

Five Thousand Orangemen Hold Walk in Driving Rain

ORANGE PLATFORM IS BROAD ENOUGH FOR ALL CREEDS

Supreme Grand Master Scott Says Even Roman Catholics Could Endorse Principles.

TALK FEST AT PARK

Controller McCarthy Says Order Has Brought About Movement for Union of Protestant Churches.

A tropical sun was drying up the benches and grass in Exhibition Park when the crack fire and drum band of the County Orange Association headed the procession of the speakers of the glorious twelfth and honored guests to the band stand. A big crowd followed and filled the seats. "Tear off our best one," commanded the drum major of the fifers and drummers when the band had mounted the steps and were on the platform. And the band did "tear off its best one," while the crowds cheered. In their minds everyone was at the gates of Derry. County Master Crawford presided, and in an short speech introduced Mayor Hocken, who gave the address of welcome.

The Mayor's Address. It is well to celebrate the anniversary of an event which is the corner stone of British institutions as they exist today," said Mayor Hocken. "Civil and religious liberty hung in the balance when the battle of the Boyne was fought and won by William of Orange. His victory established it forever as a fundamental feature of Britain's policy. And the nations of the world have followed her example because they have seen it to be good.

"We recognize, and proclaim it today, and this liberty is for all men who live under the benign influence of the Union Jack. It is the possession of those who disagree with us, just as our right to demonstrate belief in those principles and convictions, which are honestly and sincerely held, is the inalienable privilege of every British citizen. "We say to those who hold contrary views, 'We cannot see you as you do, but we are able to admire manifestations of sincerity in whatever form they may be given. In this great City of Toronto I hope we will always be able to boast that equal rights are granted to every class and creed. If the Orange association fails to teach that lesson, both by precept and example, it will fall in its mission. If the order has a better gospel to preach—as it claims—its members must give proofs of it by exhibiting a broader tolerance, a more charitable spirit and Christian kindness to those who are not of the household of its faith.

"Because the members of the order are doing this more generally than ever before, our organization is winning the respect of the great unaffiliated public. I would impress upon you not to abate one jot or tittle of your fervor for the cause in which you are enlisted. Rather I urge you to greater diligence in perfecting your understanding of your avowed principles, because I know that a broader and cleaner vision of the cause will make you better citizens, better neighbors and better men. "As your chief magistrate, I compliment you upon the extent and splendor of your demonstration, as it is my duty and privilege to do with all such public displays, wishing your organization, and all similar bodies of whatever creed, the prosperity that is the due of all upright and honorable men," Mayor Hocken concluded.

Controller McCarthy. "I appreciate the honor of addressing one of the greatest gatherings of people of the Protestant faith in Canada," said Controller McCarthy. "I appreciate this gathering as a demonstration of the aims, impulses and desires of the present day.

"The outstanding principles of the Orange Association are reverence to God, loyalty to king and country and human brotherhood as taught by Christ. "That the Orange Association has bound more and more firmly together Canadians of the Protestant faith is a part of the history of our country, and to this binding of the Protestants may be largely attributed the onward movement for union of the Protestant churches. The Orange Association has

Business Situation Improves

THE BANKS AND BUSINESS

Business is steadily improving, and we believe it will continue to do so. It's not business, but it's the banks that keep things back. How?

The banks create the stringency by refusing to let money out, by some of them hoarding it, and forcing others to follow them. The Imperial Bank has been, time after time, the chief sinner in this respect. It insists every now and then of hoarding, increasing its reserves of ready money so as to hand depositors their cash if called for. Other banks that do not keep the same reserves as the Imperial are suspected in consequence: the feeling of unrest is widened.

These repeated acts of Mr. Wilkie and his board of tightening up credits, refusing to let out money, and for which they regularly pose before the public as strong men with strong banks, are nearer the panic-monger point than the newspapers who discuss money conditions in a freer kind of way.

The banks that let out money are the ones that help business, not the ones that keep thumping their chests and walking about like "strong men" lifting weights in circus rings. If we had three more Imperials we might as well put up the shutters.

And these banks who cut down their loans are able by the higher rates that they engender to keep their earnings. Mr. Wilkie seems to be more afraid of his depositors than he is of his customers and the public. That's not good banking.

RIVAL FACTIONS MEET IN BELFAST IN FISTIC FIGHT

Several Injured in Riot Following Twelfth of July Parade in Orange Centre.

BELFAST, Ireland, July 12.—Some what serious rioting occurred here early this morning at the opening of the celebration of the "Twelfth," the July festival of the Orangemen, in the course of which many windows were broken and a number of policemen and civilians were injured, two of them so severely that they had to be taken to the hospital.

Rival factions of Nationalists and Unionists first fought each other furiously, and then when a body of police appeared to separate them, joined forces and attacked the policemen. The fight raged along the streets for over an hour and a half. Sticks were freely used by the civilians, who also threw showers of stones, which were accompanied by an occasional revolver shot. The policemen drew their clubs and charged, and hand-to-hand fighting went on till about five o'clock, when the crowds dispersed. Only one arrest was made.

SUNSHINE NEEDED TO RIPEN CROPS

Alberta and Saskatchewan Are Assured of Big Yield—Rain Plentiful Throughout West.

WINNIPEG, July 12.—(Special).—Alberta has experienced ten days of incessant sunshine, and with rains in the next fortnight a bumper crop will be assured.

Saskatchewan has sufficient moisture to secure the crop, which promises an abundant harvest. During the past week Manitoba has seen very little of "Old Sol," and when the rain was not falling the sky was very overcast and threatening. This, of course, has had a beneficial effect rather than otherwise, as the crop generally needed moisture, and with dull weather has percolated down below the roots of the grain.

Highly satisfactory reports are to hand from the Portage Plains, where there is a splendid crop. Thousands of acres are in head in the plains district. Wheat is looking fine, but oats are not so good, and are much later than wheat. Barley is a splendid crop in this district, and some of it will be ready for the binder the first week in August, providing plenty of sunshine during the next few weeks is experienced.

In Neepawa district the prospects of a great crop are excellent, and oats, while not so far advanced as wheat as in the Portage Plains district, is splendid.

The Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture report this week states that the crops throughout the province are in an excellent condition. At only one point is rain still claimed to be needed—Lloydminster, on the western border of the province.

Must Fight It Out

ATHENS, July 12.—It is semi-officially announced that the Greek Government has replied to the Russian proposal for the cessation of hostilities, that peace must be concluded on the battlefield.

The proposal was supported by Great Britain and France.

FRUIT PRICES REMAIN HIGH

In Spite of Large Shipments, the Heavy Demand Keeps Quotations High—Raspberries Short.

ALTHOUGH quite large shipments of different fruits and vegetables arrived in the city on Saturday, the prices still remain high on account of the heavy demand.

Raspberries are not arriving in as large quantities as were anticipated, and the price ran from 18c to 20c, according to quality.

A few cases of strawberries straggled into the city, and these late arrivals were eagerly snatched up at 16c and 18c a box. The dealers were willing to let them go at that price rather than chance having them spoil on their hands over Sunday.

Considering the large shipments being received of Canadian cherries, the prices are away too high. The sweet variety brought from 75c to 1.25, and those for preserving from 60c to 75c a basket.

Canadian potatoes are rapidly replacing the imported brand, and sold at 40c per basket. The outlook this year seems to be for a good crop, and reports show that the dry rot is not so prevalent as last year.

Red currants have gone down in price owing to the large crop this season. They sold on Saturday for from 40c to 50c a basket. A few black currants have been received, which brought as high as $1.50 a basket.

Black raspberries are pretty scarce so far, and only a few cases were shipped into Toronto. These sold at 16c and 18c a basket.

The heavy demand on huckleberries keeps up the price. Saturday's sales ranged from $1.25 to $1.75 the basket. Other prices are: Cabbages, $1.50 a bushel hamper; peas, 60c a basket; beans, from 80c to $1 a basket; gooseberries, 50c to 60c a basket; Canadian cucumbers, $1.50 to $2 a basket; spring onions, lettuce, beets and carrots sold around 35c a dozen.

Mr. William C. Bullock, Toronto's well-known financial agent, has just returned to town after another and very successful visit to London, England. Asked regarding British conditions he described these exceedingly prosperous, and that a strong and general sentiment of confidence and optimism regarding the future was very conspicuous in business circles. Mr. Bullock says the outlook in London is bright and that Canada has lost nothing of its popularity as an investment field.

MONSTER PARADE MARRED BY HEAVY DOWNPOUR OF RAIN

Five Thousand Enthusiastic Followers of King Billy Brave Elements in Annual Twelfth Walk.

LESS THAN LAST YEAR

But Many Thousands See Spectacle From Under Cover of Protecting Umbrellas Lining Route.

Five thousand Toronto Orangemen braved the heaviest downpour of the year and the Glorious Twelfth saw the monster parade leave Queen's Park for the Exhibition grounds despite all obstacles. Thousands of umbrellas were carried by those in line, and with the route lined with citizens this year's parade might be described as a procession of umbrellas passing thru a wall of umbrellas on either side. And the procession was so large that it took an hour and a half to pass.

The parade of last year saw 7000 Orangemen in line, and with a clear sky this record would have been broken on Saturday. Before the rain began and when it looked as if the weather would keep clear for the parade, the muster in Queen's Park was assuming larger proportions than ever before, and the prediction was confidently made by the marshals that nothing that had previously taken place on a Twelfth of July in Toronto would equal this year, but when the down-pour set in hundreds of those who would otherwise have marched decided that for the once they would assume the part of spectators. When the parade got under way hundreds of them were to be found along the route acting the part of admirers instead of being in the ranks of the admirer.

With the True Blues in the lead, followed by the Ladies' Orange Benevolent Association, County Orange Lodge officers, Orange Young Britons and visiting Orange lodges, the parade proceeded from Queen's Park along Grosvenor street, down Yonge street, thru Albert and James streets, past the city hall, then on Queen to Dufferin street, and down Dufferin to Exhibition Park.

Exciting Incident. An exciting time took place in front of the city hall, when Detective Miller, with a prisoner, attempted to break thru the lines of Weston Lodge. A marshal, armed with a long baton, rushed up and shoved Miller back. When the detective attempted to explain the marshal jabbed him in the pit of the stomach with his baton. This caused a break in the procession and Detective Miller was soon surrounded by a score of Orangemen, and he was roughly handled. Detective Jarvis, who was standing at the top of the city hall steps, ran to Miller's assistance. To defend themselves the two detectives had to strike out, but they not only held on to the prisoner, but also got safely thru to the sidewalk. In the mix-up Detective Miller received a nasty bruise behind his ear.

The procession was five and a half miles in length and there were fifty-four bands distributed among seventy-

Five Million Dollar Action Decided

Michigan Lake Superior Company Property Will Be Sold in Default.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., July 12.—In the United States district court this morning a decree of foreclosure was ordered in the case of the Real Estate Trust Company of Philadelphia against the Michigan Lake Superior Company of Soo, Mich., whereby the power company must pay $5,255,000 with interest at the rate of five per cent per annum from May 1, 1913, and costs. In default of payment the property of the power company will be sold at public auction. The trust company was appointed trustee in the mortgage and the power company has not made any payment for the past ten years. The mortgage falls due in 1939. Those intimate with conditions declare the power company will be unable to meet the payment. According to the master in chancery, John S. Lawrence, of Grand Rapids, a public sale of the property will be held within seven weeks in case payment is not made.

DOES CONTROLLER FOSTER EXPECT SNOW NEXT WINTER?

We regret to see that opposition has become a habit with Controller Foster. Automatically, when any new proposal is made by anyone else, and without waiting to hear details, he opposes. Such a "horrible example" no doubt is of service to other more observant members of council. Controller O'Neill, for instance, was able to perceive some merit in Aid. Wickett's plan for dealing with suburban territory. "Aid. Wickett has really given us a comprehensive policy of annexation," Controller O'Neill commented.

Something comprehensive is what is required. Toronto cannot afford to add to the value of adjoining real estate for years without receiving any taxes. Nor can Toronto collect taxes from owners of property outside the city limits.

The plaint of obstructives like Controller Foster is that there is never any finality to the extension of the city. They cannot mean, of course, that they wish to see the growth of the city checked. So their objection becomes an indictment of their own inadequate and short-sighted measures. They are always five or ten years behind the times. Five years ago they told us that "the Midway" should not be annexed for ten years. Have they learned anything from that? Ask Controller Foster, and he will tell you, probably, that North Bariscount, that Todmorden, should not be annexed for ten years to come. Same old brains; same old policy.

The factors that drive people to the suburban fringe are high rents and transportation. When there were no street cars cities did not grow so rapidly, and without street cars Toronto would now probably be a city of 200,000 or 300,000 at the outside, all living within the area bounded by the belt line. Transportation enabled people to get away from the congested area of high rents and taxes, where they could own their own homes. It will be found that the fringe of population borders the street car lines. Those who protested against the annexation of North Toronto forgot the Toronto people who pay double car fares twice daily. They fringe Yonge street up to York Mills. Wherever the cars go there will be problems of population, of drainage, of water, of fire protection, of police service, of light and pavements.

Controller Foster's idea is to let a new street car franchise be granted in the northwest for the city to buy up in the future, and in the meantime to be the means of developing another population and annexation service such as exists wherever street cars go. If any street cars are to be run the city should run them. The natural boundary for annexation is the limit of a reasonable walking distance from a street car line. People do not go beyond this limit unless they have reasons which make them undesignated of annexation, such as the occupation of the market gardener, who will come into town with his produce on a wagon.

It should be an easy matter to outline such limits of annexation as would serve for ten years to come. The policy of chewing off bits will keep Controller Foster and his successors busy every year.

George Bernard Shaw speaks of things that are known to everybody, except to those who never know anything in advance. We can assure Controller Foster that it requires no miraculous power to predict snow for next winter, and an increasing population in a probably higher ratio for a generation to come in Toronto.

Convicted Senator Turns Informer

Sentenced to Four Years, Ex-Senator Stillwell Gives Information Against Others.

NEW YORK, July 12.—Ex-State Senator Stephen J. Stillwell, convicted recently of soliciting a bribe and sentenced to four to eight years in Sing Sing, turned over to District Attorney Whitman today what is said to be a statement involving members of the senate's assembly. In connection with alleged irregular acts with reference to legislation enacted at Albany last year. Stillwell's sentence was purposely delayed by the district attorney, and for days it had been rumored that he would supply the prosecutor with evidence against certain of his former colleagues in the hope of gaining immunity. Counsel for Stillwell would not confirm today the report of the alleged disclosures.

Farmer Sues Doctor For Damages to Arm

While Undergoing Operation for Diseased Leg, Man Loses Use of Arm.

SASKATOON, July 12.—(Special).—What promises to be an action of unusual interest will be tried at the next sitting of the supreme court when Charles R. Elliott, a farmer, brings an action against Dr. H. E. Munro, a prominent physician for alleged negligence in connection with an operation he performed on plaintiff's leg. The plaintiff's claim is that in February, 1912, he engaged Dr. Munro to attend him in connection with a diseased leg. He avers that on March 20, 1912, while he was under Dr. Munro's care an operation was performed by Dr. Munro on his leg and that owing to the doctor's negligence plaintiff's left arm was allowed to come in contact with the operation table in such a way that the nerve in his arm was killed and in consequence he lost the power of the arm.

LAFOLLETTE AND CUMMINS TO TALK FULL WEEK EACH

Lower Tariff Republicans Dissatisfied With Underwood Tariff Bill in Congress.

LIST OF FREE ITEMS

U. S. Attorney-General Will Personally Conduct Trial of Presidents Chamberlin and Mellen.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—(Special).

The Underwood tariff bill will be thru both houses and signed by the president on or before September 1, and will probably go into effect about thirty days later, so far as the great majority of the schedules are concerned. The sugar duties are to be more gradually reduced.

The delay in passing the bill will be entirely due to the senate; even now that body proposes a five weeks' debate. Senator La Follette and Senator Cummins of Iowa, desire a week apiece, and a number of western Republican senators will take the floor to square themselves with their constituents in opposing tariff reduction. The Democrats will do little of the talking, they will endeavor to get a vote as soon as possible, and a vote will be reached sometime next month by agreement.

The only uncertainty about the bill in the senate seems to hinge upon free sugar and free wool. Louisiana, the home of the sugar cane, and Colorado, which produces nearly all the best sugar, are rampant against the free sugar schedule. The general impression here is, however, that even should the senate amend the sugar and possibly the wool schedule, it will recede from the amendments when conferees from the two houses come together to finally settle the bill.

It is hard on La Follette and Cummins, and men of that kind, to find the Democratic party gathering glory for

GREASY RAILS CAUSE ACCIDENT

Carlton and Parliament Street Cars in Collision—Motorman Badly Hurt.

GREASY rails, caused by Saturday's heavy rains, were the cause of a rear end collision between a Carlton and a Parliament street car at Sackville and Gerrard streets about 1.30 Saturday afternoon.

The only one injured was the motorman on the Parliament street car, Norris Gubbins, who had his foot badly crushed. After having his foot dressed at the old General Hospital, which is close at hand, he was taken to his home in the police ambulance.

Several eyewitnesses of the accident stated that the Carlton car came along Gerrard street at a fair rate of speed, closely followed by the Parliament car in charge of Motorman Gubbins, and that when the Carlton car stopped rather suddenly at Sackville street Gubbins, altho he did all in his power to avert the collision, could not prevent his car from sliding with considerable force into the rear of the Carlton car.

Several passengers on the Parliament car were badly shaken up, but were able to go to their homes.

PASTOR WILL NOT MOVE INTO HIS NEW PARSONAGE

Friction in Congregation of East King Street Church Over Appointment of Rev. Dr. Cook.

PROPOSED WAY OUT

To Exchange Station for Beech Avenue—Interesting Personalities of the New Shake-up in Toronto.

After a week of stir and turmoil, which always accompanies the annual changing about of ministers, the Methodist churches of the city are having a breathing spell.

The trouble at East King street arises out of the fact that Rev. Dr. J. S. Cook of Gerrard Street Church, who was delegated by the recent conference to the King street pulpit, has not been welcomed with open arms by the parishioners.

On arrival, Mr. Hull found that the parsonage at Dunn avenue would not be ready for a week or ten days, owing to necessary repairs.

The church is situated in the heart of a foreign population, and for many years it has had a struggle to live, also aided by members of the more wealthy Sherbourne Street Church.

At present the situation is at a deadlock, Dr. Cook having learned of the lack of enthusiasm shown towards his appointment, has not moved from his parsonage on Sackville street, and will wait until the three chairmen of the Methodist districts in Toronto—two of whom are at present out of the city—arrive at a decision.

Two solutions are suggested. One is that Dr. Cook should exchange his charge for that of Rev. A. G. Hudson of Crawford street Methodist. Another is that he should exchange with Rev. P. M. Peacock, formerly of Beech Avenue Church, assigned by the recent conference to Lambton Mills.

Mr. Peacock will occupy the King street pulpit this evening, and it is generally expected that he will be chosen to fill the vacancy. His strong point is work among young men, and his progressive attitude will suit him for a struggling church such as the one in question.

Besides, it is supposed that one of the compelling reasons for the opposition to Dr. Cook is his ill-health, which would prevent him from undertaking the tight duties of the Lambton Church.

Decided Acquisition. Perhaps the most interesting of the newly-arrived Methodist clergymen who assume their work in Toronto today is the Rev. Hiram Hull. He comes direct from the northwest to assume charge of the splendidly equipped Methodist Church at Parkdale.

Mr. Hull, who was born near Toronto, left here nearly twenty-eight years ago, and received all his education and ministerial upbringing in the northwest. He is an original student of Wesley College, Winnipeg, and under Dr. Sparling took his B. A. at Manitoba University, and since then has done his work at Arden, Man., Kenora, McDougall Church, Winnipeg, and Fort William. Mr. Hull, who is a regular "Son of Anak" in appearance, is a preacher of decided methods and will soon make his personality felt in Toronto.

On arrival, Mr. Hull found that the parsonage at Dunn avenue would not be ready for a week or ten days, owing to necessary repairs. Consequently, he and his wife and daughter registered at the Gladstone Hotel, Parkdale, and next morning the western clergyman informed his congregation that he would be pleased to receive them and do all necessary church work from his new quarters.

Beech Avenue Church Friday evening the congregation at Beech Avenue Methodist Church welcomed their new pastor, the Rev. R. Strangways, B.A., B.D., his wife and family at a public reception at the church, which was well attended. Mr. Strangways comes to Toronto after a very successful ministerial career at Farry Sound, Shelburne and Weston.

The pretty little church on Beech avenue is already crowded to its full extent, and on Wednesday last the annual Sunday School picnic took place, when five cars of enthusiastic scholars and adults spent the day at Scarborough Heights.

Cotton Ginners Must Be Careful

Manchester Cotton Association Sends Protest to American Agricultural Department.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Secretary Houston of the department of agriculture received a protest today from the Manchester, Eng., cotton association against the practice of certain ginners of mixing various staple cottons in the same bale.

"You will appreciate," says the letter of protest, "the serious consequences against the practice of keeping different seed cottons of various staples separate and not to gin different qualities together."

At the department it was pointed out that the trouble is due largely to the disinclination of the American ginner to take the time after ginning one kind of cotton to clean out the ginning machine before he introduces another staple. It was said that the value of a bale is often lessened from $1.50 to $4 by resultant mixture of grades.

CADETS SORRY TO LEAVE CAMP

Pie and More Pie to Make Week at Niagara a Joy.

It was a very boisterous and noisy bunch of cadets that the steamers Cayuga and Corona brought back to Toronto from Niagara at 1 and 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

At Niagara Saturday morning the lads were reviewed by Brig-Gen. Ellison of Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton's staff, Brig-Gen. W. H. Cotton and Major-Gen. F. L. Lessard, the camp commandant.

With one feature of the camp Gen. Lessard is anything but satisfied, believing it was a mistake to bring over the younger boys from the schools. After Thursday's sham-battle about 60 lads, none of them over 12 years of age, were prostrated by the heat and exertion.

The patients in the isolation ward will have to stay another six weeks; this includes Toronto lads from Givens street school. The shillcock outbreak is believed to be thoroughly under control.

All the lads spoken to were enthusiastic in their report as to the time they had at the camp. However, it is evident that the boys were privileged above the ordinary rigors of military life, for on questioning one of the boys on how he liked the camp grub, the reporter was surprised to hear, "Pie, roast beef, cream, potatoes, vegetables and pie—lots of pie—and strawberries."

Canadians Third In Empire Trophy

C.A.P. Cable. BISLEY, Eng., July 12.—The Canadian team shooting for the Empire trophy, which was in third place at the end of the first stage of the match yesterday, could do no better at the 800 and 900 yards ranges this morning, when the totals were:

Sherbourne Street Bridge Ablaze

Planking Ignited by Fires Started on Slope of the Ravine.

Fire originating from bonfires, under the Sherbourne street Rosedale bridge, destroyed about forty feet of the planking at the north end on Saturday morning.

Employees of the city who have replanked the bridge just recently were burning up the old planking on the slopes of the ravine, but failed to notice that the bridge was in danger until the flames worked their way between the planks. The men then tried to put the fire out by tearing up the planks. This only gave the fire a nice draught, so an alarm had to be sent in.

While the bridge was burning a Church street car approached, stopped, started again, and with power turned on full went thru the hole in the planking. The passengers had a thrill, but seemed to enjoy it.

The firemen had the time of their lives fighting the flames. The slope lives fighting the flames. The slope lives fighting the flames. The slope lives fighting the flames.

The firemen were busy at the hour, church street cars were disorganized for an hour.

Put One Over the French Sailors

Joseph Pierre Gets Money by False Pretences and Plays a Practical Joke.

MONTREAL, July 12.—(Special.)—The maddest bunch of men in Montreal are the sailors of the French cruiser Descartes, which is now visiting the city.

Joseph Pierre is the cause of all the trouble, for he is alleged to have pulled off one of the slickest games at their expense that have been tried here in a long time. In addition, he raised the wrath of the William Davies Co., the provision packer, to a dangerous point.

Last night Pierre is said to have visited the washup and informed the inmates that he could get them shoes at a greatly reduced price from a French manufacturer. His tale was so plausible that he gathered in $20 to do the buying with. Then he decamped for a gay night elsewhere.

This morning he showed at the office of the Davies firm. There he is alleged to have said he was the purchasing agent of the cruiser, and he gave an order for 100 carcasses of beef and 15 live cattle, 800 pairs of chickens, 25 living sheep and 25 carcasses of mutton, 25 living hogs and some other goods. Just about that time the detectives got after Pierre and he landed him in court. He will be up on Monday.

Illinois to Form Mining Schools

State Has Appropriated Fifteen Thousand Dollars for the Purpose.

HALEPAH, N. S., July 12.—Principal F. P. Sexton of the Nova Scotia Technical College has received a communication from Prof. H. H. Stock of the University of Illinois, announcing that the State of Illinois has just appropriated $15,000 for the establishment of coal mining schools like those which are being carried on in Nova Scotia.

Prof. Stock has planned to come to Nova Scotia to observe some of the work of the International Geological Congress, the last week in July, to study the coal mining schools of this province, with a view to securing information which will help them in establishing the schools in Illinois.

Nova Scotia is the only place in North America where mining schools of this character are being successfully carried on.

Two Defeated Armies Likely to Fight

Negotiations Between Turkey and Bulgaria a Complete Failure.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 12.—The negotiations between Turkey and Bulgaria, the latter represented by M. Natchovitch, a former foreign minister in regard to the future frontier between the two nations, have been a complete failure.

The Turkish Government last evening sent a note to the commander of the Bulgarian troops, demanding that they evacuate forthwith all territory south of the line running from Enos on the Aegean Sea to Midia on the Aegean Sea. Otherwise it was pointed out they would be driven out by Turkish troops. The terms of the note permitted of no temporizing.

In 1922 General Ismet Pasha, commander-in-chief of the Turkish army, has left for the front.

The landing of Greek troops near the Fort of Dedeagatch on the Aegean coast is causing some concern to the Turkish Government, which fears the Greek pretensions are incompatible with Ottoman interests, as they may take the place of those of Bulgaria which are now strongly contested by Turkey.

No Equal Pay in England.

Women Get a Small Share of Civil Service Jobs and Their Wages Are Less.

When the U. S. government discovered a need of women's services in the treasury department during the Civil war, all the stock objections to women as workers outside of the home fell away, says a writer in the New York Evening Post, for the time being, as if by magic. It was discovered that she could do of use to herself and the community. It was discovered that she could do civil service work satisfactorily, and it was discovered that it was possible for her to be employed in an office where men were without distracting the men.

In England, however, the same old objection seems to be still current and is advanced in recent arguments before the royal commission on the subject of the exclusion of women from the civil service. Sir Almoth Wright also alleged it as a reason for denying women admission to the hospitals as medical students.

In reply, it has been pointed out that on any defect in the sex proposed to be excluded but on a defect in the sex proposed to be included.

Mr. H. C. Haldane, all ways a good friend of woman's cause, says that the exclusion of women from a great many professions at the present time is the result of superstition, and the generalist has made the point that, as women are already employed in the same rooms as men in the telegraph and telephone services of the general postoffice, what was being declared to be an impossibility by one government department was an established fact in another.

The general postoffice is the only department of the English civil service that employs women to any great extent. There are less than 10,000 women on service lists that carry over 135,000 names; that gives about six positions out of every hundred to women. Equal pay for equal work has no recognition. Sir George Murray, former secretary of the treasury, when asked if a woman, who does admittedly as valuable work as a man in her position, should have the man's pay, gave the historic answer, "Not if you can get her for less," which was to sum up the economic consideration in a nut-shell.

The clerkships of the service are divided into the higher division, the intermediate and the second divisions. Higher division clerks are, in the regular order of things, slated thru as the future heads of departments, colonial governors and Indian provincial administrators. In the intermediate and second divisions the work is more clerical, with varying grades of responsibility.

For none of these places are women eligible. In the postoffice, to which they are eligible, the salaries paid in the earlier years of service do not permit them to be self-supporting. Only positions, which at home can take the wages of the father or the mother or both are subsidized for the difference between what the government pays the girl and what is a living wage.

In the case of women factory inspectors it has been shown that a senior woman inspector is put upon the wages of the junior man inspector. This is a matter of routine, when there is no question of the equality of service rendered. The senior woman inspector performs the same duties that the man superintending inspector performs. She gets from £230 to £400. He gets from £600 to £750. In the educational field there is a still greater difference in the pay. Women inspectors of schools start at about £220 and can go to £400, while

Introduction of Orangeism in Canada

In the Town of Brockville was the fountain first opened from whence issued the waters of Orangeism that have since irrigated the land.

The imperial warrant having arrived, the lodge was sounded, and the brethren promptly responded, and gathered in the old court house at Brockville, on Jan. 1, 1830, where with unique ceremony, "in due and ancient form," the first grand lodge in Canada was organized and founded, of which grand institution the late Most Worshipful Bro. Ogile R. Gowan was elected the first deputy grand master of British North America.

The first primary lodge warrant was granted to J. O. L. No. 1 about Aug. 13, 1830, of which Bro. Arthur McClean was W. M. L. O. L. No. 2 was convened on July 4, 1831, with Bro. Arthur McClean as W. M.

ENGLISH TORIES IN HOPELESSLY BAD CONDITION

Since the House of Lords Has Been Shorn of Power the Conservative Party Are Helpless.

THEMSELVES TO BLAME

Chancellor of Exchequer Will Start His Land Campaign During the Coming Fall.

LONDON, July 12.—In spite of all the gloomy predictions of the Tories, there appear to be no breakers ahead for the government since the opposition's attempt to make political capital out of the Maroon affair failed.

The Tories, on the other side, find themselves in a hopeless position, and even their own papers occasionally admit that never before has the party been so absolutely hopeless as at present, when all they can do is to protest against the measures, which they know are bound to become law, since the antiquated house of lords has been shorn of its power to kill all real democratic legislation.

In all their speeches in parliament, the Tories come back to the abolition of the lords veto as the main cause of their own deplorable helplessness, and they have repeatedly tried to impress it on the minds of the voters that, by passing the Parliament Act, the Liberal government has inflicted a great blow to the freedom of the people; and, by trying to rush the home rule bill, and the Welsh disestablishment bills, through the house of commons in what the Tories call a most undignified manner, the government is committing the additional crime of destroying the elementary liberties of the house.

Mr. Chamberlain's Speech.—After the scathing speech of Mr. Churchill, the other day, however, Mr. Chamberlain, who has been the chief mouthpiece of the opposition, is not very likely to raise the same complaints any more.

Mr. Churchill proved beyond any doubt that the opposition had only themselves to blame for the present state of affairs, and he pointed out that, by giving the opposition the opportunity of discussing over and over again measures which had already been passed by the house of commons, the Parliament Act was a windfall which no other party had ever enjoyed.

In this connection, he told the Tories that he still had vivid memories of a time when the members of the government party spent the greater part of three sessions walking thru the lobbies, dividing upon and debating night after night the provisions and details of measures which had the support of the largest government majority ever known in the house of commons, and then, when they had finished, every one of those measures were thrown out and wrecked by the partisan vote of the house of lords. At that time, he thought something might justly have been said about the degradation of the house of commons, and the blot on its immortal liberties and elementary rights.

An argument of this kind is unanswerable, and the Tories have now settled down to accepting their fate in comparative silence, only occasionally raising a little dust to throw into the eyes of the voters.

It is pretty safe to say that, even should an opportunity arise, the Tories will hesitate to submit home rule to the decision of the country, for Sir Edward Carson's recent trip, which was meant to be a triumphal tour, has proved that the English people no longer look upon home rule as a bogey, and that the people of Scotland are all enthusiastic about it. Nothing is now more certain than that Ireland will have home rule next year; and that the resistance of Ulster will immediately find nobody to fight, and their political leaders will be the first ones to desert them.

In the meantime, the program of the government is taking firmer shape.

Land Reform.—Early in the coming autumn, the land campaign will be opened by the chancellor of the exchequer. This is in accordance with the arrangements made by the cabinet six months ago. There never has been any intention of abandoning the policy of land reform; but, owing to the exigencies of the parliamentary situation, it has been impossible to begin campaigning in the country at an earlier date.

While the house of commons is sitting is not a favorable opportunity for political campaigning, for both leaders and their followers are required at Westminster during the continuance of the parliamentary session.

Mr. Lloyd George will go forth on this campaign for the regeneration of rural England at the request of the prime minister, and with the approval of the whole cabinet.

In the meantime, the board of agriculture is maturing the details of a bold scheme of rural housing. The idea is to provide cottages, with a

King of Wurtemberg A Democratic Ruler

His Majesty Can Constantly Be Seen Walking in Country Unattended.

GENEVA, Switzerland, July 12.—Now that George of Greece has passed, it is generally conceded that King William II. of Wurtemberg, is the most democratic sovereign in Europe. He can be seen most any day wandering around the countryside, or boating on Lake Constance practically unattended.

The other day, while passing thru the little Swiss village of Rohrschach, he stopped for refreshment. On ordering a mug of beer he threw down twenty cents, and told the maid not to bother about the change. Presently he ordered another mugful, which was brought by an old woman. Again twenty cents more he placed them on one side.

"Now," he said, "I think I have tipped the whole family so good day. 'No you haven't,' came a child's voice. 'I was going to bring you the next. It's always the way. Very few visitors take six drinks, and I'm the sixth waiter.'"

The king turned and took the little boy by the arm, and said, "Well you shall have the biggest tip of any," he said, placing a gold piece in the child's hand.

Divorced at Age of Eighty Two

Duke Ludwig of Bavaria Divorced His Ballet Girl Wife.

MUNICH, Bavaria, July 12.—A decree of divorce was granted today to the eighty-two-year-old Duke Ludwig of Bavaria, against his second morganatic wife, who when she was a ballet girl at the Bavarian Court opera was known as Antoinette Barth.

The court threw the entire blame for the quarrel on the wife who admitted her fault. She is forty years younger than Duke Ludwig, to whom she had been married since 1892 after the death of his first morganatic wife who also was an actress of the name of Henrietta Mendel.

An Electric Fan for every purpose is shown on our display tables. For stores, for offices, for restaurants, for barber shops, for homes—both fixed and oscillating types and wall, desk, ceiling, and upright types are shown in a variety sufficiently large to meet every requirement—modest or otherwise.

The fans we sell are sturdily made and scientifically balanced in every part, making them unusually quiet and smooth-running for many long summers of continuous service. All you need to do is give them reasonable care and oil them once a year, and they'll run like a watch.

You have an Electric Fan downtown, of course. Why not have one at home? Imagine how fine it would be to enjoy the same refreshing coolness in the dining-room or the living-room, and when the upstairs is "like an oven" to take it to the bedroom, confident of securing a good night's rest.

Less than one-fifth cent an hour runs an Electric Fan. Where can you get cheaper summer comfort? Why not get your fan to-morrow and give the heat the laugh? The prices at which we sell them make it easy for you to own one.

Hundreds of Letters to Be Sent to President Wilson in Defence of the "Poor Man's Fruit."

NEW YORK, July 12.—President Wilson will be deluged with hundreds of letters from New Yorkers in defence of the banana as the "Poor man's fruit," if those present last night at a meeting in Cooper Union follow the advice of speakers in protest against the proposed tax of one-tenth of one per cent. per pound on bananas imported into this country.

Mrs. Julia Peath, president of the Housewives' League, and other women spoke, urging that all present send to President Wilson a personal letter of protest.

Resolutions were also passed calling upon congress to reject the proposed tax, declaring that "Such a tariff was not within the purview of the voters who elected the Democratic party to power."

Commander Col. Maas Takes Town After Two Hours' Hard Fighting.

MEXICO CITY, July 12.—The Town of Monclova, in Coahuila, was captured by the federal commander, Col. Maas, after two hours' hard fighting yesterday, according to government advices.

No estimate of the dead is given, but it is reported that rebels met with large losses. Monclova has been the headquarters of Venustiano Carranza, the leader of the constitutionalist rebels. Colonel Maas' forces numbered 2500, the rebels, the government estimates at 4000. The artillery is credited with an important part in the battle, at the conclusion of which the rebels fled to the north in disorder, the federal cavalry harassing their rear.

No New Trial For Charles Becker

Supreme Court Holds That the Former Lieutenant Received a Fair Trial.

NEW YORK, July 12.—Charles Becker's application for a new trial on the charge of murdering the gambler, Herman Rosenthal, was denied by Supreme Court Justice Goff today. Counsel had sought to reopen the case on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

Justice Goff, who was the trial judge in the Becker case and in the case of the four gunmen also convicted, held that the former lieutenant had had a fair trial before him, and in a 17-page opinion, denied the plea. If relief comes to Becker now it must be thru the higher courts. For months he has been in the death house at Sing Sing.

WOMAN: ARE YOU REPOSEFUL?

Some Advice For Hot Weather.

The woman who is excessively warm and uncomfortable in the warm weather is usually the woman who bustles and rustles about from morning until night. Perhaps she does not accomplish much, but when she is down to rest she sits down energetically. When she takes a drink of water she drains her glass eagerly, hurriedly. She has not learned to be reposeful, which, in the summer time, means that she has not learned to keep cool.

Exercise and activity have their rightful places in warm weather, as they have in cool weather. One of the reasons why men of temperate climates sometimes are unable to stand the tropics is that they give up exercising altogether. The physical upset must be maintained if the body is to fight the heat, and exercise is the way of maintaining it. But exercise must be indulged in in the cool part of the day, and must be taken much like medicine, in the very warm weather. In the middle of the day quietness must be the rule, says The Washington Star.

Look again to the tropics. The mid-day siesta is the rule. Early in the morning, and again in the evening, everything is alive, vigorous. In the middle of the day a hush of almost absolute stillness prevails. The tropics are having their noonday rest.

Look out of your own windows at mid-day. Some of the bees are still buzzing. It must be that they are acclimated to intense heat when they are born, for they defy the sun's hottest rays in their search for honey. But the birds are still, supposedly sipping. Squirrels have sought their holes. Rabbits and chipmunks are not to be seen. In the very warm weather there should be a rule in the house that after a light and early luncheon, there should be no activity until 3:30 o'clock. If this rule were made and kept there would be fewer breakdowns from the heat among both mistresses and maids.

This is the time of day when little children nap, and so they are little trouble. Even if they are too warm to sleep, they can be taught to lie quietly in a shaded and well-ventilated room. Older children, if they are allowed to stay up in the evening an hour or so later than usual, can also be made to lie quietly, with a book, perhaps, for the hours between noon and 2 o'clock. The evening is really the loveliest time of a summer's day, and if children sleep and rest after midday they may be allowed to enjoy part of the cool that comes with nightfall. By the time they go to bed their rooms will be cooler, and their rest will be stronger than they would have been early in the evening.

The problem of "getting the work done" keeps many a house mistress and maid from resting in the heat of the day. Early rising will overcome this obstacle. Look at the birds again. The trees in the early morning are alive with them, and the air almost vibrates with their chatter. The maid who has a leisurely afternoon to look forward to will gladly hurry with the work in the morning and will as gladly take it up again late in the afternoon, and any housewife of ordinary intelligence can so manage her housekeeping that she can accomplish it before noon and after 4 o'clock each day. The sleep she loses by getting up early—and nothing but a summer evening compares with a summer early morning—she can make up in the midday nap.

LONDON, July 12.—The meridian of glory of the King's visit to Lancashire was attained yesterday, when 109 ships, including cruisers, liners, merchantmen, yachts, training ships and tugs, were reviewed on the Mersey. Never before has the King witnessed a marine display which has so fully mirrored the commercial greatness of the British Empire.

DODGE CITY, Kan., July 12.—Farmers of Western Kansas planned to begin a campaign today to exterminate the herds of grasshoppers which for several days have threatened to destroy the growing crops of that section.

A carload of bran, mixed with 2500 pounds of poison, has been distributed among the farmers. This mixture will be scattered over every green field in which the pests are found. Two state entomologists are here to superintend the work.

PAGES IN MANX HISTORY

A Democracy From the Mists of Time.

In all parts of this world you will find Manx men and women, and wherever they are they will form Manx societies, and hold their annual meetings, tell their old stories; find out where their countrymen are, and how they are getting on.

The Isle of Man is situated in the Irish Sea, about 3 1/2 hours' run from Liverpool; yet, in the centre of the British Empire, today the Isle of Man makes its own laws, has its own government, its own council or parliament, and its own house of lords, elected by the people. In Manx's Isle women had the franchise many years before they had it in New Zealand. The Manx parliament goes back to the days of King Ormy in the early part of the tenth century. He is believed to be the son of the King of Denmark. There is a legend that he landed on a clear starlight night, and being asked by the natives whence he came, he replied, pointing to the milky way, which glittered brightly in the heavens: "That is the road to my country." And to this day the "milky way" is called the "Road mowar re Goree"—"The great road of King Ormy."

King Ormy established a legislative body, committed the laws to writing, and formed an army. Sir James Gell, one of the greatest men the island has produced, who was clerk of the rolls and acting governor when King Edward visited the island some years ago, writes: "It is hardly open to me or to any lawyer to question the existence of King Ormy (the first of the name), since this king was declared by the Deemsters and Keys in 1422 to have existed." It is therefore, clear we had a parliament in the Isle of Man before "Rolf the Ganger," the great, great-grandfather of William the Conqueror, had asked up the Seine and taken Normandy from King Charles the Simple, of France.

Law-Giving at Tynwald.
If you visit the Isle of Man on the 5th of July, you will still see the old open-air parliament of King Ormy, the oldest legislative body in the world. Tynwald Hill is almost in the centre of the island, and is formed of earth brought from each of the seventeen parishes. It is like a bridge, four stories high. Every law passed by the Manx legislature must receive the royal assent, and be promulgated from the top of the hill, where it can be seen into force. The ceremony commences at 11 o'clock, when the governor, the legislature, and as many people as St. John's Church will hold, attend divine service. Then a procession is formed, which marches from the church to Tynwald Hill, some 200 yards in the following order:—Three policemen, six corners, the captain of the seventeen parishes, the clergy, the high-bailiff, members of keys, members of council, the governor's swordbearer carrying his excellency's sword, with the point upwards, the governor, his chaplain, the surgeon of the household, and the chief constables.

On reaching the hill the court is "fenced," i.e., all persons are warned against disturbing the court. In old times, in "fencing" the great Tynwald court, no man was allowed to murmur a word in the presence of the court, or being hanged or drawn. The titles of the acts are read in English by the clerk of rolls, and in Manx by the speaker of the house, who is qualified. Of late years the late speaker of the keys, Mr. A. W. Moore, C.V.O., read the Manx. After his death the reading was done by Mr. William Cashen, the well-known keeper of Peel Castle.

The Tribute of Rushes.
But King Ormy is only a modern, every-day king. Away back in the dark ages, when Romulus and Remus were suckled by the she wolf, Mannin Beg Mac of Leaghey was ruling in Man. He was a mild and just ruler. The tribute he exacted from his followers was a part of "feather glass," green sedge, a species of the rush family; and to this day, coming down from countless centuries, this tribute of rushes is paid by a farm near St. John's. The owner has to supply rushes for the path from St. John's Church to Tynwald Hill, over which the procession marches. Mannin Beg was not only a great navigator, but a famous magician, and kept this island under a mist. He was dreaded by his enemies, and if he threw chips of wood in the sea they at once became ships. His stronghold was Peel Castle, on the battlements of which, by the power of his "magic," one man would appear as a thousand. He was called Zui Dooinney Troor Casagh, the Three-Legged Man; and all his people, who were likewise three-legged, traveled about like a wheel, turning round and round. A Manx legend says there were routed by St. Patrick, whereupon, being amazed at his power, they became fairies and lived in the ancient tumuli, using flint arrows they averaged their wrongs on human beings.

St. Patrick and the Sea Fiend.
When St. Patrick first came to the Isle of Man he came across on horseback. The island was under a dense mist, and he had all the powers of darkness arrayed against him. A great sea monster had followed him. The horse climbed up the steep place on Peel Hill, and stopped when it found a firm foothold. A beautiful spring of fresh water sprang out of the ground, whereby the saint and his horse were refreshed. Looking down he saw the great monster which had followed him. He cursed the monster, and he turned into solid rock, and remains there, and can still be seen with its great fin upon its back. He was directed to the island by the bleating of a goat, whose kid had fallen over the rocks, and by the cry of the curlew. He blessed them both, and from that day no man has seen a goat bringing forth its young or found a curlew's nest. The spring was called the Holy Well, and it was here the first Christians were baptized.

How Priests "Laid" Ghosts.
The Manx believe in fairies, giants, ghosts, and witches. Across the valley from Tynwald Hill is a mountain called Sileu Whuallian, with a very steep side. If a woman was considered a witch, she was taken to the top of the Sileu W. and placed in a basket with big spikes and rolled down. If she arrived safe at the bottom, she was proved a witch, and had to undergo other treatment. If a house or people were troubled with a ghost, they had to get a Roman Catholic priest to "lay" the ghost. The priest now alive can remember a priest being brought over to "lay" the ghost of a young man who met his death by a play; and how, walking backward and reading out of a book, the priest commanded him to rest in the Red Sea, from which place there is no return. There are giants' graves and marks of the fingers, etc., which prove their great size.

The Children of Pride.
Manx people believe that the fairies were fallen angels, and were driven out of heaven by Satan. They call them the "Children of Pride." They are plenty of them, as they fell as they were a shower of hail for three days and three nights. When going out at night, Manx people would pray "God save me from the Children of Pride." The fishermen were great believers in fairies, and if they saw the fairy heron, a certain sign of a good fishing. There was a fairy cave under Cronk-na-Tree Lhaa, called "The Cave of the Carpenter," and if the fishermen heard them making barrels it was a sure sign the season would turn out well. In the Isle of Man friendships are not those of today or yesterday, but go back in old families hundreds of years. Farms will be held by families century after century. Business will be handed down from father to son for many generations.

but she did not desire war. The question of who had provoked the present hostilities would, he said, be decided by a proper enquiry, but the fact that the Bulgarian troops were scattered along the entire frontier and from the Danube to the Aegean Sea clearly proved that there had been no premeditation on the part of Bulgaria.

Newspapers Suspended.
VIENNA, Austria, July 12.—A message from Sofia says that the actual military and political situation in the Balkans is unknown to the populace in the Bulgarian capital. The government there has suspended the newspapers so as to prevent unfavorable news from spreading, while the Bulgarian war office continues to issue reports of the success of the Bulgarian armies in the field. Nothing was known until last evening by the inhabitants of Sofia of the action taken by Roumania, whose troops have crossed the Bulgarian frontier, and occupied considerable territory.

Three Years and Ten Lashes for Assault
Berlin Man Gets Stiff Sentence and Severe Rebuke for Serious Crime.
BERLIN, Ont., July 12.—Henry Trupp of Conestoga was this morning sentenced by Judge Chisholm in the county criminal court to three years in the provincial penitentiary and to receive ten lashes for having seduced a young girl under the age of fourteen years. The court delivered a scathing rebuke to the prisoner for the crime he had committed, calling him selfish, low base and vile.

MASKED MAN SHOT HOTEL WATCHMAN
COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., July 12.—A masked man attempted to hold up the night clerk at a fashionable hotel at Manitou early today, shot and killed the night watchman, and escaped to the hills. A posse is in pursuit.

Notes on the Parade.
An interesting memento was shown by the members of the Orange Order, No. 900 Division. Mr. Alex. McNeely, of West Toronto, was wearing a medal which was won by his great-grandfather, Mr. William Tully, who was a member of the R. F. and fought in the Battle of the Boyne, in 1690.

given the ideal of a great united Protestant church. This ideal is strong in Montreal, where its greatest need is felt. Altogether there has been developed co-operation in solving the social problems of the day.
"The future of the Orange Association and its possibilities will not be measured by strife and battle, but by unswerving faith in God," Controller McCarthy declared. He concluded with the following stanza:
Our Father God, from out whose hand we have received this gift of sand, We meet today united, free, And loyal to our land and Thee. We thank Thee for the gifts of sand, And trust Thee for the coming one.
The Orange association and its principles were the subject of the speech by Lt.-Col. Scott of Walkerton and the supreme Grand Master. "The platform to stand upon," the Roman Catholic to stand upon," he declared, "was cheered. It is broad enough for every man, no matter what his nationality, sect or creed, to stand upon. Its aim is equal rights to all. We believe in one flag, one empire, one school, one language. Up to recent years our association was not aggressive, but today it has a determined front against the enlargement of the privileges of the Roman Catholics,

THE SEA-GULL
Far from the loud sea beaches Where he goes fishing and crying, Here in the inland garden Why is the sea-gull flying?
Here are no fish to dive for; Here is the corn and lea; Here are the green trees rustling, Here away home to sea!
Fresh is the river water And quiet among the rushes; This is no home for the sea-gull, But for the rooks and thrushes.
Pity the bird that has wandered! Pity the sailor ashore! Hurry him home to the ocean, Let him come here no more!
High on the sea-cliff ledges The white gulls are trooping and crying Here among rocks and roses Why is the sea-gull flying? Stevenson

The Recall in Ancient Greece.
In the palmy days of the Greek Republics, many centuries ago, as historians tell us, when a man arose to such a height of power of influence that he became a possible menace to the state, the citizens took a vote on his case as an undesirable.
This was sent to the senate, and if the vote was sufficiently large and representative that body passed a resolution in which the too distinguished grand lodge of Newfoundland. Among the Toronto delegates will be Captain

NO RIGHT TO LOSE HEART OVER REAL ESTATE SITUATION NOT SAME DEMAND THIS SUMMER FOR FURNISHED HOUSES

"If We Were Built to Our Requirements, and Not Thousands of Houses Behind, Might Feel Disturbed."

With the improvement noticeable in projected building work, which began to show signs of decline in the latter end of May and in June, W. S. Dinick, president of the Devonport Land Company, sees a perturbing element of the real estate situation removed.

"It is now probable that fall construction operations, especially in houses, will be up to the usual level, likely ahead of the average, although approaching our requirements," he told The Sunday World while discussing the outlook.

"BUCKING" LAND SPECULATOR IN FARTHEST WEST

U. S. Secretary of Interior Lane Finds Opportunity to Champion Cause of the People.

GRABBERS IN FRIGHT

Ninety-Five Per Cent of Land Held by Speculators Who Charge Excessive Rates For Water.

By Jonathan Winfield.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, has made a bid which will, in all probability, outdo anything in this line that William Jennings Bryan ever tried to accomplish in championing causes of the people.

He is not trying to gain anything for himself, especially, but has taken up the cudgels for the farmer and the homestead in the great west. His efforts in this direction materially affect the pocketbook of every man, woman and child, and within the next few years Mr. Lane's name may be a household word from Chicago to San Francisco.

Incidentally he is "bucking" the land speculator, and is brewing a little storm that is gathering in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and other far western cities which threaten to inundate the interior department and the halls of congress when the issues, apparent now only on the surface, are brought out. These land "grabbers," as they are termed here, have quietly been acquiring vast tracts of land in the west, on which the people of the United States have spent over $75,000,000 in irrigation projects.

Secretary Lane finds that the projects were constructed for the purpose of aiding the small farmer in tilling his ground, but that in reality 95 per cent of the land is held by land speculators who are charging excessive rates for water which has been sluiced to the land by the government. The other five per cent of the acreage is owned by the small farmer, but even government water rates are held by Mr. Lane to be excessively high. Building notes for dam, canal and sluice ways add to the cost of upkeep of the farm and conditions, westerners say, are becoming intolerable.

By going into the question from the very first day that he entered his office, Mr. Lane has become intimately acquainted with conditions obtaining in the west. Daily conferences have been had with delegations from the west. Even the land speculator had his day in court, and his contentions and views were placed before the secretary. So for three solid months, Mr. Lane has gone into the question of water rights for cities, water charges for farmers, and rights of the speculator, and has come to the conclusion that the United States government has been the means of furthering the aims and schemes of the real estate dealers rather than conserving the interests of the small farmer or homesteader. In this connection, Mr. Lane announced: "I am for the farmer, first, last and at all times. Naturally handicapped by lack of sufficient funds to carry on expensive farming under the conditions that obtain in the west, the farmer must receive support and co-operation from the general government, if the great west is to be settled and made to be as productive as the east. Expensive water will ruin the small farmers and ranchmen. They must have cheap rates and long time notes, the government must back them up and extend their credit, helping them over the rough places if necessary, if the various projects designed to benefit the whole people are to be accomplished. Why should the government spend $75,000,000 for the benefit of private capital? Why should the government adopt a hard and fast policy such as has existed in the past which has kept the small farmer from going into the new regions and taking up government land? Isn't it time for the United States to extend to the westerners a little paternal patience, a little more consideration, a helping hand?"

Not Playing Politics. This is just where Mr. Lane comes to the front as a champion of the people's rights. Westerners do not think that Mr. Lane is playing politics or using an opportunity of "getting in solid" with them. They believe that thru Mr. Lane they have a greater chance of obtaining what is due them, and they have ever had before, and are willing to take the secretary at his word, depending upon his known proclivities in getting to the bottom of things and deciding the issues for the benefit of the many.

The storm that is centering, however, comes from the land speculators. Conditions obtaining now in the west are very much to their liking, and they are not willing to see the secretary "unsuccessfully" interfering with a policy fostered by the government under which capitalists have been induced to open up hundreds of thousands of acres of land adjacent to the several irrigation projects.

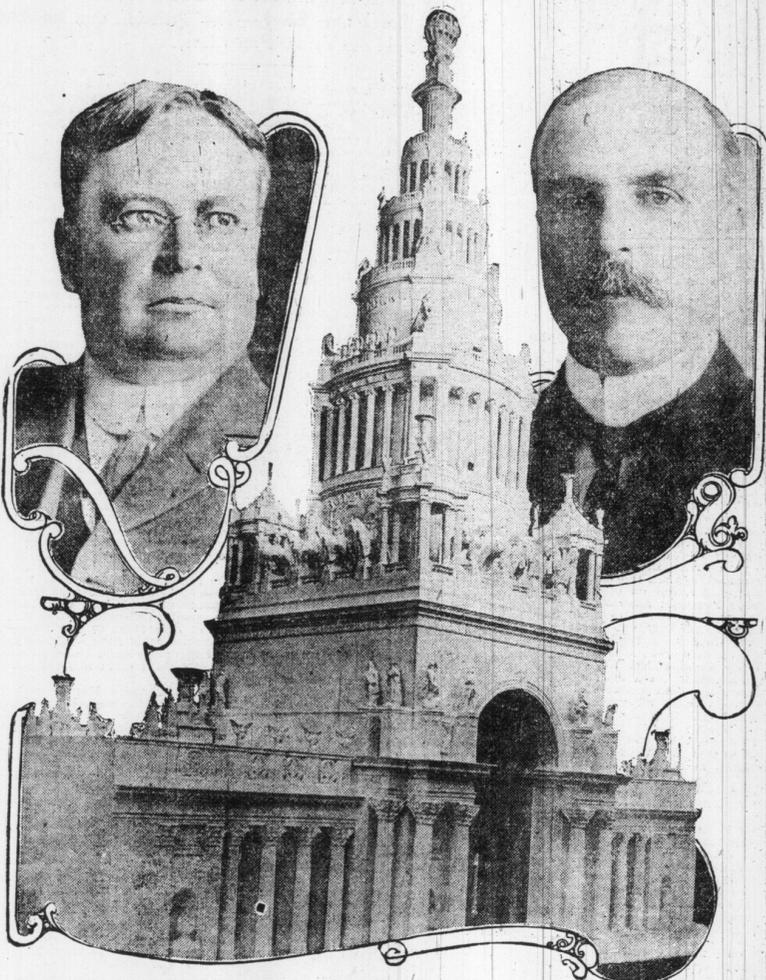

Secretary Lane expects a tremendous howl to be raised and is preparing for it in advance. He has already announced that he will do something to relieve the present conditions of the farmers on the irrigated lands, and a decision in several very important cases is about to be made, probably not until after congress adjourns, however. Land speculators cannot very well protest against something that has not yet happened, but interior department agents report that large realty investment concerns are watching Secretary Lane's every action.

When the secretary's decisions are announced, it will give the land speculators plenty of time in which to prepare an appeal to congress, but it is not thought by government officials that it will amount to much, as representatives in congress are loath to face the condemnation of their constituents.

Secretary Lane, however, is willing to abide by the result, and it is safe to predict that he will make a big hit with the people. The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something. "I'll have to get rid of Flo," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?" Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous wrath and burning indignation, as she replied: "Every single thing except the dog biscuits!"

DOMINATING FEATURE OF FRISCO FAIR

The dominating architectural feature of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915, is the imposing Tower of Jewels, which will lie at the south end of the Court of Sun and Stars. This tower, 430 feet in height, will have a base one acre in extent and will be indescribably beautiful with statuary, mural paintings and mosaics; at its summit will be a grouping of statuary supporting the globe typifying the world. On the left is Hiram W. Johnson, California's Progressive Governor, who is taking a keen interest in the preparations and on the right is James Rolph, Jr., present Mayor of San Francisco, who is a member of the exposition board of directors.

EUGENICS—Evolution and Social Progress

By Hector MacPherson

LONDON, July 12.—If the greatness of a book is to be estimated by the amount of literature which it calls forth, Darwin's "Origin of the Species" may well be described as epoch-making. The book came in the nature of a revelation. It marked the beginning of a new era in intellectual progress, and, like all gospels, it attracted advocates of fanatical tendencies.

At the outset, scientists of a certain cast of mind made Darwinism synonymous with materialism. In Germany, in particular, in the reaction from the Hegelian philosophy, Darwinism was seized as a convenient watchword for the new school with which thinkers like Strauss and Haeckel became identified. In this country, leading scientists were more cautious. Huxley, Darwin's chief disciple, was too much of a philosopher to adopt the materialism of small men, but even he was not averse to coquetting with the new views.

The materialistic interpretation which was given to Darwin's theory of evolution was largely, if not mainly, responsible for the wave of pessimism which passed over the world of science during the latter half of last century. If the survival of the fittest was secured by a terrible struggle for existence in which the great majority perished, we were back to the old Calvinism, with its doctrine of an abstract scientific dogma, no great harm would have been done, but, unfortunately, it became a political dogma, as well, and cast a chill over the hearts and minds of those who were fighting the battle of the weak, those who had fallen down, beaten in the dusty conflict of life. Science, which in the view of eighteenth-century thinkers like Condorcet, opened a path to the millennium, seemed in the nineteenth century to sound the death-knell of humanity.

The influence of Heredity. Earnest thinkers who could find no resting place in materialism, began to subject Darwinism to keen scrutiny. It was felt that the influence of heredity, for instance, had been so over-estimated as to lead to fatalism, and around this aspect of the evolution theory keen controversies raged. How then, the controversy, is seen in a book just published: "The Further Evolution of Man," by Mr. Hall Calvert. The author, a medical man, deals in a masterly fashion with Darwinism in all its aspects, and shows that the evolution theory, properly understood, leads not to pessimism, but to optimism. From the side of sociology, the book is of great value. The author is opposed to the founders of the new science of eugenics, in so far as they make heredity the all-controlling factor in social progress, and seek to apply to man the experimenting methods which obtain among animals. The author of this book is highly successful in showing that, in regard to man and society, the all-controlling factor is not heredity, but environment. "The really important characteristics," says Mr. Calvert, "are entirely the result of environment, and include not only the class into which a man is born, but every possible influence which surrounds him as a child, whether of nature, home, temper, culture, criminality, or otherwise. It is the sum of these influences which he receives, and the religious influence and guidance which is brought to bear upon him." Rear a child in the slums, and "can it be expected that in such surroundings anything else can happen than that the child shall become a member of the criminal classes, with no other possibility, but a career of crime?" The author here, in his opinion, provided you take the children of dissolute parents early enough away from their squalid surroundings, they cannot be said to suffer at all from their birth environment. Note the sociological importance of this new teaching of Darwinism. If environment counts so here, in regard to civilization, we have ample justification for recent legislation, the effect of which is to give better opportunities to those who are battling with adverse conditions. Instead of relegating the enlightened scientist can hail with enthusiasm all legislative measures calculated to surround men and women with congenial environment. In the words of Mr. Calvert: "If we wish to benefit the nation as a whole, and particularly the unborn generations that are to follow, it is clear that we must give the children of the workers of the nation the best possible environment, so as to secure a good start, and the opportunity of steadfast progress in well-being from infancy to manhood, and not forgetting to surround them with the accumulated culture of the past. Before many generations were over, the impetus towards a higher order of things would be felt; society would be regenerated from below; the physique of health, happiness, and all-around culture would be the order of the day," to all students of science, both in the abstract and practical sciences, we strongly recommend this book. It covers a wide area, among the higher reaches of thought—scientific, religious, sociological, and political—the author moves with an ease and mastery. The eugenists will find the volume a hard nut to crack.

QUEEN VICTORIA DANCES TANGO

LONDON, July 12.—What with her numerous progeny, together with her rather solemn English temperaments, Queen Victoria of Spain was generally believed to be something of a "stick" so far as gay society is concerned. Imagine then the surprise occasioned in a London drawing room recently when a Miss Yacini, a skilful instructor in the dance, addressed the company in these words before doing her dance: "If you could see the Queen of Spain dance the Tango you would never look upon it as either vulgar or impossible for the modern billiard room. She has been thoroughly instructed in the dance and executes it with infinite grace."

"Mr. Chairman" said the orator, who had already occupied the platform for twenty minutes, amid many interruptions from the audience. "Mr. Chairman, may I appeal on a point of order? There is really so much desultory conversation going on in parts of the hall that it is impossible for me to hear a word I am saying." "Voice from the back of the hall: "Don't be down-hearted. You're not missing much."

GOOD MAY COME OF ARMY BILL

In Return For Their Promise Not to Wreck Bill Socialist Party Will Gain Big Reforms.

BERLIN, July 12.—Good may after all come from the army bill with its enormous increase of the burdens of taxation, for it looks as if the Radicals and Socialists in return for their promise not to wreck the bill are to get the introduction of certain reforms for which they have agitated for many years.

First of all German soldiers serving their compulsory military term will no longer have to act as household servants to officers, their wives and children. They have hitherto been forced to take upon themselves all kinds of domestic work, from that of the cook to the dry nurse, thus saving their officers the expense of paying regular servants.

During the debates on the army bill the Socialists made it sufficiently clear that they were not devoid of patriotic feelings and, altho they were opposed to militarism of general principles and sincerely hoped for the coming of the era of universal peace, they could understand the necessity of maintaining a strong German army under the present European conditions, and they are perfectly willing to have all young men devote two years of their life to military exercises and training, but they object to considerable part of this time being used in a large number of cases, in cleaning the windows of the officers' private dwelling houses and acting as nurses to the officers' babies.

The Socialists contend that the rule which allows officers the personal service of a soldier in the active army, has been greatly abused, and that many officers take advantage of this privilege to save the expense of keeping a maid-servant. The amendment was rejected, only the Socialists, the Poles and a few members of the Centre party voting for it, but the Reichstag passed another resolution, proposed by the budget committee, in which the government is requested to adopt measures whereby the number of soldiers employed as officers' servants shall be reduced.

A further amendment was introduced by the Socialist party providing for the abolition of all prescriptions by virtue of which the Garde du Corps and other elite regiments are distinguished from other regiments.

The debate on these motions was very animated. It was introduced by the Socialists, whose speaker, Dr. Lenz, stated that the guard regiments were recruited from all parts of Prussia and even from Alsace-Lorraine, but not from Germany, whose soldiers were dispatched to the frontier regiments. The consequence was, he added, that in the case of mobilization, the guard regiments would not be ready for several days after ordinary regiments, because their component parts lived so widely apart over the country.

He declared that the guard regiments were nothing more, and were intended to be nothing more, than "the personal instrument of a liberal autocrat." He complained of the luxury displayed by their uniforms, mentioned that in the minds of recruits for these regiments every eye was turned to secure the most brilliant uniforms, and that they protested against their enjoyment of various privileges, and finally contended that they played only a decorative role in, or rather at the end of, wars.

This persistence in the demand for the "reform" of the army, that is, for the introduction of a liberal spirit into what has hitherto been a military organization, is exceedingly interesting in itself as an illustration of the trend of the times.

"Shopping" as Amusement. In an article commenting on the futility of "going shopping" for mere amusement without need to buy anything, some of the things which are mentioned in "The Atlantic Monthly" reflects the attitude of people who do not like to "shop," and shows how the modern habit of regarding the shops as a spectacle rather than a place of reasonable purpose may be modified by the spread of public opinion. We read:

As individuals we may not be able to decrease the cost of commodities or to discover new methods of invention, but we can change our habits, and we will. We can teach children to choose the best instead of the useless, the lasting instead of the cheap, the beautiful instead of the ugly. It is no easy task to choose "the best instead of the good." This the working people, the professional people, the conscientious housewife, and the thoughtful idler in the shops bring to their shopping, no real interest. They do not often enjoy wandering through the shops, they are there to purchase, to buy, to get, to get, to get. Shopping as an all-day business is impossible to them. They have no desire to sit in the waiting-room of a department store, to listen to assorted music, to watch the wandering crowd, to examine, without mind to purchase, clothing suitable for a court function. They have no willingness to spend what they do not have, or to get what often lost in the jungle of things they can in the struggle to get out.

Making Tinplate Pay in Indiana.

It was once thought that tinplate could not be made in the United States, says Opportunity. There were only a few mills at that time and practically all of them failed. One of those that had been shut down stood in a lonely spot in Indiana. The owner, a Miss Yacini, a skilful instructor in the dance, addressed the company in these words before doing her dance: "If you could see the Queen of Spain dance the Tango you would never look upon it as either vulgar or impossible for the modern billiard room. She has been thoroughly instructed in the dance and executes it with infinite grace."

An Irishman was one day engaged at stone-breaking on the roadside, and not being used to the work could not get on very fast. A friend of his was changed to pass by as Pat was belatedly taking the hammer from him, and the stone with ease. Said Pat, "Sure, now, and it is easy for ye to break the stone after I have been softening it for the last half-hour."

Walker had accompanied his wife on an excursion to the realms of bar-pugdom, in a enormous building, with its many departments, had become separated from his better half. For an hour at least he remained loitering impatiently at the junction of many ways, where lifts, stairs, and passages met, and then, tired and angry, he approached an irreproachable shop.

"Sir," he said, to the frock-coated and suave attendant, in tones of righteous indignation, "I've lost my wife."

Back came the reply, with stammering force: "Third floor over the bridge for the mourning department!"

LONDON, July 12.—London society has been very much amused over the effect the coming here of Princess Augustine Victoria of Hohenzollern has had on the habits and conduct of ex-King Manuel, whose she is married shortly. The Princess is a German of the German type, that is of the sheltered German type. Her tastes are simple and she is a decided reactionary when it comes to the Tango and other features of modern civilization. Since the Princess has been in London, Manuel has not visited any of the musical shows or other scenes of gaiety which have known him in the past. He seems solemn and morose. He and his fiancée go frequently to Covent Garden, but the ex-king always wears a bored expression on his rather expressionless face. It is pretty generally agreed here that Manuel is a mere trifler; that he has no serious interests, is very capricious and selfish and hates the prospect of being called upon to reascend the throne of Portugal.

Bill Bradley's Big Stick Downs Royals Five to Three

Leafs, With Lush Pitching, Make it Two Out of Three—First Game Called Off Owing to the Rain.

By a Staff Reporter.
ISLAND BALL GROUNDS, July 12.—Baseball plans for the holiday afternoon were seriously interfered with by the dreaching rains of the morning, necessitating the cancelling of the first game of the double header, and nearly by spilling the second game as well.

For a time prospects for a contest were anything but bright, but with the clearing of the sky and the freshening of a southwest breeze, conditions rapidly improved, and shortly before three the announcement was given that the game would start at four o'clock. In the meantime every effort was being made to put the grounds in playing shape, but a big pond of water lay on the right foul line, while smaller pools were scattered in the deep outfield. The ground also near the grand stand was very wet and heavy.

The teams were constituted practically the same as on Friday; Lush, catcher; DeLinger, pitcher; Burns, second; Smith, first; Purzell, left field; O'Hara, right field; Shultz, center; and McGraw, shortstop. The Royals were: Burns, catcher; DeLinger, pitcher; Smith, first; Purzell, second; O'Hara, third; Shultz, fourth; McGraw, fifth; and McGraw, sixth.

First Innings.—Lush pitched to Burns, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Smith, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Purzell, who was out. DeLinger pitched to O'Hara, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Shultz, who was out. DeLinger pitched to McGraw, who was out.

Second Innings.—Lush pitched to Burns, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Smith, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Purzell, who was out. DeLinger pitched to O'Hara, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Shultz, who was out. DeLinger pitched to McGraw, who was out.

Third Innings.—Lush pitched to Burns, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Smith, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Purzell, who was out. DeLinger pitched to O'Hara, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Shultz, who was out. DeLinger pitched to McGraw, who was out.

Fourth Innings.—Lush pitched to Burns, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Smith, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Purzell, who was out. DeLinger pitched to O'Hara, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Shultz, who was out. DeLinger pitched to McGraw, who was out.

Fifth Innings.—Lush pitched to Burns, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Smith, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Purzell, who was out. DeLinger pitched to O'Hara, who was out. DeLinger pitched to Shultz, who was out. DeLinger pitched to McGraw, who was out.

Wagner and Lajoie Who are Failing at Last

For many summers now old Father Time has kept an envious eye on Napoleon Lajoie and Hank Wagner, two of the greatest baseball players that ever lived. But it was not until the present season that the old fellow succeeded in making any material inroads into the efficiency of this duo of diamond stars.

The news that Lajoie had been retired to the bench to be used hereafter only among the thousands of fans who have watched him with pride since he came to the big league in 1905, is a great disappointment to the fans who can hope to escape that record. We pause for a moment to recall the average covering his entire period of service is a little lower and at the same time shorter, he having been in the game but fifteen years. While Wagner has not yet been retired to the bench, the injury to his knee received early in the season is gradually cutting him down in his work in the short field.

Lajoie, the agile, with the grace of a French dancing master and the eyes of a frontier scout. Wagner of the accurate and sure hand, with the sureness of fate. When will baseball see their like again?

PETER JACKSON WAS THE PERFECT BOXER

Naughton Thinks Australian Was Best Turned Out From the Big Colony—The Reason.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 12.—A correspondent wants to know who, in the writer's opinion, was the "most perfect boxer" of all the Australian ring men who came to America in the 80's and 90's. And, while I think of it, I might remark, "Correspondent" is asking me to fill a pretty large question.

In the communication embodying the query, the correspondent says:

"I am a close reader of all that is printed in regard to ring happenings, and I have noticed that quite often, when discussions about comparative cleverness of latter-day boxers and former pugilists are under way, some critic will make reference to 'the marvelous Griffo,' as if he were the most perfect boxer of all who were in the glove game in the 80's and 90's."

In regard to Griffo, I can only say that I did not have an opportunity of judging the young man's merits when he was at his best. I did not see him in action until he had passed his heyday, and then only once, in an event for which he had had no training, and seemed little concerned as to which way the decision went.

He had disgraced a Queensberry clown at the time of which I speak, and was more fired by the ambition to make the spectators laugh than anything else. He retained sufficient of his boxing with the gloves to make things interesting for his opponent, but his blows were of the mushy order, and his defense not nearly so complete as it had been in former years.

Whatever he might have been earlier in his career, Griffo was certainly more a talk performer or juggler when I saw him.

So far as Griffo may figure in a discussion of this kind, I would prefer to pass the question on to other critics, who have opportunities of making comparisons between Griffo and other Australians when Griffo was at his best.

Australian pugilists are some exceedingly clever ring men, and now, with my experiences and recollections mellowed by years, I have no hesitation in saying that Peter Jackson was the "most perfect boxer" of all the Australians I have seen in real action.

George Dawson had ideas of his own, and did not heed to the lines of the game, but he was a very talented fighter, and he earned the right to be described as clever, but he was not being as well balanced a piece of fighting machinery as Jackson.

Many of the Australians were extremely clever, having the fine points of the game in command to a degree which made them appear graceful in action. Among these Jim Hall was prominent, and Steve O'Donnell was another. George McKenney was a light-weight, and that scrapper George Mulholland, could make almost any man who opposed him look foolish. Fitzsimmons boxed cleverly when he first came across, but when he began to study anatomy and develop knockout punches, he sacrificed art to utility.

Peter Jackson Was Clever.

Peter Jackson was the most talented exponent of the Mace school of boxing the writer ever came across. He knew how to lead and counter, and time and measure, and his footwork always rhymed with his first play. He would duck, snap back, and sidestep in a bewildering way, and he appeared to be always within range, so far as his own attack was concerned, and out of range when his adversary tried retaliation.

I remember Jackson's first match at the old California Athletic Club in San Francisco, back in 1888. His opponent was George Godfrey, the Boston colored man, who was known as "Old Ironsides." I will never forget the pained look which first ran over Godfrey's face when he first ran foul of the Jackson straight left. Peter, who seemed to have an arm as long as an oar, picked Godfrey off his feet with a lunging blow, and placed him on his hunkers on the floor. Godfrey had proved himself a game fellow in many hard fights, but, as he sat there that night, the expression on his countenance was one of mingled surprise and discouragement.

A little later in the evening George received a heart punch from Jackson's right, and, with glazing eyes and quivering ribs, he feebly held a hand aloft and acknowledged defeat.

Jackson's accurate knowledge of timing was shown in his battle with big Joe McAuliffe, the "Mission Giant." For a number of rounds Jackson prodded the giant with straight lefts, and kept his own head bobbing to escape McAuliffe's lurching back fire. Then Jackson feinted McAuliffe into leading with the left. Joe straightened his arm and Jackson threw his head aside and allowed the blow to pass over his shoulder. While doing so, he brought his right across and a sharp spat, followed by a trickle of blood from big Joe's ear, showed that the giant had been effectively and heavily countered.

After that, poor Joe was cut down slowly and scientifically. He was too big to take liberties—rather chances—with, and Jackson whipped him artistically, and came out of the melee without a scratch.

I am wandering away from the point, however, and illustrating how dangerous it is for old-time critics to reminisce.

In answer to my correspondent, I will simply repeat that Peter Jackson was the "most perfect boxer" of all the Australians I had opportunity of studying.

McAleer Denies Any Trouble With Stahl

CLEVELAND, July 12.—President James McAleer of the Boston Red Sox denies that he and Manager Jake Stahl have reached the parting of the ways. McAleer, who is here for a day or so, denies there is any truth in the yarn.

The story had it that Stahl, jealous of the Red Sox president with the majority stockholders, wanting that position himself.

McAleer, according to the report, learned of Stahl's action and has forced the issue, declaring that one or the other must sell out and retire. It is said that McAleer has arranged to meet the minority stockholders in Chicago Saturday, prepared to buy or sell.

McAleer brands the entire story as preposterous and says that Stahl has never gone after the president's job, and that he has had no difficulty with the manager.

FLYING BOATS READY FOR THE SECOND LEG

Chicago to Detroit Journey Has Its Perils—How They Stand.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Pilots of four flying boats were ready early today to advance another leg in the long cruise from Chicago to Detroit. The weather forecast indicated that unfavorable conditions might prevent a resumption of the race today. Roy M. Francis and Beckwith Havens were at Pentwater, Mich., 216 miles from Chicago.

Glenn L. Martin was at Lake Harbor, Mich., where he arrived late yesterday, after a perilous trip of 162 miles from Chicago. Martin was forced to volplane the carburetor on his engine dropped off. Martin fixed up a makeshift valve by using the charcoal skin with which the fish chamois is strained. The craft made the two miles to shore under its own power.

W. E. Johnson still is at Robertsville, Ind., unfavorable weather having prevented him from continuing the race.

CHICAGO, July 12.—President B. B. Johnson of the American League today said he had heard nothing of trouble in the Boston Red Sox organization between James McAleer, president of the club, and Jacob Stahl, manager. He said he had word from McAleer that he was on his way to Chicago, but that he had arranged no meeting with him.

"I do not know what Mr. McAleer's purpose is in coming to Chicago at this time," said President Johnson.

"He has not arranged to see me about anything."

MUSKEGON, Mich., July 12.—True to the predictions of the weather forecaster, high winds prevailed over Lake Michigan today, and the straits in the Chicago-Detroit flying boat cruise were compelled to remain in port this forenoon. Martin was still at Lake Harbor and Havens and Francis at Pentwater.

NEXT SATURDAY'S RACES.

The program of motorcycle and bicycle races to be held at Exhibition Park on Saturday, July 13, under the auspices of the Toronto Motorcycle Club will consist of many novel features. The events will include a slow race, a gasoline consumption test and motor-paced bicycle races. The generous prizes which will be given are drawing large entries.

The functions of the International Federation will be restricted to three activities, as follows:

BOILLOT CAPTURES FRENCH AUTO RACE

Did the Distance of Five Hundred and Seventy Miles Under Eight Hours.

LONGBAU, France, July 12.—Georges Boillot, the French automobilist and winner of the Grand Prix at Dieppe in 1912, today won the Grand Prix of the Automobile Club of France over the Picardy circuit of approximately 570 miles in 7 hours, 56 minutes 25 seconds. Jules Goux, the Frenchman who won the recent 500-mile race at Indianapolis, was second in 7 hours, 56 minutes 25 seconds.

The competitors circled the course 23 times. The race, apart from the speed attained, was chiefly to decide how small a quantity of fuel was necessary, the principal condition being that machines must not consume more than four gallons for every 100 kilometres, or about 83.2 miles. There were 20 Frenchmen, comprising eight Frenchmen, four Britons, three Italians, three Germans and two Belgians.

PIRATE LEADER IS AFTER COZY DOLAN

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 12.—Charlie Dolan and Fred Clarke have had their trade and it is no secret any longer. Dolan is eager to make a swap, but it is reported on good authority that Dolan, the speedy infielder, whom the Phillies secured as a change last year, is the man Pittsburgh is after.

Both managers figure that a roster would benefit both Pirates and Phillies. The report is that Dolan is the man being sought by Pittsburgh, and that Dolan is being sought by the Phillies. If Butler is to play short another infielder is needed by Pittsburgh, and it may be that Clarke Dolan has in mind for Wagner's job.

These Suits Set The Pace For Big Values

Well, it looks as if we had some other shops "going!" This sensational offer of summer suits to order seems to have made others try to follow our lead.

But it is only an attempt. The values are not the same, and cannot be.

The only reason we could make suits to measure at this price is because we bought "mill ends" at such a bargain figure that we can afford to do so. These fabrics are from British mills, and we offer them at

Suit to Measure
$11.75 AND $13.50

Guaranteed to Satisfy

If it was not for the fact that these cloths are "mill ends," these suits would cost you anywhere from $20 to $35.

And remember that the tailoring is not skipped in any way—the same care in cutting—in fitting—in lining—in making—as if you paid the higher sum.

These suits are simply extraordinary value, unequalled in this or any other Canadian city; and the real economist will take advantage of our offer at once.

The Owl Holds a Sale

The Owl is wise. He knows nobody will buy Oxford shoes at the end of the season, so he puts on the sale of Owl Oxfords—and some high shoes, as well—right now, leaving 8 or 10 weeks' good, solid, wearing value this summer. And the cut in price is a healthy one—sufficient to coax out money in the hardest times.

Owl Oxfords

The line is not complete, of course—the "dressy dressers" have made an unprecedented raid on the biggest and best stock we ever had in the store—but you are certain to find a perfect fit in the Blacks, Tans, Patents, and Gun-metal we are offering at $3.98 for the $5.00 Oxfords, and $3.49 for the $4.50's.

Owl High Shoes

Here is a chance for you to make a killing—to buy your fall high shoes at end-of-the-season prices. These shoes are a special line we were able to buy from a high-class manufacturer, who needed ready money—you get the benefit.

CLEVERNESS AGAIN HOLDS SWAY IN BOXING WORLD

"Tear-In" Style Takes a Back Seat—Coulton and Kilbane Real Shifty—The Heavyweight Muddle.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Discussions have arisen in England and Australia as to whether the "tear-in" fighters of the present day are better boxers than the clever fellows who made a business of pugilism 15 or 20 years ago. Some of the arguments used in support of the valiant views expressed are highly interesting, but one very important matter has been overlooked. There are no "tear-in" fighters now—at least, none worth talking about. The clever fellows have come into their own again.

Take the smaller men. When Terry McGovern, with bent back, lowered head, and rapidly-revolving fists, began demolishing the nations of the earth, the opinions that many persons held in respect to the noble art of self-defence were revolutionized. After the Brooklyn whirlwind had run amok for a year or two, grave doubts existed as to whether there was any scientific side to boxing; for, had not the game developed a youth who, by determined onslaught, could upset all ideas of leading, countering, timing, side-stepping, and what not?

And, when Terry spreadeagled "Peddler" Palmer, the pride of British pugilism, in one round, the belief that fortuitousness was the one and only antidote for cleverness, became a firm ground that ever.

Terry strutted his brief period and then went under to another "tear-in" fighter, in the person of "Young Corbett." It is worthy of note, by the way, that each of these "tear-in" specialists fell a victim to a fellow who also operated along "tear-in" lines. "Corbett" did fairly well until he ran into that of Battling Nelson, who was possibly the greatest headlong fighter of them all—greater, even, than Terry McGovern, the founder of the "tear-in" dynasty.

Old Bat Was the King. Terry did more than any of them to show that cleverness could be made to succumb to direct methods. Among other things he won from Joe Gans, who was, possibly, the most

CANADIANS AGAIN WIN FROM BELGIANS

Schwengers Has Easy Time in Davis Cup Singles—Ready for the Finals.

FOLKESTONE, England, July 12.—The Canadian representatives in the preliminary rounds of the Davis Cup tennis tournament, although already qualified to enter the final round, where they meet the United States team, decided to play today the remaining two singles matches of their semi-final round against the Belgians.

In the first match, B. P. Schwengers, the Canadian champion, beat P. De Boroman of Belgium by three sets to one, the score being 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, 6-2.

INTERNATIONAL POLO AT WOODBINE SATURDAY

The impetus given to polo by the recent international games in New York, in which the British were beaten by the American team, is making itself felt throughout the United States and Canada. The Buffalo Polo Club, the oldest in America, immediately after the games at Meadowbrook, sent a challenge to the Toronto club for a sudden death game to be played here next Saturday. The first returning mail carried an acceptance of the challenge and the second international polo struggle of the year is an assured thing. The game will be played at Woodbine.

Thirty-two thousand people cheered and shouted themselves hoarse at the England-America games in New York. The game is a thriller and in order to introduce it into popular favor here the Toronto club has decided to charge a nominal admission of only 25c for the game. The Toronto sporting public has had but few chances to see the ancient sport, but it now promises to take a high place on the calendar of local athletic pastimes. From thirty to forty of the finest polo ponies in the United States and Canada will be used in the various periods of the game. The Buffalo team will arrive here about the middle of the week to become accustomed to the polo field at the Woodbine.

Duke of Sutherland's Pictures Are Copies

Discovery Causes Great Disappointment and Low Prices Are Obtained.

LONDON, July 12.—Great surprise and disappointment were manifested at the Duke of Sutherland's pictures from Stafford House.

It has been long supposed that the collection contained numerous fine examples of old masters, and the public fostered the belief that Stafford House held one of the finest private galleries in England, but when the pictures came to be put up for auction it was found that the supposed old masters were in reality most obvious copies, and many not even good copies.

Four supposed Murillos went for $155 each, three Correggios for $125 for the group and Garrachi's "Holy Family" for $75.

The discovery threw such a damper over the sale that even the genuine pictures brought exceedingly low prices. The best price, $6750, was for Paul Veronese's "Christ and His Disciples at Emmaus," while another Veronese, "A Venetian Nobleman," brought $5000, and "George III. and Queen Charlotte in Coronation Robes," fetched only $1400.

Religious Service Before Business

CHICAGO, July 12.—Samuel A. Kean, for years a banker and bond dealer in La Salle street, known for his practice of holding a brief religious service in his bank at the opening of each business day, died yesterday at his home in Evanston, Ill.

His firm was prominent in the city's business life 20 years ago. Each morning up to the time of his retirement from banking Mr. Kean's first act upon entering his bank was to summon all employees to his private office. He announced the number of a hymn, led the singing, made an introductory talk and had employees take turns in reading the day's lesson. Then he interpreted it for them.

Mr. Kean was 76 years old.

Hamilton Boys At Annual Camp

E. E. of M. C. A. Enjoy a Week's Holiday at Edgelake Beach.

STONEY CREEK, July 12.—During the past week the Hamilton E. E. of M. C. A. have been holding their annual camp at Edgelake Beach. Superb weather conditions at one of the most backing and scenic spots along the lake shore has been one of the many instrumentalities which have afforded the campers a most enjoyable time, and the camping arrangements which have been effected under the guidance of the secretary, G. M. Douglas have been unequalled.

The Y boys have two large tents, an office for the secretary and a kitchen, and arrangements in the latter respect are unique beyond dispute. Not a single implement and utensil necessary for domestic use is absent from the kitchen. The boys include Gus Fraser, George Monck, Ernest Hawkins, Kenneth Beckett, Edward Veale, Arthur Onions, Harry Martin, George Richardson, Charles Cox, J. Rowley, Chas. Summerfield, R. Summerfield, William Carmichael and Secretary Douglas J. Rowley, the chef, is an exceedingly able cook.

Believing in the old motto, "Early to bed and early to rise," they turn out of their bunks at 5 a. m., and then they take advantage of one of the most interesting features of their camp life. The secretary takes several of the campers out onto the lake for some distance each morning in boats and meets the fishermen's smack. They witness with keen interest the hauling in of the fisherman's nets, which contain a good haul of fish, and are then the recipients of a portion of the catch, including whitefish and trout. Swimming and boating are profusely indulged in.

The secretary allot certain duties to each camper every day and one of the strict rules which he enforces is the keeping of the whole of the arrangements in a tidy way. They are given domestic duties to attend to every day. They have devotional services every morning, comprising a prayer, the singing of several hymns and a Bible reading. Another contingent will join them here on Saturday.

SCARBORO FIELD IN GOOD SHAPE

the net, making the score a tie. Peter Barnett put Toronto on the lead half a minute later, and again, before the net was set, he sent a ball over the pass from Kalls and beat L'Heureux, making the score 7 to 5 in favor of the home side.

TORONTO'S NATIONALS. Fourth Quarter. Near the end of the quarter the Nationals' defence, that previously had been playing a steady game, became disorganized, the loss of Dr. Lachapelle, seemingly to materially affect their play. Up to this stage they had been staying close in on their nets, but the Toronto boys finally got them drawn out, and the result that foxy little Kalls and the wily Barnett, ably assisted by Dandeno and Captain Warwick, slipped a couple over on them that they otherwise would not have got.

Nationals were first out for the final session, but instead of prancing out as they did for the preceding quarter, they came with bowed heads, and the lead of the Torontonians taking all the "peppery" out of them.

Dussault got possession at the start and passed to Dupras, but Holmes easily handled the receiver's shot, and the ball traveled down to the other end, where Warwick tried his hand at shooting. Clement again saved and passed to Cattaranich, who cleared, but Braden got possession, and the ball went to Kalls, who cleared, and when the latter made it: Toronto 8, Nationals 5, Time 3:30.

T.B.C. FOR CHATHAM.

Members of the Toronto Bowling Club are holding their annual excursion to Chatham on Wednesday, July 16, via Grand Trunk Railway. Train leaves Union Station at 8 a. m. Tickets will be good to return on regular trains Thursday or Friday—22.45 return. Manager Tommy Ryan is making arrangements so that the boys can attend the opening of the Windsor races, which is Wednesday afternoon. Particulars of excursion can be had at T.B.C. ticket office or Toronto Bowling Club, 11 Temperance street (phone Main 1894).

THE DESERT OF TIME WASTED

DON'T Waste Time. Those three words should be in the mind of every man every day.

They should be repeated over and over in every pulpit, in every newspaper, in every public school, in every family group.

Only one thing we have—time. In time we live, and do our work.

And time we waste like spendthrifts, forgetting its value and our small supply.

Often we have talked to our readers about waste of time. Often in future we shall talk about it.

We wish that it might be possible to find words that would put into the mind of every young man and old man, into the thought of every woman and child, the lesson that is taught in the picture on this page.

Wasted time is a great desert, its presiding genius is a silent, cold, heartless sphinx of death. On the sands of that desert of wasted time are scattered the bones of failures and the footsteps that led nowhere.

Don't waste your time. Don't waste it in idleness; don't waste it in regretting the time already wasted; don't waste it in dissipation; don't waste it in resolutions a thousand times repeated, never to be carried out.

Don't waste your time. USE IT. Sleep and work, rest and think.

Save part of the time of yesterday by saving part of the money earned yesterday. Money earned in days past is the TIME of days past.

Save the time of to-morrow by planning to use it carefully, thoroughly and systematically.

The best of us have already wasted time enough for the creating of a dozen reputations,

"If Only the Years Would Come Back Again, and Bring Their Chances Once More."

That Is the Cry of Millions of Remorseful, Disappointed Men. The Cry Is Vain. The Hand of Time Writes and Passes On. We Cannot Call It Back.

But Regret for Time Wasted Can Become a Power for Good in the Time That Remains. And the Time That Remains IS TIME ENOUGH, If We Will Only Stop the Waste and the Idle, Useless Regretting.

for the doing of ten times as much work as we ever shall do.

Time is wasted that devotes itself to THOUGHT of time wasted.

Don't waste time. Remember that however much time you may have wasted already, you have TIME ENOUGH LEFT if you will use it.

The old man has no excuse for mourning the chances that are gone forever. NO CHANCES ARE GONE FOREVER WHILE LIFE AND TIME REMAIN.

You have seen the rising sun and the setting sun.

They look different to you, but the difference is in your imagination.

The rising sun is the sun of youth, and the setting sun is the sun of age. One is like the other. The rising sun, like the setting sun, gives heat and light to the earth and beauty to the clouds. And no man can tell the difference between a photograph of the sun that is rising and the sun that it is setting, or the difference between paintings of the two if the paintings are accurate.

The rising sun seems to us full of hope, life and promise. The clouds that the rising sun paints and illumines seem full of beauty and freshness unknown to the clouds of the later day.

The setting sun seems tired, the farewell rays seem different from the early rays that tell of the coming day.

But the difference is in our MINDS.

In the morning we are fresh, full of ambition and hope, and our eyes see things in one way.

In the evening we are tired, some illusions have gone, and the tired eyes see different colors and different lights.

Actually, sunset and sunrise are the same. And actually, the beginning and the end of life are the same as regards power and possibility, if we can only see things as they are, not be discouraged, and not be deceived by the hours and the years that have passed.

Your time in the day is as good as ever it was. The sun's light as the sun goes down is as bright as the light when the sun comes up.

What you could do with your hours forty years ago, you can do in those hours now, IF YOU WILL.

Don't waste time. If all of your life is ahead of you, plan to use it all, AND BEGIN WITH THE PRESENT HOUR.

If half of your life is gone, plan to make the remaining half as useful as the whole life would have been without the determination, the incentive and the knowledge of age.

You know when you are wasting time. You CAN stop the waste if you will.

Begin now to save and use your only real possession.

Time slips through your fingers like sand through the fingers of a child on the seashore. Each grain of sand is an hour, and each handful is a year.

What others have done you can do if you will. Time enough is still ahead of you. The last days are as good as the first if you refuse to believe in any difference.

Whether your sun be rising or setting, use the hours of light and opportunity that remain.

Soon the night, the darkness and the cold will come. All the sand of time will have run through your fingers, and your chance in this life will be ended.

"Work, for the night is coming, when man's work is done."

The Situation at Ottawa

We do not mean the political situation, but the national problem of building up a national capital which will at the same time advertise Canada, and gratify the pride of the Canadian people. Australia has tackled a similar problem in a big way, she has created a federal district, and has adopted a comprehensive plan for a new capital city, which includes designs for government house, parliament buildings, and all the public offices that will be needed by the Federal Government for years to come.

Canada began well with the graceful buildings on Parliament Hill, but her progress since then has not been in the line of systematic development. Indeed various governments have committed blunder after blunder. The first big blunder was the erection of the Langevin Block, which does not correspond in any way with the other buildings, and prevented the extension of the grounds of Parliament Hill to the south. This was followed by a succession of blunders on the part of the Laurier Government. Having already a beautiful park separated only from Parliament Hill by the Rideau Canal, the government wisely expropriated a large quantity of land contiguous to the said park, but now the front of the entire tract is occupied by a million dollar hotel, and a big department store. Not only this, but the Laurier Government did its best to ruin the parliament buildings by tacking on a "wing" not in harmony with the architecture of the building.

Nor does it seem that the Borden Government is going to make matters any better. Mr. Rogers is planning another grotesque "wing" to "balance" the exorcism upon the parliament building already mentioned, and has more than once intimated that he would like to build a new building, somewhere east of the west block.

The grounds about the parliament buildings can now only be extended in one direction, namely to the west, and the plan now is to build a big departmental block just west of Parliament Hill, facing Wellington street, and running back to the river. To procure suitable plans for this block, a competition has been arranged, open only to the architects of the British Empire. Surely this competition should have been confined either to Canadian architects, or thrown open to the world.

The fact is that if Canada is to have a capital worthy of her future, she must at once adopt some big comprehensive plan and carry it out at whatever cost. Ottawa has many natural beauties and the buildings on Parliament Hill designed before Confederation, are universally admired. There is no reason why we should not have a capital city which would be a source of pride and admiration to all Canadians.

Democracy Demands Sex Equality

One of the objections raised against the extension of the franchise to women is that in some countries and states where that has happened no very marked improvement has occurred in the character of the legislation or administration. Even if this were true in particular instances it can have no bearing on the demand made by women for equality of right based as that is not on expediency but on principle. The claim is fundamentally ethical and is part of the feminist movement which has been and is the most conspicuous feature of the twentieth century. That movement is itself in turn part of the trend towards a wider democracy which shall carry more broadly into effect its three main propositions. These, as has been well put, are first, that in a civilized community government should depend upon the consent of the governed; second, that no taxes should be imposed upon the people except by the act of their elected representatives; and third that the broader the basis upon which political institutions are erected the firmer they stand.

It is indubitably true that the nations which have most completely realized these three principles are the most stable, effective and progressive, and have become this increasingly as they have accepted the obligations these principles entail. Look for example at the case of the United Kingdom and consider the conditions there as they were during the Georges and the early Victorian era. Who can deny that not only is there a vast improvement in social and economic circumstances but no less a far greater loyalty to its constitution. This remarkable change can only be attributed to the larger and closer co-partnership between the king and the people. Just as privilege has been eliminated and political power placed in the hands of the people so has government improved and been extended to many departments of social betterment which were formerly entirely disregarded. Factory legislation, sanitary regulations and many other matters affecting the public welfare have received consideration simply because the government has become more truly of the people, for the people, by the people.

But the people are composed of men and women and in most democratic countries only half the people participate in the work of government. Men have hitherto monopolized it and the majority are still hostile to the enfranchisement of women—the voteless half of the people. Yet if there is anything in democracy and democratic principle it applies equally and alike to men and women. Both are under the law, both benefit by good laws and suffer from bad laws and bad administration of the laws. If we believe in democracy at all we must allow that if the consent of men is essential for the government of men then the consent of women is just as essential for the government of women. "If," in the words of Mr. W. H. Dickenson, a member of the British Parliament, "democracy requires that no man be taxed, except by the act of his elected representatives, it is precluded from denying the same right to women, who, equally with men, pay the taxes and equally contribute to the wealth of the country. If we hold that the solidarity of our institutions and the usefulness of our governmental system are increased by enlarging the male electorate, how can we fail to think that precisely the same results will flow from admitting women also to the franchise."

HORRIBLE THOUGHT

"Gracious, Wife, Did We Borrow Jones' Suitcase Last Vacation and Forget to Return It?"—By DeBeck.

Cool Clothes

Cool garments are those which favor the dissipation of the heat of the body, for the warmth felt by the wearer of the garment proceeds not so much from the garment itself as from the wearer.

Wool is warm, because it is a worse conductor of heat from the body than other materials, whilst fur is the worst conductor of all. Silk is cooler than either cotton or linen, for it favors conduction of heat from the body better than any other material.

Bleached fabrics are cooler than unbleached ones. In summer and winter all clothes should fit sufficiently loosely to give the limbs and respiratory organs their full freedom.

Color should also play an important part in the choice of our clothing for the seasons. White is the ideal color for summer, because it is one that absorbs the least heat, whilst, on the other hand, black or dark-colored garments attract the sun and absorb a large amount of heat—hence their usefulness for winter wear.

What The Senate Might Do

The threat of the house of lords to adjourn indefinitely and leave the house of commons impotent, seems to be a vain one in the light of the provisions of the Parliament Act. In Canada, however, the senate is a co-ordinate branch of the National Legislature, and can strand the house at any time by adjourning.

In the United States neither house can adjourn for more than three days at a time, without the consent of the other; they can jointly agree to adjourn over the Christmas holidays, or to adjourn sine die when the session's work is completed. But neither house can walk off and thus evade receiving bills passed by the other chamber.

It was quite possible, last winter for example, for the Dominion Senate to have embarrassed the government by simply adjourning for three or six months. If we are to have legislation in this country, to curb the senate, this point should not be lost sight of.

Bird Protection

A new law for the protection of migratory birds goes into effect in the United States on October 1. The law divides the country into two zones, Northern and Southern, and within these two zones the regulations as to shooting season vary, according to the four classifications of migratory birds. On insectivorous birds, as robins and larks, there is perpetual closed time in all states; and many other birds that have been slaughtered, particularly in the South, where there has been little or no state protection, there is a five-year period of protection.

The new law has much more than sentiment behind it. The agricultural interests of the country have demanded it—after a tardy recognition of the importance of bird life in fighting the insect pests of field, garden and orchard. The protection that is to be given may be too late in the case of some species, but if the law is well enforced it cannot fail to do much to some other species that have been fast vanishing before the onslaughts of the hat hunters and plumage traders. May the law prove all that its friends have hoped it would be, and may it be followed by the international action that is no less needed to save the beautiful birds of the tropics.

No Silly Season Yet

Altho we had quite a hot spell some time back which we believe has not yet departed from the land to our south, the summer so far has passed without any of those fantastic tales which usually come over the wire at this time of the year. Indeed we cannot recall seeing a typical hot weather story yet.

Nor have we heard any hot weather arguments. People are notoriously short tempered and excitable when the weather is warm, and crimes of violence, big strikes and national revolutions generally occur in the summer months. If the weather is hot enough, the best of friends may, engage in violent disputes over a matter of no consequence.

Now and then some accident starts a discussion which all the newspapers and many of the people engage in with great vigor. Some of these have become historical. Thus The New York Sun wanted to know whether a piece of pumpkin pie should be eaten with a knife and fork, or be eaten from the hand, a discussion of more lively interest in the United States than in Canada where many of us still painfully pronounce it p-u-m-p-k-i-n pie.

"Is $25 enough to get married on?" was another, and still a third was "Should a man give all his money to his wife?"

Then too we hear echoes every now and then of that famous question anxiously propounded by The World some years ago: "Where kin the hired man wash his feet?"

Why Women Are Discontented

Census returns in Great Britain show that there are in the islands 1,178,317 more women than men! This helps to explain the shocking and extraordinary conduct of the suffragettes, making clear the impossibility of marriage and normal lives for a great body of women, and the hopelessness of their situation unless conditions are somehow to be changed.

The exceptional woman of high endowments who invades man's field of work makes good, for unusual capability and force in either sex can carve out a notable career. But for the average woman to whom are closed those lines of activity for which she is best fitted the battle for bare existence is not different from the market for merchandise, and when it is overstocked with a commodity prices fall under the law of supply and demand. Where women are too few to go around they are "starred." Where their number is approximately equal to that of men they are treated with proper consideration, as in this favored land. Where there is a surplus of femininity, as in Germany, with a million men in the military and naval service, women work in the fields, the college professor rides first-class, while his wife rides third, women are crowded off the curb where the sidewalk is narrow, and the hands of men are whiter and more carefully manicured as a rule than the hands of women.

Some Health Proverbs

An open window is better than an open grave.

Warm rooms have killed more people than ever froze to death.

If you let the child have measles when he is young, you may save a doctor's bill later on, but you may have to pay the undertaker now.

Scarlatina may not sound so dangerous as scarlet fever, but ask the undertaker.

Crusts - & - Crumbs

By ALBERT ERNEST STAFFORD

"The Cottage" was the third house I lived in—this incarnation. When I think of it I think of Goldsmith's line—"there to return and die at home at last." We went to live there in 1864 I believe, and we left it in 1872. As I was born two days after Christmas, in 1861, it meant the world to me for a long time, and when we left it I went round the rooms and kissed the walls goodbye. I had copious memorials of those early days, but when a subsequent home was broken up recently, everything was swept into oblivion, and that book I had in mind, "When I Was a Child," will be one burden the less for the printer. I had such experiences there as every child has in the country. I learned about butterflies, and spiders and bees, and birds and their nests; and I had a little garden plot separate from the big garden, and planted my own seeds, and grew my own flowers and trees. I was a regular forester for trees. I had read that a horse chestnut takes eighteen months to germinate, and I planted one. Of course I dug it up occasionally to see how it was doing. Finally something was doing, and the radicle appeared. I wanted it to grow up out of the earth, but the perverse plant appeared determined to go down into the ground. I turned it upside down several times, but it always turned down again, and I discovered that even a horse chestnut has a will of its own. When I let it have its own way it soon sent up two cotyledons. It was ten years afterwards before I learned these words, and there was no one in our family who knew anything about botany as a science. The great botanical event of the Irish year was "setting" the potatoes. "Starry Eyes" and "White Rocks" were standard varieties in those days, and there was a tremendous sensation when a new and enormous kind was brought "from Amerikay" named Calico-Clickers. The processes of waling and cutting the seed, "dropping" them on the "rigs," on which the manure, which was known by a good scriptural epithet, had been scaled, and covering them from the "fur" with spade work. I was thoroly familiar with, and I became intimate with all those who did the work of the field, and the byre, of the garden and the kitchen, and grew up democratic to a degree. Many a flogging I had for playing with forbidden children, and all children were forbidden; but their interests were my interests, their delights were mine, and to this day I do not understand the caste prejudices that grades humanity according to its wealth or social position.

The great event of the year, supreme beyond all, and greater than all the others rolled into one, was "The Twalt." Right in the very middle of County Antrim we were all bigoted Protestants. The Fenian, rising had intensified our prejudices to the highest pitch. I lay awake at night trembling with terror lest a Fenian should discover that I was a Protestant and pitch a bottle of Greek fire thru the window at me. That was the dreadful and hopeless fate which appalled the children of that day. The more water you poured on, the fiercer the Greek fire would burn. I connected it with the story in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and understood in a vague way that "Greek" was a word used as a substitute for a much more terrible one not to be mentioned, attached to the diabolical being, who figured in the picture of the fire burning against the wall in the Interpreter's House. I suffered agonies of imagination from Greek fire, and I have no doubt thousands of others did all over Ulster. Next to Greek fire the other terror that was flying by night was the kidnapper. Against all these evils there was but one protection—the Orangemen. No one could tell what an Orangeman really was, but we children felt that when the eyes of the young man were opened and he saw horses and chariots of fire all round the hills about Elisha, he might have had some faint conception of what the Orangemen were. But of course, the Orangemen were so much more wonderful than even Elisha, would have been glad to be in County Antrim on "The Twalt" to see "the flie." I never saw "the flie" myself. That was too great a privilege to expect. But for weeks before the great day of "the glorious, pious and immortal memory," and this legend in racist betokened divine honor and authority, before we went to bed at day's-gone the rumbling and mutterings of distant drumming echoed far and near over the country, and we would awake perhaps in an hour or two, drowned in a magnificent noise as some returning party passed the house and "bated the drum" in robust complement, till the walls shook, and the windows rattled, and the joyful consciousness penetrated our hearts that no Greek fire could coexist with such majestic uproar. I do not think anyone on this side of the Atlantic can "bate the drum" with the same skill they used to have in Antrim. They had special rhythms and changes in their "bating" which seemed to be as firmly established and elaborate as change-ringing on a peal of bells.

No one who has not been born and bred in the land can understand the extraordinary fervor with which "The Twalt" is regarded in Ulster. No other holy day in any part of the world calls forth more reverence, more sacrifice, more ceremonial, more display. In the course of time King William, who ill-treated his wife and falls in many respects to meet the approval of modern historians, has come to embody for the Ulsterman all the virtues and none of the vices of King Arthur, Lancelot, and Galahad. The fact is that the men of Ulster know little or nothing about King William, but they know much of an ideal man whom they call by that name, whose bravery, wisdom, loyalty, patience, piety, love of liberty and manly and kingly virtues no person dare impugn. We all bowed the knee to this kingly man of action, and it was not all our fancy painted him—well, so much the worse for him. Ulster at least is loyal to an ideal. So this mysterious ideal sovereign, whose memory encourages every virtue but that of toleration, became for me as for all my contemporaries a figure not to be dishonored by any mere historical information. The Faithful and True who sat on a white horse in the book of Revelation was for many just a prophecy of the man who rode across the Boyne on a white charger wearing a vesture dipped in blood. It is impossible to exaggerate the intensity of the feeling of loyalty felt for this monarch of 250 years ago. No modern sovereign could evoke it. And all this feeling culminates and is poured out annually on "The Twalt." Its symbolic color is orange, and a mystic who wrote in "The Dublin University Magazine," in 1853-4, in speaking of the trinity of Being, Thought, and Joy or Love, has this to say: "Out of the purple or dark Violet has struggled the Red; out of the Red is breathed the Orange. The movement of the Orange Joy is threefold. If, holding to its root in the Red, it growth forth in a circle according to Pravriti, or procession, till it reenters the primordial Violet, it produces the glad Green of universal nature, wherein all living things rejoice, and on which the fables love to dance. If, preferring the way of Nivriti or retrocession into itself,—it reenters its fountain, the Red, and their common fountain the Violet, all three coalesce, and merge into pure light—then the Red is a subject unto the Violet, and Light is all in all."

But at four-and-a-half only the gorgeous glory of the orange robes and orange banners and orange arches impressed me, and the unathomable profundity of the abysses of mine opened up by the fiers and drummers. No noise ever seems adequate after those "Twalts" of the later 'sixties. Niagara is tame in comparison, and having once faced a drummer in his fine frays nothing else human could browbeat me. I believe drummers in the height of their inspiration pass into an ecstatic state, and that of Eastern ascetics, borne away by billows of sound. I have seen their faces rapt, impassive, while they banged away with blood-streaming hands. To excite the noble fury of one was the hope of every normal boy. "The Cottage" sat at the end of a peninsula made by the swerving of a new road in famine time to get rid of the up and down of the old road. The old road ran into the "new line" I spent those eight formative years, and in the second of them I had a drum and was ready for "The Twalt." The Twalt was used to come down from The Past thru Gullinstown and Lormerstown, and pass "The Doctors," and as a special compliment the procession would pass thru the little village of Ballynagilly, and the noble fury of the Twalt was a blank check. And I waited with all the trepidation of four-and-a-half till the great flags and banners came gaily dancing and waving past our gate, and no earthly honor could equal the fact that the sacred banner with its white horse was waved at us. We had contributed to the Twalt, and all the william, and dahlia, and purple, and hollyhocks, and anything else the flower garden produced that would help to construct those wonderful arches which one spuce, to be used to see. After the flag came the lodge, each member with sashes and orange lilies, the Master with an orange cloak hanging to his heels, resplendent being any thing else on either side, and an escorting company of women and girls all in the gala best of the year. The beating heart of all were the drummers and the fife, advancing and retiring, strutting and bending and gyrating, while their clamour echoed for miles over hill and dale. The procession, on this particular occasion had gone past a few minutes when a hue and cry was raised in The Cottage. The original Crust and Crumb was lost. The vision of glory had been too much. I was recovered on the Sour Hill over which the road stretched away off in those days into sunset, and across the regions beyond Ullisturley and across the Braidwater. I was at the head of the procession, and I was drumming away with my two little drumsticks.

I have a few memories of childhood behind this, and they are all marked by the same characteristic. There is the memory of a walk in a garden; of the ride in the perambulator and of the sleep in a strange room; of helping to move and carrying a parcel. They are just glimpses, or flashes of recollection. What I have described here of the Orange processions is from memories of later years. But I remember seeing the little child in petticoats with his drum and drumsticks marching at the head of the procession. I say I see him, see him as a third person would see him, looking at him from the left front. It is not a memory of myself from inside, but a memory from outside, before the ego or centre of consciousness had descended into or was wholly incarnated in the body. If my readers will study their earliest memories they will discover some strange facts.

"The Deerslayer" A Thrilling Tale

"The Deerslayer," a thrilling tale of the pioneers and Indians in the new and unsettled days of America, was the chief feature at Ryan's Theatorium during the past week and proved a great attraction.

Actor Makes Real "Getaway" From Straight-Jacket

In "When Light Came Back," a recent Eclair release, a sensational scene shows Bob Frazer, who takes the part of prisoner, releasing himself from a real straight-jacket. Bob says there is no fake about it and that Houdini has nothing "on" him when it comes to this class of work.

WIN A SEASON TICKET

For the next few weeks the Sunday World offers its readers monthly season tickets for any moving picture theatre in the directory printed on this page. All you have to do is to visit any of the houses mentioned in the directory, and write a short letter stating what you consider to be the best photo-play of the week, and why.

Railroad Drama For the Wonderland

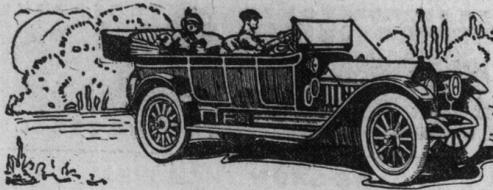

"The Weaker Mind" and "When a Woman Loves" For This Week's Bill.

At the Wonderland Theatre a splendid program was supplied last week, the chief picture being "The Tragedy of the Eagle Mine," which dealt with a colored woman's devotion to her white husband and son. The story is full of pathos and excitement while the acting of the various characters was splendid.

Another fine feature was an Egyptian story, "The Soltimar of the Prophet," and an Indian drama entitled, "The Squaw Man's Awakening." "The Squaw Man's Awakening," the moving picture newspaper showing the most interesting events of the world, revealed some really fine pictures.

For this week Mr. Joy has secured a fine railroad drama in two parts entitled "The Weaker Mind," for Monday and Tuesday, while on Thursday and Friday the chief attraction will be "When a Woman Loves," a specially strong "Cine" in three acts.

Popular Star Rejoins Powers Company Edwin August, one of the best known and most popular stars in the photoplay world, who has been with the Vitagraph for some months, returned to the Powers' ranks on June 1, with his leading lady, Miss Mary Charleston. In addition to writing and directing his pictures Mr. August will take the leading roles.

Motoring

Ontario Motor League Notes

The Ontario Motor League is sending out hundreds of direction and danger signs to affiliated clubs, which are putting them up. The clubs are covering all sections of the province traveled by motorists from Toronto to Chatham thru the Niagara district, Kingston, Peterboro' and other well traveled roads.

The league is also continuing the work of marking the poles by color paint. The road from Toronto to Windsor has been done in white, and the league will continue the work from Hamilton to Niagara Falls in red with a cut-off across Burlington Beach in blue. The question of getting painted bands of tin to tack onto the poles is being considered, and this will likely be adopted as more attractive than the other method.

The league's meeting at Peterboro' last week was a big success. The members went from Peterboro' to Karawatha Lakes, holding their board meeting on the steamer at Stoney Lake. Further up the lakes the directors were joined by a number of Peterboro' motorists, and the dinner was held at Burleigh Falls, returning to Peterboro' at 10 p.m., motoring from Young's Point.

Several important questions were discussed at the meeting. The league will take up with the Hon. Mr. Hanna the question of indicating the limits of towns and villages. The provincial secretary has sent out a number of special constables to tack onto the motorists within the village limits, and the argument is that the travelers have no means of knowing when they get into the restricted speed district. They want the villages compelled to place signs or authority given to the league to do so.

Mr. Frederick Nichols complained of the municipalities dumping gravel and stones on roads and leaving it there for long periods much to the danger of motor cars. The committee will take this up with the government and urge that the material be distributed.

It was decided to hold a conference during the Toronto Exhibition of representatives of all motor clubs of Canada to form a Dominion federation to further national projects such as highways to obtain uniformity of legislation, and to exchange licenses with the United States. A number of the clubs from St. John, N.B., to British Columbia have endorsed the idea, and will have representatives.

Dr. Donlittie and Mr. Hazelwood, the president, were named to represent the league on the committee which the Ontario Railway Board is forming to devise legislation to prevent accidents.

The conference will be held in September.

The Barrie Motor Club was affiliated.

Motorists are advised that the Kingston road between Whitby and Oshawa is unsafe for traveling. The C. P. R. is tearing up the road between these points to put in a subway. Motorists should leave the Kingston road at Whitby and take the base line which runs from the Grand Trunk Station about a mile and a quarter south, and advance east to Oshawa. A number of cars have been stuck for hours on the torn up road. There are no signs to indicate that the road is practically closed to motorists.

National Highways For States Planned

Idea is to Build 50,000 Miles of Good Roads, or Two Per Cent. Total.

There are more than 2,000,000 miles of highways in the United States, according to a bulletin of the National Highways Association, which continues to say that of these miles not one truly can be called a national highway.

To propose the building of 50,000 miles of highway is but proposing to build a little more than two per cent. of the total road mileage of the country. France has 40,000 miles of national roads or 10 per cent. of the total mileage.

The National Highways Association was formed by men interested in the subject of good roads in general and national highways in particular. The association has worked out a tentative plan for a series of national highways which cross and recross the United States, and designed to furnish the maximum of convenience and utility, while serving the largest possible proportion of the territory thru which the highway passes. The highways have been located by experienced road engineers.

At the present time the association's engineers are correcting and co-ordinating the present scheme. Letters have been sent all over the country to various authorities asking for opinions. It is the desire of the National Highways Association to emphasize the fact that these highways are proposed only that a start may be made in the endeavor to secure for the country the good road benefits it needs if its development is not to fall behind that of other nations.

Cole Plans For Doubling Plant

During the Past Year Big Inroads Have Been Made on Foreign Business.

John Guy Monihan, of the Premier Motor Manufacturing Company, has become associate director of sales and advertising of the Cole Motor Car Company. Ed. F. Harrie, has been promoted to field sales manager. This expansion in organization follows closely on the recent announcement of increasing the Cole stock to $1,000,000, and the doubling of the Cole output, and the closing of a contract for another mammoth addition to the factory.

In securing Mr. Monihan, Mr. Cole believes that his already concrete sales and advertising organization has been materially strengthened with such men as director of sales and advertising, Homer McKee; field sales manager, Ed. F. Harrie; secretary and treasurer, J. F. Morrison; factory production manager, J. F. Richman; and field advertising manager, H. C. Bradford.

The tremendous strides made by the Cole Motor Car Company are recognized all over the country. During the past year big inroads have been made on foreign business. The Cole's great output of this year is oversold, and Vice-President S. J. Knepp states that all materials for the doubled output for the coming season will be delivered on a carefully-prearranged shipment schedule. Naturally, all the high automobile merchants are conversant with Cole standards, and are recognizing more and more the strides he has made with his standardized car.

Ever since Jan. 1, automobile dealers, the recognized leaders in their particular localities, have been writing, wiring, or visiting the Cole factory with a view of getting the Cole line for the coming season.

Packard President Makes Long Tour

H. B. Joy Obtains Preliminary Survey of Route For Lincoln Highway.

Henry B. Joy, president of the Packard Motor Car Company, has just returned from a motoring trip to the Pacific coast, made for the purpose of obtaining a preliminary survey of a transcontinental route for the Lincoln Highway Association, of which he is president.

Mr. Joy made the trip in his "prairie schooner," a Packard 48" chassis, equipped with a special body, containing a complete camping outfit. He was accompanied by Frank H. Trego, research engineer of the Packard Motor Car Company.

The good roads tourists followed the route of the Forty-Niners across the plains, and turned south in Utah, going thru Salt Lake City and around the lower end of the Great Salt Lake. Fifteen and one-half days were consumed in a leisurely drive of 2723 miles from Detroit to San Francisco.

"Conditions have improved materially in Wyoming," said Mr. Joy; "altho the railroad crossings are in a deplorable condition. We found a number of good cut-offs from the original trail, which shortened our trip. Despite the fact that Nevada has only one inhabitant to the square mile, we found it to be the best sign-posted state west of the Mississippi River. Everywhere we came across painted poles that marked the route.

"The lack of legible signs in California is a serious drawback. Altho there are more automobiles in that state than in any other, with the exception of New York, it was there that we found the most trouble. We were misdirected and lost our way on several occasions.

"By 1913 motorists should have no difficulty in making the trip from New York to San Francisco in eleven days. By that time many miles of good roads will have been completed, and good sign posts will mark the transcontinental route."

Manager of Alco Service. The appointment of J. F. Gfrorer as manager of the Alco general service department is announced by C. A. Benjamin, general sales manager of the American Locomotive Company. Mr. Gfrorer has been connected with the Alco service department since its inception, being one of its organizers. It was largely thru his efforts that the high standing of the Alco service department was made possible.

In naming Mr. Gfrorer for the office the Alco officials have merged the general service department, which served the branch houses, and the dealers' service department, thereby concentrating the service work of the company.

Detachable Rims

Detachable rims were invented, patented, and first marketed by Michelin in 1906. During the past seven years they have been widely copied, but have hardly been equalled, in their leading features of simplicity of construction, lightness, strength, and efficiency.

The Michelin detachable rim has no delicately adjusted contrivance about it, but is held securely in position by six steel clamps, each secured by a bolt and nut. The tire is mounted on a special rim furnished with a lug, and is slipped laterally over the fixed rim of the wheel. Detaching is an equally simple affair. The six nuts and clamps are removed, the valve is turned to the lowest position, and the upper part of the tire is pulled towards the operator. The rim is thus removed from the wheel, the valve releasing itself automatically.

The Michelin detachable rim is moreover, much lighter than any other type—no small consideration, since every unnecessary pound of weight wastes power and wears out tires prematurely. Its efficiency has also been proved in all kinds of service and it is specially suited to the conditions prevailing in this country. Be the road as rough as it may, a Michelin detachable rim will remain firm upon its wheels; and however much mud and gravel may adhere, it cannot cripple any

The official F. A. M. hotel at the Denver convention, July 23-26, will be the Albany.

Edward Baumgartner, a contracting foreman of Marietta, O., has ridden his motorcycle 20,000 miles and still has the original tires on the machine. The telephone company at Rochester, Indiana, is so well pleased with the first motorcycle installed that a rush order has been entered for a second machine.

The Goodyear Wireless Service

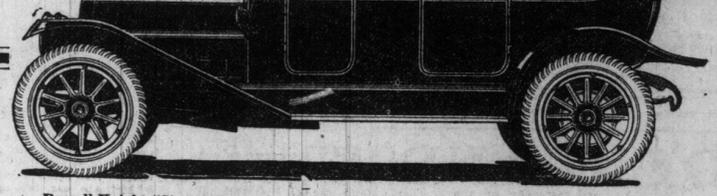

The Goodyear Company is, we believe, the only manufacturing one in Canada using wireless regularly for year around for commercial purposes. Having its factory in Bowmanville and head office in Toronto makes necessary a communication more constant and regular than would be possible by telephone.

The company installed wireless apparatus in November, 1911, and to June 18, 1913, exactly 96,849 messages have passed between the two stations. This is the American Continent record for the number of messages between any two stations of these are in connection with shipments. It was expensive to install, but expense is no object when the betterment of "Goodyear Service" is the consideration.

Increased Efficiency With Use KNIGHT ENGINE vs. POPPET VALVE ENGINE

For some years past we have maintained that, whereas the Poppet Valve tends to deteriorate in efficiency almost from its first active use, the Knight engine increases its efficiency in use; also that the law of diminishing returns operates far later in the life of the Knight engine than it does in the Poppet Valve engine. The test was as follows: The findings of the Judges were remarkable for the absolute unanimity with which our claims for the all-round supremacy of the Knight Engine were substantiated:

RESULT OF THE KNIGHT ENGINE TEST, MARCH 15th to 28th, 1909. R.A.C. OF GREAT BRITAIN. ENGINE.

28 h.p. R.A.C. rating. Maximum h.p. attained—57.25 h.p. for 5 hours. Average h.p. maintained—54.3 h.p., or 141 per cent. of its rated load of 38 h.p.

REPORT ON GASOLINE. Knight Motor gasoline consumption for each h.p.—.663 lbs. NATURE OF TEST. 132 hours on bench, plus 2,000 miles on road at 42 miles per hour, thence 5 hours on bench.

CONDITIONS OF TEST. That engine must develop 133 1-3 per cent. of its rated maximum h.p., or at least 33 1-3 per cent. over its rating of 38 h.p.

RESULT OF THE POPPET VALVE TEST, MAY 1913. AUTOMOBILE CLUB OF AMERICA. ENGINE.

6-cylinder, 38 h.p. A.L.A.M. rating. Maximum h.p. attained—44.9 h.p. for 3 minutes. Maximum h.p. maintained throughout test—35.7, or 93 per cent. of its rating of 38 h.p.

REPORT ON GASOLINE. Gasoline consumption for each h.p.—.801 lbs. NATURE OF TEST. 300 hours on bench alone; no road work given.

CONDITIONS OF TEST. That engine be required to develop only 70 per cent. of its maximum h.p. (that is, 44.9 for 3 minutes), which was shown to be 20 per cent. less than its rating of 38 h.p.

JUDGES' REMARKS

Result of Examination of Parts. (KNIGHT ENGINE) The engine was completely dismantled, and no perceptible wear on any of the fitted surfaces was noticeable. The cylinders and pistons were found to be notably clean. The ports of the valves showed no burning or wear. Adjustments—None.

AVERAGE H.P. DEVELOPED. In 132 hours, 54.3 h.p., or over 141 per cent. of its rated h.p.

DISTANCE AND SPEED ON ROAD. 2,000 miles at the rate of 42 miles per hour. Average for 5 hours, final bench test, 57.25 h.p., or an increase of 3 h.p. over that developed in the first 132 hours of the test. (The Poppet Engine was not driven on road during test.)

This goes to show how fully our claims as to the increasing power of the Knight have been substantiated.

JUDGES' REMARKS

Result of Examination of Parts. (POPPET VALVE ENGINE) The exhaust from the motor was smoky, and considerable carbon deposits were observed on the exhaust valves after the test. Adjustments—The following adjustments were made during the 300-hour run: The tappet on the lock nut on the exhaust valve tappet of No. 1 cylinder was found to be loose, and the tappet in such a position that the valve did not seat properly. The tappet was screwed down and locked. It was later found that this tappet had been set for more clearance than it had at the start of the test. It was consequently reset at the 152nd hour to its original position, where it remained to the end of the test. While this adjustment was being obtained the power fell momentarily, but developed than were recorded during periods when no adjustments were made. Two spark plugs were replaced without stopping the motor, one during the 106th and one during the 128th hour. The screw covers above certain of the valves were tightened. The screw which fasten the cage containing the carburetor air valve in place were also tightened once during the run. A slight leak around the gland on the water pump was present during the greater part of the test, but no adjustment thereof was made.

AVERAGE H.P. DEVELOPED. 1st five hours 38.7
2nd five hours 38.1
3rd five hours 37.8
At the end of 40 hours 37.0
Thence it decreased steadily until during the last five hours it was 34.1, or a decrease of over 10 per cent., as compared with the average of the first five hours.

DUNLOP TRACTION TREAD MOTORCYCLE TIRES

There is only one reason which should prevent a man from possessing this master tire—not having a motorcycle itself. Nearly every motorcycle owner realizes that the wear and tear on his tires is tremendous, still that he must get the mileage, enjoy resiliency with every mile, and know that skidding is an impossibility. Where you find a rider upon whom the above impression has not dawned, you will find another rider who will quickly tell how he secured all that was possible in mileage, resiliency and safety by using Dunlop Traction Tread Tires. Motorcycle Gossip

Conducted By A. N. B.

T. M. C. Races on July 19.
The Toronto Motorcycle Club held their regular meeting on Wednesday, July 10, in the club rooms. The much-discussed plan of re-affiliating with the Canadian Motorcyclists' Association was again brought up, and the members were unanimous in their decision to drop all connection with the C. M. A., and endeavor to get along without that body. The C. M. A. officials failed to make any concessions, and as the members of the T. M. C. considered that they had not been fairly treated and looked for some special considerations, they were greatly disappointed. In future, the T. M. C. will shift for itself, and the outlook is not so bad, at that!

The club will hold another race meet on Saturday, July 19, and, with the help and co-operation of a large membership, expect to make a grand success of the affair, as they always have in the past.
A special race card of amateur events will be on the slate, and also several interesting gymkhana events, such as a slow race, gasoline consumption test, and other novelties. The Toronto Motorcycle Club has always been able to draw a large crowd up to date, and it is hardly likely that July 19 will prove an exception.
As the T. M. C. is affiliated with the Canada Motorists' Association, they will receive their sanction from that body in future.

A RUN THRU HIGH PARK.

Torontonians at Elmira.
A party of local motorcyclists, including E. Buftum, manager of the local branch of the Hendee Manufacturing Co., and wife; W. G. Self, C.M.A. director, and wife; and Alex Duff, the local amateur star, left by boat for Rochester on Wednesday, July 2, to attend the New York State convention and championship meet at Elmira, N.Y., July 4 and 5. After meeting Mr. and Mrs. Tassel in Rochester they spent the night in that city, and proceeded the next day thru Canandaigua, Fen Yan and many beautiful places, and stayed Thursday night at Watkins Glen. On Friday they finished their trip to Elmira. Alex Duff, who has jumped into such prominence as an amateur, captured two seconds and a third in the amateur track events. J. U. Constant, amateur champion of New York State, got first in all the events, but Duff made him hustle at that. Constant was riding a four-valve Indian, while Duff rode the same Indian machine on which he recently defeated Fred Miles, and Bobby Scott. Duff was not eligible for the state championship race as he was not a resident of New York State. The Canadian party returned by the same route and are delighted with their reception at Elmira.

Why Not a Side-car Picnic?
Why not make the next social run a side-car picnic? Instead of going upwards of one hundred miles to some neighboring town or city, and taking dinner at an hotel, why not make it a short run to some of the beautiful spots surrounding Toronto, and each rider take a fair partner who could easily supply a dainty lunch? With the addition of a large utensil in which to make tea this could be made a most enjoyable outing, and the co-operation of all club members is assured.

Abandon Private Car.
That economy of operation is not the only appeal the motorcycle makes to tourists is shown by the fact that a Los Angeles, Cal., couple abandoned the comfort of a private Pullman car to complete their honeymoon on a motorcycle with side-car attachment. I. L. Hibbard, son of an eastern railway magnate, and his bride, formerly Miss Ethel Davenport, of Los Angeles, had been touring the States in a private car belonging to Mr. Hibbard's father. But when they crossed to the continent, they refused to continue to travel in a Pullman. They wanted to make side trips and visit points not accessible by train. So Mr. Hibbard purchased a motorcycle with side-car attachment and they will complete their honeymoon on the motorcycle.

A Correction.
We made the statement in these columns last week that only two single-cylinder machines with side-cars made the trip to Waterloo and return on July 1. This was a mistake as Mr. Carbut drove his single Indian and side-car the entire distance, without the least trouble, and never even opened his tool kit. Mr. Carbut is an enthusiastic motorcyclist and never misses an opportunity to take a trip when the weather is at all fit.

A Friend in Need.
Bert Webb, demonstrator and salesman at the local Indian store on Spadina avenue, had a peculiar experience on Sunday last while returning from Whitby. He only picked up four brand new locks in his back tire while on the Rouge Hill, and after fixing the fourth puncture came across a companion in distress, Mr. Wilson and wife with their side-car outfit, who had run out of gasoline. As Bert did not have any too much of the precious fluid himself he decided to tow Mr.

Wilson's outfit back to town, which with the aid of a length of wire rope he did in good time. This was pretty good work for his engine, pulling two side-cars and two motorcyclists with their passengers, as there are some stiff grades on the Kingston road. The party arrived in Toronto about midnight, none the worse for the experience.

Two Brazil, Ind., young women, Miss Myra Hill, daughter of former state treasurer, Major R. S. Hill, and Miss Mabel Pruner, started on a motorcycle trip to California.

Few women have made this trip by motorcycle, and perhaps none have previously undertaken to make the trip riding tandem, as the Brazil girls are doing. They will make the journey leisurely and are expecting to have an enjoyable time seeing the country enroute.

A Few Suggestions?
"1. If a motorcyclist should happen to leave his tire lever at home, a connecting rod will form a very good substitute, and the rider will be almost certain to find one or more of these in his engine. Also, if a piece of wood be driven into the big end, it becomes an excellent mallet.
"2. Riders wishing to tow their friends and not having an elastic tow rope are recommended to use the inner tube from their back tire; the butt-ended variety is especially suitable for this purpose.
"3. If a motorcyclist, when on tour, forgets his toothbrush, he should remember that there is a carbon brush in the magneto which will answer the purpose admirably.
"4. If a piece of thin wire be wanted for any purpose, e.g., to affix a mascot, there is always an apple supply in the armature."

New HUDSON Announcement

A 54-Horsepower Six $2800
A HUDSON Four $2300

These are sensational values. The cars are fully equipped with Delco system of electric self-cracking, lighting and ignition device, demountable rims, speedometer, clock, top, windshield and all other details that make the car complete.

See this $2800 Hudson Six Today

Within one year we have become the world's largest builders of Sixes.
This enormous output has taken us out of the costly development period.
The days of a premium on Sixes are over.
You can get a HUDSON Six at four-cylinder prices.
It's the first time that a high powered Six—a big, roomy five-passenger Six, with every detail the finest, could be bought under $2800.
You who have wanted a Six, but were unwilling to pay more than $3000 for your car, can now realize your wish.

This HUDSON Six is the natural successor to the Six which last season outsold every Six in the world.
It will do more than a mile a minute, and on high will throttle down to three miles an hour.
It is powerful enough to meet every road demand. It is so quiet you can scarcely hear the motor.
And the price—think of it—is only $2800.
Good fours of other makes cost that much.
Come see this HUDSON Six.
Let us demonstrate it to you. We'll show its mettle against any motor car at any price.

A New Low Price Level for Fours

There have been many startling values in HUDSON cars in the past.
This Four at $2300 we think by far outdistances any HUDSON car ever before offered.
Remember the "23" at $2150.
It was the great car of its day.
Thousands now daily prove the stuff of which it was built. This HUDSON four, built more sturdily even, with more powerful motor—almost 40 horsepower—with electric self-cracking device, electric lights, roomier body—a $500 greater value—is only $2300.

Contrast such value with any four on the market.
Compare performance, design, workmanship, etc., with $2600 cars. That's the kind of competition we seek. It's the kind that will convince you that truly a new low price level has been found for reliable four-cylinder cars.
The car is here for your inspection to-day.

Both Cars Built by Coffin

These cars are the product of an engineering corps, the largest in the whole motor car industry.
At its head is Howard E. Coffin, long regarded as the foremost engineer in America.
Working with him are 47 experts. Each has been chosen because he excelled in some important particular.
Most of them devote their whole time to the HUDSON. Others are free lance experts brought in to perfect some part.

Each has brought to the HUDSON the very best he knows. The result is that HUDSON cars in every detail reveal the utmost in car building.
Remember that last year's HUDSON Six was the most successful Six ever built.
And that Howard E. Coffin has more four cylinder successes to his credit than any other engineer in America.

Why Michelin Tubes are Red and Why they are better than others:

No rubber, no matter how it is treated, can compare, in any way, with Pure Para—for Para is the finest rubber the world produces.

Pure Para Rubber can be treated with certain chemicals which impart to it an extremely high limit of elasticity and durability—and also a rich red colour.

No other kind of rubber can be treated with the same chemicals, but has to be treated with others, which tends strongly to harden it, and give it a grey colour.

This explains the superiority of our Red Tubes.

But beware! Tubes made of ordinary, medium grade rubber, coloured with red ochre or vermilion, have been marketed from time to time. Of course, they cannot approach the quality of Michelin Red Rubber Tubes, made of pure Para Rubber.

Price $2 each.

Musical Comedy By Percy Haswell

"Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" the Clever Cohan Farce For This Week.

From Sardou's clever comedy, "Divorçons," the Percy Haswell company will next week switch to musical comedy, when they will present "45 Minutes from Broadway," one of the most successful Cohan farces. The piece nor the songs that go with it, are not new to Toronto playgoers, and the quaint characters, Kiki Burns and Plain Mary will be well remembered. The comedy was an immense hit from its first presentation, and became exceedingly popular all over the country. The plot is one that appeals to the audience. Seidom has such a pretty romance been introduced in a musical comedy. The songs, too, they have been published, and have been popular for a number of years, never grow old; and those who have heard "So Long, Mary," and "Mary Is a Grand Old Name," will certainly enjoy listening to them again. Leading critics have always contended that "45 Minutes from Broadway" was the author's supreme effort, combining as it does, comedy, burlesque, melodrama, and musical comedy. In the conception of the play, selections of characters and originality of situations, the author has shown the same genius for getting together novelties and surprises that are noticeable in all his works. Miss Haswell and her company will be assisted by a competent chorus, well able to handle the many tuneful lyrics.

"I have heard a good deal about people who borrow trouble, but I think my wife will want a lot of beating in that line."

"Why, I thought she was always cheerful and contented with her lot."

"She was until our baby was born six weeks ago. Now she is worrying because he may marry some girl that we shall not like."

"You dreadful boy, fishing on a Sunday. Whatever will your father say?"

"If you can wait a minute he will tell you. He's just gone to dig more bait."

Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch

Alice Hegan Rice Comedy Will Be Presented by Bonstelle Players.

The announcement that the Bonstelle Players are to present this week at Shea's Theatre, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," by Alice Hegan Rice, has been received with genuine appreciation both by those who are in the habit of attending the theatres and those who seldom enter a playhouse. One thing that has been noted all thru the summer season at Shea's has been the very happy choices made by Mr. Bertram Harrison, the popular director of the company. From the very first week it has been Mr. Harrison's endeavor to select those comedies which would not only be the most acceptable but which would also give Shea's patrons the opportunity of seeing this first-class company in a variety of offerings. Not only has Mr. Harrison succeeded in choosing really good plays, but the company has also demonstrated a remarkable versatility rarely if ever seen in Toronto before. In the week just closed the climax was reached by the presentation of a really novel play, "Mary Jane's Pa," for the first time in Toronto. It is no exaggeration to say that no better production has been seen here in many years.

There is only one play in existence today which could possibly outdo "Mary Jane's Pa," and that is "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," pronounced by all who have seen it as "the greatest success in recent years," and insuring this for this week the management feel sure that they have made a selection which will appeal to all. Everyone has read the book, once, twice, and many people three times, and the play has proven even more enjoyable. It has the enviable reputation of having run a whole season in London, and two years in New York, a record which few plays can boast of. This week's production will excel any presentation of it that has hitherto been given here, both in excellence of setting and in quality of acting. All the old friends, Mrs. Wiggs, Miss Hazy, Mr. Stubbins, Miss Lucy, Mr. Bob Billy, Chris, European, Australia and Asia will appear in the play. Mr. Edward H. Robins and Miss

Col. Ferari's Shows Here All This Week

Allied Exhibition Coming Under Auspices of Rameses Temple of Mystic Shrine.

When the Col. Francis Ferari's Shows erect their 31 cars of paraphernalia and equipment in Bayville Park Monday morning, a week of fun and pleasure will be inaugurated. These allied exhibitions come to Toronto under the auspices of Rameses Temple of the Mystic Shrine of this city. Caged wild animals have always a fascinating interest for the spectator. There will be every opportunity for the public to gratify their curiosity as to the habits of these ferocious denizens of the jungle, when the Boston-Ferari aggregation opens its doors. Col. Francis Ferari, the general manager of the enterprise, has secured many zoological specimens, among them lions, tigers, leopards, bears, hyenas and elephants, nearly all of which have been trained to perform marvelous feats in the large steel arena. In addition to the animal exhibit he is bringing to Toronto many of the attractions which made Luna Park, Coney Island, the centre of interest. Among these will be "Sam" Gumpertz's famous "Dreamland," the great circus sideshow, with its grotesque inhabitants; the "Follies of the World," a Broadway hit in musical comedy; "Crazy" Curran's daredevil audrodrome; with its auto cars rushing around the cup-shaped track at 90-mile-an-hour speed. De Alma's dog, pony, monkey and elephant show; Sanger's Miniature Circus; Trip to Mars, Snake Show, Ferari's Wheel, Ocean Wave, and the smallest talking horse in the world, and many other attractions and amusements. Several open-air free attractions will be offered: The Ariel Howards, the hazardous, high-wire artists; the two Bouncing Rubes and their hay wagon; daily flights in the Rex bi-plane and band concerts. There will be a daily street parade, in which the two mammoth elephants, Gyp and Judy, will draw the gilded band chariot, the largest vehicle of its kind in the world.

American Poets on Craze For Ragtime

Popular Music Mirror of Superficial and Commercial Age With Its Rush After Sensations.

"Americans are artistically in the first phase of their national boyhood," says Edwin Schoonmaker, "and generations may pass before we awaken to a deeper musical understanding. Music in this country is still a commercial proposition, not a serious and sacred field for aesthetic dogmatism." Mr. Schoonmaker thinks that ragtime is the "terror of a superficial and commercial age, in which an observer can see its shallowness and sensationalism and the prosaic rush after sensations yet he mentioned as a counteracting influence many examples of serious pioneer work. Edwin Markham is quoted as saying that "ragtime is nothing but the slush of the street and voices the sentiments of jailbirds. It is more villainous than a low novel, and should be condemned far more emphatically than the turkey trot. Materialistic tendencies of the times has much to do with this vogue. Realism in music is nothing but the deadness of aesthetic feeling. There is, however, a big difference between European realism in music and American ragtime, also both tend towards the material and ignore the spiritual issues of art. All arts are one at bottom," he further says: "They express more emotions in the presence of nature and humanity. Poetry deals partly with intellect, partly with emotions, and its appeal is more indirect. Music has another language and comes more closely to our hearts, and a nation should look more seriously to this field of art than to any other. I do not feel so bitter against modern instrumental music, but I see a great devaluation in our popular song-writing. The words are as vulgar as the melodies. They are a disgrace to the nation. Mr. Markham thinks that the time will come when American composers will collaborate with American poets and create works of art more true to the character of the nation. Hervey White thinks that owing to the mixture of races, American music will eventually "bear a universal message."

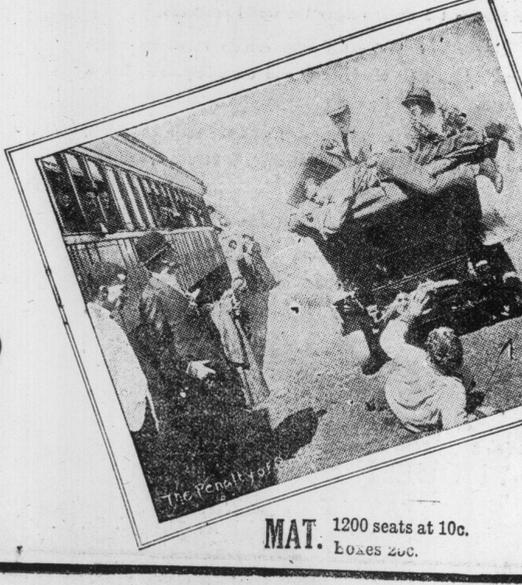

Realism. "Did you get a good part in the dramatic reviews?" "Fine. There was real bear in the third act!"—Yale Record.

THE PENALTY OF CRIME

(IN TWO PARTS)

A STRONG AND COMPELLING PHOTO-PLAY

The Story is one of Crime and Redemption Through Love and is Thrilling and Fascinating in its Incidents and Denouement

Nell Forest, an attractive girl, was brought up in an evil atmosphere and under the influence of a couple of crooks, Ed Watson and Billy, the rat. The crooks hatched a plot for a big haul. Maurice Fielding, attached to a jewelry firm, was to make a trip from New York to Chicago and Nell was pressed into the job. She made herself acquainted with Fielding, he was a different man to her companions and they both fell in love with each other. The girl then refused to assist in the job, but Watson threatened to expose her to Fielding unless she did her part, and promised to give her liberty as soon as accomplished. It was arranged that Nell would travel to Valley Spring, a summer resort on the same road that Fielding would take. A large trunk was obtained for Nell and Billy told himself into it. During the trip "the rat" freed himself, attacked the baggage man, wounding him, and the jewelry from Fielding's trunk was transferred to the other one. Nell and the trunk were put off at the Springs and quickly loaded on to an auto which was driven by Watson. The escape was however, discovered and Fielding and others pursued the crooks. The first auto was driven over a bank into a river. Watson was killed, but Maurice rescued Nell. "The rat" before dying, told of the plot and of Nell's love and opposition to the job. Fielding's love for Nell induced him to do the right thing.

Penalty of Crime Great Photo-Play

Fascinating Story of Love, Revenge and Happiness Told at the Strand.

As to the leading feature for this week the Strand Theatre will present a thrilling and fascinating photo-play embodying in a novel and striking manner the eternal story of love, revenge and ultimate happiness. It is called "The Penalty of Crime," and relates episodes in the history of Nell Forest, an attractive girl, brought up in an evil atmosphere and under the influence of a couple of crooks, Ed Watson and Billy, the rat. The crooks hatched a plot for a big haul. Maurice Fielding, attached to a jewelry firm, was to make a trip from New York to Chicago and Nell was pressed into the job. She made herself acquainted with Fielding, he was a different man to her companions and they both fell in love with each other. The girl then refused to assist in the job, but Watson threatened to expose her to Fielding unless she did her part, and promising to give her liberty as soon as accomplished. It was arranged that Nell would travel to Valley Spring, a summer resort on the same road that Fielding would take. A large trunk was obtained for Nell and Billy folded himself into it. During the trip "the rat" freed himself, attacked the baggage man, wounded him, and the jewelry from Fielding's trunk was transferred to the other one. Nell and the trunk were put off at the springs and quickly loaded on to an auto which was driven by Watson. The escape was, however, discovered and Fielding and others pursued the crooks. The first auto was driven over a bank into a river, Watson was killed, but Maurice rescued Nell. "The rat" before dying, told of the plot and of Nell's love and opposition to the job. Fielding's love for Nell induced him to do the right thing.

Mrs. John Ward Will Reside in London

Daughter of the Late Whitelaw
Reid Yields to Wishes of Her Husband.

LONDON, July 12.—Mrs. John Ward, who was Jean Reid, daughter of the late Whitelaw Reid, yielded to the importunities of her ambitious young husband, and consented to return to London before the end of the season. The Wards will reside in Dudley House Park Lane which was purchased by the Mills millions.

Mrs. Ward has simple tastes, and seems to care little for rivaling her cousin, Lady Granard, in the pursuit of official and social honors. But her husband is exceedingly ambitious. He hopes to get a peerage of his own. A brother of Lord Dudley, he is a born courtier, and loves the atmosphere of royalty. For that reason Dudley House is becoming a show place, and in future great entertainments may be expected.

Of course, there will be no great "flash" for at least a year, but in the meantime, Ward, who is talented, ambitious, and rich, will use his great resources to further his ambitions.

"How old are you, Johnnie?" asked the teacher.

"Six," was the laconic reply.

"And when were you six?"

"On my last birthday."

Not Likely.

The other afternoon Mr. Will Crooks, M.P., was discussing those entrancing subjects, courtship and marriage.

"It's more important," he said, "to court the missus after you've married her than it is before."

He admitted, however, that he once made the same remark to a man already married, and the latter replied: "But you don't want to run after a 'bus when you've caught it!"

EDWARD H. ROBINS WITH THE BONSTELLE PLAYERS AT SHEA'S

SIR EDWARD CARSON

A Rebel Because He is a Loyalist.
By James Dunn.

LONDON, July 12.—Torn between the blackthorn and the sceptre, Sir Edward Carson has successfully preached the two gospels of violence and order. He is a rebel because he is a loyalist; and, by a splendid paradox, he justifies the cause of Ulster. For some days eighteen Irish Unionist members of parliament have made a pilgrimage and conducted a campaign—a campaign which has now closed at Bristol. Their text was: "Ulster's appeal to Great Britain"; in commercial Glasgow and beautiful Edinburgh, in busy Leeds, and in tranquil Norwich, there was the threat of the blackthorn and the symbol of the sceptre. And the blackthorn is shaken that the sceptre may be supreme.

It was a lightning campaign, triumphs were won in moments, impressions were stamped by the speeding milestones; but, as the express trains devoured distance, so did Sir Edward Carson grasp the ever-changing natures of fleeting constituencies.

Sir Carson's Gifts.

Sir Edward Carson is gifted with the imagination and magnetism of the Celt. He is an orator and diplomatist; he has a tongue of silver, and a head of ice; he has the brain of reason and the voice to compel; he is a statesman and an actor, a patriot, and a poet; he is as grim as granite and as soft as a wheedling woman. He defies a government that he may cement an empire.

A spare, wiry man, in a rough-fitting suit of dark clothes, he has the face of a Machiavelli and the soul of an Irish chieftain. He is a furnace within an iceberg; his hot words pour like lava down a snow-crested hill.

"Strip me of honors," he said, "but let me be true to my cause. He will sacrifice all he has gained for something he desires. He is there to be punished for the phrase he has coined."

It was when he talked about the defiance of Ulster that Sir Edward Carson made the greatest "hit." There was the real ring of resistance, the patriot, obscuring the politician. Scotsmen approved and Englishmen cheered, because an Irishman dared to rebel. It was the cue for a cheering chorus.

And there lies Sir Edward Carson's power. His enthusiasm is controlled by his intellect; he is a magnet that compels; he speaks and people listen; he storms, and people cheer.

Dominated His Hearers.

So it was in Glasgow, in Edinburgh, in Leeds, and in Norwich. People came because they were curious, and they remained to cheer. This thin, spare man, with the flexible mouth and the glowing eyes, dominated his hearers. Speaking with a delightful brogue that glided his more earnest passages, he froze his audience with words and melted them with phrases. He handled them with the skill of a practised musician. One moment he was storming in violence; the next he was soothing in sweet content. Whether the magic of his eloquence is temperamental or calculated, Sir Edward Carson has the gift of the born orator; he has seen him move millions.

New They Know.

An old maid and her mate went into a restaurant near the docks and ordered dinner. The waiter placed a plate of curious liquid before them. "I say, your fellow, what's this stuff?" shouted the captain.

"Soup, sir," replied the waiter.

"Soup," shouted the old sea-dog. "Soup, Bill" (turning to the mate), "just think of that! Here you and me have been sailing on soup all our lives, and never knowed it till now!"

Little Willie had just had two of his first teeth pulled. The dentist, anxious to soothe the little fellow, who was crying bitterly, said:

"Cheer up, my little man; they'll grow in again."

"Yet, I know that," sobbed Willie, "but not before dinner."

Photographer (to young man): "It will make a much better picture if you put your hand on your father's shoulder."

The Father: "Huh! It would be much more natural if he had his hand in my pocket!"

Making Dolls.

The making of dolls as seen in the German factories is an interesting process. Even the some of the rooms are hot steamy places where one does not care to stay long at a time. First there is the kneading room, where a big mixing trough is set-up, and in this all sorts of ragged material are to be found—old gloves, rags, and cardboard, etc., and gum substance. This mixture is kneaded by hand to the consistency of a paste, heated and carried into the mold room. There it is dipped by women and poured into patterns which are set up in rows. The molds are put away until they are cold enough to handle when a workman, by a dexterous movement of his hands, separates the heads, sides, and the doll's head is revealed.

The polisher then trims off the ragged seams and sends the heads to another room, where the holes for the eyes are cut out. This is an extremely delicate task, as all the sockets must be of uniform size. The work is done by hand, a long, sharp knife being used. The heads are next painted, waxed or glazed, depending upon the character of the material from which they are made. The arms, legs and hands are molded in the same manner as the heads, a special machine being used for stamping out the hands. These parts are painted in flesh color, while the heads must have rosy cheeks, red lips and dark or light eyebrows, as the color of the eyes used may require.

Putting in the eyes is a simple operation unless the eyes are to open and shut, in which case the balancing of the eyes becomes a matter of some skill. Germany possesses a secret formula for the enamel used on the eyes, and the dainty, natural flesh tint of the better grade of dolls is the result of this process. The making of the eyes is a dreary task, for it must be done away from the sunlight, and in some parts of Germany the workmen work in the cellars. It is said that one town supplies three-fourths of all the dolls' eyes used. Violet is the most difficult color to mix, and few violet eyed dolls are found. The wig is the final touch, and this is usually made of hair, and imported from China. The hair used for blond dolls is the same, except that the color is extracted.

How Our Grandmothers Made Lye

In the days of our grandmothers, the housewife leached ashes from the family fire-place to get lye for various purposes in her home. With it she kept her rough board floors white by daily cleansing and scrubbing, and cleaned and scoured the articles of her occupation.

Today, lye preparations are put up in fancy cans, decorative for the kitchen shelf, and the busy housewife is no longer put to the trouble of preparing this cleansing agent. Only one thing she must be sure of in buying these, prepared brands—that she gets a really pure and guaranteed article.

Lye should have a very important place in every household as a time and labor-saver as well as for hygienic purposes. It has been said that the health of a nation depends upon the amount of soap it consumes, and it may equally be said that with our modern sinks and systems of plumbing, our health depends upon the proper use of lye in purifying all the drains about the house.

A prepared brand of lye can be used in cleaning everything about the household—tableware, china, glass, greasy vessels, windows, paints, etc. It is well to begin with half a tea-spoonful of the lye to a gallon of water, increasing the amount of lye if the solution does not seem strong enough.

Wedding Notices

HAGARTY-ANNABLE.

A quite wedding was solemnized on Wednesday afternoon, at 4.30 o'clock, in Trinity Church, Nelson, B.C., when Nellie Christie, second daughter of Mr. J. E. Annable, ex-mayor of Nelson, and Mrs. Annable was married to Mr. Reginald Walter Hagarty, B.A.Sc., son of Mr. and Mrs. Hagarty, Toronto. The church was beautifully decorated with roses and ferns, by the friends of the bride. The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. R. J. McIntyre, and the wedding march was played by Miss Maddon Thompson, Toronto, a friend of the bride. The bride who looked lovely in her traveling gown, a tailor-made dress of cream cloth, and hat of Venetian lace with willow plumes and pink roses, carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses, was given away by her father. The bridesmaids, the Misses Lottie and Gertrude Annable wore white serge gowns, and Panama hats, wreathed with pink ostrich feathers, and real carnations, and a maiden-hair fern. They carried sheaves of pink carnations. Little Miss Quenee Marquette Annable, sister of the bride, wore a coat of cream satin and bonnet of princess lace, rimmed with tiny pink rose buds, Roman sandals, and carried a rose basket filled with lily-of-the-valley. Mr. S. J. Booth of Toronto, was best man.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents, for the relations and a few intimate friends. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Hagarty left in the evening for Banff. Mrs. Annable, mother of the bride, wore a Parisian gown of amethyst satin, with real lace and diamond ornaments. The presents were numerous and valuable.

TUROFSKY-PULLAN.

A wedding took place in the new Rideau Street Synagogue, Ottawa, when Miss Hilda Pullan, youngest daughter of Mr. H. Pullan and the late Mrs. H. Pullan, Ottawa, was married to Dr. Harry Alfred Turofsky, B.A., Toronto. The synagogue was decorated with palms and flowers and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. Berger, assisted by Rabbi S. Fyne. The bride who was given away by her father, looked very charming in an ivory charmeuse gown, with real lace tulle, trimmed with heavy pearl ornaments and tassels. She wore a tulle veil caught with orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of roses and lily-of-the-valley, and wore a diamond sunburst, the gift of the groom. She was attended by her sister, Miss Olive Pullan, in a gown of white nylon de soie, over white satin draped in paniers, with shadow lace on the bodice, and wore a hat of Dresden chiffon trimmed with pink roses and carried a bouquet of beauty roses. Her gift from the groom was a silver mesh bag. The groom was supported by his brother, Mr. L. J. Turofsky, who was the recipient of a gold watch fob. After the ceremony a reception was held at the Raquet Court, Metcalf street, when over two hundred guests were present. The guests were received by Mrs. A. H. Coplan, sister of the bride, who wore a champagne tulle gown over apricot satin, and carried a bouquet of beauty roses and wore a diamond ornament. She was assisted in receiving by Mrs. R. Turofsky, mother of the groom, who wore a black brocade gown, which opened over a gold-colored underskirt, and a large black hat, and carried a bouquet of beauty roses and wore a diamond ornament. She was assisted in receiving by Mrs. A. L. Florence, who wore a gold tulle gown over yellow champagne, with large picture hat to match. Mrs. N. Metrick, sister of the bride, wore a white gown of white duchesse satin with court train trimmed with pink lace and studded with seed pearls. After the reception the bride changed for a traveling gown of black and white corded silk, with white corded silk cuffs and collar, Panama hat, trimmed with black velvet. Dr. and Mrs. Turofsky left for New York, and on their return will reside at 106 Kentworth avenue, where they have

NEWS OF THE HORSES IN GENERAL AND TURF TOPICS

FT. ERIE MEETING BRINGS TROUBLE

Numerous Form Reversals and Slow Track the Cause of Big Change in the Racing.

When the Niagara Racing Association had their track at Fort Erie resurfaced with the object of remedying the hard surface that owners and trainers of thoroughbreds formerly complained so much about, they accomplished their purpose in a way, as the footing has since been more like a farmer's field that had been plowed, disbarrowed and dragged. So soft and slow is it, the crack sprinters that could run six furlongs in 1:12 the week previous at Hamilton, could not run the same distance in 1:15 at Fort Erie even after the track had been worked over several days and had been worked over constantly. Re-surfacing the track may have been necessary but, to the public, it appears to have been overdone.

DRIVEN OUT RACES ARE CONDEMNED

Noted Owner of Trotters and Pacers Favors the 2 in 3 System in Vogue at Cleveland.

James F. Galtcomb, owner of Audubon Boy, 1:57 1/4, and Gay Audubon, 1:58 1/4, now quarantined at the North Randall track, has declared himself opposed to the 3 in 5 heat system of racing and heartily in favor of the 2 in 3 heat proposition.

To the enforced racing of five and sometimes six and seven heats to win a place, Mr. Galtcomb blames the short-lived value of many of the fastest horses campaigning in the Grand Circuit within the past few years. Although the 2 in 3 system is antiquated, it is still being used on many of the more prominent tracks throughout the country.

Each year, however, the management of the speedways are becoming aware of the fact that the long races were quite proper when horses seldom trotted faster than 1:40 for a mile. Now that they have been bred and trained to go the mile in slightly over two minutes, the long races tax the vitality of the horses too much.

The agitation against 3 in 5 heat races is not new. Mr. Galtcomb was a party to the "Cyracuse Compact" made in 1908. At that meeting of last year at Columbus, Ohio, he was one of the owners and driver present at the Grand Circuit meeting signed an agreement never to drive a horse in a 3 in 5 heat race.

Although practically every other trainer violated this agreement, Galtcomb refused to enter his horses in a long race until the last meeting of last year at Columbus. At this time everything was favorable for a victory for Gay Audubon and his owner, Mr. Galtcomb has decided never to go in for the long races again.

Because of his stand in the discussion over long and short races, H. K. Devereaux has won the hearty support of Mr. Galtcomb. Mr. Devereaux, who is president of the Grand Circuit, president of the North Randall Race Association, president of the Association of American Breeders, lives in Cleveland and is well known to all prominent horsemen.

In speaking of Mr. Devereaux, Mr. Galtcomb said: "He is one of the greatest horsemen in America today. I think for various reasons, one of which is his human feeling toward race horses. He believes the human way of racing horses and as a result has made practically all of the races at the Cleveland meeting of the Grand Circuit for two in three heats.

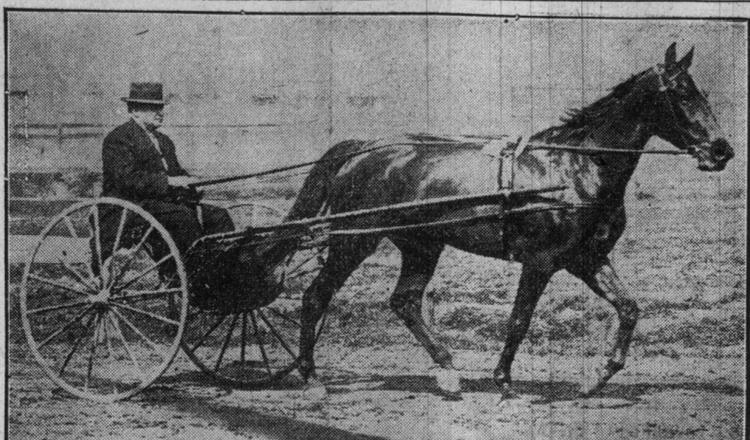

LEXINGTON'S BIG LIST OF ENTRIES

Noted Kentucky Association Will Have Banner Harness Horse Meeting—Free-for-all Class Light.

The Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association has received 466 entries in the fifteen fixed events, which closed recently for its October meeting at Lexington. The commendable effort of the association to increase the earning capacity of harness horses having had records seems to have met with a rather poor response from owners and trainers, judging from the meagre list of entries in the two open races for purses of $3000 each. Only eight were entered in the free-for-all paces, while in the trotting free-for-all, Colorado E., 2:04 1/2; Gay Audubon, 2:05 1/2; Hallworthy, 2:05 1/2; and Dudie Ashland, 2:07 1/2, were the only ones named. Neither of these races is usually closed, however, since additional entries can be made until Sept. 15 on the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, a higher entrance fee. The entries in the harness races were, as usual, the most popular features of the program, as the following summary of the entry list will show:

The Transylvania nomination event for trotters of 2:38 class, Oct. 21. The October Prize, free for all trotters, Oct. 22. The Battleton Cup, trotters of 2:07 class, Oct. 23. The Walnut Hill Cup, trotters of 2:08 class, Oct. 24. The Ashland, trotters of 2:19 class, Oct. 25. The Kentucky, three-year-old trotters 3:30 class, Oct. 26. The Lexington, two-year-old trotters 3:30 class, Oct. 27. The Cumberland, pacers of 2:10 class, Oct. 28. The Blue Grass, pacers of 2:10 class, Oct. 29. The Kentucky Futurity, three-year-old trotting division, Oct. 30. The Kentucky Futurity, three-year-old trotting division, Oct. 31. The Championship Stallion Stake, three-year-old trotting division, Oct. 31. The Championship Stallion Stake, three-year-old trotting division, Oct. 31.

Mr. W. W. Hubinger, who died recently in his home in New Haven, was at the time prominent in the trotting world as the owner of a large stable of harness horses, and as the heaviest stakeholder of the Grand Circuit, George W. Devereaux for him.

R. J. MORRIDE, THE LOCAL HORSEMAN AND HIS NOTED PACING MARE, NETTIE ETHAN, 2:10 1/4, THAT HAS PERFORMED WELL ON THE CANADIAN CIRCUIT TRACKS THIS SEASON AND RECENTLY WON A CLOSELY CONTESTED RACE AT PORT HURON, MICHIGAN.

CLEVELAND DRIVING CLUB OPENS THE GRAND CIRCUIT

Highly Successful Meeting Marks the Opening of the Big Track Racing at North Randall.

The Grand Circuit for 1913 opened Monday last at Cleveland, O. or North Randall, rather, as racing is held at that place, which is a suburb of Cleveland, located about 12 miles out from the business section of the "Sixth City."

The North Randall plant is at present in a rather crude state, except the buildings, which are up-to-date in every particular, and the tracks, there are two tracks, the mile oval and a half-mile ring situated inside the main oval, and both of these are well equipped, and reports from his early training quarters, Libertyville, Ill., had him going in 2:05 two weeks ago. He is in the hands of Charley Dean, the man who rode Mr. Heat, 1:58 1/4, and The Broncho, 2:00 1/4, and, although the horse was at North Randall, he had not started. He had gone off in training.

The big trotter, Crescote, owned by R. J. Mackenzie, and that raced so successfully on the ice last winter, made his Grand Circuit debut on Monday last at Cleveland, Ohio. He had a record of 2:06 1/2, and came within a neck's distance of obtaining a record of 2:05 1/2 right off the bat. As it was, Uncle Biff, winner of the heat in question, just did beat the big gelding, that came back the next heat and forced Santos Maid out in 2:08 1/2.

On account of Uncle Biff winning the great heat and Santos Maid the next two of the three-heat race, Crescote got only third money as his portion of the spoils, but he raced most creditably, nevertheless, and made his Grand Circuit debut on Monday last at Cleveland, Ohio. He had a record of 2:06 1/2, and came within a neck's distance of obtaining a record of 2:05 1/2 right off the bat. As it was, Uncle Biff, winner of the heat in question, just did beat the big gelding, that came back the next heat and forced Santos Maid out in 2:08 1/2.

The real sensation of the Cleveland meeting was undoubtedly the performance of the blind 3-year-old colt Etawah, a son of Al. Stanley, 2:07 1/4, that won the first heat of the race, and Etawah in 1:02, carried along by the filly Virginia Todd. The performance of the blind colt looked so good to Frank G. Jones, the Memphis street railway magnate, that he bought him, and Etawah is now a member of the Geers stable of trotters and pacers.

World's Champion Fails. Uthian, the great, world's champion trotter, that has set the record at 1:58 last season, was billed to make an attempt to beat the world's wagon record 2:00, held jointly by himself and Lou Dillon, 1:58 1/4, and also the track record of 1:58 1/4, made by himself in 1911, but the wagon trial was postponed the opening day, on account of a fabled wind. However, the gallant trotters went a mile to sully in 1:59 1/4, according to the official timers, although none of the outside watches caught the mile better than 1:59 1/4. Still, it was a great mile, and one that further serves to prove that Uthian is the peer of trotters of all time. The black gelding was driven by Doc Tanner, and Johnny Dickenson drove a thoroughbred hitched to a cart as pacemaker.

World's Greatest Drivers There. There was no scarcity of talent, as far as drivers are concerned. All of the leaders in the profession were there, including Edward F. Geers; "Pop," the dean of them all; Tommy Murphy; the Wizard; Walter Longworth; as clever as they make them; Alonzo McDonald; William Andrews; John Dickerson; William Snow; A. S. Rodney, that came into fame as the driver of Boden, 2:05 1/2; last year; Nat Ray, the Toronto boy; Charlie Valentine; Arlie Frost; Ben Whitehead; Edward Beynon, and his son Jimmy; Curt Gosnell, and a score of others.

Many "regulars" however, were missed at the meeting, as the betting, as a rule, is light at North Randall, and the regulars go only where speculation is brisk.

The means of speculating at the meeting was by auction-pools and by pari-mutuels. With the auctions, all circuit followers are familiar, but few of them were on intimate terms with "iron men," consequently betting on the heats was limited.

William Fitch, our own "Billy," was chief pool-seller, and in that capacity lowered his record several seconds.

The meeting was successful in every respect. The racing all three was of a very superior character, and better weather for a race meeting could not have been wanted. No expense was spared by the members of the Cleveland Driving Club to keep the track in apple-pie order, and the result was the footing was like velvet, and it is doubtful if the campaigners will be favored with a better track this year.

QUESTION OF LADIES RIDING SIDE SADDLE OR ASTRIDE

Noted Authority Sums up the Advantages and Disadvantages of the Two Styles of Saddles—"It All Depends."

When Miss Eleanor Sears of Boston caused a hue and cry among members of the Burlingame Mothers' Club in California by riding thru the country in boots and breeches last year, the editor of The Rider and Driver offered a prize for the best essay on the subject of women riding astride. It was won by Francis M. Ware, an authority on all phases of horsemanship, riding and driving, who summed up the advantages and disadvantages of the two styles of equitation thus:

SIDE SADDLE.	ASTRIDE.
Conventional.	Unusual.
Safest seat, as long as it stays in place on the horse. The animals always shrinks at exercise.	Not so secure to the average rider, but more certain to remain in place and not to need attention from rider or her escort.
Expensive to pad to fit horse, and may gall and chafe badly. Must fit well.	Not so in the cross seat. Fits any horse fairly well.
Weights three more.	Lighter by as much.
Only one kind of side saddle.	Many sorts, sizes, weights and shapes of astride saddle.
Wrongly develops body very generally.	Has no such effect.
Twists body awkwardly; brings shoulders out of line; difficult to mount and dismount unaided.	Straight carriage; easy to mount, etc., unaided.
Complicated to adjust; unsafe to be handled by "green help."	No such expenses usually involved. Easy and simple to adjust.
Expensive to buy.	Light.
Dangerous in a fall.	Cheap, by comparison.
Fatigue comes easily from cramped attitude.	Comparatively safe.
More tiring to horse. Makes many become unsound very quickly.	Does not tire as quickly, nor tames as usually.
Cannot be used at all on some horses.	Can be used upon all.
Does not fit all.	Suits any shape.
Side saddle is not suitable for long, rough rides.	Cowboy saddle is an armchair.
Horse cannot be made a finished horse because of absence of "both legs" effect.	Better "hands" usually, and offers chance for full leg and heel action.
"Perch upon" a side saddle.	"Sit down into" a cross saddle.
Dangerous in traffic.	Not specially.
Requires a special shape of horse; special attire; special equipment.	Does not require these.
Stout women had best use side saddle, or the cowboy shape if riding astride.	All girls should learn to ride astride, even if they do not do so always. Very easy with cross saddle.
Very difficult to saddle own horse with side saddle.	Cross seat is not for aged or very fat women.
Side saddle suits any age of shape or height.	Cross seat, with loose boots, baggy breeches and long flowing coat skirts, is absolutely obscuring.
Side seat is more revealing of the figure.	"Astride" garb need be neither. Need weigh not over 8 or 10 lbs. Need not be, if fair size. Need not do so.
Well fitting habits hard to get and very costly.	Mr. Ware's conclusion was: "Side saddle or cross saddle? After all, as dear old Pook Bah says in 'The Milkmaid,' 'Hess you! it all depends!'"
Weights about 50 lbs.
Escort should ride upon one certain side.

The dispersal sale of the late James R. Keene's Castleton stud in September will put on the market forty-four thoroughbred runners, including seven stallions, thirty broodmares and seven foals of 1912. The Castleton stud was without a rival, having sent to the turf in six years the winners of 1,387,000, while in 1907 Mr. Keene won with colts of his own raising $897,312, which stands as the world's record. His formula for breeding winners was to mate the best of English sires with native stallion tramping back to early American turf champions.

BRADSTREET'S NEW BUILDING AT NEW YORK.

In reference to the above The New York Sun mentions "Among a number of fine modern structures in the vicinity of Lafayette and Howard sts., perhaps the finest is that which bears the distinguished name of Bradstreet's. This building is situated at the northwest corner of Lafayette and Howard sts., and is to be used principally for their Mechanical Department, their large Executive Offices and spacious New York Office being still at 346-348 Broadway."

No Occasion for Moss.

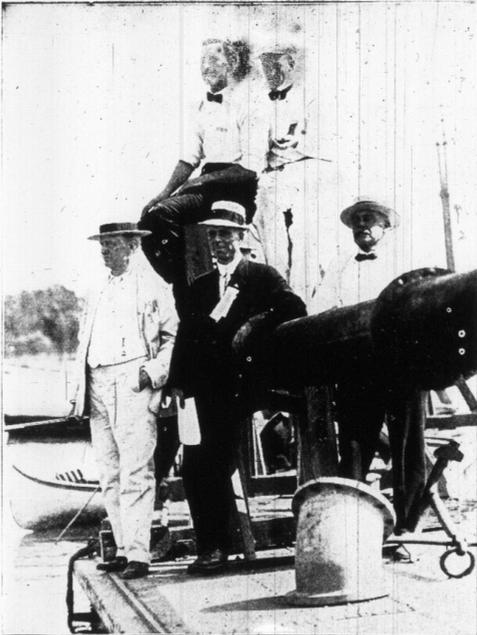

Jack London, the novelist, was praising the tramp. "Many a tramp," he said, "is more intelligent and honorable, and has a happier life than the average rich man. Some tramps are renowned, too, for their humor. "I once knew a tramp named Boston Jack. It is said that Boston Jack knocked on the back door of a farmhouse one July afternoon and asked for assistance. "The farmer's wife said: 'Why don't you go to work? Don't you know that a rolling stone gathers no moss?' "Madam," without evading your question, may I ask of what practical use moss would be to a man in my condition?"

THE figure on the left shows a red-and-white striped waterproof satin empire skirt with a blouse of white satin and a cape of red satin. A novel feature is the use of suspender-like straps that are attached to the top of skirt on either side of back and front. These are made of the striped goods cut on the bias. Similar bands trim the sides of skirt to the slashes which are laced with red silk cord. The cape has a hood which may be worn over the head instead of the bathing cap. The cap here worn has a brim to protect the eyes. The middle figure is wearing a draped suit of waterproof faille, trimmed with fleur de soie having a white ground and a red flower. The surplice blouse has short kimono sleeves with turn-back cuffs. Loops and ends of the flowered goods are arranged at the left side. The trousers are shirred on cords and finished with narrow frills. They extend below the skirt.

The left hand figure wears a suit of Nile green taffeta with panel, collar, girdle, sash and sleeve revers of white taffeta. The skirt is knife-plaited and has trousers extending below skirt. The front panel is ornamented with piped button-holes through which are passed crystal balls covered with chiffon. Each pair has a stem bound with silk cord.

THE BOOK OF THE WEEK

Goldwin Smith's Correspondence

Edited By ARNOLD HAULTAIN

Altho in certain quarters the word of Goldwin Smith was listened to with marked reverence and in most quarters with respectful attention, it will be conceded, even by his admirers, that he was scarcely an important influence in the political matters of his time.

Goldwin Smith was born in 1823 at Reading, England. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol and in 1853 was appointed Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford and filled that chair until 1866.

It appears that Smith, who during his residence at Oxford had taken a prominent part in local and general politics, had managed to incur the hostility of Disraeli. It is not exactly easy to see why, but the contemporary Disraeli took a strange way of avenging himself.

Once established in America, Smith never returned to England, except on occasional visits; but he maintained a close interest in the political life of his native country.

Chamberlain seems to me very mischievous. He is a politician, and a politician's chief aim is to create a proletariat with his best not by industry, but by political plunder.

This was written in November, 1885. A month later the voice of reprobation rises to a higher pitch. Gladstone's "gentle crowing for power" has made him "surround" Parnell.

There was a perplexed silence. Then a little boy spoke up: "Please, sir, 'cause God alote knows where the buttons is."

let us rejoice. Dagon is fallen." (1890). "All this stuff that Gladstone is publishing about cosmogony, mythology, and other things that he does not understand, is intended as a display of the extraordinary versatility of his genius."

(1893) "Gladstone is religious, and I suppose manages to justify his conduct to himself; but he seems to have parted company with conscience and regard for truth. There have been worse men, no doubt, in English public life, but none of them have brought such calamities on the country."

When Gladstone disappeared from office, the tension of Smith's nerves was sensibly relieved; but yet he was not very comfortable. The union was safe, at least for a time, but other good causes were impelled.

"The last independent voice in the English daily press has been stifled. The editor has been coerced and has resigned. I was thinking of paying a short visit to England, but the jingolism there would sicken me."

"The press is saturated with Rhodesian influences. . . . The quality of Mr. Rhodes's intellect is proved by his having tried to bribe the Irish with a subscription of £10,000 to the dismemberment of the United Kingdom."

"It is absurd to talk of the war as inevitable. Statesmanlike conduct after the raid could have averted it. 'Fate' is the subterfuge of folly."

"Commercial union with the States, if we could have got it, would have freed free trade in its train. It would have so enlarged the protected areas as to have destroyed the value of the monopoly, and it would have annulled the patriotic agreement which at present has great weight with the Americans."

It is impossible, within short compass, to give any adequate opinion of the range of matters dealt with in this correspondence. But it may be remarked that they are almost entirely personal, and that they deal with large issues, mostly international, imperial, or even world-wide.

There was a day, however, when that ended, when the doors were flung wide to a new conception of the man, and of what he might have become. I was going to America, and I paid an angry and reluctant visit to my London tailor thirty-six hours before I was to start. A suit of clothes had been sent home which, after an effective trying-on, was a monstrosity. I went straight to my tailor, put on the clothes, and bade him look at them. He was a great tailor—he saw exactly what I saw, and what

NATURE'S GARDEN

FROM THE CAR WINDOW

Along the railroad right of way the nature-lover may get rapid glimpses of many old friends from the car window. Everywhere is the rich yellow of the buttercup; in the low bottoms it forms strips of yellow carpet waving away into the fields; in the pastures it has a straggly, beaten look.

The sweet aroma of the clover penetrates to the interior of the car; field after field meets the eye with its variegated mat of white and red clover blooms. Starting up from the grass of the fields stand the numerous cone-shaped umbels of black-eyed Susan, with their wide-margined trimmings of yellow petals; a single cone-shaped flower stands at the top of the stem, the dark purple centre looking almost black against its yellow surroundings.

Some of the flowers have a decided tinge of blue. Watching closely we find that this is caused either by the prevalence of blue vervain or larkspur. These flowers may easily be distinguished as the vervain grows in a candleabra-shaped clustering head, and the blooms come out in rings round the conical shaped spikes, the lower buds opening first. The larkspur, on the other hand, has its flowers growing close together, up, down and around the central stem; the name, larkspur, indicates the formation of the flower, which may be observed at close range, one of the sepals being prolonged into a large spur.

The straggling branches of the sweet clover have changed from green to a pale greenish-yellow, the small, thick-clustered flowers covering the whole plant. It is when the train leaves the region of well-tilled fields and races thru the low swamp-lands that one's eye finds the task of recognizing old friends or making possible new flower acquaintances rather difficult.

The white umbrella-like clusters of the grasses, is found when we slow up to be our straggly acquaintance the iris or blue flag. The ferns grow in low, thick clusters and combine with the grasses to form a thick-piled carpet, under whose edge the black moist earth of the swamp blends into the crystal mirror of the pellucid water. The white umbrella-like clusters of the yarrow, and the pinkish fringed aster straggles up thru the long grasses. The fringe of the tall meadow rue is just changing from green to white; patches of watercress and other plants with innumerable tiny white flowers flash by like patches of snow.

The swamp-lands are so attractive with their wealth of plant life that we wish we could have been transported there to fill in the dreary hours spent in waiting for late trains at the dusty station.

nominate; but hundreds of times I have myself heard Quakers use "them" in just such a way in England and America. The facts are, however, that Quakers differ extensively in their habits and their growth up in England among the Quakers in certain districts a sense of shame for false grammar which, to say the least, was very childish.

Moving pictures of the insane, epileptic, and other persons who are suffering from nervous diseases are being used by doctors to study the development of the case, and as a permanent record of the symptoms peculiar to each disease. The suit, the facial expressions, and the gestures are depicted and the impression created is even greater than if the patients themselves were before the observer.

The suit was introduced by Theodore H. Weisenburg of Philadelphia, Professor of Clinical Neurology at the Medical-Chirurgical College and Neurologist of the Philadelphia General Hospital, who has had ten thousand feet of films made during the past five years for use in the classroom. Every nervous ailment, however, the medical world is shown in these pictures.

"Few of the numerous kinds of nervous disorders ever come under the notice of the majority of the students," said Dr. Weisenburg, "but the symptoms of each case on record in a film, by putting it into a projecting machine the student finds himself face to face with patients suffering from every known nervous disease."

The symptoms and peculiarities of nervous diseases are usually of such short duration that there is little opportunity to make extended observations, but the picture once caught, the film can be repeated until the student becomes familiar with the symptoms. It is indelible and records the case instantly when he meets such a case in his afterwork.

There is sometimes a great deal of trouble connected with making the pictures, but Dr. Weisenburg has met with a number of curious and amusing experiences. On one occasion an attempt was made to take motion pictures of the face of a patient who was unsuccessful. Technical World Magazine.

Eggs Fried on Ice. Frying eggs on ice is a recent feat, as was demonstrated at a recent electrical exhibition given by the University of Illinois. The eggs were placed on an ordinary frying pan and the frying pan was placed on a pile of cracked ice on a kitchen table. Eggs were fried nicely, tho' it took longer than when a stove is used. No wires were in sight. The frying pan had no electrical connections and could be taken up and replaced at will.

A peculiar but simple principle of electricity was used. An electro-magnet, as is generally known, is a horseshoe-shaped bar of iron, with coils of wire wound round each arm of the horseshoe.

Through a current of electricity is sent thru the coils of wire, the horseshoe becomes a magnet and will attract and firmly grip any bit of iron placed near it, as is generally known, is a horseshoe-shaped bar of iron, with coils of wire wound round each arm of the horseshoe.

In the egg-frying trick the magnet was placed under the table, and an alternating current was sent thru the coils.

THE CHURCHYARD OF GREY'S ELEGY.

With volume XII. in the uniform edition of the works of Sir Gilbert Parker, we come to "The Right of Way," unquestionably the author's most powerful and popular book. When he was writing it Parker realized its importance. He confessed that he was a bit of a fool over it. It aroused all the old ardor dreams of youth and springtime. He could not lay it down, and he could not shorten it. The novel was to make or break him—prove him human and an artist or an affected literary bore. Of course when "The Right of Way" was finished there were innumerable inquisitive letters about the relations of Charley and Rosalie. To these letters there was but one reply. It was that all the author had meant to say concerning these unhappy yet happy people had been said in the book, to the last word.

Portrait of Gordon. Readers of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Weavers," have endeavored to identify the leading characters of the story with actual figures in Anglo-Egyptian and official public life. David Claridge has been regarded by many persons as having been drawn from General Gordon. Sir Gilbert, however, assures us that he was entirely a creature of the imagination, tho' he concedes that, as he was saturated with all that has been written about Gordon, it is quite possible that something of the great man may have found its way into the character. The true story of David Claridge, however, may be found in a short story called "All the World's Mad," in Donovan Fasha, which was originally published by Lady Randolph Churchill in The Anglo-Saxon Review.

The truth is that David Claridge has his origin in a fairly close understanding of, and interest in, Quaker life. I had Quaker relatives thru the marriage of a connection of my mother, and the original of Benn Claridge, the uncle of David, is still alive, a very old man, who in my boyhood days wore the broad brim and the straight preacher-like coat of the old-fashioned Quaker. The grandmother of my wife was also a Quaker, and used the "thee" and "thou" until the day of her death.

Quakerisms of Speech. Let me say that criticism came to me from several quarters, both in England and America, on the use of these words thee and thou, and statements were made that the kind of speech which I put into David Claridge's mouth was not Quaker speech. For instance, they would not have it that a Quaker would say, "Thee will go with me"—as tho' they were ashamed of the sweet inaccuracy of the objective pronoun being used in the

OUR WEEKLY ORIGINAL POEM

BRAIN CHILDREN

By Lilian Leveridge

I feel like that famous old mother, Who lived huddled up in a shoe; For my family's just such another— Oh, what, tell me what shall I do?

So many to worry and tease me, At morning, at noon, and at night; Forever they vex and displease me, They never do anything right.

"Be merry, I like your sweet chatter," I said to my son young and small; But I can't think what ever's the matter— My son is not merry at all.

"Be dignified, sober and saintly," I said to the minister man— But he winked at me coolly and quaintly, And answered, "I don't think I can."

"A gay laughing girl I shall make her," I said of my heroine fair; But she grew as demure as a Quaker— I've given her up in despair.

I said to my hero, "Be earnest— Be master of fate when it comes; Arm, arm you for conflict the sternest!"— But there he sits twirling his thumbs.

"You both are too young," I insisted, "To wed or be thinking of love!"— But he lifted her face and he kissed it, As true as the stars shine above!

Like bees in a swarm they surround me, My children, both early and late— Yes, even in my dreamings they bound me With fears for their fame or their fate.

Oh, woe that my hand were more skilful, Your course to direct and control! Ye are wayward, my children, and wilful— But oh! ye are dear to my soul.

Mlle. Leginska Will Be One of the Soloists at the First Concert of the Series.

The first concert of the Hambourg Concert Society is announced for October 23. The public rehearsal, which was such a delightful innovation last year, will take place on Saturday afternoon, instead of on Saturday evening, as last season. The program arranged for the opening concert is a very important and interesting one. Mlle. Leginska, whose triumphs in Europe are well known, and who has recently created such a furor in New York, Buffalo, and other American cities, will be one of the soloists. Jan and Boris Hambourg, fresh from successes abroad, will also be heard in solos and duets. The chief d'œuvre, however, will be the Tschakowsky trio, played by the three artists. The individual programs, with a full list of assisting artists, among whom are well-known singers, will be published shortly. Special rates for students have been arranged.

"Francesca" Premiere Carnegie to Finance For Boston Opera Co. Symphony Orchestra

First Production of Zandonai's "Annunzio Work" to Be Directed by Henry Russell.

It is announced from Paris that Henry Russell has obtained for the Boston Opera Company the rights to the first production on any stage of "Francesca da Rimini." The initial performance will be given in February, and it is expected that both the composer and the librettist will be in Boston to supervise the rehearsals and to be present at the premiere. Tito Ricordi, the publisher of the opera, will also be in attendance. Lina Cavalleri will have the title role and Lucien Muratore, tenor, and Yanni Marcoux, baritone, the leading male roles. The Boston Company will also include in next season's repertoire Verdi's "Munna Vanna," with Mary Garden, "Morona and Danges" as principals.

It is interesting to know that the Boston Opera Company is refunding ten per cent. of its subscriptions to the thousands who subscribed to a security fund to insure opera in Boston. The total subscribed was $150,000 annually for three years. Of this amount only $133,898 was used, and $15,000 is being returned to the subscribers.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis MacLennan (Florence Easton of Toronto) are removing to Hamburg where they have accepted a three years' operatic engagement.

Mr. Keane, the New York manager for Boosey & Company, the noted publishing house of London, England, has been elected vice-president of the Music Publishers' Association of the United States.

Philip Kahn, music publisher, convicted of criminally libelling Henry Russell, director of the Boston Opera House, was sentenced on June 25 to imprisonment for one year. The libel was contained in a series of magazine articles published by Mr. Kahn in which Mr. Russell's personal and business character was attacked.

Dr. A. S. Vogt, director of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, spent several days in Berlin where he conducted the examinations of about thirty pupils connected with Prof. Ziesels studio who came in from Berlin, Waterloo, Hawkesville, New Hamburg and Hespeler.

Carl, the eminent New York organist, and director of the Guild of Organists, called for Paris, to visit the family of the celebrated French organist, Guilmant, with whom he has been studying since the autumn of 1906. Mr. Herbert Weatherley has arrived from England, and began his duties as organist at the Metropolitan Church last Sunday evening. Weatherley is a composer of repute, and his residence in Toronto adds another well-equipped musician to our local roster.

Mr. Siegfried Herz, manager of the Nordheimer agencies, is on a business trip through the west. Mrs. Herz, who before her marriage, was a pupil of the late, of Montreal, a protégé of Lady Laurier, will arrive in Toronto from Berlin, Germany, early next month. Mrs. Herz is a violinist, an artist, and linguist, and will be one of Toronto's most charming hostesses.

Alma Gluck, the operatic soprano, is studying with Sembrich in Moscow. She is also taking lessons in piano and studying languages at the Berlitz School. Her tour of this country begins in January.

Thomas Hardy Chalmers, the operatic baritone, who is known professionally as Thomas Hardie, was married in London on June 24, to Signorina Vilma Florelli, of Florence. Mr. Chalmers has been engaged by the Aborns as a member of the Century Opera Company.

Mme. Teresa Carreno will give over 30 concerts in America next season. Her tour opens with a concert of the same organization in other New England cities. Mme. Carreno will also tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Carl Muck's direction. Mme. Carreno has several old pupils in Toronto, who hope she will be one of the soloists chosen for our symphony concerts at Massey Hall.

Mrs. Grace Barron, of New York, is spending the summer at Centre Island. Mrs. Barron, who is widely known in operatic and recital work in the United States, claims Toronto as her birthplace.

Mr. Ernest Seltz, pianist, has decided not to return to Europe until about the first of September. Upon his arrival in Berlin he will continue his studies with Lhevinne, the celebrated pianist and pedagogue.

Mr. Paul Hahn, the cellist, who has been for many years, and is one of the best known cellists in Ontario, is soon to start in business for himself in association with Mr. Carl Hunter, son-in-law of Sir Edmund Walker. Success is sure to follow this venture as both young men are fine musicians themselves, and have been associated from boyhood with things musical, which will give their customers the advantage of dealing with kindred spirits, thus making even business a pleasure.

The Hammersteins have engaged Marthe Chenet, one of the most famous lyric sopranos in France, for the forthcoming season at their New York opera house. She will make her introductory appearance in Erlanger's

"Aphrodite," a role in which she has acquired much fame abroad. Baron Erlanger will come to New York and conduct the first performance himself. Mlle. Chenet will also sing in "Louise," "Thais," "Tosca," "Aida," and all operas in the French repertoire. She is said to be one of the handsomest women on the operatic stage. The Hammersteins are paying her, it is said, $1,600 a performance.

Mme. Marie Rappold, the Metropolitan soprano, is soon to become the wife of Rudolph Berger, tenor of the Royal Opera, Berlin. Mme. Rappold owns a large tract of land in the State of New York which she intends to convert into a village, giving it the name of Bergersville, in honor of her future husband.

A report that Cosima Wagner had sanctioned a short version of "Parsifal" to be given at the London Coliseum, by means of moving pictures has become widespread, and the powers that be at Bayreuth are taking steps to prosecute the promoters for the wrongful use of Frau Wagner's name.

Mr. Arthur E. Semple, L.R.A.M., the popular flute soloist, left on the 6th instant on an extended tour of Great Britain and Europe. He will return about the middle of September, when he will resume teaching at the Hambourg Conservatory and at the Toronto College of Music. Mr. Semple has filled a large number of concert engagements during the past season, and is also a most successful teacher.

FALLEN AMONG THIEVES

A SERIAL STORY BY ARTHUR APPLIN

Clio stopped him with a smile. "My dear boy, don't begin to apologize. You know I'm interested in every phase of your life. And romance—doesn't often come across it. I'll help you, of course. I think you're only going to make yourself miserable, but that's your own affair. What do you want me to do?"

"First of all, keep your eyes on Mimosa while I'm away. Baron Estine is your friend, I know. You mustn't tell him the truth about Mimosa, but you can prevent Varies forcing her into a marriage. And now I want you to go to Mimosa's room and see what happened to her."

"With all my heart. Do you want to come with me?"

"No, no, and together they went upstairs."

Clio knocked twice, the second time receiving a feeble reply. She entered; Stopford stood just outside.

Mimosa had not risen from her bed. She was sitting upright, rubbing her eyes as if just awakened from a heavy sleep. The windows were closed, the curtains drawn. Clio pulled up the blind and opened the window.

Stopford was not looking at Mimosa. He was staring into the fireplace, where pieces of a broken tumbler were lying. Presently the draught from the window caused the door to shut in his face.

He waited as patiently as he could until Clio reappeared.

"Don't look so scared, she's all right. It's quite clear to me, now, that she either takes drugs or is drugged. It's a pretty problem you've found, Mr. Stopford. And it's a dangerous game you're playing. Come upstairs, and let's talk it over."

Stopford nodded. "Go back into the room; you'll find some portions of a broken tumbler lying in the fireplace. Pick them up and give them to me."

Clio de Fontaine obeyed. Stopford wrapped them up carefully in his handkerchief. At the bottom of a portion of the tumbler there were traces of a thick, sticky liquid.

"Before we talk, I think I'll take these round to a chemist and have the liquid analysed," he said.

Clio nodded. "I'll wait for you on the terrace."

CHAPTER IX.

On his way to the town—the long street which ran just below the mountain railway in the direction of Cap St. Martin—Stopford met Smith. The latter was strolling round the gardens between the Metropole and the street. He was examining the flowers and shrubs as if he were a botanist rather than a sailor.

Stopford would have avoided him at that moment, but Smith saw and but-tressed him.

"Quite an interesting collection of flora here. I wonder who's responsible. He caught sight of the handkerchief Stopford was carrying. Some of the liquid from the broken glass had oozed thru the linen. "Had an accident?" he asked laconically.

"Yes—no." Stopford gave a nervous laugh.

Smith apologized. "I warned you I had no manners. Why didn't you tell me to go to the devil?"

"I did once," Stopford replied. Again his saving sense of humor came to the rescue. "And you didn't go."

Smith shrugged his shoulders. "My dear sir, we all take return trips there for dinner tonight, at half-past seven. As a matter of fact, I was just strolling up into the town to make a few purchases for the dinner-party. Thought of asking your help. I've forgotten what women like to eat."

"There's only one woman coming?"

Stopford began to fear lest Varies was taking Mimosa.

"It's always only one woman. But again, don't let me keep you. I'll buy some roses and some peaches, and leave the rest to my cook."

"Come with me," Stopford said, after a moment's hesitation. "I'm going to look for an analytical chemist."

"An analytical chemist?"

Smith jumped at the word, and gave another glance at Stopford's handkerchief, which he carried as an English workman carries his dinner. "I know something of chemistry. Analysis always interests me. I used to analyse everything—that's why I'm an optimist."

They reached the top of the garden. Stopford laid his hand on Smith's arm, then drew him to a seat sheltered by a clump of palm-trees. A huge cactus spread its branches on either side of the pathway; a miniature stream bubbled down the moss and fern-encrusted rocks.

The two sat quite a long time without speaking. Smith was never in a hurry. He took a pouch from his pocket and rolled some vile-looking black tobacco into a cigarette.

"Look here, I've told you so much. I may as well tell you everything," Stopford blurted out. "Mademoiselle de Fontaine knows now; it's not quite dark, especially as I'm merely making board your yacht. I'm going to make my escape without saying good night. I want you to keep Mr. Varies there as long as you can."

"While you talk to his wife. I realize all that."

"Mimosa is not his wife; Varies is merely the girl's uncle."

Smith inhaled his tobacco as if it were the rarest Turkish. "So, Mimosa is the girl of whom you spoke? Then I'm right in presuming Mr. Varies is a thief—and she's not entirely free from suspicion? Very interesting. When I first saw you with her on the promontory at Monaco I was attracted. I'm not sure I haven't fallen in love with her myself. But I thought she was married, so, naturally speaking, I closed the watertight compartments of passion. There's no reason why I shouldn't open them now, eh?"

Stopford did not reply at once. He was not quite sure whether Captain Smith was serious or not.

"I don't care what you do if you'll help me save her from Varies and Baron Estine—the man you know as Oscar Sorral. He has asked her to marry him. Varies will sell her."

"Yes—no." Stopford gave a nervous laugh.

Smith apologized. "I warned you I

Stopford briefly outlined his suspicions. He told Smith that he had incontrovertible proof Mimosa was a thief; moreover, that she had stolen from a woman who befriended her. Yet, in spite of this, he refused to believe her guilty.

"She doesn't remember anything that has passed, scarcely anything she has done for an instrument, on which she plays whatever tune she fancies. It's almost unthinkable—for if she's so absolutely in his power she may, unknowingly, have been forced to commit nameless horrors and crimes."

Stopford waited for Smith to speak. But he merely rolled and lit another cigarette.

"An interesting case," Smith said, without the least trace of emotion or surprise. "Possibly to you it sounds extraordinary. I've met that sort of thing before in the east."

"It can't be hypnotism—"

Smith dismissed the idea with a wave of his hand. "Varies could not hypnotize a fly. The girl is either weak intellect or else Varies has discovered a drug which by constant use deadens the brain, atrophies the intellect. I know such a drug; for a time its action is harmless enough; it merely induces a kind of mental coma: the brain sleeps, the body remains active. When the effect of the drug wears off, the patient has absolutely no recollection of what was said or done while she was under its influence. In time, of course, the effect is disastrous, the subject loses all sense of right and wrong, has no will of her own. The brain will atrophy. The end is insanity and suicide."

Smith spoke calmly and coldly. Stopford rose to his feet; the portions of broken tumbler tied up in his handkerchief rattled together.

"Good God! If we are to save her, there's not a moment to be lost."

"Like all young men, you jump at conclusions."

"You say you know the drug?"

Sitting down, Stopford began to unknit the handkerchief.

"There is such a drug. I came across it once, had a chance of testing it, and watching the effects. The natives of Guinea discovered it. I believe certain tribes in Northern India use it. Most of the Fakirs know the secret."

Stopford gave Captain Smith the largest portion of the broken tumbler. A few drops of liquid still rested at the bottom of the glass, the sides were stained with it. He told him the events of the previous night, and the discovery of the broken tumbler in the fireplace of Mimosa's room in the morning.

Smith held the glass up to the light, smelt it; dipped his finger into the liquid, and tasted it. Then he handed it back to Stopford, and he closing his eyes, remained deep in thought for upwards of a minute.

Stopford waited, watching him impatiently.

"I wonder how and where the black-guard discovered it."

"Then you think—"

"I'm almost certain. Come along, we'll find a chemist. If I'm right, I don't think he'll be able to tell you much. You'll have to go warily, my friend. I suppose you have some vague notion of denouncing Mr. Varies. You say you've only proof that he received stolen goods. As this drug is practically unknown in England, its use is not forbidden. How are you going to prove he used it? How are you going to prove the effect it causes? English magistrates are all right, but they're not over-burdened with intelligence! And a British jury—"

"We must get Mimosa out of his power. That's all I want; that's all I care for."

"Baron Estine will do that if he marries her."

"If he marries her—yes. But what sort of husband would he make? What sort of life would she lead? Do you think Varies would leave her alone?"

Smith shook his head. "Probably not, while she had any money. And then, these jewels she has stolen? She discovered, sooner or later, they were walking thru the town of the woman to whom they belonged; her friend, I think, you said. Do you think she has any suspicion?"

"They were walking thru the town now. They halted outside a chemist's shop."

"Perhaps she knows more than I think," Stopford said. "I discovered yesterday that she is acquainted with Varies; she has written to him here, in Monte Carlo."

Smith's blue eyes opened widely for a moment. "Ah! I wish I knew her name."

Stopford looked at him. "Mary Lady Hetherington."

The blue eyes closed completely. He began to run his fingers thoughtfully thru his beard; "Mary Lady Hetherington! He repeated the name once or twice; the tone of his voice never changed. "And you know her name is quite familiar to me."

"Yes, I know her."

There was a long silence. Smith pushed open the door of the shop outside which they stood.

"I'm engaged to be married to her," Stopford said.

Smith swung round sharply. The two men stood face to face, Smith's long lean figure towered above Stopford.

"I thought you were a gentleman," he growled, raspingly.

Stopford boldly met the gaze of the cold, steel-blue eyes. "Surely it doesn't matter to you what I am, Captain Smith. Dismiss me from your thoughts altogether; think only of this unfortunate girl. You said she interested you. You can help me save her. She's worth saving. I do love her—enough to give her up and go away. But I'm not going now without taking her from Varies. Tomorrow morning I return to London, in order to see Lady Hetherington. My future conduct depends upon what I learn from her. I've told you she has been communicating with Varies. I have suspicions which I would rather not tell even you. I shall return to Monte Carlo as soon as possible, and I'll tell you everything. Meanwhile—"

"Meanwhile we're attracting attention. Let us go in here and leave your broken tumbler and a guinea with Monsieur the chemist."

Ten minutes later the two men were walking down arm in arm towards the Hotel Metropole. Captain Smith had persuaded Stopford to catch the night express to London, and on his arrival there to tell Lady Hetherington everything, and demand a like confidence from her.

And Stopford had agreed to go.

The guests were assembled on board Captain Smith's yacht; Clio asked her name. He said it was The Wild Duck. In the centre of the polished oak table, in the saloon, the largest silver bowl had been filled with red roses; the other silver bowls contained peaches and grapes. The saloon was entirely lighted by candles from eight silver candelsticks. Save for knives and forks and old-fashioned cut-glass, the table was bare of decorations.

The candle-light gave an atmosphere of mystery.

Clio was quick to realize the exquisite taste displayed. She looked at the great skins surrounding the sides of the saloon, and she smiled thoughtfully.

"So I am really the first woman to get foot on your boat, Captain Smith. I feel sorry—you shouldn't have broken the spell."

"Perhaps you will cast another spell; perhaps, I hope, you'll bring her luck."

"Hain't The Wild Duck been lucky, then?"

Smith turned the conversation, without replying.

Since his arrival on the boat Varies had been very silent; indeed, he had scarcely spoken a word. He seemed deeply impressed with what he saw. Evidently he was puzzled, and not quiet at his case. Here his lack of breeding showed itself.

Captain Smith mystified him. The old boat, rotting for a coat of paint; the extraordinary crew in their extraordinary uniform of ragged, white duck trousers and ragged, blue shirts. And the saloon, with its valuable silver and glass and the rare skins and furs hanging on the walls. The profusion of flowers and fruit, and the exquisite wine and cigars, served to heighten his embarrassment and his interest.

He began to think Smith's talk of poverty was merely affectation. It was more probable that he was an eccentric millionaire. A miser, perhaps. And yet—

At first Smith paid but little attention to Varies. All his interest seemed concentrated in Clio. But Stopford noticed that the sailor who served the wine never allowed Varies' glass to be empty for a moment. And eventually the gambler's tongue was loosened, and he talked and laughed, and flattered his host, and became extravagant in his conversation. And as he lost his wits, he lost his cunning.

Coffee and liqueurs were served on deck beneath the awning of old sails. Here were red roses again, and the light of one strange Japanese lantern hanging overhead.

Presently from the bridge of the yacht, came the sound of music. A fiddle, and a baritone voice; rough, yet warm and musical. Silence fell on the little group under the awning. Varies yawned and now and then glanced inland, towards the shore and the casino gleaming white among the dark green trees.

"You're a magician, Captain Smith," Clio whispered, leaning towards him when the song was over. She stole a red rose, and standing behind his chair, pinned it in the button-hole of his old blue coat. He watched her out of his cold blue eyes.

"Why do you say that? Do simple things surprise you so? Yet there's no rickety lute; merely an old boat and flowers and a sailor singing on the bridge—the sea and the stars."

Clio repeated his words, standing behind his chair. "So few of us can find or if we find can keep, the simple things of life—a bunch of flowers, an old boat, and some one singing beneath the stars."

She sighed. Glancing at her, Stopford remembered the first impression she had given him. A very woman, with her head and soul hidden beneath the French gown and the fashionable harness and trappings of the woman of the world. She looked really beautiful now—spiritually beautiful as well as physically beautiful.

"I envy you, you lucky man." "What would I not give now to be able to throw aside these silly clothes, and to sail away with you in an old blue coat and patched, white duck trousers?"

Smith laughed a little brutally. "These pearls you wear would buy my coat and trousers, my boat, and everything it contains—except perhaps the crew. It might even buy me, as your captain—on conditions."

"And what would the conditions be?" Obviously Clio was serious, while Captain Smith was only laughing at her.

"That you should never go up on the bridge," he replied, "and always give your orders thru your servants."

Clio tried to send a warning glance at Clio. He was leaning over the rails now, looking down into the sea. Stopford tried to send a warning glance at Clio. He did not want to alarm Varies or arouse his suspicions.

"May I look at those wonderful pearls a moment?" Smith asked, "in case you're tempted to accept my bargain!"

Clio handed them to him. He examined, and gave them back.

"Are you satisfied?"

"Yes, quite," Smith replied.

"Then the bargain is made," Clio said. "You keep the pearls and I take The Wild Duck; just as she stands, with everything she contains. You are to remain on board, as captain. As for the crew, you must make the best bargain with them that you can!"

Captain Smith rose, with a laugh. "You had better wait until tomorrow before the bargain is sealed. What about a little game of cards, eh, Mr. Varies?"

The latter instantly grew interested. A move was made for the saloon, Clio and Varies leading the way. Stopford remained behind a moment with Smith.

"You won't forget," he whispered. "I'm catching the night train, as I promised. I may or may not see Mimosa before I go. Keep your eye on Varies; don't let him out of your sight. And ask Mademoiselle de Fontaine to take care of Mimosa. Varies may strike some disreputable bargain with Sorral, or he may bolt, taking his niece with him. You'll be prepared, won't you?"

Smith nodded. "Even in calm weather a sailor is ready for storms. My sails are torn, but they'll hold the breeze. And The Wild Duck will be coiled tomorrow morning."

"You're not thinking of leaving?" Stopford asked anxiously.

Smith laughed as he descended the companion. "I'm not thinking of anything. As I told you, I can't afford to go, and I can't afford to stay. I made a few thousand francs at the tables, but before I can go back to the only life worth living I must make a million. Hurry, or you'll miss your train. And don't forget my advice—tell Lady Hetherington everything, even your suspicions. Tell her you don't love her, but are prepared to keep your promise to her."

He gripped Stopford's hands a moment, then disappeared.

Stopford dropped down into the boat waiting for him alongside The Wild Duck. As soon as he reaches the shore he called a cab and drove straight to the Metropole. To his surprise, he found Mimosa sitting in the lounge.

She greeted him with a smile. "You see I've remembered for once in my life."

She was looking ill; dark rings beneath her eyes, her cheeks were very pale, her fair, boyish hair hung limp and straight.

Stopford ordered coffee and a liqueur brandy. He lit a cigarette and offered one to Mimosa. To his surprise, she took it.

"I've got nerves tonight. I almost wish I didn't remember. I feel something like Rip Van Winkle—he slept for a hundred years, didn't he?—I believe I must have slept for a hundred hours. Tell me what you want to see me about, because I've quite forgotten that. The sleeping or waking, I've never stopped telling myself that I promised to see you tonight. And I know it was about something very important."

"It was a matter of life and death."

Stopford shook his head. He felt it was cowardly to torture her at that moment. There was not time to tell her everything, and if he only told her part he would probably leave her terrified, a prey to hideous fears and emotions.

His faith in her had quite returned now. He knew she was not acting. He had never acted. He knew whatever she had done that was wrong, had been done without her knowledge or consent. Her brain had been drugged, her soul sent to sleep, leaving her body free to perform any vile task which Varies chose to set it.

Captain Smith was right. Stopford determined to tell Lady Hetherington everything when he reached London. . . . When she knew, he wondered what she would do.

Key of E Minor relative of G Major

GROVE'S MUSIC SIMPLIFIER. SECOND LESSON. THIRD LESSON NEXT SUNDAY

Entered According to the Act of Parliament of Canada at the Department of Agriculture in the Year 1906. SECOND EDITION, Copyright, 1905, International Copyright Secured. Copyright 1903-4 by W. SCOTT GROVE, Scranton, Pa.

The second lesson in these simple instructions for the piano or organ takes up the key of G and its corresponding key of E minor. It is proposed to give all of the fundamental chords used in musical composition. There will be ten more lessons before this 12 weeks' course in music is completed. The pupil is expected to learn these chords, so they can be played almost intuitively. This means diligent PRACTICE. When this lesson has been mastered the student will be fully qualified to take up the study of the third lesson, which will appear next week.

INSTRUCTIONS—Fold the paper across the page half way between the two charts and place one of the charts at right angles to the keyboard of your piano or organ so that the small white letter D at the bottom of the chart is directly over the key D on the keyboard. The other spaces on the chart will then be over the white keys and the black spaces over the black keys. Each series of letters on top, middle and lower section represents a chord. When playing these chords begin at the top section and play the white letter first with the left hand, it being the bass, and afterwards the black letters on the same space simultaneously with the right hand, making the harmony desired. Then play the letters in the middle space in the same manner, followed by those on the bottom space, return to the top space, forming a complement of chords.

Turn the folded paper from right to left and use the other chart which will then appear right side up in the same way. The small white letter D at bottom of chart with a dash above it, is only to indicate position, and should not be played. During the week preceding the next lesson the chords shown here should be played over and over again until you memorize them and can play them without the charts. Then you will be ready for the next lesson.

Memorize the letters also, so that instinctively hereafter you will recall what letters or keys make up the various chords. A knowledge of the chords of keys in which music is composed is the foundation stone for future skill in reading music fluently.

The black letters are played with the right hand and the white letters at the left are the bass, and are played with the left hand. Every triad in black letters is marked 1, 3, 5. Always read triads 1, 3, 5, no matter what position. Triad 1 3 5 G—marked—third position, 5, the highest; always read it so. 2 5 G C first position, 1, the highest; read 1 3 5 G C second position, 3, the highest, read 1 3 5 G C and so with every triad major or minor.

The Briton Woman

By Laura E. McCully.

Lo, where she sits in chains,
Old Mother Slave, gray as the storied years,
Whom man's mad phantasy has crowned with flowers!

Still dwells dull sleep upon that carven brow,
Reared high for kindly thoughts and reason sure,
Dead are her eyes with ancient, unshed tears,
And all her face is furrowed up with pain
And dread, and unto tenderness her mouth
Melts not, but mutters warily as she sleeps.

See how the calloused wounds upon those hands
No strangers to the truck, the anvil's heat,
The pickaxe and the loom, see how they gape
Upwards, amazed, upon her faded crown!
Puce was that robe purper, but now
Sollure is on it, and she sits ashamed.
Her household gods are stolen, round her feet
Crawl noxious things, and yet she will not rise,
But in her sleep puts forth her shackled hands,
Dreaming about the brood that at her knee
Were safe, and now were safe, save that enchained
She may not rise and follow down their paths.

Can this be she from whose historic womb
Sprang Viking after Viking, even till now?
Sullen, silent and shackled, hath she borne
Masters of men and makers of the world?
Yes, this is she, bound for men deem her weak
However strong her sons, and faint at heart
Tho they be bold, and dull of brain and soul.
For this cause lay they burdens on her back
And weigh her down with chains, lest she escape,
And load on her contumely and scorn
Naming all things contemptible as hers
And whatsoever she hath that they have not Reckoning it as lest! Therefore behold
The patience of her world long, brooding scorn
Out of whose womb came poets, heroes, kings!

War hath been made upon her, pillaged, reft
In her deep dream she noted not the loss
Hhat ravaged her and called her mean and weak.
Yet now at length she stirs, and her great soul
Stronger for travail, feels the entering iron,
And vastly shudders, roused from age-long sleep,
Conscious at last of chains and wounds and crown!
See how she dumbly looks upon the world
As one new-born, and moves her mighty limbs,
And her breasts yearn for all her wasted broods!
Primitive, vast, unconquerable, lo
She rears her up, a Briton, bold at heart,
Defiant, dogged, prone to deeds not words.
No odds may daunt her: on her lips there breathes
The ancient battle-cry, and in her soul
Fiercely flames up the ancient British fire!

John McNeill a Human Dynamo Greatest Preaching Acquisition

Striking Characteristics of Cooke's Church Pastor Who Began Life as a Railwayman and Roused London With His Fiery Eloquence.

By H. E. Willmot.

Rugged, tender, earnest, humorous, masterful, kindly, dominant, sympathetic—such is the man, or part of him—that today occupies the pulpit of Cooke's Church Toronto. True, these qualities are only part of the man. Without the dynamic personality behind that gives them potency they would be meaningless.

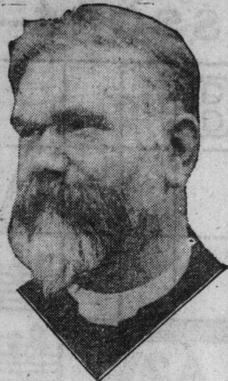

Reverend John McNeill (he prefers it without the "Reverend") is the greatest acquisition to evangelical preaching in Canada since the beloved William Morley Punshon was stationed in Metropolitan Methodist Church, Toronto. The names here are coupled for historical and not comparative purposes. The men are entirely dissimilar. At the age of fifty-nine John McNeill cast off his moorings from the old land and turned his face towards new problems in Canada with what he calls "enthusiasm and genuine hopefulness."

It is a fond saying of Rev. Dr. Milligan of Old St. Andrew's Church that no man can really preach until he has passed thru at least twenty-five years of ministerial experience. "He must lay his antecedents broad and deep before he can expect any return." If that be true then John McNeill comes to Toronto in the maturity of his endowment. Pastor first, exangelist later, he has girdled the empire with the gospel message, and is now solving the great problem of the down-town church. No better choice could have been made, for in the summer of 1893 in company with the late Dwight L. Moody, John McNeill filled the vacant theatres of Chicago from pit to gallery for six weeks during the excitement and sensation of the World's Fair. The reason he explains in his sermon, "The Story of Capernaum,"—"It was noised that He (Jesus) was in the house."

John McNeill preaches because he cannot help it. With him to live is to preach. While his style is original he maintains the striking characteristics of a great many Scottish divines whose message is the word of life in positive, emphatic and inspiring language. McNeill does not deal out terror, denunciation and misery; his sermons are of joy and optimism.

The preacher at Cooke's began his life amid lowly surroundings. He was born in Renfrewshire on July 7, 1854, and after receiving his education in the Free Church Schools entered the service of the Caledonian Railway. In 1877 he started to study for the ministry, was ordained in 1886 and commenced his first pastorate at Regent's Square Presbyterian Church, London, in 1889. Regent's Square, he is known, is one of the most fashionable and exclusive churches in London. McNeill is strongly endowed with prophetic emotionality and his fiery discourses struck right at conditions as he found them in the metropolis. His preaching did not altogether suit his congregation and it was not uncommon to see him on the streets entreating the people to come in and hear the gospel. In 1892 he accepted an invitation to join Moody, and together they went to Australia, New Zealand and practically completed a world's tour.

A large man physically, dark of complexion and shaggy in appearance, McNeill is a human dynamo. His energy is exhaustless. Five sermons a week and two on Sunday is his measure. He works with untiring zeal. At the Pre-Assembly Congress of the Presbyterian Church in Toronto recently he seemed to be everywhere. He would meet his own congregation at Cooke's with a powerful discourse and at the conclusion of the service would tear off to Massey Hall and face four thousand people with a message that sent a thrill to every heart. The hot spell had no terrors for him. He would attend the noon-day meeting at Cooke's rewarding those who had gathered from the heat and turmoil of the day with a choice morsel of exhortation then hasten away, perspiration soaked but eager, to meet the elders of the church in solemn council at Knox.

John McNeill never uses notes; he is not ashamed to repeat a sermon and the repetition follows the original with minute precision and loses none of its refreshment in the interval. A fluent speaker, he has all the characteristic eloquence of the Celt. A splendid imagery with an inexhaustible fund of humor impart a charm and scintillation to his sermons. He is apt at illustration, keen and pungent in elucidation; all the while fervent with religious emotion. He is a discursive speaker and indulges in wide ramifications in developing his thought, but is sure to come back to his first theme and round out his argument with convincing finality.

He loves his native Gaelic. Often he will tell an audience, "You have no word in English to express it like the Gaelic." They will be off into a rhapsody over the peculiar aptness of his own tongue to picture the very shade of thought that he wants to convey. "It was noised that He was in the house." "The Scotch for it would be 'soothing,' just soothing," and those who knew the word understood just what was meant.

McNeill would have made a great actor; he is a great actor. With wonderful power and facility he visualizes his text, graphically describing the scene and leading the imagination of his hearers until the whole story is an animated picture before the mind.

lead in a brief, fervent invocation that the divine presence might not be withheld. All the while he is working at concert pitch, and as soon as the meeting is over hastens away for rest and meditation. The social side has no attraction for him; he knows his work and understands its demands. Only in this way can he maintain the high record of efficiency for which he is famous.

John McNeill is a force in every community where he is found. He has vitalized every pulpit that he has filled. In Free St. George's Presbyterian Church, Liverpool—his last charge before coming to Canada—he quickened the moribund life of that parish until it became a flaming torch in the welfare of that great city.

As an evangelist his methods are natural and without artificial embellishment. He eschews the tricks and mechanical organization of the Torrey and Chapman school. He talks about lost souls in a manner that makes men believe that nobody gets far away from God. He is building a permanent, an everlasting structure, and the nation is counted rich that numbers him among her sons.

Of this world's goods he is not in want. His marriage to the daughter of a rich banker has made him independent of the emoluments of fashionable pulpits and his work is inspired with the true spirit of the crusader.

The Wide Brown Road.

Before my door a wide brown road I see,
And blithesomely it winds away from me;

I do not know what in its way may lie,
Or on what quest its travelers may be.

Sometimes I dream it crosses brooks that creep
Slowly to find the lake so still and deep;

I stand upon the bridge and see below
The eddying waters and the trout's swift leap.

I see fair homes behind the screening trees,
Which thrill like harps to every passing breeze,

With children playing by the kitchen door,
Which rises out from gold-starred, grassy seas.

The road winds on where stately hills arise,
Or past some pool which like a mirror lies.

Holding a picture of the arch above,
Or tossing billows when the north wind cries.

And at its end there lies a city fair—I dream of shining towers and buildings there—

And there my road comes to a happy end;
But of its travelers, who shall know, or care?
