A NEEDED LESSON.
There was no use in talking, they were too extravagant. There must be a stop put to it, and that at once.
Harvey Temple had made up his mind on that point. He had told Helen they must retrench some way, but the bills were just as large this month as last, and he proposed to see that there was a change.

He was a clerk on a moderate salary, and by the time the rent and servant's wages were paid there was little left.
The more he thought of it, the more it seemed to him that Helen ought to do her own work. He thought they could get along very well if they could save the price of the hired girl's wages and board. With only two in the family it was ridiculous to keep a girl. So he discharged the girl that night, telling her she could go for breakfast, and giving her a week's pay in place of the custodian's notice. But he did not say anything to Helen about it till the next morning. Helen never done housework, he knew, for her mother was rich, but as Helen had married a poor man, she must accommodate herself to his circumstances. He told Helen about it at breakfast. It was a lovely morning and their windows were open, and the windows of the next house, where Mr. Belden lived, and he, sitting by his window, heard every word as plainly as if they had been in the same room, but they did not know it.

"Helen," said Harvey, "the bills are larger than usual this month, and it is impossible to get ahead at all while things go on this way. We must try to do without a girl, I think, till we can see our way clear."

"Do without a girl?" echoed Helen.
"Why, Harvey, we must eat, you know, or do you intend to board?"
"No, I mean that you must try to do your own housework for a while. I hate to ask you to do this, but really I can see no other way."

"But I can't do housework, my dear boy; I don't know how."

"Well, you'll have to learn," he said, a little nettled. "Surely there is nothing hard about it. I should think any woman could do housework."

"Yes, I can learn, I suppose. I am not very stupid. But it takes time, I am afraid."

"Yes, and there's no time like the present," he answered, with a rather laugh attempt to be jocular. "When things have to be done, there is no time in delaying. I have already told Sarah to go. She leaves to-day."

"Mr. Temple was angry, but she did not show it. She answered quietly after a few moments:
"That was rather a hasty move, seems to me. Don't you think it would be a better plan to keep her another month and let me learn of her? I know she is absolutely nothing to do with it. It was a wrong way to bring up a girl, I know, and I regret it, but I know I am not capable of managing a house in my present state of ignorance."

"Oh, you will soon learn, and I won't mind your making a few failures at first.
It's easy enough to do housework. You get along all right. I am so sorry about it, but you should not have married a poor man, you know."

"It isn't that I mind doing the work, Harvey; it's that I don't know how. I think it's a little unkind of you to expect it all at once."

"Get a cook book, that will tell you what to do. Well, I must be off.
Don't get very much for lunch; I'll put up with about rations till you have learned my dear." He laughed carelessly, kissed her and hurried from the house feeling decidedly mean, yet sure that he had done his duty.

Helen sat still, thinking. They had only been married a year; the first six months they had boarded, then decided it would be cheaper to keep house, but it wasn't. Helen realized her own helplessness in the matter. She was the only daughter of a frivolous little woman, and her life had been spent in fashionable boarding houses. Helen's marriage to a poor, insignificant clerk was a great blow to the mother, who carried her blood to another city.
Helen, however, had good sense, and was perfectly willing to put up with her husband's poverty if she only knew how to do it. She was roused by Sarah's coming in, with an injured air, to say she was going. Helen mechanically said a few words and watched her go.

It was a trying situation to face, but she did not mean to shrink. She would do her duty cheerfully. She first did her daily work as she had been accustomed to do, arranged the parlor, fed her bird and watered her plants. Then remembering that she would have to wash the dishes, she went to the kitchen.
Positively she had never washed a dish in her life, but it does not require any special intelligence to wash dishes, so she felt secure. By the time they were all on the kitchen table there seemed to be a great many. When she went to get the hot water to begin operations, she was out of the kitchen, and the fire was out and the kettle cold.
Helen was dismayed. She had never thought of the fire. She looked in

It was a trying situation to face, but

the dishes, she went to the kitchen.
Positively she had never washed a dish
seemed to be a great many. When she
tions, she was out of the kitchen, and
the fire was out and the kettle cold.
the range anxiously, but it was a black and sooty mystery to her. She had never even anyone make a fire in a range.

She knew they used paper for kind-ling. So she took off her stove lids and carefully laid two newspapers into the range, she did not unfold them, either, but made a solid paper floor upon which she deposited all the coal the fire box would contain. Then she replaced the lids and attempted to light the paper.
It was hard work and she used up another newspaper and a large number of matches before the paper would burn.
The dampers were opened to heat the oven, so the draught was defective, but what did Helen know about danger?
When the paper really began to burn the smoke rolled out of every crack and crevice in the stove, and Helen was frightened. What had she done? She feared the neighbors would think the house was on fire and turn in an alarm.
She removed the stove lids again, but the smoke blinded her and brought tears.
She realized the full significance of the illustration "A NEEDED LESSON."

Meanwhile the stove continued to smoke.
Helen was frantic. Further any such an atmosphere was impossible, and she fled and lifted up her voice in a wail.
When she ventured out again the stove was calm. It no longer erupted forth smoke, but of fire there was no trace; the paper had burned out, leaving the coal unintended.

Helen did not care to repeat the smoking process, so wisely resolved to wait till Harvey came home and learn how to build a fire. The lunch hour was rapidly approaching and Harvey expected promptly.

Indignation replaced the tears, and she decided a cold lunch was good enough for any man who had acted as Harvey had done.

She searched the ladder, finding nothing eatable save crackers, butter, pickles, three cold potatoes and a slice of ham left from breakfast. She spread the table in a most elaborate manner, placed the sumptuous repast upon it, and sat down with fire in her eyes to wait the coming of her lord and master.

Meanwhile, Harvey was having a little surprise-party of his own.
Mr. Belden who lived next door, was Harvey's employer. He went to the warehouse a little earlier than usual, and sought his telegraph operator.

"Good morning, Mr. Johnson; have you any messages to send this morning?"
"No, sir. Banks and I have it arranged that he should send orders to me in the forenoon and I for him in the afternoon.
It's all receiving, mornings."

"Very good. Can you receive as well by sound if you are not at the instrument; in this little room, for instance?"
"Yes, sir, so long as I can hear, it will be all right."

"Just as a woman learns cooking," suggested Mr. Belden. Harvey stared at him, not certain that the man had been his wife, and Mr. Belden continued: "I happened to overhear your conversation with your wife this morning, and thought I would give you a practical illustration of your own ignorance. It does not seem to me that it was more absurd of me to expect you to go right to telegraphing, than for you to expect your wife to go right to cooking. Housework is a learned, young man, and must be learned with time, careful study and good teachers. Now go home and tell your wife that you don't know it all yet, but that you are not too old to learn, and that you will economize in some other way till she learns how to do housework, which she will probably do before you do telegraphing. You will take your usual work this afternoon. That's all."

He turned to his work again and Harvey went out. His ideas were considerably disarranged, and during his walk home he had time to rearrange them several times, but no matter how arranged the fact stood forth with startling clearness that he was several orders of magnitude of a fool, and Mr. Belden knew it. Helen greeted him with elaborate politeness, but he caught her in his arms exclaiming:
"Don't, Helen! Don't say anything to make me feel any smaller, or I shall become invisible."

He looked at the feast spread for him and laughed, saying: "Well, Nell, I must say you have learned your lesson better than I did. Just listen to my tale of woe." He told of the events of the morning, adding: "This is all I deserve for lunch, I admit, but I don't want to punish you any further, so let's go down town; then you have another girl at once and let us have peace."

Helen went smoothly after that.
Things in the house became a first class and housekeeper, and Harvey even showed a disposition to find fault with the simple question, "Can you telegraph?" restored him to his proper place at once, and their domestic life was serene.

General Intelligence.
AN IMPORTANT OFFICE.
To properly fill its office and functions, it is important that the blood be pure.
When it is in such a condition, the body is almost certain to be healthy. A complaint at this time is certain in some of the various forms. A slight cold develops the disease in the head. Droppings of corruption passing into the lungs bring on consumption. The only way to cure this disease is to purify the blood. The most obstinate cases of catarrh yield to the medicinal power of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Not only does Hood's Sarsaparilla do this, but it simply because it reaches the seat of disease, and by purifying and vitalizing the blood, removes the cause. Not only does Hood's Sarsaparilla do this, but it gives renewed vigor to the whole system, making it possible for good health to begin again.

WEDDING REHEARSAL.
New York, Nov. 5.—The Duke of Manchuria has said several times that he would attend a rehearsal of his wedding and he has kept his word.
The rehearsal took place yesterday at 3 o'clock at St. Thomas' church, and besides the Duke, his best man, Ivor C.
Guest, W. K. Vanderbilt and Brock Hall Cutting, one of the ushers, were present. It had been announced that the rehearsal would be held between two and four o'clock and as early as one o'clock a crowd began to gather at 53rd Street. At precisely 2.50 o'clock Mrs.
Vanderbilt's carriage, a landau drawn by a pair of English hackneys came down 5th avenue, and into 53rd street and drew up at the side entrance to the church. In the carriage were Mrs. and Miss Vanderbilt and W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr. A sight of the future Duchess of Manchuria gratified the curiosity of the crowd, which wanted to catch a glimpse of the Duke. While they waited for him to come the rehearsal was going along inside the church. The rehearsal was delayed some time waiting Bishop Littlejohn. As the Bishop did not appear after a long wait Mrs. Vanderbilt decided to go on with the mimic service.
The rehearsal, after the first trial, went off smoothly. While the rehearsal was going on, the Duke of Manchuria and his son Morris were making a shopping tour. The Duke arrived from Washington at seven o'clock yesterday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt will attend the wedding of their niece to the Duke of Manchuria, but will remain at the Breakers until the latter part of the month. Their only daughter is to be a bridesmaid at the Duke's wedding in New York.

Wm. K. Vanderbilt, his daughter, Miss Constance Vanderbilt, and the Duke of Manchuria, met at the home of Mrs.
Vanderbilt at 21 East 72nd street to-day and signed the papers effecting the marriage settlements. Mrs. Vanderbilt was present. It was learned on good authority that according to the terms of the settlement Miss Vanderbilt gets a dowry of $50,000.

THE DATE A FORGERY.
WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 6.—The Manitoba government has sprung a question in connection with the separate school controversy. Much has been made by Catholics since the agitation began of a bill of rights dated 1870, the title of the confederation, which declared that all the rights the Catholics then enjoyed were to be preserved. The Protestant controversy has been that not until several years later was any such declaration made. However, the document bearing the 1870 date has been in evidence and appeared genuine until now, when the government discloses that the date on this much discussed document is really 1873. By photographic process it is revealed that the figure 3 being plain in faded ink, while the cipher over it is in fresh and blacker ink. The somewhat startling revelation is made in a pamphlet issued over the signature of Mr. Fred C. Wade, barrister, of Winnipeg.

PREACHER AND TEACHER.
REV. CHAS. E. WHITCOMB, RECTOR ST.
MATTHEW'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH AND PARISH, ST. MATTHEW'S PARISH, SENIOR, HAMILTON, ONT., FORMER GREAT BELIEF FROM DR. AGNEW'S CATARRHAL POWDER.
The rector of St. Matthew's Church, Hamilton, Ont., acts a warm place in the hearts of his people, not alone because he is a faithful pastor, but for the work he has done for the children of Hamilton as principal of St. Matthew's parish school. As he has sent forth his influence through church and school, he extends in a wider way the good properties of that wonderful medicine, Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, by telling the people of Canada how much it has helped him. There is something unique in this medicine that secures favor wherever it is known, and which just now is making a host of friends because of the certain relief it gives in cases of hay fever, a trouble that afflicts many at this season of the year. As a cure for catarrhal trouble it has no equal.—Sold

A PLUCKY EXPLORER.
PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 5.—A cablegram was received in this city last evening from Dr. Donaldson Smith, dated Alger, Algeria, the 3rd inst. "Successful." This news established the safety of the plucky Philadelphian, who for the past year and a half has been exploring the wilder of Eastern Africa and at the same time puts an end to the doubt as to his safety, which has been felt by those interested in the expedition for the past few months. Dr. Smith entered Africa on the eastern coast at the third degree of north latitude a year ago last June, to push his way across the country of the Galla and Mese to the two lakes which have been recently discovered another expedition and from thence on to the two Nyanzas, his object being to carry out and complete the line of exploration from the lakes to the east coast, a distance of several hundred miles. Dr.
Smith was accompanied by about 150 Africans and at first by an Englishman, who was subsequently obliged to return to London. Dr. Smith sent back some specimens of the region's flora, after he had been on his expedition a few months, for the Geographical Society of London, and some months later was reported to be pushing on by another party who had met. As the progress of these explorations has been so rapid, it has been until the arrival of his cablegram last night. As the region which Dr.
Smith has traversed is at the present time represented by a blank space on the map of Africa, the significance of the explorer's brief message will be realized.

DEATH FROM HEART FAILURE.
THAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN AVOIDED BY THE USE OF DR. AGNEW'S CURE FOR THE HEART.
Promptness is the first essential in all cases of sickness, and especially in heart trouble. Minutes may mean everything.
The use of an effective medicine may mean the saving of a life, where the use of that possessing little power may simply leave death to take its course.
One great virtue of Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart is that it gives relief almost immediately, whether the case be that of organic or sympathetic heart disease. The numerous testimonials received by the proprietor of this medicine bear the strongest testimony to this fact. "I would not have been alive today had it not been for your medicine," is the cheering refrain of a large percentage of the letters received by the proprietor of this remedy.

SUPPOSED TO BE THE ADRIA.
A Halifax dispatch states that the schooner found by the steamer Bridle-water on Saturday last floating bottom up on Broad Cove, and towed into Mushers' Harbor, has been identified as the schooner Adria of St. John. All hands are supposed to be lost. The Adria is owned by Chatham to New York with laths. The last heard of the schooner was a letter from Captain Watson dated at Port Hawksburg, Oct.
27. He was then waiting for a chance to proceed. Capt. John Watson, the commander of the Adria, was a cousin of the owner. He was a Portland man and his wife and family reside on Main street.
The schooner made several voyages since she was here and probably got a new crew at Chatham. She always carried six men besides the captain. The Adria was built by Mr. Roberts, at Portland, in 1871, and was 194 tons register. She was at one time a brigantine, but was converted into a three-masted schooner some years ago. There was no insurance on her, but the cargo of laths, shipped by Messrs. J. H. Scamell & Co., was insured in Cowie & Edwards' office.

The testimony of thousands who have used South American Kidney Cure.
A friend in need is a friend indeed.— It has been said the way to test our friend's is to try them. It is so with a medicine. So many medicines are tried, but without waiting. This is never the case with South American Kidney Cure, it is kidney trouble that is the ailment.
It does not cure anything else. There is not a case of kidney trouble, however, beit ever so distressing, where quick relief will not be given, and by a little patience altogether removed. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it, and what is here said is what thousands say who have used this medicine. Sold by thing could have been more indicative of heart-break and dejection than the attitude of the boy as he wound his arms about the shaggy neck of Wag, the dog, and gave full vent to his grief.

Two weeks before, had trouble come upon him, he would have given vent to his feelings in oaths; because, two weeks before, no one had told him there was anything wrong in so doing. But now it was different. In that fortnight Mrs. Conway had worked wonders upon this wailing, little stranger within her gates. She stood beside him now, hearing his own trouble and sharing his. She longed to keep this boy always with her, but her husband had consented to his presence for two weeks only, under protest.

"Folks that can't bring up their own child properly have no right to try their hand on other people's," he said.

Mr. Conway and Joe—that was all the name he had—had talked it over and concluded it was a hopeless case, but that maybe next summer he might come back again for awhile.

Mr. Conway brought the team around to take Joe to the station. "Here, Joe," said Mrs. Conway. "I am going to give you this picture of Hugh, when he was a boy about like you. I give it to you because you love Wag so much, and Wag's picture is here, too. And remember, whatever comes, you are to be good and true and honest; and sometime I am sure we shall meet again."

The boy took the picture and pulled the hat low over his eyes, and strode away without a word, but Mrs. Conway understood. She sat on the porch long after the wagon and its occupants had disappeared from view, and wondered why it must be so, that her own son would not, and this child could not, stay with her.

When but a child, Hugh Conway had shown a decided tendency towards wildness, and two years before, at the age of 16, he had "disappeared." That was the word Mrs. Conway always used when she spoke of it, though that was not often, for Mrs. Conway never wished to speak of the matter, and Mrs. Conway shrank from discussing family affairs with the neighbors.

When Joe came he was such a comfort. She cooked for him Hugh's favorite dishes, told him the stories her own boy had liked to hear, took him into her confidence, and talked to him about Hugh, and how she still hoped and believed he would come back sometime, like the prodigal. And when untutored Joe asked if the "Prodigal" was one of her boys, too, she told him the story and its application, and that opened the way for more teachings from the same grand source. So Joe stopped swearing and fibbing, and drank in the truths as only the very thirsty can drink. Once or twice way I had come in a roundabout way that Hugh was in New York, and Mrs. Conway and Joe often discussed the possibilities of Joe's falling in with him. "If you do, you'll try to send him home, won't you, Joe?" Mrs. Conway would ask; and Joe promised faithfully. It was hard for both when the time came to part. Not so Mr. Conway. It was a torment to him to see the boy, with fishing rod in hand, and Wag affectionately trotting at his heels, go tramping over the same paths his only son had once made beautiful in his eyes. The boy was respectful and well-mannered enough but he felt that it would be a relief to have him gone.

It was raining and toward evening when Joe reached his old haunts. His cries were a trifling disappointment that he did not talk more freely about his job. But there was a lump in Joe's throat that refused to be swallowed, and as he could not talk much with it there, and did not want the "folks" to know about it, he kept still.

After a time he showed them Wag's picture, and was pleased that it received favorable comment. Hugh's picture was ignored and the interest centred in the dog. But through this interest he managed to enlist the boys' sympathy sufficiently to get a promise that they would "keep a lookout" for any trace of Hugh. The interest of the others, however, soon began to flag, and the matter was forgotten by all but Joe.

"I'd rather find him and send him back to her than go myself, most," (adding the last word honestly), "cause she'd rather have him, of course, than me. I wish there'd be room for us both."

The days pass into weeks and the weeks into months before we see Joe again, and then we find him in one of the white beds in the convalescent ward of a city hospital. He had been trampled under a team and all but lost his life, in a reckless endeavor to cross a crowded street. Joe had not realized at the time, however, that it was reckless; his eyes were fixed upon one object, and he had forgotten himself. He was following a young man, whom he imagined resembled his picture of the boyish Hugh, and the next he realized was that he was in St. Mary's Hospital.

In the cot next his was a young man, much younger than he really looked, because of the lines dissipation had written on his thin face. He had been stabbed in a drunken brawl, and had been very near death's door. Now, in these days of convalescence he was reviewing his brief life. A failure, he told himself, and he less than 20. He was conscious of a wave of homesickness, but he was ashamed to think of going back to the parents he had disgraced. He remembered the teachings of those parents, and shuddered at his condition, spiritually. He had a desire to begin a different life, but he knew he could not do so. He knew he could not do so. He knew he could not do so.

Joe was in radiant spirits that morning. Wag's picture had been saved and was an unfailing source of comfort. The pleasant-faced nurse came through the ward and stopped at Joe's bedside.

"And now I have come to have you tell me that story about the picture," she said.

Joe gladly told it all: About the trip to the country, the fishing in the brook, the horseback rides, about Wag's many virtues, and dear, motherly Mrs. Conway. At last he told of Hugh, and his long search for him, and how he believed he was on his way to find him, if only he had not been so careless and got hurt just then.

"Oh," said Joe, warming with his subject, "How could Hugh stay away from such a mother, and—And Wag?"

The words came from a hard-faced young man in the next cot. The startled nurse looked around to see him sitting up in bed, his face aglow with interest.

"Would you let me see that picture?" he asked, as the nurse pushed him down to the pillow. Joe felt complimented. He watched the young man closely as he scanned the picture. There was nothing in his face suggestive of Hugh, and the thought did not enter Joe's mind, but he hoped he admired Wag. He passed the picture back without a word, much to Joe's disappointment. But the nurse, with her broader experience, was sure that Joe's loving, patient search was finished.

That night, as she made her final rounds of the ward, the young man spoke to her and asked if she would write a letter for him.

The nurse fulfilled his directions and enclosed a letter of her own in behalf of little Joe.

When Mr. and Mrs. Conway appeared at the hospital a few days later they found their son's recovery that they were allowed to take him home with them. But what pleased the nurse most of all was that they decided there was "room for Joe," just as he had whistled—M. Vaughn in Our Young People.

FARM NOTES.
To milk a cow "clean" has always been the ambition of the milker, and when that end was attained he was perfectly satisfied. But to milk a cow in a clean way, although of equal importance, does not in a large percentage of cases, come within the scope of my consideration.

Undoubtedly weeds at one time had utility to stimulate farmers to work hard so as to destroy them. But nowadays the best farmers do not wait for weeds to appear before they set the cultivator going. The time to kill a weed and have it do the greatest good to the soil is just after the seed has germinated. But cultivation does much more than destroy weeds. It mixes the soil, pulverizes hard lumps, and enables the soil to hold a great amount of air in contact with its moist surfaces. This causes fermentation in the soil and develops carbonic acid gas which makes mineral plants so useful.

Every time a rain falls all the tilled land should be cultivated. There are many wet rains through the summer which wet only the surface of the soil, and it is not cultivated, under the moisture speedily evaporates and is lost. This cultivation has another effect in developing nitrate in the soil. Whenever vegetable matter in the soil needs only to be decomposed and manure elements set free. There is also on soil that is cultivated frequently a deposit of moisture by the atmosphere which it contains, and this being really a dew, always contains more ammonia than does ordinary rain water.

The natural grasses, when cut for hay, are generally spread and dried as rapidly as possible in order to secure them in the best possible condition. The same method is not applicable to the clover crop. It requires a longer time to cure properly, and if exposed to the scorching sun it is injured more than the natural grasses, since its succulent leaves and tender blossoms are quickly browned and lose their sweetness in measure, and are themselves liable to be wasted in hauling over. Many prefer curing in the coil. Now clover when dry and free from dew; let it wilt, and the same day as it is mown fork it into coils which will weigh from forty to fifty pounds when fit for the barn. Do not rake and roll, as that will compress it too much. Place in the rain according to the weather, but it may be safely mowed away while the heads and stalks are comparatively green and fresh. When fit to cart, the green stalks will be found to be destitute, or nearly so, of sap, as the sap has candied and the clover will keep. On the day of carting turn the coils over, expose the bottom to the sun an hour or so, and to each ton of hay as it goes into the mow add four to six quarts of salt.

It is often desirable to know how to keep a piece of ice from melting for a considerable time; and a western journal tells how it may be done. WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.) Washington, Nov. 5, 1895.
A significant fact, as bearing on Mr. Cleveland's attitude toward Mr. Olney's announced "foreign policy," has just been disclosed. It is already known that work on the naval vessel under construction and on the Ordnance has been hastened. It is now stated that this hastening of the work was by the direct personal order of Mr. Cleveland. It is an unusual thing for the President to interfere in matters of this sort, they being left entirely to the Secretary. The anxiety to have the vessels completed and fitted for actual service as soon as possible, to the extent of personally directing that the work be hastened, is therefore quite significant. Interest is added by the fact that, by a special order of the Secretary of the Navy, the season's work of the Naval War College was directed to the study of a plan of defense of the New England coast against a naval force such as Great Britain could send against us. The work on the New England coast was completed, and the answer as to the best mode of defense was worked out and will be kept secret.
A project is on foot to transfer the Pension Office to the War Department, and to this end a bill will, it is said, be introduced in Congress at an early date. Some such step was advocated in the last Congress, but never was made an issue. It is now said to be the intention of the promoters of the movement to push it vigorously forward in both the House and Senate. Grand Army men are said to be opposed to the change, and the attempt to carry it through the House and Senate will probably be contested. They prefer to wait, in the expectation that the Pension Office will soon be under a new administration. To place the Pension Office under the War Department would virtually remove it permanently from the political topic. Grand Army men believe that the Pension Bureau can be better administered as a part of the Interior Department than as an adjunct of the Department of War, and will contest the change on general principles.
The consensus of opinion seems to be, in considering the question of the Presidential nominations for next year, that the party will be the predominant influence in the convention of the Republicans. In this connection it is asserted that Senator Allison, of Iowa, next to Mr. Harrison, is perhaps the best Republican Western figure. The influence around him is friendly to Harrison, and he is also the natural heir to the support of the old Blaine element in the party. Mr. Allison is a most careful, conservative, and adroit politician. He is regarded as a statesman in the literal sense of the word, although not even his most intimate friends would class him as a great man. Gen. Logan once said of the Senator that if the Senate would be covered with eggs Mr. Allison was the only man in the chamber who could walk with full length without breaking one of them. The extreme conservatism of his character might suggest that he was timid. He is not a man who would ever break away from right lines of conservatism, but nevertheless within the lines of a fixed policy he would stand immovable.
The report of the Commissioner General of Immigration shows that during the last fiscal year 238,336 immigrants arrived in the United States, which is the smallest immigration since 1870. The report says that as a rule the class of immigrants who came were of a hardy character, able to earn a livelihood. It is estimated that the revival of business will induce an immigration next year exceeding 300,000.

ANOTHER DISCOVERY.
Of Interest to Bicycle Riders.
A well known bicycle rider has made a discovery that will be good news to all who locomote on the wheel. He says:
"Since I first began to ride a wheel, which is several years ago, I have been subject to more or less chafing and irritation. Sometimes when heated the itching inside my legs would be so severe that I would feel compelled to forego riding for a time. Nothing that I tried did any material good until my attention was drawn to an advertisement of Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching of the skin. I tried it and almost from the moment it touched the skin the itching stopped. I also find its occasional use prevents chafing. Further evidence of the efficacy of this preparation is given by Chas. Roe, former Central Press Agency, Toronto, who was troubled with itching skin of the most aggravated kind. He was the skin became heated during sleep from too much clothing, would wake up with absolute pain from digging into the flesh with his nails. Chase's Ointment gave relief from the first application and permanently cured. Price 60c."

Weak and Nervous

Whenever the body has been weakened by disease, it should be built up by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read this:
"About two years ago I suffered with a very severe attack of inflammation of the bowels. When I began to recover I was in a very weak and nervous condition, and suffered intensely with neuralgia pains in my head, which caused loss of sleep, and having no appetite."
Became Very Thin
and weak. Fortunately a friend who had used Hood's Sarsaparilla with great benefit, kindly recommended me to try it. I did so and a perfect cure has been effected. I am now as well as I ever was, and could not be without Hood's Sarsaparilla in my house for anything." Mrs. G. Carr, 245 Manning Ave., Toronto, Ont.

CO-OPERATION.

An Offer of Momentous Interest.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST WEEKLY WITH THE UNION ADVOCATE FOR $1.75.

Our readers will be pleased to know that we have made special arrangements by which the UNION ADVOCATE and the FAMILY HERALD, two weekly papers of most excellent quality, may be had for $1.75.

The Family Herald is the greatest weekly family newspaper in the world, and has been wonderfully successful. So greatly has it grown that it is now published in sixteen pages, and even now it is hard to get all the good things in. No family can afford to do without the Family Herald, for not only does it amuse and instruct but it returns its subscription price many times over.

All the successful farmers, breeders and dairymen endorse it because they find it a source of instruction that is precious to them, and which they can get nowhere else. Home-wives find it a valuable aid to their housekeeping. The young folks are enraptured with the pages which contain matter to interest every member of the family.

This year every subscriber will be given as a premium a lovely picture called "Little Queenie," an artistic gem which every one will want, but which can be got only through the Family Herald.

Every subscriber, at no cost to himself, has the life insurance for $500 against death by railway accidents.

You can get the Family Herald with its premium and life insurance, and the LIFE ADVOCATE for $1.75. This is an offer so generous that everybody should accept it.

Simple copies may be sent to the Advocate Office, or they will be forwarded upon application to the Family Herald Publishing Co., Montreal.

CONSUMPTION CONQUERED.

A P. E. ISLAND LADY RESTORED TO HEALTH.

Attacked with a Hacking Cough, Loss of Appetite and General Feeling of Lassitude—Pink Pills Restored Her Health After Doctors Failed.

From the Charlotteville Patriot.

Times without number have we read of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but generally the testimonials telling the tale but laid the scene in some of the other provinces. This time, however, the matter is brought directly home, and the testimony comes from a much respected and Christian woman. Mrs. Sarah Strickland, now residing in the suburbs of Charlotteville, has been married many years, and blessed with a large family and although never enjoying a robust constitution had, until a year ago, been in comparatively good health. About that time she began to feel "run down," her blood became thin and a general feeling of lassitude took possession of both her mind and body. Her friends and family viewed with alarm the gradual development of her illness, and when a cough—at first inconstant, but afterwards almost constant, especially at night—set in, doctors were summoned and everything that loving, tender care and medical skill could do was resorted to in order to save the afflicted one.

At last, after many months of suffering, she was induced by a friend to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Through utter discouragement, and almost disgusted with medicine she yielded more in a friendly way than in a hopeful spirit. After using the pills for a short time a gleam of hope, a wish to get well, again took possession of her and the treatment was cheerfully continued. It was no false feeling, but a genuine hope: nature was making to reassert itself, and before many boxes were used the family were joking their mother on her appetite, her disappearing cough and the bright she had given them. The use of the Pink Pills was continued for some time longer and now Mrs. Strickland's elastic step and general, excellent health, would lead you to imagine that you were gazing upon a different woman, not one who had been mangled from the very jaws of death. She was never in better health and spirits, and no matter what other she is in her belief that Pink Pills saved her life and restored her to her wonted health and strength.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are an unfailing cure for all troubles resulting from poverty of the blood or slurred nerves, and where given a fair trial they never fail to react like that above related. Sold by all dealers, or sent postpaid at 50 cents a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y. See that the registered trade mark is on all packages.
