Life's Ebb.
All talk of the past is idle,
The light of my days is o'er;
Nor penance nor prayer can bridle
The shades that haunt my door.
They come at the dawn of morning,
They come with the closing day;
At night they come without warning,
And they take my rest away.
I stand on the sand that's stealing
Adown to the soundless sea,
And sand and sea are revealing
What life has done unto me.
The wave of my life fond leaping
The brow of my care to calm,
Away from my heart is creeping,
Like notes from a dying psalm.
O soon will my world be wafted
To a moaning cave in the wind;
But the good I have engrained
Will ever remain behind.

Interesting Story.

WIRED LOVE.
A ROMANCE
DOTS AND DASHES.
BY
ELLA CHEEVER THAYER.

"The old, old story,"—in a new, new way.
"Oh, yes!" replied Jo, perching himself on the arm of a rocking-chair close to Cyn, and appropriating a wooden cover for a plate as he spoke. "He and Quimby did me the honor to call on me to-day, but left for metal more attractive—whether the dinner or you ladies, I will not pretend to say!"
"It was we ladies, your dreadful matter-of-fact creature!" said Nattie. "Their presence at the dinner was quite accidental; Cyn and I started out for a little private feast, and behold the result! Bohemian enough for even you, isn't it, Jo?"
"Exactly what I like!" replied Jo—and very close indeed to Cyn had Jo managed to get, but then the table was very small—"But the idea of you two girls proposing to selfishly enjoy such a feast all alone!"
"I begin to think we did make a mistake, in not making preparations for, and inviting a larger party," acquiesced Cyn.
"I wonder if Miss Rogers has overcome her anger towards offending me?" questioned Mr. Stanwood, looking at her roguishly, as she helped him to a second piece of pie.
"My anger towards you?" repeated Nattie, coloring.
"Yes; you did not want me to accept Miss Archer's most kind invitation, and remain; now confess, did you?" he asked, laughing.
Nattie was rather embarrassed at this instance of the young gentleman's perceptive faculties; and not exactly able to refute the charge, was somewhat at loss how to reply.
"I—I do not get acquainted quite so easily as Cyn," she stammered.
"Except on the wire!" Cyn added.
"Except on the wire," repeated Nattie, with a smile; then meeting the curious glance of Mr. Stanwood, it suddenly flashed upon her that he was the same young gentleman who had called at the office, and inquired about the tariff to Washington, for the sole object of talking, as she then supposed, "I have seen you before!" she exclaimed, on the impulse of the moment.
"That sounds like a novel! what is coming now?" ejaculated Jo, with his mouth full of pie.
Mr. Stanwood laughed very heartily at Nattie's exclamation, and asked in reply,
"Have you just discovered it? I recognized you the moment I entered the room to-day. That is one reason I was so anxious to remain. She snubbed me most outrageously," he added to Cyn, in explanation, "and simply because I tried to be agreeable to her one day at the office."

"But you had no business to be agreeable!" said Nattie, also laughing, and not at all displeased.
"Of course you had not," interrupted Jo.
"I never talk to strangers," concluded Nattie.
"Except, perhaps, on the wire, as you said just now!" he suggested.
"You have caught her now!" said Cyn gayly, as she peeled an orange.
"But you will never do even that again, will you, Nat?"
"One such experience is quite enough for me," Nattie replied.
"Still the next one might have red hair, or smell of musk!" Jo remarked.
"He might be even worse, though!" interposed the penitent on the stool.
With a strangely puzzled look, Mr. Stanwood glanced from one to the other, observing which, Cyn said,
"You don't understand, of course. May I tell him, Nat?"
"Ah! well—yes!" Nattie replied with an air of vexed resignation. "I suppose I may as well make up my mind to be laughed at on account of that story forever and a day."
"I am as much of a victim as you, for I was intensely interested in the unknown," laughed Cyn; then turning to Mr. Stanwood, she went on. "It appears telegraph operators have a way of talking together over the wire, knowing little about each other, and nothing at all of their mutual personal appearance. In this manner, Nat became acquainted with a young man whom she knew as 'C' and grew, to speak mildly, interested in him—Now, Nat, you know you did—and so, as I remarked previously, did I—we were introduced over the wire. In fact, he seemed everything that was nice and agreeable, and if we did not actually fall in love with him—you see, I am sharing your glory all I can, Nat—it is a wonder."
"If this 'C' knew the impression he made on two young ladies, he would certainly feel complimented," Mr. Stanwood, who was playing with his knife and fork, here interrupted.
"Fortunately, he never really knew," replied Cyn, while Nattie looked somewhat gloomily at her goblet of coffee, in memory of the romance that collapsed.
"To continue this over true tale!—Thus far all was mysterious, enchanting, romantic. But now comes the dark sequel. One day 'C' called—bodily."
Mr. Stanwood started and looked quickly up at Nattie, who, without observing his glance, murmured contentedly,
"Odious creature!"
At this he turned with a perplexed look again to Cyn, who proceeded,
"Yes, an odious creature, he proved to be. Only think, he had red hair, and dreadful teeth, smelt of musk, wore cheap jewelry, and, in short, was decidedly vulgar!"
"What!" exclaimed Mr. Stanwood, staring at her as if he thought she was bereft of her senses. "What!" and he dropped his knife and fork, and pushed his chair back privately, to the alarm of the Duchess, who was immediately behind.
Cyn appeared astonished at his vehemence; but Nattie, too occupied with thoughts of this newly revived grievance to observe it, repeated,
"Red hair, all bear's grease, and everything to match!"
"Do you mean to tell me," Mr. Stanwood asked, looking at her earnestly, and speaking with great energy, "that a person, such as you describe, called on you and represented himself to be 'C'?"
"Exactly," Nattie replied; "first telling me he was going away to substitute for a day, and then coming upon me in all his odiousness."
"The story seems to interest you," added Cyn, glancing at him scrutinizingly.

Mr. Stanwood looked at her, at Nattie, mused a moment, and then burst into a laugh, equal even to the one Quimby had caused.
"It does interest me," he said, as soon as he could speak; "very much, indeed. It is really the best joke—considered from one point—I ever heard. And, of course, after that day, 'C' was cut?"
"Indeed he was," Nattie replied, scornfully.
"The circuit was broken after that!" Jo added, technically.
"And a romance was spoiled in the first act," added Cyn, rising from the now vanished feast.
"Poor 'C'!" said Mr. Stanwood, following her example. "Really, Miss Archer, I have enjoyed this dinner better than any I ever had, and the climax is the best of all!"
"I wish we might have such a feast every day!" said Jo, regretfully.
"And, except the damage—I don't refer to any done myself, I—I am used to it, you know—I quite agree with you about the dinner. And as for the joke—I—I—really it was quite a serious one to Miss Rogers, at the time, I assure you. Bless my soul! You should have seen how—how blue she was for a week, you know!" said Quimby.
Nattie colored as Mr. Stanwood glanced at her, and knowing he could not but notice the blush, thought angrily, "How dreadful it is to have such honest, outspoken people as Quimby about!"
"Come, Nat, and help me clear away the remains," said Cyn. Apparently glad enough was Nattie to obey, and turn aside her burning face from the sight of those merry brown eyes.
In a very few moments the banqueting hall was transformed to a parlor, with only Quimby sucking an orange on his stool that he refused to leave, Jo cracking nuts, and the Duchess eating a fig, to tell of what had been.

CHAPTER X.

THE BROKEN CIRCUIT RE-UNITED.
Mr. Stanwood sat down at the table where Nattie was looking over Cyn's album, and seemed to have become very thoughtful; Cyn meanwhile busied herself in dressing an ugly gash the ever-unfortunate Quimby had managed to inflict on his hand.
Suddenly Nattie was disturbed by Mr. Stanwood drumming with a pencil on the marble top of the table, and glancing up casually, observed his eyes fixed upon her with a peculiar expression, and at the same moment her ear seemed to catch a familiar sound. With a slight start she listened more attentively to his seemingly idle drumming. Yes—whether knowingly, or by accident, he certainly was making dots and dashes, and what is more, was making N's!
"I will soon ascertain if he means it or not!" thought Nattie, and seizing a pair of scissors, the only adaptable instrument handy, she drummed out, slowly, on account of the imperfectness of her impromptu key—pretending all the time to be entirely absorbed in the album.
"Are you an operator?"
Mr. Stanwood, in his turn, seemingly deeply engaged in the contents of a book, immediately drummed in response,
"Yes."
Nattie felt the color come into her face.
"Oh, dear!" she thought, "and Cyn told him that ridiculous story! Every operator in town will know it now." Then with the scissors she asked,
"Why didn't you say so? Where is your office?"
"I have none now," the pencil answered, while Cyn, glancing across the room, wondered to see the two so studious, and unsuspectingly asked Quimby if he supposed they were practising for a drum corps? After a few meaningless dots, the pencil went on,

"A little girl at B m was dreadfully sold one day!"
The album Nattie held fell from her hands as she stared petrified at her vis-a-vis, who kept his eyes on his book with the most innocent expression imaginable, one that even a Chinaman could not have equalled. Where could he have heard those words, once so familiar! A moment's thought gave her the most probable key.
"You are in the main office of this city, and have heard me talking with 'C'!" she wrote, as fast as the scissors would let her.
"No, to the first of your surmise," came from the pencil, "and yes to the last."
"What office were you in?" the scissors asked.
"X p," responded the pencil.
"What! with 'C'?" asked the scissors, and if ever there was a pair of excited scissors, these were the ones.
"Well—yes," replied the pencil with provoking slowness. "Don't you 'C' the point? Can't you 'C' that you did not 'C' the 'C' you thought you did 'C' that day?"
Nattie's breath came fast, and her hand trembled so she could not hold the scissors. With a crash they dropped on the table, making one loud, long dash. But the imperturbable pencil went on calmly,
"It was all a mistake. I am—'C'!"
Diadaining scissors and pencil, Nattie started up, exclaiming vehemently,
"What do you mean? it can't be possible!"
The consternation of Cyn, who was just informing Quimby that his wound would do very well now, the horror of the patient, and the surprise of Jo Norton at this emphatic and accountable outburst from the hitherto so silent Nattie was indescribable.
"Good gracious, Nat! what in the world is the matter?" cried Cyn, starting up and bringing the bottle of liniment she held in violent contact with Quimby's head, a circumstance that even the victim did not notice, so absorbed was he in amazement.
At Nattie's exclamation, Mr. Stanwood threw aside his book, pencil, and innocent countenance together, and regardless of any one but her, sprang to his feet, advanced with both hands extended, and shining eyes, saying,
"I mean just what I said, it is possible!"
Hardly knowing what she did, utterly confused and bewildered, Nattie placed her hand in the two that clasped it, while Cyn stared with distended eyes, Quimby with wide-open mouth, and Jo gave a long whistle. Cyn was first to recover, and began to scold.
"Well," she exclaimed, "this is a pretty piece of business, never yet played on any stage, I should think! Nat, will you, or will somebody have the goodness to explain this sudden and extraordinary scene?"
"I—I don't understand!" Nattie murmured faintly, and looking half-frightened, and half-seechingly at Mr. Stanwood, who in response smiled, and said, with a firmer clasp of the hand he still held,
"I will explain in a very few moments how it is possible that I am the real 'C'!"
"What!" screamed Cyn.
"What!" shouted Jo.
"What!" absolutely yelled Quimby.
"There has been a mistake!" Mr. Stanwood said, now looking at Cyn.
"A mistake!" she repeated excitedly. "What do you mean? You 'C' our 'C' of the wire? Nonsense you are joking!"
"Yes, he is joking!" Quimby retorted, but his teeth chattered as he spoke. "He is a dreadful fellow to joke, Clem!" cried Cyn and Nattie, in the same breath.

EDITORIAL NOTES.
In another column will be found a letter from Mr. L. W. Kimball on the subject of fruit raising, which will no doubt be of interest to our readers. We would be pleased to hear the opinion of any of our readers on this or any other like subject.

We desire to thank our many patrons who have so kindly helped us by sending in their subscriptions during the past few weeks, particularly as we have never made any demand on them. We are going to make our paper interesting if it is in our power and will be very grateful for any help we may receive.

If you are not already a subscriber for the American Agriculturist, you cannot do better than to become one at once. We have received the April number and do not hesitate to pronounce it, if possible, superior to any previous issue. The table of contents shows that it treats of nearly 100 different topics, embracing everything that pertains to the farm and garden, and contains information that is worth to any person having the least interest in farming operations many times the price of a year's subscription. Don't forget that you can obtain this valuable paper and the ACADIAN one year for only $1.50.

RECIPROCITY.
Reciprocity of trade with the United States would probably be the greatest boon that could be given to the people of this County, as it undoubtedly is the natural market for our surplus crops. With the Annapolis Railway and a direct line of steamers from Annapolis to Boston, freights can be sent easily and cheaply from any part of the Annapolis Valley to Boston during the winter months and from the many ports on the Basin of Minas and the South Shore during the summer and autumn; and the products we have to dispose of are readily taken by our American neighbors, whilst we in return require an equal amount from them in some other form. The great drawback to this interchange of commodities is the enormous duties with which each article is met on either side of the line, and, in some cases, when prices are nominal, virtually prohibit exportation and importation to the mutual disadvantage of them and us both.

Since the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States, Canadian statesmen have, on more occasions than one, made overtures for the renewal of the treaty and have probably pressed the matter in such a way as to lead our neighbors to suppose that the favors were all on our side, and they therefore refused to again enter into reciprocal trade relations with us. The fact that the Americans persisted in refusing to again enter into any reciprocity of commodities with us was doubtless the first incentive on the part of the Government of this Country to formulate a protective tariff similar to that across the border and hence our so-called N. P., which has now become an established institution in this country which it will be difficult to repeal. It is extremely doubtful if there could be found any intelligent or patriotic person in the whole of Canada who would (if he could) change in any considerable measure the present protective tariff of the country, although there are many who for some reason or another try to persuade us to believe the great thing needful to bring better times and prosperity to every one would be free trade, irrespective of what our American neighbors might do. Were our public men when in the dark shades of opposition as patriotic as their American contemporaries, who, by the way, are invariably one on the question of their country, no matter what the feelings, politically or otherwise, might be, we should in our opinion be much more respected by our neighbors and very much nearer the desired reciprocity of trade with them; but so long as we find many of our influential public men making such derogatory statements in reference to our own country and its resources, backed and intensified by a portion of the Canadian press, we cannot expect much in that direction. As a proof of the baneful influence of such sentiment, we quote the following from the Montreal Herald (independent):

"In conversation with one of our reporters, Mr. Richie stated that while at the United States capital he had met a great many representative men with whom he had talked about Canada, its resources and possibilities. Touching upon the question of a policy of reciprocity between the two countries, he found that a general feeling prevailed—based upon the character which Canada received from some of its public men—that a reciprocity treaty was hardly necessary, as in the course of a short time the country must come to the United States government for relief from their present condition."

The above is the testimony of a thoroughly intelligent and impartial United States capitalist and is worthy of full credence.

CORRESPONDENCE.

INTERESTING TO FRUIT GROWERS.

To the Editors of the ACADIAN.
The farmers of Nova Scotia, especially of the Annapolis Valley, are just beginning to consider the advantage and profit of putting in more than one crop; for when that fails, by low prices or by failures to raise a crop, then they are all poor indeed as witness the past two years, that those who did not have any fruits to sell had a hard time to pay their taxes. There is nothing so profitable as the growing of fruits. Apples, pears, plums, and cherries pay a big return on the amount invested. There is nothing that will repay one much more than to raise apples at $1.50 per bushel or 50c per bush. The cost is small and the labor light in comparison with any other farm crop. Yet the growing of small fruits such as strawberries, currants, gooseberries, raspberries, and blackberries, will pay much better, and since the introduction of the new variety, which are three times larger, of superior quality, and far more productive. Our statement may appear extravagant to those unacquainted with these new varieties. I know of parties that have from one to one hundred acres of small fruits in bearing that make a net profit annually of over $500 per acre. The fruit can be grown as cheap, if not cheaper, than potatoes, and the net profit ten times more. Farmers in this beautiful valley should not depend on one crop (potatoes) if they want to keep the wolf from their door and secure a competency, or to become rich. There is no need of any being poor as all may become rich. I can tell of a family that a few years ago was not adverse to accept old clothes to keep out the cold, and cold victuals to appease hunger, that last year from a small patch of land of small fruit, took more cash than many a well-to-do farmer did from his farm of 200 acres. What this Blue Nose did all can do. There ought to be 10,000 acres of small fruits put out in this valley this spring and that would be but the beginning of the small fruit business. If there is 100 acres planted it is as much as may be expected, as the plodding farmers here want to do just as their fathers did before them. It is always difficult to get the people out of the old ruts of thoughts and actions of their ancestors. A very few go ahead, active spirits, take John A. Coleman, Wm. McNeil, Geo. V. Rand, Alex. A. Jones, Geo. D. Pineo, and Chas. Thomas have led out into the vast sea of speculation and doubt—now no longer one of doubt but of certainty and profit. The business of raising small fruits can't be overdone, as when they can't be sold fresh at remunerative prices, then they can be evaporated and canned, and then they will pay a big investment. Yet it will be years before we will have to resort to those processes to dispose of the fruit raised here, as the demand for the fresh fruit increases faster than the supply. We prophesy that the time is not far distant when there will be an Evaporating & Canning Factory at nearly every depot from Windsor to Annapolis. For the outlay and labor there is nothing that will pay better than black raspberries. They always find a ready sale fresh from 10 to 20 cents per quart, and when evaporated sell from 30 to 50 cents per lb. They outrank any dried fruit. It takes four pounds to make one pound dried. The vines should be planted 3x6 feet, 2,400 to the acre. A plantation will last 12 years. The vines never sucker, so it is not much labor to cultivate them. The old wood should be removed each year, as the last year's vines bear the fruit, and the vines should be pinched and cut back to three feet and staked. Should never be allowed to bend to the ground unless you want to propagate new vines. Mr. Jones, of Waterville, has 1/2 acre in bearing, and readily found a sale for all he could send to Halifax at 15c per quart, and could have sold ten times more had he the fruit. I never saw larger or finer berries, every farmer who can spare a few dollars should plant from one quarter to one acre, then in a few years we should see this Valley throughout its entire length prospering and blooming like a garden.

A SEMIPROPHESY.
HALF FULFILLED AND ONLY HALF.

To the Editors of the ACADIAN.
There was a lively and humorous article in a late number of the ACADIAN headed "An Aesthetic Village" (see the number for November 21). It described some real or imaginary locality, where aesthetic tastes rebelled against the noise and other disagreeable accompaniments of factories and machine shops, and especially of those establishments in which steam engines are found; and it showed how successful the gentle and cultured inhabitants of the place had been in excluding and banishing all such anti-aesthetic occupations and operations from the village. The writer, rather unfortunately however for his representations, had to confess that there were two printing offices in the place, which with their printers' ink and noisy presses, are not particularly aesthetic objects. He did the best he could under the circumstances; he hinted that the printing offices might, probably before very long, be notified by the community to quit, and seek other fields of operation, and he virtually prophesied that such would be the case. The semi-prophesy of the present writer has been already partially fulfilled, for one of the offices has been closed, and press, editor, sub-editor, printers, and printers imps have all been compelled to pack up, bag and baggage, and decamp. But it must not be understood that it was the aesthetic tastes of the villagers alone, as "Aisthetikos" might represent, which caused this stampede; and therefore as a truthful chronicler, I must here qualify the prophesy of the writer, referred to. There were other reasons for the fiasco of the paper, whose fate was by an exercise of the imagination foretold. First the paper had its habitation in the village by no art of the villagers themselves. Next the soil was not congenial, for the villagers were not in sympathy with the objects and principles of the paper. Again everything was mismanaged from the first. An old broken-down third or tenth-hand press, which had been obtained in a manner more than questionable, was to do the printing. A figure-head was expected to perform duty as editor. The employees of the establishment were hired at starvation wages and paid by dribble. Articles solicited and furnished were acknowledged "with thanks," or without, and with nothing more substantial or satisfactory to their writers. The printing was badly done, no blame to the printers, and the contents of the sheet were, with the exception of the advertisements, selections, and echoes, nil, or at best diluted dishwater—by the way a not very aesthetic object. From all the above considerations nothing else was to have been expected than the short and inglorious career of the paper, whose history has been sketched. Joy be with it. It has gone to parched fields and pastures brown!

But the prophesy, if such it was, which would rid the village of two papers, has been, as intimated, only half fulfilled, nor is the other half likely to be realized; for the second paper occupies its place as firmly and fixedly as ever, and apparently more so, for the villagers, so far from manifesting any hostility because of the clatter of the press and the blackness of its ink, seem to be favorable and friendly. Indeed, so encouraging is their treatment and kindly their attitude, that it is said the proprietors contemplate moving very shortly into more ample and convenient quarters, when they will enlarge their sheet and procure additional help; in a word they design to make the paper worthy not only of the aesthetic village in which it is established, but of the province which the village so worthily represents.

ANNALIST.
P. S. It will be seen from the above that the writer supposes, whether rightly or wrongly, that he has identified the village, which was in the "mind's eye" of "Aisthetikos," when he penned his sketch.

In London 2526 births and 1497 deaths were registered last week, allowing for increase of population. The births were 302 and the deaths 429 below the average number in the corresponding weeks in the last ten years. The deaths include 32 from small pox, 31 from measles, 14 from scarlet fever, 14 from diphtheria, 43 from whooping cough, and 11 from dysentery.

From Mitchell's Newspaper directory just issued it appears that there are now in London 405 newspapers; in the province, 1202; in Wales, 79; in Scotland, 184; in Ireland, 161; and in the British Isles, 21; the total thus being 2052. The magazines and reviews number 1298, of which 335 are of a decidedly religious character.

March, which came "in like a lamb" seems to have a good deal of the lion in him after all.

Before you purchase your White Cottons, please step in and see the splendid assortment which Caldwell & Murray have opened this week.

We are pleased to see that our friend, R. R. Duncan, Esq., of Grand Pre, who has been quite ill for some time, is able to be around again.

The first thing which arrests the attention of customers on entering the store of Caldwell & Murray is a splendid assortment of Table Oil Cloths.

We are now furnishing Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes (cornered or addressed), Bill Heads, Counter Heads, Statements, Business Cards, Shipping Tags, and all kinds of plain and ornamental printing at extremely low prices. Samples and prices furnished on application.

PRESENTATION.—On Monday evening last, Mr. Burpee Witter, Deputy of Wolfville Division, S. of T., on behalf of R. R. Duncan, Esq., P. W. P., presented the Division with three handsome silver officer's jewels. A motion of thanks was voted to Mr. Duncan, who was absent.

Gentlemen, if you are contemplating a spring suit, Caldwell & Murray can show you some very handsome suitings at prices which must be satisfactory.

BENEFIT.—As will be seen by another column, the Band intends giving a Benefit at the Rink next Tuesday evening. The ice is now in good condition and no doubt a good time will be had. Among the attractions will be an exhibition of fancy skating by D. R. Munro, good music and electric light. We hope that our readers will remember that the Band has given us good music all this winter for nothing and that all will do their best towards making this a financial success.

PICTURES FRAMED.—If you want your pictures framed in first-class style and at an extremely low figure, bring them to Rockwell & Co's. A well selected stock of picture moulding always on hand.

On Tuesday afternoon as Geo. Hamilton Esq., of Grand Pre, was turning his horse about in the street opposite Mrs. Chipman's, it took fright and ran down toward Main St., turning the corner by the Baptist meeting house and continued running down Main St. until it was stopped not far from the Bank. Both shafts were broken off but no other damage was done to horse or sleigh. On the evening of the same day J. I. Brown was driving down near Church hill with a horse and sleigh, some person came up behind him driving at a furious rate and, before Mr. Brown could rein his horse out of the way the rear horse and sleigh, in which were two ladies and a driver, ran into his sleigh damaging it considerably and striking Mr. Brown in the back and cutting his horse in the leg. The occupants of the rear sleigh were thrown out but received no serious injury.

LEFT.—In the Wolfville Presbyterian Church, a few weeks ago, a Greek and English New Testament. The owner can have the same by applying at this office.

We understand that S. D. Macdonald and wife have returned from Southern California, where they have been spending the winter.

The annual meeting of the trustees and lot-owners of the Willow Bank Cemetery will be held in Odd Fellow's building, Wolfville, on Wednesday evening, April 1st, at 7.30 o'clock.

The snow-storm of last week was by far the most severe that has been experienced here this winter. It began on Thursday morning and continued with slight intermission until Sunday morning, blocking the roads and causing a complete suspension of Railroad traffic for the time. The Saturday morning express from Halifax was delayed until Monday morning and there was no train from Annapolis from Friday night until Tuesday morning.

WESTERN BOOK & NEWS CO.

About four years ago Mr. A. M. Hoare came to Wolfville and opened business in the Book, Stationery, and News line, in Witter's Block, under the above firm name. Owing to circumstances which must still be fresh in the minds of our readers the business at that time was in a bad state and when the new store opened it was found that the business must be worked up from the bottom. Not at all discouraged Mr. Hoare went to work and in a comparatively short time built up a trade which has been successfully carried on ever since. There stock at first small was increased to suit the various tastes of their customers until now it comprises everything that is necessary to meet the requirements of this market. The quarters in Witter's Block has been for some time too small and cramped for the successful display of the well-assorted lines of goods kept for sale by this firm; and when the New Star moved to Kentville the store vacated by them was at once secured and last week, after the shop had been thoroughly cleaned and painted inside, the Western Book & News Co. moved into their new quarters, in the Eagles Building nearly opposite the Post Office. While much yet remains to be done in the arrangement of their goods, yet Mr. Hoare has succeeded already in making a really fine show, and the store now ranks as one of the prettiest in Wolfville. On the right hand as we enter the door is arranged a splendid stock of STATIONERY, comprising all the leading commercial and fancy lines of writing papers and envelopes, and a full assortment of stationery sundries such as pens, ink, sealing wax, etc. etc. On the same side but farther back are the

BLANK BOOKS in almost endless variety. On the counters are two large show cases filled with purses and fancy goods, and below these are tastefully arranged their magazines and newspapers. This spring they also got out a large catalogue of magazines for which they take subscriptions, and this includes nearly all the magazines and papers published at the present time. On the left are arranged their stock of BOOKS, which is very extensive and complete, including the popular poets of the day stories for old and young, and a large supply of the Text Books used at Acadia College and the Public Schools. Further back on this side is a large glass case filled with Bibles, Hymn Books, and Photograph Albums, while still further back is a cozy little office and still further back a roomy store-room where will be kept the well assorted stock of ROOM PAPER AND PICTURE MOULDINGS. Altogether the store is an attractive one and will well repay a visit by all of our readers.

The ACADIAN wishes the Western Book & News Co., and its energetic young manager every success and hope to see them long continue to cater to the literary tastes of the people of this community.

Found! a Plum Tree that will not Black Knot!

The Masters Plum Tree has stood the test 40 years in Kentville, King's County, Nova Scotia. Chas. A. Masters, of Kentville, found this tree growing on lands now owned by Judge G. A. Blanchard forty years ago, and removed the tree to his garden in the village, where it now stands a healthy bearing tree, and is now owned by me. There are scores of trees throughout the village in bearing from 4 to 20 years old which bear every year, and not a vestige of black knot appears on one of them. The tree is an annual bearer of rapid growth, growing tall not spreading. The Plum is quite large, purple color, and of excellent quality. It is the best preserving plum grown, and sells higher than any plum brought into the market. Last year, while the crop was immense, this plum readily brought $3.00 per bushel, $1.00 more than any other variety offered for sale. We have several hundred first class trees to offer for the spring planting and intend to plant 6,000 root grafts here. That this is the best and most profitable Plum Tree to plant that is grown in the Dominion of Canada, and that it will not black knot we refer the planters of this delicious fruit to

F. S. Masters, Barrister, of whom we purchased the original tree; also to Chas. A. Masters, G. A. Blanchard (Judge), J. R. Blanchard, H. B. Webster, M. D., J. E. Mulleney, M. D., Otho Eaton, John Byrne, T. E. Smith, J. A. Shaw.

MUSINGS, ON THE CORNWALLS BRIDGE.

By CHARLIE WALTERS

I crossed the old Cornwallis Bridge,
When winter-winds blew wild and bleak,
When on the shore the surge did ridge,
And rolling waves a story speak
Of ships that are far out to sea,
Tossed on the breakers wild and free.

I stood upon that bridge so old,
And gazed upon the rolling tide
That to me many stories told
Of ocean breakers wild and wide—
That would some noble ship destroy—
To pieces dash it like a toy.

Long did I stand by its old side—
My thoughts were going out to sea;
I thought of those who there had died,
While seeing others faithfully,
Who in the ocean found a grave
Far, far beneath the rolling wave.

I thought of battles with the sea—
Fierce battles fought by sober men,
Who fight to gain the mastery
And bring their ship safe home again;
For when they get her into port,
From all the storms they have a fort.

I thought of nights upon the sea,
When ships are tossed up mountains high—
Tossed by the storms so fearfully
As if to touch the very sky.

When sailors work with might and main,
They sink no more to rise again.
These were my thoughts on that old bridge—
As there I stood alone one day,
When on the shore the surf did ridge,
And rolling waves did float away,
And now in verse I write them down,
But not for pomp or high renown.

TEMPERANCE AND THE CHILDREN.

Hon. Thomas B. Bicknell, of Boston, President of the National Education Association, in an address at the Madison Convention, is reported as saying:—"The giant evil—yes, crime,—of our day is intemperance. Compared with it all other vices and crimes are but its infant children. The great reform of our day is temperance. Compared with it all other reforms are but of its healthful and omnipotent generation. Two persons stand at the threshold to protect the incoming generation from becoming an easy prey to the devourer of health, happiness, hope, life, and heaven. The natural protectors of our youth are the parent and the teacher, and the home and the school are the citadels for their defence. Formation, not reformation, is now the educational watchword which woman has proclaimed as the signal to be sent to all her allies in the world, and the two words—Woman and Temperance—each etc, symbol of the true and the good, shall be forever united. It is a marvel to many that this new gospel of teaching the children the laws of health, of chastity, of purity, of hope, and of temperance, should have such a remarkable spread, and meet with so general acceptance; that legislators in town, city, country, state, and nation should listen, hear, and legislate to protect childhood, from the ravages of rum, and that a literature should spring up as by magic from a hitherto sterile intellectual soil."

A THOUGHT.

People despise each other too much. There is really some good in almost every one; something admirable in most. The stiff and solemn serious man may be a model of integrity and purity, though the gay Bohemian grins at him. The Bohemian at whose approach the sober, solid man shudders may really be warm-hearted, generous and self-sacrificing, though many libations flush his face and he seldom says enough to buy himself the credit for which he makes himself prematurely ready. The business man whom others think a creature of dollars and cents doubtless fought in his youth a very Apollon of discouragement, and is secretly more tender-hearted and charitable than he dare let the world know. From this self-contained and unrefined person you often hear excellent homely truths and honest sentiments. This elegant creature who seems to live to be pampered, proves himself strong and steadfast in time of need.

Even those deep in the gulf of vice may not merit so much scorn as we give them; who has held out the helping hand? Not we who gather back our robes lest they should touch theirs. Did we not so deeply despise those of whom we disapprove, doubtless the shining example we are vain enough to fancy that we set them would do them more good. But one thing is certain: whatever impulses we are conscious of, exist in other bosoms. God did not make us in peculiar fashion. We suffer and rejoice, aspire and fall, as others do. The man who despises his fellow man only scorns himself under different circumstances.

—A man too busy to take care of his health is like a mechanic too busy to take care of his tool.

—An eminent Western judge says that a Western jury would much rather convict a person on circumstantial evidence than on facts, but would rather let him go than do either.

ETHERINGTON'S ADJUSTABLE SPRING BED.

The Spring Bed consists entirely of STEEL SPIRAL SPRINGS, which lock on the slats of a common bedstead; making a most DESIRABLE BED WITH BUT A SINGLE MATTRESS.

Thus a saving in the price of bedding. They are the best laying, the most easy, most comfortable, most elastic, the cleanest and the easiest cleaned, the best ventilated (therefore the most healthy), the most durable, the cheapest and the easiest repaired. Most adjustable, as it fits all bedsteads without regard to width or length, and is perfectly noiseless. It can be packed in a trunk 16 inches square, so the most portable; no hiding places for vermin, no sagging to the centre, no slats to become bent and remaining so, but can be adjusted to the unequal weights of the occupants, permitting them to lie upon the same level.

On all points of merit we solicit comparison with any other Bed in the market.
