As we review the years since 1968, we find that the cost of living has gone up by leaps and bounds. To give an example of this, in 1971 the cost of housing, which is very essential to the people we are speaking about, went up 7 per cent. The same applied to the food and the clothing they required. These are three specific items, the cost of which increased last year so these people were gypped to the tune of 5 per cent on those items alone.

We then go back over the years they have been getting a 2 per cent increase. It is my feeling that these people have been dealt with very unfairly because the difference between the 2 per cent and the actual rise in the cost of living still has not been added to the old age security pension or the guaranteed income supplement. These people are still behind the eight ball. This is something we have to look at. The government is holding back all these people. The same applies to some of their bonds and other securities.

It is a fact that certain people are not treated fairly by the government. I include middle class people today in that group. There may be a man and wife who both work and earn $12,000 per year. With our present inflation, in the space of four to five years the purchasing power of their income may go down by $2,000 to $10,000. To keep up with this rising cost of living, they probably receive increases in their salary which the government, by way of income tax, magnanimously drains off. Therefore, the same thing applies, only in another way, to the middle income earner this year. He will find out that there is no reduction in taxes, but an increase of 3 per cent. I deplore the fact that people are not treated fairly by the state. I do not care whether it is a Liberal or Conservative government, let us be a little more honest about what we are doing.

Governments today seem to have a built-in interest in people getting salary increases so that they can drain off more taxes. They even seem to have a built-in interest in inflation. This again hits those people on fixed incomes, particularly the people we are speaking about today, the old age pensioners. This wrong can be corrected by an order in council without any problem. It was with this in mind that I brought this amendment before the House. I hope that justice will be done.

If we go back to the figures, we find that while the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has said we have brought these people almost to the affluent stage, by using last year's figures we see that they are still far below the poverty line as set by the Economic Council. Let us do what is fair and square, and restore to these people their rightful pension. The present Liberal government has departed a long way from the principle established by the government in 1952 when the universal old age security pension was set at $40 a month. They not only did that, but they increased it from time to time. If memory serves me correctly, they did this when the gross national product was $21 billion. Today, our gross national product is close to $100 billion, five times as much. It was a Liberal government which brought that in; not only that, Mr. Speaker, but it was universal in its application.

I ask for the support of all my fellow members of the House of Commons in this effort to ensure that an injustice is righted and that these older citizens who have done so much to build our country are treated fairly, and that the product of this differential is restored to them as from January 1, 1967.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say just a few words on this amendment. I agree with the proposition the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) is advancing as far as it goes, but I cannot see how his amendment will achieve the purpose he has in mind.

The amending bill, as it now reads, says the escalation is to be a certain amount. That amount, at the present time is 3.6 per cent more than it was last year. The amendment would change it to read—"the escalation shall not be less than that certain amount." In other words, it shall not be less than 3.6 per cent. I do not see any difference between that and just saying it is 3.6 per cent. If this is simply a pious statement expressing a hope that somehow or other the amount of the escalation might be higher—

Mr. Rynard: It may be pious, but it is honest.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall not go into that. If it is merely a statement expressing a hope that somehow or other the amount might be higher, then perhaps we had better vote for it. But if we do, it will be in the knowledge that it does not mean anything, since the bill has already set out what the escalation is to be.

I agree with the hon. member that the escalation now to be applied to old age pensions should be much greater than it is. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) asserted in committee the other day that the $82.88 pensioners will now get is 8 cents more than they would have received had the old escalation formula been continued, the one in effect until December, 1970. However, under questioning, his deputy minister admitted that if the pension had been escalated by the full amount of the cost of living increase since $75 was fixed some years ago, the amount of the pension would now be over $90. This is what we should be trying to achieve, and we will support a proposition to that effect. At the same time, I say again it is not enough simply to fiddle around making minor adjustments in the escalation factor. What we need is a substantial increase in the basic amount. The hon. member's leader has already made it clear that he does not subscribe to the proposition that the basic pension should be $150 a month. We take the position that that is what it should be. I suggest, therefore, that this proposal for a few cents or a few dollars more is really not good enough.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this amendment presented by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) in connection with Bill C-207, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act. I agree with all those who have indicated that this is good legislation. It is legislation which is long overdue. The minister has admitted, through his sudden conversion to the principle of linking old age security payments to the cost of living index, and by making an increase retroactive to January 1, 1972, that the existing legislation in this area is not adequate to meet the needs of the present day. For the life of me, I cannot understand why the minister did not go all the way in terms of retroactivity to the date on which the basic pension was established at $75 coupled with a 2 per cent escalation factor.

The history of the Liberal party in connection with old age pensions has not shown that party to be too expansive or too generous. Many of us can remember the episode in 1957 when the old age pension was raised from $40 to $46. We can also remember the drastic and well deserved results of the following election when "Six-buck" Harris himself went down to defeat, together with the majority of the Liberal party of the day. We sometimes wonder whether history is repeating itself.

The bill before us concerns Canadians, many of whom suffered the effects of two world wars and the worst depression in world history. Many of them have become self-sufficient, and have been able to acquire sufficient resources of their own to see them through the years of their retirement. However, thousands of Canadians who have retired in the last few months are finding their life savings so badly eroded by inflation that a few dollars can make the difference between comfortable retirement and a bare existence. Had the escalation clause in this legislation been linked directly to the cost of living, the basic pension would now be $90.53. In other words, recipients will still be eight dollars short of the sum they should actually be receiving each month, notwithstanding the minister's own view that in arriving at the amount of old age security payments the cost of living is a necessary criterion.

As I say, we sometimes wonder whether history is not repeating itself. In 1957, $6 was given under this legislation.. Today, it is $8. The legislation still falls short. I realize that on July 1 an old age pensioner will receive a cheque for $97.28. However, on August 1st his cheque will be reduced to $82.88. In other words, he will get a bonus for one month. I do not know how near we are to an election, but I feel recipients of old age security payments will not be led astray by this attempt to bribe them with their own money, money which was due to them many months ago. According to the minister, this concession will cost an additional $166 million. Looked at within the whole spectrum of social security spending, which is within the neighborhood of $5 billion, this is not such a large sum. I say to the minister: Think again, and amend the legislation further, even at this late stage in such a way as to bring the basic old age security pension up to at least $90.53, the amount pensioners should be receiving had the escalation clause been instituted in 1967 when the pension was set at $75.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I was anxious to comment briefly on the amendments moved by our colleague the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) to the effect that old age security pensions provided by Bill C-207 be increased.

Mr. Speaker, we attempted, yesterday, through an amendment, to express a different way of looking at old age security pensions. One of these motions provided for the payment of these pensions at age 60, rather than 65. The second aimed at extending the old age income security provision to persons less than 60 years, of age provided the spouse has reached the prescribed statutory age of 60.

It is known that the bill introduced by the minister provides for old age security pensions to be paid at 65, while we would like them to be payable at 60.

A third motion followed and aimed at the total cancellation of the guaranteed income supplement which is nothing but administrative "tampering" that is extremely costly and gives practically nothing more to senior citizens. Later I shall quote figures to clarify this point.

We ask that the guaranteed income supplement be cancelled, and that $200 a month be paid all senior citizens, and this without inquiries, administrative manipulations, forms or complex calculations, such as Bill C-207 proposes.

It has been said that those motions entailed expenditures of public money—

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not wish to offend the hon. member and I would be interested to hear his remarks, which seem to be about his party's policy with respect to this legislation, more appropriately on third reading if the hon. member wishes to expound his philosophy again. However, in respect of this amendment I understand that the rules of relevancy apply, and I fail to see how his remarks relate to the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The point raised by the minister is well taken. At the time the minister rose the Chair was examining the bill and amendment, while hoping that the hon. member would bring his remarks to bear on the amendment itself, which did not seem to be the case.

[Translation]

When the minister rose on a point of order, the Chair was in the process of studying the clause of the bill and the amendment, and felt that the hon. member was digressing from the subject before the House, namely the amendment at the report stage, to which the rule of relevancy applies specifically and stipulates that the debate must bear formally on the amendment and the clause before the House.

Obviously, the Chair cannot, under the circumstances, prevent the hon. member for Lotbinière from rising and making opening remarks but, I wonder, whether in so doing he did not digress, and whether he should not keep his remarks for the debate on third reading; I would invite him, for the time being and if at all possible, to stick to the amendment and the clause before the House.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to offend you or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (M. Munro) but as I maintain that my remarks pertain to the amendments moved by the hon. member for Simcoe North which provide for an increase in certains amounts provided for in the act; my opinions refer to them. That is why—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair regrets to have to interrupt again the hon. member, but I want to remind him that the House is considering but one of the amendments moved by the hon. member for Simcoe North, that is Motion No. 6, which proposes to strike out, on page 2 of the Bill, the word "is" and substitute the words "shall not be less than". Therefore, this is a very specific and rather restrictive amendment.

I find it difficult to allow the hon. member to carry on with his comments on amendment No. 7, which is not yet before the House at this time.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I must say again I can hardly understand your explanations. I shall read the amendment moved by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) so that you may be sure that I know what it is about:

That Bill C-207, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be amended by striking out the word "is" at lines 14 and 24, page 2 and substituting the words "shall not be less than".

Now, what can one read in line 14 Mr. Speaker? I quote:

4. (2) (a) for a month in the fifteen-month period commencing with the month of January, 1972 is the amount obtained by multiplying

(i) the basic amount of such pension,

Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, when one is talking about multiplication and division, he is talking about figures. That is precisely what I have been doing since the beginning of my remarks.

Besides, the marginal note says:

Basic amount of pension and further on:

Annual adjustment of basic amount of pension

Therefore I am justified in speaking of the basic amount and I maintain it should be $200 a month, for all older people in Canada and without any means test. That is why I believe I am complying with the rule of relevance.

I come to the same conclusions upon reading line 24 of the same clause. Indeed one can read in the amendment and I quote:

and substituting the words "shall not be less than".

As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, subtractions and additions concern the basic amounts and I maintain once more that I am complying with the rule of relevance.

I said we brought forward that kind of amendment because we thought that the basic philosophy of Bill C-207 did not correspond to the real situation of older people in Canada.

The philosophy behind this bill and the amendments submitted by the member for Simcoe North on parts of clauses 3 and 4 has demonstrated how complicated it is to give money to our senior citizens and help them.

Those clauses provide for all kinds of mathematical complications, reports, inquiries; each time his financial situation will change the old age pensioner will have to declare it, etc.

Mr. Speaker, granting a guaranteed income supplement is based on a wrong principle. Instead of helping our senior citizens by giving them increased financial assistance, without government bickering, we set a minimum basic amount and, taking into consideration the economic situation as determined by the government, we raise as much as possible the guaranteed income supplement which will be added to this basic amount.

Under the government philosophy it is more important to grant a minimum basic amount and a maximum guaranteed income supplement and thus determine whether elderly people can survive or not. This is quite ridiculous. We believe that we should simply increase the basic amount up to the maximum intended by the government, including the guaranteed income supplement, and give it to all senior citizens whatever their income, without any inquiry and bickering so that they may enjoy the security of a minimum income.

I do not know whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare understands what I am trying to tell him but I am strongly opposed to the fact that he will not be able to pay this money to the elderly since it is going to be swallowed up by the administration of the basic amount and of the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Speaker, so much for the remarks I wanted to make and, as you have noticed, they were quite related to the clause under study.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). I think the amendment is a realistic one in that what the hon. member is endeavouring to do is to provide the flexibility that the government may need and which is not inherent in the present legislation. What the hon. member for Simcoe North is endeavouring to do is give recognition to the fact that the figure proposed by the government is unrealistic. It is a long time since the cost of living in Canada has increased by only 3½ per cent a year. Whether the government likes it or not, and whether it wishes to talk about its great battle to control inflation, the fact of the matter is that it has not controlled inflation and it is not in the neighbourhood of 3½ per cent.

• (1600)

The hon. member for Simcoe North is saying that even though the Liberal party does not recognize this fact, the Progressive Conservative party does, and that if the Progressive Conservative party were in office it would put in this bill the type of escalating clause which would guarantee to the people that the purchasing power of their dollars would be as high this year as they were last year, and as high next year as they are this year. This party recognizes that $80 today has a devil of a lot less purchasing power than $80 had a year ago, and certainly a devil of a lot less than $82.80 had a year ago.

It is very easy to get confused about old age security pensions and guaranteed income supplements, Unfortunately, I am sure that sometimes the public does not recognize the difference. The significant difference between the two schemes, as far as I am concerned, is that Canadians have contributed to this pension fund and have a right to receive their fair share from it. It is not something the government is handing out, it is something to which they have a right because they paid for it. Every Canadian, through his contribution to income tax, has paid for an old age security pension. This is just the same as any pension scheme a person in Canada might have with a company for which he has worked. He does not have to come as a supplicant to this government on bended knee in order to receive $82.80 per month in pension. This government has an obligation to pay this money because the old age recipient has contributed.

What bothers me is that this government, when it eliminated the escalator clause, was saying to the old age pension recipient that he was not in fact going to receive an amount equivalent to what he contributed. The government was saying that it was, in fact, precluding these pensioners from receiving the amount they thought they were contributing and would receive. This government and previous governments has taken certain moneys with a certain purchasing power from the old age pensioners of today and tomorrow.

My leader spoke about constant dollars in his speech on the budget debate on Monday. If we look at this bill from a constant dollar point of view, we find that the value of the dollar the government pays to a recipient of old age security when he qualifies at age 65 is less than it was when he contributed through taxes, in spite of the clause proposed by the government containing the 3½ per cent escalation. It could well be that the escalation in the cost of living will be twice as high as the 3½ per cent stipulated by the government. This is exactly the same situation as that in respect of the 3 per cent perpetual bonds, through which the government is robbing the people of this country blind.

What the hon. member for Simcoe North is suggesting to the contributors to the old age security fund is that we will recognize that they are contributing constant dollars toward old age security and that they will receive constant dollars. In other words, the dollars contributed toward old age security will be of the same value as the dollars received when they qualify for old age security. That is our commitment to the old age security recipient now and in the future. That is what we are interested in and that is the reason we have proposed this amendment.

It may be that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) could suggest another method of doing the same thing. Our difficulty is that, in endeavouring to propose amendments to a piece of government legislation, you must take the legislation as you find it and amend it in the best way you can. I believe the hon. member for Simcoe North has endeavoured to do that. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a better idea as to how this can be done, and if he proposes such a way, I know that the hon. member for Simcoe North will, as will every other hon. member of the Conservative party, support such an amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would you vote for a $150 basic pension?

Mr. Coates: I am not opposed to that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just your leader.

Mr. Coates: I am speaking for myself right now. What I am saying is that we would like to see the old age security recipient in this country receive justice. He is not going to receive justice under this legislation, nor will he receive it when getting an extra $2.80 per month. There are ways and means, and certainly sufficient funds, to see that these recipients do get justice. I cannot for the life of me understand why this government is not willing to give the old age security recipients what they need and have a right to receive. I do not believe the government's proposal will accomplish that, but I believe that the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Simcoe North is a step in the right direction. It could meet the situation if properly applied. There may be other ways of doing this, and I do not argue with that. There is always more than one way to accomplish something. I suggest that this amendment would provide a more equitable deal for the old age recipients of this country than the proposition contained in the legislation now before us.

[Mr. Coates.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of listening to the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) and of reading the clause of the bill the hon. member would choose to amend. I must say I fail to see what significance the amendment will have. The clause of the bill states what, in fact, the escalation is to be. The effect of the hon. member's amendment would be to make this escalation not less than what it is in fact to be. I question what impact this would have.

That being my view, I do not intend to go into the substance of some of the allegations, comments and observations of the hon. member and others. If they are relevant, I think it is not with reference to this particular amendment but rather to third reading, and I will be more than happy to take advantage of my opportunity of rebuttal on third reading, if these views are expressed again at that particular time.

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Rynard) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Before I render a decision on motion No. 7 put forward by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), perhaps I should give notice of the first impression of the Chair regarding the acceptability of this motion. In my opinion, it would require additional expenditure on the part of the Crown and on this basis I would have difficulty in accepting the motion. If hon. members have opinions on the acceptability of that motion I would like to hear them. Otherwise, I will make a decision at this time.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is fair that I should argue this one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You won when you did not argue.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps, on the hon. member's suggestion, if I sit down the Chair might decide in my favour. If I could receive some indications from the Chair to that effect, I would be glad to sit down right away.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if you look closely at this motion you will see that it is not a direction. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Rodrigue) as reported in yesterday's Hansard at page 2326, used these words in dealing with an amendment which might seem at first blush to infringe upon the Crown's right to initiate expenditures:

This is obviously, I think, a broad amendment, since it would force the Crown to incur additional expenditures.

Using that as a yardstick, I suggest that this amendment does not in fact force the Crown to incur additional expenses because there are certain safeguards written into it. In the first instance, it provides that there is to be an instruction to consider the advisability of inserting therein the following clause. This is the old, traditional method, which we have used in the House for a great many years, of dealing with the question of advisability. It may well be that in considering the advisability the committee may seek a legal opinion. The law officers of the House may be present, and they may say to the members of the committee that what they seek to do they cannot do because of certain rules and certain statutes. I call that to your attention in the first instance, Mr. Speaker.

Your Honour is aware of the fact that there are several types of amendment on third reading referring matters back to a committee. Some of them contain a direction that the committee do something. This is not one of them. This is a direction that it be sent back to the committee with an instruction to consider the advisability of doing something. With all due deference, I think it would be drawing a long bow to say that a committee cannot be urged by the House to consider the advisability of doing something, even though the Chair may have a fairly strong view that what they may urge to be done might not be proper.

Then, I go to what is set out in paragraph 2 of the amendment which reads:

No order may be made under subsection (1) until the proposed text of the order has been laid before the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the making of the order has been approved by a resolution of the House of Commons.

I take it that that is a safeguard which is written into this amendment by which the House will be instructing the committee to ensure that all proper and legal steps are taken. It may well be that Your Honour or any member of the House cannot exclude the possibility that in committee, as a result of persuasive and eloquent arguments which are made by members of the committee, the government may be persuaded that what we are proposing to do is sensible and generous. I recognize that may be very difficult, because one thing we know about this government is that so far it has not been kind, compassionate or generous in dealing with old age pensioners. But I do not rule out the possibility that eloquent and strong argument in the committee might well persuade the government to change its mind. If the government saw fit to change its mind, and to support an amendment of this kind, it could affix legality to it through the text of an order to be laid before the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council.

Finally, the third paragraph of the amendment reads:

Expenditures required under an order made under subsection (1) should be paid for out of moneys to be appropriated by parliament.

You have to read into that the words "to be appropriated by parliament pursuant to the laws of this land".

I suggest that if you put all this together, what you have is a recommendation from the House to the committee to consider the advisability of inserting this clause, but to do so only on the understanding that all of the things which have to be done to provide it with a cloak of legality are in fact carried out. That is the limit of the recommendation. I would have no hesitation at all in doubting the acceptability of the amendment if the bill were to be referred back to the standing committee with a direct instruction that the following clause be inserted therein. But when the safeguards are written into it, then the House is in fact saying to its faithful committee: "attempt to improve this bill but do so only when you can do it by the proper steps which need to be taken under the constitution to make it effective."

Having in mind the impediment which is faced by members of the House in attempting to secure a better form of arrangement for old age pensioners, I suggest that the Chair should be vigilant and alert in trying to find ways and means of construing my argument so as to make this amendment acceptable.

Mr. Jerome: I wonder if the hon. member was speaking on motion No. 7, because I fail to follow his argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, we are on motion No. 7.

Mr. Baldwin: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I poured forth all this eloquence with respect to another amendment. I simply ask that when the time comes I may be able to refer to what I have already said. When I came into the House, I was under the impression that the House was dealing with another amendment. If we are dealing with motion No. 7, my words were poured into the arrid atmosphere. My argument has no application, and so far as we are concerned I think the motion should be put.

• (1620)

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have only the briefest comment to make with respect to motion No. 7. It appears to me to call for a straight, across-the-board increase in the amounts to be paid under one classification in clause 10, and appears to fly directly in the face of the recommendation, and therefore is clearly out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Possibly at this time I should express my regret to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for not calling him to order. The Chair had been trying to follow his argument and, at the same time, look at the clause itself. I do not think I succeeded in finding any connection that would change the decision of the Chair. After what was said by the hon. member for Peace River at the end of his remarks, the Chair can only repeat that this motion would result in increased payments from public funds. If hon. members refer once more to Beauchesne, citation 246, they will see arguments there that are quite eloquent as to the non-acceptability of such an amendment at this time.

Accordingly, if there are no more motions the Chair will put the motion for concurrence.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age

Security Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and social affairs be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion for concurrence agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave now.

Mr. Munro moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is not very often that the House gets an opportunity to preview an amendment, but on this occasion hon. members have had a good opportunity to look at one. The amendment that I intend to move has been dealt with by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It is that the bill be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, with an instruction to consider the advisability of inserting therein the following clause:

The Governor in Council may, by order, increase the Old Age Security pension so as to reflect the full increase in the Consumer Price Index since the 1st January 1967—

What we are seeking is simple justice. I find myself facing quite a paradox. Not being a lawyer and able to examine two sides of the coin, I am simply examining the right side and looking for justice. While this amendment may not meet all the legal requirements of the minister, it does satisfy the consciences of most of us, and I would say his conscience also. I know he is bound by some tentacles which hang on to him pretty firmly or else he would agree to accept this.

How in the world can we sit in this chamber and not give the justice that we should to those people to whom we have denied the right of escalation according to the increase in the consumer price index since 1966? This is not right; it is not fair. We are asking for fairness so that these people may know they have been justly treated. The longer I sit in this chamber and watch governments, Mr. Speaker, the more I see a tendency to cheat. I know that in balancing things, decisions have to be made. A government has to cut expenses somewhere or else increase taxes. The present case demands simple justice. The amount of money necessary would be small. I am no economist but under the present proposal old age pensioners are being cheated out of about $10 a month. It is time we took steps to rectify that.

I would ask the minister to support me right down the line on this amendment. If necessary, the bill should go back to committee to provide that no order will be made under subsection (1) until the proposed text of that order has been laid before the House by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada. Surely this amendment is in order, both from the legal standpoint and the conscience standpoint, and so I move it, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair has no motion in front of it.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to save time by not reading it all. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That all the words after "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"Bill C-207, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs with an instruction to consider the advisability of inserting therein the following clause:

'(1) The Governor in Council may, by order, increase the Old Age Security pension so as to reflect the full increase in the Consumer Price Index since the 1st January 1967 to date with adjustments to the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

(2) No order may be made under subsection (1) until the proposed text of the order has been laid before the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the making of the order has been approved by a resolution of the House of Commons.

(3) Expenditures required under an order made under subsection (1) shall be paid for out of moneys to be appropriated by Parliament.' "

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I think this would be the right time to invite hon. members to comment on the acceptability of the amendment. I have to question a certain aspect of it, but before rendering a decision I would invite hon. members to comment. This, of course, would include the hon. member for Peace River who has already made some comment on it.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I made my argument at the wrong time. It was because I came into the House hurriedly after attending to important business, and I thought we had reached this stage of the bill. However, no harm has been done. It may be that what I said in advance will have convinced the Chair and the Chair's advisers and, if so, I have nothing more to add.

• (1630)

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, may we have a copy of the motion please?

Mr. Baldwin: It is very simple.

Mr. Munro: We are having some difficulty with the writing, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has a copy that he could let us have so that we can be certain of the wording.

Mr. Baldwin: We only had three copies, Mr. Speaker. We thought it would be accepted without any argument, so we do not have any more copies available.

Mr. Munro: I wonder if I might ask the hon. member for Peace River to look at his copy. I am reading the amendment and five lines down it reads "consider the advisability of inserting". Then, he has crossed out "inserting the following" and put in something else. Can he tell me what he inserted there?

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I must share in the good things of life. Would the minister be kind enough to repeat his request?

Mr. Munro: If the hon. member would be kind enough to read the fourth and fifth lines of his amendment which start, "with an instruction to consider the advisability of inserting". I am not clear what comes after that.

Mr. Baldwin: It reads, "instruction to consider the advisability of inserting therein the following clause".

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the rather ingenious argument of the hon. member for Peace River on motion No. 7, and I thought that we might have the pleasure of hearing it all over again but apparently that is not to be so. It appears that his contention is that this is really not a specific instruction for the expenditure of additional moneys. I believe he relies entirely on the phraseology "with an instruction to consider" as saving him from the application of that particular rule. I do not think it does in this particular case, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as he indicates further on what those instructions are to be. They are quite specific; that we are to increase the old age security pension. We are not just to consider the increase, but to consider it in very specific terms as follows:

—so as to reflect the full increase in the consumer price index since the first of January, 1967 to date with adjustments to the guaranteed income supplement.

If one takes just the component dealing with retroactivity to 1967, those instructions are quite clear, quite specific. They call for additional expenditures, a function that cannot be performed by other than the government. This amendment would necessitate the additional expenditure of many millions of dollars. With sufficient time, I could obtain an estimate of the amount involved. Certainly, the retroactivity feature, if tied in with the escalation for the cost of living going back to January 1, 1972, we estimate would cost somewhere in the vicinity of $80 million.

I would want to check my figures, but if I am correct in that, hon. members can readily understand the additional expenditure required to take the retroactivity of the escalation back to January, 1967. If I am correct on the $80 million figure, we are probably talking about several hundreds of millions of dollars in the application of this particular feature, not even taking into account the adjustments to the guaranteed income supplement, if the amendment means more than merely the retroactive escalation of the old age security back that long.

I might indicate as well that, while we are dealing with the rather monumental additional expenditures called for by this particular part of the amendment, when you add that to the expenditures we are already committed to with reference to this particular bill in the sense that it calls for expenditures of some $250 million to $280 million, to say nothing of the cost of the exemptions announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for senior citizens, we can see that this type of impact over and above what is already planned would be very serious indeed.

I must say that since the amendment is so specific as to what the committee is to do, what additional expenditures there will be—and it is possible to estimate very precisely what those expenditures would be—I fail to see how the hon. member for Peace River can any longer rely on the generality of the words "an instruction to consider". For that reason, I think it is quite obviously an inappropriate amendment at this particular time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat what I said, although if I am pressed I will repeat part of it. What the minister has said demonstrates the wisdom of a course of this kind. The minister has been making an argument in this House, which I think is the wrong place to make it, against using the words in the amendment of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), "the advisability of inserting therein the following clause".

If this amendment were passed, what would happen? Let us cast our minds ahead. The committee would be seized of jurisdiction by reason of the direction of this House. It is quite plain that there is no firm, mandatory direction to the committee to insert it, but to consider the advisability of inserting it. That involves several things. First, should those words be inserted? What about the question of cost vis-à-vis benefits to the people involved, the old age pensioners, the people of this country who are so detrimentally affected by inflation? The minister might be able to appear before the committee and make a convincing argument, as he has attempted to make here, that it would not be advisable to do it. If he were successful the committee would reject the amendment.

On the other hand, if he were not able to convince the committee that it would be advisable to do it, then they could make a proposal to insert those words but, as I repeat, with the safeguards I have referred to before and which make it quite plain that it cannot be done unless all the requirements are met which have to be met when we deal with matters of a financial nature. We have been a little ingenious, and we have had to be. We are not yet the government but time will shortly cure that. Until we are the government, in dealing with these matters we are compelled to make propositions of this nature.

I would go a step further. If one looks at the financial recommendation which appears on the bill itself, it is couched in fairly vague terms. The first few lines read:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure to amend the Old Age Security Act; to fix the basic amount of the old age pension at $80 per month—

• (1640)

There has been no attempt to change that. I continue:

—and to provide that it will be escalated annually to reflect the full amount of any increase in the Consumer Price Index with the initial escalation—

I draw Your Honour's attention to the words, "to reflect the full amount of any increase." There is a strong element of vagueness and variability about this, Mr. Speaker. The act attempts to define Consumer Price Index in clause 1 as follows:

'Consumer Price Index' with respect to any fiscal year or any twelve-month period means the average of the Consumer Price Index for Canada, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for each month in that fiscal year or twelve-month period,—

You can search the Statistics Act from one end to the other and you will not find any definition of Consumer Price Index. The Statistics Act provides that the statistician—I forget his title—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It should be her title.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes—can, by the direction of the minister, in this case the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), publish certain statistics dealing, inter alia, with the prices of goods and services. That is all you will find in the act. Statistics Canada has every right to vary the method used to fix the index governing price and wage increases, or the changes which occur in prices and wages from month to month. It has every right to vary the method used for arriving at the value of the index. We might find, as was found last year—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am not sure that the hon. member is debating at this time the procedural acceptability of the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It seems that he is debating the matter itself, as if we were discussing the amendment and not its procedural acceptability.

Mr. Baldwin: With all due respect to Your Honour, to hon. members of the House and particularly to the minister, let me say that even if we were to accept his argument, and I do not and I have given convincing reasons to show why the Chair ought not to accept it, and look at the financial recommendation which accompanies the bill, which the Chair must look at to determine whether there is any variation between what this amendment proposes and what His Excellency proposed, we still will not find that distinction which I submit is necessary. I say that because the financial recommendation must be considered together with the legislation governing Statistics Canada and the definition of Consumer Price Index.

After all, the Consumer Price Index is to be the basis for varying the escalation in the old age pension. Because of sloppy draftsmanship, the government will permit in future years considerable variations to arise in the interpretation of what should be the increase in old age pensions pursuant to changes in the cost of living. The Consumer Price Index is determined by Statistics Canada in a variety of ways. The methods used to determine the Consumer Price Index may be changed at any time. Therefore, the term Consumer Price Index is not a statutory definition. One will find, therefore, on reading the terms of the recommendation, that the recommendation itself is not too clear. The language of the recommendation is not so clear as to prevent our including another variable in those elements which are to be taken into calculation in arriving at pensions. However, that is going beyond the point that I need to raise.

Let me return to what I said before. The committee is being instructed to consider the advisability of something. It may decide that it is not advisable to do it, in which case that settles the matter. On the other hand, if it decides that it is advisable to do something, then, according to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe North, it must observe certain safeguards. There are certain safeguards which ensure that this amendment will not be inserted in the act until certain conditions are met. First, an order must be laid before the House by a member of the Queen's Privy Council, and the making of the order must have been approved by a resolution of the House of Commons. Second, expenditures shall be paid for out of moneys to be appropriated by Parliament. The latter wording I submit ought to be construed as "to be appropriated by Parliament according to the law of this land."

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I ask Your Honour to consider one or two brief comments I will make about the procedural acceptability of the motion in addition to the remarks that were made by the minister. I submit that if the amendment were accepted by the House, it would offend directly against two or three precedents.

As the bill is now being considered at the third reading stage, it has gone through clause by clause examination in the standing committee, at which time members enjoyed the opportunity to propose amendments to the bill, if they so wished. Several amendments were proposed at that time. In addition, pursuant to the rules, amendments were proposed in the House at the report stage, after proper notice had been given. There the Chair had the opportunity to consider the procedural acceptability of those amendments. Motions to increase the amount of the pension were ruled out of order. One, which was debated this afternoon, was accepted by the Chair. The point is that substantive amendments to the bill can be put only at certain times. They can be put either in committee or at the report stage in the House, after proper notice has been given.

This amendment, in my view, is not an amendment which seeks to change the motion for third reading of the bill, although it would do that by an indirect route, but is a substantive amendment to the bill itself. I submit that what the hon. member in that regard cannot do directly he ought not to be permitted to do indirectly. He is proposing at this time an amendment which goes to the very substance of the bill. I submit, therefore, that this is an amendment affecting not the third reading motion, but the substance of the bill itself, and it cannot be permitted at the third reading stage.

Second, the amendment intends, as the hon. member clearly said, to increase the amounts which would be paid under the Old Age Security Act. That intent is not directly evident. The language of the amendment is ingeniously couched and would lead, indirectly, to that end. Here, again, the hon. member is attempting to do indirectly what he knows he is not permitted to do directly, namely, through an amendment to seek to increase amounts paid as pensions. To achieve both these procedurally illegal objectives, the hon. member has ingeniously proposed an amendment which, if accepted, would send the bill back to the committee and, further, send it back with the specific direction as to what the committee must do. That, I submit, is the final, fatal flaw in the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: No, not at all.

Mr. Jerome: I see the hon. member shakes his head. He suggests that his amendment does not give a specific direction to the committee but, rather, asks the committee to give consideration—

Mr. Baldwin: To the advisability.

Mr. Jerome: —to the advisability of doing something. In other words, he is not asking the committee to consider the bill in its entirety but is asking it, instead, to confine its attention to one subject only, the contents of his amendment. I submit that that specific direction to the committee constitutes a fatal flaw in the amendment which the hon. member proposes.

For those reasons, I submit that the amendment cannot be and ought not to be accepted. Its acceptance would destroy existing precedents and would constitute a most dangerous new precedent, by permitting substantive amendments to be introduced at the third reading stage, which otherwise would not be permitted. Further, the precedent would permit bills to be referred to some body, with a specific direction that something be or be not done. This amendment would be a substantive amendment at this stage. Its flaws, I submit, are fatal to it and I submit it is out of order.

Mr. Baldwin: It is fatal for us to suggest anything the government does not like.

Mr. Munro: Even if you have tried it twice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not decide to speak in this procedural debate until my good friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome), took the floor. His attempt to say that you cannot move amendments on third reading which would refer a bill back to a committee makes it necessary for me to defend the right that has been exercised in this House a good many times. Some day I should like to take him to the library and show him bills considered in the last century, when neither he nor I were here, that were subjected to third reading amendments between 40 and 50 times. Therefore, the business of referring bills back to committee from third reading is not something that was dreamed up by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

The reason I was thinking of sitting this one out is that I cannot get excited about amendments that propose to raise the amount that old age pensioners are getting from $82.88 to $90 or something like that. What is needed is a change in the bill to provide a basic pension of $150 a month. If I knew of any way to bring in an amendment that would force this House to vote on that proposition, the amendment would be made but, frankly, I see no way in which that can be done, under our rules as they stand.

Even though I am not excited about this amendment, for I think it is a case of trying to put up something to cover the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has declared himself against the $150 a month pension, I think there is a procedural case to be made for this amendment. So far today, most of the talking has been off the cuff. That is usually my style as well. For a change, let us look at Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, citation 415(1), and I quote:

> When a bill comes up for third reading a member may move that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular.

The reference there is to the committee of the whole, but if the bill has been before a standing committee, it is common practice that that is the place to send the bill back. The rest of citation 415(1) simply says that the motion is not debatable. Citation 415(2) reads:

> Bills may be recommitted a number of times with or without limitation; in the latter case, the whole bill is opened to reconsideration, but in the former case the Committee can only consider the clause or amendments or instructions referred to them.

Surely, there is an implication in 415(1) and (2) that it is possible by way of an amendment on third reading to ask that a bill go back to committee with a request that such and such be considered. That is what the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) is asking, that this bill be not now read a third time but that it be sent back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering a certain aspect of the bill.

There is another citation or two along the same line, asserting the right of referral. Your Honour may say quite frankly that there are also some citations that raise doubts. This is why we have Speakers—to resolve these differences. Citation 415(4) reads:

> On the third reading of a Bill, an amendment to refer back to the Committee of the Whole must not tend to change the principle approved on the second reading.

That imposes a certain limitation. The same kind of limitation appears in citation 418 which reads:

> All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

In other words, if this amendment sought to change a principle, not a detail, that was approved on second reading, or sought to put into the bill something that is not already contained in the bill, in principle, then it would be out of order. As the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, the subject matter of this amendment is already in the bill. He referred to the hon. member's recommendation for provision for escalating of the pensions paid under the Old Age Security Act to reflect the full amount of the cost of living increase. I suggest that the hon. member for Simcoe North is not importing any new idea. The bill already provides that there shall be an escalation clause, different from the old 2 per cent ceiling that we had, related to the actual cost of living. This amendment simply proposes a change in detail as to how that escalation is to be put into effect.

Speaking procedurally, it seems that this amendment does not offend citation 415(4) or the sentence I read from citation 418 from Beauchesne and that it is supported by citations 415(1) and (2). In substance, I still do not think that the amendment deals with what we should be dealing, but I have to support the hon. member's right to put such an amendment.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Considering the eloquence displayed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as well as their competence in this matter and their excellent work in the Committee on Procedure and Organization, I do not think I have to repeat what they have said. I would like to recall not a precedent but something that was done yesterday when the House was considering a motion to refer a bill back to the committee on third reading. That motion was as follows:

That Bill C-2 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of reviewing clause 44 and particularly paragraph (a).

That amendment was accepted by the Chair, which shows that, in his argument, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) does not take into account as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, the right of an hon. member to move such an amendment on third reading, in accordance with section 415 (1) and (2) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment we moved yesterday was substantive and tended to give quite detailed instructions to the committee. It even attacked the principle and contents of clause 44. If one refers to yesterday's debates, the Chair with the House's consent had accepted that amendment which has been put to vote today. I would think therefore that the parliamentary secretary's argument that the hon. member should be refused the right to bring in this amendment because it is a substantive amendment with detailed instructions has now been refuted in less than 24 hours.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I thank hon. members for their contribution in helping the Chair make a decision. I agree that the amendment before us is well drafted in that it could be looked at as a proper case.

I listened to the arguments of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that statistics from Statistics Canada might not correspond to the consumer price index for all kinds of reasons. This was getting into the debate itself which the Chair cannot do and cannot use as an argument.

In my opinion, the decision that has to be rendered at this time is based on two points. The first point is to try to determine whether the amendment departs from the principle adopted on second reading. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) referred to an amendment that was accepted by the Chair last night. That amendment proposed to refer a bill back to committee to amend one particular clause. Over the years, it has been the practice to accept a six-month hoist amendment or refer a bill back to a committee for the purpose of reconsidering one particular clause.

In this case, the Chair is wondering whether the amendment would not tend to change the principle which has been approved on second reading. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred to citation 415 of Beauchesne at page 287. He even read paragraph four of that citation which, to my mind, is very clear. I might perhaps repeat it:

On the third reading of a bill an amendment to refer back to the Committee of the Whole must not tend to change the principle approved on second reading.

Basing myself on this paragraph, I find myself wondering whether the committee itself would have the power to deal with such an amendment. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment which has been proposed is really one which brings in a new subject, a new approach, if one considers the debate which has taken place and the study which has been carried out at the earlier stages.

Again, if we read citation 418, we find a similar thought expressed in the following terms:

The question for the third reading is put immediately after the report from the Committee of the Whole. All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

The Chair is wondering whether the proposal made in this amendment does not involve a new matter, a new approach to the bill itself.

Hon. members might also refer to Beauchesne at the bottom of page 275 where the rules which govern reasoned amendments are set out. We find that the first principle to be taken into consideration when drafting or accepting an amendment is the rule of relevancy.

There is another aspect with which the Chair has to be concerned. It is the financial aspect. I wonder whether the amendment, in the form in which it is presented, is not seeking to do indirectly what the hon. member cannot do directly. Citation 246(3) of Beauchesne, 4th edition, makes it clear that hon. members should not try to do indirectly what they cannot do directly. I think I should read this paragraph:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication to which the royal demand or recommendation is attached must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of the charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

Although the other citations from Beauchesne, 415 and 418, made me hesitate about accepting the amendment before us, having regard to the rule of relevancy, my decision is confirmed by what is contained in Citation 246. Looking again at the amendment I can only conclude that it puts forward a new financial proposition, one which I cannot accept at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-207, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, involves all the outdated social security system that we know.

Social security in Canada costs increasingly more to all governments and therefore to the Canadian taxpayers who assume the charge through their taxes. In spite of all the speeches from government members, social disparities persist. In spite of the investment of billions of dollars, even in Canada, there are still some people who go to bed hungry and among them there are often old people.

The bill which is in third reading features three things. First, it provides a cost of living escalation clause. As a matter of fact, it is an excellent piece of legislation and I want to commend the minister for it.

For a long time, there have been requests for the escalation of social assistance rates based on the cost of living, since the first to suffer from inflation were the sick, the disabled, the war veterans and the elderly people who, moreover, were subjected to an income ceiling set by governments granting them pensions, which resulted into serious injustice.

That is why I welcome the provisions which are found in Bill C-207 for escalating old-age security pensions in line with the rise in the cost of living.

Where I do not agree is on the basic amounts granted and on the principle of the guaranteed income supplement.

• (1710)

In fact, a basic amount of $82.88 will be granted to anyone aged 65. In order to receive more money, forms will have to be filled in and returned for the expert calculations of public servants who will establish what is the amount of the supplement, in accordance with the cost of living index. At any rate, the maximum amount to be granted after these lengthy and complicated calculations will be $150 a month, including the amount based on the cost of living.

I do not know of any unmarried person who can live on $150 a month in Canada. Out of $150, $60 a month must be deducted for housing which leaves only $90 a month to the pensioner for food, clothing and drugs. They have to live 30 days on that. We know that older people are often in need of drugs which are very expensive.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration which would raise monthly pensions to $150 for single persons and $285 for married couples is not realistic. It does not take into account those who are victimized by the present economic situation. In fact, this light increase is not geared to the cost of living.

Everybody is aware of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that in Canada housing, clothing and food are the most expensive things. Now, these three items of our everyday life are precisely those which are first affected by inflation, by the increase in the cost of living. The moment we begin to feel the increase in the cost of living, we can see immediately the bad effects it has on rents, which older people are unable to control. These people are just like everybody else: they must live with the lease system and put up with rent hikes. Though old, they cannot go to the corner store, to the grocer's, and say: I do not want prices to go up. Being frozen at $150 a month, their income is clearly insufficient and they are compelled to suffer the increase in the cost of living without any kind of protection.

The government will tell me that I am wrong, that under the legislation they will get an increment geared to the cost of living, but I shall answer right away that the proposed 3.6 per cent progressive boost based on the cost of living only applies to this maximum amount of $150. This means that the increase in the cost of living is only taken into account for the total amount of $150. Now then, with $150, as I said earlier, a person cannot live decently in Canada. This does not even represent the bare minimum with which one person can have three square meals a day.

This is why I said at the beginning of my remarks that the government's philosophy in speeding up the passing of this bill—and I am not the least surprised about it—can only bring more misery and poverty in Canada, that it is nothing but a bandaid treatment which does not settle the problem at all and which can only maintain people in poverty because what they are granted under this legislation does not meet their requirements, at this time.

Mr. Speaker, since 1962, we have been calling for this escalation in old age security pensions according to the increase in the cost of living. This is the first principle that we support. Secondly, we suggest that the basic amount of old age security pensions should be equal to the minimum income that a person requires to live decently. We are urging that senior citizens be granted a basic amount equivalent to the minimum income that a person must have in order to live decently and cope with the rising cost of living.

This is why we have moved amendments at the report stage to improve the bill, to change its intent, its philosophy, to get us out once for all out of this mesh that generates poverty and social inequalities. Is it any wonder that after 10 years, in spite of the billions of dollars invested in social security, social inequalities are still with us? Is it any wonder that poverty continues to exist in a country as rich as ours?

Mr. Speaker, it is significant because pensions are inadequate and do not take into account the minimum a person requires in order to live decently. As a result, people get no help, but only crumbs with which they manage to keep body and soul together. It is unfortunate, and we find it shocking, considering the tremendous wealth of our country, that all Canadians should be the victims of the financial system that controls everything.

Mr. Speaker, we are asking, in plain words, so that the other side will understand, that the old age security pension—and this was the purpose of the amendments we moved—be statutorily available to people at 60 instead of 65. Why? Simply because, on account of what is going on in our ridings, a person of 60 who has the bad luck of losing his job—a fact which accounts for economic insecurity in Canada—has a very hard time finding another job, some proper means of living. Actually, it is impossible.

A Canadian age 60, Mr. Speaker, is almost incapable of finding a job. Now, a person who loses his job through illness—and it is a known fact that that illness strikes more often at that age—has no chance of finding another decent job. This means that no help is available and that he must rely solely on himself for his livelihood, in order to meet his needs and obligations, with the result that he must manage to survive for five years, from 60 to 65, with the hope of living until then and getting the old age security pension at 65, as provided in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the minister is in front of me and I ask him why the government refuses to lower the eligible age to 60, since, anyway, this government, as former governments, has found nothing worthwhile not only to keep people of 60 or 65 working, but above all to enable them to survive while waiting for their pension.

This is why the eligible age has to be lowered to 60. Another reason is that the labour market can no longer absorb all the young people who are looking for work and are qualified to fill available positions.

On the other hand, we can find on the labour market in Canada hundreds of people aged 60 or 65 who would like nothing better, after having gone through two economic crises and two wars, than to retire. Considering they have to go on working in spite of their age and their ailments, not only will they be "penalized" where unemployment insurance payments are concerned, but they will not be eligible for an old age security pension until they reach 65. Thus, those people are not only forced to keep on working, sometimes until their death, but they are also deprived of a well-deserved retirement. It is not that the labour market should get rid of those people, but it is high time that we should treat Canadians properly. Those people have done more than enough to build our country, and we now have a duty to assure them of a well-deserved retirement.

This is why we strongly request that the eligible age for old age security pensions be lowered to 60. Is it not proper that we should allow those people to enjoy a well-deserved retirement?

There is a second point with which I wanted to deal and which I am surprised to see has been overlooked. In order to make myself clear, I am going to give a very specific example. Let us suppose that a 65-year old person receives his old age pension and that, for a valid reason, he decides to stop working, or that he loses his job—considering how little job security we now have in Canada. This person comes back home and applies for an old age security pension. The maximum she can get, together with her spouse, is $285. If she is alone and if her spouse is not entitled to it, she will draw $150. The person being retired and her spouse not being 65, she will not be entitled to the old age security pension. So, this couple will not get $285 a month, as is the case for a couple when both are entitled to the pension. Thus, because these persons are not both 65, they are penalized and cannot really benefit from the increase that is being announced with such noise. In this particular case, the measure cannot be efficient.

This is why we ask the government not only to consider this proposal but to act and grant an old age security pension of $150 to any person whose age is less than what is prescribed in the present act, provided his or her spouse is entitled to it. Thus, if the husband retires and his wife is only 59 or 60, she will not have to work to keep the family afloat. This pension would enable her to retire also and live happily with her husband.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this proposal is worth considering.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Cyr: Perhaps that would not be accepted by Quebec.

Mr. Fortin: The hon. member for Gaspé is saying that perhaps it would not be accepted by Quebec. My answer is that the federal government should at least consult Quebec before taking this step. We should avoid raising more constitutional issues that do not settle the matter, as it has just been done.

Quebec Social Affairs Minister Castonguay says the problem is that the federal government, in a particular sector, gives a pension which results in financial difficulties for those who support the retired people and that the government of Quebec, despite its illimited spending capacity, cannot solve the problem and has therefore a feeling of frustration.

Many of these problems could be avoided if we would agree to give $150 a month to the spouse of those who will get the old age pension at 65, unless we bring the eligibility age down to 60 as we would like. We could avoid many problems and allow this couple to live decently.

Finally, the third proposal that we also defend strongly is the following; according to the provisions of Bill C-207, the old age pension that will be granted by the government is ridiculous even if it includes a supplement geared to the cost of living. This means inquiries, forms to be filled, correspondence, administrative intrigue, in one word more bureaucracy. There is already enough of that, not only as far as the government is concerned but also for the population in general.

We suggest that we should quit bothering people and start really helping them by granting the basic amount to each elderly person in one monthly $200 payment. I understand that some members will object that the government does not have enough money to give $200 a month to the elderly.

Mr. Speaker, with the $150 the government intends to give them, these people will not be able to live any better. By giving them $200 a month, they would have enough minimum income security to meet their legitimate needs.

Where would the money come from, Mr. Speaker? Today, it costs over $13,500 million, unless I am mistaken, to finance the federal, provincial and municipal welfare programs. And most of that money is spent in administrative costs. Those amounts are therefore not paid to the people for whom they are intended. That may seem unbelievable to some of my colleagues. Yet, I invite them to consider the fact that to finance the guaranteed income supplement, the old age security pensions, the allowances to the blind and the disabled, the program for the professional rehabilitation of the disabled, manpower mobility, adult training allowances, student grants, assistance to the immigrants, clearing up of the downgraded zones, veterans's pensions, Indian and Eskimo affairs, welfare services, research, all those services cost $1,097 million, of which no Canadian sees a single penny. That, Mr. Speaker, proves that we have reached the point where bureaucracy dominates the legislature and the government.

That is why we say this must cease, that the problem should be settled once and for all by giving people directly, without inquiry, once they have reached the age of 60, $200 a month without any supplement. Thus, Mr. Speaker, and for the sake of consistency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be not now read for the third time but be referred instead to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for the purpose of considering the advisability of:

(a) Lowering to age 60 eligibility for the old age security pension;

(b) Granting the old age pension to every person, even if his age is lower than the provisions of the present act, whose spouse receives a monthly pension by virtue of the said act.

(c) Abolishing the concept of the supplement and fixing the basic amount at $200 a month.

—and $150 a month for the spouse under 60.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member could perhaps indicate, for the information of the Chair, if he feels that this amendment is acceptable according to Standing Orders. The hon. member will admit that an almost identical amendment was moved a few moments ago by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). My colleague, the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel), who was occupying the Chair at that moment, outlined the precedents and referred to the Standing Orders applicable in such cases. I am afraid that his decision then is also applicable on all counts to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

However, I would be happy to listen to any comments on the matter.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to refer you, in support of this motion, to citation 415(2) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms which reads as follows:

Bills may be recommitted a number of times with or without limitation; in the latter case, the whole bill is opened to reconsideration, but in the former case the Committee can only consider the clause or amendments or instructions referred to them. When material amendments are desirable, the order for the third reading may be discharged, and the bill recommitted to introduce the amendments in Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to base my argument on that paragraph to which I will come back in part.

Yesterday, as you will recall, we brought in an amendment tending to refer Bill C-2 to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs so that section 44 be completely deleted from the bill. Your colleague ruled that the amendment we brought in yesterday called for a redrafting of section 44, which was not the case, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment we moved yesterday tended only to delete this paragraph from the section.

Along the same line, Mr. Speaker, we attack the bill in its third reading without any limitation. I quote from the citation:

Bills may be recommitted a number of times with or without limitation, in the latter case, the whole bill is opened to reconsideration;

The motion that I move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Kamouraska, tends to question the very principle of the bill, its philosophy, not the principle of granting financial assistance to old people, but the one under which the basic payment and the guaranteed income supplement are established.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we question the age factor. The bill provides for the payment of a pension to any person who reaches age 65. I ask that the committee examine the possibility of lowering the statutory age to 60.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for an escalation of this pension in line with the increase in the cost of living, for the single person as well as for married couples.

The bill does not provide for the payment of a pension to the spouse of the old age security pensioner.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) pointed out, there is some flexibility in the bill itself which will allow for an increase in the pensions.

My motion is to the same effect and in the same spirit. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is relevant since it is substantive, since it deals with the principle of the bill and is non-limiting.

I shall repeat in concluding what you have so well understood, and I am positive about it: Whenever a bill is to be referred, the whole bill may be reconsidered.

Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what I am after, so that our senior citizens in Canada may get true income security instead of some fictitious social security.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre addressing himself to the point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker I rise to say only a brief word. I like the substance of this amendment much better than the substance of the amendment we had a while ago. I argued that it should have been in order, but we lost on the ground that it went a little beyond what was in the bill. All I can say with regard to this amendment is that if I had thought it was possible at this stage to bring in an amendment to provide for a substantial increase in the amount of the pension, to lower the eligible age and to provide benefits for spouses who are younger, you would have had such an amendment from me long ago.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his comments. I am rather suspicious that perhaps this is exactly what would have happened.

I also wish to thank the hon. member for Lotbinière for his comments.

I am afraid the hon. member has failed to differentiate between the two types of amendments: the one which allows the House to consider the suggestion that a bill be referred to a committee for one of its sections to be re-examined or reconsidered, and the other one which is called reasoned amendment in English and which is used by a member to indicate why he intends to vote against the principle of the bill.

The reasoned amendment here gives a detailed account of the reasons why the hon. member intends to vote against the bill as such on second or third reading. There is no question then of referring the bill to a committee but simply of saying why the House should vote against the bill as such.

I think that the hon. member is aware of the precedents in this respect.

The other type of amendment suggests that a clause of a bill be referred to a committee for consideration and it is possible of course to give instructions to a committee to consider any clause. Unfortunately, the instructions to be given to the committee must comply with our Standing Orders and a well established precedent is that which is found in Beauchesne in citation 415. I should like to quote from it and to refer hon. members to paragraph (4). I quote:

On the third reading of a bill, an amendment to refer back to the Committee of the Whole must not tend to change the principle approved on the second reading.

• (1740)

418. —On the second reading of a bill, an amendment may be moved expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution, or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees or commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or the opinion of judges. This cannot be done on the third reading because it is not directly connected with any provision—

The principle expounded by the author of citation 418 is to the effect that there should be a strict relevance in the case of an amendment moved at the third or second reading stage.

The 3rd paragraph of citation 246 of the 4th edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms reads as follows:

(3) The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all . . . not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications—

I do not want to read the whole paragraph, but in quoting paragraph 3 of citation 246, I wanted simply to remind the hon. member that it is not possible to instruct the committee to do something the House itself cannot undertake, which the committee cannot be authorized to do, that is to amend the financial orders of the Crown.

I could read other citations, including No. 252, but I do not think it is necessary to do so. It is obvious to me that hon. members could, if they so wished, simply move an amendment to the effect that a particular clause of the bill be reconsidered. A motion to this effect would be acceptable, contrary to that moved by the hon. member.

Moreover, I sincerely believe that it violates our Standing Rules and I do not think that it could be acceptable to the Chair.

[English]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate on third reading will be very brief indeed. I note that there are a number of hon. members who are anxious to make contributions to the debate at third reading stage, and that some of them have spoken already on second reading. I believe there are a small number of hon. members who have speeches to make not of very long duration, but undoubtedly of substance. It now being 17 minutes to six o'clock it would seem entirely possible that we are very close to concluding third reading of this very important measure. That being the case, my only purpose in intervening in the debate is to move, pursuant to Standing Order 6:

That the hours of sitting be extended beyond six o'clock this day until debate upon third reading of Bill C-207 is concluded.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought there was an agreement that we would sit beyond six o'clock for a little while to continue debate on this bill, hopefully to finish it, and I wonder if that is not the better way to do it. I am prepared to sit beyond six o'clock in order to finish this bill. I think many hon. members are prepared to do so, and I believe we could arrive at that conclusion this way rather than by use of a sledge hammer.

Mr. Jerome: I am not trying to do by sledge hammer what was under discussion. I know that the idea of sitting beyond six was under discussion at the time that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) proposed his amendment. However, since the time was running out during which such a motion could be put, I felt it was appropriate to get the floor at this time. I would much prefer to do it by agreement.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I had attempted to get the floor before the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), and I was going to preface my remarks by saying we were prepared to sit until 6.30, and that there had been some discussion along those lines. That was the first sentence I was going to utter.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, our party does agree to sit for a few minutes after six o'clock. But I wonder why such strong pressures were brought to bear lately to have this bill passed hurriedly when it is such an important one.

I would not like the members to be muzzled owing to the swiftness with which some want this bill to be adopted. We are willing to keep sitting, but not after 6.30.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously there is no agreement. I would think in that case—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said, I wonder if there could not now be agreement reached in public that we sit until 6.30 and take a reading at that point.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is open to receive that suggestion. The suggestion is that the House proceed to sit until 6.30—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And take a reading at that point.

Mr. Speaker: —and the question be put at that point?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, I really did not mean that we would end the debate, but at that point we re-assess the situation to find out if we could finish in another eight or ten minutes. I am trying to find a way to end this debate today, and to do it happily by agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, there is no agreement. If there is no agreement the Chair has to put the motion. I will inquire if there is agreement.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) has indicated that there is no agreement. Therefore the question is—

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I tried to explain a few minutes ago that we were willing to have the House sit until 6.30. If at 6.30 the discussion is over, we could proceed with the vote. However, if at 6.30 o'clock, some members want to have the floor, I would not wish to prevent them from doing so. The debate could be resumed to-morrow because I feel the sun will rise again in the morning as usual.

[English]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that that objective can easily be achieved by passing the motion and stopping the debate at 6.30, which would accommodate everybody's point of view.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is obvious to the Chair that the only thing to do is to put the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You blew it, Jim.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Mr. Jerome, seconded by Mr. Watson, moves pursuant to Standing Order 6:

That the hours of sitting be extended beyond six o'clock this day until debate upon third reading of Bill C-207 is concluded.

Are any members objecting?

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: There being more than ten members objecting, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose you have to learn the hard way, Jim.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat what I said before, and add that if the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) had not intervened I would have completed what I had to say by this time. However, we are still prepared to sit until 6.30.

We have in the past waived the notices which have been required. We have been co-operative. We have done all that an opposition could do with respect to expediting this bill, still retaining our right to debate intelligently and responsibly what we think are errors and defects in the legislation. If we did anything less than that we would not be discharging our duty to our constituents and to parliament. And having said that, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this party is still prepared to sit until 6.30 with respect to this measure. I hope that the measure will pass, much as I dislike many aspects of it. And it probably will pass, either by 6.30 or certainly by some time early tomorrow afternoon. It will then go to the other place, and no doubt will become law.

Let me say very hastily that there are three aspects of the bill which disturb me, despite the fact that it is going to pass and that we are not opposing its passage. In the first place, so far as the amounts are concerned, the government has shown itself to have all the characteristics of a shabby, mean, petty-fogging, Scrooge approach to the older people of this land. There is no question about it. Those are the facts. Having calculatedly brought about a measure of inflation in this country to which the older people were exposed as the first victims, and having resisted strongly all attempts from this side of the House—in a non-partisan manner I include members from all opposition parties—over the months and years to expand the spending power of the older people who are in need of increased pensions to make up for the difficulties which inflation has brought upon them, the government has persisted in its attitude. The government voted against our motions to amend existing statutes, motions which all parties on the opposition side launched through the medium of opposition days, and the traditional motions with respect to the Speech from the Throne and budget. Our proposals have not been accepted and everybody on the other side, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down, has voted against them. However, some improvement in the pension position of the elderly is being made and we propose to support it.

The second thing I dislike about the bill is the way it has been introduced. I repeat what I said about the attempts made by the opposition to improve the lot of these people and the rejection of those attempts by the government. Then suddenly, in what appears to be the dying days of Parliament, we are told "Take it or leave it; it has to be through by a certain day and we require from you all forms of acceptance in order that the bill may receive Royal Assent by this Friday". This is not a way to govern this country; this is not a way to pass legislation which is so badly required for the benefit of the old people of this land. I resent having to give my approval under these circumstances and against this background.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there has been a problem in relation to the constitutional issue, the federal-provincial aspect and the abrasive attitude of this government in its approach to the other provinces, in particular the province of Quebec. In this regard I should like to quote from an interview with the Prime Minister published today in the Toronto Star. The interviewer said:

I was wondering too, and I don't want to ask phoney questions about election dates and so on, but it has crossed my mind about the effect of calling an election if this Quebec problem continues over the months.

I say here, Mr. Speaker, that there had been some discussion, as there has been in the press and in the mind of the Prime Minister, about the attitude taken by ministers in the Quebec government on this bill and the lack of consultation on it. There had even been public threats of resignation by Quebec ministers. The question continues:

I wonder what would be the effect of an election with Quebec in this state of semi-turmoil?

This is the answer:

It's hard to say but my guess would be that it would rather serve the cause of federalism and hopefully of our government—

Our Liberal government, of course.

—to have that kind of an election, because I think the people of Quebec want to be reassured that there is at least one strong government somewhere. And if we are campaigning in Quebec and saying: "Look, you may be having troubles locally but don't worry; the country is in good strong hands; please vote for us", I think it wouldn't be disadvantageous to us.

I am sure Premier Bourassa is saying to himself "With friends like these, who needs enemies".

The province of Quebec made its position clear with respect to this bill. I do not necessarily share their views, but there has been abrasiveness and divisiveness between the two governments. In these circumstances, the leader of this government which is trying to push through this bill, publicly makes this cold, calculated statement. With this background, Mr. Speaker, it irks me very much to have to give my approval to this bill but I do so, as do my colleagues. We know the increase is not enough, and it is not given under the circumstances it should be, but we know that these people need it desperately. In these conditions, we propose to do what we can to see that the bill passes and that, hopefully, it will receive Royal Assent within the time required.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to briefly resume my position concerning Bill C-207.

During the debate on second reading, I explained with enough detail that the government behaved in an equival manner when it introduced point-blank this legislation aimed at increasing the old age security pensions. Some errors and, above all, the omissions of the last session are being remedied to a certain extent.

No doubt pressed by the imminence of the next general election, the government did not really try to improve the Old Age Security Act or to provide greater purchasing power to people 65 or over. It was satisfied with some window dressing. It did stop to consider the case of married couples aged 60. And yet, how many times did we urge the government seriously to consider this possibility? They did not care at all about the serious consequences that such a decision might have on the Quebec government, and on this point, I agree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) hides behind a so-called correspondence that they refused to table at the beginning of the afternoon. This is why I speak of a so-called correspondence with the responsible authorities of the Quebec National Assembly.

At a time when unrest prevails in the province, they stir the fire by provoking, arrogantly—this is the very expression used by Premier Bourassa—the Quebec ministers, Messrs. Castonguay, L'Allier, Toupin and Cournoyer. It is very nice to say that they are always ready to consult and co-operate with the Quebec government. It is clear, however, that they could not care less. This is the way to increase social inequities.

Concretely, what does this mean? A Quebec social welfare pension of $135 for persons aged 60 to 64 inclusively. At age 65, the federal Department of National Health and Welfare grants them $285 per month. That difference of $150 is what provoked the Quebec government: it was too much for Mr. Bourassa's cabinet.

I cannot but deplore this situation which could have been avoided if our suggestions had been heeded. I feel sure that if we take away from the Quebec Social Affairs Department responsibility for all families where parents are aged 60 to 65, we will be helping Quebec out of a difficult situation and we will be helping to create the famous just society for which the Canadian people are still waiting.

Mr. Speaker, those were the remarks I wanted to make on third reading.

I should like, on behalf of the people of the riding I am pleased to represent in this House, to indicate that we are, of course, ready to support an increase in the old age security pension, but that we regret the questionable conduct of the government under the present circumstances. And we are all longing for more justice, more equity, more security, to be established, as soon as possible, for all Canadians. That is why we insisted so much for the minister to implement our suggestions, in view of the fact that our amendments were rejected.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, before you call it six o'clock, may I ask permission of the House to revert to routine proceedings in order to table a committee report?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS, RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, among the people we all represent the saddest, surely, are those of advanced age who are unable to fend for themselves and who go through all forms of privation in trying to retain their properties. I know several. In my constituency, Halifax-East Hants, there are people who will eat only one meal a day instead of three. Those people will do almost anything to retain the place in which they have lived over the years. It struck me, when we were considering the formula involving the consumer price index, that perhaps we are not really achieving justice for Canadians from coast to coast; so, I went to the consumer price index itself to see what it involved. It is my impression, having looked at the formula on which the consumer price index is based, that it simply does not provide a sufficiently good answer for the plight of the old age pensioner.

Let me refer to the Canada Year Book for 1970-71, and especially to page 1059, where one will find a section devoted to the consumer price index. I will not read all of it, but I will read enough to prepare a foundation for my argument:

> The purpose of the consumer price index is to measure the movement from month to month in retail prices of goods and services bought by a representative cross-section of the Canadian urban population. For a particular article or service, a price index number is simply the price of the article in one period of time expressed as a percentage of its price in a reference period, usually called a base period. However, indexes for individual goods may be combined to form indexes representing prices of broad groups of goods and services. Thus, the consumer price index relates to the wide range of goods and services bought by Canadian urban families. The index expresses the combined prices of such goods each month as a percentage of their prices in the base period 1961.
> The group of goods and services represented in the index is called the index 'basket' and 'weights' are assigned to the price indexes of individual items for purposes of combining them into an over-all or composite index. The weights reflect the relative importance of items in expenditures of middle-size urban families with medium incomes. The basket is an unchanging or equivalent quantity and quality of goods and services. Only prices change from month to month and the index, therefore, measures the effect of changing prices on the cost of purchasing the fixed basket.

Having laid that foundation, let me make a telling point against the use of the consumer price index. I continue quoting from that article:

> The basket and weights now used in the index are based on expenditures in 1957—

That was 15 years ago, Mr. Speaker. I continue:

> —of families of two to six persons, with annual incomes of $2,500 to $7,000, living in cities of 30,000 population or over.

The injustice lies in this, Sir: That index is not a proper representation of the type of cost that the older person is apt to encounter. For one thing, the older person is apt to incur higher medical costs than a younger person may encounter. Or, he may need special clothing, special nursing care, or the like for coping with the problems associated with old age. In short, the problems that the older person faces are not the same as the problems that the population in general face.

Second, Sir, the cost of living, as reflected by the consumer price index, is not the same everywhere. Living costs in small towns are apt to be different from those of our great metropolitan centres. That is simply not taken into account. For instance, property taxes will vary, and the like. So, I suggest that there is real weakness here in using the consumer price index formula. That formula arrives at one figure. It is inflexibly applied from coast to coast and does not take into account the varieties of experiences that older people may undergo.

Third, I say that the index is not sufficient, because the floor itself is not sufficient. The floor should be put at around $100, instead of at the figure that is proposed. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because the formula, again, does not take into account another great fact of life, namely, that poverty levels have been established in Canada; and, so far as I can determine, the poverty level is at least $250 or $300 per person higher than amounts being proposed in this particular measure. So on the basis that half a loaf is better than no loaf at all, I will support the bill; but may I say that it is only a small step forward and that a better step could have been taken. We might have adopted something better than the consumer price index as a measuring tool, something that would be more representative of those classic studies that have been carried out in the last 10 or 15 years involving the poverty level, below which Canadians should not be allowed to exist.

• (1810)

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the third reading of this bill, I have a few remarks to make. The first is about the government's insistence on having this bill passed so hastily. I wonder why and we will try to find the reason.

First, this bill was passed on first reading and referred to the committee last Friday, that is, May 12 at 5:40 p.m., at the end of the day and of the week. The bill was considered the following Monday, namely Monday last, even though committees seldom sit on Monday, and the report was immediately submitted at 5:50 p.m. This means that the government is quite anxious to have this bill passed, and even though it will help considerably our senior citizens, I do not think the government should insist so much on having the Senate deal with it so soon. The hon. senators will only have to repeat their memorable feat of a few months ago when they railroaded the tax bill. I am convinced that this bill will get the royal assent tomorrow night.

At all events, it seems to me that the Canadian people will soon have to choose a new government. This is why we should expedite this bill. At last the Canadians will be able to elect a real government which will set up a real system, the one that the Canadian people want.

The present social and economic system prevents the weak, the handicapped and the aged from having access to the tremendous wealth of our country. We, Créditistes, believe that Canada has the necessary economic resources to enable all Canadians to live above the poverty line.

All the remedies applied in Canada in the past to solve the problem of poverty have been applied at the income level. Attempts have been made by both governments and labour unions to increase personal incomes, but nobody has ever thought of increasing the purchasing power, or at least of keeping it from decreasing all the time as is the case at present.

Statistics Canada recently published a very significant table in this regard.

If the price index is considered on a basis of 100, we see that in 1947, we could buy with 65.6 cents what costs $1.33.4 today.

Mr. Speaker, this means that every time the cost of living rises, the purchasing power is reduced, especially for older people and all those who cannot earn their living. They are pitied but are only given meagre pensions or welfare allowances.

This is why the Social Credit party has been urging for a long time that older people's rights be recognized. We must not grant them pensions as we give charity. No. They have rights, and it is these rights that we want the government to recognize.

In 1965, the committee for the advancement of older citizens gave evidence before a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on the new Canada Pension Plan. Here is what was said at that time:

> We are taking the liberty of saying openly that we do not want an increase in the cost of living, we want a decrease. The increase in prices is a direct cut in benefits, thus reducing all income and mostly the income of those who live on small private pensions. A cost of living adjustment of $2 cannot compensate the increase in prices.

Further on, it says:

> We urge that adequate provisions and arrangements be included in the new legislation to ensure that all pension plans provide a minimum basic pension of $100 a month. We also request that the age limit for both plans be brought down to age 60 for women and age 65 for men, when full benefits should be paid.

Not just a portion of the allowance, according to the wealth of individuals or the savings they may have achieved! I shall discuss that point later on in my speech.

I continue to quote:

> Old-age pensions were introduced in Canada under economic conditions very different from those now prevailing. In those days, old-age pensions were hand-outs, bare pittances subject to means tests, to keep body and soul together at age 70. When the fire of life was barely a spark, and life expectancy was much shorter than today.

Mr. Speaker, this is no longer a question of charity to older people. It is a matter of right which we seem to forget. Instead of thinking about things and goods that Canada has to offer to older people, we think in terms of dollars. As the government is "broke" it does not show much generosity to older people.

I quote from the White Paper on Income Security in Canada tabled a few months ago by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). It says on page 1, first column:

> This occasion, when new income security policies are being considered, affords an opportunity for a statement of purpose and basic policy. Although any new initiatives are necessarily limited by what is economically feasible—

Can we see the existing needs? The government's new initiatives are being paralyzed by the economic situation. We are thinking in terms of dollars. There is no consideration as to what may be offered and as to what the country is in a position to offer, be it for food, housing, clothing, any kind of services. We think of the expenses that the country can afford.

And in the center column, we find this—I think it is precious, Mr. Speaker—and I quote:

> Unless the system gives most individuals capable of working the opportunity to productively exercise their initiative, the national wealth to finance income security will not be generated, and the country will lack the means to assist those who cannot participate fully or partially in the labour force.

Why the "unless"? Do Canadians refuse this productive exercise, Mr. Speaker? Is there something wrong with the system in the eyes of those who wrote the white paper? They seem to have doubts about the system.

Mr. Speaker, if there is something wrong with the system, let us change it and let us allow the elderly to receive what they are expecting.

In 1967, I submitted to the House a motion which provided that both spouses would simultaneously receive their old age pension.

• (1820)

On May 7th 1971, I again insisted that when someone receives his old age security pension, even if his spouse has not reached pension age, the latter has a right to take advantage of this pension as well as the former. In my opinion, if two persons live on such a pension, even if it is now being increased to $150, it is still not enough.

Then, if the spouse were also to receive the old age ssecurity pension, we would allow at least the couple to live decently upon retirement.

When I put forward this motion on May 7th, 1971, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) who was then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare said about me:

> —aroused my curiosity to the point where I wondered whether the speech he delivered so masterly
> "would not fall in the darkness and void of times".

The member for Hull should have said instead that the speech made by the hon. member for Abitibi "would not fall in the darkness and void of the liberal party". That would have been far more accurate, for we are still at the same point as we were then, and the liberal party overlooks the spouses of persons 65 years old.

With the low increase it now grants to our senior citizens, which in fact does not exceed $12.30 a month, the government thinks it can call an election next week and go to the people hoping that the old people will crawl before it, before the liberal party, and carry it back to power.

Mr. Speaker, I think and I hope that the government is wrong. In view of the way the government keeps on insisting on that increase in income, and the participation of the guaranteed minimum income, we, of the social credit party, request that the pension be universal irrespective of whatever other income our senior citizens might have.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I should like to submit two cases out of the hundreds I have dealt with during the past few years. Let us take the case of a man from La Sarre, my own city, a close neighbour of mine. He has reached retirement age. Having worked hard from age 12 or 13, he saved, managed carefully all his life. He and his wife were never seen in taverns or theaters. They deprived themselves of amenities all their lives and thus managed to put aside a few thousand dollars. Today, they are being penalized for their thrift.

This man invested his savings through a bank, in bonds and shares in companies. He therefore receives interest or dividends on his investments. He has to pay income tax on this income. Furthermore, he and his wife are denied the supplement to which others will be entitled and which, under the new legislation, would amount to some $1600 a year for the two of them.

Mr. Speaker, the government penalizes those who save money during their lifetime and takes possession of those savings.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an injustice for these persons, and this is why we ask that this pension be granted to any person aged 60 or more, without discrimination.

The same situation exists in the case of people aged 65 or more who want to keep on working. For instance, one individual in my riding had a contract for the distribution of mail. After I had considered his case with him, he found out that he was working for nothing, that is, the guaranteed income supplement that he and his wife were losing was roughly equivalent to the amount that he would have earned distributing mail for 52 weeks. Once again, Mr. Speaker, this is unfair for an individual who wants to serve his country.

I think that Canada can and must grant our senior citizens a decent pension enabling them to live as they wish, to keep on being happy as they wish and they must not be deprived of this.

Lastly, the chairman of the Canadian Pacific, Mr. Crump, has retired. I assume that after spending more than 50 years with this company, including more than 20 years as chairman, Mr. Crump does not have to worry about his financial status or his leisure. However, Mr. Speaker, there are not very many Canadians in the same situation as the chairman of the Canadian Pacific. Most people have been taxed during most of their working years and reach retirement age with no income, except for a few of them. And when they do get some income, when they have saved something, they are penalized one way or the other.

This situation must cease as quickly as possible, and this is why we have introduced these amendments which have been rejected. I think that the people of Canada will accept these amendments in approximately two months from now.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I see the time is rapidly approaching 6.30, which was the magic hour; I do not think we can really complete this business tonight. I have had discussions with hon. members in other parties and we are agreeable, if the House wishes, to an order of the House being made now, which would provide that all questions be put to dispose of the third reading tomorrow after not more than one hour of debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is that agreed?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Although we would still be prepared to continue to sit and finish this bill tonight, if that is not possible we are prepared to agree to this order being made. I would hope that in the hour's debate tomorrow I might get five or seven minutes.

Some hon. Members: Me, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being past six o'clock the House will adjourn until tomorrow at 2 o'clock p.m.

It being twenty-eight minutes after six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. I understand that there has been consultation with the House leaders by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) who is unable to be here today but who would have moved this motion had it been possible for him to be here. The motion is prompted by a sentence handed down in the courts in Hamilton a few days ago involving the imposition of corporal punishment on a young offender who, in addition to being sentenced to ten strokes of the lash, received a rather substantial jail sentence. Therefore I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams):

That this House recommend the suspension of sentences of corporal punishment until the disposition of Bill C-2 by this parliament.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is somewhat irregular, I realize, but there were consultations with the hon. member for Egmont and I undertook to examine whether it would be possible to accede to this request. I find that there are some difficulties in accepting the motion but that the objective, hopefully, can be reached by another route. At least, that is under consideration. Regretfully, I would have to say no to the acceptance of the motion at this time, although I agree with the spirit of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a typical Liberal position.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East is submitted to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time.

TABLING OF SEABED ARMS CONTROL TREATY AND CANADIAN INTERPRETATIVE DECLARATION

COMMUNICATIONS

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN DEPARTMENT AND EUROPEAN SPACE RESEARCH ORGANIZATION ON CO-OPERATION IN FIELD OF ADVANCED SPACE TECHNOLOGY

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in the two official languages copies of the memorandum of understanding between the Department of Communications of Canada and the European Space Research Organization concerning their co-operation in the field of advanced space technology, and also a copy of a diplomatic note to the Director General of the European Space Research Organization from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

URBAN AFFAIRS

SEWAGE DISPOSAL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and compelling necessity. It involves the recent development of a water recycling system undertaken by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Ontario Research Foundation which will make the probability of the saving of enormous costs for municipalities across Canada a distinct reality in a very short period of time. I urge and recommend that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs take steps to confer with municipal authorities, with the objective—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he must indicate what the motion is. The hon. member is now urging the minister to do something or other; that, of course, has nothing to do with the spirit of the motion. The hon. member should indicate the urgency of the motion and then propose the motion.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, the urgency is that throughout Canada there are many pipeline sewage disposal plants being constructed, and if a conference could be arranged with municipal authorities there would be a saving of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money. I believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

The Chair, of course, cannot disagree with the hon. member's suggestion. All I am doing now is to invite him to put his motion.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by the hon. member beside me—

Mr. MacInnis: Who is he?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, the Tories are not interested in saving millions of dollars in taxes.

I would move:

That an appropriate committee of this House be instructed to discuss how communications could be made to municipal authorities for saving millions of dollars of taxes through the use of a new invention that has been researched by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the hon. member a copy of the motion? The hon. member appears to be on weak ground. There is no seconder and no motion.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would take great pleasure in seconding the motion proposed by the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member for Hamilton West has the motion? Perhaps the matter might be reconsidered at a more appropriate time.

PUBLIC ORDER

SITUATION IN QUEBEC—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING ATTITUDE OF VOTERS IN CASE OF FEDERAL ELECTION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister of Canada was reported today by the press as having stated that the present unrest in Quebec would prompt Quebecers to vote for his party not only because the Liberal party represents a strong government but also because the Quebec government is weak. Obviously, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can clarify that statement, and also whether he intends to make an election issue out of that important question, namely the unrest in Quebec.

Can the Prime Minister throw light on the statement reported in the press?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

I have been warned that such was actually the interpretation put on my remarks. I should like hon. members who might be interested to read the actual text of my interview. I have it here but I will not quote from it. I can however reply to the hon. member's question by saying the matter was discussed within the context of difficulties our government might encounter, for instance, if holding an election several months from now, let us suppose in the fall, if the disturbances, and what the reporter called a semi-revolution or semi-disturbance, were to continue for several months, his actual words being "If this Quebec problem continues over the month".

My reply was that such a situation would not prevent us from holding an election in Quebec.

I was replying about a hypothetical case. However, I am very happy, Mr. Speaker, to be able to say that in my opinion that supposition is not materializing. The interview took place several days ago and the developments of the past few days indicate that, on the contrary, the Quebec government has shown considerable control of the situation and is indeed a strong government.

The supposition is therefore not materializing.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the Prime Minister has obviously clarified his statement by saying that the Quebec government is strong, I would like to know, following the creation of a security group by the Solicitor General to investigate social troubles in Canada, whether any security group has reported to the cabinet the true reasons for the troubles in Quebec, and whether the Prime Minister intends to cooperate with the premier of Quebec in order to restore the situation in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member is mistaken when he speaks of the role of what he calls "a security group". The RCMP operates in Quebec as in other provinces, as a federal police force, under certain circumstances. There is no other security force, to use the hon. member's words, than that one, which operates in all provinces.

As for a report to the cabinet referred to by the hon. member, there has never been any; there has certainly not been any since the recent developments. I am not speaking about October 1970, of course.

As for the question asking whether we want to co-operate with the Quebec government, the answer is yes, of course. I also stated in the interview mentioned by the hon. member that there was no question of having the same type of co-operation as then. In October 1970, the Quebec government and the city of Montreal had asked for the help of the armed forces. I made it clear that there was now no similar request, nor any discussion on the matter. This confirms what I said in my first answer, that Premier Bourassa acted with firmness and stability in the circumstances, and that the country is grateful to him.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Will the Prime Minister undertake to make a statement in the House on Tuesday next that there will be a summit conference between himself and the Prime Minister of Quebec on restoring amicable arrangements?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the question is at least procedurally questionable.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR LIST OF AMERICAN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who was scheduled to be here but who I am sure is away for a good reason, may I ask either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whichever one may be able to deal with the matter, whether it is possible for the government now to inform parliament with respect to the names of the 1,500 or so United States corporations which are using the DISC program or have registered for the DISC program?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is meeting today with a delegation of Russian officials who are here in Canada and he therefore cannot be in the House. The list of companies which have applied for DISC registration in the United States is not yet available for public scrutiny. Therefore we have not been able to obtain a copy of it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES—DATE FOR RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or any minister, the following question. In view of a report that Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance Grey has stated that decisions in Washington are likely to determine the access of Canadian exports to foreign markets for the next decade, can we be informed, in light of this serious statement by a senior government official, whether trade negotiations between Canada and the United States have been recommenced and, if not, whether a date has been set for these negotiations to start?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Some changes have taken place in the official structure in the United States within the last few days, as the hon. member will be aware. It does not therefore seem prudent to be commencing official negotiations at this time.

REPORTED INVESTIGATIONS BY UNITED STATES INTO CERTAIN IMPORTS FROM CANADA—SOURCE OF INITIATIVE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I appreciate that perhaps the parliamentary secretary is at some disadvantage, but there is another question which he might answer or take as notice. It arises out of a report that investigations have been initiated in Washington into a number of Canadian imports such as aluminum, potato granules and sulphur as well as tires from the Michelin company in Nova Scotia. Arising out of this report, can the parliamentary secretary inform the House whether the department is aware of these initiatives to investigate these products and, if so, whether the initiative came from some government department in Washington or from private companies that are being hurt by our exports; and what is the purpose of the investigation?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The products mentioned by the leader of the New Democratic Party are dealt with in different ways. If we take aluminum as an example, there has been a request for anti-dumping duties to be applied. This request came from a private company in the United States. The government of the United States is under an obligation to investigate and to respond to the charge. So it is not an action that has been invoked by the government itself.

The position of the United States government regarding the Michelin Tire Company would be entirely different, because it would involve countervailing duties that they might consider applicable against the Michelin company, which would be an action taken by the United States government. But there is no indication—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are going a little far afield at this point. I see three members who are seeking to ask supplementaries. I will recognize one hon. member and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and return to the supplementaries later. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REASON FOR DELAY IN RESUMING DISCUSSIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister. Since he and President Nixon agreed to arrange discussions on trade between their respective ministers, what is the reason for the delay in holding these discussions? Is it due to reluctance on the part of the United States government, or is the Canadian government itself deliberately withholding any discussions at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, we are not deliberately delaying, to use the words of the hon. member. We have done what we undertook to do; we have reviewed our position. We are looking at various modifications that we might find desirable, and we are prepared to meet with the United States officials at any time they judge convenient for them after they have done the same thing.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I put a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is the delay due in any way to the fact that the Canadian government is prepared to make some very serious concessions respecting the auto pact but is waiting till after the election before making these concessions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not acceptable procedurally.

MANPOWER

CLOSING OF CIP PLANT, TEMISCAMING—REIMBURSEMENT WITH INTEREST OF CONTRIBUTIONS MADE BY EMPLOYEES TO THE PENSION FUND

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the hon. Minister of Justice or rather to the hon. Minister of Finance. One of my colleagues says there is no justice there.

Mr. Speaker, I believe my question concerns many federal representatives. It arises from the closing of the Canadian International Paper plant in Temiscaming on May 31. The employees contributed for a number of years to a pension plan to draw a pension when they reached the age of 65. Now they are asking the company to reimburse the amounts paid under the pension plan, along with the interest, since they will be laid off on May 31.

Since I am told that insurance and trust companies in Montreal have these amounts, can the Minister tell us whether he intends to take any action so that the CIP employees may get these amounts since they will no longer be working for the company?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that this comes under my jurisdiction but in any case, I will consider the representations made by the hon. member and I will give him an answer.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REASON FOR DELAY IN RESUMING DISCUSSIONS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, perhaps I might direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since there appears now to be a serious reduction in our balance of trade internationally, with a resulting increase in the importance of our trade relations with the United States, I should like to know whether the delay in the negotiations has been caused by the swiftly changing pattern in the United States making it necessary for a more complicated and in-depth submission on the part of Canadian officials?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any change in the underlying circumstances except, of course, the change in respect of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Danforth: I have a supplementary question which I think is within the purview of the minister to answer. Because of the major importance of these negotiations to Canada and the necessity for early and favourable progress, can the minister indicate whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his top departmental officials are engaged in direct negotiations with their counterparts in the United States, or are we still at the stage of lower level departmental communication?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, the position is as expressed by the Prime Minister, namely, that both sides have been reviewing their positions with a view to resuming negotiations. We are ready to do so at any time but the time has not appeared opportune for the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North and then return to the second question in respect of which there are supplementaries.

UNITED NATIONS

VOTE ON LEGALIZING POSSESSION AND USE OF MARIJUANA—REASON FOR ALLEGED CANADIAN ABSTENTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether a vote was taken yesterday or recently in the United Nations on the legalization of possession and use of marijuana, and if a vote was taken in the economic committee of the United Nations why did Canada abstain from voting?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to ascertain whether those are the facts. I will take notice of the question.

Mr. Woolliams: When the minister is checking into the matter, will he ascertain whether all other nations voted against it while Canada abstained?

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF CANADIAN CORPORATE BEHAVIOUR GUIDELINES AND EXTENSION OF POLICY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce having regard to those corporations which have made applications under DISC. Has the situation been looked at in an attempt to determine whether these corporations have violated the good corporate behaviour guidelines laid down by that department, and is it intended to extend this policy whenever it is discovered that corporations are making applications under DISC?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, where we are aware of companies that have taken out DISC corporation status in the United States we have had discussions with some of them. I cite, for example, the automobile companies with which we have had discussions during the last two or three weeks. In so far as other companies are concerned, we are attempting to gather as much information as is possible under the circumstances and we are reviewing what action we can take in that regard. I would draw the hon. member's attention to the changes made in the budget which will make it possible for Canadian corporations to deal more effectively on a competitive basis with the DISC corporations in the United States.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, since so much of government policy is going to hinge on knowing which corporations have made applications for DISCs, can we get a firm answer from the parliamentary secretary on whether the corporate guidelines are going to include those corporations that have made such applications?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take notice of that question.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT SAFEGUARDS WILL NOT BE ABANDONED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact it is reported this morning in the business section of the Globe and Mail that the Under Secretary of the United States, Mr. Paul A. Volcker, has intimated that the United States government has not reviewed its trade proposals and does not intend to until after the forthcoming federal election in Canada, and in view of the claim there has been a deal made between the Prime Minister of this country and the President of the United States to give up the safeguards in the auto pact after the federal election, will the Prime Minister assure the House that, whatever else happens in respect of the auto pact negotiations, these production safeguards will not be abandoned after the next election?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for assuming that we will be here as a strong government after the next election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is a rhetorical suggestion.

Mr. Trudeau: I was, of course, referring to the hon. member of the NDP, but I know the Conservatives are nervous about this, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Call it now.

Mr. Trudeau: But I do take exception to the implications or innuendoes in the question as asked. It seems to me that the facts as recited by the hon. member, which he says he got from the Globe and Mail, rather give the lie to the question asked by the former leader of the NDP when he assumed that we were dragging our feet. I wish the two members would get together.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a last supplementary. We do have to get on as we are still on the first round of questioning.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I directed the question to the right hon. member for Mount Royal asking for his guarantee because I knew I need not ask for that from the hon. member for York South.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask a supplementary question to settle this matter. Will the Prime Minister make a statement in the House today or tomorrow on the question of the date of the general election?

Mr. Trudeau: Is this an urgent question of national interest, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL NOTICES OF LAND EXPROPRIATIONS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Is he in a position to indicate to the House the date of the gazetteing of notices of expropriation respecting the acquisition of land for the proposed airport at Pickering?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there are about 500 titles involved and at least 500 interested parties who have to be notified before we are able to do so. I should think this could not be done before early August.

ALBERTA INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT CONFERENCE ON FEASIBILITY OF MACKENZIE VALLEY CORRIDOR—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the plans of the government of Alberta to call a joint industry-government conference regarding a study of the feasibility aspects of an energy corridor down the Mackenzie River Valley, will the Prime Minister inform the House whether his government is in liaison with the Alberta government in this regard and, if not, is the federal government going to make known its own findings at that time?

Right Hon. P. E. INDIAN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—INQUIRY AS TO CASH OFFER TO SETTLE ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Are he and his department now considering the making of a specific offer to the Native Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories in return for the extinguishment of treaties 8 and II with regard to their land rights?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the government's position in that respect is well known. We are prepared to abide by the treaties and we have offered two options to the Indians: either their lands or a compensation. They have not made any choice.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would he mind informing the House frankly whether the department has now under consideration a specific offer to the brotherhood with regard to extinguishing treaties 8 and 11 with respect to their land rights?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has reservations regarding a question in those terms. I do not think an hon. member has the right to ask a question in the words used by the hon. member. I think that is argumentative. But the question has been asked and the minister might be allowed to reply.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—RIGHTS OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Have the offers made to Indians and Eskimos of the Northwest Territories been made also to the Indians of northern Quebec, to those of the James Bay area?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the two situations are not similar, because in the Northwest Territories land control comes directly under the federal government while in the James Bay area it comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec government. However, the principles are the same.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS RESPECTING TREATY NO. 7

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he give the House and the country the decision with regard to treaty No. 7 and the Indians' claims for their ammunition money for the past 97 years?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we got a recommendation from commissioner Barber to that effect. We are considering this recommendation and we will inform the House when a decision has been taken.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STANBURY-FIELDS REPORT

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on another matter.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and will return to a supplementary by the hon. member for Calgary North in a moment.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, my question for the minister concerns the request for tabling of the Stanbury-Fields report and the response of the parliamentary secretary during the adjournment debate on May 1 when he said in effect that the federal government would have tabled the report if it could have secured the concurrence of the government of British Columbia. Later a public statement by the British Columbia Minister of Municipal Affairs was reported in which he denied the allegation that the report was being kept confidential because the British Columbia government had not assented to its being made public. Would the minister recheck the information on which the statement of the parliamentary secretary was based? Alternatively, would he inquire whether the British Columbia government has changed its original position on this matter?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indians Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the government of British Columbia has changed its position on that subject. If it has, however, and is ready to allow us to table the report, we will be glad to do so.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF SUGGESTED MACKENZIE VALLEY CORRIDOR FOLLOWING PROPOSED HIGHWAY ROUTE—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the original question about an energy corridor down the Mackenzie Valley and the Prime Minister's announcement of a new highway to the north, may I ask him whether there have been any discussions or negotiations with regard to having the energy corridor follow that highway down through Alberta to bring energy supplies from the north to the industrial centers of Canada and elsewhere?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the member asks whether there were any discussions I am not sure with whom he means the discussions might have taken place. There were, of course, discussions within the federal government and cabinet, and the purport of my decision was to indicate that we would be planning the road and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has already said that surveys are proceeding along that basis. The intention would be to have a road which preferably could be the core of such an energy corridor down the Mackenzie Valley.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF FUNDS TO UNION OF NOVA SCOTIA INDIANS RESPECTING HUMAN RIGHTS PROPOSAL

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Would the Secretary of State be good enough to investigate the claim of the President of the Union of Nova Scotia Indians that moneys approved in principle by the minister's officials for the human rights proposal submitted by the union have been held up and no explanation given? Would the minister be good enough to use his good offices to expedite the matter as soon as possible?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member is talking about. I shall inquire and I am confident that everything relating to grants to Indian associations is considered by the government very quickly.

AGRICULTURE

PROGRAM TO CONTROL SWAMP FEVER IN HORSES—AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether the program for control of swamp fever in horses will be compulsory, and what compensation will be paid for infected animals?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the requirement to have horses subjected to a test or indeed to be slaughtered should they show positive results from the test is not compulsory. There will be compulsory quarantine if a horse should have a positive reaction to the test. There will be a compensation program effective as of yesterday, and the details of the amounts will be announced shortly.

Mr. Foster: Would the minister consider making the compensation for these animals retroactive to January 1, 1971?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, that is a representation. The hon. member for Edmonton East.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION ACT

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON PROPOSED CHANGES AND EFFECT ON APPEAL BACKLOG

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in view of press statements in recent days regarding proposed changes to the Immigration Act, would the minister inform the House what those changes are and whether in any way they will affect the backlog of cases before the Immigration appeal Board?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the changes to the act are very comprehensive and too detailed to explain to the House now. Certainly they will have a position effect on reducing the causes that led to this backlog in appeals. In other words, when the new act is before us in the fall it will have a positive effect in this area.

SUGGESTED PLACING OF IMMIGRATION UNDER SEPARATE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the present confusion in the department in regard to Immigration, is the government considering separating immigration from manpower and placing it under a full-time ministry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, I am sure, appreciates that a question asked in those terms is not in order. The second part of the question might be in order, but I see no point in allowing a question to be asked in those terms. the hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the Prime Minister is this: Is the government considering separating immigration from manpower and placing it under a full-time ministry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this time we are not contemplating any new administrative arrangement concerning that department.

ABORTION—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO PROTECT NURSES AND OTHER HOSPITAL EMPLOYEES NOT WISHING TO PARTICIPATE IN OPERATIONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the difficulty experienced by some nurses and other hospital employees who do not wish to participate in performing abortions, can the minister inform the House whether he intends to introduce any legislation that would adequately protect the position of such employees?

• (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is no present intention to introduce any changes in the law. The relationships of nurses to hospitals and their general employment relationships would, of course, ordinarily fall within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this does involve federal law, could the minister indicate if his department is considering legislation on the matter?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, the problem to which the hon. member has specifically referred is rather more within provincial jurisdiction than within ours. I am not sure any of his colleagues would go along with him in trying to solve the problem through the federal field.

POTATOES—EXTENSION OF DIVERSION PROGRAM—ADEQUACY TO STRENGTHEN MARKET

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the welcome announcement he made recently that the diversion program for potatoes in New Brunswick was being extended. Is it estimated that this extension will meet the requests of the five potato organizations which forwarded their representations to him recently through the Minister of Agriculture of Prince Edward Island to an extent that will strengthen the market?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this action has already had some influence in strengthening the market in the days since the extension was announced. At this point we cannot say precisely how much diversion will take place, but certainly it will be up to the maximum capability of the starch plants to receive and process potatoes for the time involved.

VIET NAM WAR—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON EVACUATION OF CANADIANS FROM NORTH VIET NAM AND ACTIVITIES OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he now advise if he has any information on the evacuation of any Canadian nationals from North Viet Nam since the escalation of the war, and also can he advise if personnel of the ICC in the area are performing any duties or functions, or if in fact there are any personnel in the area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had better make inquiries before I answer that question in order to make sure that my information is fully up to date.

GRAIN

CLOSURE OF ELEVATORS FOLLOWING ACQUISITION OF FEDERAL GRAIN BY MANITOBA POOL—ACTION TO PROTECT FARMERS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. With reference to the takeover by Manitoba Pool Elevators of the line elevator system of Federal Grain and the consequent announcement of closure of elevators which is causing great hardship for many farmers, can the minister say whether the Wheat Board is looking into these closures with a view to protection of the farmers concerned?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not had specific closures brought to my attention. These, of course, are ordinarily undertaken by the elevator company concerned on its own examination of the financial situation and presumably with the best interests of the farmers in mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that there are only three or four minutes left before the end of the question period, and even that may be stretching the time a little bit. I note that the hon. member for Churchill has a supplementary and he will be recognized for that purpose, but it should be brief.

Mr. Simpson: Is the minister saying that he has not had representations to have the Wheat Board look into the situation caused by these closures?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I said that none had been directed to my attention.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that television stations are now announcing that "Sesame Street" will not be carried on most of the stations concerned this year because there has been a change in its designation from a neutral position to an American position in terms of Canadian content, in light of its educational value would the minister give consideration to having this program re-established in its neutral position with regard to Canadian content?

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO PLANS TO INCREASE NUMBER OF FAMILY DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the overwhelming evidence given by people recently indicating the great need for family doctors, has the minister any plans for increasing the output of family doctors?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. There was some commotion and I did not fully hear the hon. member's question. Would he kindly repeat it?

Mr. Rynard: In view of indications by the people that their great need today is for more family doctors, what plans does he have to meet this need?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts about a question so general in nature which has been asked a number of times in past weeks, but if the minister can reply in a few words he has just about ten seconds to do so.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. member to the very detailed answers I gave to the same question in recent weeks indicating that a great deal has been done.

Mr. Rynard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is not the question at all. A news release was issued about a week ago but it had nothing to do with the manpower situation.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DISTRIBUTION OF BOOKLET DEALING WITH SUPERMARKET PRICING—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED CONTROL OF PRODUCTS FROM FARM TO SHELF

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has his attention been drawn to the study by a professor of sociology at Simon Fraser University which finds that supermarket chains are masters of the illusionary pricing technique, and often control products from farm to store shelf to the detriment of the consumer and, if so, would he consider making a grant available so that this booklet could be widely distributed across Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that a question such as this one should normally be put on the order paper. But the question has been asked and the minister might reply briefly because we have almost run out of time.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, now that the hon. member's comment and the booklet have been brought to my attention, I will examine them with great interest.

Mrs. MacInnis: If, on examination, the minister does not want to do this, will he consider an investigation into the control by the supermarkets of products from farm to grocery shelf?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a hypothetical question or a representation.

Mrs. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is not a representation. It is a question that I am asking. I am asking if the minister will conduct an investigation into the control by supermarket chains of products from farm to grocery shelf? There is a question mark at the end of that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that my impression, gained over the years, is that all representations have a question mark at the end when they are made during the question period.

Is he aware that many persons, unemployed for the past three months, have not yet received their unemployment insurance benefits? If so, would the minister advise us whether this delay is due to a lack of funds on the part of the commission or to the incompetence of the central office civil servants in Montreal?

DISPUTE WITH NABET—TELEGRAM FROM UNION REQUESTING MINISTER OF LABOUR TO REVIEW NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he received a telegram from NABET requesting him to review the negotiation proceedings between that organization and the CBC and, if so, what was his answer?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): I have received that telegram, Mr. Speaker, and I am giving consideration to it.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the lengthy time that negotiations have been proceeding without having come to any conclusion, will the minister speed up his review so that his thoughts can be made known to the parties in the very near future— tomorrow, let us say?

Mr. Speaker: Again I suggest that this is a suggestion or representation. We have just about run out of time, but before calling orders of the day the Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East for a last question.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF AMENDMENT DEFINING FISHERMEN AS INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS—CONSULTATION WITH CERTAIN PROVINCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he consulted with the provinces of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and British Columbia on the provisions of Bill C-183—I am thinking especially of clause 107(1)—has he also consulted with the fishermen and, if not, will he do so?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there have been very extensive consultations with the fishermen and the Fisheries Council. The standing committee is currently sitting and has heard both of those bodies. I am not in a position to answer this afternoon on whether or not there were consultations with the provinces.

• (1500)

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question. Is the minister of the opinion now that there is dual jurisdiction with respect to fishermen and bargaining?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to give a legal opinion on that question. We obviously took the position when we introduced the provisions in the bill that there was federal jurisdiction, and we intend to proceed on those grounds unless and until challenged.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for the Yukon is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: My question of privilege involves an alteration to Hansard. On a previous occasion the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in reply to a question of mine deleted a whole word—either that or his officials did—entirely changing the senses of the answer. On page 2351 of Hansard for yesterday a word has been changed which completely alters the senses of what the minister said. On the previous occasion, his answer was in English and that might have been forgiven, but this time he spoke in French and distinctly used the French word "minorité" and it appears in Hansard today as "majority".

It may not have been the minister who altered Hansard; it could have been his executive assistant who often reads the blues. But in my view it is a breach of the privileges of members of the House to have this happen. The least the minister could do would be to instruct his helpers not to change the sense of his answers by such blatant alterations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House Leader about the business for the rest of this week and for next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, when orders of the day are called we will continue with Bill C-207 which is under a House order that the debate shall end within an hour. Following that, we will take Bill C-208, the Veterans Act, Bill C-211, Election Expenses, Bill C-203, the Representation Commissioner Act, Bill C-7, the Explosives Act and Bill C-191, Wildlife. On Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, I should like to call the budget debate.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact, as has been noted by the Chair and by myself, that between now and the end of June there are only 12 days left for government parliamentary business, would the government House Leader give some indication as soon as he can which bills now on the order paper are, in the opinion of the government, of immediate priority so that he can continue to get the co-operation of the official opposition in advancing discussion of those measures?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the way in which Bill C-207 and Bill C-208 have been dealt with. If priority is required, I would at the moment indicate that Bill C-211 is a priority item, and the foreign takeovers bill would have a high priority as well as the Representation Commissioner bill. All the bills are quite important, but if I had to list them I would do it in that way at the moment.

Mr. Bell: Have you heard from the Senate lately?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ESCALATION OF PENSIONS, RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS, INCREASE IN GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 17, consideration the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on third reading of this bill dealing with the rise in the old age security pension of $2.88 to cover the cost of living increase, I might say that this indicates the government finally has seen the light and realizes the necessity, because of inflation, of guaranteeing some automatic pension increase to those people who are over 65 who are, in some cases, unable to work. In view of the rapid rate of inflation in recent years, it is only just that this be done. The increase in the guaranteed income supplement to $15 a month is also significant, and is certainly indicated for most people falling into this category.

This action of the government has been denounced in some quarters and it has been suggested by the Quebec government that it is unfair. According to the newspapers, the Premier of Quebec has accused the federal government of arrogance in failing to discuss the old age security pension increases with the provinces. Although the federal government has steadfastly assumed the right to make direct payments to Canadians, I am one who believes that more consultation should take place on the increase in old age pensions, particularly in the guaranteed income supplement area. Provincial governments, under the British North America Act, have had the responsibility for health, welfare and education thrust on them. At the time of Confederation these were minor areas of government responsibility, but they are much larger now.

The advent of shared cost programs has meant an uneven distribution of funds across Canada for various welfare and social programs, and the federal government has often been to blame for forcing the provinces to take on programs that they were not ready for, either administratively or financially. The payment of a universal old age pension to every Canadian regardless of where he lives and regardless of his financial situation, is one thing, but the attempt to give further assistance to those in need by means of the guaranteed income supplement seems to me not to be the best way of providing extra assistance to those who need it. I would regard it as a considerable intrusion into the affairs of the provinces. The most logical thing, it would seem to me, would be for the federal government to confine itself to direct payment on a universal basis to all Canadians, regardless of their financial status, with the provinces providing extra assistance for those who need it.

The old age security pension is, in effect, a type of insurance paid by the citizen through his years of service in the community whereas the guaranteed income supplement falls under the heading of social benefits made necessary by his financial position. It seems to me that the guaranteed income supplement program should be phased out after suitable arrangements are made with the provinces, to take care of those in need. There are many needs which are not met by the guaranteed income supplement for those pensioners who must of necessity have further help from their provincial governments.

One of the weaknesses of the guaranteed income supplement Mr. Speaker, is that it is based on the dollar income of the pensioner, and it does not take into account any of the assets that a person may have. For instance, a person may have his own home but he will receive the same income as one who has the cost of rent and other expenses to meet. Indeed, a person may well leave assets such as cash in his current account in the bank, drawing no interest, and he could quite easily receive the full guaranteed income supplement. It is, therefore, a very imperfect way of assessing what extra income a person should receive over and above the old age pension.

There is one area that I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), whose department makes the assessment for guaranteed income supplement. It concerns the matter of annuities. At the moment, according to the ruling I have received, an annuity payable at so much a month, on the principal portion of which tax has been paid and represents savings, is considered full income.

I know of a specific case in which a person with a small amount of capital, about $12,000, was advised to buy an annuity on her 65th birthday which would have provided her with so many dollars a month. However, on investigation it turned out that this annuity would be wholly considered income in the calculation of the guaranteed income supplement, so she would lose heavily by taking the annuity. At the end of five years, she would have just as much left out of her capital as if she had invested in an annuity. This seems to be an administrative technicality that should be investigated. Where the tax has been paid on the principal portion of the annuity, that should be exempt from the calculation of income in the guaranteed income supplement. We might also learn that in many cases those who have saved through the Canada Pension Plan will find that their guaranteed income supplement has been reduced to the point where they are little better off than those who did not save toward an annuity or did not even contribute to the Canada Pension Plan.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I am in full agreement with the bill and hope it receives speedy passage.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on Bill C-207 to amend the Old Age Security Act.

My remarks shall be very brief and deal mainly with certain statements made in the course of this debate by members of the opposition. The other day, I heard the leader of the Social Credit party (Mr. Caouette) stating that it was thanks to his party that senior citizens obtained higher pensions.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Mr. Ouellet: The leader of the Social Credit party is a past master in the art of saying shocking things and I think it is proper, in this House, to state the facts.

In fact, the planned increased pensions are strictly in line with the tradition of the Liberal party which has always been the protector of those in their golden years. In 1908—

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to answer the questions of the hon. member when I have finished my speech.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Témiscamingue rising on a point of order?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to point out to the hon. member that, two years ago, when an increase in the old age pension was proposed to the House, he voted against it.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I expect the hon. member could not stand to be contradicted. He mentioned, when he last spoke in the House, that he would like to pit himself against me in public debate. I told him he could invite me to his riding at any time and that I would gladly go and explain to the voters in Témiscamingue how the hon. member has been telling them half-truths for many years.

Mr. Speaker, in 1908, for the first time, a Canadian government, then headed by the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, tried to help elderly people by passing an act on annuities. That was long before the Ralliement Créditiste came into existence, and long before the hon. member for Témiscamingue came on the scene.

Second, in 1927, a Liberal government—and Creditistes had nothing to do with that either—introduced the Old Age Security Pension Act. It originally provided financial assistance of $20 a month to people aged 70 or over who passed the means test. At the time, the act was administered by the provinces, with the federal government sharing in the expenses to the extent of 50 per cent.

Subsequently, several amendments were brought to the act, to increase benefits and to alter provisions relative to the means test. It was however becoming obvious that this system for meeting the needs of elderly people could not be satisfactory to all. That is why in 1951, following an appropriate amendment to the constitution, the federal government, under the administration of the right hon. Louis St-Laurent, undertook, first to assume full responsibility for administration and financing of an old age security pension plan applying to all persons of age 70 or over.

Second, to pay half the costs of a provincial old age assistance scheme with a means test for persons aged from 65 to 69.

The monthly benefits payable under the terms of the act have changed through the years, Mr. Speaker, and it can be said that the legislation passed in favour of the elderly over the past ten years under the administration of the right hon. Mr. Pearson and of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) are unequalled in any country of the free world.

When the Liberals came back to power in 1963, the pension was $65 a month for persons aged 70 or more. Let us consider the progress achieved and this, without any help from Social Credit.

First, Mr. Speaker, we have increased the pension to $75, and afterward to $80 a month, for all pensioners.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would not wish to restrict the Parliamentary Secretary in his comments, but I wonder to what extent they have to do with the bill we are now considering. Sometimes, in similar circumstances, the Chair allows a lot of leeway to hon. members with regard to the subject-matter of the act to be amended, but, in the present case, as the debate is limited to one hour and as the Chair knows that many other hon. members would like to have the floor before the question is put, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to come back as soon as possible to the bill under study.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I said that I would be brief, but I feel that it is important, following the stupidities said in the House, especially by the Créditistes, to recall the facts and to show that the Liberal party has never hesitated to help the aged when the time had come for doing so.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we established a new plan to grant a supplement to pensioners who have no other resources for their retirement.

This amount at first was $30; we increased it to $55 and now it will go up to $70 for single persons and $125 for couples. Thus, 550,000 pensioners will now receive $150 a month.

We have lowered the age of eligibility for old age security pensions from 70 to 65.

We have financed—this hon. members of the Social Credit party do not mention—through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the building of thousands of homes and units for older Canadians.

We have also made sure that the major part of the burden of health preservation, an essential condition for happy retirement years, does not bear only on senior citizens, through the medicare and Canada assistance plans.

Mr. Speaker, we established the Canada Pension Plan and its equivalent in Quebec in order to guarantee a supplementary pension for Canadian workers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Once again, I have to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary. He could make this kind of speech during the debate on the budget or when the next session opens or at any other moment. He must understand that we are now considering a bill amending the Old Age Security Act and that this remarks should be limited to the bill before us and to its amendments.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss some clauses of Bill C-207 which I consider extremely important.

We will be offering to Canadians additional protection by allowing them to deduct for income tax purposes, up to $2,500 a year, their contribution to a registered retirement plan.

We have also raised up to $1,000 the special exemption for income tax purposes granted to any person 65 years old or older and to any blind or disabled taxpayer. This means that nearly one third of the pensioners will not have to pay income tax, and that all the others will be paying much less.

Another important aspect of the measures we are recommending for the elderly is the recognition of the fact that reaching a certain age does not necessarily mean that a person is unable to make a useful contribution to our society. Several Canadians aged 65 and over have talents and skills which we want to develop, not only to give their lives some meaning, but also because we want to profit from the skills of these people. This is why we are going to launch the New Horizons program which will enable older people to fully participate in community life.

Mr. Speaker, as a conclusion on this very impressive achievement, I would like to say that, when the present government was elected in 1968, the annual maximum level of pensions was $1,285 for single persons and $2,570 for married couples. In 1971, these figures were upped to $1,620 and $3,060. Presently, in 1972, they are increased once more to $1,800 and $3,420. These are important and significant increases over a period of two years.

These payments, Mr. Speaker, can be favourably compared with others in any other country of the western world. Let's make a few comparisons together.

Mr. Caouette: Go and tell that to René Lévesque.

Mr. Ouellet: The maximum yearly amount paid in a country like Great Britain, for example, is $1,300 for a bachelor and $2,200 for a couple.

In the United States, these yearly amounts are $1,649 for a bachelor and $2,428 for a couple.

On the other hand, the maximum yearly amount paid in Scandinavian countries which are supposedly very progressive in the social field, is far lower than in Canada. Let us, for instance, take the case of Denmark where a bachelor draws $1,245 and a couple $1,868. Sweden is also far behind Canada in this respect. A bachelor in that country draws $1,200 and a couple $1,867.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, to those who are beset by constitutional qualms, as is the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), for example, who joined in the debate yesterday and whom I would qualify as a separatist in disguise, that the federal government is absolutely justified in helping Canada's pensioners and particularly those of Quebec.

There are now 422,000 Quebecers aged 65 years and over who draw the old age security pension. Of this number, 258,600 receive the guaranteed income supplement. During 1971-72, old age security pensions paid to Quebecers amounted to $400 million while the guaranteed income supplement was $146 million.

The proposed amendments mean that payments to Quebecers will increase by $67,300,000 in 1972-73. I fail to understand that some people are indignant that the federal government is trying to add $67,300,000 to the lot of Quebec's senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my comments, I would like to reply to certain objections raised by some hon. members of the Social Credit Party. They are wondering why the government has not extended the eligibility for the pension concurrently to both husband and wife.

Mr. Speaker, the government has carefully considered the question and found important difficulties, such that if the Social Crediters' proposal was implemented, it would be grossly unfair to widows, single women and unemployed people in the same age bracket. Allowing benefits to the very young wife of a pensioner would untowardly perturb social priorities. In fact, one could expect that women might provide for themselves when their husband's income is insufficient.

On the other hand, paying benefits to the pensioner's wife after 60 would mean discrimination against widows, single women and unemployed men in the same age group.

And, as I said, it would be extremely unfair to apply the proposals of the Social Credit.

The members of the Social Credit party have asked a second question: Why not provide for early and optional retirement at 60?

Such a measure conceivably might encourage the employer to compulsorily retire 60 year old people, even though they might wish to keep on working. Besides, our economy would then be deprived of their productivity, our welfare and health services laden with heavier burdens when they are already hard put to cope with all the problems of those who have prematurely retired.

Mr. Speaker, with the old age security pension set at $80 and the guaranteed income supplement at $55, we spend at present some $2,200 million. An early retirement such as the Créditiste party is advocating—supposing everybody was eligible in 1972 and we paid $200 per person—would mean a considerable increase and we do not feel we can afford the cost of such a system at present.

If, at 60, we granted only a pension based on financial means instead of a universal pension, it would cost at least an extra $265 million.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to observe that the efforts made by the government to help old age pensioners have been constant. All Liberal administrations have granted pension increases. We can thus say that the present government is most concerned with the fate of pensioners and has always wanted to introduce measures which took into account not only the needs of senior citizens but also the resources of taxpayers.

The suggestions made by Créditiste members during this debate show how irresponsible they are, and how unrealistic. A payment of $200 a month for every person aged 60 years and over would cost Canada a minimum of $5 billion for old age security pension alone, while our present budget is about $14 billion.

I would like, therefore, to conclude my remarks by saying that a responsible government should govern taking into consideration the needs of the whole community. This is why I hope that this bill, which is a most adequate and generous measure, will be approved by all parties without hesitation.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, as I was listening to the remarks of our colleague on the other side of the House justifying this legislation, my memory went back four years to an election campaign that had as its key words "a just society". If there has ever been an injustice perpetrated upon the senior citizens of our country, it was the legislation brought in five years ago which limited the adjustment of the pension paid to our senior citizens to a 2 per cent rise in the cost of living. I do not understand the reasoning behind that kind of legislation. If inflation amounts to 5 per cent a year, why do we penalize our senior citizens? Why do we mock the very purpose of supplying a senior citizens' pension by limiting him to half or less than half of the increase in inflation?

Some hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: All we are asking at this time is that we make this measure retroactive to January 1, 1967, when the guaranteed income supplement was introduced, and adjust the guaranteed income supplement to make it equal to the actual cost of living increase. We are not asking for anything more than that. That would be justice, Mr. Speaker.

The implementation of the correction of faults in our society to render justice should begin at this level of responsibility which affects the very lives of the people who have given their all to help make Canada what it is today. What this legislation should have done in the first instance was to make what is owing to our pensioners as a result of the increased cost of living retroactive, over and above the $80 basic pension and over and above the guaranteed income supplement, so that the pension would be equal to the actual cost of living. I think it is a disgrace.

I think that, regardless of how the Liberal government attempts to justify its position we have to wait until another election campaign to try to give these pensioners part of what we owe them. It is the old story of playing politics with our senior citizens, and then only to give them half of what they deserve, by making it retroactive only to the beginning of this year. That is simple justice. The government would have faced its responsibility by raising the basic pension to $100 a month and the guaranteed income supplement $15 a month, only if they intended to compensate for the cost of living rise during the last five months. Again, I do not understand why the government has not been able to see this.

There is another glaring injustice. It relates to the spouses of pensioners who have reached 65, and who have themselves not yet reached the age of 65 but who have passed their 60th birthdays. This suggestion relates very specifically to the needs of many widows across the country. However, it applies to all those whose husbands or wives have reached the age of 65 and find it difficult to maintain an adequate income. Surely, we could at least have brought those past 60 into pension entitlement, provided the husband or the wife had reached the qualifying age of 65.

I am only underlining the inadequacy of this bill. I think, to sum up, that to correct this injustice, the government—and I do not see how government members on the other side can argue as they do—should have made this cost of living adjustment apply back to the date the legislation was first brought in and make it available to a spouse who is over 60 but not yet 65, and included that cost of living adjustment for those who are entitled to the guaranteed income supplement. This applies to all pensioners. There is no single group of Canadian people who are so adversely affected by the inflationary situation which concerns us as those we are attempting to deal with justly in this legislation. Anything short of this is injustice; anything short of this is irresponsible.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that when I took part in this debate on second reading on May 10 I announced the date of the forthcoming federal election as July 17. I did not realize that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had now gone to Government House and got the actual dissolution. But listening to some of the speakers this afternoon, especially the speech of the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), I am beginning to wonder whether we are already on the hustings.

An hon. Member: Take your time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): An hon. member tells me to take my time. Well, there is only half an hour left in this debate. I do not intend to take all of it; I shall take only a few minutes, so that others who may wish to speak will have an opportunity to do so.

It is still my very strong view, Mr. Speaker, that the pensioners of Canada want the basic old age security pension raised to a figure of not less than $150 a month, and it is my view that they have the right to expect parliament to raise the basic pension to that amount. We feel, also, that along with a basic old age security pension of $150 a month there should be the kind of changes in the Income Tax Act which would take the money back from those in the upper income brackets. We insist that this is the way to do it. It is not conducive to a society of equals, it does not lessen our being a country of haves and have-nots, to continue a practice of applying a needs or income test before the rate of a person's pension is fixed. So we take our stand very strongly for $150 old age security pension with the necessary tax changes to make sure that the wealthy pay it back. We also feel there should be an escalation provision better than the new one which is provided in the bill before us. We welcome the one provided in Bill C-207, because it is better than the old one with its two per cent ceiling, but we still feel there should be an escalation provision which would make it possible for retired people not only to keep up with the rising cost of living but to share in the rising standard of living which they in their working years helped to make possible.

It is our view, despite the argument advanced a few minutes ago by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Ouellet), that pensions under the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan should be available at the age of 60 to all those who are prepared to leave the labour market or who are already out of the labour market. I hope it is clear that in the latter phrase I include wives of pensioners where wives are younger than the present pension age.

I agree with those who argue that some kind of provision should be made for spouses and this seems to fill the need, by making it possible for those who are a few years younger, to receive the pension if the breadwinner is also drawing the old age pension. The arguments which have been advanced against this today, and on previous occasions by the hon. member for Papineau and others, do not convince me. We think these are reasonable provisions which ought to be enacted. Some day we shall have to take these steps. We think they should be taken now.

As for this bill, Bill C-207, it does contain a few things that are good. There is nothing in it that is bad. The trouble is, there is so little in it that is good. All it does is provide for an escalation in relation to the rise in the cost of living. No account is taken of the gross national product or the rising standard of living, and it is calculated in relation to a basic pension which is already inadequate. If the hon. member for Papineau and others on that side of the House intend to take credit on the hustings for the principle of escalation, let them realize that they will be facing many old age pensioners to whom an escalation formula of this kind is no help because the basic pension itself is too low. That is what is wrong with this bill. It does not go far enough. As I say, it does provide something. It puts the escalation back on the basic $80, and it provides for an increase in the guaranteed income supplement both to single and to married couples. The bill is also drawn in such a way that perhaps for the first time in old age pension history, if my memory serves me correctly, payments are to be made retroactive.

Elections are wonderful, Mr. Speaker. Usually these increases do not come into effect until after two or three months have gone by, but with the prospect of an election on July 17, the bill has been drawn in such a way that there will be a six months retroactive increase in the cheques to be received by our pensioners at the the end of June. Nevertheless, even though on a former occasion I have called that what it is, if any money is going to get through to these people I think it should get through to them as soon as possible. This is why I regret that this House did not pass the bill yesterday, as I think we could have done and as I believe we should have done. I hope that any suggestion that the ladies and gentlemen of what is sometimes called the "other place" will hold up the bill is false.

In any event, I have indicated our position on the question of the old age pension, namely that we think it should be a basic pension of $150 a month, with the other provisions to which I have referred. By way of contrast, the position of the government, the Liberal party, is that it is good enough to have a basic pension of $80, escalated from the point, and to take care of those who need more by an income or needs test system. That is their position; they are prepared to go to the country on it and to ask the people to give them credit for it. But I would suggest it does not meet the needs, indeed the rights, of our senior citizens and is not in line with progressive thinking in the whole field of human and social development.

I said a moment ago—and I am just about through; as I have said I do not want to take up an undue portion of the time that remains, which is very little—that I regret that we did not get the bill through yesterday so there would be no question about these increases being in the cheques of our pensioners at the end of June. I regret yesterday's performance for another reason, too. It is not often that we on this side of the House spar off against each other. The three parties on this side of the House usually present a common front against the government side. Be that as it may, I was quite disappointed yesterday that our friends of the Progressive Conservative party spent the whole afternoon presenting motions, amendments and arguments which led to one point only: they were trying to get a little more into the escalation clause. I give them credit for the fact that they got down to precise figures as to what they wanted. They wanted to get the basic pension up to around $90 a month by giving the pensioners the full cost of living increase back to the time when the pension was set at $75 a month. But that is all they contended for yesterday, $90 a month.

I say to my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party that if $90 a month is all they have to offer, as opposed to the $82.88 from the Liberals, then they might as well quit talking about pensions. The fact is that their leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), has said publicly and categorically that if he is elected to power he will not go for a basic pension of $150 a month. So, despite the things that individual members of that party may say, that is now the position of the official opposition—one of opposition to a basic pension of $150 a month. I regard these attempts to make motions to raise the pension to $90 a month as an effort to cover up that basic inadequacy. It is a position pensioners cannot accept.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there it is. I have accused others of speaking as though they were on the hustings, and maybe that charge will be thrown back at me. But at this point I would suggest it is a good idea to make sure that the lines are clearly drawn. The Liberals are satisfied with a $80 pension, now raised to $82.88, with the income test as a means of providing additional money. The Conservatives are satisfied with a basic $80 pension provided it is escalated to around $90 to $95. My hon. friends of the Social Credit party can speak for themselves, and they have done so. Our position, and I believe it is the position of the senior citizens of this country and of most Canadians, is that the basic pension ought to be raised to $150 a month; that the income tax structure should be modified along the lines I have suggested; that the pension payable both under the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan should be available at age 60; and that special steps, if necessary, should be taken so that spouses a few years younger—not the young brides to which reference was made a moment ago, but those a few years younger than the breadwinner—should be included in the pension. These are the steps that we think ought to be taken, and I regret that they are not in the bill. However, as far as the bill is concerned, the provisions it contains represent a move in the right direction, and we hope it will pass when this debate ends at 4.05 this afternoon.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, as always, I listened with enjoyment to the previous speaker. He very kindly stated what the position of the government was on this bill, and also took it upon himself to tell parliament and the country what the position of the Conservative party was. Then, he said that his position was that there should be a basic increase in the old age pension to $150 a month for the senior citizens of Canada.

What the hon. member did not do, Mr. Speaker, was to tell this parliament and the people of Canada where to get the $1,400 million that that increase would cost. I say that it is intellectually dishonest for any member of this House, even though he be a man of the calibre of the last speaker, a completely respected member of the House who has done much for parliament and this country, to stand up in the House and suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) should extract an additional $1,400 million in taxes, without spelling out that this is how the money would have to be raised.

It is all very well to tell the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that he would adjust the income tax rate. I'll say it would be adjusted! It is so adjusted now that every member of this House admits he would like to lower taxes. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would adjust it so high that the middle class people of this country, who are already over-taxed, simply could not stand the burden of the taxation that the hon. member suggested only a few minutes ago.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not even out of a gross national product of $95 billion?

Mr. Whicher: This is wrong and it shows, in my opinion, a complete lack of responsibility. The hon. member comes from a party with 20 members, and there is every possibility that its membership will be reduced after the next election. Yet he stands up in his place, knowing perfectly well that his party will never come to power, and tells the members of this House and the people of Canada that a further $1,400 million in taxes should be raised. That is not the way I do business, Mr. Speaker. When I suggest that some money be raised, I spell out just where the money should be found. I have always said, and many other hon. members have said, including the hon. member who has just spoken, that taxes ought to be reduced. The hon. member wants them reduced when the budget debate is on, and he wants them increased when he wants more money for our pensioners.

Let me say this to the House: there is not one single member of this House, that I know of anyway, be he government member, member of the official opposition, a member of the NDP or the Créditistes, who does not want to give the senior citizens of this country every single nickel that the country can afford. The hon. member is not the only member of the House who knows that these are the people who made Canada great; of that we are sure. When I had the great honour of moving the adoption of the address in reply to the Throne Speech some months ago, I said that the senior citizens of Canada were treated better than anywhere else in the world, and that statement still stands. The fact is that now they are being treated even better, and I say to you that I am proud to be a backbencher in a government that has done so much for the senior citizens of this country in the past four years.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it was only a few years ago when old age pensions in this country were $40 a month, payable at age 70. We find now that those people, who for some reason or another have not enough money at age 65 to support themselves, will receive $150 a month for a single person and $285 for a married couple. This is the result of the efforts of this government. Every member of this Parliament and every Canadian should hold his head high and say proudly that we have treated our senior citizens, who made Canada great, as well financially as this country can afford. We would like to do better but we are now doing better than anywhere else in the world.

When I say that this is the best pension scheme in the world, I should ask my hon. friends to remember what other countries have in the way of pension schemes. The United States, the wealthiest country in the world, does not have an old age pension scheme. Let us look at socialistic Sweden, and England which, as I have said before, has been drowning in socialism for many years. Let us consider the pensions those countries pay and compare them with the old age pension scheme of this country. OUr scheme has been created chiefly by this government and the Diefenbaker Conservative government. I suggest you get a good old age pension scheme as a result of having a free enterprise system in a country because then it can afford to pay great pensions such as we are paying at the present time.

I listened a few minutes ago to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) castigate the government. I was somewhat surprised, but I must apologize because I do not really think he was speaking on behalf of my good Conservative friends. I think he must have been speaking as a former Créditiste when he castigated the government for not doing something for widows at age 60. We all feel sorry for these people, but let me remind the hon. member that when the party he now supports was last in office old age pensions, not only for widowed people but for the so-called heads of the household, were given at age 70, and the amount was not anywhere near what it is today.

Many other things have been done for our senior citizens in Canada. Every member of this House, whether he is on the government side or not, can proudly say that nobody who receives the old age pension plus the income supplement from January 1 of this year, amounting to $150 a month single and $285 a month for a couple, will pay one single cent of income tax into the coffers of this government. I say this is a mighty good thing, and the government should be proud of itself.

I also think of what has been done in the medicare and hospitalization fields. I also remember that in most provinces, if not in all of them, no one who is receiving a supplemented old age pension today pays anything to medicare. I think of what happens in my own province of Ontario, and I am sure this is true of other provinces. No one 65 years of age or over pays one single copper in hospitalization costs. Once more, I am proud to be a Canadian and a member of a government team which has made this possible.

I think also of the many senior citizens' homes that have been built in Canada from Vancouver to Newfoundland. Only 20 years ago there was no such thing as cheap housing for our senior citizens. There were no senior citizens' homes like those being built all over the country for those people who helped to make Canada great. Once again, I hold my head high and am proud to be a Canadian.

This does not mean we could not do better. It would have been nice to raise basic pensions to $150 per month as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggested. The fact is that this would cost $1,400 million, and I suggest that we must tell the people of Canada where that money is to be found. Some months ago, before this bill was even conceived, we had the best pension system for senior citizens of any country in the world. When this bill is given third reading, we will be able to say to the whole world that our system is even better. It has been made better because we appreciate these people who have really made this country great.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I think I should remind the House that one hour was assigned for the completion of this debate before the vote. I had hoped there would be representations from all parties during the hour. Only seven minutes remain, and I believe the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) hoped to have two or three minutes to close the debate. I hope the hon. member will keep that in mind and, if possible, bring his remarks to a close very soon.

Mr. Whicher: I appreciate your bringing that to my attention, Mr. Speaker, and naturally I will abide by your wishes.

In closing, I should just like to point out that about six members of the opposition party spoke last night, but the government did not have one speaker during that time. Like every member on the government side, I want to be fair. I am sure the Créditistes have views to put forward, so I will not use up all the time. I simply say that there is much more we could do in this country. This is not heaven, by any means; it is still called Canada, but it is the next thing to heaven as far as our senior citizens are concerned. If my hon. friends to the left do not believe what I say, let them name one country that is closer to heaven than this country of ours.

Mr. Bell: Prince Edward Island is heaven to me.

Mr. Paproski: Alberta.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate your intervention. I also thank the hon. member who spoke before me for the courtesy he has shown me.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to avail myself of the few minutes at my disposal to deal with very serious matters. I shall not attempt to refute some of the arguments put forward concerning Créditiste hon. members because time is too valuable.

I feel we should not, as responsible parliamentarians, use the problems of old people for petty partisan politics. Those people are entitled to some security in their old age and that is not a gift. If Canada can assist them, it is because they made good use of the time available to them to build our country.

The government is now administrating the country's resources, distributing them to give security to these people who have deserved it. The government does not create resources, it merely distributes them, grants assistance and recognizes the rights of these people.

I for one consider the increase in the guaranteed income supplement to be inadequate. I base my claim on the fact that many of these people have to live in old people's homes. They find some comfort in those homes but, considering the increase in the cost of living and in the construction cost of such homes, and considering the obligations of the companies building them, the cost of room and board for the aged increases so much in some homes that they are asked to pay $180 a month, because of the high cost of financing.

I wish to call the attention of the House to this: in the province of Quebec, they played politics with the question of homes, when they are partly financed by the central government. The truth should at least be told. There are enough problems, enough things of which we are accused, so that, at least, when some things are done properly, let us say so.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that, to my mind, the amendment was justified since today most people of 60 are turned down on the labour market. According to the act as it stands, they are not eligible for the old age pension. What will we do with those of them who have no income? We must do something for them and that is precisely why an amendment was proposed asking the government to amend the bill they they might become eligible.

Granting that right to people of 60 to 65 will in no way harm the disabled, the widows, those who are in difficult circumstances, even if they are not yet 60.

Some day, sooner or later, although we may think of it as utopian now, it will have to come to that; it might as well be sooner, not only for those people who are 60 to 65 but also for the young who are waiting to get into the labour force. That will enable Canada to provide employment for young people; that will help solve a problem and will have beneficial effects on the social climate.

I believe we are right to say we do not have the financial means that would be necessary. The present system should be reformed so that finance should be at the service of people, young and old alike.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of the special order adopted on Wednesday, May 17, I must interrupt this debate and put immediately any question that would be required to dispose of this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

PENSION ACT, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AND OTHER ACTS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-208 to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowance Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder, be concurred in.

Motion for concurrence agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave now.

Mr. Speaker: By consent now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the past week we have had to deal with two important measures introduced by the government. Even though some other bills have been introduced, we have been able to reach third reading stage on Bill C-207, to amend the Old Age Security Act, and also have been able to report the same progress on Bill C-208, to amend the Pension Act, which is before us at the present moment. This must be some sort of record, Mr. Speaker, but the important thing is that through co-operation from all parties we can progress with legislation in a non-partisan manner, if that legislation will benefit the citizens of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: That does not happen too often here.

Mr. Marshall: It should be worth noting also for the record that these two bills were introduced for first reading just one week ago. This illustrates just what can be done. In just seven days, two important pieces of legislation have received first and second reading, have gone through committee stage, and should receive third reading today. Furthermore, following consideration in the other place, the two bills can receive Royal Assent by the early part of next week. So, let it never be said again by the government that there has been a lack of co-operation by opposition parties, unless the legislation introduced must be challenged for its content for the benefit of Canadians. I am sorry to say, however, and I will continue repeating this, that the same practice does not hold true for Bill C-170, to raise family allowances. There has been little or no progress on this bill since it passed second reading and was referred to committee on April 27. Neither should the government try to say that this bill could not have received quicker treatment, because the original bill was introduced in the last session and was allowed to die on the order paper for reasons which have yet to be explained.

Bill C-208, in the main, provides for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder to reflect changes in the cost of living. In the words of the minister, as recorded at page 2253 of Hansard for May 12:

> There never has been any clear principle governing the general changes made from time to time in the amount paid in veterans pensions or allowances . . . Veterans and their families, or widows, had no certainty as to the amounts of the payments they might receive from year to year.

He went on to say:

> This bill will for the first time remove that uncertainty. It spells out clearly the fact that the pensions and allowances will be adjusted annually; that when changes based on living costs are warranted they will take effect on January 1, and that the amount of these changes will be . . . determined by the movement of the consumer price index.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot see the reason for all the complimentary remarks that have been made about what great things the government is doing for the veterans, other than the small escalation provision in the bill. By this time, and in this bill, many of the other inequities which still exist in the legislation could have been corrected and should have been corrected. We are dicussing a bill in which there has been no recognition of the repeated appeals of war veterans organizations from across the country. How many times since the Pension Act was first introduced after World War I have veteran members heard the pleas for establishing a basic rate of pension equal to the wages of an unskilled labourer in the government service. And how many times have they heard the same promises from ministers of veterans affairs, the same words which the present minister used in his speech last Friday when he said:

> Another point which I would like to stress is that the present bill relates only to the question of changes related to the cost of living; in other words, to the principle of escalation. Veterans organizations have also been making representations to the government with regard to the basic rates of pensions. In other words, apart from the periodic changes in rates there is also the question as to whether or not the pensions stand on the right base.

Just listen to these words:

> I want to say clearly that this question of basic rates is under careful study. At this time, I cannot predict the outcome of that study but I do want to point out that the present measure should not be regarded as being prejudicial in any way to the review of this question of basic rates.

Study what, Mr. Speaker? Surely, members will not accept that story again for which this government is so famous. Surely, the veterans organizations which have studied the basic rates, and made recommendations for the past 50 years, are not going to swallow that one. How many briefs on the basic rate of pension are lying gathering dust in the Department of Veterans Affairs?

Let us just look for one moment at the brief from the National Council of Veterans Associations of Canada submitted on April 14, just two months ago, and at a statement of the minister of veterans affairs in 1965 to the effect that the government was considering the development of some new basis for pensions, all of which has had a most unsettling effect on the war disability pensioners.

In part the brief states:

> It is felt now that the question of a formula has been under study long enough, and it is now incumbent upon the present government to re-affirm the principle of the unskilled labour market, in the terms prescribed by the Woods Committee, and that is,
> > That the basic rate would be equivalent of earnings in the class of untrained labour in the public service of Canada. Having endorsed this principle, the government should then proceed to recommend to parliament an increase to the level of $4,550 per annum for the single pensioner, with commensurate adjustments for dependents and for widows and orphans.
> One further step is necessary. That is, the adoption of the cyclical review principle which means that, once compensation has been established at the $4,550 level, the rate would be subject to fluctuation each year in accordance with increases in either the cost of living, composite wages or some other reasonable indicator of purchasing power.

Although the brief contains some 15 pages I will just quote one more paragraph, Mr. Speaker.

> If this principle means anything at all, there is an obligation on the part of the present government to bring to a satisfactory conclusion the seven-year long study to which this matter has been subjected. The review should be terminated in a manner satisfactory to all concerned before the life of the present parliament expires. It would be inhumane if Canada's veterans and their widows and children were now required to wait for the results of further deliberations while a newly elected government settles into office.

There has been a seven year study, and now the minister says he is going to study it again.

In 1966, the then minister of veterans affairs told the Dominion Convention of the Royal Canadian Legion that the government was searching for some new yardstick on which to base pensions. The veterans' organizations, quite properly, took this as a promise that the government would tackle the problem which had been allowed to develop since the end of World War II, as a result of which war pensions had not kept pace with earnings in the unskilled labour market.

As hon. members know, a committee of three independent people under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Woods of Saskatchewan was established in 1965 to review the organization and work of the veterans Pension Commission. The committe's terms of reference did not include the quantum of pension, and thus the veterans' organizations stood aside on this particular issue in order to assist the government in remedying some of the structural and administrative faults in the Pension Commission, as well as some of the ancillary benefit areas, including allowances for attendants and exceptional incapacity. The report of the Woods Committee resulted in some important amendments which were passed by the House on March 30, 1971, but nothing was done about the basic rate at that time.

It would seem that the claim of the veterans' organizations, which is to the effect that the government is obligated to overhaul the basis of payment of war pensions to bring them in line with the rate for unskilled labour, is an extremely valid one. Since 1965, the government has approved three increases which appeared to have been based on the rising cost of living, but did nothing to bring the pension closer to the pay of an unskilled labourer in the federal public service.

Within recent months the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) has received lengthy submissions which indicate a great deal of research on the part of veterans' organizations, all of them proposing an increase in the basic rate to the aforementioned figure of $4,550 per annum. These veterans' organizations are much disturbed, and rightly so. The increase in war pensions of 3.6 per cent was announced at a time when they were awaiting a reply to their serious and well-documented requests to the government for an increase in the order of 30 per cent, which would have given the 100 per cent pensioner parity with unskilled labourer. The government's announcement made no reference to anything which might be done to close this considerable gap which successive governments have allowed to develop. It, therefore, seems that if it is the government's intention merely to take the basic rate of $3,504 and subject this to annual or biennial fluctuations in keeping with the cost of living, it will have effectively robbed the 100 per cent disabled veteran of approximately $1,000 a year.

I submit to the minister that since 1919 there has been an implied contract that the 100 per cent pension would be aligned with earnings in the unskilled labour market. No matter what indicator is taken, no person in his right mind could suggest that such earnings today are below $4,550. It seems to me that the veterans' case is a reasonable one, and I sincerely hope the government will assure veterans that the 3.6 per cent increase is another interim measure, and that there will be no undue delay in the government bringing a further measure before the House to place the basic rate of pension on par with the junior grades in the federal public service.

The minister said last Friday, as recorded in Hansard:

> I want to say clearly that this question of basic rates is under careful study.

How many more studies could possibly be done when the matter has been studied almost to death already? Another of his statements with which I have to take issue is the following:

> Another matter of considerable interest in this connection is the question of how the current increases under the Old Age Security Act will be treated for purposes of War Veterans Allowance. I am pleased to announce that the government intends to seek an authority from the Governor in Council for a regulation exempting these increases under the Old Age Security Act, so that they are not treated as income when computing entitlement under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I understand that an order in council has now been signed to that effect. However, I wonder why an amendment could not have been included in either Bill C-207 or Bill C-208 to have this matter corrected. Whoever drew up this bill must have had a short memory or did not have too much influence, and whoever authorized it in government must also have a short memory. How much more time must we spend in waiting to repay the veterans of our country, other than in a piecemeal fashion? After 27 years, the government fiddles with the lives of our Hong Kong veterans who have submitted millions of pages of briefs giving proof of the effects of inhumane treatment which it is distressing to repeat.

New evidence was presented as late as April, 1972, giving proof of the effects of stress from the Japanese concentration camps which accelerates aging. The request was made that the Hong Kong veterans so afflicted be considered for 100 per cent pension. But still the answers are vague and disheartening to these veterans who wonder what is going on with a government that seems to forget so easily. When anyone mentions this you get a backlash of comparison showing how our pensions are ahead of others. Mr. Speaker, these veterans are aging far ahead of others. It is time we stopped the hypocrisy and repaid the debt that is owed to these veterans in a meaningful and Canadian manner.

How much longer will the European prisoners of war have to wait to get recognition, are they going to be the subject of another study? The studies have all been made with regard to these prisoners of war, Mr. Speaker, and the briefs are multitudinous. I have some of them in my files. Back in 1953, there were the findings and recommendations of the Chief Commissioner on War Claims. I have a study on the effects of malnutrition and other hardships on the mortality and morbidity of former prisoners or world War II, prepared in 1956. There are many other studies in existence. And still this association pleads for reasonable consideration from the government for those who suffered and who continue to be affected. This bill means very little to the veterans of our country because it does not include amendments to compensate for the discrepancies which exist in the Pensions Act. It is only another political gimmick, and the government should be ashamed to pass it.

This bill means nothing unless it includes an amendment to clause 59(3) which permits the Pension Commission to take into account, in deciding on the amount of an exceptional incapacity award, whether the veteran amputee wears a prosthesis. In representations last year from the War Amputees of Canada a contradiction arose regarding the assessment of section 59(3) by the then minister and the Chairman of the Pension Commission. The minister denied that there was a basis for reduction of the exceptional incapacity allowance unless the amputee unreasonably refused to wear a prosthesis. However, the Chairman of the Commission confirmed that the act does require the Commission to take into account the fact that an amputee wears a prosthesis, and will pay less allowance because of it. This is a discrepancy which could have been corrected in this bill if there were any sympathy for our veterans.

There are many other considerations which must be taken into account, many of which have already been mentioned by my colleagues. The time is getting a little late, perhaps too late, to make amends. It is almost too late to amend the eligibility provision for allowances under the War Veterans Allowances Act, and immediate consideration should be given to reducing the requirement that veterans must have served in the United Kingdom for at least 365 days in World War I.

It is almost too late, but we still have time to apologize and amend the residence requirements of war veterans who live outside Canada. As indicated by many of my colleagues and myself on different occasions, the War Veterans Association of Britain has pleaded with the government to ease the regulations, especially for the elderly or disabled who decided to remain in Britain. There was little or no response, and we now have the opportunity to answer those pleas if the government wants to display some sincerity or by recognizing their sacrifice.

It is almost too late, but there is still enough time to review the Veterans Land Act for amendments to help provide decent accommodation for some of our veterans who still live in substandard housing and have no other means of applying for help, even though the department says otherwise. No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we should be in too much of a hurry to throw kudos to a government that each year pushes farther in the back of their minds the objectives of the Pension Act, which in the very first section refers emphatically to the debt that the people of Canada and the government of Canada owe for the sacrifice and disability of war veterans due to service to their country. None of us here should be too ready to give praise to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for the nibbles he has given to the senior citizens and the veterans of this country, when the motives are so glaringly suspect.

No, Mr. Speaker, let none of us here get too complacent and accept with evident satisfaction that governments, past and present, have fulfilled their obligations to almost one million veterans, many of whom are still waiting after 52 years or even 27 years for a little more comfort because they returned from wars disabled. We may be discussing escalation clauses, whatever percentage it may be, but we should be dealing in a more meaningful way with human beings. We should be discussing with a little more feeling our failure to provide all that has been reasonably requested over the years by veterans' organizations on behalf of those citizens who in their youth went to two world wars and offered their lives on behalf of our country.

We become involved in wars, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, because of the weakness and ineptitude of those who govern. We should feel proud then, that we are able to sit in government and, with a sense of comradeship, regardless of political affiliation, deal with the problems of war veterans, ever conscious of our obligations. This bill could have done much more if those responsible for its content could have delved a little deeper in their consciences, and been mindful of the purposes of the Pensions Act.

In the interest of effecting passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker, it appears that veterans will have to wait a while longer. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the government will take heed of the many weaknesses still remaining in the Pension Act and deal with them in the immediate future. If not, Mr. Speaker, it may be too late.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give my support to the contention that has been made so effectively by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), that for all the good that is in this bill a number of things are not in it that ought to be. He has outlined these deficiencies extremely well and I hope that the government will pay attention to the plea that something be done soon with regard to the various matters to which my friend has referred, notably the reassessment of the basic rate of pension under the Pension Act, certain matters under the War Veterans Allowance Act and the whole question of dealing more favourably with prisoners of war, with the administration of the exceptional incapacity allowance and so on. As I say, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has stated this case very well and I imagine that I am not the only one following him who will want to be associated with what he has said.

The second thing I should like to say this afternoon is that whenever some of us make the plea that I made earlier today for substantial increases in the old age pension, there is always a member for Bruce around to ask "Where is the money coming from?" I tried to suggest, by way of an interjection, that our gross national product is over $95 billion and out of that we could provide adequately for our senior citizens. The point I want to make now is that I do not think I ever heard that question asked in the midst of a debate on veterans affairs. All of us believe that the best possible must be done for our veterans and no one gets up to ask where the money is coming from. I must say that I have heard a number of ministers of veterans affairs take the same line, namely, that our obligation to our veterans, their dependants and their survivors, has to be met and that our job is to take steps to meet that obligation.

Having said those two or three things by way of introduction, Mr. Speaker, may I say the rest of what is in my mind at this point as briefly as I can. Like other members, I am anxious that this bill get through and get to the other place so that it can be passed and its benefits get to our veterans as quickly as possible.

As I said at the second reading stage of this bill, the statement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) to the effect that the cost of living increase provided in this legislation is not to be regarded as a substitute for an increase in the basic rates, is very welcome. He noticed our appreciation immediately after he made the statement. He confirmed it at the end of the debate on second reading and also made it clear that he was speaking not just for himself as a minister who might not be with us much longer, but that he was speaking for the government. I think this is part of the reason for the plea that the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has made, namely, that this commitment should be kept without delay, that there should not be another four or five years of study of the matter but that the basic rates should be put in line with the basis that was accepted when the Pension Act was first passed after the end of World War I.

I wish that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) would look at what the Minister for Veterans Affairs has said. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has been trying to sell the people of Canada on the idea that an increase of 3.6 per cent in the basic pension is an increase. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is a wiser man. He knows that 3.6 per cent is not an increase, that it is the basic rates themselves that have to be adjusted. We welcome the commitment that has been made that this is to be done. Like all who took part in this debate, I insist that it be done with the least possible delay.

May I say again, as I have said at an earlier stage of the debate, that we are glad that this bill is so drawn that the cost of living increase to be provided in it will be obtained by all who draw any kind of pension that is under the responsibility of the Department of Veterans Affairs. There are the various pieces of legislation mentioned in the title to this bill as well as other pensions and allowances and we are glad that the scope of this bill is such that it will cover them all.

By the same token, it has been admitted by the minister that these increases are just for cost of living purposes, that they are not to be a substitute for basic increases. I insist that all the basic rates connected with all of these acts, must be reconsidered and brought in line with the proper basis that was accepted many years ago.

Again, Sir, may I say that something the government has done at this time we welcome enthusiastically. I use that expression despite the warning of the last speaker who suggested we should not give this government undue praise. We cannot do that. It praises itself so much that, even if we tried to match that praise, we could not do it. I still say that we welcome enthusiastically the provision, partly in this bill and partly in the order in council that is being obtained, which makes it clear that war veterans allowance recipients are not to be given their guaranteed income supplement by one department of government only to have that supplement taken away by another. That will not happen, although that has happened in the past far too often. Actually, it has happened so often that the mail I am now receiving from veterans shows that they expect this to happen again. It is difficult to convince them that this time that will not happen. As I say, it will not happen, and this is good. So, even at the risk of offending my friend, the previous speaker, I give the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) a bouquet on this point. Mind you, I agree with the previous speaker that all this should have been included in the bill. This provision was not in the bill, and I think we can take some credit for what is to be done. After a few speeches had been made and after a few conferences had been held, the minister was able to say, "We will attend to this and do it by order in council." So long as that is done, we shall be satisfied.

Mr. Marshall: We helped the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The motto of the opposition parties in this House is, "We help the government". After all, someone has to provide that help.

I support strongly the proposition that this business of guaranteeing the full benefit of escalation should be included in the statute. Since the guaranteed income supplement first came into being, the few cents added to the guaranteed supplement each year have also been passed on to veterans receiving war veterans allowance, but only on the basis of an order in council passed every year. Why should we leave it that way? Why should there be any question about this? Why should we have to get up on the floor of the House and ask if the government is to do this year what it did last year? Now that escalation has been made a statutory annual proposition with respect both to the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement on the one hand, and war veterans allowances and other veterans pensions on the other hand, why does the government not say right in the statute that when these increases are granted, veterans are to get the benefit of both?

I gather that my friend, the previous speaker, pleaded that it is not good enough to leave this to the uncertainty of an order in council. The uncertainty of the government's acting on the matter is not good enough. I say, why not put this provision in the statute so that it will become a permanent proposition? We are happy to see that our veterans are to be accorded better treatment this time than they were accorded in the past. I hope word will go out to them to make it clear that this time they are to get both the increase they are getting in the guaranteed income supplement and the increase they are to get by virtue of the 3.6 per cent increase in their war veterans allowances. Since the government has done it this way this time, I hope this can be put on a permanent basis.

I again express the hope that the Department of Veterans Affairs will find it possible to include these increases in the cheques at the end of June. I understand there will be some difficulty here, because so many cheques have to be computed separately. Computing the old age security pension increase is easy. All the $80 cheques will now increase to $82.88. Also, in the case of the guaranteed income supplement, the increase for a single recipient is to be $15, and for a married couple $30 in every case. This amount is simply added to the amount being paid under GIS. So, this can be done quite easily with respect to cheques coming under the Old Age Security Act. I am told that with respect to veterans' cheques, the matter is more difficult, because so many individual computations must be made. My fear is that if at the end of June veterans get their increases in their old age security and guaranteed income supplement cheques but do not get them in the war veterans allowance cheques, they will wonder what has happened and perhaps think they have been misled in the assurance given to them that they are to get both increases. I am sure that there are enough computers around this place for doing this work, and enough mathematical experts could be obtained for doing these computations, so that if this bill passes through this place today and perhaps through the other place tonight, arrangements can be made for the increase for veterans to be in their cheques at the end of June.

I am about to sit down, Sir. I merely want to say a brief word on two other subjects which, I admit, are not included in this bill. However, I will have finished referring to them before you can call me to order. We who are members of the Veterans Affairs Committee are delighted that the House gave us a reference enabling us to hear the various prisoner of war associations. We are in the midst of hearing them now. I hope the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission and the government will pay close attention to the particular pleas we are getting from these bodies; also, that close attention will be paid to their plea for more generous administration of the provision for exceptional incapacity allowances.

Sir, we welcome this bill. It is unlike some other bills, since there is nothing in it that we oppose. We like it all. Even so, as the last speaker said, there is still more to be done for the veterans of this country, such as a guaranteed income, and the government, parliament and people of Canada must meet that obligation. I hope we shall do it soon.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words concerning Bill C-208, which increases veterans pensions and I want to say that we are also satisfied with the increase granted by the government.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that veterans have been asking for an increase because the cost of living goes up constantly. Therefore, the increases we are giving now will soon become useless. We will have to start all over again.

This is why I want to ask hon. members and the administrators of our country to see if they could not try to adjust the economy so as to check spiralling prices. We boost pensions because prices have risen; now that we have increased pensions, we will again increase prices. The problem is not solved.

Soon both veterans and all pensioners in our economic system will still be at the same point. The economy is unbalanced; we are nearing bankruptcy.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was saying our production was close to $100 billion this year and consumption near $60 billion. In other words, we still have about $40 billion in capital. So, instead of taking revenues or money from the pockets of taxpayers, and they have precious little as it is, we could draw the necessary funds from the total revenues of national production.

• (1640)

As long as we take revenues, salary increases and taxes from the pockets of taxpayers, we will keep on disturbing our economy.

Veterans are certainly right in asking for increases, because they must do with a meagre pittance and are almost at the rationing stage. So, we owe them something, because they went to war. What for? To safeguard our freedom and democracy.

After the war, we were not supposed to have any economic stagnation. We were supposed to live entirely and fully free, and the economy was to be put at the service of all Canadians. And we realize that this has never been achieved. Actually, approximately 20 per cent of our population enjoys the benefits of our economy; the remaining 80 per cent live in poverty, from day to day and in slums.

If there are so many slums, it is because the interest rate is too high. Our citizens lack the means to build new houses. Those who do build them must pay interest rates as high as 4, 5 or even 6 per cent. The government does not concern itself with establishing interest rates which would permit lenders to make a reasonable profit, while allowing those who need a house to buy one. At the present time, we are all tenants in this country and we pay excessive interest rates which in part accounts for the increase in the cost of living and prevents our citizens from living their lives properly.

Then, what should we do to enable all our citizens, including our veterans, to have a decent life? We must set up a well balanced economic system so that we can put an end to the increase in the cost of living and the increase in taxes.

As long as we fail to solve the issue, we shall ask for increases which do not bring any solution but do cause new problems because, under the present system, we shall pay for the increases out of the pockets of those who already do not have much.

Mr. Speaker, we have been speaking for a long time of our proposed solutions designed to balance our economy and correct the mistakes of our present system. In fact, we admit that the present system is the best in the world, but we realize that it lends itself to much abuse, something which must be identified and corrected.

We must balance our economy in order to provide every person with what he is entitled to get. Thus, all the goods we have in hand might be used to meet people's requirements, thus ensuring their economic freedom and security.

[English]

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I agree with what has been said by my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), on some of the major criticisms of this bill. However, I will say that we welcome what is being done for our veterans.

I have just returned from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs where we completed a clause by clause study of the bill and had a frank discussion with the minister and the officials of his department. They explained some of what we considered last night to be apparent anomalies in the bill. The minister reassured us with regard to our fears in connection with the old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and the war veterans allowance by telling us that the total benefit would accrue to the veteran. This was one of the fears that I and others voiced in this debate.

The standing committee also heard representations by representatives of two prisoners of war associations, the national association and Hong Kong veterans. While it may be argued that they did not have anything to do with this bill, they did ask for increased benefits and further recognition. That is what this bill is all about, increasing benefits to veterans.

The National Association of Prisoners of War represents those who were incarcerated in prisoner of war camps in Europe, particularly those taken prisoner in the infamous Dieppe raid when, despite the valour of our Canadian soldiers, many were taken prisoner. They asked a very small thing from the government. While I agree that something like this cannot possibly be incorporated into this bill, I urge the government to take note of the brief presented by the national association wherein they ask for an immediate 10 per cent increase in pension for those who suffered indignity, starvation, humility, inhumanity and mental anguish in the war. They have reason to make this simple request. I might say that all members of the committee, government and opposition alike, were sympathetic to the request by this association. The departmental officials were present, heard the representations and made note of them. I hope they are also sympathetic.

This morning the Hong Kong veterans made similar representations. The committee afforded them the same reception. All members were sympathetic toward them. The brief is in the hands of the government. I trust the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) will take note of their representations which are reasonable, especially in view of the fact that a comparatively small number who suffered at the hands of the Japanese are still alive today. Most members of the committee agreed that the sum of money that would be involved would be in the neighbourhood of approximately half a million dollars. Surely, we cannot afford to do less than that for these men who gave so much. I wish to put on record that the Hong Kong prisoners of war asked that such conditions as arthritis, coronary ailments, mental breakdown and so on be considered automatically a result of service under those terrible conditions they suffered during the war.

Your Honour has allowed me to wander a bit. I appreciate that. I will now return to the substance of the bill before us. We are talking about a 3.6 per cent increase in pensions and allowances and all the benefits in veterans' legislation. Let us take a look at what this means to a 100 per cent pensioner. The basic rate of pension is $3,504. Based on 3.6 per cent, that works out to $126 and some odd cents per year. Broken down, this means they will receive $10.50 a month. This is a good thing and we do not object to it. However, let us not over-praise the government for what it is doing. This is long overdue.

As was pointed out last night, what is really needed is to bring the basic rate into line with the inflation that has taken place over the years and parity with the unskilled labourer in the federal public service. If that had been done, the veteran would be satisfied with the 3.6 per cent increase and would not even have asked for an increase at this time. Had that been done, and the escalation formula attached to the new basic rate in line with the present wages for unskilled labour, I am sure we would have received this bill with far more favour, and so would the veterans organizations. I shall not mention this aspect any further except to say that when we praise the government for the action it has taken we should remember that it is only veterans drawing the 100 per cent pension who will be receiving the $10 or $15 a month. And not many of them are getting the 100 per cent pension. Many are getting less. Of course, the percentage of benefit decreases in proportion to the reduction in the amount of pension they are getting. So the crying need is for an increase in the basic rate of pension and if the government is really sincere about helping the veteran, this is the direction in which we should move. As my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) has pointed out, the veterans organizations have requested such action time and time again through their representatives. I am afraid their briefs are gathering dust in the pigeonholes of the department. Let us dust them off; let us do something meaningful for those who did so much when their services were needed.

Everyone in the House agrees that what is being done for the veterans needs to be done and we support the measure wholeheartedly. There is nothing the matter with the bill except that it does not go far enough. We have tried to draw attention to its deficiencies and we have tried to make some impression, not only in the House but in committee on the officials of the department concerned and on the mind of the minister in the hope that heed would be paid to some of our representations. Let us hope this is not the last of the bills to aid our veterans. Let us hope it is only a beginning. It has been suggested that the government only takes action of this kind when it is considering going to the people for a mandate. Why not take action some time when there is not an election in prospect? If we are serious about aiding those who gave so much of themselves for their country when they were needed, then surely we can look after them when they are entering the twilight of their lives and when their own need is greatest.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): I wish to join other members of the House in welcoming this bill. We have received an assurance from the minister, and I, for one, am very pleased about the attitude he has taken toward this important matter in assuring us that the basic rate will in fact be looked into and that a benchmark commensurate with the rate of pay of labour on Parliament Hill will be put into the statute once and for all. Surely, this is not being over-generous. And if we are looking for a standard which can be rationalized, may I say that I have never met anyone in the years I have been in parliament who ever raised any objection when this particular benchmark was mentioned.

The Hong Kong veterans were before us this morning in the committee. They are very happy, generally speaking, about the recent improvement in their lot, but, as they say themselves, time is running out on them. Some 20 per cent of them are still fully employed, which is a miracle in its way, when one realizes that these men endured three and a half years of the most frightful treatment as prisoners of war in the hands of the Japanese. They have made heroic attempts to remain self-reliant and self-supporting. As one might have expected, they became tremendously close as a group. They have stuck together, and they worry a great deal about those who have not been able to make it. They say, and I will take their figures, that there are 25 per cent of the survivors, some 1,150 in round figures, who are still unable to support themselves completely. Then again, as everybody knows, a strong-willed man is often able to put up with the rigors of life but in these cases it frequently happens that hardships fall upon the family, wives and children who do not enjoy the standard of living which most Canadians can get for themselves today. The best they can look forward to is a standard of living below that of the labouring man on Parliament Hill.

This is why the veterans have come to us and said: Can you not look after those people who do not measure up and who cannot bring their standard of living up to that of labour. They admit that some of their number have done so well that they have not even applied for their pensions. Some have done very well indeed. In every walk of life there are giants, mentally and physically, who can survive even the rigours of a Japanese prisoner of war camp. But the representatives of the group are realistic enough to know that one must not take account only of the very few who do not need help from a grateful Canadian people. So they have come to us and said: Will you not give us the benefit of the doubt in certain cases. We have done so on many occasions with respect to other veterans, as I mentioned yesterday.

The Hong Kong veterans asked to be given the benefit of the doubt with respect to complaints of premature aging, cardiac conditions and arthritis. They say they can bring forward medical evidence to support their claims. I do not think there is need to labour the point. Everyone in this chamber would agree that it is not good for a man who has a weak heart to spend three and a half years in a prison camp. This is a classic example of a case where the benefit of the doubt rule might well be applied. These people have made an heroic attempt for 27 years to put themselves on the road back. They come forward now and ask for a little more help. I think we should give them the benefit of the doubt as requested.

I shall resume my seat, now, and end my participation in the debate. Let us keep an open mind toward these people and give them all the help we can.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, granting these increases in the form of an escalator clause based on the current increase in the cost of living rather than at a low fixed rate as previously contained in some of our legislation is to be commended. We agree we should be making provision for special difficulties encountered by veterans who were prisoners of war and who may now be suffering from arthritis or heart disease related to privations which they then endured. The inevitable end for some of them is near so we are not being overly generous.

• (1700)

As we approach an election I keep thinking of the argument that has been used, not only by this government but by previous governments, that if we are to provide pensions and allowances they must remain at a very low level since the country would not agree to pay the kind of pension that was originally envisaged to put the war veteran pensioners on a par with a sweeper in the civil service. As many hon. members have indicated, this level has now risen to a reasonably respectable one, and since it is now higher than a mere subsistence level we have to find another way of justifying the low pensions that we pay. Hon. members will recall that the Woods Commission reported that those with multiple disabilities should receive an amount that was three and a half times what was originally suggested as the basic pension rate. Only recently members of the government said that this was too high, having figured it out in dollars and cents, and that it could not be justified.

Although the increase was not nearly as generous as Commissioner Woods would have liked, the legislation has now been in effect for about a year and to my knowledge there has been no complaint that the veterans are receiving undue consideration from the Parliament of Canada. Neither have I heard anyone say that the amounts we are paying are overly generous in terms of the compensation that a country as rich in resources and wealth as Canada could afford to pay those who made the kind of sacrifice they did. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased that we were able to increase the cost of living escalator clause relating to both pensions and allowances to bring it in line with the cost of living increase. It had always seemed to me that we adopted an unrealistic escalator, but we have now corrected this situation.

I am reminded of labour organizations that argue against the implementation of wage controls. They say, and rightly so, that wage controls are fair for some, but for those in the lower categories they are very unfair. If you freeze the pension of a person on low income so it becomes stabilized at a level considerably below the standard of living achieved by the average person in this nation, then you put these people at a considerable disadvantage, which I do not think is in the interests of Canadians.

Finally, may I say that I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Laing) will stay in the department for a considerable length of time. I would appreciate it if he would change his mind and run again, though I do not know how that would sit with some of my colleagues from the minister's province. Nevertheless, he is the first minister of the department who, on his own initiative said he would do this, he would do that, he would do the other, and I think the veterans of this country will be very pleased that the order in council will be implemented and that those changes that the bill neglected to make will in fact be made. I am sure the veterans of this country will congratulate him on the forward step that he has taken, and some of them will remember Art Laing long after he has left this place.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being after five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), public works; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), supply and services; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), agriculture.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, in arranging the schedule of business for private member's hour this afternoon, it had been hoped that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) would be able to go ahead with one of her two notices of motions for production of documents. She was, in fact, prepared to do so and we on this side were prepared to reply. However, there has been a late scheduling change. A committee of which she is a very active member was called into session this afternoon. I refer to the health and welfare committee, which is dealing with the family income security plan in which the hon. member is very interested. Accordingly, at the last moment, without any opportunity for advance notice to be given either on her part or on our part, it was necessary for her to withdraw from the arrangement and she will not be moving her motion this afternoon.

As a result, we did discuss the possibility of using this hour, or a good portion of it, to conclude the debate on the measure that has just been passed. That being so, I think there might be a disposition among hon. members to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House agree to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ELECTION EXPENSES BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CANADA ELECTIONS ACT AND INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-211, to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before beginning to set out the details of this particular bill I might make one or two comments about the question of election expenses, the background to this bill and my approach in bringing the bill before the House of Commons. As you will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, every member of this House in a sense is an expert on election expenses because each member has met the difficulties and responsibilities in a financial way of contesting a general election. Therefore, everyone here has knowledge that probably is at least equal to the advice that is received from all other sources concerning what we ought to do about this difficult problem.

[Mr. Jerome.]

First of all I might mention that this bill follows in the main, if not entirely, the recommendations of the Special Committee on Election Expenses which reported to this House in June of last year. That was an all-party committee which met frequently and heard witnesses. In so far as can be determined, its recommendations to the House of Commons were unanimous. That report in turn benefited from the study which had been made previously by an expert group, a committee which had been appointed by the Pearson government and headed by Mr. Barbeau, known as the Barbeau committee. The membership of that committee included two former distinguished members of this House, Mr. M. J. Coldwell and Mr. Arthur Smith. In addition to the three gentlemen I have mentioned, the other members were Mr. Norman Ward and Mr. Gordon Dryden.

To a great extent, as did the report of the special committee, this bill for its guiding principles rests on the main recommendations of the Barbeau committee. There are some divergencies. I will perhaps later be prepared to explain why I am not recommending to the House the implementation of every single item that was put forward either in the Barbeau committee report or in the special committee report, although I repeat that we have followed in the main the principal recommendations.

We are keeping an open mind in respect of the details of this bill. I shall be listening to the views of hon. members on all sides of the House, and if perhaps persuasive arguments can be made and if gaps can be revealed in the bill, then certainly I will be ready to accept changes to it. As an example of that approach I might mention that the Barbeau committee recommended that in the disclosure provisions, registered political parties be obligated to report contributions received from foreign sources. There was no reason given at any point in the report concerning the basis for this recommendation, the extent to which in the view of the committee it felt political parties were financed by foreign sources or, indeed, why from a public policy point of view foreign sources ought to be segregated from domestic sources.

The special committee did not follow the Barbeau committee in that regard but recommended that non-resident individuals, corporations and unions be prohibited from making contributions to registered political parties. Again, in the report of the special committee I have been unable to find any reasoned argument in support of this particular proposal. In the absence of any compelling argument in favour of either of these approaches, I have not included any such provision in the bill. However, I certainly will be listening to the observations of hon. members on this point and if good arguments can be brought forward indicating the inclusion of such a provision would be an improvement to the bill, I would be prepared to accept an amendment along those lines: likewise in respect of other details of the bill, except that I am not prepared to depart from the main principles which underscore this bill.

The bill itself incorporates three main principles which have been widely discussed since the last electoral reform on this subject in 1920, namely, the limitation of election expenses, the disclosure of sources of contributions and the need for financial assistance by candidates and political parties. The piecemeal electoral reforms between 1871 and 1920 all suffered from the twin difficulties of failure to recognize the existence in the law of political parties and failure to recognize that political parties and candidates require fairly large amounts of money in order to carry on their activities.

In the modern world very large amounts of money are required to conduct election campaigns and to communicate effectively with the electorate. Hopefully, this bill will overcome the problems imposed by these earlier failures and as well will bring the question of political finances to the attention of the public. Hopefully, also, it will place candidates seeking public office on a more equal footing.

I am sure hon. members will be asking why we are bringing this bill before the House at this particular time. There is no sinister motive at all behind the timing. Members will recall that the report of the special committee was presented last June, and as the person principally responsible for the scheduling of government business I can say that had I had the bill in my pocket on that date it would have been quite impossible, because of other legislative priorities, to have brought it before the House much earlier since it would have meant removing from the legislative program items to which the government attached priority.

Last fall, as hon. members will recall, we spent much time on the employment support bill, on the tax reform bill and on the farm products marketing bill, just to mention the three main items along with budget bills that had to receive the attention of the House. Also as hon. members know, in this session we have been occupied with legislation of considerable importance. That is why I invite members not to speculate that there is some sinister motive which has induced the government to bring the bill forward at this particular time, unless it is to support the speculation which exists in all our minds that elections are necessary and probably will overtake us at one time or another.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now tell us about your good motives.

Mr. MacEachen: There is a question as to when the bill will come into effect and whether it will be in effect before the next election. Not knowing when the House will pass the bill and not knowing the date of the next election, it is quite impossible for me to answer that question, except that it is clear that the Chief Electoral Officer can insist under the law on a time period of six months before he is obliged to implement an amendment to the Canada Elections Act. But there is nothing in the law that would prevent the Chief Electoral Officer implementing any amendment or being in a position to implement any amendment to the Canada Elections Act within a shorter period. Of course, hon. members may have conferred individually with the Chief Electoral Officer as to when in his opinion it would be possible to give effect to the provisions of this bill when and if it comes into effect.

The first principle in this bill is a decision to put a limit on election expenses. We all hope and strive for the objective that money and financial resources in the hands of any individual or any party should not be the deciding factor in elections. There is a widespread opinion, incapable of proof however, that money has been very instrumental in waging and winning elections. Any discussion on the eligibility of persons for office must be premised on the assertion that a candidate with limited funds should have some equality or some semblance of equality of opportunity to present his views as much as the candidate with large resources. This bill in all its aspects will not assert full equality, because how is that possible in any field of endeavour? But at least it will bring us closer to the objective of equality among candidates competing for public office.

One method of putting candidates of differing financial means on a more equal footing in election campaigns, suggested by both the Barbeau committee and the special committee, was the imposition of a ceiling on the amounts which candidates could spend on election expenses. That is quite important because if an effective ceiling is placed on election expenses then a particularly wealthy candidate cannot rely upon great resources in order to influence unduly the outcome of an election. We have not put a cap, we have not put a limit or we have not recommended a limit on all election expenses. We have avoided that, as the Barbeau committee avoided it and as the special committee avoided it, because first of all there is a question of necessity. Is it necessary to put a limit on every conceivable item in the expense list of a political candidate?

There are certain overhead expenses within a campaign which exist from one election to another, which do not vary a great deal and which exist in every constituency—for example, the travelling expenses and personal expenses of candidates. What the Barbeau committee did and what the special committee did was to select those items in the over-all expense spectrum which first of all were foreseeable, were controllable, were subject to the greatest escalation and which were putting the greatest burden upon candidates and political parties.

For that reason, election expenses are defined in the bill generally to include expenditures in connection with the media, the print media and the electronics media; in other words, paid advertising, the biggest element in modern election campaigns. Accordingly, we have imposed a ceiling on a candidate's election expenses to be defined as the cost of paid broadcast advertising, paid press advertising and other forms of paid advertising. A candidate's fixed costs which I have mentioned already, such as travelling expenses, the costs of his nominating meetings, and so on, are not included. The rental of halls, for example, is not included within the definition of election expenses. These are not included because they are relatively static in nature and they have not been inordinate consumers of election campaign funds. Therefore we have defined election expenses to include these special items and we are proposing a limit on campaign expenses under the definition I have mentioned.

The limit on a candidate's campaign spending proposed is $1 per elector for the first 15,000 electors, plus 50 cents per elector for every elector over 15,000 and under 25,000, and 25 cents per elector for each elector over 25,000. This formula works out at the figure of $20,000 for the first 25,000 electors, plus 25 cents for each elector over 25,000.

For example, in a constituency having 45,000 electors a candidate would be limited to $30,000 on his campaign advertising costs. These are the figures put forward by the special committee. They are larger than the amounts recommended earlier by the Barbeau committee. They are within shooting distance of the actual experience of particular urban candidates in the last federal election.

They may seem to be generous or to be too large, but bearing in mind the recent experience of candidates, and that if adopted this legislation will exist probably for quite a number of future elections, they seem to be a reasonable limit at this particular time. As a government we are not married to these particular figures. If persuasive arguments can be made that they ought to be increased or decreased, then we would consider that question as well.

Now I would like to deal with a number of constituencies so that hon. members will get some idea of the amounts we are talking about. For example, the constituency of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with estimated electors of 60,284 at April 1, 1972, would have a spending limit of $28,825.

An hon. Member: He will need more than that.

Mr. MacEachen: The constituency of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), with 45,807 electors, would have a spending limit of $25,201. The constituency of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), with 47,130 electors, would have a spending limit of $25,550. The constituency of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), with 33,000 electors, would have a spending limit of $22,000. Those are the limits for these constituencies. It is not difficult for hon. members to compute the amounts for themselves. If I can make a personal comment based on my experience as a candidate in a number of elections, I believe that these are real limits, not fictional limits and that in the future candidates will be held back quite forcibly by these limits when they are confronted with managing a modern election campaign based, as it is, on the employment of the media.

I should like to turn for a moment to the limitation of spending by the parties. The bill does not impose any over-all spending limit upon registered political parties. In this particular we followed the recommendation contained in the Barbeau report. The bill does, however, impose limits on the use of the broadcast media by political parties through an election campaign. It is in the area of the electronics media that campaign spending by registered parties has escalated most notably in recent years.

It was for this reason that the Barbeau committee and the special committee recommended that some limitation be placed on spending in these areas. Spending by registered parties in other areas such as in the press has not proved to be as significant in terms of consumption of campaign funds as the broadcast media, and consequently the need for control is not so great. Registered parties will be limited to 6½ hours on any broadcast outlet during the election campaign. That is not 6½ hours for each political party; the total 6½ hours is to be shared by the registered parties and the bill provides that the CRTC will be given the responsibility of adjudicating any dispute as to the allocation of time.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Woolliams: That is pretty dangerous.

Mr. MacEachen: This is also a real limit. It follows the recommendation of both the Barbeau committee and the special committee. In arriving at any allocation formula, the CRTC is to consult representatives of the registered parties in an attempt to have the formula worked out by agreement. If agreement cannot be reached, the CRTC can put forward a proposal and give notice that it will be binding and after two days it will be binding on all parties. The CRTC will then notify all broadcasters in Canada of the proposed allocation and these broadcasters must provide time to the registered parties on the basis of that allocation. There are penalties for any failure to provide this time. The time will be paid for one-half by the Chief Electoral Officer and one-half by the political party itself.

Beyond this over-all limit, political parties will not be permitted to buy time but broadcasters who so wish can contribute time over this limit to registered political parties. If such a contribution is made, it must be made to all parties on the basis of the formula just mentioned. Consequently, the advantage to any registered party which might be obtained by having had campaign funds available for media advertising will be lost and all parties will be on a comparable footing as far as the use of paid broadcasting is concerned.

As hon. members are aware there is a great deal of interest in the question of disclosure of the source of campaign funds. The Barbeau committee in its hearings identified a feeling held by many Canadians that political parties must have something to hide because they do not disclose who are their contributors. I do not suggest that this feeling is justified by the facts surrounding the contributions to any party; however, because this feeling exists it is necessary that we not only reassure the public about political parties but that we do it in such a way that they will be convinced that the assurance is real and solid.

This bill reflects the view that disclosure of the sources of campaign contributions will put the facts surrounding contributions before the public. It will have a salutary effect in reducing the alleged mystery surrounding the financing of political campaigns, and probably for the first time will impress upon the public the fact that usually political parties are broke and between elections have a great deal of difficulty financing their annual activities, and that despite the alleged wealth of political parties each of them has great difficulty and candidates have a great deal of difficulty at election time in raising money to finance their campaign.

It is a myth, of course, of modern politics that money flows into the coffers of political parties without limit and that really it is an abundance of riches with which the parties work at election time. We hope that the system of disclosure recommended in this bill will put a good deal of this misunderstanding to rest and that the public will have a real look at how much money political parties raise each year, how much they raise for elections, how much they spend and what they spend it on. As a government, we have not gone into conclave and decided what system of disclosure would be in the best interests of the Liberal party, for example. On this point we have accepted the recommendations of the Barbeau committee and the special committee of the House of Commons.

In this bill we are proposing that political parties be obliged by law to disclose their sources of funds by category, namely, the corporations, trade unions, private individuals and so on. We are not obliging nor asking that the individual contributor to a political party be identified in the return. In taking this approach we are following that taken by the Barbeau committee and by the special committee.

The Barbeau committee discussed this particular question and hon. members may want to refer to the discussion in which they put forward the pros and cons of disclosure by contributors. They concluded that for a number of reasons it would be in the best interests of the democratic process not to identify particular contributors whose privacy would be violated, who may be subject to harassment from all political parties and whose secrecy of political activity would be jeopardized. For these reasons they did not recommend the identification of the contributor. They accepted the view that an obligation to disclose individual contributions to political parties would probably dry up sources of support from legitimate contributors and would force political parties to rely on what they term illegitimate sources of campaign contributions.

It seems to me that in obliging political parties on an annual basis and after an election to disclose by source their contributions in total dollars, by obliging the chief agent of the party to make a report to the Chief Electoral Officer, by obliging the party to have its accounts audited and confirmed that in the opinion of the auditor the accounts had been kept in accordance with the law, and by obliging the Chief Electoral Officer to make these accounts public we are going a long way in putting a searchlight on the activities of political parties. We are taking a very important step and I hope that members of all parties will realize its implications for the future of all political parties and the operation of their financing.

With regard to candidates, the system of disclosure for candidates under the bill is intended to be the one contained in the present law. In this regard we are simply adopting the Barbeau report and the special committee report of what should be disclosed by candidates. We are requiring candidates to publish returns relating to the names of contributors, whether private individuals or corporations or unregistered groups who have contributed to their campaigns. The names of specific contributors must be set out on the form relating to election expenses.

In addition to the return relating to election expenses, a candidate must within two months following date of the election have his official agent turn over his accounts, receipts and vouchers and his return relating to election expenses to an independent auditor who will check the accounts to determine whether or not they accurately reflect the spending or, alternatively, that there is insufficient information.

The official agent of the candidate must then forward the return relating to election expenses, and the auditor's report to the returning officer who in turn submits it to the Chief Electoral Officer who keeps both reports as public records. The returning officer is obliged to publish the return relating to election expenses and the audited report in a local newspaper following the election. The candidate is not entitled to the return of his deposit or the financial assistance, which I will discuss later, until these returns have been submitted.

The concept of the auditor's report was developed by the special committee and it is felt that this will allow an individual citizen to determine quickly and accurately what a particular candidate has spent or whether a particular candidate is in violation of the law. If a candidate does not submit a return and an auditor's report, or if the return is inaccurate or incomplete, then the candidate if elected will not be allowed to take his seat, or if not elected will not be eligible to be a candidate again until the return and the report have been filed.

I have already discussed the system of disclosure by registered political parties but I should give a little more detail because it is a key proposal. Under the bill, parties registered under section 13 of the Canada Elections Act will be required each year, within two months of the end of its fiscal year, to submit an annual return showing the amount of contributions made to it in that year by classes of donors. These classes of donors are individuals, public corporations with share capital, private corporations with share capital, corporations without share capital, trade unions and unincorporated associations other than trade unions.

On the disbursement side, the parties must show amounts of money provided by the party, the value of other assistance given to each provincial and regional organization of the party, the amount of money expended on operating expenses of the party, including the travel costs of the leader of the party, and the total of all other expenditures made by or on behalf of the party. In addition, within six months of each election the registered parties must submit a similar return with respect to contributions and expenditures made by the party during the election.

Both the annual reports and the post-election reports of registered parties must be accompanied by the certificate of an independent auditor similar to the one to be obtained by candidates. This must state that in the auditor's opinion the accounts of the party and the reports accurately reflect the expenditures of the party in the annual period or in the election campaign, whichever is applicable. That is certainly a new step.

I have already discussed the question of disclosure and I have mentioned the reasons which led us to accept the recommendation of both Barbeau and the special committee with respect to the obligation. We fully accept the principle of disclosure with regard to political parties, but it is disclosure by category. For the first time we have applied the doctrine of agency. To ensure that the accounts, vouchers and receipts of the registered political parties accurately reflect all the expenditures and contributions made to political parties, it is necessary to apply the doctrine of agency to political parties.

The system of agency for political parties will be analogous to the one already applicable to candidates. Registered parties will be required to designate agents with the Chief Electoral Officer forthwith after the coming into force of this bill. Thereafter, all payments on behalf of the party must be made by agents and all contributions made to agents. Each party will be required to designate a chief agent who will be responsible for the filing of the party's annual and post-election reports and obtaining and filing the auditor's statements thereon.

Each agent of the party will be required to render whatever assistance is required to the auditor for the annual and post-election audit. The chief agent will be held responsible for filing the auditor's reports and ensuring their accuracy, and will be guilty of an offence for not doing so. The registered party itself may be prosecuted for failure by its chief agent to discharge these duties. This makes it possible to go after the agent of the party or the political party. The fine proposed for an offence by a registered political party is $25,000. It may seem an inadequate amount, but it seems to me that the sanction here is not solely the fine itself but the embarrassment which any national political party would suffer if it found itself in violation of the provisions of this bill.

I would also point out that the existing provisions governing the duties of the candidate's agent will ensure that no person other than the official agent incurs election expenses on behalf of the candidate. If other persons or groups incur election expenses with the knowledge and consent of the candidate or his official agent, such expenses must be included in the candidate's expenses and will be subject to the candidate's limit.

If such groups incur election expenses without the knowledge and consent of the candidate, they will be guilty of an offence unless they can show that they incurred these expenses in supporting or opposing a candidate for the legitimate purposes of an organization to which they belong and not for the purposes of avoiding the candidate's expenditure limits. We feel that protection for persons who incur election expenses for the legitimate purposes of an organization to which they belong, and not to avoid the limitation of expenditure provisions of the act, is necessary in order to preserve a balance between freedom of speech on the one hand and the necessity to observe spending limits on the other.

In addition to imposing a limit on the amounts which candidates can spend on personal publicity, both the Barbeau report and the special committee report recommended that a degree of financial equality should be established among candidates and among political parties by the extension of certain services and subsidies to all who qualify and to increase public participation in politics by broadening the base of political contributions through tax concessions to donors. The bill contains several provisions to accomplish these purposes.

Any candidate receiving 20 per cent of the valid votes cast is entitled to a return equivalent to 25 per cent of proven and allowable election expenses defined in the act and certified in the audited report. In addition, the candidate will receive a sum of $250, which is intended to be a contribution toward the cost of obtaining an auditor's report. Candidates in scheduled areas, that is, large northern ridings, will receive a further federal allowance of one cent per square mile up to a maximum of $3,000 for proven travelling expenses, whichever is less. These amounts are paid by the office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

These payments are directed to assisting candidates for parliament to meet the basic requirements of communicating with the public, and since modern election campaigning is heavily dependent on the mass media with their very high costs, it becomes desirable that candidates should receive a degree of assistance in meeting these costs.

In addition to the time alloted to the registered parties on the broadcast media, broadcasters are required to make additional time available to the candidates of each party in the amount of five minutes on television, 20 minutes on radio and 20 minutes on cable television services. In practice, this time is divided among candidates of the parties in the area covered by the outlet. Where a broadcasting outlet covers more than one riding, each candidate would get the amount of time which I have just mentioned. Provision is also made for independent candidates to have access to broadcasting time on an equitable basis.

At the same time, while this is a guarantee to ensure that every candidate in every riding where there is an outlet will have guaranteed minimum access to the media in the way I have stipulated, each candidate is free to purchase media time up to the limits of his own election budget. In other words, though there is a guarantee of minimum time which must be provided, he cannot be denied any amount of time he wishes to purchase up to the ceiling imposed on his election expenses.

There is another important point. Rates for individual and registered parties are fixed at the standard rates charged by broadcasters for normal commercial customers and increased rates during an election campaign are not permitted. We are all familiar with the practice of the media of charging, not the lowest commercial rates but what are described as national rates. In future, under this law the media will have to provide candidates with the lowest commercial rate.

Mr. MacLean: Good.

Mr. MacEachen: That, in essence, describes the provisions of what is a wide-ranging effort to reform and update the electoral process in Canada with respect to election expenses. We accept the principle of disclosure, of greater public knowledge about the financing of political parties. We do not take the approach in the bill that politics is evil, that it is sleazy, that it is something to be hidden. We proceed on the basis that it is a legitimate activity and that it should be given the same status as other activities in the community.

It is for this reason, and in order to broaden the basic contribution to political parties, that we are providing certain tax incentives to contributors to political parties. An individual or a corporation can be eligible annually to a tax credit of up to $500, or one-third of a maximum annual contribution of $1,500. We believe that this tax credit, available to contributors of political parties, should make it possible to broaden the base of support for political parties while making the practice of contributing to political parties more appealing. It should certainly encourage smaller contributors and reduce dependence among parties upon very large contributors.

We have chosen the tax credit system as opposed to an income tax deduction because we feel it to be a more equitable system and because it does not affect the tax base. Here again, there was a difference of opinion between the Barbeau committee and the special committee. The Barbeau committee recommended a tax credit; the special committee recommended a tax deduction. After considering the arguments for and against, we thought it was in the interest of equality among taxpayers and better for our political system to use the tax credit method.

I believe I have covered all the main items in the bill. Where we have departed from any of the recommendations of either committee I shall be glad, either on winding up the second reading debate or in committee, to go into further detail. But I am sure the principles of the bill, namely, the principle of disclosure, applicable for the first time to registered parties, the placing of a ceiling on election expenses of candidates and of political parties and, finally, the support of political activity through direct grants from the treasury to eligible candidates and through the provision of tax incentives will be widely supported.

I wish to apologize for the time I have taken in introducing this bill but I judged it to be of some interest and did not wish to miss any of the important points. I might add that I am approaching the bill with an open mind, in full knowledge that everyone in the House is an expert on the subject. We, the experts, in the House of Commons will finally determine the shape of this bill based upon what I consider to be the superior knowledge and experience possessed in this field by members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, so impressed am I with the minister's very interesting defence of this bill that I am almost tempted to say "Amen" and sit down. But I will resist that temptation for a while. The minister is indeed a very plausible parliamentary practitioner when he wants to be. I must say I was more impressed by his presentation than by the bill he is presenting. As to the whole question of election expenses, I have long been an advocate—and I imagine most members of this House have been advocates—of introducing a measure of change. There is much that ought to be done; this is a very important aspect of our parliamentary system.

• (2100)

I think some of the general principles that the minister has recapitulated find general acceptance in the House. It is proper and appropriate that we officially recognize the tremendous importance of political parties to our whole parliamentary structure. Sixty years ago Lord Bryce declared that political parties are older than democracy and that no great, free, representative state ever worked without them. He was not able to see that you could work democracy without political parties. And so we must realize that they are essential to the working of our system. Only too often do we hear the sordid suggestions that surround political parties rather than acknowledge the essential democratic function that underpins them.

I was immensely moved by the minister's invitation not to suggest that there was anything sinister about the timing of the presentation of his bill. I also noted his invitation to suggest why the separation of foreign contributions, which was recommended by the Barbeau committee, had not been included. I should not have thought that at this "grey" stage of parliamentary discussion that that kind of invitation would have been necessary or that such prompting would have been required.

I noted, too, that the minister said it would have been very difficult to get the measure through during all these many, many months, that even had he had it right in his pocket there may have been great difficulty about getting passage. I suppose had he never tried, he would never have known what parliament would do with his measure had he taken it out of his pocket. I have the feeling that it was not in his pocket until very lately, that this measure is a scissors and paste job, and that where Barbeau did not fit the minister used the special committee. Certainly the synchronization of the two does not strike me as the result of a long, careful series of legislative steps; I find a lot of disharmony in the piecing together of what Barbeau suggested and what our very fine special committee suggested. Therefore, I am not going to cast any sinister suggestions but I am just wondering whether there was a burning desire to produce yet another panoply of progressive excellence before a certain event, and to produce it in such a way that nothing really had to be done but produce it.

This is a discussion that has been going on for many years. The subject of election expenses has been a dreary story of sometimes shady dealings and worrisome suspicions. We have had many calls for reform down through the ages. Sir Robert Borden—as he later became—made his first speech in 1896 and spoke of nothing else but the outrageous, rotten practice that had put certain members of the other party into office. He made a very good job of it, too. There were a lot of crooked things done in olden days. For example, there was a certain sheriff who on nominating day did not tell the Conservative candidate where the nominating meeting was to take place, and the poor lad showed up after nominations were closed and there was a Grit acclamation.

I may say that my party was not free from iniquitous practice. We never forgot the Pacific scandal, though over the long course of history we were never seemingly able to become the masters at this sort of thing as another prominent and ancient party did. But it is not for me here today to throw two Beauharnois against one Pacific scandal; suffice it to say that there was room for reform.

But then, again, it should be said that down through the years as Parliaments have tackled this subject we have produced what by comparison with many states, indeed with practically any state, is a very fine parliamentary system. We have an elections act which I think compares very favourably with any I have studied, and I have studied a good many. We have improved the elections act and have in our own time, generally speaking, gained the confidence that elections that take place in Canada pretty clearly and generally reflect the popular will of the day. We cannot judge the popular will, though at times we might make comments about it. Certainly ever since I have been in this House and long before that we have had at the helm a Chief Electoral Officer who was a man of ability and integrity, a judgment which I am sure is universally held and widely shared.

There are some things about this measure which cause me immediate concern. I agree that there are advances in it, and not for one moment do I suggest that much good has not been produced in this bill. But I am troubled about many matters. In the first place, we do not really yet have anything like a limitation on what parties will be spending. The big, well-heeled party will still have the advantage over the other parties not so affluent, and I do not say that because I do not happen to belong to the most well-heeled party. But let us not pretend that we are putting a ceiling on election expenses when in fact it is something a good deal less substantial than a ceiling. We must note that we are limiting expenses to some aspects only, such as advertising, broadcasting and printing material. We all know there are many other areas than these.

I would not use the word that the minister used: the other expenses are not "static" and they are certainly not insignificant. Heaven knows, they are not lacking in costliness. The disclosure provisions are not such as to create a tremendous advance or to cause any real quaking and shaking. It is not terribly hard to form a corporation, shall I say. There are many ways whereby in its administration and its practical operation this measure will be something less than a gem of perfection.

Another thing that I do not see dealt with here and which concerns me is that if we believe that parties are important—and they are important—we must recognize that parties have to live between elections as well as at election time. I think this consideration should and could have been thought about. The minister mentioned that various new positions would be created and an auditor would be appointed. I presume that the Chief Electoral Officer will pay him too. I hope that this will not be a charge upon the local candidate. I also noted that in the picking out from the Barbeau report and the picking out from the special committee report we lost what I thought was a very good suggestion, that of free mailing. I think that would have been a useful and helpful contribution to the conduct of an election. Surely we should be able to facilitate contact between a candidate and the people he seeks to represent.

I shall not dwell long on the idea of the tax credit or discuss it in contradistinction to the tax exemption; I might get mixed up, as the minister did momentarily this morning on the radio, though he soon corrected himself. I am wondering whether perhaps somewhere along the line we might make it easier for the little man to contribute and help, because I believe parties should be as broadly based as possible, with as many people as possible helping to make that party something in which they have a part and a tangible investment. That is the way you make a broadly based, popular party and I believe that is a very good thing.

When I get to the clause on broadcasting I see more evidences of haste than in any other clause. This is an area which will be filled with problems and which will require many amendments and reconsiderations. In the first place, what genius thought up the notion that prime time for radio is between 6 to 12 p.m.? That, surely, is not the kind of thing that people with this bill in their pockets since 1966 or 1970 should have let go by. That is not prime time for radio at all. In spite of the fact that we have spent millions preparing for satellites, there are still places in this country which depend upon the radio for messages of this kind and of other types. This bill lumps together TV and radio, and a little separation or surgery will be required there. In this whole area we find evidence of haste which would almost lead to sinister suggestions to which, of course, I do not want to give utterance.

An hon. Member: You are restrained in that regard.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes, I am a very restrained man. As I read over the clauses I am wondering just how they are going to become operative. I am wondering what we are going to do with the broadcaster who has his prime time fully booked, yet the state tells him he must carry this and that. Who decides whether he cuts into Pepsi-Cola or Coca-Cola time? He may have a bit of a problem in deciding which one he should bump. Who copes with the candidate's strategy in preferring to concentrate his small, limited amount of time rather than spread it out? There you have another problem. I notice that proposed section 99(2) is very much in need of guidelines and I think this will have to be discussed in great detail and more explanation will be required. The minister was probably very wise in gliding over this subject pretty quickly.

I come to another problem in this whole area, in respect of what you do with newspapers during the blackout period before election day. We had grown accustomed to having 48 hours during which we had no TV or radio political messages. This time was cut down to 24 hours. We now have this inhibition moved to the written media, the newspapers. We read that any article, editorial, advertisement or announcement of a partisan political character in relation to the election or by-election, as the case may be, is an offence under this act.

Supposing the Leader of the Opposition goes to Toronto the night before an election and addresses a tremendous crowd of enthusiastic people. What do the newspapers of that city do? Do they blot it out altogether or do they send two reporters, one of whom might say that many people thought it was an enthusiastic meeting while the other might say many thought it was not? Perhaps they might say there were a number of people there but they are not able to disclose how many because that might look like something of a "political nature". I suggest you are going to make namby-pambies out of the press lest they be charged with the offence set out in the act.

How are they going to report a political meeting? This is still a legal operation for them which now, under this bill, they may not fulfil. I believe in this connection the bill extends a badly defined prohibition which had existed heretofore for broadcasters only. This extends it to the press, which is a much more difficult media to have involved because I cannot see papers being blanked out altogether.

It is always a difficult thing to choose a good, general objective such as we have but I am inclined to believe that perhaps this bill suffers from a little too much hasty and ill-coordinated particularization. There are some other jurisdictions which have a limit on expenditures but which allow the parties and the candidates to decide whether they shall put "X" number of dollars of effort into radio, into television or into print, but in this bill we have a series of inhibitions which will be extremely difficult to sort out.

Probably we might achieve the objective more easily and more efficiently if we allowed a choice within the framework of expenses. There still is a great deal of diversity in this country and a campaign which would work for the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), for instance, would not be the kind of campaign which would work for an hon. member such as the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) whose riding is quite different. So you cannot apply judiciously and wisely a too rigid formula as to how a man or a party makes an appeal to the electorate.

Of course we have the right to say there are certain things one cannot do, and this is said in the elections act. We have the right to suggest that we bring a degree of equity into the measure of assistance. I think that is all to the good. The only danger here, of course, is that we might find that the contribution which comes from the state will become a kind of a floor and that over and above that the same needs and desires to collect and raise funds will still be required. Perhaps if there is any misconception in the mind of the public it may be more difficult to attain them.

If I speak only half as long as the minister it does not mean I am only half as interested, but it is hard for me to get over my habit of laconic brevity even in a matter of this kind. One of the most important things I looked for and did not find was a reference to shortening election campaigns. I think election campaigns in Canada are far too long, and when we have people who have the right—and our system gives one man this right—to decide when a campaign takes place, this prolongs them still further. This adds still more complications to our efforts to shorten election campaigns. I am not the only one who thinks that. At page 48 of the Barbeau report we find this passage:

> Modern communications and transportation, in the committee's view, render unnecessary the present length of campaigns. The duration of campaigns now not only imposes a heavy burden on the finances of the parties and candidates, but also on the stamina of the leaders and candidates as well as the electorate.
> The committee recognizes that the time necessary to enumerate electors under the present machinery may make it impossible to shorten the period between the issuance of the election writ and pooling day, without the introduction of a permanent list of electors. The committee also recognizes that considerable planning and preparation are required by parties and candidates immediately following the dissolution of parliament, and there is no intent on the part of the committee to suggest a restriction on this type of activity during any prescribed period. The committee suggests, however, that the campaign period need not coincide with the period needed for the establishment of the election machinery.

The report goes on to suggest that parties and candidates be prohibited from campaigning on radio and television before the 29th day before election day. I would presume to go even further than this illustrious body and accept the minister's invitation to constitute every one of us here as an expert. I think this is a good suggestion which was carried through by the special committee on election expenses. They pretty well recommended the same thing, except they declared it should be 29 days.

The report recommended that parties and candidates be prohibited from campaigning, as distinct from preparation for and holding nomination conventions, advertising for workers, and so on, on radio and television, and from using paid print media including newspapers, periodicals, direct mailing, billboards and posters prior to the twenty-ninth day before polling day.

I think both groups have missed a significant point. Once the writ is issued it will be terribly difficult to deal with the days before you would formally commence your campaign. What would you do? Would you go home and knit, or draw pictures in some private book? I believe if the recommendation of the Barbeau committee or of the special committee were followed we would have two campaigns, a kind of phony war for a month and then the real thing for the next month. Both would be costly. I say, and I have said this before, that the time has come to adopt a permanent voters list. It would cost money, of course, but so does enumeration and so will all this legislation.

The permanent list works quite well in other countries. I think with a permanent voters list we could have an election within a month. With modern technology I believe a month is plenty of time. I am convinced that with the campaign period cut in half we would have not only a better and more sustained campaign, as well as a more highly intensified voters' interest, but we would also be able to cut down expenditures across the board, which is what we are after. This, I think, is a more effective way in which to reduce the cost of campaigns.

I propose to move a reasoned amendment in respect of this measure. Before I present it I wish to reiterate that for the good that is in this bill, we are thankful. We are thankful for the things which are useful, valuable and adaptable. Under reasonable terms and under efficient administration we will lend our support. I regret profoundly that the whole measure has been surrounded with cynicism. I shall not go back into history and into other efforts to reform in this manner, but this particular situation is shocking. This reform began in 1964 when the Barbeau committee was established. The report of that illustrious body was ready in 1966. We had all sorts of appeals to the government in between. What happened? On April 7, 1968, a most auspicious day, the then new Prime Minister was asked this question:

> I wonder if you could tell us, coming back to this election expenses matter, whether you intend to do anything about implementing the report of the election expenses committee. It seems to me this is rather fundamental to the just society which you mentioned.

The year 1968 was the year of the just society. This was the Prime Minister's answer:

> I agree. Top priority. Next Speech from the Throne.

The verve, the enthusiasm, the high gear of 1968 has sloughed and slumbered. The special committee reported months and months ago. People have been asking when we will have the legislation. The minister never told us it was in his pocket. I do not think it was in his pocket. I think it is impending, cloudy events which has caused them to look for something a little brighter perhaps than that which went before. I am not enamoured of that method. I find inadequacies in the measure and I propose, seconded by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) to move the following motion:

That all the words after "that" be left out and the following substituted:

This House, regretting that government delay in introducing Bill C-211 prevents the full operation of a measure dealing with election expenses before January 1, 1973, and that the bill fails to provide for adequate reform, declines to pass a bill which does not take advantage of present day advances in the mass media and transportation which would provide for a shorter election period and thereby, amongst other things, substantially reduce election expenses.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) may appreciate that the Chair would have procedural reservations about an amendment of this nature. I have had occasion during the past few weeks, when there has been a proliferation of amendments of this kind, to indicate that to my way of thinking hon. members are really attempting from time to time under the guise of so-called reasoned amendments to bring in substantive motions.

Hon. members know well, or will find out if they study the history of procedure in the Canadian House and in the British House, that reasoned amendments are a very limited type which can be proposed and accepted procedurally. Traditionally, in our British parliamentary system there are really only very few amendments which can be proposed at the second reading stage, essentially an instruction to a committee or a three-month or six-month hoist. The so-called reasoned amendment is intended to give a member an opportunity to place on the record the reason he is opposed to the principle of a bill and why the people on whose behalf he is addressing the House will oppose the bill and vote against it.

I notice we have tended to stray from this principle to the extent that just recently we had a reasoned amendment proposed by a member of the House who later voted in favour of the bill, which is pure heresy so far as procedure is concerned. There is no doubt whatsoever that a reasoned amendment can only be an indication for the record as to why a member or a party intends to vote against the principle of a bill.

I find it difficult to recognize in this proposed amendment the essentials of a so-called reasoned amendment. Mind you, if we look for precedents we will find precious few because in the history of procedure in our House there have been very few reasoned amendments proposed. I suggest that for some strange reason it seems that in recent weeks and months hon. members have been taken with the idea that perhaps a reasoned amendment is a good way in which to propose a substantive motion which very often does not bear too much immediate and essential relevancy to the principle of the bill.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

I wonder whether that is a good practice. I fear very much that we could become involved in an entirely new principle or method of amending a motion for the second or third reading of bills. Before accepting this amendment I should like to look at it very closely. But before I do that I will be very pleased to hear arguments which might be submitted for the consideration of the Chair, either in support of the procedural aspect of the amendment or in opposition to it, which I would be glad to take into consideration.

• (2130)

Mr. MacEachen: Your Honour, I was notified this afternoon by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that it was proposed to move a reasoned amendment. I indicated to him that probably because of the reasons Your Honour has mentioned—and he was aware of them—there might be some discussion as to the validity of the amendment. He put forward the proposal that we might defer any consideration of the arguments pro and con until he could be in the House tomorrow to deal with the procedural aspects for the opposition. That is quite agreeable to me and, I hope, to other hon. members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This is an excellent suggestion, because I feel that some day we will have to look at this idea of reasoned amendments and among ourselves agree whether it is the type of situation into which we want to get. I have serious doubts about whether we should allow the House to drift procedurally to the position where any amendment can be moved on second reading; I think this would be very regrettable from a procedural standpoint.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that discussion on the validity of the amendment is deferred until tomorrow because hon. members have been using up my time for the last five minutes. I begin by paying tribute to the special committee of the House which worked for over a year on this matter because, first, I thought it worked extremely well, extremely hard and with a great deal of harmony and, second, because I was a member of that committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well put.

Mr. Benjamin: The chairman of that committee, the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell), did a good job in guiding our deliberations. We had a great many discussions, and even arguments, but never with any ill-feeling. We tried to come up with a report that would be unanimous but unanimous in the sense that it would be a consensus and that each of us, if and when we received the legislation, could stand up and speak on specific points in the report with which we might have disagreed in our committee deliberations. Now, Mr. Speaker, after all the talk of politicians of all parties for so many years we finally have legislation to limit and control election expenses. This bill is welcome if for no other reason than that we are starting to do something about this situation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made many statements, one of which the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) quoted, and there are a number of others on the record about his anxiety to place controls and limitations on election expenses. Since last June 4, when the report of the Special Committee was tabled, on several occasions I have asked both the government House leader and the Prime Minister when we would have this legislation.

It seems to me that if it was the government's intention, as is now apparent in the bill, to accept most if not all of the recommendations of the Barbeau committee and the special committee, the drafting of the legislation could have been done much sooner. It also seems to me that the arguments of the government House leader about the lack of time, pressure of business and the heavy legislative schedule do not hold water since we had time for seven weeks of recess at Christmas, two weeks at Easter and a long summer recess last year. Somewhere in those three periods surely at least two weeks could have been available to deal with this legislation.

I would have some worries and doubts about how much the government means it if an election were called tomorrow, next week or the week after that before this legislation is passed. If that happens, my worries and doubts will have been proven valid. We will then know that the intention of the government was not to have legislation passed before the next general election but to have a bill that its candidates could wave in the air during the campaign. In that event it would be the basest kind of political cynicism and political perversion. I hope I am wrong; I hope with all my heart that it is the government's intention to have this legislation passed.

If by chance no election is called until November, December, or January or February of next year, then there is no good reason why this legislation could not be in effect for the next general election, even though there is a provision in the Canada Elections Act that six months must elapse. I point out that there is an exception, that where the Chief Electoral Officer advertises to the effect in the Canada Gazette that he is ready to go ahead, then the provisions of this bill can be implemented in a period sooner than six months. I suspect that he would probably need at least four or five months to ;implement this kind of legislation.

My first remark about the bill itself are that we will support it in principle. I was pleased to hear the governement House leader say that he has an open mind on this matter and that he would be willing to listen to and possibly implement worthy suggestions put forward by members in all parties. I was pleased to hear him say that because I want to point out to the House a large hole in this legislation, one mentioned also by the hon. member for Hillsborough. There is no provision in the bill to put any limitation on party spending. Mr. Speaker, that in effect nullifies the whole purpose of legislation to limit and control election expenses. If my memory serves me correctly, this is one item on which members of the special committee were unanimous, and in its report the committee said:

> The Barbeau committee did not recommend any general limitations on expenditures by parties. However, your committee considers that imposing limitations on candidate's expenditures would not be as effective if limitations were not also imposed on parties' expenditures. Therefore, the committee considers that its proposal to limit candidates' expenditures is closely related to its proposal to limit parties' expenditures.

Not limiting party expenditures not only nullifies the purpose and principle of legislation to control election expenses but it causes me to have worries and doubts about whether the government really means it when it talks about controlling and limiting expenses. I still have a fear that the old-line parties cannot bring themselves to part with their corporate bagmen, or at least reduce the amount that those bagmen need to get, because with no limit on party spending the bagmen can operate at full-steam as before.

We had a great deal of harmonious discussion on this matter, members of all parties expressed their concern about it and the committee recommended a limit of 30 cents per elector in the aggregate of the electoral districts in which each party ran candidates. If a party ran a full slate of 264 candidates, a limitation of 30 cents per elector in all of Canada, with some 14 million electors according to the June, 1971, census, would mean that each party would have a limit of $4,200,000 it could spend. Surely that should be enough. In the committee I argued that 30 cents was too high and spoke in favour of 20 cents; other hon. members wanted 35 cents or 40 cents. We ended up with a compromise and recommended 30 cents.

Even $4,200,000 would probably cut the Liberals down by $2½ million or $3 million, and the Tories perhaps by a million or a million and a half. At least it would put the limit on, because without that limit the party can spend money in any and all constituencies in the country without mentioning a candidate's name, for the aid and comfort of the party. I hope the minister and the government will agree to an amendment when this bill reaches committee to insert the recommendation of the special committee to limit party expenditures to 30 cents per elector, which can be a maximum of $4,200,000. I may catch heck from some of my colleagues for this. I think that is really too much, but at least it is a limit. With rising costs it may well be that two or three elections from now it will not be too much, but surely at this time it should be enough.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we limit candidates. The recommendations of the committee were adopted word for word in this bill and I am grateful to the minister and the government for that. I am sure all members of the committee will feel complimented that the government accepted the entire recommendations on the limitation in respect of candidates. I have a feeling that the minister's figures on how much the limits would be were slightly out for some of the ridings he cited. I do not think he was using the latest figures; I think they were 5,000 or 10,000 low for each riding, though I may be mistaken. For 60,000 electors the limit for the candidate would be $28,750, for 80,000 electors the limit would be $33,750 and for a riding with 100,000 electors it would be $38,750.

Mr. Speaker, when the committee met I felt this was too generous and I said so, but others wanted higher limits. One or two members of the committee agreed with lower limits but we ended up with these. It may well be that two or three elections from now, with rising costs, those limits also will not be too high. It is a kind of political chicanery if we limit candidates but do not limit parties. Parties can spend more on many things in provinces, regions and constituencies. Money can be spread around and cannot be proven to have been spent on behalf of any one candidate. What saddens me is that in traditional fashion the Liberal government can take a good principle, bring in legislation incorporating that principle and then proceed to pervert it with the provisions in the legislation.

Another item I should like to talk about is reimbursement. At least this provision is in the bill. Since 1933 my party has been advocating controls on levels of election expenses and reimbursement from the national wealth for election costs. What the government proposes is of most benefit to the well-heeled candidate; the poor candidate benefits least. A candidate is eligible for reimbursement if he receives 20 per cent of the valid votes cast. The committee recommended this, but I felt that 20 per cent of the valid votes cast was too harsh; I held out for 10 per cent and then for 12½ per cent, and got to 15 per cent but was unable to persuade my colleagues on the committee. So 20 per cent of the valid votes cast was agreed upon.

Mr. Speaker, I contended then and I do now that any candidate who receives 10 per cent, 12 per cent or 15 per cent of the vote is not a nuisance candidate and should be entitled to some reimbursement. I regret that the government did not accept the committee's recommendation for the formula of reimbursement and I hope that it will when the bill gets to committee. The formula proposed by the government is intrinsically unfair, I think. The bill's formula proposes reimbursement in the aggregate of one-quarter of the candidate's election expenses and in the schedule III ridings, travel expenses plus $250. The committee recommended reimbursement for one first-class mailing per elector, which is eight cents per elector, three cents per elector for printing costs, five cents per elector for other campaign expenses for the first 25,000 electors, and three cents per elector for all over 25,000 electors.

Let us take my own constituency of Regina-Lake Centre as an example. As of June last year there were 63,036 electors 18 years of age and over. I might also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a terrific, wonderful riding, with wonderful people—it also has 373 more women than men. Candidates in my constituency will be limited to spending $29,500. Under the government's formula for reimbursement they will be eligible for $7,625 if they spend the maximum and if they receive 20 per cent of the valid votes cast.

Under the committee's formula, Mr. Speaker, the qualifying candidate who received 20 per cent or more of the vote would be eligible for reimbursement of $8,070, about $400 more, provided the reimbursement did not exceed the total amount that the candidate actually spent. Therefore, a candidate without financial resources who received 20 per cent of the vote and who was only able to spend $5,000 would be eligible for a $5,000 reimbursement and still might lose his deposit of $200.

Surely this is fair play, Mr. Speaker; it equalizes the fight between candidates who have little or no financial resources and those who have all the resources they need. I submit that this is also a cheaper way of doing it, for the voters will pay through the national treasury less than they will pay through the corporate contributions given to the old parties in this country. It would help to provide more freedom and equality in our electoral processes.

The third item I wish to mention is disclosure. I said that my party has advocated this since its founding in 1933. On the basis of political contributions honestly given, there is nothing to hide. My party has always prided itself—maybe sometimes we have sounded somewhat obnoxious and pure about it, but we think it is justifiable pride—that since 1933 we have printed annually the financial statements of our national party, the provincial sections of the party and provincial constituency associations of the party right across Canada. We have not made public the names of individual contributors unless they do it themselves. I hope no one will think that makes us sound hypocritical because we have always advocated full disclosure. However, we have always felt that it would be unfair to disclose the names of our contributors when there is no requirement on the other parties to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, the committee recommended a modified disclosure. I personally accepted the recommendation of the committee, though again I may get heck from some of my colleagues for that. There is one other thing that should be in the modified disclosure. Where reports are sent to the Minister of National Revenue for those contributions which would be eligible as tax deductions, and to the Chief Electoral Officer where the two reports do not jibe and where there is an obvious and blatant evasion of the elections act, the names of the contributors to that particular candidate, that particular party and that particular constituency would have to be made public. That in itself would serve as a deterrent of sufficient degree to cause any party or any candidate to be extra careful and ensure that there is not any hanky-panky with income tax receipts. There would be no juggling of books as between what was reported to the Chief Electoral Officer and what was reported to the Minister of National Revenue.

The committee recommended that contributions from foreign corporations, unions and foreign citizens be prohibited. We made that recommendation because we felt it was consistent because the elections act provides now that no non-resident corporation or individual may participate in a federal election campaign. I hope the minister will agree to an amendment in the area of contributions from foreign corporations, unions and citizens so that they will not be permitted and not be eligible for tax deductions. These should not be allowed in any case.

I submit that where violations occur when the Minister of National Revenue and the Chief Electoral Officer are comparing the two sets of reports, under the law the Minister of National Revenue should be allowed to disclose the names of contributors. The glare of publicity and shame that would fall upon that candidate and his party would be sufficient for then and ever after to prevent violations of the law as it pertains to election expenses and living up to our election legislation.

We are generally pleased with the provisions for broadcasting. This is another way of limiting the costs of election. There is one area where the paste-pot missed. In this, I agree with the hon. member for Hillsborough. While there are limits for parties, there do not appear to be limits for candidates. Since there is no limit on the parties with regard to the funds they can raise, and there is no limit on the candidates as to how much television, radio and newspaper advertising they can buy, what is to prevent the party siphoning money into riding after riding for candidates to spend up to the limits which they are allowed on advertising? The bill is inconsistent in this respect.

Some provision has to be incorporated in the bill limiting the candidates as well as the parties in the broadcasting field. On the one hand we do not limit parties and limit the candidates when it comes to funds and on the other we limit the parties but do not limit the candidates when it comes to broadcasting. I hope the government House leader will agree that these inconsistencies need to be ironed out in committee.

With regard to shortening the election campaign, I submit that what the special committee really had in mind, if I may say this so to the hon. member for Hillsborough, was that 56 to 59 days campaign time is not too short. It is barely sufficient time for the Chief Electoral Officer to prepare and for party organizations to prepare for and conduct their campaigns. If you are really going to campaign among the people, call on them, and if our election is to be something more than radio, television and newspaper advertising, you require six to seven weeks. This is necessary if you are to meet thousands of electors.

The committee felt, and I feel, that the public is not demanding a shortening of campaigns, a shortening of the time between the writs being issued and the election date but a shortening of the time in which they are bombarded with television, radio and newspaper advertising ad nauseam until they are so fed up they pay no attention to the political issues. We urge that the length of time during which broadcasting may be carried out should be limited to the last four weeks of the campaign. This is why we said 29 days. If you knock off the day of prohibition, there are 28 days in which broadcasting and advertising can be permitted. A shortening of the campaign for broadcasting time is feasible and it is what the majority of the public want.

We were disregarded when we suggested offering tax credits for income tax payers. I find this strange, when Mr. Carter proposed tax credits instead of exemptions and when tax credits were advocated in this House for individual citizens instead of exemptions, that the government said it cannot be done. However, the government finds it is something different when it comes to tax credits for corporations in other areas. How we have tax credits for political contributions. All of a sudden, it can be done.

I suspect that whether you allow political contributions as deductions from net income for income tax purposes or whether you allow a tax credit, in terms of dollars to the national treasury and in terms of savings to taxpayers it is six of one and half a dozen of another. May I illustrate my point by saying the committee recommended that a citizen be allowed to deduct from net income up to $1,000 a year for a contribution to a party, and in an election year an additional $1,000 a year contribution to a candidate. In an election year he could deduct $2,000 from his net income. If your tax rate is 25 per cent, you save $500 on income tax. The bill proposes allowing a $500 tax credit as a maximum. In dollars and cents, it does not make very much difference. However, it is encouraging in a sense that maybe this kind of move to tax credits will speed up the day when we have tax credits in our income tax law for the individual taxpayer, instead of exemptions.

I submit there are three areas that are most urgent and require scrutiny. First, the area of disclosure. If the government cannot and will not agree to full disclosure of all political contributors, I hope it will at least agree to a furthering of the modified disclosure provisions in the bill. Where there is a violation of the election law, the names of contributors to that candidate, that party in that constituency would be made public.

The second area is that of reimbursement. I hope the minister will agree to drop the government's formula and include in the bill the formula recommended by the committee. I submit it is much more fair. It does not discriminate against the candidate who has limited or no financial resources. It provides for a more equal and fair reimbursement for all candidates provided they qualify under provision concerning 20 per cent of the votes cast. I hope the minister will consider lowering that 20 per cent floor to at least 15 per cent. In fact, I hope he will agree that any candidate who gets 10, 12 or 15 per cent of the popular vote is not a nuisance candidate and should be entitled to reimbursement.

Finally, and in my opinion most importantly, I say to the government House leader it is a "must" that we incorporate an additional clause in the bill to provide for a limitation on parties the same as is provided for candidates. Unless we have a limitation on parties' expenditures, the whole intent, purpose and most of the principle of the legislation is nullified or set aside. We are asking for abuse. In future elections, politics and politicians will be brought into even more disrepute by the citizens of this country.

May I call it ten o'clock Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC WORKS—RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on May 1 I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé) if, in the new era of prime ministerial largesse, reconsideration was being given to the construction of the Northumberland causeway. This, of course, is a project on which the government repudiated its commitments. But it was in light of great promises of billion dollar corridors to the north that I asked if the much less costly Northumberland causeway, so long promised, would now be built, or completed since $20 million has already been spent on it.

• (2200)

I was interested in the minister's reply. He almost let the cat out of the bag when he said:

—the people of that island province are appreciating and enjoying what has replaced that project, namely, considerable federal assistance under the department of my colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

He was referring, of course, to the development plan which many islanders regard as the alternative to the promised causeway. The minister skilfully avoided confirming this view embodied in my supplementary question. Apart from the fact that under the development plan, Prince Edward Island has reached new highs both in unemployment and cost of living, the bartering of one for the other was not a good trade even in the beginning. The development plan requires that the province, the weaker, smaller, poorer partner, shall provide over two-thirds of the cost. That was not, in my view, particularly shrewd bargaining on the part of the province.

But it is not just because the Dominion government is obligated to provide 100 per cent of the cost of a causeway that I recall the potential value which it possesses. Along with many colleagues from Prince Edward Island and elsewhere, I have down through the years set out the advantages in economics and transportation which would flow from the construction of a permanent land link between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. With the rapidly increasing number of tourists to Prince Edward Island there can be little doubt that existing ferry facilities at Borden and Tormentine are destined to become inadequate.

One of the ships on the run, the sturdy icebreaker Abequest, is at the quarter century mark. I was surprised to learn that no definite plans are under way for the addition of new ships to the service. I do not wish to see us fall behind in meeting transportation needs on this route. The only adequate answer, of course, is the provision of a permanent link. Modern technology can construct it, the needs of the day require it, and if the government has the requisite foresight it will repudiate its own repudiation and begin to get on with the job of providing it.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have a short answer for the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). A meeting was held in the first week of May at which a Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick delegation made representations concerning the Northumberland Strait crossing. Senior federal government officials met with the provincial delegates to listen to a proposal which was presented at that time. However, due to a number of points in the proposal which were not clear the delegation was asked to review its position with a view to having a further meeting in the near future.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—TRANSFER FROM REGINA TO WINNIPEG OF AUDIT SERVICES BUREAU—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on May 10 I asked the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) the following question:

In view of the minister's expressed interest in the dispersal of government facilities geographically, would he undertake to review the decision of his department to close the audit services bureau in Regina and transfer it to Winnipeg?

Unfortunately, the minister did not have the opportunity to reply to my question because Mr. Speaker ruled it could not be considered at that time. I am glad to see the minister in his seat and look forward to hearing welcome news affecting Regina when he speaks. As I understand the situation, Mr. Speaker, on June 4 the audit services Bureau of the Department of Supply and Services in Regina is to be closed and the employees are to be transferred to Winnipeg. From then on the services provided through that office are to be provided from the Winnipeg office.

Actually, many of the services now provided by the Regina office will be provided by the employees concerned who will travel from Winnipeg to Regina. They will incur expenses and there will be much dislocation. They will conduct their audit work and then proceed back to Winnipeg. I fail to see how the government can save money from such a move. In addition it is possible, I understand, for some employees now connected with that office who are not in professional categories to encounter certain problems as a result of the dislocation which will take place.

I want to take note of the minister's expressed interest in the dispersal of government facilities throughout Canada. I commend him for his interest and know he has taken a particular interest in seeing that some facilities are moved to Winnipeg.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Burton: Since the minister comes from Winnipeg, I cannot blame him for his action. I can even understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), both of whom are present, also take an interest in this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Burton: I know the minister has succeeded in making sure that the expansion of the Canadian Mint will take place in Winnipeg. I commend him for his interest on behalf of his home community in that regard. Yet I ask the minister, is there any need to pick on Regina? Regina is a little smaller than Winnipeg. It is a better city than Winnipeg, although a little smaller. A small number of federal employees are to be found in the city. I think the minister might have some consideration for the needs of Regina and also consider the economics of the situation.

I hope that when the minister rises to speak we shall hear welcome news from him, that his department has reconsidered its decision in this regard and has decided, wisely, to leave the audit services bureau, as well as other facilities, in Regina.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) that one thing I am certainly not doing is picking on Regina in any decision that is being made in the reorganization of our audit services. I can say to him that following the question he raised in the House a few days ago during the question period, I undertook a review of the changes in the structure of our audit services. As a result, I am now able to respond in some detail concerning the matter in which he is interested.

First of all, I can say there has been no decision taken to close our audit services bureau in Regina as was, I believe, indicated in the hon. member's question. It is the policy of the department to maintain professional audit representation in every provincial capital and that, of course, includes Regina. It is true that more than a year ago we made a decision to strengthen the audit services bureau in the regional offices, that is, in Edmonton and in Winnipeg. Regina has been an area office, not a regional one. This decision was taken on the recommendation of the director-general of the audit services bureau. The main purpose was, and is, to increase the professional quality and efficiency of our audit operations.

My review of this matter indicates that these changes have been undertaken with a minimum of disruption to the personnel involved. I am advised that one employee from Regina has moved to Edmonton, that two employees who wished to remain in Regina have been assisted in making suitable transfers to other federal government departments in Regina, and that one employee has been transferred to Winnipeg.

I can say, further, that this policy of strengthening the audit services bureau in the regional offices in the west is consistent with the policy we have followed in the Maritimes where our audit services bureau is now centred in Halifax. I think the hon. member will realize from the review which I have described that the personnel involved in this reorganization have been very few in number. I hope he will also recognize that these changes have been made in order to strengthen and improve our audit services in western Canada.

AGRICULTURE—DECREASE IN NUMBER OF FARMS BETWEEN 1966 AND 1971—PROGRAMS TO STOP OR REVERSE TREND

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question in many ways is similar to that of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). The hon. member claimed that the government was picking on Regina and I claim that the government is picking on the small farmer. On May 2 I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) as follows:

In view of the startling revelation in the census that the number of farms in Canada dropped by 15 per cent between 1966 and 1971—a very serious situation—can the minister say whether he is now contemplating any new programs that will stop that trend or hopefully reverse it in certain areas?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, the very significant upturn in incomes of farmers between 1970 and 1971 will, I think, have a profound effect on this.

I felt that that was an inadequate answer and this is why I want to pursue the matter for a few moments tonight. First of all, the real net increase of farmers in Canada has not gone up very much in the last year, contrary to what the minister claims. I believe the increase has been about 10 per cent in terms of real net income, still lower than it was five to six years ago, despite the fact that costs of production have gone up drastically.

I also point out that over the last ten years farmers have gone into debt. The year 1970 was one of the worst years on record, almost as bad as some of the years in the thirties, when it comes to the question of farm income. In the province of Saskatchewan, for example, the average net realized income of a grain farmer was about $1,000 a year, way below the poverty line. The Minister of Agriculture's statement that there has been an increase over 1970 is really not worth a crop of beans.

To prove my point, all we need do is look at farm debt. The Farm Credit Corporation bill was debated in this House a few days ago. We find that a very high percentage of loans made by the FCC are now in arrears. Farmers in my constituency have taken out cash advances and are experiencing difficulty paying them back. Many farmers in my riding are at the point of bankruptcy or in financial difficulty, and they see no way out.

The second thing I am concerned about is that while we watch this trend continuing so rapidly we are seeing a whole segment of Canadian society being destroyed before our eyes. Each and every year small farmers are being forced off the land and this in turn causes the population of villages, towns and small cities to dwindle. In the last five years in Saskatchewan only one town out of dozens had an increase in population, the town of Moosomin, but this is located along the Trans-Canada highway and benefits from the tourist trade. Other towns suffered a decline in population—indeed, some of the small cities as well—and this solely because of the severe recession in the agricultural industry.

Let me refer to a few statistics which I think illustrate the serious problem that is confronting rural Canada. Between 1966 and 1971 the number of farms in Canada declined by 15 per cent, from roughly 430,500 to 366,000. These are the census figures as at May 1 of this year. In the province of Saskatchewan the number of farms decreased from 85,686 to 76,970, a drop of 10.2 per cent. In Manitoba the number went down by 12 per cent, in Alberta by 9.7 per cent, in the province of Quebec by 23.7 per cent, in Nova Scotia by 37.6 per cent, in New Brunswick by 37 per cent.

I suggest the number of farmers being forced off the land gives cause for serious concern and is something to which we shall have to turn our attention if we are to save, preserve and stimulate the rural areas of Canada which I suggest are a very important and vital part of our way of life, socially, economically and culturally. Many things can be done to bring this about. First of all, we could put much more federal money into agriculture and support the prices of farm commodities. We could take a similar step to the measures taken by the Saskatchewan government and establish a land bank whereby the government would purchase land from older farmers who wished to sell, in turn leasing or selling the land to younger people who want to start farming or to small farmers who need another half section or quarter section in order to have a viable farm unit. This is something one province is trying to do by itself, and with co-operation from Ottawa it could go much further.

All farm organizations were very disappointed at the budget brought down in this House a few days ago, because it handed out concessions to the manufacturing companies but had nothing for the farmers. In my view the farmers are the prime producers in this country and are among the best consumers we have. If we put more money into agriculture it would stimulate the entire economy. This matter concerns me because in my constituency I have hundreds and hundreds of small farmers, many with their backs up against the wall, totally disillusioned with this government and its policies. It is these people who are demanding explanations, and it is the children of these people about whom I am concerned because they are being forced off the land and into circumstances of poverty.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has quite correctly stated that according to the census the number of farmers has declined by 15 per cent. However, he neglected to mention that the land area devoted to agriculture has remained essentially constant. It should also be noted that the annual decline in the number of farms has been about the same for the past 30 years, so this is something that has not just developed.

I am not sure that this general trend can be stopped, although as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) previously mentioned the significant increase in farm income will no doubt have some effect in this regard. The government anticipated this trend some time ago and recognized that as this adjustment and change was occurring there were some hardships being placed upon the people involved, the hard working rural people who have been the backbone of this country since its beginning.

To help overcome some of these problems, this government introduced its small farm development policy and has placed a great deal of emphasis on it. This is the policy which does some of the things the hon. member suggests we should be doing. It is a program designed to make it easier for these individuals who want to stay in agriculture and expand or adjust their operations by providing special credit facilities, and make it easier for those who decide to retire from agriculture or try their hand at another occupation by providing, among other things, grants in addition to the resale value of their property. Officials of the Department of Agriculture are working diligently with their provincial colleagues to arrive at the necessary federal-provincial agreement which will make it possible to put this program into effect.

As the hon. member may be aware, more emphasis is now being placed on the marketing aspect of agriculture which, it is anticipated, will improve the income position of farmers and thus encourage those contemplating leaving agriculture solely on the basis of income, to stay. The age of our farmers has a lot to do with the number of farms disposed of each year and the government is meeting this problem head-on by changes in the Farm Credit Act currently being considered in committee which would, among other things, make it possible for 18-year olds to obtain loans. Time does not permit me to go into the many other programs designed by the government to assist the family farm.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

YUKON TERRITORIAL COUNCIL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 based on a deteriorating situation in the Yukon with respect to the operation of the Yukon Territorial Council. The situation is worsening to the point where 250 people jammed the corridors and hallways of the council building at the last session. Therein lies the urgency and the oppressive system that continues to exist has to be relieved. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the petition signed by 4,626 Yukon citizens being 60 per cent of the total number of eligible electors enumerated on the list of electors for the Yukon Territory for the 1968 federal election and presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that the Yukon Territorial Council be dissolved forthwith and that a new election be held be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development with instructions that the said committee proceed to the Yukon Territory, there to hold public meetings for the purpose of inquiring into the complaints and grievances of the residents of the Yukon as set forth in the said petition, and to report thereon to this House with the least possible delay.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Prime Minister said no.

Mr. Baldwin: If you fellows sat over on this side, you would know how to say yes.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are still on motions. I believe the hon. member for Spadina wishes to present a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43.

YOUTH

PROJECT SELECTION CRITERIA, OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

This matter concerns the criteria for the selection of projects for opportunities for youth grants, or the application of the criteria. This subject requires immediate consideration by the House in view of the rejection of the University of Toronto application for funds to build a pollution-free electrical car for the urban vehicle design competition and the acceptance for funding of similar projects in British Columbia and Manitoba. I therefore propose to move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House do now refer the criteria for the selection and funding of opportunities for youth grants to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts and report back to the House thereon within one week.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FISHERIES

DEPLOYMENT OF DEFENCE AIRCRAFT AND VESSELS TO PROTECT FISHERMEN'S GEAR FROM HARASSMENT BY FOREIGN TRAWLERS OFF EAST COAST

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence who is hovering somewhere in the ambulatories. I see him now coming over the horizon. My question is prompted by evidence presented yesterday to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry by a delegation of fishermen from the Newfoundland Fish, Food and Allied Workers Union regarding continuous harassment of gear by foreign trawlers within Canada's 12-mile limit on the east coast. What steps is the Department of National Defence taking to deploy aircraft and surface vessels to the area to protect Canadian nationals and the gear of Canadian fishermen?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge we have not been requested by the Department of Fisheries to do so.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister whether reconnaissance is taking place at the present time by aircraft of Maritime Air Command over the area of the east coast of Newfoundland, and is this aerial reconnaissance reporting incursions by foreign trawlers to the appropriate authorities?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there is continuous surveillance. No such report has been made to me.

Mr. McGrath: Is the government prepared to give consideration to the deployment of aircraft in eastern Newfoundland which would make aerial reconnaissance much more practical since it would add about 1,000 miles to their range?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's advice on defence strategy.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN FISHERMEN—SUGGESTED EXPANSION OF FISHERIES PROTECTION PATROL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the obvious lack of proper surveillance, as reported to the fisheries committee yesterday, over the excessive fishing operations which are being carried on within our 12-mile limit off the east coast of Canada, would the Prime Minister consider the expansion of fisheries protection patrol by our ships in that area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer affirmatively because I do not agree with the premise of the question. I believe the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Fisheries are better equipped than the hon. member to decide whether there should be more surveillance.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES ON CONSEQUENCES FOR CERTAIN COMPANIES OF POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. My first question arises out of a statement by the president of the Atlantic Development Council that United States countervailing duties against Canadian imports from companies such as Michelin and McCain Foods on the basis that those companies are in receipt of government grants will seriously endanger development in the Atlantic provinces. On that basis, I ask the minister to inform the House whether the government has made representations to the American administration on this specific point or plans to indicate to them that countervailing duties would have very serious consequences, particularly in the Atlantic provinces?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of countervailing against McCain. I am, of course, aware of the countervailing procedures against Michelin. I have already indicated, as has the Minister of Finance, that we shall be making representations, and we have already had discussions with the United States government with respect to the Michelin case.

Mr. Lewis: On the basis of reports that exports of potato granules, for example, which are produced by McCain Foods Limited, are the subject of investigation in Washington, and the apparently general attitude in Washington that products exported by Canadian companies in receipt of government grants are in fact being subsidized and that countervailing duties are justified, may I ask whether the department is studying this entire area and developing some approach to the Americans which might avoid the serious harm that could occur if such duties were applied in a broad way?

Mr. Pepin: Of course we are studying these things all the time. The countervailing and anti-dumping measures presently being taken are taken at the request of companies. I should like to underline the fact that we do the same in Canada; these procedures are not confined to the United States. I should also like to underline the fact that to my knowledge, there is no United States global position against regional development in Canada. It is only when regional development subsidies end up in substantial exports to the United States that opposition is expressed; in other words, it is not a global complaint against regional development through industrial support in Canada. Is that clear?

Mr. Lewis: I do not think it is mud. I think it is very clear. The answer therefore demands the following question. Do I gather from the minister that since there is no global policy, as he calls it, he does not consider the imposition of countervailing duties against products from Michelin and other companies receiving federal grants as an important matter about which his department should be concerned? Is that the impact of the minister's answer?

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member is putting words into my mouth; I thought there were already enough! I simply said that as far as I know there is no United States position against regional development in Canada, against the fact that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion provides support for industrial establishment in certain regions of Canada. It is only when there are substantial exports to the United States that the Americans appear to take objection.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South on a further supplementary, but we will have to try to move on.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—MEASURES TO OFFSET IMPACT—POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES BY CANADA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the minister this question. He has told us on a number of occasions that his department and the government are working on contingency plans to deal with any adverse impact of the United States DISC program. Is he now in a position to tell us what some of these plans may be and, in particular, whether the imposition of countervailing duties by Canada against United States imports through DISC is one of the measures being considered?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I thought the hon. member was present the other day when the Minister of Finance read the budget speech which is considered by most interested people as a good reaction to DISC and other export subsidies in other countries in a positive way.

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary, then the hon. member for Champlain, and we will return to this matter later in the question period.

PROPOSED IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY AGAINST CERTAIN MICHELIN TIRES—SOURCE OF INITIATIVE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Either the minister or the Minister of Finance said in the past seven days that he would try to find out who initiated the action in the United States against Michelin. Is the minister now in a position to inform the House what company or agency of government initiated this action in Washington.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to say that. Besides, I think I should leave the matter to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Broadbent: For the minister's information it was the Goodyear Corporation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a question, not to give information to the minister.

VIEWS OF OTHER TIRE COMPANIES ON DUTY-FREE IMPORT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Has the minister received the views of the Goodyear Corporation, Uniroyal and the Dunlop Corporation, to name three firms located in Ontario and Quebec, on the Michelin case, especially concerning the right to give them tariff-free entry to the Canadian market during a limited period of time? If so, what were their views on that issue and what was the response of the government?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, for a long period of time my department was trying to develop a tire plan that would incorporate some of the features of the Michelin arrangement by which certain types of tires could be imported free of tariff into Canada if more exports of certain other types of tires took place. For about a full year we tried to develop such a plan, but the companies were not particularly favourable to it. Discussions continued. We were hoping to come to some conclusions as a result of these discussions in view of the relative uncertainty accompanying the Michelin situation at this time, so we think we should hold off further discussions on the subject—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister said he would reply in a nutshell. It is a sizeable nut.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DISCUSSION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC TO CO-ORDINATE PROGRAMS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

The clarifying statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday with regard to the Quebec government having convinced no one, does he intend to follow up his intentions in the near future by accepting to meet his opposite number in Quebec as well as minister Castonguay, with a view to reconsidering the federal government position concerning possible agreements in the field of social affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member. The opinion I expressed yesterday convinced almost no one because the citizens of the province of Quebec were already massively convinced of what I said, except for a few scattered créditistes and separatists.

LE DAIN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING MARIJUANA—COMMUNICATION WITH OTHER COUNTRIES IN LIGHT OF CANADA BEING SIGNATORY TO INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put my question to the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in their absence I shall ask it of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Nielsen: The Solicitor General is here.

Mr. Woolliams: Then he must have just entered the chamber, but I shall put it to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that we are one of the signatories to the single convention on narcotic drugs, has there been any communication with any of the other signatories in reference to this agreement, particularly in view of the fact that Le Dain has now recommended the legalization of marijuana? As Canada is one of the signatories to that agreement which opposes legalization, has there been any communication at this time with any other nation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take notice of this question on behalf of the ministers.

LE DAIN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING MARIJUANA—INQUIRY AS TO INSTRUCTIONS TO CROWN AGENTS AND RCMP

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I put this question to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that in the Le Dain Commission report there are three different kinds of recommendations, has the Solicitor General issued any special instructions to agents of the Crown under the Attorney General of Canada with reference to sentences so as to make certain that those who are convicted of or plead guilty to a charge of being in possession of or using marijuana will be fined rather than sentenced to jail or penitentiary?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, those duties belong to the Minister of Justice, but I would be happy to know which of the three recommendations of the Le Dain report is supported by the opposition.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one further question which I think the Solicitor General will find within his jurisdiction? Have there been any special instructions issued to the RCMP, who have special jurisdiction in reference to narcotic control, that they should no longer use the incognito association methods they have used in the past in order to get evidence and convictions in reference particularly to possession and use of marijuana?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has the duty to enforce the law as it now exists.

PRESENTATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING MARIJUANA

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary to the President of the Privy Council.

Since the Solicitor General just replied that he would like to have the views of opposition members on the Le Dain report, could the minister tell us if the government intends to introduce a bill shortly in the House so that the hon. members may take a position on this report?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: Why not?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

ELECTIONS

OTTAWA CENTRE—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which I will attempt to make an honest one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the interesting entry into the other place recently of a former distinguished member of this House, can the Prime Minister assure the House that steps will be taken in so far as Ottawa Centre is concerned to see that a by-election is held there at the same time as by-elections are held in Bonavista-Trinity-Conception and York West?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will certainly consider that, Mr. Speaker, and if the hon. member has any other by-elections in mind I will be pleased to look after them as well.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED DEVELOPMENT OF ANTI-ALCOHOLISM PROGRAM

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I had hoped to put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his absence I hope you will permit me to ask the question and perhaps some minister will take it as notice. Having in mind the importance the Le Dain Commission has attached to alcoholism in Canada as a major Canadian drug problem, and in view of the fact that the federal government now has a net revenue of more than $1 million a day from the sale of alcohol, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare give consideration to the development of a federal anti-alcoholism program?

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the matter is being considered at the highest level. I believe the hon. member for Spadina has a supplementary to a previous question.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REASON FOR REFUSAL OF GRANT TO UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO TO PRODUCE POLLUTION-FREE AUTOMOBILE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): No, Mr. Speaker. I have a question related to the motion I posed earlier and I should like to direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. It relates to the Opportunities for Youth program. Can he inform the House why the application of the University of Toronto, which sought funds to complete a pollution-free electrical car for the urban vehicle design competition to be held in Michigan in August of this year, was rejected?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether hon. members should be allowed during the question period to refer to what I understand are the many applications under this program which have been rejected, but this one may be a special case and the Prime Minister may wish to reply to the hon. member's question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State has told the House that there were something like 15,000 or 16,000 requests rejected. I cannot possibly have the answer to all of them in my head, but the Secretary of State has stated previously that anyone who wanted to know why his particular application was rejected would receive an answer in writing if he requested one.

• (1130)

Mr. Ryan: Will the Prime Minister check into this matter in view of its urgency, particularly because similar projects in British Columbia and Manitoba were accepted for funding under the Opportunities for Youth program while at the same time several projects in Ontario were completely rejected? I think it is very important to check into it forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST NON-STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister. A couple of weeks ago the Secretary of State indicated he might be announcing some new programs for non-student young people. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether these programs are ready for announcement and, if so, when the announcement will be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF REGIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEES TO REVIEW OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH AND LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAMS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary arising from a resolution of the youth and community assembly convened by the Manitoba Committee of the Canadian Council on Children and Youth recently in the city of Brandon. Would the Prime Minister consider the implementation of the resolution of that assembly requesting that regional advisory committees be set up to review the ad hoc programs of the government such as OFY and LIP with a view to gearing them more closely to community needs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the prologue to the question was addressed to me I am afraid I missed it, but I will take notice of the question and see whether an answer can be provided.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT MILITIA RECRUITS' PAY BE RAISED TO MINIMUM WAGE LEVEL

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that militia recruits are paid about $1.03 per hour for the time expended by them with the Canadian forces, will the minister consider raising the rates at least to the level of the established federal minimum wage?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter is presently under review and I will report to my friend when the review is completed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Department of National Defence is carrying out a study of the pay structure for the militia, will the minister advise when the results will be forthcoming, and will the minister recommend that incentives be provided for re-enlistment and long service?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider my hon. friend's representations.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR INDUSTRIES IN MAKING REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AGAINST IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES OR ANTI-DUMPING ACTION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and is supplementary to earlier questions. It deals with the countervailing duties which were under discussion. In a case where duties are levied or anti-dumping action is taken against a Canadian industry as a result of the government's policy of incentive grants, is it the intention of the minister to give support to those industries when they make their representations against these charges?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question would have to be qualified. What kind of support? Does the hon. member mean financial support or support in presenting their case to United States authorities? If it is the second, indeed we are supporting them.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, to clarify the matter, I was thinking of support going beyond merely the provision of information and whether in fact the department will also provide counsel to those industries and financial support in making their cases?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, let us say that for the time being that matter is hypothetical and we will do as best we can to help if the proposed countervailing really ends up in countervailing duties having to be paid.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Joliette and possibly return to the hon. member for a supplementary.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS OPPOSED TO PROJECT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Recently, a group of Indians from northwestern Quebec were requesting the support of the federal government in order to stop the works on the James Bay project. Can the Prime Minister say whether the government intends to answer this request in the affirmative? If not, can he confirm again that his government is still prepared to co-operate with this project within authorized limits while giving adequate guarantees to the groups concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has dealt several times with this matter in the House. The hon. member may not have been present yesterday when the minister answered certain questions.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES CONCERNING EFFECT OF IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY AGAINST MICHELIN TIRES ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if he has had consultations with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion regarding the implications for the DREE program of the United States threat of countervailing duties on Michelin tires and if he will make representations to the United States government concerning exactly what this means in respect of our regional development program, bearing in mind that other countries exporting to the United States have similar programs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): To my knowledge there is no attack by the United States authorities on regional development in Canada. I repeat what I said previously. I did not have personal discussions with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on that subject, but interdepartmental consultations are going on all the time on this particular aspect of regional development and on the Michelin case in particular.

CANADA-UNITED STATES—INQUIRY AS TO NEW AMERICAN PROPOSALS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact negotiations on trade between the United States and Canada appear to be in limbo, may I ask the minister whether the United States government has advanced any new proposition to the Canadian government, or whether the Canadian government has shown any initiative in this regard, or are we going to confine ourselves merely to reaction to United States government action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of the hon. member is, of course, argumentative. It is certainly not acceptable procedurally.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question.

Mr. Speaker: It might have been easier to have phrased it correctly in the first instance because we will be running short of time.

Mr. Danforth: As the minister stated in the House that there was a field of disagreement and some irritants between the United States and Canada on trade matters, may I ask him whether the United States has advanced any new proposition or taken any new initiative to solve this perplexing problem?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said yesterday that no hard discussions had been resumed between Canada and the United States on trade matters. We are looking very carefully for the most aupicious time and circumstances to resume these negotiations.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is there any truth in the rumour that the Prime Minister has a very important announcement to make?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question cannot be asked in those terms. The hon. member may want to give notice of the question so that we can consider it at the time of adjournment next week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River rises on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question which my hon. friend asked, I simply want to say that the House would be prepared to give unanimous consent to revert to motions if the Prime Minister has an announcement to make.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, if the Conservative Party could get a few more on the front benches I might consider that.

An hon. Member: It is the quality, not the quantity, that counts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED PAROLING OF PENITENTIARY INMATES TO HOMES OF SENIOR CITIZENS—INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF STUDY AND ACTION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. As the Solicitor General and his departmental officials have been studying the feasibility of the placement of persons released from penal institutions in the homes of senior citizens who are willing and volunteer for the program, has the Solicitor General completed his study of this program, and what action does he intend to take?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I met with the members of the pensioners association in Vancouver and they support the program almost unanimously. However, they asked if it would eventually be extended to include all age groups of society. This suggestion is now under consideration in this new perspective.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FEMALES RESPECTING MOVING COSTS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF ACT

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

Does the Minister or his Department intend to bring in soon amendments to the National Defence Act and Regulations with regard to Canadian Forces personnel in order to do away with what is, in my view, an unacceptable situation and a scandalous discrimination in this age of women's liberation, discrimination—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a speech. If he wishes to ask a question, he should do so without presenting an argument.

Mr. Béchard: Does the Minister intend to do away with a situation whereby the single female personnel of the Canadian Forces are discriminated against, compared with that of their single or married male companions, with regard to their expenses for moving from one base to another?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not admit to the discrimination.

AIR CANADA

POSITION OF PROPOSED PURCHASE OF TRI-JET AIRCRAFT

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the proposed purchase by Air Canada of tri-jet aircraft going forward at a speed sufficient so as not to place in jeopardy subcontracts flowing from this purchase to the Canadian air industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am unacquainted with the matter, Mr. Speaker. I will bring it to the attention of the Minister of Transport immediately.

POLLUTION

THREAT FROM SUNKEN "IRVING WHALE"—REASON FOR NOT AWARDING CONTRACT FOR REMOVAL OF VESSEL OR CONTENTS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary or to the acting minister concerning the Irving Whale which is a serious ecological threat to Prince Edward Island. Can he advise whether the failure to award contracts to any of those who submitted tenders for the removal of the ship or its contents resulted from the high cost of these tenders or were the reasons technological or others?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall take notice of the question and submit it to the Department.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of privilege.

A moment ago, I asked the Prime minister a question that he did not answer. He merely took this opportunity to make a quip to cheer up my Liberal colleagues from Quebec. Mr. Speaker, it is most annoying to find that my Liberal colleagues are in such a state of trauma because the majority of their constituents voted for the parti québécois that they have only one word—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with the present state of negotiations between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia with regard to the offshore mineral rights issue. Which government now has the initiative, the government of Canada or the government of Nova Scotia, and which is waiting to hear from the other in respect of resolving this vital issue?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not quite understand the question, Mr. Speaker. However, I do understand it has to do with offshore mineral rights and this matter is being dealt with by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has had a meeting with the premier of Nova Scotia, and I am sure he would be happy to answer the question if it is asked of him sometime next week perhaps.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT ON CANNABIS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the House leader a question. In view of the fact we have been unable to get answers from various ministers in reference to the Le Dain Commission report and the position of the government, would he be prepared to set a day aside for a debate on that subject so we can ascertain from the ministry their position with respect to the commission report?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we have very little government time remaining.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: But I would be happy to call one of the many opposition days still remaining in this supply period so that the opposition can raise the question of the Le Dain Commission report and we can all discuss it.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a supplementary question for the minister and I ask it in all seriousness. Will the House leader guarantee that there will be another opposition day to give us that opportunity?

Mr. MacEachen: You will have to judge that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PRESENTATION OF LEGISLATION ON USE OF MARIJUANA

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning the Le Dain report.

Is it the intention of the right hon. Prime Minister to inform the House, prior to adjournment, whether it is his government's policy to legalize the use of marijuana?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This, Mr. Speaker, depends obviously on the date of adjournment. However, perhaps I could answer—

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF FOOD—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION TO DETERMINE WHETHER HIGHER PROFITS OF CHAIN STORES JUSTIFIED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker. On Wednesday, as reported on page 2352 of Hansard, I asked the Acting Prime Minister if the government was investigating the fact that food prices are rising at a time when food chain stores are showing very substantial increases in profits, and the Acting Prime Minister's answer was in the affirmative. I therefore want to ask the minister whether these investigations are being carried on, whether he intends to report to the House the results of these investigations, and when we may expect such a report?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe I responded to a similar question from another member of the hon. gentleman's party the other day. I will repeat my answer to the extent of saying that if any violations of the Combines Investigation Act are brought to the attention of the director of the anti-combines section they most certainly will be investigated, but that has not occurred yet.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is supposed to protect consumers and that there are very sharp increases in the prices of food coincidental with sharp increases in profits by the companies selling food, will the minister himself undertake to instigate an investigation into this matter to see whether or not there is any collusion among the companies or whether exorbitant profit-taking is going on?

Mr. Andras: That would properly fall under the purview of the director of the combines investigation section, and if there is any evidence of this kind of action taking place I am sure he will carry out his duties in that regard.

REQUESTS FOR INVESTIGATION OF HIGHER FOOD COSTS IN YUKON THAN IN YELLOWKNIFE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does he intend to accede to the repeated requests of the Yukon Consumers Association to conduct an investigation into the relatively higher cost of food in the Yukon than in Yellowknife despite cheaper transportation costs to the Yukon?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I should like to check again on that, but it is my understanding, if my merory serves me well, that an investigation has been conducted and a reply sent to the people who inquired. I will be glad to refresh my memory and respond to the hon. member at the earliest possible moment.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STEPS TO PROTECT OFFSHORE WATERS FROM EFFECTS OF DEEP-SEA MINING

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries and I gave him notice of it. I understand that in his absence his parliamentary secretary is prepared to answer it. With the advent of ocean mining, and particularly the international development of the continuous line bucket system for dragging metalliferous nodules from the ocean floor, what steps is the department taking to protect our offshore environment in view of the likelihood of an international race commencing shortly?

Mr. Speaker: The parliamentary secretary may reply to the question briefly. The question is a far-ranging one and would normally invite a statement on motions. If the parliamentary secretary can reply briefly, he will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, a continuous line bucket system for deep sea mining is under development in the Pacific Ocean, primarily by Japanese and American interests. The earliest date for first full-scale operation is 1975, although this is considered optimistic. No significant nodule deposits are known to exist on the Canadian continental shelf or in waters where the federal government has direct jurisdiction.

DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD

PROVISION OF FUNDS TO EXPLOIT BREAKTHROUGH IN GAS LASER TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. It has recently been announced that the Defence Research Board has achieved a significant breakthrough in gas laser technology and it has been indicated that approximately half a million dollars would need to be allocated to the project in order to fully exploit the breakthrough. Has the minister given consideration to the allocation of these funds, and what is his decision?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Defence Research Board comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, may I redirect the question to the Minister of National Defence?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Defence Research Board itself decides on how it is going to allocate its funds each year for various projects. Of course, research into lasers has been a major undertaking of the Defence Research Board and I believe it is going to be in the future.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED ORDER FORBIDDING UNION MEETINGS ON FEDERAL PROPERTY

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I have been informed directly by the chairman of the local of the Letter Carriers Union in my riding that an order has been issued by Treasury Board through the Department of Public Works that no more postal union meetings are to be held on federal property. Is this a general policy across the country or is this just an isolated case?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Treasury Board or the Department of Public Works would issue instructions in relation to postal unions which would clearly hamper the rights of free collective bargaining.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Would this order be related to his continuing silence on current negotiations with the postal unions?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, may I first reply to the Prime Minister that I was in the House yesterday when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development answered questions, but as he did not answer some questions concerning the James Bay project, I simply asked him whether he was amenable to representations made by the Indians for an immediate stop of this project, to which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has never replied clearly.

So, I call upon the Prime Minister to say whether he would favour co-operating with the James Bay project, as I think he would.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has simply repeated the question that he asked during the question period. This period now being over, perhaps the hon. member for Joliette will have an opportunity to ask his question at another occasion or another day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ELECTION EXPENSES BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CANADA ELECTIONS ACT AND INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-211, to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and on the amendment thereto of Mr. Macquarrie (p. 2412).

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering what the wish of the Chair was with respect to the discussion which Your Honour invited on the admissibility of the amendment offered by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). At any time Your Honour would wish to designate, we would be prepared to argue it.

Mr. Speaker: I might say that the Chair is under some difficulty. Perhaps I might advise hon. members that in the course of discussions the hon. deputy to the Deputy Speaker has briefed himself considerably and at length on the subject to the extent that he appears to be an expert on reasoned amendments. He is quite familiar with the circumstances of this case and he would be prepared to hear argument at this time if hon. members feel this would be the right moment to discuss the procedural point. I would invite him to replace me, because from now on he will be the recognized expert on this subject.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the description which His Honour has given of your being the recognized expert we will know where not to direct our reasoned amendments from now on.

Mr. Speaker, I want to direct your attention to the amendment which was offered by the hon. member for Hillsborough yesterday. First of all, I wish to observe that on last September 13 at page 7760 of Hansard and the next few pages, this whole question was debated and a decision given. At that time Mr. Speaker indicated that, so far as reasoned amendments were concerned, he was in a quandary about the whole issue and he invited suggestions as to some way in which hon. members of the House might in due course indicate their views. I think it is a great pity, Mr. Speaker, and I say this advisedly that this session and probably this parliament is whimpering to a close without this being done. I am not going to blame my hon. friend, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). I know he is quite eager and concerned that this and other issues be dealt with, but I do think that when hon. members from this side, from the other side and the Chair have brought to the attention of the House a number of anomalies and difficulties with regard to the operation of the new rules as altered in light of changing circumstances, it is a great pity that we are not able to leave as a legacy to the next parliament certain views on procedural requirements and this, of course, is one of them.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn my attention directly to this particular amendment. I realize that Your Honour will be considering the provisions of citation 382. This is the text on which most decisions have been based, and it, in turn, goes back to many of the old precedents in the United Kingdom. As an expert, Your Honour probably knows the citation by heart but I should like to put it on record. Citation 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition reads in part:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill—

I repeat those last words, Mr. Speaker.

> —the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill—

I find I must repeat those words because yesterday His Honour, Mr. Speaker, in taking a preliminary view of this issue, limited himself to this statement, and I am now quoting from yesterday's Hansard, the left side of page 2412:

> The so-called reasoned amendment is intended to give a member an opportunity to place on the record the reason he is opposed to the principle of a bill—

I want to make it as crystal clear as I can, Mr. Speaker, that while I agree with him as far he goes we must read into that and add to it the words that I have quoted, not only the principles, but the policy, or provisions of the bill. In other words, it is competent for a member, in attempting to move a reasoned amendment, to place on the record the reasons for his opposition to the principle of the bill, to the policy in the bill or to the provisions of the bill, because that is the only way there can be an acceptance of what is set out in citation 382.

There is a reason for that, Mr. Speaker. It goes back to the practices, the precedents, the rules and the operation of the House at Westminster over some centuries. But I think, Mr. Speaker, that we in this House and certainly the Chair, must take judicial notice, if I may use that expression, of the fact that the type of legislation with which this House as well as the House in Westminster is now dealing is different from the type of measure that contains a simple declaration of principle to which the clauses of the bill were limited. The cases in which we find that today are rare. Instead, we find that government bills are a composite of various subject matters. The subject matters, for example, embraced by certain tax bills and money bills are as far apart as the north and south poles. I am not stressing that. I insist, however, that in considering this issue it is important for us to remember now, as well as in future, that the types of bills we are examining these days are entirely different from the sorts of measures that this House or the House of Commons in the United Kingdom considered even 20 years ago.

Second, the Chair, in considering the reasons underlying its decision, cannot ignore the changes which have crept into the proceedings of the House as a result of the rules we adopted four years ago. This is neither the time nor place to comment on the wisdom of those rules and the problems they have created. Without doubt, the approach of this House to a debate on second reading these days is entirely different from the approach this House adopted towards such debates 15 or 20 years ago, and is different from the approach that it adopted before the rule changes of 1968 and 1969.

Now, after second reading, a bill is referred to committee, after which it comes back for the report stage and is given third reading. Anyone examining Hansard and scrutinizing the manner in which this House now deals with legislation cannot help concluding that the second reading and reference of a bill to committee is far less significant now than it was before 1968. The procedures adopted by this House make it plain that remedies are available now which were not available before. For instance, we are now given the remedy of putting on the order paper amendments to be moved at the report stage. What we did in the last few days in dealing with Bills C-207 and 208, the bills concerning old age security pensions and veterans' benefits, illustrates how our new procedures and remedies work. We entertained grave doubts as to whether those bills were effective, as to whether they went far enough, and we expressed those doubts in the House as well as outside. We said, "Fine, let us try to improve those bills by the means of reasoned amendments. In any event, we are quite willing to send those two bills to committee and see them return at the report stage because, in the process, we may be able to persuade the government, or enough hon. members, to work out effective and beneficial changes." We failed, Mr. Speaker; of course, with this government, we always fail in those attempts, but that is besides the point.

What is important is that there is great emphasis placed by this House, and certainly by members of my party, on the report stage and subsequent third reading stage. For instance, we may say in the second reading debate that we do not like a bill, that it does not go far enough, that there are parts of it on which we differ, but that we support the general thrust and principle of the bill when we consider the conditions at which it is aimed and which it seeks to correct. In that case we will say, "Fine, send it to committee," knowing well that if amendments submitted in committee are not agreed to, we may move further amendments at the report stage or at third reading; knowing, also, that if those amendments are not accepted and the bill is not changed, we are justified in voting against the bill. I suggest as strongly as I can that the Chair dare not ignore that change in our procedure which has come about since 1968.

Having said that, and not wishing to take much more of the time of the Chair, I will refer again to the proceedings of September 13, 1971, at which time Mr. Speaker accepted the reasoned amendment which had been moved by my hon. and learned friend the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I spoke on that occasion and cited a number of precedents from the House of Commons in the United Kingdom. I submit that those precedents show there can be found a parallel between what we are attempting to do here and what was achieved in the United Kingdom with a number and variety of measures with respect to which reasoned amendments were accepted.

May I now return to Citation 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. The reasoned amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West was accepted because the amendment sought to indicate and to establish that the hon. member who moved the amendment did not agree to the second reading and therefore moved, as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions in question. The proceedings I am referring to are recorded at page 7765 of Hansard for September 13, 1971.

In 1961, on second reading of a bill dealing with Commonwealth immigration, the following amendment was moved as a reasoned amendment in the U.K. House of Commons.

> This House declines to give a second reading to a bill which, without adequate inquiry and without full discussion at a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers, removes from Commonwealth citizens the long standing right of free entry to Britain, and is thus calculated to undermine the unity and strength of the Commonwealth; gives excessive discretionary powers to the executive without any provision for appeals; will be widely regarded as introducing a colour bar into our legislation; and though providing for health checks and for the deportation of those convicted of certain criminal offences, fails—

I underline these words:

> —to deal with the deplorable social and housing conditions under which recent Commonwealth immigrants and other subjects of Her Majesty are living.

That amendment deals with a variety of subject matters. It deals with the policy inherent in the original legislation as well as with a number of provisions in the bill, and then ends by saying, "We decline to pass the bill because it does not include certain things we think should be in it." That is precisely what the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is attempting to do on this occasion. Having said in the preamble that he regrets that government delay in introducing Bill C-211 prevents its full operation before a certain date, he goes on to say that the bill fails to provide for adequate reform, and so on. The amendment says that the House declines to pass a bill which does not take advantage of present day advances in the mass media and transportation. Of course, having been pressed for years to bring in legislation of this kind, the government has now brought it in at a time when there is likely to be dissolution of the House, and it knows full well that it is unlikely to be passed in time for the coming election since it will not come into effect until after January 1. That, Mr. Speaker, is unmitigated gall on the part of the government; it is political fraud of the worst type. That is beside the point.

In any event, the motion proposed by my hon. friend ends by saying that the House declines to pass a bill:

> —which does not take advantage of present day advances in the mass media and transportation which would provide for a shorter election period and thereby, amongst other things, substantially reduce election expenses.

If there is any principle behind this bill, that principle is that there shall be regulation of or limitation of campaign expenses. This is or may be done in a number of ways. We say that some of these methods may be all right; we say, however, that the simplest and most intelligent way, and perhaps the most desirable way of doing this, is by limiting the length of campaigns. We are saying, then, within the meaning of Citation 382, that we decline to give second reading to the bill; further, we have brought forward a resolution, the one I read, declaratory of a principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the bill. We have done this in precisely the same way as it was done in the United Kingdom and with precisely the same kind of language that Mr. Speaker in the United Kingdom accepted. I suggest to Your Honour with the greatest respect that it will be necessary to very badly torture the meaning of those words which I quoted from the United Kingdom precedent and citation 382 to hold that the amendment which the hon. member has moved does not meet those requirements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that last night the Speaker raised the question of reasoned amendments at the second reading stage of a bill. I have been concerned about the gradual trend toward the acceptance of second reading reasoned amendments in the House. I remember the time I worked for the opposition from 1958 to 1962. I had been temporarily retired from the House of Commons and was working with the then Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson. One of the jobs I had was to work on the question of procedure.

Mr. Baldwin: Your experience will come in handy.

Mr. MacEachen: That was really the way I became interested in what I thought was a rather occult and mysterious art that could only be practised by mystiques like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, necessity drove me to the study of procedure. Over those four years we contrived to develop reasoned amendments on second reading. It was most difficult to have any of them accepted. We had good advocates on the opposition side, including the present government leader in the Senate and the present chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, who was undoubtedly the best procedural expert on our side at that time. He was far ahead of any other person, probably because he had become accustomed to the study of procedure in his years with Mr. King and Mr. St. Laurent. Even his advocacy, and that of the present government House leader in the Senate, almost always failed to have a reasoned amendment accepted on second reading.

Mr. Speaker Michener, who occupied the chair at that time, was most meticulous. It appeared as though he had to pay huge sums of money out of his own pocket if a second reading amendment went before the House. There were only a few in four years. It seems to me that it is a very desirable practice to get back to the rigid application of the tradition on second reading amendments. If it is not applied rigidly, there will be a gradual development leading to the acceptance of any type of amendment on second reading.

The tradition has always been that a member who proposes a second reading reasoned amendment is giving advance notice to the House that he intends to vote against and do everything possible to defeat the bill. It is highly contradictory for any member to move a second reading reasoned amendment, and then vote for the bill when it is called for second reading. The implication is that you are opposed to the bill. You have resorted to a device, a second reading reasoned amendment, which, if accepted, kills the bill. That is why His Honour said yesterday that there was no doubt whatsoever that a reasoned amendment can only be an indication for the record as to why a member or a party intends to vote against the principle of the bill. I am satisfied, even though my hon. friends opposite find defects in the bill, that they will not vote against the bill. They will not vote against the principle of disclosure, the principle of assistance to candidates and the limitation of expenses.

I do not complain that my hon. friend has moved a second reading amendment. I do not reproach him. I am merely using this instance to illustrate what is involved in moving a second reading amendment. It should be preceded by a political decision by a party or a member that he or the party is going to do everything possible to defeat the bill on second reading, and then, once having made that political decision, he or the party proceeds to use this device to reach the objective. As His Honour pointed out, it is obvious that in recent times that strict application has not been followed. I hope we will get back to it.

I disagree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who argued that the 1968 amendments to the rules changed the significance of a second reading motion or second reading adoption in the House of Commons. I know there were opinions at that time that this was the case. I certainly never accepted that view. At that time, I proposed to speak in the debate if the occasion arose so that I could reinstate what I felt to be the importance of the second reading, namely that it was an adoption of the principle of a bill. That is all.

In one of his rulings, Mr. Speaker Michener ruled that there could be a principle or several principles in a bill. The authorities usually refer to the principle of a bill. Mr. Speaker said that it was possible to find a number of principles in any bill and that in order to found a proper second reading amendment, it was essential to oppose the principle of a bill or set up an opposing proposition to the principle or principles contained in the bill.

The hon. member for Peace River referred to that citation at page 527 of the 17th edition of Erskine May in which he categorizes reasoned amendments as follows:

(1) It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

It seems to me that has been the key paragraph and that in practice, the other two categories proposed by May have seldom been used to support the validity of second reading amendments. If they were, those second two paragraphs are so broad that if they were used as a foundation many more amendments would be put on second reading. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that if those second two paragraphs are valid, the door is wide open. I say this because paragraph three reads:

• (1220)

It may seek further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, or the production of papers or other evidence.

The hon. member has already quoted paragraph two. In most cases, the Chair in Canada, especially Mr. Speaker Michener, has referred to the first category as a valid definition of a reasoned amendment. This is the foundation I should like to see established in the particular case under consideration. The amendment itself, it seems to me, does not in any way put forward a proposition contradictory to the principle in the bill itself. It first of all raises a complaint against the government, a grievance. It is complained that the bill was not brought in earlier, or that it has been brought in at such a time that its provisions could only come into effect on June 1, 1973. That is a complaint which is not really relevant to the contents of the bill. If the hon. member wished to have that proposition dealt with by the House it should probably come forward as a separate motion.

The second point in the amendment relates to the election period. Well, the election period is established by the Canada Elections Act. There are provisions in that Act establishing the election period, dating from enumeration day until polling day. There is certainly nothing in the bill before us which relates to that; this aspect of the amendment, which seems to me to be the main aspect, is quite outside the scope and provisions of the bill itself.

I am not emotionally attached to the defeat of this amendment on procedural grounds. If it were accepted, it would not bother me greatly except that it seems to me the Speaker has laid the gauntlet down and said: It is time we stopped loose practices and got back to the proper interpretation of what constitutes reasoned amendments. I agree with such an approach. I congratulate him on taking that leadership. I hope that this ruling will establish for the future a proper basis for reasoned amendments and that we shall return to a strict interpretation of the rule in this regard, and, especially, that we shall all understand that reasoned amendments should only be put forward and accepted in cases where the mover and his party are out to defeat a bill. Otherwise, they should not be put forward at all.

Mr. Baldwin: Do I take it, then, that it is the view of the minister in support of the Speaker that a reasoned amendment which otherwise might not be in order would be in order if the mover says: I and my party intend to vote against the bill on second reading. Would that preserve the legality of the motion relating to a reasoned amendment?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not see how the Chair could possibly accept an amendment as being in order merely because the mover says: I am putting forward this amendment and I intend to vote against the bill itself. Besides, I do not think Mr. Speaker or any of us is entitled to ask how an hon. member proposes to deal with the bill itself. I take the position that a second reading reasoned amendment, within the British and Canadian position, is itself an indication on the part of the mover that he is opposed to the principle of a bill and that he is making a motion because he is out to kill the bill. This is absolutely clear in the authorities. It is quite inconsistent to take what is regarded as a lethal step and then, later on, to embrace the bill on second reading. It really is most contradictory and I have been shocked at the loose attitude shown toward parliamentary morality in this area.

Mr. Baldwin: He might be persuaded by the eloquence shown on the other side.

Mr. Woolliams: What the minister has said means that the whole debating system is a farce.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as another drafter of a great many second reading reasoned amendments, I suppose I should get into this discussion for a few minutes. The President of the Privy Council was almost boasting that his batting average when he was adviser to his party on these matters was low. He indicated that this reflected the difficulty of getting reasoned amendments accepted by the Chair. I do not know what my batting average is, but I know I have been able to get quite a few of them accepted. However, this discussion has developed into an academic review of the whole subject of reasoned amendments rather than sticking to the particular one before us. That is understandable.

For my part, I like the suggestion in the hon. members' amendment that something be done to shorten elections. I thought it was ingenious of the hon. member to get that in by suggesting it might be a way of reducing election expenses. I am aware, though, of the difficulty which both he and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) are encountering in trying to persuade the Chair that the proposed amendment is in line with our precedents and positions relating to reasoned amendments.

One of the things I find odd is that in Beauchesne we are told that on third reading all amendments which can be made on second reading are in order except certain kinds of amendments. In other words, fewer kinds of amendments are permissible than on second reading. Yet, if we search the records, we will find that it is easier to get third reading amendments accepted than second reading amendments. This underlines the point that the criteria laid down for reasoned amendments on second reading are really not very clear. I therefore support the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River that despite the expertise you have achieved in these matters, Mr. Speaker, the subject should be given further thought, perhaps not only on the floor of this chamber when these questions come up, but by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

I should like to make this further point. Again, I am supporting the hon. member for Peace River and contending with the President of the Privy Council. I believe it is a fact that we slightly changed the meaning of second reading in December of 1968. At that time what was then the special committee on procedure presented two reports which were companion pieces. One of them made the actual changes in the standing orders, including the change that makes the motion for second reading read that the bill be now read a second time and be referred to such and such a committee. That report was adopted. The other companion report was by way of a commentary. I do not have it in front of me this morning but my memory of it is fairly clear.

In this companion report, we commented on the significance of many of the changes being made. One of the changes on which we commented was this very change under which we say at second reading that the bill be read a second time and referred to such and such a committee. We said in that commentary that the important vote on a bill should really be the final vote, the vote on third reading. We downgraded slightly—I emphasize the word "slightly"—the significance of second reading by saying that at that point we were really simply giving general approval to the bill and agreeing to discuss it at the committee stage.

I well remember in the sessions of the committee when we were dealing with this matter that we were trying to cope with the situation that had often developed when government members on the committee would say to the opposition members: "Why are you trying to change this bill? You voted for it on second reading". Then opposition members used to say in the committee: "We voted for it in principle, in general, so that it could go to committee, but that does not mean that we have to support it in its exact detail". I think I am being quite faithful to the commentary and the report of December 1968 when I say that we decided that the time had come when a vote on second reading should not be as rigid and final a decision that the bill is okay; it should simply be a decision that the bill is generally okay, subject to what happens to it in committee.

The change that we made was ever so slight, and I emphasize that, because if I am completely opposed to a bill, I vote against it on second reading and do not want it to go to committee. But there are many bills that come into the House that we do accept in general if only we can get some changes made to them.

I think it should be possible on second reading to move the kind of amendment that does not necessarily kill the bill but which makes it possible to put on the record the opinion that certain changes in the bill should be made. Perhaps this is not going to be very helpful to my hon. friend from Hillsborough as far as this day's amendment is concerned, but I wonder whether it would not be possible for us to develop a system under which at second reading, where the motion is that the bill be now read a second time and referred to a certain committee, it would be permissible to add to the reference to committee a phrase that would say "with the instruction that the committee give consideration to amending the bill, so as to"—shorten the election period, or what have you.

There are many instances where the opposition is not, in an outright sense, opposed to a bill in its entirety but where I think it would be good debate to have some of the suggestions made added to the reference to committee. I would hope that the next time the committee on procedure and organization gets around to considering procedural matters it might take a look at this question of the kinds of amendments that we can move on second reading.

Oppositions have trouble with all kinds of amendments. However, we know what we can do on third reading, and I think the batting average for third reading amendments is much higher than it is on second reading. But surely it is a matter of common sense that at second reading the opposition should have three choices. First, to support the bill outright. Second, to oppose the bill outright. And surely there is a third choice for an opposition, namely to say that it goes along with the bill in general and it wants it to go to committee and be given further consideration, but that there are certain ideas not included in the bill which it wants to have included. In effect, that is what my hon. friend from Hillsborough is trying to do under the present rules and practices. I see the difficulty that he is having because of the traditions against this kind of amendment, but I hope that consideration will be given to this question in the future so we can have a little better opportunity at second reading than we have under the rules as they now stand.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. May I thank hon. members for their constributions to this very difficult procedural debate. May I first thank Mr. Speaker for the remarks that he made concerning the present occupant of the Chair, though I have grave doubts about some of his affirmations concerning me. As hon. members know, the occupant of the Chair does not meet on the way up the steps with the Holy Spirit; he simply does his best and at the same time has to abide by the rules of the House. I think all hon. members will agree with me that any occupant of the Chair has the advantage of having the present Speaker, pass on to him from day to day his knowledge of the rules and procedures of the House, as well as his humanities, which is very helpful. I do not know how much this is going to help me to make a decision that will satisfy hon. members, but before I give my decision I shall try to touch on some of the points that have been brought out by hon. members.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referred to some remarks made last September by Mr. Speaker to the effect that the House, through its committee on procedure, should look at the evolution that had taken place over recent months regarding reasoned amendments in order to arrive at a change in the rules that would define the use of reasoned amendments.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker issued a warning to hon. members in his remarks following the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hillsborough. He said that the proliferation of amendments of that kind indicate that hon. members are really attempting from time to time, under the guise of so-called reasoned amendments, to bring in substantive motions. He went on, as reported at page 2412 of Hansard:

> I suggest that for some strange reason it seems that in recent weeks and months hon. members have been taken with the idea that perhaps a reasoned amendment is a good way in which to propose a substantive motion which very often does not bear too much immediate and essential relevancy to the principle of the bill.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referred to citation 382 of Beauchesne's in which it is stated:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a Bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the Bill by Committees, Commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence or the opinion of Judges.

Yesterday Mr. Speaker mentioned that these so-called reasoned amendments are intended to give an opportunity to members to place on the record a reason for opposing the principle of the bill. The Chair agrees with this statement, but questions the interpretations put on it by the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

The hon. member for Peace River referred to the changes in the rules. Of course, the Chair is quite aware that there has been a rapid evolution in the rules in the past few years since 1968. Even though these rules have been amended, I am sure that hon. members will not ask the Chair to further amend these rules by making a ruling that in itself will tend to modify a long established practice in the House of Commons. The Chair would meet with great difficulties if it were asked to do so. I agree that a new practice has developed, as mentioned by the hon. member, to send more bills to the committees, making it more easy to give second reading without questioning all the details of a bill in the hope that the committee would have a better opportunity to adopt modifications. This was referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who said that with the change in the rules we downgraded slightly the second reading stage of a bill, but I do not think this is a reason which should prevent the Chair from making a decision based on past practice, precedent and rules of this House.

There are basic rules we have to follow. Of course, there is little doubt in the mind of the Chair that a reasoned amendment at the second reading stage of a bill involves one of the more difficult parliamentary procedures. The invitation which has been made in the past by Mr. Speaker, to have the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization look at this matter, still stands. I am sure hon. members would benefit from a discussion of this problem outside the House rather than discussing it only in the context of a particular amendment in respect of which the Chair has to make an important decision, because this could prevent some hon. members, in view of their opinion of the bill itself or the subject-matter under discussion, from expressing a clear view on the whole subject-matter; one might be defending the amendment and another opposing it. If the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization considered this matter outside of this context it might come forward with suggestions useful to hon. members, the House and the Chair.

Referring again to the difficulty met in respect of a reasoned amendment, I would invite hon. members to look at page 527 of May's Seventeenth Edition where three rules are set out concerning the form of a reasoned amendment with a description of the categories of that kind of an amendment. It reads as follows:

(1) It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

(2) It may express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill, or otherwise opposed to its progress.

(3) It may seek further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence.

Such amendments have tended in modern times to become rather stereotyped and are confined generally to the first two categories.

Category No. 3 as described by the author may have become obsolete in the British House of Commons in view of our practice of referring the subject-matter of a bill to a committee.

Citation 386 in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition refers to that type of amendment in the following words:

On the second reading of a Bill, the House may decide to refer the subject matter thereof to a Commission although the bill could not be referred to a Committee of the House before its second reading. (The subject matter of a Bill and the Bill itself are two different things.) On the 17th April, 1934, the following amendment was moved to the second reading of a Bill to amend the Railway Act in respect of rates on grain: "That the Bill be not now read a second time but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada." This amendment was as much a declaration of policy as if it stated that the question of adjusting the railway rates on grain should be investigated by the Railway Board. The Speaker allowed the amendment, and an appeal was taken to the House which confirmed the decision by a vote of 78 to 44.

To go back to May's Seventeenth Edition and the citation to which I have already referred, there is a description of the types and classes of amendments which fall into that category referred to as "reasoned". At the foot of page 527 and at the top of page 528 of May's Seventeenth Edition it is stated:

The principle of relevancy in an amendment governs every such motion. The amendment must "strictly relate to the bill which the House, by its order, has resolved upon considering", and must not include in its scope other bills then standing for consideration by the House.

The amendment must not be concerned in detail with the provisions of the bill upon which it is moved, nor anticipate amendments thereto which may be moved in committee; nor is it permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question, that the bill be now read a second time, as such words must, by implication, attach conditions to the second reading.

An amendment, which amounts to no more than a direct negation of the principle of the bill, is open to objection.

In those three paragraphs, the conditions which must be met by a reasoned amendment are stated. In paragraph (1), as cited, one important condition must be met when an amendment is moved to a motion for second and third reading. This is the rule of relevancy. The amendment, according to the rule of relevancy, must relate strictly to the bill the House is considering at the time.

Coming back to the amendment before us, to my mind the first part of the amendment, referring to what the mover calls "government delay in introducing Bill C-211" is quite irrelevant to the principle of the bill. It must be said also that the motion does not claim to oppose the bill on those grounds. Actually the Chair would be tempted to ask itself, if it were accepting the arguments made by the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, whether any kind of amendment would be valid. By their interpretation of the rules, reasoned amendments as such would become obsolescent. Later the proposed amendment suggests that there should be a provision for a shorter election period having regard to advances in mass media and transportation. This, again, is beyond the terms of the bill before us. What the hon. member proposes are amendments to the Canada Elections Act, rather than to the bill which is before us, Bill C-211. That, to my mind, is the basic weakness of the proposed amendment.

In essence, the hon. member's suggested reasoned amendment is not declaratory of any proposition adverse to, or differing from, the principle of the bill before us. For those reasons I cannot accept the amendment. May I be permitted, however, to add in conclusion that I hope hon. members will understand, if the Chair has spent more time than it should have on the arguments made, that it did so in the hope that soon in the coming months hon. members will have an opportunity to look again at the question of reasoned amendments. Regardless of the decision rendered now, I invite hon. members to look at this question at other times rather than in relation to an amendment which is before the House on a specific bill. Again, as I have said, so far as the amendment is concerned the Chair cannot accept it. This ruling is mainly based on the present rules and practices of the House, on the precedents and on the previous decisions which have been taken. This is the only way, unless the rules of the House are changed, in which we can preserve this institution.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) would like to speak for four or five minutes. I would agree to lend him my allotted time, provided I am permitted to speak at two o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I endorse this bill and welcome it. Having been through a campaign in 1968 that was too expensive, I can tell hon. members from the lessons I have learned that a campaign does not have to be so expensive to succeed. With careful planning and more concern for costs, I know that my last campaign could be duplicated today for about half the cost. Nevertheless, a campaign does cost money and this is a fact that the public and the press seem to find hard to accept. For example, in my own riding which is the fifth most populous in Canada, sending a letter to each voter costs $7,200 just for postage stamps. The bill before us would permit $37,000 to be spent lawfully on the items specified. I say this limit is more than enough for anyone to make himself known and put his message across. I make no apology for the cost of my 1968 campaign. I broke no rules or customs. My accounting was complete. The money came from personal supporters, from Liberals in the riding and from the party. No contributor has held me to account. I do not even know them all.

But big campaign bills reflect on the system. They encourage the false belief that politics is a rich man's game. Hon. members know how many of us in this Chamber are rich in the normal sense. The charge of rich man's game is false. But big campaign bills tend to discredit the truth. I do not know whether this bill will be applicable to the next election. I hope it will because the right of partial reimbursement and of tax credits for contributors would be desirable. I have risen in my place today to state that, whether or not the bill is law at the time of the next election, I will abide by the provisions relating to spending limits, to disclosure and to auditing, provided that my Conservative opponent also does so. I believe that this is a constructive step, one which will be welcomed by Don Valley voters and one which should be welcomed by my opponent.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

• (1410)

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, while listening yesterday to the speech of the hon. minister who is piloting this bill, I felt a glimmer of hope because he seemed to have adopted a more flexible attitude that was open to the suggestions and amendments which would eventually be brought in during the debate on this bill. Relying on the minister's straightforwardness, I think we should accept some necessary suggestions and amendments regarding this legislation.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has spoken of forthcoming general election and the impossibility for this bill to be in any way effective before then.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement, I wonder whether we should not have further considered the amendment moved yesterday by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). Indeed, if there is no particular urgency to adopt this legislation which will not be implemented before the next general election, why not delay its consideration so that it may be improved still more and more specifically analysed to avoid once again the necessity of constant review.

Mr. Speaker, a legislation which purports to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act in regard to election expenses has a direct bearing on the basic problem of democratization of elections, that is to say on democracy itself since elections are the springboard of democracy. If such a bill is so drafted as to relate to an actual democratization, it should rest on the principle that an equal opportunity should be offered all political parties and candidates to submit their views.

This equal opportunity is essential, Mr. Speaker, if we want democracy to operate better in this country, because experience has shown us that loud and intensive publicity may warp the opinions of the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, here are a few concrete examples; we very well know that, because of repeated advertising on television, on radio of in the newspapers, or a particular brand of soap for the dishes, all the women go out and buy that brand, simply because they have very often heard the name or seen the advertisement. Does that mean that this soap is better? Not always, Mr. Speaker.

So, when I speak of loud and intensive publicity which may warp the thinking of the electorate, I am speaking about something true, about something real, about things that do happen during an election campaign. Basically, the bill should be aimed at preventing such a situation for God knows how the members of the Social Credit in particular had to suffer from these enormous electoral machines—steam rollers you might call them—whose money is crushing everything in its way.

Mr. Speaker, does the results of the work of such an electoral machine honestly and sincerely reflect the Canadian voter's opinion? Certainly not. This is why fundamentally any policy in respect of election expenses should prevent political parties from having recourse to high-gear and noisy publicity aimed at misleading voters.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the first impression we gather from this bill is that it still rests on the underlying and hypothetical principle whereby the percentage of votes obtained by a candidate or a party is proportionate to the expenses made. I think this is what the situation is now and has been in the past.

However, what is it that should be done? To disappear? By virtue of what rights or privileges would the elected representatives of the House of Commons be so elected, if not on account of their ideas and beliefs, but exclusively on account of election expenses?

This, Mr. Speaker, is something which must absolutely be corrected through this bill, that is, to find out the true opinions of voters on a percentage basis according to election expenses. This is a mistake and this bill should not make the same mistake again.

Mr. Speaker, if the citizens of this country are to be treated fairly and equitably, we must first of all, as mentioned in the bill, examine closely this limitation of election expenses.

While studying the clauses of Bill C-211 concerning this limitation, I found that it is still much too high because there would still be many ways of obtaining good reasults without having to make that kind of expense.

Mr. Speaker, I am all the more pleased to emphasize this because once again we of the Social Credit party have proved beyond all doubt, that elections can cost practically nothing. Consequently, we set precedents in this modern age where we have been able on the sole strength of our principles and convictions, to win people over to a particular cause. It is not necessary to spend $25,000, $30,000 or $50,000 in order to avoid, as I was saying a while ago, distorting the results of an election.

We have therefore proved that it is possible to restrict these election expenses and I find that the limits provided in the bill are perhaps still too high considering—and I emphasize this—that there should not be any member who has been elected because money made up for his lack of personal qualities. No member of this House should be elected because of the amount of money spent in a given constituency.

For this reason, the authorized limits should be closer to a minimum than to a maximum and as I say this is possible. We have proved it ourselves during the last federal election in the constituency of Champlain, for instance, where the Social Credit candidate spent $1,-344.50 while $32,000 was spent by the Liberal candidate.

Mr. Speaker, that, I suggest, is very concrete proof that stricter limits can be placed on the expenses authorized during an election campaign.

Another point involved in achieving greater fairness and justice in election campaigning for all concerned is the subject of newspaper, radio and television publicity. The bill deals with that, and even stresses the point, quite justifiably. However, I should like to add that such publicity, in newspapers as well as on television and radio, should also be equal for all parties or at least distributed according to a fair proportion. When I say "fair proportion", I want to point out that I mean almost equal proportion.

In fact, because of the extreme importance achieved by the media, television and radio as well as newspapers, particularly the dailies, it is imperative that justice be exercised for all parties in the matter of publicity.

That is why I feel that under no circumstances should time limits be exceeded. The bill indicates that a certain numbe rof hours between a given date preceding the elections up to the day before the eve of the elections would be shared between political parties, with the government reimbursing 50 per cent of the cost.

Mr. Speaker, that would be right in principle, but I suggest that an absolute limit should be set on this time, not to be exceeded, so that things would not reach the last point I want to make, rowdy, intensive publicity which can be misleading. Then, we are working towards a more equitable allotment if we limit exactly the advertising time allowed to each political party or candidate.

As the mass media, specifically radio and television, have secured their broadcasting rights from the CRTC, it seems to me that they should provide free of charge all the political parties with the time they need to inform the public of their respective programs, and I repeat, "free of charge".

They operate under privileges and rights granted to them by the federal government. Considering the amount of stupidities one hears and sees on a number of these stations, I think that, when election time comes, all of them should make free air time available to the candidates. If those periods cannot be had free of charge, then they should be reimbursed fully and not only to the extent of 50 per cent as provided for in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, this is a basic principle, and if we want to stick to the basic principles which should prevail in a democracy, if we do not want the power of money to elect the members of parliament instead of the power of conviction, we must reach the point where all expenses for publicity over television, radio and in the press, at least the dailies, are reimbursed in full and not only up to 50 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, one point has not been mentioned in this bill although it is of major importance: we know that it is of the utmost importance for every candidate to have a representative at the poll during a general election. That is essential if reasonable supervision is to be exercised and abuse avoided.

• (1430)

The act does not mention any expenditure relating to polling agents. This is essential if we are to obtain justice and equality for all in the field of elections.

As for the agents of political parties or candidates, it would be quite easy to solve this problem by considering them, for example, on the same footing as deputy returning officers and clerks and pay them directly in the same way as the special officers appointed on polling day.

It should be recognized that in addition to the deputy returning officer and the clerk, the candidates' representatives should be automatically paid for their services during that day by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Speaker, this point is so important that I would like to elaborate on it because this is a matter of votes in polling stations and it is extremely important that each candidate be represented.

Since elections take place either on Mondays or Tuesdays, it is sometimes difficult to find people to represent a party at the polling station without paying them. If elections took place on Sundays, this problem would not exist, but since the present law requires that elections take place on Mondays or Tuesdays it follows that candidates' agents at the polling station must lose one working day and when the candidate does not have sufficient funds to pay them, he is the victim of an injustice.

Moreover, if this essential question could be resolved as I suggested, this would ensure at the polling station a degree of honesty essential to fair elections.

It is, of course, easy for the well-organized parties enjoying huge election funds to give those people $20, $25 or $30, as the case may be. If there are 200 polls, and if the average pay is $25, the salaries of the party agents at the poll will amount to $5,000. Since it is essential for a candidate to have an agent, then these special agents should be remunerated as are other officers in polling stations.

When the by-election was held in the county of Trois-Rivières, I had an opportunity of noting certain anomalies which are still prevalent although they should be weeded out, that is the considerable number of people and agents who are hired by some political parties in polling stations to monitor and inform.

In a church basement at Trois-Rivières, there were 17 polling stations. There were some 60 agents at the entrance who were paid by the Liberal and the Progressive Conservative parties and whose very presence intimidated incoming electors.

The law should provide that a candidate may, if necessary, have only one agent at the polling station. What are these so-called agents doing there since they are paid by the old parties? They only check the lists of electors to see whether the name of Mr. So-and-So has been duly entered and they ask him although they have no right to do that since they have no business being there. So, they intimidate the poor voter in this way, particularly if he is already a little shy. This could be considered as a final attempt to influence the vote. All this should disappear. But what should we substitute to it?

It would be very well for neutral officers appointed by the chief electoral officer or by his returning officer in each constituency to be present in every poll. These agents would be there simply in order to inform the voter when he arrives at the door and tell him where he must vote and if necessary give him the required information. But this must be done by utterly neutral agents. It must be considered here that voters are adults, since the right to vote is granted to adults. They are able to perform their duty by themselves, without being surrounded by squads of special agents appointed by some political parties.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, we consider it necessary in such a bill to avoid all the shortcomings and abuses which took place during elections. I think that our suggestions certainly deserve to be considered and carried out.

Mr. Speaker, there are peculiarities in this bill which, with your permission, I should like to bring to your attention.

For instance, on page 4, there is no indication as to the number of authorized agents a political party may have. I think the bill should be made more precise in this respect and specify exactly the number of authorized agents for each political party.

Paragraph (8) of clause 13.1 reads as follows:

(8) Every payment made by or through a registered agent in respect of any expenses of a registered party shall, except where the payment is less than twenty-five dollars, be vouched for by a bill stating the particulars and by a receipt.

What I find strange here are the words "except where the payment is less than twenty-five dollars". Thus only by distributing $20 bills by the thousands, it would be possible to run up fantastic expenses without the necessary receipts. It should be noted that this might very well happen and there have been some such instances in the past.

In paragraph (11) of clause 13.1, there is also the matter of charges which must be paid within six months after they have been incurred. I think there should be a little more time in cases of this kind. If someone is willing to advance funds to a political party and willing to wait one year for reimbursement, I don't see why this should be forbidden.

In paragraph (1) of clause 13.3, it is indicated that auditors who are appointed for candidates or political parties must report to the chief agent who in turn has to report to the Chief Electoral Officer. I wonder, for the sake of security, whether it would not be appropriate that the auditor himself report directly to the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Speaker, again these are suggestions. We shall introduce amendments, if need be, but if the minister would immediately consider these suggestions, he himself could move the proper amendments.

I would also speak to the 20 per cent of the votes cast, the required 20 per cent for a candidate to be entitled to a refund, to a fraction of expenses incurred.

Mr. Speaker, once again we must be practical and consider that in theory, it may happen that a candidate might get slightly fewer votes than the winner—100, 200 or 300—and still not have 20 per cent of the votes. This could happen. At the last provincial elections in Quebec, some members were elected with 26 or 27 per cent of the votes. Thus, theoretically a defeated candidate may be very close to the winner and not have obtained 20 per cent of the number of votes cast.

Instead of speaking of 20 per cent of the number of votes cast, we could say 25 per cent of the number of votes cast for the winner. It would be more fair, I think, for all the candidates. There are at present at least four official parties that put up candidates in almost every riding. If, at a given time, there was a close contest between the four parties, each party could theoretically get 25 per cent. Thus, that is when the candidate gets 20 per cent of the number of votes. In such a situation, this result becomes fantastic.

We should rather say 25 per cent of the number of votes obtained by the elected candidate, our electoral system being what it is, based on the principle of the simple majority on the first ballot.

There is another aspect of this bill that is worth mentioning. A maximum fine of $25,000 is provided in the case of political parties that would be guilty of an offense against this act.

Mr. Speaker, when one knows about the astronomical amounts spent by certain political parties during an election, when one knows that those expenses amount to millions of dollars, one will understand that paying $25,000 for violating the law would not be very much for old political parties. They will readily pay those $25,000 for they have plenty of money.

The paying of such a fine would not make much difference in situations such as those we have unfortunately known and will probably see again.

It would seem at first sight that the object of this bill—I would not like to question the motives of the President of the Privy Council—is to favour the Liberal and Progressive Conservative parties' election funds.

Mr. Pepin: Poor little martyr.

Mr. Matte: Indeed Mr. Speaker, some election funds are well supplied. Methods were devised so that corporations of all kinds and individuals may make contributions to political parties. And God knows that it is being done. The hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) puts this principle into practice when he writes for example to all the corporations to which he granted subsidies, inviting them to contribute to the Liberal party's election funds. There is no doubt that huge amounts are expected.

I think that we should pay more attention to such things, in order not to alter the results of the elections.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also says—this seems to be another important part of this legislation—that some tax exemptions will be available. We are all for that but, again, this will benefit mostly those who can offer considerable sums of money to the political parties. On our side—everybody knows it—we are a basically popular party that exists only through the willpower of the people at large. All those things are foreign to us. Those who are being elected exclusively on matters of principle and conviction are always somewhat surprised at the potential of well-lined electoral coffers.

Anyway, we heartily hope that this legislation will be so amended that the ideal situation might be pursued, that is to allow to people full freedom of speech something which must be safeguarded even more when elections come since at that moment the voter makes the most important decision. We therefore have before us a legislation directly related to the voter's freedom of speech.

We should therefore consider all possible ways to ensure more freedom of speech by means of such a bill, provided the government is prepared to accept our suggestions and our amendments in due course.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker, but I must put in a word or two about one or two of the exceptions to the exceptions for which provision is made in this bill. I speak not only for myself, but for my colleague the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange), though I am sure there are one or two other constituencies, such as for example, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and Coast Chilcotin where there is an absence of conventional means of transportation. I speak specifically of the clause in the bill which deals with the reimbursement of travel expenses. I hope the government will seriously consider amending the bill in committee so as to deal with a defect which, in my view, is very glaring.

Hon. members who refer to this clause on page 18 of the bill will find that it limits the reimbursement of travelling expenses to a maximum of $3,000. Now, where there are no scheduled airline services, where there are no roads and where it is not possible to reach certain portions of constituencies, such as the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, without chartering air services, hon. members will realize at once that this amount of money disappears very rapidly when applied to transportation. For example, $3,000 would pay the cost of two return trips from White Horse to the northernmost portion of my constituency at Old Crow.

As to my colleague from the Northwest Territories, there is no way he can travel from Yellowknife to the easternmost portion of his constituency without coming down to Edmonton and taking a commercial carrier into the eastern Arctic. From that point he has to charter air services. It is impossible to undertake this kind of travel for an expenditure of $3,000. The two factors to be taken into account are the absence of conventional means of transportation and a lack of easily accessible communications media in those two large northern constituencies.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Northwest Territories makes up a constituency which is 1,300,000 square miles in area. It is not possible to get around a constituency of that size on $3,000. I did not look at the last return of election expenses put in by my colleague from the Northwest Territories, but if he did not he should have spent some $10,000 on transportation. In the Yukon, I can state quite frankly that my average over the seven elections that I have gone through in the last 14 years has been $5,000. There is no way you can cut that figure any finer.

I would draw to the attention of the government that not only are these two northern areas—the Northwest Territories more so than my own riding—lacking in road networks, railroads and commercial air services, which places a financial burden on the shoulders of any campaigner, but in addition they suffer from a lack of conventional radio networks and conventional television networks as established here in the south. The burden placed on campaign organizations to finance other means of communication is very great. We do not reach the majority of our voters by radio and television but by means of printed material which is published in the form of flyers, booklets or letters, and postage is another factor that has to be taken into account.

In view of these differences, I suggest that the government seriously consider amending the bill before us and making exceptions of these not more than half dozen ridings in Canada that are handicapped as I have described. I am sure that the matter will be raised in committee, and in discussing it with the House leader a few moments ago he was not averse—in fact, he was quite amenable—to considering the exceptions that I drew to his attention. But without such amendments, and without limiting the expenses that can be laid out in an election campaign, the provisions set forth in the bill almost mean that candidates may as well stay at home.

Another of the limitations set forth in the bill is the $1 for each of the first 15,000 electors on the list of eligible voters. There are in excess of 15,000 eligible electors in the Northwest Territories but substantially less than that in the Yukon. So not only is a burden imposed on campaigners in northern ridings in regard to transportation costs, but because of the smaller population we also are severely limited under the $1 per voter formula.

The election campaign expenses in the Yukon that have been filed following the last three to four elections have varied between $20,000 and $25,000, and I am sure a similar amount would have been spent in the Northwest Territories—indeed, it should have been substantially more. I can see no reason for not limiting these expenses to a sum in the order of $15,000, and in the Yukon $5,000 should be set apart for transportation and the other $10,000 split between printing costs and other expenses. In the Northwest Territories, a ball park figure would be of the order of $25,000 to $30,000. What it would be for Coast-Chilcotin or Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, I am not prepared to guess; I am more familiar with the two northern ridings.

Therefore, I suggest there must be a reassessment made regarding the section of the bill that (a) limits expenses on the basis of number of voters in a riding, and (b) limits reimbursement of travel expenses in light of the lack of conventional communication facilities in the north compared with those in the south. With those remarks I hope that the government will reassess their position in the matter, reconsider the provisions of the bill affecting the two northern ridings and one or two others in this country, and introduce the appropriate amendments at the appropriate time.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Barbeau committee in its report on the history of Canadian election expenses legislation had this to say at page 13:

> The legislative response to the problem of money in elections throughout Canada exhibits a consistent but melancholy pattern.

I must say that the latest chapter in this history, Bill C-211, has not escaped that pattern. It is still a melancholy pattern full of gaping holes, and the largest and most glaring is the failure to deal with what is the nub of the whole question of election expenses, that is a firm limitation of expenses by parties as distinct from candidates. Any legislation that purports to control election expenditures by candidates but neglects to control election spending by parties is, at best, a halfway house and, at worst, a sham and an evasion.

What should be the aim of legislation in this field? In my view, genuine democracy involves equal rights and opportunities for all citizens without regard to the size of their bank accounts. A system which provides for the financing of election campaigns through large and secret campaign funds from corporate interests and other wealthy interests is a denial of genuine democracy. It involves the purchase, indirect though it may be, of influence for the chosen few. Any system that depends on financing from a corporate elite which already have enough power breeds public apathy and disillusion. It means that while we have what is partially a democratic system, it is in essence a system of plutocracy. This is what I find today and the legislation before the House does nothing to alter it.

I agree that some democracy is better than no democracy, but what we need is a more perfect democracy, and this can only be obtained if our representative system is fair and just to all. If parliamentary democracy, for example, can be regarded as a race for the honour of representing the people, then the present system handicaps the poor and bonuses the rich. When the race starts, some candidates are miles in front of others. The parties and individuals that possess the necessary money to advance their cause before the voters have a tremendous advantage over those who do not. In North America, this system has reached the point where to be a candidate for high office in the United States you have to be a millionaire. Indeed, perhaps I am behind the times and you have to be a multimillionaire in order to succeed.

In my view the Barbeau committee report is an excellent report, one of the best I have read on this subject. I want to read to the House some of the recommendations in that report which I think ought to be incorporated in legislation in this field. These recommendations are found at page 37 of the report and read as follows:

> Political parties should be legally recognized and, through the doctrine of agency, made legally responsible for their actions in raising and spending funds.

I take it that "legally responsible" means they must be controlled and checked in that function. The second recommendation reads:

> A degree of financial equality should be established among candidates and among political parties, by the extension of certain services and subsidies to all who qualify.

That is done in the present legislation, but in my view is done inadequately and in the wrong way. The third recommendation is as follows:

An effort should be made to increase public participation in politics, by broadening the base of political contribution through tax concessions to donors.

That is covered in this legislation and is welcomed; I think it is a very sound provision. Recommendation No. 4 reads:

Costs of election campaigns should be reduced, by shortening the campaign period, by placing limitations on expenditures on mass media by candidates and parties—

I point out that the recommendation includes the words "and parties", but the legislation ignores the importance of parties in this whole field and is totally inadequate to solve this problem. Recommendation No. 5 reads:

Public confidence in political financing should be strengthened, by requiring candidates and parties to disclose their incomes and expenditures.

I do not think that is adequately done in this legislation. The report then outlines that enforcement machinery through a registry and the supervision of a registrar should be established. I am not satisfied that the present legislation includes adequate provision for enforcement.

When I was first elected to parliament this subject of electoral reform was one of the subjects I felt most strongly about and I hoped during my career in the House to be able to contribute to it. Some years ago I introduced a private member's bill directed to this very subject. When the Barbeau committee was appointed in 1964, making its final report in 1966, I thought we were making excellent progress in this field.

In 1968, when a prime minister was elected who had both privately and publicly expressed his convictions about the necessity of genuine changes in this field, I must say I was encouraged. I do not agree with the report of the special committee in all its details but I think it was an achievement in the history of legislation in this field when the special committee appointed to deal with this matter reported unanimously. Some of its conclusions were the result of compromise but, nevertheless, it was an advance in the field.

Now we have Bill C-211. I am afraid it may be too late. If I had not heard something about an announcement made today, I would have said it was definitely too late. When I prepared my notes I had assumed the impossibility of this legislation being adopted before the next election. I was going to characterize this legislation as window-dressing for that reason. Now we have a breathing space and I urge upon the government, through the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who is in the House at the moment, that there is a challenge to them to ensure that this legislation, amended in accordance with the will of this House to make it more effective than it is at the present time, should be passed before the next election. If it is not, it will be a test of the sincerity of the government and its desire to reform this vitally important field.

I spoke about the inadequacy of this legislation and said its most glaring inadequacy was its failure to place any limitation upon the expenses of political parties. Everybody knows that major expenditures in an election are made by political parties and not individual candidates. Everybody knows that the major scandals in the history of Canada in this field are related to political parties and not individual candidates. I suggest this is a gap which must be filled if parliament is to be able to say it has grasped the subject and dealt with it adequately.

At page 16 of the Barbeau committee report I find a judgment on the law passed in 1874, nearly 100 years ago. It reads:

By failing to come to grips with the reality that politics is more importantly a party process than an individual process, the framers of the 1874 law failed to put together a workable framework for legislation control.

That is precisely the situation we are facing here. Almost 100 years after this ineffective legislation of 1874, we in 1972 are being asked to put into effect legislation which fails to come to grips with the reality that politics is more importantly a party process than an individual process. The report goes on to state, as I have read, that the framers of the 1874 law failed to put together a workable framework for legislative control, and I say that is precisely true of Bill C-211 which fails to put together a workable framework for legislative control of expenditures by parties. In that respect there is a major defect in this legislation.

This legislation will not satisfy the people of Canada or the demands of a popular democracy unless it is remedied before being passed by the House. I do not want to go into all the details, because obviously second reading is not the right place to do so, but there is no provision in this legislation for disclosure of the sources of campaign funds except in regard to candidates, and even in that respect it is inadequate.

I have somewhere here a copy of the remarks made by the President of the Privy Council in introducing second reading of this legislation, but I seem to have mislaid it for the moment. He said no case had been made for special legislation to the effect that foreign sources of support and campaign funds for elections in Canada should be disclosed. I suggest to him it is self-evident that in this country it is highly important, if we are to be influenced by foreign sources in our electoral processes, that this should be known to the Canadian public.

I say to him that the very least this legislation should do—and I do not see that it does it at all—is include provision for the disclosure of foreign sources of contributions to candidates or parties in an election. I suggest those who are worried about our independence should concentrate their minds on this particular subject. It has always been my view that the greatest problem in respect of independence is in obtaining independence of mind and independence of our political system. I suggest that related to that is independence of our political machinery, and we cannot have complete independence if we are to have undisclosed contributions of political funds from foreign sources.

I must say I was amazed at the President of the Privy Council saying there was no reason shown for such a provision. I say this legislation is defective unless it provides adequately for full disclosure of all campaign funds, especially those which come from foreign sources. I do not think any political party in this country wants to be beholden to foreign sources for campaign contributions, and the best remedy against this would be provision for full and adequate disclosure.

I wish to deal with just one or two other matters. As far as I understand the legislation, the present provisions with regard to disclosure by candidates and the reporting of sources of their campaign contributions remain unchanged. I suggest that is inadequate. We all know that under the present system campaign funds are lumped together and put in the name of a nominal contributor such as the riding association of a political party or a trust company, and that various other machinery is used to conceal the real source of contributions to candidates. If we mean business in this field we will ensure that the legislation provides that the real source of campaign contributions cannot be hidden in this way.

There is one other point. I understand this legislation provides for the reimbursement of candidates up to 25 per cent of their actual expenses plus $250 which, as I understand the remarks of the President of the Privy Council, is designed to deal with the expenses of an auditor who is required under the legislation. I find this provision very unsatisfactory. Surely a fairer provision would not provide 25 per cent for an individual candidate but, rather, a basic allowance for all qualified candidates. In effect, this is a bonus for candidates who have the means and the desire to spend a large sum of money.

I recognize, of course, that there are limitations in various cases up to about $30,000 for each candidate and therefore there is a limit on the amount of reimbursement he can receive. But I do not understand why a candidate should be reimbursed at a lower level for the needs of his campaign because he spends $5,000 rather than $25,000. If the purpose, as I understand it, is to equalize the situation, surely there should be a basic allowance for all qualified candidates rather than reimbursement based on what they spend on their election campaigns.

I was pleased that the minister said in his opening remarks that he is ready to accept suggestions and has an open mind. I remind him that this legislation is an historic step toward a more real and genuine democracy and it is of the utmost importance that it should contain all provisions necessary to that end. I want him to fill in the gaps. I hope he will proceed with an open mind and suggest that he should accept some of the recommendations of the Barbeau committee and of the special committee which are not contained in this legislation.

I hope, above all, that he will accept the proposition that if candidates are to be controlled in respect of expenditures, parties must also be controlled—because it is the parties which spend millions of dollars and which perhaps are unconsciously influenced by the source of campaign funds. Unless we do that, this measure will be a half-measure at best, and a sham.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad an opportunity is now being given to me and other hon. members to participate in this debate, an opportunity which at one time we thought might have been denied us. Now, however, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has—I believe most improperly—told the press, rather than this House, that there will be freedom from an election during this summer. We will now, therefore, possibly have a chance to consider this bill in detail.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I shall not comment, as I am not entitled to, on the statement of the Prime Minister, other than to say it appears he has yielded to the fears and tears of members of his party from Ontario and other parts of Canada and has postponed the election. However, I hope hon. members who appear to have something to say will now enter the debate and give us the benefit of their views on this subject.

First of all, I support what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said concerning the special circumstances of the constituencies in the far north and those parts of Canada which because of their area and access to means of communication present very special problems to candidates and voters in an election campaign. I recall the first election in which I was a candidate, I believe in 1935. I was too young at that time to know better; I was seduced into politics! In any event, I recall the various means of transportation I had to use, such as boats, aircraft and snowmobiles in an election campaign which lasted for months.

There is no question that the situation has improved since then. The means of communication in the north has improved. The scattering of isolated communities in the north and in the near north is such that I believe the eloquent pleas of the hon. member for Yukon should commend itself to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and other people on the government side. I shall not suggest a formula. I believe the situation should be looked at and, hopefully, the committee is the place where this might be done. I hope that evidence will be called before the committee.

The President of the Privy Council may react by saying that the Barbeau committee had witnesses before it, and also the committee of this House. But now we have concrete, specific proposals by the government and I do not think it would do any harm to receive at least a limited amount of evidence or briefs showing a reaction to what is in the bill and, possibly, alternatives or additions to it. Certainly, such evidence or briefs should be directed to the issue raised by my hon. friend from the Yukon. There is no question that elections are costly in such a riding. There is the cost involved and the wear and tear on the people. These are such as to warrant special consideration.

I have campaigned in the Northwest Territories on behalf of candidates there. My own riding adjoins that area and I know what is involved. I do not know whether the situation can be resolved by taking the population plus the area involved, with special consideration being given to the means of communication. This principle has already been accepted by the House. The amendments to the Senate and House of Commons Act, made some time ago, place members from different constituencies in different categories in respect of expenses. That principle having been accepted, I would especially urge the standing committee which studies this bill not to forget the very special conditions which exist. Having been involved in election campaigns in such an area in the early days, I know the extent to which the situation has improved in the southern parts of my constituency—but the problem still exists in the north. I am sure my hon. friend from Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuck), whom I believe will enter this debate, will agree with what I say.

Finally, I want to bring once more to the attention of the House the very eloquent and reasoned comments of my hon. friend from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) whose amendment has been ruled out of order but who, nevertheless, made a certain proposition which he would have used as a basis of support for his amendment had it been accepted. I shall not go into the detail of the bill itself; the hon. member for Hillsborough did that to some extent.

There is no doubt that all of us as practical, seasoned people involved in public life will recognize that no matter what this statute may say, ways and means will be found, not of evading it but of avoiding it. There are a variety of ways, such as committees formed of friends of a party, or friends of a candidate who will be free to seek out means by which what is proposed in the bill, the real pith and substance of the bill, can be set aside to a large extent.

No doubt if loopholes are discovered, they may be plugged later. But I suggest that what I hope hon. members had in mind, what I think the Barbeau committee had in mind and what I am sure the House of Commons committee had in mind, was some real and honest way of limiting and controlling election expenses. While this is a modest beginning in that direction, I am convinced it will be found that when legislation is put into effect at the next election, so many loopholes will be found in it that in many respects it will be, not a farce but almost a nullity.

For this reason, while this consideration takes place—and this is a continuing process which may take ten years to be astute, vigilant and alert enough to find out what those loopholes are and to plug them—I suggest to the House and to the country that the proposal made by the hon. member for Hillsborough to shorten the period of election campaigning is a sensible and logical course to undertake, not as an alternative but as an additional means of limiting and controlling campaign expenses.

There is another reason as well. Today, the people of Canada are well served by the various communications media. They are well served by members of parliament on all sides of the House who through the use of these media and frequent trips to their constituencies are able to keep the public of Canada well informed through the use of the adversary system. I would like to think that most people in Canada today are pretty well informed on many of the political and public issues dealing with our social and economic life. This being the case, I view with abhorrence, as I am sure a great many hon. members do, the length of campaigns of the sort which we have had in the past, lasting 2½ months or three months.

I say with all the strength at my command that this is not necessary and that three weeks or a month at the most is completely adequate to pinpoint the specific issues on which the parties divide and where there are conflicts—and then let the jury decide! When members of the legal profession address the jury in a murder trial or in civil action, we know that one can get to a point where one can lull the jury to sleep. You do not repeat your arguments ad nauseam; you make your case and then you shut up. This is the situation which should prevail with regard to election campaigns, and also with regard to answers by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin).

Mr. McBride: How about debates in the House of Commons?

Mr. Baldwin: If occasionally we could get intelligent contributions from the other side of the House, we could have a yardstick by which to judge.

I say with all sincerity that surely by now we have made a case for a shorter election campaign period. There may be problems in legislating to that effect, but I do not think so. If we were able to say that only during the period of 30 days prior to the election date expenses could be incurred, expenses within the meaning of this act, and only within that time expenses could be incurred which would be acceptable, this could be placed within the framework of the legislation.

The people of this country become nauseated by the continued expression of political diatribe during the course of a campaign of 2½ months. The leaders of our political parties have imposed upon them very severe strains. I do not think that national leaders should have to be exposed to election campaigns of this length. Our friends to the south find it even worse. In the Congress of the United States they have been seeking ways and means of shortening election campaigns. Their constitution, however, makes it very difficult for them to do so.

We have an opportunity now and a vehicle by which to achieve this, and I hope the committee will look at this proposal very seriously. I hope they will consider the extent to which television and radio are utilized during the course of an election campaign. I do not think it is necessary for people who would like to see "Sesame Street" or "Blood of Dracula" to view instead the Prime Minister.

I do not mean to make a joke of it, but I suggest that there is one way—and I do not eliminate the other methods—by which we can certainly limit and control campaign expenditures, and that is by ensuring that the length of the campaign is drastically shortened to no more than 30 days. A stipulation should be attached to the effect that expenses of any kind incurred before the 30 days will not be counted and cannot be considered as being official campaign expenses.

I make this plea and ask the committee to consider it. Perhaps they are not yet ready. We do not know when this legislation will be first used. We do not know when the Prime Minister will call an election and we do not know whether the legislation will be in effect when the election is called. There is some doubt as to when it will be effective and some suggestion that, apart from the question of six months, it can only come into effect at some period after January 1, 1973. I have not directed my attention to that but possibly the committee will. If it is feasible for the legislation to become applicable during the course of the next election, I would ask the committee to take a very serious look at this proposal as it has been advanced by the hon. member for Hillsborough and supported by myself.

Election Expenses Bill

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, welcome as this legislation is, welcome as is any legislation in the field of election expenses, I think we have to enter a large caveat with respect to the specific provisions of the bill and its over-all impact on this matter. My colleagues, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), have dealt with a large number of points involved in this bill, the points they accept and the ones they criticize. I do not intend to go over the same ground that they covered.

I would like to discuss this bill taking into account two points. First of all, I think we need to relate the legislation to our society, to the relationship between government and people and to the role that government plays in society. I think there are serious questions we must ask, because whether we like it or not there are a great many people in Canada who are becoming disillusioned with the way in which the system operates. They are becoming disillusioned with democratic processes because all too often they see the sham and the hypocrisy that is involved in certain events, all too often they see what is done for the sake of gaining or retaining power. There is a large-scale reaction among many Canadian people to these phenomena. People are more aware than ever that some of the forces which control the destiny of our country also control the well-being of Canadians.

People are more aware of this now than they were in the past. They do not like what they see. They do not like the performance of the past several weeks culminating in the announcement today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there will not be an election this summer. At least that doubt is removed and we know there will not be an election for some time, although the Prime Minister has been playing cat and mouse with the country for several months. People do not like to see our electoral system being played with; they feel it is not in the best interests of the functioning of democracy and see it as part of the process of breakdown of our democratic institutions. We should be looking for some change in the system of calling elections so that the power will not rest in the hands of one man as it does now under our constitution.

That is one part of the picture, Mr. Speaker. Another part concerns this legislation. I think most people will welcome legislation governing election expenses, but they will be disillusioned because of some of its loopholes. There is no requirement to disclose campaign contributions, nor is there any limitation on expenditures by national political parties, and when people realize this I believe they will reject what otherwise could be a very good piece of legislation. The government should give serious consideration to this question because people are becoming concerned about many aspects of the functioning of our democracy. They see the role that money plays in persuading people and they are aware of the power of advertising in today's society.

I believe more effective provisions are required in respect of the disclosure of campaign contributions. In this party we are prepared to take our chances along with everybody else and have our contributions made known. People like to point out that the trade unions make contributions to our party, but we are prepared to make that information available provided the same information is made available by the other parties. We want it made known what contributions are made by corporations and the role they are playing behind the scenes in the electoral process.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

An hon. Member: What about trade organizers?

Mr. Burton: We are quite prepared to make everything known, but we ask that the other parties do the same. Hon. members opposite should have the courage to do this rather than trying to take refuge behind some form of camouflage. It is a great chance for government members to carry on in the same way if all sources of contributions to the Liberal party are not made known to the people of Canada.

I know of one case where there will be a great deal of concern, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Regional Development, of which I am a member, has been examining some of the incentive grants made to private industry. There have been about 1,400, some large and some small. As a result of questions asked in committee it has been learned that three large grants have been made to McCain Foods Limited, a food processing firm in the province of New Brunswick. It is well known that in 1968 one of the senior personnel in this firm acted as Liberal campaign manager in New Brunswick. I understand, too, that McCain's financed the leadership campaign of the provincial Liberal leader in New Brunswick and they are presently playing an active role in political affairs in that province. Of course, that is their right as it is that of any other citizen, but they have a lot more power than other people. In committee we learned that $3.2 million in grants had never been reported to parliament as is required by section 15 of the Regional Development Incentives Act.

I hasten to add that as a result of some members, including myself, digging out this information, the minister has now given an undertaking to supply parliament with a supplementary report setting out information on some 90 firms where changes in grants have been made and where the net change has totalled an increase of $7 million. I hope that information will be available within the next few days so that this matter can be examined properly before the end of the month. I found out that the first application for a grant, for a new potato processing facility, was made on December 19, 1969; the date of the offer was November 2, 1970, and the date of acceptance was December 9, 1970. The total amount offered in this grant was $6.1 million and some of that money has already been paid out. Two more offers of grants were made, one for $633,000 and another for $443,000. Grants of some $7.1 million have been offered to this firm which is a leading figure in the New Brunswick Liberal party.

Another interesting fact should be noted. An important official in the department, Mr. George McClure director of operations for the Atlantic region joined it in February, 1969, and left on August 1, 1970, to join the firm of McCain Foods Limited in a high executive position. At the time he left, three applications for grants had been received from McCain Foods Limited, one on December 19, 1969, one on May 22, 1970, and one on June 8, 1970. One of these had been offered on July 22, 1970, prior to his leaving, the other two being offered on August 28, 1970, and November 2, 1970.

Mr. Speaker, in committee I stated that I felt there was a potential conflict of interest here and asked the minister or his department to look into the matter. They reported on the investigation and said it had been found that this man was involved in the operations part of the department's programs in the Atlantic region and that any decisions or evaluations of offers and grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act were made by the incentives division of the department.

I accept the word of the minister and his deputy in this regard, Mr. Speaker, but surely the various divisions of the department have contact with each other. It is ridiculous to suggest otherwise. It was made quite clear that this man had been involved in discussions with McCain Foods Limited about their expansion plans, yet he went directly from the federal government service into the employ of McCain Foods Limited.

Mr. Cullen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member is going to speak on the subject matter of the bill, or is he to be allowed to continue the smear comments that he has been making for the last five minutes?

Mr. Skoberg: You can't take it.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, the matters to which I have related in the last several minutes are matters of fact which have been stated in the committee by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and his deputy.

• (1540)

Mr. Skoberg: Disclosure, my boy; that is what's wanted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Burton: Here is a case in point, and I use it as an example to show that possible conflicts of interest may be involved. Of course, it may not be possible to answer some pertinent questions at this time, although it is well known that the firm in question has dipped into the public treasury to the tune of $7.1 million. It is a well known beneficiary of and an active participant in the affairs of the Liberal party of New Brunswick. That is a matter of record and hon. members opposite cannot quarrel with it; it is a fact. Furthermore, these facts are known to the public. Mr. Speaker, the people know that some of these things are going on, even if the specific facts are not available. It is this process by which one political party is able to maintain itself in power that is leading to growing disillusionment in the democratic process.

Until we deal with the problem of identifying contributions, no matter by whom they are made, to political campaigns and political parties I suggest that we will not obtain effective legislation in the field of election expenses. Thus, I urge the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who introduced this bill to look seriously at that particular part of it. I suggest that unless this area is considered, the people of this country will know that this bill is a sham.

I know the minister made the point that the bill follows the recommendations of the committee. I concede that point. I suggest, nevertheless, that some members of the committee disagreed with that recommendation. They wanted to make progress in that field. They came forward with their report because they wanted progress to be made. I suggest that we could go beyond that point. The time to do that is now, while this legislation is before the House. This is the occasion for dealing adequately with the matter. When the bill goes to committee let us give it further consideration and make sure that adequate provisions are included concerning the disclosure of campaign contributions.

Mr. Woolliams: That would be an interesting exercise.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, legislation concerning election expenses and various regulations governing general elections in this country have come forward from time to time during the past 105 years. The legislation and regulations have been amended from time to time since then, but never to the extent that this bill proposes. Some of the legislation that was passed was designed to curb or control corrupt practices. The idea behind this bill is somewhat different. On the surface, it sounds like a democratic measure. Apparently it is aimed at giving people with moderate incomes the same chance to enter politics as is available to those with much higher incomes. It is difficult to argue against that principle if taken by itself. All the same, one must consider many factors about this bill before coming to some kind of logical and reasonable conclusion about it.

In 1873, I think it was, the first example of corrupt practices came to public view. That stimulated the introduction of legislation dealing with this matter which was introduced in the following year, 1874. Then legislation in this field was passed in 1908 but there was nothing further until 1920 when amendments were proposed by the prime minister of the day, Arthur Meighen. Those amendments were to the Dominion Elections Act and were designed to clarify a number of points in the existing legislation, such as exceptions to the rule that all payments must be made through the official agent. There was also a clarification of personal expenses and the amendment changed the penalty for default in publishing a statement of expenses.

The 1920 legislation expanded the scope of publicity by requiring that candidates disclose contributors and amounts contributed. Although this was an improvement, much of the usefulness of the new provision was made ineffective by two continuing failures, those being the nonrecognition of political parties and the lack of enforcement provisions for dealing with infringements of the act. Since 1920 no new laws of any significance have been brought down, although many pleas for reform from the media and the public have been expressed from time to time since then.

There is only one documented case of a member being unseated under the old regulations for corrupt practices; otherwise the law was not enforced. Some of the reasons for that lack of enforcement are, first, that the established parties have been unwilling under the old legislation to initiate action against each other; second, that the trouble and cost of contesting an election suit about election expenses is prohibitive to the private citizen; third, that no organized, non-political agency has felt itself responsible or has been made responsible for prosecuting candidates violating this law on election expenses and, finally, that no governmental agency has felt itself responsible or has been made responsible for prosecuting candidates violating the law on election expenses.

The two main weaknesses of the legislation first enacted in 1874 and subsequently amended were, first, the failure to recognize political parties as essential units of political finance and, second, the failure to provide effective machinery for enforcing the law.

A long time after that the Coldwell commission studied this whole problem and made seven main recommendations which were not, so far as I know, ever included in the legislation. Those seven recommendations were as follows: first, that political parties should be legally recognized and, through the doctrine of agency, made legally responsible for their actions in raising and spending funds. Second, a degree of financial equality should be established among candidates and among political parties by the extension of certain services and subsidies to all who qualify. Third, an effort should be made to increase public participation in politics by broadening the base of political contributions through tax concessions to donors.

Fourth, costs of election campaigns should be reduced by shortening the campaign period, by placing limitations on expenditures on mass media by candidates and parties and by prohibiting the payment of poll workers on election day. Fifth, public confidence in political financing should be strengthened by requiring candidates and parties to disclose their incomes and expenditures. Sixth, a registry under the supervision of a registrar should be established to audit and publish the financial reports required and to enforce the provisions of the proposed election and political finances act; and, seventh, miscellaneous amendments to broadcasting legislation should be enacted to improve the political communications field.

I think it is fair to say that the art of democratic politics and the evolution of the communications media have always been closely linked. The increased use of mass media as a form of political propagandizing has become an accepted and necessary element of present political campaigns. The forbiddingly high cost of media advertising has become one of the main problems facing prospective and nominated candidates for public office. Hence, the principle behind this bill is, as I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, that it will bring greater equality between individuals in terms of their eligibility for public office.

First—and I think this is the main reservation that should be considered—is the fact that in general terms the amount of campaign funds that a political party can collect can be considered as a fairly accurate reflection of the amount of popular support that party has in the country. Because of that it is quite easy to see why my friends to the left are constantly suggesting that election expenses be limited. It appears they have difficulty collecting any significant amount of funds except by compulsory means in keeping with their compulsory philosophy. Not having very much public popular support and not being able to collect very large amounts of funds for campaign purposes, they are taking the alternative which is to limit the amount the other parties can spend. This has the same effect as increasing their own funds.

I was slightly baffled by the pious self-righteousness of the hon. member who spoke before me when he talked about conflict of interest between parties and their potential donors. I think it is quite well known that the party to my left depends largely on compulsory contributions from unions, some of them foreign-dominated and some of them not. It seems to me that it is no different from the point of view of conflict of interest when a union boss tells a member of that party what to say, when to say it and how high to jump, then it would be for someone from a corporation to tell other parties or try to get them to say what they want said. If you examine the structure, that kind of self-righteousness is not justifiable.

Mr. Burton: We will lay the cards on the table.

Mr. Yewchuk: Naturally that party will lay its cards on the table because the contributions are compulsory; they are deducted from the cheques in the same manner as income tax. There is absolutely no way they can get away with hiding this as a voluntary contribution. I recognize that workers have the right of opting out of this, but they do not usually do so if they want to survive. When we consider the remarks of the leader of that party and the decision made a day or two ago by the Canadian Labour Congress that they are going to throw their open support behind that party, we see that that party does not really reflect representation of the general population of this country when that might be considered as a conflict of interest.

We in our party have been subject to some criticism by the party to our left. They have criticized us for being puppets of big business—paid for, owned and operated by big business. This is a myth which I am sure any intelligent individual can recognize immediately. Evidence of this is the kind of constituencies we represent in this House. Just look at where the members of my party come from. Almost to the last man we represent fairly poor, economically speaking, constituencies such as rural ridings and ridings where—

Mr. McBride: You even have poor members.

Mr. Yewchuk: That is right. I will not reflect upon who they are, but I am looking at one right now. The point I am trying to make is that this party is by no means controlled, owned or operated by big business. As a matter of fact, it is controlled and operated by the average man in this country; the average wage earner, fisherman, farmer as well as the average businessman and occasional physician and lawyer. Unfortunately, we do not have any wealthy lawyers in our party, but I am sure that if we work at it we will be able to attract some of them.

We have a good deal of support from the rank and file of unions. I am sure this will be seen if we examine the election results in certain areas where rank and file union people reside. They do not necessarily vote the way their union bosses tell them. While we are accused of being responsible only to big business, examination of the situation reveals that this is simply not the case.

Second, I want to comment on the idea of disclosure of sources of financial assistance for campaign purposes. I can only speak for myself; other members can speak for themselves. I do not know where the money comes from which finances my campaign. I have absolutely no knowledge of any individual, corporation or other interested group that may make donations. All I know is that we receive an allocation of funds from our central finance committee.

Mr. Skoberg: Now we know.

Mr. Yewchuk: Under these circumstances, I think a member of parliament is much more able to function as a free agent and to speak about what he thinks is right for the country without being subject to any kind of pressure from whoever the donor may have been. The party to my left is proposing that we know who gave us our campaign funds because that is the position in which they find themselves; they realize how uncomfortable it is to be subject to pressure from a particular pressure group.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: I am in a situation where I would rather not know. I do not want to be subject to pressure by a particular pressure group, telling me what I should be saying in parliament and for whom I should be speaking. I want to be able to speak honestly, sincerely and impartially in the way I think is best for my constituents and the country. Therefore, I am very vigorously opposed to the idea of naming individuals, corporations or any other groups which have made donations, whether big or small, to the political party which I represent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but since we have reached the hour of four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the government House leader will confirm that the business for next week is as he has already announced or will there be any variation?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the plan is to continue the budget on Tuesday and Wednesday. On Thursday I would like to return to the legislative list that I gave on Thursday last, beginning with the election expenses bill that was before the House a moment ago. If there are any changes, I will communicate them to hon. members.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY BILL

AMENDMENT TO REQUIRE BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY TO SUBMIT ANNUAL ACCOUNTS TO AUDITOR GENERAL AND REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent) moved that Bill C-16, to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act (public and financial accountability), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in support of Bill C-16 it might be well to review some of the events leading up to the situation as it exists at the present time. On April 30, 1964 it was my pleasure to second the motion proposed by Mr. Walter Foy, the then hon. member for Lambton West, as the constituency was then called, respecting Bill S-4 having to do with the international bridge over the St. Clair River known as the Blue Water Bridge. This legislation was brought about because it was necessary that somebody be charged with the maintenance and upkeep of the bridge.

It will perhaps be helpful to explain that the bridge, first built in 1938 with government help, paid off its indebtedness in a period of 23 years. During this time it was operated by the Michigan state bridge commission, but when the indebtedness had been discharged the United States bureau of public roads said that federal grants for Michigan highway construction would be withheld in accordance with an original agreement which stated there could be no tolls on the bridge or on highways in Michigan. Moreover, the village of Point Edward, Ontario, had not been receiving tax revenue from some of its most valuable industrial land upon which the Canadian approach to this bridge is located. Further, virtually no maintenance work was carried out during the period. What little work was carried out was done gratis by the Ontario department of highways. Heat and light in the customs and immigration office was supplied by the federal government.

Having regard to these facts, I was very happy to be the co-sponsor of the bill. Local papers congratulated the then hon. member for Lambton West and myself on the degree of co-operation we displayed at that time as a result of which the measure passed through the House in record time—less than half an hour, in fact.

The commission established to operate the bridge, I naïvely thought, would consist of prominent citizens of the area. However, the members eventually appointed read like a "Who's Who" of the Liberal heirarchy in Sarnia. As a practical politician I could see what had happened and simply assumed this was the way the cookie crumbled. One of the first things the commission did was to reimpose tolls. These were higher than originally envisaged but were accepted as necessary to provide for maintenance. Successive increases have been put into effect over the years, and as co-sponsor of the bill setting up the authority I wondered when some meaningful financial statement would emerge from this semi-public body.

I myself believe the commission was operating quite responsibly, but in 1970 rumours started to fly concerning expense account living, trips abroad, and so on, on behalf of bridge commissioners. These were probably triggered by announcements of new tariffs. I felt some moral responsibility when the city of Sarnia, in a letter dated October 8, 1970, requested that certain financial data be supplied to them and asked why public notice had not been given of a hearing by the transport commission relative to the imposition of increased tolls. The answer to this request by the council is interesting, Mr. Speaker. I should like to quote the following excerpt from this letter dated October 14 and sent by Mr. John Blunt, the chairman, to Mr. Given, the city manager of Sarnia:

As you know, the Blue Water Bridge Authority was set up by act of Parliament as a private authority to manage and operate the bridge. As such, we are not in a true sense a public body nor are we agents of the Crown. We therefore are not required to publish our financial figures, although we do file statutory annual statements with the Auditor General.

In a later paragraph the letter reads:

I would be pleased to meet with you and your council at any convenient time to give you more background information, including financial statistics, but such discussions must be on an off the record basis.

Having regard to this attitude I placed a series of questions on the order paper in an effort to clear the air. This was on November 12, 1970. I also set down a notice of motion for the production of papers. Six months later I received what I might call non-answers to my questions. The following replies were received on May 26, 1971, and I append them to the question to which they relate.

QUESTION: On what date or dates did the governor in council, or any authority delegated by the governor in council order the Blue Water Bridge authorities to make its cost records and its cash receipts and disbursements records available, pursuant to section 19(1) of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act?

ANSWER: In accordance with the requirements and responsibilities of the Canadian government, certain financial information, mainly with respect to tolls, has been submitted to the government by the Blue Water Bridge Authority under the provision of the Railway Act. No additional request for financial information has been made to date under the enabling authority contained in the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, section 19(1)(a).

QUESTION: On what date or dates did the Blue Water Bridge Authority provide the governor in council or his designee with itemized, detailed and verified reports of the authority's receipts and disbursements under section 19(2)(a) of the act?

ANSWER: Not applicable.

QUESTION: Commencing with 1964, in what year or years were the accounts of the Blue Water Bridge Authority audited by persons designated by the governor in council or his designee under section 19(2)(b) of the act?

ANSWER: No persons have been so designated.

QUESTION: Has the Auditor General recently required from the appropriate department, information, reports and explanations concerning the operations of the Blue Water Bridge Authority?

ANSWER: No.

Compare these statements, which I received in answer to my questions, with the statement made by Mr. Blunt, chairman of the bridge authority, to the Sarnia city council. Take my question about the Auditor General and the reply: nobody has requested any information nor has any information been received. Compare this with the statement of Mr. Blunt in his letter to the city of Sarnia in which he said "We file statutory annual statements with the Auditor General."

I shall be charitable and say I believe that Mr. Blunt honestly does not know the difference. Not many individuals know all the technicalities surrounding the huge government we have here. So, as I say, I do not believe Mr. Blunt was being dishonest; I just do not think he knows the difference. The fact remains there is no real accounting by this body that members of the House can lay their hands on. Against this background, I commend this simple bill for passage. It provides that the affairs of this body be reported in the form prescribed for most public bodies, Crown corporations, and so on. The explanatory note to the bill reads in part:

The purpose of this bill is to require the Blue Water Bridge Authority to submit its annual accounts to the Auditor General of Canada and to make an annual report to the public through Parliament.

If there are any technicalities in this measure which the government feels should be corrected, I would welcome someone from the other side of the House proposing amendments. I invite suggestions. Following my abortive attempt to get meaningful information about the bridge commission, I received a letter from the authority dated June 15, 1971. The first paragraph reads:

During a regular business meeting of the authority commissioners held this week, several members expressed concern about reports in the press that you were not satisfied with answers you received to questions asked by you in the House regarding the operation of the Blue Water Bridge.

May I suggest that this paragraph is the understatement of the year. Of course I was not satisfied. Nor was the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), though I am not going to quote him out of context; I suspect that he may speak later today. When we both appeared on TV and radio he agreed that the answer that I had received—I think I quote him correctly—was, in effect, a non-answer. Let me continue to read the letter:

As co-sponsor of the bill that created the authority, you no doubt know that one of the provisions of that bill stipulates that we are to give out financial statements only to those designated by the governor in council and this we are prepared to do if, as and when we receive the necessary authority to do so.

This next paragraph is extremely interesting:

In your particular case, however, the members of the authority feel, rightly or wrongly, that you as co-sponsor of the bill have more than an ordinary right to know what is going on and what has gone on in the operation of the authority you helped create.

I do not accept that logic at all. I do not accept that due to my position I can have access to information from a public body that other Canadian citizens cannot have. There is no reason that I should have the information any more than any other citizen in the Sarnia area. But this paragraph gives a clue to the way out; it suggests, and quite properly so, that the authority is ready, willing and able to give out their financial audit when directed and where designated by the governor in council. The closing paragraph of this letter is also quite revealing and reads as follows:

Meanwhile, Mr. McCutcheon, rest assured that we have since our inception filed annual, audited, financial reports in Ottawa with the Department of Transport who we were instructed to report to.

How does one square that statement, which is written by W. H. Young, a civil servant and employee of the authority, that they file their report with the Department of Transport, when a few months earlier the chairman of the commission, the man charged with the responsibility, said that they report every year to the Auditor General? I am not attaching blame to the Blue Water Bridge Authority; I am attaching blame to the cabinet, to the governor in council which has not given the proper direction. Neither the chairman nor the paid manager knew where they were reporting.

This closing paragraph of the letter I like particularly; I do not know who they thought they were kidding:

You are of course at liberty to release this letter to the press if you care to do so. We look forward to seeing you.

One thing is clear, Mr. Speaker, from the answers given to questions and correspondence: at no time has the governor in council directed this authority to report any place in particular. I say that the government has abandoned its responsibility in this regard. To prove my point, I have before me a letter from the Automotive Transport Association of Ontario dated March 7, 1972, and addressed to me. It reads in part:

We do not know what your interest may be in the bridge, but we thought we would tell you that some of our people objected to the second toll increase in two years. The objection was made to the Canadian Transport Commission who reported they had no authority to entertain any protest.

So it looks to me as if there has been an abandonment by the government of responsibility to the authority in Sarnia. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that you could get any information from the Department of Transport? I doubt it. Could you get it from the Auditor General? I say that would be pretty questionable. Which department of government has the information? For the benefit of my colleagues in the House, the last I heard was that it was hidden some place in external affairs, and I doubt very much whether chairman Blunt knows that either. If you happen to be interested, Mr. Speaker, as a special dispensation you could accompany me to Sarnia where the authority has given me such a warm invitation to come and visit them. But unless the rest of my colleagues in the House are invited, I do not think they will get in.

I ask for the support of my colleagues in the House on this matter. In my opinion it is a reasonable request I make to treat this authority in the same way as Crown corporations and other government bodies are treated. However, if hon. members opposite wish to keep this matter sub rosa, if they want suspicion still to shroud the dealings of this authority, then I suggest they can practise on their oratorical skills and talk this bill out. If they do that, the responsibility for continuing this confusion will rest squarely on their shoulders. May I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that even so it really will not matter all that much. There may be a slight delay, but I promise them that after the next election the new government of which I will be a member will see to it that this bill is put through promptly.

Blue Water Bridge Authority Bill

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly encouraged to hear that Liberal fortunes have gone up so much that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) has seen fit to announce that he is going to join the Liberal party and form part of the government after the next election. I think that both of us wrote our speeches this morning when we thought an election was going to be announced at two o'clock this afternoon.

In all seriousness, I must confess that I was apprehensive that the bill of the hon. member might not be reached during this session and that we would not have an opportunity to debate it. Anyone who has made a study of the history of the Blue Water Bridge, as I have, will have to concede that Ross W. Gray, Q.C., who was a Liberal member of this parliament from 1927 till 1942, was the driving force behind the bridge being built in the first place. I had the honour of being articled to Ross Gray and later was associated with him in the practice of law. From this association, both as a colleague in the practice of law and as a close personal friend, I learned a great deal about the trials and tribulations faced by Mr. Gray when he was endeavouring to convince the powers that be at the time of the need for just such a structure. I well remember the scrapbook that Mr. Gray had showing the various stages of construction and I could not help being amazed at the far-sightedness of Mr. Gray and the governments of that day which undertook a project of this magnitude.

The agreement entered into at that particular time stated, among other things, that when the bonds and debts of the bridge were retired, tolls would be discontinued. That agreement also made provision for payment to the village of Point Edward of $5,000 in lieu of taxes each year. On June 1, 1961, the obligations of the commission were satisfied.

Going back in history to that particular period—I was practising law at that time and was solicitor for the council and have reason to know something about the facts—the then member for Lambton West, Mr. Walter Foy, and the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon), who was then the member and still is, jointly saw the need for establishing the Blue Water Bridge Authority and for making provision for payment of taxes to the village of Point Edward which would be commensurate with the holdings of the Blue Water Bridge Authority.

The minister of transport of that day, in moving second reading of Bill S-4 asked the former member for Lambton West, who was intimately acquainted with the situation, to explain the bill and the reasons for it. I think it is to the credit of these two men, one from each party, that they worked together to the advantage of the area. I think it was a tribute to the former member for Lambton West, Mr. Foy, that he was selected by the then minister of transport to introduce the bill because of his familiarity with the subject.

The hon. member for Lambton West knew that the village of Point Edward was being shortchanged because it was no longer receiving revenue either from government grants or from assessment and, in addition to this both he and the member for Lambton-Kent recognized that it was necessary to establish a Blue Water Bridge Authority to maintain and operate the Canadian side of the bridge. The then member for Lambton West said, on April 30, 1964, as reported at page 2762 of Hansard:

> In the original agreement the village of Point Edward was to receive $5,000 in lieu of taxes each year. The original agreement did not provide for any Canadians to be appointed to the bridge commission although it was, in fact, an international bridge.

The agreement further stated that when the bonds and debts were retired, the tolls would be discontinued. This took place in 1961. The hon. member for Lambton West at that time recited the history much along the same lines as the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has done today. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent supports the bill and the argument put forth by the former member, as reported at page 2763 of Hansard for that day.

Here we had two members recognizing the need to work together, so there was certainly unanimity at that particular time and, as the hon. member for Lambton-Kent said, the bill received careful scrutiny in the other place and I can only assume from his support of the bill that it received careful scrutiny from him. It is, therefore, appropriate that the member for Lambton-Kent should present the bill at this time in the interests of tidying up what he sees as a gap in the provisions of Bill S-4.

I, too, have been somewhat apprehensive about the provisions of section 19, because I felt it placed members of the Blue Water Bridge Authority in a rather difficult position in that they could not, and cannot to this date, under the provisions of this bill as it now stands give out financial statements to the general public but only to those people designated by the governor in council. This bridge authority stood ready and prepared to do this at any time.

When I prepared my remarks in connection with this bill I had no idea of the stance to be taken by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, but I was certain that the hon. member was not suggesting there was anything wrong with the present operation of the bridge nor that any funds had been misappropriated or misused. I was happy when he said this afternoon he was making no such charge. In fact, he suggested that the bridge is admirably run but the problem is one of getting these statements to the general public. He was simply making these representations to tidy up what he feels is a looseness in section 19(1).

He will know from earlier conversations that this has been a matter of concern to me as well and I, too, have been stressing both with the Department of Transport and with the Department of External Affairs that the section should be changed if only to protect the interests of those who presently serve, without pay, as members of the Blue Water Bridge Authority.

When certain questions were raised by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, the then general manager of the bridge wrote the hon. member a letter dated June 15, 1971. The hon. member reads it in one way and I read it in another. The manager of the Blue Water Bridge Commission, operating under the strictures that are imposed by section 19(1), wrote that they could not make their financial statements public, could only make them available to those designated by the governor in council, but were prepared to do so when they received the necessary authority. The letter went on to say that because of the hon. member's interest in the bill they would like him to have a full picture of exactly what was happening.

I should like to quote one part of the letter which the hon. member did not see fit to read:

> With this feeling in mind then the authority members extend to you an invitation to visit the bridge offices, there to see the operation in all phases, there to meet and talk with any or all of the commissioners you care to see or the general manager or the treasurer or the auditors, W. L. Smith & Co., and there to receive complete and detailed answers to any and all questions you care to ask about present or past operations.
> We have on hand complete records of every cent ever taken in (attested to by four signatures and an auditors check) and a cancelled cheque for every penny spent. We will have on hand a signed, audited, detailed record of any commissioners' expense account complete with receipts for any trip ever taken by any commissioner or employee on behalf of the bridge.

The letter states that they hoped he would accept this invitation. This does not answer the hon. member but simply points out in my opinion the way in which the bridge commission and its manager's hands are tied under section 19(1). They were endeavouring to operate under the strictures imposed by the legislation. So they were not hiding anything but trying to indicate that everything was on the up and up, but they really did not have the authority to do what we feel is necessary. Therefore, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent quite properly is bringing forward Bill C-16 which is the subject matter of this whole question. The hon. member is simply suggesting another route or another procedure which in his opinion would be preferable to the one existing under section 19(1) of the bill.

I have been advised, however, that the government is quite pleased with the hon. member's opinion of the Blue Water Bridge Act, but it does not see the need for the amendments the hon. member is proposing. Indeed, I am happy to inform the House that in accordance with section 19 of the Blue Water Bridge Act, the section which the hon. member wishes to replace, an appropriate order in council is now being prepared requiring the bridge authority to submit an audited financial report annually to the Minister of Transport. I say it is about time, but in any even it is being done.

I accept the support of the hon. member in bringing forth these questions in respect of the bill and his support in conversations we have had personally as well as on radio and before the television cameras. This is like motherhood week. Such a procedure would be in keeping with the practice relating to the analogous Crown-owned, income-earning bodies. The hon. member's amendment would have the bridge authority submit its financial reports to the Auditor General. I suggest, with respect, that the Auditor General is responsible for auditing public funds, funds derived from taxation, not from the sale of services by an entity which is not a government department.

The proposal I have outlined I think better reflects the long standing Canadian practice. I believe the hon. member for Lambton-Kent indicated this in fact would meet his need as long as we went along with long standing Canadian practice. Our goal is similar. The means are slightly different, but I think the hon. member will concede that this order in council adequately meets that which he was endeavouring to get at through the introduction of Bill C-16.

The hon. member's amendment is slightly deficient in another unimportant aspect. It calls for submission of the authority's financial reports to the United States. While it is true the bridge act envisages the development of an international authority, in fact the United States, in particular the state of Michigan, chose not to establish a joint administration of the bridge. The Blue Water Bridge Authority is, therefore, a purely Canadian entity and its financial reports should be submitted to the Canadian government alone. Perhaps the hon. member was being farsighted and hopeful, as I was, that we would have a joint administration of the bridge rather than an administration on the Canadian side only.

Lest it be thought that since 1964, when the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act was passed, the government has been unaware of the financial obligations of the authority, I wish to make it clear that such is not the case. Section 9 of the Railway Act—if anybody had an objection, all he had to do was read this particular section—expressly grants the Canadian Transport Commission jurisdiction and control over tolls charged for passage across international bridges and requires each bridge authority to submit its schedule of tolls to the commission in order that this schedule be properly assessed by a commission, and it has to be accompanied by a financial statement.

The government, therefore, has been fully aware of the financial operations of the authority. I might add that if any persons wish to question the schedule of tolls at the Blue Water Bridge or any other international bridge, they may apply in the normal manner to the Canadian Transport Commission which has power to order that a public hearing be held to examine the tolls. There has been a suggestion here that this was not done. This is not true. After the Blue Water Bridge Authority was set up, and after its initial studies and managerial work, there was a request for a public hearing and the Canadian Transport Commission held a public hearing in Sarnia in, I believe, 1965. I do not have the specific date but I know a public hearing took place at that time. I know it as solicitor for the corporation of the county of Lambton.

My friend has made the suggestion, which I suggest he might have written when both of us thought there would be an election, that the members of the Blue Water Bridge Authority read like a Liberal "Who's Who". I think that can be attributed to a backlash, because from 1942 until 1962 we had a Conservative member of parliament both provincially and federally, and all the appointments of Conservatives had been made during that period. There were only Liberals left. There were some wonderful men available from whom we had the opportunity to choose. They have done an admirable job.

There is a vacancy now on the Blue Water Bridge Authority. I have received no less than 27 names. I am flattered that from one of my Conservative colleagues in the practice of law I received seven names. I think the hon. member will be pleasantly surprised, if the recommendation I have made is accepted, that it will not read like a Liberal "Who's Who" particularly and at least we will have a "Who's Who" from some other party.

I want to thank the hon. member for bringing forth this bill. I believe it is a good bill. However, in light of the information I have obtained from the Department of External Affairs and the fact that an order in council is to be passed to do precisely what the hon. member and I want done, I do not think we really need this bill. I expect there are others who will wish to comment on the bill.

I did not realize there is so much interest in the Blue Water bridge. I come from an area of the country which happens to be graced with the beautiful waters of the river St. Clair and Lake Huron. I do not have the statistics—perhaps the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has them in one of his own speeches—but tourists go over that bridge in hundreds of thousands every year. This is possibly the reason there is more than an average number of people in the House at this late hour on a Friday afternoon; they want to hear about the Blue Water bridge.

The fact is that these records have been kept and that now an order in council is to be passed to make them public. On that note, I believe private members' hour has been well served this afternoon. I am sure there are others who wish to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent and myself.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cullen: I never refuse a question from the hon. member.

Mr. McCutcheon: I am delighted to hear the words of the hon. member for Sarnia, but since there are so many announcements by the government to the effect that there will be an order in council soon, I wonder whether there is any chance that the government has taken him into its confidence so that he could be a little more precise concerning when the order in council will be passed.

Mr. Cullen: To the extent I am not violating my oath of secrecy, I would say the order in council has been drafted. The hon. member has not been on the government side and therefore may not know that many orders in council are passed. I believe it is merely awaiting the administrative procedure of a signature. The magic word I have heard around here is "soon". That is all I can say without violating my oath of secrecy.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, having heard the expression of respect between the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) and the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen), I almost fear entering this debate. But I believe anyone who has taken the time to read Bill C-16, indeed has taken the time to ask himself why this bill was brought forth and has gone back into the history of this whole enterprise, will be aware that the subject being considered is of paramount interest to the connection between the province of Ontario and the state of Michigan which bears on the constituencies the members represent.

There are also some broader implications in this bill. As we know, the bill is entitled "An act to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority". It is a very short bill having to do primarily with section 19 of the original Blue Water Bridge Authority Act. The desire of the member in whose name Bill C-16 stands is that section 19 of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act be repealed and that in its place there be reinstated a rather lengthy section, the purpose of which would be to have the financial situation of the bridge authority made known to members through the Auditor General. I trust I have not oversimplified the position of the hon. member, but that is how things stand as I read the bill.

I have taken a great deal of interest not only in the bill but in the background to it. The history of this bridge authority is fascinating. One detail which has not come out is that back in 1964, when there was also this true party spirit supporting the original set-up of the bridge authority, the bill was not a House of Commons bill but a Senate bill. It was Bill S-4 as it came to the House in 1964, and when it came from the other place to this chamber it resulted in a very short debate.

This demonstrated the amicability in this House concerning such a bridge authority. There seemed to be no division at all about it. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), the then leader of the Social Credit party, gave his support. The member who spoke on that occasion on behalf of the New Democratic Party was the member who is sitting at the helm of the New Democratic Party this afternoon, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and I thought he gave one of his better speeches on that occasion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It must have been short.

Mr. McBride: It was extremely short, only two sentences, if my memory serves me right. I thought it did him credit. The matter was dealt with expeditiously. Bill S-4 came in as a Senate bill precisely because it was not intended to draw any funds from the public purse. I believe it was the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), now Minister of Agriculture, who raised that question during the debate on Bill S-4. He pointed out—and the minister of transport of that day, Mr. Pickersgill, agreed—that there was no suggestion that there would be any expense to the public treasury resulting from this bridge authority, and it is my understanding that since 1964 there has been no draw on the public treasury.

As one member of this House, I am slightly confused as to whether or not an accounting of the expenditures and the revenue taken in by a Crown authority is a property under the purview of the Auditor General. It would seem to me it would make more sense not to pursue the avenue suggested by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent but, rather, to endorse the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, namely, that we ought all to be encouraged by the order in council that is being drafted.

I want to say also that Bill C-16 is deficient or perhaps even slightly misleading in that it calls for the submission of the authority's financial reports to some representative of the United States. We are all aware that when the bridge act became law in 1964, those passing the legislation in this country assumed that there would be an international authority. In fact, the United States, and in particular the state of Michigan, have not established a joint administration of the bridge, with the result that the Blue Water Bridge Authority is totally Canadian and its financial reports should be submitted to the Canadian government alone.

The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton has pointed out very well something that I wanted to bring to the attention of the House, namely, that there has been an avenue available since 1964 for the Blue Water Bridge Authority to report. I would suggest this is rather inadequate so far as making available to the public their financial situation. So I think that the order in council that is in the process of coming forward and which will have the bridge authority report to the Minister of Transport is extremely relevant, important and urgent.

As I understand the rules of this chamber, when the Minister of Transport comes before the Standing Committee of Transport and Communications, and when the information is made available to him, it would be properly within the ambit of the committee to ask specific questions of the minister on this subject. On delving into the history of this matter I found that there is no record of a member asking the Minister of Transport when he was before the committee with his estimates for information that is being sought by way of this bill. This has been sought through other avenues by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent who has taken a prime interest in this whole subject.

I think that this reporting through the appropriate order in council will clear up the whole issue before us today because certainly the gist of the substance—and I suppose a debate on second reading is a debate on principle—would be supported in principle by all hon. members because to reveal the financial transactions of this authority would be a worth-while endeavour. I find myself more in agreement with the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, that the other avenue is perhaps the best one.

In conclusion I should like to raise a couple of questions. First, I wonder how well the hon. member for Lambton-Kent or any other hon. member is aware of the profit potential of this authority. I was particularly interested to discover that the commissioners served at no cost. This is what I understood the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton to say, namely, that the men and women who serve as commissioners on the bridge authority do so out of the goodness of their hearts.

This would suggest to me that the authority does not have much resources at its disposal, yet when we look at the statistics, at the thousands upon thousands of vehicles that go over this bridge and consider whether any cost is being planned for the future in the form of tolls and so on, it seems to me that we should become aware of what the profit potential is. If it has a potential to make a profit, perhaps we should raise a still more basic question, one that permeates all of our culture concerning such enterprises as Air Canada, the CNR, the CBC and, this afternoon, the Blue Water Bridge Authority, namely, whether many of these services that are rendered to the public should not be taken over by private enterprise.

I suppose you could say that the bridge spans an international border and that there is no way in which we could entirely remove the government from being involved. However, perhaps this matter should be considered, just as another member on another day considered the possibility of our turning over the postal service of Canada to private enterprise. Perhaps I should say to hon. members that they should consider this possibility as well.

Finally, I want to pay a very high tribute to the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton who has taken a personal interest in this bridge authority and who, as his speech demonstrated this afternoon, researched the matter and brought us his personal familiarity of the subject that is so unique when he told us that he was solicitor for the village of Point Edward and therefore totally familiar with the issue on the Ontario side.

Mr. Speaker, my microphone is going on and off and I am confused as to whether or not I should resume my seat.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, 19 May, 1972

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wilfred Judson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 19th day of May, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

Royal Assent

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau

Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

• (1650)

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1700)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-207, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act—Chapter No. 10.

Bill C-78, an act respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill"—Chapter No. 11.

Bill C-208, an act to amend the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act to provide for the annual adjustment of pensions and allowances payable thereunder—Chapter No. 12.

Mr. Speaker: It being after five o'clock, pursuant to section 3 of Standing Order 2 this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, May 23, at 2 p.m.

At 5.04 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 23, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's) moved that the first report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, presented to the House on Tuesday, May 16, 1972, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

URBAN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF FINAL REPORT OF TRI-LEVEL INTERIM PLANNING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table in both official languages copies of the final report of the Tri-Level Interim Planning Committee made up of myself, the Hon. D'Arcy McKeough and His Worship, Mayor Marcel D'Amour of Hull.

FOOD PRICES AND SUPERMARKET PROFITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent to move a motion. My motion arises from the increase in the cost of food in the home of nearly 7½ per cent from April, 1971, to April, 1972, together with a simultaneous increase in the profits of the large supermarket chains during the first quarter of this year—Safeway, 40 per cent, George Weston, nearly 50 per cent and Dominion Stores, 300 per cent. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the following motion of which I have already given notice to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) and to which I am sure he will be favourably inclined:

That the matter of food prices and supermarket profits be referred to a special committee of this House for investigation and report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should remind the hon. member that it is not the minister's consent that is required but the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

SMALL BUSINESS, FISHERIES AND FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of recent reports under the Small Business Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and Farm Improvement Loans Act for the period January to March, 1972, which indicate that not one loan was made in the province of Newfoundland, demonstrating failure by the chartered banks of Canada to fulfil their responsibility in directing these loans on behalf of the government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and that witnesses from the Bank of Canada be called for questioning.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDUSTRY

FORD MOTOR COMPANY—EFFECT ON CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF APPLICATION BY UNITED STATES OF ANTI-POLLUTION CONTROLS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with respect to the difficulties that have arisen with regard to the production of the Ford Motor Company because of the anti-pollution controls imposed by the United States. Has the minister or his department been in touch with the company with a view to determining what the position is and what measures the Canadian company is proposing to take?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my department has been in touch with Ford. The difficulties that they have in the United States with the pollution control standards have been confirmed. However, the rumour which has apparently been circulating that the company had announced lay-offs is not true.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the minister developed any plan to put into effect to minimize what I might call the ripple effects of any such difficulties of Ford? I am thinking particularly of the effect of these difficulties in bringing about a shutdown or at least a slowdown of the operations of suppliers to Ford of Canada. Has the minister any plans to deal with such an effect?

Mr. Pepin: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, at the moment that question is hypothetical. I shall inquire further and see whether action is needed.

CHECKING OF EMISSION STANDARDS FOR CANADIAN PRODUCED CARS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I put a further supplementary to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any plans in regard to the establishment of ongoing checks on the emission standards of Canadian-produced cars in addition to the year-end production of evidence by the companies themselves?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have to some extent separate testing facilities. I believe the hon. gentleman knows that our controls apply only to new automobiles as they leave the factory; we can only ensure that new cars meet these standards. After that, the question becomes one for each provincial jurisdiction. But we have managed, very successfully, to work out a set of arrangements with the provinces which will, in a sense, give us a national basis on which to work and national standards.

[Mr. Speaker.]

APPLICATION OF UNITED STATES SAFETY STANDARDS TO CANADIAN PRODUCED AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should like to ask the minister whether his department was aware of the safety standards being set by the United States government and whether, in view of the importance of car exports to the United States, the automobile companies have been asked to make provision for incorporating these safety features?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am afraid I am not aware, Mr. Speaker. The news came to me this morning. I have a report indicating what I said in answer to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the difficulty which will now arise as a result of failure to anticipate the safety requirements in connection with the export market, can the minister assure us that his department will keep in touch with the automobile manufacturers to make certain that they comply with these safety regulations in the future?

Mr. Pepin: I will do whatever is needed, but perhaps the Minister of Transport might have more to say on the subject.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The situation with regard to our present law having to do with auto safety is that it applies not only to automobiles manufactured in Canada but to all cars imported into Canada; cars imported into Canada from any other country would be subject to such rules as we lay down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair feels we should complete the first round of questioning. I shall call upon the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Shefford and then return to the hon. member for Waterloo and the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for further supplementaries on this subject.

[Later:]

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should point out as a preamble that the reason I directed the initial question to him and inquired about the checking of safety regulations in the export market had to do with manufacturing and the possibility of plant shutdowns if these standards are not met rather than the safety features themselves. In view of the fact so many automobiles produced in Canada are being exported to the United States, I hope the minister will give us his assurance that he will start checking the provisions that exist in other countries and ensure that those who are manufacturing in Canada meet these provisions in order that exports are not curtailed or held up in any way.

FORD MOTOR COMPANY—POSSIBILITY OF SHUTDOWN BECAUSE OF U.S. POLLUTION CONTROLS—MAINTENANCE OF PRODUCTION FOR CANADIAN MARKET

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since an immediate but avoidable danger to workers in Canada of the Ford Motor Company concerns lay-offs that may occur in terms of production aims for the Canadian market, and in view of the fact the company has indicated there may be a total shutdown of production in Canada as most of their models are exported to the United States, will the minister obtain an assurance from the company that, if this difficult decision has to be taken in some form, it will keep at least the number of employees at work required to produce cars for the Canadian market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am told that this would not be very practical in view of the integrated operations between Canada and the U.S.A.

COMMUNICATIONS

RATE INCREASES GRANTED TO BELL CANADA BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the decision by the Canadian Transport Commission to grant the Bell Telephone Company substantial rate increases totalling more than $47 million a year. I should like to ask whether the government is studying this decision for the purpose of taking any action with respect to it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has not come to cabinet as yet, but I believe questions having to do with the Canadian Transport Commission would be more properly dealt with by the Minister of Transport. I do not know whether he has advice of anything in this regard.

Mr. Lewis: I think it would concern the Minister of Communications rather than the Minister of Transport in this case. In view of the seriousness of this matter and bearing in mind the net income of Bell Canada in 1971 was over $147 million compared with $133 million in the preceding year, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will assure the House that he will look into the question of whether these increases are justified from the point of view of the consumer and whether, as the Governor in Council has authority to do under section 335(4) of the Railway Act, the government will ask the commission to furnish all the information in its possession relative to the application and the decision for study by the government?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be very glad to raise this question with the minister.

Mr. Lewis: If the Prime Minister does that, will he also draw the minister's attention to the fact that section 64(1) of the National Transportation Act gives the Governor in Council authority to rescind or vary any decision or order of the Canadian Transport Commission? May I also ask the Prime Minister whether the government will use that section to rescind this order for a rate increase which, I suggest to him, is further gouging by Bell Canada of the Canadian consumer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the last part of the question is not entirely procedurally correct.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can he report on the progress of negotiations with regard to the longshoremen strike now paralyzing the ports of Quebec and Montreal, and tell us whether we can hope for an early settlement of that conflict?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Labour I might point out that in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec a collective agreement was arrived at several weeks ago with beneficial effects to both the employers and longshoremen. The collective agreement contains grievance and arbitration procedures. If the leaders of the unions refuse to utilize their legal rights, that is, the grievance and arbitration procedures, then I can only conclude that they certainly are not acting in the best interests of their members, nor within the mandate they have at their disposal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Minister of Labour. Will he say whether officials of the Department of Labour are taking steps to bring the two parties together in order to settle this dispute?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I would presume that the solution is so obvious, namely, that these experienced union leaders should take advantage of the arbitration procedure included in the collective agreement, that the officials of the Department of Labour have not proceeded to take an active part without invitation.

RAPESEED—LAYING OF CHARGES BY WHEAT BOARD AGAINST CERTAIN FARMERS FOR OVERDELIVERY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask my question of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, but in his absence I should like to direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that the Wheat Board has caused charges to be laid under the Criminal Code against a number of western farmers for so-called overdelivery of rapeseed for which the farmers have direct production contracts with seed processors? If he is aware of such action, will the minister indicate what steps the government is taking to stop this illogical and intolerable situation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that some farmers and in fact one seed processor have been charged. I cannot agree with the assumption that it is an illogical process. I am sure it will be examined in the courts.

Mr. Thompson: Do I understand then that the determination of the Wheat Board to convict farmers under the Criminal Code is justified?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That kind of question is, of course, out of order on many counts.

Mr. Thompson: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

POSITION OF CONTRACTS BETWEEN PRODUCERS AND PROCESSORS IN LIGHT OF PROSECUTIONS FOR OVERDELIVERY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that certain growers of rapeseed and certain oil processing firms were encouraged to enter into contracts at the beginning of this crop year, and in view of the fact that under those contracts the firms are committed to take the total rapeseed production of individual farmers, is the Minister of Agriculture in a position to give the assurance that these contracts can be honoured and followed through?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a fundamental principle of the whole quota system is to make sure that the market, however large or small it may be, is shared equitably among all producers in the area. Of course, that is the main consideration upon which the Canadian Wheat Board acts when it sees alleged violations of this principle.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the government has actively encouraged and indeed taken an active part in the transfer of rapeseed production from high to lower erucic acid, will the minister make an early statement on motions clarifying the point which has been raised here for both the processor and the producer?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the government has never taken the position that any kind of arrangements, contractual or otherwise, shall take precedence to the point of excluding all other producers who should have some access to the market under the quota system as well.

MARIJUANA—STATEMENT BY HEALTH MINISTER OPPOSING LEGALIZING OF POSSESSION AND USE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of a speech the Minister of National Health and Welfare made to students over the weekend in Hamilton, I believe, in which he opposed the legalization of possession and use of marijuana. Was he setting out government policy at that time?

[Mr. Thompson.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take notice of what was actually in the speech before expressing an opinion on it.

VOTE AT UNITED NATIONS ON LEGALIZING POSSESSION AND USE OF MARIJUANA—REASON FOR ALLEGED CANADIAN ABSTENTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one further question. Three days ago I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question concerning whether Canada abstained in a special committee of the United Nations when there was a vote on the very question I have raised with the Prime Minister as to the right of possession and use of marijuana. Is the Prime Minister now able to answer that question in light of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been away for two days?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I understood the minister, as did the hon. member, to say he would take notice of the question and look into it. The minister has been away for two days and I am sure the hon. member has also. It has been a long weekend.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY MINISTER OF CASES OF JAMES AND ALEX DONALD

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which I have given notice. Would the minister look into and hopefully intervene in the case of James Donald and Alex Donald, two Scottish immigrants living in Toronto who voluntarily came forward, disclosed their situation to the department and refused to take advantage of the right to appeal, which procedure could keep them in this country for years? As their wives and four children are involved and as they are hard-working people, would the minister personally look into the matter?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The hon. member was courteous enough to give me advance notice. I can think of nothing that would give me more pleasure than nine more Scots in Canada as landed immigrants and future citizens, so I will personally intervene.

FINANCE

STEPS TO MAINTAIN ADEQUATE DOMESTIC RESERVES OF GOLD IN LIGHT OF HIGH DEMAND

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Finance in the absence of the minister. In recognition of the current high demand for gold in Europe and elsewhere, and in view of the current high free market price for this commodity, what steps is the government of Canada taking to maintain adequate domestic reserves?

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State. Since many Canadian gold producers are presently selling their production on the international rather than on the domestic market, what action is the Canadian government taking to maintain an adequate inflow of gold from domestic sources? If the minister is going to take notice of this question also, when he answers will he also explain to the House what Canada is doing about the principal gold producer in South Africa having ceased production and what measures Canada is taking in order to ensure the continuation of adequate reserves from international markets?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that the answer to that question should be given on motions. If the minister's answer were to be as long as the question it would have to be given on motions.

INDICATION OF POSSIBLE RETURN TO GOLD STANDARD BY UNITED STATES—CANADIAN PLANS TO MEET EVENTUALITY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could bring another matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of State who is responding for him today. It arises from the recent statement of Arthur Burns, chairman of the United States Federal Reserve Board, at the International Monetary Conference in Montreal in which he indicated that the United States government is contemplating a return to the gold standard. When the minister replies would he indicate what plans Canada is making to meet this eventuality?

Mr. Speaker: Again I suggest that would have to be included in the minister's statement on motions.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I point out, with respect, that perhaps because of the intervention of the Chair in connection with the three questions asked by myself and the one asked by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris the Minister of State, who is usually quite informative in his replies, might have understood that they need not be answered. Your Honour has suggested that the matter be dealt with by the minister on motions. I wonder if we might have an undertaking from the Minister of State that he will come to the House tomorrow with a statement on motions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is hardly a question of privilege. It is a supplementary question to which the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I will look at the questions and see what response is appropriate.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF FINAL REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs under whose jurisdiction I believe the Prices and Incomes Commission comes. Can the minister tell us whether the final report of the Prices and Incomes Commission is now ready and, if so, when will it be tabled?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has not yet been presented to the government; it is in the course of preparation, but I understand it will be presented soon.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I understand that it contains some pretty forcible criticism of government policy. May we have the assurance that when the report is tabled it will be published in full?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—EXTENSION OF CERTAIN PROJECTS—FINAL DATE FOR ACCEPTANCE OR REFUSAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Further to the statement he made in the House on May 5 with regard to extending the Local Initiatives Program, can he tell us whether requests for extension will soon be answered, and whether a deadline has been set with regard to their acceptance or refusal?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as a general rule all projects under the Local Initiatives Program which are sponsored by municipalities can be extended to June 15 on the understanding, of course, that no supplementary sums of money from the federal purse are involved. If the hon. member would like a specific answer on a specific program, I would be glad to discuss it with him.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—FINAL DATE FOR REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING PRIVATE PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister.

I would like to know whether a deadline has been set concerning the submission of private projects under the Local Initiatives Program or if applications for extension can be approved at any time and get special consideration.

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Those local initiative programs that are privately sponsored come to an end at the end of May, with the exception of about 1,200 projects which on their merits and according to criteria that have been circulated, will be extended until the sum of $30 million has been expended.

RAPESEED—TYPE OF CHARGES LAID BY WHEAT BOARD AGAINST CERTAIN FARMERS FOR OVERDELIVERY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, with reference to questions asked earlier of the Minister of Agriculture in connection with the prosecution of farmers believed to have delivered rapeseed beyond their quotas, in view of the fact that anyone convicted will of course be found guilty of a criminal offence and be branded as a criminal, may I ask him why the Wheat Board has proceeded as though this was a criminal offence rather than under the provisions of the Wheat Board Act where an actual conviction would be for a pseudo-civil offence?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will reply to the question, although I think the charges are based on a violation of the Wheat Board Act and the regulations thereof.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister saying that the questions asked, which indicated that criminal prosecutions had been undertaken, were without any foundation?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker, I said I would look into it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION RESPECTING DUTY OF EMPLOYEES TO GOVERNMENT AND OPPOSITION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. It is based on a public statement by the President of the Canadian Transport Commission to the effect that public employees owe loyal service to the government and cannot be neutral when dealing with the opposition. Can the minister advise the House whether this doctrine is also held by himself and the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to study a little more closely what was actually said before I accept this version of the doctrine.

HOUSING

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON NEEDS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of housing. Has he had replies from the provinces with regard to consultation on housing needs where they concern the provinces, and would he indicate what progress has been made with regard to the introduction of the legislation he promised some time ago?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the process of consultation with the provinces is still continuing, but we have met with all the provinces and had reactions from them. I hope to introduce legislation along the lines forecast in the Speech from the Throne at an early date.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, have similar consultations taken place with Canadian mayors and municipalities regarding the proposed legislation?

Mr. Basford: The municipalities were represented at most, if not all, of the consultations with the provinces.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House the line of reasoning which caused him late Thursday night to decide not to call a general election and let the people decide—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that such a statement would have to be made on motions, and I wonder whether that is what the hon. member is suggesting. He will appreciate that he cannot expect the Prime Minister to reply to that question at this time.

• (1440)

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did preface my question by saying, "would he take the first opportunity on motions". Could he answer yes or no to that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member of course, has the option of putting the question down for debate at ten o'clock.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION BY RIDEAU CLUB AGAINST CERTAIN FEMALE GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the refusal of the Rideau Club to permit two women representing government departments to attend a working luncheon held in that place last week, is the government giving consideration to adopting a policy of not permitting any government functions to be held at the Rideau Club as long as that organization discriminates against certain government employees?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with some representatives of the gentler sex—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Don't get coy now. Just tell it like it was, Bud.

Mr. Drury: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we are in the presence of what I would call the rougher sex here. I pointed out to them that in cases where government activities involving both sexes were concerned it would not be practical and indeed, we should not interrupt the proceedings by lunching or endeavouring to continue the work in places that did not allow the presence of women.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. It seems to me that the President of the Treasury Board did not get the full import of the question. It was whether the government will not consider refusing to hold any functions, whether of one sex or of both sexes, in the Rideau Club as long as the Rideau Club pursues a policy which is contrary to the declared policy of the government with respect to equality of the sexes in all such matters?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not fully aware of all the facts behind this incident. I have undertaken to make some inquiries, but it is my understanding that the Rideau Club at present not only allows both sexes on its premises during the dinner period but also has on occasion allowed both sexes during the luncheon period.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about breakfast?

Mr. Drury: Breakfast I am not sure of; I am not sure if there is much demand for breakfast. I will be glad to look into the matter.

VICTORIA CONFERENCE—STATEMENT OF QUEBEC SOCIAL AFFAIRS MINISTER RESPECTING A CERTAIN DOCUMENT—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INVESTIGATE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

A few days ago, during a press conference, the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs stated that, during the last federal-provincial conference in Victoria, a document emanating from a federal government department was circulated among some provincial delegations, cautioning them against certain Quebec proposals.

Is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether he was aware of this and whether he was in favour of such a procedure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what document is being referred to. If the hon. member can be more specific, I shall find out.

Mr. La Salle: Since the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs made that statement, may I now ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he can find out which federal department circulated that document and report to the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not followed in detail all the statements of the Quebec minister involved, but if the hon. member is interested he might supply me with details and I shall inquire.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board, but since it involves the entire public service, both fair and unfair, perhaps it should be directed to the Prime Minister. Has the high level study of guidelines dealing with conflict of interest in the public service been completed and, if so, will it be made public?

URBAN AFFAIRS

DEVELOPMENT OF PROCESS TO PRODUCE DRINKING WATER FROM RECYCLED SEWAGE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE APPLICATION

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Now that the minister has survived a $400,000 sip of tasteless water made from recycled sewage, does the government intend to promote the use of this newly developed recycling system in Canada and, if so, will the minister make a statement to the House as to the areas in which this system should prove useful?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to send the hon. member a complimentary bottle of recycled water.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: The pilot project that has been financed by CMHC and the Ontario Research Foundation is producing absolutely pure water. It is still being refined from the points of view of economics and engineering, but the experts are very enthusiastic that it will prove out—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret interrupting the minister but I do feel that this kind of question normally ought to be placed on the order paper. I fail to see the urgency of the question.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Now that the minister's appetite has been whetted, and mine as well, would he not tell us whether CMHC has plans to introduce this system immediately in any of its current projects?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker. It will be 1973 before that is ready.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Chair might very easily have suggested at the start that the original question be placed on the order paper, but since it was asked and answered the hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will forgive me for asking a supplementary, but there is a potentially tremendous tax saving if the municipalities of Canada can be informed. I would ask leave to ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. Gibson: —if he will so inform the municipalities?

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF RETALIATION BY CANADA IF COUNTERVAILING DUTY IMPOSED BY UNITED STATES AGAINST CERTAIN MICHELIN TIRES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has to do with his suggestion that Canada might find a way of redress against the United States if the Americans go ahead with countervailing measures against Michelin tires. He has indicated that this could possibly be in the area of defence purchasing. Would the minister indicate what possibly could be gained from that inasmuch as government is the only purchaser of defence equipment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that a very good newspaper drew the conclusion that I was talking about retaliation. I was simply analysing in a very professorial way—I sometimes go back to previous incarnations—the vagueness and broadness of the concept of countervailing, mentioning that countervailing could be used against different types of subsidies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: We are running short of time and there are still a number of members in the back rows waiting to ask questions. I hope there will not be too many supplementaries.

Mr. Forrestall: I will attempt to respect your wishes, Mr. Speaker. Did I understand the Minister correctly that defence is probably not the most likely area for countervailing duties?

Mr. Pepin: Unlikely, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NUMBER OF UNITED STATES BRANCH PLANT COMPANIES THAT HAVE RECEIVED INCENTIVE GRANTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if an assessment has been made of the number of branch plant operations of United States companies that have received grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act in Canada, and if this information has been made known to the United States government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but the point I was making the other day is that there is no concerted United States action against regional development in Canada. The case we are talking about now, Michelin, is an exceptional one, and because there has been a complaint.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST INTENTION OF RAILWAYS TO INCREASE POTASH FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Last Wednesday he undertook to inquire from the Canadian Transport Commission whether or not an appeal had been lodged against the proposed freight rate increases on potash. Can he report today whether or not there has been and, if not, will he ask the CTC to review the proposed increases?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): In reply to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I did check and up to this morning there had been no appeals lodged in this connection. I am not at all certain that I have authority to ask them to initiate such an appeal, but there are several avenues open to anyone who may wish to do so.

Can he advise the House whether the Postmaster General has initiated an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the position taken by the provincial government of Alberta in establishing private mail carrier service between the cities of Calgary and Edmonton for government mail?

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the minister is studying the matter and I am sure that when the study is complete the information will be available to the hon. member.

Mr. Mazankowski: Will the parliamentary secretary undertake either to have the information tabled in the House or to have a statement made on motions?

Mr. Cobbe: Mr. Speaker, I will discuss this matter with the minister.

In light of allegations that the cost of the four ships in the destroyer escort program has now risen to an astronomical figure of well over $300 million, more than half as much again as the original estimate, and since it will take one year before the program is completed, would the minister look into this and make a statement in the House as to where the situation now stands?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence has already made clear statements on this matter. The DDH program is proceeding within the budgets approved by Treasury Board.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is it a fact that the agenda of topics to be discussed at the tri-level conference has been determined? If so, would he give the House some indication as to when he intends to table it?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the agenda has been agreed upon and is outlined in the report I tabled at the beginning of this afternoon's session. I would be happy to send the hon. member a copy.

Mr. Alexander: Will the minister say whether or not the representatives of the three levels will be attending the conference as equals?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, they will be attending in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon that are being recommended and are set out in the report I tabled today.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACT WITH PINKERTON AGENCY RESPECTING SERVICES NOW PERFORMED BY CORPS OF COMMISSIONAIRES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the minister now in a position to answer my question of May 4 and of May 16 as to whether the National Capital Commission has entered into a contract with the Pinkerton agency, a subsidiary of an American firm, for the provision of services in the national capital area previously provided by the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, apparently the policing of certain National Capital Commisssion properties is undertaken by arrangement with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who have in the past hired to assist them members of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires. However, this year the Corps informed the RCMP that they were no longer able to supply personnel for this purpose and the RCMP have made other temporary arrangements with Pinkerton.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question on this matter to the Solicitor General. I wonder if the Solicitor General can report to the House on whether the RCMP made an investigation into the background of the Pinkerton agency, particularly its labour relations, before engaging this agency to do this work?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the commissioner that after four calls for tenders the main angle for the RCMP was to consider human resources as well as security measures supplied to the RCMP for this control. FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, May 15, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance), that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West), (page 2178).

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate may I congratulate, first of all, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for the showmanship he displayed during the presentation of the budget and for the flurry of enthusiasm that went along with it. His display of enthusiasm covered many of the shortcomings of the budget. That, I suppose, is quite a tribute to the minister, since he appears to be a good salesman in his own right. His actions reminded me of the cliché one hears in sales circles. Salesmen say, "Do not sell the steak; sell the sizzle." Unfortunately, in this budget there is not much sizzle. On close examination we find that there is not much steak in it, either, for the average Canadian.

His statement that providing a job for every Canadian is his first and most urgent priority was indeed commendable. It was a bold statement and was one which I am sure every member of this House would support. That was supposed to be the characteristic by which the present Minister of Finance was to be distinguished from his predecessor. However, rather than take a positive approach and deal with the future, he spent a great deal of his time in his budget presentation in rambling, in defending the record of the government and in defending the record of the minister who previously occupied his portfolio. He blamed the state of the economy on unemployment, on rampant inflation, on everything and anything, from the so-called phenomenon of an above average participation rate in the labour force by too many young people, to too many women being in the labour force. Then, he went on to blame the economies of the United States, of the European Common Market and of Japan for many of the economic problems of Canada; yet nowhere in the budget speech was the minister bold enough to admit that our state of affairs has been caused in large part by the government itself, particularly by the previous minister of finance.

It is fairly well accepted that this government has failed to manage the economic affairs of this country in an efficient and effective way. Really, Mr. Speaker, when the government at the helm cannot operate even an effective postal service, there is little hope of its being able to run the economy of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The service of the Post Office Department has deteriorated to such an extent that the provincial government of Alberta has been forced to set up its own mail delivery service. At least, it has entered into a contract with a private mail delivery service for the delivery of inter-government mail between Edmonton and Calgary. It has done that because of the inefficiency and ineffectiveness of the Post Office Department in carrying out its obligations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: Today, I received a letter from a gentleman known as Fred Lonsdale Jr., who has offices at Lloydminster, Saskatchewan and Marshall, Saskatchewan. That letter reads, in part:

> Our business interests involve mainly communications and we view with alarm our high postage bill, up 60 per cent in the past few years, seems only to have resulted in rapidly deterioration in service.
> One part of our business, the Credit Bureau of Lloydminster, is making increasing use of TELEX as an alternative to the mails.
> It might not be long before that business will be on DEX 1 eqpt., which similar to PHOTO FAX transmits a photo copy of documents over a telephone line in 1-6 minutes.
>
> Time service by the post office department is bad enough but worse still is the unreliability.
> We are also in the insurance business and as we cannot depend on the mails with last minute closing of construction bonds some of our clients simply have to drive bids and bonds to Edmonton or Saskatoon.
> The 1903 ox cart was more reliable.

The letter is dated May 18, 1972.

Mr. Paproski: And today is the twenty-third; shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will be glad to send the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) a copy of that letter and will be glad to hear the outcome of his investigation into circumstances surrounding the provincial government's decision—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Why is the hon. member waiting?

Mr. Mazankowski: —to set up its own mail service through a private mail carrier. I think this is a national disgrace, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Back to the pony express.

Mr. Hees: Back to the ox cart days.

Mr. Mazankowski: While suggesting that things were going to get better, and we certainly heard that before, the minister went on to say that we have to take a new look at our situation and decide what policy will best serve our long term interest. In this connection, I feel that the minister failed miserably to come up with an imaginative scheme to meet the challenge he boasts about, providing a job for every able bodied Canadian who seeks employment, particularly on a long term basis. When you analyse this budget carefully, you see that it is nothing more than an ad hoc measure, tarnished with pre-election political taint which the government hopes will get it over the hump.

If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) wants to make another speech, which I hope will be better than the one he made on the last budget, I would certainly like to hear it, particularly if there is anything constructive and stimulating in it. It is certain that that minister has been unable to cope with the economic problems that face industry in this country. This budget may well backfire. When we strip away the verbiage, all the frills and flowery phrases, there is no evidence of the new fundamental approach about which the minister talked. People no longer trust this government. They are suspicious of their underlying motives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: People are suspicious of the fine print and some of the deliberate omissions. For example, the public was very quick to recognize the fact that effective the first of the year there will be an automatic increase in personal income tax. As the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) says, perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) cancelled the election because, now that the budget has been analysed, it can be seen that it will not provide the necessary impetus to get this country going. Can we really be sure that the corporate tax measures which have been introduced will be in effect for more than one year? There have been four budgets within the past 12 or 13 months. By simply bringing in another budget, any tax concession or tax increase can be brought into effect.

Also, can we assume that jobs will automatically be generated as a result of these measures? Manufacturing and processing industries need the stimulation provided by tax changes. I do not believe the impact of these proposals will have the immediate effect that we need. The minister alluded to the fact that the impact of the budget will only be felt within the next three or four years.

I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, also; can business generally look forward to less government interference and manipulation, thus allowing the free play of the market, coupled with the wisdom and initiative of management, to respond and foster growth in a reasonable and confident way providing long term growth and stability? We do not have that assurance in this budget. Big government continues to dominate in a very paternalistic way. Are we going to have more legislation introduced which will generate animosity and uncertainty in the business world, as the tax reform amendments, the Competition Act, the Labour code amendments and the foreign ownership question have? Are we going to have this form of government regimentation which will leave business in a state of suspended animation?

It is well known that the business community, particularly small businesses, are overwhelmed by the technical details of the recent changes in the tax law, the proposed legislation related to competitive practices and the law of industrial relations and labour standards. A very high percentage of management time is being absorbed trying to calculate the impact of these proposals to the point where essential business planning is being severely hampered. All these things collectively, which have been created in large part by the government's technocrats and academics, make up the bulk of the difficulties which have crippled the economic vitality of this country. These have affected all businesses, large and small, manufacturing and service industries as well as investment and resource industries. I suggest that if the Minister of Finance wants to create jobs, he would be wise to tackle this area and remove the gross amount of government interference which we have in the business world today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I sincerely believe this would restore confidence and provide a new sense of determination which would result in renewed planning based on sound objectives. The Minister of Finance could then have introduced a full employment budget with emphasis on more direct employment and investment stimulus, more effective assistance for the labour intensive and export sectors which are placed in an unfair position by recent national and international events. There could be more effective measures to remove the corporate tax discrepancy between Canadian companies and international corporations operating in this country. That would be a worthwhile move. There should be greater across-the-board equity in incentives and tax breaks affecting other sectors such as the service industries, the construction industry, farming, fishing and logging.

I am pleased that the Minister of Finance recognized that growth in jobs comes more effectively from the private sector than the government. I commend him for taking this first step in putting government back into its proper role. While we acknowledge the fact that the corporate tax reduction in the processing and manufacturing sector, plus the added feature of accelerated depreciation on machinery, may provide some stimulus and offset the effects of DISC and the appreciation of the Canadian dollar, it should be recognized that a large part of the machinery in question will be purchased outside this country. This may have a more favourable affect on economies other than Canada's. I believe that more than 50 per cent of the $3 billion spent on machinery and equipment is spent on items imported from other countries. This proposal may displace more people through greater automation. I believe the minister alluded to this as well. It is now commonly accepted that these proposals will not provide an immediate upsurge in the economy. I believe the minister suggested it may be three or four years before the full impact of them is felt.

I believe, and I say this very sincerely, that positive steps should be taken to bolster the role of Canadian firms which export a large percentage of their products. What are we now doing? Many Canadian companies have to compete against multinational corporations operating on an international scale. They are finding it very difficult to compete as a result of tax policies. The Versatile Manufacturing Company, like many other companies, is being forced out of the country because of the taxation policies of the federal government and the provincial government of the province in which it is located. The president of Versatile suggested to me that his corporation is paying a 54 per cent corporate tax and that Massey-Ferguson, which operates on an international scale, has been paying in the order of 31.6 per cent for the past three years. John Deere, which operates on a world-wide scale, paid an effective tax rate of 10 per cent. The president of Versatile told me that if he were to get an equal tax arrangement with his world wide competitors, he would not only be able to provide more jobs for Canadians, but would be able to reduce the price of his farm machinery considerably. He suggested a figure of 10 per cent. He calculated that he was paying $900 more tax on the largest tractor his firm builds than the Massey-Ferguson company is paying on its largest tractor. His tractor retails in the area of $26,000.

We now have a situation in which this company is being forced to move to the United States to establish a subsidiary there. Once a subsidiary is established there, we can look forward to its further development in the United States. We allow our truly Canadian industries to suffer, thus failing to provide the potential employment which could be derived therefrom. When grants are being considered under the incentives legislation by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, more consideration should be given to Canadian corporations as distinct from multinational and international corporations.

I believe, too, that positive steps should be taken to encourage new industry, particularly in areas where for economic reasons greater diversification is required. I refer particularly in this context to western Canada. The provisions in the budget for accelerated depreciation and the reduction of corporate taxes may not be sufficient to stimulate the development of new industry in the west; I have in mind, particulary, the processing of agricultural products. A certain amount of expansion has taken place in this area in western Canada, but great difficulty is still experienced in acquiring sufficient risk capital to start some ventures. The Industrial Development Bank has not always looked kindly on small operations in their early stages and many such development are stultified for lack of risk capital.

I might mention, here, the town of Smokey Lake in my constituency where an alfalfa pellitizing plant has been developed, largely as a result of co-operation between the citizens of that community. A great demand exists for this product; indeed, at the present time the commodity is being imported into Canada. It became evident that the banking institutions, including the Industrial Development Bank, were not willing to provide sufficient funds to get the operation into being. Eventually, the directors of the company made application to the First National Bank of Oregon. Approval was given in principle to a request for financing, but certain conditions were imposed. The company found itself in a situation in which it could not obtain a grant under the area development incentive legislation because of the time lag. Today, however, through the tenacity and conviction of the directors and shareholders the plant is in operation—but only after many difficulties, a great deal of cost and much inconvenience. I feel it is plants of this kind which are in need of greater consideration from the federal government.

Turning to the area of personal income tax, my own feeling is that reductions in personal income tax levels, particularly in the middle income range, would have been a desirable proposition not only from the standpoint of stimulating the expansion of the economy but also on grounds of fairness. We should bear in mind that the government is constantly reaping greater revenues from taxation as a result of increases in the cost of living. I believe a good case can be made for tying personal tax rates to a formula based upon the cost of living index. There is ample precedence for doing so. I refer to the legislation in connection with the pensions and allowances of senior citizens and war veterans. I welcomed those proposals; the manner in which they were dealt with by parliament indicates how expeditiously the House can dispose of good legislation. Had the government put forward more legislation of this kind, it would have encountered very little difficulty in proceeding with its legislative program.

I turn, now, to agriculture. There are a number of disappointments in the budget but none keener than in the field of agriculture. I do not believe the farmer can find much to be pleased with among these proposals. When industry, manufacturing industry in particular, encounters a setback, relief is provided almost immediately. But those who rely on the export of agricultural products have been obliged to put up with foreign subsidies and unfair competition for many years without redress. The situation has been getting worse, instead of better, yet the government still shows considerable reluctance to provide any relief in this area. The point I have particularly in mind, is this: the minister spoke in glowing terms about the way in which net income in the agriculture industry had increased over the past year. He mentioned a figure of 25 per cent. Some clarification is needed, here, since it is not really net income we ought to be dealing with, but realized net income. This is the figure which puts dollars in the farmers' pockets. And here the figure is in the order of something like 10.8 per cent. I simply say this for the sake of clarification.

Next, I wish to put on record some figures which were quoted before the agriculture committee. As cited by Mr. Williams, the deputy minister, the net income figure for 1966 was $1,549 million. In 1970, the figure was $927 million. Thus, there has been a reduction in that period amounting to some 40 per cent in net farm income. So, we are considering an increase of 10 per cent in that figure, one which is a far cry from the figure recorded in 1966.

Further clarification is also required in connection with the application of the tax proposals as they relate to corporations. I notice with interest that the Farm and Country magazine of Tuesday, May 23, calls for clarification with respect to the application of these changes to companies processing agricultural products. There is uncertainty not only with respect to corporate tax reductions but also in respect to claims for rapid depreciation. An article appears in Farm and Country by John Phillips, who says:

> There will be a lot of dismayed Ontario farmers when they discover that Finance Minister John Turner's budget excludes them from goodies offered other businessmen.
> Last week, Department of Finance officials gave a tentative ruling to the effect that farmers could not share in the fast write-off given urban manufacturers.
> Within hours of the budget announcement Farm and Country was getting a flow of inquiries about the write-off for farm processing equipment such as automatic feed mixers and grain dryers.
> Finance Department whiz-kids have concluded, however, that the few farmers operating a fruit packaging plant or using equipment to wash carrots could qualify for the almost instant depreciation.
> Their ruling is not final. The regulations have yet to be written. This may take two months or so. Doubtless Finance Minister Turner will get many representations over the coming weeks.
> The only farm beneficiaries under the new budget are old people living on nothing but the basic old age pension and guaranteed income supplement.

I am glad to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in the House. I am aware of his continued and vital interest in agriculture, and I know he is concerned about the application of the corporate tax rate and depreciation provided for in the budget. I hope he will use his good offices to twist the arms of revenue officials so that these provisions will be taken into consideration and accurately interpreted in the best intents of Agriculture. After all, no other industry is more affected by the appreciation in the value of the dollar and the DISC proposals than is agriculture. Therefore, I urge that these matters be dealt with now rather than after the revenue department has made its final interpretation.

The minister also referred to the many adjustment programs, and many of these spell extinction for a good number of farmers. He also recognized the inequities of the tax reform proposals that have been made in several areas and instituted corrective action, though he failed to do so in the area of capital gains arising from inter-family transactions or in reinstating the basic herd provisions. However, I am aware of the fact that an interdepartmental committee is working on this subject, and once again I urge the Minister of Agriculture to use his good offices in this area.

The minister went to great lengths to deal with the suggestion that most people want to live in the large urban centres. This, to me, simply casts a reflection on the naïvety of the minister and the government, as well as their long-standing disregard for rural Canada. The fact of the matter is that this assumption is not correct. On the contrary, there are more and more people becoming desirous of living in rural areas and bringing up their families there, provided they have the opportunity of earning a minimum standard of living that is comparable to that of their urban counterparts. Many policies and programs of the government, such as the DREE program, manpower programs and agricultural programs, are literally forcing people to quit rural areas and move to cities. I have warned the Minister of Agriculture and the government on many occasions of the fact that there is a very great need for the maintenance of an equitable rural-urban balance. I believe that a positive approach must be taken to restoring the viability and vitality of the rural communities of this country. This is long overdue. The problem might be attacked by the establishment, for example, of a new department that would co-ordinate all of the economic and social aspects, producing solutions that are based not only on economic realities but on the realities of human and social needs.

I am disappointed that the finance minister did not see fit to take steps to reduce or to remove completely the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This is a tax that affects every Canadian and such removal would have had a long lasting effect. Similarly, I am disappointed that the minister did not take the opportunity to reduce or remove the sales tax on the soft drinks industry. This industry has been bombarded by a number of problems, particularly smaller operations, since the advent of the various anti-pollution programs which have added an extra burden. I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to say that, like most hon. members on this side of the House, I welcome the budget that has been presented, the first budget of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I particularly welcome the changes providing for full escalation of old age security payments and payments to veterans. It is quite clear that most hon. members in this House are of the same mind in view of the speed with which this legislation has been passed. May I congratulate the Minister of Finance on his first budget and assure him that it has been well received by most members in this House, certainly by most members of the Canadian public.

As I have said, I am particularly happy about the escalation provisions regarding old age security pensions and veterans pensions. As the minister pointed out in his remarks, the government is committed to proposing ways of rendering justice to those people in our community who have been hurt by the rise in the cost of living and have no way of fighting back. The minister went on to say that he was speaking of those Canadians who have retired, whose working days are over, and of our veterans and their dependants. The same principle, however, applies to payments under the Canada Pension Plan which, as hon. members know, provides for an escalation feature which has been, and is, limited to 2 per cent a year. It would be very pleasant to believe that we could limit the rate of inflation to 2 per cent a year, but experience in recent years makes this look very unlikely indeed.

I realize that no increase can be made in the escalation rate under the Canada Pension Plan unless at the same time a corresponding increase is made in the escalation rate—the same 2 per cent—under the Quebec pension plan. The two plans are tied together, and parallel changes must be made in co-operation between the two governments. Admittedly, the problems are complex, but just as it was essential that full escalation be provided for our veterans and those in receipt of old age security payments, so it is essential, and only consistent with justice, that full escalation be provided under the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. The present 2 per cent escalation is just not sufficient. People who have been working all their lives and expect to get a reasonable pension on retirement are finding that by the time they retire, or a few years after they have retired, the $400 or $500 a month they were expecting to receive under their pension plan is worth much less, perhaps only $300 to $400 a month, in terms of purchasing power. Therefore, it seems to me quite clear that, until such time as we can establish a non-inflationary economy, it is essential that those who have retired on fixed incomes and cannot protect themselves against rises in the cost of living should have full escalation of their pensions. I hope the minister will assure the House that this problem is being considered very carefully, and that in due course provisions will be agreed upon to provide for full escalation under both the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan.

There is another point perhaps of equal importance in connection with the escalation of pensions. A very large number of people are covered by private pension plans provided by the corporation or employer for whom they work. Probably these private pension plans are at least as important as those under the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. To be eligible for income tax deductions, these private pension plans must be registered with the Department of National Revenue. In that way, therefore, our federal government does have control over the provisions contained in the eligible pension plans established by private employers and corporations.

A few months ago I was amazed to learn, after writing to the Department of National Revenue, that under the present procedures of the department a private pension plan will not be accepted for income tax deductibility if it provides an escalation rate of more than 2 per cent. In other words, if an enlightened employer or corporation wants to establish a pension plan which will provide for full escalation so as to protect the income of the employees when they retire against an increase in the cost of living, the income tax department, under existing regulations and procedures, will refuse to accept it. If the income tax department refuses to register a plan, that means that the contributions made by the employee into that pension plan are not deductible from the employee's income for tax purposes. It also means the contributions made by the employer to the pension plan will not be deductible for income tax purposes. Obviously, the result will be that an employer will not adopt that type of pension plan.

It seems incredible that the federal government would adopt deliberately regulations to prevent enlightened employers from providing pension plans which fully protect the purchasing power of pensions built up by employees over a period of years, yet apparently this is what is being done at the present time. I think possibly one reason may be that the department wishes to protect its revenues. Obviously, if there is to be full protection against escalation a pension plan will cost more than if there is only partial protection. Therefore, in limiting the amount of the escalation to 2 per cent, as we have done in the case of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, the Department of National Revenue ensures that deductions from income tax will be lower and that federal government revenues will be higher.

This does not seem to me to be a good reason for this procedure. I hope that the Minister of Finance in co-operation with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), will review this situation, and before too long will be able to announce to this House that this particular provision will be changed, and that instead of preventing employers from providing full escalation in private pension plans, the federal government will do its best to encourage employers to set up plans which have full escalation provisions. I hope that ultimately the federal government will go further and will insist, as a condition of registering for tax deductibility, that every private pension plan must include provisions to guarantee full protection against increases in the cost of living.

From my recollection of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, I believe he indicated a hope that the increase in the cost of living would be kept to a minimum, and we would be able to curb inflation. Of course, this would be an ideal situation. However, assuming we do not have a breakdown in the monetary system which would lead to deflationary conditions throughout the world, and no one wants that to happen, I see no reason to believe—and I think there are many economists who hold this view—that we will have anything but a continuing and very substantial percentage increase in the cost of living each year. Therefore, until such time as we do devise the economic methods which will permit us to maintain stability of prices with high employment, it is essential that throughout the entire spectrum of Canadian life regulations should be adopted and legislation should be introduced to protect the purchasing power of people who are retired, people on fixed incomes and with savings, who are in no position to protect themselves by insisting upon increased wages or salaries.

One provision which does help to protect Canadians at the present time, and one I certainly wish to commend most highly, is that provision pursuant to which the basic exemption for those over 65 will be raised from $650 to $1,000. This provision does help to protect the purchasing power of people who are retired.

Mr. Peters: Its adoption is fairly belated.

Mr. Wahn: It may be belated, but welcome nevertheless, and I am delighted to see it in this particular budget.

I turn now to another important provision in the budget, that which relates to the reduction of tax of manufacturing and processing businesses, including small businesses, and the related provisions for depreciation and fast write-offs for machinery and equipment required by manufacturing and processing industries. I think most Canadians will welcome these as well. There has been some suggestion in some quarters of Canada, possibly not from the minister, that these provisions will help to counter the effect of United States legislation providing for the DISC program.

I gather that the DISC program is designed to prevent the multiplication of United States owned branch plants in Canada, and to provide encouragement to manufacture in the United States rather than in Canada. To the extent that the DISC program would prevent a further extension of branch plant operations in Canada, I am inclined to think it should be welcomed by Canadians rather than resisted. To the extent it would result in the withdrawal of branch plant manufacturing facilities which now exist, it would create short term problems because our manufacturing economy has been built up on a branch plant basis. Changes should be made gradually. Any sudden retirement from Canada of manufacturing operations which form the basis of the economy of particular municipalities or localities would cause a great deal of hardship. From a short term point of view, some legislation such as this to prevent hardship in Canada to established manufacturing operations is certainly to be welcomed.

In addition, of course, the general principle of reducing taxes on manufacturing and processing businesses is likely to be well received in Canada. Probably corporate income tax must now be regarded as a cost of doing business rather than as a sharing of profits with the State. In other words, any manufacturing company now has to try to make a reasonable percentage profit on its capital which will justify its continued expansion and continued capital investment. From this point of view, corporate income tax is now regarded as a cost of doing business, just as municipal and sales taxes or any other provincial or municipal taxes. A reduction in the corporate income tax should therefore have the effect of reducing the cost of doing business of these corporations. In time, this should make them more competitive in world markets. It should also in time and as a result of competition lead to a reduction in selling prices in Canada. This, of course, would also help reduce the danger of inflation. There are many good reasons this particular provision, reduction of the tax rate of manufacturing and processing businesses, is a good thing. I would hope, however, the minister would give some consideration to whether it might be desirable to introduce, perhaps over a period of time, a lower rate of tax for companies which are Canadian-owned as compared with other companies. The purpose would be to increase the number and competitiveness of Canadian-owned companies in relation to other companies. The present tax reduction, of course, applies to all companies. I think perhaps it must at the present time, in order to avoid the problems relating to DISC which I mentioned.

Personally, I should like to see long-term consideration given to the possibility of using the tax system to encourage wholly-owned subsidiaries of foreign companies to make their shares available to the Canadian public, to encourage Canadian companies and give them a competitive advantage over companies which are not prepared to operate in Canada upon the basis of a partnership with Canadian investors. This would be a long-term project which perhaps could not be introduced in this budget. However, I believe it is important that we should decide one way or another whether our program to ensure greater Canadian investment can be stimulated by the tax system or whether direct controls are required to do it. Certainly, it is well worth investigating the possibility of achieving what we want to achieve through the tax system.

In conclusion, may I say I welcome the budget provisions, particularly those relating to the escalation of pension payments and the tax provisions. While I welcome them, they are to some extent pragmatic and ad hoc provisions. I hope that before too long the minister will outline in greater detail the basic philosophy of the government in relation to the control of inflation and also in relation to the development of more efficient Canadian industrial organization.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it is with a keen interest that I take part in the budget debate. The budget speech is always preceded by long comments and followed by comments now worthwhile now interesting now negative and now positive.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to avail myself of this opportunity to discuss certain budget proposals and remind the government that certain suggestions have already been made and that it should give more attention to some solutions that could promote in our economy and social climate the stability we are looking for.

I am not suggesting that no efforts were made these last years; on the contrary. I also admit that results in some cases were worthwhile and in other cases insufficient. We need only look at our unemployment rate in 1968 and at the one we have today.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion used great amounts of money to create new employment. The Department of Agriculture put forward some interesting measures in favour of farmers. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce succeeded in concluding excellent agreements with other countries. I am also thinking of certain capital injections made at different times of the year during the last four years.

However, all those efforts and accomplishments were inadequate. At any rate, we were not able to check the evil that we call unemployment. I acknowledge that suggestions were made by members from all parties. Some of them were accepted since the budget complies with them. The budget speech also includes worthwhile proposals from the government.

I had an opportunity to invite the government to organize more general meetings with businessmen, provincial authorities, union leaders and employers. In my opinion, the government has not managed, over four years, to find miracle solutions. I still believe that nobody in this House is in possession of such solutions. I am still convinced that the government will always benefit from more regular meetings with businessmen, provincial government representatives, union leaders and employers, focussing on a serious study of our ailing and troubled economy. Considering the expertise of such businessmen and representatives, the government could obtain wise advice likely to help it establish an efficient and valuable policy for the future of our country.

Of course, I should like to declare myself very pleased with the improved social measures announced in the budget speech. As concerns the increased old age security basic pension, I have been hearing about that for a long time. I shall not say that the government has imagined or devised something new when it increased the old age security pensions.

Anyway, we should honestly rejoice at the government's positive answer to past representations.

However, for a few minutes, I should like to discuss briefly the problem thereby created for the province of Quebec. As a representative of the province of Quebec, I believe that it is only normal that I should stress, among other things, the reaction of the Quebec Social Affairs minister or of the Quebec cabinet. It has been suggested that Quebec might find this legislation unsatisfactory. One would have to be quite naïve to believe that the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs was dissatisfied to find that the government was increasing the old age security pensions.

The Quebec government deplored that it was not warned of this measure. I submit that we should consider the Quebec context and the objective of the Minister of Social Affairs who wrote a book on Quebec social policy. This book was written ten years ago and the minister is most anxious to implement this Quebec program of social policy.

It should also be recognized that Quebec is in a rather peculiar situation. In fact, I wonder whether all hon. members are as convinced of that as I am. I think that under those circumstances, the Minister of Social Affairs is quite justified in insisting on a typically Quebec social policy for Quebecers and with Quebecers without being necessarily isolated from the rest of Canada.

In my opinion, Mr. Castonguay was quite right in deploring that the government failed to inform him about the passing of this legislation because he was thus obliged to consider the Quebec social policy in relation to different classes of people and that, simultaneously, the Quebec provincial budget was affected in the area of social policy.

I think that this explanation was necessary. I also believe that Quebec members are perfectly aware of the Quebec situation. They recognize the arguments put forward by the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs. Perhaps they simply need a little more courage to agree with me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would add that everyone in Quebec is happy that the old age pension has been increased.

Starting July 1, 1972, the government will increase from $650 to $1,000 the special exemption for persons aged 65 and over.

Mention should also be made of the special exemption of $50 per month for trainees and full time students attending courses prescribed by educational or training institutions.

[Mr. La Salle.]

Moreover, medical expenses are enlarged, for tax purposes, as from January 1, 1972.

No doubt that these special measures provided in the budget are beneficial and welcome. Thus, the changes relating to tax reform are, to a certain extent, very interesting and the economic outlook for next year, to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has referred, is very bright. Shall we have to wait until the end of the year to see that the economic outlook has been thoroughly considered and that it reflects what is in store for us?

I do not hesitate to say that the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance is most acceptable. But is it enough to rectify the situation? Are the credits provided sufficient to lead us to believe that within the next ten months or the next year, the rate of unemployment will be reduced to a normal level? Will it be possible to generate enough jobs to meet the needs of the manpower entering the labor market every year, in June, and to create the social climate we are hoping for? I doubt it very much and this is why I took the liberty of making some suggestions.

We have heard about the increase of the old age security pension payable at 65. Some of my colleagues who have spoken about it, and myself, have been wishing for a long time now that the qualifying age be reduced to 60 I must repeat, even though I have already said it and it has been suggested to me, that this suggestion was very interesting. Yet, in the budget, my proposal of bringing down to 60 the age of eligibility to the old age security pension, since, according to statistics, there would be in Canada from 350,000 to 400,000 persons aged from 60 to 65, went unanswered.

In view also of the fact that there are about 600,000 unemployed, it would be very interesting, in a year from now, to be able to put on pension persons aged from 60 to 65, in order to give work to 400,000 unemployed.

I think that this pension of $285 for a couple is inadequate in several cases. We should, once again, consider seriously the possibility of increasing this pension to at least $350 a month for a couple, because I do not think, considering the increase of the cost of living, that we can give these aged people a well deserved rest, an adequate income enabling them to feel happy and say that their country has done something for them, which would create by the same token about 400,000 new jobs.

In my opinion, we would promote a better social atmosphere, by granting our older people a well-deserved rest—since they have been on the labour market for about 40 years—and by providing about 350,000 to 400,000 young people with a job, a responsibility as well as a suitable salary.

Thus, we would have put things back in the right place, we would have given work to young people between 20 and 30 years of age, and well-deserved holidays to people of 60. Therefore, we would develop a most human policy, since we all know that in industry, for instance, machinery is increasingly important, while the person is less and less important.

Mr. Speaker, I really hope that through perseverance, we might get some results. I say so because the hundreds of letters received from people in my riding always emphasize their support for this kind of policy. We would, during the first six months, provide for a voluntary pension, that is to say enable people between 60 and 65 to get a reasonable pension and a deserved rest and, during the next six months, make this pension compulsory, if we really are to put an end to this unemployment which has existed for too long a time.

I understand that the government has been hesitating about developing such a policy, because it has believed, for four years, that it was going to correct this situation through money injections made by the departments I referred to a while ago. I repeat that the government has made every effort in terms of time and money, but we all admit that this was not sufficient. This policy, which would reduce by 70 per cent the number of unemployed, would be such as to involve the passing of legislation which, from a social point of view, would be quite extraordinary and, at the same time, we should stop to spoil the generation of people between 20 and 30, trying to give them ever increasing social allowances, just to request that they remain idle.

We should give serious consideration to setting the age for eligibility to old age security at 60. The amount should be adequate. In view of all the consequences I have just mentioned I believe we would truly make progress towards achievement of a much better social climate than is now prevailing.

I should also, Mr. Speaker, point out to those in the government, particularly to the Minister of Finance, that funds should be made available to build anti-pollution plants in municipalities. It is all very well to discuss pollution but so long as sufficient funds are not made available to municipalities for the building of such plants, all attempts to clean up the St. Lawrence river are pointless, since we know that all its affluent rivers are polluted.

It is very important, I suggest, that intelligent officials see to it that we clean up the Great Lakes and the main rivers first and then smaller streams.

Our municipalities are all anxious—which I learned from their responsible representatives—to get purification plants but the required funds are not available. I think that the Minister of Finance should in the near future consider paying the cost of building purification plants, which would promote the sale of materials and create jobs. Such a policy would be extremely beneficial. And what about the importance the House should attach to recreation? Of course we know that in the province of Quebec certain jurisdictions must be respected. For my part, the suggestion I would make would respect those jurisdictions. I am thinking of a policy on recreation that would provide credits. In fact, the problem is always one of credits when municipalities are considering the construction of arenas and baseball fields.

I know what extraordinary amounts of money provincial governments have spent to organize recreation. Above all else, the municipalities must be given the basic tools, I know from experience because I have dealt personally in recreation. In fact, I had the opportunity and the pleasure of doing recreational work for years, and I know very well how to go about it. It is often low-brow work. It does not necessarily entail the submission of extensive briefs to the department, which in any case often gather dust on the shelf.

I know some municipalities which are now equipped with a floodlit arena or baseball park. I feel they are basic equipment which enable them not only to play hockey or baseball but to go in for other forms of athletics.

How could we reach those goals? I thought that the government would be in a position to take part in the construction of arenas. In the average municipality, an arena can cost some $100,000. I do not refer to large arenas with artificial ice which can cost $500,000 or $600,000. In my opinion, those who advocate such projects are mistaken. A good number of average municipalities would like to be have an ordinary arena which would enable thousands of young people to practice some sports, whatever the weather. Such arenas can be built at a cost of $100,000. And I believe that the federal government could invite the provinces to participate, and the provinces could in turn invite municipalities to do so. The municipality would show its good faith by guaranteeing a minimum fund of 25 per cent. The province could be invited to provide 25 per cent of the cost, and the federal government, 50 per cent. We shall then be able to establish a serious, efficient and long-term recreation policy. For instance, my riding has benefited this winter from local initiative programs worth $1,300,000. I was very happy, but I am sure that if the municipalities had been provided with a million dollars, they would have succeeded in building a dozen arenas where, for 20, 25, 30 or 40 years, thousands of young people would have enjoyed themselves.

Such a comparison is valid and I make it because I believe more than ever that it is important to supply the municipalities and the young with basic institutions which will last. As for the necessary basic structure, it shall be easy to provide once we have the basic tools with which to work.

It is unthinkable to organize a hockey game when there is a storm; it is unthinkable to organize a baseball or softball game when it rains. It is unthinkable, of course, to have games during the summer after 8 p.m., as we have no lights.

As for funds put at the disposal of municipalities they should first be discussed with the provinces and municipalities. I am convinced that they would be quite pleased to pay a quarter of these expenditures. The federal government would do something profitable and durable. It would seriously contemplate a policy on leisure.

This does not mean that the federal government should cease promoting sports in Canada, as it is now doing, but in order to properly compete with other countries, serious consideration should nevertheless be given to building arenas and training athletes who will do credit to our country.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot ignore the Opportunities for Youth program which in itself is still an excellent initiative but its application is quite questionable.

The government should seriously consider instituting programs of such a nature that they will serve society in general and at which the young people could work and earn a substantial income during the summer.

At present, the government makes thousands of young people believe that they will be able to develop a project. Unfortunately, these young people will be greatly disappointed. In spite of funds amounting to about $35 million earmarked for this year's program—which is a commendable effort on the part of the government—it will find that thousands of youths will be very disappointed with this policy because out of six projects only one will be accepted. In view of these circumstances, I should like to remind the government that it would be better to change not only the selection of the projects, but also the manner in which the program is outlined.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but wish for the disappearance of this evil which is unemployment. Also, I should like to tell the government that in my constituency north of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Berthier, springtime erosion has for many years caused problems to the municipalities of Saint-Sulpice, Lanoraie and Lavaltrie, which are situated along the shore of the river. Would it be possible to ask the minister that funds be earmarked for the construction of a retaining wall? The St. Lawrence River is a waterway very important to navigation. The technical innovations in the area of shipping are progressing as rapidly as in other areas.

East of those municipalities, a dam was built a few years ago so the riparian owners send me every spring requests for subsidies from the Department of Public Works to check the devastating erosion. The hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) could say the same since the city of Repentigny is in the area I am referring to, between Montreal and Berthier. The hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Yanakis) is also certainly aware of that problem.

Now instead of spending such amounts of money every year, as it has been done for a hundred years only to carry few stones for makeshift repairs, I believe we should build a permanent retaining wall. An important project of that kind would provide employment for a good number of unemployed and riparian owners would be secure. Indeed, they are worrying very much this year about erosion that threatens not only waterfront lots but buildings also. Therefore I should like the hon. minister to consider the possibility of appropriating credits for carrying out such a project. Municipalities made several representations to the Department of Public Works but on account of the standards established a few years ago, nobody wants to assume responsibility for that erosion. Now, we know very well that the water level was raised for shipping purposes, which is a serious cause of concern for waterfront owners. A project of such magnitude would give jobs to anxious workers for a certain time.

Also I would like to mention that the riding I have the honour to represent is still awaiting a review of the designated areas which was promised and which hopefully should be announced by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand). Saturday last, the city of Joliette officially requested from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion that it be given a more advantageous designation than that granted to the riding I represent.

[Mr. La Salle.]

The economic situation of my riding is neither better nor worse than in other regions. But I believe that my riding is as much in need of these benefits as some neighbouring ridings—of which I am not jealous—which have been granted a more advantageous designation.

I am again inviting the hon. minister to consider once more our request most carefully as he always does. In fact, two years ago, it was my pleasure to be informed by the minister himself that my riding would be granted 10 per cent on all investments and $2,000 on all new jobs. But since some ridings may be granted up to 20 per cent and $5,000 for each new job, the situation is becoming quite difficult for my riding and mainly its municipalities, not counting the city of Joliette which is making tremendous efforts with a well-organized industrial commission. But we have lost the odd economic injections because of unfair competition.

As we are living in a just society, the minister will no doubt study this question very seriously and be in a position, before June 30, to give some good news not only to the voters of Joliette but also to the whole area which owing to that development will experience an extensive economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that my time limit has expired. I regret being unable to carry on with my remarks as I had more to say, but I shall end by further calling the attention of the Minister of Finance to the urgent needs facing the voters of the constituency of Joliette that I have the honour to represent.

[English]

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, may I extend my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) upon his first budget. I add my congratulations to those of others who preceded me in this debate. I was most pleased to find that the government had finally decided to leave behind the concept of the 2 per cent cost of living escalator and adjust payments so that the actual increase, in percentage terms, in the cost of living will be added to the incomes of those in Canada who are 65 and over. I have been questioned by many on this point, particularly by people in the middle income groups. They suggested that the government was abandoning the principle of selectivity and returning to the universal type of program. May I say, for the benefit of those who feel that way, that the new approach does not conflict with the principle of selectivity. Inflation hits everyone, not only those who are lucky enough to have saved a fair amount of money and have an income for retirement. I am happy that the present Minister of Finance was the one who introduced this cost of living escalator which will apply to those I have mentioned. No one in this country needs help more than those who have served their time, so to speak, in the work force of Canada, who are now retired, and who have little or no defence against the onslaughts of inflation.

I was pleased to recognize, as everyone here recognized I believe, that this budget is a growth budget. It indicates great faith by the government in the private sector of the economy. Over the past few years, the country has faced the problem of unemployment. Without doubt, the problem is serious and the government has taken a number of public measures in an attempt to correct this problem. It is now realized, I think, that the government has more or less come to the end of its tether in this field. It is recognized that we must turn to the private sector of the economy and give that sector the impetus that is required if we are to provide jobs and get Canadians back to work. Without doubt, private industry, which includes both big and small businesses, will be tempted to take advantage of the provisions in the new budget which are helpful. Without doubt, business will want to increase profits, to increase its take so to speak; it will be tempted to do that instead of increasing the number of jobs in the country. The minister has indicated that he will be watching the situation closely to see that this does not happen. I certainly urge him to do so. The thrust of the budget urges Canadian companies to invest in Canada and to create jobs for those in this country who are still unable to find jobs.

While I am talking about this matter, I should like to say something about spending, particularly public spending and public grants in the economically slow growth areas of the country. In my opinion, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been doing a great job. Yet I think more is needed, and I do not think that more grants from that department are necessarily the answer. If, over the years, a certain area of our country has become depressed, if that is the right expression to use, it has become depressed for a reason. For instance, perhaps there are not the raw materials available nearby to warrant the establishment of a manufacturing industry. Perhaps the area is far from markets. There could be a number of reasons. The weather might be a factor. For all those reasons as well as for others, private industry may not have seen fit to invest in an area.

The government, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, holds out inducements for companies to invest in these slow growth areas. In so doing, it necessarily creates side effects. There is always another side to the coin. In other words, you might set up a pulp mill in New Brunswick, only to find that that pulp mill competes with another mill in Quebec. The pulp mill in Quebec might find it hard to meet this competition. Additional competition is created as a result of a grant given to an industry in a certain area. Numerous examples could be cited. I am suggesting that the government might consider undertaking capital expenditures in areas of slow economic growth. In this modern age when communication from continent to continent is practically instantaneous, there is no reason in the world why all government buildings, departments, and major government investments need to be in one particular area in Canada. Large capital government expenditures could be made very usefully in the slow growth areas. They certainly would not produce jobs in the way a steel plant or a paper mill would, but government jobs are jobs. With government people working in these areas, service industries would grow. I think that this concept, combined with the concept of DREE, might go a long way toward eliminating some of the disparities which presently exist in our country because of regional problems.

During the course of this debate, many members have stated that this budget is, in effect, a countermeasure to the United States DISC program. I do not feel that is necessarily the case. There is more than one market in the world. I agree that the United States is the closest and most accessible market, but we should not overlook the huge market that is developing in Europe as a result of the enlargement of the European Economic Community. Canadians must look to that market and must tap it. There are 250 million to 350 million people in that market, and it is ready to be tapped. However, we want to tap it from Canada rather than from within the structure of the common market, as some American multinational companies have done. This budget will, I hope, encourage Canadian processing and manufacturing industries to process and manufacture in Canada at economic rates that will enable them to compete well in that huge market across the Atlantic.

We feel that the American DISC program is aimed at us, but that is not the case. Our friends to the south have a real problem. The few American multinational corporations with headquarters in the United States that invested in Europe last year managed to sell $14 billion worth of merchandise in the European common market from plants which they established inside the boundaries of that market. The total number of companies in the United States were only able to sell $4 billion worth of goods to that market. The Americans are quite justifiably concerned. They see these plants being established with American capital, while the jobs are held by Europeans. Therefore, there is some reason for DISC. This budget is a step in the right direction, but I do not believe it was aimed at combatting DISC. Rather, the proposals were made with a long range view to enable Canadian industry to compete in all markets of the world, not just the American market, and compete efficiently.

During the course of this debate, many members referred to the unhealthy state of the Canadian economy. Practically every other word from the opposition benches was about the terrible mess in which the Canadian economy is today and has been recently. I say to them, as one bull said to another when asked how his heifer was, compared to what is it lousy? Compared to what country is the Canadian economy in a mess? It has been said by someone much more learned than I, in a context I cannot recall, that no man is an island. Neither is a country nor a family. You can only compare a family man with his next door neighbour, his neighbour in the next city or the next province. The same holds true for a country. You can only tell if it is doing well or poorly by comparing the efforts made within it with those in other countries.

Should we compare ourselves with the United Kingdom, where at the moment the unemployment rate is about 6 per cent, the inflationary rate is about 10 per cent and the growth rate over the past 15 years has only been 4 per cent compared to our huge growth rate? Should we compare ourselves with that country? If this country is in bad shape, what should one say about the economy of the United Kingdom which is being so efficiently run by a Conservative government? Should we compare our economy with one of the socialist countries in Europe where inflation is running amuck, where the cost of social services is so high that governments are concerned about whether there will be some sort of revolution because of the tax burden being carried by the average individual in each of those countries? Should we compare Canada with Sweden? There is probably more unrest in Sweden today than in any other country in Europe. The tax burden is so high the people are rebelling. That country has a socialist government. Should we be compared with the United States where inflation is running between 6 per cent and 7 per cent, even with price and wage controls? Unemployment in that country is running at 6 per cent.

I think I can say with confidence that we can compare our country with any industrialized country in the western world and we can hold our heads up high. We can be proud of our performance, but we cannot be satisfied because there are people out of work and we must take care of them. Many people say that the rate of unemployment in Europe is not nearly as high as in Canada. That is quite true. However, their unemployment statistics are compiled in a different manner. They do not consider a 14 year old to be a potential worker. His ability to work or have a job is not taken into consideration when their statistics are compiled. I do not say that the European unemployment figures are fraudulent, but there is a lot that is covered up.

When checking, out of a hotel in Europe, you may have to wait 45 minutes because, no matter how modern the hotel, there is not a billing machine in it. There are 15 men in the back office working with pens calculating your bill. In this country we have computers to do the work of those 15 men. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pointed out on many occasions, we could have a high rate of employment if we scrapped a lot of our machines. However, we do not want to do that. We want to urge business to take this budget and go to work. We want them to put those dollars and tax savings to work, invest in Canada and create jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity of taking part in this budget debate which, in a sense, is a discussion of the economic state of the nation. It is obviously a surprise to some hon. members that we are still here to take part in the budget debate. Had I believed all the things I saw last week I would probably not have been making a speech here, but somewhere else. So, we find ourselves here today assessing the economic state of the nation, just as a few days ago, obviously, someone assessed the state of the Liberal party and made certain decisions as a result. Noting the fevered expectations and forecasts of the past number of weeks I am reminded, not of the finest poetry in the world, but of a most memorable passage by Macauley which reads:

• (1630)

Was none who would be foremost
To lead such dire attack;
But those behind cried "Forward!"
And those before cried "Back!"
And backward now and forward
Wavers the deep array;
And on the tossing sea of steel,
To and fro the standards reel;
And the victorious trumpet-peal
Dies fitfully away.

So, we are not to have an election after all. If it is obvious by its self-diagnosis that the state of the Liberal party is not too vigorous, it is equally obvious from reliable external and internal indicators that the health of the nation is much less vigorous than it should be. It may well be that hon. members, such as the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy), believe we have never had it so good, and, believing this, are impelled to communicate this sentiment to the Canadian people time and time again. I cannot muster up the statistics to make such a statement, and I suggest they will not be regarded as being very credible by those to whom they were offered. As we look at this budget, we have to make an evaluation not only of the document itself but of the kind of economic policies which preceded it and the kind of economic conditions which permitted it. So, we are in fact looking at the whole of the record of the government which took office with immense expectations and with much acclaim some four years ago. The present minister's budget, like the economy over which he presides, derives from the decisions or non-decisions, the judgments or non-judgments of his predecessor, so our appraisal has to be somewhat in depth.

[Mr. Murphy.]

Members who support the government have of course waxed enthusiastic about this particular budget and have thrown bouquets in large numbers at the new minister. All I can say is that this is a better budget than the several which preceded it, nurtured and nourished no doubt by the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson). It is interesting, however, that the present budget is evidence of a significant turnabout in the economic policies of the government. It is interesting, also, that the man most responsible for that turnabout should be the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: —who has revealed in his quiet and thoughtful way a grasp of the economics of this country which has far exceeded that of people opposite. If any savant in the party supporting the government wants to know why public opinion polls are showing greater and greater support for this party, it is because month after month people are appreciating the economic wisdom of the Leader of the Opposition. I will give the government that diagnosis for free. If they are thoughtful, they will note his suggestions for our economy which preceded the turnabout of the former finance minister. They will note, too, how perceptively he has analyzed the economic situation. Many of the better moves of the present minister, and in his latter days of his predecessor, were made when they picked up some of the suggestions of the Leader of the Opposition. In his very fine speech during the budget debate, he presented two further important suggestions which I think will find favour among Canadians and have an important effect upon the national economy.

To take satisfaction out of the state of Canada's economic affairs today is surely an exercise in myopic non-observation. How can we strut about and say how well off we are, how beautifully things are going, when unemployment stalks the land year after year? In the old days of classic economic teachings, we were told that these two things came in sequence; inflation might follow unemployment. But the present government has mastered the art of bringing them on simultaneously and continuously, seemingly with no prospect of making either one of them disappear. There is far too much poverty in the just society, too much inequality among Canadian people and among the regions of Canada.

I happen to come from a region which knows the pangs and inequity of regional disparity. The province of Prince Edward Island, so richly blessed in many ways, is today in the unenviable position of having the highest unemployment rate of all the provinces. We have even surpassed Newfoundland. The figure for March was 16.2 per cent, and combined with this, figures on the cost of living which I have just received today, show that the index in the City of Charlottetown, taking January, 1969 as a base of 100, stands, in April of 1972, at 114.5. Compare that with the figure for another area, St. John the home of my whip, known for its high cost of living—109.8—and 106.7 for the other Atlantic centre, the city of Halifax. So we have the effects of both inflation and unemployment, uniquely painful to the people who must endure them simultaneously. In these circumstances I find it very difficult to tell the people of Prince Edward Island or the people of the Atlantic region they have never had it so good. Ask the young people of Canada how things are going today? Ask the graduates who are coming out of our fine universities by thousands and thousands. Ask them if the economy is going well. I talked to a young student the other day. I said: "Have you applied to the Canada Manpower office for a job?" He said: "Are you kidding? I have been there 45 times."

Much was made by some speakers this afternoon of various programs, including Opportunities for Youth, and the LIP program. They offer something, of course, and with our statistics so high in the realm of unemployment, of course we welcome them. But what happens when the six or seven weeks are over? What happens when the $38,000 or $58,000 or $78,000 is spent and the 12, 13 or 15 jobs peter out at the end of the project? These are mere palliatives. They are not nearly enough for the hundreds of thousands of Canadian people, especially the young who are crying out for opportunities. We all know very well that the projects which are accepted are far outnumbered by other projects, probably of real value and virtue, which are rejected.

We have had discussions in this House during this debate on the general question of regional disparity. A hard and dispassionate look at the statistics—though it is difficult for me to be dispassionate—indicates that the gap is not narrowing. By many important economic indices it is broadening; getting worse. Yet we have a situation where practically the whole country is a designated area. I suppose this is part of the reason that when practically the whole of the generality becomes the special, there is nothing very special left, because almost everything becomes a designated area.

I was much interested in the intervention of my hon. and learned friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who was euphoric almost to the point of excitement over this budget. He thought it was one of the greatest that had ever come along. On May 15, as reported at page 2259 of Hansard, he said:

> According to those who are in a position to judge, Canada has a record second to none throughout the world in recent years in terms of the expansion of the economy and the control of inflation.

So, mention was made of controlling inflation. Another modest outburst came a few paragraphs later when he said:

> In the last three or four years, we have achieved a record that is second to none in the history of this country.

He then designated the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) as having worked well abroad on behalf of Canadian industry, though earlier he had said that if Oscars were given out for economic performance Canada would have been one of the recipients. He might not have been so timid and suggested that we should have had them all. In other words, whatever proposals were made by the minister would not be designated, as were Swift's, as modest proposals.

I thought it interesting that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should intervene so strongly on behalf of his colleague the Minister of Finance. Then, I reflected upon it a bit and came to the conclusion that it was not so strange really because it is in fact in the external world that some of our great problems have arisen. Things are happening there that are injuring our domestic economy. One of the areas where I have quarreled consistently and differed continuously with the present government is with regard to their white paper projection of a foreign policy for Canadians. Hon. members will recall the following paragraph on "Foreign policy in essence":

> In undertaking this review the Government has been constantly reminded of its need and responsibility to choose carefully aims, objectives and priorities in sufficiently long and broad terms to ensure that essential Canadian interests and values are safeguarded in the world situation where rapid and even radical changes can be anticipated as normal rather than exceptional conditions. Canada, like other states, must act accordingly to how it perceives its aims and interest. External activities should be directly related to national policies pursued within Canada, and serve the same objectives. Diplomatic relations are maintained and strengthened for a wide variety of reasons—among others, trade expansion, collective security, cultural contact, co-operation in development assistance, exchanges in science and technology.
> Such relationships have to be kept under review to ensure that they continue to serve Canada's objectives effectively. Those may change as both Canada and the world change. In essence, foreign policy is the product of the Government's progressive definition and pursuit of national aims and interests in the international environment. It is the extension abroad of national policies.

I think it is not. I think foreign policy is much more than that. As a decent, responsible and well-endowed member of the international community, we should think of foreign policy as much more than an extension of our domestic situation.

Also raised in this debate is the opposite issue, the effect of external movements and non-movements on the domestic situation. External developments and decisions have affected, and affected unhelpfully, our domestic economy. I believe that this is one of the serious weaknesses affecting our economy today. When we do have a foreign policy debate I should like to discuss the "neo-Mackenzie Kingism" which pervades our foreign policy, but I am more concerned today at the statement made by the deputy minister of trade in Czechoslavakia that Canada could be selling more goods there except for the fact that Canada itself is dragging its feet.

On May 3 a very interesting compilation of statistics by Statistics Canada was issued on March trade. According to a report in the Ottawa Citizen of that date:

> Exports during March this year totalled $1,501 billion, barely above the $1,498 billion figure for March, 1971, Statistics Canada reports.
> The slight increase was the result of increased exports to the U.S. and declines in exports to almost all other countries.
> Exports to the U.S. rose to $1,119 billion from $1,041 billion—
> The statistics indicated a trend to increased Canadian dependence on the U.S. market is continuing, despite federal government efforts to open up other foreign markets. Exports to Britain were $8.6 million for March, down from $90.9 million a year earlier.
> Other declines: Japan, down to $55.4 million from $75.8 million; West Germany, down to $17.6 million from $26.9 million; Norway, down to $18.3 million from $24.3 million; Italy, down to $14.9 million from $20.8 million; Australia, down to $12.7 million from $22.5 million; Venezuela, down to $8.7 million from $20.1 million; Belgium-Luxemburg, down to $5.9 million from $12.4 million; and India, down to $5.1 million from $9.7 million.

This is a dreary threnody of trade declines to the very kind of country to which our export trade should be booming. Exports of newsprint fell, as did exports of aluminum, copper and automobiles. Is this the kind of record, Mr. Speaker, that is second to none, with an increasing dependence upon the United States market and a continual slipping in other very important markets? Instead of patting ourselves on the back for how well we are doing, I think we should and must make vigorous efforts to stimulate trade all across the world today, and to diversify our trade.

I was amused—though I am sure this was not meant unkindly—by the denigration that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made of the former minister of trade and commerce in the government that I supported. This hon. gentleman was known as a great and aggressive promoter of Canadian trade, and he has been constantly needling and nagging the present government to expand our trade in the markets of the world. Why do we not have more trade offices if this is what is needed? Can we not negotiate with those on each side of the Iron Curtain for more trade offices? If we have to do a better job of selling our goods, then what is holding us back? This is part of this withdrawal syndrome. There are ten countries in the world that have full-fledged ambassadors and embassies in Ottawa to which we have yet to appoint any ambassador. We have not reciprocated the representation.

We have not even yet got around to appointing a High Commissioner to Barbados, a country of 200,000 people which for several years has had a three-member high commission in this city. We have not appointed an ambassador solely accredited to the European Common Market, and if there is any economy or political aggregation more important on today's horizon than that vast united Europe which is developing with the admission of the United Kingdom and other countries, I do not know what it would be. Is this government aware of what is taking place? As I say, Sir, we have not got around to doing what many other countries have done, appointing an ambassador in Brussels solely accredited to that vast and growing aggregation.

Let me read from a very modern and able economist, Dian Cohen, writing in the Toronto Star in respect of the admission of the United Kingdom to the European Common Market. She says:

> What is possibly more significant in the long run is that Canada is increasingly being left out in the cold by a world which is aligning itself into massive trading blocs. We are rapidly reaching the point where our only role in the world economy will be to react to external events.

Then, what will we tell the producers of Canada? Will we say then that they have never had it so good? We are in danger of being left out and losing our trade capacity with many of the countries forming the EEC, as well as others out of it. Should we not be concerned and troubled?

Many of my colleagues have dealt with our relations with the United States. Many have described how the government has blown an uncertain trumpet, lo these many months. Do the people of Canada know what is going to happen with the TAPS route? Do they really know what is going to happen about the Mackenzie route? Do they really know how much our government has studied either one of them, and do they really know how forthrightly, clearly and consistently our government has conveyed its views to the United States on either one of them? Is it too fearsome a prophecy to suggest that the people of Canada, if they do not watch out, will end up with both routes and have the invidious dangers to the environment from both of them, not just one? Are they given clear information on this?

Have the people of Canada been told where we stand and where we do not stand on the growing European community? Do they know what we are doing about the possibilities of trade with that area? Do they know what has been done about the market we once had with the United Kingdom? Has the government been alert to the dangers of a rapidly changing world economy?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am glad there is someone who is satisfied. Speaking of uncertain trumpets, I just heard one.

I would look at another area of great concern, and I see my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) is here. He is an expert in this field. What are we doing to protect the industry which today is probably in more deadly peril than any other, and that is the historic fishing industry? This is a prime industry of this country, and the situation is hurtful to the whole industry and hurtful to the whole of Canada. We have made great proclamations and talked about a 12-mile limit. No one gets in there; no Australian ships are allowed in there, and no Swiss ships are allowed in there. Of course, they do not come anyway, but those that do come have historic rights which they still hold. We have seemingly made no effort, diplomatically or otherwise, to oust those who are bringing depradation to the great resources of the sea off the east coast and off the west coast as well. In the face of the problem with the Danish government in reference to salmon, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) screwed up his courage and suggested a personal boycott, but it was clearly ordained the day after that it was a mere personal boycott.

Have we successfully asserted our claims to fisheries management over the continental shelf? There are so many issues that cause thoughtful people great anxiety I am convinced that it is the mismanagement of things abroad which has been one of the large contributors to the ills of our economy at home. We are missing the boat in trade; we are withdrawing from those areas of world activity where we should be functioning at a high pitch with intensive involvement; we are failing to be vigorous in markets of the world and, as I documented a few minutes ago, we are losing markets which are precious and valuable to us. These are the kinds of things which must be considered not only in this debate, but which must be and will be considered by the Canadian people. It is that consideration and that kind of forecast of what conditions should be that is no doubt the reason we are still here and not out on the hustings testing the wind of public opinion on the economic mismanagement of this government.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North-Nipissing East): Mr. Speaker, I deem it a privilege to participate in this debate at this particular point, following the speech we have just heard by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). To start off my speech this afternoon, I should like to give him an example of the great economic savings and advantages which are the record of his present leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in this House of Commons. Let me quote from a report of a meeting of the Standing Committee of this House of Commons on National Resources and Public Works when the Atomic Energy of Canada officials appeared before it a couple of weeks ago. At that time the chairman asked the following question of Mr. Gray, President of Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited:

As you know, we are purchasing heavy water from as many areas in the world as we can. Can you give us the names of those countries and the costs that we are paying per pound for that heavy water at the present time? By comparison, what would heavy water cost us if we were in a position to produce enough to service ourselves as a nation?

To this question Mr. Gray replied:

We have bought a lot from the United States at varying prices starting at $24 a pound, going to $28 a pound, going to $30 a pound, and they have just announced that the price is now $39 a pound. We bought some from Sweden at $31; we bought some from Russia at two prices, $30 and I think the last was around $32 a pound; and we bought some from Britain at $30 a pound. We have leased some from Argentina at a 7 per cent charge, which we have to send back.

Had Glace Bay—

This is the plant which was originated by the hon. Leader of the Opposition in this House when he was Premier of Nova Scotia. Quoting again:

Had Glace Bay produced heavy water, as it was supposed to do, we would be in a surplus position and would not have had to buy any of this expensive heavy water. This runs into quite a few millions because their contract price started at $20.50 a pound and dropped down to $16 a pound, for an average of $18.15. That is the same number for the Canadian General Electric existing contract. At the moment we have been buying their production at $20.50 a pound. So you can see that there is a big mark-up between $20 and the new price of $39. I suppose we have averaged $30 a pound over all this production, which is something like 1,600 tons. We have paid at least $10 more a pound, which comes to around $30 million extra.

• (1700)

Is this the type of economy or the kind of economic measures the opposition in this House of Commons would offer to the Canadian people at a time when this government has the best record in many fields of any nation in the western world today?

Let us start looking at some of the positive things in life. We live in a nation which has the greatest potential. I believe the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) was correct when he asked whether, because with all the faults at our own doorstep, we ever compared our economy and problems with those of other nations in the world. I have asked this question in this House before, and I ask it again. Who would exchange his way of life in Canada today for that of a person in any other nation in the world? Let us stand up, be counted, and go ahead with a positive attitude for the development of this country. I say on behalf of all members of this House of Commons if some of the backbenchers in this House of Commons were listened to once in a while, those who have firsthand knowledge of their constituencies, and if their recommendations were taken to heart and proper measures followed, we would not have some of the problems which exist today at all levels of government.

I shall give a positive example of this. I do not pretend to be a prophet, but on October 22, 1970 in a speech in this House of Commons as recorded at page 475 of Hansard I stated the following:

I want to say a few words about transportation. It is my view that equitable freight rates and good roads are important in developing the Canadian economy, as are our very worth-while policies of regional economic expansion.

I wish to say at this stage that I am not a critic of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I remember the days in 1962 when there were nearly 3,000 people in the unemployment rolls in the city of Pembroke at a time when members of the official opposition were in power. Not one single effort was made to alleviate the unemployment situation in that area at that time. I give the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) full marks for at least having the gumption and intestinal fortitude to stand up, be counted, and produce a program whether or not he may be criticized for the administration of it. It is only the doers in this world who are criticized and not the armchair critics.

In that same speech of October 22, 1970, I also stated:

We in the Ottawa valley have always been plagued with unsatisfactory road conditions. If there is one thing we badly need, it is a good highway artery.

Let me give the House a good example of what I mean. The bridge in the centre of the town of Petawawa that spans the Petawawa River was built before the first troops moved into Base Petawawa in 1907. Today, it is called upon to handle all the traffic moving into Base Petawawa from various parts of the country, as well as traffic destined for Chalk River. Invariably there is a big traffic jam right in the middle of the town of Petawawa during the rush hour, and it is nothing for cars to be lined up for three miles. One morning about two weeks ago the nuclear laboratories at Chalk River lost $2,000 in wages which the Crown Corporation had to absorb because employees were late through no fault of their own. Renfrew County Council has brought this problem to the attention of the Minister of Highways of Ontario. It sent a resolution to the Minister of Highways of Ontario requesting the early completion of the proposed highway 417. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) and myself were asked to support this brief, and we did so.

In reply to my letter to the Minister of Highways, the Hon. George E. Gomme, I was informed that roads were not the only problems in eastern Ontario, and that if we had really wanted to admit it, another problem was lack of economic development policies. He suggested that if the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and myself had succeeded in getting the area designated, this would have gone a long way toward solving our problems. In other words, the minister was trying to pass the buck to us. Let me tell the Hon. George Gomme that the hon. members for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and Renfrew North have now done their homework and we are looking for him to do his.

I delivered that speech shortly after the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and I had succeeded, through speeches in this House, and through talking to party officials, in convincing our ministers in this House of Commons that the Ottawa River valley is very important, very much like parts of the Maritimes. It is also very closely related to the Maritimes. A number of us who have relatives in these areas travel back and forth. We were able to convince the ministers concerned that this area required economic policies. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion saw fit to declare our area a special area under regional economic expansion. We have reaped some benefits from that program.

Let me tell you, however, what has happened since then with regard to Mr. Gomme's statement to me that another problem must be met which was related to economic development. I stated we had done our homework on this subject. Mr. Gomme, as Minister of Highways and his successor, the new Minister of Transportation and Communications, as late as January 28, 1972 advised the then Minister of National Defence that no second bridge was required across the Petawawa River because a start was to be made on highway 417. Shortly after that, an announcement was made that construction would start in 1973. Originally, the starting date was 1975. I can only say that in 1869 the Canadian government bought the Hudson's Bay Company land in western Canada in order to build a railway across this nation. Without the technological knowledge we have in this modern age, the Canadian engineers of that day built the Canadian Pacific Railway across this nation and had it completed by 1885. We have such a progressive Department of Highways, Transportation and Communications in Ontario today that it takes several years to build a very important bridge across the Petawawa River.

At midnight of May 6, the present bridge collapsed, the very bridge about which I spoke in this House two years ago. At that time, I wrote a letter of complaint to the highways minister of the province of Ontario and received an arrogant answer from him. When the bridge collapsed, several families were stranded on the north side, the site of the Canadian forces base, Petawawa. In order to get the military personnel to assist the civilian authorities, the request must come from the province concerned. I made six or seven telephone calls to Queens Park, Toronto, to try to locate a provincial minister, but I could not even get an answer from the switchboard at Queens Park, Toronto. I even made a phone call to Ottawa to try to locate a provincial minister. Is this the kind of progressive government that this great new Colgate premier of the province of Ontario is giving us today?

On Sunday, May 7 I sent a telex to the premier of Ontario requesting that a state of crisis be declared and that emergency measures be taken to assist in dealing with this problem because about 4,000 employees cross the bridge daily to and from work. My telex was backed by one from the warden of Renfrew County who is head of some 40 reeves across the county. It was also backed by a telex from the mayor of the city of Pembroke, one from the mayor of the town of Deep River and one from the reeves of Petawawa township and the village of Petawawa in which the military base is located. As of today, May 23, the premier of the province has not even had the courtesy to acknowledge a single one of those telexes from the elected officials in the area. I do not care what the premier of the province thinks of me as a person, but I respect his office and I expect him to respect what I represent, even if he cannot respect me personally. I also expect him to respect the office of the warden of Renfrew County, of the mayor of the city of Pembroke and the mayor of the town of Deep River. That is the least we can expect.

The old ball game has started once again. People have started asking, for what are we paying the Canadian armed forces? The bridge collapsed 450 feet away from the gateway to the second largest military base in Canada. First of all, let me point out that this bridge is part of a provincial highway and it is not the responsibility of the Department of National Defence in any way. They cannot take action until they are requested to do so by the province of Ontario which must take full legal responsibility for any action taken after the collapse of the bridge. The armed forces did not receive a request from the province of Ontario until the Friday following the collapse. Finally, the engineers checked the site toward the end of the week. The approaches to the river banks were built by the province, the abutments were put in by the province and the province took full legal responsibility for that action. I want to pay a compliment to the Canadian armed forces because General Quinn, commanding officer at base Petawawa, his staff and his military personnel have cooperated fully, and had it not been for them I do not know what we would have done. They followed the correct procedures.

Yesterday, 150 engineers from the Royal Canadian armed forces were on duty all day constructing a Bailey bridge. They started at eight this morning and at four p.m. they had 70 feet of the 260 foot span built. This shows the expertise of our armed forces, and it shows what they can do when they are asked to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: I do not want to hear it said that our armed forces today are not a professional group.

In the time that I have left, I should like to make a few remarks about an interprovincial national park that will make a great contribution towards achieving greater unity in this nation. We in the northern part of my constituency, in the area to the north of the Mattawa River and on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River in the county of Témiscamingue, are working closely together to create the first interprovincial national park in Canada which would include areas on both sides of the Ottawa River. We are doing this not only as an example of unity between the two major provinces in central Canada, but because we know that people from all the urban areas of southern Canada, from Ontario, Quebec and the other provinces, will go into the national park when it is finished, will be travelling and talking together and thus will get to know one another.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is a great admirer of Sir John A. Macdonald. I, too, have read a great deal about him. He was a great asset to this country because of his flexibility in the early days of Canadian history. You will all remember that in 1864 he made his famous speech in Charlottetown in which he said—and I will not quote his exact words—that if you fellows and we fellows could get together once in a while and talk things over, we would learn what a wonderful person each one of us is. We want people from all areas of Quebec, as well as ethnic groups, to come to that interprovincial national park because they will share common interests. We want them to socialize in the restaurants and recreation complexes that will surround the national park and to get to know each other.

This will do far more for the unity of the nation than the political confrontations and the uprisings and disturbances that have taken place lately. We have to take positive steps toward this goal. It was with that thought in mind that I introduced two private members bills for first reading in the House a few days ago. It was rather interesting to hear the comments that have been made following the introduction of the bills. First of all, I am sick and tired of seeing the symbols of various countries abused, specifically the flags representing those nations. I recommend in these bills, and I will recommend on any platform, that the tearing down, the burning and the desecrating of the Canadian or of provincial flags be made a criminal offence, and I recommend the same thing with regard to the flag of any foreign nation lawfully represented in Canada.

I would like to recount an anecdote which appeared in the Canadian Press. I refer to an article in the Globe and Mail of May 2 which reads as follows:

• (1720)

Under two private bills introduced in the Commons yesterday it would be illegal to deface the official flags of Canada and even the U.S. Stars and Stripes or China's Red Flag.

The bills, introduced by Leonard Hopkins (L, Renfrew North) would make it an offence to harm the flags of Canada or the provinces and of those countries whose governments "are legally represented in Canada."

Anybody who "destroys, disfigures, mutilates, defaces, defiles, desecrates or casts contempt upon the Canadian or provincial (or the prescribed foreign) flags is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction," the act says.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that it does become an act. There is an interesting anecdote to this. You know that we have some famous open line programs on our radio stations. It is amazing to hear the intelligent remarks made on some of these programs. I understand that one interesting commentator on a Kingston radio station picked up my bills and started a great discussion about who is this guy running around protecting communist flags? What is he doing all this for? Apparently I was the subject of heated debate in the whole Kingston area. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this kind of publicity. There are some politicians who say that publicity is good for you, whether it is bad or good. I do not entirely agree with the former, but in any case this gives me a chance to speak on the Kingston radio station in an area where I am partially known, being a graduate of Queen's University, one of the fine old institutions in this country. I will be very interested to meet this intelligent commentator. Having taught school for 12½ years and having handled every grade from one to 13, I am not sure in which category this commentator falls. However, it will be interesting for me to make a clarifying statement when I am there, and I shall quote from my bills with great delight.

In all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have from this House, and particularly from the front benches of my own party, the strongest possible support for the interprovincial national park that we are trying to create between Timiskaming and that great district of Nipissing. This is part of the area that was represented by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Legault) before he gave it over to me, and what a lovely gift it was! While I am on this subject, Mr. Speaker, on a personal level may I say that it has been a great pleasure indeed to have such a fine gentleman and co-operative colleague to the north of me. He will be retiring from parliament at the end of this session, and I wish him every success in all his endeavours thereafter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: The Ottawa River, Mr. Speaker, will run right through the middle of our proposed national park. I am sure the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre), in view of the experience he has had in this regard during the last few days, will agree with me when I say that according to statistics 3 per cent of the logs that have been floated down the Ottawa River and its tributaries over the last 125 years are still lying in the Ottawa River. Statistics also indicate that an average of 5 per cent of the logs floated down these rivers by lumbering companies during the past ten years are still at the bottom of the Ottawa River. I received representations from groups who were interested in cleaning up the Ottawa river. A pilot project was launched last summer and one group formed a company. They took out a couple of thousand of these logs. Some were 50 years old, and they piled them up on the shores.

Shortly thereafter they were moved to a sawmill and the lumber products and by-products produced were of a high calibre and quite merchantable. This group has been offered, free of charge, all the logs lying in the Ottawa River owned by the companies that floated them down the Ottawa and its tributaries over the years. This group is now the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, and it is made up of all the companies that have ever driven logs on the Ottawa River. To give credit to the Ontario government, Mr. Speaker, it has cancelled the timber dues that would normally be payable on delivery of these logs. Here we have the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company, made up of all these other companies, willing to donate all these logs lying between Ottawa and Lake Timiskaming. The company has the expertise to do the job. It could employ 200 men. It could feed sawmills on both the Quebec and Ontario sides of the river and create employment. We have many people who are capable of undertaking this type of employment because logging has been a long time tradition in the Ottawa Valley. However, it costs more than $4 per log to put each log out on the river shore.

We have gone to several government agencies but cannot find support for this program. Mr. Speaker, I chaired the committee which passed the Canada Water Act three years ago, and the Ottawa is one of the river basins that will come under the regulations issued pursuant to that act. The Canada Water Act says that the polluter must pay, but how are you going to make the polluter pay if he went out of business 30, 40 or 50 years ago? This is a new field of operations today. I am using the Ottawa River as an example. I am sure there are many other rivers across the country from which logs could be salvaged and which could form part of a good solid program of conservation. I strongly recommend to the government that this be undertaken, either as a manpower training program or that funds be provided through the Department of the Environment to assist companies like this to clean up waterways and help promote tourism. Many of the outlying areas of Canada are not likely to get steel mills, tire plants or other sophisticated industries.

We have two major industries to offer. One is forest products, which we want to protect, and the other is tourism. We want to make our area as inviting as possible to all the citizens of Canada, the United States, and everywhere else throughout the world. If we are given the money to do the job, we will do it. I strongly plead with the cabinet to provide funds to start this program off either through Manpower, Finance, or the Department of the Environment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Pursuant to Standing Order 40, I have to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows:

[English]

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Unemployment Insurance; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—Human Sciences; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—Grain.

[Mr. Hopkins.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance), that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West), (page 2178).

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on his new portfolio and his first budget. I think he deserves credit for the workmanlike way in which he has approached his task. The good news that unemployment declined a bit this month, encouraging though it is, has been off-set by a further increase in prices. And the worst is yet to come. Recent wage settlements have reached new levels and signal even greater price increases in the months ahead.

It is not surprising, therefore, that a recent nation-wide poll aired on the CTV network program "W5" showed inflation as the problem uppermost in people's minds, with unemployment a close second. The country remains in the depths of economic crisis. Is it any wonder, under these circumstances, that there is so much unrest, alienation and a growing trend toward anarchy?

One thing is becoming increasingly clear—four more years of "London School" economics and Canada will split down the middle; Quebec will separate. The social unrest in that province has a largely economic base. There is a very high level of unemployment. Prices are rising. The level of taxation there, as in other parts of Canada, is excessive. Home ownership is becoming a rich man's dream. And wages in many cases, including segments of the public service, are well below $100 a week. People with family responsibilities cannot exist at that rate. The headline in one Montreal newspaper recently underlined the extent of the unrest when it said that Quebec lags in the national economic and employment upswing. It said that notwithstanding the impetus in employment of the last month, Quebec did not share proportionately in even that tiny improvement which took place.

Is it any wonder that there is so much labour unrest? Of course, the present struggle has an ideological tint. Some of the most powerful labour leaders have openly declared their opposition to our private enterprise system. They want to overturn it completely and replace it with their own ill-defined brand of socialism. But they are still a very small minority. The great majority of the workers they represent do not share their philosophy. But in a climate of unemployment, inflation, high taxes and inadequate wages, passions are easily aroused; mob reactions are easy to excite.

To cool the present unrest, some pretty dramatic economic improvement is called for. The federal budget was a small step in the right direction, but totally inadequate to cope with the size of the problem. Tax cuts for manufacturing industry will spur development and assist in offsetting the United States DISC program. Minute adjustments in old age pensions will help but in no way compensate our senior citizens for their substantial loss of purchasing power caused by years of inflation.

On the other hand, the decision to let personal income taxes rise 3 per cent to their former unreasonable levels at the year end is a step backward. Manufacturers are not going to expand their capacity unless ordinary people have enough money, after taxes, to buy the additional output. Instead of an increase in personal income taxes, a further cut for low and medium income earners is urgently required both as an economic stimulus and in the name of justice. Failure to disclose this decision to allow personel income taxes to rise at the end of the year was an error in judgment on the minister's part. It raises question marks in the mind.

Another omission of serious proportions was the government's failure to "come clean" and estimate the likely shortfall in the unemployment insurance fund which will have to be made up as a budgetary item. One local accountant of repute estimated that the shortfall would be between $400 million and $500 million, or even higher. If provision had been made for this estimated shortfall, the anticipated budgetary deficit would be double that announced by the minister; in other words, his estimate could be as much as 100 per cent in error. If this kind of falsification were inflicted on an unsuspecting public by a private corporation, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andras) would cry "Foul" and probably lay charges. Yet the federal government sets the example with impunity.

Most important of all, the budget provided no measures designed to control inflation. The government has gone from one extreme to the other. In 1969-70, inflation was uppermost in their minds and was to be controlled even at the expense of higher unemployment. Now the government says its number one priority is jobs and although lip service paid to the concept of modest price increases, in reality, through its inaction, the government shows that it does not give a hoot about rising prices.

If the government really cared about inflation it would have introduced some form of incomes policy with teeth in it. By one means or another, wages and profits have to be controlled where monopoly power exists. The wage-price spiral must be stopped. Sanity must be restored. The government's abortive voluntary guidelines approach was doomed from the start. A much more realistic approach must be taken if the economy is to be brought under control. Action Canada believes that very simple controls of monopoly power would allow us to pursue the twin goals of full employment and zero inflation. This would be the foundation for an enhanced quality of life.

The classic approach to combines and monopoly power has been anti-combines legislation, but this approach has been almost totally ineffective. The reason, of course, is that oligopolies seldom make formal agreements to set prices. The matter is usually decided around the luncheon table, no records are kept and no evidence exists which would stand up in a court of law. The classic approach has not worked and does not work. And labour unions are not subject to anti-combines legislations at all, so their monopoly power is totally uncontrolled.

There is no alternative to mandatory price and wage guidelines if we are to pursue vigorously and effectively the twin goals of full employment and stable prices at the same time. There are the demands of the consumer. If there is any other solution, I have not heard of it. Monopoly power, no matter what it is called, has to be restrained. Abuse of power by a privileged minority does violence to the principles of a free society.

Someone has referred to the frightening prospects of wage and price controls. A grim picture is painted of a bureaucratic morass similar to that imposed in wartime. Mention was made of ration cards, etc. This comparison of the present situation with that existing in wartime is really quite irresponsible. In wartime there was a physical shortage of goods and services of all kinds. Rationing was essential. In wartime the inflationary pressures were caused by too much money chasing too few goods. It is in these circumstances that black marketeering develops.

Today there is no physical shortage of goods or services of almost any kind, with the possible exception of housing. Today there is an excess of products and not enough money to buy them in the hands of people who need them most. Today rising prices are caused by rising costs. To compare the present situation with the wartime situation is so unbelievably absurd that one wonders why any intelligent person would do so. A red herring of that kind hides the real world and adds nothing to rational debate; it only adds to the depth of confusion.

Wage and price guidelines are not comparable to the bureaucratic controls of wartime. Bureaucrats should not set individual prices. Bureaucrats should not set individual wages. They are not competent to do that; no one knows it better than I do. The kind of price guidelines I suggest would merely limit profits to a certain level of return on capital invested, or in some cases on sales, equal to the long-term experience. Companies would set their own individual prices as they always have in peacetime. Wage increases, where contracts exist, would be limited to the average increase in real output per person in the labour force. Individual wages would be negotiated between management and labour, as they are now, but the total settlement could not exceed the guidelines. In this way union monopoly power would be subject to the public interest and price stability would be possible. Most important of all, this would permit the continuous pursuit of full employment policies.

The pursuit of full employment policies is critically important. The present high level of unemployment is self-destructive and is undermining our society. It has had disastrous consequences for thousands of individual Canadians. I speak with feeling on this matter, Mr. Speaker, because the people of my riding, Trinity, are directly affected. They are people with incomes below the national average. They are people who work with their hands. They work in construction and in factories; they are needle workers and office workers. They are people who are directly and immediately affected by any downturn in our economy. Many of them have lost their jobs and their capital goods as a result. Many of them have cashed in their insurance policies and used the proceeds to meet current requirements. I know of one family which had to give up a house after having made mortgage payments for 20 years. It is this kind of distress which cannot be taken lightly. It might be different if it were necessary, but in a country like Canada it is completely unnecessary and for that reason some of us feel impelled to speak out loudly on behalf of these people.

Reducing the present totally unacceptable level of 6 per cent unemployment to, let us say, 3 per cent, which would merely represent those persons changing jobs, would require a fantastic increase in capital investment. At the rate of $25,000 capital investment per person it would require an additional $7.5 billion to provide jobs for 300,000 people. When I use the figure of $25,000 capital investment per person, I am reminded by my economist friends that that figure is much too low; they suggest a more realistic figure would be $50,000 per person. If one is to use the figure of $50,000 per person, the amount required would be $15 billion.

The government has failed to realize the magnitude of the job. Its relief to industry will help provide jobs for new people entering the labour force, but no provision has been made for the investment required to do more than nibble at the backlog. That fact has been underlined by the figures I have quoted. The backlog of capital investment required in order to bring unemployment down from 6 per cent to about half that figure, which might be considered satisfactory in this country, would be somewhere between $7.5 billion and $15 billion over and above that which normally would be required to provide for new entrants to the labour force.

It is perfectly obvious that if the Canadian economy is to survive and prosper, monopoly power must be effectively curbed in the public interest. The size of the political vacuum in Canada today can be measured by the fact that none of the existing parties is willing to undertake this difficult, thankless but essential task. If Action Canada's policy is put into effect, we will then be in a position to solve a whole series of related problems.

At the present time we are underproducing by $3 billion to $5 billion dollars a year in real terms. This is due to the unemployment of men and underemployment of machines. If we went to the full employment solution we would have an extra $3 billion to $5 billion of resources annually, over and above normal growth, to use for the elimination of poverty, the elimination of slums, the construction of urban transportation systems, the provision of adequate housing, the control of pollution and the development of Canadian industries and resources by Canadians. That is a tremendous amount of resources and would finance many homes at $25,000 each, the rehabilitation of many old houses at $5,000 to $6,000, the construction of sewage disposal systems, of garbage recycling systems, the supplementing of incomes at the low end of the scale and for more adequate supplements for old age pensioners, and the provision of meaningful employment for young people.

In summation, the government has failed to level with the Canadian people. The government has failed to take steps adequate to cope with the present level of unemployment. It has done nothing to relieve the tax burden on the lower and middle income groups. It has provided inadequate relief for our senior citizens and, finally, the government has stubbornly refused to take the action necessary to curb the abuse of monopoly power by big unions and big business in order to restore price stability and protect the weak and unorganized. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, the government deserves the censure of this House.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, because the first part of this budget, old age security, the guaranteed supplement legislation and the war veterans pension legislation has already been debated, there is no need to discuss these problems further except to say that the government has moved from its position of making the old age pension static at $85 back to some degree of universality for all Canadians regardless of their economic status. The move of the government a year ago to freeze the old age pension at $80 and gradually phase it out and relate it to the income of the individual has been thwarted, at least for the time being.

I now come to what the budget is doing for business and the economy of the country, that segment which sustains the welfare of Canadians. In this respect the government has been woefully inadequate. Its moves will not help this country to surmount its problems in unemployment and its relations with the outside world, particularly the United States. The stepping down of Mr. Connally, the tough-minded individual who made a start on realigning the policy of the United States both financial and trade, indicates that we are at the end of an era. The regime of Mr. Connally indicates that as a dominant western nation the United States has had to make moves in the interest of that country to strengthen and turn around the balance of payments of the American economy.

The United States has served notice that we cannot expect further favoured nation agreements with the inauguration of the inquiry into Michelin tire exports, the alleged dumping of aluminum into the United States, the controversy over the Canada-United States auto pact and its implication that we are getting the best deal. They have served notice that our manufactured goods are facing increased surveillance protectionism in the United States market.

Similarly, the strong American protectionist sentiment established the union espousal of the Burke-Hartke law in the United States with their proposal that the present American economic structure exports jobs from the United States. We can make no mistake about that. This refers to the export of jobs to Canada in branch plants, and so on, and the American unions have indicated their support for any move to prevent this.

What are the main problems facing Canadians in the immediate future? It is quite obvious that unemployment is of vital and immediate concern. Consequently, what will be our industrial and commercial strategy to provide jobs on a strong growth basis for the years ahead? The unemployment level is far too high, with over 600,000 persons being classified as unemployed. However, much of this unemployment can be ascribed to the high birth rate of the fifties. With a drop from the birth rate of the fifties and indications of a continuing drop, we are now witnessing a drop in the labour force. This will become progressive and in another five years or so there should be no need to create jobs in large amounts.

The jobs needed should be generated by a modest growth of the economy. The government's strategy of tax cuts to manufacturing and processing firms will not be of much value. I object to treating various sectors of the economy in a wildly different fashion. That is what this cut for manufacturing and processing does. There is a strong case for leaving the allocation of resources to the normal competitive processes of the market rather than using crude and non-reliable tax concessions. These introduce a new sense of distortion into the functioning of the marketing system and substitute therefor the judgment of the Minister of Finance as to what types of tax relief make for growth in our competitive system.

This policy will create more disparities in the various regions of the country and will benefit areas which are now considered largely aggressive. It does not do anything for the western grain industry which exports well over 10 per cent of our total export earnings into world markets other than the United States. This tax concession to manufacturers and processors will not in any way help the agricultural industry. I cannot even see where meat processing plants will benefit. There is no obvious reason why the manufacturing sector of our economy should be favoured. It is a myth that only the manufacturing sector creates jobs. Studies have shown that most of our manufacturers have to find a market in the United States and, seemingly, this area will be increasingly closed in the immediate future.

If the government is interested in creating jobs, it is going about it in the wrong way. All economics show overwhelmingly that the service area is the biggest producer of jobs in an immediate way. If it is necessary to counteract the DISC program, it would have been more appropriate to have a similar plan in Canada to encourage exports. The cut in corporation tax for manufacturing and processing firms will benefit companies which receive high profits in the short-run and will do nothing for companies that are getting started or are not in a profitable position. Indeed, it is estimated that substantial savings will end up in the United States treasury due to the fact that many profitable manufacturing firms are American owned.

Erratic variations in tax rates do little, even if they are favourable or result in a lower tax rate. A budget was brought down in June, 1971. This was followed by the 7 per cent temporary tax reduction last October. The tax reform legislation passed last December attempted to set out tax schedules for the ensuing three years. Now we have another haphazard change with the 9 per cent tax cut for manufacturers and processors.

Then there is the added uncertainty of defining what is manufacturing and processing and what is not. It could be months before these will be defined by the tax department. This makes it impossible to plan ahead intelligently. Large industrial organizations need to plan at least three years in advance, so long-term plans must be passed upon something more than the whim of the Minister of Finance. Frequent changes in tax rates are counterproductive. All people recognize that uncertainty about expectations inhibits investment. Businessmen do not know what to do because they cannot anticipate which parts of the economy will be supported or what will be the duration of the assistance.

Mr. Speaker, the budget implies that investment can better be stimulated by tax reductions to corporations than by across the board tax cuts. Our main deficiency today is still consumer demand; only when consumption catches up with investment in a significant range of industries will more stimulus be needed. The tax reductions for corporations will call forth little additions in investment. There is still plenty of unused plant utilization available for expansion.

At the same time, personal income taxes are going up as a result of the expiration of the temporary tax reduction. Over the past 20 years the Canadian government has become increasingly dependent on personal income tax as a source of revenue. The increase in direct taxes upon individuals over the past 15 years is almost twice as great as the increase in direct taxes upon corporations during the same period. An across the board tax cut in income tax at least for those below the $20,000 bracket would have the effect of increasing consumer demand, which we need immediately, and of contributing to savings, the ultimate source of investment and growth.

There is one area in which the Minister of Finance can quickly and easily increase economic growth and provide immediate jobs. He can clarify the investment provisions as they affect small companies in the sphere of ineligible investment income. An analysis of the affairs of small companies is showing that the relevant provision in the tax bill just passed is having a most damaging effect on the formation of new, small companies created by the investment and savings of other small companies. In its attempt to close the loophole of using the small company as a tax avoidance area, the government has drastically slowed up enterprise in this area. New, small companies quickly create jobs as compared to larger companies which require a longer period of planning. They are particularly important to areas of this country away from the large cities where pools of capital have been concentrated.

The accelerated write-off and the provisions of the budget expanding capital cost allowances for machinery are a simple recognition that taxation policies have been changed to respond to corporate wishes. This type of program will be utilized as a gimmick by many companies to derive maximum tax benefits. These changes will not have much impact on our high unemployment rate because they cannot be implemented by many corporations on short notice. These capital cost allowances permit the deferment of taxes which could result in increasing the cash flow. In subsequent years these same corporations will have written off many of their assets and therefore could be short of funds to pay their taxes. This happened in the late 1960s following the previous period of accelerated depreciation.

Constantly introducing tax changes will have only a temporary effect on our economy. Our economic difficulties have their origin in the Benson, Basford and Bryce proposal which flocked out of Ottawa and have been aggravated by the level of the Canadian dollar which is in turn the result of improper fiscal and monetary policies. It appears the Liberals have been converted to Social Credit theory in vain efforts to bring down the exchange value of the Canadian dollar. There have been astounding increases in the money supply.

Over the last two years the annual increase has been close to 18 per cent. Increases in money supply of this magnitude have fueled inflation but have had little apparent effect on the Canadian dollar which continues to creep higher. Also, over the past two months the Bank of Canada has used more than $200 million to buy U.S. dollars and thereby restrain the level of the Canadian dollar. Certainly $200 million could be more advantageously spent.

What is needed now is gradual, expanded stimulus; in other words, lower taxes in all categories. Good fiscal policy should be implemented to effect real demand in all sectors of the economy, including exports. The Trudeau cabinet continues to try to substitute its adjustments for those of the marketplace.

Elaborate variations in the treatment of a particular segment of the economy, the manufacturing and processing group, illustrate the administration's bias but little else. Frequent shifts in taxation rates, four changes within one year, create so much uncertainty that investment decisions will not be made. Tax cuts for corporations ignore the common sense view that investment is not going to increase while excess capacity abounds. The shift and emphasis to give more weight to personal income tax was illustrated by the effective increase in personal income taxes which will become payable next year and, as well, corporations which do not fall into the manufacturing category will find their rates go up by 7½ per cent on the first of next year.

The economy is suffering from too much pushing and prodding. Broad tax cuts would bring down the external value of the Canadian dollar and we could be sure that savings eventually would be channelled into spending and investment, perhaps even into plant expansion if necessary. If secondary manufacturing needs help, surely it could be provided in much better ways. Encouragement of export activities is one area in which government could do something. Trade bloc agreements would be of great benefit to the Canadian export industry. We should allow our economy to function and do the things that it does best.

The preferred treatment to manufacturing given by this budget would seem to indicate that the government is embarking upon a so-called industrial policy on the basis that manufacturing is the area which needs help. There is serious doubt in the minds of many people that manufacturing will provide the entry into world markets which Canada's industrial machine is seeking. In a report of the Science Council of Canada published in October, 1971, and entitled "Innovation of a Cold Climate", there are some very interesting statistics. They show that between 1961 and 1967 manufacturing employment increased by 25 per cent. In 1968 this growth faltered and has remained static since. This is not because of lack of technologists because Canada has been graduating these people by the thousand.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

The decline in this area has been in part brought about by technology itself being able to supply the same volume of goods with fewer employees. It is significant that in Canada it is precisely those industries from which most was expected in employment, tax revenue and consumer benefits which are now in difficulty.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was quoting some statements made by the Science Council of Canada on the difficulties that manufacturing is now experiencing in Canada. They said it is significant that in Canada it is precisely those industries from which most was to be expected by way of employment, tax revenue and consumer benefits that are now in difficulty. No new manufacturing industries are in sight, and low technology industries simply cannot shoulder alone the responsibility of meeting our expectations of a better standard of living. The adoption of appropriate over-all monetary and fiscal policies will take the country back toward a satisfactory rate of economic growth. What is needed is to eliminate the elements in the tax system which inhibit growth and promote inefficiency.

The budget takes no cognizance of the increasing change in the approach of youth to the work ethic. Youth is questioning the goals and values of education and the effort involved is seeking a diploma. We have always had this, but it is on the increase in today's society. An increasing number of student dropouts are coming from all sections of the economy and a growing number of young people are opting for non-employment. It is becoming increasingly feasible to live on part-time wages, a situation fostered by a relatively affluent welfare system and an unemployment insurance scheme which in effect is a modification of a guaranteed income.

It seems likely that a growing number of tomorrow's employees will not have the same ideas and aspirations of those of today. Economic, social and political structures will have to be prepared to accommodate these changing attitudes in planning modifications to job content. It is to be kept in mind that employment is becoming increasingly concentrated in the service sector. All this indicates that society is questioning traditional values. The failure of the budget to continue the service aspect of our society must be looked upon as one of the detrimental features of this budget.

I wish to turn for a moment to the foreign investment proposals put forward by the government. In Canada's case, foreign investment is synonymous with United States investment which is the investment we fear. It seems ironic that at this time the aims of the DISC program in the United States, which is causing such consternation in Canada, are the same as those of the proposed foreign takeover committee proposed by the cabinet. Both are designed to keep United States investment at home, and this will provide jobs for Americans.

If United States investment can be an instrument of domination, it is also the principal vehicle of technological change. It introduces manufacturing processes as well as new management techniques. It forces our manufacturers to rationalize and modernize, something they would not accept without competition. If we continue to permit outside investments or takeover, we will share in the profits that foreign investors make. Obviously these profits, spread throughout the economy, raise the general standard of living.

We could curtail takeovers by foreign companies, but they would merely establish or enlarge branch plants here with adverse effects on domestic companies. If we turn foreign investment away, these funds will go to other countries. On the other hand, foreign investment does impose limitations on national development in addition to the limitations inherent in the whole process of industrial activity.

For those of us in western Canada, the keeping out of foreign investment would mean replacement by eastern financial interests because of the need in western Canada for investment capital. The possibility of legislating against foreign investment, just as our present efforts to control it, would be negated because eastern capital would be in a position to force Ottawa to impose conditions in its own interests. The best thing to do about foreign investment is concentrate on everything possible to encourage industrial dynamism which will attract the entrepreneur of our society. Experience shows that the entrepreneur of new processes has a greater advantage over his rival and innovation is the major source of profit. We need to attract this talent.

The portion of this budget which deals with the economy of the nation is not conducive to steady and sustained growth. It will not provide jobs immediately, nor will it make provision for future years when our job needs will be less.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join members on all sides of the House who have expressed appreciation for the improvement to our economy which has allowed us to take on additional responsibility such as increases to old age security benefits, guaranteed annual income benefits, increases in veterans' pensions, and so on. We on this side of the House particularly, but perhaps members on all sides, can take deep satisfaction from the fact that the Canadian economy has moved forward to the point that even though we did have the most generous pension scheme of any in the world in these categories, we are now in a position to improve that scheme even further.

I do not want to argue that these pensions are high enough or completely satisfactory, but from time to time I think we as Canadians should remind ourselves that the levels of pension benefits were the highest in the world and are being improved even now. I think that is a tribute to the attitude generally of Canadians and their willingness to improve the economy and to share in that improvement in this way.

Mr. Nielsen: With inflationary dollars.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is now doing something I intend to deal with in greater depth in a few moments, that is, he is deliberately attempting to depreciate and downgrade the performance of Canadians in developing our economy by setting out distortions as to what is actually happening to the point that we do not as Canadians take as much satisfaction as we should.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: I have two main reasons for entering the debate this evening, the first of which is to set out in clear, concise and accurate terms the record of the performance of the agricultural sector of the Canadian economy during 1971 as opposed to not only the immediate preceding year but the previous ten-year period. My second reason is to refute this kind of distortion to which the opposition must resort when it does not have any better arguments.

I should also like to refer to misinterpretations and misrepresentations that have been made by some otherwise responsible members of the opposition when dealing with provisions in the budget which they claim to be discriminatory of agricultural production in so far as processing and manufacturing is concerned. Opposition members have had some success in this regard from time to time, in that they have fooled the public for a while with these distorted interpretations to the point that some sincere and well meaning citizens believe them. Therefore, I think it appropriate that we scotch these misrepresentations and misinterpretations early rather than assume that everyone will dismiss them for the kind of allegation they are.

Let us consider some of these misrepresentations. There are one or two other things I should say. Some of my colleagues from western Canada are now travelling about the country suggesting there is nothing in the budget of significance for western Canada. They repeat this to the point that they believe it themselves. It seems to me that the leaders of the governments of the prairie provinces, whether they be Social Credit, Conservative or NDP, have been going around the country attempting to attract manufacturing and processing industries to establish within their provinces. There is no more attractive way to do that than by developing a sustainable basis of the kind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) outlined in the budget in relation to corporation tax cuts.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, be serious.

Mr. Olson: As I suggest, every person in the four western provinces has talked himself into believing that the most important economic thrust we can make in this area is in attracting additional secondary manufacturing, including processing, to establish there. We have always agreed that the first stage in development should take place in primary industry such as agriculture, mining and oil and gas development. We have reached the second stage. We ought now to be encouraging secondary manufacturing, including processing, to establish and expand. It is in this general area that we find a higher labour input by Canadians.

It is fair to say that in the oil and gas industry, for example, exploration, development and injecting additional and larger volumes into the market stream will provide an impetus to our economy. I am sure this will continue. The petrochemical industry has only just begun operations in western Canada. I am sure it will gain a tremendous advantage from the cuts in corporation taxes which were made for this purpose. The accelerated rate of write-offs, up to 50 per cent, of the cost of new equipment going into this industry will be of tremendous advantage to western Canada.

The petrochemical industry is only one area in which there will be an advantage. Other industries to benefit include mining and the large-diameter pipe manufacturing plants in western Canada. That industry is only at the beginning stage, but there is the possibility or potential that it will develop the greatest pipeline building era in Canadian history. Many of these pipe manufacturers are located in western Canada. They will be in a far more competitively advantageous position as a result of this budget. The plants of the pipe manufacturing industry are located in Calgary, Regina, Camrose and Edmonton and the suppliers of this massive and ambitious industry are located in other parts of western Canada as well.

I have mentioned only a few industries which will benefit. We must remember the tar sands development in Alberta which has really only just started. We can envisage markets looming in the future of tremendous volume and range for the development of this resource. Certainly the provision in respect of depreciation of processing equipment, as well as the new tax structure, will be of tremendous advantage in this area. Hon. members from western Canada should look at the facts and give Canadians the hope and optimism justifiable as a result of this budget, particularly in the secondary manufacturing area which we all agree is the area in which we as a nation should be moving.

I should like to return briefly to the suggestion that there has been some kind of discrimination in this budget against manufacturers and processors who use agricultural raw products. Because it would be improper to do so, I shall not refer to the discussion which took place in committee. However, after this matter out of the committee public statements were made by some members of the opposition who for their own purposes wished to leave a distorted picture. They made a flat statement which was a misinterpretation of the whole matter.

An hon. Member: Who are they?

Mr. Olson: It would be easy to mention their names. They do not spend enough time in this House, so they are not here tonight. But the record is clear. They attempt to make bald, flat statements on the basis of a misinterpretation. They misinterpret what is in the budget. This carries them for a while: I agree that it has in the past. They say that anyone manufacturing or processing agricultural products will be excluded from the provisions in respect of the reduction in corporation tax or the accelerated write-off provision with regard to manufacturing or processing equipment. Very clearly, that allegation is not true; agricultural products which are being manufactured or processed will receive exactly the same treatment.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Horner: Will this apply in respect of all products?

Mr. Olson: The hon. member is doing exactly what he did in committee; he is asking the Minister of Agriculture to give a legal interpretation of the application of the law which quite properly comes under the Department of National Revenue. Then he will go out in the country and say he asked this question and the Minister of Agriculture did not answer. They know the Minster of Finance said there would be no difference. There are such things as washing, grading, and so on, which are not included but they are not regarded as further manufacturing or processing. If there is no substantial physical or chemical action which takes place in the process, this is considered as grading, washing, and so on. People who understand agriculture—unlike the hon. member for Yukon—know the difference between processing and preparation for market.

Another very important matter I should deal with is the attempt which was made earlier today by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and half a dozen others to try to explain away, in depreciating and degrading terms, the very significant improvement which occurred in 1971 in respect of farm income.

An hon. Member: Only because of a low in 1970.

Mr. Olson: I know they would have a great deal of difficulty in the farm area because of this garbage they have been peddling for the past two or three years. Farmers now know how productive the government's policies have been for their purposes. When we assumed office in 1968, so far as agriculture was concerned we made clear that the major thrust of the Department of Agriculture, and indeed of the government as a whole, in the agricultural field would be to turn the emphasis toward the marketing aspect of agricultural products because we believed the greatest enchancement of benefits for farmers would be available from emphasis in that area. I suggest that for years the Department of Agriculture has done an excellent job under all governments in those areas in which it has been active.

I suggest there are two main areas involved. One is in the resolution of production problems through such means as the research stations we have across the country, the health of animals branch, and so on. In other words, advance in production technology was one of the main functions. The department did this very well; in fact, it did it so well in many cases that the capacity to produce has far outstripped the advancement in marketing and marketing technology.

The second main area in which the Department of Agriculture has been involved is perhaps one which could be broadly described as the regulatory function. Making inspections and grading agricultural products such as vegetables, poultry, beef and so on in order to make sure that while these products went through the merchandising and distribution system the grades were maintained both on behalf of the producer who was selling and the consumer who was buying the product. As I have said, we made a deliberate announcement that the emphasis would be on the marketing sector for the purpose of improving the position of the primary producer in respect of marketing functions and structures. We have followed that policy consistently since that time.

We might look at the result of having done this for nearly four years in order to see what the rate of success has been. For example, Canadian farmers on the average in 1971 came through a much improved year. The average gross income per farm—by the way, this is something members of the opposition never talk about—rose to an all-time high of $13,589 in 1971 compared to $10,678 the year before. In other words, it is up almost 25 per cent. That just lays the basis. The average net income also rose in 1971 to $3,946 from $3,160 the year before. This is something I am sure members of the opposition will never repeat outside this House. That is an improvement of 23.6 per cent in just one year. That is pretty important, but it is even more important to point out that taken over a ten-year period the improvement is 70.3 per cent.

Hon. members like to hold up years like 1966, for example, and say that everything has gone down according to that one particular year. The Liberal party was in office in 1966 and does not want to take anything away from that great year. It was a great year for agriculture. No one denies that. We sold the largest amount of wheat, at the highest price, in Canadian history. There is no doubt about that. Hon. members, however, like to make comparisons between 1966 only and 1971. They do not want to make comparisons between 1971 and the ten-year average. All they want to do is make comparisons between that year and the highest peak, the year of the great surge in grain sales under a Liberal government.

I would like also to draw attention to the fact that total grain receipts in 1971 were up by $120 million over the year before. If hon. members would like me to spell out in detail the figures for oilseed, for barley, for oats and for wheat I would be happy to do that, but I can tell them that there were increases in every single grain commodity.

An hon. Member: There needed to be.

Mr. Olson: There are other bright spots that should be taken into account; for example, gross receipts from the sale of cattle and calves, which amounted to $1,034 million, were also the highest in Canadian history and were $60 million over the year before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: Cash receipts to farmers were up to $4,318 million in total, an increase of $151 million over the year before. That just sets out the main framework, the details of which I would like to fill in with respect to some of the commodities that were involved.

We used to hear a great deal of criticism from the opposition regarding the dairy policy. I am sure you have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that they have been strangely silent regarding the dairy policy in the last eight or nine months. The reason is pretty clear. I would like to go into detail on this but I am afraid I might not get extra time. Nevertheless, I should like to point out that people who have asked why we have not raised the price of milk by about 50 cents per hundred should know that the actual increases in milk prices—this varies somewhat from province to province because it is the province which sets the amount of payment to the producers—and the change in the holdback by the price changes that we took in 1971 and the improved market conditions, for which we take credit, amount to somewhere between 85 cents and $1 per hundred for the producers.

So when we hear misinformed or underinformed members of the opposition say that the increase was only 20 cents or 25 cents and that the farmers are asking for 50 cents, they should be reminded that the producers received increases on four separate occasions in 1971. The opposition will have to explain why they have been distorting the efforts of this government, because in the final analysis the farmers look more at the results than they do at complaints that everything is wrong.

Mr. Dinsdale: You can't fool the farmer.

Mr. Olson: I hope I have not run out of time because there are many more things I would like to speak about. These days we hear a lot about increasing the capacity of the grain handling system for what appears to be a growing demand in world markets for Canadian grain. Certainly the performance of 1970-71, when we sold 706 million bushels of grain, was an all-time record. This year we will exceed it by a great amount. But what we need to bear in mind and what needs to be recalled from time to time to put this matter in perspective is that the volume we are putting through the grain handling system is increased by 30 per cent or 40 per cent over that which most of the experts believed to be the absolute maximum only four years ago.

However, what is more important is that this was done without massive capital outlays. It was done by improving and making more efficient the use of the facilities we already have in place, such as railways, terminals, cleaning facilities, ship loading facilities, and so on. It has been said over and over again, yet it does not seem to get through clearly, that three or four years ago with the procedures that were used at that time most people involved in the industry thought that 500 carloads per day at the west coast was the absolute limit on a sustainable basis.

Last fall, before we had difficulty with the heavy snows in the mountains, we were in fact putting through up to 700 cars per day on a sustainable basis. This spring, now that we are getting the volume of cars through the mountains—and I am sure there will be some difficulties, some more slides that will tie up rail lines from time to time—on several days recently we have unloaded as many as 950 cars a day with those same facilities, while three or four years ago it was expected that 500 to 550 carloads was the maximum sustainable capacity.

Back in 1968 it used to be thought that the maximum that could be put through Thunder Bay was around 1,000 or 1,200 carloads a day. Now we are approaching 1,900 carloads a day on a sustainable basis. We have no doubt at all that with the kind of co-operation we have had from the grain industry, and with some new procedures that have been brought in, we will be able to put through 30 per cent and perhaps as high as 50 per cent more without any massive capital investment. I think that speaks for itself. We were going to really come to grips with some of the bottlenecks we had had in the grain industry and make maximum use of the facilities that were already in place, and we have achieved this—

Mr. Nielsen: Did the railroads have anything to do with it?

Mr. Olson: Yes, the railroads were co-operating. Obviously we could not get 2,700 or 2,800 carloads to export positions unless the railroads co-operated, and we could not get them through the terminals unless the terminal operators co-operated and put them through. So this is a tribute not specifically to the government but to the whole industry for the kind of co-operation they gave us. The hon. member for Yukon has never bothered very much about all this because he did not know, and he still does not know, anything about it; but there are members on the other side who know about the new block system, the exchange of cars at the terminal and some of the improvements in grain handling facilities. They have always said that would not do and that we have to commit oursleves to the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, more storage, and so forth. We have established very clearly that there is much more capacity in the system and what we need is co-operation from everyone. This has been achieved.

Mr. Dinsdale: The government has pulled its socks up.

Mr. Olson: That is not all. We believe that much more can be done in the marketing arena to be helpful to the producers. We believe that the absence of a representative of the producers at the table where the price is determined has been detrimental to the producers' interest in the totality of the marketing system.

If traders are going to make these kinds of determination, and they are working on margins rather than on the absolute amount that is paid for a commodity. For example, obviously they can get along just as well on a two-cent margin between 10 cents and 12 cents on hogs as they can on between 30 cents and 32 cents; in fact, in some cases better. But it is a big difference to the farmer whether hogs are selling for 10 cents or 30 cents. The spread to the traders is the same. Therefore, we are determined to do everything we can to make sure there is a producer representative at the table where theses kinds of prices are determined, a representative whose vital interest is the producer and the return that he gets.

Much has been done and much more will be done in this area and also in the promotion of products in both the domestic and export markets. I remember what happened with respect to honey producers shortly after I assumed this office in 1968. They were in a desperate situation because they themselves had not been directly interested and involved in the marketing of their product.

Mr. McKinley: They still are.

Mr. Olson: I cannot hear what the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) is saying.

Mr. Nielsen: He said they still are.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Olson: When I took this office they were being offered 4 cents a pound for honey and not only had their 1967 crop on hand but almost all of the 1966 crop; and they had the 1968 crop approaching, with almost no barrels in which to store it. They are in a much happier situation today and, by the way, the price is now three or four times as high as the initial offer was then.

We have received many representations from the sheep and lamb industry during the last few years. They had received deficiency payments during the last 12 or 13 years and during the whole of that period there was a decline in returns received from wool. Mr. Speaker, there is a general decline in wool prices all over the world, mainly due to competition from synthetic fibres. One thing which is certain is that making that deficiency payment did nothing to enhance the producers' position in the market place, particularly when there was a viable, growing market for fresh Canadian lamb. Last week I called a meeting of representatives of the industry. To cut a long story short, Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members read the press communiqué issued following that meeting. If they do, they will see it is probably an historic event, a turning to the better for the welfare of the sheep producers because they will now in a co-ordinated, co-operative way be involved in the marketing of lamb.

In the first year of the scheme we have offered to finance the development with funds up to $250,000 and we will stay with it for five years with a financial commitment so that the producers can put their own house in order and get a decent return for the high quality of their product.

Mr. Woolliams: They can't wait five years.

Mr. Olson: We are starting right now. This is not one of those on-and-off governments; when we make a commitment we stay with the job until it is done. I hope, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet run out of time. Hon. members opposite seem to think that Bill C-176, which is now the National Farm Products Marketing Act, was the only action the government took to help producers do things in the marketplace for their own benefit. That is only one of a dozen things we did.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I take it I have unanimous consent to continue.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, if the minister continues for only one or two more minutes, that will be all right; but we have a list of scheduled speakers and we could agree only to a minute or so for the minister to conclude. I am sorry to do this because he has been very revealing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): This would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). I will take only another 60 seconds. I had hoped to outline the tremendous progress we are making to enhance the position of egg and poultry producers and the position of the potato industry. I am sure hon. members will await with great expectation the successful results of the progress now being made in all these other areas, all of which adds up to the prospect of a much brighter agricultural industry in Canada.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the first comment I want to make is to note that on this day, more than two weeks after the introduction of the budget on May 8, we are on only the third day of the budget debate. This is a very unsatisfactory situation. It is one that should be avoided in the future. By the device of delaying the debate the government can diffuse criticism and discussion of the budget. After all, Mr. Speaker, the budget is the single most important statement made in the House during a session and it requires priority consideration. In this case the budget is so vulnerable that I can understand why the government wanted to diffuse the situation, particularly if a federal election had been called prior to last weekend, as had been planned.

The first question that must be asked is whether the budget is good for Canada and Canadians. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) obviously thinks so, as he asserted in his budget address. His address amounted to an act of faith in corporations, in their capacity and benevolence to act in the best interests of Canadians. His philosophy can be summed up in a phrase: what's good for corporations is good for Canada.

The minister maintains that his budget will produce new jobs. Possibly it will. But will it produce enough? The minister in effect acknowledged that he was on shaky ground when answering questions in the House and questions that I asked him in committee. While he continued to assert his faith in his proposals, he refused to divulge unemployment projections for the balance of the year and would not even give a range of expectations for such factors as the participation rate, an important factor, and only expressed himself very cautiously in extrapolating the trend based on the latest monthly figures.

I cannot help but notice that whenever the government wants to give the economy a boost it always thinks in terms of machines. Thus, we have generous capital cost allowances which permit corporations to buy machinery and equipment this year, write off 50 per cent of it this year and the remaining 50 per cent in 1973. Thus, a firm can buy a piece of equipment on December 31, 1972, and have it completely depreciated for tax purposes by December 31, 1973. Some deal! Who benefits? The branch plant type of industrial structure that we have in Canada means that our own machinery industry is not adequately developed, so Canada will not even benefit much from purchases made as a result of this incentive.

The minister must also take into account the fact that often putting machinery in place displaces jobs. This, of course, involves the age-old problem caused by displacement of labour when machines are introduced. No one in Canada wants to stand in the way of technical progress, but I suggest that the momentum of technology and scientific advance, with proper encouragement, will bring a sufficient rate of progress. But why stack all the cards on the side of machines? We are only making more problems for ourselves.

It is maintained that there is a shortage of capital in our economy. But it is also obvious that in the present situation we have a labour surplus situation, a labour surplus only from the point of view of the current functioning of the economy and not from the point of view of real needs. So what does the Liberal government do? It makes the situation worse. It increases the need for capital and in some cases it will aggravate the job situation. If it is possible to build into the tax system incentives based on machinery and equipment purchases, why is it not possible to build in incentives based on net creation of new jobs? Why not introduce incentives for the employment of people?

I do not minimize some of the problems that may be encountered in developing a satisfactory system, but surely it is the only approach that makes sense in this regard. The government cannot take comfort in the contention that the labour force-job situation will balance out in the long run. In the meantime the misery, the hardship and privation that the government has caused millions of Canadians is inexcusable.

The most important feature of the government's generosity to corporations is the cut in the corporate tax rate from 50 per cent to 40 per cent. This carries with it a number of important consequences and implications. First, it makes a shambles of tax reform. Let us for a couple of minutes look at the history of the situation. The Carter report when presented included a plan for a rational tax system. It was to be a neutral tax system within the framework of a basically capitalistic economy. By the time the government produced the white paper, this concept had been modified considerably and it was tinkered with to a good extent.

Following the hearings by the committee of the House and the "blood" paper, the government presented proposals which were watered down even more. Bill C-259 in the previous session was introduced. During the course of debate on that bill more changes were made. Very few of those changes, I suggest, were beneficial to Canadians as a whole. One of the few areas of beneficial change involved co-operatives and credit unions. Much time during the debate was spent on technical points of interest only to corporations. At the same time, I must say that the concept involved in those discussions was based on maintaining a certain balance between taxation received from individuals and that received from corporations. Now that is being altered.

We have not even heard from the minister a statement of the philosophy, principles or approach to be taken by the government. In addition, on January 1, 1973, income tax for individuals in Canada is to be increased by 3 per cent. At the same time there is to be a 20 per cent reduction in tax for corporations. What will that do to the balance between the two tax sources? Are corporations to contribute the amount that they ought to contribute to the total tax system and to public expenditures in Canada.

Of course, the budget papers say that in 1972-73 individual income taxes will account for about 44 per cent of total government revenues, and corporation income taxes about 15 per cent. The budget figures are based mainly on collections under present rates, before the new rates come into effect. The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) suggested in this debate that if one calculates the effect of these changes in 1973 when the total changes come into effect, we shall find that about 49.9 per cent of total revenues come from individual income taxes and about 12.2 per cent from corporations.

We must also be concerned about equity. Under the present proposals of the Minister of Finance, the lower rate of corporate tax is to be available only for manufacturing and processing industries. That is also the case with respect to capital cost allowance provisions for machinery and equipment purchases. I ask, what about the other sectors of the economy? The minister really has not any justification in equity for the changes he has introduced in the budget.

The minister has also said on several occasions that these measures are the Canadian response to the situation created by the United States Domestic International Sales Corporation legislation. Obviously, serious problems must be dealt with. Who will be the winners? Who will gain as a result of some of those things which have been done? I suggest that the firms that are to gain the benefits of reduced tax rates and special allowances in Canada are largely the same firms that are establishing DISCs in the United States, and that move will virtually free them of tax obligations on foreign sales. I ought to make clear that I am referring to the DISC legislation in the United States concerning the last point. I ask, again, who will be winners in that sort of situation? It will be the corporations, obviously. And who loses? I suggest we do. I suggest that we Canadians will bear some special losses in this situation.

The government had to respond to the situation. It was caught in the whirlwind of its past policies of depending on foreign capital to such a great extent. The minister's response indicates that he is still going to rely on a passive role on the part of government in the operation of economy, in keeping with the traditional capitalistic approach to such matters.

I have deliberately dealt with the situation in Canada. We are all concerned about the future of Canada. I am concerned about the future of Canada as a nation. We must examine the total picture when we examine documents such as the budget address. Nevertheless, there are also regional considerations to be considered. Since I come from western Canada, Saskatchewan, I want to discuss some regional considerations that affect us in western Canada. The obvious question I must ask is, is the budget any good for western Canada?

Mr. Dinsdale: No.

Mr. Burton: I was interested in the comments of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who made an impassioned plea on behalf of the manufacturing industries. His remarks seemed to be rather out of tune with the role he is supposed to play in this government. It seems to me he tried to make the best of a bad situation. He suggested that there will be a few industries in western Canada which will benefit from the special corporate tax rates. What these tax rates will do to their operations remains to be seen.

The Minister of Agriculture should also bear in mind, when he is talking in western Canadian terms, that one half of manufacturing production in Canada is centred in Ontario. That province, of course, makes a great contribution to Canadian wealth and Canadian well-being and I do not downgrade it in any way. It seems to me that when the Minister of Agriculture attempts to suggest that these special measures which will benefit the manufacturing industry are good for western Canada, he is totally off base.

Mr. Dinsdale: He is straining credulity.

Mr. Burton: The Minister of Finance did not even make a nod in the direction of western Canada. He did not have a word to say about problems that concern western Canada. His statement was aimed solely at central Canada and the Liberal party's concern about fixing up its relations with big business in the largest financial and business centres of central Canada. The closest point relating to western problems was a fleeting reference to agriculture in his speech and in the economic review which was tabled earlier.

I should like to review for a moment a couple of comments that the Minister of Finance made in the budget address concerning agriculture. The first statement I refer to is as follows:

> In agriculture, a very rapid rise in productivity with a corresponding decline in the need for farm workers, has necessitated a continuing process of adjustment.

What has been the result, Mr. Speaker? Rural Canada is being denuded of population and the minister has not even hinted that he opposes the process under which the rural populations of Canada are being denuded. He did not question this matter at all; he simply seemed to suggest that he wants to see more of it and he hopes the process will continue. He also ignored completely the fact that the real increases in productivity had not been reflected in income figures to an adequate extent. The second statement he made about the farming situation was as follows:

> Here a wide range of federal programs have been put in place, including price supports, organized marketing, long and short-term credit, favourable tax treatment, and production development aid. New measures only recently introduced have improved all of these programs.

I suppose I cannot blame him for bragging a little about some of these things. Although he expressed a great deal of satisfaction, I suggest that in this area there is no cause for it. Tonight in his speech the Minister of Agriculture quoted certain figures. He suggested that the average farm net income in Canada for 1971 was $3,946. Mr. Speaker, I think one should bear in mind that that represents the farmer's return on his invested capital, on his labour and that of his family, on the management he provides—and the return averaged $3,946.

The Minister of Agriculture had the nerve to brag about that figure. He said it was higher than the 1970 figure which, at $3,146 per farm across Canada, was even more disastrous. Here, I suggest, is one of the major causes of poverty in Canada which this government has failed to tackle. Of course, in his speech the Minister of Finance said that last year farm income rose by almost 25 per cent over the level of 1970. I think it was fatuous to compare the 1971 income with the disastrous level of 1970. That is not the sort of comparison one ought to make.

It should also be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the 1971 net farm income of farm operators across Canada totalled $1,730 million. True, it is higher than some years, but at the same time it should be kept in mind that this figure compares with $1,868 million in 1951 and $1,878 million in 1952. In 1971 we were still below the level of 1951 and 1952.

I notice that in his address the Minister of Agriculture made reference to the dairy industry. I do not think the minister should be bragging about this situation. He claimed that opposition members were not saying much about this matter lately, and seemed to be taking some credit for the situation. The minister of Agriculture must have overlooked what the Minister of Finance said about this situation in his budget address. The minister said:

> The dairy industry is currently benefiting from a substantial firming in world price levels—

He did not indicate this was as a result of government policies or good government planning. This came about in spite of the type of planning carried out by the government. The government should not have too much to say about this situation because they were doing everything possible to restrict dairy production at a time when world demand was rising and a shortage of dairy products was developing at the international level. The Minister of Finance also said:

> —and this year exports of grain and cereals from western Canada will surpass all previous records.

I certainly hope the minister is right. This will be of some benefit to western Canadian farmers, but at the same time it should be kept in mind that it will not be reflected to the same extent in income figures, whether it is gross income figures, as referred to by the Minister of Agriculture a few minutes ago, or net income figures. The fact is that farmers today are receiving $1.70 for wheat. That is the export price. Just five years ago they were receiving $2.13 or $2.14. That is certainly not much of an improvement. We shall have to sell a lot more wheat to simply get back to the same position as 1967.

The next paragraph in the budget address of the Minister of Finance is one I would like to draw to the attention of the House. This statement made me very angry. This is what the Minister of Finance said:

> Our manufacturing industries are the largest single source of employment in Canada, providing jobs for more than one-fifth of all working Canadians. But by contrast with other sectors of the economy, this important sector is the one that is most exposed and most vulnerable to the challenge of change and international competition.

I do not deny that the manufacturing industries in Canada are faced with serious problems. However, I suggest that this statement will cause a great deal of resentment and ill will, particularly in western Canada. The minister has demonstrated that he does not know the first thing about agricultural problems and he could care less. Where has the minister been during the past five years, particularly since international grain prices began to fall? Has he never heard of the International Wheat Agreement or the International Grains Agreement which collapsed? Is he not aware of the history of long exposure to foreign competition that has faced agriculture, particularly the export sector of the industry?

The situation is even worse. I suggest that the minister's lack of regard for agriculture was a deliberate decision to continue a long-standing policy of restricting support to agriculture. I say this because I watched the minister talk about the budget on the CTV program "Question Period" on Sunday, May 14. At that time he explained that in developing policy for his budget address he examined the three basic sectors of the economy, the primary sector, the manufacturing sector and the service sector. He said he decided that manufacturing was most in need of help and could be helped through budget measures. He pointed out that this arose because of conditions of world competition facing manufacturing industries. It is a strange thing that the minister almost falls over himself to come to the help of manufacturers but he has no time for agriculture. It is tragic for those farmers who have had to bear the impact of world competition for many years, such as grain and cereal producers.

Does the minister not realize what he is doing to agriculture? He is letting it be strangled. Does he not know that in spite of remarkable increases in productivity, this is not reflected in relative net income terms? Does the minister not know what he is doing to rural Canada and the nation as a whole? What kind of a nation does he think we will have if we simply have a few huge cities with a virtual economic and social desert between them? That will not be a nation. Unless we have a definite, meaningful decision by government in the very near future that it will participate in the reconstruction and development of a healthy rural Canada, it will be too late. Rural Canada is now disintegrating. The federal government must work actively with the provinces if we are to avoid a catastrophe.

If the minister is concerned about agriculture and rural Canada, he could at least have said something about the future of the two-price system announced by his colleague, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, some time ago. Payments this year were made from a 1971-72 supplementary estimate. What about next year? There is nothing in the estimates for 1972-73. Is the government going to do some more tinkering with the situation? There is a good basis for my suggestion: it is not mere speculation. When the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board announced the method of payment under the two-price system on February 25 he said that a different payment method for future years would be discussed with farm representatives. I quote his words:

> Unifarm and others have asked that the money be used in future in a stabilization plan.

I suggest that this is what the minister in charge of the Wheat Board plans to do with the future of the two-price system. He is going to tinker with it and use that money in order to sweeten the pot for whatever kind of stabilization plan he brings back into the House.

The budget address is consistent with statements on agriculture made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I wish to draw his words to the attention of hon. members. This is from a speech made by the Prime Minister in Quebec to the Co-operative Fédérée du Quebec on February 2. This is what the Prime Minister said about agriculture:

> Agriculture will not be able to meet the challenge of the future if it does not become economically independent.
> Like any other industrial sector, it has to operate and will have to operate without subsidies, without outside aid, as a mature organism that has developed its full potential.
> It is becoming less and less acceptable that consumers bear the cost of farmers' deficiencies.

The Prime Minister blamed the whole situation on the farmers. What did the Minister of Finance have to say about manufacturing industries? He said that manufacturing industries had to be helped because they were exposed and vulnerable to the challenge of change and international competition. I suggest that this is an incompatible stance when one compares what the government is doing for manufacturing with what it is doing for agriculture and rural Canada. I challenge the government to make a firm commitment that it will play a dynamic role, together with the provinces and communities throughout Canada, in rebuilding rural Canada.

Another reason for my concern about agriculture and rural Canada is the possible consequences arising from the budget. I wish to quote as follows from an article in the May 16 issue of the Globe and Mail entitled "Budget has important implications":

> F. H. Hatt, president of E. M. Saunders Ltd. of Toronto, takes the view that the reduced corporate taxes for manufacturers will take the pressure off the Canadian authorities to keep the exchange rate down. Since manufacturers and processors are the groups that have been hit hardest by the dollar appreciation in the past two years, the tax cut will offset hardship in this area—and may well provide a margin for some further appreciation of the currency.
> A rise in the Canadian dollar to, say, $1.03 in U.S. funds would satisfy Washington as to the appropriate level for the Canadian dollar—

This, again, will hit the export sector of agriculture. It will make it even more difficult for it to survive. However, there is no hint of any help or compensation for the export sector in dealing with the problem it will have to face. Farmers have no protection; they are left out in the cold, with no help from the Minister of Finance.

I suggest that the minister should take careful note of some of these things, with particular reference to a matter that has been referred to from time to time in this House. That is the question of western alienation. There is no question but that our nation is facing serious strains at the present time. There are difficulties in relationships with the province of Quebec from whatever point of view one approaches the matter. However, it must be kept in mind that we have problems in western Canada. This point was dealt with very effectively by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) when he spoke in this House on February 22. He said:

> I consider the phenomenon of western alienation to be of sufficient magnitude to have the potential of profoundly affecting the course of this nation—

He went on to define western alienation in this way:

> —the sense of frustration and anger at what is perceived to be lack of concern and understanding for the west and its problems by central Canada.

He commented, further:

> —westerners are still in the process of adapting themselves to the changes inherent in industrialization and are still seeking to define the new relationship with the rest of the country that these changes necessitate.

• (2110)

Later he said:

> It is this lack of political clout in Ottawa and a total lack of understanding or even of attention on the part of the federal government which has led to present western alienation.

I suggest that if the Minister of Finance does not show any more concern for the west in the future than he did in his budget address, we are in for serious problems in the future.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, as I sat here listening to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) I could hardly believe my ears. According to him, everything is rosy with the western farmer and nothing could be better. Yet as I travelled in the west, as I am sure members opposite have done, and listened to the western farmer I came to the conclusion that there was a huge groundswell of discontent in respect of the policies of this government. If everything is so rosy, why is there this tremendous discontent, particularly among western farmers? If everything is so rosy, we can assume that nothing more can be accomplished by the government, particularly the Minister of Agriculture, in regard to western agriculture.

I have heard some of my colleagues from the east coast suggest that perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could use his influence with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) to encourage him to at least attempt to solve some of the acutely serious problems which exist in that area of the country. I do not think things are as rosy as the minister would have us believe.

The minister says I know nothing about wheat and he is right. But he should have the same modesty when he speaks about oil, gas and the mining industry and admit that by any criterion his knowledge of these segments of the Canadian economy is slight indeed. I am one of those who was around when the minister was on this side of the House as a member of the Social Credit party.

Mr. Cullen: He saw the light.

Mr. Nielsen: Let me inform the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) that it was not much of a light.

An hon. Member: That's when your light went out.

Mr. Nielsen: Let me inform the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) that the minister does not know a great deal about agriculture and will not know much if he continues to shift his position as he did in a few short years. We can go back to 1956 when the minister scorned, ridiculed and scoffed at the policies which were being advanced in respect of agricultural policy. These are the same policies, upon which he is heaping ridicule, that he advocated when he was a Social Credit member in this House before opportunism advanced him to where most Liberals wind up in the party opposite.

An hon. Member: Oh, come off it.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of State (Mr. Mahoney), the hon. member for Calgary South who has at least one supporter behind him, received his kudos and his portfolio as a result of the tremendous task he accomplished in piloting the tax reform legislation through the House of Commons. What does he say when he is asked questions? He was asked a question this morning about a critical situation facing Canada in respect of the price of gold. This knowledgeable and usually informative Minister of State for nothing, said nothing. I think interjections by him, both in his previous position and his positon at this time, are very ill-timed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member should mention that the principal reason he did not receive an answer was that the Speaker would not allow me to answer because his questions were out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: When ministers over there are embarrassed, as they usually are, by questions from this side of the House they take refuge in assuming the mantle of the Speaker and either call our questions hypothetical or out of order. The truth of the matter is that the minister was not up to date on the current situation and knew nothing about it. If he did, which is very unlikely, he did not have any intention of informing the House about it, which is par for the course for these ministers.

The Minister of Agriculture is right in suggesting I know nothing about wheat. I have sat during debates in this House when the majority of members of the other side were not here.

Mr. Cullen: You haven't been around very often.

Mr. Nielsen: The only time the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth has anything to say is from the seat of his pants on the backbench over there. If he wants to contribute, why does he not urge other backbenchers to encourage the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to let them express a free opinion, instead of—

Mr. Gibson: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I can only say to the hon. member that perhaps my speeches have not been the greatest in this House, but I have made about 50 while my hon. friend has been absent from the House, practically the whole session.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. There is no point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will not grace that interjection with the legality of a point of order. All the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth has to do is compare the column inches of Hansard to see whether or not I have made more of a contribution than he has. The argument is often used—

• (2120)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I have listened to all hon. members, but I would ask the hon. member who has the floor to continue his remarks on the budget debate.

Mr. Gibson: Just wait till we have the election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I am sure the hon. member knows what I mean by having order in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have not really noticed any disorder in the House. The interjections that I have heard from the opposite side of the House are no worse than those usually coming from that side, and are no more inane than is usually the case. When I hear comments about voting and arguments of the sort that the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth likes to dredge up, from a pretty empty barrel of interjections I might say, all I have to do is look at the attendance record of the former hon. member for, I believe, Ottawa West who is now in the other place. That hon. member has been a very distinguished member of the House for many years and in the last session he had a 100 per cent attendance record, yet he had only four column inches in Hansard compared with two pages of my own. So I do not think I have to put my record on the line with anybody else's, least of all with that of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, whose estimate of having participated 50 times in debates is an exaggeration to say the least.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to the hon. member for Ottawa West, which is my seat. I do not quite understand his reference and I am wondering whether that is what he intended.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to confuse the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) with the hon. member who was promoted to the other place, though the hon. member for Ottawa West might entertain some ambitions about following him, in which case I give him my sincere wishes.

To get back to the comments of the Minister of Agriculture about wheat sales, if ever there was a bigger horn to blow he certainly took second place to no one tonight, because he was really blowing. Even one as ignorant as I am about wheat knows—and not one of the few farmers on the other side will gainsay me this—that the reason for wheat sales is not super salesmanship on the part of anyone in this government, or in the last one for that matter. The reason for our wheat sales is that Alvin Hamilton and the Diefenbaker government passed the Export Credits Insurance Act which permitted credit to be granted to potential purchasers of wheat. Hon. members opposite, at least the knowledgeable ones, know the truth of that statement.

The Minister of Agriculture speaks of distortion. Even to a mind as ignorant as mine on the subject of wheat his remarks today can only be described as downright misleading, because they simply are not true. This being the budget debate, it is only fair ball that we should expose some of the weaving, ducking and avoiding that the treasury benches have been treating this parliament to over the last four years. Anyone who watches from the public galleries the operation of this House during question period, when opposition members are trying to get information from cabinet ministers, must wonder what this institution is all about. We get half-answers, answers that some people would describe in even broader terms. We get no answers. We get answers that are misleading. We get answers that duck and weave every step of the way. One has only to refer to this afternoon's session to hear questions that have been put to ministers by opposition members throughout the previous four years.

What has happened to parliament? What has happened to the committee system? I am a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The chairman of that committee is not here tonight, but the committee usually meets on Tuesday and Thursdays and has a deadline by which to pass the estimates.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): You are never there.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) says that I am never there, but he knows that is not true. As far as the hon. member is concerned, that is a matter in connection with which he can require me to put up my seat because it is a direct charge that he knows is not true. He knows very well that I am a regular attender of that committee and that I contribute very substantially to its deliberations. But when does this committee meet? It should be meeting regularly twice a week, but it is not.

Mr. Goyer: Are you referring to privileges and elections?

Mr. Nielsen: I am speaking of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) has any useful and meaningful contribution to make to this debate, I invite him immediately to get to his feet and make that contribution. However, I very much doubt that he will. He has made no useful contribution as yet as a member of the cabinet and I doubt that he will make any useful contribution for the short time he has left at his disposal as a member of the cabinet. The only thing the minister has done so far is to set up his "gumshoe corps", his so-called security planning and research group. What has this so-called group done? Of whom is it composed? How many people are in the group? What is it doing? All these questions we ask of him in the House; we ask questions of him in committee. But we get no answers.

Mr. Goyer: Related to wheat problems.

Mr. Nielsen: I would not doubt that a bit. That is the only reason the government has for setting up such a force—to look after internal security in the growing of wheat. Certainly there is no other reason for setting up such a body and replacing a hitherto legitimate and perfectly efficiently performed function on the part of the RCMP.

So we have a committee system today which in 1968 the Prime Minister assured the country was going to be reformed to enable it to operate more efficiently. And committees do not even meet. When committees bring down reports the government pays no attention to them; the reports are ignored. All these committees, with the possible exception of the saw-off in the public accounts committee, have a majority of Liberal members and all decisions are of course made by that majority. Even the procedures within the committees are decided by the majority.

Every member in committee is limited to five minutes to speak his piece; he is then cut off by the chairman. Either that or the chairman runs interference when government officials are being questioned. So what earthly use is a committee system that has now degenerated to the point of absolute uselessness? Nothing is done in committee. The estimates have been taken away from the House, where they used to be given fair debate, and salted away in committee where they are never heard of again. All this under the guise of so-called participatory democracy. That arm of parliament has been completely destroyed.

It now appears that it is unparliamentary for the leader of the New Democratic Party—and I can cite other examples on this side of the House—to use the expression, as he did today, "gouging". The hon. member was referring to Bell Telephone gouging the people of Canada, though I do not myself necessarily subscribe to that view. That was called procedurally incorrect.

We have a Prime Minister who can use obscenities and swear words in the House, and this is perfectly all right. But suddenly it is wrong for opposition members to use descriptive adjectives. I can recall the time when this was the very essence of debate. But suddenly it has become wrong under the rule changes which were imposed upon us by a government with an insatiable lust for power. The opportunism of the Minister of Agriculture is a prime example of what I am referring to.

In the Yukon there have been repeated demands for reform of government institutions for a dozen years. For three successive years representatives of the people there have been asking for government reform. Acting unilaterally, and without the approval of the House of Commons, this arbitrary Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) decided to change the structure which had existed for years—not that it was necessarily a good system—and experiment. The north is a greater experiment in state socialism than people in southern Canada could believe. If they could see it, they would not believe it. It is worse than the colonialism which existed in this country 100 years ago.

The Minister of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Prime Minister, made it even worse by setting up within the bureaucracy what he was pleased to call an executive committee consisting of three civil servants taking instruction from the minister, and two elected members of council—a committee of five predominated by the civil service majority. I criticized the minister at that time. I told him it would not work. I knew it would not work.

At the end of the last session, matters reached a point at which 250 citizens in Whitehorse, where the council meetings were being held, crowded into the corridors leading to the council chamber, booing, catcalling and clamouring for the resignation of the council. Almost 5,000 citizens in the Yukon, almost 60 per cent of those eligible to vote in the last federal election in 1968, sent a petition to the governor in council, with copies to the minister and the Prime Minister asking them to take action with regard to the disquiet which existed there and which some believed bordered on civil disobedience. And what did we get from the minister? We got platitudinous statements that he did not intend to adhere to anything which smacked of government by petition. He adopted the same attitude with respect to the petition of the Old Crow people. That petition has yet to be heard. They renewed their appeal to be heard as recently as two weeks ago.

While all this was going on, members opposite suddenly saw a vision, a vision which in 1957 and 1958 they ridiculed. Now, because there have been discoveries made in the north which were foreseen a dozen years ago by those who did have a vision of northern development, they want to climb on the bandwagon. And so we find the minister of northern development making all kinds of what he is pleased to call new announcements. We find the Prime Minister blatantly exercising political opportunism by announcing a new Mackenzie highway which will extend 1,049 miles to the Arctic coast.

Mr. Speaker, this highway, which he announced approximately two weeks ago was already under construction more than a year go and it was in the plans ten years ago. Yet all of a sudden the Prime Minister announces the new highway, only because of the probability—he thinks, and so does the minister of northern development—that a pipeline will be constructed down the Mackenzie Valley.

A pipe dream is what they are operating on, because while a gas pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley is probably inevitable, it is a good few years away yet, particularly in light of the fact that the United States government has announced approval of the TAPS route from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez with a tanker connection to Seattle.

So the government, again in its zest for gaining political advantage on the eve of what it thought might be an election, announced this tremendous new highway down the Mackenzie Valley, a highway which is to cost $100 million. Anyone who can do a simple calculation can see that this works out at $100,000 a mile through some of the roughest, toughest country in which any road could be constructed. It would not take any contractor even remotely familiar with construction costs in the north more than a moment to tell you that this would not amount to any highway at all, if it were built, but merely a two-car trail through the wilderness.

I do not wish to be taken wrongly. I am not knocking any investment the government makes in the north, because therein lies the future of Canada; we are a northern nation and this vast region holds the key to this country becoming one of the richest in the world. But instead of taking this kind of approach, the sincerity of which in any case I doubt, they should be devoting their attention to discovering means by which the gas reserves which are being rapidly proven not only in the Prudhoe Bay area but in the delta could be funelled through one of the northern centres such as Whitehorse. I think this should be part of the price of a pipeline down the Mackenzie and across the Yukon.

Gas means cheap energy, and in the northern portion of the Yukon and Northwest Territories we possess the largest known reserves of iron ore in the free world—some 22 billion tons. Combine this iron ore with cheap energy and you have the basis of a steel industry far superior to that which made the United States the great industrial nation it is today. As it is, I question the sincerity of the minister's statement that we are spending more money in the north than we have in any other year. Speaking about distortion, I question the basis upon which the minister of northern development could tell us that $19 million are being invested in one year in the north. That is somewhat short of the truth. He is talking about contracts which are let for one, two and three years, sometimes more. There has been a good deal of pre-electioneering going on among ministers opposite, including the Prime Minister. It reminds me of the old political game of trying to catch your opponent off guard, trying to catch your opponent with his pants down.

I think I might end my remarks with reference to a story. Men who have been in the business world may appreciate a story about a 43-year old businessman who had just lost a good secretary. He was asked, "How is that fine looking secretary of yours; is she well?" The reply was, "No, I had to fire her". His friend asked, in astonishment, "Why fire such an excellent secretary?" "Well," he said, "it was my forty-third birthday. I came down to breakfast in the morning and not even my children remembered my birthday. I went to the office, my secretary remembered and said, 'Happy Birthday'. She said she would like to take me to lunch. After lunch she said, 'It is such a beautiful day, let's take a drive in the country', which we did. While driving in the country she suggested we go to her apartment for a martini and forget the office for a few hours. We went and had one martini, and as she was walking toward her bedroom she turned and said, 'Make yourself comfortable while I do the same.' In a few minutes she came out with a large birthday cake in her arms, followed by my wife and children singing 'Happy Birthday', and there I sat in just my socks." I suggest that is how the government is likely to find itself sitting as a result of its lack of decision in calling an election.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming traditional in Canada to criticize or laud disproportionately the annual budgets brought down by the central power, especially because the latter adopts its budget policy without consulting the members of the Canadian confederation, namely the provinces.

This inevitably and justifiably leads to back-washes in some provinces—not only in one of them—which interpret this action as trespassing on the setting up of and the respect due their respective priorities. No consideration, anywhere in the world, can be viable without true consultation and policy co-ordination in the implementation of the programs adopted by various levels of government.

This is not new, but the time has come to innovate and prove that federalism can be viable. The central government has enormous responsibility in that respect but, once again, unfortunately, it overlooked it in formulating its budget policy. This, however, is understandable considering the fact that we are now studying what is strictly an election budget intended to restore the fortunes of the administration of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

After four years of blind administration and buffer politics, in fiscal as well as in monetary matters and in the field of economic expansion, the victims of this lack of real policy cannot be counted.

The unemployed, families thrown out in the street, the number of poor and families in misery—the proof of this is in the Croll report—the number of bankruptcies among private enterprises, the frightening growth of the public debt, all this is everywhere in Canada. Witnesses of this failure, the structures are now threatening to collapse everywhere, so unfair and shocking is the economic and social situation for Canadians.

Before this confessed failure, the Trudeau government defines its budget as follows, and I quote:

> The main thrust of this budget—is to buttress the Canadian economy—to provide incentives for Canadian industry to grow and compete and provide jobs.

And in the same breath, the minister adds the following:

> —to render justice to those people in our community who have been hurt by the rise in the cost of living and who have no way of fighting back.

Those are words, but the budget offers nothing to financially help the people to face the rise in the cost of living.

In spite of the publicity given to the budget speech, we have in the last few hours seen here in this House identical or almost identical reactions to those shown last year and before then on the same occasions. For some, the dyed-in-the-wool Liberals, the budget is automatically called a masterpiece. Let us say in passing that for the past 100 years, one always realizes looking back that this is a mistake, while for others, it is of no value because it does not come from them (I am speaking of the retarded Conservatives, who walk in the shade cast by the Liberals).

It is quite obvious that the truth has few chances of coming to light in such attitudes, either extreme or retarded conservative. For us, Créditistes, this budget is not much different from the previous ones, except that we are on the eve of a federal election.

Let us see what the budget brings forward: depreciation over two years in the case of machinery and equipment purchased from now on for use in manufacturing and processing goods in Canada. That will be good news for the big corporations which can afford expensive machinery and equipment. Within two years, they will buy all the machinery and equipment they can, notwithstanding their price. On account of this privilege from the Liberal government, they will be able to depreciate the full cost of such equipment over two years. Logically, we could argue that the more equipment those corporations will buy, the more workers they will lay off.

Therefore, such a policy runs counter to that of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) whose purpose and endeavours are to create employment. On the other hand, that department will invest as usual millions of dollars to create more or less permanent employment. On the other hand, the government will unduly promote the interest of the big corporations in encouraging them to buy machinery whose full cost they will be able to depreciate over two years, which will contribute in increasing beyond measure the unemployment rate in Canada.

The Liberal government still goes further in the case of big corporations so that they will contribute to the election funds: it sets the reduction at 40 per cent, of general corporate tax only in the case of income from manufacturing and processing. There you have another measure to gratify those who are contributing to election funds. A 40 per cent reduction for big corporations, that's really something. That is a bitter pill to swallow.

We know that according to the budget, corporate income tax represents 16 per cent of budget revenue, against 17 per cent in 1970-1971. Not only will corporations pay less income tax than during the previous years, but they will benefit from a reduction to 40 per cent. The Liberal government does not forget those who contribute, since it is the only way to maintain the exploitation of the people by high finance.

On the other hand, on page 13 of the budget paper, one can read the following:

> As is shown in table 5, income tax is again the largest source of government budgetary revenue.

In the field of personal income tax, the federal government will collect over $5,540 million, that is over 39 per cent, that is an increase of 2 per cent over last year. We are far from the just society: the allowance is of 40 per cent for the large firms, but nothing constructive is being granted to the individuals, except a tax increase of 3 per cent. However, the minister said that the budget was intended "to render justice to those people in our community who have been hurt by the rise in the cost of living and who have no way of fighting back."

Mr. Speaker, I have read somewhere the following statement which has always impressed and which I found extremely strong until I came to the House of Commons and really understood its significance: "The future of the young people is being jeopardized by sinister capitalists who hang on to their manger; they are shameless and deprived of ideals." Young people don't know what to make of those capitalists—what I call high finance.

What strikes us is not only the concentration of money in a few hands, but the strength of the discretionary economic power held by a small number which is encouraged in this budget.

Those great masters of credit money and debt money which they freely use, those experts who inject credit money into the economic system can seal the fate of the people so that nobody can subsist without them. The financial magnates have been given powers devoid of any moral consideration.

The economic dictatorship controls the life of the nation by the issuance and receipts of credit through banks with the collusion of the Bank of Canada. In all budget papers submitted to us, there is no reference to that problem.

During its four years in power, the government has done nothing to improve the banking system in that regard. As in all fields, everything is dependent of finance, on those who are vested with such extraordinary powers and who have supreme control over society, internal and external trade as well as over politics.

A man who spends less than he earns gradually makes money. Everybody can thus become well-off whether they are employers, dealers, industrialists, farmers or workers. At that rate, it is quite difficult to become a millionaire. But on the one hand the government is encouraging savings, on the other, through its taxes and present budget, it is taxing and retraining them. How many millions are the products of gross, immoral, sometimes even illegal injustice: protection of laws relating to companies, to the Bank Act, the unlimited powers given to some people by the government and this at the expense of the nation.

Banks have no gold and yet they lend millions. Why are we told that money is based on gold when banks have no gold? There again no such mention is made in the budget. As incredible as it may seem, a Canadian deputy minister of finance said recently in a letter, and I quote:

—as banks have been relieved of their responsibilities, there is definitely no gold kept in Canada in support of money in circulation.

Through an improbable law, the federal government has given chartered banks authority to lend fourteen times as much money as they own. There is nothing in the budget on this item. If we grant this authority to banks, why should we not grant it to workers and to everybody? Carpenters, farmers, doctors, are citizens on the same basis as bankers and in Canada are entitled to the same privileges, if any, through the guaranteed minimum income plan.

As under this law, banks only have to keep 5 per cent of deposits and as they lend 14 times more money than they own through the issue of credit, what would happen if all depositors were to claim their deposits at the same time? There is nothing in the budget about this.

This monetary system that is supported by the government is wrong and unfair.

There has been overproduction, according to the budget speech. We are inclined to believe it since workers, in ever increasing numbers, are being thrown out of work and forced on unemployment insurance benefits. However many people lack the bare necessities. What is wrong? Our scholarly economists seek means to fight unemployment, to avert disaster. The solution is so very simple: distribute money to the people so that they can purchase production, and work will start anew.

There has been overproduction, we are told. And meanwhile "Marchand and company" pour out millions to create jobs and increase production, which is absurd.

Instead of basing money on nothing, and allowing banks to issue credits, why not base money on production and balance distribution? There must be better adjustment of goods to human needs.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister himself (Mr. Trudeau), said at the time of his last visit to Victoriaville that man was not made for work and that it was the first duty of a government to ensure an income to its citizens.

In the recent budget, not a word is said about this.

By basing money on production instead of on nothing, it would be easy to keep proper balance between production and money in circulation. If the amount of money in circulation is smaller than the amount of production, let new dollar bills be issued and shared equally.

Let no one come and tell me that his would be equivalent to socialism. Did our so-called adversaries, whether from the Liberal or the Progressive Conservative party, practise socialism when they instituted the unemployment insurance, family allowance or the old age security plans?

In terms of commercial inventory accounting, reserve merchandise is called capital. Well, if this is capital, let us give it its counter-value in purchasing power.

When one establishes the inventory of a country, one talks about human capital, natural ressources, real estate and production. Then this capital—and I think this is the only one which is truly sound—let us show the people, through means of purchasing power and operation, that it exists and let us balance purchasing power with production. If everything is bought because the consumer has money, production will have to be renewed and there will no longer be any unemployment. If it is true that more and more the machine is replacing man and that progress is here to stay, we should find a financial mechanism to make up for the loss of work. That is the substance of Social Credit.

One of the richest men in the world, Mr. Rothschild, probably the most powerful international banker, said a few years ago:

Let me issue and control the currency of a nation and I will take care of those who make the laws.

Mr. Speaker, he has only confirmed what we have been thinking and saying for a long time: That most legislators are at the mercy of bankers. That is what is happening in Canada!

Why allow such an accumulation of capital when a man occupies only a limited space in the world, eats only three meals a day, even though financial tycoons are suffering from stomach ulcers. They wear only one suit, sleep only in one bed and live in only one house at a time. Why then allow them to hold forty companies' directorships, forty salaries, forty dividends, "forty interests"? If they number about one thousand in this country, and this figure is not exagerated, they are occupying the place of 40,000 workers and getting their salaries.

Abusive capitalism has helped production by exploiting consumers and we thus have almost one million unemployed in Canada. Since on the average each unemployed has three dependents, it follows that three million Canadians are suffering from privation.

Mr. Speaker, in Canada, the wealthiest country in the world, we must put capitalism at the service of all Canadians, and not indulge in an exagerated capitalism, or abusive socialism, as advocated by the New Democratic party.

Financing peace, this is what we are longing for, and it seems here to be an impossible task. But financing war pursuits seems to be a very easy task for governments. Let us look at what is happening in Vietnam, for instance: One never hears of money problems, but one can always hear about the everlasting problem, because it serves the big financial interests.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Speaker, we need a monetary reform which would not take away one cent from the "Haves" but would provide for those who do not have enough to live as human beings.

Some will say: Why give more to the have-nots? This is again socialism! Let us be serious. We gave millions of dollars to India, to China, to Africa, even to Communist affiliated countries. Does that make us more socialists in Canada?

Money is not wealth, but it does express wealth and, yet, it is everything. Therefore, we have here a basic economic error. Money must serve the Canadian people and not subjugate it.

Banks are distributors of credit money of which the dollar has only the value of a nickel. Why, they are counterfeiters! The whole build up of the Canadian economic structure managed by a hundred dictators, bank and company managers is based on the ignorance of the people and the unfair and anti-social laws.

We are all subjugated, amazed, dazzled, we are all struck with a sort of fascination for these millionnaire czars who exploit to their benefit our dullness, our ignorance, our fear to know and to understand.

Mr. Speaker, that is why it is so difficult to understand the difference between a grit and a tory, but with time in this House, we end up by learning that there is no difference between them.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—ACTION TO PREVENT LOANSHARK OPERATIONS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, last winter it came to my attention that some people in a number of large Canadian cities had discovered a way of profiting from the delays encountered in issuing unemployment insurance cheques and from the desperate financial straits in which many people in receipt of unemployment insurance payments found themselves. These "businessmen" would offer people who were due to receive an unemployment insurance cheque, but who had not yet received it and were in need of money, what was in effect a loan.

This practice is called discounting. An offer of cash would be made, in return for which the recipient would pledge to turn over his unemployment insurance cheque upon receipt to the person making the loan. To guarantee receipt of the cheque the lender would have his client arrange to have the cheque mailed to the lender's office.

[Mr. Fortin.]

The loan was never for the full amount of the cheque. Customarily, also, half the amount of the loan was given immediately and the other half when the borrower signed over the cheque to the lender. A typical transaction would be an $80 payment in return for a $100 cheque, $40 of which would be paid immediately and the other $40 when the cheque was signed over. The discount was $20. One can readily see that if the cheque was received a week later, the lender was in effect charging interest at rates in excess of 1,000 per cent per annum. That is usury in anyone's language. The transaction involved absolutely no risk to the lender because he was having the cheque mailed to his address and it was a government cheque.

A further investigation revealed that the people involved in discounting UIC cheques were also engaged in discounting anticipated income tax rebates, pension cheques and other benefits paid by governments. I felt this practice to be odious and accordingly raised the matter in the House on the first occasion which presented itself after we reassembled following the Christmas recess. Accordingly, on Friday, February 25, I asked the following question:

> Is the department aware of loansharking operations, the lending of money against unemployment insurance cheques, resulting from the delays in payment and, if so, what action is the commission taking to prevent this occurrence?

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) replied:

> Mr. Speaker, the situation will be investigated. If indeed such a situation exists it is clearly despicable.

On Friday, March 10, I followed up the matter by moving the following motion under Standing Order 43:

> That in the opinion of this House the government should immediately bring forward legislation which would ensure that the practice of discounting government payments to individuals, at usurious rates of interest to the recipients of benefits provided by law, is placed under the provisions of the Small Loans Act.

Unanimous consent was denied. On Wednesday, March 15, I asked the following question:

> Has the government yet taken any steps to end the practice of lending money at usurious interest rates against the future receipt of unemployment insurance cheques?

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration replied:

> Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, the minister is very concerned about the practice of discounting unemployment insurance benefit warrants. I want to assure the hon. member that consideration is being given to a number of measures designed to halt the practice. I can inform the House that as of now a process is beginning and new regulations are being instituted under the unemployment insurance plan to prevent the use of an address which is not that of a claimant for mailing purposes without the permission of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I must say—

And so forth. I then asked the parliamentary secretary if the government was considering legislation to end the practice and his answer was a simple yes. My understanding is that the government did indeed take some action. It had the Superintendent of Insurance investigate the practice of discounting in order to discover if violations of federal laws were involved and if prosecutions could be undertaken.

In addition, I understand that UIC regulations were altered so as to make it more difficult for a client to have his cheque mailed directly to a loanshark. But no legislation was forthcoming. Accordingly on Wednesday, March 29, I myself introduced a bill the purpose of which was to make it clear that the practice of short-term discounting of payments of governments to individuals such as UIC benefits, pension cheques and income tax rebates were to be considered loan transactions and subject to the provisions of the Small Loans Act.

Maximum interest charges allowable under that act are 24 per cent, or 2 per cent per month. The practice of discounting, if subjected to such regulations, would end because the rate of return on a loan lasting a week or two only would be so little that it would not be worth the trouble of undertaking the transaction. I have yet to receive any comment from the government on the contents of the bill.

Finally, on Monday, May 8, I asked the following question:

A while ago there was some trouble with loansharking associated with unemployment insurance cheques. At that time the minister's parliamentary assistant who was being questioned in the House indicated that legislation might be prepared by the government. Is the government considering the preparation of such legislation and if so, what form will it take? Will it be by amendment of the Small Loans Act?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, preliminary investigation shows that if there is any weakness in the act or law it lies in the provincial jurisdiction. We are suggesting now that perhaps we should be concentrating in that area, with the co-operation of the provinces of course, in order to bring an end to this type of situation.

What the minister's reply means is that the federal government believes that the practice of usury through short-term discounting is one which must be regulated by legislation at the provincial level. The provinces still say that this is a federal responsibility. So we have another jurisdictional dispute, another constitutional argument, while Canadians continue to be gouged daily by loansharks. My advice to the federal government is: take a chance, introduce legislation to control discounting and if someone wants to challenge the constitutionality of the legislation to let him take it to court. The odds are better than even that the federal government would win such a case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) asked during the question period on May 8. I listened with interest to his observations this evening. I assure him, again, that the minister and the department are considering actively the problem he spoke about again this evening.

By order in council PC 1972-667 an amendment to the unemployment insurance regulations was made which reads as follows:

Section 145 of the unemployment insurance regulations is amended by adding thereto the following subsection (8);

A claimant making a claim for benefit shall, unless otherwise permitted by the commission, supply the mailing address of his normal place of residence.

This, the hon. member will observe, will prevent claimants from advising the Unemployment Insurance Commission of a change of address which could be that of a lender. Most hon. members know that loansharks oblige people about to receive benefits to have them mailed to their civic address, to ensure that they get back the moneys lent plus the extravagant interest rate for which they are asking.

In addition to this amendment to the unemployment insurance regulations, investigations of which the hon. member is aware have proceeded for some weeks. These investigations may lead to additional measures to protect the interests of the unemployed of this country. Indeed, active consideration is being given to possible actions. I hope it may be possible to make further announcements later.

One of the findings that has emerged from the investigations is that there is not necessarily a relationship between delays in unemployment insurance benefits, for whatever reason—those mistakes might be on the part of the claimant or the commission or anyone else—and the so-called loansharking operation. Indeed, loansharking began long before changes were made in the unemployment insurance regulations of this country. Nevertheless, that practice is deplored by the minister, by the department and certainly by the government. Any useful suggestions received from any part of the House will be welcome and will be given careful and attentive study by the minister, to make sure we can end this practice.

HUMAN SCIENCES—PROGRAMS TO INCREASE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on April 17 I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) to take note of statistics which had just come to my attention from Statistics Canada indicating that the government of this country spends 15 times more on the natural than on the human sciences. I asked if the government was so totally committed to technological efforts that it was not contemplating further expenditures on the human sciences.

• (2210)

From my university background I have noted over many years that the relationship between the human sciences and the engineering and natural sciences is something like that of Lazarus to Dives, but I was appalled and disturbed that the gap had widened between these two with the assistance of government. The document which stimulated my concern is entitled "Federal government expenditures on the human sciences," catalogue 13-545, published by Statistics Canada. One quotation is startling. It reads as follows:

The expenditures on activities in the human sciences are rather modest when compared to the expenditures for the engineering and natural sciences. For instance, the current expenditures on R & D in the human sciences represent only 7 per cent of the equivalent in the natural sciences in 1969-70. Moreover, this proportion drops to 6 per cent if capital expenditures (important in the natural sciences but almost non-existent in the human sciences) are included in the calculation.

Comparison of total expenditures on scientific activities for these two areas shows that for one dollar spent in the human sciences in 1969-70, there was a corresponding expenditure of almost eight dollars in the engineering and natural sciences. However, forecasted expenditures for 1970-71 and 1971-72 indicate a small 'improvement', which expected ratios of $1/$7 for these two years (excluding the census costs).

This matter is one of great concern, especially at a time when there is renewed concern in Canada about such questions as our national identity, cultural heritage, and so on; when we find that there is a seeming drying up of expenditure on the part of the government on those things which one might say expresses the Canadian soul. Not long ago I saw a very moving editorial in the Ottawa Citizen entitled "Canada Council beheaded," written by Christopher Young. He wrote:

The government acted with commendable speed in filling the vacancy at the top of the CBC. Only performance will tell whether vice-president Laurent Picard is the right choice to run the national broadcasting network, but at least there will be no hiatus at the top. Mr. Picard was appointed three months before the resignation of George Davidson was to take effect.

This is a great difference from the situation with regard to the Canada Council. I again quote:

The council's director, Peter Dwyer, suffered a severe stroke while at work a year ago. Mr. Dwyer had worked in the Privy Council under the St. Laurent government and had drafted the act setting up the Canada Council, on the basis of recommendations made by the Massey commission. He had moved to the council's staff when it was founded in 1957 and had directed its highly successful arts program from the beginning.

It was apparent rather quickly that Mr. Dwyer would not be able to return to the heavy administrative job at the head of the council's permanent staff. His formal resignation was announced last November, and he is now a consultant to the National Arts Centre.

But nothing has been done to fill the post, and the council is drifting aimlessly. Decisions are deferred. New ideas are discouraged. Staff morale is wretched. The council itself, made up of distinguished or politically acceptable citizens, has failed to fill the vacuum of leadership.

The public servants who work at the council and the people in the arts who have come to depend on its advice and funds—at least those I have spoken to—are appalled by the effects of the government's failure to act. Whether indifference or indecision is the reason, the results are serious—

Meantime some of the newer government agencies—notably the Local Initiatives Program and Opportunities for Youth—are moving into areas where a more dynamic Canada Council might be expected to be active—

The Canada Council does not loom as large in the national consciousness as the CBC. But its importance to the writers, musicians, painters, actors and dancers, as well as the university professors, of this country can hardly be exaggerated—

Governments need to be checked not only on those things which they ought to have done but also on not doing those things which they ought to have done.

This sounds very episcopalian.

The government—and specifically the prime minister whose prerogative this appointment is—ought to have acted on the Canada Council vacancy long before now.

I think that these two things unite in a most disturbing way the heavy expenditure on the natural sciences and engineering and the very miniscule expenditure on the tremendously important realm of the human sciences. The fact that the Canada Council leadership seems not to have commanded any priority causes me a great deal of anxiety. I say this as one who believes that while the natural sciences are important, while the structure of Canada, its basic engineering, is important, surely the soul of Canada is still more important even than these and this priority should be reflected by a sensitive and thoughtful government.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question follows a report issued by Statistics Canada outlining the discrepancy in government spending between technical sciences and human sciences. Although we must acknowledge the existence of such a discrepancy, let us put it into proper perspective.

It seems that the figures provided did not include the Department of the Secretary of State, the Public Archives, the CRTC, the National Library, the Company of Young Canadians, the National Film Board, the Canadian Film Development Corporation, the National Arts Centre, the CBC or the Opportunities for Youth program, to mention but a few. All these programs are closely related to human sciences, since they deal with people, and the bulk of their expenditures is directed toward aspects of Canadian life that are of a humanistic nature.

I am aware that the hon. member is thinking in terms of moneys distributed to provide assistance to specific research in sociology, political science and anthropology, but I am sure he will agree that a good many of the reports and studies paid for by the federal government, or its agencies, whether it be the youth report or whatever, fit very well into those criteria. Furthermore, the people employed to carry out those taks are mainly social scientists.

I would like to terminate my remarks by saying that the distinction made by confining human research to technological research is somewhat rhetorical. It can be argued that a botanist, a chemist, an environmental specialist deals as much with the well-being of people as does a sociologist. The federal government is attempting to infuse this concept in its apparatus and in this respect is studying very closely the recommendations of the report of the Senate Special Committee on Science Policy. That particular report has stressed this aspect of sciences and has offered most valuable comments.

GRAIN—PILOT PROJECT FOR USE OF INTERIOR ELEVATORS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in the last several years since the introduction of the task force report on agriculture in 1969-70 there has been considerable discussion concerning the use of inland terminals and unit trains. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board told us last winter that very soon a report on transportation arrangements in the Dominion of Canada will be tabled in the House of Commons. Yet we sit here today, soon to be in the month of June, and no report is forthcoming.

In lieu of an announcement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in Winnipeg concerning the movement of grain through inland terminals for cleaning and shipment, I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question:

Since the federal government is going ahead with a pilot project to determine the feasibility of channelling grain through large interior terminal elevators, I wonder if the minister would be prepared to make a statement on motions outlining some of the details of this program, such as the elevator companies involved and so on.

I asked the question because of the many implications of this project for the Prairies generally in terms of the use of inland terminals. I inquired whether the government had established objectives, whether it had estimated the cost of operating the necessary trucks, whether it had decided who should lease the trucks and how the private elevator companies would be involved. How would the grain be cleaned and shipped out? This information should be laid on the table without delay so that interested parties in the prairie region can form an opinion as to the government's objectives and the significance of the program by comparison to the expected end results—results which should also be publicly stated.

I make this suggestion no matter on what side of the debate on the use of inland terminals a group may happen to be. These groups, whether the Palliser Wheat Growers Association, the National Farmers Union, the wheat pools, the Pioneer Elevator Company, or what have you, should have the opportunity to know exactly what is going on in terms of the use of inland terminals and to understand the implications for our transportation system. Ministers speak of moving so much grain to the west coast, but at the same time I suggest we cannot ignore the problems that we faced during last winter. We must look at different methods of grain movement and grain handling in terms of one principle above all others, and that is service to the farmers involved. There is no use completely changing the system if this merely adds up to additional cost of production for farmers whose prices for grain commodities are already far too low.

All kinds of ideas are being put forward in this country, indeed in the world, regarding grain movement. The United States has been developing the use of water transportation facilities, different types of barges to haul goods, especially farm products. Some of the railroad companies, such as Pullman in the United States, have developed certain ideas that are based on the use of container cars and larger door openings in grain cars to facilitate quicker loading of grain. There are all kinds of methods that the government can examine. But the most significant and important aspect of this kind of project is that there be complete consultation with those directly involved who will be directly affected after the program has been implemented.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the hon. member's request for details on a pilot project to channel grains through interior terminal elevators, I might say simply that this project is for feed barley only. This barley will be trucked from various private country elevators under instruction from the Canadian Wheat Board to the Canadian government elevators at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon. At this point it will be cleaned, segregated by grade and made ready for reshipment pending instructions from the Wheat Board. At the end of this crop year the pilot project will end and an evaluation will be made. I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that the project will be useful not only for purposes of evaluation but it is expected that four million bushels of barley will be put through the system under the project.

The hon. member also raised other points. However, I can only say that this experiment was undertaken on the recommendation of those who were greatly involved in grain transportation in this country.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

TABLING OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1971

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 61 of the Financial Administration Act, and on behalf of the Minister of Finance, I should like to table copies in both official languages of the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971.

The Auditor General has asked me to extend his apologies to the House for the lateness of this report which is due to circumstances of which the House is aware.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF PERSHING GERVAIS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I am looking vainly for an Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker; I think I see one opposite me now. In any event, I have a motion to propose under Standing Order 43. The urgent and pressing circumstances involved the alleged extraordinary use by the Canadian government of immigration regulations to arrange for one Pershing Gervais, at the instance of the United States government, to use Canada as a place of refuge after having charged Jim Garrison, former New Orleans district attorney, with involvement in a pinball racket. My motion, if I am allowed to put it, is as follows:

That this House urges the government to immediately make a full inquiry into the circumstances of admission into Canada of Pershing Gervais, alias Paul Mason, and report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ALLEGED MISUSE OF INCENTIVE GRANTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter arises out of an independent study, presented to the Standing Committee on Regional Development yesterday, which shows that 11 out of 18 companies which received total commitments of $34 million in public funds under the Regional Development Incentives Act made no investment or location decisions because of the money but just reaped windfall gains. With consent, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

• (1410)

That this House resolves that the government should immediately appoint an independent authority to investigate the performance records of companies which have received or may receive grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act at the discretion of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and to make recommendations with respect to the continuance or repudiation of each such commitment and, where justified, the recovery of public moneys and such further and other recommendations as the authority may consider proper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIVE INDIAN AND ESKIMO POPULATION IN CANADA

Question No. 207—Mr. MacLean:

1. What is the ratio of the total native Indian and Eskimo population to the total population of Canada?

2. What is the ratio of the total Indian and Eskimo population who hold a postgraduate degree at the doctorate level to the total number of Canadians who hold such degrees?

3. What is the ratio of (a) the total native Indian and Eskimo university graduates to the total number of university graduates in Canada (b) the total native Indian and Eskimo population who are students at the secondary school level to the total number of such students in Canada?

4. What is the ratio of medical doctors serving the total native Indian and Eskimo population to the total number of medical doctors in Canada?

5. How many (a) medical doctors (b) dentists (c) nurses are employed by the government to serve the native Indian and Eskimo population?

6. How many of the above employees, in each category, are native Indian and Eskimo?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada, the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. The ratio of the total native Indian and Eskimo population to the total population of Canada is 0.012 according to the 1961 Census of Canada.

2. No data available.

3. (a) 130 Indian and Eskimo university graduates. (b) In the 1969-70 school year, there were 7,749 Indian students at the secondary school level. This figure represents registered Indian students only. The ratios requested are not available.

4. The ratios requested cannot be provided accurately. Most of the native Indian and Eskimo population is now provided medical care by medical practitioners who render the same service to all Canadians. Where local medical services are not available to these specific groups, federal or federally sponsored services, i.e., university personnel, are provided where possible. In the Territories, native Canadians may be serviced by Public Service physicians initially, but possible referral to treatment centres in more southerly areas routinely involves any number of physicians or specialists. The overall active Canadian physician: population ratio is about 1:700.

5. (a) 150 medical doctors (this includes all categories of physicians, most of which serve in multiple functions.) (b) 27 dentists (most dental work is performed at federal expense by private dentists). (c) Approximately 820 nurses.

6. Doctors nil. Dentists nil. 11 nurses are native Indians.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXPORTS OF RESOURCES AND FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Question No. 220—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. To date, what consideration has the government given to allow the Province of Alberta to communicate with the Government of each of these countries (a) United States (b) USSR (c) People's Republic of China over matters concerning (i) oil (ii) gas (iii) water?

2. What kind of representation is being made in each of those countries by the government, in relation to the export of (a) oil (b) gas (c) water from the Province of Alberta?

3. Have any projections been prepared by the government which would forecast gains and/or losses in terms of production and standard of living in Canada, if American ownership of oil and gas resources would be limited to 49 per cent control or less?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Formal communications with the Governments of the USA, USSR and the People's Republic of China are the responsibility of the federal government and these are normally channeled through the Canadian Embassies in those three countries or through their respective Embassies in Ottawa. The federal government is, at the same time, in touch with the government of Alberta as well as the governments of other provinces, and vice versa, regarding questions of mutual interest which have an international dimension, including when appropriate, oil, gas and water.

2. It would not be appropriate to indicate publicly at this stage what precise representations might be involved since this disclosure might adversely affect Canada's bargaining position.

3. No such projections have been completed to date; however, such questions are under consideration in the government's general review of energy policy.

TEST RUN OF A UNIT TRAIN OF WHEAT

Question No. 240—Mr. Southam:

1. Was a test run of a unit train of wheat made early in December between Saskatoon and Vancouver and, if so (a) what was the number of bushels of wheat involved (b) what was the grade of wheat involved (c) how many hopper cars made up the train (d) what was the time involved in moving this unit train between Saskatchewan and Vancouver (e) how long did it require to load the train (f) how long did it require to unload the train (g) who was the purchaser of the wheat and at what price (h) was there a net saving per bushel in moving this amount of wheat under this experiment and (i) if so, what was the saving per bushel and will the saving be reflected in the net return to the producer through the Pool Account (ii) if not, will the loss be deducted from the Pool Account?

2. Are further test runs to be made with wheat or other grains in the near future?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian Wheat Board as follows: 1 Yes. (a) 278,868 bushels; (b) No. 2 Manitoba Northern, (c) 90 hopper cars; (d) Total time from beginning of loading at Saskatoon December 3 at 6:00 a.m. to completion of loading to vessel December 6 at 4:00 p.m. —82 hours; (e) 10 working hours; (f) 8 hours; (g) As a matter of good commercial practice, it is not the policy of the Canadian Wheat Board to divulge sales information which is deemed to be confidential between the Board, as seller, and the buyer. (h) (i) and (ii) There was no saving realized as a result of this experiment. There were some additional expenses involved which would not have been incurred had the same grain been moved in the usual way to its normal destination. At the present time it is known that approximately $4,000 in additional transit charges have accrued but a final accounting cannot be made until all the facts are known. It was understood from the outset that no monetary benefit would result from the experiment and the Canadian Wheat Board participated in it on the understanding that any unusual expenses which would be involved would not be a charge on producers but would be met by the Canadian Grain Commission.

2 No, there are no positive plans at this time for further test runs.

GRAIN TRAFFIC—VANCOUVER

Question No. 255—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many box cars of grain were unloaded in Vancouver in each day from November 1, 1971 to date?

2. What is the capacity of the terminal elevators at Vancouver?

3. What was the maximum amount of grain held at these terminals in each week since November 1, 1971?

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE—RECEPTION, MARCH 4, 1972

Question No. 305—Mr. McIntosh:

1. What was the purpose of the reception, concert, dinner and dance hosted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the National Arts Centre the evening of March 4, 1972?

2. Of the guests, how many were (a) diplomats (b) others?

3. What was the cost of the National Arts Centre Orchestra's special concert staged for the occasion?

4. what was the cost of (a) the liquor (b) the wines (c) the champagne (d) the liqueurs?

5. What was the cost of the dinner?

6. What was the cost of the orchestra engaged for the dancing?

7. What was the rental fee for the Arts Centre facilities, accommodation and staff?

8. Is entertaining on this scale a routine practice for the Department of External Affairs?

9. What is the total departmental annual cost of entertaining (a) in Ottawa (b) in Canadian missions overseas?

10. Did the Minister or any of his departmental officers request or order the Arts Centre Management to permit minimal or no publicity in the media of the event?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. For a number of years, at least since the late 1950's, it has been the custom for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to provide an annual occasion to enable foreign diplomatic representatives and their wives to meet socially as a group with a number of distinguished Canadians in appropriate Canadian surroundings. An occasion of this nature serves as an expression of appreciation of the courtesies and hospitality extended to Canadian representatives in and visitors to the countries of the foreign Heads of Mission concerned and also to a great many of our fellow citizens here in Canada by those diplomatic representatives. It serves also as a gesture of hospitality on the part of the Canadian Government towards the distinguished diplomatic representatives of the friendly governments accredited to Canada. The importance of such occasions has long been recognized by governments of many other countries where official entertainment in honour of Heads of Foreign Diplomatic Missions is an established practice.

2. (a) 134; (b) 138.

3. $3,500.

4. (a), (b), (c) and (d): liquor and liqueurs: $900; wines including champagne: $1,400.

5. $3,655.

6. $220.

7. No rental fee for facilities and accommodation. Staff $800.

8. This year it was possible to organize one single social event rather than a series of smaller ones, as in the past, by making use of the excellent facilities of the National Arts Centre. It was also the first time that a concert by the prestigious National Arts Centre Orchestra was made part of the event. In view of the success of the evening, it is hoped that similar social events with emphasis on Canadian culture, may be held annually in honour of Heads of Foreign Diplomatic Missions and their wives.

9. (a) The annual Departmental hospitality costs in Ottawa during 1971-72 amounted to $24,579. Other hospitality expenditures controlled by Departmental headquarters in Ottawa: (1) hospitality in connection with international conferences amounted to $36,636; (2) hospitality in connection with the Government's cultural and information programs amounted to $6,509; (3) hospitality extended by the Government of Canada to visiting Heads of State and dignitaries amounted to $327,574. (b) The direct costs of entertaining at Canadian posts abroad for the fiscal year 1971-72 were $706,504.

10. No. Indeed, special effort was made to invite a diverse group of Canadians including newspaper editors from Ottawa and other Canadian cities, many of whom attended the evening function.

LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT

Question No. 310—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many copies of the Le Dain Commission Report on the Non-Medical use of Drugs have been printed, where are they sold and what is the price per copy?

2. How many copies must be sold in order to make the publication profitable and what, if anything, is the government doing to avoid loss on the publication?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): 1. 5,339 French copies and 24,960 English copies have been printed of the Interim Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs. Copies are sold through Information Canada's Centres (Bookshops), commercial booksellers which have asked for them and by mail order from Information Canada. The Report sells for $2 per copy.

2. The publication became profitable after the sale of 4,270 copies of the French edition and 19,960 copies of the English edition. Copies of the Report are nearly sold out and a revised second edition is presently under consideration.

GENERAL ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE BOARD

Question No. 313—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many manufacturers have been helped to take advantage of export opportunities arising from the Kennedy Round by the General Adjustment Assistance Board since it was established in 1968?

2. How much money has been saved or expended by manufacturers as a result of the establishment of the General Adjustment Assistance Board?

3. What is the yearly cost of maintaining the General Adjustment Assistance Board?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. A total of 76 manufacturers have been assisted.

2. (a) The amount that manufacturers have saved is not available. (b) As a result of the establishment of GAAP, manufacturers have expended or committed to expend $77,914,000 on restructuring programs.

3. For fiscal year 1971/72, a total of $11,000.

SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT ON POVERTY

Question No. 318—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many copies of the Senate Committee Report on Poverty have been produced?

2. Where are they sold and what is the price per copy?

3. How many copies must be sold in order to make production profitable or break even?

4. What, if anything, will the government do to avoid any possible loss on the publication of the Senate Commmittee Report on Poverty?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): 1. 2,500 French copies and 11,544 English copies have been printed of the Senate Committee Report on Poverty.

2. Copies are sold through Information Canada's Centres (Bookshops), commercial booksellers which have asked for them and by mail order from Information Canada. The Report sells for $2 per copy.

3. Sales must reach 8,772 copies of the English edition and 1,676 copies of the French edition in order to recover printing costs. Sales of the English edition have exceeded the break even point and the French edition is within 100 copies of that level.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO STATE OF BANGLA DESH

Question No. 347—Mr. Robinson:

Has the government extended recognition of the independent State of Bangla Desh and, if so, what assistance is planned by the government for this nation at the present time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Government of Canada recognized the state of Bangla Desh on February 14, 1972. A Canadian mission headed by Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, President of CIDA, recently visited Bangla Desh and assessed the humanitarian and rehabilitation requirements. As a result of the mission's findings and in co-ordination with the United Nations Relief Organization Dacca (UNROD), a Canadian aid program is being discussed with Bangla Desh officials. The prospective breakdown is as follows: food aid $20 million; railway track material $7 million; tubewell project $5 million; commodities $5 million; shallow draft vessels $2.5 million; electrical transmission spare parts $1 million; and $5 million unallocated.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 356—Mr. Robinson:

Under the new family allowance program, what is the estimated amount of money that will be saved that would formerly have been paid to recipients who would not fall within the eligibility criteria?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There will be no savings experienced because of the cancellation of benefits to families with income above eligible Family Income Security Plan levels, but rather a transfer to low income families of the sums involved. Those families who will not qualify for Family Income Security Plan benefits now receive an estimated $180 million under the Family, Youth and Quebec Schooling Allowances programs.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Question No. 360—Mr. Ryan:

1. What amount has the Secretary of State spent on advertising the Opportunities for Youth Program, and in what ways has the Program been advertised?

2. Where are application forms for OFY grants being made available?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. The following expenditures can be clearly assigned to advertising publicity given to the Opportunities for Youth Program to date: (i) sums spent by regional offices for local radio spots: $5,000; (ii) a campaign on radio and in student newspapers to remind students of the March 8 deadline: $28,000; (iii) printing and distribution of pamphlets and posters used by field officers and other officials: $30,200; Total: $63,200. The Program was publicized through a press conference by the Secretary of State January 13, by hundreds of press articles and interviews given by 75 field officers on campuses and elsewhere to citizen and student groups throughout the country.

2. Before the cut-off date of March 8, the main points of distribution for the 500,000 application forms were the regional and field offices of the Opportunities for Youth Program, some 600 Canada Manpower Centres throughout the country, 18 regional offices of the Citizenship Branch of the Secretary of State Department, Summer '72 information officers, Information Canada Inquiry Centres and the operational headquarters of the Opportunities for Youth Program in Ottawa.

AMOUNT DEBITED BY CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Question No. 386—Mr. Horner:

How much did the Canadian Wheat Board bill the Department of Finance under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act for each month beginning March 1, 1968 until March 1, 1972?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act are paid monthly on the basis of a calculation submitted by the Canadian Wheat Board at the beginning of each crop year. Subject to the final determination of the Canadian Wheat Board stocks of wheat on August 1 the basis for the monthly payments may be revised during the course of the crop year. The Canadian Wheat Board does not bill the Government on a monthly basis.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL UNIONS

Question No. 389—Mr. Robinson:

1. To the government's knowledge, how much money did Canadians pay into international unions in each of the years 1965 to 1971 respectively?

2. How much money was paid to Canadian union members belonging to international unions in each of the years 1965 to 1971 respectively?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: 1. Net dues and assessments paid by Canadian members to international union headquarters: (1969 is the latest year for which figures are available.)

1965	28,297,000
1966	30,987,000
1967	35,154,000
1968	41,514,000
1969	41,377,000
	177,329,000

2. The following table presents details of payments to Canadian union members under the three specific categories of expenditures in Canada which international unions are required to report under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act and Regulations: (1969 is the latest year for which figures are available.)

PORTNEUF CONSTITUENCY—BENEFITS UNDER THE ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 396—Mr. Godin:

For the winter of 1971-72, have companies in the constituency of Portneuf applied for benefits from the Department of Manpower and Immigration under the on-the-job training program and, if so (a) how many applications were made (b) how many projects were accepted (c) what is the average duration of the agreements and how many workers will benefit from them (d) how much will be spent by the government in this constituency under this program?

Questions

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Statistical records for the Canada Manpower Training on-the-job Program are maintained on the basis of each Canada Manpower Centre and census geographic code but not by electoral district. The Portneuf constituency is serviced by the following CMCs: Quebec East—except villages of Montauban and Notre-Dame-des-Anges; rural municipalities of Notre-Dame-des-Anges-de-Montauban, Rivière-à-Pierre and St-Rémi; the unorganized. Grand'Mère—the villages of Montauban and Notre-Dame-des-Anges; rural municipalities of Notre-Dame-des-Anges-de-Montauban, Rivière-à-Pierre and St-Rémi; the unorganized.

Following are the responses applicable to these two CMCs as at May 10, 1972: (a) number of applications: Quebec East, 157; Grand'Mère, 34; Total, 191. (b) Number of projects accepted: Quebec East, 128; Grand'Mère, 22; Total, 150. (c) Average duration per trainee: Quebec East, 18 weeks; Grand'Mère, 13 weeks; Average, 16 weeks. Number of trainees: Quebec East, 341; Grand'Mère, 189; Total 530. (d) Total training on-the-job expenditures committed: Quebec East, $474,982.23; Grand'Mère, $133,248.38; Total, $608,230.61.

DEVELOPMENT OF PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

Question No. 427—Mr. Rowland:

1. What is the amount spent by the government, through grants or otherwise, on the development of pharmaceutical products?

2. In the past five years, how many pharmaceutical products have been developed with the assistance of the government?

3. Of the pharmaceutical products referred to in part 2, how many were eventually manufactured and marketed by Canadian-owned drug manufacturing companies in each of the past five years?

4. Does the government require that pharmaceutical products developed with the assistance of federal research grants or other federal assistance be produced and marketed by Canadian-owned drug manufacturing companies and, if not, for what reasons?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Department of Industry Trade and Commerce, through its Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, granted $2,064,000 to drug companies for research on pharmaceutical products during the years 1967 to 1972. In addition during the same period $1,309,000 was loaned to pharmaceutical companies through the Pharmaceutical Industry Development Assistance Program to assist them in expanding and improving their operations, which includes their product development capabilities. Direct research grants under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce Program for Advancement of Industrial Technology to pharmaceutical manufacturers to date has amounted to $217,127.

2. In total, 17 new products have been developed which include products licensed by Canadian-owned companies under the provisions of Bill C-102 and hitherto not available from sources other than the patent holder. In addition six new products are presently under development.

3. Twelve new pharmaceutical products developed in part with federal funds, and available through licensing resultant from changes in the Patent Act incorporated under Bill C-102 have been made available by Canadian-owned companies to the Canadian public in the last five years, eight of them during 1970 and four during 1971.

4. Recipients of grants under IRDIA are required to sign a statement that they are free to exploit the results of their new product developments abroad in most world markets. It is understood that in certifying this statement the applicants will endeavour to build plants for the manufacture of these products in Canada and do as much in the way of export development from Canada as is commercially feasible. Similarly under the PAIT program recipients of grants must show that should a new product be developed they will undertake its manufacture in Canada to the maximum extent commercially possible without prejudicing their financial position. These programs do not make a distinction between Canadian-owned companies and non Canadian-owned companies. All companies which are incorporated federally or in a province in Canada are eligible for assistance. The nationality of their shareholders or officers is not a condition. To restrict the assistance to Canadian-owned companies would be to fail to utilize the very considerable technological and worldwide marketing capabilities of the foreign-owned companies in Canada, some of which have made considerable investment in Canada and account for a major portion of Canadian drug exports.

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE FERRY SERVICE—MV JOHN HAMILTON GRAY

Question No. 430—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Will the MV John Hamilton Gray be returned to the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service and, if so, on what date?

2. What new ships are being constructed for this service?

3. When are such ships to be ready for service?

4. What improvements are being made on the facilities of the Vacationland and Holiday Island?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The MV John Hamilton Gray is currently on the Borden-Cape Tormentine service and will be remaining there until May 23 when she will be withdrawn from service for refit.

2. No new ships are being constructed for this service at the present time. However, sufficient capacity to meet the anticipated demands is being assured through the interchange of vessels between the Gulf service and the PEI service and through the addition of two new vessels last year.

3. Not applicable in view of the answer to No. 2.

4. Washrooms are being installed on the lower car deck of each of these vessels and these will be ready in time for the return of the vessels to service this spring.

PAYMENTS MADE TO MANITOBA UNDER NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE PROGRAMS

Question No. 516—Mr. Murta:

What were the total contributions and payments made to the Province of Manitoba under Department of National Health and Welfare programs during the past fiscal year?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Under the Medical Services Branch: (including hospitalization and medical care services for Indians); $666,096.65. Under the Health Programs Branch: (including medicare and hospital insurance payments, the Health Resources Fund and Health Grants); $83,171,452.88. Under the Social Allowances and Services Branch: (including assistance and services under the Canada Assistance Plan, Blind and Disabled Persons Allowances); $36,559,552.00. Making a total of $120,397,101.53.

*ARMENIAN INDEPENDENCE

Question No. 517—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. In 1971, did the government receive a memorandum from the Canadian Committee for the Independence of Armenia regarding the Armenian independence and, if so, on what date?

2. What reply was given?

3. What, if any, representations were made to governments of other countries by the Government of Canada on the question and, on what dates?

4. What response was received?

5. What further action is contemplated by the Government of Canada?

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes, on April 24, 1971. This memorandum asks the support of all nations for the creation of a free and independent Armenia.

2. The memorandum was acknowledged on May 3, 1971 and has been given serious consideration.

3. No representations have been made to governments of other countries on the question. No other country has made representations to Canada to support the creation of a free and independent Armenia as proposed in the memorandum. There have been no resolutions on the question before the United Nations or any of its agencies in recent years.

4. Not applicable.

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, by letter of April 21, 1972, indicated a willingness to meet with representatives of the Armenian Community in Toronto in keeping with his general policy of maintaining contact with leaders of Canadian ethnic groups.

NIHON NOSAN KOGYO COMPANY, JAPAN

Question No. 518—Mr. Mazankowski:

Is the government involved in any way, or aware of, a proposal by Nihon Nosan Kogyo Co., the largest compound feed maker in Japan, to develop a wholly-capitalized feed lot operation in Alberta in co-operation with Mitsubishi Corporation, which would run beef cattle and hogs destined for distribution to Canadian, American and Japanese markets?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is aware of the interests of many Japanese companies in developing a Canadian source of beef, as well as a number of other agricultural commodities. There is no involvement by the Department, however, in the specific project referred to.

Questions

BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY—NUMBER OF PERSONS ACCEPTED FOR TRAINING COURSES

Question No. 533—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. During the years 1969-70, 1970-71 and 1971-72, how many persons in the constituency of Beauce were accepted for training courses given by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

2. What amounts were paid to the students?

3. What were the training costs?

[Translation]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Training information is not available on a constituency basis. The following relates to training provided in the area served by the Canada Manpower Centre at Ville St. Georges: 1. Number of trainees commencing training[1]: Fiscal Year: 1969-70; Full Time: 872; Part Time: 483. Fiscal Year: 1970-71; Full Time: 899; Part Time: 767. Fiscal Year: 1971-72[2]; Full Time: 1,231; Part Time: 388.

2. Training Allowance costs (including trainee travel grants): 1969-70, $625,201; 1970-71, $740,651; 1971-72[2], $874,992.

3. Training Costs: 1969-70, $582,104; 1970-71, $563,878; 1971-72[2], $680,529.

ASSOCIATION OF AFRICAN UNIVERSITIES—REQUIREMENT OF STUDENTS WHO BENEFIT UNDER CIDA

Question No. 541—Mr. Robinson:

Are the African students who will benefit under the CIDA contribution toward the university scholarship fund administered by the Association of African Universities of Accra, Ghana, required to return to work in their own country after their educational pursuit and (a) if so, for how long (b) if not, are they allowed to immigrate to Canada or other countries after finishing their education?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian contribution towards the university scholarship fund of the Association of African Universities is an extension of an existing program supported by other donor countries. Selected students do not sign contracts with the AAU to return to their homeland although it is expected of them. Many students are sponsored by their own governments and have jobs ready for them on their return and it could be that these have signed undertakings to return. However, the signing of such agreements is not a requirement by Canada for students nominated under this program. To answer the second part of the question the graduates may apply for immigration permits to any country in the world; however, there are reasons to expect that many of them will remain in Africa. The education the students receive is regionally oriented and fits them for work in Africa rather than in Europe or North America. This is particularly true in such disciplines as agriculture and tropical medicine. The Canadian project is just beginning and until students graduate it is not possible to report on their actions; however, the Government believes that the pattern will be in accordance with its aims and objectives in assisting developing countries.

Questions

OIL DRILLING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA COASTAL WATERS

Question No. 554—Mr. Douglas:

1. How many oil wells have been drilled to date in the coastal waters of British Columbia?

MANPOWER STRENGTHS—MEMBER ELIGIBLE FOR VETERANS' LAND ACT

Question No. 570—Mr. Foster:

How many members of the permanent Canadian Forces are currently serving whose compulsory retirement age (i.e. expiration of service) extends past the deadline of March 31, 1974, for assistance under the Veterans' Land Act?

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): On April 30, 1972, there were 61,953 personnel serving in the Canadian Forces whose compulsory retirement age or expiration of service is scheduled to extend beyond March 31, 1974. However, records are not maintained by the Department of National Defence in a manner which would permit the number still in the Canadian Forces, eligible for assistance under the Veterans' Land Act, to be identified. The Act is administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs and it is the responsibility of individuals to make application to that Department to determine their eligibility and apply for assistance if they so desire.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Motions for Papers

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 18 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents.

COPY OF ALL CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING SALE OF LAND BY CITY OF REGINA TO DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Motion No. 18—Mr. Burton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence and other documents concerning the recent sale of land owned by the City of Regina at the Regina Airport to the Department of Transport.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 11, 27 and 28.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN MR. JOHN CARSON AND HON. JOHN TURNER REGARDING BILINGUALISM IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Motion No. 11—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between Mr. John Carson, Chairman of the Public Service Commission and the Honourable John Turner, Minister of Justice, regarding bilingualism in the Public Service and its application under the terms of the Public Service Employment Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this correspondence in general cannot be identified as government papers as such but rather should be identified as correspondence between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), as a member of parliament, and one of the established institutions of government. In addition, some of the correspondence reflects on the personal competence or character of individuals—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether the hon. member's remarks are acceptable under the terms of the Standing Order and the practice of the House. The hon. parliamentary secretary should indicate immediately whether it is proposed to table the documents.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member in whose name this motion appears I suggested that it stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motions for Papers

COPY OF REPORT BY GASTON G. CHAMAILLARD FOR DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES RELATING TO WATER RESOURCES AND WATER POLLUTION

Motion No. 27—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Gaston G. Chamaillard, undertaken for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, regarding a Canada-wide survey of public information, educational activities relating to water resources and water pollution, as mentioned in answer to Question Number 1,323 of the 1st Session of this Parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is the same as motion for the production of papers No. 84 of the last session. As stated at that time, this report was prepared for internal working purposes. It contains information obtained on a confidential basis and must, therefore, be treated as privileged. I would therefore request that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF REPORT BY OPERATION RESEARCH INDUSTRIES—QUANTITATIVE ASSESSMENT OF THE POLICY AND PLANNING BRANCH

Motion No. 28—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the consultant report by Operation Research Industries Limited undertaken for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding a quantitative assessment of the Policy and Planning Branch as mentioned in answer to Question Number 2,452 of the 1st Session of this Parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is the same as motion for the production of papers No. 90 of the last session. As stated at that time, the report is an internal working document which was prepared to assist unit management in determining what organizational changes might be required to increase efficiency of operations, and its release is not considered to be in the public interest. Under these circumstances, it is requested that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Jerome: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDUSTRY

FORD MOTOR COMPANY—POSSIBILITY OF SHUTDOWN BECAUSE OF U.S. POLLUTION CONTROLS—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH AMERICANS ON DISTRIBUTION AND ECONOMIC DISLOCATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but in his absence I will address it to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government given consideration to holding meetings with the government of the United States with the aim in mind of persuading that government to permit the Ford Motor Company to distribute 1973 model cars to its agencies with the proviso that these 1973 models not be sold until the completion of the new tests being carried out by the United States Environmental Protection Agency?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): This is quite an interesting suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I will see that it is passed on to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, has the government also considered holding meetings with the United States government with the object of avoiding a dislocation of the production of the Ford Motor Company both in Canada and in the United States because of the very serious effects such dislocations will have on the economies of both countries?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is aware that the government of Canada is meeting fairly continuously on a number of trade matters with the United States, and that preoccupation with avoiding dislocation of the motor car industry is of just as great concern to them as to us.

Mr. Hees: In view of that very general non-answer, and because of the great seriousness of the dislocation which can result from the Ford Motor Company having to stop production, will the government make it a very special point with the government of the United States to avoid such dislocation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FORD MOTOR COMPANY—POSSIBILITY OF SHUTDOWN BECAUSE OF U.S. POLLUTION CONTROLS—CO-ORDINATION OF DEPARTMENTAL ACTIVITIES TO MINIMIZE EFFECTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Minister of Transport seems to be charged with the responsibility of looking after safety matters, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce seems to be ducking the question because his responsibility is in the area of production—

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might attempt to ask questions this afternoon rather than make statements. We will probably make better progress that way.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Acting Prime Minister see that the activities of these two departments are co-ordinated and that the production losses are anticipated in order to make sure that unemployment does not result in Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the assumption behind the question, namely, that the activities of the two departments are not co-ordinated, is quite unsubstantiated.

AUTOMOBILES—POSSIBLE TARIFF AMENDMENT BECAUSE OF CHANGES IN U.S. APPROACH TO AUTO PACT

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board as Acting Prime Minister. When the automotive trade pact was signed some years ago there was a great deal of concern over the loss of millions of dollars in tariffs. The explanation given was that this would be compensated for by the number of new jobs. If, as it would appear, many main and supporting plants could be closed down as a result of changes in the United States approach, does the government have in mind any change in the tariff structure to compensate for the loss of employment opportunities for Canadians?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman will be aware that as a consequence of this particular arrangement there have been and will continue to be created many new jobs in Canada in the automotive field.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Spadina rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Ryan: No, Mr. Speaker. It is another question.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INCENTIVE GRANTS—ALLEGED MISUSE BY CERTAIN COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF LEGAL ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that according to the findings of Dr. D. Springate, who appeared before the Standing Committee on Regional Development yesterday, 11 of 18 companies that received DREE grants totalling $34 million reaped windfall profits from these grants, would the minister undertake to make a statement to the House by the end of this week explaining how this was possible in terms of the act and what action he, as the responsible minister, intends to take to avoid a repetition?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I shall be appearing before the committee this afternoon where I can give more details. The basis of Dr. Springate's thesis is extremely narrow. No one with a slightly scientific mind can draw sure conclusions from it. Yesterday, Dr. Springate himself stated in answer to a question put to him before the committee that he was dissatisfied with his own conclusions, and I agree with him.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister to deal with the specific instances cited by Dr. Springate. In view of the meeting this afternoon I should like to go on to a second related question. Inasmuch as Dr. Springate's study clearly indicates what I would regard as corporate cheating on the part of certain corporations, would the minister indicate whether any companies receiving DREE grants have been prosecuted, whether any legal action of any sort has been taken against any companies up to the present time and, whether or not something of this nature has taken place in the past, if any legal action is being contemplated?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Springate has never claimed that his study was an objective analysis of the financial situation of those companies and of the reasons for their applications. He has merely held personal interviews and drawn his conclusions therefrom. I fail to see how legal action can be taken as a result of interviews with people whose names and circumstances the interviewer himself refuses to reveal.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the minister should attempt to smear a serious study in this way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really do not think we should embark on a debate on this matter which obviously is of interest to many hon. members. We should try to limit contributions at this stage to straightforward questions and perhaps straightforward answers.

Mr. Broadbent: I will try for a straightforward answer to this question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact Dr. Springate asserted in his study that officials in the minister's department are working in clear contravention of the stated purposes of the Regional Development Incentives Act and provides documentary evidence of this in his written thesis, would the minister inform the House whether he has personally authorized such departures from the stated purposes of the act?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there are dozens of officials in my department highly specialized in the same field as Dr. Springate. They carried out case studies and were in possession of complete data, which was not the case for Dr. Springate, and their findings were not the same as his.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

INCENTIVE GRANTS—ALLEGED MISUSE BY CERTAIN COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the seriousness of the charges raised by Dr. Springate which concern 11 companies and involve over $34 million in public funds, and as these grants were made under the discretionary powers of the minister under RDIA, will the minister undertake an investigation into these charges?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, each application is thoroughly examined together with financial statements. For existing companies, we study not only the balance sheet for the current year, but for the three previous years, something which Dr. Springate never did, having himself recognized that in all cases, he interviewed only about—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the charges that some of the applications were falsified, will the minister now undertake an investigation, or at least undertake to talk to Dr. Springate?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if Dr. Springate or the member for St. John's East wish to tell us what company has admitted having falsified the applications, we are ready to lodge proceedings tomorrow morning.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: He will tell you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously getting into a debate. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and then a representative of the group to my extreme left.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Considering the recent ruling of the Canadian Transport Commission authorizing increases in Bell telephone rates, will the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression was that the hon. member was rising on a supplementary question. Obviously I was wrong. I think we should complete the first round of questioning before going to another matter.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—RESULTS OF MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIER BOURASSA

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Could he tell us whether he has met the Quebec premier in connection with the James Bay Indians and what have been the results of that meeting?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I expect to meet Mr. Bourassa tomorrow afternoon in Quebec City.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS OPPOSED TO DEVELOPMENT—CO-OPERATION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister invited me to do last Friday, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Recently, a group of Indians from Northern Quebec requested the support of the federal government in order to stop the work on the James Bay project. Can the minister tell the House today whether the government intends to answer this request in the affirmative? If not, can he confirm again that his government is still prepared to co-operate in this project within authorized limits while giving adequate guarantees to the groups concerned?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): To the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I shall answer that I have, since then, met with the Indians in my office where we had discussions. They are not at this time asking that the work be stopped altogether; they would prefer a negotiated settlement. That is why I shall meet with Mr. Bourassa tomorrow in order to make sure that the interests of the James Bay Indians are well protected.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Rock: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert has the floor.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY OF CAUSES ALLEGEDLY SUBMITTED TO PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As I look at the serried ranks of the cabinet, with only 40 per cent of its members present, I have to direct this question to him. I wish to ask him whether or not the government will table the findings of a study into the causes of inflation from 1965 to 1970 said to have been placed on the desk of Mr. John Young, chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, some months ago?

• (1430)

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this report placed on the desk of Dr. John Young some time ago, but I will make inquiries as to its appropriateness for tabling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, because it was of such importance I am sure it came before the cabinet. Did the researchers find that the government's rapid escalation of spending, at an average annual rate of 14 per cent between 1965 and 1970, was the principal cause of inflation during that period rather than wage increases?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as a member of the cabinet I am still unaware of this report, so I do not know what it said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That speaks very badly of a cabinet that does not know what is going on in connection with inflation. Would the minister look into this now because the House would like to know, the Prime Minister having stated in December, 1970, that inflation was licked?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Regina East has a supplementary to the previous question. Perhaps we might try to have a few supplementaries and then go to the next questioner.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INCENTIVE GRANTS—ALLEGED MISUSE BY CERTAIN COMPANIES—SUGGESTED REVIEW OF DESIGNATED REGIONS AND SPECIAL AREA PROGRAMS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the startling findings of Dr. Springate, which were made as the result of a study of specific cases involving 18 out of 25 large companies in receipt of grants, could the minister indicate whether he is going to undertake an overhaul of the designated regions and the special area programs when these come up for renewal in the very near future?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly see the relation between the first and second parts of the question but I think that the second one is really the root of the matter. Now, in the very near future, I will make a statement in the House on the designated and special areas.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will have noted that there are a few supplementaries sought on this subject. We have to make an attempt to move on. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and then the hon. member for Lachine.

INCENTIVE GRANTS—ALLEGED MISUSE BY CERTAIN COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY NON-PARTISAN BODY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the seriousness of the charges made yesterday in the committee by Dr. Springate, would the minister undertake to appoint a non-partisan committee or authority to investigate these charges in order to see what is really happening?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for Dr. Springate's academic skill. He made a study on my department and I think this can be very useful. He refused himself to identify any company or person he interviewed; he did not examine the financial statement of any company or any document on which our decisions are based. Therefore I regard his study as a serious one—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. minister but—

[English]

Obviously this is debate. I think we should try to move on to the next question. I will recognize first the hon. member for Lachine and then the hon. member for Peace River.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REQUEST TO QUEBEC PREMIER THAT INDIANS AND ESKIMOS OF JAMES BAY AREA BE GIVEN VOTE PROVINCIALLY

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in regard to his meeting with Premier Bourassa. Would he ask the Premier of Quebec to allow Indians and Eskimos in the James Bay area to vote provincially in the future? They do not have this franchise at present.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform the hon. member that the right to vote was granted to the Indians and Eskimos in Quebec for the last elections, before 1970.

[English]

Mr. Rock: Mr. Speaker, I understand they have not even a constituency in that area at present.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CIRCUMSTANCES OF ADMISSION OF PERSHING GERVAIS TO CANADA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister or, rather, for the Prime Minister who is just entering the chamber. I knew the right hon. gentleman could not resist me. Would the Prime Minister or a member of his government make a statement on motions tomorrow or before the end of this week regarding the case of Pershing Gervais, alias Paul

Mason, who is alleged to be in this country on a minister's permit from January, 1972, to January, 1973, as a result of special arrangements between the United States Department of Justice and officers of the Canadian government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say I never heard of the gentleman, but I will be very glad to take notice of the question and see if a statement is called for in a case like this.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the Prime Minister also be good enough to investigate and report on the further allegation that Mr. Pershing Gervais is in this country partly as a result of statements made to him by a Canadian government official that there would be no problems with the Canadian government over immigration, entry, work permits and other regulations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into the matter. Perhaps the hon. member could jot down the name on a piece of paper so I would be able to trace it.

Mr. Baldwin: He is already on record.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLEY OF SECRETARY GENERAL OF UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the House will allow me to interrupt the question period for a moment in order to draw attention to the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of a distinguished visitor in the person of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Mr. Kurt Waldheim.

As hon. members know, Mr. Waldheim is not a newcomer in our country. He was first minister plenipotentiary and later ambassador of Austria to Canada from 1956 to 1960. So, it is an old friend that we welcome today.

[English]

Mr. Waldheim was appointed Secretary General of the United Nations in succession to U Thant. He is the fourth incumbent of an office described as the highest to which a diplomat can aspire, and also as the most impossible job in the world.

Mr. Waldheim emphasized at the time of his appointment that the United Nations was an instrument of peace and that it was up to the member states to ensure that it fulfilled this role. The Secretary General, who has already been honoured and decorated by numerous countries, knows that he enjoys the confidence of a body representative of most of the nations of the world. We pray that under Mr. Waldheim's guiding hand the world organization will successfully fulfil the role for which it was destined.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Baldwin.]

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS TO SECURE REDUCED RATES FOR PENSIONERS

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Considering the recent ruling of the Canadian Transport Commission authorizing increases in Bell Telephone rates, would the minister contact the Bell Telephone Company and the Canadian Transport Commission to see if they could not arrange special reduced rates for pensioners similar to those which now apply on trains and aircraft?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting idea which I have discussed with Bell officials informally on occasion, but it does appear that the law now prevents discrimination among customers. Therefore this is something which might be further discussed in the House, if the hon. member would like to do so.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING TRANSPORT COMMISSION DECISION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Communications some questions which I addressed to the Prime Minister yesterday arising out of the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to grant the application for rate increases by Bell Canada totalling, as I mentioned yesterday, over $47 million a year. May I ask the minister whether he and his department are studying the matter with a view to taking action with respect to the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have asked my departmental officials to study the matter and they are doing so.

Mr. Lewis: May I draw the minister's attention, as I did with the Prime Minister yesterday, to the fact that both under a section of the Railway Act, section 335(4) if I remember correctly, and under a section of the Natural Transportation Act—

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some reservations about the hon. member drawing sections of statutes to the attention of the minister. Perhaps the hon. member might like to ask the question. It might be easier for the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that under both the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act the government has authority (a) to demand all information in the possession of both the company and the commission and (b) to rescind or vary any order or decision made by the commission, is the minister giving consideration to rescinding the order of the commission so that Bell customers in Canada do not have to provide interest-free capital to this large corporation?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications has no authority under either of these acts to rescind the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Lewis: I did not say the minister, I said the government.

Mr. Stanbury: I listened carefully to the hon. member. The fact is that there are many channels for seeking review of this decision open to any citizen as well as by the parties before the commission. There has been no suggestion made by any of these parties or any citizen yet to the government or to the commission for such review. When the study by my department, to which I referred a few minutes ago, is completed we will certainly consider whether or not any action by the government is warranted.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the section of the National Transportation Act to which I have referred gives the Governor in Council authority, of his own motion, to rescind or vary any decision of the commission, may I ask the minister whether he will see to it that the government will consider rescinding this totally unjustified third increase in Bell Telephone rates in the last two or three years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary North.

DRUGS

MARIJUANA—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY HEALTH MINISTER OPPOSING LEGALIZATION OF POSSESSION AND USE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I have already put this question to the Prime Minister yesterday. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare was speaking in Hamilton over the weekend, I believe, he stated to a group of students that he was opposed to the legalization of marijuana and hashish. Was he speaking for the government and is that the government's policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he can ask only the Prime Minister, or somebody answering on behalf of the Prime Minister, to say whether a statement represents government policy.

Mr. Woolliams: Then I direct the question to the Prime Minister who took notice of it yesterday.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare say that he did not make the statement which the hon. member attributes to him.

Mr. Woolliams: Then possibly I can now put this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. After listening to the answer given by the Prime Minister, does he say that he was misquoted in the Montreal Star which carried the headline, "Munro Opposes Legalizing Possession Of Pot"? He is alleged to have said that in a speech to students in Hamilton. Does he take the position that he was misquoted?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am taking no position on being misquoted or otherwise, knowing the free way in which the hon. member quotes. What I said in Hamilton was that we would study the Le Dain Commission report and on the basis of that study come to a conclusion on whether we would adopt the recommendation with reference to removing the offence of simple possession of marijuana. I also reiterated the concern of the Le Dain Commission about the effects of marijuana on adolescents.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary, and before I put it may I suggest that I was not quoting myself but was quoting from a newspaper clipping. May I ask the minister whether he has now placed the report before cabinet and has he made recommendations to cabinet with reference to the report of the Le Dain Commission, particularly with reference to the legalization of marijuana and hashish?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker. The report has just been in the possession of my department for a matter of days. We are studying it and preparing recommendations to cabinet, but this will take a little while yet.

LE DAIN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING MARIJUANA—INQUIRY AS TO INSTRUCTIONS TO CROWN AGENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary to the Minister of Justice. In light of the recommendations made by Mr. Le Dain, have any instructions gone forward to the special agents representing the Department of Justice in reference to prosecutions for the use and possession of marijuana?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would want to check whether any action of any sort has been taken by the department so far on the basis of the report. So far as I know none has been taken.

PLANS FOR EXPANSION OF VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—ACQUISITION OF CORA BROWN PROPERTY—STUDY OF FUTURE USE OF BURKEVILLE AREA

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is further to a previous question concerning the expansion of Vancouver International Airport. Has the minister given final approval to an agreement to acquire the area known as the Cora Brown property?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. Final approval to that effect has not been given. There have been continuing discussions with the residents concerned, but they have not been finalized as of this moment so far as I know.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the minister whether he has approved a grant of funds to study the future use of the Burkeville area?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I can identify the Burkeville area precisely as such. What I have done is to indicate that we will prepare over-all plans for the future use of the whole of Sea Island and I presume that would include this area.

URBAN AFFAIRS

FEDERAL SPENDING—INQUIRY AS TO REVIEW TO ACHIEVE CLOSER CO-OPERATION IN LIGHT OF STATEMENT BY QUEBEC MINISTER

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the statement by Quebec's Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, the Honourable Gerard Levesque, that federal urban spending hurts more than it helps, is it the intention of the government to review its urban spending with a view to closer co-operation with the aims of provincial and municipal governments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without admitting in any way the veracity of the allegations of the so-called minister—I mean the so-called allegations of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You have done it again!

Mr. Trudeau: —the House does know that arrangements have been proposed for a tri-level meeting where representatives of the federal, provincial and municipal governments would come together to discuss this very problem. The House knows that the federal government has been interested for many months now in finding a process whereby we would be able to discuss these problems with the municipalities. It appears that such a process has been discovered and it was referred to in the House just a few days ago by way of an announcement.

Mr. Baldwin: Will Paul Hellyer sit in on it?

GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE OR NATIONAL URBAN COUNCIL

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): As a result of the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has the government abandoned its objective of a national urban council in favour of an annual tri-level conference only?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has abandoned nothing. It is looking jointly with the provincial and municipal administrations for ways in which they can come together to discuss the very problem which concerns the hon. member. I repeat that a decision has been made and a report has been made by the working group to me and to the other first ministers recommending such a meeting for later this year—in the fall presumably. It has not been decided yet whether it would be an annual meeting, whether it would be ongoing or otherwise. It is the first coming together of these three levels of government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are just ten minutes before the end of the question period. If each hon. member asks one question and two or three supplementaries we will fast reach the end before we can give an opportunity to other members to ask questions. I would recognize the hon. member for Spadina for a last supplementary.

SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION AT TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate whether federal-municipal tax-sharing agreements will be a subject of discussion at the forthcoming tri-level urban conference in November and, if so, would he indicate what the federal government's position on the matter will be?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have very serious doubts about the question. Certainly the first part of the question could very well be placed on the order paper. The second part would invite a rather lengthy statement which should be made on motions. However, if the Prime Minister can reply briefly he will be allowed to do so and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this time various authorities are still involved in setting up this consultative process, and I hope it will be successful. The federal government has been pressing for it, but at this stage it is too early to talk about the details of an agenda or the position of the government on this hypothetical agenda.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POLICY FOLLOWING PEARCE COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He was good enough to send us a copy of a statement made by him on the subject of Canadian policy toward Rhodesia following the Pearce commission report. Does he propose to make that statement in the House?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to do so. If at the end of the question period hon. members will agree to revert to motions, I will be happy to do so. Otherwise, it will be published.

STRATEGIC ARMS LIMITATION—REPORTED AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND SOVIET UNION—PRIOR ADVICE TO CANADA ON CONTENTS

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is further to one I raised on May 5 concerning strategic arms limitation and the talks that have been going on between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. In view of reports that such an agreement has been signed in Moscow today, will the minister advise whether Canada was informed as to the contents of this agreement prior to the signing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the United States government kept all members of NATO, including Canada, generally informed. I hope that the report the hon. member has received is true because we have been very much interested in success for the SALT talks. I know the House will join with me in congratulating the two super powers on having agreed to some limitation of these weapons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DANISH POSITION ON HIGH SEAS SALMON FISHING—SUGGESTED STRONG STAND BY CANADA

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the continuing leaks from the Danish government about their selfish position with regard to high seas salmon fishing, is the minister now, the day before the conference in Washington begins, prepared to really take the gloves off and get tough in regard to our position on such fishing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my purpose is not to get tough. My purpose is to achieve results. I think that the kind of attitude we have been taking, which has been a reasonable one and one that will appeal to all nations, is the best way of getting the Danish government to change its mind.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN HEALTH RESOURCES FUND TO ENABLE TRAINING OF MORE GENERAL MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the very serious and increasing shortage of general practitioners in Canada, 25,000 short in the next 20 years as indicated by the Canadian Medical Association, has the minister any plans to increase the health resources fund to help provide training facilities at universities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be aware that there are considerable moneys left unexpended in the health resources fund. That is the first point. The second point is that there is a good deal of controversy about whether there is a shortage of physicians, either now or in the long term, as the hon. member also knows.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED NUCLEAR TEST BY FRANCE—SUGGESTED GRANT TO "GREENPEACE III"

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question may be supplementary in a way to the earlier question about strategic arms limitation directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the policy of the government of Canada is one of opposition to further nuclear proliferation, and in view of the fact that the government of Canada has directed a note to the government of France protesting the proposed Pacific nuclear atmospheric tests, is the government considering making any kind of grant to the fund-short Greenpeace III voyage so the work of this foundation can be continued and enhanced?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it would be in the interests of either the Greenpeace men or the Canadian government to do that. I spoke to the sponsors of this project some time ago. I said that the best help they can give to this kind of protest is voluntary help which is not associated with the government.

Mr. Rose: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister plan to take a similar initiative and wire the good wishes of the government to Greenpeace III as he did on the Amchitka voyage of Greenpeace II?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will send the hon. member a copy of the telegram that I sent to the Greenpeace II mission and the hon. member may want to consider whether it is to be interpreted in the way his question was posed.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CABANO—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF GRANT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF CARDBOARD PLANT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REASSURE LOCAL RESIDENTS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a question.

The citizens of Cabano are quite worried following the news yesterday that the federal government would not grant $8 million for the construction of a cardboard factory in Cabano. Would the minister reassure the people of Cabano by stating that the government will indeed grant the funds necessary for the realization of this project of utmost importance?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the population need neither worry nor rejoice because the case is not closed and no decision has been reached as yet. As soon as it is, all those concerned will be advised accordingly.

AIR TRANSPORT

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise as to the result of the negotiations for the establishment of air service between Canada and the Peoples' Republic of China, in particular with reference to the designated carrier and the appropriate landing rights in Japan?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only advise on the first part of the hon. member's question. Talks were held in Peking which were quite successful in terms of resolving a number of technical and related questions. There will have to be a second round of talks. Of course, any relationship to any other country in regard to landing rights is not yet resolved. In partial answer, I might say we will have negotiations with Japan, as I recall, in June of this year.

IMPROVEMENT OF TOBERMORY-SOUTH BAY FERRY SERVICE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the House when we may expect something definite with regard to improved ferry service between Tobermory and South Bay?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Falling back on the standard answer, Mr. Speaker, soon, and I mean within a few days.

ALLEGED DIRTY CONDITION OF SHIP LOADING FOOD FOR BANGLADESH

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask the Minister of Transport. It has to do with a vessel now loading part of Canada's gift of food to Bangladesh in Vancouver harbour. The name of the vessel is the Philippine Admiral. Will the minister give consideration to looking into the complaints of 50 longshoremen working on that vessel as to the alleged dirty condition of this food ship?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, whenever it is called to my attention that an "Admiral" is dirty or otherwise, I am glad to look into it.

DISPUTE WITH NABET—TELEGRAM FROM UNION REQUESTING MINISTER OF LABOUR TO REVIEW NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It concerns a question I asked him the other day regarding a telegram sent to him by the NABET people asking the minister to review the negotiating process and the discussions between the CBC and NABET. The minister said he had the matter under study. In view of the importance of an early decision being reached for obvious reasons, has the minister come to any definite conclusion as to what the next move will be as far as his department is concerned?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity this week of meeting informally with representatives of NABET. The federal mediation service is at the disposal of both parties to this dispute. I am hopeful they will make use of this mediation service and that some significant progress will be made quickly.

Mr. Alexander: Will the minister tell us whether the proposal submitted by him has been accepted by both parties, or is this still up in the air?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I am not making proposals to the parties. I am not acting as a mediator in this dispute. The officers of the department are available as mediators. Both parties know that the federal government is prepared to make a mediator available over a longer period of time after a settlement has been reached. We stand by that offer.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO PRESERVE UNITED KINGDOM MARKET

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Having regard to the widespread concern which has been expressed that Canada will find increasing difficulty in selling wheat to the United Kingdom, has the minister instituted any new measures to preserve our market in that country.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I can assure the hon. member that the Wheat Board is in constant touch with our buyers and takes all logical steps to assure that market as well as markets in all other countries.

POLLUTION

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS UNDER NORTHERN INLAND WATERS ACT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On May 1 I asked him a question on a matter of some urgency in light of recent oil finds in the Arctic, namely, when the regulations under the Northern Inland Waters Act would be completed and published. The hon. gentleman took the question as notice and undertook to look into the matter. I wonder whether he is now in a position to reply?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the act has been proclaimed and I understand that the regulations are being considered by the two councils which have been established in order to implement them. I think that a meeting has been held last week and as soon as the report is submitted, we shall be able to proclaim these regulations. Meanwhile, officials of my department have advised the companies that they should abide by the regulations as if they were actually in force.

INTENTION RESPECTING PROCLAMATION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the minister. Is it the intention of the government to proclaim the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act? If not, why not; and if so, when?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have advised this House that we could not proclaim it right now because if we did we would have, in the present context, to delay the activities in the port of Churchill. But we think that we have found a solution to the legal problem which had developed following the passing of this new legislation, and we should be able to proclaim the act for the next navigation season in the north.

VOTE AT UNITED NATIONS ON LEGALIZING POSSESSION AND USE OF MARIJUANA—REASON FOR CANADIAN ABSTENTION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to answer a question which was put to me by the hon. member for Calgary North?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have gone beyond the end of the question period, but with unanimous consent the minister might be allowed to reply. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member asked me whether a vote had been taken in the United Nations with respect to the legalization of marijuana. Then he asked if I was able to inform the House whether all other nations had voted against the proposition while Canada abstained.

On May 17 a vote was taken in the social committee of the Economic and Social Council on a resolution entitled "Abuse of Cannabis and Multiple Drug Abuse." This resolution was adopted by the social committee with 41 members in favour, none opposed, and three abstentions, namely, Canada, the Netherlands and Trinidad-Tobago. The Canadian delegation explained, as it did when a similar vote was taken earlier on the narcotics convention at Geneva, that it abstained from voting because the subject matter of the resolution formed part of the mandate of the commission of inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs whose report had not yet been given governmental consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in reply to a question, I would be happy to make a statement on Rhodesia if there is agreement to revert to motions for that purpose, but if there is not disposition to grant this permission perhaps I might at least have the privilege of tabling the statement which I think would be of interest to hon. members.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we would prefer that the hon. gentleman table it. I am sure that hon. members who are interested in it would be ingenious enough to find an opportunity in the unabridged question period outside the House to make their views known.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs distributed copies of this statement earlier so that it might be made here rather than outside to the press, we would prefer to revert to motions so he can make the statement now and other members can comment on it.

Mr. Speaker: It appears there is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière realizes that he would need the unanimous consent and the House has already indicated that there is not unanimous consent.

[English]

In the circumstances, the Chair will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Baldwin: There is unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling the document, if that is agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave of the House to table the document to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance), that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West), (page 2178).

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to resume and conclude the remarks on the budget which I started yesterday.

In April 1972, the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) tabled an Economic Review designed to restore the fortunes of the government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In the first paragraph, on page 7, one can read that even if "demand and production in the Canadian economy have been advancing at a strong space since 1970—higher than in any year since 1966—yet, and I quote:

—in spite of this, the unemployment rate remained high.

This is a clear recognition of the administrative failure of this government. Apparently, it does not understand that the consumers' purchasing power must be increased, considering Canada's huge power of production. As a comprehensive proof of this assertion, I shall quote another excerpt of this report, to be found at page 7:

A principle source of strength in demand during 1971 as compared to 1970, was in a category of expenditures that may be described as postponable consumer spending. This includes expenditures on durable goods (such as new cars and home furnishings), semi-durable goods (which include clothing and household items like linens and draperies) and new residential construction. Postponable consumer spending increased by $1.4 billion or almost 12 per cent in 1971.

Mr. Speaker this shows how huge are the consumers' needs and how limited is their purchasing power. It happens that the Canadian people get into debt in proportion. There lies the problem, and nowhere else! Obviously, the purchasing power of consumers must be increased if the national production is to be disposed of. Otherwise, poverty will increase in the midst of plenty.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the right hon. Prime Minister that on his visit to Victoriaville he stated that the main right of the individual is not the right to work but the right to live decently in his country and that, in any event, machine is replacing man more and more. That means, and this is logical, that the government will have to find the financial mechanism required to ensure a guaranteed income to every Canadian, according to the economic situation, to make up for the inconveniences inflicted by progress.

I find the study of the monetary system fascinating and my colleagues of the other parties should also be fascinated by it. I find it very satisfying as I feel that I am participating actively in a field that is intrinsically related to the common good. It is interesting to see all the intellectual contorsions bankers go through to make us accept straight away their monetary system, which is really a clever utopia.

Their intellectual fervor does not keep them from recognizing the existence of a very eloquent situation. Thus, in a brief recently published by the Bank of Canada, the admission is made in a style that is unbelievably technical and monetary, and I quote:

The economic policy of public powers (including the monetary policy) must therefore, to some extent, be applied by trial and error on the basis of insufficient data.

• (1510)

That is the most surprising standard of management in a field as important as that of currency, the economic blood of this country. No wonder that such disorder causes such calamities, including inflation.

The only suitable explanation is that the government is a counterfeiter. I will try to point out the causes of the inflationary upsurge which seems to have taken responsible people by surprise, especially on account of its persistence, and the more so since the fight against inflation in which the government has been engaged for four years was a total failure, and was done at the expense of the small wage earners, the poor and the unemployed.

It is obvious that it will not recognize the real causes of inflation, which seems to have become chronic. It would rather use it as a Trojan horse to win elections. There was a time when one could foresee inflation through an analysis of certain distinctive conditions. It was the lack of consumer goods as against strong purchasing power. Today, we find that products are in abundance while there are human needs that the purchasing power is not great enough to meet. Such a situation dumbfounds the intellectuals in banking circles.

I will allow myself to describe the inflationary situation as I see it.

First, the real cause of that calamity, inflation, is the upholding by the state of an unaccountable privilege granted to the chartered banks. Society reacts in its own ways but its reactions are rather quiet and hard to detect. One may resort to clever propaganda, but the individual always gives way under the dictatorial power.

Secondly, the bank has absolute and unquestioned control over Canada's common good, with its privilege to control credit and, indirectly, currency. As the bank has the power to charge interest on its loans, it therefore requires a larger repayment than the amount it liberates. That is another cause of the unrest exerting such a great influence on prices. At the beginning, we had a deficit monetary system.

Thirdly, our current accounting system makes prices more consistent with economic reality. Also prices are more scientifically computed and take all circumstances into consideration. Accounting takes into account mainly two basic factors that influence prices: investment and distribution of buying power. I do not think that a bank can add any value to money. It can only be an inflation factor.

Fourthly, this is a time of specialization. Our economic experts in monetary science are certainly playing a major role, but it cannot be considered efficient. The state of confusion of our economy is indicative of the lack of a sense of responsibility on the part of our government in the monetary field. Its bad influence can be seen in the professional defence organizations.

I have no time to determine the reasons for this fact, but we should admit that the experts are refusing to analyze the factors that influence prices. They fail to see that two parallel forces contribute to the establishment of prices, namely investment and buying power. Presently, the consumer is suffering from the impact of those two forces which are crushing him. Actually, the buying power should be used only to pay the very product consumed. The investment portion will never become the consumer's property. It will always be the producer's property and this is not bad. However, we should balance the buying power to meet the consumer's needs. Our banking system cannot take this technique into account and the government is doing nothing to eliminate this absurdity. It is its slave. In the past, the individuals picked up the tab, because they lost some money. Presently, with the power of defence organizations and accounting, the whole burden of production costs is reflected in prices and so is degenerating into continuing inflation at the expense of the average or small taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would like to repeat what I said yesterday, namely that the succeeding governments—Grits or Tories—have created shameless poverty in Canada, a country which ranks second in the world in wealth.

Mr. Speaker, this is an obvious paradox which is being willfully maintained. Still more serious, poverty and richness exist side by side in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if the government fails to take immediate action in order to set up a financial mechanism known as social credit, that is socialization of credit, so as to enable every member of our society to have enough economic blood to participate fully in the economic, social and political life of his country and so as to respect both the freedom and the security of the individual, that will soon be the end of Canada, which is already in progress.

We need only look at the events occurring in Quebec: unions are clamouring for job security. But why? To work? Do we work for the fun of it or to secure at the same time a minimum adequate income? Obviously, the two go together and most often very few workers are willing to work 45 hours a week unless they can be sure of a suitable income.

It is ridiculous that with progress and automation people should lose their jobs through illness or old age or else because they have too many diplomas or not enough, for lack of experience or too much of it.

It means, Mr. Speaker, that within a maximum of five years the government will have to find some financial system allowing those who are leading marginal lives to live fully and build their country, failing which our society will collapse, and we will not build the country.

I am surprised to note that since I have been in the House, whenever I speak of the constitution, of abortion, of homosexuality, of the flag, of federal-provincial relations, of social or external policy, we have lively debates, everyone participates and benefits, everything goes smoothly but when I speak of monetary problems, of people's purchasing power, then all those Grits and Tories who were flying at each other's throats suddenly unite to fight the Social Credit doctrine.

Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I only need two more minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Does the House agree to allow the hon. member for Lotbinière to go on with his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I also thank my colleagues for their kindness; I can assure them that I will not abuse this privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I end my speech with these questions and I would advise my colleagues to ponder seriously over them.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, I heard some noes in the chamber. There are on the list members of the House who want to speak today. If we decide to extend time there will be members who would like to speak today but will be denied the privilege. I think we should stay within the rules.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It seems that there is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I understand that unanimous consent was given a moment ago and the House cannot revert it. Besides, I wish to point out to the previous speaker that the remark that he has just made is very ungracious in view of the fact that yesterday we gave unanimous consent to allow the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to continue his remarks. I suggest that my hon. colleague should show the same consideration to us as we did to a member of his party.

• (1520)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I must admit that there was unanimous consent, in the first place, to allow the hon. member to go on with his sppech for a few more minutes. Therefore, if the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) agreed, I think we might overcome this difficulty, since it is a matter of only one or two more minutes.

Mr. Deachman: I agree to grant him two more minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member has quite understood that the House agrees to grant him two more minutes.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, when one wants to understand, two minutes are enough. One can do more in two minutes than in two hours, if one wants to.

Mr. Speaker, I simply ask these two questions to my colleagues. How is it that we have, in this House, the authority to undertake numerous reforms and inquiries to have reports made which will be consigned to oblivion, on any subject matter but one, which is very important: the banking and monetary system? How is it that no hon. member finds it important to attack this golden calf known as high finance in Canada?

How is it, Mr. Speaker, that every member of this House recognizes that every Canadian's problem relates to money. They all admit that money is insignificant, but when you do not have it, you cannot administer anything. While this problem affects every province, every municipality and every school board, how can we accept to undertake reforms in all these areas, to look fully into these subjects for hours, at the cost of several million dollars, when we refuse to deal with the basic problem, namely the monetary system?

During the last 20 seconds remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, I shall suggest that it is high time we enabled each Canadian to get his share of the national production, so that he can really live in his country and develop in self-respect, in freedom and security. That is the only way to build Canada in peace, in mutual respect, otherwise—and I regret having to repeat it—the structures will collapse and violence will erupt. This has already started, and those responsible will be those who have maintained the system in the pay of high finance.

[English]

Hon. P. M. Mahoney (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, it is not inappropriate for me to follow a spokesman for the Social Credit party in taking part in this budget debate, inasmuch as I intend to devote a good deal of my allotted time to a discussion of the Stanfield "constant dollar" plan. Lest I be charged with being unparliamentary in using the name of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), let me hasten to say that I have derived the designation from a Progressive Conservative press release dated May 18. I assume, therefore, that the leader of the opposition approves of the designation. It is not inappropriate that this discussion should follow along in the context of a Social Credit exposition, because many commentators have noted that it is a sort of "funny money" exercise without, however, benefiting from the respectability that a measure of antiquity has given Social Credit.

In his speech in the House on May 15, the Opposition leader observed that unemployment "constitutes the principal challenge which faces the government in 1972". I agree with him, so does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and so does the government. That is what the May 8 budget was all about—jobs, jobs and more jobs. Having identified the principal challenge, however, the opposition leader advanced two ideas neither of which, whatever their merit otherwise, would contribute significantly to creating jobs for Canadians. He suggested an increase in old age security payments, the payments made to our senior citizens regardless of need, in precisely the same amounts that the budget proposed to increase the guaranteed income supplement, payments made to our senior citizens who are in most need.

Looked at in the context of a measure to create jobs, this proposal falls flat on its face. The Conservative press release calls it the Stanfield pension alternative and estimates its net cost at $102 million over and above the cost of the government's proposal. The Stanfield pension alternative would have had the effect of putting an extra $100 million in the hands of our senior citizens, those not in the greatest need. No doubt a good portion of this would be spent on consumer goods, but the leader of the opposition must be aware that slow consumer spending is not a problem in Canada and has not been for a long time.

Total retail sales increased by 12.6 per cent in April, 1972, over April, 1971. Even the most casual observer of the Canadian economic scene, such perhaps as the Leader of the Opposition, should recognize that further direct stimulus to consumer spending is far more likely to be counterproductive because of its inflationary effect than of value in creating jobs.

Then, too, there is the principle of the thing. I do not think Canadians feel that the government is better able than they are to manage their personal financial affairs. The day is past in Canada when our citizens will sit cheerfully by and pay taxes at a level necessary to maintain adequate levels of social assistance on a universal basis regardless of need. Canadians do not begrudge adequate social assistance payments to their fellow citizens who are in need, and in fact that is what we have done in the budget for our senior citizens in need, for our veterans and their dependants. These proposals of May 8 assure a continuation of the most generous of such programs in the world. They are perhaps not as generous as we would like, but they are as generous as we can presently afford and the best available in the world. We can, and we will, do better as we are able to afford it. The record of this and preceding Liberal governments is a firm testimonial to that.

In 1963 there was no guaranteed income supplement and old age security payments stood at $65 per month for senior citizens aged 70 or more. In 1964 the old age security was raised to $75 and in 1965 the age of eligibility was reduced to 65. A $30 guaranteed income supplement was introduced in 1966 and a cost of living escalation with a 2 per cent ceiling was introduced. In 1970 the old age supplement was fixed at $80 and the escalation applicable to it alone was removed. The guaranteed income supplement was increased to $55 for single persons and $95 for married couples and, of course, the escalation with the 2 per cent ceiling on combined old age supplement and the guaranteed income supplement payments continued.

In the past few days parliament has, at the government's initiative, amended the Old Age Security Act to provide for cost of living escalation, without a ceiling, for both old age supplements alone and combined old age supplements and guaranteed income supplements. It also increased the guaranteed income supplement to $70 per month for single persons and $125 for married couples. In summary, during a decade of Liberal governments our most needy senior citizens have seen their pensions increase by over 130 per cent, from $65 to $150 per month if single and by almost 120 per cent, from $130 to $285 per month, if a married couple.

The other proposal to meet the challenge of unemployment is the Stanfield "constant dollar" plan. Again, whatever its possible merits, it does nothing about jobs. Rather, it is a bit of fiscal sleight of hand designed to achieve one thing and one thing only. It is designed to prevent the inflationary element in an increase in income from moving a taxpayer into a higher tax bracket. The opposition leader claims that it would also give parliament greater control over government spending, but this point is entirely fatuous.

Parliament controls government spending through its review of budgetary proposals on the revenue side and a review of estimates on the expenditure side. Nothing in the Stanfield "constant dollar" plan would change that. All that would happen is that the government would have to provide for the revenue lost through the plan in its budgets either by increasing its deficits, increasing taxes or a combination of both. There is simply nothing magic in the plan that would either enhance or impair parliamentary control of either spending or revenue.

The plan presents a number of difficulties, some formidable. It would present an administrative challenge in determining proper payroll deductions. Its application to capital gains accumulated over a period of years, but included in the tax return for the year of realization, would seem to call for clarification to say the least. That sort of problem can doubtless in this age of computers be overcome somehow, and I want to make it clear that I do not regard administrative convenience or inconvenience as a determining factor in doing or refraining from doing something otherwise desirable. That is and will continue to be among the criteria that I will apply in the ongoing review of tax policy. Nevertheless, administrative difficulties must be solved and the opposition leader has given us no clue as to how he would cope with them.

The progressive personal income tax is generally regarded as our fairest tax. It is also a fair and effective fiscal tool. Elimination of the inflationary element from it would weaken it as a fiscal tool. Then, too, government expenditures are met with current, not constant, dollars. For both of these reasons, to strengthen its fiscal policy and to make up eroded revenues, the government would inevitably be required from time to time to increase some tax or other.

If the increase were applied to some other tax, the sales tax for example, the price paid to avoid inflationary increases moving taxpayers into higher tax brackets will be an increased burden of a less fair tax. If the increase were applied to the fairest tax available, the whole exercise would prove illusory, undoing what the Stanfield "constant dollar" plan set out to do, nothing more than a gimmicky bit of fiscal sleight of hand. We could refrain from doing anything, see deficits increase ad infinitum and accept a weakened fiscal stance. None of these results seems worth the benefit.

Then there is the matter of provincial revenues. The leader of the opposition acknowledged this particular problem. Under the reformed tax law we have achieved uniformity of our personal income tax system across Canada. Even Quebec, by accepting the federal revenue guarantee, has conformed its personal tax system to the new federal system. This in itself is a major achievement.

I have used the revenue estimates contained in the Conservative press release where available. Oddly enough, while scrupulously giving detailed estimates and examples in other areas, the press release is silent on the revenue implications of the pièce de résistance, the constant dollar proposal. However, the Department of Finance estimates that the federal revenue cost would come up to $375 million the first year. The full provincial revenue cost over and above that would aggregate in the area of $120 million. These totals would obviously increase annually in the absence of increases in tax rates and, if the balance of the system achieved by the tax reform is to be preserved, in the absence of revisions of exemptions and deductions on an ongoing basis.

I am convinced that our provincial governments are as anxious as we to do the right thing. They will want to preserve the taxpayers from a tax jungle. If they see $120 million as a proper initial price for them to pay for not permitting inflation to bump taxpayers into higher tax brackets, they will be beating a path to the finance minister's door urging acceptance of the Stanfield "constant dollar" plan. No doubt they will be led by the Tory premiers of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Ontario and Alberta. The federal government, for its part, must decide whether in a period when unemployment is our principal challenge, identified by the Leader of the Opposition, acknowledged by the government and confronted in a meaningful way by the budget, forgoing revenue initially by his own estimates—almost $500 million a year in total—for a scheme that regardless of whatever else may recommend it does absolutely nothing to create or maintain employment, is the best way to utilize that kind of money.

The Leader of the Opposition has talked about the increase in OAS as a result of the escalation brought in in the budget and recently enacted by parliament, in a very disparaging way. Certainly it must be small, given the perspective he displays in the May 18 press release. It is not in it with the $30.67 per month tax reduction he wants to give the $40,000 a year man for the current year, although it is not far off the $3.33 per month reduction he has in mind for the $10,000 a year man and the $2.42 per month reduction for the $8,000 taxpayer. Then there is $2.17 a month in it for his $6,000 a year specimen and a magnificent $7 per year, or 58 cents a month, for the $5,000 a year man. One has to wonder if he will more likely be remembered as "30-buck Bob" by the $40,000 a year fellow or "58-cent Bob" by the $5,000 a year man.

The inflationary push involved in the total proposal of the Leader of the Opposition is an important ground for criticism of his plan. The first whole fiscal year in which it would be in effect would be the year 1973-74. That year would reflect the cost over a full year of the constant dollar method and the cost for nine months of the extension of the 3 per cent surtax. In contrast, 1972-73 includes only a quarter cost for these measures. Our estimates suggest that when allowance is made for this fact, the total revenue cost to the federal government of the $380 million in 1972-73 would rise to $750 million in 1973-74. It may be noted that this increase occurs despite the termination of his 2 per cent tax cut which he estimates would cost $134 million in 1972-73.

These estimates break down as follows: pension changes for the year 1973-74, $107 million; 3 per cent tax cut extension, $255 million; use of constant dollar method, $375 million. To add almost three-quarters of a billion dollars to the cash requirements of the government for 1973-74, over and above those which would emerge from the existing budgetary structure, would almost certainly be strongly inflationary. The proposal of the Leader of the Opposition would thus have the effect of increasing the rate of inflation or, alternatively, would have to be accompanied by other tax increases or by expenditure reductions in other programs.

These proposals appear to stem from the belief that the government sector of the economy has a stake in inflation in the sense that the higher revenues which result from inflation permit governments to finance new expenditure programs. This, of course, is extremely inconsistent from a man who has been complaining for the past months, indeed years, about the energy with which the government has attacked inflation. The Carter commission dealt at length and in detail with the constant dollar idea. The commission, as recorded at page 33 of volume 2 of its report, concluded as follows:

[Mr. Mahoney.]

> We are convinced that it would be a serious error to relate transfer payments and tax credits to a price index so that they increased automatically with inflation. To do so would seriously weaken, if not destroy, one of the basic defences against inflation, the automatic stabilizers that are built into the present tax-expenditure system.

Later it states:

> The corollary of this position is that the tax structure generally should not be adjusted automatically to take into account changes in the general level of prices. Taxes must be based on current dollar income, including increases in the market value of assets, and no attempt should be made to adjust automatically for changes in the purchasing power of money. To develop a tax system that taxed only increases in "real" purchasing power would irreparably damage the built-in stability of the system.

Employment is the priority and that is what the budget is all about. For 1971 as a whole, the real growth in the Canadian economy ran to 5½ per cent; for the last half it grew rapidly and probably exceeded 6 per cent. I would refer hon. members to the October, 1971, report of the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Performance in Perspective" at pages 52 and 53 where the following appears:

> We have estimated that a rate of growth of over 6 per cent per year over a three-year period from the middle of 1971 would be required to move the economy back reasonably close to potential output—that is to reduce unemployment to 3.8 per cent of the labour force.

• (1540)

Without adopting their criteria, it is obvious that the various measures taken by this government in the management of the economy has brought us within shooting distance of the objectives that the Economic Council has established.

The rapidly improving performance of our economy was largely responsible for the fact that the Minister of Finance had a lot of room, almost $1 billion worth, to move within the constraints of fiscal responsibility in bringing down his May 8 budget. He used almost all of this room to achieve two things: about $350 million went to improve the lot of those whose bargaining position in our society is weakest, the aged and the disabled, and about $500 million was committed to the creation of jobs in the private sector.

The most significant of the corporate tax changes were limited to manufacturing and processing activities although there was the important extension to the mining industry of both fast write-off and eligibility for depletion allowance of the cost of equipment acquired to refine ore up to the primary metal stage. This government has taken the position that by and large our resource industries now have available tax incentives sufficient to maintain a satisfactory level of exploration and development.

Our service industries also are performing well at present. By their very nature they are not as prone to suffer from outside competition as either the manufacturing or resource sectors. The best thing that can be done for them is to enhance the demand upon them by other sectors.

I believe there is a very positive and key advantage for western Canada in the special treatment directed by the budget to processing and manufacturing. One of the very fundamental concerns of thinking western Canadians has been our inordinate dependence upon raw material exports. This concern has been articulated by responsible provincial leaders. For example, the Premier of Alberta made the following statement to the federal-provincial conference of first ministers last November:

> The future growth of our province will be determined by our ability to guide the province through the transition from a primary industry economy to a balanced economy equally based on natural resources and secondary and manufacturing industries.

Speaking in his budget debate this March, the Premier of Saskatchewan indicated that, while continuing to support resource development, his government—> —will put new emphasis on those projects which involve further processing of our agricultural products and other raw materials.

This applies with equal validity to the Atlantic provinces. The Premier of New Brunswick, at last February's first ministers conference, said:

> There is an urgent need to get manufacturing on a growth pattern if job opportunities are to improve.

The corporate tax cuts on processing and manufacturing profits and the two year write-off permitted for newly acquired processing and manufacturing equipment and machinery will substantially reinforce these very desirable provincial objectives and contribute tangibly to their attainment.

The May 8 budget constitutes a massive act of faith in the free enterprise system. Free enterprise has served Canada well. We are confident that it can and will continue to serve Canada well. We are confronted by many serious problems and right now the main one is unemployment; but we are confident that we can solve these problems as well as the unemployment problem specifically within the context of the free enterprise system.

We expect that the 20 per cent corporate tax reduction and other capital investment incentives offered manufacturing and processing activities will lead to substantial improvement in the ability of Canadian products to compete at home and abroad and hence to a large increase in employment opportunities in Canada. We are confident that with the certainty of this tax reduction as an ongoing measure, corporations can convert plans to action quickly and have a substantial and relatively immediate impact on jobs for Canadians. We are confident that our confidence in private enterprise is well founded.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this budget debate I wish first to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on his maiden budget. It is not an enviable position in which he found himself, having been conscripted to it in the first place and then having to follow the tragedy of the budgets which preceded this one. I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) who has just finished reading a questionable speech. There was a day when speeches in the House were supposed to be made for the purpose of debate, and not read, but that day has long since gone, particularly when ministers of the Crown, albeit fledgling ministers, have every single word written out for them. Of course, that pattern is followed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) so we should not really be too critical of the Minister of State.

The minister said that the government has come within shooting distance of bringing inflation and unemployment under control. I say to him that he must have a very strong telescopic-sight and a very long-range rifle, because I certainly do not see the target within sight at all. I say to him, also, that it is not the system that he has been talking about that is wrong; it is the management of that system. We heard him spend the full time of his speech condemning my leader who made a particular suggestion in relation to one alternative. However, there is not very much he can say about his own budget, although voters in Calgary South might have obtained more benefit from explanations of some parts of the budget for which I have not been able to find any answer or rational explanation.

My basic objections to the budget are threefold. First, it is wrong and it makes little sense to treat different sectors of the economy in diverse ways. What has happened in this budget is that the manufacturing and processing aspects of the economy have been given some incentive and encouragement while the other aspects of the economy have been neglected altogether. It seems to me that if we really want to bring the economy of this country back to what it ought to be and where it could be, we will have to deal with the general problem of taxation and inflation in a consistent way that is equitable to all sectors.

Another criticism I have of the budget is that it innovates yet another approach to the problem of financing the cost of government in attempting to create jobs, as the Minister of Finance said. A great deal has been said about the 20 per cent corporate tax cut—this matter was mentioned by the previous speaker—but the fine print in the budget does not even say that there is a current 7 per cent tax cut incentive for corporations which will automatically disappear at the end of this year simply because the reduction which was given a few months ago for a specific period of time is not reactivated. I have not heard one speaker on the other side mention the fact that there is presently a tax reduction that will be no longer effective. So if they want to talk honestly and with integrity about what the corporate tax reduction is, they should be using the figure of 13 per cent instead of 20 per cent.

Another point I should like to make is that while this budget does very little for the middle income earner, and does nothing for the low income earner, the fact is that income tax goes up 3 per cent at the end of the year for everybody. Again, nothing was said about this in the budget, not even in the fine print. The fact remains that Canadians will pay 3 per cent more personal income tax after the end of this year because in the mini-budget that the previous Minister of Finance brought in last October the highlight was the 3 per cent tax reduction across the board which, however, was implemented only until December 31, 1972. Because nothing is done to erase or amend that time limit every taxpayer will be paying 3 per cent more income tax at the end of the year as a result.

In addition to this deceitfulness—certainly the fact that it was concealed, that it was not mentioned, means it can be classified as exactly that—my complaint is that we try one thing one year and another thing the next year, and as a result the whole business community and tax paying community becomes confused. It is impossible to plan ahead on such a basis.

Another criticism I have of the budget is that tax reductions for corporations are inappropriate at this time. Government speaker after government speaker talks about the priority of creating jobs. But nothing is done in this budget to create any new jobs; in fact, the opposite will be true. Even if we wait for another winter and another year, the situation will not be better; in fact, it will be worse than it is because we are not dealing with the core of the problem of unemployment. Frequent shifts in tax rates such as these are literally counterproductive.

A third point which I make in regard to my contention that a reduction in corporate tax rates is wrong at this time is that the government disregards the fact that our main deficiency today is consumer demand. Consumer demand depends upon purchasing power in the hands of the consumers. Until consumption catches up with investment in a significant range of industries, the tax reductions for corporations will bring forth little additional capital investment and very few new jobs.

In fact, one of the real problems today so far as attracting capital from outside is concerned does not even relate to the private sector. No mention has been made of that. It relates to the public sector, Mr. Speaker, because provincial government after provincial government has to go outside the country to find the necessary finances for development within its own jurisdiction. The federal government has done nothing to correct that situation.

It seems to me that the government's decision to cut taxes for corporations, many of them foreign owned, means that we are transferring dividends to the foreign owners. In fact, our whole industrial incentives program has done more to assist the takeover of Canadian companies and to strengthen the hold of foreign investment on Canadian companies than it has to help Canadian industry or Canadian companies. Combine that with the 3 per cent tax increase for individuals and it will be seen that we are not meeting the issue at all.

It seems to me that the Canadian government has become increasingly dependent upon personal income taxes as a source of revenue over the past two decades. I will illustrate this with a few statistics in a moment. This has had a curtailing effect on consumer demand and also on the supply of savings which is the ultimate source of investment and growth. The increase in direct taxes on individuals over the past 15 years has been almost twice as great as the increase in taxes on corporations during the same period.

This brings me to another point which the government overlooked completely. It relates to those who have jobs now but who do not pay taxes. I am speaking of the working poor. There are over five million of them in Canada today, people who have jobs earning all the way from $60 to $70, $80 and even up to $90 and $100 a month, after deductions their take-home pay is considerably less than that. They don't earn enough to pay income tax. With the cost of living as it is today, how can they have any reasonable standard of living? They are locked in, working their 40 hours a week but not getting enough to provide a decent standard of living. Nothing is done to help these people or make it easier for them to face their problems. This is why I am very concerned about mismanagement of the system which causes such conditions to continue.

[Mr. Thompson.]

The government's attitude should have been directed toward employment and investment stimulus. Jobs are created by increasing demand, which means increasing production. You only increase investment stimulus by providing a stimulus. Why didn't the government come up with something like allowing a tax deduction of $1,000 for every family in Canada which actually invests in the development of the country, using that exemption for risk capital development? Allowing families a deduction on this basis would give them a reason to invest in Canadian companies. Don't worry about the loss of this income as tax income: tax the profits that come as a result of it. That is the kind of stimulus we want to encourage investment by Canadians in Canadian business and industry. There should also be more effective assistance for the labour-intensive and export sectors most damaged by recent national and international events. This would truly stimulate production and jobs.

Nothing has been done for industries affected most adversely by the American DISC program. There should have been greater equity provisions for Canadian investment in Canadian corporations. I do not see this budget creating new jobs or even solving the problem of foreign ownership of Canadian industry. The budget entirely ignores those manufacturing and processing firms which suffered most because of the DISC program, from appreciation of the Canadian dollar and other recent trade impediments. Firms that are without profit or are making marginal profits will not be helped by corporate tax cuts or fast write-offs. If a firm has no profits, little capital and dubious markets, these measures provide no assistance and meagre incentive to expand or even to maintain employment. Recognition must be given to the fact that business can expand its activities only when it has confidence in the future, when the economy is stimulated by adequate consumer demand. Only then will job producing economic expansion be assured.

Similar criticisms may be made of the introduction of a new class of capital cost allowance entitling a taxpayer to claim as depreciation up to 50 per cent of the cost of an asset in the year it was purchased or acquired and the unclaimed balance in any year following. Even though this is to be used for machinery and equipment to be used for the purposes of manufacturing or processing, it is open to major criticism. The machinery that will be brought in may in fact replace present workers. The same machinery may have a high non-Canadian labour content, and unfortunately this is the case simply because of the high taxes placed on that kind of equipment. The machinery may even displace less skilled operators who are particularly susceptible to prolonged periods of unemployment. The form of the incentive does nothing to favour the disadvantaged regions with pockets of particularly high unemployment. The employment effects of tax incentives for business are slow to appear in comparison with the effects of a comparable personal or sales tax reduction.

The true philosophy of the government is clearly revealed when we compare the personal and corporate income tax sources of budgetary revenue for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1971, with the expectations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973. The budget measure will provide no direct assistance or incentive to many of the labour-intensive and other important sectors of the economy. What has been done for the service industries? Nothing. What has been done for the construction industry? Nothing. What has been done for the farming industry? Nothing. Not only does the budget not provide the farmers with the same accelerated write-off that is given to other production industries, but it does nothing to help them with their other problems.

The budget does nothing to help provide farmers with the capital that is essential to most of our agricultural industry today. Literally nothing was done for the farmers. But worse than that, the policy of the government seems to penalize the farmers. Let me give an illustration, Mr. Speaker. A few years ago the minister and the Department of Agriculture were pleading with western grain farmers to diversify, to get out of wheat and barley. They were telling the farmers that there were markets and demand for other types of crops which would provide the necessary cash for farmers caught in the cost-price squeeze.

• (1600)

Many farmers went into diversified crops such as flax and rapeseed, but then last year the government brought in legislation to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act which placed flax and rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. The farmers had not asked for this and had already set up their own marketing and processing arrangements because there was a market in the United States and in other foreign areas for vegetable oil. This particular aspect of diversification has been rather profitable, so why the government insisted on bringing it under the Canadian Wheat Board Act is something I do not understand. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), in reply to criticisms from this side of the House last year and again this year, made a very clear statement on May 11 last year to the effect that there is no intention to bring rapeseed, flaxseed and rye under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board in the near future. A press release from his office reads:

> Changes proposed in the Canadian Wheat Board Act would enable the extension of board marketing to these crops, but these sections may never be used and certainly will not be used except after full support of the move is received from producers based on a thorough discussion of the issues.

He went on to say:

> The situation is the same with regard to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

He said that these amendments to the act would not be required unless at some future date these crops were brought under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The press release concluded with the statement:

> I repeat, the government has no immediate plan to change the marketing system for these grains. And I assure producers that before any such change is contemplated there will be thorough discussions with everyone involved.

Mr. Speaker, the government has now authorized the inclusion of these grains in the Canadian Wheat Board Act without any consultation with farmers, and it has moved to convict farmers who may have oversold the quotas established under the act. There is a case in my constituency of a farmer who was given a 60-acre quota. At 20 bushels per acre that means he should have sold 1,200 bushels of rapeseed. He had a delivery contract with the seed processors in Lethbridge for a greater quantity than that, and in March of this year he was issued an additional 900 bushels delivery authorization. They seized his permit book. It was found that the amount he had sold previously had not been entered and his records did not indicate it, so he shared a truckload with a neighbouring farmer and 388 bushels were delivered to the plant in Lethbridge 200 miles away. It turned out that he had delivered 104 bushels more than the Canadian Wheat Board said he could, in spite of more than 500 bushels remaining under his authorized delivery contract, and now he has been taken to court.

When the minister responsible for the Wheat Board makes a statement in May of one year and contradicts it in May the next year, it completely undermines the confidence of the farmers and the processing industry. This is not just one farmer, Mr. Speaker; 1,400 of them are in the same situation. This is the tragedy of the policies being implemented by the bureaucracy on the other side of the House.

When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), the Minister of State from Calgary South and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board attempt to justify their position or to rationalize the budget, they are not dealing with the issues really faced by the Canadian people. What about the fishing industry? There is nothing for that industry. What about the logging industry? There is nothing for it. Since these industries, the service industry, the construction industry, farming, fishing and logging are excluded from the tax and incentive measures, they will be placed in a more difficult position because their relative capacity to compete for available capital will be reduced. This is a discriminatory policy.

Generous corporate income tax cuts do not make firms more profitable or productive because they in no way affect the cost of manufacturing and processing inputs. A realistic budget would gear its policies to consumption rather than production. Perhaps if that were done something would be accomplished as far as eliminating the problem of unemployment is concerned. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are not dealing with the issue as it should be dealt with.

As an indication of the policy of this government during the last five years, its budgets have placed emphasis on increasing personal income tax and decreasing corporation tax. In 1968-69, 34 per cent of taxes came from personal incomes and 20 per cent from corporations. For 1972-73, 44 per cent will come from personal incomes and 15 per cent from corporations. In my opinion this creates more unemployment and does nothing to solve the problem of inflation. This is the just society that the Prime Minister spoke about four years ago but about which we hear less today.

Another problem that I mentioned in criticism of the budget concerns the increased flow of Canadian equity capital to the American market. This runs counter to Canada's interests at a time when this country's energy interests are confronted with high capital outlays according to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). In a recent address he said that an important contributing factor in the southward flow of capital has been lack of diversity of the Canadian capital market competing with the high percentage of direct investment in the United States. He estimated that the energy industry's capital outlays alone would total between $50 billion and $70 billion in the 1970s. Where is this money to come from, Mr. Speaker? The answer is—from outside sources!

The minister has correctly pointed out that equity capital run-off to the New York market runs counter to the interests of Canadians. He has also stated that the energy industry would require capital of $50 billion to $70 billion during the 1970s. Yet the minister is wrong in assuming that merely restricting foreign investment to 10 per cent of assets in pension and retirement savings plans will encourage Canadian investment. It will limit foreign investment but will not encourage domestic investment. This is where the budget is so very wrong.

There is another aspect of these budget proposals which cannot be passed by. It seems to me that the government's arrogant and insensitive approach is one of the reasons we are in difficulty. The increased income tax deductions for the blind, the disabled and pensioners are notable, but why was this not done five years ago when the program was developed? Inflation was just as rampant then. If aid is needed by the unfortunate individuals in these groups, it should be given in a more direct way and it should go to those who need it most, those who cannot work or who are locked into low incomes.

I should like to spend my last few minutes speaking about the energy situation that exists in the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. At the present time the rate of increased production in the petroleum industry is lower than in other energy industries because exploration and development in western Canada and in the north has been slowed down by government policies which inhibit rather than stimulate.

The fact that the federal government could enter into a so-called secret agreement with the United States back in 1967, placing a number of restrictions on the exporting of oil from Canada without consulting the provinces, bears testimony of the need for greater participation between the two levels of government. More important is the fact that there should be more co-operation between the federal and provincial governments so that a clear energy policy for Canada can be established. The fact that Premier Lougheed has stated that Alberta will not participate in any future constitutional talks indicates the low level of regard which the federal government has for the rights of the provinces.

A few weeks ago the Prime Minister said in Edmonton he was going to build a new highway to the Arctic and this would also be an energy corridor through which the pipeline could pass. That is, if it is feasible: we have not found out whether it is or not. We have not seen anything in government statements that would encourage private industry to investigate or conduct its own research in this regard. In a few weeks there will be an energy corridor conference in Calgary: it is being planned by the Alberta mines and minerals minister, who said:

> —objectives of the government-industry meeting will include pipeline plans for crude oil and natural gas, detailed examination of the all-weather road proposal across the northern mainland, and listing of individual opinions on the multiple transportation systems from all parties for individual projects.

When making this glorious statement in Edmonton, why did the Prime Minister not invite the province of Alberta to participate in such a conference, as well as any other province which is concerned about this matter? I have placed some questions on the order paper in this regard. I cannot even find out whether the federal government has enough interest to ascertain what the province of Alberta is doing in this regard or to say if it even intends to participate in the conference. The conference, which is planned for the third week in June, ought to have been initiated by the federal government in their attempts to meet the needs of the whole nation with regard to energy production and transportation.

I wish to make one other point before my allotted time comes to an end. We will never have the investment of Canadian people in the development of Canadian resources and industry unless we provide incentives that are at least equal to those which citizens of the United States can get in their own country. The tremendous drain of capital to the south indicates that Canadians have more confidence in the investment policies of the government of the United States than those of the government of Canada. Why cannot we provide incentives that will encourage Canadian people, at whatever level and at whatever amounts they wish, to invest in our own resources which today almost completely depend upon outside sources of finance? This question involves a depletion allowance approach which should be completely changed. It involves a major expansion of the policy of Canada to develop and process its own resources as it relates not only to mines, but also the petroleum industry.

While the north is very important to us as far as energy is concerned, and the west is important as well, we will never develop the resources of this country until we have a policy of incentives for Canadians and a policy of co-operation for the different levels of government. If this budget had done something about that problem, the claims the government had made for it might have been justified. As they are not, I see little validity in the government's policies as enunciated in the budget.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to follow the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), who speaks so well even when he has nothing to say. It is interesting to hear him.

Mr. Thompson: I cannot help it if you do not have enough ability to understand it.

Mr. Osler: Perhaps on occasion he does have something to say, but I have not been fortunate enough to be here at those times. I wish to compliment the Minister of Finance

(Mr. Turner) on his budget. I think it is a good budget, a very realistic budget and one that shows where the heart and the mind of this government is.

Mr. Dinsdale: On the election.

Mr. Osler: First, it shows that it wants to help people within the ability of the country to do so. Second, it shows that it realizes the country must pay its own way if anyone is to be helped at all. Those are two pretty humane and realistic thoughts to possess in the mind of any government. Recently this government has made two important policy statements, one the budget and the other the matter of foreign takeovers. Both of these have far reaching implications for all parts of the country, but in particular for western Canada which needs all the capital it can get and requires the build-up of its manufacturing and processing capabilities.

As for its statement on foreign takeovers, the government has served notice that Canadians who enjoy a controlling ownership position in a company will no longer be allowed to sell or transfer this control to foreigners unless such action seems to be in the national interest. I find no fault with this attitude.

As for the budgetary measures, the government has taken steps within the country's means to allocate additional benefits for senior citizens and those who are disabled. Unlike some of the "pie in the sky" dreamers we run into in one small corner of this House, it has at the same time taken measures to ensure that the source of tax revenue on which all benefits depend will continue to expand. People are the only thing that count, Mr. Speaker. To do things for people, be it our senior citizens, those who are ill, those who for a variety of reasons need a helping hand, be it for housing, welfare, urban renewal or a host of other problems, this is the primary task of government today.

I only have one small quarrel with the measure proposed in the budget for old and disabled people. I will not bore the House with my observation. This was very adequately expressed yesterday by my colleague, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn). He said that to go so far for some people on incomes fixed to the cost of living index is inconsistent if you do not go the whole way. He said he hoped the day would soon arrive when the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan can both have similar treatment and be tied to the actual cost of living index rather than the 2 per cent escalation. And he requested the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) to do something about the law which does not allow private pension plans to have more than a 2 per cent escalation built into them and still be deductible for tax purposes. That is an area that can be looked into to round out the very good measures that were taken for older and disabled people in this budget.

In a sense, Canada is like a great internal combustion engine coupled to a dynamo that creates power. If you overload that dynamo by making undue demands for electricity, you will burn it out and complete darkness will surely follow. If, on the other hand, you tamper with the supply of fuel, nothing will work at all and again darkness will be the result. The very necessary public sector in Canada is attached to the dynamo end of this power generating machine. The private sector supplies the fuel. If we want more power for the benefit of more people in this expanding Canada of ours, we must secure our source of fuel. Thus, I commend the government for setting aside half a billion dollars in its latest budget to create lasting jobs in the private sector.

By and large, Canada's resource industries now have available tax incentives sufficient to maintain a satisfactory level of exploration and development; and the service industries are performing well too. Thus, within this $500 million for the private sector the most significant of the measures taken are the corporate tax changes affecting manufacturing and processing activities.

Moreover, this action is entirely consistent with the government's action over the past decade to encourage an ever increasing degree of "finishing" activities in Canada. I did not have time to look up the figures, but the proportion of our manufactured products as against raw material exports has continually risen. Speaking from memory, I would say it has risen from 12 per cent to something like 40 per cent in the last decade. The budget proposal implies a consistent attempt to follow this trend and encourage it, bearing in mind that to finish more of our products in Canada means more jobs. In other words, we must make conscious efforts to combine skilled people with our resource development and we must add to this a third vital ingredient, salesmanship, if we are not forever to remain hewers of wood and drawers of water until all our resources are used up.

Let us turn now to western Canada. One of the fundamental concerns of all thinking western Canadians has been our very large dependence upon raw material exports. The Premier of Alberta has declared that the future growth of his province will depend upon the success with which it is guided through the transition from a primary industry economy to a balanced economy equally based on natural resources and secondary and manufacturing industries. The Premier of Saskatchewan has indicated that his government will put new emphasis on projects involving further processing of agricultural products and other raw materials. The Premier of British Columbia has moved to assure an increasing degree of in-province processing of forest product exports.

Even in my own province, Manitoba, attempts have been made to grapple with this problem. These attempts have often been successful, despite the boobs of the former Tory government, which sank approximately $100 million into the so far unsuccessful industrial complex at The Pas and despite the tax policies of the present NDP government there—I must admit I cannot fully understand them—which reputedly is now in the process of attempting to tax the very air which Manitobans breathe. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Manitoba stretches across one of the great flyways which geese and ducks use in their annual migrations. Very soon, I think, there will be a move to tax the geese and ducks which use this air space twice a year. Wait for it: it will happen. If they could find a way of putting a meter on them, they would even tax the ultimate pleasures of life.

If all the western provinces are agreed that they need industrial growth in order to ensure meaningful lives for those who choose to live in the west, then surely the recent corporate tax cut on processing and manufacturing profits, plus the two-year write-off permitted for newly acquired processing and manufacturing equipment and machinery, will substantially reinforce these very desirable provincial aims.

I have said on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, that very few of the regional problems to be found in Canada can be solved by unilateral regional action. The government of Canada, by harnessing the resources of all the Canadian people, can help Canadians of any particular locality in a truly effective way. This budgetary measure is an apt illustration of what I mean. With the opening up of the Mackenzie River corridor to the north, with the development of trade to Asia and the countries of the Pacific rim, western Canada is at last in a position to take its rightful place in confederation. It could not do this without the help of Canada as a whole, any more than Canada as a whole could exploit its present and potential capabilities if western Canada were not a part of it. This being the case, we who live in western Canada are fortunate indeed to have a government here in Ottawa which understands these things, however imperfectly, and brings forward measures like those to be found in the recent budget.

During the debate on the government's policy toward foreign takeovers, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said:

> We must have policies aimed at ensuring that Canadian industries, big and small, have access to capital for expansion and markets for the sale of their products and their services.

Anyone who wishes to take the measures proposed in the present budget, add to them a dash of the tax amendments passed by this House last December, then a handful of goodies from the bag containing all the measures that have been introduced to help the western farmer sell and deliver his grain, plus a good ladleful of seasoning from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, can easily find that the resulting brew tastes mighty like the sort of policies for which the Leader of the Official Opposition is obviously aiming. Of course, it is not a perfect brew, Mr. Speaker. A government's job is to govern: it cannot always wait upon perfection; it must act on the basis of what it has near at hand. I think these measures are good measures but, as I have said, they cannot be considered to be perfect.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) made several observations yesterday which I found interesting. He said we could not expect governments which were perfect; we could only expect governments which did the best they knew how. He said, as recorded on page 2471 of Hansard:

> Should we compare ourselves with the United Kingdom where at the moment the unemployment rate is about 6 per cent, the inflationary rate about 10 per cent and the growth rate over the past 15 years has been only 4 per cent compared with our own huge growth rate? . . . Should we compare Canada with Sweden? There is probably more unrest in Sweden today than in any other country in Europe. The tax burden is so high that people are rebelling. That country has a socialist government. Should we be compared with the United States where inflation is running between 6 per cent and 7 per cent even with price and wage controls? Unemployment in that country is running at 6 per cent.

[Mr. Osler.]

Nobody in this governement has ever claimed perfection. Nobody in this government has ever claimed it was doing an optimum job, the very best that could possibly be done. All that was ever promised was that we would try hard, and I submit that compared with other countries our record is good.

The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) spoke yesterday. He is a man I admire greatly but I do not know that I agree with what he had to say. He said that the government's strategy of making tax cuts available to manufacturing and processing firms will not be of much value. I quote from his speech as reported in Hansard at page 2481:

> These introduce a new measure of distortion into the function of the marketing system and substitute the judgment of the Minister of Finance as to what types of tax relief make for growth in our competitive system.

If that statement means anything, it surely means that the system was functioning perfectly, or much better, before the Minister of Finance made his recent budget statement. Well, he and his party have spent the last four years telling everyone how badly the system was functioning. I would say the hon. member cannot have it both ways, If the system was functioning well before the budget, and the budget has caused it to function badly, then what he said before was meaningless. If, on the other hand, it is functioning well now, his criticism of the budget is meaningless. He should decide out of which side of his mouth he wants to talk.

• (1630)

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie spoke about inflation and how regrettable it was, as did the hon. member for St. Paul's. I join with that view, as I suppose everyone in Canada would who shares concern for inflation. But I agree with both hon. members that our inflation is not as bad as that of other western industrialized nations.

Although we all regret inflation, few on this side of the House are woolly-minded enough to think that it will be cured by the application of simplistic proposals such as the one recently advanced by the Leader of the Official Opposition. Speaking in the budget debate on May 15, he pledged himself to a proposal whereby the calculation of personal income tax would be based on constant 1971 dollars. This proposal does not include a reduction in the level of any government services, but it does call for a reduction in the revenue from personal income tax. The gap that would result would have to be met by additional personal income taxes or increases in other taxes, such as in the sales tax; but he does not talk about that.

The leader of the opposition admits that his proposal would affect provincial revenues from personal income tax. In any year the consumer price index rose, the revenue of the provinces which base their tax on federal tax would drop and they would be forced to impose an additional amount of tax to maintain their revenues. If he thinks that this government has had problems with the provincial governments, just wait and see what would happen if anyone tried to put this dream into effect. Talk about balkanization!

The proposal would confer greater benefits on high income taxpayers than on low income taxpayers, but he does not talk about that either. It militates in favour of those with a strong bargaining position in society; yet out of the other corner of his mouth he talks of the overbearing strength of labour unions and other organized members of society relative to those who are unorganized. I should like to hear him talk out of the middle of this mouth so that I might be able to understand what it is that he is saying. A uniform deflation of incomes for tax purposes, as proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, would not be equitable for the reasons I have stated. Moreover, such a proposal would deprive the government of Canada of one of its most effective and equitable fiscal tools and would itself contribute significantly to inflation.

The proposal to deflate personal tax liabilities for changes in the price level would weaken the capacity of personal income tax for automatic stabilization. The result would therefore be a stronger inflationary pressure than that which would be experienced with the present tax system, or increases in taxes to offset the deflation of personal tax liabilities. To raise personal income taxes would merely undo the Leader of the Opposition's proposal, while no other tax which could be raised is as equitable as the personal income tax. Of course, he said, it would force the government to bring its tax proposals before Parliament. I have only been in the parliamentary system for four years but it is my understanding, based on observation, that that is exactly what the government has to do every year or whenever it brings in a budget. So I do not see what outstanding help it would be to force the government to do something it is already forced to do, and has been for years.

The amount of a taxpayer's tax for one year would be uncertain until the price index was fixed. And this from a man who for the last 2½ to three years has been going around the country lighting little brush fires with his little cigarette lighter, or whatever it is he uses, telling everyone that the uncertainties created by the present government have caused the so-called trouble that he sees at every hand! If there have been uncertainties before, this proposal would merely add more. Obviously, it is inconsistent to determine personal income tax in constant dollars while other taxes, such as the general sales tax, remain unadjusted.

I do not always agree with the Winnipeg Free Press but occasionally they see the light on a clear day. With regard to the proposal made by the Leader of the Opposition they have this to say:

> If Mr. Turner had taken Mr. Stanfield's advice . . . the borrowings would increase also. The government would extract more than $2 billion out of the nation's savings—money that otherwise would be available for job-creating investments.

Again they say:

> The difference between Mr. Turner and Mr. Stanfield is that the former will use the old device of crude monetary inflation as little as he thinks possible, while the latter would use it recklessly on a far larger and unspecified scale.

And again:

> —if Mr. Turner is desperately trying to make the best of a bad job—

That is, vis-à-vis inflation.

> —Mr. Stanfield goes much further and would make it still worse by piling monetary on top of cost-push inflation.

And finally:

> Without the responsibility of office, he is simply trying to win an election with popular but irresponsible promises.

I do not know how anyone could put the position better than that. It is almost like the good old days of Dafoe, the way it rings. I am glad to see they have at last been stirred to pungent writing; they have needed it for some time.

So much for the Progressive Conservative party's platform. If that is their platform, I rejoice that an election cannot be too far ahead, because this spells "progressive" increases in taxation and "conservative" hard times, all wrapped into one neat little blue ball. If you do not mind, Mr. Speaker, I will stick to the Turner budget and the Trudeau government. I am confident that when the time comes to test their judgment, the vast majority of the Canadian people will decide to do the same.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the budget debate is one of the important debates of the parliamentary session and many valuable contributions have been made to this discussion thus far. Actually the budget, as it is brought down each session by the government in power, is the fiscal instrument by which the government stabilizes the economy and announces the growth policies that are going to be implemented. It is interesting that the debate on the budget as it resumes this week is somewhat different in its approach from that taken last week. Usually in a parliamentary program the budget debate proceeds undisturbed and uninterrupted. Then you get continuity in the debate and a little more vigorous give and take. I have been listening to the debate for most of this afternoon and it seems that as each speaker succeeds another there is a lack of communication and dialogue. Each speaker is operating in a vacuum.

I suppose this has been caused by the interruption of the proceedings to deal with what the government regarded as a matter of great public importance and urgency, namely, the implementation of the nominal increases in old age security, veterans benefits, disability pensions, and so forth. The legislation was rushed through, to the extent that the other place was called together for an unusual Friday sitting so that everything could be in place for what was anticipated to be the calling of an election prior to last weekend. That election did not come and as a result we find a remarkable change in the mood of this House and in the attitude of the government as this renewed debate on the budget takes place at this time.

Because the budget was planned as an election budget it does not deal with the fundamental purposes of budgets which I have already outlined, namely, the use of fiscal instruments by the government to deal with problems in the economy. This budget does not come to grips with the fundamental economic problems of Canada as they confront us at the moment. It is more in line with what might be described as the "ad hocracy" approach to basic issues. I shall be dealing with "ad hocracy" as it applies to other actions by the government before I conclude my remarks this afternoon, particularly those in reference to its approach to one of the major problems in the Canadian economy, that of regular winter unemployment resulting from the severity of Canadian winters.

Applying this term to the electioneering type of budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) as his first attempt at budgeteering, he made many fine statements many of which I could quote. On February 24, as recorded in Hansard at page 217, the minister said:

—I see our first priority to be to provide good jobs for Canadians who are seeking work.

As reported at page 215 for the same date, the minister said:

I fully recognize that statistics are no substitute for jobs.

Again, in the same speech he said:

My first and most urgent priority is to provide continuing and well paying jobs for those Canadians seeking work.

I think there has been sufficient said on this side of the House to point out that the budget brought down by the minister negates those fine words. There is ambivalence as between coping with the dual problems of inflation and unemployment because the Minister of Finance is recorded at page 1998 of Hansard for May 8 as saying:

I am hoping to achieve industrial growth at a pace that will not aggravate the inflationary impulses in the economy and escalate the cost of living. This government is committed to reasonable price stability.

I point out that the budget does not deal with what the minister laid down as the number one priority, namely, dealing in an adequate and comprehensive way with unemployment. Other members have spoken in this vein today so I shall abbreviate my remarks accordingly. The main emphasis in stimulating the economy has been placed upon reduction in corporate taxes. This is fine as a long-term measure to deal with long-term economic problems, but Canada requires solutions to present day problems. The Leader of the Opposition has, in season and out of season, travelled across the country hammering away at the essential problem, bringing before the people of Canada, not only in this House but on the hustings the solutions he thinks are required to deal adequately with this problem. I noticed that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) paid considerable attention to the activities of that hon. gentleman in this regard.

It is interesting that the Leader of the Opposition has had considerable impact in the west, as recent public opinion polls indicate. The problem surrounding the slowdown in the economy as it affects corporations, manufacturing and processing businesses represents only one aspect of the difficulty. I should think if we are going to have a budget to deal with the first priority as outlined by the Minister of Finance, to provide good jobs for Canadians seeking work, we must immediately stimulate the purchasing power of the Canadian public.

Certain spokesmen for the government have referred to the bugbear or bugaboo of inflation. I say in this regard that the extravagant expenditures of this government have been a greater contributor to the fires of inflation than any excessive demand on the part of the Canadian public at this time. This is not the occasion to outline in any great detail how the government has so boosted its expenditures that inflation was an inevitable by-product of government fiscal mismanagement.

There has to be a reduction in personal taxes at this time. The Leader of the Opposition has been consistent in presenting this proposal to the Canadian people, hence the attack at some length by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, with no particular impact. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) spoke on this subject, pointing out that since 1968 the present government has been trying to cope with the problem of underemployment and underproduction in the Canadian economy by favouring the corporate taxpayer rather than the personal income taxpayer. He put figures on the record, but some hon. members here now were not in the House at that time.

From 1968 to 1969 personal income tax revenue rose from 34 per cent of total income to 44 per cent, whereas corporate tax went down from 20 per cent in 1968-69 to 15 per cent in 1972-73. Again the government is resorting to the same formula to deal with what the Minister of Finance has described as the number one problem in the Canadian economy. I suggest it will have exactly the same effect: it will increase unemployment in the long term, and I think the figures over the next few months will demonstrate this point, rather than increase employment opportunities.

There are many fine, new, shiny factories lying idle across the nation because of low demand on the part of the Canadian consumer. From the standpoint of a western member of parliament, I should like to say that the rapid depreciation on machinery will not have a helpful effect in dealing with the problems of western Canada, that part which can be referred to as a comparatively underdeveloped segment of Canada's economic area. As has been pointed out, if you encourage accelerated depreciation on machinery used in manufacturing and processing industries, you get a situation in which machinery will tend to replace workers.

• (1650)

I am sure, also, that it is almost axiomatic to point out that this creates a situation in which there is a high degree of non-Canadian labour content because a good deal of the machinery used in the manufacturing process is built outside Canada. Obviously an increased use of machinery in the manufacturing process is a part of automation which is one of the major difficulties in the growing problem of unemployment. The government has not even started to deal with this whole complex problem of automation. It will be found that machinery displaces the less skilled operator in the first instance. This is the area of the Canadian economy in which chronic unemployment tends to be most persistent. Obviously, in areas of Canada such as western Canada where there is lack of manufacturing and processing industries, this provision for accelerated depreciation of machinery will not help solve the special problems in the west to any great degree.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and other spokesmen such as the Minister of State (Mr. Mahoney) who spoke earlier this afternoon have all tried to paint a picture that all is well in the western part of Canada. It is not so long ago that some of these gentlemen were using the phrase which has become one of the popular phrases used by pundits, "western alienation".

Now we have a budget designed as an election budget because everybody thought we were on the eve of an election. No doubt there would have been an election had the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not had information from western Canada and other parts of Canada, particularly the province of British Columbia, that was somewhat negative in terms of the government's prospects. So today—and I suppose we will hear this theme during the rest of the budget debate although it is no longer pertinent in terms of an election budget—we will have paeans of praise in respect of how good things are in western Canada at this time and how much better they will be once the budget which is being debated is implemented.

I suggest that if this is the attitude of these spokesmen on the government side from the west, then there is complete lack of understanding, complete insensitivity and even lack of concern on their part for our continuing problems. Obviously, a budget of this kind will do nothing to overcome the fundamental disparities between western Canada and the central part of Canada in particular.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) is in the House this afternoon. He has been one of the most eloquent spokesmen in the past in pointing out that there is a fundamental problem of neglect by the national government. Last February in the city of Brandon, which I represent in this parliament, a meeting took place at the agricultural study centre. It was a small meeting, attended by some 60 leaders in the agricultural community, largely from Manitoba, who went there to discuss the special problems of western agriculture.

As I say, it was not really a representative gathering, with only 60 persons in attendance, but apparently it was from that conference that the Minister of Supply and Services came forward with the thesis of the western fact as a separate entity and separate problem which requires the special attention of the government. There is not one provision in this budget which comes to grips with the problems which were discussed on that occasion. I trust that the Minister of Supply and Services will be making a speech during the course of the budget debate in which he will elucidate some of the conclusions reached at that very important conference. I was not privileged to be present. It was rather an exclusive conference, apparently. I had to obtain all my information second-hand.

Mr. Richardson: I will be glad to send you the notes.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister has indicated he will send me the notes. I believe it would be much more appropriate if he would make a speech during the course of this budget debate as a spokesman for the province of Manitoba. We have had two spokesmen from the cabinet who represent the province of Alberta, the Minister of Agriculture and this afternoon the Minister of State who has some responsibility for fiscal matters. However, we have not heard from the province of Manitoba in this regard.

I trust that the Minister of Supply and Services, when he makes his statement on these important matters, will do a much better job than the Minister of Agriculture whose speech was an apologia for the government's inadequacies in respect of agricultural policies. For example, he compared the total income of farmers in 1971 with 1970, which was the worst year western agriculture experienced. The contribution of the Minister of Agriculture and his counterpart from the province of Saskatchewan, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), has been to support the government's policies. I cannot understand how a westerner could possibly initiate these policies, but they have had to be the sponsors and spokesmen for policies which have accelerated the movement of farmers off the land.

Statistics have been placed on the record already, but I would quote briefly one or two examples. In 1966 there were 39,747 farmers in the province of Manitoba. In 1971, only five years later, after three or four years of the present Liberal administration, there were 34,981 farmers. This is a decrease of some 5,000 farmers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: I will accept a question.

Mr. Osler: I do not have the statistics with me, but I wonder whether the hon. member can give us the statistics in respect of the decrease in farms in the prairie provinces over, say, the last 20 years in order to give us a comparative setting.

• (1700)

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not have that answer, and I am sure the hon. member can do the research himself. I have the figures put out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on Monday, May 1, 1972. They deal with the five-year period to which I have referred.

Mr. Osler: The only point of the question was to see whether the hon. member was trying to establish that there had been an increased depletion of farms under the present government that was extraordinary in historical terms, or whether this was a progressive process.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can understand why the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has a slightly guilty conscience in this regard.

Mr. Osler: I have a curious mind, that is all.

Mr. Dinsdale: In the speech which he just completed, he pointed out that all was well in the west. All is not well in the west, and the figures I am quoting apply to the period 1966 to 1971. The same figures apply to Saskatchewan. There is a decrease from some 85,000 to 76,000. I think it is doing a disservice to the people they represent when members of parliament who now find themselves in the cabinet, where they should have some influence on these matters, instead of acting as strong spokesmen for the west act as apologists. If they do it in public, what must they do in private, in the secrecy of the Privy Council? They must be completely silent.

Mr. Osler: Give us the figures for the time you were a cabinet minister and then we will believe you.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am dealing with 1966 to 1971. The Minister of Supply and Services has not yet spoken in this debate. I hope that he will. I would point out that what has happened in Manitoba in recent years has not helped to solve the fundamental problems that the hon. gentleman has described in speeches across western Canada. There is still inequity with respect to freight rates. The tariff is still stacked against us, and DREE is now stacked against us because it is actually luring away from the province the new industries which we have been establishing in recent years, because of the more attractive offers in terms of capital resources that are made available to them to relocate in other parts of Canada.

I know the minister has been proud of the fact that we are getting a new Mint in Manitoba. Also, no less than three federal ministers were present—there was a picture in the paper to prove it—at a stone-laying ceremony the other day in the city of Winnipeg with respect to the new Canada Grains Council building. There were three ministers present.

Mr. Osler: Four ministers, one NDP and three Liberals.

Mr. Dinsdale: I was referring to federal cabinet ministers. That might be good public relations.

Mr. Osler: If we could have found Tory ministers, they would have been there.

Mr. Dinsdale: There were no ministers present when the air bases were closed at Gimli and Rivers. As the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart) pointed out in a question the other day, this resulted in a loss of some 3,000 jobs. I do not think that that slack will be taken up at the Mint.

Mr. Orlikow: What about the overhaul base in Winnipeg? You forgot about that.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would point out that this sort of tokenism is not good enough and I hope a strong government spokesman will speak out on behalf of this neglected area of Canada before the debate is concluded. We sometimes forget about the great developments that took place during the period about which my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, wants me to talk, such as the development at Whiteshell which was a really positive development largely initiated by the then member for Winnipeg South Centre who at that time was on the treasury benches. He encouraged the location of the atomic reactor there which has been the basis of the establishment of a new community.

This is the sort of positive development which we would like to see encouraged by the ministers who represent western Canada, not the tokenism of a Mint which has not too much to offer in terms of employment and opportunity. We could talk about the development in Thompson, Manitoba. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre wants me to refer to those days because he wants to talk about the development at the Pas.

Mr. Osler: Yes, talk about The Pas.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Dinsdale: I was present at the opening of the Thompson community in 1960, and from a standing start in that year it has developed to a thriving community of some 18,000 citizens. This is the sort of development we want to see encouraged by the present government. Perhaps the Minister of Supply and Services will enlighten us on this point.

I should like to make a brief reference to the defence by the Minister of Agriculture who spoke about all the wonderful things that have recently taken place in the agricultural economy. This government gave us LIFT, the program that was supposed to stabilize the prairie grain economy because there were no markets available and we were producing too much and had to reduce our cereal crop production potential. The farmers named the program "lower income for tomorrow" even though the government of the day called it Lower inventory For Tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but he has gone beyond his time. Unless the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House, he will not be able to continue. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1710)

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the temptation to enter the debate on the budget tabled on May 8 last by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was too great for me to resist any longer.

I should like first of all to congratulate the minister for his great understanding of the problems which are of concern for the Canadian people and for putting such a humane philosophy as the basis for this budget. The Minister of Finance has been the architect of our time when he brought forward a budget to reinforce the Canadian economy, provide incentives that will enable Canadian industries to grow, to be competitive and provide steadier employment. I therefore wish to join with other hon. members in congratulating the minister on his masterpiece, which is realistic and corresponds to Canadian aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, I listened a while ago to the comments of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), on agriculture as well as on the speech delivered last night in this House by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). I doubt that he was here when the minister delivered his speech and that doubt is being confirmed because I am sure that he did not even read the speech of the Minister of Agriculture. I will quote from page 2485 of Hansard:

> The performance of 1970-1971, when we sold 706 million bushels of grain, was an all-time record. This year we will exceed it by a great amount.

Those are good news as far as agriculture is concerned and as Canadians, when we sat on the committee on agriculture, we were happy to hear about the establishment of a two-price system for grains used in domestic consumption and we were twice as happy to learn that the federal government was investing $60 million for the Prairie producers. About 175,000 western farmers will benefit by that two-price system.

Now, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, if he claims that he is knowledgeable in agricultural matters, as he did a moment ago, to at least come to the meetings of the Committee on Agriculture. I have often chaired that committee, I am its vice-chairman since 1968, and I challenge the hon. member to prove that he came at least once to its meetings to outline his proposals for the improvement of the lot of western producers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the major budget measures which will promote the growth of our manufacturing and processing industries? Such measures have been considered within the framework of a new industrial policy. The creation of new jobs will be directly proportionate to the growth of our Canadian industry and to—

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was not aware that the hon. member was addressing remarks to me in the first instance. He has asked me to say whether I have been present at the agricultural committee's meetings. I would inform the hon. gentleman that for 15 years I was a member of the agricultural committee. I am not at the present time a member of that committee, but I am devoting my time to three other committees. I think even he, as a comparatively new member of the House, would agree that a member who sits on three committees is doing all he can with respect to committee responsibilities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sure the hon. member will understand, although an invitation was issued to him by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), that he cannot take up too much time during the hon. member's speech. The point he has raised may not be a point of order but it is a fair answer to the request that was made.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): So, I go on to say that the creation of new jobs will be directly proportionate to the growth of our Canadian industry and to the involvement of the business community.

Among those measures, let us point out, first, that the cost of all machinery and equipment bought by a taxpayer as of May 9, 1972 and used for the manufacturing or processing of goods to be sold, will be written off in two years. It is therefore a tax deduction of the order of 50 per cent of the cost of the asset during the year of acquisition.

Furthermore, effective January 1, 1973, the highest corporation tax rate applicable to profits earned in Canada, in manufacturing or processing, will be reduced to 40 per cent. This represents a decrease of the order of 10 per cent.

Likewise the small manufacturing or processing concerns will have their income tax reduced from 25 to 20 per cent. The fiscal treatment given to such companies will now compare quite favourably with that existing in other countries, especially the United States and the extended common market.

So it is to be expected that such measures will lead to substantial incentives for the establishment of new manufacturing plants in Canada and for the development of those now existing, by increasing the income which the investments will finally produce.

This budget also gives justice to elderly people and to veterans who suffer deeply from inflation and who unfortunately have no means of protecting themselves against this calamity. Elderly people as well as veterans will no longer have to suffer the hardship of a diminishing standard of living thanks to the increased old age security pensions. In other words, we eliminate the current yearly escalation ceiling of 2 per cent so that on April 1 next year, the maximum benefits will be consistent with the total increase in the cost of living; 1,800,000 Canadians will benefit from this new policy which will cost $120 million.

In addition to escalating the old age pension to take into account the rising cost of living, we have two other measures in favour of senior citizens. Starting January 1, 1972, the monthly maximum benefits under old age security and the guaranteed income supplement will go from $135 to $150 for single people and from $155 to $285 for married couples. One million people will benefit from this new policy at a cost of $180 million.

Moreover, the income tax social exemption granted to those aged 65 and more which the government recently boosted from $500 to $650, will now be $1,000. This exemption will also be granted to taxpayers confined to bed or wheelchair and to the blind.

This year is quite important for the senior citizens residing in Canada. Exactly 20 years ago, the right hon. Louis St-Laurent, Prime Minister of Canada, presented to this House a bill on old age security pensions. This program has been modified and is now considered as second to none in the world.

No country in the world can compare advantageously with Canada as to the way we are treating our retired citizens. In fact, in January 1952, the Liberal government introduced in this House a bill granting to those aged 70 or more a monthly pension of $40. Now, 20 years later, the government has reviewed this program and is granting to those 65 or more a monthly income of $150 or $1,800 a year and to married couples a monthly income of $285 or $3,420 a year through the old age security plan and income supplement.

It is noted that more than 50 per cent of improvements to old age security pensions have been implemented under the present government headed by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Older citizens living in Ville de Laval will have access to a home for the aged. The federal government will earmark $2,137,500 for a centre called Manoir des Îles on Paton Drive in Chomedey, Ville de Laval. This construction, the total cost of which is $2,250,000, is administered by the government of Quebec under an agreement between the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Quebec Housing Corporation.

In the process of contributing to a more just society, the main changes to various welfare policies have been the implementation of a selective rather than universal approach in the field of family allowances and income security. Selective benefits, that is to say benefits payable to lower income people, are being increased so as to better reflect the needs of families who shoulder heavy family responsibilities but whose income is unfortunately not commensurate with their burden.

• (1720)

As regards veterans, their pensions and allowances will also be increased yearly in accordance with the cost of living index; 333,000 Canadians will benefit from this new measure which will cost $25 million a year.

Thirdly, another measure will be of help to students: it is a new deduction related to the cost of obtaining education which will be in addition to the existing deduction for tuition fees. This new measure will be a deduction of $50 per month per student for each month in the year during which the student is in full-time attendance at certain institutions. This measure will benefit 600,000 students and will amount to $50 million.

Fully aware that our young people are an important natural asset, the government has not spared any efforts to help them through job creating opportunities during the summer months and by granting $85 million to create jobs in various federal departments.

The original Opportunities for Youth Program has been implemented. This program aims at developing the creative spirit of our young people who are asked to submit such projects as would improve the life of Canadians. This very imaginative program has met with tremendous acceptance from students who have submitted 19,000 projects.

In order not to further "bureaucratize" this initiative, full freedom has been given by the government to a youth committee to make a selection from these projects. I am very happy to learn that the government will review the implementation and approval criteria of these projects so that their execution would have some permanent effect on the well-being of the community.

Moreover, and in order to encourage industrialists to employ students in the summer months, a vote of $262,000 has been earmarked towards a national advertising program.

Wishing to contribute to the success of the Operation Placement Program, the Department of Manpower and Immigration has set up for the benefit of students 137 employment centres to be added to the 390 manpower centres disseminated across Canada.

On May 15 last, I had the privilege of presiding at the opening of the employment centre for students in Laval. That centre is located at 127 des Prairies Boulevard, at Laval-des-Rapides.

These various projects show to what extent we are concerned with the training of our leaders for tomorrow, who today, are more prone to imitate than to judge, to execute than to advise, to launch new projects than to pursue old ones.

Mr. Speaker, since Confederation, it is easy to recognize the years during which the Liberal party has ruled, since it respects the individual and his freedom. The Liberal Party is aware of the potential of each citizen. Improving the life style of Canadians is a priority objective of this Liberal government. Improving the life style of old people, of low-income Canadians, developing the potential of our youth by challenging their creativity, facilitating access to universities through interest-free loans during the academic period, those are the things that mark the difference between the Liberal party and other parties.

In closing my remarks on the study of the budget, I am bearing in mind the image of the society constantly before us, the image of a world where all are striving to retain their livelihood, sell their products, their work, their talents and their ideas.

In the first place, a well-organized economy must provide a job for those who can and want to work, and such task is not as easy as it seems.

Through last year's Local Initiatives Program, the federal government contributed to create 92,577 jobs during winter, but what impresses me even more, Mr. Speaker, is that as a member representing the province of Quebec I note that 40 per cent of these jobs, that is 38,473, were created in this province, which represents an amount of nearly $64 million.

I think that this is a feature that proves to what extent federalism spells profits for the province of Quebec.

About the Local Initiatives Program, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state that all the projects of Laval which were presented in last November were approved, for an amount of $886,000. I shall only quote some of the main grants which are very significant, for instance, $295,000 to improve the Chomedey filtering plant, which shall have an added capacity of 25 million gallons daily. Thus, we shall ensure a better pressure during peak hours, and avoid the water shortage during summer in Chomedey.

Another federal grant to Laval amounted to some $166,-725 for a sewage and water system in the area of Sainte-Dorothée. Another contribution which is quite appreciated at this time in the riding of Laval, is the $80,613 allocated for building a tunnel on Concorde boulevard, under the CP tracks. This tunnel will facilitate the east-west traffic flow which at the present time, is only possible over two main roads, Cartier and Saint-Martin boulevards.

Which means, Mr. Speaker, that last year, through the Local Initiatives Program, the government granted the City of Laval $886,847, which is equivalent to the creation of 471 new jobs. In addition to this, an amount of $318,000 was invested in the City of Laval, in the private sector, under the Local Initiatives Program, following the presentation of projects by non-profit organizations.

I could talk on and on about the many departments that are unceasingly striving to create new jobs. One of them is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which invests in various under-privileged areas in order to foster employment there.

From 1965 to 1970, even if we have created in Canada twelve times more jobs in absolute number than in the whole of France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Sweden and Great Britain put together, there is still in this country a certain level of unemployment. Even if in March 1972 there were 8,016,000 people—that is, 336,000 people or 4.3 p. 100 more than last year—employed and paid considerably higher salaries, the unemployment level here is still too high. However, our rate of development, at 4.3 p. 100, is by far the highest of the industrialized nations of the western world. This excellent performance was the subject of an article in the most prestigious English paper, the London Times, which awarded Canada the highest distinction for the best all around economic evolution of all the industrialized countries in the western world.

According to the latest figures published by Statistics Canada, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate dropped from 6.7 per cent in April 1971 to 5.8 per cent in April 1972. During the same period, the number of unemployed decreased by 67,000.

This means that, in Canada, millions of workers are engaged in various occupations; each and every morning, these millions of workers leave for work as if they were moved by a mechanism which nobody can see, nor is aware of, and all the jobs they do are tied together like so many links of a chain with multiple branches, or like so many gears of a gigantic watch. This balance of the economy can only be attained if there is a close co-operation between the various industrial sectors in a free enterprise system, the trade unions and the state with its various levels of government.

Mr. Speaker, in view of all the measures put forward by the government, I fail to see any justification or seriousness in the amendment moved by the honourable member for Edmonton West Mr. Lambert) which reads as follows:

This House regrets the failure of the government to bring forth effective measures to relieve unemployment, to provide incentive for Canadian investment in Canadian development or to propose personal tax relief for stimulation of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, considering all the projects put forward by the federal government, I shall have to vote against the amendment.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have been told by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) that the major purpose of his budget presentation was to deal with unemployment. I believe the government will fail in its objective of dealing with unemployment, as it has since the year it was elected.

Before dealing with that matter, I want to say that I do not believe it was the major purpose of this budget. I think it was to placate the business community of this country which was dissatisfied with the Liberal government. That is why tax cuts of $500 million are being given to the corporate sector of our economy. At the same time as the government refuses to give personal income tax cuts, it proposes to permit an increase of 3 per cent at the end of the year on personal income taxes. That is the real purpose of this budget. We in this party intend to make that the major point in the election campaign whether it comes this fall or in the spring of 1973. I refer to the government so favourably and one-sidedly dealing with the corporate sector of this country.

We have been told by the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) and the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) how successfully the government is dealing with unemployment. The fact is that with the exception of two months, for two years we have consistently had 6 per cent or more unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis. It is true that in April, 1972, the seasonally adjusted rate dropped to 5.8 per cent, but that was still the highest rate of unemployment in any country in the western world.

I see that the hon. member for Laval is leaving the chamber. I wish he would stay for another few moments. I want to remind him that 216,000 people in the province of Quebec were unemployed in April, 1972. He may be satisfied with that record. I am not surprised that the Parti Quebecois, the party which wants to separate, divide and destroy this country, in a recent drive had the greatest financial success it has had in its history. When there are 216,000 people unemployed in the province of Quebec it is not surprising that the people of that province are dissatisfied with federalism, Canada and the Liberal government.

An hon. Member: Are you happy about that?

Mr. Orlikow: No, I am not happy about it. I wish you people would do something about it instead of saying that everything is great. Let us look at the unemployment figures. In April, 1972, there were 250,000 people between the ages of 14 and 24 who were unemployed. These are the best educated young people this country has ever seen. Because I do not like to talk in round figures, let me tell hon. members about a visit to my office yesterday afternoon by one of my constituents.

This young lady received her BA at the University of Manitoba in May, 1970. She spent a year in the faculty of education at the University of Manitoba and completed teacher's training in May, 1971, one year ago. She was not able to get a teaching job in the province of Manitoba, and came to Ottawa. The only work she has been able to get is as a substitute teacher on very few occasions. She told me yesterday that one of her mistakes is that she has not lied to prospective employers. She told them how well educated she is. For most jobs she is over-educated. She feels that the only thing she can do now is try to get a job as a cashier in one of the supermarkets in this city.

This is a sad commentary for a society which has spent tens of thousands of dollars to train a young woman to be a teacher and she cannot get any job except possibly as a cashier in a supermarket. In spite of this, members opposite are happy about the state of our economy.

Let us look at what the Minister of Finance proposes with his budget. If you bring in a budget with the hope of expanding the economy and providing employment, you have two choices. First, you can cut personal income taxes. Is there any member of this House who doubts that personal income tax cuts, particularly for those in the low and middle income brackets, would mean an immediate expenditure of virtually all that money for goods and services which these people need? Anything given in the form of a tax cut for those who earn $12,000 a year or less—and that is the vast majority of the people in this country—would be spent. These people cannot afford to save money. Did the minister do that? Of course not. What he did was cut the rate of corporation taxes to 40 per cent and provided for another round of fast writeoffs on machinery purchases.

The minister suggested that kind of program will encourage manufacturing plants to invest in new machinery, be come more efficient and hire more workers. I suggest that it will do nothing of the kind. Manufacturing plants that are now working on short time with one shift will not invest in new machinery which they do not need to meet their present demands. If there is more demand, they will bring in more workers. They will not do what General Motors plans to do on July 1, when there will be a complete shutdown for one month or more so that all of its employees will not be working.

The minister's tax cut for corporations of $500 million will mean a substantial increase in their profits. The minister has provided a gold plated carrot for the corporations of this country, one which they do not need. The fact is that corporation profits are up very substantially. I realize some hon. members may say I am partisan, that I am unfair. They may be right. Let me, therefore, prove my contention that corporation profits are moving up substantially and that corporations do not need this carrot which the Minister of Finance is providing. I quote from the Financial Times of May 8, 1972: under the heading "Profits are looking better" we read the following:

Canadian corporate profits are continuing the recovery which began last spring, helped by tax cuts and a liberated consumer. First quarter earnings make exceptional reading. One first quarter survey in Canada, taking in 93 public companies, found that profits were 27 per cent ahead of the same period last year. Profits from both private and public companies were up 18 per cent from 1970.

The article goes on to list some examples. Steel Company of Canada Limited's first quarter profits were up 55 per cent, Royal Trust Company's first quarter earnings were up by 60 per cent, and Traders' Group Limited's by 30 per cent. Imperial Oil was ahead 33 per cent in the first quarter, Dupont of Canada's first quarter profits rose sharply, and the first quarter earnings of the Ford Motor Company of Canada were up by 60 per cent.

It is against this background that the Minister has proposed, and government backbenchers will support, this rape of the public which will give the corporations another $500 million. Keep in mind that what the minister is proposing is that beginning January 1, 1973, the 3 per cent cut in personal income tax which was instituted in the fall of 1971 as a temporary measure will cease. So in fact the ordinary citizens of Canada will experience, not a tax cut such as the corporations will receive but a 3 per cent increase in income tax.

It is true there have been increases in payments to old age pensioners and veterans, but those increases were demanded by members of the opposition in all parties for two or three years and were refused time and time again by the government. Why has action been taken now? It is because the government has been watching the public opinion polls. The government's stock has been dropping, so an attempt is being made to buy the old age pensioners. I suggest that old age pensioners have better memories than the government gives them credit for. They know what the government has done; they know it refused for three years to grant necessary increases.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Why is the government following such a stupid budget policy? It does so because it is wedded to the idea that the only good which can be done in the economy is by the private sector. Whatever the private sector does is good. If they want to build another filling station or another supermarket, that is good, even though we do not need them. But if the government spends money on pollution control, on housing or community centres, that is bad, that is inflationary. That is why the government places all the emphasis on the private sector; and not on the whole of the private sector, either, but on the 95 big corporations which supply the campaign funds for the Liberal party.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, what are the great expectations of the government for tomorrow's business?

Mr. MacEachen: The same as Thursday last, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I see an hon. member sitting at the back who would like to be recognized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being after six o'clock, unless the hon. member has a point of order—

Mr. Bell: It is just to adjourn the debate.

Mr. MacKay: I should like to call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At 6.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED CONFLICT IN MINISTERS' STATEMENTS CONCERNING IMPORTING OF CERTAIN TIRES BY MICHELIN FREE OF DUTY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In a letter dated June 21, 1971, sent to me by the former Minister of Finance, now Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson), the hon. gentleman asserted:

> The government has agreed to permit the Michelin Company to import certain types and sizes of tires duty-free for a period of three years—

On May 8 of this year the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) asserted in the House, as reported on page 1973 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, the government has not authorized any duty-free entry of certain types or sizes of tires for the Michelin Company, nor has any decision been reached as to when such a remission would come into effect.

On May 9, I once again questioned the minister on this point, asking whether the three-year concession had been cancelled or put off to another time. The Minister of Finance replied, as reported on page 2087:

> I would interpret it primarily as a matter of time, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, on May 11 the Minister of Finance asserted in the House that "no remission or relief has actually been granted to the Michelin Company".

In today's Globe and Mail it is reported that Mr. J. D. Moore, president of Firestone Tire and Rubber Company of Canada, asserted in a speech in Toronto yesterday that the Michelin Tire Company of Nova Scotia had been granted the right to import tires duty-free into Canada for a three-year period beginning in 1970 as a concession for establishing two plants in Nova Scotia. This confirms the statement made to me in the letter of the former Minister of Finance last year.

In view of the seriousness of this contradictory information provided by two ministers of the Crown, I move:

> That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and that the Minister of Finance be requested to appear before that committee in order to make a full explanatory statement on the question of tariff concessions made to the Michelin Tire Company.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given the Chair notice of his intention to bring this matter before the House by way of a question of privilege. I think the hon. member knows the rules and practices of the House in relation to statements made outside the House and statements that are allegedly contradictory. It is a long-established point of procedure that this cannot be raised in the House by way of question of privilege. I refer hon. members to Citation 113 in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which states in part:

• (1410)

> —a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

This, of course, extends to contradictions which may come to the attention of hon. members in relation to statements made by two ministers. I do not think this kind of situation ought to be discussed by the House by way of a question of privilege and then referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The duty of the Chair is to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I have to rule that in view of the precedents and long-established practice the matter cannot be considered by the House at this time as suggested by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM ROUMANIA

Mr. Speaker: I should like to draw to the attention of the House the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a very distinguished parliamentary delegation from Roumania, led by His Excellency Mr. Stefan Voitec, President of the Grand National Assembly of Roumania.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members may recall that Roumania was a most gracious host last year to a delegation of members of this House. The President of the National Assembly, accompanied by Madame Voitec, and four parliamentary colleagues are now visiting Canada as guests of the House of Commons. On behalf of hon. members I extend to them a very hearty welcome.

[Translation]

I also know I am expressing the sentiments of each and every hon. member of the House in welcoming President Voitec, Madame Voitec and members of the National Assembly of Roumania. I am convinced that their visit to Canada will further enhance the co-operation which already characterizes the relations between Roumania and Canada.

Mr. President, I very sincerely hope that your stay among us, unfortunately of too short duration, will have been both a pleasant and a rewarding experience for all members of your delegation.

MR. HORNER—RESULT OF SOFTBALL GAME BETWEEN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AND PROTECTIVE STAFF

Mr. J. H. Perhaps I might suggest that a pay increase for the protective staff would provide a greater incentive for them to recruit better ball players.

FISHERIES

STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION AT ANNUAL MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION FOR THE NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERIES

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like briefly to outline to the House the approach that Canada is taking at the 22nd annual meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries when it opens in Washington today.

There are two basic thrusts: one is conservation and the other is a special preference for coastal states. The emphasis is on conservation. Most of the traditionally fished stocks in the Northwest Atlantic are either being overfished or are under heavy fishing pressure, with the result being a reduction in the supply of fish available to our inshore fishermen. This is why Canada is urging a cutback in the offshore fishing efforts by all nations and a special allocation, in Canada's favour, to improve the income of inshore fishermen in the maritime provinces, Newfoundland-Labrador and Quebec.

Our approach is based on sound, scientific principles. Each fish stock should be managed separately. Its size should be determined annually by a group of scientists who are regarded as authorities in their field. These international experts will estimate the sustainable yield for each species—a level of catch which can be taken by fishermen from the 15 nations operating in the North Atlantic and still allow the resource to return to a healthy state.

Individual quotas can then be struck for each nation. Canada, being a coastal state, will receive a special allocation. This special allocation will be included in the Canadian total in order to protect our inshore fishermen.

We are proposing that the over-all quota, or total sustainable yield of each species, be allocated as follows: 40 per cent for each nation in proportion to its latest three-year catch statistics; 40 per cent reflecting its catches in the preceding ten-year interval; 10 per cent additional to the coastal state; and 10 per cent to look after contingencies.

I could put it another way, Mr. Speaker. The estimate of over-all sustainable yield will be reduced by 10 per cent so as to be on the safe side in so far as the commission members total catching effort is concerned. A further 10 per cent will be set aside, preferentially, for the coastal states, primarily Canada. The remaining 80 per cent will be divided among all 15 nations, including Canada, on the basis of recent history.

As Canada has been responsible for half of the total ground-fish catch off our east coast, we will be allocated more than 50 per cent of the estimated sustainable yield of cod, redfish and flounders in 1973.

If we can sell this approach, this formula, this practical step toward responsible management in the Northwest Atlantic, to the other member nations of ICNAF, we will have gone a long way toward stabilizing our commercial fishery on Canada's east coast. We will have introduced order out of chaos. We will have converted the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries from an academic exercise by scientists into a fish management authority.

We will also have set an example for the rest of the world. Few international commissions have any authority over the catching effort employed by individual nations operating in international waters. Canada, by arming ICNAF in this way, will therefore be setting the stage for sound management of the living resources of the sea, something which is long overdue in the other fishing areas of the world.

A word in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, about salmon. We are adamant. Nations which look after their own rivers—rivers in which Atlantic salmon can spawn—should have the sole right to harvest these fish. Countries like Denmark whose rivers and streams produce few salmon have no right to take salmon on the high seas. Our negotiating team at ICNAF will, therefore, be calling for an immediate cessation to fishing for Atlantic salmon by other nations off West Greenland.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, we on this side listened with interest to the statement on policy made by the minister in respect of the proposals to be put forward at the annual meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries. The threat to the Atlantic salmon as a commercial species must be viewed in the over-all context of the depletion of our marine resources by overfishing, especially by the fishing fleets of foreign nations that fish off our shores, and the failure of ICNAF to respond to this situation. The sea is the world's main source of protein, and any threat to the existence of this natural food bank should be of global concern.

In a paper prepared for the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization for the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment to be held next month under the sponsorship of the United Nations, Dr. Henry Regier of the University of Toronto and Dr. Don W. Kelley, who was formerly associated with FAO, came out flatly and said that world fisheries face total destruction unless techniques already available for saving them are properly used. The FAO recommended a number of ways to cope with the situation, including a recommendation which states that fish stocks should be managed rationally through controls, including monitoring and periodic assessments of fish catches and limits on waste disposal. The paper contains this warning:

> Time is not on our side. In spite of growing environmental and economic awareness, we have grave concern about the future ecological state of the fresh water and inshore marine communities from the viewpoint of fisheries.

I submit that it is to this problem that ICNAF must address itself, otherwise it will be leaving open to question the justification for its very existence.

The minister makes reference in his statement to a formula which Canada will be putting forward allocating quotas on a total sustainable yield of each species. However, it is not clear from his statement whether these species include Atlantic salmon or whether the estimate of the over-all sustainable yield would be an adequate basis for the establishment of an over-all quota even if reduced by 10 per cent for those species of fish, including salmon, which have already declined as a consequence of overfishing. It does appear, however, that Canada will have two separate proposals: one for allocating quotas on all species except salmon, and a resubmission of our proposal of 1969 for a total ban on salmon fishing on the high seas.

In the ICNAF conference of 1969 Canada's proposal was rejected by a vote of eleven to two with one abstention. What hope do we now have of our proposal being accepted? Our chances are no better now than they were three years ago; if anything they are worse. Under the provisions of the ICNAF agreement, the proposal must be accepted unanimously. Since the 1969 conference, the Danish government has taken a hard line toward Canada's proposal and, in an effort to undermine our position within ICNAF, they have entered into a bilateral agreement with the United States to phase out the Greenland salmon fishery within five years. This proposal is untenable and unacceptable to Canadians and it is unacceptable to Canadian fishermen. The Americans were responding at that time to the pressures of very influential and wealthy sports fishermen when they entered into this agreement with the Danes. I submit that the agreement fails to recognize the urgency of the situation.

Statistics indicate that there has been a sharp increase in the total catch coincidental with the discovery of the Greenland feeding grounds by the Danes. The Danes keep saying that they cannot agree to Canada's proposal for a ban on high seas fishing because they say there has been no evidence provided to them that high seas fishing is depleting the salmon stocks. If this statement is true, it is an indictment of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and of the Minister of Fisheries for not presenting in clear and simple language our case to the Danish government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: I say this because statistics indicate that there has been a sharp increase in the total catch coincidental with the Greenland fishery. The Danish catch has risen from 50 metric tons in 1965 to 2,654 metric tons in 1971. This figure, of course, corresponds with the decline in the Canadian commercial catch as well as the virtual disappearance of salmon from rivers in New Brunswick and Quebec.

I ask the minister, in view of the very serious economic impact that this situation has on Atlantic Canada, whether these figures were made available to the Danish government, and if they were not, why they were not made available?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him of the terms of the Standing Order which allow him to comment briefly on a ministerial statement. There should not be a debate at this time. The hon. member was given the floor for the purpose of commenting briefly on the statement made by the minister. I hope that the hon. member will bear that in mind in continuing his remarks.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for that admonition but I wish to point out to you, Sir, that this is the same thing that happens when fisheries are talked about at international conferences—there is always an urgency to get on to something else. With all deference to your ruling, I must take a little time to explain the situation because I live in Atlantic Canada and I see what is happening in that area. The decline of our fisheries is having a tremendous impact on our people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for South Shore, but at the same time the rules are there. It seems to me, if the matter is as important as the hon. member says it is, and of course I know and all hon. members know it is, that perhaps there might be an opportunity under the rules for a more extended debate to be had in which the hon. member might ask the searching questions he has been asking, but certainly under the terms of the Standing Order this is not the occasion to do it. In any event, I thought it was my duty to bring this to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to conclude very briefly. I would point out to the minister and the House that Canada imports almost 35 million dollars worth of goods annually from Denmark. According to a press dispatch from Copenhagen in the Globe and Mail of May 25, Danish officials claim that they are exporting about $12 million worth of salmon to Canada. If one were to give credence to this figure, the appropriate government action should be obvious. Unlike the minister, we believe that a case can be made for a restriction to be placed on all Danish goods coming into Canada. I am sure we would find the Danes not nearly so inflexible in their approach to this matter if the Canadian government were to take this action.

I also believe we should be prepared to review our membership in ICNAF if we are, in the words of the minister, to change ICNAF from an academic exercise by scientists into a fish management authority. Again, for the life of me I cannot understand why the minister did not make his statement in Washington today rather than in this House, because that is where he should be to impress upon the various nations overfishing in the North Atlantic that we have a real problem and that we have to find a reasonable solution to it.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) that the matters raised in this statement are very important and urgent. In light of Your Honour's suggestion I would invite him and his colleagues to raise this subject matter for more extensive debate tomorrow when I believe an opportunity to do so will be offered.

The minister has outlined Canada's position at the ICNAF meeting, a position that can only be described as a very generous position to the other 14 nations involved in the commission. I say this advisedly because it is a well known fact that by and large the groundfish stocks off our shores are to be found upon the continental shelf and, as hon. members know, the resources of the continental shelf from the sea bed downward belong to the coastal states under international law.

Some of us feel that the logical position we ought to develop at a future law of the sea conference is that we have a prior claim to the resources that lie above the seabed on the continential shelf off our shores. Therefore Canada, in going to the meeting which opens today in Washington and suggesting that other fishing nations in the North Atlantic be entitled to take up to 80 per cent of their long-term average catches based on past fishing efforts, I suggest is making a very generous proposal. If the other nations involved have any regard at all for the conservation of the resources of the sea, I do not see how they can do otherwise than accept this offer without undue debate.

The minister makes reference to sustained yield catches being based on scientific management techniques. I think all hon. members, including the minister, would agree that techniques of scientific management of the various fish stocks have not yet been developed to perfection. Indeed, his suggestion of a 10 per cent contingency allowance bears that out.

I would suggest that if there has been any value in the work of ICNAF to date it is that some basis has been laid for a scientific understanding of fish stocks in the North Atlantic on which future management techniques can be based. Regretfully, actual fish management has not so far been developed. At this time and in the light of known facts, unless we are prepared to accept scientific management of fish stocks in the North Atlantic there has been little point to ICNAF and this exercise which goes back almost 20 years.

When we speak of scientific management I hope that not only Canada but all the other nations mean genuine scientific management and not just management based primarily upon the marketing desires of the various fishing nations in relation to what they catch from time to time. We have had some unfortunate experiences within our own area of jurisdiction. I feel there has been some yielding to pressure for overcatching of stocks based on the desire of those doing the harvesting to sell their catches, and that genuine scientific management has suffered. The sad story of the herring fishery on the Pacific coast of Canada is an example.

The minister makes a brief reference to Atlantic salmon. This matter has been the subject of extensive discussion in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and perhaps it does not need to be expanded upon at this time.

Despite what I consider to be the ill-advised agreement made between the United States and Denmark for a long-term phasing out of Atlantic salmon fishing, I hope the United States will join Canada in seeking an immediate ban. Some people have suggested that the main pressure within the United States has come from sports fishermen. I suggest that these people should throw their weight behind the position that Canada is seeking in its presentation to the commission in the hope that in the end both the United States and Denmark will agree that Canada's position regarding Atlantic salmon is much sounder than that in the agreement to which I have referred.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) made his statement available to us only a few minutes before the beginning of this afternoon's sitting. I regret that, once more, only the English text of the statement was distributed. I hope that next time the hon. minister will have something else to offer us than apologies, and that he will be able to let us have the French text at the same time as the English.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that in some department there is failure to apply bilingualism. Before speaking of bilingualism—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should restrict his remarks to fisheries problems rather than turning to those of bilingualism.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand your point of view full well, but almost every time a minister makes a statement we Créditistes get a copy of it in English only. We trust the situation will be rectified.

Mr. Speaker, in his statement the minister gave the priorities the government intends to discuss at the meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries which opens today in Washington.

It is not so much what the government intends to discuss in Washington that is important to the Canadian fishermen who are dissatisfied at this time, and rightly so, but rather the concrete results that will stem from the meeting. Not only should the minister and the officials of his department not make any concessions at the meeting, but they should insist on our sovereignty over the adjacent continental shelf to a depth of 1,000 fathoms off the Canadian coast as well as over its resources.

Mr. Speaker, we have been speaking about sovereignty and fishing rights for a long time in this House. In my opinion, the government could have inveiled today a more realistic and specific approach to be proposed at that important international meeting.

Mr. Speaker, we note in the statement that the government does not discuss the possibility of making breeding ponds available to Canadian fishermen when we know, according to statistics, that they have always been unable to compete against imports in that field. Last year, Canadian imports from Denmark amounted to $37 million, while our exports to that country totalled $15 million. We therefore suffered a trade deficit of $22 million solely for fisheries.

We trust that the minister will alter his proposed plan at that international meeting, because Canadian fishermen are faced with tremendous problems.

In 1969, I saw in the Gaspé region five foreign fishing ships which, in the space of a few hours, took all the fish from the fishermen of that area. In a few hours, these ships stole the incomes of the Gaspé fishermen, and this, with a permit from the federal government. All that the fishermen did, was to take out their shotguns and shoot at the fishing boats which stood at anchor about one mile from the Gaspé shores. This is all the protection that the Minister of Fisheries was then granting to the Gaspé fishermen.

That is why I was then shocked by the situation of fisheries, in Canada. In my view, the minister, today, while expressing good wishes, was not specific enough when he said that he could propose a valid solution for Canadian fishermen.

WAR CLAIMS

TABLING OF REPORT OF WAR CLAIMS COMMISSION, WORLD WAR II

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table, in both official languages, the report of the War Claims Commission, World War II, signed by Mr. Thane A. Campbell, Chief War Claims Commissioner.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

CONTROL OVER PUBLIC EXPENDITURES—SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF INSTRUCTIONS BASED ON AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the statements contained in the report of the Auditor General for the 1970-71 fiscal year with regard to the continuing dangerous deterioration of parliamentary control over public expenditures through such devices as expenditure of moneys not spent in the proceeding year, the use of the contingency fund carryover, legislating by estimates and other similar arrangements, will the government cease and desist from these practices and will instructions be issued to members of cabinet and to government departments that these practices must be discontinued?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House would agree that it would be better for the House itself to give such instructions if it feels that they are warranted. For that very reason the government House leader will later today give notice that he wants this report to be brought before the parliamentary committee at a very early date.

• (1440)

Mr. Baldwin: That brings me to my next question. As this statement is a repetition of a similar statement in the previous auditor general's report and as there are now approximately 40 recommendations by the Public Accounts Committee which the government has either rejected or neglected, will the government find some very early way and time for the House to debate these very serious situations?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hope very much that the Public Accounts Committee, to which I have just referred, will use all diligence to examine this report which is always very helpful to the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is a matter for the House.

Mr. Baldwin: I asked the Prime Minister about a debate in the House; as he does not want to reply, I give him notice that we will be debating this subject tomorrow.

Mr. Trudeau: Tomorrow? Very well.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—REMISSIONS TO COMPANIES UNDER MACHINERY PROGRAM—ALLEGED FAILURE TO REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question emanating from the same report. In the absence of the Minister of Finance may I address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of a statement in the Auditor General's report that a number of remissions to companies under the machinery program of the minister's department, totalling over $71 million in the year 1970-71, were not reported individually to parliament as required by section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. I ask the minister to inform the House what the reason is for the failure to make such reports as required by law?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into the matter on which the hon. member requests information and give a proper answer tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that perhaps the minister may not have this information at his fingertips. If he finds that these remissions, totalling a very large amount of money, were not reported individually when they exceeded $1,000 each, will he undertake to the House to table a list of such remissions which were not reported in the way required?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have already said I will look into it.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—FAILURE OF CERTAIN COMPANIES TO FILE FINANCIAL STATEMENTS—INQUIRY AS TO PROSECUTIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I address a further supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the considerable number of companies that have failed to file annual financial statements as required by a section of the Canada Corporations Act and as an even greater number of companies failed to file annual returns as required by another section of the act, can the minister inform the House whether charges are being laid or contemplated against the companies that have failed to file financial statements or annual returns? If so, how many such prosecutions are being initiated?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take the question as notice and discuss the matter with the minister responsible for those returns, as well as looking at the facts in my department.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—ACTION TO COLLECT MONEYS OWED BY CERTAIN PROVINCES FOR MILITARY SERVICES IN EMERGENCIES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. Perhaps the Prime Minister will discontinue his reading for a moment and listen to my question. Will he ask the Minister of Finance to take the first opportunity on motions to explain what the government intends to do to collect the $816,000 which has now been owed for two years or more by the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and British Columbia for military services rendered in emergencies, and why the money has not been collected so far?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to discuss the question with the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are at least ten hon. members rising for supplementaries. The Chair will recognize a few and then go to the hon. member for Lotbinière. For the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Oxford.

[Mr. Pepin.]

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—ACTION ON OFFENCES ALLEGEDLY COMMITTED BY CERTAIN PUBLIC SERVANTS IN EXPENDITURE OF MONEYS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. In view of various offences which, according to the 1970-71 report of the Auditor General, appear to have been committed by certain public servants with respect to the spending of public moneys, could the Prime Minister find out—perhaps he knows already—whether the Minister of Finance has consulted or intends to consult with the Attorney General of Canada in order that appropriate action may be taken?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO WASTING OF FUNDS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the attention of the Prime Minister. Having in mind that the Public Accounts Committee has had a book compiled listing its scores of recommendations made between 1930 and 1970, a 40-year period, for the stopping of waste by the government, will the government give consideration to inquiring not only into those items of waste but also into the root cause of this continuing government goofing?

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN SPENDING BY NORTHERN CANADA COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question was for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but I will direct it to the parliamentary secretary. Inasmuch as the Auditor General's report for the third year in a row has pointed out some very serious irregularities in spending by one northern Canada commission, amounting to about half a million dollars last year which was not authorized by the Governor in Council or Treasury Board, could the parliamentary secretary indicate why these irregularities are continuing and what is going to be done about them?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will draw the question to the attention of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I reiterate that the report will be before the standing committee soon.

Mr. Baldwin: One would think they were spending their own money.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—CONSULTATION WITH OTHER COUNTRIES TO INTENSIFY SANCTIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the statement the minister tabled yesterday concerning the Rhodesian situation, he stated that Canada would continue to maintain in effect existing sanctions. May I ask whether the government will give consideration to consultations with other likeminded nations in the Commonwealth and the United Nations with a view to the intensification of sanctions, rather than the mere maintenance of existing sanctions, so as to make them more effective and eventually bring about majority rule in Rhodesia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is speaking about intensification of our sanctions, I do not think they can be intensified. They are total.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Totally ineffective. They are pure humbug, Sir.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Later:]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Greenwood. I would ask the minister to reply to the second part of the question which did not deal with Canadian sanctions against Rhodesia but with the possibility of encouraging other nations to intensify their sanctions and to make them as total as Canada's. Is any initiative being taken by Canada in that regard?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I hope all nations observe the United Nations sanctions. They are supposed to be universal. I am glad to have the support of the hon. member in these representations.

INQUIRY AS TO SANCTIONS AGAINST DENMARK BECAUSE OF ATLANTIC SALMON FISHING OPERATIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on a much more important matter which strikes closer to home. Does the government intend to institute sanctions against the Danish government because of its action in fishing for North Atlantic salmon and the manner in which that country has disregarded our interests?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a supplementary question, as the hon. member for Skeena will no doubt recognize. However, as the question has been asked perhaps the minister might want to reply.

OLD AGE SECURITY—INQUIRY AS TO RECIPIENTS OF SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFIT PAID BY QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The Quebec social affairs minister stated last night over the CBC French network that Quebec was granting a monthly allowance of $31 to people 65 years of age and over who were living in homes and that it would be increased to $40 next September.

Can the National Health and Welfare Minister tell us if the Quebec allowance is added to the old age pension granted by the federal government and can he also inform us who were the recipients since old people do not seem to have received the amounts allegedly paid by Quebec?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I find the hon. member's question somewhat confusing. All I can say is that I did read what the Quebec minister of social affairs had to say. All I gather is a suggestion that he intends to make additional charges to those over 64 who are being maintained in provincial institutions. I am seeking clarification of his statement.

FURNITURE—EFFECTS OF EXPORT OF HARDWOOD TO JAPAN ON WOOD SUPPLY FOR CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS—PROPOSED MEASURES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

It has to do with the difficult situation facing the Canadian furniture industry and especially that of Quebec following massive purchases of hardwood by Japan in the last few months, which deprive this industry of essential raw materials. What action does the minister intend to take to protect this important Canadian industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the furniture industry, particularly in Quebec, is doing very well, and this development, unfortunately, comes at the same time as a large increase in our exports of maplewood especially. Efforts are now being made to increase the production of that wood and I was told a few days ago by officials of my department that the situation was improving.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister. Is he in a position to assure the people concerned in this industry that they will have the required hardwood, which is essential to the making of Canadian furniture?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I can only assure you that my department will make all possible efforts to help producers put on the market the quantity of wood needed.

SUGGESTED FOWL BUYING PROGRAM TO REDUCE EGG PRODUCTION

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the provinces have reached a reasonably tentative agreement regarding control over egg production, would the government initiate an effective fowl buying program to relieve the overproduction of eggs immediately?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): If the provinces have reached such an agreement which has sufficient substance in it to make it workable, it will be helpful if they will communicate the contents of the agreement to me.

INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF EMBASSY IN BUCHAREST

May I again ask the minister whether the government has plans to open an embassy in Bucharest and to appoint an ambassador accredited solely to the People's Republic of Roumania which for some time has had a prestigious embassy in Ottawa?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It was my privilege to receive similar representations from the distinguished representatives from Roumania who are here, and I assured them that Bucharest was on the list.

CRITERIA THAT PROCESSING INDUSTRIES MUST MEET TO QUALIFY FOR BUDGET TAX REDUCTION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House and the country what criteria agricultural products processing industries must meet in order to qualify for the tax reduction announced in the budget?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a long list here in front of me but I am sure Your Honour would not allow me to read it at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he table the criteria that companies have to meet in order to qualify for the tax reduction?

Mr. Olson: This is, of course, a question which should be addressed either to the Minister of National Revenue or to the Minister of Finance because they will have to administer these laws. But I can advise the hon. member that this matter was discussed somewhat extensively in the standing committee this morning, as the hon. member would have known had he been there.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT DECISION ELIMINATING NEED FOR JURY UNANIMITY IN CRIMINAL CASES—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In light of a recent decision by the United States Supreme Court eliminating the need for unanimity among juries in criminal cases, does the minister intend to introduce similar legislation applicable to Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): We have no immediate intention of introducing such legislation. The whole question of the appropriate approach to criminal law reform is being studied presently by the Law Reform Commission as well as in the department and may result in legislation at the next session.

TEXTILES—ORDERS SENT TO ROUMANIA—MEASURES TO PROTECT JOBS OF CANADIANS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question will be of interest, I hope, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some Canadian textile industries enjoying financial support from the federal government now order almost as much work in Roumania as in Canada, thus jeopardizing the jobs of Canadian workers. Is the minister aware of this fact and does he intend to take specific measures to preserve Canadian jobs in the textile field?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the minister will be able to reply briefly to this question. I am sure the hon. member for Lotbinière will admit that his question has a very wide scope and should normally be answered by the minister in the form of a statement on motions. If the minister can reply briefly, the Chair will recognize him for this purpose.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I can only confirm that indeed we import textiles from Roumania. If we wish to continue to export our products to Roumania, I suggest that we have to allow Roumania also to export her products to Canada.

TRADE

ACTION RESPECTING TRADING BLOCS AND OPERATIONS OF MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of statements in the report of the Ontario Economic Council calling attention to the changing world patterns in trading blocs and the lack of control by host countries over the operations of multinational corporations, would the government tell us what steps it has taken in connection with the development of these trading blocs and what views it has concerning the operations of multinational corporations, bearing in mind the bleak future predicted for Canada's international trade?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest, with respect, that this is a very general question that would normally call for a statement on motions. But if the minister can reply briefly he will be allowed to do so.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think I can reply briefly. I have not read the report of the Ontario Economic Council, but the presentation of it by the chairman as an amalgam of fact, opinion, argument, judgment and interpretation is not much of an invitation. On the subject, and taking the European Economic Community as an example, I was in the Senate for two hours yesterday, and I will send a copy of my speech to the hon. member. As to all the other blocs, I have spoken brilliantly on these subjects on a number of occasions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF FUNDS TO UNION OF NOVA SCOTIA INDIANS RESPECTING HUMAN RIGHTS PROPOSAL

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question, Mr. Speaker, is addressed to the Secretary of State. It concerns a question I put to him a few days ago with regard to a telegram received from the president of the Union of Nova Scotia Indians, with particular reference to the statement that moneys, the advance of which had been approved in principle by the minister's officials, were not forthcoming, and this without any explanation being given. The minister undertook to investigate; I wonder whether he is now in a position to throw any light on this subject?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it is about a communication and the hon. member inquired whether I had received it. MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION FROM CUSTOMS DUTIES ON CERTAIN IMPORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and is in the field in which he understated his brilliance. Could the minister clarify the Michelin tire situation? I ask this in view of the fact that the president of the Firestone Tire Corporation in a speech reported today has stated unequivocally that the Michelin Tire Company is receiving the benefit of duty-free import of certain tires for a three-year period, confirming the statement made by the former Minister of Finance. Could the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce unequivocally inform the House what the situation is with regard to this matter?

• (1500)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I always feel a little nervous about invading the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, but I do not see any contradiction in what the hon. member has stated this afternoon. A commitment was made by the Canadian government to a company called Michelin and that commitment has not yet been incorporated in an Order in Council. I do not see any contradiction there.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I trust we will not become involved in a debate. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary and will then go to the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Broadbent: My supplementary question to the minister concerns the confirmation that this agreement is presumably ready to receive from the cabinet. Would the minister inform the House whether this is a pro forma action by the government, or does it mean that the issue has not yet been resolved in principle?

Mr. Pepin: I have said everything I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the many complaints that have been registered by the NDP, would the minister endeavour to find out why the leader of the NDP, and especially the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, are so opposed to secondary industrial development in Nova Scotia, particularly the development of the Michelin Tire Factories in Bridgewater and Granton, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is, of course, completely out of order.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

VICTORIA CONFERENCE—CIRCULATION OF DOCUMENT AMONG CERTAIN PROVINCIAL DELEGATIONS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Last Tuesday I asked him a question concerning a document which was circulated among some provincial delegations at the last conference in Victoria.

In his reply, the Prime Minister asked me to supply him with details. This having been done, could the Prime Minister indicate now whether he recognizes the authenticity of such document, who was responsible for its circulation, and whether he himself was in favour of such a procedure?

Mr. Speaker: I have serious doubts on certain aspects of the question put by the hon. member. If the Prime Minister could answer it briefly the Chair would recognize him.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do how difficult it is to answer briefly. I shall try to do so but I hope that the brevity of the answer will not prevent the hon. member from asking supplementaries if it is not clear enough.

To the first question, I shall answer that I am aware of the existence of these documents because they were sent to several provinces. They were prepared, as usual, at federal-provincial conferences in order to explain the position of the federal government, as the provinces themselves produce documents to explain their views.

Finally, let me tell you that I of course agree with this method by which each delegation makes known to the others its position in respect of the proposals made by other participants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the member—

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether this document was given to all the provinces and particularly to Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the document in question was prepared at the request of the provinces taking part in the federal-provincial conference of health ministers. Several provinces asked the federal minister to give them some explanations as to what might be the consequences for them of the proposals made by Quebec a few days earlier and the federal government willingly agreed to explain—the way he understood them—what consequential effects Quebec's proposals would have for the provinces.

As for the second part of the question, I shall answer in the affirmative. Even at Victoria, the Quebec delegation was made aware of the federal positions as they had been explained to the other provinces which had asked about them.

CANADIAN POSITION AS PRESENTED TO ICNAF MEETING—REQUEST FOR BACKGROUND DATA

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Based on the minister's statement today about quotas being introduced for marine resources off our shores, has he prepared any background information in the form of scientific data or catch data to present to the ICNAF countries, and is the minister prepared to make that information available to the House of Commons?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I understand that scientists from all 15 member nations have been meeting in Washington during the past week. They have been producing statistics, comparing them and reaching conclusions as to sustainable yield. We will try to get their figures and make them available to the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that over the years the proposals that Canada has made regarding conservation measures for marine resources have been rejected by several ICNAF countries, does Canada have any unilateral plan of action based on the rights we have as a coastal state under the 1958 Law of the Sea Conference held at Geneva?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, our approach has been a multilateral one within the North West Atlantic Fisheries Commission. We have been quite successful, first in establishing quotas for haddock, as the hon. member knows, and more recently for herring. We hope that this quota arrangement will be extended to all species along our eastern seaboard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Chair should recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. I see a number of members wanting to ask questions supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. That might fill the rest of the question period as we only have about five minutes left. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard of this report and, indeed, discussed it with the Solicitor General. We agreed that he should ask for a report so we can see what action should be taken.

Mr. McCleave: Will the Solicitor General consider making a statement on this matter to the House?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure he will consider it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice who is also in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that a major car manufacturer owes the Crown $6 million in duties and sales tax and that this debt is to be forgiven, I wonder whether the minister or the government would give consideration to a similar forgiveness of overpayments to farmers, as described in the Auditor General's report?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not see the connection between the two situations described by the hon. member. Specific overpayments are, of course, looked at on their own merits and a decision is made on that basis.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF WHEAT BOARD ANNUAL REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, would the minister in charge of the Wheat Board accede to the repeated requests that have been made in committee that the Canadian Wheat Board's annual report be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture in the very near future?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I have indicated to the House, I do intend to do this. I am aware of the fact that the committee has a fairly full load of work, but I do propose to put down a motion referring the report very soon.

UNITED NATIONS

REDUCTION OF CONTRIBUTION BY UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE SIMILAR ACTION BY CANADA

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Thank you for your recognition, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was the brown suit blending in with the furniture. My question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that last week the United States Congress voted to reduce its United Nations contribution from 32 per cent to 25 per cent, is the Canadian government contemplating any similar adjustment to its U.N. contribution?

• (1510)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I might add that the Secretary General spoke to me about the financial problems facing the United Nations and is concerned about this action of the United States Congress. He is hopeful that this matter can be resolved, as in the past, by negotiation and discussion and not by unilateral action.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURE—COMPENSATION TO INDIANS ARISING FROM TREATY RIGHTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries which is supplementary to a question I asked last week. Has there been any agreement yet reached with the Indian people of the Atlantic region concerning compensation for their treaty rights involved in the ban on the Atlantic salmon fishery there?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. There are very few native people involved, and they are to my knowledge principally in New Brunswick. Discussions are proceeding with these people.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERIES—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether Canada is represented at the annual meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries in Washington today at the ministerial level because of the importance of this conference to Canada and, if not, why not? Perhaps the minister could tell us who is representing Canada?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, customarily ministers do not appear at these commission meetings, except in the case where the country is the host. I appeared briefly last year to welcome the national delegations that were there. There are no ministers presently in Washington. We are represented by Dr. A. W. H. Needler, who is head of the delegation and formerly our Deputy Minister of Fisheries in Ottawa. He is supported by a number of people from the industry on the east and west coasts and fishermen.

HEALTH

GENETIC DEFECTS—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF SCREENING CLINICS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the very serious genetic defects being experienced by Canadian people, has the minister any plans to set up screening clinics across Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member must be aware that if such clinics were set up they would fall within provincial jurisdiction and control. Where we can be of assistance to them is in working out standards in a consultative way. We are also trying to work out some acceptable cost-sharing formula, but the administration is theirs.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the minister that this is a national issue, not a provincial one, and it affects everybody.

Mr. Munro: I would remind the hon. member that this is a federal state.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—ALLEGED INADEQUATE PRESS RELEASE BY CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY CONCERNING LOAN FOR HYDRO STATION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which relates to a news release yesterday from the Canadian International Development Agency about a million dollar loan to Nigeria to assist in building a hydro-electric generating station. I should like to ask why it is that the Canadian International Development Agency is permitted to give what amounts to dishonest and false information in that it refuses to disclose that the loan carries no interest rate, has a repayment free period of 10 years and an additional 40 years within which the loan should be paid? Why was that information not contained in the release?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea, but I think it is quite clear that this is an aspect of the Canadian program which has been highly commended, particularly by people in his party. If he would like me on each occasion to emphasize the generosity of the Canadian people in this respect, I would be happy to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy if the minister would do that, and we would be even more happy if the government would be equally as generous at home in providing interest-free money—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—ALLEGED HIGH RATE IN GASPÉ AND NEW BRUNSWICK—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. As this will be his only appearance in the House this week, I should like to ask him a question based on the startling information that the highest rate of unemployment in Canada is in northern and eastern New Brunswick and Gaspé, having hit 18.4 per cent. What is the minister doing about this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member appreciates that questions posed in such general terms are hardly in order. The minister might reply briefly and he will be recognized for that purpose.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a correction first. This is not my first or only appearance in the House this week.

Mr. Bell: During question period it is.

Mr. O'Connell: I was here for the question period—

Mr. Bell: You voted last night but you were not in the House yesterday, my friend.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we are losing precious time. The minister might reply now that he has made his point.

INDUSTRY

TARIFF REMISSION ON MICHELIN TIRE IMPORTS—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ARRANGEMENT FOR OTHER TIRE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the Michelin Tire arrangement. Since he has been kind enough to give us some factual information for a change about the arrangements made with Michelin in respect of tariff remission, and as an agreement has been made for tariff remission which has not yet been implemented, can the minister say whether he has been approached by other tire companies in Canada seeking the same arrangement and, if so, what has he said to them?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already said in the House, I think on ten occasions, that we in Industry, Trade and Commerce tried to develop a tire plan which would incorporate some of the philosophy of the Michelin arrangement, but the companies, for different reasons, were not particularly interested and have not developed anything from what was being offered.

HARBOURS

PROVISION OF FACILITIES FOR FISHING COMMUNITIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the hardships being caused to inshore fishermen by the continuing rejection by his department of applications for the provision of harbour and wharf facilities to fishing communities, will the minister make a statement on motions in the House to indicate any changes in public works policy in respect of providing maintenance for wharves and breakwaters and dredging to assist inshore fishermen to maintain their livelihood which is being affected?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in policy. We are continuing to provide the best facilities possible with resources which are not unlimited.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE PROGRAM FOR CONSTRUCTION OF WHARVES BY FISHERMEN

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower. Will he discuss with the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Public Works some type of project under the local initiatives program or a similar program to allow fishermen to provide new facilities and to maintain existing facilities in order that they may support themselves in the fishing industry and to provide employment opportunities to prevent the loss of their livelihood?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss the proposal with both ministers. I appreciate the compliment of the hon. gentleman in recognizing the effectiveness of local initiative programs in that part of the country.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I want to make a correction. The Minister of Labour may have been here yesterday during part of the question period, but when I took the attendance of ministers, as I have done each day for the last three weeks, he was not here. I might just point out for the information of the House that there have been six ministers away every day who should have been here.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. Is the hon. member for Peace River rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Baldwin: I am rising on a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I did not think the question period had quite expired and I do not want to infringe on it. Would the government House leader indicate the business for today, tomorrow and next week?

Business of the House

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, today we will continue our discussion of the election expenses bill, followed by the bill to amend the Representation Commissioner Act, the Explosives Act and the wildlife bill. Tomorrow is an opposition day. Monday we will begin discussion of the foreign takeovers legislation, to be followed by the uncompleted items I have mentioned for today.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat the earlier notice I gave, that in light of the unsatisfactory answers by the Prime Minister we will be discussing the Auditor General's report tomorrow.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that Standing Order 60 provides that there shall be a six-day budget debate, will the minister advise the House why the government is interrupting the budget debate by bringing in such bills as the wildlife bill, particularly in view of the disclosures by the Auditor General?

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Speaker. This—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a supplementary. I might remind him that the question period is over. If he wishes to rise on a point of order, that is a different matter. We are now really asking questions two or three minutes after the question period has expired.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Very well, Mr. Speaker. On a supplementary question, will the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that there are other members who are anxious to ask supplementary or other questions. We have gone beyond the question period. If the hon. member, as suggested, has a point of order he would have to be recognized, but I doubt whether we should proceed much further. In any event, in order to save time I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With the greatest apology to you, Mr. Speaker, I never felt the House leader of the opposition should rise on a point of order in respect of business. This is the final question on Thursday. Be that as it may, whether it is a supplementary or a point of order, will the minister advise the House when it is the intention of the government to return to the budget debate, a six-day debate which has been interrupted, in light of the report of the Auditor General?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I cannot precisely say when the budget debate will be resumed. It will not be before the last days of next week and possibly not then.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Well—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West on a point of order in a moment. Would the hon. member resume his seat. I think I should point out to hon. members that if we agree that these questions are questions and not points of order, they will have to be asked during the question period. The hon. member for Edmonton West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the unsatisfactory answer of the minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to enter very serious reservations about the hon. member's right to move a motion of this kind when he has the floor on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Athabasca will have the floor, and once he is recognized I suggest he would have the right to move that motion at that point. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my point of order with regard to House business is simply to ask whether there will be any opposition days next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was hopeful that early next week we would meet to discuss what the business would be following the legislative program I have outlined. It may be that a choice will have to be made between the budget debate and opposition days, one or the other. We cannot have both.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ELECTION EXPENSES BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CANADA ELECTIONS ACT AND INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, May 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-211, to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the budget debate is not being resumed I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That this debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am advised that the hon. member for Peace River has already spoken in the debate, so he cannot be a seconder to this motion. We need a new seconder for the motion that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) seconds the motion.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) that this debate be now adjourned. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Yewchuk) which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the Créditiste members refrained from voting because this was a waste of time and a silly game on the part of the Progressive Conservatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Obviously, the hon. member will agree with the Chair that this point of order is groundless.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)—order please.

Mr. Baldwin: —the taxpayers' money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell).

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the committee may I remind all hon. members how the report on election expenses came about. The Barbeau Committee, consisting of Mr. Alphonse Barbeau, the Honourable M. J. Coldwell, Mr. Gordon R. Dryden, Mr. A. R. Smith and Dr. Norman Ward, and which included representatives from the major parties, was appointed in October 1964 and submitted its report on election expenses in October 1966.

In the last session, pursuant to an order of the House dated October 8, 1970, a special committee considered the comprehensive two volume report of the Barbeau Committee, the new election expenses legislation of Quebec, Nova Scotia and other jurisdictions, held 45 meetings, heard dozens of witnesses including representatives of the main political parties, the legislative assemblies of Quebec and Nova Scotia, the government of Puerto Rico, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the CBC, the CRTC, Chief Electoral Officers of Canada, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and many others.

In considering the report and Bill C-211, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that one must start with four basic principles. First, a candidate cannot hope to be elected unless he spreads his message effectively. With today's costs and more populous ridings, this can be quite expensive and perhaps prohibitive. Second, there is an advantage to a candidate with wealth, whether inherited or earned. Effective controls on spending and a modest financial contribution to a candidate's expenses would substantially remove this inequity. Third, all costs cannot be paid by the public treasury; the greater proportion of funds must continue to come in the form of voluntary donations from supporters of the candidate and the party. Research has indicated that if a great deal of money comes from the government, people are reluctant to give because they feel the candidate is well looked after. Fourth, it is a myth that large contributions lie waiting for willing receivers. Funds are difficult to obtain both for the individual candidate and the parties. Legislation must be clear and positive to encourage contributions through tax incentives, protection of the name of the donor and protection of the candidate against overcharge by radio, T.V. and the press and by controls on the amount which he can spend both in respect of an over-all ceiling and the period of time during which he may spend money during a campaign.

The Barbeau report was an excellent and comprehensive document, but it is five years old. Many changes have taken place since it was submitted, and we have had the advantage of hearing comments on its proposals and on the Quebec and Nova Scotia legislation. While the committee digressed from the report considerably, I hope we have come up with something good. After complete study of the bill, I find myself in agreement with the basic principles and the framework; in fact I take pride that so much of our work was adopted. However, I seek improvement in some of the concepts and many of the details.

I support the principle of a contribution to the candidate who receives a certain percentage of the vote; the principle of limited tax relief to those who contribute in the form of a percentage tax credit. I support, too, the idea of making T.V. and radio available to all in order that each may spread his message and that charges for these services be held to the regular preferred rate. I support the principle of agency, which means that candidates and parties are fully responsible for the actions of their agents, and I support the principle that spending by candidates should be fully controlled. The bill, in its definition of election expenses, does not go far enough and I shall ask that it be strengthened and widened.

The Barbeau Committee recommended selective controls on advertising because it felt wider controls could not be enforced. We disagreed and came up with the idea that if each candidate were required to have his own accountant audit his report, the control would be effective. The bill follows the Barbeau report for controls on advertising only, and our recommendation for the audit.

The bill's definition of election expenses omits costs for hiring halls, campaign headquarters, paid workers, entertainment, refreshments, paid scrutineers and other items which in some ridings could constitute the majority of the expense.

Let me give two examples. A wealthy industrialist could call on perhaps 100 of his employees as paid canvassers and that would not come within the definition. In another riding, if a candidate had the support of labour and there was a strike on, he could call for 100 or 200 of the striking labourers to canvass for him and that would not come under expenses as described in the bill, but it would have been included in election expenses as described in the report. The report would prevent this by including in the definition of election expenses all time paid for directly or indirectly; the only time which would be omitted would be time some person contributed freely. In a riding consisting of small villages and towns, halls and lounges could be made available with entertainment and refreshment similar to that of drop-in centres, and these certainly would substantially affect the result of the election. Those expenses would not come within the definition of the bill, although they would come within the definition in the report. I submit that those expenses ought to be added to election expenses.

• (1600)

I do not support the concept that the names of donors should be disclosed to the public. As the law now stands, the official agent discloses the names of donors making donations which go through him. However, secrecy can be maintained easily by causing the donation to go through a nominee, usually the chairman of the riding association. He simply collects in private all those donations and then sends one large cheque to the official agent. Under this bill, all donations would have to go to the official agent. The result is that this bill, read with the present legislation—or, putting it another way, the legislation, as amended by this bill—would require every donation to a candidate to be identified by name; that is, it would require full disclosure.

[Mr. Chappell.]

Mr. Grills: How would you do it?

Mr. Chappell: We questioned each of the witnesses on disclosure of names, and concluded that names should be disclosed to the Minister of National Revenue for policing purposes but that they should not be disclosed to the public, because that would be counter-productive and donations would dry up.

Mr. Grills: But how would you do all this?

Mr. Chappell: The Barbeau committee report recommended that donations to parties should not be disclosed but that donations to candidates should be disclosed. We concluded that this would distort the balance between the party and the candidate, because some would feel that it was more appropriate to give donations to the party than to the candidate. We think this should not be allowed to happen. This distortion and upsetting of balance should not be allowed to take place. It would be useless to require the disclosure of donations over a certain amount, for example, $100. Some in this House have made this argument. Such a requirement would be too easy to avoid. A man, by giving through his wife, could double his donation; by using his two children, he could quadruple it; if he were to use his friends and give through them, he might be able to give ten times as much as the law permits. Such action would simply bring the law into ridicule.

Mr. Grills: That is what this bill will do.

Mr. Chappell: In addition, disclosure of names would discourage giving because of possible community repercussions. One of the witnesses before the committee was an NDP member from Nova Scotia. He pointed out that if a list were published in small towns of those who had given donations, there would be embarrassment and resentment. I think many hon. members would agree with that.

Let us take, for example, the operator of a large garage in a small town. Suppose he gave $100 to the Liberal, Conservative and NDP parties, and his donation was published. If, during the next election campaign, canvassers for each of the candidates were to go to him and ask for donations, I suggest that it would be only natural if he were to say, "All three of you can go away; you published my name as a donor, and I will not give to anybody." I have always marvelled that people who do not give, and generally those who want disclosure of names do not give, should request that donations of $1, $2, $3 or $5, which every good citizen should give to the candidate of his choice, shall be disclosed, and that we shall thereby breech the secrecy of the ballot, which is what would happen in effect. We hope to separate the basis of contribution, and that is why tax credits are to be preferred in this connection, rather than complete disclosure of all donations. If people were to give $1, $2, $3 or $5 on a wide basis, to many candidates, disclosing their names would be equivalent to disclosing whom they supported and how they voted.

The members from Puerto Rico who met with our committee, who are experts in the sense that they were on an equivalent committee, suggested that we have the best of both worlds. We have both disclosure and protection of privacy, since we must disclose either to the Minister of National Revenue or some minister of the Crown for policing purposes, but disclose to the public only the total donations and not the names of the donors.

I do not agree with the suggestion that the election campaign period be without limit. This is a major point with respect to which we agree with the Barbeau report. All the witnesses before us were unanimous in this view. If there is not a limit on the advertising period, one candidate may be forced to follow the lead of the other candidate, since his backers might say, "Let us get going; your people are losing morale. Get in there and spend money in the advertising field." After a month or so, a candidate may have expended the amount allowed for advertising. He would then spend money on other items which are not included in the definition "election expenses" in the bill, thus, of course, increasing his expenses.

May I raise another point which is perhaps more difficult to appreciate but which is most important. There are four recognized parties in this country; obviously, they will register. In addition, there are perhaps four or six other parties, not so recognized, which will also register. These parties are entitled to use the six and a half hour period which is made available to all parties. On the twenty-eighth day of the campaign they would lose their registration rights if they had not fielded 50 candidates. The twenty-eighth day, I suggest, is too late for action to be taken, since these minor parties would have used three or four hours of the time available to them simply to bring their personal message to the world, to tell the world about some cause they espouse. The result would be that people would have lost the right to hear the representatives of other parties which seriously hope to form the government. If this campaigning were limited to 28 days, as the committee suggested, that problem would not arise.

As the law now stands, successful candidates file their reports and the majority of unsuccessful candidates have no alternative—I suggest that this matter would be raised in the House if there were anything amiss—and do not do so. I ought to have said, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of unsuccessful candidates do not report. The only penalty, as I understand the act, for those who do not report is this: They will not be able to stand for election on another occasion if a court so orders. This has been completely ineffective. We recommend that the chief electoral officer should be required by law to see that all reports are filed. Under questioning by our committee, he said he was agreeable to shouldering that responsibility. The bill provides for payment of $250 towards the cost of an audited report for those candidates who receive 20 per cent or more of the votes cast. I suggest that we change that provision and allow $250 to every candidate to meet the expenses of the audited report. I think it is wrong to charge somebody who can honestly say, "I used every penny I had and I did not have $250 left", because, in the result, we would be sending that man to jail for not having enough money. However, I do not think the public should lose. He has to make a deposit of $200. I suggest this sum be increased to $250. In other words, we would divert his forfeited deposit to pay the auditor for the report.

Recommendation 34 allowed between 13 and 14 cents per elector by way of reimbursement to a candidate who had received 20 per cent or more of the votes cast. This was equivalent to the cost of a stamp and a respectable brochure for each elector. We felt this was the basic minimum to which the public was entitled in order to learn about the man himself and his platform. For a constituency of 50,000 he would be reimbursed to the extent of $6,500; if he had a large constituency of 100,000 voters he would get 13 cents for the next 50,000, another $6,500, or a total of $13,000. The bill would allow him to be reimbursed to the extent of 25 per cent of the amount he spent on advertizing only.

But supposing a candidate spent all his money on advertizing. Supposing, also he had limited funds and spent only $10,000 on his campaign. He would get back only $2,500. The result would be he would be prevented from using money which he might have borrowed from a bank and paid back from his reimbursement. So, also, in the bill, a person with a constituency of 100,000 electors would be disadvantaged. Under the committee's report, he would have received 13 cents for each additional elector over 50,000. That, as I said before, would have been $6,500. Under the bill he will receive only half that amount, or $3,250, which is in no way enough to send the simplest scrap of paper to 50,000 electors. It is my suggestion that the amount of reimbursement be based upon the number of electors in the constituency.

There is another unfair situation which could arise. In some constituencies in which there is a local television station, the candidate could spend all his campaign funds on advertizing over television and he would be reimbursed to the extent of 25 per cent. But in a rural riding where there was no television station he might decide to hire halls and provide refreshment and entertainment. That would be his method of campaigning. But he would not get back 5 cents. Under our recommendation No. 13, we would limit reimbursement to the winner and anyone who obtained 50 per cent the vote the winner received or 20 per cent of the total of votes cast. The bill omits reimbursement for the 50 per cent. I would remind hon. members that in some constituencies, particularly in Quebec, there might be five, six or seven candidates. The winner might receive only 35 per cent of the votes cast, the second 19 per cent, and the third 18 per cent. It seems wrong that under those circumstances, a man who came second should not be reimbursed. I suggest he should be included.

In recommendation No. 3, we recommend that political parties be made legal entities for the purposes of suing and being sued, and owning and leasing property. It is time political parties became full adults in terms of being responsible for their financial transactions. The bill, in clause 13(5), appears to make the parties legal entities only for the purposes of enforcing the Act. I may be wrong. Perhaps the courts will determine that they are also legal entities for the purpose of suing and being sued. I suggest this be made clear; it ought not to be necessary to go to court to have the matter cleared up. I suggest we follow the wording in the committee's report.

Recommendation 38 would prevent a non-resident, including a union or a corporation, from contributing in any way to a political party or candidate. Section 36 of the Canada Elections Act prohibits non-residents of Canada from campaigning in Canada. We felt our recommendation was reasonable as an extension of that idea, and consistent with the long established principle that non-residents might not campaign in Canada.

In the select committee, we had good attendance and excellent co-operation. The committee worked hard for a long period. I suggest to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that the House take advantage of the wealth of knowledge acquired by members who sat on that committee, and that the bill be referred to that committee, which could be reconstituted, for further consideration.

In conclusion, I should say I am pleased with the broad principles of the bill, and pleased that so many of our suggestions have been adopted. I hope that many of the ideas which have been put forward today will be incorporated in the measure during the committee stage and accepted by the House.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the objective of the bill we are discussing is to reduce election expenses which are borne by a candidate in a general election so that there will be the least possible obstacle in the way of a young man or woman with ability, but with limited means, who wishes to run for parliament. This is an objective with which we all agree, because it is a well known fact that parliament is only as good as the people who are elected to it, and to get the best we must make sure that we remove as many as possible of the difficulties which stand in the way of getting the best people elected.

One of these obstacles is the high cost of running an election, due to the increasing use of the costly medium of television and the sharp increases which have taken place in the cost of radio, direct mail and the many other forms of advertizing which are in popular use. Although I agree with the objective of this bill, I believe that the government has outlined an inadequate method of realizing this objective, and I would like to suggest what I believe to be a far better means of bringing about what we all have in mind.

We have just heard a speech by the chairman of the committee which considered this whole question of controlling election expenses. From him, we learn that the government has paid relatively little attention to the recommendations of that committee which obviously spent a great deal of time studying the whole subject and hearing witnesses. I believe the committee did a thoroughly good job of trying to come to a conclusion that would be beneficial to the government in drafting the bill that is before us. But obviously the government has paid very little attention to the recommendations of the committee, and therefore I endorse the suggestion the chairman of the committee has just urged upon the House, that is to send this bill back to committee for redrafting so we may receive the sensible type of suggestions that the committee put forward for the consideration of the government.

I should like now to suggest what I believe to be a far better means of bringing about what we would like to do, which is to make it possible for young men and women with ability but limited means to be elected to this chamber. Even though the government did pay a great deal of attention to the recommendations of the committee that examined this whole question, I think on hearing the simple plan that I am about to put forward the members of the House of Commons will agree that it is a reasonable plan, one that would be easy to implement and which would work very satisfactorily in achieving the objective we all have in mind.

In looking for plans that would be useful to meet the needs of given situations, it is always helpful to examine what has been successfully done by others in similar circumstances. I have very carefully studied, and observed at first hand, the plan that has been used with great success for a number of years now in the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom was faced with exactly the same problem that Canada is faced with today, but it overcame the problem by adopting a plan that placed a strict limitation upon the amount of money that a candidate was allowed to spend in an election, and enforced the restriction by carefully scrutinizing all election expenditure. If at the conclusion of an election it was found that a candidate had overspent the amount of money that the government allowed him to spend in an election campaign, his election to parliament was nullified.

The expenditure that is allowed in the United Kingdom is based on the number of electors in a riding. My experience from running in eight elections, six in urban ridings and two in mostly rural ridings, leads me to believe that the limit today in this country should be 10 cents per voter. That is the kind of limitation that would bring about the objective that we all have in mind and in the easiest and fairest way possible. Since the average riding in Canada has about 45,000 voters this would reduce the cost of running in an election in Canada to about $4,500 per candidate. This would be a fair charge to a candidate and his party, and would be a very great reduction of the cost of running in most ridings today. National television, radio and newspaper advertising would, of course, be paid for by the national headquarters of each party on a basis that would be established by parliament.

Such a reduction in the cost of running in an election would bring about two very important improvements. First is the obvious one of making it possible for all good, potential candidates to stand for their party's nomination. The second is that all candidates would be required to do far more personal campaigning than they do today, and as they are required to do in Great Britain, since most means of campaigning that money makes available in this country today would not be open to them. Candidates would have to do a great deal more door-to-door campaigning and present themselves to the voter at many election meetings, where they would have to submit themselves to the questioning of the electorate and be judged on a much more fair and accurate basis than they are at the present time. Having made it possible for voters in this country to judge more accurately the candidates who present themselves to be judged, I believe that we would be more certain that the best candidate would be selected to represent a riding, and in this way the quality and standards of the House of Commons would be materially improved.

If we follow such a plan as this, it would no longer be possible for a wealthy man, one who can afford high-priced public relations men, television, and other costly means of advertising that are available today, literally to buy his way into parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will be in trouble, George.

Mr. Hees: I am very interested to hear that comment, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member who made it would go back over any of the eight elections in which I have run, he would find that I was one of the most enthusiastic exponents of door to door canvassing. The reason I have been able to maintain my membership here is that I believe in personal campaigning, which is why I speak with such enthusiasm about it.

Another change that I would suggest we make in the electoral procedures of this country is one that would not only reduce the cost of running elections but greatly improve the quality of the presentations that the various candidates make to the people they ask to elect them. I suggest that we cut the length of the election period from the present eight weeks to four. The eight-week period was necessary in the days when rail transport was the only means of getting the leaders across the country and there was no jet travel or television. In those days it took an eight week period for the party leaders to travel across the country and discuss the issues with the people. Today, as we know very well, jet travel and television enable all issues to be discussed in all parts of the country in an absolute maximum of four weeks. We who have participated in elections, and certainly the people who have to listen to us, know only too well that after four weeks there is nothing new left to be said and the whole election campaign becomes dry, dull, boring and extremely costly.

Therefore, I believe it would be very worthwhile for the government and the country to maintain a permanent voters' list, just as is done in Great Britain and in many other countries. Although this would cost some money, it would greatly reduce the over-all cost of elections both to the parties and the candidates. After all, that is what this measure is all about. It is designed to reduce the cost of running an election, and to make it as easy as possible for young men and women with ability but with limited means to present themselves with every chance of becoming elected.

I strongly urge the government to give some consideration to what I have said. This will not cost the government or the taxpayers of this country one penny, except for the added cost of maintaining a permanent voters' list, and I think everyone would agree that this additional cost would be worthwhile. These measures are simple; they have been tried and proven successful and workable in a country far more sophisticated in election matters than are we, namely Great Britain, as well as many other countries. I am confident that these measures will work equally as well in Canada.

I strongly urge the government to accept these suggestions in the spirit in which they are made and to adopt these measures. I believe if they are adopted we will greatly increase the effectiveness of this House by making it possible to get the very best candidates elected, including the young men and women with ability but with limited funds who would make a very great contribution to the governing of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of taking part in the Special Committee on Election Expenses as a vice-chairman. The chairman of this committee was our distinguished colleague from Peel South (Mr. Chappell) who spoke earlier and who fulfilled his functions with much tact, skill and efficiency.

Our sessions were quite lengthy and often complex, but the committee members showed much patience, good will and understanding despite the different views, which were inevitable, about a subject on which we all pretend to be quite experts.

It must be noted that the committee received advice from a legal adviser who, most of the time, was assisted by the Chief Electoral Officer, whose skill and work we all admire. Their advice was very valuable to all committee members.

We also had the report prepared by the previous members of this committee, who made much deeper and further studies on the subject, that is the report of the special committee established by the government in 1964, whose chairman was Mr. Alphonse Barbeau—now judge of the Superior Court of Quebec—and made up of recognized experts from different parties, which presented the result of its investigations and discussions in 1966.

This committee was appointed as a result of public concern about the source of election funds as well as a need for a reform in order to curb the continuing increase in election expenses, in particular since it became necessary to use new means of communications, which are very closely and expensive.

The committees' reports and this bill aim at improving the situation of the parties and candidates, at increasing the people's confidence in our system of parties while guaranteeing the individual's liberty of choosing not only the man, his party and his philosophy but also the way it should be supported.

Contrary to popular belief, the lack of funds is a painful aspect from which the political existence of parties and candidates is suffering. Their financing has always caused precarious situations. The very minor importance given to the financing of our political institutions is unbelievable in view of the crushing responsibilities entrusted by our system to the parties and candidates who, among other things, are required to explain to our citizens the objective and efficiency of laws, the decisions and actions liable to affect their way of life and often their existence.

Mr. Speaker, as many of my colleagues, after having studied a number of times the election systems of various countries, I believe that our election legislation is excellent—probably the best—and well-fitted to the special needs of our great country.

Some people have already mentioned the advisability of establishing a permanent list of voters—in fact, the first spokesman for the official opposition and the speaker before me suggested it—as a desirable measure to shorten the duration of election campaigns.

I am opposed to this suggestion and the committee which considered the report tabled by the representation commissioner in this House in April 1968 was unanimously against the establishment of such a list, which would be not only costly—I think the figure amounted to $1 a year per voter—but would be far from efficient in a political system such as ours because elections are not held at a fixed date and the people would probably not welcome compulsory registration or compulsory vote. So, I refer my colleagues to the report of the committee and to the very eloquent report tabled in the House by the representation commissioner, who has examined these various systems.

The question of limiting the duration of election campaigns has been the subject of suggestions this afternoon by the previous speaker and also the subject of discussions both in the Committee on Privileges and Elections and in the Committee on Elections Expenses and we all agreed that the present period is necessary to allow parties and the Chief Electoral Officer to prepare and get organized. However, I believe, together with committee members, that the period during which political propaganda by parties and candidates on radio or television and in newspapers is allowed should be limited to the last month or so before election day.

This would effectively reduce election expenses but I think that despite the improvement in communications to which the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) referred earlier, the prescribed period is necessary to arrange elections in a country as large as ours.

Mr. Speaker, the so-called Barbeau Committee had made seven basic recommendations aimed at establishing a more equitable electoral system. I must say that these recommendations are adequately taken into account in the bill now before us. In line with the proposal of our committee, the bill does not however retain the sixth recommendation of the Barbeau Committee suggesting that a registry be established by means of another legislation to audit the various financial returns. It simply amends the Canada Elections Act to enable the chief electoral officer to receive the returns of official agents, and I think that the government has rightly upheld this decision of the special committee on election expenses which made it the subject of one of its recommendations.

The first recommendation of the Barbeau report dealt with the recognition of political parties that would become responsible for their actions respecting the collection and expenditure of election funds through an official agent.

[Mr. Forest.]

The 1970 Canada Elections Act already provides that political parties shall register with the chief electoral officer, under certain conditions. This legislation goes even farther by requiring the registration of agents who alone shall be authorized to receive contributions and who shall be assisted by an auditor for each party. This auditor shall report to the chief agent who, in turn, shall report, within the prescribed period, to the chief electoral officer. The reports shall indicate the parties' sources of income, detailing the categories of contributors, and shall be published. The importance and existence of parties being thus recognized, they shall become legally responsible for their actions.

Candidates must also appoint an auditor to assist their agents to produce the required report on election expenses and sources of income. This is an innovation and fortunately the government will contribute to paying the salary of this auditor.

I agree with the committee chairman and approve the recommendations of the special committee to the effect that it would not be fitting to reveal the names of donors, and this for the same reasons mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Peel-South (Mr. Chappell) which moreover are reproduced after recommendation 44 of the report of the Special Committee on Election Expenses.

The bill thus meets the first and fifth recommendations of the Barbeau Committee to a great extent. The bill, as also the Barbeau committee conclusions, provides no ceiling for total expenses of parties and candidates which henceforth will be known, notwithstanding the suggestion of the special committee. I for one feel that this is a mistake and that a limit should be set, even if it should exceed if necessary, the one suggested, subject to revision after the first general election for which the present bill will have been in force.

The bill retains the limits proposed by the special committee, but only where advertising expenses are concerned. It is a fact that nowadays the latter make up the better part of election expenses, and that this trend can only become more accentuated. For instance, Mr. Speaker, figures submitted to the committee with regard to the election of April 29, 1970, in the province of Quebec showed that 71.37 per cent of the election expenses of the five running parties had gone on advertising. A candidate will be able to claim back 25 per cent of eligible expenses, which is appreciable. I rather advocate the formula adopted by the special committee, which gives the candidate far more flexibility and freedom of action in the thrust of his advertising.

I am very happy, however, that this bill incorporates the recommendations of the two committees which I have mentioned concerning the mailing to voters, a few days before the election, of a special notice informing them of the names and political affiliations of candidates, of the addresses of polling stations, and of polling times, and that from now on candidates will not be allowed to distribute cards in their constituencies, as had become common practice. This will save candidates time and money, and voters will still be very well informed.

I would like to deal very briefly with two major proposals endorsed by the Barbeau Commission and the special committee—tax deductions granted to contributors in order to encourage public participation in political life, and measures designed to democratize access to radio and television at election time—both excellent innovations.

This bill provides for a tax deduction of one third, up to a maximum of $500, of contributions made annually to registered parties or to candidates through authorized agents who will have to file a report. The special committee had rather recommended the introduction of tax relief for individuals and corporations. This is, however, an excellent measure which should encourage the public to participate in the financing of our political parties, a thing for which it has always showed very little interest, and the results will be most interesting to watch.

Finally, the bill aims at limiting to 6½ hours the broadcasting time allowed the registered parties at election time, according to the recommendation of the special committee. This time will be divided up fairly among the parties, under the authority of the CRTC, and I believe that formula has already given good results. It is only fair that the cost be shared by the government and the parties themselves that will benefit from the arrangement.

I want to point out a well-advised innovation which will be welcomed by all the candidates and which is already enshrined in the Quebec Election Act. As everyone is aware, election campaigns signal the revival of the almost general practice whereby the rates of advertisement in newspapers, over the radio and television are boosted. From now on, rates will be based on the lowest rates applicable to customers for comparable advertisements. This reform was imperative and is intended to rectify an unjust situation.

Mr. Speaker, the president of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) indicated that, except with regard to fundamental principles, he was willing to listen to the recommendations of hon. members, and of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to which the bill will be referred, and where we will have the opportunity of discussing it further and suggesting amendments. Meantime, the government must be congratulated for having introduced this bill with a view to bringing in several important and interesting changes in a complex field which touches upon the very basis of our democratic life.

This is an important step towards improving further a system that was not perfect but which won Canada the reputation of holding elections that truly reflect the will of the people.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when this debate began on Thursday, May 18, my colleague the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) indicated that we are in support of the principle of this bill. But in that same speech he pointed out that in the bill there are some very serious flaws. Even by the time my colleague reached the end of his speech, he found it necessary to say this:

• (1650)

Finally, and in my opinion most importantly, I say to the government House leader it is a "must" that we incorporate an additional clause in the bill to provide for a limitation on parties the same as is provided for candidates. Unless we have a limitation on parties' expenditure, the whole intent, purpose and most of the principle of the legislation is nullified or set aside.

I may say on behalf of the members of this party, including the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), that our further and more detailed study of this bill has led us to the conviction that although there are a number of things in it that are good, the bill itself completely fails to implement the principle that we support and the principle that the bill is supposed to implement. We have had that drawn to our attention in mild but very effective terms this afternoon by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell) who was the chairman of the special committee that considered this whole question. Even he, before he got to the end of his speech, pleaded with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that Bill C-211 be sent back to the special committee, and that the special committee be reconstituted for that purpose, so that it might participate in the drafting of a better piece of legislation.

The position that we take is that this bill, although it is presented to us as a bill to control election expenses and to do certain other things with respect to elections, completely fails to do what it proposes to do and we feel that to pass this bill off on the people of Canada in its present form is to perpetrate another hoax. In our view, the government is trading on the general and popular interest in the idea of doing something about election expenses and it hopes that because it has presented a bill which is called a bill dealing with election expenses the public will swallow it and think that something good has been done.

In our view, if this bill were passed and put on the statute books, it would fail to do the job that it is supposed to do, and its presence on the statute books would be a bar to getting a decent piece of legislation for a long time to come. Therefore, we feel, as does the hon. member for Peel South, only perhaps we feel a bit stronger about it than he does, that this bill in its present form should not be proceeded with. It should either be sent back to the special committee that dealt with this matter or it should be sent back to the government and a totally new piece of legislation should be introduced.

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that you realize that I am making it very clear that it is our intention to vote against this bill in its present form so that you will realize that when I propose at the end of my speech a reasoned amendment you will see that it is not one of those amendments with which you sometimes have to cope, the kind that seem to go both ways. Ours is an amendment that says that this bill should be stopped in its progress and, instead, that a totally different piece of legislation should be introduced.

In the reasoned amendment which I shall move, I shall indicate at least two of the important principles which should be contained in a better piece of legislation. I may say that we gave a good deal of consideration to the question of whether those principles could be obtained by making amendments to this bill, and we have come to the conclusion that that cannot be done. I state that both in procedural terms and in substantive terms. We therefore feel that this bill in its present form should not be proceeded with but that the House should stop it in its tracks, and call upon the government to bring in another piece of legislation.

This whole question of election expenses is one that has been before us for a long, long time. It was a live issue before any of us in this chamber came here. But in recent years it has been a particularly lively issue, and no one has done more to popularize the idea that something should be done about the control of election expenses and about putting candidates on an equal footing than the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself. At a press conference on April 7, 1968, in the city of Ottawa the following question was put to the Prime Minister:

> Do you intend to do anything about implementing the report of the Election Expenses Committee?

That, I may say in parenthesis, was the report that was tabled in 1966. The rest of the question was:

> It seems to me this is rather fundamental to the just society which you mentioned.

The answer of the Prime Minister was very terse but very much to the point:

> I agree. Top priority. Next Speech from the Throne.

That was in 1968. Later that same year, on June 4, 1968, in the city of Edmonton the Prime Minister said:

> There are many aspects of the just society. It includes electoral reform so that the citizen really has a right to express his choice, his political choice, freely and without basing himself on how much money a party can get.

A few days later, on June 10, 1968, speaking over the CBC the Prime Minister said:

> The important thing is that our laws and our election laws be reformed in order to make sure all parties are on as equal a footing as possible by reducing election expenses, by making the government assume as large a part of the election expenses of all parties as is possible.

I say, therefore, that no one gets more credit for this issue being a lively one today than the present Prime Minister. Mind you, when, as a result of these statements, we pressed him for action on the matter of the election expenses, we were put off; we were given the old answer about the crowded state of the parliamentary timetable, and so on, and we were told there was not time to do anything about it before the next election whenever it might come. But now in this pre-election period—however long the period may be—when we seem to be getting various kinds of goodies, we have been handed this bill. The trouble is that that word does not apply to this piece of legislation. It passes itself off as doing something about election expenses but it completely fails to establish the kind of equality to which the Prime Minister referred.

Mr. Speaker, since you are about to get to your feet I shall sit down, but I shall have something more to say about this matter at eight o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson)—Grain—rapeseed—laying of charges by Wheat Board against certain farmers for overdelivery—request for government intervention; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—External Affairs—proposed nuclear test by France—suggested grant to "Greenpeace III"; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Natural Resources—offshore mineral rights—state of negotiations with Nova Scotia.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, private bills, public bills.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ATOMIC ENERGY

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION—REQUEST FOR COPY OF REPORT ON ASSUMPTION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEUTERIUM OF CANADA PLANT BY ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity) moved:

> That an Order of the House do issue for copies of any report or reports prepared by or for the government recommending that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited assume responsibility for the reconstruction and operation of the Deuterium of Canada Limited heavy water production plant at Glace Bay, N.S.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are at least three important principles involved in a discussion of this resolution. The first and most immediate is the question of disclosure of essential information necessary to enable members of parliament to fulfil their function as watchdogs of the public purse. The second, and related principle, is the extent to which political considerations should be injected into economic decisions by government. The third, and equally related question, is the extent to which government should raise money through taxation to spend on high cost projects that have highly political overtones. There is a question of priorities, and Canadians are overtaxed by governments which spend money with reckless abandon.

Speaking to the first point, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how we can determine whether or not the government's decision to reconstruct the Deuterium of Canada plant is a wise decision if we are denied access to the information on which the judgment was based. It is just possible that the government did not receive any advice, Mr. Speaker. If that is the case it is an important fact of which we should be made aware. More likely, however, in this case there would be a recommendation from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I would like to know if the government has acted in accordance with expert advice, or contrary to it. Of course, the government may be making the best of a bad deal in proceeding as it is or, Mr. Speaker, it may be throwing good money after bad. How do we know if we do not have access to the facts? A review of the origin of this project might be useful at this stage.

I well recall the early discussions in cabinet. Canada experienced a shortage of heavy water. An increased supply was required to provide for our new atomic energy plants that were being built. Two proposals were put forward for consideration. One involved construction of a plant in Whiteshell, Manitoba, under contract to the Canadian General Electric Company. The other was the Deuterium of Canada proposal for construction of the Glace Bay plant. All of the expert advice supported the Canadian General Electric proposal. Most of the problems relating to the Deuterium proposal were anticipated in the discussion.

The discussion raged on for a considerable time. Ultimately, a decision was taken. The decision finally was strictly political. It was a private decision taken by the then Prime Minister and the present President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). It defied economics. It was a political decision, pure and simple. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, this is not an isolated example of political decision making by the President of the Privy Council. He has a good track record in this regard. I understand he studied economics at university, but I have not seen the slightest evidence that he is able to keep the principles in mind on a day-to-day basis. The financial results of this judgment have been great, with about $100 million down the drain so far. That means that every Canadian taxpayer, every member of the Canadian labour force, has been relieved of about $12 in tax money for one blunder on the part of government.

If this were the only case it would not be so bad, but there have been many, many other cases of governmental blundering in decision making. We have one in Manitoba involving vast sums of money. We have another one in Newfoundland where an excessive over-run of costs occurred. Then, of course, in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion subjective judgments are being made almost every day. Recently a decision was made to subsidize a French tire manufacturing company with a considerable amount of the taxpayers' money. I have wondered if the workers in other tire manufacturing plants in Canada want to pay higher taxes in order to help put themselves out of jobs.

A while ago the Canadian taxpayers were asked to provide some millions of dollars to an American soap company to build a paper plant in northern Alberta. This was decided at a time when capacity in that industry was already far greater than the demand. Once again, I think it is reasonable to ask: did the workers in the existing plants with the existing surplus capacity want to pay higher taxes in order to subsidize the elimination of their own jobs? The story, of course, goes on and on. There are some very important considerations in so far as the principles are concerned.

When I was doing research for my book, "Agenda: a Plan for Action" I took a look at some of the experience related to both public ownership of industry in Canada and public participation by other means. I found there were certain very interesting principles involved, in so far as the line of demarcation is concerned, between companies publicly owned which affect the average citizen directly, and those which do not. For example, I found that corporations like the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation, which is not widely known, and whose name would probably not be recognized by many Canadian taxpayers, operates very efficiently and with virtually no interference on the part of government whatsoever.

When that corporation reported to me as minister of transport, I think I came in direct contact with the president of the corporation about only once a year. On that occasion he would bring to me their annual statement for the year, and report verbally on the success they had encountered. Almost inevitably they had good financial success. The service they were providing to the Canadian people was highly satisfactory, and there was no reason for me and no inclination on my part to inject political considerations into the management of that corporation.

I think the same could be said of Polymer, Mr. Speaker. It has often been cited as an example of a Canadian corporation, publicly owned, which was operated with virtually no political interference at all. Certainly, this was the case until recently, when I think some exceptions might have been made. During all those years it was a most successful organization. Part of its success was due to the fact that it was operated by highly skilled management, with exactly the same kind of criteria that would be applied in privately administered enterprises. Its success was worldwide. Very recently some political considerations have been injected into the management of that company, but I have not yet had a chance to check the effects of that interference.

• (1710)

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, other types of corporations are quite different. I should like to give two examples of corporations where on a day to day basis they come into contact with many Canadian citizens and where as a consequence and inevitably, political judgments are introduced. The first one is Central Mortgage and Housing. Here is a publicly owned corporation which affects the lives of many Canadians quite directly. If one were to examine the file, one would find that during its years of existence there has been more than a little correspondence from individual taxpayers to the minister to whom the corporation reported. Of course, in many cases the inquiries were merely of a factual nature, but in other cases direct intervention on the part of the corporation was called for. It is virtually inevitable, where any corporation comes in this kind of direct contact with individual taxpayers, that political and subjective judgments will have to be made on behalf of the people being represented.

One could cite the Canadian National Railways as another case in point. Often there have been requests to shut down branch lines which were overruled indirectly by the government. It would not be convenient to have a certain branch line shut down just in advance of a general election or a by-election where that branch line happened to serve a constituency which was a marginal case. From my earlier years in parliament, I recall direct intervention by the government in settling labour disputes between Canadian National Railways and its employees and normal considerations were abrogated when the political considerations became paramount as far as the government was concerned. Even though the interference would be difficult to document in many cases because of the nature of the intervention, the intervention was nevertheless real. In those circumstances, of course, the cost to the Canadian taxpayer rises very substantially.

It is not only in cases where ownership is involved that the expenditure of public funds increases due to political intervention. As I stated a few seconds ago there are other examples as well. One that is currently in the news is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. As a matter of fact, I have said on other occasions, and repeat today, that I question the necessity for this department of government at all. I am not the least bit convinced that it is a wise expenditure of the taxpayers' money. No doubt some success can be pointed out in cases where financial support has resulted in industrial expansion in underdeveloped parts of the country, but there are other cases where the result has been a higher cost of the products consumed by the Canadian taxpayer. In other cases the claim can be substantiated that the expenditure of public funds has merely resulted in the transfer of unemployment from one part of the country to another without any net gain whatsoever.

It seems to be a penchant of government to introduce programs without having the facility or the will, in some cases, to follow them up with an analysis to see whether the benefits are equal to the costs. I think if I were making a recommendation to the government on an over-all basis, it would be that more of our programs should be subjected to minute scrutiny after they had been in operation for a period of time in order to see whether taxpayers are getting value for their money. In many cases, I suspect they are not. Certainly, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is one case where I think it would have been better if the department had never been formed. That is not to deny that there are parts of the country in need of economic assistance but there are other ways to accomplish this. It can be done by the application of the rule of law in budgets to provide special tax privileges or accelerated depreciation or some other financial benefits in certain parts of the country if that is desired. There is an objection to the fact that subjective judgments are being made by people with no experience in business. One has only to look at the dossiers of some of the people involved in making these decisions to know that they are quite unqualified. They have never had to raise money and account for it personally and, as a result, funds are disbursed in a way that is casual, to say the least.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I would say that in relation to this motion we have three principles which deserve more attention and debate than they have received lately. There is the whole question of secrecy. In a case like this why can information not be made public? Why should the Canadian people be denied the information on which judgments are based? Why should those of us who sit in parliament and have a responsibility to the Canadian people in respect of parliamentary and governmental expenditures, not have the information necessary to decide for ourselves whether the government is being prudent with tax dollars?

We have grown up with the tradition of secrecy in this country, and I have seen some of this from the inside. I remember when it was considered improper in Canada to brief members of parliament on defence information which was classified even with a modest level of security classification. I had a chance to do something about that, and after I became minister I briefed members of the parliamentary committee on defence, including information which was secret and top secret in classification. Based on my own experience, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that secrecy is often used as a cloak to deny to parliament and the Canadian people the facts to which they are entitled. I should like to see much more information made available, and I am sure it could be prepared in such a way that it would not prejudice the careers or integrity of the people who write the briefs.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I think that government as a whole is getting involved in far too many judgments in the marketplace. In particular, I think this practice of setting up boards and departments with arbitrary powers should be checked. There are too few checks on the spending of public funds and the whole trend toward intervention on an arbitrary basis is alarming, in my opinion, and should be thoroughly examined. If the results are as I expect, the trend should be reversed.

Finally, and directly related to the program to which I have referred, is the total amount of money collected from the Canadian people. When we are involved in so many cases of subsidization, when we are involved in so many cases of attempting to do the impossible, inevitably we have to collect more money from the Canadian taxpayer than is reasonable. This is becoming a major problem and affects not only low income earners of Canada but all income earners, including the middle class. For the majority of Canadians, except the very rich, the tax level has reached the point of becoming burdensome. I know this from experience, having talked to constituents in my riding. Many of them find it difficult to keep their heads above water financially. The burden of taxation is becoming very great at the municipal level, and at the provincial level. In Ontario, after the last election, a number of taxes and levies have been substantially increased. The burden is heavy at the federal level. At the end of the year, personal income taxes are to rise in accordance with the provisions of the recent budget. So, too much money is being collected for questionable projects. Too much money is being spent on so-called priorities that are not the real priorities of the average Canadian citizen. The government is becoming involved in too many areas which, in my opinion, would be better left to the responsibility of the average taxpaying citizen himself.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some care to the remarks of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). I noted at the outset that he charged that the government, in assuming responsibility for the reconstruction and operation of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, had blundered. I waited with some anticipation to hear the facts which would support that charge.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think my hon. friend was not listening quite as closely as he indicated. I did not say that in making the decision to reconstruct the plant the government had blundered. I did say, and this is the point, that we do not know whether or not the government had made a mistake. The Pearson government made a mistake in making the decision on a political basis in the first place. But, I do not know whether the present decision is right or wrong, since this government is hiding the facts on which the decision was based.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for correcting the inference on my part that there was a charge of blundering. I believe the word was used, and the implication was there. The hon. member says he did not mean that, and I withdraw my remarks on that point. I had the feeling though, as the hon. member spoke that he really did not care if he received these reports, that his motion for the production of these papers was simply a device, a spring board to give him another chance to discuss general economic policy.

I must say I was amazed that the hon. member would wish to downgrade in such strong terms the making of political decisions. Is the hon. member suggesting to this House that in his long and distinguished career as a parliamentarian and member of government he did not make political decisions? I was under the impression that members of parliament were elected by their constituents to come to Ottawa to help to make political decisions. Now, we are told that political decisions are wrong and that we should leave most decisions to the experts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Apparently, if we leave everything to the experts, Canada will be a happier and better country in which to live. I suggest that the hon. member should look at some decisions experts have made in this country as well as internationally. Not long ago, when I was at the United Nations in New York, I heard of certain decisions that had been made by experts in the field of agriculture. To put in bluntly, those decisions were nothing but boners. So, experts sometimes make terribly had decisions, and their decisions are not always in the best interests of the people.

The hon. member talked about Canadian National Railways and suggested that there is often some political pressure exerted which prevents that company from taking certain actions. I hope there is such pressure, and wish there were more of it. Let me cite an example from my riding. On the advice of experts, Canadian National decided that they would "run through" the community of Nakina. Here, "run through" means that the company would not bother changing crews in that community. The people of that community got together and formed a citizen's action committee which put political pressure on their representatives, on the government and on others. The result of that political pressure was a political decision. The run through was prevented.

What happened subsequently? The experts took another look at long hauls on railroads and found two interesting things. First, they discovered that long hauls are not safe. We know that there is an increasing number of accidents on the railways. Perhaps some accidents are taking place because men are spending too long on the job and getting tired. Safety and alertness are diminished by long hauls. Second, the experts found that long hauls are not economical. So here is a case in which, if the advice of experts had been followed, a thoroughly bad decision would have been made.

May I return to the notice of motion, Mr. Speaker, concerning the production of papers having to do with the decision of the government to assume responsibility for the reconstruction and operation of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay. It was announced in this House on January 29, 1971 by the then minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the government had authorized Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to enter into an agreement with Deuterium of Canada Limited and the government of Nova Scotia to enable Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to do an assessment which would determine the feasibility and probable cost of bringing the heavy water plant at Glace Bay into production. By now, the plant ought to be producing between 1,700 and 1,800 tons of heavy water which is desperately needed to alleviate the present shortage, a shortage that is not expected to be met until some time in 1974.

The province of Nova Scotia had indicated to the federal government that it was not practicable, because of a lack of sufficient technical expertise at the provincial level, for Nova Scotia to bring the plant into production and operate it with provincial facilities and resources. The government of Canada, therefore, authorized the AECL study, while making clear that it did not include any commitment on the part of the federal government or AECL to carry out further work, to put the plant into production or to operate the same. This study, however, would be submitted to the government for its consideration upon completion.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited then engaged Canatom Mon-Max, an engineering consortium consisting of Canatom Limited of Montreal and Mon-Max Limited of Calgary, to do a detailed engineering study of the Glace Bay plant and prepare a reconstruction cost estimate. The Canatom study was delivered to AECL on 31 May, 1971, and formed part of a subsequent submission by AECL to the federal government that concluded that, given certain conditions, heavy water could be produced sooner and more cheaply from a rebuilt Glace Bay plant than from a new plant of equivalent capacity.

In early October, 1971 it was announced that AECL had been authorized to commence negotiation with the province of Nova Scotia and Deuterium of Canada Limited, to determine whether a basis could be found for an agreement whereby, with the concurrence of the federal government, AECL would assume responsibility for the reconstruction and operation of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay.

Then, on October 29, 1971, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced in Halifax that a proposal had been negotiated which envisaged AECL acquiring a leasehold interest in the plant and assuming full responsibility for its reconstruction and eventual operation. The job was expected to take about three years and cost $95 million.

An agreement was signed which provided for AECL to lease the plant at a nominal rent of one dollar per annum. Loan funds amounting to $95 million to cover the estimated cost of the job were made available by means of a supplementary estimate approved late in 1971. AECL officially took over the plant on November 29, 1971, and work was begun immediately by the engineer and prime contractor hired by AECL to manage the rehabilitation of the plant.

• (1730)

Essentially, the agreement between the province and AECL provides for AECL to lease the heavy water plant and operate it or arrange for its operation by a third party. The cost of rehabilitation and operation, in respect of which loan funds have been made available by the federal government, will be recovered from the revenue received from the sale of the product. The lease will be terminated when the rehabilitation costs have been collected. That, briefly, is the history of federal government involvement in the heavy water plant at Glace Bay.

The hon. member for Trinity now asks this House to issue an order as a result of which the reports which were prepared for AECL would be made public. He wishes to see and examine all the documents pertaining to the making of this important decision. I have a great deal of sympathy with the hon. member's more general submission in connection with administrative secrecy. The principle of administrative secrecy is a long established tradition of the British parliamentary system, but I am among those who question whether or not this principle conforms with the requirements of modern democracy.

In a modern democracy, publicity services are indispensable to citizens who wish to participate actively in the political process. This is what the hon. member for Trinity is complaining about: he was not allowed to see the reports so that he could determine whether the decision taken was a wise one. There are those who argue that the strong position of administrative secrecy in all countries which have inherited the British parliamentary system is a legacy which one can trace back to the period of absolute monarchy. It is, therefore, probably axiomatic to say that any large measure of government secrecy is incompatible with democracy.

Having said this, however, I am prepared to argue that there are good, valid and acceptable reasons why the particular reports requested by the hon. member should not be made public at this time.

Let us bear in mind that the hon. member requests particular information—reports which were prepared for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited on the basis of which this Crown company would later furnish a memorandum to cabinet. First of all, I would point out that the Crown in the right of Nova Scotia is involved in litigation with several companies which participated in the original construction of the Glace Bay plant. The detailed engineering assessment of the plant which was made for AECL, and the subsequent report prepared by AECL for cabinet, necessarily contained information and opinions relative to the original construction. To make public these documents could be regarded as prejudicial to the fair disposition of that litigation.

[Mr. Penner.]

Second, I am certain that the hon. member for Trinity, who has a long and distinguished career in parliament and government, realizes that when public officials or consultants are asked to prepare a report they do so with more candour if they are assured of privacy or confidentiality. In the case of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay, the government wanted a candid disclosure or revelation so that it would not be necessary to read between the lines and draw inferences. The report undoubtedly contained frank comments concerning the provincial government in power at the time, public servants and commercial firms. This frankness was necessary. But my point is that those comments would not have been made had the reports been prepared with public scrutiny in mind. If the competence of commercial firms is questioned in a public document, those firms must be given the opportunity to reply.

As far as I know, there was no public inquiry into the failure of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay to go into production. Perhaps there should have been. But the problem facing the federal government was whether it was economically feasible to attempt to put the plant into production or whether in the hon. member's words, it would be merely sending good money after bad. On the basis of the reports it was concluded that heavy water could be produced earlier and more cheaply from a rebuilt Glace Bay plant than from a new plant of equivalent capacity.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Earlier in his speech, when he read that same sentence, the hon. member said "subject to certain conditions". Can he advise the House what those conditions were?

Mr. Penner: Certainly, when you are putting a plant like this back into production there are all kinds of conditions. The hon. member is asking me to provide him with technical data as to what these conditions were. That kind of data, though not available to me, was available to the government which had to make this decision.

In the third place, I would remind the hon. member that the reports—as no doubt he already knows—are the proprietory material of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The information contained in them was prepared by an engineering firm especially for AECL, which in turn was charged with the responsibility of preparing a memorandum for cabinet. Proprietory material might well contain data which, if made public, could put Atomic Energy of Canada at a competitive disadvantage in its efforts to sell, for example its CANDU power reactors at home and abroad.

I might point out that Canada's development of a distinct line of highly economical nuclear power reactors has now reached the stage of initial commercial acceptance by electrical utilities. This stage has been reached in spite of the fact that Canadian expenditures on nuclear power development have been extremely modest compared to those of the U.S.A., the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, France, and now West Germany and Japan.

In 1971-72, AECL received its first real budgetary increase in four years. This year's estimates show that the operating and capital budget will total $79 million, an increase of $2 million over last year. CANDU reactors are capable of further development to meet the challenge of competition from new designs, at least for the foreseeable future. By 1980, Canadian designed nuclear power generating capacity already committed will total over six million kilowatts, and strong efforts are being made to interest other countries in the purchase of reactors of the CANDU type. Any data which might serve to weaken AECL's competitive position would clearly, if published, not be in the best interests of Canada.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of my arguments in opposition to the hon. member's notice of motion for the production of the reports which were submitted to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited concerning the heavy water plant at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want it understood immediately that I support the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) that all information in this matter should be made available to the Canadian taxpayer. In saying that I also want it clearly understood that I am definitely in favour of the government's undertaking to rehabilitate the Glace Bay plant in view of the fact that there is an unemployment rate of 29 to 31 per cent in the area and the rehabilitation of the plant would mean a great deal.

Although I fully support the making of this information available, I should like to spend a few minutes referring to some of the comments made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) who gave a brief history—and I emphasize that it was a very brief history—of this government's part in the construction of the Glace Bay heavy water plant.

The hon. member for Trinity referred to some important principles. He referred to the fact that some highly political overtures were made. He mentioned there was expert advice given, that we should review the origin of the decisions taken, and he said that it was a political decision of the Pearson government to rehabilitate this plant. One thing that amazes me is that the hon. member for Trinity was a member of the government which made the decision that put the government of Nova Scotia of that day in a financial straitjacket.

If the government wants the facts, the facts are available. For the last five years I have been listening to snide remarks that have been directed from the other side of the House to my leader on the subject of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay. I say they are snide for this reason: hon. members opposite who make these remarks do not know the history of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay. How many of them are aware that it was the government of Nova Scotia, in conjunction with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which first undertook to invest between $15 million and $18 million in developing this plant?

The decision was then made to double the capacity of the plant and thereby double the cost of building the plant. I do not think the government of Nova Scotia was necessarily involved in that decision, but even the present government House leader, whom I am sorry to see is not in his seat, referred to it as a tremendous undertaking. Indeed, he had nothing but praise for the decision.

Then having doubled the capacity of the plant, the Liberal government of the day insisted that the Nova Scotia government have a controlling interest of 51 per cent, thereby putting it in the financial straitjacket in which it eventually wound up. Hon. members opposite point their finger at the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who happened to be premier of the province of Nova Scotia at the time, but he really had no choice; he and the people of Nova Scotia were forced into this position.

When hon. members opposite talk of political decisions, let them remember this. The Nova Scotia government undertook to study the possibility of rehabilitating this plant. The study, which was done by Dupont, showed that the plant could be rehabilitated for $30 million. So what did the government do? It waited and waited until the cost of rehabilitating the plant had climbed to over $90 million. This was a political decision that tripled the cost of rehabilitation. If hon. members opposite want proof that this was a political decision, that proof is not hard to find. I am ashamed to say it, but the minister from Cape Breton who is the government House leader addressed a political audience at the eleventh hour of a provincial election campaign at Glace Bay and said, on October 11, that an agreement was ready for signature but that the government of Nova Scotia had not made the new offer which was absolutely necessary.

I have raised this matter before in the House and if anyone questions what I say, I have a transcript here of the television broadcast that the minister gave. If that is not enough, then I invite each and every member to join me in my office where I will play them the tape recording of what the minister said in regard to the failure of the government of Nova Scotia to make that new and necessary offer.

On October 13 there was a change to a Liberal government. Six days later, on October 19, there was introduced in this House a bill to give aid to this plant. The delaying of this decision by the government cost the taxpayers of Canada in excess of $60 million. The hon. member for Trinity speaks about responsibilities, but he should have taken some of the responsibility for the political decision made when the issue was first brought before parliament. I can turn to a great deal of evidence given before the science committee of the other place. The chairman of that committee was a minister of the government and said that the cabinet had not discussed the matter fully enough to make a worth-while decision.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay talked of the tremendous potential of the plant and referred to the competition Canada is facing in the field of nuclear reactors. I say this is absolute nonsense. The fact is that we cannot sell them; we have to give them away. Only two countries have looked at these reactors, Pakistan and India. And what did they pay for them? I should like to see a financial statement proving that they paid one penny. Probably they became part of the foreign aid scheme.

The hon. member stated that other countries do not make use of heavy water for their atomic reactors but, rather, are using enriched uranium. If the hon. member for Thunder Bay wishes to question this, I suggest he speak to the chairman of the science committee of the other place who has put the record straight. He is a member of the hon. member's party. I have referred to remarks made by the chairman of the science committee of the other place, as well as by the hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Thunder Bay. The hon. member opposite in the back row, from Renfrew-Carleton, has taken exception to statements made by his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the development at Glace Bay. He complained that certain conditions were to be met—

Mr. McBride: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being recognized by the hon. member but my constituency is Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. McIntosh: That is a great contribution.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, that is what I call a contribution to the debate. At least I will admit that Liberal members know where they come from. I say the evidence is there for all to see. It is interesting to note that a former minister who recently resigned from the government—I say this with all due respect to him, because he resigned for health reasons—was pushing for a system of operation that would not use heavy water. I refer to the former minister of energy, mines and resources. I have a cutting from the Globe and Mail of December 18, 1970, which is headlined "Greene indicates Ottawa leaning toward building a uranium enriching plant". This is in contradiction to all the undertakings given by AECL. A former minister of the government is questioning whether a proper decision was taken and whether the cabinet had given the matter enough study.

• (1750)

There is no question that this was a political decision involving the expenditure of $60 million to help the Liberal government; this was denied the Conservative government of Nova Scotia. Perhaps I should not suggest that a decision to put the plant in Glace Bay was a political decision because there was a Conservative government involved. The government in power today did its utmost to put the people of Nova Scotia in a financial straitjacket, and it will take them a very long time to recover.

Snide remarks are being made every day about the leader of the opposition. Hardly a day goes by without the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) shouting something about heavy water. It is very interesting to note what was said on April 1, 1965, by the now new Liberal Premier of the province of Nova Scotia when he was a Liberal backbencher from Halifax. He directed a question to the then minister of labour, the minister from Cape Breton in the Liberal government. I shall quote his question to emphasize the fact that these are the people who today want to blame the leader of the opposition for all the faults of this plant at Glace Bay. The new Premier of Nova Scotia was sitting as a Liberal backbencher on April 1, 1965, when he asked this question. He had to be reminded by the Speaker that he could only ask his question if it was truly a question. He never knew how to ask a question when he was here, and now as Premier of Nova Scotia he does not know how to answer.

An hon. Member: That was April fool's day.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member says it was April fool's day, but that had nothing to do with the question. Mr. Speaker said the now Premier of Nova Scotia could ask his question—

If it is a true question and not a statement.

MR. REGAN: It is a Nova Scotia one. Will the Minister of Labour assure the House that on behalf of all constituencies in Cape Breton, he will keep the type of representation in the future that brought to that island the heavy water plant?

Today, members of the Liberal party point to the leader of the opposition, because he was premier of Nova Scotia at the time, and shout about heavy water. You can hear their shouts throughout this chamber. But the question is in Hansard for all to read and check. At that time they apparently took full credit for the establishment of the plant in Glace Bay. Whenever things go wrong, members on the opposite side blame the leader of the opposition; but the facts can be checked.

When the government was prepared to double the capacity of the plant in Nova Scotia there was no announcement from the federal government or from the Conservative premier of Nova Scotia at that time. Who made the announcement about doubling the capacity of the Glace Bay heavy water plant? Lo and behold, it was the same Mr. Regan who is now the Liberal premier of that province; yet we hear every day from the other side the same shouts about heavy water. The responsibility is theirs; they made the decision and they can live with it.

Let me now come to the question of what is happening in respect of patronage. Again, I regret the absence of the government House leader, the hon. member from Cape Breton. The unemployment rate in Cape Breton today ranges between 29 per cent and 31 per cent. The minister from Cape Breton says he did not talk to anyone from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, but when he was in Scotland last year he met a Scotsman at a social function and, just by coincidence, asked him to accept a job as public relations officer for Atomic Energy of Canada. He brought a Scotsman into this area where there is 29 per cent to 31 per cent unemployment. That man is now working in the plant where there are at least two men who have had years of experience in the public relations field. The minister says he does not remember speaking to him about this job, but he is not very emphatic in his denial.

In any event, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited hired this public relations officer. I understand that a public relations officer is someone who is employed to create a good public image for somebody else. This man was brought in from Scotland and put on the job, yet Atomic Energy of Canada Limited say he has not been there long enough for them to assess his capabilities. They did not advertise the job. They never advertise these positions. They did not contact the Atlantic public relations officers association to find someone from Cape Breton, Nova Scotia or even from the rest of Canada who was qualified to fill the position. Apparently, if you are looking for a job with this government the best thing to do is to go overseas and get in the way of a minister on tour at government expense. If you do not believe me, read the Auditor General's report and check the Paris newspapers.

There are thousands of young graduate Canadians tramping the streets of Ottawa and Montreal today. On the very day it became known that this man had been hired there were three graduate students in my office from Montreal asking for help in finding work. Everywhere they went they were told they were over-educated. They were told that if they were put to work today, tomorrow, next week or next month there would be a position for a university graduate and they would leave the job. We have Canadians walking the streets today who are told they are over-educated. They are graduates of our universities who cannot get jobs. This government brings people from Scotland into this country under the aegis of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and puts them to work in Cape Breton where there is an unemployment rate of between 29 per cent to 31 per cent.

I keep repeating that unemployment figure because if there ever was a government that needed, through repetition, to learn something about unemployment and other problems facing this country, it is this government. This is a government that runs advertisements in Paris newspapers inviting the educated to come to Canada, the land of opportunity. If this is the land of opportunity, it is time the government realized there are Canadians who are ready, willing and able to accept any opportunities that exist in this country. I believe in Canada for Canadians first, and I think it is shameful that this government brings in people from other countries to take jobs that could be filled by capable Canadians. There are hundreds of Canadians, many in Cape Breton, who are qualified to fill the public relations position at the Glace Bay heavy water plant. There are two men at the plant who have had years of experience in this field. What this government has allowed to happen is shameful.

The minister indicated he would not show any bias in respect of hiring a Nova Scotian or a Scotsman. Perhaps there is an historical bias because of the minister's Scottish name and background. The minister from Cape Breton suggests that what happened is all right because this man can speak Gaelic. I suggest that is absolute nonsense, I am against anybody coming to this country to take a job that a Canadian is able to do, and I do not care whether he comes from Wales, England, Scotland, Ireland or France.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ELECTION EXPENSES BILL

AMENDMENTS TO CANADA ELECTIONS ACT AND INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-211, to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was interrupted by private members' hour at five o'clock I was in the midst of making it clear that we find this bill so disappointing that we feel it should not be proceeded with in its present form. Like the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell) who spoke earlier this afternoon, we point out that there are so many deficiencies in the bill that it does not carry out its intent, which is to control election expenses and put the various candidates and parties on some kind of an equal footing at election time. Because the bill is so deficient, because it is merely a case of trading on the idea of doing something about election expenses, we feel it would be better to have no bill at all than to have this one. Actually, our preference is that the bill be stopped in its tracks and that the government be called upon to bring in legislation that will provide effective control over election expenses and establish a better approach to equality among parties and candidates.

Having said that this bill is deficient in that it does not carry out its intention, that it does not carry out the principle which is supposed to underline it and which we would be prepared to support, may I point out two or three of its deficiencies. As my friend, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), indicated on May 18, the biggest hole in the bill is to be found in the fact that although there are limitations on the expenditures of individual candidates there are no limitations on the expenditures of parties. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that for all the good one can see in the effort that is behind this piece of legislation, that deficiency in itself nullifies the entire bill. What earthly use is there in saying that a candidate in an election can spend only so much money, if the provincial or national party behind that candidate can spend on his behalf without limit?

As the hon. member for Peel South also pointed out this afternoon, even the limitation that is imposed upon individual candidates is not as severe or real as it ought to be. There are figures in the legislation which by a process of arithmetic set a limit on the amount that an individual candidate can spend, but that limit applies only to the types of election expenses identified in the bill. There are about three or four categories of expenditures that qualify as the kind upon which there must be a limit. What earthly use is there in setting that kind of limit if ingenious candidates or ingenious parties can find all sorts of other ways in which to spend money at election time?

That is why we feel this bill is a hoax. That is why we take the position—and we take it as a party that has been advocating control of election expenses from the time it was farmed—that it would be better to have no bill at all than to have this one. If this bill passes and becomes law, it will be a long time before anything is done to make it effective, so we think it would be far better to stop it right now and prepare a decent and effective bill.

I welcome the comment made this afternoon by the hon. member for Peel South who was chairman of the Special Committee on Election Expenses. He said that the bill ought to be sent back to the special committee, that the special committee should be reconstituted so that it might participate in the drafting of a better piece of legislation. That deficiency in the bill, namely, that it does not provide any real or effective control on the limit that can be spent in an election campaign, is in itself enough to condemn this piece of legislation. A candidate in an election is limited in what he can spend on certain kinds of projects but not on all the things on which he can spend money, and the parties are not limited at all. Therefore I suggest the bill is so deficient on that point that we have to say that its principle, commendable as it is, is nullified by the terms of the legislation.

The second weakness in the bill is one that we feel very strongly about—although in some quarters of the House our view may not be shared—and that is its failure to required disclosure of campaign contributions. We recognize quite readily the difficulties that would arise if full disclosure were called for; there are some contributions. But I suggest that in terms of the effective working of democracy those problems are minor compared with the problems that are created by a situation in which powerful corporations can make sizeable contributions to the parties of their choice, knowing that there need be no public disclosure of those contributions.

May I remind hon. members of the House that this statement of mine—a statement that was made many times from this part of the House—about contributions to the older parties is supported by a statement that was made on February 14, 1972, here in Ottawa by Mr. R. G. Renkin, the Ontario provincial chairman for the Liberal party red carnation fund. The statement was very clear and very true. It was in these words:

> The Liberal party has operated for many years on the support of 95 major Canadian corporations.

I urge very strongly that that kind of situation must be cured. It has bedevilled Canadian politics for a long time.

Mr. Yewchuk: What is wrong with it, Stanley?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is wrong with it is that it makes it possible for vested private interests to control the affairs of this country by making contributions which enable parties to have so much money to spend that they can capture the vote of the electorate at election time.

Mr. Yewchuk: Where is the evidence for that?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If my hon. friend had not moved adjournment of debate this afternoon he could have continued his speech and given us the evidence one way or the other, but it is a fact of Canadian history. There have been scandals in the past and there have been valleys of humiliation over this very fact of the kind of contributions which corporate interests have made to the two old parties of this country. We feel very strongly that if we are going to do anything about election expenses we should cure this evil. Let us cure it by requiring that there be full disclosure of campaign contributions.

That recommendation has been made at various stages in the study of this matter, but when the government brought in this bill it did not see fit to include it. We think it is somewhat odd that in reference to the income tax credits to be allowed for contributions, reports have to be made in secret to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray). It continues to puzzle me how the Minister of National Revenue can have this information in that capacity, know what contributions have been made to this party and to all the other parties, and yet as a politician, a member of the government in power, to be assumed not to have this information.

If there is to be someone to whom this information has to be reported, we suggest that it should be an independent officer of parliament rather than a minister of the government. That, I may say, is in passing because the main point I am making is that in our view a bill dealing with election expenses in the year 1972 which does not touch the question of disclosure does not deserve the support of this House. A bill that does not do that should be given the treatment suggested this afternoon by the hon. member for Peel South, although let me make it clear that he did not suggest it for this reason but for several others. Such a bill should be sent back for redrafting so that it will deal with the problems we face in this field.

Another area where we feel this bill is deficient is in the area of reimbursement, and I should like—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I wondered if the hon. member would allow a question. I am curious to know if, as the hon. member states, corporations making contributions to parties leads to corruption, how disclosure of their names would necessarily stop that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the light of day cures a great many things. Dare I say that some people love darkness because their deeds are evil. I have said it anyway. What you can do in the dark can be a lot more evil than what you can do in the broad light of day. I suggest that if the information of who was supporting the Liberal party, the Progressive Conservative party, the New Democratic Party or the Social Credit party were made public, the country would at least know the source of that support and some things that are now being done would not be done. The people of the country would be much more free and able to make their decision as to which party should be given support at election time.

I was about to deal with the question of the reimbursement to candidates of some of their expenses. I have noted that not only the hon. member for Peel South but the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Forest) has taken exception to the formula that is in the bill before us which provides for a percentage reimbursement of certain kinds of expenses. Both those members took the view that we hold, namely, that the formula proposed by the committee over which the hon. member for Peel South presided was a much better one. It was to the effect that a certain minimum amount per voter should be made available to each candidate, at least to each candidate who can get a certain percentage of the vote, and the figure of 20 per cent is mentioned in the bill. At any rate, that kind of proposition has some element of fairness in it.

If there are 45,000 voters in a constituency and there are three or four parties running, and you give to each of those candidates a sufficient number of cents per voter so that the message can go out—as it were, enough cents to get out one piece of literature or what have you—at least you are providing some sort of equality among those three or four candidates. But when in place of that you say to the one who spent the most on a certain type of expenditure that he gets 25 per cent of it back, and to the fellow who did not have the money to spend that he gets little or nothing back, you are certainly not establishing any measure of equality among election candidates about which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) spoke.

Mr. Yewchuk: How is it not equal?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should have made his speech this afternoon. He is trying to make it on my time. He chose to move the adjournment of debate and lost his right to continue speaking. I think he should abide by the decision he took.

This formula for reimbursement, I suggest, is a terribly deficient one. I come back again to the fact that the two main purposes of this bill are supposed to be, first, to control election expenses and, second, to achieve some kind of equality among the candidates. The attempt to control expenses is completely vitiated by the first two deficiencies I have mentioned, and the attempt to achieve any kind of equality is completely missed by a formula based on a percentage proposition rather than on a formula that would provide equally for the various candidates in the field.

We think also, Mr. Speaker, that the failure of the bill to impose any kind of limitation or prohibition on foreign contributions—from foreign corporations, foreign trade unions, foreign individuals or what have you—is a weakness. This is a Canadian piece of legislation concerned about the election in Canada, by the people of Canada, of the Canadian parliament and we do not think that it should be possible for elections in this country to be influenced by money from abroad. Some of the studies that have led to this piece of legislation strongly recommend that there be a prohibition against the granting of income tax exemptions, and so on, for foreign contributions and we regret very much that this bill as it now stands has not implemented that recommendation.

For these four reasons as well as others, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this bill is very deficient and that it ought not to be proceeded with at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have no hesitation in saying that it contains some things that are good. I think the attempt to provide some equality in terms of broadcasting is a good feature and I think the whole attempt to cope with the problem is good. There are a number of things in the bill that are good. But we have had to study the matter in depth, as is our responsibility, and when we look at the little bit of good and the tremendous amount of bad in the bill we feel that it would be better to have no election expenses bill at all than to be saddled with this one.

As I said, this bill has four main weaknesses, in that it does not control expenses because it places no limits on the parties, in that it does not provide for disclosure of contributions and thus leaves us open to all kinds of abuse; because it has the wrong formula for reimbursing candidates and because it places no limitations on contributions by foreign bodies or individuals. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we urge this House not to be fooled by a piece of legislation that is being paraded under its title, that is being sold to the country simply because it is called a bill to control election expenses when it does not do that at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We think it should be sent back to the drawing board and we call upon the government to do that. Toward that end, and as I indicated before five o'clock that I would do, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

> That Bill C-211 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give immediate consideration to the presenting of a bill that will provide effective control over election expenses, by establishing reasonable limitations on the amounts parties as well as candidates may spend, and by providing for the full disclosure of contributions to political candidates and parties both at the time of and between election campaigns.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will have more to say later about the substance of the hon. member's speech. I should like especially to speculate on why the New Democratic Party made a somersault on this bill over the weekend. What forces made the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) disown the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who told us—

Mr. Lewis: Order. Just speak to your point of order and don't get into a speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stick to your point of order, and stick to the truth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) making a speech on the motion that is before the House, or is he rising on a point of order?

Mr. Peters: Anything at all!

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am just establishing my grounds for later on. The amendment is probably more deficient from a procedural point of view than the one proposed on Friday last by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). While the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tried manfully and with considerable ingenuity to put his amendment within the four corners of the rules, he failed. And I am satisfied that he has not succeeded where the hon. member for Hillsborough failed.

We have in the amendment a series of opinions about this bill. They are all debatable propositions, a series of arguments. It seems to me that the flaw in the amendment is that every possible subject that has been covered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and included in his amendment is a subject matter that could be dealt with in committee by an amendment to the bill.

The hon. member has talked about the limitation of expenditures by parties. We have provided for a form of limitation of election expenditures by political parties and the hon. member is free to move an amendment in committee to broaden that type of limitation. Likewise, with the question of disclosure: he is perfectly free and able in committee to amend the provision of the bill in a way which would bring about all the objectives he has in mind, if he can get the support of the committee. It is quite unnecessary to ask the government to present another bill.

What is the necessity of presenting another bill, Mr. Speaker? That vehicle is not necessary to achieve the hon. member's objectives. All he has to do in committee is to move amendments, because none of these proposed changes is hostile or declaratory of any principle opposed to the principle of the bill. The bill incorporates the principle of limitation of election expenses, it incorporates the principle of disclosure, and the other details are even less important than those I have mentioned. I refer to Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, citation 389 which reads:

> A motion opposing the second reading of a bill must not anticipate amendments which may be moved in committee.

Every one of the proposals mentioned in this second reading amendment is a subject or amendment which may very well be moved in committee. On making a ruling on Friday last on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Hillsborough, the Chair quoted from May's Seventeenth Edition as follows:

> The amendment must not be concerned in detail with the provisions of the bill upon which it is moved, nor anticipate amendments thereto which may be moved in committee; nor is it permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question—

What is being done in this second reading amendment is merely to anticipate amendments that can easily be moved in committee. I suggest that it is unnecessary to go through the charade of suggesting that we need another bill. What the hon. member should do is prepare amendments, move them in committee and persuade other members of the committee to accept them. Then the bill will come back in the form he wishes. Another bill is quite unnecessary.

I suggest it is even clearer today that this amendment is out of order, Mr. Speaker, than it was on Friday last when there was some doubt as to the regularity of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Hillsborough. In this case the amendment is out of order for the reasons I have mentioned.

• (2040)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy seeing the confidence with which the President of the Privy Council makes his little speech and says "That's it; the hon. member is out of order." The main point he seems to be trying to make tonight, since he cannot make the one he usually makes against second reading amendments, is that the changes I am suggesting can be achieved by amendments moved to the bill when it is in committee. Has the President of the Privy Council forgotten that this bill carries with it the Governor General's recommendation?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Conveniently forgotten!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has he forgotten that when we deal with the bill in committee and bring forward our suggestions that we shall be told, as we have been told time and time again, what we can or cannot do to the bill; because what we can do to it is laid down once and for all by the terms of the resolution agreed to by His Excellency the Governor General? I suggest to you, Sir, that any attempt of mine in the standing committee or at any point in the progress of this bill to change it from one that imposes limitations on only an aspect of expenses to one that deals with the whole, broad gamut of expenses would be met with the argument, as has happened so often in the past—

Mr. MacEachen: Not at all. The recommendation does not affect any of those items, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't give us that nonsense.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member knows it perfectly well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says I know this perfectly well.

Mr. MacEachen: You cannot show me any part of the recommendation which would have the effect the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have been told time and again what happens when the Governor General provides the limits beyond which we cannot go. The minister himself, when he was minister of national health and welfare, well remembers that when he finally agreed that a certain kind of amendment should be made to the medicare bill, that that amendment which we put through but which has never been acted upon required a supplementary recommendation from the Governor General.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that any attempt to provide for a reimbursement formula that varies from the one in this bill would meet the charge that it constitutes a variation from the provisions of the bill itself. The minister knows very well that the development in procedural terms of the last few years, particularly since we have done away with the resolution stage, indicates that the form of the bill itself to which the Governor General has agreed, so far as its main contents are concerned, is the form that has been laid down, and that is what we cannot change.

Any attempt to make these kinds of major changes to the bill in committee would not get to first base. If we try to do this in committee the minister would be the first one, or Liberal members on the committee would be the first, to say that we cannot do that because we would be going beyond the terms of the bill laid down once and for all by the Governor General in his recommendation.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Can he show me where the Governor General's message or recommendation affects any of the proposals he has made? None of them affect the charge on the Crown; that is the critical point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister amazes me. You know, he has such a good memory. Does he not know that when we have tried to argue that since there is no more resolution we are not necessarily limited by the terms of the Governor General's recommendation, we have been told that the measure before us is the measure we are considering and that we are considering only what has been recommended in "the present measure", to quote the royal recommendation.

Mr. MacEachen: Oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Please do not make those kinds of noises at me tonight. The minister knows better. We have been told that we are limited by "the present measure", and any attempt to get around that would be met with strong objection in the standing committee. Parliamentary counsel would be there—

Mr. MacEachen: Then how would it be possible to amend any bills in committee that are accompanied by recommendations? According to the hon. member's argument it would be impossible to amend any bill in committee, in any particular. That is the hon. member's position tonight.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is still possible to amend the bill in committee on details that do not change the basic principle. However, we are asking for a different principle; we are asking for the principle of effective control of election expenses.

Mr. MacEachen: That is just an opinion, not an amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are saying that this bill does not control election expenses of parties at all and that it controls only some of the expenses of candidates. We are asking for the control of all expenses, both of candidates and of parties. In terms of disclosure, we are asking for things which could not be achieved by the process of trying to change the bill in committee.

Mr. MacEachen: That is nonsense.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Also, in our amendment we ask for the disclosure of contributions made between elections as well as at election time. I am sure, as sure as I stand here, that if we tried to move these amendments either in the standing committee or in committee of the whole, the first one on his feet saying that those amendments go beyond the terms of the bill as laid down and recommended by the Governor General would be the President of the Privy Council.

I am interested, of course, in noting that the President of the Privy Council did not raise the objection that was raised to the amendment moved last week by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), the objection that has been raised most often lately, that the amendment is partly in support of and partly opposed to the bill. We have made it clear, and I hope I have made it clear in my speech, that we are not as a group opposing the bill in part and then turning around and voting for it. We think the structure of the bill is basically wrong, and this is an amendment which proposes an alternative, one that is completely opposed to the bill as it stands.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, when you ruled on the amendment of the hon. member for Hillsborough you quoted some of the standard paragraphs dealing with the subject. May I quote in particular citation 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill—

I interrupt myself to say that that is why I think these amendments are called reasoned amendments. We seek to give our reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of the bill. I continue:

> —to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill—

That is precisely what we are doing. We are approaching this bill with a different principle, with a different view of its policy and we are suggesting different provisions. We think that the bill before us, Bill C-211, is not adequate. We are opposed to it and we want to stop it now so that there may be a bill before us embracing a different principle, a different policy and different provisions that will more readily provide for effective control of election expenses.

Perhaps it was not necessary for me to mention this aspect of the matter because it is clear, from the non-reference to it by the President of the Privy Council, that our amendment is not faulty on that point. It is an amendment offered by members who are opposed to the bill. We have stated some of our reasons for being opposed to it and we have stated our desire for a different kind of policy.

Speaking on the point the President of the Privy Council raised, I suggest that nothing would be more futile than for any member of the standing committee to attempt to achieve these changes by amending this bill in committee, because we would be told at once that those amendments run counter to what is laid down in the recommendation of the Governor General. I contend, therefore, that we have the right on second reading to say we are opposed to the bill, to give our reasons for that opposition and to bring forward a reasoned amendment. That, Sir, is what we have placed before you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before I examine the procedural acceptability of the amendment, perhaps I should again read the amendment to the House:

That Bill C-211 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give immediate consideration to the presenting of a bill that will provide effective control over election expenses, by establishing reasonable limitations on the amounts parties as well as candidates may spend, and by providing for the full disclosure of contributions to political candidates and parties both at the time of and between election campaigns.

• (2050)

As it has been stated many times from the chair, reasoned amendments on second reading are among the most difficult of our parliamentary proceedings. In the past few years hon. members have sought to make greater use of such amendments and, indeed, have sought to go beyond the recognized forms—the six months' hoist or a reasoned amendment to second reading.

I wish to thank the two hon. members who contributed to the procedural debate; Points made by both participants are of interest and value. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) expressed the view that the amendment we are considering puts forward proposals which might be made in committee. The minister referred to citation 389 of Beauchesne to which I also refer.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred to the limitations of the Governor General's recommendation, suggesting that the Chair by previous decisions had limited the possibility of going beyond the recommendation or the possibility of altering any of the proposals covered by the recommendation. The hon. member referred to citation 382 dealing with the subject of reasoned amendments—a citation which was used last Friday, I believe—under the terms of which an hon. member can put forward reasons for not agreeing to second reading of a bill.

That having been said, there are a few questions the Chair must ask in its desire to proceed in accordance with the practices of this House. The Chair has to decide on the procedural acceptability of the amendment. I find myself wondering at this point whether the amendment before us does in fact oppose the principle of the bill. I refer to citation 382 and shall read it to the House:

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record his special reason for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill to move, as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committee or commissioners—

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I have great doubts about this amendment and its effect on the bill. I am tempted to conclude that the amendment is not really opposing the principle of the bill. Although the hon. member in his speech said he could not accept the measure because it did not contain certain provisions, his amendment does not oppose the principle, the subject matter within the proposal before us.

I am wondering if what appear to be the reasons given by the hon. member in his amendment are proposals which might well be the substance of another bill. On the other hand, the President of the Privy Council has suggested that the proposals contained in the amendment could be put forward at the committee stage. The minister referred to citation 389 of Beauchesne where it is stated:

A motion opposing second reading of the bill must not anticipate amendments which could be moved in committee.

In that regard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a point as to the recommendation of His Excellency which in his mind set a limitation on the capability of the committee, or the House at a later stage, in accepting such amendments. In the opinion of the Chair, after looking at the recommendation attached to the bill, it is in general terms and would appear to be wide enough to permit hon. members to include the changes suggested in the amendment moved by the hon. member. Hon. members cannot, of course, expand the measure beyond the limits of the recommendation of His Excellency, but I do not see any limit on the possibility of providing for a restriction.

The arguments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, based probably on previous decisions, were to my mind more particularly concerned with moneys involving expenditure by the treasury. The precedents are quite clear on that point. When we are speaking of expenditure or appropriation of money, this limitation of course applies. But when it comes to the possibility of proposing amendments to a bill, it is my impression that the recommendation we have before us is wide enough to enable the committee to accept such amendments, although of course the Chair is not prejudging what could be done in committee.

In conclusion, basing myself on the point that I stressed at the beginning, that the amendment should clearly oppose the principle of the bill and that it might be anticipating at the same time amendments that could be made at the committee stage, I hold that the amendment cannot be accepted at this time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For clarification's sake, are you now ruling that it will be permissible at committee stage to move amendments revolving around the subject matter of the proposed amendment of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)? Are you saying that we can do that in committee? Because if that is not what you are saying, we will have all sorts of difficulty in the committee, especially when members such as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) want to give their directions about opposing these moves. I think it would be just as well if you indicated what are our rights and prerogatives in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sure that the point raised by the hon. member is a valid one, but I suggest that if he had listened closely to what I said—

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is the problem; I did.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I clearly said that I did not want to prejudge any decision that might be made by a chairman of the committee at the committee stage of the bill. The ruling that I as the occupant of the chair at the present time am making will have to be interpreted by other occupants of the chair. I would not wish the hon. member to ask the Chair at this time to pass judgment on any further decisions that may be made.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I rise on another point of order then, Mr. Speaker, and ask whether you are now saying that the government can have it both ways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, there is one point about this measure that bothers me and I should like to share my concern with hon. members of the House. The section that bothers me is headed "Political publications and broadcasts" and is clause 13 which is found at page 20 of the bill. The gist of this clause is that on an election day or the day before a person who publishes an article, editorial, advertisement or announcement of a partisan political character in relation to the election or by-election, as the case may be, is guilty of an offence against the act.

This is an attempt to bring into the publishing field something that exists in a slightly different way in the broadcasting field and I state categorically that this attempt is wrongly made. Instead of bringing this into publishing we should be kicking the other measure out of broadcasting. What evil is being cured by putting something like this into the law, which is a prohibition on reporting and comment? What evil is being cured, I ask; and is the remedy a greater evil than any situation in the past which the government feels should be corrected in the future by this sort of legislation?

First, I think there are safeguards in society today regarding what the government is trying to remedy here. I think the first safeguard is that by and large the press of Canada is a responsible press and that the newsrooms of Canadian broadcasting stations are staffed by responsible people. I think that is the biggest safeguard of all. It is the credibility of the press, radio and television that is really on trial, whether you are dealing with events occurring within 24 or 48 hours of an election or with events that occurred a long time before. The public either believes in the honesty and fairness of the press, radio and television or it does not. I do not think that this particular measure sanctifies the honesty of the press in any way. So that the ethics of the news profession is our main safeguard and it is, I suggest, the only safeguard that should be adopted.

The maturity of the electorate and their ability to know when they are being treated in a brainwashing or partisan way, or whether they are receiving objective reporting, is another safeguard. Within the last few days the Canadian press has sent forth through its subscribers a special report—I suppose it would be classified as an article within the meaning of proposed section 99(1)—in which it is said:

> The bill prohibits partisan political comment on any federal election day and on the day before voting, but sources in the Privy Council office say that this applies only to editorial comment and political advertisements in newspapers.

Why anyone should assume that this is what the law means is beyond me. Why somebody in the Privy Council office, who is not specified, should be the source of the interpretation of a poorly phrased paragraph in the legislation similarly is beyond me. In its editorial today the Toronto Star was able to take this contraption apart in a pretty effective manner. I will get around to the comment made by the Toronto Star in a few minutes, but the point I wish to make about the danger of prohibiting an article of a partisan political character is simply this, that you are in the field of value judgments and you may have to make a value judgment in extraordinarily difficult cases.

For example, it would be quite possible during the final moments of a campaign—not probable, but possible—if a demagogue were operating in the land, for all sorts of promises to be made by him which, if simply reported without any commentary or effort to examine their implications, might have an effect on the electorate and could not be checked in any responsible manner whatsoever. Indeed, if one used the ordinary democratic process of trying to get the truth across, the person who tried to answer would find that he might be breaching the law, and the person who was getting away with journalistic murder might find that he was being protected by the law. I think that if you have that sort of situation with regard to reporting in this country, then you have a pretty serious situation indeed.

You could use the example of something that happened during the last election, or something that people would remember happening—certain disturbances in the city of Montreal. How do you report that, under this particular measure? You are not supposed to report something of a partisan political character. One might very well say—indeed, I think a great many people did say—that the right hon. gentleman who is the Prime Minister of this country, in facing up to a certain situation showed very commendable qualities. If you said or portrayed that in any way, would you not in fact be reporting in a partisan political manner? I think this is capable of that sort of interpretation. The Toronto Star to which I referred earlier made this telling point:

> Besides restricting free speech, the clause is incapable of precise application. What exactly does "partisan political nature" mean? Is an editorial—or a letter to the editor—urging voters to support a particular party a "partisan" item? Would it be a breach to report a news story—for example a Statistics Canada release on the latest unemployment figures—that might hurt the government and help the opposition? Must a newspaper, before publishing an official announcement, examine it with a magnifying glass to make sure that it hasn't a possible political connotation? The courts would presumably be called on to answer all these questions, and until they did editors would be left in uncertainty as to what they could lawfully publish.

The wording of that clause and its implications bother me. If it is the general wish of the House that this sort of thing be in the law of the land, I suggest they take a long look at the use of the word "article" because that word to me—and I have spent half my life in the news business of this country—would suggest news items. That being so, I suggest there would be a severe limitation on reporting in the final days or the last day of an election campaign.

Another point about this bill that bothers me is the prohibition of a time honoured practice of all of us in the House, the giving out of information as to places of voting. If we send out something purely for that purpose, we are guilty of an offence. I do not know what would happen thereafter, but you are guilty. This is one of the things I think is traditional on the part of candidates. This is a bond with the electorate and an attempt to be of service to the prospective voter. It is going simply too far to make an offence of an attempt to be helpful. If an attempt to tell some dear old lady that she votes at such and such a church hall is an evil intent, then this measure goes too far. I do not know why I should be subject to the wrath of God and the law of the land for trying to be helpful.

Another thing I do not like in the bill is that part which specifically prohibits advertising of a partisan political character on election day. In my part of the country, as I imagine in other parts, it is customary to put ads in the paper indicating transportation telephone numbers, numbers of party headquarters and other numbers in order that people can receive information. I do not see anything wrong with that.

Again, in my part of the country, and I think in other parts as well, political parties would be foolish if on the day of an election they bombarded the electorate with advertisements dealing with issues and the like. In most places I think there is maturity and parties and candidates let the issues settle themselves on the Saturday night or the Sunday before the election. Then on election day they put every sinew and muscle to work to help the people through the process of voting. The process of voting is still a frightening act for a good many people and one about which they are shy. Any inside or outside help given by agents and the like is very helpful.

The measures to which I have referred inhibit the proper discussion of issues as well as some of the sensible operations of a political party. I hope that when the bill reaches committee changes will be made in order to correct these matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-211 concerning election expenses covers quite a lot of ground and brings in several changes.

At first glance, one could say that it is an improvement over the existing act especially if, once it is passed, all candidates are placed on an equal footing and at the same time the people can find out who finances them.

We often hear that he who pays the piper calls the tune. The people will finally be able to see, at least in part, how the "old parties" run elections. Bill C-211 sets a ceiling on election expenses in ridings; however, the bill sets no limit on the parties' expenses on a nationwide basis.

I am pleased to support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who goes as far as to say that this weakness in the bill will neutralize all its effects.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Speaker, considering the number of experts working for the government, it is obvious that what we have here in the bill is not a mistake nor an oversight but something that the government wished and wanted there.

I can hardly imagine a businessman controlling only 50 per cent of his staff or a manufacturer controlling only 50 per cent of his expenses; they would go backrupt before long. As things now stand, we can see they want to control only part of the election expenses. I believe politics is the only place where we can see such things. Nowhere else, in business or elsewhere, do such things exist.

Moreover, this bill is aimed at controlling election expenses in advertising and broadcasting. But there is no provision to limit or control expenses for renting halls or cars; there is no provision either to control the salaries of the thousands of persons that could be mobilized by a political party. There is no provision in the bill to control the time paid by corporations or unions.

Really, Mr. Speaker, trying to make us believe that a candidate who has obtained 20 per cent of the votes will get a reimbursement of 25 per cent of his election expenses is nothing else but bluff to me, since the bill does not even refer to the big election funds of the old parties. Should the bill be passed, nothing would oblige an insurance company, for instance, that would have paid $50,000, $75,000 or $100,000 to the Liberal or Progressive Conservative fund, to declare anything. In other words, this legislation will always allow a public corporation to contribute to election funds without being accountable to the public at large.

We admit that the bill features some suggestions made in the report of the Barbeau Committee on election expenses in 1966. However, we can realize that what we are being offered today is very little compared with what was provided in the Barbeau report. In fact, on page 21 of the bill, clause 99.1 (1) reads as follows, and I quote:

> In the period beginning on the date of the issue of the writ for a general election and ending on Saturday the second day before polling day, each broadcaster ... shall make available to the registered parties an aggregate of six and one-half hours of broadcasting time between the hours of six p.m. and midnight.

Under the control of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, the party representatives should agree among themselves on allocation of time available, failing which the CRTC shall make a proposal for an allocation of time that will be binding if the registered parties make no objection.

Should any party object to the allocation of time proposed by the CRTC, the latter shall consult the party involved, change its proposal or simply confirm it after discussion, and its decision shall be binding on the party thus providing for compulsory allocation of time.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Social Credit party strongly oppose such a policy and, in our opinion, the allocation of time should be based on the principle of equality between the registered parties.

We believe that any registered party fielding enough candidates to form a government should have time allocated in proportion to their number.

At the present time, on the basis of past experience, we can say that if the bill before us is passed, according to clause 99, the Social Credit Party of Canada will be unable to get more than half an hour of broadcasting time. I presume that I am not the only one to believe that this is blatant injustice.

• (2120)

Outside Parliament, in my opinion, all parties are equal. We do not work looking back on the past nor on the basis of the heavy majority of the party in power, but we keep the future in mind. The proof that all parties are equal at the dissolution of Parliament is that ten days after prorogation, we automatically lose several privileges which are granted to us as the people's servants.

When we leave Parliament, even if we remain elected members till the next election, we can no longer make telephone calls free of charge nor enjoy franking privileges.

We are all on the same footing when it comes to telephone calls and postage. This is why in my opinion the CBC should not serve a group more than another.

We know that the broadcasts will be allotted under the supervision of the CRTC. We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that these supervisors are friends of the government, that they have been hired and are paid by it.

I do not trust very much the impartiality of this group, and I dare suggest to the minister who is sponsoring the bill that he should move an amendment to clause 99.

The allocation I repeat, should be done not in favour of members who have managed to get elected at the previous election, but by taking into account the number of candidates running for each party.

Supposing that the Liberal party had 264 candidates and the Social Credit 225, in my view these figures could be used as a basis for a fair allocation of the time available to the parties.

In short I remain convinced that revealing the financing of parties is an improvement, provided there is not too much hypocrisy. But there again it will be really difficult for a party to prove complete honesty. As I pointed out, amounts emanating from large corporations will not necessarily be publicly revealed.

In short, as in most pieces of legislation, the litle people who contribute to election funds will again be singled out.

An insurance company doing business in a municipality, in a province, will subscribe to the fund without having its name revealed and at the same time the owner of the small corner store or the service station, the manufacturer who contributes a few hundred dollars will get talked about.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is childish to believe that reports will remain confidential as called for by the spirit of the legislation.

After all, in the province of Quebec, during every election campaign the same thing happens: we see that the list of welfare recipients always becomes available to the political organizers of the party in power, who use it for blackmail purposes. I suppose that the future list of contributors to election funds will be used for the same purposes, and the strongest will win.

If we speak of democracy, Mr. Speaker, action will have to be taken through better distribution of television broadcast time. Since I was a child, I have been hearing now and then that elections are often dishonest and I personally think that the people will keep on thinking so if no amendment is brought to the bill under which we would be granted only half an hour of television time out of a total of 6½ hours.

The public is entitled to the truth, Mr. Speaker, and if the Liberal party has nothing to hide, its representatives in Parliament should not be afraid to share the time alloted for these broadcasts in an honest way.

In clause 8 of the bill are listed the authorized election expenses and, as a matter of fact, one may read at page 14, and I quote:

> (2) The amount determined under this subsection in respect of an electoral district is the aggregate of
> (a) one dollar for each of the first fifteen thousand names appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for the electoral district;
> (b) fifty cents for each name in excess of fifteen thousand but not in excess of twenty-five thousand appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for the electoral district; and
> (c) twenty-five cents for each name in excess of twenty-five thousand appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for the electoral district.

Finally, for the Portneuf riding that has 66,000 voters, according to the 1971 census, the candidate of each of the four parties represented in the House would be entitled to expenses amounting to $37,500, which represents an amount much in excess of $100,000.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that during the coming election campaign, the candidates will spend freely and that the people will be spoiled a little. After all, it is merely a little of their own money that they will be getting back.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to exercise the privilege of speaking in this debate on Bill C-211 to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses. The bill should read more appropriately, "to amend the Canada Elections Act and to allow aspirants to political office to dip into the public purse".

It is said that the bill if passed may not be used during the next election. I dare the government to make an issue of this legislation and go to the people for approval of it as it now reads. I believe if the government did so there would be an unfavourable reaction by the public. This bill affects the very basis and fundamentals of our democratic electoral system. At present, parties are given only limited recognition under our system. I understand they are to be given a little more recognition in the next election because the name of the party with which the candidate is connected is to appear on the ballot.

Since the parties so far are given only limited recognition under the system, this strengthens my statement that our elections system is the real basis of our democracy. The name of the nominated candidate is all that counts. Hon. members can look at the sides of their desks and see proof of that; their name only appears on the desk tag. I ask hon. members how they happen to be members of parliament. It is because of their own efforts, and also due to the choice of the electorate on the day of the election. It is also due to the secondary circumstances of being a member of a particular political party. I often recall the words of a very respected town clerk in my native town of Napanee who in advising new council members said:

• (2130)

For many years I have listened to prospective candidates on nomination night saying that their friends had urged them to let their names stand for nomination in elections. Don't you believe a word of it. It is only the egotism and ambition of the individual that makes a man ask for nomination and for election.

That was true in the Napanee town council and all councils, and it is true in the House of Commons in Ottawa today. You raised yourselves up by your own bootstraps. Sometimes the party was a great help to you, and sometimes their help was a lesser factor. In 1968 Trudeaumania swept this country. It is not going to do so in 1972 or in 1973. There is every indication to back up the statement I have just made. Today's press carries headlines of million dollar bungles of the Trudeau government as shown in the Auditor General's report. Headlines also refer to parliament's control weakening.

A headline in a leading Liberal paper reads, "Who pays the bill for the flying PM?" All these headlines refer to a wasteful spending of the taxpayers' money by the Trudeau government. Today, instead of continuing with the budget debate, which would be the proper economic procedure, the government puts forward Bill C-211 that asks the House to condone and ratify more wasteful spending of the taxpayers' money by subsidizing the cost of candidates' campaigns from the public treasury. If that is not a waste of the taxpayers' money, then I have no business standing here and claiming to be the representative of the riding that elected me.

Although this bill has many clauses, I want to speak against it in only one respect at the present time. I oppose clause 11, that section which allows for the reimbursement by the taxpayer of candidates' expenditures. I heard my learned friend, the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell), who laboured conscientiously as chairman of the committee, tell the House that subsidies of candidates' expenses by the taxpayers would encourage men of small means to run for and be elected to parliament.

Does the government think that Parliament is the private preserve of the wealthy? Has the government taken a poll to find out what the individual wealth of our members is? I hope not, and I think not. I think that many of my predecessors were better endowed with this world's goods than I am. I have been through four elections, and this also applies to many of my contemporaries here. We are not too well endowed with this world's goods, yet we are here. I was elected each time, partly on borrowed money every cent of which, plus interest, I repaid later.

I am unalterably against the taxpayers of Canada and my constituents from Frontenac-Lennox and Addington paying any portion of my election expenses through legislation. Anyone who wishes of their own free will to cover part of my election expenses is welcome to do so and his contribution is appreciated, but to pass a law compelling people to subsidize the private political enterprise and ambitions of a candidate for parliament is something that I will not support.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

This scheme perpetrates more Marxist socialism, in the phony guise of liberalism, on the taxpayers of this country. It also encourages triflers and opportunists. Instead of strengthening the old, two-party system which has been well tried and found valuable in the past and which now in 1972 is the four-party system, because of Mr. Pearson's bad dream of recognizing parties with a minimum of 12 candidates, this law will encourage the formation of more parties, which we can well do without in this House. It will also encourage more independent candidates because it will put more hands in the public till.

I urge the government to refer this bill to the committee and to strike out clause 11, section 63.1. I wish to put it on record for all of Canada to see. It will probably also be put on the record by other hon. members who agree with my stand. This clause is a government amendment to the old act, as is shown by the black, vertical line on either side of the clause. It reads as follows:

This amendment would authorize the Receiver General to partially reimburse candidates at an election who are elected or who obtain a number of votes equal to 20 per cent of the number of votes cast in the appropriate electoral district. The amount of the reimbursement would be based on the candidate's actual election expenses or authorized election expenses, whichever is the lesser amount, and in the case of certain electoral districts, on the candidate's travelling expenses. In any case, there would be a minimum reimbursement in the amount of $250.

So almost without exception every candidate in every riding who received at least 20 per cent of the vote would be reimbursed to the extent of at least $250. It is too much for the Canadian taxpayer to bear this kind of illegitimate expenditure. He has enough responsibility paying our salaries and the salaries of the gigantic civil service, as well as all the expenses that go with federal responsibilities, without having to subsidize the campaign expenditures of political candidates. If we pass the bill the way it is now, it would put socialism right in the polling booths; and I predict that if it passes it will perpetuate a system of corruption the like of which Canadians have never seen.

Mr. Speaker, you might deduce that I am trying to be altruistic in my approach to this matter, but I ask you this question on behalf of the Canadian people: Why should any Canadian citizen and taxpayer be asked to subsidize any part of my election expenses? They did not personally ask me to run. They did not ask me to incur any election expenses.

Mr. Peters: Were you parachuted in?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Certainly not. In fact, many men have run for office in the past without incurring expenses. I realize that those days are gone. But it is not necessary to incur expenses to be elected, if you have the confidence of a sufficient number of people. Basically, according to the electoral principle, the democratic principle, it is not necessary to make expenditures to be elected. I know that this is not possible today, but a candidate must look after himself. No one forced him to run, and no one should be forced to help underwrite his campaign expenses.

There is another point that I wish to make. This bill stultifies and threatens democratic initiative on the part of candidates. I will recount some incidents that could take place if this law is passed. The scene is the average small town where the candidate and/or his party are holding a political meeting and they have paid the rent for the hall. The candidate is making a speech expounding the aims and policies of his party. He makes a remark that is not popular with the cross-section of the general public who are his listeners in the hall. Bedlam breaks loose at the back of the hall. A man stands up and says, "Shut up, Mr. Candidate. I won't let you say that here, because your candidacy is subsidized by the general public and I am a taxpaying citizen. You either shut up or get out."

• (2140)

The candidate answers the heckler, "With due respect, our party has paid the rent here tonight." The heckler then says, "So have I helped pay the rent, because my taxes help pay your election expenses." This shows how ridiculous and crazy has been the thinking of the government in the formulation of this bill.

There is another point which I wish to put forward. The chairman of the committee mentioned disclosure. Mr. Speaker, as long as there is coin of the realm in circulation, how can any candidate—especially since according to law he cannot handle money and all cash must be handled by his financial agent—disclose anonymous donations? How can any audit be successfully conducted? How can any audit be accurately conducted? Therefore the word of someone other than the candidate must be accepted. What kind of a charade would that be? Although I am critical of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I am one of the first to agree that election expenses are mounting beyond reason with every parliament. That is a result of the fierce political and electoral competition that is indulged in, and of the current inflationary spiral that has been generated by the Liberal party.

I would like to support the parts of the bill which sensibly limit expenditures in constituencies and that would tend to be fair and equitable in the allotment of radio and television time to the candidates of all recognized parties. But, again, I will not support any more free time on the airways, both radio and television, than has been granted in the past. This decision should be left to the existing T.V. authorities and the radio and T.V. stations. In other words, if my opponent has more money to spend on television than I have, we can just say that is my tough luck and let him spend it. In many cases it is not always the candidate whose face appears most frequently and for longer periods on television who wins an election. Sometimes the viewers get tired of this. Sometimes overexposure is the cause of a candidate's defeat. Anything beyond what has been granted in the past should be paid for by the canadidate and/or his party.

I have been critical of this bill. I am most concerned, as I said, about clause 11 which proposes a new section 63.1 and compels taxpayers to reimburse candidates' expenses. If it remains in the bill, I serve notice that I cannot and I will not support it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this kind of bill gives the government an opportunity to do something that I had occasion to do once when negotiating a contract in a new plant. In such as case you look at all the other contracts around the country, pick out the best of everything, list which is the best one, the next best one, the one that is not so good and the one that is very bad, and deal with each section of the new contract, trying to get the best possible even if it is not with respect to the sections that are concerned only with money. I remember that in one contract I secured agreement on a five-week holiday after 15 years' service. The reason the company agreed to this was that it had been in operation for little over a year and the day of reckoning seemed far distant.

But what does the government do with this legislation? It has examined similar legislation in other countries. The Barbeau report indicates that a study was made over a number of years of legislation in other countries. The government has discovered some of the mistakes which other countries made. It has discovered that in countries where expenditures on behalf of a candidate are limited, a more democratic distribution of representation is possible and many abuses have been eliminated. Yet it comes before parliament after all this investigation and presents legislation with provisions that have proven to be deficient in other countries.

This bill is providing the very minimum possible. It is putting a timid foot in the door when really we should be dealing with legislation that would make the last speaker cry—legislation that would provide equality, that would eliminate the last vestiges of wealth being used to win elections. As the last speaker said, some 20 or 30 years ago it was possible to be elected because of one's position in the community. A man may have owned the local mill. He may have been the son of a man who had been a Member of parliament. He may have been the son of someone in the militia. He may have been a very rich person and on his name alone could be elected. However, during the limited time that I have been a member of this House I have noticed that members more and more must depend on their own ability and on their own initiative to retain their seats in this place. This is a trend that will continue. Those who are capable will probably be elected. The amount of money spent will not necessarily determine the outcome of an election.

Earlier this afternoon I made an offhand remark to a previous speaker in the debate, knowing that he was a very wealthy man. I asked what was he worried about, and quite righly he replied that during election campaigns he goes round and raps on doors. I know he does this, and it benefits him. That holds true in many ridings. I know that in my own riding on a couple of occasions the amount of money available to a candidate was detrimental to his cause because he had difficulty in spending all of it.

I am sure that many people who read the Barbeau report were surprised at the cost of elections. I was a little surprised. I have heard various figures used, but it was interesting to note that in the 1962 election the figures revealed a very sharp rise over all previous elections. The president of the National Liberal Federation, Senator J. J. Connolly, told Maclean's as reported at page 281 of the report of the committee on election expenses in 1966:

—the rise in costs "is not a matter of addition . . . but of multiplication." That article states that "the consensus in Ottawa" is that the campaign will cost at least $11 million, "about $3 million more than the estimate made for the 1958 election."

On the same page the report gives figures indicating that the cost of an election to the treasury was estimated at about $13 million and that "the last campaign, all told, will have cost about $32 million to Canada." Mr. Speaker, $32 million does not grow on trees. This statement gives the lie to some of the arguments to the effect that control of election expenses is not necessary. In 15 years, I have gone through five or six elections. In fact, elections were coming about once a year. This $13 million is a fixed expenditure by the government, and I think it is an indication that we will have to do something about election expenses not only from the candidate's point of view but from the point of view of political parties. To some extent, much more important to the general public is the $13 million that a general election costs the treasury.

Mr. Speaker, consideration should have been given to the establishment of a permanent voters' list in this bill. I am sure everyone will agree that the reason the government did not call an election for July is simply that they were aware it would be impossible, even with the expenditure that the government itself makes, to set up machinery that would function in the holiday period. I am sure that would have been true from the point of view of political parties and that the electoral officers in each area would have had considerable difficulty in running the machinery. An election in July would have been a calamity, in my opinion. I remember an election in August and there was considerable confusion about enumeration then. You had a list one day, but when you phoned the people about one-third were on holidays and another one-third were preparing to go. We should be considering the establishment of a permanent voters' list as a means of cutting down election expenses.

There obviously has to be control over political parties. I am only guessing, but I would say the nomination of a candidate in my riding recently cost as much, if not more, for newspaper and radio advertising than I would spend in a general election. I doubt very much that it was his own money, although it was very interesting that one of the candidates called it his nomination convention—it was not a Liberal convention, it was his. I understand that he received a sizeable amount of money from Ottawa and it was used for that purpose.

An hon. Member: A LIP grant!

Mr. Peters: I suggest that this is part of the problem. If we are not to control the contributions made to political parties, there is not much point in controlling the expenditures made on behalf of an individual.

Mr. Speaker, I can honestly tell this House how much was spent on my election because we had to raise the money. I can also state that the New Democratic Party works differently from some other parties because 20 per cent of the budget that we report for election expenditures goes to our provincial office. It is then distributed in some way in other ridings, so that for every thousand dollars raised 20 per cent or $200 has to go to the provincial office. The more you raise, the more the provincial office gets. Of course this system has disadvantages as well.

Knowing exactly how much was raised and how much was spent in my riding, I still cannot be sure how much the party would contribute to my election in terms of national newspaper advertisements, in efforts made simply by allowing the $200 deposit in some ridings where it is difficult to get a candidate with $200 of his own. I do not know what the benefit to me may be in those circumstances, but there is some. There are advantages and sometimes disadvantages too, because you are not just running in a local campaign but have interference from other areas.

This matter of honest representation, it seems to me, will be more readily accomplished if we arrive at equality on the basis of the number of voters represented, the fee to be paid by the government, the allowance to be made for expenditures on T.V. and radio and establish a quota so that everybody participates equally. It is my opinion that it will not then be the coffers of the political party which will benefit; it will be the candidate chosen on the basis of equal expenditure and equal opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, other countries have looked at this matter very carefully. They have found and corrected the loopholes. If we had a government that really believed in equality, it would be trying to get the best legislation possible, not the least legislation from which they can get political gain. Using the title of this bill as a form of control of election expenses is dishonest. The bill does not do that. It puts certain limitations on the expenditures of candidates, but in my opinion it does not limit expenditures for elections and it does nothing to correct many of the abuses inherent in the present system.

This is new legislation. If the government wished, it could pick out the best sections of legislation across the country and surprise the Canadian people by accomplishing now what will likely be accomplished in 10 or 15 years. The government is always amending, always bringing in something that should have been presented in the initial stages of legislation. Mr. Speaker, surely the government will one day have enough backbone to introduce the kind of legislation that many people in this country will oppose because it does not suit their selfish ends but which will be applauded by everyone who looks at it in a non-partisan way as being the best legislation which will do most for the process of our democratic machine in Canada.

Mr. Drury: New Democratic machine.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GRAIN—RAPESEED—LAYING OF CHARGES BY WHEAT BOARD AGAINST CERTAIN FARMERS FOR OVERDELIVERY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I bring before parliament tonight a situation which involves between 1,300 and 1,400 western farmers who are being brought before the courts at the initiative of the Canadian Wheat Board for breaking the laws of Canada. Rapeseed growers market their product under contract to Western Canadian Seed Processors in Alberta and to other similar processing plants in Manitoba and Saskatchewan which within agreed and authorized limits purchase the farmers' rapeseed production.

Specifically I refer to a farmer named William Reid Thompson, not related to me, who farms in the community of Olds, Alberta. On March 3 he was issued with delivery authorization No. 2959 by Western Canadian Seed Processors in the amount of 900 bushels. On March 9 he had delivered 388 bushels of rapeseed to the Western Canadian Seed Processors' plant at Lethbridge, some 200 miles away, that delivery being part of a truckload. His Canadian wheat permit No. 0088947163, had previously been delivered to the Western Canadian Seed Processors' plant.

The Canadian Wheat Board had allotted him 60 quota acres which amounted to 1,200 bushels of rapeseed. However, his delivery amounts had not been entered into the permit book because a representative of the Canadian Wheat Board had seized his permit book from the office of Western Canadian Seed Processors' plant; thus he had not been informed of the amount still deliverable under his quota. The 388 bushels delivered on March 9 turned out to be 104.8 bushels in excess of his quota.

On April 10 the Canadian Wheat Board mailed to Mr. Thompson a duplicate of his permit book, informing him for the first time of the amount delivered against the permit book and also informing him of the 104.8 bushels overdelivery. On May 3 Mr. Thompson received a summons instructing him to attend court on Thursday, May 18, he having been charged with delivering 104.8 bushels of rapeseed in excess of the quota established by the Canadian Wheat Board. The trial has been held over until June 1 at the request of the plaintiff.

This is a ridiculous, intolerable and illogical situation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: This farmer, along with hundreds of others, entered into a contract with Western Seed Processors Ltd. The farmers have been told to find crops alternative to wheat and barley. Many have done so by growing rapeseed, as did this particular farmer. They have also found their own market. Their delivery authorization is based on the home market available for oil products. They did not ask that rapeseed be included under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board, nor were they consulted about it.

Is it not unreasonable in the extreme that now these farmers must be penalized under a control system which does not realistically apply to this type of enterprise? This is a situation in which a federal government agency, under a policy developed by this bureaucratic administration, is advising farmers of this country to grow certain products, controlling when and how to sell them, and then the farmers are treated like common criminals when they defend their right to market a farm-grown product for which they themselves have found markets.

Every bushel of rapeseed which is processed through seed processing and crushing plants is used for domestic consumption. The quotas imposed by the Wheat Board are restricting their production. There is an estimated carryover of between 40 million and 50 million bushels of rapeseed from last year's crop. Yet every bushel of this amount which can be used on the local market reduces the amount of this carryover.

Mr. Speaker, why are quota restrictions placed on rapeseed that is used for home consumption? The Wheat Board does not do any rapeseed marketing. It is exercising control only over the delivery system. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) say that this is necessary. It could be necessary for rapeseed which is sold directly on the export market, but it is certainly not necessary for that used in home consumption. I am talking about the quotas for farmers. Strangely enough, there is no quota on sunflower or mustard seed or on soybeans, the latter being imported to this country from the United States and the oil of which is used for making vegetable oils. Is this justice in a just society? Farmers also must now plan what they are to grow next year, and they don't know what to sow. Rapeseed does not enter the elevator system, nor does it take up space at terminals. It does not require rail cars or use railway facilities; it is trucked directly to the plant on an agreed contract basis.

Last May when we dealt with legislation which would make it possible for flax, rye and rapeseed to be brought under the Canadian Wheat Board the minister, answering protests from this side of the House, said that the government did not plan any action toward bringing the marketing of rapeseed, flaxseed and rye under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board at that time. He went on to say in a press release dated May 11:

> I repeat, the government has no immediate plan to change the marketing system for these grains. And I assure producers that before any such change is contemplated there will be thorough discussions with everyone involved.

Now, without any reference to farmers, without any consultation and without their even being informed, one of the grains at least has been brought under the control of the Wheat Board, even that which is to be used in the home market and which has been a source of cash for the farmer. In a bureaucratic way, the government is interfering with the diversification of crops.

It seems to me that if there is any justice left in this country, if there is any sense of responsibility or honesty left in the government, it must instruct the Wheat Board to drop these charges and work out an equitable system with the farmers themselves. To allow this case and 1,400 similar cases to proceed through the courts, treating these farmers as criminals, is wrong.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is only one aspect of the larger question of quota deliveries to the oilseed crushers which we are currently reviewing. However, I should like to point out that there have been no prosecutions under the Criminal Code.

Mr. Thompson: They were summonsed under the Criminal Code. He was brought to court under it.

Mr. Béchard: The administration of quotas is the responsibility of the Canadian Wheat Board, which has to see that all producers receive equal treatment as far as possible with regard to the enforcement of the quota regulations. Any action which is taken by the board is therefore within the terms of its responsibility. I am sure all hon. members would wish the administration of the quota system to be as fair as possible and that no producers be allowed an unfair advantage over others in this respect.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PROPOSED NUCLEAR TEST BY FRANCE—SUGGESTED GRANT TO "GREENPEACE III".

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I rise tonight to speak on a subject of the utmost seriousness. Without attempting to sound too pompous, I believe that if mankind does not soon put an end to nuclear proliferation and the testing of nuclear weapons, all the national problems which we endlessly debate from day to day will pale into insignificance.

Mr. Gleave: Don't you know that Nixon is over there discussing these things?

Mr. Rose: We have witnessed the progress of the SALT talks. Yes, as my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) reminds me, there is some reason for at least limited satisfaction in the fact that United States President Richard Nixon is currently in the U.S.S.R. and that the leaders of the two countries are attempting to exercise some restraint in the area of nuclear proliferation and initiate some kind of nuclear hiatus. What concerns me tonight is the proposed atmospheric test planned in the South Pacific for mid-June, 1972. France and the People's Republic of China are both nuclear powers and have indulged in testing, but neither of them is a signatory to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Speaker, the national origin of nuclear contamination makes no difference to me or to anybody else; the horrors are identical, regardless of the source of the contamination. Experts on human environment have informed us that the somatic effects of radiation can cause malignancy even at present levels and that genetic alteration may occur generations later. It is clear, therefore, that continued testing must be resisted vigorously and resolutely, not just for the sake of those who happen to be alive in the world today; we must engage in a pact with the yet unborn which will protect our grandchildren from afflictions brought about by the obscenities of irresponsible bomb detonation today.

It is for these reasons—indeed, these are the basic reasons that I entered politics—that I am so persistent in my opposition to nuclear testing. It is why I raised various questions yesterday with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and also with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Why, I ask, should not the government of Canada participate in funding the Greenpeace III voyage of protest? Its objective is four-square within Canadian government policy. Besides, many people point out that we are giving away millions of dollars for almost everything else. It seems to me that this would be a very healthy cause, and I regret that the Secretary of State for External Affairs declined my request.

Why, I also ask, should not the Prime Minister wire a message of congratulation and encouragement to Greenpeace III, as he did to the Amchitka-bound Greenpeace II? As head of our country—whether I support him and his party or not—his support and his prestige of office would carry a tremendous clout in terms of world opinion.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) are planning to attend the Stockholm conference on human environment to be held June 5 to 16. Whether nuclear testing is a major agenda item or not, I do not know; but would it not be ironic if, while the diplomats were discussing the world's environmental transgressors, at the same time the government of France saw fit to explode an atmospheric test in the Pacific? It is my hope and plea that if nuclear testing is not a major agenda item, Canada's delegation will make it so during this particular conference by intransigence, filibustering—anything that is necessary. Then my daughter and the Prime Minister's young son will be able to look forward to growing up in a world free from added nuclear contamination.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian, and particularly as a British Columbian, I am as concerned as the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) over the forthcoming nuclear test scheduled in the Pacific. I agree that it is a deplorable situation and I assure him that the government of Canada and the people of Canada share his concern. A great many private individuals in Canada share the common objective of trying to persuade the French government and any other government to desist from carrying out this kind of nuclear testing.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said on May 10, the government has made formal representations to the French government expressing its opposition to these nuclear tests—indeed, we oppose tests by any nation—in all environments but particularly in the atmosphere. Our representations called upon the French government to reconsider its plans for a new series of tests in the South Pacific. Representations of this kind are employed by governments to convey their views on matters of great importance only. The question that has been raised is whether direct government support for the Greenpeace foundation or any other private body of citizens is likely to increase the total impact of these representations.

What is striking about the action of the Greenpeace foundation and about the large number of letters which I understand have gone from Canadians to the government of France is that these representations have been made spontaneously as expressions of opinion of individuals who feel strongly enough to make their views known. They have felt so strongly they have been compelled to take some direct action. If the government of Canada were to give its formal endorsement and particularly its financial backing to the Greenpeace foundation, then it might be thought, however unfairly, that this private organization was in some way acting as a mouthpiece for the government of Canada.

Look at it another way. Official government representations will carry more weight if they are accompanied by clear indications that they are genuinely supported by independent, national public opinion—and this is the position of the government. We do not wish to dilute either the official representations of the government of Canada or the unofficial representations of those who take this matter so seriously.

NATURAL RESOURCES—OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, last week, as I have on other occasions, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the status of negotiations regarding the provincial and the federal government's offshore mineral rights. This was of particular interest to me because it was one of the first topics I pursued when I came to this place last year. The Prime Minister's answer was that he did not understand the question. This is probably because there was some bedlam in the House at the time. He did state that he understood it had to do with offshore mineral rights and that the matter was being dealt with by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

I thought the House might be interested in this topic because it is now almost one year since the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and I raised the issue with the Prime Minister on his return from the Victoria conference. His answer at that time was that the government was still waiting for answers from the provinces to the plan it put to them more than a year before. This was in respect of possible negotiations regarding offshore mineral rights. It is obvious that at least two years have elapsed without anything constructive being done. This is a graphic illustration of this government's failure to come to grips with an extremely vital issue. I sincerely hope the bickering and ill will which characterized these negotiations on the west coast of our country will not be carried on as far as current negotations are concerned with Nova Scotia and other Atlantic provinces.

In the "Journal of Canadian Studies", Mr. Neil Caplan deals fully with this subject. In an article entitled "Offshore Mineral Rights: Anatomy of a Federal-Provincial Conflict" we find an excerpt headed "Negotiation and Deadlock". The author points out that Arthur Laing, who is from British Columbia as this House knows, the then minister of northern affairs and natural resources, conducted negotiations with Mr. Kiernan, provincial minister of mines and petroleum resources as far back as July 26, 1963. In October 1964 there was a federal-provincial conference which tried to reach a solution. But this also failed, so the matter went to the Supreme Court of Canada despite the sincere wishes of both the federal and provincial governments that some other course of action might have been taken.

On November 7, 1967, the Supreme Court of Canada in a judgment found in favour of the federal government, and legally at this time the mineral rights off British Columbia belonged by definition to the government of Canada. I say that politically nothing has changed. The province of British Columbia is still bitter and unsatisfied and has changed its position by saying that perhaps legally the offshore mineral rights belong to the federal government, but equitably the federal government is obliged to dispose of them to the provinces under a fair type of arrangement.

On December 2, 1968, the present Prime Minister outlined a proposal in which he developed a concept of mineral resource administration lines which would be drawn to distinguish between submerged lands, to be administered federally seaward of those lines and provincially landward of those lines. The provinces would retain the revenue derived from their zones and the federal government would place in a national pool all revenue from its zones, half of which would be available to the provinces and divided among them on the basis of any financial arrangement which the provinces could agree upon.

I suggest, with respect, that this is an abdication of federal responsibility. In effect, the government is saying it will take half and the others can fight over what is left. Since this proposal was made, negotiations seem to have stalled. In my opinion this is a very serious situation. It should be pointed out that Nova Scotia entered confederation as an original partner. It came into the union with a long history of jurisdiction over territorial waters. Canada and France also have a dispute over offshore jurisdiction. Both countries have issued exploratory permits for the same area. This situation exists in Nova Scotia where oil companies are receiving from the federal and provincial governments rights to explore.

Perhaps the whole issue may be solved if and when a more precise and comprehensive Law of the Sea is agreed upon by an international tribunal or committee. In the meantime, despite the bungling or bumbling of governments the oil companies continue to obtain cheap exploratory rights on a duplicate basis. But this situation will not continue for very long because royalties are another kettle of fish and the oil companies will not pay revenues of this type on a duplicate basis. They are simply too expensive. I suggest that once an oil find is confirmed, as we hope it will be, in commercial quantities the pressure will be on in more ways than one.

I believe it would be extremely fortuitous and, to be colloquial, nice for once if the government of Canada would act instead of react and at least keep this House and the people of Canada informed of its posture, whether there will be meaningful co-operation and an equitable settlement in respect of this particular issue, and whether it will deal on an equal basis for once with a part of Canada which lately has received very little from confederation.

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the hon. member's original question asked what had resulted from discussions among the provinces and the federal government in respect of offshore rights. The simple answer is that the premier of the province of Quebec and the premiers of the Atlantic provinces will hold a meeting in June to discuss their position with respect to the latest federal offer in connection with off-shore rights. In our view, the intitiative at this stage is clearly to be taken by the provinces.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

Third report of Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, in both official languages—Mr. Lessard (LaSalle).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions. March 16, 1972—Mr. H.-Pit Lessard (LaSalle):

That the First Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Thursday, March 16, 1972, be concurred in.

Mr. Lessard (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, with leave, I move that the motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member requests unanimous consent to withdraw his motion. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

The motion is withdrawn.

REASONS FOR RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL—REVIEW OF CASES SINCE 1970

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether Mr. William W. Buchanan, chairman of the federal anti-dumping tribunal, has resigned his position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I received the gentleman's letter of resignation several days ago.

Mr. Hees: Has he tendered his resignation because of a conflict of interest in carrying out his duties?

Mr. Trudeau: There is no mention of that in his letter, Mr. Speaker. It was just a simple letter of resignation. I would be happy to table it in the House if it is so desired.

Mr. Hees: Would the Prime Minister check into this matter and advise the House on Monday whether Mr. Buchanan has resigned because of conflict of interest in carrying out his duties? Would the Prime Minister also advise the House, either now or on Monday, whether, in view of the revelation of what took place in respect of the anti-dumping case in 1970 involving the Canadian Pittsburgh Glass Company, the government has decided to review any other anti-dumping cases which have arisen in the intervening period?

Mr. Trudeau: I can certainly look into the latter matter of whether any other case is being reviewed. My present knowledge is that no other case is being reviewed. That is the only one. On the former aspect, I do not see how I can satisfy the hon. member. The gentleman resigned and I accepted his resignation. The reasons for which he resigned are for him to state and they are stated in that letter.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. Will he advise whether he has instructed the director of prosecutions or any official of his department to place the file concerning the chairman of the anti-dumping tribunal before the federal court? If so, does he intend to make any statement with regard to the whole matter or will this be left to the Prime Minister in a subsequent statement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the whole question is, of course, the subject of investigation and examination. The only action which has been commenced to this point is action instituted at my direction before the federal court to challenge the decision of the anti-dumping tribunal in the one specific case.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants for a final supplementary on this subject and then recognize the hon. member for York South.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF STUDY OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the President of the Privy Council. I asked a question earlier this week in his absence concerning the conflict of interest study of the public service of Canada being carried out at a high level. Has that study now been completed and will it be made available to the public?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, studies of the question of conflict of interest have been going on in my office, part of which have been completed. There are other phases to the study of conflict of interest and there is the question of whether the report should be made available in piecemeal fashion or in totality. However, I will be happy to consider the matter in view of my hon. friend's representations.

INDUSTRY

MICROSYSTEMS INTERNATIONAL—DEFENCE INDUSTRY GRANT—POSSIBILITY OF LOSS OF JOBS IN CANADA BECAUSE OF CONSTRUCTION OF ASSEMBLY PLANT IN MALAYSIA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce one or two questions regarding Microsystems International which I have raised on previous occasions. In view of the fact that Microsystems has been offered about $31 million or there has been a commitment of that sum under the defence industry program, of which amount $8.1 million has already been paid, I should like to ask the minister whether he knows or his department has been informed about the building by Microsystems International of an assembly plant in Malaysia and whether any of the work that should have been or might have been done here will be done in Malaysia in the new plant of this organization.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer to that additional question this morning but I may answer the previous questions which were posed. The hon. member referred to lay-offs at that time by Microsystems. My information is that there have been no lay-offs at Microsystems since December, 1971, nor are there liable to be as sales are increasing at this time.

He questioned me also on the monitoring of research and development funds provided by my department. This is indeed being done very closely, and careful consideration is given to all expenditures of government funds to ensure optimum returns to Canada. I might add that last year 78 per cent of sales of Microsystems were to Northern Electric, but this percentage is decreasing as overseas sales in particular expand. My friend may have seen the recent agreement between Microsystems and some Japanese companies. Losses are also decreasing and cannot be attributed to their sales to Northern Electric. These losses are start-up costs.

Mr. Lewis: I am grateful to the minister for his answer to my question the other day. I should like to ask him whether he would undertake to look into this proposition of building a plant in Malaysia in view of the fact that my information is, if it is accurate, that the production of the conductor is not labour intensive whereas the assembly is labour intensive. Could the minister look into the question of whether it is the intention of the company to have the assembly done in the Malaysia plant, which would obviously mean a loss of Canadian jobs?

Mr. Pepin: I will look into it indeed, but as a matter of principle I think we must not accept the idea that Canadian companies should not establish elsewhere in the world to produce what they already produce in Canada because often this is the only way to penetrate foreign markets, sometimes with Canadian content.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that and I am not suggesting we should stop it. In view of the fact that the research and development are being carried on with public funds given this company under DIP, is the minister suggesting there is not some responsibility to make sure that the jobs are retained in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously a point of argument between the minister and the hon. member.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUEBEC—CONTRIBUTIONS OF SEASONAL EMPLOYEES—AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question.

Could he advise us whether the federal and the Quebec governments have come to an agreement as to the payment of contributions by Quebec government seasonal employees to the Unemployment Insurance Fund?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to this question, but I shall be pleased to refer it to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration under whose jurisdiction this matter comes.

IMMIGRATION

CIRCUMSTANCES OF ADMISSION OF PERSHING GERVAIS TO CANADA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question in connection with the case of Pershing Gervais, alias Paul Lee Mason. I note that his ministerial permit has now been revoked since I brought this matter up several days ago in the House. I want to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to the terms of the admission of this man into Canada. I have in my hand the record of minister's permits showing that Paul Lee Mason and his family were admitted to Canada pursuant to section 5(d) of the Immigration Act. In view of the fact that this section provides that people who have been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude can only be admitted to Canada pursuant to an Order in Council, will the Prime Minister file the Order in Council under the terms of which this man was admitted to Canada?

• (1120)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all informed about this matter except to the extent that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration told me yesterday that he would handle it in the House if questions were asked of him. I am sorry the hon. member did not think of asking a question yesterday when the responsible minister was here.

Mr. Baldwin: On that point, Mr. Speaker, I gave the Prime Minister, or the minister, until the weekend to make a statement and he did not see fit to do so. However, I would ask this supplementary question. In view of the fact that officials of the Department of Justice in Washington are alleged to have stated to representatives of Canadian newspapers today that for the last two years Canada and other countries have been used as a haven for people of this character in at least 50 instances, through the medium of United States corporations with subsidiaries in Canada, will the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, because of these serious allegations, to make a further investigation and a full statement to the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. member for having given me to the weekend to make a statement. I will give him a few more days to ask the minister the question when he is in the House.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE, MONTREAL—INTERVENTION OF DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR TO ACHIEVE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Labour, but I am not too sure which minister is the acting minister. Since this is the eleventh day of the wildcat strike in the port of Montreal and considerable losses are being incurred, would the minister tell us whether the government has made contact with the parties and whether anything is being done to settle this strike?

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the matter is being considered by an acting minister. While this is being done the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED DISPLACEMENT OF CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES BY STUDENTS UNDER OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. However, in his absence on government business I shall direct it to the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister aware that several hundred civilian employees of the Department of National Defence across the nation, many of whom are veterans and many of whom are married men with families, are being laid off at the present time and being replaced by students under the Opportunities for Youth program? Further, if the answer is in the affirmative, what does the government plan to do about this deplorable situation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Defence may I say I am not aware of this but I will certainly cause inquiries to be made.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, would the President of the Treasury Board, in making his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, aware of this situation, also consult other members of the government with a view to ensuring that these several hundred long-term, in many cases, non-permanent employees do not suffer as a result of the opportunities for youth program?

SHIPPING

PROVISION OF SHORE-BASED NAVIGATIONAL CONTROL SYSTEMS FOR SHIPS USING STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA AND ADJACENT WATERS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which arises in part from a report that what is described as the largest tanker ever to have visited the waters of the state of Washington has come to Esquimalt for propeller inspection after delivering oil to Cherry Point, Washington. Can he advise the House what steps are under way to establish shore-based navigational control systems in the Strait of Juan de Fuca and adjacent areas on the Pacific coast?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would give me time I would be glad to give him a written reply. The answer is quite lengthy. In the interim I might say that something is being established comparable to the installation at Chedabucto Bay on the east coast which is regarded by many as the most modern in the world. However, I would like to get a full written report for the hon. member on the navigational aids in this whole area.

AUTOMOBILES—ACTION TO OFFSET EFFECTS ON INDUSTRY OF OPPORTUNITY FOR CANADIANS VISITING UNITED STATES TO PURCHASE CARS AT LOW PRICES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the program of the United States Chamber of Commerce known as "Tour America" intends to use DISCs to sell cars to visiting tourists at special low prices, particularly if they take them home with them, and as Canadians are the most likely buyers under this program, what does the government intend to do to prevent adverse effects on our automotive industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the opinion of my department is that the imposition of tariff on the cars when they are returned to Canada would eliminate any gain to be made by buying in the United States. That is the general proposition. The company itself has made a number of observations on this subject to my department but, being very careful these days in these matters, I have asked that these observations be cleared before I use them in the House.

Mr. Ryan: Do I understand that the automotive manufacturers in the United States have stated that they will not use this program with respect to Canada?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker. I refrained from saying anything on that subject for obvious reasons, but I have said that the opinion of my department is that the imposition of the tariff, which is 15 per cent, would eliminate any advantage to be gained by Canadians using this device while travelling in the United States.

Mr. Ryan: As the 15 per cent would then be on used car value, would there not still be some incentive to Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is debate. Is the hon. member for Broadview rising on a supplementary?

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider endeavouring to obtain parity of prices between American and Canadian cars in order to avoid this problem?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my friends in the NDP, as usual, have so many objectives; they would like to see lower prices in Canada than in the United States, more employment, more parts produced in Canada, for exports, freer trade and better safeguards. I suggest that they should establish priorities.

TRANSPORT

MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POLICY

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. A short time ago in the House the minister indicated to me that he would be making a statement when he appeared before the transport committee with regard to transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces. I noted in his statement yesterday that he did make some reference to ferry situations in the Atlantic area. Will he be making a more general and all-embracing statement regarding Atlantic provinces transportation policy?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I would hope so, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday of next week I am meeting with the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Council at their annual meeting. Subsequent to that it may be that I will have something to say, either in answer to questions or in statement form. Yesterday I tabled a copy of the earlier speech I made on the subject, but after next Tuesday I may have something further to report.

Mr. Coates: It was my understanding that the council was to make an annual statement. Will that statement be made regarding transportation policy at this meeting next week?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hope it will not be considered a breach of the privileges of the House when I say that I propose to indicate to this group what the contents are and get their observations so that when I table it in the House a day or two later I will be able to indicate their reaction.

POWER

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION UNDER NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT RESPECTING GRANDE RIVER

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is related to the recent recommendation to the James Bay development corporation that the first stage of the James Bay hydroelectric project be proceeded with. Has the minister yet received an application under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for the development of the Grande River?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, the situation remains as it was on the last occasion on which I answered this question. We have received, I believe, one application but it appears to have had no direct relationship to the James Bay development as it was merely part of a road plan for the area. Beyond that, there are no further details.

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REPORT ON ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment with reference to the James Bay project. In view of the continuing allegations by the James Bay committee of dire consequences if this project is proceeded with, has the minister had any recent further report on the ecological effects?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say. There was a report at the end of the year covering the first phase of our investigation into the environmental consequences of the James Bay development. The second phase is getting under way this summer.

POLLUTION

MEASURES TO CONTROL INDUSTRIAL WASTES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment regarding a speech he made in Montreal earlier this month to the federation of associations in Canada relating to the environment, in which he said in part with respect to industrial—

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, may I remind the hon. member that the question has to be asked directly. We shall get into difficulties if hon. members ask questions about statements made outside the House. Questions may be asked about the proceedings of the House or statements made in the House, but it is a long-established rule that reference can be made to speeches made outside the House only to the extent of inquiring from the Prime Minister whether they represent government policy. Otherwise, I suggest they should not be referred to at all.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I will ask my question directly. What plans does the minister—he knows what the answer is—or the government have to monitor industry and make sure that industrial wastes are kept inside the factory fence? Can he tell the House what plans he has for putting that edict into effect?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have been developing national standards in conjunction with individual industries, one industry at a time. The new standards have been published. For example, those dealing with the pulp and paper industry and the chlor-alkali industry, have been published. Similar standards are being developed for the chemical industry, the oil refining industry, and so on. One of the principal objectives of these standards is to keep the pollutants inside the factory fence as far as possible.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Am I to take it from what the minister has said that he is going to bring about changes in the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations, to which he referred, which now permit pulp and paper mills to continue to dump their effluent into the water courses of the land, contrary to what he said in Montreal a few weeks ago?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, our standards apply immediately to new construction, new mills and new developments. As to existing mills, the hon. member knows that he has one in his own constituency which is a very bad offender, but I do not believe he is advocating the immediate shutting down of the mill in his area.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The minister has deliberately distorted what I asked him, and in the process—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that another member should not be accused of deliberately distorting what has been said. He can say it has been distorted, but he has no right to say the distortion was deliberate.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, the minister deliberately did just that. He distorted the purpose of my question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): —that part—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may believe that and he may think that; however, there are things that members can think but cannot say. That is the basis to effect the propriety of debate. I would think there are many things that hon. members would like to say. Some things can be said and some things can only be thought, and sometimes the one does not coincide with the other. I remind the hon. member that he has been in the House a long time and he knows he cannot accuse another hon. member in that way. He can argue with the minister as long as he wants to, but he certainly should not accuse another member, whether he be a cabinet minister, a member of his own group, a frontbencher or a backbencher, of deliberately distorting another member's words.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if I may continue my question of privilege, the minister, out of his ignorance of the subject, distorted the purpose of my question. I asked him whether he intends to bring about changes in the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations so that industrial wastes will be kept within the factory fence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really fail to see how the hon. member, on a question of privilege, can redraft the question he asked previously or seek further information. That is not a question of privilege; it is dispute and debate between the minister and the hon. member. I think we should move on to the next subject.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE, MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO ARRESTS FOLLOWING REFUSAL TO OBEY INJUNCTIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question about the strike at the port of Montreal. The Minister of Labour being absent, I shall ask it of the Minister of Transport or to the Minister of Justice.

Does the government intend to enforce the injunctions issued and have people been arrested up to now?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the ordinary administration of justice and the enforcement of rules are in the hands of the provincial Attorneys General rather than in the hands of the federal Attorney General.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE, MONTREAL—INTERVENTION OF DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR TO ACHIEVE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether any minister is now able to answer my earlier question whether the Department of Labour has been in touch with the parties and has been able to do anything to bring the two parties together?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can answer the question partly by saying, in the affirmative, that the Minister of Labour has been aware of this matter and has been in touch with some of the people concerned.

TRANSPORT

INSPECTION OF REPAIRS TO AUTOMOBILES RECALLED BY COMPANIES FOR CORRECTION OF DEFECTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the current policy of the Ford Motor Company of only installing audible warning devices on cars with defective wheel mounts instead of actually correcting these dangerous defects, has the Minister of Transport considered establishing regulations whereby repairs made to recalled vehicles will be subject to rigid testing and inspection by the Department of Transport?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again, this question would require a very long answer to reply fully to the hon. member. I can say that we have established what he has described as rigid inspection. May I take the question as notice to find out exactly what form those inspections take.

Mr. MacKay: Will the minister undertake to publish a periodic list of all makes and models recalled, specifying the nature of the defect and the steps taken by the manufacturer to remedy it?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to mislead the hon. member, but I believe such a list is already in existence and is in fact published. I will get it for him.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY CLOSURE—REPRESENTATIONS TO DENMARK FOLLOWING BAN—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Did the government, either through the Department of External Affairs or the minister's department, officially contact the Danish government immediately after the ban on the Atlantic salmon fishery was imposed, outlining what we had done and requesting the withdrawal of that country from the fishery? If so, will the minister table the documentation?

[Mr. Lang.]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we have had numerous discussions with the Danes over the past 12 months. I personally went to Copenhagen and spent several days there trying to convince the Danish government that they ought to change their high seas fishing policy. There is some correspondence on the matter which I would be glad to make available to the hon. member.

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINGENCY PLAN TO INDUCE DANES TO CEASE FISHING FOR SALMON ON HIGH SEAS—POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF CANADA FROM ICNAF

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): In view of the minister's admission outside the House yesterday that he does not expect Danish co-operation, can he indicate whether Canada has a contingency plan to achieve the withdrawal of the Danes? Second, is Canada willing to follow the lead of the United States and lay our involvement in ICNAF on the line unless we get more co-operation on the basis of conservation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the position we are taking in Washington relative to the Danes is that they should stop fishing off West Greenland immediately. We hope they will stop. I was asked what the chances are of their stopping, and I would not say they were very high. Certainly we are continuing to maintian pressure, and I should not like to leave the impression that we are absolutely certain they will be adamant and will withstand our very logical and persuasive argument.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not answered the second part of the question. Can he say whether Canada is willing to follow the lead of the United States, as indicated in a statement of yesterday, and say that unless we get more co-operation in the area of conservation we will lay our involvement in ICNAF on the line and get out of the organization?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the indication in the press is that the United States has stated that if it does not get its way it will withdraw from ICNAF. I think this would be extremely unfortunate. I think we are making considerable progress through ICNAF. Canada is relying on the success of the North Atlantic Commission to bring about quotas and a rational system of fishing close to our coasts.

POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL EXTENSION OF CANADIAN JURISDICTION TO COVER CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary or related question to the previous ones concerning fisheries. In view of the statement yesterday by the United States Under Secretary of Commerce, Mr. James Lynn, to the effect that the American government has under advisement the possible withdrawal of that country from ICNAF, the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries, is the Minister of Fisheries or the government giving consideration at the moment to extending unilaterally our fisheries jursidiction over the Canadian continental shelf under legislation that would be comparable to that introduced by Iceland?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): No, not at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. What position will the government of Canada take at next week's meeting of the NATO foreign ministers in Brussels about the continued membership in the alliance of Greece?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge that Canada's position at the next meeting will differ from the position taken in the past.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED DUMPING OF BRITISH COLUMBIA EGGS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of reports that British Columbia eggs are being dumped into the province of Ontario at prices as low as 22 cents or 23 cents for grade A large, and in view of the desperate financial losses being suffered by Ontario egg producers, will the Department of Agriculture launch an immediate investigation into this urgent problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for raising this question. Of course, the department is considering all possible implications, but it is not always easy to determine exactly whether or not there is actually any dumping. However, we have to deplore battles between producers of various provinces and I believe it is one of the main reasons for insisting on some final agreement between provinces and on using the provisions of Bill C-176 which provides for a settlement of these problems.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED CARRIAGE OF KOOTENAY COAL BY U.S. RAILWAY—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF POSSIBLE ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS ON WHITE ROCK AREA

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to direct to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the decision of the Supreme Court a short while ago which is believed to give a green light to the carriage of Canadian coal by railway into the United States and thence by a United States railway back into the lower mainland of British Columbia en route to Roberts Bank. As well as giving some consideration to the potential unemployment involved in that decision, will the minister look into the ecological factors as the railway concerned, the Burlington Northern, runs through one of Canada's finest scenic resorts, White Rock, a part of the Surrey-White Rock area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to do the latter. The current status of the case in question, as I undertook to find out for the hon. member for York South, is that the case has not actually been finally disposed of. The effect of the Supreme Court ruling was to permit the applicant to go back and reapply to the Canadian Transport Commission. Simultaneously with their court action they filed an appeal before the CTC. Both of these matters are still open and for that reason the case is still, in a sense, sub judice.

INTERIM MEASURES PENDING IMPLEMENTATION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. I think he is the appropriate minister under the circumstances. In view of the fact the government is admittedly having some difficulty in bringing into effect the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, can the minister inform the House what intermediate measures are being taken by the government to ensure that our Arctic waters are not polluted in the interim? Second, can the minister tell us how soon this act will be proclaimed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have doubts as to the first part of the question. The hon. member is asking for a statement which should be made on motions. The minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the first part of the question. I do not see anything wrong with the second part.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be making a statement in the next few days on this subject.

If so, when did the United States authorities, either directly or indirectly, make known to him or his department the fact that this man had been convicted of offences involving moral turpitude?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was the minister responsible at the time of the admission of this man into Canada. I did approve of that admission with full knowledge of the facts, but not with any pressure from any government of which I am aware.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—REMISSIONS TO COMPANIES UNDER MACHINERY PROGRAM—ALLEGED FAILURE TO REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my most of the time friend, the hon. member for York South, asked me yesterday what the reason was for the failure to report individual remissions over $1,000 under the machinery program as required by Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, deplored by the Auditor General at page 107 of his report. The "reason" is simply that the practice followed in 1971 was the same as the practice in previous years. There are approximately 17,000 remissions per annum under the machinery program of my department, and it would be impractical to list them all in the public accounts. What we do is list the numbers of the Orders in Council covering these remissions. The information requested is available at the statutory instruments office in the Varette building on Albert Street.

If so, has the minister any good word as to lower prices for Scotch whiskey that will bring happiness and be of interest to all hon. members?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure there is urgency to this question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: —but there appears to be general interest in the House. Hon. members appear to be very anxious to hear the minister's response.

TARIFF REMISSION ON MICHELIN TIRE IMPORTS—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ARRANGEMENT FOR OTHER TIRE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In reply to a question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Waterloo, the minister stated that an offer by his department to tire companies other than Michelin embodied the same tariff remission concessions that were offered to the Michelin company. I was informed yesterday in categorical terms by the president of one of these other firms that no such offer had ever been made by the government. In view of this, will the minister take a minute to explain what he intended by his answer yesterday?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I was that precise I apologize! I thought I used the words "the same general philosophy". In the case of Michelin the philosophy is that the company imports into Canada certain types of tires that they do not produce here and produces more for the domestic and the export markets of other types of tires. The same philosophy would have been provided as part of the "tire plan" I talked about yesterday.

Mr. Broadbent: Is the minister saying to the House that precisely the same financial incentives were proposed along this line to the other tire companies?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said. The "same philosophy" would have been incorporated in the tire plan which the department discussed with the other interested Canadian tire companies.

• (1150)

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that, in addition to the millions of dollars in concessions that have been made in the form of DREE grants and tax remission programs that have already been made public, I have learned that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member in his question and two supplementaries is really indicating what he has learned, information that he has received. This is not the purpose of the question period. The hon. member should ask his question without conveying information as he has been doing.

Mr. Broadbent: I accept your correction, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact it is now known that, in addition to the previous concessions and remissions to Michelin, the company has also been granted the privilege of writing off over a two-year period their total capital costs involving capital equipment and plant equipment, which was not publicly known before, and in view of other complicated tax concessions which have not yet been fully clarified, would the minister consider making a statement early next week on the total financial package that has been offered to the company and the return that the Canadian economy is supposed to obtain?

Mr. Pepin: I will do my best, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance, who is absent, is responsible for this particular matter and I will pass these questions on to him. But may I say that any other tire company which might have used the plan that was suggested would also have benefited from regional development funds, acceleration of depreciation rates and that sort of thing, which are legal practices in Canada.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The last series of questions and answers has brought us to two minutes beyond the question period. I am sure the hon. member will be given an opportunity early next week to ask his supplementary. We might start the question period on Monday with the hon. gentleman's supplementary. Orders of the day. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. McIntosh: No, Mr. Speaker; I thought you were going to recognize me. I wished to put a supplementary to an earlier question by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Speaker: I did indicate at that time that the question was out of order and there could not be a supplementary to a question that was out of order. I have just indicated to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings that the question period has already expired. I am sure the hon. member's question is of interest and it can also be asked on Monday. I believe that the spokesman for the official opposition is anxious to get started on the speech he wants to deliver to the House, so we will call orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED EROSION OF PARLIAMENT'S CONTROL OVER GOVERNMENT SPENDING AS A RESULT OF EVASION OF CONSTITUTIONAL SAFEGUARDS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

This House, noting the continuing erosion of Parliament's control over government spending of public moneys due to government evasion of constitutional and legal safeguards as noted in the 1970-71 report of the Auditor General, and due to imperfect procedural structure, reaffirms the fundamental principle of the Canadian constitution that parliament must control expenditures of public moneys.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a terrible indictment of this government that in this year A.D. 1972 the parliamentary opposition feels compelled to move, in terms of this kind, a motion such as the one Your Honour has just read. It is not the first time this has happened. Two years ago, on April 21, 1970, my leader moved a motion in not quite the same terms but along the same general lines. This motion included the following statement:

That this House condemns the government for criticizing the Auditor General of Canada for carrying out his duties according to law; and reasserts its support of the principle of unfettered parliamentary scrutiny of government expenditures—

And so on. As I say, that was two years ago. Since that time a lot of water has gone under the bridge. There have been two more annual reports issued by the Auditor General and Tabled in this House. I think it is a shocking thing that at this time we should be compelled to move such a motion.

Two years ago, on April 21, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), in replying on behalf of the government—as I assume he will again today—made this statement as reported at page 6119 of Hansard. After referring to the motion, he said:

This statement puts forward principles which are unexceptionable.

Obviously it would appear that the government and the hon. gentleman accepted those principles. I thought at the time, going back to a Biblical quotation from, I think, Luke, that there is more joy in heaven over one Liberal sinner who has repented—and I see another leaving the House at this time—than seventy and two just Conservatives who needed no repentance.

When we read the Auditor General's report that has so recently been placed in our hands, it is obvious that there was no real belief on the part of the President of the Treasury Board in what he said at that time. As a matter of fact, when we read his speech of April 21, 1970, as well as a similar speech that he made on another occasion, I think I was deluded in accepting in good faith his statement that this principle was one which was unexceptionable. I say that because, as reported at page 6121, the President of the Treasury Board went on to say this:

> We will be proposing that the government ought to be obliged to report to Parliament, to the Public Accounts Committee, on the totality of the Auditor General's report, on all the criticisms he has made of the government and the public service.

Raising its ugly head at that time was the intention of the government, which has now been confirmed, that it should have the opportunity to rebut in advance of presentation to this House the statements made by the Auditor General, an official of parliament who reports to this House. The government, obviously angered, worried and concerned, as it should properly be, about these very reasonable criticisms that had been made over and over again, was planning to try to reduce the effect of those criticisms by making a rebuttal in advance, instead of following the proper practice of having its representative appear before the public accounts committee.

On another occasion, namely on March 7, 1972, we found it necessary to bring forward another motion in my name, not in the same terms as this, of course, but dealing with the same general issue. At that time the President of the Treasury Board told us exactly what the government thought of the attempts made by this party and the House to look into this matter. As reported at page 606 of Hansard for that date the President of the Treasury Board made this statement:

> After the next election we undoubtedly will have another look at this problem of the allocation of our most valuable commodity, time, and will have noted the experiences of the present parliament.

That is a clear and present threat by the President of the Treasury Board that if after the next election this country is unfortunate enough to have another Liberal government, which would include the hon. gentleman and, I assume, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as members, then there will be an attempt to restrict opportunities for parliament to examine the very important issues that should be examined. I say that is a clear threat by the hon. gentleman, and I hope that the members of his own party, as well as the public, will take note of it. This, Mr. Speaker, is their reply to debates of this sort that we have launched in a statesmanlike way to try to secure some reasonable and rational discussion of this very serious problem.

• (1200)

I could go back to the British North America Act and to the Financial Administration Act to outline these principles which have been established over the generations. It is the right of the representatives of the people, and not the right of the Treasury Board or the government, to scrutinize and examine the expenditures of government to ensure that the government proceeds according to the accepted principles and practices of parliamentary dominance in so far as the expenditure of public money is concerned. This government has forgotten, if it ever knew, that these principles exist.

What was the reaction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday? I raised this matter and other hon. members pursued it in the House during the question period as well as outside. What did the Prime Minister suggest as a remedy? The right hon. gentleman was going to arrange for the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) to refer the report to the Public Accounts Committee. In heaven's name, what is the situation now of the Public Accounts Committee? Because of slovenliness, incompetence, indecision, inability or a lack of desire on the part of the government to get the Auditor General's report of previous years into the hands of the Public Accounts committee in the proper time, the Public Accounts Committee is now months behind in its study of the 1970 report. That report has only been very scantily digested. There has not been adequate opportunity to do very much about that report. The Public Accounts Committee is still charged with and engaged in looking into this report.

I know the government will say the Auditor General had some responsibility because his report did not come into the hands of the government in time. I deny that allegation and refute it in advance, because I can see by the look in the eyes of the President of the Privy Council that this is what he is going to say. If the Auditor General did not get his report into the hands of the government in the proper time on occasions, he has made it abundantly clear by statements in the Public Accounts Committee and elsewhere that it was because this government, whether deliberately or by inadvertence, has failed to provide him with the staff and equipment he needs to do his job. That is where the fault lies, right at the door of the government, and it cannot hide behind any such statement. In any event, it will probably be weeks or months, knowing the way this government is operating, before the Public Accounts Committee is able to complete its deliberations and make its reports in respect of the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971.

What consummate duplicity on the part of gentlemen opposite to suggest that the answer to our legitimate complaints and the answer to the anxiety, frustration and anger of the people of Canada about this continuing example of unparallelled government extravagance, waste and stupidity in the expenditure of our money is this reference of the Auditor General's Report for 1971 to the Public Accounts Committee. This Chamber is the place in which people should be looking at the case made by the Auditor General, not in respect of the items, but in respect of his statement that there is a continuing erosion by the government of the right of this Parliament to control funds which are expended by the government of Canada.

Let me buttress that statement by reference to the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1971. The Auditor General writes in paragraph 50, at page 22:

> Reference was made in paragraph 47 of our 1970 report to the inclusion in the 1969-70 Estimates of amounts which were not required to meet expenditure coming in course of payment during that year.

I pause there to emphasize the fact that the Auditor General is saying, in his current report, that this is not the first time he has brought to the attention of this House and the people of Canada a very serious allegation in respect of the government. In the 1970 report, there was paragraph 47, which I will not bother to read as it is along the same lines.

The Auditor General goes on to say in paragraph 50 of his 1971 report:

> Nevertheless they were recorded as expenditure of the year under the authority of special wording in the several vote texts in the Appropriation Acts. These amounts, totalling $172,685,000, formed part of certain balances totalling $296,663,000 at March 31, 1970 which were available without further reference to Parliament to meet obligations coming in course of payment subsequent to that date. We pointed out that one of the most important controls exercised by Parliament over public expenditure was provided by section 20 of the Financial Administration Act which directs that:
> "All estimates of expenditures submitted to Parliament shall be for the services coming in course of payment during the fiscal year."

In plain defiance of that Act of Parliament, the financial bible under which this government or any government of Canada should be operating, this government has arrogated the right to spend millions of dollars without obtaining the consent of this Parliament. The same situation prevailed in respect of the previous year.

The Auditor General has placed side by side at page 24, in the continuation of his description in paragraph 50, the sums of money which were available to this government to spend without proper appropriation or approval by this Parliament; one year it was $291 millions and in another year $296 million.

The Auditor General ends up with this statement:

> We reiterate our view that one of the most important controls exercised by Parliament over public expenditure is its requirement that all estimates of expenditure submitted to it shall be for the services coming in course of payment during the fiscal year. This control is seriously weakened when funds are credited to special accounts to be available for spending in future years.

Then, the Auditor General goes on in the next paragraph to deal with the government contingencies program. We have had a lot of debate in the committee about this enormous special fund which, from year to year, aggregates well over $100 million. In the supplementary estimates, and I refer to supplementary estimates (B) for the year 1971-72, under the heading of "Treasury Board", there is an item, Vote 5b, government contingencies. The government, through the medium of this particular supplementary estimate, completely altered the purposes for which the vote of $75 million had been made available as part of the contingencies fund. I know it can be said that this Parliament did approve this item. This Parliament was bulldozed into approving it.

What happens and how is this approval obtained? We all know that when there are supplementary estimates they are submitted to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee which does not have a great deal of time to consider them. There are usually several hundreds of millions of dollars, involving many departments, and there is pressure on the committee to approve these estimates in order that they may qualify for passage under our Standing Orders. Here is an important deletion involving $75 million, and the committee has an extremely limited amount of time to debate it. There was no opportunity for the House to debate it. These are just illustrations. If I had time I could go through the Auditor General's report from back to front and give even more abundant examples than I have.

There is one more aspect of the government's failure to comply with the proper practices and rules of parliamentary control; that is, the method of legislating through the estimates for large sums of money to be paid out according to the whim of the government. I will give one or two examples. In Supplementary Estimates (A) for 1971-72, at page 44, there is a very large appropriation of some $160 million. This is the device used by the government for the granting of loans to provinces, provincial agencies and municipalities under the Municipal Development and Loan Act for the purpose of assisting in the creation of employment in accordance with terms and conditions set out in agreements entered into between the Minister of Finance and the provinces.

What that means is that the Minister of Finance enters into agreements with the provinces, which are never approved by this House, and which do not constitute any realistic attempt to cope with unemployment, which everybody agrees should be done. I feel very strongly that there should be some greater measure of consultation with Parliament when an amount of $160 million is expended merely by placing an item in the estimates rather than giving Parliament the opportunity it would have had to debate that item had it been contained in a bill. Hon. members know that there is a debate on second reading of a bill, after which it is referred to a committee. There is an opportunity to call witnesses, make proposals and move amendments. The bill then returns to the House for the report and third reading stages. Every stage is calculated to permit a diligent and effective opposition to deal with proposals of this kind and suggest alternative or additional means of coping with a problem.

Again, this procedure is not followed. The government all too often does this through the medium of an item in the estimates, in this case $160 million, and we have a further erosion of that Parliamentary control which is essential if Parliament is to retain any significance at all in the democratic process. I know that emergencies arise, at which time governments must act swiftly and it is not always possible to come to Parliament to secure the requisite consent. However, there is a very heavy burden on any government when it takes some $17 billion or $18 billion of the taxpayer's money out of their pockets every fiscal year without going to Parliament. I say these are the means an alert, intelligent and vigilant government would use to bring in legislation in ample time to permit the type of debate we should have. I deplore that practice which prevents this being done. I have referred to the means by which the government is gradually getting away from the type of control we ought to maintain.

There are other illustrations of this type of legislation by estimate which are indicative of an exceedingly bad practice. This is done by all governments. I believe it is about time we called attention to the fact that the members of this House and the country will no longer countenance such a practice. In addition to the Auditor General, the Public Accounts Committee has looked into this practice. As long ago as the year 1966-67, in the 13th report of the Public Accounts Committee, the committee looked at the general question of parliamentary control, filed a caveat and called the attention of the House and inferentially of the country to the fact that there was a weakening of parliamentary control. This was in another context, but it was done after very careful consideration. I took the time to read the minutes of proceedings and evidence which preceded the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee. This recommendation was neglected. Nothing was done about it. This recommendation is one of 38 others which at the present time are lying untended. No action has been taken on them. The government either has neglected or rejected them, or is simply incapable of action on them.

The blue ribbon committee of this House charged with the responsibility of examining the public accounts through the medium of the Auditor General's report is a committee which, up until recent years, at any rate, has had a very enviable reputation for non-partisan objective examination in carrying out its duties. Here we have 38 recommendations going back to the fourth report in 1963. For nine years the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee have been piling up, and we now find at this time that 38 of them have been neglected or rejected. This is the stage at which the Prime Minister was willing to leave the 1971 Auditor General's report. I had the honour of serving as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee for several years. I thoroughly enjoyed it. I believe it was a very responsible committee. I must say, however, that in recent years there has been some falling off of the spirit of non-partisanship which did exist and which always should be present in the committee.

The other day, while re-reading the story of Becket and King Henry II, I wondered whether the Prime Minister, having just finished reading a copy of the Auditor General's report of two years ago, said to those around him, "Is there no one who will rid me of this man?" I think those words are similar to the words of King Henry when he wanted to get rid of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), the then President of the Privy Council, and the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) who was then I believe the government House leader, were quite eager to volunteer to make comments about the Auditor General which were not in keeping with their high responsibilities as ministers of the Crown. They were prepared to appear before the Public Accounts Committee and make remarks before that committee which would have had the effect of seriously crippling the function of the Auditor General of making a very impartial study.

There is no question in my mind, as a result of my appearances at the committee and reading the transcript of the proceedings, that there has been a greater disposition on the part of government members on that committee to attempt to hide some of the misdeeds of this government. I hope this is only temporary and will change. However, there are very few lines of defence left to the harassed taxpayer. By reason of certain changes in the rules, with respect to which some of my colleagues will later be dealing, the opportunities in this House are becoming increasingly restricted for dealing in the way in which we should be dealing with the right of this parliament to continue to exercise control over the public purse. The Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee, with which he works in the closest liaison, are probably the front line of defence the taxpayer has. I would hope—and I say this quite sincerely—that what I seem to have detected as a form of more aggressive partisan conduct on the part of government members of the committee will be changed and that they will return to the objective and impartial study which is essential if the committee is to do its job.

• (1220)

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has indicated that he hopes that the attitude of members of the government on the Public Accounts Committee would be changed to a non-partisan one. I wonder if the hon. member would like to single out any members of that committee he feels are guilty of such an approach. I feel that this is an insult to members, not only on this side of the House but to the entire committee, which certainly in my four years of experience on it—and I have seen the hon. member only once at that committee's meetings—has behaved in a singularly non-partisan way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I am sorry the hon. member is so sensitive, but since he is attending the committee continuously he might be better qualified that I am to name the hon. members on his own side who are not non-partisan. However, I believe in the value and efficacy of this committee; there is no doubt about it. Obviously, we are getting so close to an election now that it is very unlikely this committee will be able to complete its deliberations, even on the 1970 report. I hope that after the next election when this parliament reconvenes, regardless of which party forms the government, the new public accounts committee will put behind it the bickering and partisanship which have crept into it which I say, in spite of what the hon. member has to say, does exist and can be easily detected.

One more point raised by the Auditor General is the question of his staff. This has been a continuing irritant. It has been referred to for over ten years. There has been an obvious need to secure a more effective method by which the Auditor General will be able to select his staff. I will not get into the details of it. I hope that either this government or the government that succeeds it will put together a new bill. I think we have to take the Auditor General out of the Financial Administration Act. When that new bill is put together, many of the proposals which have been advocated by the Auditor General and his staff and which in many cases have been approved by the committee, should be contained in it. I should like to make reference only to page 4 of the report for this year where I find the following statement, but because my time is running short I will read only the last sentence of the paragraph. The Auditor General is referring there to the action of the Treasury Board in downgrading 28 senior members of his staff:

> In my opinion, this action by the Treasury Board Secretariat is unfair and discriminates against the Auditor General. It should be corrected forthwith. If it is allowed to stand it will mean that his office is prevented from employing auditors in the highest classification in the public service of Canada. It will also mean that in order to reach the highest classification in their profession, his most experienced auditors must leave the office of the Auditor General.

I sincerely hope that when the new legislation is introduced this will be one of the problems which, along with others, will be solved.

I see that my time is close to being up. I want to close on this note. I know that when people occupy treasury benches, particularly those who have served previously in the establishment, in the civil service, they have a disposition to assume that they are the sole arbitrators of the way money is spent. I concede to them the essential right to initiate programs of expenditures—that is their duty and responsibility as the executive. But they move from that position to gradually assuming that they are lords of all they survey, that parliament exists only to be a rubber stamp for their wishes and views. They assume that members of parliament have no right to challenge their decisions regarding the expenditures of the public funds. The sole right of making decisions does not rest on the Prime Minister, on the President of the Treasury Board, on me, on the leader of my party or on any single member of this parliament; it rests with all the people of Canada. But the elected representatives sitting in the House are the people who, more nearly and more truly, are able to judge what the people of Canada wish in their infinite strength and wisdom, and I suggest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He can continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Perhaps there might be unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his last sentence.

Mr. Baldwin: I will not take advantage of the generosity of the House, other than to say that I hope it would be the right of the House from now on, in the light of the representations which have been made to the government and in the light of the public reaction to the Auditor General's report as well as to his previous reports, to ensure that there will be returned to parliament the control of the expenditures of public funds in this country.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this discussion of the motion which the official opposition has put before the House, I would first like to sketch the background against which it seems to me the Auditor General's report and the spendings of the vast and varied departments and agencies of government, should be reviewed.

Alleged Loss of Control of Public Moneys

It is quite clear that the public sector spending at all levels of government constitutes the biggest big business in the country. In this place we are the trustees of the spending of the public's $15 billion or $16 billion of tax money a year. The government is into a variety of enterprises and services. The public is involved, through its agency the Post Office, in the delivery of millions of letters every day, the ownership and operation of thousands of motor vehicles in the service of various departments. The public is concerned and involved in the rubber business, the mining business, the housing, highway and even the movie business.

One item which we approved at this level some years ago had to do with the cost of construction of the National Arts Centre. By my calculation every Canadian man, woman and child was involved in the expenditure of approximately $2.20 to put the National Arts Centre here in our capital. In this way my own riding of Surrey-White Rock contributed through taxation something in the order of a quarter of a million dollars for the building of the National Arts Centre.

As one of our party's representatives on the Public Accounts Committee I feel at every session of that committee that I am plugged in, so to speak, to everybody's pocketbook and on the other hand to everybody's wellbeing. The same principles apply at the level of the Public Accounts Committee as they do at the level of the directors of a business or an association, the trustees of a church, or the officers of a trade union. We are all concerned with what we take in and what we put out. In our case, at this level of financial control or investigation, we should note that a great part of the billions we oversee are fixed charges. Defence and interest payments seem to be firmly in that category. Together, they make up about one fourth of our entire federal spending. In my view our spending in both these areas could be materially reduced by no more revolutionary a means than that employed by any sensible economically minded married couple. However, in line with all this, Mr. Speaker, and checking into the intricate and sometimes duplicative efforts and facilities of the federal government and it agencies, we have the Auditor General and his staff delving into and exposing the hundreds of items of governmental goofs and wastes.

• (1230)

The Public Accounts Committee recently compiled an historical record, extending from 1930 to 1970, of all the recommendations of the various public accounts committees over that 40 year period. It is a book of some size, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure it will make very interesting, if painful, reading. It is a history of waste exposed, and in too many instances left to continue. As a former newspaperman I can very well appreciate such juicy items as the ones featured in the press yesterday under the heading "Henderson's Horrors"—items about the mothballed hydrofoil that cost Canadians $8 per family, about the Prime Minister's flights, about the puppets that didn't puppet. But while we cry out at this waste of public money—money that could have been put to good use such as increasing the well-being of our older or younger people, or such as reducing the taxation of our middle aged people—while we cry out at this cataloguing of bungling and waste, that is not enough.

There are two other areas in regard to the revelations in the Auditor General's report which must be objected to in the highest degree. The first is the revelation which the report makes of the government's tendency, (a) to put special wording into the vote texts of appropriation acts, and (b) to record certain items as expenditures duly approved by parliament which were in fact funds retained for spending in subsequent years and which should have gone back to parliament for re-approval. Millions of dollars have been secured by the government in this way in the 1970-71 period. This strikes at parliament's right to represent the public in the outlay of the public's money. This must be stopped. We recommend that where any change occurs in the normal course of presentation of estimates, in the wording or standards which previously prevailed, a note or other indication calling attention to the variation be included in that particular item. That would be a guide to parliament rather than, as has sometimes been the case, a blind to parliament.

Again, Mr. Speaker, dealing with the millions of dollars that the government gets by contingency votes for supplementing the appropriations of the various departments, back in 1966 the Public Accounts Committee urged that any additional amounts required by each department must be made the subject of a supplementary estimate, prepared by the department concerned for submission to parliament. If that procedure were carried out, it would put an end to the evasion of parliamentary control of public funds by the building up of reserves through contingency votes.

A second serious thing about the report of the Auditor General is the effect of the disclosures of the inefficiency, sloth and wastefulness which are present in some departments of government. The effect of this will be to the discredit and disdain of our parliamentary system. I wonder what the farmer, the logger, the fisherman, the plant or office worker, or the old age pensioner must think of parliament after this catalogue of waste. I wonder what the country must think of parliament, never mind what it thinks about the government, after reading the Auditor General's detailed, yet limited because of staff problems, report. It seems to me that the disclosures by the Auditor General strike at the root of the public's faith in their elected representatives. I believe that this House, the Public Accounts Committee, and particularly the government should put an end to the kind of thing which is exposed by the Auditor General. If we do not do so we will in effect be guilty of undermining the parliamentary system.

In the view of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, all hon. members of this House should be united in their concern over the waste that the Auditor General exposes, and in many cases exposes every year without result. We should see to it that more power is given to the Auditor General, and that his staff is not handicapped, but indeed enlarged and upgraded, to find out and eliminate the inefficiency and waste which are tabulated in his report. We in the New Democratic Party are not content to exclaim over the scores of detailed items of non-productive expenditures as tabulated by the Auditor General. We are all for attacking them, and we do so in and out of committee, but that is not enough. I think we need to do two more things if the war on waste at the Ottawa level is to be won.

We need to follow up and follow through on the Auditor General's recommendations against leaks in public funds. His report states that of the 41 recommendations which had not been implemented or otherwise dealt with at March 31, 1970, 31 still remain. Seven additional recommendations are capable of specific implementation, but have not yet been implemented even though they were made by the Public Accounts Committee. The House should concern itself more than has been the case in pressing the government to expedite the implementation of the anti-waste recommendations of the Auditor General and of the Public Accounts Committee. We need to follow through to see that the leaks are blocked. But that too, important as it is, is not enough.

In my opinion we should press for a deep, broad and far-going survey, or inquiry or investigation of the system of the government's ways of doing business. It is not sufficient for us to examine the fruits of the system, not enough to take up individual results of a basic and continuing fault. We must get to the root as well as to the fruit of federal incompetence. I believe that the Auditor General himself made a rather similar proposal. In the Public Accounts Committee we read from year to year his reports of individual instances of bungling, but from year to year the same stream of dereliction continues to flow. I urge, in addition to the motion before us, that parliament either through the Public Accounts Committee, or perhaps through a select committee, should probe into the depths of the iceberg, the tip alone of which shows itself in the Auditor General's report. We should probe into this faulty system. Let us examine and correct the system, and not just complain about what it produces.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, we of the NDP support the motion moved by the Official Opposition. We press for more power and freedom of action for the Auditor General, and we intend to make detailed representations on that point at the committee level. We seek practical safeguards to stop the government's tendency to evade parliament's scrutiny and understanding of its accounts. We ask for a determination by all hon. members to follow through and see to it that the anti-waste recommendations are implemented. Finally, we call for an in depth inquiry into the system that produces the on-going waste and bungling in the expenditure of public funds.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the motion the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) moved today is most important because it deals with the report the Auditor General of Canada presents every year. Every time this report comes out, we note that he points out innumerable costly errors for which civil servants are responsible.

Every year the Auditor General presents a report which, to my mind, is revolting. If the Canadian public were to read it, I believe a revolt would break out in Canada. In fact, this report points out the costly errors made by people who think they are competent and honest.

I feel the errors are deliberate in most cases. A person can make an error once, but when the error is repeated, one can wonder about the honesty of some civil servants.

Following the submission of those reports, we unfortunately note that there is a certain rivalry between the Auditor General and the government. Indeed, it became obvious a few months ago when the government blamed the Auditor General for failing to submit his report in time.

The Auditor General stated why it was late, as he had already done on many occasions at the end of several financial years.

At the beginning of the report which has just been given to us, the Auditor General mentions once again the difficulties he experiences when auditing public accounts. I will quote in that connection the last two paragraphs of section 8 on page 4 of the report which in my opinion are liable to throw some light on the situation. They are as follows:

> In my opinion, this action by the Treasury Board Secretariat is unfair and discriminates against the Auditor General. It should be corrected forthwith. If it is allowed to stand it will mean that his Office is prevented from employing auditors in the highest classification in the Public Service of Canada. It will also mean that in order to reach the highest classification in their profession, his most experienced auditors must leave the Office of the Auditor General.

This is the position as it stands. The Auditor General is denied the right to hire the staff he needs and to determine their salaries at his discretion. This makes it very difficult for him to find the qualified staff he requires and even prevents him from retaining the one he presently has. If these employees want a pay increase or an improvement in their working conditions or of their situation, to which every federal civil servant is entitled as would be any other employee of the private sector or of an other level of government, they have no choice but to leave the Auditor General's Office and seek another job in private concerns or in government departments.

I proceed with my quotation from paragraph 8 of the report:

> This action points up more clearly than anything else that if the Auditor General of Canada is to be truly independent he must be free to recruit the staff he needs and to determine their salary levels within the framework of the Public Service of Canada.

This is the situation, Mr. Speaker. Working conditions in the Auditor General's office are really difficult. Apparently it needs at least 28 or 30 officials to attain the necessary strength to perform worthwhile duties expected to be done within reasonable time.

Mr. Speaker, yet the Auditor General's office manages fairly well to audit all the departments' books. Maybe it does not work under the best of conditions but it succeeds just the same in making audits and in pointing out operating and management faults within these departments. Each year the Auditor General's report is studied by a committee especially set up for this purpose and whose chairman is chosen among the official opposition members so as to make it as unprejudiced as possible, it seems. In turn the Public Accounts Committee brings in each year several reports and makes recommendations to the government. But the government is reluctant to accept and implement these recommendations.

The report of the Auditor General for this year mentions at least 38 recommendations of the Committee on Public Accounts that still lie idle and have not been implemented. And one wonders whether the government or some of its departments have at least examined them.

Mr. Speaker, in view of this situation, we have no other alternative than to ask once more the Committee on Public Accounts to scrutinize the report of the Auditor General of Canada, to make once more to the government recommendations that it will deem fair and necessary. Let us hope that the next government whatever it may be will take steps to implement these recommendations and to grant the Auditor General of Canada and his staff all the freedom required to perform their duties adequately, for we hold the view that the office of the Auditor General of Canada is in a certain way the keeper of the nation's business. He has a duty to reveal publicly mistakes that have been made, to make suggestions and to trust that the government will correct the situation.

If you consider all the amounts that have been spent unnecessarily by the various government departments, you realize that millions of dollars have been spent uselessly. Here is one more reason to be concerned over this situation which has been recurring year after year without the government doing anything about it.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will give more special consideration to the recommendations made in this report, as well as to those of the public accounts committee.

Unless steps are taken, the Canadian public will increasingly lose confidence in this nation's administration, and this could have serious consequences.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I again urge the government to accept the Auditor General's main recommendation that he be given all possible freedom in the hiring of his staff, and at the same time, that he be allowed to keep the qualified staff which is now serving him , in the interests of highest efficiency.

[English]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate may I say that we welcome the motion for two reasons. First, we welcome its operative part, that part saying that this House reaffirms the fundamental principle of the Canadian constitution that parliament must control expenditures of public moneys. That is one part of the motion to which the government does and can fully subscribe.

Mr. Baldwin: It has a funny way of showing it.

Mr. Drury: Unfortunately, the motion is unsatisfactory in that it appears to have been based on a series of false premises. If it were in order to amend this motion, we would point out or propose some amendments which would correct the motion, instead of noting those items in the motion which, I suggest, are inaccurate, to say the least. I would, instead, suggest to the House that it note the steps progressively taken by the House, largely inspired by the present government, for improving the flow of information to members and for improving substantially both the capacity and the ability of members of the House to give effective and adequate scrutiny to the accounts of the government.

Mr. Hees: The minister is a great comedian.

Mr. Drury: All this has been done in the name of reaffirming the principle stated in the motion, to which we all subscribe. Some of the steps which have been taken I will list now and I will speak on them at greater length later.

First, there is the new procedural system of supply. I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) speaking, apparently in entire ignorance of the improvements that have been made in the instruments for scrutinizing government accounts and plans. As a result, one must assume either that he was being eminently cynical or that he has been absent from the House for long periods.

Mr. Pepin: The second possibility can be discarded.

Mr. Drury: The first step, I suggest, to be considered is the new system of supply and the arrangements under which there is not only more extended House consideration of government programs and expenditures, but a much more effective and hugely increased ability on the part of members to scrutinize government proposals and proposed expenditures through the committee system.

Second, may I point to the revised form of the estimates. The estimates, as now put before the House, are in a form that is substantially different from that of a number of years ago. In this connection, the government has already expressed its appreciation of the very useful work and advice provided by the Public Accounts Committee in changing the form of the estimates and in making them much more informative and much more coherent, with the result that the ability of members to understand the real substance of programs and proposals is greater than it was in the past.

Mr. Baldwin: There is much more money in them.

Mr. Drury: The hon. member says there is much more money in them. That is true. He seems reluctant to recognize that Canada is growing, that things are growing bigger and faster.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member is a true Conservative, two steps forward, three steps backward.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member's reluctance. Not only is he a member of the Progressive Conservative party, but appears to be somewhat more Conservative than progressive.

Another example of a measure for improving the ability of members of the House to understand and scrutinize and, consequently, criticize if they can the accounts of the government is that measure for providing substantial research resources to the various parties in the House. A substantial allocation of money is provided to each party, to enable the parties to inquire more fully and more profoundly and, consequently, more effectively into proposals put before the House by the government on behalf of the country.

I wish also to refer to a specific piece of legislation which is designed to improve the availability and flow of information to hon. members. My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) referred to it a little while ago. I am referring to the recently enacted Statutory Instruments Act under which the government no longer, as it did in the past, is to make information available on a gratuitous basis. Now, the government is willing, and indeed insists, to being subjected to the statutory obligation to make information of the widest character available. In addition—

Mr. Baldwin: After one year, you have not even appointed the scrutiny committee.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, those are some of the steps which have been taken by the government, which reaffirm by statute and by action, and not by lip service, our belief in the principle which this motion calls on the House to reaffirm. If it were not that the opening words of the motion are inadequate and misleading, we should fully support the substantive part of the motion and, if it were in order, I would be glad to propose an amendment. However, I am advised that this would be out of order.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker? I will deal at greater length and in greater detail later with some of the steps which I have just outlined.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister has just spoiled my dinner.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, at the time of the adjournment for lunch, I was mentioning some of the actions proposed to Parliament and some of the actions directly taken by the government to improve substantially the capacity of Parliament, particularly the House of Commons, to scrutinize in an effective way the programs and activities of the government. I indicated that I would make a rather more detailed reference to this in the current period. The first reference I would like to make is to the new system of supply which, as I indicated earlier, seems to have been imperfectly understood by the hon. member for Peace River in his speech proposing this motion. May I refer the House to a very excellent pamphlet entitled "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent, 1972-73". The first part of this pamphlet is entitled "Parliament is Supreme" and I suggest this conveys an understanding and a belief of the government.

• (1410)

In indicating the kind of new supply arrangements that have been adopted by the House, the pamphlet has this to say:

From Confederation in 1867 through to 1968, the Canadian House of Commons considered these estimates in what was called the Committee of Supply. This Committee was composed of all members of the House and carried out its work in the Commons Chamber. Because only Members of Parliament are allowed to speak in the chamber, no outside witnesses or public servants could be heard or questioned. By the late 1960's, the Committee of Supply was sitting for 40 to 60 days each year, providing about 200 hours of study to the Government's expenditure plan.

The pamphlet then goes on to indicate the new system of reference of estimates to committees of the House for detailed scrutiny:

The Committees may, during their examination of the Estimates, call for the appearance of Ministers and departmental officials. They may also call for departmental papers and records to assist them in their examination. If a Committee wishes, it may hear witnesses from outside the Government who possess specialized knowledge and who can assist the Committee to evaluate specific programs.

The happy result of these new steps is this:

By the time the Estimates are reported to the House, the several Standing Committees have spent a total of about 500 hours in studying the Government's expenditure plan. This is more than twice as much time as was spent by the old Committee of Supply.

While the capacity of the House to examine Estimates has been increased, the ancient tradition has been maintained which guarantees members the right to express their grievances in the House of Commons before approving Government spending estimates. A total of 25 days each year is set aside for the Opposition parties to discuss matters of their choosing.

Then, finally:

It is fundamental to the Parliamentary system that the Government's programs be subjected to this detailed and public scrutiny, for it is in this manner that the public is informed each year about differing views on national objectives, and about issues surrounding the means the Government has chosen for achieving these objectives.

I have quoted at some length from this document because I think it describes in plain and simple language the increased capacity of the House to scrutinize the spending plans and programs of the government, and I suggest is a direct refutation of the notion in the motion that, owing to procedural inadequacies, the House has been stifled and its members are being denied the ancient opportunities they allegedly had for questioning, scrutinizing and criticizing the government's programs and spending plans.

On another aspect of this matter, namely the provision of effective information to the House, I made mention of the fact that in 1970 a new form of estimates was introduced to the House of Commons for the first time. This new form of estimates had been the subject of preparation within the government for some period of months, followed by discussion over a great many meetings with the public accounts committee, as a consequence of which some changes in the original government proposals were made, including those proposed by the committee and willingly accepted. This resulted in a new form of the estimates designed to provide more and better information to hon. members concerning the government's proposals for expenditures in the forthcoming year.

On the occasion of the introduction of these proposals, I said, as reported at page 3468 of Hansard for February 11, 1970:

The tabling of these estimates marks a major step forward in an endeavour by the government to improve the process of resource allocation and to better inform Parliament and the people of Canada of the objectives, operations and costs of the departments and agencies of government. The form of these estimates is radically different from that which has been followed for more than half a century. For the first time the expenditure proposals respecting departments and agencies are clearly formulated in terms of programs. The objectives and sub-objectives of each program are stated and the nature of the program further amplified through a description of the activities carried on in pursuit of program objectives.

I then said:

—I believe that the estimates in the form I am now tabling provide a clearer and more informative presentation than we have had heretofore of the proposed allocations of fiscal resources to the budgetary requirements of Canada.

This, then, Mr. Speaker, was another step in improving the ability of parliament to become aware in a meaningful way of the spending proposals of the government and to scrutinize them. I assume from his opening remarks that the hon. member for Peace River has not yet had time to study the new form in which the estimates are now presented. I received the impression from what he said that he was unaware of the change having been made in 1970.

A further measure introduced by the government for improving the capacity of the House effectively to scrutinize government spending programs, plans and policies was the introduction in 1968 of new, hitherto unavailable, research resources for each of the political parties in the House. In that year there was made available to all parties in the House, with the exception, at the outset, of the government party, funds with which to hire persons of the parties' own choosing, reporting only to them, in the field of research into government operations and activities. For the Conservative party, a sum amounting to $125,000 per year was provided; for the New Democratic Party $35,000 per year and an identical sum for the Social Credit party. Some of the remarks I have heard today indicate that these resources are, of course, being used.

It was not until a year later that a comparable sum was provided to members of the House on the government side. This was another measure through which the government endeavoured to improve the capacity of opposition members, indeed of members of the House generally, effectively to examine, scrutinize, and where necessary criticize, the operations, plans, proposals and programs of the government of the day in order to make sure that there is an adequate accounting, through parliament and its members, to the people of Canada.

• (1420)

This morning all members who spoke made reference to an observation in the Auditor General's report, which is the one under discussion here today, about the shortage in the Auditor General's staff and the causes therefor. This has been quite extensively discussed in the House on a previous occasion, and also in the Public Accounts Committee. Unfortunately, the report bears the date of February 29, which ante-dated the examination by the Public Accounts Committee of the current staff position of the Auditor General's office.

After some four meetings during which the Auditor General and myself made statements, the committee reported its conclusions to the House regarding staff shortages as follows:

Alleged Loss of Control of Public Moneys

The Committee has found that Parliament has provided the funds for the number of staff required by the Auditor General. The problem seems to lie in the difficulty of obtaining and retaining qualified staff to fill the approved positions.

The reasons for these difficulties are complex and will require further consideration by the Committee.

It has been suggested by both the President of the Treasury Board and the Auditor General that the solution lies in an Auditor General's Act.

This was the conclusion the committee came to and, as we all know, this was a committee under the chairmanship of a member of that party represented by the official opposition. It came to this conclusion after some considerable time spent on the matter. It would be rather simplistic to assume there were easy and fast solutions which were being withheld on the grounds of ill-will or some other undesirable motive. The committee agreed that the problem was a complex one and that there was no ready solution within the framework of existing legislation. It proposed that an endeavour should be made to find a way around this, under the terms of a new Auditor General's Act, which would serve the principal purpose of ensuring the independence of the office of the Auditor General and provide, hopefully, a solution to this particular problem. Had this particular inquiry by the Public Accounts Committee taken place at an earlier date, before the report which appears to be dated February 29, probably the wording which has been quoted in the press and here by some hon. members today would have taken a rather different form.

This does not alter the fact that there is a problem, or that the office of the Auditor General must be adequately staffed if it is to carry out the important functions with which Parliament has charged that office. We must have funds to obtain staff which is both adequate in numbers and in professional competence. We, on the part of the government, are prepared to do all we can to support that principle. One of the things in this regard is the production of a new act to be known as the Auditor General's act.

Hon. members are fairly familiar with the history of this matter. Some years ago, the government endorsed the suggestion that there should be an Auditor General's act, and that this office should be removed from the ambit of the Financial Administration Act. The willingness and readiness of the government to go the full length desired by Parliament in this respect has been reiterated in this House on a number of occasions by representatives of the government, including myself. Let me make reference to testimony I gave before the Public Accounts Committee on March 16, 1972. I quote:

Finally the Government has even been prepared to consider exempting the Auditor General entirely from all Treasury Board authority in the matter of budget and staff levels. In April 1970 I said this to the House:

"The Auditor General has made certain proposals which would assure his independence from the normal rules which govern the civil service, thus by inference further affirming his independence of the government. The Government has been prepared to accept the Auditor General's propositions, and indeed to go further than he proposed."

The Government stands by this position, and the alternative which I proposed in 1970 to achieve this end.

[Mr. Drury.]

I should like to reaffirm that the government will support and encourage the drafting of a new Auditor General's act designed to provide the independence to that office which is essential if the Auditor General is to carry out the functions given to him by Parliament. I am glad to say I have been informed that the Public Accounts Committee, which has been charged by the House with producing legislative proposals in relation to such a bill, has already appointed a sub-committee to initiate the work, and I understand this sub-committee is now at work. I suppose we must recognize here again the fact that, as the Public Accounts Committee earlier found, this is a complex question and one should not anticipate that either the House committee or the sub-committee will be able to solve all the problems in a matter of days or even weeks. However, one looks forward to the occasion when the committee will be able to produce a draft of a bill for presentation to and scrutiny by the House. I trust it will be rather more sympathetically received than the earlier one which was rejected by the official opposition without even an examination of the provisions of the bill itself, or indeed any consideration of the fact that the bill was merely a reflection of the proposals made by the committee, to which the official opposition provides the chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: Is that the one the government was driven to withdraw?

Mr. Drury: That is the one which was rejected without consideration by the official opposition.

Mr. Fairweather: And by every editorial writer in Canada.

Mr. Drury: Indeed, I want to make it quite clear that regardless of what was said and done, the opposition did ensure that no adequate examination of the bill ever took place. I hope next time the official opposition, which I am quite sure will be the same old gang, will be rather more objective and treat the bill, to be produced by the Public Accounts Committee, with more objectivity and sympathy than it did the earlier one. I suggest this indicates that this government, far from having devised procedures which stifle the efforts of Parliament to scrutinize and effectively understand and criticize the government's proposed expenditures, has not only proclaimed its belief in the supremacy of Parliament, but through the acts and actions I have outlined has substantiated this belief and given effect to its belief in concrete actions which thoroughly confound the proposition made in the opening part of the motion under consideration. We are unable to amend this motion and, even though we agree with the concluding words about re-affirming the supremacy of Parliament, because of the misstatements at the outset we are compelled to vote against it.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, again the Auditor General has drawn attention to the erosion of parliamentary control over the spending powers of Parliament. This type of erosion manifests itself in many ways. It is manifested in the instances cited by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and I am sure we will hear more as the day progresses. We have heard of one form of erosion of parliamentary control over spending. This was dealt with by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in his speech of Monday, May 15, in which he drew attention to the increases in the income tax rate structure and allowances. It is to the control Parliament has over spending, particularly as this relates to the new rules affecting committees, that I wish to address my remarks this afternoon.

We have heard a good deal about reform of the rules of the House. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) referred to the changes. This process of reform, which culminated in the changes of 1968, followed a study of the rules of the House by a Special Committee on Procedure. As a result of that study, the committees of the House were to assume a new and important function. That function arose largely from the fact that committees, as a consequence of the rule changes, would examine all legislation, with the exception of tax bills, and would examine all of the spending estimates of the House instead of this being done in the committee of the whole house which carried out this function before the rule changes.

There are 18 committees of the House. Most of these committees have the responsibility of examining spending estimates. The third report of the Special Committee on Procedure of 1968 expressed the hope that the reports of standing committees would assume a critical significance related more closely to the national interest as a whole than to simple political differences. The procedure Committee hoped as well that debate in the standing committees would be well informed and pertinent, and that their members would become influential in the areas of their specialized expertise. Unfortunately, that expectation has not been realized because the same rule changes which ended the power of the committee of the whole to examine spending estimates, also strangled the standing committees by rules which, to my mind, make examination of estimates totally ineffective and at best a frustrating exercise.

The main weakness of the new rules, so far as the responsibility of committees to handle spending estimates is concerned, is cited in paragraph 14 of Standing Order 58 which reads:

> In every session the main estimates to cover the incoming fiscal year for every department of government shall be referred to standing committees on or before March 1 of the then expiring fiscal year. Each such committee shall consider and shall report, or shall be deemed to have reported, the same back to the House not later than May 31 in the then current fiscal year.

Well, what that means, in effect, is that regardless of how many meetings the committees may have in the course of the examination of their estimates, and regardless of how many witnesses the committees may call in examining the estimates of the department before them, it is all a useless exercise because all of the estimates will be deemed to have been reported back to the House and passed by May 31 each year.

In reflecting on the workings of the committees of this Parliament, one might have the impression that the new rules are working well. For instance, it is interesting to note that in the first session of the present Parliament, 520 hours and 22 minutes were spent on examination of estimates. In the second session of this Parliament about the same time was spent on estimates. In the third session a total of 229 hours and 54 minutes were spent on the examination of the main estimates, plus another 43 hours and 46 minutes on supplementary estimates. In the fourth session, to date as of May 19, 195 hours and 47 minutes, plus 15 hours and 43 minutes were spent on estimates and supplementary estimates. This may seem like an impressive record until one examines the day-by-day workings of the committees.

First of all, a very dangerous practice has crept into the committee system, which I believe is illegal, whereby committees under the same rule changes which were brought in in 1968 are now permitted to sit and hear evidence without a quorum. This means that not more than half a dozen members, if indeed that many, were present during the majority of the time in which the committees studied and examined the estimates. Most of the committees have adopted a procedure, in order to get around this contradictory provision in the rules, which stipulates that at least five members be in attendance with at least one member from each of the main opposition parties. This, however, does not always work. Quite frankly, I find difficulty in understanding how a committee, which is supposed to be a microcosm of this House and which is supposed to reflect the rules and procedures of this House, can legally sit, conduct its hearing, hear witnesses and have all the paraphernalia for the recording and transcribing of evidence without having a quorum, because the committee would really not be legally in session. Most of the committees of the House require at least 11 members for a quorum. As if that were not bad enough, the new rule change to my mind makes the whole committee system a farce because it totally denies and eliminates any suggestion that the committee develop a spirit of collegiality and expertise in its particular field.

I refer to Standing Order 65(4)(b) which reads:

> Changes in the membership of any standing, joint or special committee may be effected by a notification thereof, signed by the member acting as the Chief Government Whip, being filed with the Clerk of the House who shall cause the same to be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of that sitting, or of the next sitting thereafter, as the case may be.

• (1440)

But here is one rule that is abused. It should never have been placed there in the first instance, because now the government whips can, by use of their majority, replace members on committees from time to time without any notification. They can move in roving squads to bolster their majority on committees as the need may arise. These squads, which roam around from committee to committee, generally know little or nothing of what has been going on in the committee. Their sole function is to carry out the wish of the government majority, to ensure that the government majority functions in the committee, and to thwart the legitimate efforts of the committee members to study, to reach a conclusion and a resolution as a consequence of these studies. Is it any wonder, then, that the attendance in the standing committees of the House is so dismally low? Is it any wonder that the committees of the House meet with only four or five members present? I attended two committee meetings yesterday, and at no time during the course of these meetings when estimates were being examined was there a quorum present.

Then, we have the scheduling of the committee meetings, which again defeats the very purpose of the system because a number of government departments are being examined in committees at the same time. This denies members of the House the right, and indeed the responsibility they have, to examine the estimates of the government. A random sampling of the Votes and Proceedings of the day indicates that next Tuesday six committees are scheduled to meet: the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Broadcasting, the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, the Committee on National Resources and Public Works and the Committee on Regional Development. How can any member of the House conscientiously discharge his duties, be present and examine the estimates of the departments or present his grievances or indeed examine legislation when perhaps all of these committees are meeting at the same time?

It is not difficult to understand why the government invokes the use of Standing Order 65(4)(b), because without it they could not man the committees themselves. Too many committees meet at any given time, and there are not enough members at any given time to man them. There you see an example of the very concept of the new committee system—that is the concept of expertise in our related fields plus the concept of collegiality—being thwarted and defeated by these rules. Regardless of the rules, and regardless of what the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) may have to say, nothing that we as opposition members may say or do in committees will influence one single, solitary cent of government expenditures—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: —because immediately there is any suggestion of a legitimate cause for concern as a result of which a member may exercise his right to reduce the vote to a legal $1, you see the whips moving in, followed by the goon squad. Nothing we do in committees, and nothing we say there, has any effect on the spending estimates of the government. Is it any wonder then that the Auditor General did not dig deeply enough, because I suppose the terms of reference of the statute of that office did not require him to do so, but merely touched the surface? I think it is our responsibility to examine these rules as they affect the standing estimates of the House, and as they affect our ancient right and indeed our ancient responsibility, to examine these estimates and to vote supply.

Then, there is the matter of the manning of the committees. If the government was sincere and honest in its attempt to place a new emphasis on committees, to give committees a new role, then that sincerity would have manifested itself in some sort of compromise arrangement whereby members of opposition parties would be given an opportunity to chair these committees. What happens? Instead, the chairmanship of the standing committees of the House, with the notable exception of the Public Accounts Committee, is used as a consolation prize for those hon. members who have been here for a long time, who cannot qualify as parliamentary secretaries or who cannot qualify for any government largesse.

Mr. Baldwin: It does not take much to get into the cabinet today.

Mr. McGrath: As a result, many of the standing committees of the House are presided over by incompetent chairmen, such as the Regional Development Committee which is presided over by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) who is not here today.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. McGrath: I will have more to say about that at another time on another day. These hon. gentlemen who have the responsibility of representing Your Honour, of making sure that the rules of the House of Commons are applied in committees which are supposed to be miniatures of the House, merely act as quarterbacks for the government.

Mr. Baldwin: Stooges.

Mr. McGrath: They merely act as those who run interference for the government. They assume the role of the defenders of the government when, in fact, their role should be that of the defenders of the minorities on those committees, just as Your Honour does in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: We can point this out in debate after debate. The President of the Treasury Board referred in his speech to the opposition days that we now have under the new rules. Opposition days in no way replace the legitimate function of the House to examine and control government spending. All you have to do is to look around this chamber this afternoon to get a dramatic illustration of that fact.

Mr. Clermont: What about your side?

Mr. McGrath: I make no exceptions. It is no wonder that the members of this House are becoming cynical and lethargic with respect to their duties in the House because in fact, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, we are practically nobodies. He said we are nobodies when the House closes, so we are practically nobodies when the House is in session because, although we are here, we have no power over government spending. Members of the opposition have lost their traditional responsibility to control government spending, and indeed the members of the government party who have traditionally had the responsibility of manning committees and being, like the official opposition, watchdogs of the public purse, have become cynical.

So, we have the rigid application of this rule whereby committees meet without a legal quorum and evidence is heard without a legal quorum. We hear reams and reams of evidence, we examine numerous witnesses, we crossexamine ministers and deputy ministers, all to no avail because the end result is always the same; the estimates are reported back to the House in the same form in which they went to the committees in the first place. If that is not a useless, futile and frustrating exercise, I do not know what is.

Having said that, I am prepared to make a suggestion to the government. The President of the Treasury Board or his colleague can very well say that we concurred in these new rules. That is right; we did concur. All of the opposition parties concurred in the new rules, and I think in so doing we were led up the garden path. Now, we have had a chance to try out these new rules. Surely, it must be apparent to every member of the House, and it should be as apparent to the President of the Treasury Board as it is to the Auditor General, that these rules are not working. If the rules are not working, then we should be prepared to change them.

• (1450)

One way I would suggest that the rules can be changed to restore some semblance of responsibility to this parliament with respect to examination of estimates is to allow the Official Opposition party in the House, in consultation with the House leaders of other opposition parties, the right to call any three departments, and waive the provisions of that particular Standing Order which requires that all estimates will be deemed to have been passed by June 1 or May 31 as the case may be. Give that right to the opposition parties to call any three government departments, without any time limitations, and then you will see that public servants, ministers, deputy ministers and senior civil servants would become much more responsive to members of parliament. Every member of the House knows that since the implementation of these new rules, notwithstanding all of the new status symbols we may have achieved in the meantime, and notwithstanding the substantial raises in pay that we have achieved in the meantime, he is not treated with the same respect by members of the civil service and by members of the government. The senior civil servants and the members of the cabinet know that this House has no power to hold up estimates, is not able to change one, single cent of the government's spending program.

Is it any wonder, then, that the Auditor General should emphasize the seriousness of this matter? It is quite right and proper that the members—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. McGrath: I just want to finish my sentence.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House agree to allow the hon. member to finish?

Mr. McGrath: I merely want to finish my sentence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I must ask if the hon. member has unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: I merely want to commend to all hon. members the proposal put to the House today by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), not in any partisan way. This resolution will not come to a vote. Hon. members will not be required to stand up and be counted. I ask all hon. members of the House to examine that proposal because I think it represents our last chance. If we do not restore to this parliament some control over government spending, then the people of this country have every right to question the existence of this institution.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Gaspé on a point of order.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who has just sat down said in his remarks that the chairman of the Regional Development Committee, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) was incompetent. As a member of that committee, I must say to this House that this accusation is false, and that the chairman of that committee discharges his duties very well and is very competent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair is prepared to recognize the validity of the hon. member's remark, but—

[English]

Mr. Bell: Tell us about the unemployment in Gaspé.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must point out to the hon. member that the point which he is raising is purely a matter of opinion, and that he too will be able to take part in this debate, when he will have an opportunity to put his views forward.

[English]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the motion we have before us, put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), to me is like going elephant hunting with a flyswatter. I think clearly there are things that people might well complain about in respect of the observations of the Auditor General of Canada, but the motion before us does not touch in any way upon any of those issues. In my view this motion only brings to the attention of Parliament something that the Auditor General has commented upon, and which does not constitute any act of illegality on the part of the executive. I say this for a very good reason. The matter of Parliamentary control has been discussed at considerable length in the Public Accounts committee, and I would like to deal with the question in very specific terms.

The motion before us indicates that the government has evaded its constitutional responsibility and certain legal safeguards by allowing money to be carried over from one fiscal year to the next. It is suggested that there is something wrong in doing this, and that this parliamentary institution is opposed to this practice. As a basis for that statement, the Financial Administration Act is quoted. The Financial Administration Act is also quoted in the Auditor General's report, in particular section 20, but in case some people happen to take that report too literally I want to draw attention to the fact that it is not section 20 but section 25 of the act which prohibits these moneys from being carried over from one year to the next.

My understanding of the law is that parliament is supreme, and that a specific act of parliament takes precedence over a general act of parliament. Upon that basis, I would like to review some of the specific observations that have been made. For example, vote L55 for the CBC is described as "Loans on terms and conditions approved by the Governor in council to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the current and subsequent fiscal years for capital expenditures." A sum of $25 million is provided. This vote, approved by Parliament, rightly or wrongly, is an expenditure which could in fact by law be carried over to some subsequent year. If parliament has made a mistake, it is parliament's responsibility to say so, and correct it if it so chooses. However I do not find it—and I say this with all respect—within the purview of the Auditor General of Canada to say, as in effect he is saying, that parliament has made a mistake in approving that kind of estimate. If it did make a mistake this type of reflection on parliament should come from parliamentarians themselves.

The same thing applies to other estimates to which reference has been made, and so far as I know to all the estimates referred to in connection with the carrying over of expenditures. For instance vote L25 for the Canadian International Development Agency in the sum of $150 million clearly spells out that this money is for use in the current and subsequent fiscal years. Again, it is clear that parliament agreed to that particular approach. We can hardly blame the executive for acting upon the approval that was given to it by parliament itself.

The same is true, and in a more glaring way, with respect to vote 75 in the estimates of the Department of Transport. This is also cited in the Auditor General's report when he refers to money granted to the National Harbours Board. The vote here of $1,200,000 clearly indicates that this is the amount to be credited to the National Harbours Board special account, and is to constitute an absolute grant without interest. One can hardly blame the National Harbours Board for treating it as a grant when it clearly was a grant, and I presume if it was a grant that it was one without strings attached. One can hardly blame the executive for treating it as parliament said it should be treated.

• (1500)

One could go on and on. Vote No. 5 was discussed at length in the Public Accounts Committee because it is a provision whereby the Treasury Board sets aside moneys to look after retroactive pay increases that may be granted as a result of the unionization of public employees. This money is granted on an annual basis and carries with it, according to the vote, the right to carry that fund over for payment as a charge in the year in which it is granted. That is quite clear as far as the wording of the estimates are concerned.

On a number of occasions in the Public Accounts Committee I have stated that it may well be that Parliament does not know what it is doing, but one can hardly blame the executive for the stupidity of people in this House who now complain that we are doing what they authorized us to do. I do not know that it is the function of the Auditor General or anyone else to take members of this House by the hand and walk them through the estimates saying, "Gentlemen, you ought to know what you are doing before you vote." Clearly members ought to study these matters beforehand. It seems to me that the opposition might be able to tap some of the resource facilities given by this government in order to look into these matters in depth and express their objections, if they have any, at the time the estimates are discussed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: It is clear that there is no act of illegality whatsoever. It is suggested that there is some violation of our constitution and that in some way we are circumventing the legal safeguards, but no one has bothered to point out what those legal safeguards are. If I were a member of the opposition involved drafting this particular motion—

An hon. Member: You will be.

Mr. Cafik: —I think I would pull out something a little more substantial. If you need any help, just let me know.

Mr. Paproski: Just look after the Pickering Airport.

Mr. Cafik: I should like to make a few general observations—

An hon. Member: The people in Pickering like you.

Mr. Penner: If you had more members like him in the opposition, you would be better off.

An hon. Member: He will be over here in the opposition next time.

Mr. Cafik: I had an opportunity to be in the opposition when I was invited by some members of that party, but using my usual good sense I declined.

I should like to underline the position that I have taken in the four years that I have been a Member of Parliament. I have always been a very strong advocate of the importance of the office of Auditor General of Canada. I concur with all members of this House who express this sentiment, whatever their party affiliation. I think it is unfortunate that so many of our provincial governments do not follow the lead of the federal government in having an Auditor General look after the public purse and draw important matters to their attention. I suggest that the Conservative party which introduced this motion might exercise some influence with provincial governments controlled by their party to see that this is done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I should like to comment on another matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) today. I am sorry that he is not in the House but as happens on other occasions when we discuss the Auditor General, we find that he is very interested but noticeably absent. That is certainly the case in the Public Accounts Committee where he professes to know so much about it by remote control.

I sincerely believe that the Public Accounts Committee, comprised of members of all parties, has behaved as a non-partisan body. Members of the opposition and members of the government consistently have agreed to matters that might not be to their political advantage. I think the members of that committee were highly insulted today when it was suggested that in some cases they put partisan interest against the interest of the public whom we are elected to serve. That just is not true and I would not tolerate such an allegation against any of my colleagues, from whatever party they may come.

I think the motion before us has an unfortunate tendency to project the Auditor General into the political arena. I think this kind of debate also has a tendency to project within the Public Accounts Committee a partisan approach which up to now it has always avoided and which I hope it will continue to avoid. Pressures such as these undermine the public interest and the important and valuable work of the Public Accounts Committee. The committee has not yet studied the report that we have before us today in this motion. I believe it is only right that the committee be allowed to exercise its responsibilities in a clear and open way without interference and prejudgment in this House before it has fulfilled its responsibilities.

The hon. member for Peace River also indicated today that the government has failed to provide adequate staff and facilities to the Auditor General. That bogeyman has appeared before and has been dealt with rather effectively by the Public Accounts Committee, but I need only quote from the 1970 report of the Auditor General where at page 5 there appears the following statement:

> Although the Treasury Board has provided sufficient funds to employ the necessary staff with effect from April 1, 1971—

It is also an indisputable fact that the Auditor General has not presented estimates to the Treasury Board which have been turned down or revised downward. This being the case, I think it is quite irresponsible to make these charges when we have access to information which proves them unfounded. This type of argument is raised for strictly partisan reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: The hon. member for Peace River also mentioned that there was at one time some discussion about the Treasury Board wishing to respond to each of the comments made by the Auditor General in his report. This was discussed at length in committee and many members felt it would be useful if the responsibility to do that were imposed upon the Treasury Board and the government of Canada. If this were done, then the committee would have access to both sides of the story before judging the importance of any item contained in the report. Surely any court of law or any kind of committee that is expected to pass judgment upon observations of such importance is entitled to all the relevant facts from all sources. This approach would expedite the work of the committee and make it more effective.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before us also talks about imperfect procedural structures contributing to the possible undermining of parliamentary control. I suppose anybody could support that part of it because nothing is perfect, in Parliament or anywhere else. All procedures are imperfect, but there is clearly a tremendous improvement over the procedures of the past. When I was first elected, the Public Accounts Committee spent a good deal of time going through the form of the estimates and revising them to make them more meaningful for those who would study them. This has resulted in more, not less, parliamentary control.

• (1510)

The motion says that Parliament must control the spending of public moneys. Clearly, parliament controls these expenditures.

Mr. Forrestall: No, not in all cases.

Mr. Cafik: No moneys are spent without the explicit approval of Parliament.

Mr. McGrath: Hogwash!

Mr. Cafik: Apparently one cannot satisfy hon. members opposite. The fact is that parliamentary approval is given for the spending of moneys, and no one can challenge that contention successfully. If I were asked to vote on the motion I would not support it. It says nothing about any obligation under our constitution and nothing about any legal safeguards concerning the spending of public moneys. The holding over of funds from one year to the next, whether that is advisable or not, is undertaken with the authority and approval of Parliament.

In conclusion, I reaffirm my belief in the importance of the Auditor General, in the importance of the Public Accounts Committee and in the importance of the right of Parliament to control government spending. This motion, however, represents a partisan step which is counter productive to our democratic system and does not touch the real issue.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, may I take a moment at the beginning of my speech to comment on some of the statements made by the previous speaker. First, it is obvious that he came here only during the present Parliament and has not been a member of the House for any length of time, otherwise he would appreciate just how great in the past was the responsibility of Members of Parliament for the spending of government money and how small in comparison that responsibility is today.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member said that at one time members had a great deal of control over government spending. It is true that I have been here for only four years and I make no apologies for that. May I ask this question: When the Conservative government was in power, can the hon. member cite me one example to show that members of this House changed one estimate put forward by the government of Canada? Can he offer one example to show that this happened in any previous period?

Mr. Forrestall: There are many instances of that. That was the wrong question to ask.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I am not standing here with a resumé or list of such instances. After all, I did not know the hon. member would ask that question. I merely say that if he goes back and examines the record, he will discover that in the past members of parliament had a great deal more influence over government spending and government plans for spending than is the case at present. Before the rules were changed they had a great deal more influence.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not answered my question. I should like him to give an example of when this was done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to educate the hon. member on the facts of life.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) has the floor.

Mr. Cafik: You are not giving me the facts of life; you are only showing your particular prejudices.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I harbour particular prejudices, as does the hon. member.

Mr. Cafik: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Coates: Everybody in this House harbours a particular prejudice. However, I suggest the hon. member ought to refer to the past before making his comments, especially since he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I will not waste my time: only a short time is at my disposal.

Mr. Cafik: Why does the hon. member not answer my previous question and say something positive?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to comment on some of the things the hon. member said which were incorrect. I did not want to get into a big argument. I am on my feet now and I will stay on my feet and make my speech.

Mr. Cafik: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member has said that my statements were incorrect I should like him to substantiate that statement.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. That is not a point of order; it is merely argument or debate. I take this opportunity to tell hon. members that the hon. member who has the floor should be permitted to make his speech. He is not obliged to accept questions. Hon. members know the rules of the House. It is not by exchanges between hon. members that we shall make progress. Also, I invite hon. members to address their remarks to the Chair. In that way I think we will make more progress.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I hope that all the time taken up with points of order and various other comments and questions will not be deducted from the time available to me.

May I put some facts on record that may be of edification to the hon. member. They have to do with government expenditures. We shall see whether they were authorized by Parliament or not. Let me cite one example for the hon. member. He may examine it and derive benefit from it. The net total of accepted incentive grants under the Regional Development Incentives Act to the end of 1971-72 fiscal year was estimated to be $233,301,493 according to the summary tabled by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) on April 13, 1972. By that date, however, only $60 million or $70 million had actually been paid out. This means that DREE had entered into agreements with companies which would lead to expenditures of about $165 million beyond those approved by Parliament to that date.

According to the latest RDIA summary, the estimated value of accepted offers had risen to $250,110,024 by the end of April. According to information tabled by the DREE deputy minister, RDIA expenditures contained in the 1972-73 estimates would amount to about $125 million. Commitments to firms have thus already been made which exceed by about $50 million even the amounts contained in the estimates up to the end of March, 1973. The foregoing, Mr. Speaker, is an example of the government spending money that it had no authority to spend.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) dealt with two aspects of the Auditor General's report. I wish to deal with a third aspect, the spending of taxpayers' money, as outlined in the Auditor General's report, that has caused great damage. That money was spent without authority and in an incompetent manner; the government violated the trust given to it by the people of Canada.

Shocking revelations were made by the Auditor General, especially in the Department of National Defence, which lead to the inescapable conclusion that that department among the 27 departments of government leads the list by a country mile as the most glaringly incompetent, wasteful and inexcusably inefficiently run department in Canada. The excess of its collective incompetence almost requires a special auditor general to supervise its operations. Even worse than its operations are its decisions in the DDH program, the CF-5 procurement program and the mothballing of the hydrofoil Bras d'Or.

The gross incompetence of the department's decision-making and the magnitude of its blunders in these three spheres requires that action be taken by the government of Canada to determine exactly who is responsible for the incompetence. Is it the minister, the deputy minister and his officials; is it the chiefs of staff of this country or is it a combination of all three? Surely someone ought to be answerable to the people of Canada for the extravagant waste of money which has occurred year after year in that department. I do not know how much longer the people of Canada can be asked to put up with such incompetence.

Year after year the Auditor General presents his report, and year after year we see the catalogue of errors committed by the Department of National Defence. We have reached the point where a committee of this House has censured the officials of the department, yet the government has done nothing.

One would have thought that after the financial fiasco associated with the Bonaventure we could have expected an end to the type of incompetence and extravagance associated with Department of National Defence programs. But no; again in this year's Auditor General's report we have another catalogue of mistakes, failures and desperate estimates of costs of programs. There is an absolute and incomplete indifference on the part of the government and the Department of National Defence to do anything about the gross incompetence associated with the department.

I would like to give some specific instances of this incompetence. One is the destroyer deployment helicopter program. In 1966 we were told that this program was estimated to cost $145 million. In 1967 the cost had risen to $165 million, in 1967-68 to $192 million, in 1970 to $225 million, in 1971 to $252 million, in 1971-72 to $282 million and today we are told the estimate could run as high as $330 million. It has risen from $145 million to $330 million—and what do we get from the government? We do not get anything in the way of a reasonable explanation for the tremendous escalation in costs which the taxpayer is paying. This government goes blandly on its way with no apparent concern about the escalation in cost. This escalation in cost does not involve the helicopters that will be associated with destroyers. At the very minimum there will be eight helicopters, probably more. They each cost in the vicinity of $2 million; therefore you can add another $16 million to the estimate of $330 million.

The time has come for the question of Department of National Defence and the way it is run to be taken out of the hands of the Auditor General and placed in the hands of a special committee. I think the best group of individuals to do the job would be a committee of the other place. They have been able to examine many areas and various institutions in this country, how they operate, and what they do and whether they do it properly. They could make a determination of who is responsible for the incompetence associated with the revelations that have been provided year after year by the Auditor General.

It is obvious that this government pays no attention to the Auditor General. Year after year he tells the government the same story and they allow the same things to happen. No matter what the government is told by what organization, they allow the department to go on its merry way and make decisions that have no degree of sense, such as the hydrofoil program.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) pointed out to the government on numerous occasions, even before the Auditor General's report was made public, that these things were happening in the department. Surely some corrective action could have been taken by the government during that period, but nothing has been done. The record shows that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has made the government aware of the scandalous errors in judgment within the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services regarding the destroyer deployment helicopter program.

Let us turn to the hydrofoil program. The Auditor General said in his report:

> Expenditure to May 31, 1971, totalled $51.1 million including $444,000 for the replacement of a foil which cracked during trials in mid-1969, in respect of which the Department of Supply and Services later concluded that it had no claim against the contractor. In October 1971 the Treasury Board approved an increase of $1 million to place and maintain the hydrofoil in a state of preservation from which it may be reactivated within the next five years, bringing the approved cost of the program to $53.2 million.

If this program was not going to be followed through by the government, it should have been killed a long time before $53.2 million was spent on it. When it reached the point where Canada had produced the fastest ship in the world, tested it, proven it to manoeuvre and do what modern warfare requires of a ship, the government should have carried through and concluded the program.

If the Bras D'Or were in operation today we would have much less trouble on the east coast with Russian trawlers moving into our territorial waters and interfering with our fishery. Surely the Bras D'Or could have been useful, outside of national defence purposes, on both the east and west coasts of Canada. What we have now is $53 million in mothballs. By the time the five years are up, the Department of National Defence will probably determine that it will be cheaper to scrap this hydrofoil and build a new one.

That is the sort of decision we have been constantly getting from the Department of National Defence. The time has come for that department to be examined in depth by independent people in order to determine who is responsible for the gross in competence so that the Canadian taxpayer has knowledge of who is continuously wasting his money. We have exactly the same type of story with the CF-5 program. There is no difference at all.

I now wish to turn to comments made by the Auditor General with regard to the guaranteed income supplement and a totally unrelated matter, concessions made to motor vehicle manufacturers, particularly the concession made to one manufacturer which I believe was in the neighbourhood of $6.3 million because that manufacturer did not come within the meaning of the Canada-U.S. auto agreement. As far as the guaranteed income supplement is concerned, the Auditor General said:

> The five per cent check made by the Department of National Health and Welfare in 1971 of 1970 income suggests that the annual overpayment may now have reached a total in excess of $9 million. On December 7, 1971, the Public Accounts Committee was advised that the check to be made in 1972 of 1971 income was being increased to ten per cent.

• (1530)

That means that twice as many public servants will be investigating, in effect, the old age pensioners of this country. For some time the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) has been making effort after effort to find out why the Department of National Health and Welfare has been garnisheeing old age pension cheques in order to recover overpayments made to them. The hon. member has been frustated because the minister will not answer his questions in the House.

What frustrates me and other members of the House is that we have discovered that most of the mistakes made on the cheques are not the result of misinformation or fraudulent information on the part of the recipients but miscalculations of staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare who have overestimated the payment a pensioner should receive. On discovering that an individual has been overpaid in this way, the department proceeds to garnishee his pension cheques for some time in order to recover the overpayment, which as I say has resulted from a mistake made by a departmental official.

Most of the cases that have come to my attention indicate that the mistakes were initially made by departmental officials, not by the recipients of the cheques. If the pensioner is in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement, then he is living on an income well below the poverty line. The department then tell such an individual that they are going to reduce even that minimum income because somebody in the office made a mistake and paid him too much. Whatever this individual receives in his cheque was needed by him because it was all he had to live on, yet the government reduces his payment to below that provided by the legislation, because one of its staff made a mistake that must be corrected.

When the government discovers that an automobile manufacturer in this country cannot qualify under the Canada-United States auto agreement, the government has no problem at all in forgiving the company $6.3 million that it owes the government. But the story is quite different if you are not a big automobile manufacturer but a poor individual. I contend that if such a mistake occurs through no fault of the recipient, the error should be forgiven in exactly the same way that the automobile manufacturer to whom I have referred was forgiven $6.3 million. What is good enough for an automobile manufacturer should be good enough for individual Canadians, especially those who are asked to subsist on old age security and the guaranteed income supplement.

I should now like to deal with another matter. It is a wonderful thing that this country does have an Auditor General. The hon. member for St. John's East pointed out during his speech ways in which Members of Parliament have been unable to get information that they require and to which they have the right. About 18 months ago I put a question on the order paper asking how much language training was costing the people of Canada. I put the question in a number of specific ways. One of the questions I asked was whether or not included in the cost of language training was the cost to the government of the period during which people taking language training were away from their jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired. I have already allowed him an additional two or three minutes because of interruptions, but his time has expired by a minute or so.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the motion introduced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), concerning public accounts is the type of motion we like to get our teeth into and dismiss for many obvious reasons. That should not be a problem with this one because it is so vague. However, those who had the floor before me, and especially the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), dealt with various aspects of this motion with great eloquence and, for my part, I should like to refer to specific aspects of the said motion.

First of all, I should like to point out how little interest the Canadian people, and even the opposition members, seem to have in that motion, and the same lack of interest has been noticeable on several occasions. In fact, as late as last Thursday, during consideration of the report of the Committee on Public Accounts, two opposition members only were at the committee meeting.

So, I think today is no exception, Mr. Speaker, when we consider the scant interest shown by opposition parties towards this motion. However, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not mention that although the public gallery is very thinly crowded, it is nonetheless very distinguished and knowledgeable on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day, I heard my colleague from the Social Credit party opposite, state how the people of Quebec—I think he was referring to them since he speaks exclusively of Quebecers—had every right to be disgusted at the complete disregard shown by the federal government for the Canadian taxpayers' money.

The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) would probably wish to be more specific and state to what extent the Canadian people and the Quebecers would be disgusted if they could see how many members of his party attend the meetings of the public accounts committee. I am sure that most of these meetings are conducted in the absence of those members.

• (1540)

I think that if there were a cause for disgust by the Canadian people it would be at those parties that are totally unconcerned with matters of public accounts.

Mr. Speaker, in his preliminary remarks, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has made some derogatory comments on some committee members who allegedly show partisan tendencies or prejudices.

The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) has asked for a correction or an apology and I repeat the hon. member's request that amends should be made. But I am sure we can rely on the loyalty and sincerity of all committee members and that any charge by the hon. member for Peace River should not be taken seriously since in the last 18 months he has attended only one committee meeting.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Dupras: In any case, he mentioned the difficulties that the Auditor General seemed to have in the staffing of his office and this has been for years the subject of debates that have gone on and on endlessly on this method of staffing. As late as last March, then, we were hopeful that once and for all we could deal with this question and settle the problem. On a motion from the Conservative party, we would have tried to hear the Auditor General and the President of the Treasury Board to settle the question, to determine whether there was any possibility of improving the situation and to see who was responsible for staffing, how to retain the staff, and why the staff was leaving that office.

In answer to the question put to him on March 14 last, the Auditor General said that he wanted to specify to the members of the committee that he himself was preparing the credits for the staff to be recruited for the coming twelve months, and that he was entrusting the recruiting to the Civil Service Commission.

So the President of the Treasury Board has nothing to do with the recruiting of personnel, nor has the government any responsibility in that regard. But the fact remains that the Auditor General repeated again that recruiting was difficult because of conditions that were never made clear.

Mr. Speaker, it was noted at that time that civil servants had left the service of the Auditor General for undetermined reasons, and that failure to keep them had not only jeopardized the efficiency of his office but has also delayed preparation of his report.

We have tried to determine if those who had resigned were grade 4 or 5 employees, that is those who have heavier responsibilities than others and we have found out that 28 employees who had effectively resigned—some 30 persons had been mentioned—had less than two or three years of service and that among those who had several years of service, apparently only one had reached 20 years.

We have tried to determine whether there would not be some other procedure to improve the hiring of personnel but according to the information obtained, it seems that the employees are not so eager to work within a restricted field, namely the Auditor General's office and this for several reasons. One of the most obvious reasons is that there are fewer opportunities for promotion within a small office, while public servants are working in a much more extensive organization with 5,000 or 6,000 employees.

The acquired rights of these officials are for them very precious elements, and they are certainly very reluctant to remain, let us say, confined in a much more restricted service than the Public Service offers them. And naturally, promotion opportunities, in such a limited organization, are fewer and slower. People must show much more patience in order to get promotion or progress in their work.

Mr. Speaker, I too would like to deal a little with certain paragraphs that we find in the Auditor General's report, which has only been tabled early this week, and that the members of the House or those of the Committee on Public Accounts have not had yet time to examine.

But there are a couple of paragraphs that I would like to deal with, Mr. Speaker, and I think particularly of paragraph 142 which deals with frauds committed by people who are drawing old age security benefits. And I am sure that the term used is not the proper one.

During the examination of the 1969-70 report, we brought to the attention of the Auditor General the term "fraud" used to designate these amounts which had been paid to the people receiving unsolicited benefits. These amounts, obtained in an unpremeditated way and without the intention of defrauding the government, must be reimbursed. Paragraph 142 indicates that, out of a total of $1,039,000 accumulated over the past few years, $532,000 have been reimbursed to the federal government.

Sometimes, for one reason or another, a change may occur in the social condition of a person receiving benefits and render him ineligible to benefits. Then, when these overpayments are discovered, some time naturally elapses before the full amount owed is duly reimbursed.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we strongly object to the use of the term "fraud" when no fraud has been proved and notwithstanding a few possible cases of fraud I really feel that we should rather admire the honesty of the majority of Canadians who receive these payments.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I should also like to call the attention of hon. members to another paragraph, No. 124, dealing specifically with the setting aside of CF5 aircraft, the cost thereof to the Canadian government and the amounts that could have been saved by converting these aircraft, this equipment from bomber and observation aircraft to trainers.

There is a mention of an amount of $5 million which could have been saved. When aircraft of the CF5 type are designed for a very specific role, it is impossible for the Canadian government, the Department of National Defense to convert them economically into trainers because, since they were not designed for this role, the cost of conversion could considerably exceed the cost to the government of purchasing trainer aircraft instead.

This is therefore another paragraph which will certainly receive careful study and examination by members of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. Speaker, that will conclude my remarks.

[English]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, each year the Auditor General presents a report of considerable length containing numerous examples of improper use of public funds, inefficiencies and waste; and each year we in the opposition and those in the news media with much glee and gusto draw the attention of the public to the faults, foibles and worse perpetrated by public servants as revealed by the Auditor General's report. The government of the day is quite correctly held responsible for the waste the Auditor General reveals and almost invariably suffers politically as a result for a short time.

• (1550)

This annual exercise has by now almost become a spring ritual. It is useful despite this fact, because it encourages governments to be much more vigilant in their supervision of the expenditure of public funds than they otherwise might be in order to avoid as much opprobrium and ridicule as possible. However, with the exception of this case the annual spring ritual to me would seem to be largely beside the point.

The role of the Auditor General, as an officer of Parliament, is to provide parliamentarians with the expert assistance necessary to properly supervise government expenditures. Public servants are human; they will commit their share of errors, follies and stupidities. Occasionally, and it is a tribute to the Public Sevice of Canada that the occasions are very rare, there will even be outright dishonesty. Governments, too, are composed of human beings who will seek ways and means to juggle accounts so as to make their performance seem just a bit better than it actually is. Thus, I believe that the most important function of the annual report of the Auditor General is not so much that of pointing out past errors as that of indicating how similar errors may be avoided in the future.

It is in that light that I say the most damning indictment of the government contained in this year's report is that the government has refused to act on a total of 38 recommendations, 31 by the Auditor General and seven by the Public Accounts Committee which were designed to increase government efficiency and to enhance the effectiveness of parliamentary supervision of the expenditure of public funds. Here the government was provided with expert, well considered and dispassionate advice on how to make better use of the tax dollar, and the government has chosen to ignore it.

Mistakes in public expenditure are always to be regretted and every attempt must be made to eliminate them. But because we are human beings, subject to error, we can forgive them. What I cannot forgive is a government's deliberate neglect of opportunities to reduce waste and error. This government, through the recommendations of the Auditor General's reports and the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee, was provided with a golden opportunity to reduce waste and error in the use of the tax dollar and it chose to ignore that opportunity. That is unforgiveable.

My other major concern which arises out of this year's report of the Auditor General is the solid information it provides which indicates that parliamentary as opposed to governmental supervision of public expenditure remains woefully inadequate. Funds in massive amounts have even been spent in ways not authorized by Parliament.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Rowland: It is true; it is in the report.

An hon. Member: Give us the examples.

Mr. Rowland: I do not have the report with me, but they are listed.

An hon. Member: I will pass it over to you.

Mr. Rowland: Pass over the report and I will cite the examples. Parliament traditionally serves three functions, the formation of policy, the raising of revenue for the purpose of implementing public policy and the supervision of the expenditure of the tax dollar. For various reasons, too well known to be gone into here, we can no longer expect the legislature to carry nearly as much weight as the executive or cabinet in the first two areas of policy formation and the raising of revenue. But surely it is legitimate to expect that the legislature do yoeman service in the supervision of government expenditures, and surely it is mandatory that every facility be provided for the efficient fulfilment by the legislature of its role in this regard.

Many suggestions for the accomplishment of this goal are contained in the neglected recommendations of the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee to which I have already referred. I would like to make three more suggestions. The first suggestion arises out of the fact that many government programs are now of such a nature that they involve commitments for expenditure in future years which must be honoured but which Parliament has no opportunity to examine in detail in advance or at the time of commitment. To be more specific, cash grants offered to private companies under the Regional Development Incentives Act are spread over a number of years. Certain amounts are paid out over a four or five-year period. Consequently, departmental expenditures on incentives in a given year, which are voted by Parliament, consist of two kinds: first, payments to companies on behalf of arrangements made in this same year; second, payments to companies under contractual arrangements made a year or two or three years before—contractual arrangements which Parliament is hardly in a position to repudiate.

The present system does not permit Parliament to exercise any control over this situation. Only a multi-year budgetary system could handle it. Alternatively, in recognition of the fact that we will not be getting the multi-year budgetary system, Parliament has the right to know what commitments are incurred by departments for future years. For example, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been refusing to reveal its commitments to companies for future fiscal years. It should be forced by Parliament to disclose that information, not only for the sake of the parliamentary process but for the sake of the Treasury Board in its attempts to justify the expenditure of public funds.

In fact, looking at the accelerated pace of DREE grants, especially in the last 12 months, expenditures in future years will escalate rapidly. It is estimated that at the present pace, in five years time the commitments may reach $1 billion annually. Does Parliament want that kind of expenditure, and indeed does government want it? Surely an opportunity must be given Parliament, through the devices I have suggested or through some closely allied approach, to answer these questions about DREE and indeed about other departments which are involved in programs requiring the commitment of funds for years in advance.

My second suggestion is that to complete the circle of Parliamentary supervision of expenditures, the Comptroller General should cease to be a public servant in the orthodox sense and become, rather, an officer of Parliament as is the Auditor General. The current, well defined division of duties between the Auditor General and the comptroller must be applauded. However, there would seem to be a curious lack of logic in not making the Comptroller General an independent officer of Parliament as is the Auditor General.

The comptroller's task is, after all, in the words of Norman Ward, "in essence to ensure that all money is spent as Parliament said it should be, in no larger amounts and for no other purposes than Parliament approved." Computers, as the Glassco commission pointed out, have virtually eliminated the comptroller's actual accounting duties. The fact that the comptroller is not an officer of Parliament means that there is a break in the circle of parliamentary control of finance, a break which did not occur prior to 1931 when the Auditor General carried out a pre-audit of government expenditures as well as a post-audit as he does today.

The Auditor General may of course, and he does, include references to breaches of parliamentary instructions in his annual report. Such references have value but they are always after the fact; the discovery is always made when it is too late to do anything about it. An independent comptroller could challenge on the spot and force a ruling. The method of adjudicating potential disputes between the cabinet or the executive and the comptroller could be so established as to do no violence to the principle that the government alone is responsible for the use of funds. For example, the Minister of Justice could be made the arbitrator in disputes between the comptroller and the Treasury Board. The minister's decision would be final, thus ensuring no interruption of the operations of government, but subject to scrutiny and reversal by Parliament. Any such disputes, together with the decision of the Minister of Justice, could immediately be placed before Parliament and/or one of its committees, perhaps the public Accounts Committee, for consideration and report.

I am somewhat loth to begin an explanation of my third suggestion for improved parliamentary control over finances; it requires considerably more detailed presentation, in order to be fully understood, than the time available to me permits. But I will make a stab at it. I think Parliament needs to recreate a standing committee on estimates, not with a view to replacing the present practice of departmental estimates being referred to appropriate standing committees but with the idea of supplementing that practice. It would not be expected that such a committee would examine the estimates of all departments in a single year but, rather, go into detail with respect to a few departments each year with the hope perhaps of covering each department during the life of a Parliament.

• (1600)

On the surface, that may seem to be a useless duplication of effort already being made by existing standing committees, but a close examination will demonstrate that such is not the case. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) devoted considerable attention to the shortcomings of our committee system with respect to the examination of estimates and I do not intend to repeat his arguments. The point I wish to make is that the customary practice in committees dealing with estimates is to question only those items which are increased or decreased drastically in any one year. Professor Hockin suggested as follows:

—this high-spotting of the estimates fosters a delusive sense of task fulfilment. It is based upon the Burkean fallacy that what is changed is worth scrutiny, what remains the same is not.

That is certainly not a principle which can be followed when examining government expenditures in order to determine the wisdom of those expenditures, because it is notorious that governments continue programs long after they become redundant. I am arguing that for Parliament to properly supervise finances, expertise among Members of Parliament of the business-budget analysis sort must be created. Because of other demands on their time, existing standing committees are unlikely to develop that kind of expertise.

I envisage an estimates committee as having the time and the single-minded purpose to devote time to developing some fairly concise concepts of the proper principles which should be employed to govern expenditures. Such a committee should devise a method of detailed and, more importantly, systematic examination of all estimates submitted to it. One of the main purposes of such an examination would be to reveal any breach of the principles governing expenditures which the committee has devised.

Such a committee should also formulate general and specific recommendations for the form in which main estimates are presented, in order to ensure that they can be easily understood by a layman, which most Members of Parliament are when it comes to looking at balance sheets, and to ensure that they facilitate parliamentary control over governmental expenditures. I could go on listing tasks which an estimates committee might usefully perform, but my over-all purpose is clear. It is to create expertise in the kinds of principles necessary to properly control government expenditures, expertise which at present does not exist or if it does exist, does so in only isolated circumstances.

Obviously, some overlap would be involved with the tasks of the Public Accounts Committee. Liaison between the two committees would thus be desirable and it could be accomplished, I suggest, by adopting the British practice of making the chairman of each of the two committees ex officio a member of the other and by having the comptroller and Auditor General available to each committee. Those are my three suggestions: a means of controlling commitments for future expenditure made possible by legislation but not requiring simultaneous parliamentary approval, making the Comptroller General an officer of Parliament, and creating a standing committee on estimates.

I hope hon. members will give the ideas some consideration because even though they might not in themselves provide all the answers it is obvious, on the basis of this year's Auditor General's report, that parliamentary supervision of government expenditures is totally inadequate; and if Parliament is to be a meaningful institution devices must be discovered quickly to improve that supervision.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the mover insinuates that Parliament's control over government spending of public funds has decreased in the last few years, and this, for various reasons. I believe the contrary is true and I should like to quote certain facts in support of my assertion.

Since 1968, all government expenditures have been referred to one or another of the 16 standing committees of the House. This allows the committee members—and on this point I disagree with the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—to perform efficient work. This also enables them not only to question the ministers responsible for the various departments, but also their officials as well, and if they so desire, witnesses from the private sector, a practice which would be impossible if we still followed the former procedure of studying government expenditures in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, referring to a study made by the Committees Branch, I see that during the second session of the 28th Parliament, 152 meetings were spent on the study of the various departmental estimates.

For the 4th session of the 28th Parliament, to May 25, 1972, 124 meetings were devoted to the study of various departmental estimates.

Over and above the committees which study estimates, we also have to consider the mechanism for checking expenses, which is the public accounts committee. This committee again considered the matter of checking public accounts last fall, on November 9 and 16, 1971, as is evidence in Issues Nos. 51 and 52 of the committee proceedings. On that occasion, the committee had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Balls, assistant deputy minister of the Department of Supply and Services, who informed us that as far as tabling public accounts for the year 1970-71 was concerned, the government had made a commitment, back in 1968, through the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson), to table the Public Accounts of Canada on October 31 at the latest. This year, the three volumes were tabled, the last of which on November 4, 1971.

The Public Accounts Committee set up a sub-committee made up of a member from each party and representatives for the Auditor General, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Supply and Services, to make a study in depth of the possibility of accelerating the tabling in the House of the public accounts of Canada.

Since 1968, as a result of the recommendation of the government, the Canadian Parliament has allotted funds to the opposition parties to retain the services of support personnel. The funds are allotted annually as follows: to the Progressive Conservative party, $125,000; to the New Democratic party, $35,000, and to the Social Credit Party of Canada, $35,000.

The Standing Orders of the House afford the opposition parties other opportunities to study the various departmental estimates. I refer here to Standing Order 58(3), and I quote:

(3) Opposition motions on allotted days may be moved only by members in opposition to the government and may relate to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and also may be used for the purpose of considering reports from standing committees relating to the consideration of estimates therein.

I will also quote subsection (5) of Standing Order 58:

(5) For the period ending not later than December 10, five sitting days shall be allotted to the business of supply. Seven additional days shall be allotted to the business of supply in the period ending not later than March 26. Thirteen additional days shall be allotted to the business of supply in the period ending not later than June 30.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, 25 days are allotted to the opposition.

[Mr. Clermont.]

I think the formula which consists in referring the study of government expenses to standing committees and, once those expenses have been made, to give them to the public accounts committee to consider, is a very satisfactory and very effective formula.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said in his remarks on this motion that the government was unduly delaying consideration of the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's report for the financial year ended March 31, 1970, was tabled in this House on June 4, 1971, and the House adjourned for the summer recess on June 30, 1971. The House reconvened on September 7, 1971, and on September 29 of that same year, it referred the Auditor General's report to the public accounts committee.

The committee started consideration of the report on October 14, 1971, held 17 meetings, and is now preparing its report.

Mr. Speaker, I will leave hon. members to decide whether the government unduly delayed consideration of the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Béchard: The opposition is not serious—as usual.

Mr. Clermont: The hon. member for Peace River as well as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) who spoke before me referred to the 38 recommendations of the public accounts committee which, according to them, have been rejected or ignored.

• (1610)

[English]

A tabulation of these 38 recommendations indicates that the government has indeed responded to them, although not necessarily by acting in the fashion proposed. A substantial number of the issues have been subject to hearings before the Public Accounts Committee. I may say that in most cases these have satisfied the committee, because the subsequent reports of the committee have not raised the issues again.

I now refer to tabulations of issues and action taken. Many of these have been subject to lengthy debate. In this regard the committee has played an effective role and the procedure is not as ineffective as indicated. Mr. Speaker, the following is a summary of action taken on recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee: First, recommendations on which there has been specific comment by the minister involved, 14; second, recommendations on which there has been subsequent specific testimony by departments to the Public Accounts Committee without any new or changed recommendation by the committee, eight; third, recommendations on which departments have not been called upon to testify to the Public Accounts Committee but on which they have taken action which has not received publicity, three; fourth, recommendations which call for continued observation by the Auditor General of departmental practices rather than government action, one; fifth, recommendations subject to action re formulation of separate Auditor General Act, one; sixth, action could not be determined in time available since tabling of Auditor General's report, four; seventh, recommendations made too recently for action to be taken, seven. This makes a total of 38.

I will now list recommendations on which there has been specific comment by the minister involved. In regard to assistance to provinces by armed forces, the Auditor General's 1971 report states advice was given to the House by the Minister of National Defence in September, 1971, and by the Prime Minister in October 1971 of action taken by the government. Regarding indirect compensation to chartered banks, the Auditor General's report states that the Minister of Finance wrote the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee outlining the views of the department but the committee has not given consideration to these views.

In respect of awards under the Pension Act, the minister wrote the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, January 17, 1972. On war veterans allowances the minister wrote the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on January 17, 1972.

Then there are the following items: amendments to Customs Act and Excise Tax Act; possible loss of revenue when goods lose tax-exempt status; drawback paid on goods destroyed after release from Customs; tax exemptions for particular groups. In these respects the minister wrote the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on April 20, 1972.

With respect to the audit of office of the Auditor General, the Minister of Finance wrote the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on January 26, 1967. The President of the Treasury Board confirmed this to the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on December 9, 1971. Regarding the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the Minister of Finance wrote the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on January 26, 1967. On the cost of abandoned design plans the minister answered to the transport committee on May 25, 1972, which was yesterday.

As to parliamentary control of expenditures, the Auditor General's 1971 report states the President of the Treasury Board in December, 1971, informed the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee that the board was unable to see how its practices, sanctioned by parliament, weakened parliamentary control over expenditures. On the question of excessive advance payments under contracts, the President of the Treasury Board wrote the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on December 9, 1971. Concerning delay in collecting sales tax, the Auditor General's 1971 report states that the minister advised the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee on November 25, 1970, that amendment to legislation forms part of department's legislative program.

I will now refer to recommendations on which there has been subsequent specific testimony by departments to the Public Accounts Committee without any new or changed recommendation by the committee: second-class mail—testimony March 11 and March 16, 1971; governor general's special warrants—testimony May 18, 1971; errors in Public Service Superannuation Act—testimony April 27, 1971; interest charges on loans to NCC—testimony May 6, 1971; loans and advances representing grants to Crown corporations—testimony May 6, 1971.

Then we have reconstitution of financial structure of National Harbours Board—Auditor General's report states that the Public Accounts Committee discussed the matter on May 13, 1971, with the National Harbours Board and Canadian maritime transportation administration, but no further recommendation has been made by the committee; co-ordination of research and development to industry—testimony November 4, 1971; provision of navigational aids without charge to users—department reported to Public Accounts Committee May 25, 1971, that it was negotiating overflight charges with the International Air Transportation Association.

I will continue, Mr. Speaker, because it was said by at least two hon. members that nothing was done with respect to the 38 recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee. I deal now with recommendations on which departments have not been called to testify to the Public Accounts Committee but on which they have taken action which has not received publicity: surplus assets disposal—heading here is not in keeping with committee's recommendation which deals with the costing of material inventories; the Treasury Board has given approval in principle to the establishment of a working capital advance for the purpose of costing and controlling Department of National Defence material inventories; proposed removal allowance—the Treasury Board is conducting a study into the feasibility of applying this recommendation to the whole of the public service and not just to the armed forces; increasing accommodation rental costs—the Auditor General's report for 1971 states that the Department of Public Works circularized departments in 1971 advising them that it would use 1972-73 as a pilot year to refine techniques with the intention, subject to Treasury Board approval, to commence charging for accommodation on April 1, 1973.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this proves that one way or another the government has followed up on the 38 recommendations that the Auditor General's report contained and which some hon. members have talked about today.

In conclusion, I would like to refer to a remark made by the hon. member for Peace River to the effect that when he was chairman of the public accounts committee, the members of this committee acted in a non partisan manner. Since I was not a member of that committee while the hon. member was chairman, I am not in a position to make any remarks on its non partisan activity, but, if I consider his activity in this House, I cannot agree with him on the meaning of the term non partisan.

• (1620)

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining this afternoon I shall not attempt to deal with the litany recited over the last 10 or 15 minutes by my colleague on the other side: it was very selective, but the fact is that the Auditor General made it perfectly clear that of the 41 items set out in his report, 31 have not been dealt with—and the recitation by the hon. member will not erase them. In recent years this government has paid little attention to the report of the Auditor General.

Alleged Loss of Control of Public Moneys

I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and in part with the remarks of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland). The motion before us reads:

> This House, noting the continuing erosion of Parliament's control over government spending of public moneys due to government evasion of constitutional and legal safeguards as noted in the 1970-71 report of the Auditor General, and due to imperfect procedural structure, reaffirms the fundamental principle of the Canadian constitution that Parliament must control expenditures of public moneys.

The remarks made this afternoon by hon. members opposite in an attempt to refute that motion have not been effective. I suggest that hon. members have no option but to support the motion. The Auditor General quite clearly pointed out many inefficiencies. I could recite the case of keeping open CFB Summerside in respect of which the Auditor General has clearly stated that money is being used for purposes not completely approved by Parliament.

The question of control by this House over the purse-strings of Canada is not an old issue, as was mentioned by my colleagues the hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). I have been here for only seven or eight years but have followed the procedures of this House with respect to control of government spending. It has been demonstrated, as these hon. members pointed out, that until this government started toying with our rules and procedures there was ample control over the expenditure of moneys by government; there was the power and procedure to deal with estimates. But that power has been taken away to the extent that now we have no way of influencing government spending. Even those of us who have been here only a short time are aware of this.

Questions such as the one put to the government by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North, with respect to the St. Lawrence Seaway, impel me to rise this afternoon and express my concern. When the St. Lawrence Seaway was built in 1959-60 a very firm and clear undertaking was given to the ports of Atlantic Canada that it would pay its own way and would not be detrimental to the operations of the ports of Halifax, Saint John, and some of the lower St. Lawrence River ports.

We have not only the observation of the Auditor General in his most recent report for the year 1971 but we have other evidence to indicate that the government has failed utterly and miserably in this respect. It would appear that the St. Lawrence Seaway will be able to pay its way. The absence of control by this House over methods of correcting the situation is reflected in that failure. We have no control over government and there is no way that we can withhold money, for example, from the Minister of Transport. At the end of May the estimates will be passed whether we have seen them or not. Today it was suggested that two or three of them should come to the House. Whilst this is a good suggestion, it only goes part way.

Mr. Blair: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Forrestall: No. Sit down, unless you have something useful to ask.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Blair: I should like to inquire if it is the position of his party that St. Lawrence Seaway tolls should be increased.

Mr. Forrestall: As one of the members from Halifax said in the city of Dartmouth, I have noted on numerous occasions in recent years that the government said the seaway would not act as a detriment to our ports. I suggest that it has, and to that degree I am opposed to the existing subsidy by Nova Scotians to the St. Lawrence Seaway.

An hon. Member: The great white elephant!

Mr. Forrestall: What do we get when we need money? We are told that we are subsidized, but I say that Nova Scotia has been subsidizing Upper Canada for a number of years. I say that given a little control in this House over the way the government spends money, we might have resolved the St. Lawrence Seaway problem a long time ago without any detriment to the ports of Saint John and Halifax.

Mr. McGrath: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: Canadians in British Columbia, Newfoundland, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba—indeed everywhere—are picking up a debt of some $656 million. The tolls on the seaway do not even approach coverage of the interest. Who is paying for this? It is written off, according to the reply to a question of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North regarding the situation at the end of this year. The official reply concluded with the statement:

> In 1970, the United States government revised the financial structure of the American counterpart to Canada's seaway authority, the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, so as to require the corporation to only cover annual operation and maintenance costs and repay the original capital costs of construction—accrued and future interest obligations were waived. This approach, along with other proposals, such as those contained in the Carr report, present themselves as possibilities for altering the present system of repayment of the outstanding obligations of the seaway authority.

Without some appropriate control over the method in which the government spends the taxpayers' money, I suggest that the motion of the hon. member for Peace River is correct and necessary. As things stand, people in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, British Columbia and elsewhere are being asked to pick up that debt. The government is saying that our friends to the south have an excellent solution which they will take as their own and which they have used as an official response to questions on this subject.

Seven years ago in this House I suggested that the seaway toll should be written off over a 75 or 100-year period. That would cover the cost of handling the money which represents a great debt in terms of interest only, not in terms of capital that has gone out. I suggest that is not fair to the people of the Atlantic area since over the years the effect on the ports of Saint John, New Brunswick, Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland, and Corner Brook will be detrimental.

• (1630)

Further, I support the motion before the House because the Auditor General has once again found it necessary to remind us of the way this government had dealt with his staff, auditors and senior administrators. As has been said this afternoon, members of this House are obligated to that officer. We are obligated to do everything within our power for him in order that he may continue fulfilling that function which has been effectively removed from us.

I know the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) would like to take away the responsibilities the Auditor General has to this chamber. The minister has curtailed the responsibilities of the opposition. He has not been able to do that to the Auditor General and I hope he will not be able to in the future. If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), the only minister in the chamber, is to speak later I hope he will comment on the paragraph in the Auditor General's report relating directly, I suggest, to the motion before us. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there are 35 references in Mr. Henderson's report dealing with the Department of National Defence and these references relate directly to the motion.

During the last three or four years the department has had no alternative but to plan its own demise as a result of a frozen defence budget. I suggest that a minister owes it to the armed forces and members of this House to say how the government intends to unfreeze the defence budget so that those errors, omissions and infractions about which the Auditor General spoke can be overcome within the Department of National Defence. Many of that department's troubles have resulted from inadequate funds.

The government should make clear the procedures it intends to use to restore to this chamber its previous rights. Hon. members ought to be able to discuss government spending fully and their views ought to be given teeth. Only then will we get back on track, and only then can members advise, scrutinize and give consideration to the spending of taxpayers' dollars before they are wasted. I submit the motion is supportable. Anyone who has been in this chamber for more than two or three years cannot take any position other than that suggested in the motion.

The power and authority of this House over spending has been eroded. Those are not our words, they are words which have been analysed and spelled out clearly by the Auditor General. I think we all owe to that officer the support which this motion implicitly gives him, no matter whether it comes to a vote or not. I suggest that government supporters, if they have retained any influence in caucus, ought to persuade their ministers to support the Auditor General. They, too, are under that obligation, an obligation which is implicit in the words of the motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River. If we fail to support that officer, programs like the St. Lawrence Seaway may be thrust upon us without adequate examination or opportunity for meaningful scrutiny by this chamber.

At present, although we can ask questions and make our views known we are not given power. We on this side ought to be able to hold up the expenditures of one or more departments. At least it should be two or three and preferably that power ought to extend to all departments of government. After all, that is why we are here. We are not here to do the government's work; we are here to check on the work of government.

In recent years this chamber has become nothing but a housekeeping institution. The committees are housekeeping institutions. If a committee wishes to impress its point of view on the government, there is no way of doing it. The same can be said of this chamber. For these reasons, if the matter came to a vote I would wholeheartedly support the motion.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I rise before this large audience, not to make a very important speech from the philosophical or constitutional point of view nor to deal with the rights and duties of Parliament and of the Auditor General.

From the philosophical point of view, I have only one remark to make: it is human to err and the government of Canada has certainly made mistakes, as have the governments of all other countries, which does not mean that all governments are bad but only that some are worse than others.

Therefore, I do not rise to deal with very elevated subjects. I simply want to make a very modest contribution to political science students in the country who, reading the report of this afternoon's proceedings, especially the remarks made by hon. members of the opposition, might think that everything the Auditor General has revealed is catastrophic in nature and conclude that Canada has the worst government ever since the remote times of Roman history.

—Then I shall simply deal with cases regarding my department and this, again, as a contribution to political science in Canada. I shall quickly go over the Auditor General's criticisms against my department. I had this study made only today. It is pretty sketchy but I want to give it to the House anyway. At page 87—

[English]

In paragraph 87 there is the heading, "Failure to collect revenue due to the Crown because of inadequate control over contracts." Mr. Speaker, under this heading the Auditor General observes that many of the DIP contracts—Defence Industry Productivity— contained repayment provisions and that the department had not followed up to collect moneys due. His current comment deplores the lack of action on the part of the department in following up. The reasons for delay in following up were explained to the Public Accounts Committee last November. Action was initiated last September and progress was reported to the chairman of that committee by the minister, by myself, last May.

Here is a situation which has repeated itself on a number of occasions. The accusation has been made. The minister has confessed and atoned, but the accusation is repeated. No absolution is given, notwithstanding contrition. The sinner is reminded of his sin year after year even if he has confessed, made amends and paid in lost pride. That is the first case deplored by the Auditor General.

• (1640)

I said I was making a contribution to students of political science in Canada. The second case, paragraph 88, concerns grants to the Standards Council of Canada. The Auditor General here considers that the unspent portion of the grant to the Standards Council should have lapsed at the end of the fiscal year. He very sweetly says that this is an "opinion". It just so happens that we in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce obtained legal advice and got a different opinion. This being a grant, the opinion given to us was that the money belonged to the Standards Council of Canada. It not being an agent of Her Majesty it is not subject to the lapsing provisions of section 30 of the Financial Administration Act. The Auditor General has some lawyers on his side, we have some on our side, and that is all there is to it.

Paragraph 89, "Taxation of recaptured capital cost allowance with respect to vessels sold": this is a complicated matter. One aspect has to do with the administration of shipbuilding provisions in the Income Tax Act and in my own departmental subsidy program. It so happened that one agency of the Crown purchased a ship. It asked for the subsidy and we gave it under the provision of the law, notwithstanding the fact that it was a corporation of the Crown. The purpose of the law is to create employment in Canada. That corporation is free to go wherever it pleases to buy a ship. If we want to prevent a corporation of the Crown from buying a ship elsewhere than in Canada, we have to provide the normal subsidy to the agency of the Crown as we would to a private individual. That covers the third item.

The fourth item has to do with concessions made to motor vehicle manufacturers. The Auditor General observed that one major manufacturer did not meet the conditions of a conditional remission order. The manufacturer became liable for duty and sales tax amounting to $6 million. This amount is not included in the accounts receivable of the Department of National Revenue and that department states that it expects the debt to be forgiven. The failure was of a technical nature related to the Canadian value added in vehicles manufactured in Canada. The manufacturer concerned more than compensated for this deficiency by the export of automotive parts and hence met the over-all objectives of the automotive program. An order in council regularizing the situation has been promulgated.

In this case one has a choice between using the letter of the law and the spirit of the law. It is not always easy to decide. Had we made a strict interpretation of the law and the regulations, we probably would have been accused by the opposition of presiding over the failure of that company, depriving people of their employment. We decided to be intelligent about this, use our heads and we now stand to be chastised by the Auditor General for having done so. I suggest that the opposition would have done as we did. When you read the Auditor General's report it sounds nasty, awful, crooked and immoral, but I am telling hon. members the truth and leave it to them to judge.

Mr. Bell: You have a guilty conscience.

Mr. Pepin: No, not at all. I feel I am making a little contribution to political science and public opinion in Canada. I have not done so for at least a few days; this afternoon before five o'clock is not a bad time or a bad place to do so. If I am showing excessive modesty, it must be because of the limited number of members sitting opposite.

Paragraph 152 is another case, a rather complicated one. I answered this question this morning. The Auditor General observes here that in the case of the machinery program there has been a departure from normal practice in that the names of companies receiving remissions have not been shown in the public accounts.

The practice followed in 1971 is the same as that followed in previous years. The order in council numbers are shown in the public accounts report. There are approximately 17,000 remissions per annum. To publish them in the public accounts would be impractical. Company names and amounts can be obtained from the order in council concerned, which are in the public domain. We believe the practice to be consistent with the requirements of the Financial Administration Act.

This is a straight formality. Presumably the Auditor General would have liked us to publish the 17,000 names in the public accounts. We think this would unnecessarily crowd the public accounts. We publish in the accounts the number of PC orders, and these are available. I presume that someone reading these accusations might think that there is something devilish, "nasty, brutish and short" about what we have done here. Such is not the case.

I wish to draw another example to Your Honour's attention. I know that Your Honour is also a student of political science. Paragraph 166 has to do with the cost of unused space in Montreal, Quebec and Toronto, Ontario. The Auditor General observes that the closure of design centres in Montreal and Toronto cost the Crown $150,700 and $9,100 respectively in non-productive costs. This is under the design program of my department.

The design centres were open in Montreal and Toronto for a number of years. At first they were relatively well attended. However, public interest decreased and when we cost-benefited the whole thing it was found that every person visiting the design centre cost the government $5. It was decided that this was not very practical and the design program of my department was reoriented. It is now aimed at developing design in the manufacturing sector as opposed to educating the public sector as to its importance.

When the decision was made it was well known that the closure of the design centres would cost $150,000. The decision was made bearing this in mind. There was nothing "nasty, brutish and short" about that particular decision.

Paragraph 260 concerns advances, loans and investments, domestic, miscellaneous, loans to manufacturers re defence plant modernization. The situation here is that defence manufacturers are eligible for loans to purchase machinery for plant modernization. When a manufacturer defaults on repayment, the machinery is repossessed and the loan is extinguished. The Auditor General observes that equipment was repossessed and yet is still shown as a receivable in the public accounts.

The reply is again simple. In all but one case the department has been able to sell the repossessed machinery for the amount owing: in all cases except one we have been able to repossess and sell. It is quite normal, then, to treat a repossessed machine as something which is saleable. We consider it to be an asset. It would be misleading to the public to write the equipment concerned down to zero when there is every expectation of recovery. There is no provision in the government's accounting system to show an asset at market value. The least misleading approach is to show it as a receivable. Equipment not sold after one year is written off.

That is my contribution. I have just dealt with most of the items in the Auditor General's report that pertain to my department. I agree that it has been a skimpy explanation. I am just trying to demonstrate that when reading these accounts one should not hit the roof each time he sees an item. I am not generalizing; I am being very objective. I am just saying that these condemnations or observations should be placed in the proper context. I have tried to demonstrate that this afternoon so that students of political science now and in the future will not think that this government has no respect for efficiency and responsibility.

• (1650)

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, this debate is drawing to a close, and I think it has been a very good one. I want to pay tribute to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who has just resumed his seat. I think he did what the Auditor General has been trying to do for years; he got to his feet and explained the items that affected him. He told us of his problems and his difficulties and in some cases he asked forgiveness. As one member of the opposition, I felt he was most constructive and I congratulate him. He dealt with about six items. And six from 41 leaves 35; therefore I hope he will prevail upon his colleagues to do what he has done. If so, then the Auditor General has done his job and we in Parliament have done our job.

I think the government has approached this matter in the wrong way and has done so from the beginning. The present Auditor General has criticized former governments, not out of a sense of partisanship but because it is his duty under the law to bring these criticisms forward.

In closing, I think we have had a good afternoon and that the minister deserves credit for what he did. I only hope that his colleagues in the cabinet; some of whom are affected more seriously than others, will do what the minister did. I also hope that more than political scientists will follow this debate and pay attention to the confessions the minister has just made.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

THE LATE DUKE OF WINDSOR

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY AND CONDOLENCES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to inform the House officially of the death yesterday of His Royal Highness the Duke of Windsor.

[Translation]

In view of the very great affection many Canadians bore the Duke of Windsor and the enthusiasm with which they always greeted his visits to us as Prince of Wales, I have sent the following message to Her Majesty the Queen's private secretary:

[English]

I should be grateful if you would convey to Her Majesty and other members of the Royal Family this expression of sympathy on behalf of the government of Canada and all Canadians on the death of His Royal Highness the Duke of Windsor.

His Royal Highness occupied a very special place in the hearts and imaginations of Canadians who displayed their affections openly during his visits to Canada as Prince of Wales. On those occasions the personal warmth and youthful spirit of the man were communicated vividly to the people of this country. All Canadians and especially those who remember him in that role now grieve at his death.

I humbly request that Her Majesty extend to the Duchess of Windsor our heartfelt condolences on this sad occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have not the slightest doubt that all hon. members will wish to subscribe to this message of sympathy.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I associate myself and my colleagues with the expressions of grief and the condolences which the government has extended to Her Majesty the Queen and to the Duchess of Windsor.

As the Prime Minister has said, the Duke of Windsor had a long association with Canada as Prince of Wales and was held in great personal affection by the people of Canada. I therefore wish particularly to associate myself and my colleagues with the condolences the Prime Minister has expressed on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the cable which the Prime Minister sent was so well phrased that it said everything that needed to be said. I merely wish to join my colleagues and myself in the message of condolence to Her Majesty and to the Duchess of Windsor.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we want to join the right hon. Prime Minister and all members of this House in presenting our most sincere condolences to the Royal Family on the occasion of the death of the Duke of Windsor.

Upon someone's death, we attempt a retrospective glance at his life. The memories we do retain of the Duke of Windsor are of his loyalty to his country, the forthrightness of his decisions and above all his sincerity towards himself. Such are the most outstanding qualities which specially characterize him.

[English]

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we leave motions, is the minister in charge of the Wheat Board not going to make a statement on the announcement of the government that it has decided to purchase 2,000 hopper cars at a cost of $42 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. If the hon. member wants to ask a question, he may ask it during the question period.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1971, TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

May 25, 1972—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Public Accounts for the year ended March 31, 1971 and the Auditor General's report thereon be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Questions

VICTORIA WOOD DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—LEASE OF LAND

Question No. 7—Mr. Ryan:

1. Was a lease obtained for 7.8 acres of CNR land at the South-east corner of Danforth Avenue and Main Street in Toronto and, if so (a) how was the lease obtained (b) what was the date of commencement of the lease (c) for what purpose was the lease obtained (d) who obtained the lease?

2. (a) Did the lessee pay a lump sum for the right of obtaining the lease (b) what were the original terms of the lease (c) have any assignments and amendments been made and, if so, what are they?

3. Did Victoria Wood Development Corporation Limited sign a document that gave it lease-rights for the land on which Main Square Development is located and, if so, on what date?

4. Is the lease renewable and are the terms of the lease re-negotiable upon the initiative of the CNR?

5. Did CMHC put a value on the lease held by Victoria Wood and, if so (a) what was the value (b) who determined the value (c) what criteria determined the value?

6. (a) Did Victoria Wood apply to CMHC for a loan for its Main Square Development and, if so (i) what was the date of the application (ii) on what date were indications given that the loan would be approved (iii) on what date were the loan commitment papers signed (b) was an existing building mortgage registered against the land by any private interest or was any commitment to make such a loan outstanding (c) in calculating the amount of the loan, what amount of equity, apart from the lease, did CMHC consider Victoria Wood to have in the project and what was the form of this equity?

7. What were the construction costs for Victoria Wood's Main Square Development?

8. What stage of development was Victoria Wood's Main Square project at when it applied for assistance under the innovative housing program and what were the criteria upon which the corporation was made eligible for assistance?

9. What stage of development was Victoria Wood's Main Square Development at when the commitment papers for its loan from CMHC were signed?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Canadian National Railway and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. (a) In January 1966 the Railway, pursuant to its usual practice, invited proposals by public advertisement for the development of 7.848 acres of railway land at Danforth and Main Streets, Toronto. (b) January 1, 1968. (c) A high rise apartment development with commercial element. (d) Victoria Wood Corporation Limited.

2. (a) No. (b) It is not the practice of the Railway to disclose terms and conditions of transactions with other parties. (c) No.

3. Yes. January 1, 1968.

4. The lease is not renewable but the rental thereunder is subject to review by the Railway at various periods throughout the lease term.

5. Yes. (a) $1,000,000. (b) The valuation resulted from an appraisal made by a private firm of professional appraisers and was supported by a CMHC appraisal. (c) Normal appraisal methods and techniques were applied in determining the leasehold interest of Victoria Wood.

6. (a) Yes. (i) December 10, 1969. (ii) Statement of intent to make loan issued May 22, 1970. (iii) July 16, 1970. (b) A building mortgage was not registered against the Main Square land at the time the CMHC solicitor searched title prior to registering the CMHC mortgage, nor was CMHC aware of any prior commitment by any other lender to finance the project. (c) Victoria Wood equity consisted solely of its leasehold interest in the land.

7. CMHC estimated the building costs to be $13,892,460.

8. At the time of the announcement of the innovative programme, the Main Square Development had not proceeded beyond the stage of presentation of plans in support of its application to CMHC for a loan. The Major criteria considered by CMHC were: (a) Good location in relation to public transportation and amenities. (b) Favourable rental structure. (c) Comprehensive nature of development which includes residential, commercial and recreational elements. (d) Early start capability.

9. See 8 above.

CMHC—STUDIES BY PROFESSORS CHARNEY, CARREAU AND DAVIDSON

Question No. 415—Mr. McCleave:

1. What terms of reference were given to Professors Charney, Careau and Davidson of the University of Montreal by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or by any task force set up by that Corporation?

2. What were the qualifications of each for the assignments they undertook?

3. What payments have or will be made to each?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. In March, 1971, the Task Force on Low Income Housing commissioned Professor Melvin Charney, in collaboration with Professor Serge Carreau and Professor Colin Davidson to carry out a study, the terms of reference of which involved an investigation of the problem areas in the production and adequacy of low income housing, including such matters as supply factors and the capability of the industry, levels of productivity, quality and maintenance of stock, demand factors, patterns of need, and utilization.

2. Qualifications: Melvin Charney, M.R.A.I.C., Professor, School of Architecture, University of Montreal; Serge Carreau, M.R.A.I.C., Associate Professor, University of Montreal, consultant on community housing systems; Colin Davidson, M.A.R.I.B.A., Associate Professor, University of Montreal, consultant on industrialized building systems.

3. Professor Charney was paid a total of $30,552.14, and out of this sum payments were made by him to Professors Carreau and Davidson.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CATERING SERVICES FOR NEW HEADQUARTERS

Question No. 532—Mr. Orlikow:

Has a contract been awarded for the provision of cafeteria catering services at the new NDHQ in Ottawa and, if so (a) was this contract the subject of public tender (b) did the lowest bidder receive the contract (c) what was the amount of the lowest bid (d) if the lowest bidder was not awarded the contract, for what reason?

Mr. J.-R. Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): No, there was no public tender for a contract for the provision of cafeteria catering services at the new National Defence Headquarters Building in Ottawa. The cafeteria will be operated by the Administrative Unit of the National Defence Headquarters. (a), (b), (c) and (d) not applicable.

COST OF PUBLICATION "HOW YOUR TAX DOLLAR IS SPENT"

Question No. 553—Mr. Crouse:

1. How many books entitled, "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent 1972-73", under the signature of Hon. C. M. Drury, were printed?

2. How many of these books were distributed?

3. What was the cost to the government of printing this book?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. 558,820.

2. As of May 11, 1972, 378,811 copies had been distributed either directly to the public or to departments and agencies of government for subsequent public distribution.

3. $72,625.73.

CANADA'S AMBASSADOR TO UNESCO

Question No. 576—Mr. Thompson:

Did Canada's new Ambassador to UNESCO work for the Department of External Affairs between the years 1942 and 1945 and, if so (a) what were his duties (b) for what reasons were his services terminated (c) on what date were his services terminated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): A check of the records has shown that Canada's new Ambassador to UNESCO did not work for the Department of External Affairs between the years 1942 and 1945. Supplementary questions (a), (b) and (c) are therefore not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT ON INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 291—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the rate of unemployment on Indian reservations generally?

2. What programs are in effect to deal with unemployed Indians?

3. To what extent have the federal and provincial governments co-ordinated their efforts to reduce unemployment among Indians?

4. Does Canada Manpower provide services on Indian reservations?

Return tabled.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL—INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister further to the one addressed to him by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on Friday last. Now that the Prime Minister has had some time to look into the question of a possible conflict of interest, can he say whether or not he has made inquiries and can he now advise the House whether there was a conflict of interest in the position of the chairman of the federal anti-dumping tribunal who resigned recently?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did check into my memory on this and I discovered that, while I said I had received the letter of resignation some days before, it was actually a few weeks before, early in May. Also, the letter was sent to the Minister of Finance who was the proper minister to receive such a letter. That is all I can report, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance will be in the House and he may want to comment on this further.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Prime Minister advise the House whether any inquiries have been made or are being made into the question of conflict of interest in the position of the chairman of the federal anti-dumping tribunal who has resigned? Has any such inquiry been conducted? Is any such inquiry being conducted? Does the government intend to have any such inquiry conducted?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice replied in a general way on that matter in the House on Friday and indicated that he had caused the matter to be brought before the courts. Therefore it is obvious that some inquiry had been made. The Leader of the Opposition might want to address further questions to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I address this question to the Minister of Justice but not specifically with regard to the question answered by him on Friday. I would like to ask him whether he is conducting or is causing to be conducted any thoroughgoing inquiry into the matter of conflict of interest, not merely in relation to the case to which he referred on Friday but in more general terms?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, naturally the instant case which is before the courts has raised some questions about whether any other matter should be looked into further, and some further examinations are therefore taking place. The only one, however, which has reached any stage for action on our part is in the case of the anti-dumping tribunal's decision in regard to glass. There we have instituted proceedings, and the basis for our proceedings is, of course, a matter of record in our motion before the Federal Court.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the minister's answer, could he indicate very briefly the scope of the inquiries being conducted, and could he also indicate when the House will be informed as to the outcome of these inquiries?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think anything would be gained by attempting to describe the internal workings of an inquiry of this general nature. Needless to say, when proceedings are begun it becomes a matter of record and therefore known to the public. It is not usual for the minister to indicate to the House when proceedings have been instituted. I did not do so in this case and I am not likely to do so in any future case, but it becomes a matter of public record at that stage.

GRAIN

PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS BY GOVERNMENT—RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEPRECIATION, MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR COSTS—PAYMENT FOR USE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board or the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Prime Minister in Winnipeg that it is the intention of the government to purchase 2,000 hopper cars involving an expenditure of $42 million, and in light of the fact the Prime Minister also stated that the Canadian Wheat Board will purchase and operate these cars, can the minister inform the House whether the Wheat Board will be responsible in future years for the depreciation, maintenance and repair costs of this rolling stock?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. The Wheat Board itself will not ultimately be responsible for any part of the purchase and therefore any part of the depreciation costs but will, rather, be reimbursed for this by the government. The Canadian Wheat Board will be the titular owner of the hopper cars, but the actual operation of the hopper cars will, of course, be organized by the railways which will have to provide the appropriate locomotive power to haul the cars from grain elevators to grain terminals. The additional 2,000 cars are designed to allow us to achieve even higher export records than we have achieved at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: Since this is a new departure in transportation policy and since the railways are required to transport grain for export within the Crowsnest Pass rates as the maximum charge, can the minister tell the House whether the railways will be required to pay for the use of these cars in the form of a lease or rental agreement or in any other manner? Are they going to be required to pay for the use of this rolling stock?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the exact relationship between the railways, the Wheat Board and the government in connection with costs involved in hauling this extra movement of grain remains to be settled finally in future discussions. I should say, however, that there was a clear difficulty in persuading the variety of parties, whether the elevator companies or the railways, to take the necessary steps to ensure that we could get the movement of say 900 million bushels of grain, with each saying that with changes on the part of the other the necessary grain could be handled. It was our desire to see that the grain was in fact handled without waiting to see whether that argument could be settled. In other words, we wanted to be sure the grain would be moved without trying to rely on the fact that difficulties between the parties would be an adequate excuse to explain why it was not.

Mr. Gleave: Does the minister wish to leave the impression with the House that the railways were unready to transport the grain and, indeed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether that might not be debate. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Marquette on a supplementary. We might return to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar if he has a further supplementary.

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO INCREASE PRICES

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary arises out of the Prime Minister's statement in Winnipeg that the federal government will assist in purchasing 2,000 railway hopper cars to move grain. I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board if he can tell the House whether the government has any effective plans to alleviate the most pressing problem facing western farmers, that is, the low price at which the government is selling grain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question, I would think, is not quite in order. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement of policy which normally ought to be made on motions. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question or ask a supplementary to that previously asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House as to what plans the government has to alleviate the low price of grain that is causing western farmers difficulty at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's second question resembles the first. I suggest to the hon. member and to the minister that the question invites general statement which ought to be made on motions. However, the minister might reply briefly to the question, and I will then recognize the hon. member for Regina East on a supplementary.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, the grain which is being sold is being sold in international markets at the best possible price which can be obtained for it. Such programs as two-price wheat and the willingness to purchase 2,000 hopper cars are clear additions to the income cause of the farmers.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously getting into a debate. However, the hon. member for Marquette may ask a supplementary and the Chair will then recognize the hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, but I was referring to a program, other than the two-price system for wheat, which would cover all grains and provide for more active participation by the government than the minister has so far indicated?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member whether he thinks we should charge high prices and sell no grain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, the hon. member for Marquette is initiating a debate. We ought to return to the original question. The hon. member for Regina East may ask a supplementary.

PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS BY GOVERNMENT—PREVENTION OF WITHDRAWAL OF ROLLING STOCK BY RAILWAYS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Can the minister indicate what assurances have been given by the railways that they will maintain their present quantity of rolling stock engaged in grain movement in that particular type of movement and whether the government or the Canadian Wheat Board will be maintaining control over that situation to make sure that the railways simply do not move some of their present rolling stock out of grain movement? Can he also indicate whether steps are being taken to overcome the traffic conditions encountered in winter months between the west coast and the Prairies, particularly in the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The second part of the hon. member's question clearly invites the minister to make a general statement on what steps are being taken to overcome transportation difficulties during the winter months. Clearly, that kind of information should be given on motions and not at this time.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, it would be very much the purpose and intention of the government to make sure that the hopper cars put into use in this fashion are additional to other rolling stock made available for the movement of grain. The railways have made clear their acceptance of the basic proposition that they have to supply rolling stock for any ordinary or predictable movement of grain. The key question was whether additional rolling stock was required in certain circumstances and whether the railways were obligated to supply it if the elevator companies were not willing to move to a seven-day week, and so on. It was to overcome that argument that we felt additional rolling stock should be put in place. I assure hon. members it will be very much our intention to make sure that this is additional rolling stocks and not a mere substitution for other rolling stock.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. Am I to infer from the minister's answer that, to date at least, the railways have given no commitment that these hopper cars will be in addition to existing equipment and that the equipment now in use will be maintained? In other words, am I correct in assuming that so far no agreement has been reached with the railways?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is quite incorrect in thinking that. The railways have had very firm discussions with the Canadian Wheat Board on the amount of rolling stock they have available which is to be dedicated to grain. These 2,000 hopper cars will be additional to that rolling stock.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse and return to this subject later.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—SUPPLY FOR EASTERN FARMERS—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC RESPECTING PRICE PARITY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that the feed grain problem is still with us, although slightly improved, may I ask the minister whether he will soon make a statement in this House concerning the new government policy with regard to feed grains in order that eastern farmers may get their supplies at prices comparable with those in western Canada?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope so, although I am unable to give a precise date now because the difference in price has very largely, if not completely, been corrected by the trade and by the supply-demand ratio in western Canada. Eastern feeders would like, however, to be assured that this wide discrepancy will not be repeated at some future time. We hope that before long we will be able to give some definitive reply to that question.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the honourable minister if at the departmental level talks are going on about this between the federal Department of Agriculture and the Quebec Department of Agriculture and whether his Quebec counterpart has made some representations?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think he has in the past few days. I would like to advise that discussions have taken place and are continuing on a much wider basis, including the trade and representatives of producer groups in addition to agencies and representatives from both levels of government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre has a supplementary to the previous question.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary arises out of the remarks made by the Prime Minister in Winnipeg. Will the Prime Minister please advise the House what he meant when in his speech on Friday in Winnipeg he emphasized the need to prevent feelings of alienation and suggested that non-Liberal members—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my way of thinking, that is not supplementary to the matter we were discussing a moment ago which I thought was related in some way to the movement of grain. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has a supplementary to the previous question.

GRAIN

PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS BY GOVERNMENT—SUGGESTED FREIGHT RATE REDUCTION IF SUBSIDIZATION INVOLVED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board arises out of the question asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Since the minister has indicated he cannot assure the House that the railways will cover the capital costs and depreciation of these cars which are being purchased by the government, can the minister assure the House that if there is any degree of subsidization the government will, as a quid pro quo, get some reduction in the freight rates on grain shipped to the coast?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the actual ambit of that question perhaps goes beyond the jurisdiction of my department, but I think I can assure the hon. member that in our discussions about arrangements with the railways we will try to be sure that every possible benefit in fact flows back to the grain producers for whom this help is really intended.

Mr. Douglas: Can the minister tell the House whether there will be any degree of subsidization or, indeed, whether the railways will pay the full capital costs and the depreciation through lease fees for these hopper cars?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is a double question which is not capable of having the same answer. There will be no degree of subsidization. That is certainly our intention. However, that does not necessarily mean that the conclusion drawn in the second part of the question is true.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH RAILWAYS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Will the minister make public the agreement to which he referred that exists between the government and the railway companies so we will have the answers rather than trying to obtain the information from him during the question period?

[Mr. Olson.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the agreement to which I referred was the understanding arrived at between the Canadian Wheat Board and the railways in connection with the movement of grain in the next immediate period. I will certainly discuss with the Wheat Board whether the transportation document which is normally used in connection with such discussions can be made available to hon. members.

Mr. McIntosh: In other words, I take it from the minister's remarks that there was no agreement?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is quite wrong. I indicated that there was an agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will try another subject. Perhaps we might get away from the debate on which we are embarking once again.

POST OFFICE

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS—INQUIRY AS TO ACCEPTANCE BY GOVERNMENT OF PROPOSAL THAT NATIONAL RATES OF PAY SHOULD BE OFFERED

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister or the Acting Postmaster General. Does the government plan to accept the proposal of the Public Service Alliance of Canada that national rather than regional rates of pay should be offered to its postal employees?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can take notice of the question on behalf of the Postmaster General, but I would be surprised if he would want to negotiate publicly at this stage of the negotiations. Therefore he perhaps will not be in a position to answer the question of the hon. member.

Mr. McCleave: In light of the recommendation by the Toronto local of the Letter Carriers Union that a national strike vote be held to protest the current proposals of the government, is the government planning to develop new proposals?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think you will recognize that we have consistently refused to negotiate in public with the unions by the intermediary of questions from the opposition.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not agree that really the terms of the negotiations are evidence of a special status for several parts of this country and does not the government resist such a concept?

Mr. Trudeau: The question is a bit too esoteric for me. Perhaps the hon. member could write an essay and I will read it.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister please advise the House what he meant when in his speech on Friday in Winnipeg he emphasized the need to prevent feelings of alienation and suggested that non-Liberal Members of Parliament had helped to create such feelings?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member and the House in general that questions about statements made by ministers outside the House, including the Prime Minister, can only be put to inquire whether the statements represent government policy. I wonder whether it is traditional or according to our practice to ask what was meant by a speech made outside the House. It is sometimes difficult enough to find out what is meant by a speech made inside the House without trying to ascertain what was meant by speeches made by members outside the House. I would think this is a rather fruitless exercise. The hon. member might like to rephrase his question.

Mr. Paproski: Would the Prime Minister be more specific about what he meant in his speech on Friday in Winnipeg when he emphasized the need to prevent feelings of alienation and suggested that non-Liberal Members of Parliament had helped create such feelings?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should have thought the point was well illustrated today when, after the government had announced the purchase of 2,000 new hopper cars, the opposition took a purely negative view and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that both the question and the answer show why this rule regarding speeches outside the House is so valuable. I am sure that every Monday we could spend the whole question period discussing speeches made over the weekend by members on both sides of the House. I suggest that is not the purpose of the question period. Questions about speeches made outside the House should be restricted to inquiries whether certain statements represent government policy. That will certainly save us the trouble we are getting into in relation to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I must rise on a question of privilege. I suggest that at a time when this country is being held together by some very thin threads the Prime Minister of this country should not be stooping to blanket condemnation of Members of Parliament who do not belong to his party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Let me say that if it had not been for the many great non-Liberal members in this assembly, this country would be divided.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The rules are perfectly clear that if an hon. member wants to raise a question of privilege he has to give notice of his intention to do so. This is not a question which relates to a debate that has just taken place in the House, but rather to something which took place outside the House before the last hour. Therefore the hon. member had ample opportunity to give the Chair the notice which is required by the Standing Order.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have to ask a different question because that question was certainly not in order.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the insinuation left by the Prime Minister with regard to members of the opposition. Surely the Prime Minister knows parliamentary procedure well enough to know that it is the duty of opposition members to inquire into transactions such as this when they are announced outside the House and not explained in the House. As Members of Parliament it is our duty to make the Prime Minister explain the details of the deal. We do not know whether the farmers are ultimately going to pay for this or whether it will be the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously we are not talking about the same thing. The hon. member's question did not relate to the point raised originally by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. I may be at a disadvantage because I did not have the privilege of reading the speech to which all these questions allude. I do appreciate the point raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. The questions which were asked in relation to this matter were certainly in order and I am quite willing to recognize further questions on the point. However, I thought the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre referred to a different part of the speech.

• (1440)

Mr. McIntosh: My question of privilege had nothing to do with the Prime Minister's speech in Winnipeg. It had to do with his remark in the House a few moments ago implying that members of the opposition were not doing their duty in asking these questions and that it is not our privilege to do so. I think the Prime Minister should know better than to make such suggestions that provoke this type of discussion.

An hon. Member: Cheap politics.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question period is quickly going by on these points of order and questions of privilege which may be entirely justified. I would think they are grievances rather than questions of privilege. The hon. member has made his point and I hope we can get on to another subject. If the hon. member for Annapolis Valley is rising to ask a supplementary question, I suggest that it might be a different question rather than a supplementary. I do feel that the original question asked by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre was not entirely, completely or absolutely within the four corners of the rules.

Mr. Nowlan: Because I agree with Your Honour's preliminary ruling, I rise on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —to help clarify the program ahead in this warm, prosperous, election-free springtime and summer. For the enlightenment of the Chair and members of the House, perhaps we could be given the itinerary of the Prime Minister for the next weekend in this election-free summer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: What about your own leader?

Mr. Nowlan: We will put you into the hopper, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have obviously started on the wrong foot this week. Things can only get better from this moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, further to the point raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, I specifically requested a statement on motions for the information of hon. members. This has been denied and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has failed to give the House the necessary information. Then we are accused by the Prime Minister of abusing our privileges—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LOW-INCOME HOUSING

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question involves a change of subject. I address it to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I have asked the hon. gentleman several times to table the Dennis Report on low-income housing. I understand that this report has been available to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for two weeks and that Professor Dennis is now away on holiday. I now repeat my request that this important report be tabled in the House.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Professor Dennis was preparing the report for publication. I will determine whether it has been handed in.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE, MONTREAL—MEETING OF MINISTER AND UNION AND MANAGEMENT REPRESENTATIVES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE DISPUTE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister state whether he was able to meet personally over the weekend with representatives of labour and management in connection with the strike of longshoremen in Montreal which is now in its fourteenth day, and whether any moves have been made by the government to settle this strike?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): On Friday last I did have an opportunity of meeting informally and in an exploratory way with representatives of management and labour in the offices of the department in Montreal. The senior federal mediator is working with the two parties on a daily basis to seek a settlement of this dispute.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour concerning the same subject. Has the minister taken into his confidence the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who had so much success in the past in this field?

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by a former cabinet minister that extensive subversive activities are taking place in Canada and that the report of the Royal Commission on Security did not give all the facts, would the minister tell us whether he intends to make a statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not object to the minister replying to the question asked by the hon. member, but I suggest it ought to be asked directly. A few minutes ago I had occasion to refer to the rule we are attempting to recognize and respect that questions may be asked about statements made outside the House by ministers only to inquire whether they represent government policy, but my understanding of the rule is that it does not apply to former ministers of the Crown. This having been said, perhaps we could assume that the question has been asked directly, and the minister might reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, paragraphs 15 and 16 of the abridged report of the Royal Commission on Security give a very clear description of the communist subversive activities in Canada. The description is still generally valid.

To reply more directly to the hon. member's question, I would say that the following can be read in the same abridged report and I quote:

Note: The Report of the Royal Commission on Security as originally submitted to the Governor in Council in October 1968 included some material which in this published version has been omitted or amended in the interest of national security.

These changes are of small significance in the context of the Report as a whole—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the minister, because he is making a statement which should normally be made on motions. I think that he should try to answer as briefly as possible the hon. member's question. If the latter wishes to put supplementaries, he could do so afterwards. If he must give a long answer, the minister should ask the consent of the House to revert to motions, in order to make a statement on which representatives of the opposition could make some comments.

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the remainder of my answer will only require five seconds.

These changes are of small significance in the context of the Report as a whole, and the Royal Commissioners agree that they do not affect the substance of the Report or its recommendations.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: In order to clear up this matter, would the minister make a statement on motions and, in addition, consider asking his hon. friend from Trinity to appear before the appropriate committee with respect to the assertions he has made?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make further remarks on this question. However, I can inform the hon. member that the commissioner of the RCMP and the Director of Security Services have assured me that the situation is under control and, if the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) wants to break his oath or hide behind it to arouse suspicion, it is up to him—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Prime Minister concerning the massive security provided for the right hon. gentleman at the Liberal fund-raising dinner. I am not objecting to that, of course; I would not want to see anything happen, naturally, to my right hon. friend. But I should like to ask him whether that massive security was intended to protect him from these subversive elements or from the Liberals who were attending that dinner?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MOTOR CARS—REQUEST FOR ACTION ON AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION SEEKING BETTER WARRANTIES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the policy motion endorsed this morning by the million-member Canadian Automobile Association urging action at the federal level to protect consumers of Canadian motor vehicles with better warranties at the workmanship and parts levels, will the minister give early consideration to this request?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the notice of his question which I received just after coming into the House. I have not had an opportunity to see the policy statement to which he referred, but I will examine it and, to the degree that federal jurisdiction does apply, I will be most interested in pursuing the suggestion therein.

GRAIN

PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS BY GOVERNMENT—ASSURANCE THAT COST WILL NOT BE CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from the reply of the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board whether he can assure the House that no part of the cost of the 2,000 hopper cars for grain movement will be met out of the farmer's Wheat Board account?

Hon. Otto Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what the Prime Minister said.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNCTAD MEETING—REASONS FOR NEGATIVE VOTES AND ABSTENTIONS BY CANADA ON CERTAIN MOTIONS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I should like to direct this question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the recent UNCTAD conference and the position of the Canadian delegation which has been described by Canadian church observers there as non-committal, cynical, tightfisted and disruptive. Can he advise why, in respect of the motions put forward by developing countries to assist their economies, Canada found it necessary to vote against nine and abstain on four of these important resolutions?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—RESULT OF MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIER BOURASSA

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In view of his intended meeting last Thursday with the premier of Quebec for discussions concerning the James Bay project and possible agreements between the federal and provincial governments, could the minister advise the House of the gist of these discussions? If both governments have reached an agreement, can he tell us something about it?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have had an excellent meeting with the Quebec premier; we have agreed to continue to explore the possible ways of solving the problem. However, we are not in a position to make concrete proposals at this time, because we shall have to hold talks with the Indians of the province of Quebec. Some weeks and even months may elapse before we can announce concrete proposals.

URBAN AFFAIRS

TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE—EFFECT OF QUEBEC SELECTING MUNICIPAL DELEGATES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of Premier Bourassa's decision to have his government choose the two Quebec municipal delegates to the tri-level urban conference and the resulting impairment of the conference's purpose, will the minister now state whether the effect will be to reduce the conference to a two-level conference?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the method of choosing municipal representatives was set out in the report in which I understand the province of Quebec concurred.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, is the minister content that the provincially picked delegates from Quebec will act—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is clearly out of order.

Mr. Ryan: May I rephrase the question?

Mr. Speaker: Would the member resume his seat. The hon. member is inviting the minister to indicate whether he is content, satisfied, pleased or happy with something. That is not a proper question. The question should be asked directly.

Mr. Ryan: The premier is reported to have said that these delegates will act only as advisers to the Quebec government at the conference. Does this statement come within the guidelines to which the minister has just referred?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter for consultation between the province of Quebec and the municipalities concerned. I am quite sure we will have a successful conference.

[Mr. La Salle.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FOOD PRICES AND SUPERMARKET PROFITS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the increase in the cost of food by 7½ per cent between April 1971, and April 1972, and the simultaneous increase in the profits of food companies, Dominion Stores 300 per cent, and Weston's nearly 50 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is making a speech. The purpose of the question period is for hon. members to seek information, not to convey information to the House. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Nystrom: In light of these two facts, will the minister refer this important issue to a special committee of the House for investigation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would not be empowered to do so. I might advise the hon. member that this same question was asked by two members of his party previously, and I do not think my answer has since changed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, will the minister make a statement on motions some time this week informing us of the action he is taking on this important issue?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. member to the answer I gave, which I think is clearly printed in Hansard.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—FINANCIAL SITUATION OF ONTARIO PRODUCERS—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the continued difficulties in the egg producing industry and the desperate financial straits in which Ontario egg producers in particular find themselves, will the minister be in a position soon to make a statement in the House indicating what the future will be for egg producers in Ontario?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, discussions took place in Ottawa almost all of last week among producer organizations from across the country. As a result they have come to a tentative agreement. Meetings are starting today and telecommunications with the provincial representatives, including the provincial ministers, which hopefully will result in an agreement some time later today. If necessary, we will call a wider meeting of provincial ministers because we want to resolve this problem as quickly as possible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MINIMUM WAGE—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question concerning his regard for the minimum wage as it now exists. Will he advise the House whether he has in fact had an opportunity to meet with his provincial counterparts? If so, without disclosing the figure will he say whether a figure has been reached, and is it the intention of the minister to bring in legislation in this regard in the very near future?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of meeting the provincial Ministers of Labour. I might say in addition that the question of minimum wages is under continuous consideration by the government.

Mr. Alexander: Arising out of the answer of the minister, may I ask whether it is his intention to take a new approach with his provincial counterparts in order that he can come to the House with legislation making the minimum wage more equitable? Is this his intention in the very near future?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, it is not my present intention to seek meetings with the provincial Ministers of Labour on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With that last supplementary question we have give beyond the end of the question period. Perhaps further supplementaries might be kept until tomorrow. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR CONTROL OF FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the objective of the bill we are studying today is to ensure that foreign takeovers of Canadian corporations take place only when such takeovers will bring appreciable benefits to Canada. This bill is also designed to increase such benefits as much as possible.

In fact, Bill C-201 provides that all proposed takeovers in excess of a certain amount, will have to be drawn to the government's attention, after this bill is passed. The government will be empowered to assess these takeovers and determine how they contribute to the welfare of Canadians. It would also empower the government to negotiate changes liable to increase the benefits that might be derived from those takeovers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister but with the discussions which are taking place in the rear of the House it is difficult to follow the hon. minister's remarks. I would suggest to the hon. members who want to proceed with these conversations to do so behind the curtains.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that this bill empowers the government to negotiate changes which might increase the benefits that might be derived from these takeovers. Finally, the bill empowers the government to reject any takeover which would not bring appreciable benefits to Canada.

In other words, this bill gives the government the right to know of, to assess, to negotiate, to allow or to stop takeovers above a certain level.

This measure, Mr. Speaker, is complementary to that already taken by previous governments in order to stimulate Canada's economic development and independence. I deeply regret that some commentators have not placed the new measure in its wider context, which I will of course attempt to do today.

Previous governments have, indeed, created a group of corporations: the Canadian National, Air Canada, the Polymer Corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, the Northern Transportation Corporation Limited, the Northern Canada Power Commission, Panarctic Oils Limited, Telesat, the Canada Development Corporation.

Those same governments have limited foreign investment in some major financial sectors: banks, insurance companies, loan companies, and finance companies.

Some of our major cultural industries—radio, newspapers, magazines—are also subject to regulations which oppose foreign control, successfully in most cases.

The tax system, reinforced by last year's fiscal reform, also contains provisions to encourage Canadians to invest more in Canada than abroad.

However, Mr. Speaker, until now some of the most important sectors of our economy—manufacturing, raw materials, and many service industries—have depended on ad hoc decisions or have quite simply been ignored.

Bill C-201 is therefore designed to facilitate—I emphasize "facilitate", for it is not going to solve everything—the lessening of some of the problems created by foreign investment, and also the improvement of the advantages, the positive aspects, of foreign investment in those important sectors.

Mr. Speaker, the major aspects of this bill have already been announced to the public as well as to the House by the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) in his statement of May 2 last. I shall therefore confine myself to answering some very important questions which have already been raised both in this House and by the public at large.

For instance, why does Bill C-201 apply only to acquisitions of control? Why not implement a policy to extend and enlarge general restrictions in key sectors, all questions that are dear to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)? Why a reviewing or screening process and other similar questions?

[English]

I find it difficult to answer the first question which has been raised. Some people have asked: why not exclude all foreign investment? I think no modern country can afford to deprive itself of the benefits associated with foreign investment in terms of capital inflow, in terms of technology, in terms of markets and in terms of employment. No country today can afford to join an economic nunnery. Markets, technology and capital move around the world these days very rapidly with foreign investments. It seems to me it would not be particularly intelligent to deprive ourselves of these contributions. The technologically richest and most advanced country of the world, the United States, takes more and more foreign investment. I was looking at the statistics a moment ago and found that the United States in 1970, has experienced an increase of 11.8 per cent in foreign investment over the previous year compared to an increase of 8 per cent in Canada. This would indicate that the greatest and most powerful country in the world in terms of material wealth, is also taking a lot of foreign investment because of the technology and other advantages which come with foreign investment. So, the question to me is not one of should we or should we not. To me, it is a question of how, what are the acceptable means and methods.

The second question which has been raised in recent days, and which has been bothering many people I must admit, is the following: why include only takeovers in Bill C-201? Why not include other forms of direct foreign investment such as new investment, re-investment of earnings, for example. There are three or four good reasons for this. I think they are good. The first is that of all the various forms of foreign direct investment, Canadians have been most concerned mostly about takeovers, and rightly so, because they do not necessarily—there are exceptions of course—add much to the Canadian productive capacity. Another argument concerns the economic consequences of foreign investments. What would have been the economic consequences of including more than has been included in Bill C-201?

The extension of the review process to other forms of foreign direct investment could slow down the creation of new industry, partly through reduced business confidence at home and abroad and partly through the disruptive effects such a major intervention could cause, resulting in fewer jobs being created. On the subject of business confidence I find the opposition is divided, as is not too uncommon.

An hon. Member: So is the government sometimes.

Mr. Pepin: I meant as between parties. Perhaps it is true also within parties. We will find that out later in this debate. Some members complain that the government does things which contribute to economic uncertainty, even if those things should be in the interest of the greater objective of justice, national unity or independence of the country. Strangely enough, in this particular instance, some people such as the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees)—and I regret his temporary absence, because I like to speak at him when I speak of him—seem to be saying things rather different from the usual line taken.

In this particular instance, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings seemed to be saying that the government had not taken a sufficiently dynamic or aggressive line. He seemed to regret that we did not go any further. At least that is what I heard him say over the CBC on the night of May 2. I tried very hard to obtain a copy of his remarks because I like to be fair in reporting opinions heard. My hon. friend was flying very high that night. He might have been on a Concorde or a rocket. He said, in his usual subdued, non-emphatic tone, that the government had not been very energetic on that particular day. I would appreciate it if he would let me have a copy of what he said on that occasion.

Some other Members of Parliament openly do not give a hoot about the business community. They love to antagonize it. They think that uncertainty is fabricated to influence the government and used by politicians to justify their cowardice. This was the word which was used recently by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), and which he addressed to me. Such is the comfort of opposition benches. I am not complaining, I am just observing. Each time the opposition has been accused of irresponsibility I have heard the answer thrown at us, usually the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is leading the attack, that governing is our responsibility and that they are not here to do our work. I say to that: fair enough.

In this particular instance, so far as Bill C-201 is concerned, we are governing in the interest of all Canadians, labour, management, owners, white collar and blue collar workers, hard collar, soft collars, too, striped pants, blue pants, hot pants and whatever you want. We did take into account public opinion. I must say that the polls, which will probably be quoted here, indicate quite clearly that Canadians are in favour of more Canadian control over their economy; there is no doubt about that. But at the same time we see Canadians—and I do not blame them—wanting a better standard of living, more security, more industrial growth, more and better jobs, better pensions, etc. If public opinion wants a responsive government, I suggest that public opinion also wants a responsible government and that is what we are providing in this bill.

The government had to consider how much intervention would be practical and workable. On these grounds, it chose to limit the review process to that part of foreign direct investment where, in the broad public view, there exists a genuine and clear consensus. We also took into account, when deciding on our policy, the views of the provinces, the theories of some of the provincial leaders and the practices of others. I must say that it is not easy to interpret all this. In a few cases, and I am not generalizing, there are slight differences between the theories and the practices of the same provincial leaders. Some who are generally favourable to foreign investment take restrictive action against it, and some who are generally unfavourable to foreign investment travel extensively abroad to attract it in one form or another.

Be that as it may, I think everybody here will at least agree that there was a division between provincial leaders on the degree of acceptable control in Canada, and the federal government had to bear this in mind. We had been cautioned to do so, and to illustrate this point I can find no more useful a source than the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) himself. In a speech to the Progressive Conservative Association in Nova Scotia, written in his own hand, which he gave on February 5 of this year he said:

> I want to warn the government that, as far as we are concerned, any policy that pins its faith exclusively on the restriction of investment in Canada in order to protect our identity as Canadians is bad for this country and would be disastrous in terms of national unity.

Frowning heavily, I presume, he added:

> I want to warn this government that any such policy, far from protecting our identity, would turn region against region, province against province, and Canadian against Canadian.
> I want to warn this government that we in the Progressive Conservative party shall fight hard against any policy that would have the effect of cutting off sources of investment to the provinces that are still in need of capital.

Frowning even more, I presume, he said:

> I want to warn this government that we shall fight to the end any policy that would hamper the fight against unemployment and weaken the Canadian economy.

After saying that, the Leader of the Opposition has no speech to make. I think he can hardly disagree with this bill. I anticipate that he will not. I am quite sure that he will be talking about other things that we might have failed to do. But I am talking about this bill. If he wants to talk about other things, that will be his choice.

So much for some hon. members in the House who normally fear uncertainty. Others, both inside and outside the House, say that Bill C-201 does not go far enough. Presumably, in their view, the government has paid too much attention to public opinion, to provincial leaders, business leaders, etc. They are taking an absolutist line. I have heard their statements on the radio: full steam ahead, damn the torpedo, damn the economic torpedoes, damn the regional torpedoes, damn the constitutional torpedoes. These gentlemen say they are the true democrats. They know what is best for the Canadian people. They will force Canadians to be free. I was listening to one this morning and, in my view, that is aristocratic government, possibly even foolish government. Good government is progressive government—Liberal progressive of course; good government is evolutionary government. As has often been said, the best revolutions are evolutions. Let me put it in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker. This is why we included only take-overs in the screening process.

The next question which was raised was, why screening? Why not the general restriction approach, 50 per cent of this, this being ownership, and 75 per cent of that, that being the number of Canadians on boards? Some ask why the general restriction approach was not taken, why not add to the key sector, new areas where foreign investments would be either excluded or regulated. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, these methods have been used in the past in Canada, I mean the general restriction method and the key sector approach. In my view that was the right approach in areas of unqualified national importance. I want to emphasize that. This approach might still be used in the future, but in the particular areas about which I am talking now, particularly manufacturing and resources, it was felt that using the key sector approach, so dear to the Leader of the Opposition, was too blunt and too automatic a means.

Why is that so? Because foreign participation in these areas in general brings clear benefits as well as obvious costs. Things were clear, one-sided, in some of the cultural areas that were singled out for the key sector approach. There was no great interest in having foreign investment and control. But I repeat that it is not so clear in the areas of manufacturing and resources. Here a more flexible and a more selective approach is needed. To use a useful cliche, we need in these areas not necessarily to exclude but to exclude only if necessary. I am not ashamed of using Mackenzie King's style. Those were wise words. He was trusted by the Canadian population for 23 years. To use a useful cliche again, Mr. Speaker, in these areas it is necessary to maximize the benefits while minimizing the disadvantages. That is the very purpose of the screening process.

Let me insist. To use the expression of the main character in Fiddler on the Roof, on the one hand a takeover can reduce Canadian participation in Canadian industry and provide nothing in the way of new activity in the economy; it may even result later in the closing up of Canadian business and the consequent loss of jobs. But then, on the other hand, a takeover may provide the means to rejuvenate a declining business or provide expansion to an already viable enterprise through the infusion of new capital, new technology, improved management and expanded market opportunities at home and abroad. It can also bring lower prices to Canadian consumers. The first, on the one hand, should be blocked, should be excluded; the second, on the other hand, should be allowed, and improved if at all possible. So much for key sectors, Mr. Speaker.

Then the next question is why not—

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister entertain a question at this point? Is he not aware that the key man in "Fiddler on the Roof" also held his hands up to heaven and cried, "Good Lord, why must you visit all this on me!"

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I only have one daughter to marry off, so I don't have to worry as much as Topal seemed to worry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I was trying to answer the question, why not more key sectors? I hope the Leader of the Opposition will take account of the remarks I have made.

The next question is: why not have general rules of Canadian participation? Why not a 51 per cent ownership formula? Why not a 75 per cent of directors formula? Why not the 90 per cent of management formula, and so on? These have been recommended by a good many people.

Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this bill, and I will admit it, is not to increase Canadian participation, and I underline that, although, and I underline the "although" also, participation will be a factor in the screening of takeovers. It is one of the five factors that will have to be borne in mind. I refer to participation by Canadians both within the particular enterprise being subjected to takeover, and participation in the industrial sector where that enterprise is located. I believe that an increase in Canadian participation will come mainly through other policies, some of them presently existing and some others to be added in the future. Those now in existence are the tax system, the Canadian Development Corporation, and that sort of thing. And, as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) said in his statement of May 2, the government is looking at other possibilities to enhance the Canadian interest, such as better use of Canadian capital markets, increased development of indigenous technology, and management development. On the latter subject my department, has recently created two modest programs for the improvement of Canadian management. I hope hon. members opposite have noticed this. Reference to these programs is to be found in communique No. 33/72, but I will not read it now.

Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that a policy that would focus primarily on Canadian participation without considering performance first could bring about rather strange results. A simple, automatic, general requirement of 51 per cent ownership, 75 per cent of directors, and 90 per cent of management would not necessarily produce the results we are all seeking. Having seven Canadian directors out of nine on the board does not give you much if the seven are treated like figureheads. And 90 per cent Canadian management does not mean much if all the decisions are in fact made abroad. Having 51 per cent Canadian ownership does not give you much if, in that particular enterprise control can be exercised with 10 per cent ownership. I am just saying here that one should not be fooled by appearances. These are not black and white situations to be solved once and for all by legislative action. There is a brief passage in Montesquieu—I am sure everybody has read it—where he calls at least for some countries, for the primacy of mores, customs and conventions over laws. This is where he says that very often changes in realities are more important than changes in law.

What is the importance of this bill, of this screening of takeovers? The leader of the NDP, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) says, "One big zero." I disagree of course.

Mr. Lewis: You can make it two.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: We are establishing here a new principle, the principle that future takeovers will be screened and that, to be approved, there must be significant benefit to Canada. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I am told that takeovers represent 5 per cent to 20 per cent, depending on the year, of foreign investment in Canada.

By monitoring the forward plans of individual enterprises in this way the government is breaking new ground. It is in effect inserting its influence in an area of business planning reserved until now to private decision making. Not only will allowed takeovers be more beneficial to the Canadian economy, but the objectives and criteria imbedded in this bill will influence the nature and direction of other forms of direct foreign investment in Canada. This will be done in an orderly, evolutionary, rational way.

As the screening process gains experience and builds up a history of negotiations and decisions, foreign investors will be able to see the kinds of goals that Canadian authorities are striving for on behalf of the Canadian public and, in a typical, practical business-like way they will adjust to them. I might also add that in any such process major administrative problems arise, and unless they are carefully and systematically worked out they could well create disruption. So much for the philosophy, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to go into too many of the details of the administrative end of the bill, as this can best be done in committee, but I would like to outline some of the major administrative concepts.

A central feature of the new measure is the concept of significant benefit. how is this to be determined? Hon. members are already aware of the five factors set forth in the bill. First, there is the effect of the takeover being screened on the level of activity as reflected in production and employment. If, for example, a takeover sustains the life of a declining enterprise which would otherwise close down, the promise of continued production and jobs would constitute an important positive benefit. Similarly, high marks would be given to a takeover which held genuine promise of expanded operations and job creation.

A second factor is the effect on productivity, innovation, technological development, and other such factors resulting in the more effective use of productive resources. Higher productivity may give rise to higher returns to producers in the form of higher salaries and higher profits, better value to consumers in the form of lower prices or better quality, and spin-off benefits to the economy at large, such as the dissemination of new technology and management techniques.

A third factor is the favourable effect upon competition in Canada. The takeover may have a very favourable effect through more vigorous and productive operations.

The fourth factor does not necessarily involve an identifiable economic benefit. This is the matter of participation by Canadians, and I have already dealt with that.

A fifth factor to be considered is, of course, the need for a takeover to be compatible generally with established policies, national, industrial and economic policies, for example; the existing program for rationalization within the textile industry, within the footwear industry, the need for wider markets in the chemical industry, the aerospace industries, etc.

Mr. Stanfield: Before the minister gets off that subject, and in connection with the competitive aspect, the minister has mentioned that an increase or decrease in competition would be a factor to be considered. Is it intended that this will be the sole finding on this matter, or is it contemplated that the takeover would also have to be classed, perhaps by a tribunal established under the Competition

Act? Would the minister clarify the confusion that seems to exist there?

• (1530)

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I prefer to go into that in committee because any short sentence or two that I give now might not be clear enough, but the general philosophy is that the two considerations will have to be reconciled. We will look at that in committee, supported by experts on that point.

Mr. Fairweather: That is the Pepin two step.

Mr. Pepin: Another basic aim of the bill is to deal with control rather than ownership. As everybody knows, these are not necessarily the same thing. For example, a widely held corporation can be controlled by a very few people. Consequently, throughout the bill reference is made to control. Now, control is more difficult to establish than ownership and this is why a system of presumption is to be found in the bill. This is a bit complicated, I will admit. There are two categories of presumptions in the bill. One is to help determine who must go through the review process before acquiring a Canadian company, and the other is to help determine when a takeover has taken place.

These presumptions are designed to simplify the administration of the law, both for the government and for business. They permit the responsible minister to look at the proportions of share ownership in the hands of foreigners and draw certain tentative conclusions. These tentative conclusions can be rebutted by the corporation. The reason for these presumptions is that while it would be relatively easy for the minister to determine the number and proportion of shares held in a corporation by various persons, only the individuals themselves know whether or not they have control. So, the procedure is that the minister will presume control in certain important cases and permit the individuals to rebut that presumption.

Cabinet looked at this problem at length, for at first glance it appears that the law would assume that a party was guilty until he proved himself innocent. But any alternatives we looked at could create greater difficulties. Since the individuals are the only persons who know who controls a company, the only alternative would be for the government to set up a rather elaborate investigative apparatus to snoop—to use a favourite word of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)—into company records. This would be inimical to the Canadian way of life. It was decided to put the onus of proof on the acquirer of the enterprise being taken over. It should be relatively easy for the purchaser to satisfy the minister as to who really has the control of his company. There are several ways to do this. Filing shareholders lists is one way, the records of annual meetings is another and the presentation of affidavit evidence of the location of control of the company is still another way. The bill provides authority to the government to give advance opinion on such matters. Any decision by the minister about control should be challenged before the courts.

Speaking of these presumptions, I know that a number of Canadian controlled companies have been concerned about the provision that where 5 per cent of the voting rights are held by foreigners, a company is presumed to be foreign controlled unless the contrary can be established. Some Canadian controlled companies have read this to mean that they cannot take over another Canadian controlled company without first consulting the minister. I am informed that this will not be the case. As long as the company knows that if challenged it could readily show that control lies in Canada, it does not need to consult or inform the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to conclude my comments, the government hopes that Parliament will be able to adopt this legislation before the summer recess and once it is promulgated, the screening process will obviously become operative. We know that there will be some disagreements on certain aspects of the bill. However, I think we will unanimously, or almost, recognize that it is, as a whole, useful and should be implemented as soon as possible.

My friend the hon. Minister of National Revenue begins today his consultations with provincial authorities. He will explain the bill's provisions to the provincial premiers and request their opinion on the matter. Their views, together with those of hon. members and other outside parties will be taken into consideration when the bill is referred for study to the committee.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is significant that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is introducing this bill and not the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray). If we wanted to search for the rationalization of the government's approach to the whole matter, perhaps the fact of the minister's imprimatur on the bill would provide the answer.

The minister speaks about division in the country. He mentioned particularly division amongst provincial leaders, but I do not think he mentioned the most significant division of all and one which we have watched for the last two years, the division in the Cabinet of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: What underlines this division, of course, is the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was successful and the Minister of National Revenue now finds himself in the position of disassociating himself in a general way, and he said publicly, with the document entitled "Foreign Direct Investment in Canada"—

Mr. Pepin: Why is it then that he has been sent to the provinces to explain the bill?

Mr. Fairweather: I think we should discuss all the divisions, that is all. I should like the record to be clear.

The minister says that the government is looking at other measures in the foreign investment field. The problem is that when this government looks at other measures, it continues the uncertainty that is endemic with this government in the whole economic field. The minister discussed the essayist Montesquieu. I think he said something to the effect that "changes in realities are more important than changes in the law". I think it is a pity that Montesquieu is not here to see some of the nonsense that goes on and perhaps if he were here he would say that the reality is that there is very little change in the law and very little change in our mores.

The debate in Parliament and the country about the very large foreign presence in the Canadian economy, and the capacity of Canada to make her own decisions about Canadian economic policy, is surely in no way joined by Bill C-201, the Foreign Takeover Review Act. The bill we are considering today has been variously described in the following terms, some of which have been trotted out by the minister himself, I suppose in anticipation of what we will say in this debate. It has been described as "one big zero", as being a surprisingly modest first step, as being just plain modest, as being hesitant, as being a little nibble, of failing to come to grips, of being weak and so on. I have exhausted my energy, but I can assure you that the record is filled with adjectives about the bill. One of the most interesting appeared in the New York Times which said that "the reaction of American business is one of satisfaction". This must surely rank as one of the understatements of this year.

If I read the newspapers correctly, the Minister of National Revenue has announced, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce alluded to this a minute ago, that there will be meetings with provincial premiers. What we must know is whether the comments and views of the provincial premiers might mean that changes will be made in the legislation. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) said that it would be more a consultation and that we could not anticipate any changes in the legislation. This is a sort of bow to the cliché of participatory democracy. Surely, if the Minister of National Revenue is to be believed, the bow is accompanied with a slap. He says, "We will meet you my dear premier, but nothing in the bill will be changed because of the meeting."

• (1540)

On May 2, the Minister of National Revenue made his momentous announcement about how the government intended to deal with the phenomenon of foreign ownership of the Canadian economy. The minister tabled a document entitled, "Foreign Direct Investment in Canada." I find it curious that the document and bill should have come forward at the same time. The bill, presumably, arose as a result of this document, but really has nothing to do with the warnings which are received if one analyses carefully the document. The document thoroughly confuses the public, and one wonders why legislation dealing with a small aspect of the problem came so late, is so weak and will accomplish really very little. The foreign takeover legislation is well and good, provided it is carefully drafted, contains adequate appeal provisions and has, as an essential component, provision for strong provincial inputs on decisions as to whether a specific takeover is of significant benefit to Canada.

May I say this: the man who works in the pulp mill at Bathurst, New Brunswick, if he is lucky enough to hold the job, is not as interested in the debate on the Canadian life style as he is in his bread and butter. It really does not matter to the man working in that mill in Bathurst whether the capital behind the Bathurst mill is based in Montreal or in New York. We should remember this when discussing the whole question of investment; also, provincial assistance, direction and advice is necessary in order that there may be, pursuant to clause 2(2) of this bill, assessment in determining that any acquisition or control of a Canadian business enterprise is or is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada. Unless the provinces take a great part in the evaluation and formation of policy considerations that the minister enunciated both in that clause and in his speech today, the whole matter will fall flat.

It is small wonder that the Minister of National Revenue, I suggest with great respect to him, is anxious to dissociate his name from the report. Presumably, as a loyal member of cabinet, he supports the policy itself, because that is the only way he can continue in cabinet. He spent two years developing the policy in this area and has since seen most of his work shelved, as most hon. members would admit, or nicely wrapped in red and white.

Mr. Gibson: Step by step, merely.

Mr. Fairweather: Step by step? Step by faltering step.

Mr. Gibson: No, step by careful step.

Mr. Fairweather: By two steps? Which step?

Mr. Gibson: No, no.

Mr. Fairweather: What step?

Mr. Lewis: Half step.

Mr. Fairweather: By half step; that is no step.

Mr. Stanfield: By a hop step, or a Russian steppe.

Mr. Fairweather: I hesitate to take the advice of the hon. member, whose usual routine, to say the least, is to take a double step or two-step. I have something to say, if the hon. member can refrain from talking about steps, because this is a half step or, putting it in another way, not really a conclusive step. I hope the Hansard reporter is enjoying this, because our interchange is not adding anything constructive to this lamentably inadequate provision. I suppose, as parliamentarians, we should stand in some awe of the government's agility to sidestep the real decisions which ought to have been made as a result of the two-year study.

Mr. Gibson: It is the opposition that does the real sidestepping.

Mr. Fairweather: I hope that the hon. member will be able to make a speech—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has the floor and should be permitted to make his speech.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, the tragedy is that the hon. member invited me to buy his lunch today, and here he is taking a half step, or obviously a no step or non-step. Sidestepping may be one of the attributes of this government, but it is a quality I deplore; and, when the government is engaged in what I suspect is pre-election preening, it leaves it open to the charge of being two-faced upon this issue. Tokenism has found an admirable ally in this government.

In the minister's statement of May 2 last, as reported at page 1829 of Hansard, he made brief reference to a most important aspect of foreign direct investment and multinational enterprise, and the need for international action. Actually the official opposition and the House in general, I suggest, would be reassured if some positive elements of such a policy were spelled out.

It is interesting to note that the minister identified this problem in his statement. It was also identified, if I may say so modestly, when the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence considered this measure. At that time we heard an interesting witness, Mr. George Ball, former undersecretary of state in the United States. During the questioning, I urged upon him and on the committee the view that there was a need for the government to show leadership in this field. Canadians tend to look at the issue as one between the United States and Canada, whereas many countries in Europe and, indeed, around the world are feeling the effects of the multinationals, many of whom are more powerful than most of the governments which are members of the United Nations. I happen to believe that multinationals must be accountable to some régime; I suggest that régime should be an agency of the United Nations; for, the activities of these multinational enterprises, despite any evidence of good corporate citizenship, are of such a nature that they must be beholden to some governments or the régime of many governments. Canada, it seems to me, is in an especially advantageous position to take the initiative here, and I suggest we should proceed forthwith to host a conference of countries in the world which are affected by the undertakings of the multinational corporation. A beneficial side effect would be that debate would move away from a United States-Canada discussion and become, if I may use the word, internationalized. At least, the discussions would be internationalized and, hopefully, agreement about remedies would be reached on some international aspects of the matter.

As Douglas Fisher and others have noted, the fashionable phrase this season is "industrial strategy", as I think the minister knows,. In a sense, we are caught up with clichés. They come on the scene, are worked to death, and pass away. The one in vogue currently is industrial strategy. We are often in danger, it seems to me, when we coin or over-use words and phrases and put more meaning into them than the plain, ordinary meaning of the words can bear. If I have learned anything in public life, it is that sloganeering is a poor substitute for action and that the debasing of the language is a poor antidote for our economic ills. Mr. Fisher reminds us that using terms such as "industrial strategy" leads us into the danger of glibness and I am sure the minister, more than any other minister, avoids glibness.

• (1550)

Mr. Fisher said:

If we are to have an industrial strategy declared for Canada it must be easily understandable. It will be meaningless unless it has with it all the majesty and support of governments.

That is plural, governments. There can be no industrial strategy for Canada that does not have a provincial component. Anyone who thinks otherwise is not a federalist. Mr. Fisher continued:

That is, the assertion of it by Ottawa alone, without the positive agreement of the provinces, is almost certain to doom it.

I can add an "amen" to Mr. Fisher's comment and say that decisions about whether any acquisition of control of a Canadian business or enterprise is or is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada must have an essential provincial element as the decision process goes forward. Otherwise, and surely the minister will agree, the purpose of the bill will be doomed to failure.

Canadians must have leadership from governments in enunciating to them a very clear exposition of national, industrial and economic policies. Here I am using the language of the bill. It is fine to have this type of language embodied in the bill, but if I heard his speech correctly, the minister admits that this type of enunciation of clear guidelines is a key element in the decision about whether or not a takeover is beneficial. We have to be assured that the decisions are taken on the basis of economic considerations and not on the basis of political considerations. I am sure this must be a major source of worry for the minister. There is so much discretion left with him that he will be under some pressure. I have already watched this with the Canada Development Corporation. People have all sorts of little catalogues of things that the CDC should take up.

Mr. Pepin: You mean partisan. You do not mean political.

Mr. Fairweather: I mean partisan political. If the minister means by his question the socio-economic aspects of the company which have to do with the political life of the country in the wide general term, of course that is the consideration. I will add the word "partisan" if it makes my speech clearer. The minister should be free of partisan political considerations when the decisions are being made by virtue of this bill.

The foreign takeover review policy must be understood as being a trading policy. The involvement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is made clear because it is a trading policy. The government, on behalf of Canadians, extracts a price for permitting the acquisition. The minister's language may differ a bit from mine, but he said the price will include such things as promises of jobs, technological improvement in the company, plant improvement, increased exports, more indigenous research and development and so on.

What if all these elements are present and then a few years hence the company trots in and says "Sorry, we have accomplished the takeover, but we are now about to close plant A and plant B." I suppose this would put the minister and his department into the area of forecasting which is perhaps better left to those of us who try to doubleguess the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about when he will be prepared to face the country in an election. The minister may be as good a forecaster as I, or perhaps even a bit better.

The Prime Minister said the government will use moral suasion in this aspect. I am anxiously waiting for another speaker from the government to delineate for me the Prime Minister's meaning of moral suasion. I think mortal man has many suasions morally, the Prime Minister none the less than the rest of us. It will certainly make most interesting jurisprudence if we see moral suasion as enunciated by the Prime Minister put into the body, so to speak, and made part of this whole takeover review board. This is an anxiety with which I will have to put up for a while. Surely, one of the spokesmen for the government will be telling us about the moral suasion which will form part of the government's policy. I hesitate to use the word nebulous, but in answer to a question of mine today, the Prime Minister said the point I was making was esoteric. I wonder if anything can be more esoteric than moral suasion. However, we will leave that consideration to other government spokesmen.

We will require a much more clearly defined and public set of guidelines because it will be our obligation, and I presume the bill is drafted in this form, when Parliament is debating at some future time whether or not a takeover comes within the ambit of this clause of the bill. This will be a public matter. In fact, there will have to be a great deal of publicity, not hurtful in the sense of income tax matters that are restricted by laws, but Parliament must not be caught in the bind that there will be "secret" stamped on some of the policy considerations that go into the decision about whether an enterprise is likely to be of significant benefit. This, of course, is a subject for another debate. However, we must, in considering this bill and the takeovers that will or will not be permitted under it, not get ourselves into the position of being hamstrung by the fact that a good deal of the information is marked "secret".

I want to discuss for a minute or two some of what I might call the worrisome aspects of the working out of the bill in its technical sense. I hope that when the bill reaches committee some of the procedures can be tested, if I can put it this way, against the philosophy behind the Canadian Bill of Rights. I suggest there are some incursions in the way the bill is now drafted. Presumably, the minister and the department, which it is obligated by law to do, has received the advice of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) that the bill is in fact not contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights. This brings me to another point.

It is a pity that the Committee on Scrutiny has not yet got around to beginning its work. It might be very opportune to have the committee activated so that the regulations that flow from this act can be examined by that committee. There has been a great deal of fanfare about the committee on scrutiny. In a way, it is rather like this whole matter of foreign investment; heap big smoke but very little fire. I hope that smoke will be cleared away and that that committee can do some useful work in this and other aspects of the examination of regulations.

As I reminded the House, Section 3 of the Bill of Rights requires the Minister of Justice to examine the bill. I am running over this quite quickly. Presumably, the minister has done that and has seen that there is no inconsistency between that bill and this legislation. It should be noted that a condition precedent to the exercise of certain of these investigative procedures is that the minister, upon an ex-parte application to a court, obtains an order authorizing their exercise. I suggest the superficiality of this requirement will have to be examined. Perhaps it would be easier to do so in committee, but the minister and the department, I feel, are entitled to some warning. Clause 14(1) empowers the minister, where he has reasonable grounds to believe that a non-eligible person or group is proposing to acquire, or has acquired, control of a Canadian business enterprise without having given due notice, and so on, to cause an investigation to be made in connection with the matter. Subclause (2) authorizes the minister to designate any person he sees fit to carry out these investigations.

I suggest, as an aside, though a relevant one, in relation to the conduct of an investigation affecting the rights of a private citizen, that the structure of the investigative process does not set standards and qualifications or provide, at least, for the acquisition of qualifications through experience. The minister may vary his decisions from order-in-council to order-in-council; the investigator may be changed at the whim of a minister or his successor. For this reason the proposal in the bill is more alarming than might otherwise appear, because if a straightforward proposition to establishing a tribunal had been made we would at least have known the names of those appointed as members. Other misgivings have been expressed about the structure of the review arrangements, but I shall not go into them at this point since the House has been generous to me in allowing me time in which to speak. My hon. friends may wish to discuss them later on in the debate.

I feel Bill C-201 in no way goes to the root of the problems created by direct foreign investment in Canada. This is not to say it is not a partial solution. I have not been persuaded by that part of the minister's speech wherein he dealt with arrangements for a minimum allotment of shares for Canadians. We should like to know a great deal more about this aspect. Then again, despite the minister's hesitancy when he spoke about the efficacy of Canadian directors, I believe it would be a good policy decision, if only from a symbolic aspect, to provide for some Canadian directors. Rules with regard to full disclosure on the part of foreign corporations should be rapidly implemented. Also, as I suggested earlier, we must take parallel initiatives internationally to develop a system of accountability applicable to multinational corporations. To be fair, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) mentioned this parenthetically at the end of his statement on May 2.

I do not resist in any way, and neither does my leader, the notion that key sectors should be expanded, though I have not discussed this matter widely. It has been said, for instance, that publishing, or the distribution of books, might well be made responsive to a much greater degree of Canadian control.

Mr. Pepin: You could get to it through the word "participation" in the bill.

Mr. Fairweather: The government keeps adding "participation" to concepts like democracy. Then, it avoids both participation and democracy. I would feel safer with the straight word democracy. Perhaps the minister would like to see the essay that the Prime Minister wrote upon the subject. My dilemma is that I have no Ivan Head to collect my essays. Not yet, anyway. Had I an Ivan Head, we might begin writing a series of essays about the denigration of the word democracy and the dilemma the government has created by announcing a new concept of participatory democracy, and then avoiding both.

Mr. Pepin: I read your essays.

Mr. Fairweather: Witness the airport at Pickering. There is a fine example of throwing out the phrase participatory democracy and then running back into the hangar.

As I had begun to say before the minister interrupted me, bargains will have to be extracted by the minister in connection with the use of Canadian services and supplies wherever possible. This is now being done, I understand, by the government of Alberta. There has been some grumbling by the foreign corporations concerned, but the government succeeded in extracting certain promises in return for licensing exploitation of the Alberta tar sands. This was a positive provincial initiative and it indicated an area in which a provincial government could be helpful to the minister as he establishes his jurisprudence.

A word in connection with the tribunals under the proposed competition act and the review process in that legislation. It is all very well to say that any differences can be reconciled in committee but it would help us in the committee and it would be useful in the remaining stages of this debate if we knew just how this minuet is to be carried on. Will it be done in the fashion of Arthur Murray, or will it be a Jean-Luc Pepin step? In any event a great deal more interpretation is called for, and I hope the information is given us before we get into committee. Otherwise, people may be required to go through both processes, and it is hard enough to go through one process at the present time when dealing with the government, let alone a double one.

Those are the principal points I have to make at this stage. It was flattering to see the minister making notes of them; I guess he cannot wait to get the "blues". In the light of all the shortcomings I have mentioned, and because the bill is such a weak approach to the whole field, I move, seconded by my hon. friend from Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) whom I have been able to persuade of the correctness of this approach:

That Bill C-201 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should consider introducing more comprehensive and more constructive measures which will increase Canadian participation in and control of the Canadian economy.

• (1610)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has proposed what he described as a reasoned amendment. He and other members may be able to convince me otherwise, but with great respect I think it is not a reasoned amendment as we know it within the rules and precedents of the House. I might indicate to the hon. member that one of the requirements of a reasoned amendment is that it oppose the principle of the bill. The hon. member has indicated that he does not oppose the principle, but suggests that the government should introduce far more comprehensive and, as he described it, more constructive measures. I will hear argument if the hon. member would like to present it.

Mr. Fairweather: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I might have been better off had I said nothing when introducing the amendment. This is a very important procedural point you have raised, Sir. When the rule changes were made two or three years ago, we changed the status of the second reading stage of a bill from one in which the House accepted the principle, to one in which a whole different series of considerations apply. Therefore, I respectfully suggest it is not out of order to propose an amendment which does not foreclose future action by any group within Parliament. This is the case because of the rule changes made in 1968. We should not be foreclosed, and cannot be foreclosed from this course of action because of the new setup which is inherent in the various stages a bill now goes through; that is discussion now, delineation in the committee, report and then third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal, in proposing a reasoned amendment, has referred to the rule changes. If the hon. member can give me authority or precedent to indicate that the rules in respect of reasoned amendments have been changed as a result of the rule changes I will be guided by that. However, it is my opinion that considerations as to the procedural acceptability in respect of reasoned amendments have not been changed by the rule changes. Many hon. members who are learned in procedural matters have argued that this is the case, but because hon. members argue that to be the case does not make it so. With respect, I feel there is no authority vested in the Chair to alter the established principles outlined by Beauchesne and other authorities who have guided us for some time. In my respectful opinion, the rule changes have not changed the considerations I must apply as to whether or not the Chair should accept a reasoned amendment. For that reason, and the reasons I mentioned earlier, I regretfully must come to the conclusion that this is not a reasoned amendment and, therefore, it cannot be put to the Chamber.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think it was clear to everyone who listened to the minister that he was engaged in a defensive speech, defending the bill and a policy he knew had very little meaning for Canada and for the future of this country. During his speech he put himself in the role of Tevyah in "Fiddler on the Roof". I should like to remind the minister that the first fiddler was Nero, and that is the role that fits the minister much better. It is a much more appropriate role for him in this case, because he is fiddling while Canadian independence is being continuously eroded. That is what this is all about, Mr. Speaker.

If I heard the minister correctly, he expressed the hope there would be unanimous support for the bill. I want to tell him now that there is not. This is a poor bill and a poor substitute for action to protect our country and its future, so we do not intend to support such a useless step as the minister has proposed.

The minister said there was opposition to the bill from members of this House. I think it is useful to put on record quotations from three editorials in newspapers which I do not think have the same political bent. In an editorial in the Windsor Star of May 3, 1972 we find this:

> The government is guilty of misleading the people of Canada. It promised to bring forth a foreign ownership policy. It didn't bring forth a policy, it brought forth a pitiful joke.

I am sometimes accused of using strong language, but I do not think I could have used any stronger language than that used by the editor of that paper.

The Toronto Star of May 3, 1972 had this to say:

> What the Trudeau government produced yesterday, after two years of huffing and puffing, is only a pitiful embryo of a Canadian policy on foreign ownership. The mountain that laboured to bring forth a mouse did a noble day's work by comparison.
>
> To call this a policy on foreign ownership is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians. This is no more than a feeble, timid gesture that will bitterly disappoint many Canadians who cherish their country's independence—

The Edmonton Journal of the same date stated:

> But what itsy-bitsy legislation it really is! Why it took Ottawa all these months to come up with a mere 14-page bill is a puzzle. The mountain has clearly laboured and brought forth a mouse.

This has been the reaction of everyone concerned about Canada's independence and the future of our country. As far as my colleagues and I are concerned in this debate, it is not the details of the bill or its inadequacies for the purpose for which it is produced that bother us. The real issue facing this Parliament, as it faces all the people of this country, is the preservation of the Canadian identity, the ability of Canadians to choose their own goals and to plan their own distinctive future and society. What is at stake, and this is merely a small part of the whole problem, is the very future of this country, the jobs of Canadians in years to come, the question as to who will make priorities for investment in Canada, and the question as to who will decide the direction of Canada's economy in coming years, based on our experience that decisions in a large sector of our economy have in the past been made by multinational corporations, by boards of directors and by management outside this country.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) spoke of multinational corporations. The important thing for us in Canada to realize is that the global interests of multinational corporations make Canada's interest secondary. When the interests of a corporation conflict with the interests of the Canadian people, there is simply no doubt about what the decision of the corporation will be. It is the interest of the multinational corporation that will take precedence.

I remind hon. members of this House, because I feel so deeply about this matter, that this issue of Canada's independence is older than Canada itself. History has taught us that confederation itself was the result of the collective desire of people in this part of North America to be independent of the expanding republic at the southern border. That is the purpose for which Canada was created, and that is the purpose which successive governments of this country and successive business corporation leaders in Canada have, in my view, eroded. That is why I believe this bill must be opposed. Our history as a country has been marked by repeated efforts to resist absorption by the United States.

When those of us who urge self-reliance for Canada, a greater independence for this country, do that we are often accused of being anti-American. I want to make clear again, as I have on many occasions, that I do not blame the United States at all. I reject some in my party, not in this caucus, who accuse the United States of doing all sorts of things to Canada. One of the phrases they use is that the United States has raped Canada. I am lawyer enough to know that you cannot have rape when there is invitation and consent. The fact is that successive Canadian governments and successive Canadian business leaders have invited the United States corporations to come in and exploit our resources, have invited them to set up branch plants in this country and have deliberately sold a large part of our economy to the multinational corporations even before they became as powerful as they are now. I suggest this is not being anti-American. This is merely recognizing the fact that at this stage in our nation's history we have reached another one of those historical moments when action is required to stem the tide of United States domination. I say this requires immediate action which starts now, for none of these things can be accomplished overnight.

This process will take years. At some point, under an imaginative federal government, a comprehensive beginning must be made. The time is rather too late than too early. The New Democratic Party has therefore repeatedly expressed its determination that Canadians regain control of their economy. Later in my remarks I shall propose at least some steps which should be taken now. What really depresses me is that the minister said in his speech,—as I am sure all members of the Liberal party know—and has admitted it is so, that a majority of Canadians want greater independence for the economy. Then, the minister, and I hope he will forgive me, ended up with a pitful defence of nothing. There is a desire on the part of the Canadian people for greater economic independence. The Liberal party admits that people want this but chooses to do not much, if anything, about it. The government and its predecessor, also a Liberal government, have had two task forces. There has also been a parliamentary committee. Very definite recommendations were made but almost all the recommendations have been ignored and swept under the rug.

The government set up a task force through a member of its cabinet to produce a policy. The policy, when it reached the floor of Parliament, did not even scratch the surface of the Gray report let alone the issue of foreign control of our economy. I remind, you, Mr. Speaker, that the Gray report set out five channels of foreign penetration of our economy. This bill deals with only one of these, takeovers of existing Canadian firms. It deals with this one of the five, the least important which covers the smallest part of the foreign capital investment in this country. The minister stated that it represents 5 to 20 per cent, of foreign investment, but in most years it is closer to 5 per cent than to 20 per cent. That is the only part of the problem with which this bill and the government deal.

I want to say that from the statement the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) made on May 2 and from the statement the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) made this afternoon, it is clear that it is not the intention of the government to stop or even limit foreign takeovers. The intention is merely to give the minister and his department or whoever else deals with big corporations an opportunity to bargain for what the minister calls a better deal of significant benefit for Canada.

I am not prepared to buy this sham. I say to the minister that what he is saying is utter and complete nonsense. There is absolutely no guarantee that a deal he is able to negotiate today in respect of a takeover would be honoured a year, two years or three years from today. What would the minister do then? Would he unscramble the takeover that has already existed? This idea of negotiating for a deal is a phoney attempt to try to justify a bill which does nothing in respect of foreign ownership because there is no way in which the minister and his department or any agency of the minister or of his department can get a guarantee for the future of Canada's economy in any deal he makes. If circumstances were such that after a year or two the plant closed down, Canada would be in the soup under this bill because the minister would not be able to do anything about it. Even at this point the government has fallen down on the job by its failure to provide for the period between introduction of the bill at the beginning of this month and its proclamation. It has given its corporate friends a breather in which they can make their takeover bids quickly without any review.

I do not know whether or not such a thing has happened, but the bill will not come into effect until proclaimed by the government and what will happen remains to be seen. I ask, what about the other areas in which the Minister of National Revenue's report said that legislation might require registration with the review agency? What of direct investment in new companies by foreign owners? What of new licensing and franchising arrangements? What of major new investments by existing foreign-controlled corporations in Canada? These are the important areas of possible further encroachment on Canada's economic independence. The takeovers the minister's bill deals with are picayune compared to the total problem the Gray report brings to Parliament and the people of Canada. What about these areas? The fact is that the government, like all its continentalist predecessors, is turning a blind eye on the really important parts of the problem, which threatens Canada's future. Limiting its legislation to takeovers is like hunting big game with a popgun. It will not work here any more than in the actual situation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has openly admitted the inadequacy of this measure. Confronted by the outcry of commentators and the public, he blithely tossed the problem to the provinces and said: Let them fill in the gaps. As are other Canadians, I am shaken by the Prime Minister's abdication of a clear federal responsibility. I say that one of the fundamental and essential duties of a central government in a federation like ours is to safeguard the integrity of the nation, of the state. The Prime Minister surely would not suggest that the military defence of Canada is anything but a federal responsibility. I say, on behalf of the New Democratic Party that the economic defence of Canada is equally a federal duty and a federal responsibility . I say to you, Sir, that economic conquest is as destructive of a nation's identity as is military conquest, even if it is a great deal less painful.

I cannot help but note that the statement of the Prime Minister is a long way from what he wrote in Cité Libre about foreign ownership in the days of 1958 when he said:

> Shall we suffer passively our situation of economic domination? . . . It could be better to be annexed outright by the United States than be exploited without limits.

That is what Pierre Elliott Trudeau wrote.

Mr. Francis: He still believes in it.

Mr. Lewis: A Liberal member says he still believes it. He may have some secret knowledge of what the Prime Minister believes. All I know is that the policy for which the Prime Minister is responsible is a betrayal of the words he wrote in 1958. But I am not speaking today for the purpose of underlining the mutations of the Prime Minister since he tasted power. My purpose rather is to point out how this government, after years of research, after two task forces and a parliamentary committee, has dashed the hopes of Canadians. It is also to express again the determination of my party, the New Democratic Party—a determination which, I am convinced, is shared by millions of Canadians inside and outside our party—that control of the economy must be returned to Canada and that the steps in this direction must be begun now.

• (1630)

It is therefore my intention to suggest a number of steps that we want taken immediately. One of the first steps we have urged on this government for some time has been illustrated in the last few days by the government of the province of Ontario which accepted the Prime Minister's challenge to the provinces to act, much to my surprise, I must confess, and only, from what I have seen, under prodding by members of the NDP in the provincial legislature, when it announced discontinuation of forgivable loans to foreign corporations. In any case, just last week the Ontario government admitted that there was no way of showing that its so-called forgivable loans, that is grants which are given in another name but which smell just as sweet to the corporations, influence the location of industry. As a result, the government of Ontario has suspended these forgivable loans to foreign-owned corporations. I ask you, sir, to contrast this with the situation in the federal arena. Each year and for the future, so far as the policy of the government is concerned, the federal government continues to hand out many millions of dollars to foreign-owned corporations.

Permit me, Sir, to put a few relevant figures on the record. In recent years, 39 per cent of all grants under the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, referred to as IRDIA, has gone to foreign owned corporations. In the case of the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology, known as PAIT, it has been 45 per cent. Under the Defence Industry Productivity Program, known as DIP, it has been a staggering 86 per cent. A fifth of all shipbuilding subsidies and half or more of all DREE grants have gone to foreign-owned corporations. We have not only invited foreign capital to come in and take us over but by deliberate policy and deliberate laws, we continue to give them the wherewithal to continue their expansion of ownership and control of Canada's economy.

To sum up, in the last four years more than $200 million have been paid under these programs to foreign-owned corporations, and there are commitments for tens of millions of dollars more that have not yet been handed out. Remember that all of this is in addition to the hundreds of millions of dollars that the foreign-owned corporations that control our minerals and our energy resources receive in tax incentives and concessions, in depreciation and depletion allowances.

Let me say that so long as this policy is continued by this government or by a Conservative government—as I am sure it would be if the Conservatives came to power—all this talk about trying to protect Canada's independence, is, in my profound conviction, just words that mean nothing. We invite these publicly owned corporations to use public funds, the money of Canadian taxpayers, to go on expanding their control of the economy, and they take advantage of it now as they will in the future. I say as my first suggestion that the government must put an end to this give away to corporations controlled outside Canada and use the money in the creation of jobs in Canadian controlled enterprises, whether under public auspices or in private enterprise, or a combination of the public and private enterprise.

There are merchants of doom and gloom who claim that regaining control of our economy would lower our standard of living. Indeed, this is what the minister suggested in his speech today. He suggested it gently but obviously. I reject that proposition. I cannot accept it because I believe it is not true. I just cannot believe that a people like the Canadian people, who hacked this nation out of a rocky wilderness, are unable at this stage of this country's development to fend for themselves without the help of so much foreign capital, foreign managers, and foreign know how. Indeed, some of our most reputable economists have clearly shown that there is enough capital in Canada, there are enough savings in this country, for us to develop our industry and to buy back some of the important industries that are now in the hands of outsiders.

There is simply no evidence to suggest that we would lose jobs if we insisted on controlling our own economy. On the contrary, there is much evidence that foreign ownership of our economy costs Canadian jobs every year. For example, recently we were threatened with a shutdown of the Ford plant in Canada because Ford in the United States had not complied with American regulations. Please note that Ford did not break any Canadian rules, yet its Canadian plant could be shut down along with the American plants and for no other reason than that it is controlled from outside Canada.

Our economic dependence on the United States has also made us particularly vulnerable to DISC and other American protectionist measures. As Canadians, we should note that these protectionist American measures affect all trading nations and affect Canada as a trading nation, but where Canada is concerned it affects us much more profoundly because DISC threatens our well-being not only through a reduction in trade but even more directly it threatens Canadian jobs. Branch plants of American controlled corporations will obviously be tempted and induced to reduce their operations in Canada and to concentrate their production in the United States under DISC. Our economic dependence on the United States therefore makes us doubly vulnerable, perhaps ten times more vulnerable to American protectionist policies than any other country that is concerned only with its trade to the United States and across the world.

If I had the time I could cite numerous other examples, particularly of shutdowns of branch plants in this country in the last few years that have cost Canadians thousands of jobs now and will in the future. This is the kind of thing that foreign ownership means in terms of the life of the people in the pulp mill in Bathurst that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) mentioned or the people working under any other foreign-owned corporation in this country. The fact is that their destiny, their jobs and their future are not under Canadian control, not even under government control so long as the power of the foreign corporation remains.

I make a second suggestion as earnestly as I can, and that is that Canada's present foreign exchange reserves of almost $5 billion worth in both gold and U.S. currency lying idle in the vaults of the Bank of Canada should be used to begin the job of repatriating our economy, buying into some key industries in the resource sector and in other sectors that will have a key role in our future development. This is what we ought to use our foreign exchange reserves for now. I urge the government to take such a step immediately in order to plug the gaping holes it has left in its foreign ownership policy.

Third, I urge that the government should strive to force the interest rates in Canada down to half a point, or perhaps a full point below those in the United States. So long as we play the game that the government and the Bank of Canada have played for years of deliberately keeping our interest rates above the level of those in the United States, then so long are we inviting and inducing foreign capital to invade our country. I repeat that my third suggestion is that we bring interest rates down below the American levels. This would not only slow down the inflow of foreign capital but it would have significant social consequences in Canada. It would make domestic capital far more easily available for housing and for all the other needs of the Canadian people. It would also work to reduce the foreign exchange value of the Canadian dollar, thus helping Canadian exports in international markets and creating more jobs in our export industries. This is another way in which we should attack the problem of foreign ownership.

Fourth I urge, as we have suggested for a long time, that the tax and other concessions granted to the oil and mining industries, which are overwhelmingly foreign owned, should be withdrawn both in order to stop this concentration in foreign hands of our resource industries, which are capital intensive and do not create sufficient jobs in this country, and in order to make our tax system a great deal more equitable. I know that there are some hon. members on both sides of the House who will disagree with these suggestions, but I make them without qualification because I believe they point the road along which, so far as we can see, this country ought now to travel.

My fifth suggestion is that the government should levy export taxes on all raw materials and energy resources that leave the country. These vital resources are often exported to the United States and other foreign markets at below world prices. Export taxes would curb the inflow of foreign capital to our resource industries, making it possible for us to divert investment capital in more socially useful directions, and at the same time would increase activity in the processing sector and open up opportunities for thousands of new Canadian jobs.

Sixth, Mr. Speaker, I urge that the government should also join the provinces in establishing standards of resource planning and development, including requirements for processing raw materials in Canada.

My seventh suggestion is repeating what I said, if I remember correctly, on May 2, that this control or screening agency must have real power to limit the further expansion of foreign ownership and control in all its forms in all the fields set out in the Gray report. It must at least have the power to obtain all relevant information, to investigate particular industries and practices, and to limit the establishment of new companies by foreign owners and the expansion of ones already controlled outside Canada, as well as the taking over of existing enterprises. Without these powers in all these directions it would be, as it is a toothless exercise.

Mr. Pepin: Do I understand the screening as defined by the hon. member, would have the objective of preventing, of limiting? If so, when would foreign investments be allowed through the screening process that the hon. member has in mind?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my short answer to the minister's question is that, so far as we are concerned, it would be allowed where it is clear that there is not Canadian investment capital to do the job. It would not be based on any negotiating of a deal for certain advantages which cannot possibly be guaranteed over the years. It would be allowed only if there is not Canadian investment capital to do the job, and it does not matter whether Canadian investment capital is invested through public enterprise, through private enterprise, or through a combination of both.

Mr. Pepin: Does it matter—

Mr. Lewis: I cannot hear the minister.

Mr. Pepin: As the hon. member said there was plenty of money lying around in Canada, then obviously it would be a very exceptional case when foreign investments would be allowed. It would be most exceptional, in fact an accident, if I can judge from what is said.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite get the thrust of the minister's question. I say to him that we believe it ought to be the government's objective to limit foreign investment in all spheres.

I am not suggesting that there should be a 100 per cent prohibition because that is silly, since there may be areas where it would be useful. But it should be the government's intention in law and in policy to limit foreign investment, and to limit the expansion of foreign-controlled corporations already in Canada. Actually, the minister's question takes me to my next point, which appeared in my notes earlier, but I delayed dealing with it until now.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the hon. member a question before he gets to his next point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Minister of Justice rising to ask a question?

Mr. Lang: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members may, of course, ask questions if the hon. member for York South wishes to respond to them, but I would hope this would not be too often. The hon. member for York South has that option.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly, I will accept the question, Mr. Speaker. I am, as you know, a very courteous member.

Mr. Lang: I thank you. I appreciate that courtesy from the hon. member. Referring to the hon. member's suggestion regarding the imposition of export taxes, would he not agree that export taxes on such items as potash, oil and gas might limit the power of the provinces to exact certain amounts of revenue from these resources? And going to a fairly different field, in respect to the hon. member's suggestion of trying to encourage processing, would this mean imposing a tax on the export of wheat in order to encourage its processing into flour in Canada?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the minister had stopped with the first question he asked I might have been tempted to answer politely, but his second question destroys that temptation. He knows perfectly well that no one in this House or in Canada would suggest that. This is the kind of partisan and rather cheap barb that I cannot take the time to answer just now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: So, you ignore the first part.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, out in Saskatchewan I have had the pleasure of telling the people what this minister has done for agriculture, this Minister of Justice who undoubtedly was given the title of that portfolio because the injustice of his agricultural policies was so evident. I will deal at the appropriate time with what he has done to western agriculture, but I do not propose to take the time now to answer that kind of cheapness.

Mr. Lang: I thought it was relevant.

Mr. Lewis: There is, of course, a real problem in Canada so far as the provinces are concerned. The Prime Minister, other ministers, and members of the official opposition keep on referring to the fact that the provinces want development and some of them, or all of them therefore, object to any limitation of foreign investment. I do not blame them under the present circumstances, Mr. Speaker. That is why the New Democratic Party, ever since it was founded in 1961, has emphasized the need for an agency in Canada that would give alternative sources of investment to the provinces and to industry in this country. That is why in 1961 we proposed the Canada Development Fund, which has since been appropriated by the government as the Canada Development Corporation and, having appropriated it, destroyed the idea in the CDC that it has set up.

It was precisely our knowledge that if you are going to limit investment from outside you must provide an alternate source of investment that made us suggest—and the idea has been torn to shreds by the Liberals as usually happens to our ideas—a Canada development fund or Canada Development Corporation that would not be the toothless thing we have now. When I want to ask a question about it, I must first ponder which minister should answer because this is not a Crown corporation but an independent company which is now spending all its time buying up corporations such as the Connaught Laboratories in Toronto. In this case we now find that instead of a Canadian agency distributing a certain drug for a certain animal disease, the Canada Development Corporation uses an American controlled distribution agency. That is the kind of thing that the CDC is doing now. If it had been formed according to our suggestions, which would by law require a certain percentage of the reserves of all corporations in Canada to be invested at a certain return in the Canada Development Corporation as well as having individuals in Canada invest in it and thus had billions of dollars at its disposal, it would then be possible to tell the provinces that they should not go to foreign markets for investment capital. We would have Canadian funds available for the development of the resources and the economy of the provinces. In this case, the provinces would not object to limitations placed on foreign investment because there would be an alternative source.

The Canada Development Corporation must be revamped to meet this need. It must have a mandate both to invest in new industrial development and to buy into existing multinational corporations. It must have the authority and duty to expand the public sector of the economy, either through Crown corporations or through consortium arrangements with private concerns. One thing is sure, a publicly owned enterprise in Canada will remain Canadian; it will not be sold as privately owned corporations frequently are.

The CDC should engage in heavy research and development spending independently or in partnership with private corporations. I underline that we are not being doctrinaire about this in the slightest. It does not matter whether it is a public enterprise, a private enterprise or a combination of both, as long as the doctrinaire private enterprisers do not stop the expansion of the public sector in Canada in areas where private enterprise simply will not go or to which they will not go without hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars in grants when this money could be used to develop Canada instead of to increase the profits of foreign-owned corporations. One of the principal objectives of the CDC must be to encourage new initiatives and develop Canadian technology so that our dependence on multinational corporations for know-how is reduced.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that all of our economic conversations here will have relatively limited use unless we have the imagination and courage to introduce a program of rationalization and specialization in Canadian manufacturing. Our branch plant situation, as a result of foreign ownership, has meant that an unplanned, unbalanced and unspecialized number of branch plants of foreign corporations meet in the international market. Our aim should be to meet more of our domestic demand, thus relying less on imports, and to change our trading pattern away from a single predominant market in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I am about to conclude but I should like to say that we also need a government export agency to ensure that all corporations in Canada promote trade in accordance with Canadian laws and policies and that they do not submit to foreign laws and policies.

Finally, on the question of plant shutdowns of branch plants of foreign corporations, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I demand full disclosure of all the facts before this is allowed by either the federal or a provincial government. In this way, the appropriate government could take the necessary steps to avoid the loss of jobs. This would include taking over plants threatened with shutdown when their operations are economically sound and socially useful. Mr. Speaker, it has been my—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member indicated that he was finishing, and I have given him an extra minute, but his time is now up. Hon. members may wish to extend his time but I must bring this to their attention. Is there consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this is a bit anticlimatic because I was merely going to do a short peroration—

Mr. McCleave: Perorate away!

Mr. Lewis: I just want to say through you, Sir, to members of Parliament and the people of this country that as I travel across Canada I get the impression that, perhaps more than any country in the world, Canada can realistically reach for greatness. I never travel across this country but I am impressed by the wealth with which we have been endowed, by the very great beauty in all parts and by the devotion and commitment of all of Canada's people. We have the resources, we have the skills to build in Canada a really humane society, a really compassionate society from which poverty is eliminated and from which inequality is withdrawn in which all Canadians have a sense of being, a sense of self-respect and dignity in their old age as well as throughout their lives. This is the kind of country we have, and I resent with all my heart that we have been so short sighted and so anxious to make a fast buck as to sell our great wealth out to organizations that do not have the interest of Canada at heart and to put a large part of our economy in the hands of corporations that have so many worldwide interests that the objectives and priorities of Canadians mean very little to them. I think we are less than we ought to be in failing to take steps to regain control of our own social and economic destiny in view of the greatness which Canada can achieve if governments had the courage and the imagination to let Canadians do the job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Bangladesh—Establishment of Facilities in Dacca for Canadian Plenipotentiary; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Pensions—Alleged threat of loss of allowances of blind persons working on LIP projects.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S MOTIONS

HIGHWAYS

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring as rapidly as feasible a 90-10 formula of cost-sharing with the Atlantic provinces, of the highways program formerly carried on with those provinces by the Atlantic Development Board, and of joining with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the Fundy Trail project, and of joining with Nova Scotia in building a crossing across the Shubenacadie River.

He said: The resolution that I have presented for debate today is similar to one that was debated approximately 14 months ago. However, because it deals with an important matter, the development of Atlantic transportation, I do not hesitate to bring it forward again and, until the objectives of the motion are attained, I will be inclined to bring this matter forward on future occasions.

• (1700)

The most important thing that I can do as a federal representative for the East Hants part of my constituency is obtain some form of crossing, either causeway or bridge, across the Shubenacadie River. I shall devote most of my speech to giving reasons for my support of a Shubenacadie River crossing. I understand that other hon. members have dealt with or will deal with the missing links of the Fundy Trail in New Brunswick.

The Shubenacadie River crossing is a dream entertained for more than 40 years by a group of citizens. A committee is actively promoting this idea, its chairman being one G. McLellan who lives in East Hants. The crossing concept is supported by the maritime provinces Chamber of Commerce, the municipalities of East Hants, West Hants and Colchester, the towns of Truro and Stewiacke, the Tourist Council of Central Nova Scotia, the Annapolis Valley affiliated boards of trade, the Truro Industrial Commission, the Fundy Vacation Trail committee of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. It is supported by the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture, as well as by other bodies. This idea finds general political support in the area. Perhaps of more appeal to the government is the support given by the East Hants Liberal Association.

The crossing may be either a causeway or bridge. The causeway has some advantages in that it would create a vast inland lake which could be used for recreational purposes and provide a water supply for several important towns. The disadvantages of the causeway would be the effect that it would have on wildlife. After I made my speech in the House on this subject some 14 months ago, I received half a dozen letters from various wildlife groups who said that the causeway would play hob with wildlife along the Shubenacadie River. On the other hand, building the causeway would enable land to be reclaimed for agriculture. So, those two factors must be weighed. I am not particularly taking sides on this issue at present. I am merely arguing in support of a crossing.

There are several advantages to a Shubenacadie River crossing. First, the crossing would fill in one of several unfinished links in the Fundy vacation trail. The Fundy vacation trail would be a natural railway for tourists, most of whom, as we say in the Maritimes, come from the Boston States. They enter southern New Brunswick and travel to Digby or Yarmouth in Nova Scotia, most of their trip being within sight of the Bay of Fundy. Second, truck traffic into and out of the Annapolis Valley, which is increasing, would have a shorter route in that it could cut across that part of northern Nova Scotia by Truro, and go up to New Brunswick, if that were desired. Third, there would be important advantages for agriculture, both in East Hants and in the Annapolis Valley.

Some day, Sir, Fundy tidal power will be developed, and the Shubenacadie River crossing will enable tremendous savings to be made in the transportation of materials used in the development of Fundy tidal dams. So, there will be savings of millions of dollars in transportation alone for that massive development, if and when it comes about.

I have just given the fourth reason. Fifth, personal amenities would be increased. The crossing would increase the ability of the young people of East Hants to travel to and from schools at Truro and go home for the evening without needing to travel 30 or 40 additional miles, as at present, in order to obtain their education. Shoppers would derive the same advantage, and a more adequate provision of health services would be an additional, important factor to be considered.

In the submission made some years ago, the then chairman of the Shubenacadie River crossing committee, G. H. MacDuffie, made this point:

> In this same area there is one of the highest infant mortality rates in Nova Scotia chiefly because more easily accessible medical and hospital services are not available.
> The proposed crossing would put these people 30 miles or more or a good part of an hour, closer to the medical, dental, clinical, ambulance and hospital services which now make a 60-mile round trip.

Mr. MacDuffie and others made that submission to the Nova Scotia cabinet. I ought to say that the natural capital of East Hants really is not Halifax but, rather, the town of Truro.

The sixth point in favour of the Shubenacadie River crossing is that great savings would be realized in transportation. The Margeson Study of 1964 indicated savings over a 20-year period of 24.25 million travelled miles and 546,000 man or woman hours. Putting it another way, if you allowed 10 cents per mile for driving, which is a low figure in today's circumstances, the savings would be greater than $3 million. Those figures, of course, are out of date; if brought up to date, the savings would be considerably larger than those I have mentioned.

When the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications visited Nova Scotia some years ago and studied Atlantic transport needs, I arranged for the Shubenacadie River crossing committee to ask Mr. MacDuffie to make an appearance before my colleagues on that committee. The committee met with representatives of the Shubenacadie River committee. Subsequently, when the committee wrote its report for the House of Commons, it said as follows:

> It is further recommended that the government should consider the advisability of instituting a five-year program of federal assistance to highways in the Atlantic provinces, $30 million to be the maximum federal contribution in any one year. This program should be financed on a 90-10 basis.

That is the formula I set out in my notice of motion. I continue:

> The provinces would be required to submit plans for a defined network of all-weather highways, chosen for their effect on competition among transportation modes in the Atlantic provinces, and for their contribution toward the economic development of the Atlantic provinces.

That part of the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communication, drawn up on June 17, 1969, is found at page 39 of issue No. 28 of the proceedings of the committee for that year.

It may also be interesting to put on record part of the document drawn up by Atlantic premiers in March, 1969, dealing with the basic elements of the Atlantic provinces transportation policy. Three new premiers have taken the places of those three who helped to draw up this report. As I understand it, Atlantic transportation is generally dealt with by the Maritimes Transport Commission, in Moncton. Furthermore, the views that were then expressed would undoubtedly be the views of the present governments of the four Atlantic provinces.

After saying there should be a detailed assessment of the network needs of the individual provinces, the premiers proposed, as shown at pages 17 and 18 of The Basic Elements of an Atlantic Provinces Transportation Policy of March, 1969, that:

> The length of this program should be ten years with the first five years fixed and the balance renegotiated and reconsidered prior to the conclusion of the first five years. The federal share of total costs, including acquisition of right of way, should be 90 per cent for the first five years. Prior to the end of ten years, a further program should be negotiated, if needed.

• (1710)

That is found at pages 17 and 18 of the report to which I have referred. There is no doubt that the federal government has made substantial payments toward Atlantic transportation. This was first done through the Atlantic Development Board and, laterally, through special agreements with the different provinces. As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) said in the House of Commons on Tuesday, March 14 this year, and I quote:

> At the peak of this program—

That is the road construction program in the Atlantic provinces.

> —this support was at the level of about $57½ million a year.—
> Last year new agreements were negotiated with New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland totalling $60 million. Over the past seven years, therefore, federal support for Atlantic Province Highways has averaged about $45 million a year, or over the period some $315 million, with many projects being funded entirely by the federal government.

I do not quarrel with the amounts that have been spent on what I think are very basic, essential services for my part of Atlantic Canada. What I suggest is that it be on a formula basis so that the provinces will know that it will be done on a 90/10 basis and they can then proceed to develop their plans on a somewhat different basis from the one now used.

In pursuing the goal of the Shubenacadie River crossing, I have considered the alternative methods by which it could be achieved. At one time I thought that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion could play a role in helping to provide the crossing, but I gather that the department is now concentrating its efforts on growth centres. Therefore, it seems that this role might be minimal and the important role will be shared between the province of Nova Scotia and the federal Department of Transport. This is the way I have developed my strategy in trying to do the best I can to keep this matter in the limelight and to ensure that eventually the federal and provincial governments have a serious discussion about providing that link across the Shubenacadie River.

Before the Department of Regional Economic Expansion concentrated on growth centres and while the Atlantic Development Board was still alive and well, I had a discussion with some of its economists about the formula that might be applied to justify a Shubenacadie River crossing. The board then used a 7 per cent economic funding of a project such as the river crossing. It estimated that the benefit figure should be between $280,000 and $350,000 per year. They looked at the Margeson report, which I mentioned earlier, that dealt with the transportation benefits. They felt that the economic benefit of the Margeson report would have been somewhere around $117,000 a year. They estimated that the agricultural marketing benefit would be around $24,000 a year.

These figures, particularly the second, seem to be ridiculously low. However, I quarrel with them because in the fluxion of time those figures should be substantially increased. In any event, that is the reason the Shubenacadie River crossing has been considered to be a marginal matter and why there is no crossing over the Shubenacadie in the Maitland area.

In concluding my argument on this point, I would like to say that I do not care much for the figures involved or for the economic considerations that can be set down on paper in black and white. I have a hunch. The reason is that at one time East Hants was one of the great parts, not only of Nova Scotia, but of North America. The shores of the Shubenacadie River rang with the hammers of those building some of the greatest ships of all time. In fact, the largest four masted vessel, the W. D. Lawrence. was built in the Maitland yard. If you go to that area today, where the largest of all vessels of this type was built, you will find a peaceful meadow by the side of the Shubenacadie River. I believe in historical ups and downs of areas. They can have their periods of difficulties and then come back.

I suggest, and this is going to be a large part of any political arguments I ever make for the rest of my time in politics, by building a Shubenacadie River crossing, both the provincial and federal governments would not only be doing a vast service to that particular part of my constituency, but they would get a return many times over. Anyone who would go there and look at the prosperity which would flow from this project would feel they had taken a wise and statesman-like step.

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) upon the argument he has put forward for a crossing over the Shubenacadie River. It was an impressive argument indeed. If it is followed and accepted, hopefully the people of that area will know after whom to name that crossing. The hon. member cited a number of groups which support this concept. Although I was listening closely, I did not hear him mention the involvement of the provincial government. There is no doubt that that government supports it to some degree, but I would like to know what type of priority it attaches to that particular crossing. It seems to me that a bridge of this nature within a province is something which should be dealt with primarily, at least at the outset, by the provincial government involved. The initiative should come from the provincial government.

It is my understanding that there is an ongoing shared-cost program between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Atlantic provinces, and that that program was negotiated with all of the Atlantic provinces. I understand it concerns itself specifically with highways and bridges. It is also my understanding that up until this time at least, none of the provincial authorities who are parties to this agreement have asked for either of the proposals which have been put forward by the hon. member. The hon. member may think it strange for a member from northern Ontario to become involved in a debate on a crossing of the Shubenacadie River, a debate which he suggests is on cost-shared programs between the federal government and the Atlantic provinces.

One of the reasons I entered this debate was to draw to the attention of the hon. member and the House the fact that it is not only in the Atlantic provinces that problems exist with regard to highways, bridges and so on. Very specifically, if the federal government is getting into this field, I would like it to take a look at Highway 17 as it wanders from Ottawa, through Sudbury and on to Sault Ste. Marie, which happens to be my constituency. I do not suggest that members of the government drive that route because the dangers are so great that it might well be these officials might never return to their work in Ottawa.

Just before the last Apollo moon shot, the Americans thought fit to send their astronauts into the Sudbury area to look at the landscape, which is supposed to be something like that on the moon, and to study the rocks and craters in that area. Even now, they are sending more of their astronauts there for the same purpose. There is no doubt in my mind that when these astronauts reach the area they will have no need to go into the districts surrounding Sudbury; all they will need to do will be to drive on the stretch of highway between Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie, where they will find craters the like of which they will never see on the moon. No one would dare take that route in a small car because he would get the impression, after descending into some of these craters, that he was driving in the Grand Canyon.

There is a bridge connecting Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario with Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan and during the summer tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of tourists use this bridge to drive across into Canada. If they turn left after crossing the bridge, and go west, there is a good highway to Thunder Bay. But if they decide to run left to take a look at eastern Canada, and travel over that part of highway 17 to which I referred earlier, their next thought is to get out of Canada as quickly as possible. Canadians who are attempting to cross Canada using Highway 17, which is the trans-Canada highway, flee into the United States as soon as they hit Sault Ste. Marie and continue the rest of their journey using the United States highway system.

So, it is not only in the Atlantic provinces that there are areas in which the federal government should be more closely involved. The federal government should review its position with respect to roads and highways throughout Canada. It is time we formulated a national highway policy, defining exactly the nature and extent of federal involvement in the construction and maintenance of roads, highways and bridges such as those referred to by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). All parts of Canada would benefit from a policy of this type. Each government would know exactly where it stood vis-à-vis the federal government. Each would know precisely what assistance it could expect. Hopefully, the federal government would become involved in such a way as to help develop a first rate road transportation system, one of which both Canadians and visitors could be proud as they travel from coast to coast across this country.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the motion in the name of my friend, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). I have spoken on similar motions, and on this subject generally, on many occasions both inside and outside the House.

I do not find it strange that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) should take part in this debate. I think we are getting somewhere when members, other than those directly affected in the Maritimes, take part in the discussion of this subject. I subscribe to the thoughts contained in this motion. I am in favour of what my hon. friend has said in connection with the Shubenacadie crossing, and I agree with the formula he proposed in connection with the building of this route. I hasten to assure hon. members that we do not have any super highway in mind. This is merely to be a vacation trail in line with the modern trend to get out into the country, camping and moving slowly around the beautiful rocky coastline characteristic of the Bay of Fundy.

I presume this motion will be talked out, so there is no misgiving on that score, but there is a pertinent question I should like to ask of someone in the government. I should like to know what has happened to the report which was commissioned through the Atlantic Development Council. My information is that the federal Department of Public Works, through its offices at Fredericton and Halifax, agreed to carry out a study of this Fundy trail proposal and report to the Atlantic Development Council. It was expected that the report would be submitted in the fall of last year, but so far there has been no sign of it. I understand, through the grapevine, that the concept has been recommended as a good one and as a viable proposal. But that is all the information I have. This is one question which might be answered; the reply would give us an idea of the thinking of the government on this matter at the present time.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie mentioned the position taken by the provincial governments. Well, the provincial governments concerned are interested in this project. I refer to the present and previous governments of both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It is a tremendous undertaking, in terms of money, for them. Nobody is trying to hold a gun to their heads in this regard. The New Brunswick section of this trail would go around the Bay of Fundy. Picture entering Canada at the United States border, at St. Stephen, and then taking the beautiful vacation trail completely around the Bay of Fundy down to the tip of Nova Scotia. This is a 500-mile trail we are talking about.

As I say, no one expects the provincial governments, regardless of their political complexion, to fork out $100 million. We want their support, and they have indicated their general approval. It is now a question of finding a means to proceed. Again, nobody is talking in terms of hundreds of millions of dollars for a new super highway. This proposal is not meant to take money away from the construction of other roads; we are hoping just to get approval of a start being made. The part in which I am most directly interested, the stretch of the Bay of Fundy from the Bay of Saint John up to the Fundy National Park, could be completed by using the device of increasing the park boundaries. The Fundy National Park is actually one of the smaller national parks. If the area along the coast were increased, the federal government would become responsible for the roads in the enlarged area. The National Parks Commission evidently has an unlimited amount of money to spend on projects in park areas. By adopting a device of the kind I have mentioned, we could make funds available to complete at least one of the parts of this highway.

With all this in mind, I call upon the government, either today or on a later occasion, to let us know its thinking concerning the Fundy Bay vacation trail proposal, specifically in connection with my suggestion that the boundaries of the Fundy Park be enlarged in order that the federal government might become involved.

There is one other aspect I wish to mention. Despite the lack of interest on the part of the federal government, in spite of the fact we have been obliged to go slow, people are gradually making their way through this country and cutting out, as it were, a trail of their own along the lines of the old Shepody route which existed many years ago. This was the old highway that followed the coast from Halifax to Saint John. Campers and young, energetic Boy Scouts are cutting trails there now. In spite of lack of interest on the part of politicians and the fact we have not been able to produce any concrete plans, the highway is going ahead. This is a good sign for the future.

I support the motion put forward by my friend the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). I think his suggested 90-10 formula, which has been used in the past in respect of some roads in the Maritimes, is a good one. It should be followed for this type of highway project so as not to take away funds from other needed resource highways. In this way it would mean a great deal to the tourist industry. I hope someone will let me know what has happened to the survey undertaken by the Department of Public Works which was to be made available to the new Atlantic Development Council.

In closing, may I say that the Fundy vacation trail project has stirred the imagination of many minds for over 100 years. It is a great challenge for the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. With tourism the big business it is now, this would be in the nature of a self-help program which would produce lucrative returns and certainly would be in the public interest. If it helped the tourist industry it would keep some of the promises made to these provinces at the time of confederation. It would be an impetus to employment throughout the Atlantic provinces. As I have done for nearly 20 years, I ask the support of hon. members for something that makes a great deal of sense to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks on the resolution moved by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) which in brief, calls for 90 per cent participation from the federal government, I readily support him since the province where I live—especially the area where my constituency lies—has an urgent need of appropriate highways.

Considering the tremendous length of highways everywhere throughout the province of Quebec, on account of

Considering the tremendous length of highways everywhere throughout the province of Quebec, on account of the increasing needs in the field of transportation and the development of technology, the development of modern techniques in highway construction has become necessary.

It is obvious that provincial budgets cannot sustain the exhorbitant costs of highway construction. This is why it was with satisfaction that the provinces welcomed the federal Trans-Canada Highway project although our province—mine and yours, Mr. Speaker,—under the aegis of the then Union Nationale government and saddled for too long with duplessism, had refused to subscribe to the agreement for the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway until another Quebec government was fortunately elected which practiced autonomy otherwise than in name, which practiced "totonomy", the Liberal government of Mr. Lesage.

An hon. Member: This is an old story.

Mr. Béchard: Maybe, but it turned nevertheless to our advantage.

Since the agreement of the Trans-Canada Highway, technology has evolved and traffic has considerably increased.

The motion tabled by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) refers however to a specific project involving federal financial assistance. As the mover of the motion and other hon. members have pointed out, it is not the first time that such a motion is placed before the House, since not later than last year, in February 1971, the same hon. member expressed an identical wish in a resolution which reproduces verbatim the one that is now before us.

I believe that this clearly shows, Mr. Speaker, how important the project is, not only for the hon. member who moved the motion, but especially for the people of his province and that part of Nova Scotia which he represents in the House. The rather hefty and compelling file which he disclosed on this question during the 1971 debate, clearly detailed the numerous representations he had made to several federal and provincial authorities.

The review, though cursory I admit, Mr. Speaker, I have made of the subject under debate, that is the Fundy Trail project and the construction of a bridge over the Shubenacadie River, has revealed to me the great importance of these two projects.

Mr. Speaker, however important this project may be, the hon. member will readily admit that provincial roads, including bridges, unless they connect two provinces, are exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, the wish expressed by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants in his resolution raises this question of the federal government's financial contribution to the building of highways.

As I said in my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, I represent an area which badly lacks highways that meet the modern needs of 1972, and I completely agree with this principle of federal aid to highway construction. The agreement on the construction of the Trans-Canada highway having now expired, another tool is left to the provinces for obtaining the federal government's financial participation, which is, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which, incidentally, is being strongly criticized by members from the Atlantic provinces, and especially from Newfoundland. Fortunately, some provinces benefit from the funds made available to them by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for the development of certain areas, and not all of those regions are represented by members who are over-critical.

In the kind of agreements which exist, incidentally, with all provinces, including those mentioned by my hon. colleague, and particularly his own province of Nova Scotia, the priority and importance of projects is first established by the provinces themselves, which decide to have them included in the development agreement. Thus, the area of the lower St. Lawrence, the Gaspe peninsula and the Iles-de-la-Madeleine presently enjoys the benefits of the 1968 agreement for development of that area, an agreement which was negotiated again by the Ottawa and Quebec governments in September 1971.

As the project mentioned by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants is very important and deals with a matter falling under the exclusive responsibility of the province of Nova Scotia, I suggest that provincial authorities might include the Fundy Trail project as well as the river Shubenacadie bridge project in the preparation of a possible agreement with the government of Canada under the ARDA legislation or in new negotiations. The hon. member will understand that problems of this kind are more familiar to local governments than to the government of Canada. This is why this area falls under the provincial jurisdiction only.

The hon. member was reminded, in 1971, during a debate on a similar resolution put forward by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith) that no priority had been given to the 1969 brief, to which the hon. member, as well as the hon. member for Saint-Jean-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), referred a moment ago. In fact, in the premiers' brief presented to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) by the four Atlantic provinces, no priority has been given to the Fundy Trail project, nor to the development of the river Shubenacadie bridge. And this brief, called "Transportation Modes-Highways", did not hold the attention of the last governments of Nova Scotia, which had, if I recall correctly, the same political affiliation as the hon. member who presents this motion today.

As a conclusion, I shall recall that the province of Nova Scotia has derived great benefits, as did other provinces, from federal-provincial agreements, for the development of highways; indeed, under the agreement concerning the development of the Trans-Canada Highway, this province has received $78,354,422. Mr. Speaker, we heard a great deal during certain election campaigns in the province of Nova Scotia, not of the federal contribution, but of the way this money could profit the provincial government which was under the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who is now a member of this House.

So, Mr. Speaker, I entirely support the resolution of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, but I ask him to use the normal procedure. As this comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Nova Scotia, this province would first have to submit its priorities to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which could include it in an agreement between the two governments.

Mr. G. A. Percy Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on February 23 this year. As has been said, a similar motion was introduced on a previous occasion by this hon. member. I congratulate him for his persistence in bringing this important subject to the attention of the House.

I shall be very brief because I spoke on this subject about 14 months ago and my remarks today will be somewhat in the same vein. The motion introduced by the hon. member contains two parts; one part relates to the Fundy trail and the other to a crossing of the Shubenacadie River by a bridge or, as he says, possibly a causeway that would link the two communities of South Maitland and Princeport. I have not yet heard any estimate of the cost of such a crossing. However, since bridges and highways normally are the responsibility of the provincial government, I am assuming the cost is very great and is beyond the financial ability of the province of Nova Scotia.

If this is the case—I do not wish to be facetious, because I could list other bridges in New Brunswick, in my constituency, and even in Nova Scotia which seriously require attention—the fact is that in our Atlantic provinces, where the population in most areas is sparse and where very extensive networks of highways and bridges are required, it is practically beyond the ability of the provinces to finance the necessary construction. It is a very important part of the effort to elevate or improve the economy of the Atlantic provinces to have an adequate transportation system, which certainly includes roads and bridges.

The Trans-Canada Highway has been completed through the Atlantic provinces. This, however, is only one highway. I agree with the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) that the government of Canada should take a hard look at developing a policy to assist the development of secondary roads, especially in sparsely populated areas which are unable to finance the construction of highways and bridges.

As I have said, bridges are a provincial responsibility. Nevertheless, the government of Canada, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and New Brunswick, for example, entered into a special highways agreement in respect of a secondary road. The road covered by this agreement runs between the cities of Moncton and Campbellton and traverses the entire east coast of New Brunswick. Rather than the 90-10 formula of cost-sharing mentioned by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, under this agreement the government of Canada will pay 110 per cent of the cost of this very important highway, the additional 10 per cent being for engineering and incidental costs of that nature. The province itself is faced only with the responsibility of providing the land for the roadbed.

Work on this highway is proceeding, although rather slowly; in fact, the portion in my constituency between Chatham and St. Margarets, which is in extremely poor condition, I am advised will not be proceeded with this year because the province has not yet completed the necessary engineering work to enable contracts to be let. The government of Canada, as I believe all members will agree, has conceded the fact that we have serious transportation difficulties in the Atlantic provinces. Recently the Department of Transport granted a 17 per cent subsidy on trucking with the idea that a viable trucking industry should be built up in those provinces.

The government of Canada also appreciates the necessity of our having an adequate transportation system and is carrying out an extensive transportation study in many areas including northeastern New Brunswick. This will relate not only to highways and bridges but to transportation by water. Hopefully, it will lead to a long awaited project, namely, the dredging of the Miramichi River to a depth of 36 feet. This dredging would connect the highway leading to Renous, Plaster Rock and would give direct access from the eastern part of New Brunswick to Montreal, thus cutting down the distance by about 100 miles.

I said I would be brief. I know that other speakers wish to take part in this debate. However, I recall that when this motion was debated about a year ago it was stated—and I have not heard of any change made since—that no request had been made by the province of Nova Scotia for a Shubenacadie River bridge or causeway. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants mentioned the many groups directly affected in the vicinity who have gone on record as supporting such a crossing.

I suggest that if neither the previous nor the present government of Nova Scotia requested this crossing—normally they would do so through the joint planning committee under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—then it would appear that they have not placed on it as high a priority as the hon. member who introduced the motion. Normally, if the government of Canada wished to build a bridge or highway in the province it could not be done without the consent and agreement of the provincial government. As I said before, last year when we spoke on this subject such a request had not been made to Ottawa and as far as I know the situation has not changed and the request has not yet been made.

I know the importance of the Fundy trail. The supper hour is fast-approaching and I will not make any further comments on this matter, but basically I support anything that will improve transportation in the Atlantic provinces. However, I realize, as I believe the hon. member does who introduced the motion, that this must be part of an overall scheme developed by the government of Canada to assist all the provinces in the construction of secondary highways.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a moment or two of the time of the House to make some observations relative to the motion presented with conviction and eloquence by my friend the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). I associate myself with the supporting remarks which have been made from all quarters of the House and certainly with those of the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Smith).

The mover of the motion indicated specifically to members within sound of his voice the formula which he feels should be adopted—a 90-10 cost-sharing formula. This brings to mind an association which I had in the period 1952 to 1957 with a previous administration—which held office with a degree of distinction—led by the right hon. Mr. St. Laurent. At that time the minister of public works was the Hon. Robert Winters. I remember him asking us to come from New Brunswick to discuss speeding up the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway in that province. We arrived and we had a conference with the Hon. Robert Winters who was not niggardly in his proposition, neither was he partisan in his approach. In my opinion he was a great minister and I pay tribute to his memory tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flemming: He told me then that the finishing of some parts of the highway would be quite expensive and he realized that our province had many demands on its treasury for funds to maintain existing highways. He thought the federal government should go a long way in encouraging us to get this work completed as soon as we could. He said that to that extent they were prepared to contribute on a 90-10 basis, the federal government contributing 90 per cent and the provincial government 10 per cent.

It seems to me somewhat strange, and perhaps coincidental, that another distinguished Nova Scotian should come today with a motion which specifies exactly the same formula which should be used by the federal government in dealing with the Atlantic provinces, especially Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Therefore, I rose only for the purpose of indicating to you, Sir, and to members of the House my complete support of the motion. I hope we will all see our way clear to uniting on it.

So far as the Fundy trail is concerned, I was impressed with the eloquence of my friend the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) because the Fundy trail is close to his constituency and close to his heart. I was impressed by his words. I rose only to indicate my complete support of the motion and to go back in time to show the interesting coincidence in that the Hon. Robert Winters had put forward the same formula as that proposed this afternoon by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

[Translation]

Mr. Joseph-Phillippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to commend the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—

[English]

I wholeheartedly agree with him. I believe that a bridge in the area which he mentioned, namely, the Bay of Fundy and the Shubenacadie River, is a necessity. It is a beautiful area and I wish I had the time to say a few words about it. However, I should like to bring to your attention the fact that there is a similar problem in my area. On one side of the Red River is St. Adolphe, a nice town with about 500 inhabitants, and across the river—

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin that Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons.

As a result of the growing concern of a number of Canadians about foreign investment in Canada, the Gray report made certain recommendations on which the government based its bill which in my opinion does not go far enough. We must at least admit that the government is aware of the danger, of the unfavourable Canadian position and that it has decided to take some steps to check that evil which is spreading from year to year.

You will remember that early in May the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) made a statement in this regard recalling that governments in the past had taken certains steps, and announcing the introduction of a new measure in these terms, and I quote:

> Parliament will now be asked to add an important new measure to these policies. Foreign companies seeking to buy out or take over an existing Canadian business above a certain size will be required to demonstrate that the purchase will result in significant benefit to Canada.

This statement is praiseworthy and I am convinced that if the government and the minister in charge of the administration of the act take the means required to study seriously the takeover proposals, they will have the opportunity to act before purchase is completed.

The minister also added, and I quote:

> The government is introducing legislation to establish a review process under the authority of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). In general terms the purpose will be to examine proposals for takeovers of Canadian businesses, to approve those that, on balance, will be of significant benefit to Canada, to negotiate with the proposed acquirer in those cases where he can reasonably be expected to make a greater contribution to Canadian development, and to refuse to allow those takeovers that would not bring significant benefit to Canada.

Here is in a few lines, I feel, the scope of Bill C-201.

I have before me an article from an American weekly, the Manchester Guardian Weekly, of December 9, reporting on the situation in Canada. This article is entitled: "Canada—An economic colony."

I think that this government and all serious-minded Canadians are aware of this situation. And when one can read such remarks on this situation in an American magazine, this should incite us to take an even more effective step, to make sure not only that foreign investment will be to the advantage of Canada, but also that a serious study is made to find out to what extent this could be also profitable to those who invest in our country.

Here is what one can read in the Manchester Guardian Weekly:

In the Schulz report, it has been suggested that for every dollar invested in Canada for oil extraction, 71 cents come back to the United States as investment return in the course of the first year of investment. There is no reason to doubt that the same investment income is derived from all other forms of energy operation or mining industry, whether it is natural gas, hydroelectric power or common metals.

We are not the ones saying that. It is published in the magazine I just mentioned. Therefore, if it is profitable for foreign capitalists to invest in our country, mining or processing our natural resources, it would be all the more so for Canadians. I suggest that the government should take the necessary steps to promote Canadian investment in really Canadian companies, in order that we may, instead of remaining an economic colony, become real Canadians, masters of their fate.

The government is increasingly aware of this. It is indeed of the highest importance for us to control the takeover of our Canadian companies and our natural resources. That is why the government is introducing Bill C-201. I suggest that, in view of the endeavours of all governments, federal and provincial, to produce Canadians capable of managing businesses, Canada is now mature enough, I think, to control our whole economy.

We have in Canada truly qualified people who often remain unemployed due to lack of businesses operated by Canadians. Operations are sometimes controlled by foreigners who bring in people from their own country to fill the best posts and we are neglected. We are doing the right thing in attempting to draw the Canadians' attention to this matter. We are proceeding with caution and I imagine that is the way to do it. And I do not think that we will be accused of intolerant nationalism if we act like that.

In fact I feel that will be taken as a display of national self-respect since finally self-respect is required in all fields and it is not forbidden to feel proud as a nation without at the same time being considered narrow-minded as this sometimes happens.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

This afternoon, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) said in his speech that this bill could not be a cure-all for all our problems. This is true. I consider it as a first step which should encourage the government and hon. members to make suggestions so that we continue in this direction in order to make Canadians real experienced businessmen, able to administer real Canadian enterprises, and in order that some investment from abroad remain in these businesses, as long as they are controlled, that these businesses are directed by Canadians and that they produce a good profit for Canada first. In my opinion, you may then accept foreign investment. However, they should be carefully considered.

The minister also referred—and this was of great interest to me—to discussions with provincial governments about this subject matter. In my opinion, this is again a policy which deserves praise. Actually, the federal government must hold discussions on such important matters with provincial governments because, even quite recently, one could hear the premier of the province of Quebec—I think this was yesterday—state to the fighting wing of his party that the most serious problem of his administration and what the province was in greatest need of, was capital. He said that the authority to administer is rather secondary, but that the province needs credit in order to develop.

Such is the situation, for instance, as regards the James Bay development project. This is a very wide territory to be developed, and to achieve this objective, much attention will be required. The objective is not to develop a territory and its natural resources just for the sake of doing it. This will have to be done very carefully in order not to contribute to spoiling another part of our economy through pollution of a territory and water which we desperately need.

One of the great problems which the Quebec government has to face is to find the necessary funds. Therefore, the government is seriously thinking of turning to the Americans and to other countries and inviting them to invest in the province. In this connection, I would ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce when he is having discussions with the Quebec government to seek, first, to promote Canadian investments in order that Canadians may find some advantages in investing in Canadian owned industries. This might enable the Quebec government to take positive action and to reach a really commendable goal without having to make commitments that would benefit other countries, those whose interest it is to invest here.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, we should take a new departure in our financing policy in this sector, in order that the development and the operation of our natural resources be effected by our own people and as far as possible with Canadian capital.

I heard this afternoon the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) talk about the possibility of finding capital in Canada. I agree with him provided that people who have money to invest are shown the advantage of investing in Canadian companies. This could be done through advertising and information of such a nature as to attract interest for this.

Another danger which we have to face continuously is that big foreign corporations which have subsidiaries in Canada always tend as a matter of course to first protect the parent company and the subsidiaries have second choice. If at any time, for commercial reasons, a company has to reduce its operations or to change them in any way, it will first think of protecting the parent company and the Canadian subsidiaries will be served last, which means that Canadian workers who work for these subsidiaries will be sacrificed in turn and become unemployed.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I should like, by way of a conclusion, to urge the minister and the federal government to create new credits which would be reserved to the Bank of Canada. This possibility should be carefully examined. When we talk about the Bank of Canada, sometimes people think that this is a joke, a routine, a formula that we use at every turn.

I think that this angle of our financial system should be reviewed completely, in order that the Bank of Canada, an institution established for Canadians, may open new credits which would be channelled through chartered banks towards the development of our natural ressources, thus reducing the interest rate, lowering the production cost, and placing Canada at a competitive level on the markets of the world. This way, Canadians would be given another means to become really masters in their own country.

People had a lot of fun for some years by teasing the Prime Minister of Quebec whose election slogan was "Masters in our own house". If we examine this election slogan carefully, we discover that the purpose is excellent—provided we use the means which are necessary to work it out.

The Canadian Parliament has this opportunity, this means, whereas provincial governments do not. The Canadian government has the sovereign right to direct the creation of credit based on the real credit of our country, on its wealth and it should take the necessary steps to have credit channelled by the Bank of Canada, to the benefit of the areas where the need for capital grows ever bigger, which would allow Canadians to be really masters in their own house.

Being masters in our own house, we can command the respect of the citizens of other countries. The title of an article I referred to previously will perhaps be changed from "Canada—An economic colony" to "Canada, an autonomous country of Canadians proud to be masters in their own house".

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, because of the great respect which I and many members of this House have for the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), I sought, unsuccessfully, to find parts of his speech of this afternoon which are worthy of comment. I must say that there are points on which I agree, one being that the procedure, which is to apply under this new law, should be carefully examined in committee. I also feel that he performed a service to this House by telling us that the important Committee on Statutory Instruments of which he and I are members, has not yet been called into session. One of the high points of his speech was the news that he had purchased lunch for the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson). Having said that, I must record my disappointment that as a spokesman of his party he did not contribute anything of significance to this debate.

When people read the record of this debate I think their opinion of it will be summed up by the ruling that was made on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. Essentially, it was ruled out of order because it did not take a stand on the issue before the House. On the one hand the hon. member, speaking for his party, said the legislation did not go far enough; yet every time he said that he also said, "Don't go any further because you might antagonize the provinces or other interests."

Mr. Fairweather: This is great.

Mr. Blair: That kind of approach to this problem is in part the approach of the Conservative party and, as well, reflects the fears and concerns of many Canadians. They want to approach this problem in a positive and even dramatic fashion, but on studying it carefully they see it must be approached with caution unless we are to do considerable violence to our economic system and body politic. I would point in passing that one of the questioning left unanswered this afternoon by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal was, what does moral suasion mean? Implicit in that question was the question, what relevance does it have in a debate like this?

Mr. Fairweather: The leader of the hon. member's party used that term. He might not have been relevant, but I think I was.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I suggested that the question asked by the hon. member was, what relevance does it have? Having been caught making an esoteric utterance this afternoon, perhaps he will bear with me while I explain. I think moral suasion is an important ingredient in our parliamentary and legal systems. Really, it is the appeal which ideas have for reasonable men to act decently and in the public interest. Unless that kind of spirit motivates our laws we cannot function satisfactorily, and I do not think anyone on either side of the House will quarrel with that assertion.

I regret that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is not here, because he delivered a flag-waving speech which deserves comment. I imagine he wishes to occupy the shoes of those in our history who in 1878, 1891 and 1911 took the stand that we must damn the Americans forever and a day. I suspect that behind the furious rhetoric of the hon. member for York South is an unpleasant reality that he would not like to see exposed in this chamber. After all, he speaks here in order to paper over the great split in his party on this subject and his rather immoderate language does not in any way match the immoderate policies of the Waffle group in his party. Indeed, one wonders who is the "waffler" when one hears the hon. member for York South speak, as he did today, and try to play down that determined group of people in his party who are trying to take it over from him.

It remains a matter of wonder that a person could speak for 40 minutes in condemnation of all things American and of American intrusions in our economy without mentioning once the subject of American control of many important trade unions in Canada. I must say that the speech of the hon. member for York South did not contribute much to the debate on this important measure. He brought forward his tired recitation of eight points which on other occasions have been six points or five points. His is a sure-fire way of attracting applause from a partisan audience: take away the tax privileges of the mining and oil companies and expose them to export tax!

Mr. Orlikow: You do not believe in that?

Mr. Blair: There was no concern about the effects these measures would have on the operation of those companies. There was no concern about the jobs which they provide. There was no suggestion as to how these activities might be transferred elsewhere in the community. There was simply a flat, out and out assertion that these things should be done, can be done and must be done—irresponsibly and in defiance of the best interests of this country.

Over and above that, the hon. member talked about high finance and how interest could be lowered, without referring to inflation which looms before us always. He talked without showing concern as to how this action might encourage foreign equity owners to do even better in our capital markets than they do at present. He did not say how foreign exchange reserves might be used, by whom or in what fashion to buy back the Canadian economy.

Mr. Francis: Five billion dollars worth is involved.

Mr. Blair: As my friend from Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) mentions, $5 billion could be devoted to that purpose. It is pie in the sky, as hon. members sitting behind the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) well know. However, it serves the purpose of obscuring from our view the fact that there is serious division in the party of the hon. member for York South which really attacks the credibility of any assertion which he may make in the House on this important problem at the present time.

• (2030)

We are talking about one of the most abrasive problems in our history. It is a problem, which, if not properly handled by this Parliament, could set province against province in Canada. It could set poor areas against wealthy areas. All this was foretold in the remarkably clairvoyant address of the Leader of the Opposition from which the minister quoted earlier this afternoon.

From time to time in Canada we have been prone to fall before the determined drive of patriotic talk. We had a high tariff imposed in this country in its early days. On a famous occasion in 1911, the opportunity to modify that tariff was lost. These discussions were carried on and all these economic issues were settled on the basis of emotionalism, appeals to patriotism and appeals to national loyalty. We must all face the fact that one of the reasons we have the problem of foreign ownership in our country is that the economy, which was created pursuant to these other economic policies, was one which became vulnerable to foreign ownership. It was an economy which consisted of enterprises which were structurally weak, which were not as efficient as they should have been and which in one way or another lacked the resilience to stand up against takeover bids and other incursions from abroad.

We developed an economy in this country which was not overly venturesome. No one knows this better than people like myself who come from western Canada and can remember when the great oil boom started in Alberta just after the war. Albertans had to go outside of Canada to find the money and people who had the confidence to invest in Canada's future. I see the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) nodding his head in agreement. This marks an historic occasion in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: And Edmonton Centre.

Mr. Blair: I am almost overcome by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) agreeing. The "Eskimos" may win this year.

Let us face the fact in this chamber that in many parts of Canada there are people who have a deep resentment about what the financial and industrial interests centred in Montreal and Toronto did to and for this country. When I was a boy in Saskatchewan we did not waste our time worrying about foreign owners; we talked about those awful people who inhabited Bay Street and St. James Street. I do not think a case can be made that the domestic proprietors of our economy, then or now, have always performed in a fashion satisfactory from the standpoint of Canada as a whole. Therefore I have always felt that discussion on foreign ownership as it has emerged is one which is to a degree false and misleading.

There is much evidence to show that whether or not enterprises have been owned in Canada is irrelevant to their performance in the interests of Canada. In fact, there have been many studies, starting with that of Professor Safarian in 1966, going through the Watkins report and the Gray report, as we call it, and other documents of this kind.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Tell us about when you left the Conservatives?

Mr. Blair: I will come to that. All these documents show conclusively that if there is any difference in the performance of enterprises in Canada, it is that perhaps the foreign-owned ones have performed rather better, taking into account all the criteria by which we measure that performance. However, we are now faced with a situation where there is a growing consensus that we have to look, not at the ownership of our economy but the way in which it is controlled and the performance it delivers in our society.

I repeat that it is impossible to argue that foreign ownership by itself is all bad or all good. The question which increasingly engages Canadians is, what are the effects of foreign ownership? I think we have to look at these effects industry by industry and company by company.

As Canadians, we now have priorities which are quite plain for all to see. We want an economy which will provide employment. We want an economy which will be directed as much as possible to using Canadian sources of supply for its factories, and Canadian experts as its advisers. We want an economy which will promote research and which will lay the ground-work for our participation in the technologically developing age of the future. We want an economy which will develop in this country management skills of a high order which can be used all over Canada for the advantage of everyone.

When we consider the kind of tangled nature of our industrial society in Canada, whether the companies are owned domestically or from outside the country, we can conclude that there are deficiencies. We do not really derive from our economy all the advantages which we think we should derive.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, the question arises whether or not the steps which we are now being asked to consider will make a solid contribution to our future. Everyone who speaks on this subject comments on the fact that we are being asked to direct our law against only one aspect of the extension of foreign ownership in our economy. That is the aspect which is described as a takeover bid from outside Canada.

I do not intend to go over all the ground which was so well covered by the minister this afternoon. However, clearly in terms of our recent history and our understanding of this matter, the takeover of an existing Canadian company by a foreign corporation appears as a most dramatic and unwelcome incursion into our economy. I think it is quite proper to enact as a law that from now on that kind of activity coming from outside should be one which would become us only where it is justified in all aspects of our national interests. Having said this, I should point out that already during the lifetime of this Parliament we have seen two vital industrial concerns protected from foreign takeover. The cases of Dennison Mines and Home Oil are fresh in the minds of many people. The noteworthy success of the actions of the Canadian government in both these cases should encourage us to believe that this law is one which can work satisfactorily for the benefit of Canada.

The question most often raised is, why should we stop here; why should we not go further and enact a law which would contain other aspects of foreign expansion in our economy whether by direct investment, by joint ventures, by expanding existing subsidiaries or in other ways? It is my opinion that the step we are now being invited to take is one which by all the standards of our history is an epic one. It is a departure from the previous policy of laissez faire toward investment in the industrial and resource sectors. It is one which, in itself, will be digested not without difficulty. It is also one which is least likely to attract attack on constitutional grounds. One must recognize that these are areas which trench upon fields of economic activity which the provinces have traditionally believed to be their own.

I was not impressed by the assertion of the hon. member for York South that the government habitually runs away from these difficult problems by suggesting there are constitutional difficulties. That they do exist, and that they are real no one can deny. If we were to go further at this stage and seek to embark upon a complicated regulatory scheme such as would have to be operated were an attempt made to deal with direct investment, joint venturing, the expansion of subsidiaries, and so on, we should be creating not only a big bureaucratic machine of doubtful efficacy but we should be risking constitutional challenges which might defeat a detailed attempt to regulate the economy in the national interest.

It seems to me that it is far better to proceed prudently along lines which have been well marked out and to go on, in the best Canadian tradition, to explore with the provinces areas which invite further regulation while considering the effect of this new law upon our industrial economy. Only after we have done this ought we to determine whether further steps should be taken.

In the interim, it is wrong to think that no protection exists for the Canadian economy against foreign intrusion. In areas where the federal Parliament has been paramount, protection has been provided for many years. The minister said something about this today. In areas where the federal government has undoubted jurisdiction, such as banking, finance, transportation, communications, and so on, laws and regulations have preserved the integrity of these essential parts of our economy.

In addition, we have created, as a federal Parliament, the Canadian Development Corporation which is likely to play a significant role in the re-ordering of our industry and commerce. The tax policies approved by this Parliament and its predecessors have encouraged investment in Canadian companies. Last December, for example, changes which were made in the tax laws provided, among other things, for the deductibility of interest on loans used to acquire other corporations; the limitation at 10 per cent of the amount of the portfolio of savings in pension funds which could be invested in foreign corporations; the provision that the lower tax rate for small businesses should apply only to Canadian corporations; the continuing provision that the dividend tax credit should apply only to dividends from Canadian corporations all of which will have a significant effect in encouraging Canadian enterprise.—

I do not think there are many in any quarter of this House who would quarrel with the general proposition that we could accomplish much more to the benefit of our country for the extension of Canadian control, for the prevention of harmful foreign interference in our economy by positive, constructive measures rather than by more negative prohibitions.

Mr. Stanfield: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blair: I therefore believe we should move forward to refer this important bill to the committee without delay. Knowing the committee, I am sure it will give the measure very careful study. As a member of the committee, there are details upon which I shall seek further information and, possibly, recommend changes. I believe this is forward-looking legislation and the kind of bill we should pass as quickly as possible in order to enable it to operate for the benefit of our country.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we are beginning today in this House a debate which has been raging for years, with varying degrees of intensity, outside this chamber—in universities, in high schools, in newspaper columns, on television. From time to time we have heard certain strident, shrill voices describe this problem of foreign ownership as though it were peculiarly Canadian—la plaie Canadienne. Not a bit of it. Look at what has happened in Britain since the Second World War. One has only to read the book by Serven Schriever to understand the problems presented by foreign ownership in France.

• (2050)

One sees that each of these countries has adopted various methods to try to keep a reasonable grip on things. I find it rather ludicrous that many people make shrill cries about improper behaviour and the improper or almost immoral nature of foreign ownership, while on the other hand they want Canadian firms to go abroad and do business. What is there about Canadians going abroad? Are they like St. George, pure of heart? Let somebody from Great Britain, a German, a Frenchman or an American come to Canada and he is accused of being a conniving, scheming individual about to depose Canadians. This is ludicrous.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) was hopeful when putting forward his mistaken tax bill. We have not yet reached this point because as a good deal has to be done in the way of amending the international, industrial part of the bill. But hopefully the Minister of Finance will be successful in getting Canadian firms to move abroad and compete. How will they compete? By standing offshore and firing long-distance cannons? Of course they cannot do that. They must go ashore, into foreign countries and establish subsidiaries, partnerships or some other form of business enterprise.

One is almost tempted to say that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If we as Canadians want to get out and carry on what is vital to our economy—that is, our export business—we must go to other countries and establish connections. I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) during his almost quarterly peregrinations to Japan has been urging the Japanese to open up opportunities for Canadian investment in that country.

I am sure he has been asking them to relax the long list of conditions in respect of industries in Japan which have been closed over the years to all foreign participation. He is not doing this just for the pleasure of doing it but so that Canadian businessmen can establish healthy working relationships for trade with the Japanese and other Pacific countries. All this is an attempt to guarantee Canadian jobs. Where do all these people around la plaie Canadienne, with their shrill cries about foreign ownership, think jobs will come from if firms have to close down and Canadian industry is dormant?

It was highly amusing this afternoon to listen to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) go through the litany of hamstringing operations that Canadian industry encounters, each one of which adds more and more to the cost of production so that even in the domestic market they cannot compete unless one imposes controls and rationing or so-called economic reduction. Let us consider the doctrinaire straitjacket imposed on Britain after the war. I experienced three years of it, and I assure you it was sheer hell and agony. I have in mind the economic reduction imposed by Sir Stafford Cripps. There were rules, regulations and restrictions, with everything directed by him.

With democracy in Canada—and I will not refer to individuals—many people say the proportion of people employed by government is far too high. But if we had to follow even half the suggestions put forward by the NDP this afternoon, the size of the national civil service would be more than doubled. There would be no problems of unemployment, I suppose, but everybody would become an official shuffling papers. Everybody would be engaged in so-called economic reduction. That is one aspect of the problem. Of course, the NDP has its Waffle wing.

Mr. Paproski: Stanley Knowles!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, I will not accuse the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) of being a member of the Waffle group, because that is not possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member may think I am awful, but I am not "a-waffle."

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will accuse the hon. member of all sorts of things, but not of that. We have another organization composed of sincere people, I suppose. I refer to the Committee for an Independent Canada. They are all good and well intentioned people. They have members from the NDP, members who are pseudo-Liberals and a former Liberal who I suppose could be referred to as the financial Moses of the Liberal party, Walter Gordon. That former hon. member for Danforth, when he was minister of finance ten years ago brought us a great deal of trouble with his 30 per cent takeover tax. If we look at the problems of today and consider some of their historical aspects, we will see that a good deal of foreign ownership in this country started in those days.

I do not want to go too far back in the memories of hon. members, but the institution of the British preferential tariff wall within the Commonwealth formed one of the earlier trading blocs. Our United States friends established French subsidiaries in Canada in order to get within that British preferential tariff wall. That was perhaps good business at the time. But has anyone been studying what is happening in France and in Germany? Does anyone know what is going to happen in Britain and elsewhere within the common market? Canadians and Americans have been establishing plants in these countries in order to get within that high common market tariff wall.

Why did Polymer go over to France years ago? I use that as an example of only one industry, but each one that went to France did so because of foreign ownership. They are having troubles in France because of foreign ownership and the common market. We have inherited that position. It started in the early 1930s but it has its roots in the establishment of a great deal of Canadian industry and other business in this manner, particularly in those halcyon days when we had hundreds of millions of dollars annually in deficits on commodity account and hundreds of millions of dollars on non-commodity account.

• (2100)

The money that was owed abroad was encouraged to remain here, to be invested in Canada. It was loose money available for investment in Canada. And how it was invested! The government of the day boasted about it. Canadians benefited by, shall we say, changing the nature of our economy from basically a resource and agricultural based economy to one of manufacturing and secondary industry. There has been a complete revolution in the Canadian economy since the end of World War II. This was accomplished by the use of much of the foreign money which Canada should have been paying out. But no, we invested it, allowed it to be invested or induced it to be invested here in Canada. So every dollar that was then invested became a dollar of foreign ownership.

If one tabulated all or even a proportion of the commodity account deficit from 1945 through to 1958-59, one would see why the United States was able to invest so much here in Canada. Why is there always United States money around here for takeovers? Our ludicrous, stupid estate taxes and the high level of succession duties—here I do not excuse any provincial or federal administration—have contributed to fire sales of Canadian businesses. The money was there, available to take over businesses. I never saw anything that was so penny wise and pound foolish. It was a case of selling one's birthright for a few measly million dollars of succession duties.

There may be some social justification for the estate and succession duties, but let us see what the consequences are from an economic point of view. We will see who the people are who are around to pick up a business that is about to be sold because it has an estate tax or succession tax problem, or which is about to be sold because someone who was the dominant or principal shareholder in the family business suddenly died and millions of dollars must be found to settle the estate because there is a succession duty problem.

How many businesses have been driven into the arms of foreigners? Each of us who engaged in the practice of law during those years is well aware of this fact, yet for a certain stated social reason this was the price one had to pay for foreign ownership. Of course, the party to my left would drive it all to a low level; there would be no buyers of companies because of the confiscatory levels of taxation, or if there were no restrictions on foreigners they would be around picking them up like kiddies picking up pennies at a penny-throw. That is how long-headed they are. They are very, very shortsighted.

There is another point, however, which must be considered along with the degree of foreign ownership in this country. There are many statistics emanating from Statistics Canada which are bandied about freely in the press and in this House to the extent that it would seem that the whole of our industry is owned by foreigners. But that is not the case. In many industries only 75 per cent or 65 per cent of the shares of a company are owned outside the country, and yet this appears as a 100 per cent foreign-owned company.

The Canadian taxpayer has been placed in a position of inferiority vis-à-vis the chief competitor, the United States taxpayer. We know about the principal occupation rule and how the Canadian petroleum industry has suffered as a result of it. When the situation was ripe for individuals to move in, the United States citizen, on an individual basis had the advantage over the Canadian operator principally because of the principal occupation rule. There has been partial relief in this respect, but the minister might give some throught to the fact that the principal occupation rule exists to the extent of 80 per cent: one can write-off only 20 per cent. It is still an albatross around the neck of the Canadian investor.

If we are to do something concrete and positive about the problem of foreign ownership, the Canadian investor must be placed in a position of equality or even priority. I would discriminate in favour of a bona fide Canadian taxpayer when it comes to, say, resource development or whatever formula is adopted among incentives for Canadians to own their businesses. There is no question about buying back: even if we let the Créditistes loose for a year we could not print enough money to attempt to buy back Canadian industry. Nor would the New Democrats, with all their Wafflers, try to force people to invest. To invest in what? Would they invest in government bonds? Nothing has been suggested there as a practical solution.

Certainly there can be an improvement in the situation. One classic example is the moving of the headquarters of the Hudson's Bay Company from London to Winnipeg. In a matter of three years this has resulted in an increase of shareholdings by Canadians from 6 per cent to 47 per cent. It is under Canadian management. Canadians have been prepared to buy and now have an opportunity to buy stocks here in Canada.

Why do Canadians not buy stocks in Canada? Why is it Canadians have $3 per capita more invested in the United States than is invested by United States citizens in Canada? People are shocked by that thought. In fact, per capita Canadians have three times as much money invested in the United States as their American counterparts have invested in Canada. Of course, by reason of the fact that we have only 22 million people, the totality of the Canadian investment in the United States, in that whole big economic machine, is only a small corner. On the other hand, the impact of United States ownership in Canada provides quite an economic crunch and they have that much more leverage. I will tell you where they have more leverage; and this is the point Servan Schriever makes in his book with regard to American ownership in Europe.

It is not the degree of ownership, but managerial skill that counts. This means a great deal and it is something that has not existed so far in Canada. It is improving, but what is necessary is really competent managerial skill, which can be learned only by experience and by training; it is not something that one develops from the seat of one's trousers. They have it in a much higher proportion than we. As I said, it is a matter of tax laws, a matter of managerial skill.

What is the answer to all of this? Well, it was to be in the so-called Gray report which was leaked in a Canadian publication last November. Let us look at the objectives of the memorandum, which read in part as follows:

1. To set up the alternatives available to the government in presenting its foreign investment policy to parliament and public;

2. To consider what should be done about foreign takeovers of Canadian firms in the period between the day of the policy announcement and the enactment of the necessary legislation;

3. In the light of the first two objectives, to consider the advantages and disadvantages of early legislation to screen foreign takeover; and

4. To consider what should be done about certain other issues—the status of the criteria which will guide the review agencies, the sanctions for non compliance—either with decisions of the review agency or with the terms of deals made with it, the definition of foreign takeover and control, and details of the administrative machinery, including the question of thresholds for registration and screening.

At that time, also, there were strong suggestions that foreign investment would be controlled, that there would be restrictions on foreign personnel acting in Canada. It was going to be a real "made in Canada" operation. But all that has come out of it, outside of a great deal of uncertainty and unhappiness with Canada among our friends in foreign lands, has been Bill C-201 which is to create an agency to screen takeovers.

I am not yet satisfied as to the constitutional jurisdiction of the government of Canada in this respect. How will it block, disallow or somehow negate the transfer of shares from one provincial company to another provincial company all of whose operations are within the confines of one province? I will be very interested to hear the minister tell us how they propose to do that. Or are some of these suggestions made in the bill of the same nature as those that were incorporated in the Canada Corporations Act which are pure window-dressing? They are non-effective for the purposes that were given as an explanation of their inclusion in the amending bill. Page after page of them has served no useful purpose except to add more red tape and a lot more expense for people in business. They affect only a very small segment of Canadian corporations.

If the minister will say that this will affect only those companies under the Canada Corporations Act, then that is one thing. But if he says this will operate to limit the takeover of a privately-owned cement company in British Columbia by another company operating in British Columbia where the degree of foreign ownership is sought by the mathematical formula in this bill, that is another thing. Will the minister tell us whether that is the intention? Is there any means whereby the Parliament of Canada can legislate to do anything in that regard? Will the review board be able to do anything about that, and will the minister, as the minister responsible under this bill, be able to report a yea or a nay to his colleagues so that an order in council may be issued dealing with the company or companies which are entirely Nova Scotian in their aspects?

In any event, I join other hon. members who have said something about what will happen in committee. We will see. Perhaps we will get some very illuminating explanations. I have a suspicion that this bill is a tiny field mouse that has been produced after eight years' gestation and was simply brought forward because there had been a leak and the government had to explain that documents did exist and that something was being done.

I want to speak about an industry that is much quoted as being one of those that is very much under foreign domination, that is, the Canadian mining industry. I will quote a paragraph from the address of the president of Noranda Mines at its annual meeting in April of this year. It must be remembered that 92 per cent of Noranda's 34,000 shareholders are Canadians owning a similar percentage of the outstanding stocks, so this is not the president of an American-dominated or foreign-dominated corporation reporting to his foreign shareholders. This is what Mr. Powis said:

The last point to consider is the question of foreign ownership of the Canadian mining industry. A great deal is made of the figures produced by Statistics Canada which purport to show, for example, that 80 per cent of our smelting and refining capacity is foreign-controlled. However, as indicated previously, these figures are fragmented and highly misleading. The fact is that Canadians control 67 per cent of our copper refining capacity, 70 per cent of zinc capacity and 100 per cent of lead capacity. It is only in aluminum and nickel that so-called foreign control is predominant, and this is because Alcan and International Nickel are considered to be foreign companies because somewhat less than half of their shares have been owned in Canada. However, if the trend of increasing Canadian ownership of these two companies continues, a majority of their shares will soon be held in Canada and the statistics will then show that all major sectors of the smelting and refining industry are overwhelmingly controlled in this country.

You see what a little encouragement, from the tax point of view, for the Canadian investor will do? If Canadians investing in International Nickel tip the scale to 50 per cent plus one, then those industries would be dominated by Canadian-controlled companies. This is how and why the statistics that are so often quoted are misleading. They leave out the most pertinent parts of the information that would affect us.

I have no time to put on the record a quotation from an excellent publication entitled "Performance of Foreign-Owned Firms in Canada." I will do so at another time. This is a study taken under the sponsorship of the Canadian-American Committee headed by Professor A. E. Safarian of the University of Toronto. I commend this little book to hon. members. It contains some very illuminating conclusions with regard to the performance of foreign-owned firms in Canada.

• (2120)

Dealing with solutions, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) complained about a lack of counter-proposals. There is an over-all problem of foreign ownership and it has many facets. I did not hear the minister this afternoon, but to be strictly relevant to the bill he should have talked about foreign takeovers only and about reviewing them. I have already spoken about one of the solutions which I think the majority, if not all, of my colleagues in the official opposition advance. It is that the Canadian taxpayer must be given the proper incentives. He must not be placed in any position of inferiority under our tax law when compared with other taxpayers with whom he is competing. This is solution No. 1.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we must have an integration of succession duty and capital gains tax. Then I think it is possible for the federal government and the governments of the provinces to act on a pro-Canadian basis. I can give you an example, and I am sure there are many others. The most recent one that comes to mind was when Syncrude, in my own province, obtained an enlargement of its permit and the administration imposed a number of conditions which were pro-Canadian in their thrust. Everybody recognizes their purport. It did not require lengthy statutes to say this or that must be done. This was action taken by government in regard to a particular industry.

My colleague from Fundy-Royal this afternoon dealt at some length with a partial solution dealing with the key sector. That is now in existence. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is one complete solution to the problem. I am concerned that this bill is being put forward as a very brave answer to the problem even though it may deal with only a very tiny segment of it. I am very uneasy about a lot of the takeovers and about the ease with which they are undertaken. But, Mr. Speaker, I say that we Canadians have created the climate for them. We have created the conditions that led to these takeovers.

One solution tried in the past was a restriction on the sale of shares. I remember the case of Alberta Gas Trunk Pipe Line whose shares were to be sold in limited amounts first to Albertans. That sale was really oversubscribed. But, Mr. Speaker, the general public has not yet been educated to hang on to its investments. This was a good investment, but many of the people who had never held shares before sold them as soon as they rose $10 or $15. The shares were placed immediately on the market. The company is still controlled in Canada but I suggest a significant number of the shares are held by investors abroad.

I also remember when Rainbow Pipe Line was being incorporated here. All the companies involved were foreign-owned or foreign-controlled and in fact the dominant interest in one of them, Aquataine, was held by the French government. I suggested that the shares in Rainbow Pipe Line be placed on the market with the same kind of restriction as applied to Alberta Gas Trunk Pipe Line. That is a solution to that particular type of monopoly.

I see no hope for the Canadian Development Corporation in this field, not one iota. I do not want to traverse old ground, but the Canadian Development Corporation so far as I am concerned is a dead duck. It was ruptured the day it was born. It will never operate for the Canadianization or preservation of Canadianization of industry.

So, Mr. Speaker, we will examine this bill in committee. I am opposed in principle to the screening of takeovers. I am uneasy about them, as I have said. I do not think this bill will go very far, but let us see how far it goes and then we can get to the problem. We do not have a monopoly of this problem; it is worldwide. We must remember that if we place restrictions on foreign owners, then similar restrictions may be placed on Canadians operating abroad. We must live and let live, and to that extent the problem becomes more complex.

Foreign Takeovers Review Act

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased tonight to be able to address a few remarks to the chamber on second reading of Bill C-201, the purpose of which is to provide for review of foreign takeovers in Canada. I would like to confess immediately that I class myself as an economic nationalist. I feel quite strongly that we have to take strong steps in order to preserve our national identity and economy and to maximize the economic control that Canadians ought to have over their own affairs; but at the same time I recognize that this is a very complicated problem.

There are many regional influences involved, and provinces within their own jurisdictions are rightly concerned with the amount of foreign investment that they can attract. We live in a federal system, and when we have a federal policy that is too stringent it can have disastrous effects upon the underdeveloped regions of Canada which are much concerned with the problem of attracting foreign investment to their respective areas. We must stimulate the economy to create the maximum number of jobs for the fastest growing labour force in the world. I feel that our policy has to be a responsible one directed to maximizing employment and at the same time seeing to it that there is no further erosion of Canadian ownership. I think this bill is a step in that direction.

Personally, I am not convinced that this legislation is as far as we ought to go, but I would like to say a few words on the subject which the committee after second reading might bear in mind. For a moment I would like to examine the reactions of the various premiers across Canada, to see what they think of this bill. In the province of Newfoundland, to my knowledge the new premier has not really made a definitive statement, but in Prince Edward Island, Premier Campbell has stated quite clearly—

Mr. Paproski: He was just sworn in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) has the floor.

Mr. Benjamin: That's the whole problem.

• (2130)

Mr. Cafik: In Prince Edward Island, Premier Campbell has clearly indicated that as far as he is concerned the origin of funds is not the major concern; rather, it is to make sure that the federal government does not take steps to minimize the amount of foreign investment and job creation in the area. In New Brunswick, as far as I can see Premier Hatfield has indicated that this policy is acceptable to him. In Quebec, Gerald Levesque, the former minister of trade and commerce in that province, indicated that they did not want the federal government to close the door on any investment which would create jobs.

Mr. Paproski: Who is that—premier René Levesque?

Mr. Cafik: Premier Davis, in the province of Ontario has warned the federal government and the people of Ontario against plunging blindly into programs that would produce greater domestic control of the economy but would divert foreign investment from Ontario. He has said that Ontario still needs investment from outside its borders.

"We cannot live as a province or as a nation unto ourselves". He added, "We must be involved in the total world community; Ontario cannot act in isolation." So it appears that Premier Davis, in what I believe to be one of the richest provinces in Canada, thinks that we have to be careful even there in terms of controls on foreign investment.

Premier Schreyer of Manitoba indicated that he considered the proposal for a review board to be a positive one. He said that provided it does not get too bureaucratic, it can only help and cannot do any harm.

An hon. Member: Go on, finish it.

Mr. Cafik: Premier Allan Blakeney in Saskatchewan has taken a different stance and as far as I can see from his statements has indicated that he would like to see a stronger stand taken in respect of foreign control.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: In Alberta, the Minister of Industry, Mr. Peacock, has said that he does not oppose Ottawa's examination of foreign investment as long as the federal government does not hamper the province's access to new capital. As far as British Columbia is concerned I really could not give a report. They do not seem to have made any statement in this regard.

Mr. Paproski: We are just a new Conservative government there. Give us a little time.

Mr. Cafik: I should like to talk for a moment about the present components of foreign investment policy. To deal first with banking institutions, in 1967 the Bank Act was amended to ensure that banks would be 75 per cent Canadian controlled. No person or group, foreign or Canadian, may hold more than 10 per cent of a bank's voting shares. One foreign-controlled bank in Canada at that time, the Mercantile Bank, was not permitted to grow above a certain size without government permission regarding ownership requirements.

In the insurance, loan, trust and sales financing fields, seven years ago the government introduced amendments to the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act and the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act to prevent foreign investment takeovers of federally incorporated companies covered by the legislation. The proportion of shares which non-residents could hold was limited to 25 per cent and no single foreigner could hold more than 10 per cent. The law was not made retroactive, but existing foreign-owned holdings above 25 per cent were not allowed to increase.

Last year, in 1971, the Investment Companies Act was amended to prevent further foreign acquisition of sales finance firms covered by the act. The federal law covering these financial institutions does not cover the establishment of new firms, nor does it cover provincially incorporated firms although at least one province, Ontario, has enacted legislation which parallels that of the federal government.

The government has acted to limit foreign ownership in the case of Telesat Canada. Legislation requires that ownership shall be divided between the federal government and its agents, approved telecommunications carriers and other Canadian citizens and, apart from their holdings, not more than 20 per cent of Telesat's outstanding shares may be held by non-residents. In the field of uranium the government has adopted a policy whereby ownership by non-residents of voting shares in Canadian uranium producing properties will be limited.

In the oil, gas and mining fields, although not a major restriction on foreign control of Canadian investments in these industries, steps have been taken applying to oil, gas and mining leases in the north and offshore. This already covers oil and gas leases in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and offshore and mining leases in the Northwest Territories and offshore. A current bill would extend coverage of mining leases to the Yukon as well.

The Canadian participation provisions of the Canada oil and gas land regulations, the Canada mining regulations pursuant to the Territorial Lands Act, the Public Lands Grants Act and the Yukon minerals bill restrict leases to Canadian citizens, to corporations which are 50 per cent beneficially owned by Canadians or to companies whose shares are listed on a recognized Canadian stock exchange and in which Canadians have a chance to participate in the ownership and financing. Federal government investment, in partnership with private interests in Panarctic, has helped ensure a significant Canadian element in the development of the oil industry in Canada's north.

In the broadcasting field, under regulations pursuant to the Broadcasting Act foreign-controlled firms holding broadcasting licences are being required to sell to Canadian citizens or to eligible Canadian corporations. To be eligible, the corporation must be incorporated in Canada, the chairman and directors must be Canadian citizens and at least 80 per cent of the voting shares and shares representing in aggregate at least four-fifths of the shares of the paid-up capital must be beneficially owned by Canadian citizens or Canadian-controlled corporations. In addition, regulations respecting Canadian program content are also in force.

In the field of newspapers and periodicals, seven years ago in 1965 amendments introduced to the Income Tax Act provided that firms may not deduct as a business expense the cost of advertising directed primarily at the Canadian market in non-Canadian magazines or periodicals. Exemptions were made for foreign-controlled publications already operating in Canada, notably Time and Reader's Digest. An amendment to the Customs tariff had the effect of prohibiting entering of non-Canadian periodicals containing advertising directed at the Canadian market.

A word about the Canada Development Corporation which I think is one of the components of a Canadian ownership policy. The CDC was established to help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed firms in the private sector of the economy and to give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada. It is expected to invest in enterprises in which it expects have a substantial holding of shares carrying voting rights and in which the total value of shareholders equity would exceed $1 million. The CDC is not expected to make investments that do not meet a profitability criterion.

In regard to tax policy, last June the budget featured several proposals to increase the attractions to Canadians, relative to non-residents, to acquire equity in Canadian enterprises. The then minister of finance listed four main features as follows:

> First, Canadian corporations will be permitted to deduct as an expense, interest on funds borrowed to finance the purchase of shares in other corporations ... (eliminating) a disadvantage which Canadian corporations have had in competing with foreign corporations in takeover bids. Second, the 10 per cent limitation on foreign assets of pension funds and retirement savings plans will have an important influence in channelling the funds of these large intermediaries to Canadian businesses. Third, the lower tax rate for small business will be available only to Canadian-owned companies ... Finally, the form of the dividend tax credit makes the incentive to invest in shares of Canadian corporations even more attractive than it has been for most Canadians.

In addition to this there has been a public investment policy and attendant regulations. Government investment in rail and air transport, telegraph facilities, atomic energy and, at the provincial level, in electricity generating and other utilities has had the effect in increasing and maintaining a high level of Canadian ownership in these areas.

Government regulation in the transportation and communications fields, among others, are also helping to ensure behaviour by national firms that is consistent with national objectives. I think that although public investment and regulations have not been designed primarily as an element of foreign investment policy, they have in some industries ensured a Canadian presence and, in other industries, behaviour consistent with Canadian policy.

May I, for a moment, look at controls that other countries impose on foreign capital investment. Of all the western developed countries, including Japan and Mexico, none has such a high proportion of its economic production controlled by non-nationals as this country. In countries where foreign ownership is at all significant, the foreign owners are usually from several other countries; but in Canada four-fifths of direct foreign investment comes from one country, the United States, the most industrially powerful country in the world.

Governments use various methods to control and direct foreign investment, including screening processes, exchange controls, control over access to domestic savings, mandatory rules over share transfers, ownership of real property by non-nationals and participation on boards of directors and management. In addition, all countries elaborate specific key sectors in which foreign investment will be prohibited or severely restricted. In cases where specific sectors are not elaborated, an implicit sector approach is often utilized by the general screening process.

The United States, the Netherlands, West Germany and Denmark have very few restrictions on direct foreign investment. The United Kingdom, Australia, Belgium, Italy and France welcome foreign investment but bargain with the potential investor in order to ensure that the foreign investment will meet the needs of the host country. Performance, location and type of industry are all discussed and negotiated in those countries. Sweden and Norway, despite the absence of major formal restrictions, protect key sectors rigidly. Similarly, Italy, Austria, France and the United States exclude foreign investment from significant sectors of their economy. Mexico and Japan follow an actively nationalistic policy. In Mexico the principle is that new foreign capital should be seen as a supplement to internal savings. In Japan foreign participation is not allowed until the industry is seen to be ready to compete internationally.

These countries have used a number of policies to control foreign participation. Some countries have adopted a general screening process whereby all foreign investment requires government approval. This vehicle is used by the United Kingdom, Norway, France, Japan and Mexico. To a lesser extent, often in the guise of exchange controls, Italy, Belgium, Sweden, Denmark, Austria and Australia use this process. Certain countries also use such exchange controls and limit access to domestic savings. Foreign takeovers are often financed by the host countries.

In Canada I believe this is one of our real difficulties. To avoid this France, for example, requires that all or part of an investment requirement must be financed from abroad. In the United Kingdom all takeovers must be financed from abroad. Frankly, I think we ought to move in this direction as well. I think it is inappropriate for foreign people to come to this country and buy up our industries with our money. They do this by borrowing money from our banks and lending institutions. I think the committee must look carefully at this area.

Another technique is limiting share transfers and the percentage of real property which can be held by non-nationals. In Sweden, companies can prevent the sale of their shares to non-nationals. Switzerland and Japan use different categories of shares for foreign nationals, and thus control remains in the hands of nationals, that is, in the hands of citizens of the host country.

Mr. Benjamin: What does the hon. member think of that?

Mr. Cafik: Switzerland, Norway, Denmark and Sweden do not allow non-nationals to purchase real property. Also, some countries limit participation on boards of directors and in management. For example, the Scandivanian countries insist that there be a majority of nationals on each board. Other countries, such as Japan, insist that management remains entirely in the hands of citizens of that country no matter what percentage is owned by foreigners. Britain and Australia prefer to see a majority of their nationals on boards of directors. Generally speaking, this is another bargaining point to be settled by those countries.

Mr. Benjamin: Where does the hon. member stand?

Mr. Cafik: All countries, whether they formally assume a liberal or very nationalistic stance, use the key sector approach in this field to some extent. I have enumerated some of the approaches that have been adopted by other countries. When the committee reviews this bill it ought to take those factors into account and consider, particularly, the question of people coming into this country, taking over our companies and financing those takeovers, so to speak, at our expense. It seems to me that something ought to be done and that the committee should look at this particular problem.

When the committee considers the bill, I hope it will look into another point I am about to raise. On April 23, 1970, when I spoke in the House on foreign investment, I spoke of what I thought was an important area that must be considered. I said we borrow a great deal of our loan capital from our federal and provincial institutions—for instance, we take money from funds set aside for the unemployment insurance fund, and so on—but that equity capital is brought in from abroad, usually from the United States. It seems to me, if we need foreign investment, we need it in the form of loan capital and not in the form of equity investment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I believe the Canadian people want more Canadian control in this area and would be willing to authorize their federal and provincial governments to allow public moneys to be used in equity purchases, even though some risk may be involved. At present our legislation prohibits the federal and provincial governments from using these masses of money except for perfectly safe loan ventures. That course, I believe, has had the tendency of maximizing the degree of foreign control in this country because it has forced people to seek equity money abroad.

Mr. Rowland: Read the Manitoba legislation.

Mr. Cafik: I believe the Canadian people are willing to so authorize their governments and I believe they are willing to take the gamble. If they are willing to do so, I think we ought to encourage them. The same kind of problem is encountered with other financial institutions such as—

Mr. Benjamin: The Liberal party.

Mr. Cafik: —our finance companies and insurance companies which are prevented by law from investing in equities except to a limited degree. I think we ought to do something in that area as well. Legislative changes need to be made. I think something ought to be done in both these areas to help maximize Canadian control over the economy.

I believe the present policy is a step forward, although in my view and in the view of many Canadians it is not a very brave step forward. On the other hand, this is the responsible approach since at this time we must not do anything that will jeopardize our ability to create jobs. I think we must take more courageous steps in future. I hope that once we get our people back to work in the Canadian economy the government will give serious consideration to further measures which will maximize our control over our economy.

• (2150)

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words this evening, and presumably a bit more tomorrow, with regard to the legislation presently before us. When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) spoke earlier today I was somewhat surprised, as I am sure others were, that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) could not find it possible to lead off for the government on the need for the evolution of policy on this issue.

Mr. Pepin: Why were you surprised?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I thought he was the minister who was chiefly responsible. But we are gradually getting the picture that this legislation is to be nothing more than a piece of face-saving material.

Mr. Pepin: We split the work. I do the bill, he does the tour of the provinces. What is wrong with that?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am glad that he is still in the government. I thought perhaps he had taken the route of some ministers who decided that the government was not responsible, and resigned.

Mr. Pepin: That is our business.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): If the minister wants to speak again, I would be quite happy to let him do so.

Mr. Pepin: Say something intelligent.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The only intelligence the minister has displayed so far is the ability to be concerned about an issue that is important, but there was certainly not anything in what he said this afternoon to show that the government is prepared to come to grips with this problem.

It is rather surprising that the government has the ability to be at the opposite end of the emotional spectrum when the other response is required. I am impressed by the ability of this government to appeal for balance when strong measures are needed, and then caution against halfhearted measures when unnecessary overreaction characterizes its activity. I do not think I have to spell that out for the minister; I think he knows exactly to what I am referring.

There is very little dispute between members of this House on the present financial difficulties facing our country. Indeed, the difficulties seem to indicate that any activity of a reporting nature with regard to financial institutions and transactions in this country should be considered with full care and caution. Well, caution is not lacking in the law we are discussing this evening. As a matter of fact, the bill before us is almost smothered in and suffocated by it.

The long, arduous, shrouded-in-secrecy study of the government and its policy development is broken only by the odd leak. This is one case when the leaks were better in some instances than that which was eventually produced. There was a great feeling of suspense. The final product is much like the egg that was sat on too long; all we have for policy is a bad yoke. I suspect the smell will be with us for some time to come.

No government that has been so callous about the necessity of creating employment has the moral right to hide behind the issue of jobs needed. It is more than a little inconsistent to hear government speakers tell us that we must be so concerned about the issue of jobs, yet that is what we are hearing from them. Indeed, we are not hearing a strong statement of support of the bill before the House but, rather, a continuous apology for a policy for which apologies cannot be made.

The previous speaker, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) spent most of his time suggesting alternatives. He really gave us quite a tour. It was almost like a combination of the encyclopaedia and the Canadian geographic magazine; he went all across Canada, all over the world and threw in his ideas. He seemed to forget the matter before us is government legislation which, if he is still a member of the government, he is supporting. It is just another indication of lack of support.

There is also a reflection of lack of leadership on this particular issue. Nowhere has there been any less indication of leadership than on this issue. If one wants, as some government speakers have done, to refer to the Canada Development Corporation as another part of the positives, it certainly is a part of the positive: it is establishing a new game of Crown corporation musical chairs where we, presumably, will permanently see a collection of various odds and sods of institutions, all of a governmental or quasi-governmental nature, being taken over by the CDC with absolutely no relationship to the question of economic self-determination for Canadians.

We in this party are well aware of the need to encourage development in Canada, especially in areas where economic conditions are depressed. We in this party have no hang-ups or misconceptions about a healthy attitude toward foreign investment.

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Just listen and I will get to it. Where we differ and find cause to belittle this bill and its child's step, instead of what should be a mature solution, is in the complete reluctance to realize the firm need for some very clearly stated guidelines on foreign investment and Canadian development for this country. I find it passing strange for the government, with a straight face, to produce a report such as was presented to this House a few short weeks ago and then follow it up with this kind of bizarre piece of legislation that the minister spoke of this afternoon.

Mr. Pepin: You have already said that three times.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Maybe it needs to be said more often if the message has not reached the minister's ears. Presumably that is one of the points of debate.

Mr. Pepin: I am waiting for ideas.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): There will be plenty. I hope the minister took note of those that were presented today. I am sure he did. There must be some understanding of what the government's role will be with respect to investment generally. There is no indication whatsoever of what the government has in mind. Indeed, all we are getting from this government in the matter of investment is a conflicting signal.

The greatest enterprises which involve the largest number of Canadians must be shaking their heads in vain about what the government is really up to with regard to the Canadianization of economic activity. I am referring to the activities that took place last fall with regard to the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions. Both inside and outside this chamber we witnessed hamhanded attempts to limit the effectiveness of the most Canadian institutions that we have. It was only after considerable pressure that the government finally and reluctantly reverted to the previous legislative situation which in effect provided an effective framework for co-operatives and credit unions to flourish in this country. What could be more important to the future development of Canadian involvement and control of commercial activities than these two very important enterprises?

Since it has reached ten o'clock I will not take up any more time this evening. However, I will present some concrete suggestions tomorrow afternoon and I hope the minister will be in the chamber to hear them and respond. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—BANGLADESH—ESTABLISHMENT OF FACILITIES IN DACCA FOR CANADIAN PLENIPOTENTIARY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on May 8 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. Inasmuch as the distinguished High Commissioner for Bangladesh has arrived in Ottawa, can the minister report on whether or not facilities have been acquired in Dacca for the Canadian plenipotentiary to perform his duties, and when that official will in fact be performing his duties in Dacca?

• (2200)

The reply was:

> Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take the question as notice. I am not certain whether our new High Commissioner has yet appeared in Dacca. As the hon. member knows, there is a double accreditation to this post.

I may say I have had no further response to this question which the minister took as notice. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, I was aware of the fact that the chief Canadian representative to Dacca had accreditation at another capital. It was this very situation which I protested a good many weeks ago.

This situation is doubtless another aspect of the withdrawal syndrome reflected in the government's white paper on foreign policy. There are in Ottawa today representatives of ten countries at whose capitals Canada has no accredited plenipotentiary. The House will have heard me make frequent mention of the little Commonwealth country of Barbados which has had a fine mission here in Ottawa for some years. Yet Canada, a nation of 21 million, cannot seem to find the interest or the funds to reciprocate by opening a mission in Bridgetown. I must cite a recent announcement by the minister indicating that there is now an intention to open a mission in Barbados and five other areas by 1974. But why are we lagging? Does austerity clutch the external affairs department with its icy hand long after it has relaxed its grip on other free spending departments, for example, that of the Secretary of State?

Bangladesh is the second largest country in the Commonwealth and is one to which we should extend not only recognition, as we have, but to which we should send a high commissioner accredited to that great land and to it alone. So horrendous has been its suffering, so immense are its problems and so great our opportunity for assisting a fellow Commonwealth state that Canada should feel humiliated at its incapacity to upgrade its mission. We should have a full time high commissioner there and an adequate office and staff in Dacca. There is much to do in Bangladesh and I cannot believe the people of Canada want their government pennypinching on this issue. Nor can I believe we do not have adequate personnel to staff such an office.

I am not especially enamoured of the insensitive approach to the problem by the minister when he reported on May 15 that Bangladesh would prefer more aid rather than a resident Canadian high commissioner. This, I think, begs the question in a somewhat gauche and condescending manner.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) announced on April 10 cabinet approval for the opening of six new posts. The proposed new posts will enable Canada to achieve more effectively its national objectives relating to its political, commercial, economic, aid, immigration and consular interests.

Embassies or high commissions will be opened in the following countries: Barbados, Hungary, Korea, Morocco and Zambia. A Canadian consular office already exists in Budapest, and Canadian development offices in Lusaka and Rabat. I would remind the hon. member of this when he comments on the alleged failure of the government to be more active in this field. A consulate general will be opened in Atlanta, Georgia. The posts should all be in full operation in 1974. However, the majority will likely be in partial or full operation sooner, as some elements of the posts are already in place or will be transferred from existing nearby posts. Preparations for the opening of these new posts will begin as soon as possible.

Diplomatic relations were established with Bangladesh on March 20 when our ambassador in Bangkok, Mr. Gordon Cox, in his capacity as representative of the government of Canada to Bangladesh, arrived in Dacca for his first visit. Bangladesh having become a member of the Commonwealth on April 18, our representative has been designated as High Commissioner of Canada to Bangladesh and is expected to present his credentials in that capacity almost immediately. He is probably en route to Dacca at this very minute.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

A Canadian development team has been assigned to direct the Canadian assistance program in Bangladesh and the first member, who is also a member of the staff of the Canadian representative, has been in Dacca since mid-March. Another member has joined him, to make two on the ground in Dacca. An additional first secretary is being appointed to the embassy in Bangkok to assist the ambassador in his responsibilities toward Bangladesh. He will be spending an increasing amount of time in Dacca, and the facilities available to the development team will be increased so as to permit the operation of a full diplomatic mission as soon as budgetary considerations permit.

PENSIONS—ALLEGED THREAT OF LOSS OF ALLOWANCES OF BLIND PERSONS WORKING ON LIP PROJECTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I find it regrettable that neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), are here this evening. I do not like to suggest that this is a measure of the seriousness with which the government takes the question I raise this evening, but very obviously it is.

Mr. Francis: There is good reason why he cannot be here.

Mr. Forrestall: If the hon. member has something to say, he may respond. If either of those hon. members are here, then I apologize to both. But it is my understanding that the hon. member for Papineau is the minister's parliamentary secretary and I do not see the minister or that hon. member here. I may be wrong in choosing—

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, by arrangement with the hon. member, who has good reason for not being here, I am prepared and will endeavour to reply.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member knows that points of order cannot be raised at this time. The practice and procedures are quite clear in this regard. Members are given the opportunity at this time to make their arguments, and the parliamentary secretary will have the opportunity to reply in due course.

Mr. Forrestall: The only comment I wish to make is that while there may have been arrangements made, they were not made in consultation with me. I appreciate the distinguished gentleman being here this evening to respond.

My question is quite brief and relates to the difficulty faced by people receiving blind pension allowances when they enter into LIP projects. It is quite clear that blind pension allowances are directly within the jurisdiction of provincial governments. I have no illusions about that, but I make no apology for raising the matter of protecting people on blind pension allowances.

The fact is that under existing legislation the federal authority is compelled to recover overpayments to people receiving blind pension allowances. Any income over and above the $900 allowance, plus $600 which they are allowed to earn, must be recovered. I am also aware that if these people were receiving benefits under the Canada Assistance Plan they could receive up to $1,900 before this recovery provision came into play. My concern is that while the problem has been resolved for at least this year, will the government be prepared to continue to protect people in receipt of pension allowances in the event that the level of income is affected by programs falling entirely within federal jurisdiction? I refer to programs such as those which in fact operate on the basis of direct injection into the economy of taxpayers' dollars—programs such as LIP.

I am sure the hon. gentleman opposite understands my concern. I wonder, at the same time, whether the government might consider in a realistic way and in consultation with the provinces a total and effective review of the blind persons allowance inasmuch as we are all aware that under the Canada Assistance Plan people who have this type of disability are, or could be under other circumstances, entitled to income up to $1,900 before impairment of that program begins to take place, whereas under the existing program they are limited to $600 over and above the amount they receive.

I hope the hon. gentleman will comment on this matter of interest and concern people who are in receipt of the blind persons allowance. I am sure they and the provinces would welcome a clear demonstration of understanding of the difficulties which arise under programs such as LIP. In short, I believe they would welcome clarification on where they will stand next year. I think this is a most important matter and I would appreciate my colleague's comments.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, by arrangement with the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) I have undertaken to make a reply this evening. The hon. member has made his brief and material available to me.

The Blind Persons Act provides for federal sharing, under agreement, of 75 per cent of the amounts paid by the provinces for allowances to blind persons 18 years of age and over. The provinces pay allowances to recipients under authority of provincial legislation but in accordance with the provisions of the federal act. The act specifies that payments to a province shall be made only in respect of a recipient whose annual income, inclusive of allowance, does not exceed $1,500 for a single person—the hon. member pointed this out—or $2,580 for a married couple. If both spouses are blind, the income must not exceed $2,700.

Income for this purpose includes all earnings, gratuities and contributions received whether in cash or in kind. This is the requirement under the act. However, under the Blind Persons Act it is general practice for provinces to disregard earned income during the period that the allowance is suspended, except in the case of regular seasonal employment, provided the person advises the province at the time he commences employment and requests suspension of his allowance.

Similarly, when earnings cease, the person may have his allowance reinstated without taking into consideration the amount earned during the period the allowance is suspended. Although federal officials have encouraged this practice, it is at the discretion of the province whether or not the practice is adopted. Under these circumstances, blind persons who have been employed on projects such as those under LIP could have earnings without creating an overpayment or affecting future payment of allowances.

Mr. Forrestall: For this year only.

Mr. Francis: No. This is a general policy which can be applied by the province under the existing regulations. It could apply to this year or any period in the future. The officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have been in touch with officials of the department of public welfare in Nova Scotia and their understanding is that the problem regarding blind persons employed on LIP projects will be favourably settled.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.16 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALLEGED DOWNGRADING OF PASSENGER SERVICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. The serious claims by all segments of transportation and communications and particularly by railroad workers that Canadian National Railways is deliberately downgrading rail passenger service, and their demands for the reinstatement of rail services, emphasize the need for reassessment. Since these claims contradict the announced direction of government transportation policy made known to the Transport Committee and in the promotion campaigns of Canadian National Railways, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That the government place a moratorium on all pending applications for discontinuance of rail passenger service and that they instruct the Canadian Transport Commission to initiate an independent study to assess the management capabilities of CNR and the effect of CNR decisions on the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Consent is not unanimous. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

HIGHER LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR IN RELATION TO U.S. DOLLAR—MEASURES TO ASSIST EXPORTERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, but first I should like to welcome him back to the House after his important trip to Europe. In view of the fact that the Canadian dollar has now risen to $1.017 U.S., and gives every indication of continuing to rise and making it increasingly difficult to provide a satisfactory Canadian export picture, is the government planning to introduce any measures in the near future to aid our exporters to overcome the very serious situation they are facing in increasing degree day by day?

• (1410)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has already introduced some stimulus through the budget of May 8 by way of accelerated depreciation and a substantial reduction in corporate tax for manufacturers and processors, which I think will go a long way to compensating for any international disadvantages they may suffer.

Mr. Hees: Is it the view of the government that measures which will not become effective for more than seven months will be effective in helping exporters who are facing this very serious problem right now in an increasing degree day by day?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is our view that they will be of immense help. To begin with, the accelerated depreciation was immediately effective as of May 8, and the reduction in corporate tax for processors and manufacturers will allow those industries to plan on the basis of that measure.

Mr. Hees: As Canadian manufacturers seem singularly reluctant to indicate how they are going to spend the tax reduction they will receive seven months from now, or to give any indication that they will carry out the plans that the Minister of Finance expressed for them in his budget, can the minister indicate to the House now what effect these plans are expected to have when they do become effective—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —or how effective they will become in the next seven months?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The second supplementary asked by the hon. member is, of course, a very important question, but I would think it is rather broad in scope and would invite a statement which ought normally to be made on motions or during the budget debate.

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION TO FARMERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he is going to extend the provision for accelerated depreciation to primary producers of farm products, more specifically grain, since they are being equally hurt?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question will have to await publication of the regulations pursuant to the bill that will be introduced.

Mr. Gleave: Did I understand the minister to say that this depends on the promulgation of the regulations? Has the policy not been decided?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The policy is decided; the hon. member will have to await the publication of the regulations.

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES RESPECTING ACCEPTANCE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Témiscamingue rising for a supplementary?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the number of agreements to be entered into with the United States concerning agriculture and other subjects, and of the fact that I am just back from the United States, could the minister—

An hon. Member: Welcome to Canada!

Mr. Caouette: I went into a health clinic, for the information of my colleagues.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the American dollar is accepted without question in Canada. Could an agreement be entered into with the United States government whereby the Canadian dollar would receive the same treatment in the United States?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe acceptance of the dollar, American or Canadian, depends on the reactions of shop keepers.

[Mr. Hees.]

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR LIST OF AMERICAN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question I have asked once or twice before which he has not yet answered. Is the minister now in a position to inform parliament and the Canadian people of the names of the number of firms in the United States that have registered for DISC and are carrying on business under that scheme now or propose to do so?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my answer is the same as on the previous occasion. I have a number of names of United States companies which have decided to use the DISC facility. As to some of them I have firm information because the Canadian subsidiary has informed us; in other cases it is hearsay based on articles read in newspapers. There is no scientific character at all to the list I have and consequently I will not provide the list that I have now.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister in a position to inform the House whether the number is the same as he mentioned during a speech some weeks ago, less than 1,500, I believe? Has the number remained the same or does he know whether it has increased to any extent?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have not been informed of any addition to the previous number but I will check.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that this is a very important matter for Canada—I am sure the minister shares that view—can he inform the House whether he has made official requests of the United States authorities to make such a list available at least with respect to those corporations that have subsidiaries in Canada, and if he has made such a request what has the answer been?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, some unofficial moves have been made to obtain these names and have not been successful.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a further, very short, supplementary. I knew there had been unofficial moves taken because that was suggested to us on previous occasions. I am asking the minister whether he is ready now to make a formal request for that list so that Canadians will know exactly what firms in Canada are likely to be affected, or is he still of the view that he does not wish to make such a formal request?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my parents have taught me it is not wise to ask for something you are not sure of receiving. I have already indicated to the House on two or three occasions that we were looking at ways and means by which we could obtain the information on DISC users from the customs import applications.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION WITH CHARTERED BANKS TO PREVENT INCREASE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is related to one asked by my colleague earlier in regard to the pressure on the Canadian dollar. In view of the upward pressure on interest rates in this country, is the minister having consultations with the presidents of the chartered banks to ensure that the interest rate structure will not also go up?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stay in touch with the chartered banks and will be meeting with the Canadian Bankers' Association in Winnipeg next week.

Mr. Nowlan: I am glad that the minister is to meet with these important gentlemen next week, but is he going to put forward any proposals or propositions to them so that we do not have an increase in the interest rate structure which is already too high?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will be discussing the underlying situation with the banking association.

LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES AS MEANS OF REDUCING PRESSURE ON CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In his conversations with the bankers next week will he be presenting any suggestions to them on behalf of the government for the lowering of interest rates as another means of reducing pressure on the Canadian dollar?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the banking association understands that proposition.

An hon. Member: Do you?

DIFFERENCE IN BANK INTEREST RATES ON LOANS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. When he is having conversations with the presidents or officials of the various banks would he discuss with them why certain people can get loans at the prime rate, probably 7½ per cent, when the majority of people in the lower income bracket have to pay 12 per cent and sometimes 14 per cent?

• (1420)

POLLUTION

REPORTED REOPENING OF SUGAR BEET REFINERY ON PRESQUILE RIVER

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Has the minister's attention been directed to the report that a sugar beet refinery in the state of Maine, located on the Presquile River, a tributary of the Saint John, is to start up again. I might say that this is the industry that was responsible for the pollution of the Presquile River some years ago that caused a tremendous amount of hardship for people in that particular locality.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, and we are expressing our concern about it.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

REQUEST THAT JERICHO NATIONAL DEFENCE LAND BE LEASED TO VANCOUVER FOR PARK

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. As the taxpayers have already paid for the Jericho base land which Vancouver needs so badly for an ocean-side park, will the government, instead of squeezing Vancouver for nearly $1 million, lease it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question cannot be asked in those terms. The hon. member has to ask a question and not present argument.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I was using the minister's own words for greater accuracy. Will the government lease this land to the city, as it did with Stanley Park, and once more earn the undying gratitude of the citizens of Vancouver and visitors from across Canada and beyond?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question in those terms is out of order. The hon. member is making a suggestion or representation to the minister.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I phrase it again?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members again that they ought to phrase their original questions in accordance with the rules. It takes time to ask a question that is not in order and then rephrase it so that it is acceptable procedurally. Hon. members should have only one chance, not two. However, considering many things, I will recognize the hon. member and permit her to rephrase the question.

Mrs. MacInnis: I trust, Mr. Speaker, that you will consider that I am not the only transgressor. However, I appreciate your ruling. Will the government give consideration to leasing the Jericho park lands to the city of Vancouver instead of selling them?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, an arrangement was made with the city of Vancouver whereby 78 acres of waterfront land was transferred to the city, for the sum of $1. Part of that deal was that the remaining property be sold. I have indicated to representatives of the city of Vancouver that if they wish to talk about the whole deal again I will be pleased to meet them and discuss it.

Mrs. MacInnis: Is the figure of nearly $1 million that the government has set the rock-bottom price for the property—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis: —and can the minister assure us that, pending Vancouver raising the necessary money, the property will not be sold to private developers?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that we are not going to sell the property presently to private developers. I have not indicated a price or been asked for a price for the whole property. I have simply said to the representatives from Vancouver who were here that I would be glad, if they do not want the original bargain, to meet them and change the whole deal.

FISHERIES

CLOSING OF SALMON FISHING IN GASPÉ—INQUIRY RESPECTING AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Fisheries.

Can he tell the House whether he has reached an agreement with the province of Quebec with regard to the banning of commercial salmon fishing in Gaspé and part of the north shore comparable with the one now in effect in the Maritimes?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have had a discussion with the Minister of Tourism, Fisheries and Game of the province of Quebec and I understand that the province will be instituting a ban on the commercial salmon fishery and that a similar program of compensation will be available to the commercial fishermen in that province.

[Translation]

CLOSING OF SALMON FISHING IN GASPÉ—ARRANGEMENTS FOR PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Will the compensation the minister speaks of be paid Gaspé fishermen by the federal government or by the government of the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the fisheries in that province are administered by the province of Quebec, a financial arrangement will have to be reached between the provincial and federal governments in this connection.

ATLANTIC SALMON—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH DENMARK RESPECTING ITS HIGH SEAS FISHING OPERATIONS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Minister of Fisheries has reached agreement with the province of Quebec, can he tell us whether any agreement has been reached with Denmark as a result of the meetings now being held in Washington.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, a meeting of nations concerned with fisheries in the North Atlantic is under way this week, and I do not expect that a final resolution of that problem will be reached before Friday.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES—SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN MEMBER FOR TRINITY AND PRIVY COUNCILLORS TO CONSIDER INFORMATION AND ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and is in connection with the recent charges and allegations made by the former deputy prime minister, the hon. member for Trinity. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is giving consideration to establishing a committee made up of Privy Councillors of the present Parliament to meet with the hon. member for Trinity and consider the information he may have to present, and then indicate to the House any recommendations or actions the government is prepared to take?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not considered that eventuality. I am sure that some members of the House might want to meet with the hon. member for Trinity to discuss this subject with him, but I see no cause to do so. Some of his allegations are apparently based on some things he got from cabinet. These communications are certainly privileged and under oath of secrecy.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the seriousness of his statements and, as the Prime Minister just indicated, there is the matter of his oath as a Privy Councillor, will the Prime Minister give consideration to a meeting of Privy Councillors who are members of this House in order that this form of non-partisan committee might give adequate consideration to these serious charges?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, at least once a week in cabinet there is a meeting of Privy Councillors who want to discuss matters relating to the government. As for Privy Councillors sitting on the other side, I might add that when the royal commission report came out in its original form I offered the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity to read it under his oath as a Privy Councillor, and for reasons which I respect he preferred not to read it. However, I think this is as far as we can go in communicating the original version. As the Solicitor General pointed out to the House, a slightly abridged version was approved by the commissioners as containing all the essence of the main report.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Since much of the work of the Royal Commission on Security was done prior to the time the hon. member for Trinity suggested some of these actions may have taken place, and in view of the public concern and the importance of having any difficult situation like this clarified, will the Prime Minister give consideration to a meeting of Privy Councillors who are members of the House in order to clear the air once and for all on all these matters?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I answered this question the two previous times it was asked by the hon. member today. He might want to consider getting together a group of Members of Parliament from the broadcasting committee, who studied one of the matters discussed by the hon. member for Trinity. I believe the hon. member for Trinity suggests that this committee whitewashed the whole proceedings. Perhaps the hon. member opposite might want to look into this matter. He is a Member of Parliament.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked three questions. He will be recognized for one further supplementary. The Chair is still waiting for an opportunity to recognize a member from the group to my extreme left. They have not yet had a chance to ask a question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Chair and the House for raising these supplementaries. I do so simply for clarification. I wonder whether the Prime Minister does not see a difference between those who have taken the Privy Council oath of office and those who sit as Members of Parliament in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a supplementary question. That is debate.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF DEADLINE TO ENABLE COMPLETION OF CERTAIN PROJECTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since tomorrow is the deadline for local initiative projects which were denied any extension, may I ask the minister if to date a decision has yet to be taken about local initiative projects which could be granted an extension?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already announced that projects that are municipally sponsored can be extended beyond tomorrow's date under the local initiatives program because of the fact that in some instances climatic conditions played a part in delaying the beginning of projects. We have had little or no demand for extension of privately sponsored projects. We have placed at the disposal of some of the projects that are in existence some $30 million more so that approximately 1,200 local initiative projects will be continued beyond tomorrow's date until September.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—INCLUSION OF INDIAN BAND PROJECTS IN EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR COMPLETION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Does he include within the designation of municipally sponsored projects those that are sponsored by Indian band groups as well, and will they have the benefit of the extension?

• (1430)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I cannot say categorically, but I would hope so because I believe these local programs sponsored by Indian bands have been a very welcome initiative this winter. If a firm decision has not been reached on this issue, I would personally be inclined to consider them as municipally sponsored.

EXTENSION OF FORGIVENESS PERIOD UNDER FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL EMPLOYMENT LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance in connection with a related program. Is consideration being given to an extension of the federal-provincial loan forgiveness program for the same reasons inasmuch as many such requests have been made?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government will ask Parliament for the authority to extend to June 30 the period during which it contributes 75 per cent of the wage and salary costs of projects financed under the federal-provincial employment loans program. Bad weather, labour disputes and other unavoidable factors have made it difficult for provinces and municipalities to complete projects in time to qualify for the full $35 million of loan forgiveness allocated under the $160 million dollar loan program announced last October.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALLEGED DOWNGRADING OF PASSENGER SERVICE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Incidentally, the minister was supposed to be here today. In view of the accusation made by the London, Ontario, and District Railway Workers Council that Canadian National Railways has embarked on a deliberate plan to discourage people from using passenger trains by providing terrible service, will the minister request the Canadian Transport Commission to investigate this charge immediately?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is away from the House on government business. I will see that the hon. member's question is brought to his attention.

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNIONS—ACTION TO EASE TENSION IN LIGHT OF REJECTION OF REGIONAL PAY SCALES AND POSSIBLE STRIKE VOTE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Now that the Toronto local of the Letter Carriers Union has publicly rejected the government's offer in the long drawn-out negotiations for a new contract, particularly the proposal for regional pay scales, and has also recommended the holding of a national strike vote, may I ask what action the government has taken to ease the growing tension?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The easy answer is that we are continuing to negotiate. I think the hon. member will understand that the publicly-announced action of one of the locals of the Council of Postal Unions does not necessarily govern the entire council.

Mr. Dinsdale: Has the government now decided to draw upon the expertise available in the Department of Labour and appoint a special skilled negotiator?

Mr. Drury: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT REGIONAL RATES OF PAY POLICY—CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether it is now government policy to shift wage payments from national to regional rates, not just in the Post Office but in the operational categories of employees and possibly later in the administrative categories?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): This is the direction in which the federal government in any event has been moving for some years. The proposal made to the postal workers is one small further step along this particular road.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the President of the Treasury Board a supplementary question. In view of the serious implications of this shift in policy, will the government consider bringing the matter before Parliament to ascertain whether Parliament approves of the shift from a national to a regional rate structure?

Mr. Drury: Probably the most effective mechanism for examining this subject in Parliament would be to use one of the supply or opposition days for the purpose. I repeat that this is not a shift in policy; it is merely the continuation of a policy which has been in operation for some years.

GOVERNMENT REGIONAL RATES OF PAY POLICY—POSSIBLE IMPEDIMENT TO SETTLEMENT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether this move to establish pay rates on a national as opposed to a regional basis, particularly in the Post Office and the operational groups in the public service, is the major impediment to the settlement of negotiations?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I am not sure which negotiations the hon. member has in mind. In any case it is difficult to indicate unilaterally what is the major stumbling block in the way of agreement, if indeed there be any.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West for a last supplementary on this subject. I owe it to hon. members to bring to their attention that there are quite a few members who are seeking to be recognized before the end of the question period. Obviously a number of them will be disappointed, so we should try to limit supplementaries.

Mr. Rose: I recognize the difficulty caused by the general nature of my question. I should therefore like to refer specifically to the operational groups in the public service, for instance, stationary engineers and firemen. Is the issue of regional versus national pay rates the major impediment to agreement at the moment?

Mr. Drury: In some instances, although this is rather difficult to measure from time to time, the question of regional rates of pay appears to be of major concern. In others it is the general level of pay and related regional rates.

FOREST FIRES

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF AIRCRAFT BY DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE TO COMBAT OUTBREAKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Bearing in mind the serious forest fire situation in many parts of Canada, particularly in northern Ontario, is the Department of National Defence considering the establishment of a fleet of firefighting aircraft to act as a standby force to assist provincial and territorial governments in emergency forest fire situations?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. However, the department does stand ready to aid provinces in fighting forest fires when called upon to do so, though the responsibility is basically that of the province, within its provincial boundaries.

FINANCE

PROVISION OF INFORMATION BY PROVINCES ON PLANNED BORROWINGS IN UNITED STATES TO ENABLE ACTION TO COMPENSATE FOR EFFECT ON DOLLAR

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he invited the provincial governments to give him information in advance concerning their plans to float large loans in the United States so that his department may take action to compensate for the effect of loans on the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I have said to the House before that I reiterated the request of my predecessor that provincial governments should, where possible, use the Canadian capital market to accommodate their financial requirements. I might say that most of the provinces are keeping in touch with me. Whether or not the federal government can take compensatory action to balance provincial borrowings is hypothetical. It is a question which is under continuing review.

ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES—SUPPLYING OF INFORMATION TO SECURITY GROUP—OATH OF OFFICE OF MEMBER FOR TRINITY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of questions addressed to him earlier by my hon. friend from Egmont. In light of his answers today, and since the statement made by the hon. member for Trinity was based on facts gathered inside or outside the cabinet, may I ask whether the security planning group, the new group which was set up by the Solicitor General to act as a liaison body between the government and the RCMP, has been informed of the information in possession of the hon. member for Trinity? Second, does the Prime Minister take the position that his hon. friend from Trinity has broken his oath of office?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Perhaps the Solicitor General can answer the first part of the question. The second part of the question could, I suppose, be answered by anyone as well as myself, including the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect to the Prime Minister, he is the head of the government; he sits in cabinet and I do not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Hon. members over there can yell and shout if they want to. Let them go ahead. Bring on the chorus. I think the only man who can answer my question properly is the Prime Minister. I ask him now: does he take the position that the former deputy prime minister of this country, a former member of his government, broke his oath of office?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is really asking me for a legal opinion. I would not find it proper under the rules to give that opinion. Second, I could not answer, even if I wished to do so, because I do not know exactly what the hon. member said. I have not read or heard exactly what he said. Perhaps the hon. member knows.

Mr. Woolliams: Since the Prime Minister invited me to pass the first part of my question to the Solicitor General, I should like to put that question to the Solicitor General. Has the group that he set up, this new security planning group that we have never been able to find out about, been informed of the information the hon. member for Trinity alleges he has with reference to danger to the security of Canada?

RESPONSE TO CRITICISM OF PROPOSED NEWS BLACKOUT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the bluntly worded criticism by the Canadian managing editors conference in New Brunswick last week concerning the news blackout envisaged by the new legislation on election expenses, would the Prime Minister say what his reaction is to the resolution sent to him and the nature of his reply?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question asked in those terms is not in order. The hon. member is asking the Prime Minister to indicate what his reaction is to a resolution or communication. A question in those terms, to my way of thinking in any event, is not quite in order.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, this is a very eminent body. Many members of the press gallery were present at that meeting. May I ask the Prime Minister whether a copy of this resolution was received and what was the nature of the reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether it has been received among the many pieces of mail that I get. I have received something from the Committee for an Independent Canada that the hon. member might want to question me about. I may have received the item the hon. member refers to, and I am sure that if I did it was acknowledged by my office. As to the answer that we would give, the minister will state it on behalf of the government when the debate continues in the House, and I hope at that time the hon. member will state his position on this so-called news blackout.

In view of reports that some government funds made available through the local initiatives and the opportunities for youth programs have not been properly used as designated, can the Prime Minister say whether steps are being taken by the government to tighten bookkeeping controls over these grants?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the ministers responsible have indicated at various stages the review process and the ongoing examination that is in hand. They have stated that if members have complaints about particular projects that allegedly are misusing funds they will gladly look into the matter.

Mr. Skoreyko: Is it the intention of the government to recover any moneys that have been mis-spent or not used in accordance with the original intent of the grant?

PULP AND PAPER MILL EFFLUENTS—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF OFFENDING COMPANIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of the Environment a question. On Friday last, I believe, the minister stated in response to other questions of mine that in my constituency there was a very bad offender in the field of pulp mill pollution. Would the minister be prepared to indicate the names of the pulp mills in Canada that are considered by his department to be very bad offenders?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question ought to be placed on the order paper, unless the hon. member is asking the minister whether he is prepared to do this. Of course the information should not be given at this time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that was my intention.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to comply with that request.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): May I ask the minister when he will be able to provide this information?

Mr. Davis: Shortly. Most existing pulp mills offend our regulations.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Could the minister indicate at the same time the stage of negotiations between his department and each of the pulp mills in regard to application of the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this would complicate the answer. Frequently the negotiation is carried on with the knowledge or aid of the province concerned, and it would take some time to compile all of the information.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNCTAD MEETING—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF RESOLUTIONS OPPOSED BY CANADA AND FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN ROLE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, since the Secretary of State for External Affairs is absent on important government business, may I ask his parliamentary secretary whether the hon. gentleman would undertake to have tabled in the House the UNCTAD resolutions which were so consistently opposed by the Canadian delegation at the conference at Santiago, Chile, and would he also undertake to make a statement shortly to the House concerning Canada's role at this conference which has earned so much criticism?

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice.

PENITENTIARIES

SUSPENSION OF REGULATION MAKING INMATES FINANCIALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR WILFUL DAMAGE TO PROPERTY

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it deals with a matter I asked the minister about on May 16 concerning deduction of amounts of damages done by inmates to prison property from the salaries of prisoners in federal institutions. On May 20 the regulation holding prisoners financially responsible for wilful damage to prison property was suspended. Would the minister tell the House who authorized that directive?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question ought to be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Ten o'clock.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INSTITUTION OF REGIONAL RATES OF PAY FOR MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board regarding the extension of the principle of regional rates of pay, may I ask the minister whether it is intended to institute regional rates of pay in the Canadian Armed Forces, or will the minister undertake that this will not happen?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think it is safe to undertake that it will not happen. Members of the armed forces often serve in many areas of Canada within the same year.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—WORK STOPPAGE DURING LIFE OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Labour but since he is absent, perhaps in Montreal, I will address it to the acting minister. In view of the move in Montreal today that suspended the jobs of 3,200 longshoremen in Quebec City, Montreal and Trois-Rivières, men who have been involved in an illegal strike for the last two or three weeks, is it the intention of the government to take action immediately under section 19 of the Canada Labour Code which specifically prohibits work stoppages during the life of collective agreements? May I remind the minister that the present bill we are working on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can ask questions but cannot convey reminders to the minister. The minister has the floor for the purpose of answering the question.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of what has happened in Montreal, namely, the suspension of a large number of longshoremen; the hon. member said 3,200. I can understand the suspension since there is a collective agreement and the men refused to report to work. The collective agreement is a very complex one because of a security clause. I think the employers had little alternative but to take the action they have taken. I believe it would be in the best interests of the men to sit down and negotiate according to the laws of the land.

Mr. Alexander: The minister did not answer my question, perhaps for reasons best known to himself. In view of the fact that Canadian consignees will have to foot the extra charges on goods that are forced to go through the United States, is the government aware of this situation and is it planning to alleviate the financial hardship that will occur if the government does not step in under the Canada Labour Code, which prohibits strikes during the term or life of a collective agreement?

Mr. Forrestall: Send them to Halifax.

Mr. Mackasey: Someone mentioned that ships are already on the way to Halifax and Saint John. One man's meat is another man's poison. The main people suffering from this illegal dispute, of course, are the longshoremen, and they should be asking questions of their leaders.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR CONTROL OF FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

The House resumed from Monday, May 29 consideration of the motion of Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin that Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont. Perhaps the conversations, which I am sure are very interesting, might be pursued outside the Chamber or behind the curtains. The hon. member for Egmont has been recognized. It might be difficult to hear him if these conversations continue.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), as well as other government members, joined in a chorus of apologies for the bill which is before us today. Last night the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) took us on a global tour of not only the other provinces and their views, but also other countries and other legislation in this field. When one sees what other countries are doing in the field covered by this legislation, one wonders whether it is fair to say there is no place like home. On the problem of development, particularly in areas of regional economic disparity, it is true we face problems of development not only in economically and socially deprived parts of the country but we know that such development in Canada has been spotty, dominated often by one important economic group or foreign group. Surely, the spotty and somewhat erratic economic development of Canada has occurred because there has never been a coherent set of guidelines for either foreign or domestic investment and development in Canada.

One of the major tragedies, if not the major tragedy, of the legislation we are discussing today is that the bill before us accepts the status quo. It accepts in both complacency and naïveté a situation wherein complete sectors of our economy seem destined to remain in the present state. This is something which I do not believe members of this House, or indeed the Canadian people, should be forced to accept. When we deal with something as difficult and complex as corporate behaviour in a modern and complex society, we know that to some extent the corporate structure is parallel to government. It is parallel with the official levels of government. Particularly, it has the force of government. A corporation which employs most of the men of a town or a community within a province indeed controls and influences the lives of those men far more directly than any local, municipal, provincial or even federal government. Indeed, while governments very often deal with what people cannot do, corporations and employers often determine directly or indirectly what people can do.

So, it is not difficult to see why the entire issue of foreign ownership is such a particularly sensitive one. In many ways, those who speak of examining the directorships of corporations for Canadian representation, those who speak of full disclosure, are talking about examining the workings of corporate governments. Yet, despite the ruffled sentiments that this type of proposal causes, I believe we should be committed to these things because they are in the interests of Canadians. It is important for Canadians that the facts about corporate behaviour be known. The composition of directorates should be a matter of public record so that Canadian participation can be determined. I am disturbed by the fact that most recently the government, through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has written off so quickly the importance or usefulness of having increased Canadian participation in the board rooms. It has been suggested that just having Canadians as directors would not substantially alter the situation.

Mr. Pepin: Not necessarily.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Not necessarily; the minister again indicates that today. However, I believe the minister missed the point, just as this bill has missed the point. What really needs to occur in this country, to use the government's own phrase, is further domesticity in the Canadian economy. We are not speaking of a symbolic increase of directorates to some magic number such as 50 per cent or 75 per cent. We are talking about the whole impact of corporate behaviour today on Canadian participation. In purely legal terms, it may well be true that the increase of Canadian directorships would not substantially alter the character of the industry and economic activity in this country. What we are concerned about is the effect the day-by-day decisions of the board have, on a long-term basis, on the activities of all Canadians. We are concerned about the greater usefulness of Canadian managerial skills. We know from some of the studies which have been made that only recently it has been acknowledged that we had to encourage, through schools of business training and programs of business and commerce, more entrepreneurial skills in this country.

Now, we will know, when we have developed major pools of this talent, that the talent exists and is available for the upper and middle levels of corporate management. I suppose there might be some form of moral suasion if you like for more use by firms in this country, both totally Canadian firms and particularly those which operate as foreign subsidiaries, of Canadian talent in corporation and managerial skills in the economic activity which takes place. While this is accepted in many areas, there is no hint of recognition by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that this is an important aspect of the problem which requires a solution.

Second, surely there needs to be a facing up to the problems of disclosure. I do not think it can really be argued in detailed terms that corporations, having as they do a tremendous amount of economic and social power, can longer be justified in operating in terms of secret societies. Government cannot for one moment operate as a secret society, although daily we do battle in this House of Commons because of what the government is attempting to do. Surely, if the public believes if it is not in its interest to have a government which operates in secret then it is not in its interest to have large corporations, either wholly domestically owned Canadian corporations or foreign or international corporations, operating in our society in some kind of a secret or medieval manner. There is a sense in which there must be corporate responsibility and accountability. I think, quite frankly, that it is both shocking and an indication of the naïveté of the present government that they have in no way attempted to grapple with this important problem.

Third, we must be able to come to grips with those problems that affect our economy and make decisions. I refer to the whole problem of extra-territoriality. In recent years we have known just how important these kinds of decisions can be, whether with regard to wheat sales made by an earlier government or with regard to the present DISC legislation that is being so badly fumbled by the present government. We know that there must be a firm government program to face this whole problem of extra-territoriality.

I could go on in this vein for some time, indicating the weaknesses, the lack of frank recognition of what the real aspects of the problem are, but I do not plan to spend what little time I have remaining dealing only with the negative aspects of the government's performance. I want to make some positive suggestions which I hope will be seriously considered at some stage. I suppose it would be too much to hope for some response from this administration, but I hope the one that will replace it certainly will be able to adopt many of these suggestions and provide us with a national economic and social policy that has some sense of direction, purpose and rationale to it.

It seems to me that the entire area of corporate citizenship, development and foreign acquisition should be dealt with by something more than the negative form of a screening agency. What is necessary, I believe, is a positively oriented national agency that would involve provincial and federal representatives along with industry, the academic community and citizens. The way in which we have arrived at this debate dealing with this bill, shows us just how ludicrous the present position of the government is. First of all, a task force was established under the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray). It operated in some kind of a milieu that was never very clear to anyone. Occasionally there were dispatches that came during the night watches. Finally, we had the report plus this bill. We were told that some consultation with the provinces took place, but one senses that it was nothing more than a perfunctory round-the-table discussion at a meeting last fall of first ministers or first ministers and finance ministers. We have a government whose concepts are of the ivory tower type, a government of "we alone know best". What I am suggesting is that the time has arrived for the establishment of some national, independent review agency on which there can be the broadest kind of representation.

I think that if we are serious about these problems, and it has been shown now by a number of public opinion polls that the whole question of foreign ownership and economic independence is uppermost in the minds of Canadians from coast to coast, I believe we should establish a national institute on economic independence and development. I think this national institute should be established not by one government solely but by the federal government along with the ten provincial governments. Of course, immediately there will be objections that in that kind of situation you will never get the kind of agreement necessary to establish an agency or an institute that can do a really satisfactory job. It is certain that we have never had any worthwhile action yet from this government in this respect. Further to that, since the government has produced its report and tabled this bill a number of provincial premiers have provided more real leadership on a national basis than this government has yet shown.

If we are seriously going to deal with the question in a federal state—and I sometimes wonder whether or not this government is not terribly inconsistent, at one time hiding behind the constitution and at another completely ignoring it—if we believe that we have a viable, workable federal system in this country, then the whole issue of economic independence must be decided within a federal provincial framework. Therefore, I suggest that such an institute on economic independence and development be established by the federal government and the ten provincial governments, and that this institute have statutory responsibilities related to the review of all proposed legislation in the development field in order to see that this legislation meets what might be called the joint criteria of both development and independence.

Let me say here that I think we do have to take seriously the concern that a number of provincial premiers have registered that any restrictions on foreign investment in this country could have a disastrous effect on their own planning and priorities with regard to development. Quite frankly, I think that some of their statements have been naïve. I think they really have not looked at what has happened within their own provinces with regard to foreign investment. I do not think they have questioned whether or not it has been effective for them and for the people to whom they are responsible.

I say that the time has come when we must have a co-ordinated policy that looks to the question of development as well as of economic independence. This institute should and could prepare annual reports on the activities of both provincial and federal governments for public examination. It should and could hold regular meetings, hear witnesses, and generally keep the Canadian public informed as to the true nature of the problem and the various alternatives available. It could, once and for all, force governments and the business community to lay all their cards on the table. In addition to that, a research wing could be established that would provide both short and long-range studies on alternative means of development aside from foreign venture capital. This, tied in with governmentally co-ordinated programs working on a continuous basis, would maintain some real co-ordination between the various activities of the federal government.

We have said nothing here about the way in which government departments and agencies are often working at cross purposes with regard to the whole matter of whether or not the investment and economic activity is in the Canadian public interest. There could be some real independent vehicle which could analyse the over-all policies of the federal government, as well as relate those to the various policies of the increasingly powerful provincial governments. It is a well known fact that a number of provincial governments now have such a large budgetary program of their own, are so heavily involved in assisting the establishment and encouragement of the business community in their own provinces that the only kind of policy must be a co-ordinated one. I think that regardless of whether it is this particular kind of national institute on economic independence and development or a similar agency, there has to be a vehicle which will get us beyond the present situation where we have this kind of ad hoc, instant and somewhat peripheral solution to a very serious and major question facing the Canadian people.

It is strange to note that when we get into discussions of the problem of foreign investment and foreign economic control, we almost inevitably put the cart before the horse. Certainly, that is true with respect to this government. The question is not to have a foreign investment policy and then try to relate it to some kind of development or industrial strategy. Surely, what we need in the first instance is some framework for an industrial policy. What we are really talking about here is a consistent pattern of development to which we would relate a whole series of approaches related to foreign investment and control, and not the other way round. In order to have that we have to have a much greater amount of informed discussion on public goals and on the issues at stake. Without that kind of public discussion, the ability to take action in the Canadian interest will be severely limited on the part of both this government and any provincial governments that seek to deal with this issue.

I have very few minutes remaining, Mr. Speaker, but I want to make four or five additional specific suggestions which must be considered when dealing with this over-all question. The recent changes in the income tax bill, C-259, should remove some of the disadvantage to Canadian investors with regard to investing in business activity in their own country, but to my knowledge this bill would not provide the necessary incentive so that we might redirect the activity of Canadian investors. Obviously, what we need is a pattern of investing incentives.

Perhaps the suggestion may have already been made, but I put it forward again, that tax credits be given to individuals—not to corporations—who buy Canadian type equity investments, say up to an amount of $5,000 per person per year. In that way there would be a real built-in incentive to put one's money into the kind of development capital that would allow Canadians to participate directly in the development of their own country.

Second, Mr. Speaker, surely we can give greater attention to the use of pools of money that are collected in both pension funds and insurance funds. There are at present real legislative restrictions—this was acknowledged in the report presented by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray)—that must be dealt with, and surely this is a simple and obvious step that should be taken now.

Third, Mr. Speaker, and of increasing concern to many Canadians, there are the present limitations on and present direction of banking activity in Canada. Our banking institutions have far too often worked to the disadvantage of the development of the Canadian aspect of our economy. What is needed now is a Canadianization of our banking system. Through our banking system more venture capital needs to be released to Canadians for Canadian enterprise. Again, it was suggested in the report tabled by the minister on May 2, that what we need is really a kind of merchant banking in which there can be some real risk taking. Nowhere else would this be more valuable than to those areas suffering great regional economic disparity. Some attempts have been made, but without tangible effect, to extend banking beyond the "Big Eight". Surely, the time has come for this country, and particularly members of this House, to look closely at what kind of advantages the Bank Act and the regulations at present give to our country.

I wish the minister were still here, Mr. Speaker, to hear my fourth suggestion. I am going to speak about a matter that is under his direct responsibility, and that is the Industrial Development and Research Incentives Act. Surely, this can become a more aggressive instrument working to increase our research capacity. We know the tremendous limitations that are placed on increasing the research and development activity that presently goes on in Canada, but since we have legislation that encompasses some aspect of that field I suggest that we work to make it more responsible, more active, more progressive in its support for research activity in business. And related to that there must be parallel legislation that would provide some tax incentive for the implementation of the results of Canadian research in the manufacturing and service sectors. At the present time, there does not seem to be any acknowledgement of the fact that when Canadian research takes place and there is some real pay-out in terms of manufacturing or service activity, there should be some form of tax incentive.

Fifth, Mr. Speaker, we have to acknowledge the fact that we live in an international business community. It is not enough just to talk about what we should do, given our own situation. We are in the very difficult situation where we must direct much of our economic activity beyond our own country. We have frankly to acknowledge the degree to which we are efficient and productive, whether it is technology or management that we are talking about. If we are not able to improve our technology and develop more and better entrepreneurial skills, we will simply not measure up in the international marketplace. Excellence and competence must be increasingly recognized within the legislative framework established both federally and provincially.

Having made these remarks, Mr. Speaker, let me say something else, because I believe it is most critical to any action taken by this or any other government. There must be public participation in and support for what occurs. We have seen instances in recent years when governments sprang suddenly, without warning or understanding, into legislative activity or initiatives. The public are more than willing to get deeply involved in these questions, but so far the government has been reluctant to engage the public in this kind of dialogue. It will be impossible to make the kind of decisions that will be important and effective unless there is a public involvement, a public motivation and public commitment. I hope the minister would not spend over-much on this particular piece of legislation when obviously there are some larger and more central legislative initiatives that must be taken.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this particular bill, which is to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, because it deals with a question of great concern to areas where foreign capital is needed to establish a business or an industry, and which have little or no appeal to Canadian investors, to provide jobs and improve local conditions. After several months of study the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) made a statement of policy designed to regulate foreign investment in takeovers of Canadian based enterprises. I was rather pleased that his statement did not take the hard line of the supernationalists. Instead, he brought forth a sensible document of policy which the majority of Canadians can and will support.

I express the hope that the minister entrusted with the administration of the act will use discretion and common sense. I have great faith in the present minister. I do not believe he will jeopardize the good that many companies, with shares held by foreign investors, are doing for the communities in which they are located. But suppose another minister were to lean heavily on the ideas of the so-called Action for an Independent Canada, it would then become very difficult for companies, however successful, to expand their businesses in that their shareholders, though a minority, could be classified, at least technically, as foreigners. Of course, I would shudder to think what could happen if, by a fluke of circumstances, the NDP were to win power and form the government some time in the future. That is a very remote possibility, but nevertheless it would be a disaster.

I am therefore concerned, and very much concerned at the possibility, however distant, that virtually any acquisition, even by a minority interest, in any Canadian business, by a non-resident or by virtually any company, will be subject to the almost unlimited discretion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). This thought was very well expressed in an article on foreign ownership policy which appeared in the May 22 issue of the Financial Times. On the other hand, I am encouraged to think that after due consideration of all the angles of this very important bill, the final draft of the legislation will allow capital to start new enterprises, or expand existing ones that are foreign-owned or to develop Canadian resources, to continue to enter the country. For those of us who appreciate that this type of investment has stimulated Canada's economy in the past and contributed heavily to the nation's present state of prosperity, this is good news. It will not please those who believe that foreign capital is a threat to our independence.

In the future, Mr. Speaker, Canadians who own enterprises in this country and wish to sell them to Americans will be subject to government scrutiny, and will be permitted to do so if it can be shown to be in the national interest. The policy reflects the expressed views of the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), that given a choice between extreme nationalism as expressed by some members of the Independent Canada Committee and prosperity, Canadians will choose prosperity. Of this, I have not the slightest doubt.

The opposition and the news media expressed impatience, which was not really justified, at the delay in introducing this measure. People will realize that the time spent by the government in reaching these conclusions was time well spent. It remains for Canada to continue to attract foreign investment where it can do the most good and to ensure, in every way we can, that the prime benefits accrue to Canadians in terms of prosperity and jobs. Under the new policy, Canada will continue to offer a hospitable climate for foreign investment. The difference between Canada and so many of the other developed countries is that we have, still, so much left to develop and we can use so much help in doing the job.

It should like to quote from the report of the Minister of National Revenue, which sums up the question in these words:

> Important benefits have been and can continue to be obtained from foreign direct investment. The data comparing the performance of Canadian-controlled firms to foreign-controlled firms indicates that Canadian control of a business is not, in itself, a guarantee of sound performance; and is not, therefore, a satisfactory means of achieving Canada's broad national objectives.
> For instance, general legislation providing for 50 or 51 per cent Canadian ownership, either in the economy as a whole or in particular industries, can be very costly to the economy.

Professor Melville Watkins of the NDP said that the remedy for foreign ownership in Canada was a system of complete state socialism. Mr. Watkins faced the issue in his "Waffle Manifesto", but that document was too hot for his own New Democratic Party to handle. What we have, in these new proposals, is a traditional Canadian solution designed to give us maximum benefits at minimum cost. Consideration has been given to the fact that the provinces attach high priority to rapid economic development and are inclined to feel that Canada will continue to require a substantial volume of foreign investment to achieve this objective. I am referring, particularly, to those provinces which possess large mineral, forest, and energy resources and which have been keen for investment funds. For these provinces, foreign investment means an important source of economic development and jobs.

As an example, Mr. Bourassa, the Premier of Quebec, a strong opponent of economic nationalism, thanked the Canadian government for its prudence in limiting itself to "restrained" controls. He said that his government will not accept further controls in the future which could hamper the inflow of job-creating foreign investment. "We don't want to close the door on any foreign investment which will bring more jobs for more Quebeckers" he said; "We can't afford to refuse."

An economist, Ian MacDonald, offers this answer to the argument that Canada is trading away her independence:

> As long as non-residents are behaving as good corporate citizens, there is no danger . . . If they are not, the government is free to control them. American capital has not come to this country as part of an imperialist plot and Parliament remains sovereign as the appropriate guardian of the public interest should foreign-owned firms behave in a way which threatens Canadian independence or sovereignty.

Briefly, the benefits which have accrued to Canada from foreign investment have given us, first, an inflow of capital without which Canada could not have developed to the present state of economic stability; second, access to the United States managerial skills which have been considerably more developed than those in Canada; third, the benefits of the most advanced United States technological knowledge in fields which Canadians would have required long years of research to develop on their own; and fourth, direct access to the vast United States market for many of our products.

In a special study prepared for the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects in 1957, Professor Irving Beecher and Professor S. S. Reisman summarized the advantages in this way:

> From the search by foreign investors for profit, Canada has received a supply of capital, enterprising skills, technological know-how, and markets which for magnitude, quality, and stimulus to economic growth, has probably never been surpassed anywhere in the world.

Canadian nationalists have been very active in recent years. Walter Gordon, Mel Watkins, Mel Hurtig, the Committee for an Independent Canada and other spokesmen have made "nationalism" the fashionable wisdom. Mr. Crump, the retiring Chairman of the Canadian Pacific Railway, during the course of an interview recently, said that he has no quarrel with foreign ownership and that money has no nationality.

An hon. Member: Shame; look what the CPR did to this country.

Mr. Badanai: Under the new policy, foreign investment will continue to play that vital role and, notwithstanding Mel Watkins, Walter Gordon, Mel Hurtig and the whole Committee for an Independent Canada, our identity will be as secure as it has ever been. Mr. Alfred Powis, President of Noranda Mines, speaking at the annual meeting of shareholders of the company held on April 28, 1972, had these significant observations to make:

• (1530)

Canadians are quite rightly concerned about how to provide the additional employment needed to accommodate the fastest growing labour force in the industrialized world. Many proponents of an industrial strategy start from the assumption that primary industry cannot provide the level of employment needed and that we must foster more rapid growth in the manufacturing and service sectors.

In its more extreme form, the argument assumes that Canada has a chronic shortage of capital and surplus of labour. It alleges that past national policies designed to stimulate investment, such as tax incentives, have fostered capital intensive industries such as mining at the expense of other sectors of the economy. It is said that these industries pay very little in taxes, and in addition have not only created too little employment but have also resulted in foreign domination of our economy. Therefore, the conclusion is that we need a national industrial strategy which will divert capital from primary industry to the secondary manufacturing and service sectors where many more jobs will be created per unit of investment. To the extent that this reduces or eliminates the growth of such industries as mining, it is said that nothing will be lost in the long run because our resources are vital to the rest of the industrialized world.

Such arguments have a superficial plausibility, and they are being repeated often enough that there is some danger that they are becoming accepted as conventional wisdom, at least in certain influential circles. They are probably the reason why the mining industry fared so badly in the so-called tax reform exercise. In fact, these arguments are dangerous nonsense and, with respect to the mining industry, they are based on official statistics which are fragmented and highly misleading.

Another point to consider is the extent to which the rest of the world really depends on our natural resources. In some circles, there seems to be an assumption that we have a sort of monopoly on natural resources, and that we can hold the rest of the world to ransom for them and use them as bargaining counters in international trade negotiations. As far as mine products are concerned, this is sheer nonsense. Although we are the world's largest producer of nickel and zinc, 80 per cent of the world's known reserves of these metals are outside Canada, and in all other important metals our share of known reserves is considerably smaller. Moreover, the statement that the rest of the world is running short of mineral reserves so that ours will become increasingly valuable is untrue in the case of mine products. Leaving aside the potential for new discoveries on land, there are almost limitless reserves of most metals on the floors of the oceans which are now close to being within technological reach. Clearly, our mineral resources are only an asset if they are found and developed, and if we fail to do this the rest of the world will simply pass us by.

The last point to consider is the question of foreign ownership of the Canadian mining industry. A great deal is made of the figures produced by Statistics Canada which purport to show, for example, that 80 per cent of our smelting and refining capacity is foreign controlled. However, as indicated previously, these figures are fragmented and highly misleading. The fact is that Canadians control 67 per cent of our copper refining capacity, 70 per cent of zinc capacity and 100 per cent of lead capacity. It is only in aluminum and nickel that so-called foreign control is predominant, and this is because Alcan and International Nickel are considered to be foreign companies because somewhat less than half of their shares have been owned in Canada. However, if the trend of increasing Canadian ownership of these two companies continues, a majority of their shares will soon be held in Canada and the statistics will then show that all major sectors of the smelting and refining industry are overwhelmingly controlled in this country. This is not to argue that there is not an important degree of foreign ownership in Canadian mining. There is. But the real point is that there is also a substantial and healthy Canadian component, and its relative importance is growing.

Thus, the arguments raised against continued emphasis on development of our resources simply do not stand up. The best national industrial strategy is to concentrate on the things we do well, where we have a demonstrated record of international success. This is not to deny the importance of the manufacturing and service industries. We obviously need balanced growth, and this is the direction in which any national strategy should point us. However, unless we stimulate the development of primary industry, we are likely to have no growth at all.

The late Ross Thatcher, former premier of Saskatchewan, argued eloquently for many years against any attempt to halt or reduce the flow of much needed foreign capital for the development of Canadian resources and secondary industry. While members of the NDP, of the waffle group as well as others advocated buying back Canada, and they were making loud noises in the province of Ontario especially, Premier Thatcher was heading to the United States to tell American businessmen that, so far as he was concerned and Saskatchewan was concerned, they were welcome in Canada as good corporate citizens.

Mr. Benjamin: And the people threw him out.

Mr. Badanai: The ultra nationalists and socialists do not like voices of people like the late Ross Thatcher or of the premier of Quebec.

Mr. Benjamin: The people do not, either.

Mr. Badanai: However, those people living in areas where large amounts of capital are needed to provide jobs and improve living standards will be happy. The people of northwestern Ontario, where I come from, need more capital. They do not care where it comes from since it is needed to provide jobs for the people of our province.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, although I have the utmost respect for the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), the kind of speech which he has just made is the kind which is calculated to give me heartburn. His is the kind of counsel this country has followed since the death of the great nation builders, the last of whom was Laurier. Since then we have followed that kind of cautious philosophy. We have lacked confidence in ourselves as Canadians and in our abilities to develop this nation ourselves. We have followed the hon. member's kind of advice, with the result that, today, our sovereignty and independence are jeopardized. That is what the hon. member's philosophy has brought about in this country, and that is the kind of philosophy this party rejects out of hand. His is the kind of philosophy which makes the simple-minded assumption that we need foreign capital to help to develop this country, that foreign capital was absolutely necessary for the development of this country, and it ignores the possibility that, if we had mobilized our resources as Canadians, foreign capital would not have been needed in this country because we could have achieved exactly the same growth on our own.

I think it is important to take a moment or two to consider why we are undertaking a debate of this sort, and why this kind of legislation is before the House. This legislation is before this House because there is a growing concern on the part of Canadians that our sovereignty and independence, which are necessary to develop Canada according to the particular genius of the Canadian people, stand in jeopardy. Because they stand in jeopardy, our nationhood stands in jeopardy.

• (1540)

We are discussing the idea of foreign ownership because some of us believe that there is a capacity and capability within Canada to develop a unique and highly valuable society, one which can be a model for the world. In attempting to achieve the goal of development in Canada and in assigning goals for ourselves as Canadians in the past we have been very limited. Our goals have been restricted largely to growth and prosperity. In order to achieve those goals, we have sought the aid of others without first examining whether we had the resources ourselves to undertake that kind of development. In seeking the assistance of others, I believe that what we have done has been to actually reduce our capacity to achieve the greatness which is the potential of Canada.

In line with that statement, I would like to draw to the attention of the House some words of a Canadian historian of considerable worth, Professor Donald Creighton. Writing in MacLeans Magazine of November, 1971, he said:

> The truth is that Canadians, in accepting American capital, American management and American technology, have unwittingly received the spirit that animates all three. They have not only become subjects of the American continental empire, but they have also become converts to its characteristic philosophy of life, to what might legitimately be called its religion. The central doctrine of this religion is a belief that progress is the only good in life and that progress means a liberation of man for the progressive conquest of nature by technology. . . .
> This new doctrine (the doctrine of continual economic growth) has captured the minds of Canadians, just as it has those of every other people in the western world. To achieve economic growth, they are prepared to sacrifice their independence, pillage their natural resources, contaminate their environment and endure all the hideous evils of modern industrialization and urbanization. The American empire is taking over the birthright of Canadians; and its imperial religion has taken over their minds.

That is a pretty strong statement, but I think it is accurate in its particulars. It indicates one major way in which foreign ownership limits our capacity to develop as a nation, a way in which it has not assisted, but limited our capacity to develop as a nation and to realize our potential as Canadians. That point is a bit philosophical and because it is philosophical, it may not carry too much weight with members opposite, such as the member for Fort William who spoke before me. However, there are some extremely practical considerations which indicate that foreign capital, in the amounts we have it in Canada, is also very dangerous for the development of this country.

Let me just mention one of hundreds of examples which come to mind. The concern to which I will devote a moment or two is that of unemployment, a phenomenon often brought to the attention to those of us in this House, through public opinion polls, as being one of the major concerns of Canadians. Our inability to provide jobs for our citizens is related in many ways to the question of foreign ownership. Foreign ownership exists in massive proportions in Canada. Our economy has more foreign ownership and control than that of any developed nation in the world. It is dangerous and undesirable. It contributes directly to our inability to create jobs for our people, in other words, to the amount of unemployment we are suffering at the moment. It does this in a number of ways.

First, foreign ownership means a branch plant economy. That means that key decisions are being made in board rooms outside this country in relation to considerations totally unrelated to economic realities and social needs in Canada. Thus, the American DISC legislation will quite conceivably result in production cutbacks and plant closures in Canada. Canadian workers will be thrown out of jobs, not because their work is unsatisfactory, not because they have not been sufficiently productive or because there is no market potential for the products they manufacture, but simply because the companies concerned can make a greater profit by expanding production in the United States and taking advantage of the tax cut which the DISC program represents. That is one way in which foreign ownership can adversely affect our ability to provide jobs for Canadians.

Foreign ownership contributes to unemployment by the export of jobs. Multinational corporations come to Canada to purchase and exploit our natural resources to supply the needs of their already existing manufacturing facilities elsewhere in the world. Thus our resources are exported in the rawest state possible and along with them thousands of potential jobs in the manufacturing and service industries.

The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), a member of the party opposite, estimates that $1 billion worth of exports of manufactured goods contains about $230 million in salaries and wages, whereas $1 billion in export resources pays only about $68 million in salaries and wages, and that is jobs. If we continue on our present path, the Science Council of Canada warns, and I quote:

> Canada's economy in this decade will increasingly become dependent upon the resource and service industries. Resource industries offer limited opportunities for employment; furthermore much of their profit does not remain in Canada. The funneling of funds out of the country is likely to stunt the growth of our service industries . . .
> Our participation in international trade will become less and less significant and we will become, once again, mainly suppliers of raw materials to the North American continent.

The Science Council of Canada has argued that our present course can result in the stunting of growth in our service industries, the most labour intensive of all industries in this country. It can produce a declining participation by Canada in international trade, another area in which jobs are produced. What does that do to our prospects for employment? I am not arguing that this whole problem can be attributed to the fact that our resource industries are largely foreign owned, but foreign ownership is certainly one of the most significant factors in the kind of structural employment we have in Canada.

A third way in which foreign control of the economy contributes to the lack of employment opportunities once again relates to the branch plant nature of economic development in such circumstances. Research and development of significant importance, with its attendant employment potential, both directly and through spin-off is almost never assigned to the branch plant, but remains with the parent company. Moreover, the branch plant introduces inefficiencies into production, increasing per unit cost and decreasing the export potential of our production.

For example, Canada produces for a domestic market of 22 million people almost as many different brand names and model lines of television as does the United States with a domestic market of over 200 million. That is a direct result of branch plant development in Canada. It makes no economic sense at all. Were our economy not branch plant in nature, we would probably produce fewer models and have longer production runs, thereby reducing per unit costs and making our product more competitive within the domestic market and in world markets.

These are some of the ways in which foreign ownership directly contributes to our inability to meet the Canadian peoples' needs for jobs, the way it contributes to the most critical, in human terms, of all Canada's problems, unemployment. That is one of hundreds of examples of the kind of disadvantages which result from the degree of foreign ownership which exists in the Canadian economy.

At its founding convention in 1961, the New Democratic Party sounded a warning to this country about the dangers which the increasing foreign ownership of our economy posed to our independence and sovereignty. When we were not ignored, we were denounced as being anti-American, falsely reviled as wishing to cut off the foreign capital which was erroneously believed to be the life blood of our nation, or laughed at as being hopelessly idealistic.

In 1968, the Watkins Report, commissioned by the government, said substantially the same things as we had been saying, and supplied statistical data to back up those assertions. It also warned us that about 15 years were left in which to set our house in order, to attempt to reverse the trend toward increasing foreign ownership, or it would be too late. The government ignored that report. But in the last two or three years, concern among the general public about our future as a nation should we do nothing about foreign ownership, has grown, and economic nationalism has become respectable, as the hon. member for Fort William has said. I do not consider this to be something undesirable, as he seemed to think, though. The Toronto Star backs economic nationalism. MacLean's Magazine backs it. The Committee for an Independent Canada has been formed. Now that the cause is respectable, the Conservative and Liberal parties have embraced it with open arms—or perhaps I should say with open mouths. For the last two years, the government has been promising immediate and effective action on foreign ownership. We have waited impatiently to see this policy revealed.

On Tuesday, May 8, at 5 p.m. the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) rose in his place in the House of Commons and unveiled the government's policy on foreign ownership. I listened initially with stunned disbelief and then, increasingly, with anger because the policy on foreign takeovers, together with the proposed legislation, was nothing but a sham and a hoax, a cynical effort to defuse the issue of economic nationalism before an election was called—nothing more, and nothing less. What we heard was not a policy to regulate and reduce foreign ownership of our economy. It was, rather, nothing more than a scheme for screening foreign takeovers of Canadian industries, and an unworkable scheme at that.

Boiled down to its essentials, and it doesn't take much boiling down, the legislation provides that each time a foreign-owned corporation wishes to purchase a Canadian firm possessing more than $250,000 in assets and doing more than $3 million in business, that fact must be reported to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The department is then, on the basis of criteria as yet undisclosed, to determine whether or not a takeover would be in the Canadian interest. If it is deemed to be in the Canadian interest, the deal can go through. If not, it can be stopped, though an appeal procedure is provided. That is the essence of the legislation. The half a loaf brigade, and there are many on the other side of the House, may say: Granted, it does not do much, but it does do something; it will prevent the takeover of Canadian firms by foreign corporations, and that is a gain. Anyone who takes this view is badly mistaken.

First, one should remember that the legislation is not designed to prevent takeovers as such, but only to prevent those which are not considered beneficial to Canada's interests, whatever that may mean. Second, the agency selected to determine whether or not a takeover is in the interest of Canada is not the independent screening agency advocated by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in its report on Canadian-United States relations, or by the Watkins Report. It is, rather, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the department which for the past decade and a half has been the major architect of placing Canada in the position of finding more of its economy foreign-owned than that of any other developed nation. Third, the minister whose responsibility it is to supervise the screening, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has stated categorically that the purpose of the legislation is not to restrict foreign investment but, rather, to ensure that Canadians derive greater benefit from it.

Mr. Pepin: I said "mainly"; read my speech again.

Mr. Rowland: The minister said, in effect, in a very charming way—I am paraphrasing: what I think will happen is that if we examine a deal and it does not seem to offer much to Canada we shall call the principals involved in the takeover together and tell them it does not offer very much, that we do not think highly of the deal. This having happened, rather than have the deal set aside, the principals will pull other cards out of their sleeves, and make additional offers.

Mr. Pepin: Read page 2634.

Mr. Rowland: I have done so.

Mr. Pepin: Well, read it again.

Mr. Rowland: When you look at the factors I have mentioned, is it any wonder that a United States businessman, informed about the provisions in this legislation, should have made the comment: Now, we can all roll over and go back to sleep.

I have dealt with some of the errors of commission in the legislation. The errors of omission are too numerous for them all to be mentioned individually, but it is important to note a few. First, the legislation contains no provision to deal with takeovers which may be arranged between the time the legislation was announced in the House and the time it becomes law. Moreover, spokesmen for the government have revealed in the House through their responses to questions that there is absolutely no intention of employing other means of restricting takeovers until the bill becomes law. So in the next few weeks, or months, however long it takes for this bill to become law, we can expect takeovers to be successfully negotiated at a highly accelerated rate.

Second, the legislation does not provide for the screening of new direct foreign investment in Canada, that is to say the establishment of new companies as opposed to the taking over of existing Canadian ones. Nor does it provide for the screening of projects to expand existing foreign-owned industry in Canada. These weaknesses and shortcomings were outlined in the Canadian Forum version of the Gray Report. The actual statements concerned were quoted by my leader in reply to the minister's statement on this subject. I shall not read the exchange now, but I refer hon. members to page 1831 of Hansard. That same report, as published in the Canadian Forum, said in one sentence what I am arguing in this regard right now. It said that failure to screen projects for expansion into new industries could lead to easy circumvention of the screening process. This is why, if the screening process is to work, it must not only deal with takeovers of existing Canadian firms but with the expansion of foreign corporations already established. Otherwise, the legislation can be easily circumvented. So the legislation before us is entirely useless, or, to put the best construction upon it, of very little use.

The fact is that the policy announced by the minister in this bill has nothing to do with the expansion of existing firms into new areas and new industries. It has nothing to do with direct foreign investment coming to Canada, and it does nothing to increase Canadian ownership in any of the areas with which we are concerned. In short, the legislation will not work even in the narrowly defined areas in which it is designed to operate.

Another error of omission is the government's failure to amend allied legislation to ensure that it complements the pitiful piece we have before us with the object of ensuring that the screening operation will work more effectively. If time permitted I could give a long list of legislation which requires amendment in order to make this bill work more effectively. One statute which requires amendment is the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, in accordance with which certain information is demanded in connected with the financial operations of corporations and unions. If the screening process is to be at all effective, a great deal more information will be needed about the financial operations of corporations involved in takeover deals. But no move has been made to strengthen the CALURA legislation to this end.

• (1600)

Another area of omission relates to the fact that if the screening agency does occasionally say no to a foreign takeover bid, it is obvious that some alternative purchaser will have to be found by Canadian industry. An obvious candidate for this role is the Canada Development Corporation. However, while the screening process will take into consideration the fate of companies with a mere $250,000 in assets, the Canada Development Corporation can only look at those with $1 million or more in assets. So, there is another little gap there.

When we on this side of the House asked whether legislation was going to be drafted to close this gap between the amount of assets established under the screening legislation and that under the Canada Development Corporation legislation, we were informed by the government that it had no plan to amend the Canada Development Corporation legislation. These kinds of omissions, and the government's failure to amend the legislation complementary to the bill that is now before the House, lead me to suggest that the screen that the government is holding up is so full of holes as to be totally useless. It is a big zero.

What action is needed to regain control of our economy? I think it would be worth while to spend a moment or two to reiterate some of the points made by my leader on December 9 in this House. He spoke about the problem of foreign ownership and referred to the minimal action that is required to be taken immediately to reduce or eliminate the current danger to our sovereignty and independence. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) put forward a ten point program before this legislation was introduced. First, he suggested the establishment of a screening or control agency with the power to limit takeovers and the further expansion of foreign ownership and control, including both expansion of existing foreign-owned companies in this country, and new direct foreign investment. The hon. member said that unless the agency has the power to limit further foreign expansion in Canada, it will be a toothless exercise. I suggest that is what we have here, a screening agency with no real power to be effective since it excludes so many of the safeguards that are important to a screening process.

Second, the hon. member for York South recommended the revamping of the Canada Development Corporation to meet the need for an alternate source of investment capital. Investment funds could be drawn, he said, from the reserves of financial and other corporations as well as from voluntary investment by individual Canadian citizens. He said that that was one means of obtaining from within Canada the capital which many people argue we must obtain outside the country.

The third point he made was that the Canada Development Corporation should be given a mandate to invest in new industrial development as well as to buy existing multinational corporations. There is a huge gap in Canadian industrial policy. The government has been unable to respond to the need for capitalization by those Canadians who have discovered new technology. Because the government has not had legislation to enable it to respond to such need for development capital, many of these people have been forced to go south of the border to find that capital, and as a result we have lost the technology. The Canada Development Corporation is the logical place to find this sort of capital, and therefore the legislation should be amended to ensure that the CDC is capable of supplying it.

The fourth point made by the hon. member was that the Canada Development Corporation should be authorized to engage in heavy expenditure on research and development.

The fifth point my leader made on December 9 was the need for the Canada Development Corporation to expand the public sector of the Canadian economy. It is the public sector, we can be absolutely sure, that will not fall into foreign hands.

He advocated as a sixth point, a program of rationalization and specialization in Canadian manufacturing, both to meet more of Canada's domestic needs and to change trading patterns away from a single, predominant market.

His seventh point was the immediate establishment of a government export agency with power to ensure that all corporations in Canada promote trade in accordance with Canadian law and policies, and that they do not submit to foreign laws and policies. We have had a number of examples of the need for this kind of trading corporation in the past. I recall an order being placed by the Soviet Union in Canada for the purchase of flour destined for Cuba. Some of the milling companies that tendered to supply this flour under contract eventually backed out because they were United States subsidiary plants and were afraid of the effect that their engaging in this contract would have on their parent company under the provisions of the U.S. trading with the enemy act. Another example was when the People's Republic of China attempted to buy Ford trucks and parts from Canada. It was the fear of the effect of the U.S. trading with the enemy act on the parent company which prevented the Canadian subsidiary from meeting that export order.

The hon. member for York South advocated as an eighth measure, which is required immediately to eliminate or reduce the danger to our sovereignty that is inherent in foreign control of our economy, the establishment, in co-operation with the provinces, of standards of resource planning and development, and requiring the processing of raw materials in Canada.

He advocated as his ninth point increasing public investment in resource industries, through public ownership or through joint participation with private corporations, as the most effective way of regaining control of our energy and mineral resources which are now mainly in the hands of multinational corporations and world cartels.

Finally, the hon. member advocated a policy that requires full disclosure of facts before any shutdown of a plant is authorized, so the government could take over plants threatened with shutdowns when their operations are economically sound and socially useful. We all recall what happened at the steel plant at Sydney, Nova Scotia. A multinational corporation decided it was no longer in its interests to keep this plant open and was quite willing to see hundreds of men in Canada thrown out of work. Such an event was of no concern to it. Then, the government took over the plant and made a profit in the first year of operation.

These are some of the steps that we on this side of the House contend are necessary to regain some modicum of control over our economy, and to guarantee that our sovereignty and independence will no longer be threatened as they are now. I have put forward what is a minimal program. I have recited ten specific points for action. Only one of these has been acted on by the government in its so-called policy of economic nationalization, and this is the establishment of a screening agency to screen transactions that involve only about 20 per cent at most of foreign investment in this country.

What is needed is for the government to take the kind of action that my leader advocated on December 9. This must be done if we are to keep Canada Canadian. But in response to the expressed concern on the part of Canadians over foreign ownership of our economy, the government has brought forward a bill that is inadequate in every sense, one that does not even do what is stated to be its express purpose. Certainly, it does not touch on the problem of expanding the percentage of Canadian ownership of our economy, and this gap in the legislation demonstrates conclusively that this government is derelict in its duty to protect Canada's sovereignty. The protection of Canada's sovereignty does not involve only the use of military forces. It also involves the use of economic policy. In the use of economic policy, the government is derelict in its duty.

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this takeover bill which we are now debating is to make sure that no takeover of a Canadian business by a foreign investor will be permitted unless it can be established that it is clearly in the national interest. In recent years it has been clearly established that the number of takeovers of Canadian businesses by foreign investors has been so large as to arouse legitimate concern on the part of Canadians. There is no clear evidence that the number of such takeovers is decreasing, despite the fact that in recent years Canadians have been accumulating large quantities of investment capital which could be used for investment in Canada. Much of it is going abroad. Some of the takeovers which have taken place no doubt are desirable from the Canadian point of view, but others have not been desirable. As members of this House know, it has been necessary for the government to intervene without the benefit of enabling legislation to stop important takeovers. I refer specifically to the proposed takeover of Denison Mines and the proposed takeover of Home Oil. This method of control has been embarrassing and unfair to the government and to Canadian owners, as well as to the proposed purchasers of the businesses. It therefore makes good sense to have enabling legislation which will prevent takeovers unless they can be clearly established to be in the national interest. It is also probably desirable to make sure that there should not be an outright prohibition of all takeovers but only those takeovers which in fact do not help Canada.

The bill before us seems to be carefully drafted. No doubt there will be questions with regard to details which can be raised in committee, and no doubt there are a number of amendments which usefully could be made. The principle, however, of having enabling legislation to regulate takeovers of Canadian business by foreign owners is sound. It is not all radical. Most industrial countries have established such procedures. Because of the high degree of foreign ownership of Canadian industry, the need in Canada for such legislation is greater than in most countries. Indeed, legislation of this type is long overdue.

I support this legislation as one phase in the evolution of a truly comprehensive national policy with regard to foreign investment and foreign ownership. The problem I have is not with regard to this particular bill. The problem is that this bill does not constitute a comprehensive policy concerning foreign investment and foreign ownership. It does not constitute the comprehensive policy with regard to foreign ownership and foreign investment which members of this House and members of the public generally have been expecting for so many years.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Brewin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Wahn: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Brewin: The hon. member was quoted in the press a few days ago as having said that this legislation was a baby step and would not halt foreign takeovers. He said it would be largely ineffective. Was he correctly quoted? Is that his view of this bill?

Mr. Wahn: That is a reasonably correct quotation. As I have said, I support this bill but only as one step, a small step, in the development of a comprehensive policy in respect of the foreign investment and foreign ownership, a baby step if you like.

Mr. Brewin: And ineffective.

Mr. Wahn: I will suggest certain amendments which would improve the effectiveness of this legislation if the hon. member for Greenwood will permit me to continue. The Watkins Report on the structure of Canadian industry was published more than four years ago. The report of the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence was published in August 1970, and all of us have been expecting an official government statement on foreign investment and foreign ownership since that time. This bill is good as far as it goes, but it does not represent the comprehensive statement of policy which we have been expecting. My remarks will deal primarily with such a policy.

I would like to make a very clear distinction between foreign investment and foreign ownership. I believe Canadians should continue to welcome foreign investment which will be of benefit to Canada and in the national interest; but I believe we should not welcome any further increase in the percentage of foreign ownership in the two vital sectors of manufacturing and resources, which now are more than 60 per cent owned outside the country. In debating the question of foreign investment, most of the arguments miss this important distinction. I have heard many people, including members in this House declare "In my area we need more capital to create more employment. It does not matter to us whether it is Canadian capital or foreign capital, so long as the foreign investors behave like good Canadian citizens. So far as we are concerned, the only thing wrong with foreign investment is that there is not enough of it." This usually goes along with an assertion that southern Ontario got a head start, that it now has all the foreign capital it needs and is just trying to protect its position by preventing other areas of Canada, such as Quebec, the Atlantic provinces and the western provinces, from getting their share.

These arguments miss the point entirely. No responsible Canadian suggests we should prohibit foreign investment, but we do insist that we have a real problem in Canada because of the excessive degree of foreign ownership and control over our basic manufacturing and resource industries. We do insist that in order to prevent this problem becoming more serious, and in order to direct as far as possible new foreign investment to areas where it is really needed, it is necessary to regulate, but not to prohibit, foreign investment. I ask this question of those who put forward these arguments. If foreign investment has gone into southern Ontario, Montreal, Toronto and the St. Lawrence basin in the first 100 years of our history, what makes them think that things will be any different in the next 100 years, if we do not adopt some sensible rules in respect of foreign investment? Investment will still continue to go to the same places. Cities like Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver will continue to grow out of all proportion to the rest of the country. Toronto may grow to a population of six million people. Who wants that? Certainly, few people from the city of Toronto want that. So, legislation is required which will help direct new foreign capital to regions which need it most and away from the regions which no longer want it. That is really what we are suggesting.

Another related argument, which has been put forward often, is that we cannot possibly develop our manufacturing and resource industries without assistance from abroad; that we do not have the necessary technological ability, know-how or intelligence to do this. What a despairing attitude that is! What a lack of self-confidence it reflects and what a commentary upon Canadians who make such an argument! What a craven fear they must have for our future? Great resource industries have been developed by Canadians with Canadian capital despite the fact that the majority of these industries are now owned by foreign corporations. Businesses of every kind have been built in Canada without the necessity of turning over the ownership of these businesses to foreign investors. What has been done in the past can be done in the future.

Our great banking system has been built up not with foreign capital and not with assistance from abroad. It has been built up by Canadians with Canadian capital. Does anyone suggest that the banks do not have access to capital? They do pretty well, but nevertheless for some reason which I cannot understand every banker I meet tells me that it is almost impossible to develop sound manufacturing and resource industries in Canada without capital from abroad. I say to them: are the banks not efficient; don't they work well? Do they not have branches abroad doing a good job? They say: yes. I say: what makes you think that Canadian owners of manufacturing and resource industries are less able than you? They cannot answer that argument: no one can answer that argument. Canadians are just as capable of building up their industries as are Americans or any other foreign owners.

What are the actual facts? The Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence went into the whole question quite exhaustively in 1969 and 1970 and published its eleventh report in August, 1970. Certain basic facts were clearly established in this report. The Canadian economy can be divided into ten great sectors. These are agriculture, forestry, fishing and trapping, mining, manufacturing, construction, transportation and public utilities, wholesale and retail trade, finance and services. Based upon 1967 figures which were the latest available at that time, all of these sectors were under majority Canadian ownership and control with the exception of two very large and very important sectors. These were the manufacturing sector and the resource sector, including mining and petroleum. In 1967 both these sectors were about 60 per cent owned by foreign investors, mostly from the United States.

Only two of the ten great sectors of the Canadian economy are under foreign control. But the danger is much greater than that statement would indicate. These two sectors are very large, and central to our entire economy. Other sectors which are Canadian owned, such as finance, services, trade, transportation, public utilities and construction, are closely related to and depend upon the two foreign controlled sectors. The remaining three Canadian owned sectors, agriculture, forestry, and fishing and trapping, are smaller relatively in total assets, provide fewer jobs, and have gradually become less important in our economy.

As has been stated in the House time and time again, the fact is that no other developed country in the world has so much of its economy foreign-owned as does Canada. I emphasize also that most of this foreign ownership is concentrated in the United States. I say this not out of any feeling of anti-Americanism but to emphasize that it is particularly important because of the closeness of our other relations with that country. We are close neighbours; we are influenced, sometimes almost overwhelmed, by cultural influences from the United States. American unions are dominant in Canada. We have joint military arrangements, and two thirds of our imports come from the United States and two thirds of our exports go to that country. Our educational institutions are rather similar. The high concentration of American investment and ownership in our economy is only one of a large number of factors which may, if we are not careful, make us unduly dependent upon the United States and may stunt our national development.

Some Canadians say "so what? What is the danger in this?" One answer can be drawn from history. Throughout recorded history, excessive absentee ownership has had evil results, not only for the dependent state but also for the absentee owners. The President of the United States, speaking in this chamber, made this very point. But surely it should not have been necessary that that point be made by the President of the United States in this House. Surely, every member should have accepted it long before he appeared before us. The President of the United States pointed out that in its early years his country also was dependent upon European capital, but that it had adopted policies to develop its own industries and to safeguard its own independence. He pointed out that his countrymen realize that Canada must do the same. The American government does not want a satellite Canada; the American government wants a strong, friendly and independent Canada. This was the very conclusion reached by our committee in its 1970 report.

In addition to this lesson from history, certain specific dangers are clear. If American ownership of our vital manufacturing and resource sectors continues to increase, the result, bearing in mind the closeness of all our other relations with the United States, will inevitably be a high degree of integration of the Canadian economy with the American economy. This is not similar to one country joining other countries of roughly equal size in a common market. This would not be similar to the United Kingdom joining Europe in the Common Market. The American economy is about 12 times as large and powerful as ours. If we have integration of the Canadian and the American economies, this will mean that, in effect, the Canadian economy will become part of the continental American economy. The result of this will be that Canadians will not be able to retain a reasonable degree of control over their economic destiny. This is of prime importance to Canadians. Canadians want to have jobs; they want to be able to earn enough by their own efforts to support themselves, their wives and their families, and all that depends upon the economy. Canadians want to control their own economy, they do not want their economy and their jobs controlled by large multinational corporations or by impersonal forces operating from another country, no matter how benevolent and friendly that other country may be.

If the Canadian economy becomes part of the American economy, it will mean that our economy will inevitably move up and down with the American economy. If the United States suffers deflation, we will suffer deflation. If the United States suffers inflation, we will suffer inflation. If the United States suffers from unemployment, we will suffer from unemployment, and there will be nothing that this Parliament can do about it. If some members say "So what's new? We can't now" I say that it is time for a change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wahn: We may have already become too dependent upon the American economy, and in that event it is time for a change in our policies. It is time to develop a greater degree of Canadian independence, a greater degree of control over our own economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wahn: I hope I have explained adequately that I was emphasizing the necessity for a change in the policies governing the operations of our economy.

Mr. Fairweather: Same thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wahn: Our committee made that point in its report when it said:

> The danger facing Canada is not one of political absorption by the United States; the danger which Canada must guard against is that it will drift into such a position of dependency in relation to the United States that it will be unable in practice to adopt policies displeasing to the United States because of the fear of American reaction which would involve consequences unacceptable to Canadians—
> The committee has concluded that, in addition to maintaining political independence, Canada must also maintain a sufficient degree of military, economic and cultural independence so that it will, in practice, be able to make the independent decisions which constitute the vital characteristic of an independent nation.

If we do not retain a reasonable degree of economic independence, I have no doubt we will continue to maintain the appearance of political independence. The provincial legislatures will continue to meet and debate in the provinces; this House will continue to meet and debate here and no doubt will continue to pass laws. But the vital economic decisions affecting the average Canadian will not be taken in this House or in the provincial legislatures but at meetings and by institutions controlled beyond our own borders. That is the real importance of this debate. There is a real danger here, and that is why it is urgent that we should have a clear statement of government policy on foreign investment and foreign ownership and control.

I believe that most Canadians would support the bill now before us if they could be assured that it is merely one measure in an evolving program to assure Canadians of effective control of their own economic environment, one of a number of measures such as the legislation now in place relating to banks, insurance companies, trust companies, the National Transportation Commission, the CRTC, the Canada Development Corporation, and many others. But Canadians will feel nothing but dismay if the government puts this measure forward as its final statement of policy in this field.

This particular bill has been presented by the government in response to the demand by members of the House, and by Canadians generally, over an extended period of time for a comprehensive statement of policy on foreign ownership. There is a real possibility, therefore, of misunderstanding. To avoid this danger, it is most important that the government indicate clearly that this particular bill is in fact merely one measure in such a continuing program to regain control of our economy. If this is true, then this fact should be stated clearly in this bill.

Mr. Pepin: That was in the very first paragraph of my speech.

Mr. Wahn: The first paragraph is very useful because it does recognize, as the minister has indicated, that there is a problem. That certainly is a real advance, but it is not the end.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wahn: The bill also indicates that there is a problem, but what we are asking for is a statement of policy with regard to solutions. With the greatest deference and respect to the minister, I suggest that this could be very clearly established by adding a preamble to the bill, as was done with the National Transportation Act, which would set out clearly the policy of the government. I suggest that this preamble should, in effect, state that the government recognizes there is a problem associated with excessive ownership of vital sectors of the Canadian economy by foreign owners. This, as the minister has said, is indicated in clause 2, of the bill, so I am not asking for very much.

The preamble should go on to state that action must be taken with care in order to be fair to foreign investors, and to prevent loss of jobs and hardship for Canadians, that one of the most pressing problems, and one of the easiest to deal with immediately is the problem of takeovers, and accordingly this bill has been introduced to deal with this specific problem. However, other measures will be introduced promptly as required to ensure effective Canadian control of the Canadian economy, and to maintain a reasonable degree of economic independence. This is the basic requirement, as I see it. But I suggest two additional changes. To make the takeover legislation effective, new foreign investment should also be subject to regulation by the takeover branch. The necessity for this is clearly explained in the studies entitled "Foreign Direct Investment in Canada" recently published by the government of Canada.

The final requirement, which I would suggest, is to establish a knowledgeable and authoritative group, or agency, or branch, or department, or whatever you wish to call it, to make continuing studies on the subject of Canadian economic independence, and to make policy recommendations to the government with regard to further new measures which would form part of this continuing and evolving program for Canadian economic independence. At the present time we do not have sufficient information on this subject to make wise decisions. We do not really know for sure whether the danger of economic dependence upon the United States is decreasing or increasing. We know we want to be independent. We know we want a reasonable degree of control over our own destiny, but we do not know the best way of achieving this. It is essential that there should be a continuing organization which can do the necessary research, and help to develop policies for consideration by government.

In the past, this House has enacted one piece of legislation here, another piece of legislation there. The problem is too serious and the need too urgent to proceed in this way any longer. We must have continuing study, continuing policy recommendations, and continuing improvements in our program. At the present time some work in this field is done by a branch of Statistics Canada and some by a branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The work should be co-ordinated. The group responsible should be of the highest ability to match the importance of the problem, and the policies recommended by the group should be given serious consideration by the responsible minister and by the government.

It is entirely clear that Canadians are determined to maintain a reasonable degree of independence in an interdependent world. They are concerned about our increasing dependence upon the United States. Many are not sure whether or not that is a real danger, but after the many years of study by various committees they are looking to this government for more than this specific bill on takeovers. They want to know where we have been and where we are going. They want a sense of purpose. They want a clear policy lead from the government.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the preceding speech flows from receipt of a certain telegram that some of us got yesterday, because certainly something seems to have happened over there. First of all, I must say that so far as my particular area is concerned, there does not appear to be any consensus with respect to the matter of foreign investment or foreign ownership of business and industry in Canada. If a person took the preceding speaker's thoughts as gospel he would be left with the feeling that there was no question about that in this country, and that it was a major national concern to everybody who had given the slightest bit of thought to the problem. I suggest that at least in one small part of the country this is not the case.

I have to admit that feeling is divided in my area. Actually, it is evenly divided. Prior to the Easter recess I sent out a questionnaire to the householders in my area. One of the questions asked was, "Do you feel that the government should take action to restrict foreign investment in Canada?" The response was evenly divided, and I give it from a sample of 4,600 questionnaires that were returned. Exactly 45 per cent felt there should be restriction on foreign investment, exactly 45 per cent felt there should be no restriction, and 10 per cent were undecided. Not everybody in the country feels that the matter is of national importance.

I agree that there is a feeling abroad in this land that some of our laws are not being properly enforced to give Canadians their rightful place in the development of the their own country. However, I do not think there is any genuine feeling abroad that would justify the remarks of members of the New Democratic party, who suggest the problem has reached such crisis proportions that the only solution is for the government to step in and take over the entire industry and economy of the nation.

The bill before us provides for proposed takeovers to be submitted to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) in respect of public corporations, that is, corporations whose shares are publicly traded, when a takeover involves 5 per cent or more of the issued capital, and in respect of private companies when a takeover involves shares consisting of 20 per cent or more of the issued capital. I am somewhat concerned about the position of the government when one considers that at present it is the 100 per cent owner of all the shares in the Canada Development Corporation. I feel there could be a conflict of interest with the government of Canada considering whether to approve a certain takeover of an existing Canadian business when it also has the interests of the Canadian Development Corporation at heart.

• (1640)

A great deal of information concerning the shares and the business involved will be the property of the federal government for some 90 days. The government would then be in a position to say that it might be more suitable if the Canada Development Corporation paid the price that had been agreed upon or slightly more. In this way, that organization would be allowed to have an inordinate amount of influence on the business of the country. The government is moving in this direction already. One of the largest companies engaged in the exploration for oil and gas in the Arctic is Panarctic Oils, and the government owns 45 per cent of that company. This government appears to have a continuing interest in getting into the day to day business activities of the country. It is very important to remember, in a country the size of ours, that our industries have connections with others in the world at large because of our limited domestic market. We cannot take an insular view here because we must have those connections in order to get the best results. There is also the question of technology. In many instances, it is imperative that some foreign element be involved in our business undertakings in order that we may reap the benefit of technology that has been developed abroad.

One thing that concerns me about this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that it might be subject to the same kind of treatment that has been extended to applicants for regional expansion grants. These applicants do not appear to me to have been dealt with in a fair and equitable manner in all parts of the country. It is quite obvious that the bulk of the money has gone to the province of Quebec, and I would say that probably even within that province the bulk has gone to the St. Lawrence Valley. The same attitude towards takeovers would not be conducive to the development of strong, viable businesses in the more remote areas of the country.

This bill enjoys the short title, Mr. Speaker, "Foreign Takeovers Review Act". It is the hallmark of this "Looking Glass" government that what it gives to us is the reverse image of what it promised us. This bill would be more appropriately entitled the "Provincial Powers Takeover Bill". I feel that there is a very strong constitutional weakness in this bill. It deals primarily with shares of incorporated companies because most of the undertakings to which it will be relate will be incorporated. I will have something to say about what I think the proper attitude of the government should be later on, but I am going to deal with some of the weaknesses at this point.

This bill represents another addition to the long list of power grabs—some defeated, some successful—by this government from the provinces and from the private sector. We can add it to the original investment companies bill which would have enabled this government to seize control over the investment of $13 billion annually from private business and to shift investment from one province to another to suit its political whim. Fortunately, that bill was emasculated in the Senate. We can add it to the new Unemployment Insurance Act which went a long way towards seizing provincial power over social welfare. We can add it to the direct payment of federal taxes to individuals and corporations under the Family Income Security Plan, the Local Initiatives Program, the Opportunities for Youth, the Company of Young Canadians, regional incentives grants and a variety of other giveaways.

These constitutional violations of Section 92(7) of the British North America Act which gives the provinces exclusive legislative power over social welfare, are justified under the so-called "spending power" of the federal government. The existence of that constitutional power was denied by the Privy Council, the Supreme Court of Canada, and by that eminent constitutional authority who now heads the government of Canada. The curt dismissals of that power by the Privy Council and the Supreme Court remain unchallenged by any later decisions. The statement by the constitutional authority—now our head of government—is classic in phrasing and farsighted in its analysis of the effect the spending power, if used, would have. In 1961, Pierre Elliott Trudeau said, in a paper titled "The Practice and Theory of Federalism", which he contributed to "Social Purpose for Canada":

> Indeed, the federal "spending power" or so-called "power of the purse" is presently being construed as a federal right to decide (at taxpayers' expense) whether provincial governments are properly exercising any and every right they hold under the constitution.

In a note to this statement, Mr. Trudeau comments:

> In a brilliant chapter published in A.R.M. Lower, F.R. Scott et al, Evolving Canadian Federalism, Durham, North Carolina, 1958, Professor Corry finds it "extraordinary that no one has challenged the constitutionality of the assumed spending power before the Supreme Court" (p. 119). I share his wonderment; but I find it even more extraordinary that political scientists fail to see the eroding effect that the power of the purse will have on Canadian democracy if the present construction continues to prevail, and in particular what chaos will result if provincial governments borrow federal logic and begin using their own power of the purse to meddle in federal affairs.

• (1650)

Eleven years after this article appeared in print, that constitutional authority has taken the Canadian constitution a long way down the road to erosion. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is taking another step with this bill, although not by use of the so-called spending power. This time he is taking a large-sized bite out of the exclusive legislative power of the provinces over property and civil rights.

The second reading stage, Mr. Speaker, is not the time to discuss the clauses of this bill or to point out the violations of provincial powers, one by one. Nor am I interested in hearing denials from the minister who occupies the once proud and prestigious post of Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada. Notwithstanding the pride of place that that position once held among Canadian lawyers, its pride and prestige have been eroded, just as surely as provincial powers have been eroded, with the publications by a former occupant, of the position of a so-called constitutional paper entitled, "Federal Provincial Grants and the Spending Power of Parliament".

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I feel that one of the big weaknesses of the present legislation is its failure to attempt a selective approach, since there are big differences in the types of investment to which foreign or other dollars are directed. Many have commented that the resource industry is largely foreign controlled. I suggest the reason is that Canadians do not want to invest money in that area. Our resources are there and must be developed. We, in Alberta, would like conditions to be different. Like it or not, there is a good and viable petroleum and natural gas industry in the province, and there are large, undeveloped petroleum resources in the tar sands. We might wish our economy were totally devoted to manufacturing. It is not. Those resources are there, and are crying to be developed. The industry remains a high risk industry, and returns on invested capital are not necessarily high.

May I now quote part of a speech given by Mr. A. H. Ross, President of Western Decalta Petroleum Limited, in Ottawa on May 3. After asking if the petroleum industry is profitable, he said:

> Recently, the annual reports of various oil companies have been published which indicated new highs for sales, cash flow and net income. What you never read in the newspapers is what happens to the money. Of the 74 companies listed as oil stocks on the Toronto Stock Exchange, 2 (3 per cent) paid dividends on their common shares in 1971, and the yield provided by these dividends was 2.3 per cent. For the 20 companies which are essentially oil and gas producers but which are listed as industrials on the Toronto Stock Exchange and which include the larger producers and refiners, 12 (60 per cent) paid dividends in 1971. These dividends provided an average yield of 2.2 per cent—not what could be called high. The other eight companies paid no dividends. The moneys generated by the industry are going and have gone in the past, to pay back debt and for further investment in the business.

He said that his company has operated for more than 20 years in Canada, has not paid a dividend in that period and that its indebtedness is growing every year. He continued:

> Another way to look at the profitability of the industry is to look at the return on invested capital, recognizing it is a risky industry, and compare this return to the industry elsewhere and to other industries. In Canada, for the years 1962 to 1968, the average rate of return for oil and gas producers on total invested capital was 8.1 per cent. Gulf Oil Canada Limited recently reported they earned 7.1 per cent on equity capital in 1971. In the United States, the rate of return on total invested capital for oil and gas producers for this period was 12.4 per cent. Now comparing this return, on the same basis, to manufacturing companies, their return in Canada for the same period was 9.9 per cent. The Canadian industry has not been profitable by either standard. Unquestionably, the glamour of the frontier areas has tended to lure investors to the industry, but as $2 million after $2 million goes into dry holes, and it becomes apparent that even a discovery will be long delayed in going to market and thereby generating any spendable cash, the stars in their eyes will dull and the Canadian industry will have to perform by earning an adequate rate of return. With the size of investment required, the day of reckoning is not too far off.

Clearly, if there is to be enough domestic capital for investment, we must make it easier for foreign capital to enter high rish areas. Also, the matter of jobs has been mentioned frequently in this debate. That question seems to be of prime concern for the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) who, while still retaining membership in the Liberal caucus, appears to find it more profitable to work for the democratic party in Manitoba, in that he seems to agree with that party's thinking in this area as expressed by the party spokesman in this debate. The thrust of that party's ideas is that we should not invest money in resource areas, because those areas of the economy produce few jobs. The experience of Alberta in this regard is interesting, to say the least. May I quote another part of Mr. Ross's speech which comes under the heading, "The Oil Industry is Highly Capital Intensive—Providing Few Jobs". Having asked the question implicit in that heading, he said:

> This economic argument has been put out for quite some time but more vocally lately. Perhaps it is time we took a look at the oil industry as it affects the economy of Canada. Unfortunately, at this time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member at this time.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40 to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Suggested increase in health resources fund to enable training of more general medical practitioners; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Consumer Affairs—Increase in cost of food—Request for investigation of cause; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Transport—Summerside, P.E.I. air services—Result of discussion with local representatives.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR PUBLICATION OF CONTRACTS FOR EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved that Bill C-19, respecting employment with the government of Canada not covered by the Public Service Employment Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-19 is a short bill and its purpose is simple, namely, to provide information to the public so that contracts for employment entered into by the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or other departments of government will be made known in the regular public manner by the publication each month of a list of such contracts in the Canada Gazette. I introduced this measure, not to be critical of the increase in the number of public servants or, indeed, in the number of people and organizations hired on contract by the offices of the Prime Minister, the Privy Council, any government department or government commission, but because I believe the public has a right to know who is being employed by the government of Canada for the people of Canada and for what purpose.

• (1700)

A good deal has been written and said about the increase in the number of civil servants, particularly the increase in staff in the offices of the Prime Minister and the Privy Council. In a study done by the research branch of the Library of Parliament, they summarized what is actually happening in both the office of the Prime Minister and the office of the Privy Council. They state:

As of October 1, 1971 there were 238 full-time employees in the Privy Council Office, which includes those on the Federal Provincial Secretariat and the Science Secretariat. Of this number, 157 are administrative and support staff. The total salary cost of the office, in terms of gross salary rates, is $2,452,660.

This is a very substantial increase compared to the size of this staff under other Prime Ministers. With regard to the Prime Minister's office, they state:

There are presently about 90 full-time staff members in this office including 39 stenographers and 21 clerical employees and messengers. The total salary cost of the Prime Minister's Office, in terms of gross annual salary rates, is $915,684.

This is not the time to be critical, and even if it were the time, I would not be critical of the very substantial increases which have taken place in the offices of the Prime Minister and the Privy Council. Government business has increased very substantially in recent years as the government has taken on increasing functions such as universal hospitalization, medical plans, increased pensions, services and the Canada Assistance Act, to name just a few. Obviously it requires more people to administer these programs.

I agree that the Prime Minister's office, which is the central and focal point of cabinet decision making, needs a staff to do the job. I do not object to that. I would support the expenditure of the money for this type of program. However, I am concerned about a very rapid escalation in any type of assistance given to the Prime Minister's office, the Privy Council office and various government departments about which we know a great deal less.

I refer to contracting by the Prime Minister's office, government departments, boards and commissions like the CBC or the CRTC, the St. Lawrence Seaway or any one of the hundreds of government agencies that contract specific projects and services. I am not critical of this practice. I am sure that problems frequently arise that need to be studied and the Prime Minister's office, a government department, a board or commission does not have the expert technical advisers which they need. It may be that they are needed only for a particular task or study. After that is over, that person is not required as a permanent civil servant.

I am aware of the fact that if a problem arises which needs study and if a government department, board, agency or the Prime Minister's office requires quick action, following the normal course of hiring through the civil service, which requires publication of a bulletin, the acceptance and study of applications to find the person that qualifies, can take months. Although I have not had much experience with this, I suppose it could take a year or more. I accept the fact that on occasion it is necessary to hire particular people on contract. The point I am trying to make, and which I have spelled out in my bill, is my belief that Members of Parliament, the press, radio, television and the general public are entitled to know who is being hired, for what purpose and their remuneration.

Let me give a couple of illustrations of the kind of information which I think is necessary. On October 8, 1970 I asked a series of questions about the Prime Minister's office and the Privy Council office. My questions were as follows:

1. Since July 1, 1968, what outside consultants, individuals or companies, have undertaken studies or provided assistance, etc., for (a) the Prime Minister's Office (b) the Privy Council Office?

2. For both the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council Office, what were the terms of reference for each consultant or individual providing assistance?

3. For both the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council Office, what was the remuneration received by each consultant?

Eventually, I got a partial list of the people and organizations involved. I was not satisfied because I knew of several people who were working and had not been listed. I communicated with the Prime Minister's office and was given the information. In one case, I was told that the person involved was listed in the Public Accounts as having been hired as a consultant through the Department of Justice. That does not bother me very much except that it makes it very difficult to get information which we ought to have. We should know precisely who the people are and for what purpose they have been hired.

In the answer which I got from the Prime Minister's office, which I appreciated, I was referred to a question placed on the order paper on the same day, October 8, 1970, by my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg). Although that question was of a similar nature, it asked for somewhat different information. The question reads as follows:

1. For the fiscal year 1969-70, what are the estimated expenditures for outside consultant studies for each federal government department, board, Crown corporation or agency?

2. For the fiscal year 1969-70 (a) what outside consultant studies have been undertaken or are presently in progress sponsored by each federal government department or agency (b) what is the cost for each outside consultant study (c) were contracts for these studies awarded by competitive tendering and, if not, for what reason?

The first answer which my colleague received referred only to the Prime Minister's office and the Privy Council office. It reads:

The total expenditure for professional and special services by the Privy Council Office during the fiscal year 1969-70 was $801,739. This amount includes the hiring of consultants and special staff for the Prime Minister's Office, Privy Council Office and task forces as outlined in Section 18 of the Public Accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970.

• (1710)

I do not know whether that $800,000 expended through the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council Office was near the average for each of the government departments, or whether it was more, or less, than they spent. I do not think that is important. Nor, as I said earlier, am I questioning the expenditure of this money. What I am saying is that we are spending, in the course of each year, millions of dollars on studies, and I believe the public is entitled to know who is working for the government, what their tasks are and what is the amount of their remuneration.

I present this bill, I think, in an objective manner. I hope it will not be taken as a criticism, or as an attack on the government. It seems to me that individual Members of Parliament, whether they sit on the opposition side or on the government side, should be as interested as I am in getting this kind of information. It seems to me this is information which every citizen has a right to possess. No person who is employed on a contractual basis as a consultant should be any more reluctant to have people know that he or she is working for the government, or for a particular department, than a person who is a full time civil servant. I do not intend to discuss today in any detail my feeling, as expressed on numerous occasions, that the public has a right to be given the results of studies carried out by people who work for the government, whether as full time civil servants or as individuals hired under contracts. The point I am making, and I shall not belabour it, is simply that the people of Canada have a right to know what the government is doing, who is working for government, under what terms and for what purpose. It seems to me this is a bill which ought to meet with the approval of all members of the House, and I hope it will receive favourable consideration.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for raising what is obviously a very important issue. He has done so in an unusual way by proposing an amendment to a public bill. The issue is an extremely relevant one, whether it is raised by way of amendment to a statute or as a philosophical argument about administrative secrecy—I suppose that is really the term one should use. I particularly admired the objective way in which the hon. member presented his argument. He did not use his motion as a basis for criticizing the size of the staff in the Privy Council Office, or attached to the office of the Prime Minister; rather, he contended that with the increases in its proportions the public surely had the right to know not only what these people are doing, but the results of their labour.

About a month ago the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates was considering the spending estimates of the Privy Council Office. Some of us were interested in the Legislative Secretariat which was doing, I am sure, admirable work. We could identify all the areas of research, but we had not seen the product. I believe that as members of Parliament we are entitled to see the results of studies which have been carried out. One example of particular relevancy is the work which has been done in preparing a code of ethics for parliamentarians. I believe these studies should be published, and not kept on a shelf or shuffled around offices with a secret stamp upon them.

It has been said that because we follow the traditions of the British parliamentary system we have yet to divest ourselves of one of its aspects, namely, the habit of administrative secrecy. There are several enlightened books on this subject. One of them, and I have mentioned it before in debate in this House, is by Brian Chapman.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The title is, "British Government Observed". There is an excellent treatment, here, of what the author terms the sacred cow of administrative secrecy. Another informative book on this theme is entitled "Modern Capitalism". The author is Andrew Schoenfeld who discusses various forms of government in western Europe and the manner in which this question of secrecy is approached. I, myself, hope we can aspire to the example of Sweden where a public reference room has been established in which the public has access to all decisions, all reports made by government or contracted by government. The only exceptions are records which affect the privacy of individual citizens—income tax files, for example—or state bargaining with citizens and corporations in connection with the acquisition of land, and so on, where disclosure of information might affect the price. Lastly, of course, are papers which involve the security of the state itself. These are naturally excluded from public examination. As I say, though, all other records and reports are available to the public.

It is a great pity that we in Canada have so far failed to tackle this issue. None of us, I think, object in a general way to the contracting out of work on these studies which are constantly being called for by government departments. but we object very much to the results being kept secret. The equilibrium to be maintained between publicity and secrecy in government affairs is impossible to define in the abstract with any precision; direct conciliation of the competing claims must be done on the basis of individual cases. Yet no community which is apathetic toward reconciling these different claims can come close to striking a reasonable balance. Such a community may fall into the dominant or stable pattern of this country or of the United Kingdom in which administrative secrecy is widely practiced and, apparently, accepted. It is my thesis that we should take a very careful look at the basis for this acceptance. By way of contrast, American society tends to oscillate between the extremes of secrecy and publicity. We have had a startling example of this lately with the publication by the New York Times of "The Pentagon Papers". We have also had other examples relating to the Gray report and other data, and I hope I am understood to be objective here.

It is my opinion that the reason these leaks are occurring is the tightness of the regulations relating to keeping these documents confidential. No harm would have been done had the data supporting the Gray report been released much earlier than it was. I have a bit of a suspicion that the government did not very much regret that particular leak.

No society can attain an appropriate balance before there has been an intelligent debate on the theoretical, constitutional and practical issues involved. I hope that we are participating in perhaps one edge of this debate. The difficulties posed by combining increased government secrecy, the spread of government information services, the need for more reliable information on which to plan policy and the concern to protect individuals against misuse of such information are formidable indeed. But they will not be solved by repeating ritual slogans, like "open access" or "executive privilege".

I can add to these another that is a ritual when answers are given to questions or replies made to notices of motions for production of papers. One that we hear over and over again is that this is an intergovernmental matter and it would not be in the public interest to disclose the information. I think I can put words in the mouth of the hon. member who introduced this bill when I say that we who partake of this debate feel that it is very much in the public interest that there be a good deal more publicity, not less. I suggest it is only on the basis of careful study and reasoned discussion that we can understand the meaning of the choices that we have to make.

The complexity of modern policy making is a principal reason for the universal decline of legislatures as the source of policy alternatives. The example I always give when this question is discussed in academic circles is the famous one of the overhaul base for Viscount aircraft at Winnipeg. The government hired the Thompson firm of engineering consultants to recommend to the government whether the overhaul base should be in Winnipeg or in Montreal. Although this did not matter very much to members from constituencies other than in Winnipeg or Montreal we were supposed to stamp "approved" on the government's decision without, in effect, ever having access to the data which led the government to make that decision. By no stretch of the imagination could it be said that the location of the overhaul base at either Winnipeg or Montreal was a matter going to the security of the nation.

The complexity of modern policy making is a principal reason for the universal decline of legislatures, as well as this Parliament, as the source of policy alternatives. Most of the steps taken have enhanced the policy formulation and evaluation capacity of the executive branch. The celebrated knowledge explosion and the rise of the information processing industry have come to the executive branch in full force, but hardly at all to the legislative branch. Yet the problems of modern government have now become so technical and complex that the legislature has found it increasingly necessary to defer to the executive for answers and recommendations. Information has become an even greater source of power in our political system than it was previously.

The proliferation of information can also produce a situation of chronic information overload. This has been discussed in a book by Harold Wilensky called "Organizational Intelligence: Knowledge and Policy in Government and Industry". I do not want to take up very much time discussing this, though I think we will have to come, either in a committee of Parliament or in some other way, to an agreement on how we confront the problem of administrative secrecy, giving Members of Parliament a great deal more access to various reports and studies.

I think the greatest danger inherent in some recent developments is, if I can put it this way, the triumph of technique over human values. I think this is a very serious subject. This would result in what the great English constitutional expert Harold Laski once described as the "trained incompetence of the specialist", that narrowness of vision that often comes with immersion in a program or policy field. Surely, it is our duty as Members of Parliament to see that the trained incompetence of the specialist does not occur as a result of the input—to use a cliche—that we give. Someone put it a little differently when he said that it was our role to prevent extraordinary people from doing extraordinary things to us. That might strike hon. members as a valid reason for our seeking election.

Breadth of view must be combined with technical skill in effective policy making. Generally, the training of information technologists does not overcome their limited and political sensitivities. I hope that we, as Members of Parliament, can fill a very important gap in this chain. If we have a limited social and political sensitivity we should be moved away from this place when election time comes along.

Wilensky made the point well when he said:

> The danger of technicism is in direct proportion to the shortage of educated men. Too often the new technologists are methodological and exact in their specialized fields, but impressionable, naïve, and opinionated on broader issues of policy.

I do not quote this author as being in any sense critical of the public service. I see the public service and the elected member acting in some sort of concert, or orchestration if you like, with the technologist, and those who have experience as representatives of the people can add a different and important dimension to the whole area of policy making.

Technologists lack the critical common sense and trained judgment that mark an educated man. Hopefully, with some luck, we parliamentarians can fulfil an important role here. Executives who surround themselves with specialists must always be conscious of the limitations of the contributions of such individuals. It is now possible to arrive more efficiently at wrong decisions based on poor judgment and buttressed by awesome statistics than ever before. Ignorance cannot be the basis of sound policy making, but we must be sure that our definition of knowledge is not dangerously narrow.

Perhaps hon. members will feel that they have heard enough from me, but I cannot resist a final quotation which I think sums up my feeling on this issue. Again this is a quote from Harold Wilensky:

• (1730)

> To read the history of modern intelligence failures is to get the nagging feeling that men at the top are often out of touch, that good intelligence is difficult to come by and enormously difficult to listen to; that big decisions are very delicate but not necessarily deliberative; that sustained good judgment is rare. Bemoaning the decline of meaningful action, T. S. Eliot once spoke of a world that ends "not with a bang but a whimper." What we have to fear is that the bang will come, preceded by the contemporary equivalent of the whimper—a faint rustle of paper as some self-convinced chief of state—

With an obvious exception.

> —reviewing a secret memo full of comfortable rationalizations just repeated at the final conference, fails to muster the necessary intelligence and wit and miscalculates the power and the intent of his adversaries.

I am not applying any person to this quotation. I feel the issue raised by my hon. friend is such that if this bill should be talked out, it will come back again. But face the issue we must as a Parliament. I hope the facing of it can be done in as objective a manner as the amendment proposed by the hon. member. Even given some of the perhaps hyperbole I have used, I would suggest that the public interest would be better served with a greater amount of openness.

I believe that in dealing with governments on some issues, because of the sort of cloak of confidentiality with which we surround ourselves the public becomes terribly frustrated. I have found that generally speaking the public will accept a person, warts, mistakes and all if he is honest and open with them. But what people do not accept is one more in a routine series of form letters cranked out by some computer giving a routine answer to a question which affects the individual citizen very much indeed. What sustains the existing practice of limited disclosure, I suggest, are outdated constitutional doctrines and a desire by the government to do its business in private without being put to the trouble of full explanation.

With great respect to the public service I would say there is bureaucratic inertia about facing this issue. I am sure, however, that many people in the public service would like to see the results of their studies receive much more public debate and, not less important—I have to admit this—consideration by an efficient and fair government. With that contribution, I say it is a great pleasure to support the hon. member's bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), sponsor of Bill C-19, entitled "An Act respecting employment with the Government of Canada not covered by the Public Service Employment Act" wanted to remain as objective as possible.

He often mentioned that his purpose was objectivity and not criticism of expenses, and he feels that this list, as now published, does not adequately meet the requirements of the population, of journalists, or of some politicians.

The hon. member spoke for a few minutes particularly of increased expenses in the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I remember that a few years ago, when I was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, the Treasury Board estimates were referred to the committee. On that occasion, we fully discussed the people who, on a contract basis or otherwise, worked for the Prime Minister's office. We supplied, at that time, a complete list of employees, with their remunerations and appropriate comments. If the hon. member had had the opportunity of attending some of the committee meetings during which the expenses of the Prime Minister's office were examined, he could readily have obtained all explanations deemed necessary to make sure that government funds are being properly used.

It can however be wondered why expenses of the Prime Minister's office have been increasing since 1968 and specifically since the election of the present Prime Minister. For him it is a matter of trying to instill "participatory democracy" into the people.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): A Créditiste laughs at that, but we are in fact engaged in participatory democracy. Surely there must one Créditiste in the House—no, there are two!

The present Prime Minister wanted the people to participate in the administration of the government and because of this he receives more communications, letters, briefs than any of his predecessors ever received. Naturally, there is more work than can be done by one person; that is why, at the present time, the Prime Minister must hire additional personnel to answer his voluminous correspondence and also to attend to the proper operation of his office. The people surely expect the office of the Prime Minister to be managed in an orderly fashion and that experts supply the requested information.

On the other hand, it is also true that some of my constituents do write directly to the Prime Minister's office and send me, later on, a copy of their letters. I personally know that many people in my riding are writing to the Prime Minister.

Concerning the reviewing of expenses I have just mentioned, it was very easy to check those of the Prime Minister's office or of any department, since the explanatory note of Bill C-19 reads as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to provide information to the public what contracts of employment are entered into by the office of the Prime Minister or by government departments.

However, the title of the bill itself refers to "Employment with the Government of Canada" and I wonder whether the words "Employment with the Government of Canada" could not be more widely construed than in the explanatory note.

• (1740)

We could include in the same bill the persons hired by the Speaker of the House of Commons, as the secretaries of the members, the staff of the protection service, pages and messengers who do not come under the public service. The list of such employees and their wages is not disclosed.

We could also apply that bill to the personnel hired by the Speaker of the Senate who also has prerogatives as well as to the staff of government agencies and to the Crown corporations.

Indeed, I wonder if even the manpower centres could not also publish every month a list of the many individuals for whom they find employment and if the interpretation of the explanatory note given by the member for Winnipeg North is right or whether the bill under consideration gives to the term "Government of Canada" a general meaning, because we would then have to include all the positions which I mentioned and probably many others.

I should like to state, by the way, that I am fully confident in the Public Service Commission and that I do not believe that it should have to publish each month the list of vacancies it fills. I want to pay tribute to the Public Service Commission which, for the past four years, has been appearing before the committee which I have the honour to preside. All questions are always answered in a satisfactory manner. Furthermore, the commission itself is well managed by competent commissioners who know how to carry out the studies required to ease the task of public servants; it is remarkable that the quality of the public service keeps improving, as does that of all hon. members incidentally.

Speaking of publications, as the sponsor of this bill stated, we must also bear in mind the cost of such publications and try to avoid duplication. The Committee on Public Accounts, a member of which I was for many years, has seriously considered the tabling of public accounts and, particularly, the granting of contracts of employment undertaken by the departments.

So, we studied this problem for many years because we thought that the public accounts were too bulky and that a person who was not too familiar with a government institution would have some difficulty understanding them, especially as some relatively small expenses did not appear in public accounts. This is why there were changes made in the format of public accounts.

So, if my hon. friend who presented this bill very objectively wants to get further information concerning hiring contracts entered into by the various departments, I shall be very happy to refer him to public accounts, volumes I-III, 1970-71. In volume II, sections 28, 29, 30 and 31, he will find exactly what he wants. I refer here to section 28 of 1970-71 public accounts entitled "Professional and Special Services (with individual payments of $2,000 or over)—and this is probably what my hon. friend had in mind, besides the employees of the Prime Minister's office which he also mentioned—where I find the information requested by the hon. member.

If a list of expenses of $2,000 or more only is published now, it is to comply with a recommendation made a few years ago by a standing committee of this House. The list of departments is given here: Agriculture, Communications, Post Office, etc. Here is what one can find about the Department of Agriculture:

Analyst fees
Artificial insemination services
Boarding house operations

Cattle backtagging—

Under the Canadian Lifestock Feed Board, we can read:

Pre-audit services
Stenographic and typing services

Economic consultant services

Under the Communications Department, we find:

Clerical and secretarial services

Names are given as well as amounts of expenses of $2,000 or more.

With that, Mr. Speaker, one can hardly complain. Maybe the government should, apart from that, publish every month in the Canada Gazette, a list that would be endless, I believe, and very costly. The more so since apart from the public accounts, where the figures called for in this bill are available.

We also have the orders in council which are tabled regularly and made available at all times to hon. members and which give certain details. Certain credits must be approved by the Treasury Board when they are above a given amount. So there again, expenses are controlled. Moreover, the Auditor General still controls expenses and tells us whenever he believes some expenses are unjustifiable.

With the explanations I just gave, I am sure my hon. friend from Winnipeg North will not mind the fact that I do not agree with him. Besides, it behoves the opposition in the House to discuss and exchange views on certain points. After all, I believe the list of publications I mentioned a while ago is sufficient to respond to the object of the bill before us.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much of the House's time as I hope this bill will be adopted before 6 o'clock tonight.

I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who has introduced it and assure him of my support in respect of this bill.

I thought that this measure was quite reasonable since the principle was to determine where the taxpayers' money goes and how it is spent, the duty of a member being to control the public administration. In fact, I thought this bill would be unanimously endorsed by all members.

However, after hearing the speech of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc), I believe I should review this case in order to place the debate in its true perspective.

What is Bill C-19 aiming at? Is it concerned with artificial insemination or any of the subjects mentioned by the hon. member for Laurier? Not at all. The sole purpose of this bill is to provide information to the public about the contracts of employment entered into by the Prime Minister's office or other departments. That is all. No additional information is needed since it already appears, as he has mentioned, in the Public Accounts. This information can also be found in other documents published by Crown corporations. But the details we know nothing about are those concerning the administration of the various departments and particularly of the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

• (1750)

These are things we do not know anything about and neither does the hon. member for Laurier.

According to some people in this Parliament, more than 80 persons work for the Prime Minister's office. Other reliable persons whom you and I know well, Mr. Speaker, claim that more than 120 persons work for the Prime Minister in his office here in Ottawa. Other equally reliable sources state that the Prime Minister's office includes still much more persons, over 225 if we take into account the offices scattered in the main cities of the country. And what are these people doing? Someone spoke previously of participatory democracy, which is absolutely ridiculous because the offices do not consult people before a bill is passed. Their sole purpose, according to what we understand—and here again the hon. member for Laurier should prove the contrary if he knows so much—is to tell the Prime Minister what public opinion is after bills have been passed, and that is not political participation.

Anyway, though I might be mistaken, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that nothing is being said on the matter, that everything is being kept secret, that they will not reveal the nature of these expenses, the number of hirings and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather be proven wrong and then the hon. member for Laurier will show the need for that bill, thereby avoiding confusion across the country and the doubts one might justifiably entertain since this involves the taxpayer's money. It stands to reason that such information should be supplied.

May I remind him that in today's newspaper La Presse it was stated that the booklet "How your tax dollar is spent" has a pre-election flavour, that it hides and interprets some public expenses such as, for instance, the interest on the public debt. The government members find that funny, but the chapters concerning the moneys we contribute to service the public debt are skipped. The chapter on the role of Parliament is also skipped and the facts are being interpreted in favour of the government. However, the booklet "How your tax money is spent", in which readers find publicity for the government and an apology for its policy, has cost $72,625 to the taxpayers. According to the information provided in La Presse, over 528,000 copies of that publication were distributed through government agencies.

Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that if on the one hand the government deems it necessary to tell people how their tax money is spent—and on that point, I am in full agreement—I consider on the other hand that hon. members should also have the privilege of being told how some moneys have been spent at the level of departmental management.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding these short remarks, I should like to tell one thing to the hon. member for Laurier, who has not yet learned about the tolerant standards of this Parliament. I would remind him that counting the number of members in the House is absolutely ridiculous. I would tell him that if I wanted—and I will not do it, Mr. Speaker—to point out the lack of quorum his whip and his party would be in a rather bad situation. There are only 12 Liberal members in the House. If we wanted to count the number of members here tonight it would show how low we have reached.

However, one thing is for sure: The créditistes members present in the House are prepared to work. We are supporting Bill C-19 because we want to know what the government is doing with the taxpayers' money.

If the government has nothing to hide about its expenditures to Parliament and the people then why is it against this legislation? If the government is convinced that departmental expenditures are legitimate why is it trying to hide these public expenditures?

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks with this, hoping that this bill will pass.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Laurier on a point of order.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have been attacked by the hon. member who just had the floor. Actually, he referred to an article published in La Presse and dealing with a document entitled "How your tax dollar is spent". He called it an electoral document. Now, if he goes back to page B 9 of La Presse, he will see that there is no question whatsoever of an electoral document—

[Mr. Fortin.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would ask the hon. member for Laurier to resume his seat. I must point out to him that the question he is raising is essentially argumentative and according to the House Rules it does not meet the requirements of a question of privilege or a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-19, proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), is to provide information to the public on contracts of employment entered into by the office of the Prime Minister or by government departments. As such, it seems a rather innocuous bill. I am sure there is a great deal of interest in the Prime Minister's staff and surely it would not be a big problem to administer this bill if it were passed. However, the difficulty would be in administering the bill in so far as it extends to something like 230,000 civil servants in government departments. Also, I presume CNR employees and others would be affected by it.

The hon. member wants information about people working under contract in the Prime Minister's office; he wants to know their names, their specific duties and how much they are paid for the services they render to the government. Surely this information would be of interest to many people. However, it seemed to me the hon. member weakened his argument when he talked about placing questions on the order paper. Many of us place all kinds of questions on the order paper relating to public policy and matters on which we feel there should be public information. I do this with respect to my own riding. Sometimes it is quicker to get information in this way rather than contacting a minister directly, particularly if the subject matter is of a continuing nature extending over a number of years.

If the bill covered only staff in the Prime Minister's office it could be of great value, but the hon. member weakened his argument by saying the information was given to him. I believe another hon. member also said he asked for information along the same lines, and got it.

Mr. Orlikow: A year late.

Mr. Foster: When he thought it was not adequate, he simply phoned the Prime Minister's office and received additional information. Perhaps if the hon. member for Winnipeg North had simply phoned the Prime Minister's office in the first instance he would have received all the information he seeks. The problem with this bill is that it seems to reach out to include all other contracts; for instance, those issued under the Local Initiatives Program and the Opportunities for Youth program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin that Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was quoting from a speech made by Mr. A. H. Ross, president of Western Decalta Petroleum Limited, a Canadian company located in Calgary, in reference to jobs for Canadians in the mining and petroleum industries because it has been said in this debate that this is not a proper type of investment. When we went into private members' hour I had just started to quote Mr. Ross. He said as follows:

> Unfortunately at this time little good statistical data is available with regard to the over-all effects of the oil industry. A study of this subject is under way between industry, the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board and the National Energy Board but it will probably be over a year before any tangible results are forthcoming. However, various estimates have been made and I will attempt to go through some of them with you. In Alberta Professor E. J. Hanson of the University of Alberta stated in his book "The Dynamic Decade" with updating in 1966, "The economic effects of the petroleum industry upon the province have been large and far reaching transforming a mainly rural and agricultural society into an urban, industrialized one. Alberta was a one-industry economy with limited opportunities for labour and capital—the population would have declined if petroleum had not begun its rapid development—instead of 700,000 people in 1961 there were 1,332,000" and today, 1,639,494—"the petroleum industry has almost doubled the level of employment in Alberta since 1946—the estimated revenue contribution by the oil industry for 1964 was 47 per cent of all personal disposable income" over 50 per cent today. Finally, he concludes that "in the last two decades, the exploration and development activities of the petroleum industry have been prime generators of economic growth—and the skills and abilities of the labour force have been upgraded greatly—with the continued expansion of the petroleum industry being of vital importance to the region."

• (2010)

> One has only to consider enterprises like Alberta Gas Trunk Limited, Atco Industries, Kaps Transport, PWA, Transair, Banister Construction, to realize the opportunities outside the actual exploration and development sector which have been created for Canadians. Alberta has become the research and development centre for Canada for such things as off-highway transportation vehicles (which are being sold all over the world including Russia), solid pipelines which could have major implications for mass transportation of Alberta's coal and sulphur, and the application of computer science to mineral exploration which has already made Calgary a major data processing centre.
> Another major contribution of the petroleum industry is the large scientific and managerial community which it has established in the west. This industry has attracted scientists and managers from abroad and has been responsible for the repatriation of many highly trained Canadians who had emigrated to other countries. With about 7.6 per cent of the labour force in Canada, Alberta has 42 per cent of the total number of professional geologists (in the order of 1,300) and 30 per cent of the professional mining engineers. As of January 1, 1967, it is estimated that 90 per cent of the petroleum geologists employed in Canada were located in the three western provinces.
> Added to the geologists, geophysicists, and engineers are a great number of technicians and other professional employees associated with the petroleum industry. A sizeable reservoir of highly trained people are now available in Canada. This scientific and managerial community has provided the initiative and expertise for the formation of Canadian oil and gas firms, for a drilling industry about 90 per cent Canadian-owned, for Canadian firms to participate in overseas exploration in the United Kingdom, North Sea, Indonesia, Africa, and for opening up the Canadian north. This technological base in Canada will prove to be a significant factor in Canada's development in the future and a significant factor in attracting secondary industry to western Canada.

Then he mentions how much the resource industries have contributed by way of taxes, royalties and other fees to the governments of the west. It is not accurate to say that those industries contribute nothing toward the government of this country. True, they may not be high on the list of those contributing to federal corporation taxes but they certainly contribute much to the provinces in which they operate.

Earlier when I was speaking the minister asked what it is that I propose and added that my attitude seemed to be totally negative. Before dealing with that matter may I say that we must pay attention to Canadian investors if foreigners are to be prevented from investing in this country. Unless the government's attitude is different from its attitude of the past there will be little sense in preventing takeovers by foreigners. Who will take over a business if nobody wants to take it over? That policy might make sense for monied people in central Canada who may want to go to the fringe areas and snap up businesses at bargain prices.

Actually, one foreign company is trying to Canadianize, so to speak, one of its subsidiaries. In this connection may I quote an article carried in the Toronto Star of May 27. I was somewhat surprised to find this story in that newspaper, in view of the strong editorial bias in favour of the NDP and the Committee for an Independent Canada shown by that publication. This bias results from the strong influence of Mr. Walter Gordon on the editorial policy of that newspaper. The headline reads, "U.S. firm is planning takeover of gas company—by Canadians." The article speaks of the efforts of Pacific Gas Transmission Co. of San Francisco to dispose of its majority interest in its subsidiary, Alberta Natural Gas Company Ltd., and contains this passage:

> Charles Smith, president of Pacific Gas Transmission Co. of San Francisco, says his company wants Canadians to own 55 per cent of a Pacific Gas subsidiary, Alberta Natural Gas Co. Ltd. Canadian ownership is now 33 per cent and Pacific Gas owns the rest.
> Though market analysts consider Alberta Natural Gas a sound investment, there has not been enough Canadian interest to realize Smith's goal.
> Smith said his company is offering the shares because the move "gives recognition to the Canadian government's policy of encouraging maximum participation by Canadians in the ownership of companies which transport natural resources within Canada."

Pacific Gas would retain effective control of the company, however, with its 45 per cent shareholding.

Alberta Natural Gas owns and manages the Canadian section of the 1,400-mile Alberta-California natural gas pipeline, a vital link in the North American energy network.

The article then says that the company tried twice to dispose of its 55 per cent interest in its subsidiary and failed, and it plans to make another offering in the fall. That leads me to my next proposal for increasing Canadian ownership of our economy. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) touched on this point last night when he said that former estate taxes and present provincial succession duties have prevented Canadians from accumulating the funds necessary for investment in this country.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, boy!

Mr. Schumacher: Pressure from those on my left has brought about this trouble. They decry the lack of Canadian investment in this country yet bring forward proposals under which the government, by taxation, would take all available money from our people. The government, possessing all money, will invest and leave no money in the hands of the people for investment. I for one do not accept that principle and would rather see the Americans owning everything than a Canadian federal government.

Mr. Benjamin: That figures.

Mr. Schumacher: That is what my friends to the left would propose. I have mentioned an extreme case, one that I hope will never be realized; nevertheless, that situation would result from following the proposals of those to my left.

Mr. Woolliams: That is why the Premier of Saskatchewan wants American money.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: He wants equity capital.

Mr. Schumacher: Instead of bringing forward a master plan and steps for nationalizing industry, as advocated—

Mr. Horner: By the Benjamins of this world.

Mr. Benjamin: The people want to own their own Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Schumacher: Instead of introducing such a master plan, why does the government not put many small things to work? I think there is room for improvement in cabinet. Furthermore, I am advised that long distance lines between Calgary, San Francisco and other points in the United States are tied up most of the night. They carry computer data material for use in American computers. We ought to act to keep this kind of work at home. That would make sense.

Also, it makes sense to put Canadians on the same footing as foreigners. For instance, Americans are entitled to set losses in exploration against income. That privilege ought to be extended to Canadians. Furthermore, Canadians should be entitled to invest part of their taxable income in the industries of this country and such moneys ought to be deductible from their income. It is also important for our laws in this regard to be developed further.

Although the federal government may be without power in some fields, it ought to encourage the provinces to act. For instance, we ought to make certain that enough Canadian citizens sit on the boards of directors of federally chartered but foreign-controlled companies which operate in Canada. That is my view. I also agree with one point raised by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). I do not agree with him all the time. I agree with his suggestion that there should be a revision of the Bank Act to ensure that Canadian investments are funded in Canada, not through chartered banks in the United States and then brought back into Canada in the form of foreign control. I do not see any reason for that.

I also believe that the immigration practices of the government should be tightened up considerably to ensure that graduates of Canadian universities and trade schools have the first opportunity to obtain employment in Canadian industry. There should be an application of the doctrine of reciprocity in relation to countries that want to invest in Canada. Countries which put up bars to our investing in their countries should receive the same treatment from Canada: the principle of selectivity should be applied in this regard.

This bill is not too strong at the present time and it is being decried by the party to my left. I feel it is a negative approach to the problem; it restrains and restricts rather than encourages Canadian ownership. I do not think that is the right approach. I cannot say that I have a great deal of confidence in this administration. If the situation were not so bad we would have had a much tougher measure. If something happens we will probably be in for more restrictions. Our only protection is that nothing will happen along this line as long as this government is in power, because we would be plagued with unemployment.

If the worst came to the worst, as the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) said, and the NDP took power I would be afraid to have on the books this piece of legislation on which they could expand. They say they will vote against the bill. I do not know why. Surely this is part of their program.

Mr. Horner: It is not enough for them.

Mr. Schumacher: As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) says, the trouble is that it is not enough. I still do not understand their reasoning in this regard. I have grave doubts about the ability of this bill to solve the problem. However, at this stage there is hope that better criteria will be written into the bill for the guidance or, if necessary, the control of the minister in making decisions. As things now stand, the minister has too much discretion to decide what is good for Canada. These tests are quite subjective. The way the government decided what was good for Canada in its division of money under DREE grants does not leave me much confidence in its ability to assist in the development of regions of Canada which lie outside Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the criticism of this bill is partly because of the high expectations of those who patiently waited for an announcement, and perhaps partly because of the view held that this is the only action of the government in dealing with foreign ownership. However, if one approaches this bill as representing one of a series of initiatives preceded and followed by other initiatives, then the picture that emerges over the years shows a definite trend.

It is clear that we are moving in the direction of more Canadian control of our economy, a process that will accelerate in the next few years for these reasons. In the past few years we have begun to develop in Canada new products and processes for world markets. Here are some examples, Mr. Speaker: PT6 gas turbines, STOL aircraft, machinery for an asbestos milling process, aluminum transmission towers, aluminum hopper cars, hydraulic precision tooling sold to the U.S.A. for use in the construction of space-ships, amphibious water bomber aircraft to put out forest fires, snowmobiles, crash position indicators and flight data recorders used by airlines, snow removal equipment, foam-form-block building materials, electro-vert wave soldering equipment, an organic foam spray to protect perishable crops from frost, the "Voyageur", a cargo vehicle which rides on a cushion of air. These are just a few.

Another reason is that we have shown ourselves to be capable of generating enough capital in Canada to support our own growth. This is a very recent development. Further, the incentives included in the new Income Tax Act which became effective in January, 1972, will encourage greater formation of Canadian capital in the interests of Canadian industry. These measures have been outlined by hon. members who preceded me. The Canada Development Corporation is now in operation to participate as a shareholder in the creation and expansion of Canadian industry.

Another measure is the ministry of Science and technology which was created last year to advise the government on the investment and application of science and technology in the pursuit of national goals. More money has been granted for research and development of new products and processes. For example, in 1971-72, $31 million was made available for support of some 900 projects for the expansion of scientific research and development under the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. This is also true of the program for the advancement of technology. In 1971-72 approximately $28 million was paid under this program in support of 141 Canadian projects, a sum equal to the total amount paid in the previous four years combined.

The Industrial Development Bank has stepped up its operations considerably. In 1971 it made more than 4,000 loans to Canadian businesses for a total of approximately $200 million. As mentioned by others, there is the CRTC and its work to ensure that the national broadcasting system will be owned and controlled by Canadians. There have been positive repercussions in the development of Canadian talent and a Canadian musical industry.

Today we have this bill on takeovers. It is just one more step. If one looks for a moment at the initiatives of this and the preceding government over the years in this area of policy, one can see that they fall into two main categories. There have been initiatives which consist of control legislation such as this bill. I hope this bill will be followed by the establishment of an agency to screen foreign investments other than just takeovers. The other category of initiatives consists of programs and measures to stimulate the growth of new, Canadian-owned industries. These two approaches, as they grow in scope and emphasis will lead to our gaining greater control over our economy and cultural environment within a short period of time.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments made by the two previous speakers in respect of Bill C-201 that the minister would like to see adopted on second reading and referred to the committee as soon as possible. By the way, the minister came to ask us if other Créditistes members wanted to take the floor in order to find out whether the House could adopt the motion for second reading tonight.

I find that the government or the party in power is acting in a rather strange way. If one day my colleagues are attending a committee session and are not present here in the House, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) accuses the Créditistes of being absent from the House. When we are here, it is the minister who comes to ask us whether it would be possible for us to stay away from the House in order not to get involved in the discussion on a bill.

Therefore, it would be necessary to know exactly what the government or the party in power wants.

An hon. Member: They want us to be slaves.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, this is nothing but a point I am trying to make. I do not know whether more of my colleagues will rise tonight but, anyway, we are anxious to see this bill referred to the committee for study so that Parliament may assume its responsibility with regard to foreign investors, foreign control over our economy, especially by the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this situation of economic takeover by a foreign nation is not exclusive to Canada. The same phenomenon is found all over the world. When we visited India some years ago, we realized that British subjects were in control of its economy in spite of India's status as an independent country.

Recently, I visited Cameroun which became independent in 1960 but is still controlled by France. In Iran, for instance, where we attended the interparliamentary conference, we saw that the U.S.S.R. controls the economy. In fact, I went out one day with Senator Maurice Bourget as far as the Caspian Sea where caviar is produced. We were told that the caviar produced in Iran, on the shores of the Caspian Sea, is entirely controlled by the U.S.S.R. which lies across the Sea from there. Economic control is thus achieved somewhat this way.

Viet Nam is under French commercial control and American war control. Cuba is under U.S.S.R. control. In Cuba, the economy is not in the hands of Fidel Castro but in those of the U.S.S.R. And if Fidel tries to escape this, the USSR will punish him.

The same thing happens in Czechoslovakia and in all satellite countries of the USSR. Not only their economy but their social policy as well are directly controlled by the USSR. In Czechoslovakia, only 3 years ago, students wanted to rebel against the government or to recover part of their freedom—that of being allowed to put their thoughts on paper. They even called on the Russian army, on Russian tanks, to come and crash the rebellion of those students who had no right to try and recover the freedom which their parents had lost 28 or 30 years ago. The students of 28 or 30 years ago fought the revolution and today their own children are not even allowed to try and recover a small part of their freedom.

Mr. Speaker, this does not mean that we in Canada should follow on exactly the same steps. Investors, no matter from where, will invest as long as they find it profitable.

My friends of the New Democratic Party often say, in reference to Americans: We are not opposed to foreign investment. Only, as soon as a company comes to invest in Canada and makes profits, we will ask that it be nationalized. Why do my hon. friends from the New Democratic Party not take control of their economy in Manitoba and Saskatchewan?

I was in Manitoba not so long ago while the New Democratic Party administration was about to borrow $50 million from the United States, at an interest rate of 9.2 per cent, for the development of a hydroelectric project. The day before, I heard on television the federal leader of the New Democratic Party speaking against the Americans, against the economic control of Americans in Canada, while the next evening, the Minister of Finance of the Manitoba New Democratic government was calling for assistance from the United States, and saying how warmly he had been welcomed in that country!

At this time, the province of Manitoba is about to borrow $300 million from the United States—

Mr. Benjamin: We own the power!

Mr. Caouette: They own the power, the power to borrow money. These people do not even know where they are going. They are going to borrow some money from the Americans at a rate of 9.2 per cent, and then they come and tell us that they own the power!

An hon. Member: Just like René Lévesque.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, like René Lévesque!

Mr. Speaker, as I just said, Manitoba is getting ready to borrow $300 million in the United States, at current rates. The Americans will lend it to them because it is good business. In fact, none of them complain about those loans to Canada, loans that are not based on American resources but on the development of Canadian natural resources. We are borrowing figures from the Americans. I say categorically that so long as we do not control credit in Canada, we will never be the masters of our economy.

Last night, I heard over the CBC news the indictment of the Quebec premier (Mr. Bourassa) against federal authorities. He requested from the federal authorities more powers to be able to spend more. But what is meant by powers to spend more? Nothing keeps the Quebec premier from increasing his taxes, under the present system, to spend more. What keeps the premier of Quebec, as well as those of Manitoba, of Saskatchewan, from making representations to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who wants to prevent foreign control of our economy? What keeps those provincial premiers from coming to Ottawa and making representations with a view to using the services of the Bank of Canada?

• (2040)

What would be funny about using the Bank of Canada?

When Mr. Bourassa borrows $100 million in the United States, as he has just done, at 8 per cent interest for 25 years, during that period we will pay $200 million in interests alone and we still owe the full capital amount, that is $100 million. We will have to pay back three times as much as the amount borrowed.

Will the Quebec premier return from the United States with a carload of American dollars? No, he will return with a slip of paper which we call a promissory note on which will show that amount, $100 million, and the premier's signature. The note is endorsed by the province of Quebec and the trick is done! On what are those $100 million based? On American resources? They are based on Quebec projects, on the natural resources of the province as well as on the natural resources of Manitoba and those of Canada as a whole. What is the difference between a $100 million figure written by the Americans or by Mr. Louis Raminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada, a national institution authorized to grant loans?

I have just read in the Bank of Canada Act, sections 13 and 20, that the Bank is authorized by Parliament to issue loans to the federal and provincial governments for periods not exceeding 6 months. What can they do in 6 months, Mr. Speaker? Not much. A province cannot even turn around and undertake any project, that it must repay the loan forthwith.

So, we say: Let us do for the provinces what we are doing for foreign countries. This morning, I received a news release from the Canadian International Development Agency. This was most interesting. I quote:

Canada is providing Nigeria with a $5 million interest-free loan—

—not at a rate of 9, 8 or 6 per cent, no, but interest-free! There it is in print—

Mr. Pepin: Canadians are paying the interest.

Mr. Caouette: The minister states that Canadians are paying the interest. I thought that he was smart, but I have serious doubts now.

Mr. Speaker, it is awful to get such an answer from a responsible man, a minister of a so-called sovereign government. I will deal with the subject of sovereignty in a few minutes.

I keep on quoting:

—a $5 million ... loan to help it ease its foreign exchange problems.

Another release announces a $14 million loan to Tunisia. That makes $19 million and the interest will be paid by the Canadian people, according to the minister.

Mr. Speaker, according to the news release, the loan contract covers the provision by Canada of:

—22 diesel electric locomotives ... along with spare parts, tools and related equipment.

That loan is for $9.3 million. The locomotives will be assembled in Montreal—

Whenever we ask the same facilities for the Canadian people, through the Bank of Canada, we get the following answer: With such credits, foreign countries buy in Canada!

An hon. Member: That's it, we shall buy in Canada.

Mr. Caouette: That's it. We know it and we would be silly not do do it. But let us make sure that they buy in this country with the interest-free loans we grant them.

The province that would get interest-free loans would buy in Canada as well as the municipalities and the Canadian government.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) said recently: But the Créditistes do not tell you that those countries must buy in Canada. That would be the last straw: grant them credits to enable them to buy in Russia. That would be something.

Mr. Speaker, we do not want foreign aid to be abolished. Far from it! If we can increase it, let us do it. However, let us do the same for the provinces, the municipalities and the federal government which is always flat broke.

An hon. Member: That's true!

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I will now deal with foreign ownership in our economy. I agree that we must prevent all of our economy from belonging to foreigners. However, it should be possible for those people to invest in this country if they hope to make a profit. Canadians who are investing millions of dollars in the United States are not doing it for the pleasure of it but because they are making money. Some corporations are selling their shares to Americans. Why? Because they are getting paid. It is that simple.

So, if we want to keep control of our economy, let us establish an economic system profitable to the individuals. This is the only way of increasing our economic growth.

An hon. Member: This is socialism.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, when I hear the NDP members it makes me laugh. As I have already said outside the House, and I will repeat for my hon. friend's information, a socialist is someone prepared to distribute anything that belongs to others but not what belongs to him.

For the last few days we have heard them asking: Why not nationalize the Canadian Pacific? Why? Because the Canadian Pacific is making a profit whereas the Canadian National has a yearly deficit of $270 million which is quite normal since it is a crown corporation. This is socialism as understood by the NDP. The private corporation offers better services yet makes a profit. And this is found funny.

Even Saskatchewan which has been governed by socialists for almost 25 years is the worst administered Canadian province. I went there just three weeks ago.

All government industries created in Saskatchewan by the NDP or CCF have closed because they were not viable. There is no personal initiative in this. As for the cardboard manufacturers and all kinds of gadgets invented in Saskatchewan they are no longer wanted by the people. The people are fleeing to Alberta and British Columbia to escape Saskatchewan socialism.

Mr. Speaker, I will go farther than that. A few years ago even the rats would not live in that province. The province of Alberta had to spend millions of dollars to prevent them from crossing the provincial borders.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Tell your supporters that.

Mr. Caouette: I will tell my supporters, but you should tell your supporters too.

[Translation]

At the present time, all socialist countries in the world are experiencing a recession and members of the New Democratic Party would have socialism introduced in ours. When asked to propose something positive, they give no answer.

At a large meeting of waffles and anti-waffles in Winnipeg, the national leader of the New Democratic Party was seen shaking his two fists against the American people. The day after, the Manitoba Finance Minister returned from the United States and stated: They unfolded the red carpet to loan me $50 million. What hypocritical guys they are!

If I was not aware of their theories I would not mention them, but I happened to study the CCF philosophy when I was 20 or 21 years old. Therefore, I know it. Perhaps these people have never met Mr. Woodsworth in their life. For your information, I can say that I met him. In fact, I have read everything he wrote. Better still, their former leader, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) in 1935 campaigned in Saskatchewan in a jalopy. In order to obtain more votes, they had written on one side of the car: Vote CCF. And on the other side, one could read: Vote Social Credit.

• (2050)

My hon. friends in the New Democratic Party show their faces and as long as they do it I will tell them a few home truths. Let there be no doubt about it.

I should like to quote a few former presidents of the United States. Thomas Jefferson said in 1801, and I quote:

I believe that banking institutions are a greater menace to freedom than armies in action.

They have already mobilized a money aristocracy that defies the government.

The minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce knows that very well. Besides, some years ago, he acknowledged that the money aristocracy obviously was defying the government.

The quotation goes on:

The issue of banknotes should be taken away from the banks and turned over to the people to whom it properly belongs.

That is where it hurts, the cause of all the problems we hear about today.

Mr. Speaker, John Adams, former president of the United States, made the following statement in 1826:

The problems, confusion and anguish of the United States are not so much the result of the weakness of their constitution, of their confederation, or of a lack of honour or virtue as the result of sheer ignorance of the nature of money, credit and money circulation.

As far as industry and economy are concerned, these comments would indeed apply to the situation in Canada today.

The problems, confusion and anguish of Canada in 1972, with all the measures which are being introduced, are not so much the results of weaknesses in our Constitution. At every federal-provincial conference, the talk is on constitutionality but no one knows what changes should be made in the Constitution. It is suggested that it must be amended and repatriated. Nobody knows what to do, the only thing being to set up commissions to study the matter.

If you ask a provincial premier what changes he wants, he will reply: I do not know, we shall appoint a commission. A commission is then appointed which, after a year or two, submits its report and the premier is asked once again: Now, what changes do you want? To which he will reply: I do not know yet. We are going to appoint a second commission to study the report of the first since we do not know exactly what amendments should be brought in.

And yet, every province is only asking for more power, more autonomy in a reorganized Canada. There is no need to amend the Constitution for that because it already guarantees to all provinces that their rights would be safeguarded in the field of education, highways, lands and forests and provincial organization. If these rights are not respected it is because of Ottawa and nobody else.

I envisage a future Canada tailored somehow on the model of a Canadian family, whether it is the Pepin family or—

Mr. La Salle: La Salle.

Mr. Cyr: Cyr.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Caouette: Be it La Salle or Alexandre, it is nevertheless a comparison we should make.

Let us take for instance the case of a family with ten children. No one child is identical with the other. Indeed, no twosome are identical.

An hon. Member: —or 16 children!

Mr. Caouette: Well. When I hear people say that Quebec is different from other provinces, it is true, it is not a fabrication. That Quebec is different from other provinces is a fact, but it is also a fact that Ontario, British Columbia and Newfoundland are not the same as others, either. Similarly, Manitoba is not like Saskatchewan. Each of these provinces has its own identity, like the children in a Canadian family. No two children are exactly identical. Parents are well aware of this.

One child must be handled in a certain way. Another requires a different approach. A third calls for a different attitude still, and so on for all the others. And later in life, one may be a lawyer, another a doctor, another a farmer, another a service station operator, and still another a member of Parliament. A daughter may become a nurse, a nun or a secretary and everyone goes his own way in life, even though they all belong to the same family.

Nothing prevents the children to get together for Mothers' Day, Fathers' Day, Christmas, New Year's Day and Easter and they are glad to see each other. And none of them want to be told by their brother or sister what to do or not to do in their lives. Each wants to live his life according to his own aspirations. For myself, I visualize a Canada organized on those bases, a Canada which will allow each province to act according to its own aspirations, in a Canadian family spirit.

An hon. Member: With respect.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly! With mutual respect.

Mr. Speaker, this would not destroy Canada. The problems, confusion and anxiety which prevail in Canada in 1972 are less the result of deficiencies in our constitution, in our Confederation—whatever Levesque and Co. may say—of a lack of honour or virtue, than of pure ignorance of the nature of currency, of credit, of capital flow. This is what is lacking.

But instead of coming to grips with this problem, we launch an attack on investors. We tell Canadians: Do not go and invest too much in the United States; invest in Canada. All the money of Canadian investors could not possibly be enough to save the Canadian economy, to develop our national resources, to finance the James Bay project, which is the object of so much talk today, and which will cost an estimated $10 billion. In view of the amount of interest we will have to pay on those $10 billion the James Bay development will cost no less than $25 or $30 billion, and we will not even be able to finance it. So where are we going to borrow? Not from the Bank of Canada, but from the Americans, who will put a mortgage on the James Bay!

This is interesting, this is intelligent—and we will pay interest to the Americans. Canadians will be paying for it. The minister also told me earlier that we have to pay interest on the interest-free loans which we grant foreign countries. We are really saddled with interest.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Caouette: Another American president, Abraham Lincoln, said—

An hon. Member: —as was the case in Cameroun.

Mr. Caouette: If we carry on that way, we will soon find ourselves in the situation of the Cameroun.

The government, Mr. Speaker, is about to convert us into Camerounians.

In 1865, Abraham Lincoln said, and I quote:

I have two major enemies: the army of the South which is in front of me and the financial institutions which are behind me. The most dangerous of the two is the one behind.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce knows it. When he visits all the various countries, such as Japan, the most dangerous enemy is not the army in front of him but the financiers standing behind him. I further quote:

The government should create, issue and put into circulation all the money needed to meet the purchasing power of the government—

That was not said by Caouette, but by Abraham Lincoln. I quote again:

—and the purchasing power of the consumers. The privilege of creating an issuing money is not only the supreme prerogative of the government but it is also the best occasion they have to create something.

Well, the question is not one of demolishing what belongs to others but of creating something. However, we try by any means to destroy what others did because we have not been able to do the same. We take pleasure in destroying what the citizens, personal initiative and private enterprise succeeded in carrying out. I quote further:

Citizens may be and will be provided as stable a currency as their own country.

Money will no longer be the master and it will become the people's servant.

Democracy will dominate the power of money.

At that moment, Mr. Speaker, we could say that we become at last the masters of our economy.

In conclusion, I would like to quote Wilfrid—What am I saying "Wilfrid"—I mean William Lyon Mackenzie King. He could have been called Wilfrid, it would have been the same. William Lyon Mackenzie King stated during the 1935 election campaign—it was probably an election promise—and I quote—

Mr. Corbin: He won it also.

Mr. Caouette: He won it because of that promise which he never kept, but his successors hardly ever mention it.

• (2100)

As if they forgot all about him.

I do think that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could take note of this promise by Mr. King, and I quote:

Once a nation loses control over its currency and its credit, it does not matter much who in that nation makes laws.

As long as control over currency and credit has not been restored to the government and acknowledged as being it most obvious and most sacred responsibility, any talk of democracy and Parliament supremacy is vain and futile.

Mr. Pepin: What year was that?

Mr. Caouette: In 1935, in August.

Mr. Pepin: Before the establishment of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Caouette: Perhaps that was even before the minister was born. This is possible.

Mr. Speaker, the minister should read again these documents of his spiritual father, the former Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. Mackenzie King. Mr. King was right in 1935, and he would still be right today if he talked the same way.

I said earlier that the Bank of Canada is allowed, under the act to grant loans for periods not exceeding six months. All we have to do is introduce an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act, simply change the words "not exceeding six months" and replace then by "60 years" for instance as we do for India, Cameroun, Tunis, Algeria and many other countries. I understand that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will no longer be here by then, but this is still a solution. In fact, the Bank of Canada, is entitled under the act to grant to provinces loans which amount to 25 per cent of what the province may receive in taxes during the year.

Let us take the example of Quebec, with which I am more familiar. This province has an annual budget of $4 billion. This would mean that the province of Quebec should be entitled to borrow directly from the bank of Canada $1 billion each year, for periods of 60 years. And this would apply to all provinces.

Mr. Speaker, it will be very easy to do so once we amend the Bank of Canada Act to allow loans over a 60-year instead of a six-month period. Indeed, extending loans for six months amount to making fun of provinces, of Canada, of the federal government and of municipalities.

In any event, the Social Credit party has a solution. We only have to take control of our Canadian credit, otherwise it is impossible to believe in controlling our Canadian economy. We shall not stop foreign investors from coming into our country. Once again, I say that these people come here to make profits. When the Michelin company first came to Canada, it made a market study, and in order to attract people from other provinces, as well as from United States, it chose to set up its plant in Nova Scotia, instead of Quebec, even if it is a French firm.

Therefore, the problem in Canada is not a problem of language, but one of dollars and cents. Even if we fight in English or in French, it makes no difference, because money does not know any language. It is funny that money does not speak English, French, Ukrainian, Japanese or Chinese, since everyone understands the language of money. I can assure you that there is nobody in Canada who does not know the difference between a $10 and a $20 bill.

So long as credit is not used for the development of our natural resources, thus creating new truly Canadian industries, any hope of our regaining control of our economy is vain. Let us take concrete steps that will enable us to become masters in our house and also to protect private enterprise and personal initiative. It is not the government which gets a country going, but the initiative of its citizens. If there are enterprising, vigorous, determined people, the government, by helping them organize, will make it easier to regain control of our economy, in the best interests of the people, of the provinces as a whole, in a country which would at last become united for the benefit of all Canadians and provinces. Canada could then be given as an example of understanding, co-operation and good will.

Such is my hope for Canada's future, before the four corners of the country are set ablaze by scatterbrains eager to blow everything up because they have never had the courage to create or build anything.

Mr. Speaker, if Canadians realize the full potential for economic development of their country, we shall again become masters in our house. We shall then be able to ensure economic security and individual freedom for all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to be speaking on this bill. I indicated to the parliamentary secretary to the minister that I would like to do so and he reminded me at dinner time that I would be speaking tonight; then just as he was going away he felt it necessary to say to me "in favour of the government".

Mr. Woolliams: You always vote with them.
