"AS A MAN SOWS."

BY HELEN WALLACE

Author of "THE GREATEST OF THESE," "THEIR HEARTS' DESIRE, ETC.

The wife hung over the dead face. "Oh, David, my husband, is this how we meet again? There is nothing between us now; you need no words now. Can you see?—do you know?—do you understand?" And as she gazed, something of the profound calm, of the deep repose of the still features already composed for their eternal rest, poured over her own spirit. He had sinned, but how grievously he had sinned. In that moment of exaltation, she could forget herself, and even feel thankful that the tortured spirit was at rest at last.

As she sank on her knees beside the still form the wells of memory opened again and poured out their seething tides, and now the sweet waters overflowed the bitter. It was the man whom she had loved with a lifelong, single-hearted love, the husband of her youth, the father of her child, who lay there—his sins and his sorrows might well be hidden to stand aside for a while. For the time it was a resurrection—a reunion, rather than a parting, for in that first rapture of grief the man at his best and highest was restored to her again—she must face the other side by and by, but not now—now.

As she raised her head from that merciful trance of healing memories the late afternoon sunlight was streaming in through the uncurtained window, touching the marble features and the closed eyes which would "behold the sun" no more. Instinct prompted her to rise and to screen out the light, when, lifting her dazzled, weary eyes she saw between her and the light, and stepping over the dead, a pale ethereal face, set in the golden glory with which devout tradition enhances the heads of the saints triumphant. She was so uplifted and carried away from earthly things that it seemed no strange thing that the vision of her daughter in bliss should be vouchsafed to her—the pure soul of the child greeting the weary, sin-stained, wayward man. For one long breath's length her sense of being seemed suspended as she gazed in rapt awe and wonder. Oh for one look from those radiant eyes before the vision was withdrawn.

"Isobel—my child," she breathed. The sound scarcely stirred the silence, but the eyes were lifted from the dead face, and met her in mute appeal.

"Mother!" cried a voice, charged with a passion of grief and entreaty, through which a trembling hope thrilled.

Ah, that voice! The shock forced her to her feet. This was no celestial visitant—no bright spirit in her daughter's form. Her daughter, her child, her Isobel was lying lonely, forsaken, despoiled in a nameless grave amid the dreary sands, thrust underground by the wretch who had robbed the poor clay, and this—this—

She stood breathing quick and hard—the revulsion was too sudden, it flung her back on that primal instinct which underlies all motherhood, the fierce, savage impulse to protect or avenge its young. Had ever woman been so foully, so cruelly despoiled and deceived, and now there stood her dead child's suppliant, who to her disordered fancy seemed to have robbed her Isobel of her very form and features, as well as her name and place and the love which should have been hers. How could her own mother-heart, her mother instinct have been so cunning as to accept so blindly this brilliant counterfeit of the gentle dead?

Isobel fell upon her knees and stretched out imploring hands across the silent figure which lay between. It had come at last—that which she had been dreading during the long hours of Lady Stormont's absence behind that locked door, and when no summons had come to her to join her mother in their common sorrow. It was the last Isobel's mother burning with grief and outrage who faced her now—her mother no longer.

"I know—I know," she cried in a voice that pierced, "the very sight of me must be terrible to you—that I should be alive—here—while—while she is—no. I would give my life to bring her back, and it would be no great gift, for death could be more dreadful than that moment when I learned who I was—and who I was not! I never knew what love was till I knew you, and when I found that I had no right to it—" Her voice broke. "But I would not knowingly have taken what was her due—not one look—not one kiss—if—"

Her eyes fell upon the dead face, and it silenced her. "Can you forgive me that I did?" she pleaded humbly. "It is my one sin against you. No, with sudden passion, "my very existence is a sin against you, my presence here a wrong done you. I should not have come and yet—be is my father—and you have so filled my heart with love that it is hard to empty it all at once, and through this long dreadful day—" She stopped abruptly, looking timidly, yearningly into the face which had always brightened to her glance before. "I will go; but—oh if you can forgive the dead—have mercy on the living; if you can—forgive me."

She knelt a moment longer, her face a prayer more eloquent than the broken, pitiful words, while slowly, hardly, the storm in the mother's breast died down as across her dead she looked at her husband's child, and that last despairing appeal rang again in her ears—"If I cannot pray for myself, I can beg for pity for my child, she is innocent." What had suffered the greater wrong, herself or that poor young mother, driven to despair and death, or the child flung helpless on a cold, grudging world, and now so mar-

HAND EMBROIDERIES RUN RIOT OVER ELABORATE DINNER GOWN.

An exquisite quality of rayon velvet in one of the new subgines or elegant shades is used for this costume. The beauty of the material is still further enhanced by elaborate hand embroidery. The skirt and bodice are attached, although cut and modeled as separate pieces. The skirt comes well above the waist line in what is known as the baby princess effect. The front, back and sides have full panels of embroidery, and the lower part of the skirt is laid in three hand run tucks. The bodice portion is of a matching shade of chiffon, with a small yoke and deep vest of white chiffon or lace. There are skeleton bretelles of the velvet embroidered as is the skirt, and tucked elbow sleeves of the chiffon. The chiffon bodice is very full and houses slightly all the way round. The hat worn with this costume is a felt of the same shade as the velvet, and is trimmed with American Beauty roses run in the shades of purple and red, and has a scarf of the subgine velvet.

velously brought back to the place which was hers by right? Lady Stormont was a devout as well as a just woman, and as she looked from the father to the child, brought together at last, an awe fell upon her.

"My poor child, you have little need to beg for forgiveness," she said at last. "What you did was for my sake and—falling—I know it would have been hard for you to do otherwise. But you have been sorely sinned against—can you forgive that? He said you found it hard to forgive—can you forgive your father now?" with a look toward the silent witness, who in the majesty of death seemed to belittle the brief strife of hot human hearts, so soon to be stilled even as his.

Isobel's tears came with a rush. "If you can forgive me," she whispered and with their dead between them the wife and the child drew together again. There was a long, sacred stillness, and at last Lady Stormont said, with a faint smile:

"We shall learn to know each other anew, but I wish you to read this," drawing out Sir David's letter. "It will explain much, and it will help you to understand your father, as well as to forgive him."

Isobel slowly and lingeringly withdrew and left husband and wife alone together. Lady Stormont had been kind, gentle, pitiful. What more could she expect? That the doubly bereaved woman could even bear the sight of her was a marvel, but—though she might find a friend by and by, she had lost her mother!

A few steps down the corridor she encountered Conyers, who had, indeed been waiting for her. One glance at her face made him take her hands gently into his in silence. Father and daughter, he knew, had added but little to each other's happiness in these past weeks, but such consciousness only embitters the blow when at last it falls. There was something so lost, so forlorn about her air that he would fain have taken her to his arms and comforted her if he could, but her sorrow hedged her round and for a moment he could only stand clasping her hands in silence, he could find no words, while back in his mind there rushed what had been driven from it only for a short time—the memory of yesterday's strange scene with Ashe, of Isobel's unexplained words. Was that weighing upon her now as well as her natural grief? Well, she had no father to stand by her now, he the trouble what it might; she must let him help her, he thought with a leap of all his pulses, as at last he said in a low voice—"Your father didn't suffer and he is at peace. It is you and your mother we must think of now. Isobel, you must let me help you, you will let me serve you—now!"

As he spoke she suddenly drew away her hands; a wave of some strong, revivifying emotion or of some great resolve seemed to pass over her. Like an unstrung bow drawn taut again, her figure drew erect, her head rose, a flash of light and warms and color sprang to her face and eyes.

"I have been standing beside the dead," she said with the intensity of a compelling, overmastering impulse. "There is no need there—no place there for any 'refuge of lies.' I must escape from it now whatever happens. He was my father, yes—though I am nameless, homeless—motherless; the last words were almost a sob. 'It is all there—read it, then you can help—serve if you will, and,' with a sudden darting recollection of what already seemed far away in the past, 'it will explain—yesterday.'

She thrust some loose papers into his hands, and would have eyed away, but he caught her wrist and held her fast. "Stop, Isobel!" feeling like a man on whom a sudden light is breaking, which, at first confuses rather than enlightens. "What do you mean?"

"You need not force me to tell it," in a flash of young hot pride. "It is all there—you have only to read—I want you to read it; I insist on your reading it," passionately.

Beel flung the paper aside. It might be neither the time nor the place for it, but the man in him would be denied no longer. He, too, had his uplifting, conquering moment.

"Isobel, my dear love, it's you I want.

WHERE DOES THE PAPER GO?

The first question asked by a general advertiser. The Telegraph and Times reach that class of people who subscribe and agree to pay for the reading privilege. These papers go first hand from the publishers by carrier and not through street boys to be left in office or store by purchaser after reading. Common sense teaches that every paper passed into homes direct will be read. The Telegraph and Times are home papers. Do they contain your advertisement?

Whoever you are, you are yourself—that's enough for me! Perhaps you think I should not speak now, but I must and will. My help, my service, all I am, all I have are yours now and always. Come to me now, dear, and— I'll read anything you please afterward."

"No, no." The girl strained against his detaining clasp. "I will not—I can't—you don't know—how could I? Oh, cannot you understand—why will you force me to say more?"

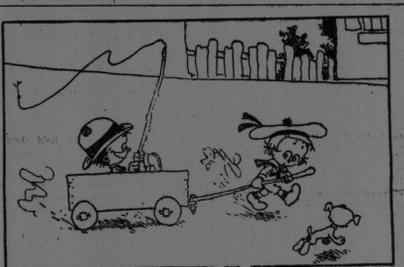

"I only want to force you to say one word more! Isobel, dearest," with sudden gravity, "I think I do understand, I do know, and it makes much that was perplexing plain now; but I know, too, that your love is the one supreme good in life for me. Do you think me such a creature that I would let any worldly scruple, any silly convention, come between us, for I think—I believe—oh, my God, it is true—between rapture and awe—you do love me!" In spite of her hell, he had drawn her nearer, he was looking into her face, "Isobel, beloved, you are mine—you don't deny it—you can't, in tender triumph. "I bid you put all else aside and come to me."

And worn out by the long struggle, her heart hungering to obey the call of its lord, she came, she yielded. And though beyond the closed door death, the conqueror, reigned, and a stricken heart bowed before his throne, yet life never tarries for death; and here a greater than he ruled, the love which is stronger than death, which no waters can quench nor floods drown.

A very large congregation assembled in Centenary church last night at the service at which Madame Yuliese Harrison sang. She was in excellent voice and her singing of I Know That My Redeemer Liveth and A Song of Trust was very highly appreciated.

Mrs. Upton (reading the paper)—Another railroad accident! Seventeen men killed! Isn't it awful, Bridget? Bridget—Yes, maam, and men so scarce! It's dreadful.

The kid in the wagon—"I tell you, Reginald, I wish you was twain! Wot a dandy pair I'd have to drive den!"

SYSTEMATIC CATARRH HAS BUT ONE CURE

Lotions and Powders Will Never Help Unless the Blood is Given Attention.

The way to radically and permanently cure catarrh is to cleanse the blood of the unhealthy secretions that keep the mucous membrane inflamed.

Catarrhal poison usually interferes with the stomach, kidneys and liver. These organs must be properly toned and strengthened, otherwise you feel sick all over.

To go direct to the source of the trouble—to cleanse, nourish and purify the blood—where can you find anything so potent as Dr. Hamilton's Pills?

This grand medicine regulates the eliminating organs and completely drives the virus of catarrh out of the system. Thousands of cures prove this.

Of course to clear the nose and head of mucous discharges, Dr. Hamilton recommends the use of Catarrhose Inhaler, which, if used with his pills of Mandrake and Balaugnat, cures the most obstinate case of Catarrh even known. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills in 25c. boxes.

TWO SMASHUPS ON HALIFAX RAILWAY

Halifax, Sept. 15.—The Halifax & South-western railway had two accidents on Saturday, one of them serious, though no life was lost in either nor was there injury to passengers or train hands.

The minor accident occurred on the line between Bridgewater and Mahone Bay, and was chiefly confined to an engine which was being run tender first, and left the rails in either nor was there injury to passengers or train hands.

The other affair was a bad smashup of the accommodation that left Halifax for Liverpool Saturday afternoon, and which left the rails four miles west of Hubbards. Ahead of a number of ordinary freight cars was an Imperial Oil Company tank car, containing 5,000 gallons of kerosene. This car broke down and five freight cars piled on top of it, three of them smashing into splinters. The merchandise they were loaded with was scattered, and the oil from the broken tank saturated everything.

The passenger cars did not leave the rails. A train came from Halifax, to which the passengers from Yarmouth were transferred and brought to Halifax eight hours late. It is expected the track will be cleared tomorrow morning.

SERIOUS STABBING AFFRAY AT TRURO

Truro, N. S., Sept. 15.—An incident took place this afternoon in John R. Murray's livery stable in which Allan Murray was badly injured. A man by the name of McCready, working in the woods near Truro, accompanied by a friend, engaged a horse and covered buggy from Murray, returning the same in a broken condition. Murray demanded payment for the damage, as well as the hire, and McCready refused to pay. Words ensued and McCready drew a dirk knife, stabbing Allan Murray three times in the back. He also slashed at J. R. Murray, but missed his aim, only cutting Mr. Murray's coat and inflicting slight injury to his hand. Chief Coss arrested both men.

FINANCIAL and COMMERCIAL

BACHE & CO.'S COMMENT ON STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Various defences have been drawn from the success of the New York City bond sale. It is safe to assume that it would not have been successful on the merits alone of the extra interest of one-half of one per cent. offered on the bonds. What primarily made it "go" and without which it would not have gone, was the fact that it was practically underwritten for the entire amount. The bonds, as we said last week, were a gain at 102. This figure we named as the one that would probably take care of it, and as it turned out, 102 and a slight fraction, 102.5, was the average of the successful bids. But the bonds could not have been underwritten if the public did not have confidence in the structure of the upholding network of the syndicate bid, which was maintained by the public and which was not to be broken until it was picked off by every one, which is exactly what was wanted. If any one believes that the syndicate was disappointed that none were left, then that person is mistaken. The syndicate could easily have swept the market clean. It had no such intention. The effort was made, and was eminently successful. It is just as if a public overreaction had been planned by the master mind, and was eminently successful. It is just as if a public overreaction had been planned by the master mind, and was eminently successful. JUDGE GARY'S VIEWS

Thinks Money Will Continue Tight in the United States.—The Steel Rail Question. (N. Y. Journal of Commerce.) E. H. Gary, chairman of the Board of Directors of the United States Steel Corporation, arrived yesterday on the Kronprinzessin Cecilie from a three months' trip abroad. Judge Gary appeared in excellent health, and in answer to a request both here and abroad, he said: "There appears to be plenty of money in France available for American investment, but there seems to be some distrust of the United States, owing to the fact that the President's policy towards corporations is not understood over there. I expect that this country will experience tight money for some time to come."

THE MAYOR'S SOLDIERS

Another Epistle from the Unknown Genius Who Writes to Mayor Sears. Quite a number of people are curious as to the identity of the "genius" who is sending to the mayor from time to time strange and wonderful suggestions for new laws. This peculiar individual who signs himself "A Traveller" appears to be afflicted with a brainstorm, the central thought of his mind being the need of improvement in various civic matters. The manner in which the communications are written brings back to memory the poetic utterances of the late lamented John Callaghan McCarthy, who "shone in this city like the late poet laureate" of this domain, the present writer has many a phrase recalled to himself. It would seem that in view of the fact that this is a former has travelled much, as he evidently has, judging by his very valuable suggestions, he should reveal himself so that all might know to whom they are indebted for these words of wisdom and sage counsel. Who knows, but at the next election of the city fathers the "Mr. Wiseman" might be leading the polls as the representative of the people to inaugurate the reforms he advocates. Let him come out and declare himself but in the meantime the attention of

LAIDLAW'S LETTER

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—The adverse developments in the copper industry recently have naturally emphasized the long felt apprehension of a general bull market and while conditions in the metal trade as yet warrant no hysteria with regard to the outlook, the bear element is doing all it can to foster the idea that a setback there is being hastened by prospective federal production. It would not be surprising therefore if the market were to show a further decline in the copper price. The market is now showing a tendency to stabilize, but the outlook is still uncertain. FEDERAL POLITICS

The withdrawal of Mayor Sears from the contest simplifies matters in St. John, and the minister of public works will no doubt be elected by acclamation. In Brockville the Conservatives have decided not to oppose Hon. Mr. Graham, so that both of the new ministers will be permitted to devote themselves to their duties without the necessity of organizing their constituencies for a contest. So far as Brockville is concerned, it is recalled that once in a by-election a Conservative minister was not opposed by the Liberals, and the parties now break even on that score. There is to be a provincial by-election also in Brockville, and the Conservatives will contest. In St. John the Conservatives had good ground for their decision not to oppose the minister of public works at this time. They must contest both provincial and federal elections ere long, and their financial outlay for legitimate expenses will be no light matter for a party so long in opposition. There was no prospect of defeating Dr. Pugsley at the present time, since he has a portfolio and is in a position to do much needed and much-neglected work for the port; and even if it were possible to defeat him the relative strength of the parties in the house would not be affected to any appreciable extent. When the general elections occur the conditions will be quite different, and the new minister must look to his laurels. The whole of the government must be on trial the country over, and party enthusiasm everywhere will be at fighting pitch.

Mr. Borden has completed his tour of Ontario, where he was greeted by great audiences and held a most successful series of meetings. He goes now to the coast, where the Victoria Colonist has predicted for him a most enthusiastic reception. His tour of the west will be followed with universal interest. From this time forward until the general elections occur, even if, as is expected, a parliamentary session intervenes, the interest of the people in the general political situation throughout Canada will steadily increase.

PROVINCIAL POLITICS

Much interest in provincial politics in New Brunswick is being aroused by the meetings held by Mr. Hazen and other members of the opposition party. Evidently the leader of the party is greatly encouraged by the results. In Kent county, despite the fact that Mr. Barnes has been taken into the government, a strong opposition ticket has been secured and there are indications of a marked change of sentiment in a county which in 1903 was solid for the government. Mr. Hazen states that the meetings last week at Rexton and Buctouche were crowded, and the opposition speakers received with enthusiasm.

In Northumberland county, the influence which strengthened the government for years have been further weakened during the past year, and the opposition, which so nearly carried all the seats in the last general elections, has increased its strength.

In Queens county a convention is being held today by the opposition, and a ticket will be nominated. Judging from the names suggested, it will be composed of men who will give a good account of themselves when the elections occur. The York county convention will be held on Thursday and the advance reports indicate a ticket of popular candidates. In Carleton county, where the people seem to take their politics more seriously than in most constituencies, the opposition is very active. In Gloucester and Restigouche conventions will be held early next month. All along the line the opposition leader is marshalling his forces with vigor, and with the assurance of stronger support than at any time since he assumed the arduous task of leading his party.

In government circles the lull continues. The cabinet has not been reconstructed. Whatever is being done is done quietly. The opposition are left to guess whether there will be a session or the elections. The new premier talks very little for publication, and to what extent he may be able to arouse popular enthusiasm when he does speak and act is one of the interesting questions of the time. Beyond doubt he must face an aggressive and confident opposition, and it is equally certain that the manner in which his cabinet is reconstructed will considerably influence public opinion. For the moment the opposition leaders have the centre of the political stage, and have no reason to complain of the reception given them.

SHOCKING CONDITIONS

The amazing story of the conditions existing in Ontario fruit and vegetable canneries must result in immediate reform or a sharp decline in the demand for the goods. The public will insist upon proper sanitary conditions and reasonable care and cleanliness in packing the goods, or the goods will remain on the shelves. We quote from the Montreal Witness: "The chief faults, according to reports of the provincial board of health, are found in the housing of employees and the use of over-ripe or rotten fruit. The report of Dr. Bell, medical inspector, who made a tour of inspection in the Niagara district, with Mr. Holmes, of the factory inspector's staff, disclosed such a disgusting condition of affairs that Dr. Hodgkiss, the chief health officer of the province, felt compelled to pay the canneries a visit. What he found there is scarcely printable. It appears that in the season about eighteen hundred persons, two-thirds of whom are females, are employed in the Niagara district. About half of these are foreigners from Buffalo, and there are about two hundred Indians from Brantford and Caledonia. As one sample of what was found, we quote from Dr. Bell: 'Food was frequently kept in dirty fruit baskets under the beds, and was often eaten either on the floor or on the beds. These sleeping and living quarters were often kept in a most wretched condition, and in some cases thirty or forty were disgracefully huddled together in one compartment. Many of these buildings were most filthy, and choice places for vermin-breeding. I saw a notice in one factory that after visiting the closet hands must be washed, but neither soap nor towel was to be seen, and, if washed, their hands must have been dried on dirty clothes. The report as a whole has all the horrors of dirt that were found so appalling in Upton Sinclair's 'The Jungle,' which forced the United States government to inspect officially the Chicago stock yards.' Dr. Bell declares that 'no clean, respectable woman would live for one hour in such places,' and adds that 'the lives of our people are at stake.' Dr. Hodgkiss reports that he found 'better provision made for horses and more care exercised in the keeping of stables that he found to exist in most of the factories he visited.' Now that the facts are known, the authorities must see to it that canneries methods are revolutionized.

MAN'S INHUMANITY Editor Times Sir—"Hate off to Ald. Frink." A host of your readers were delighted at the action of Dr. Frink in sending back to the stable the poor old horse that had served the city so many years and had been sent to the auction block. Can you tell me why this same old horse had to be sold at auction on Saturday? I believe he was knocked down to a speculator. It is seldom that a good citizen buys a worn-out horse to keep. They are generally traded amongst junk-dealers and wood-hawkers, and have a miserable existence in their old age. Yours, HUMANITY.

The above letter expresses the feeling of many citizens. One said to the Times this morning that Ald. Frink would have the moral support of more people than he perhaps dreams of in a crusade against inhuman treatment of old horses. This citizen told of one faithful animal that had served a leading citizen for years, and spent his last days miserably as the slave of brutal drivers, and of another that was disposed of in like manner by a physician to be the motive power of a car cart—when too old to be of further use to the man he had served for years. The subject is one that should appeal to the humanity of men and women. The S. P. C. A. should be more alert and more aggressive, backed by a strong public sentiment.

The morning papers tell of another terrible railway wreck, in which more than a score of lives were lost, and many persons injured. A mistake by a train dispatcher caused the catastrophe, and the tragic occurrence emphasizes once more how terrible is the responsibility resting upon the men who have to do with the movement of trains. That there are so few wrecks due to their mistakes is a great tribute to the fidelity of railway employees in general, even when, as is too often the case, they are compelled to work too many hours per day and to assume the gravest responsibilities for very small salaries. Yesterday's collision is said to have been due to a mere clerical error in writing an order, but the cost was terrible.

MORNING LOCALS Winslow Colwell, a street railway conductor, was relieved of his gold watch, while at the circus on Saturday afternoon. He reported the matter to the police but thus far they have not succeeded in locating the missing timepiece. John Lundy, while passing along St. James street, last evening, stepped off the edge of the sidewalk, breaking his leg, and was taken to his home, Brooks street, where a physician attended him. Samuel Dealhoy, employed as stevedore for N. C. Scott, also met with an accident. He was piling deck on schooner Annie

Booth at Indian town, Friday, when one of them slipped, caught him by the leg and threw him down. No bones were broken and he will be about again in a few days. An alarm from box 36 yesterday afternoon about 5:45 o'clock brought out the firemen for a blaze in a flat occupied by Robert M. Foster, 173 St. James street. The chemical was used to extinguish the fire, which had started from a defective fuse. Mr. Foster, who had some furniture slightly damaged was insured with Tilley & Fairweather for $400. The house is owned by Mrs. Kate Foster, 240 Prince William street. Damage to property is also covered by insurance. In the Leinster street Baptist church last evening Rev. Wellington Camp preached a specially interesting sermon on the History of the Two Careers, taking for his text Romans ix. 13: "Jacob have I loved but Esau have I hated," after a reference to Esau's mistake in selling his birthright to Jacob he applied the text to life of today, saying that young men might sell their birthright by riotous living, Sabbath breaking and living only for pleasure. Rev. W. L. Archibald, who is in the city in the interests of the second Acadia forward movement fund, reports that $75,000 of the $100,000 pledged has been raised and the balance will probably be secured before the end of the year. Under the conditions of the movement the $100,000, if raised within the given time, insures the receipt of $100,000 from John D. Rockefeller, and $30,000 from Andrew Carnegie. Fully 250 children attended the special flower service in St. James' church yesterday afternoon, each bringing a beautiful bouquet. The flowers were banded near the pulpit before the service began. Rev. E. J. Revington-Jones preached an interesting sermon taking as his subject, "Flowers." The bouquets will be distributed among the charitable institutions of the city and sick of the parish.

IN A MEADOW

In a meadow, dreaming, Stubble sown and woven, Way off in the mist there Lies the happy town. Lies the mart, the city, Still some part of sunshine Reaches everywhere.

Want a world of fancy? Fill this meadow, please. Here an hundred singers, Come, each with his bride. Grasses then were waving, Morning mists with rose. Flowers then were sweetest, Hopes then true and strong.

All of earth were happy. All the world was gay, Bless'd the case a unnumbered, Crowded every way. Song, when was it richer? Love, sweeter, when? When was more of promise Offer'd unto men?

In a meadow, dreaming, Far away the town, Where the idles, restles, Bear men up and down. When the wind was blowing, Tracked by wreck and woo, Some, too few they number, Bless the way they go.

Cold and bleak the meadow; In a voice of fear Cries the wind about me, Passing is the year. But the hope eternal, Fills anew my breast, Knowing that my faith All things for the best.

—Horace Varney.

IN LIGHTER VEIN

HE WAS RIGHT. Wife—I don't know where that child got his vile temper—from not from me, I'm sure. Husband (sady)—No, my dear; you certainly haven't lost any of yours.

WORKED HIS WAY. "What must I do to be saved?" cried the plutocrat at the mourners' bench. "Take all your ill-gotten gains and restore them to the ones from whom you took them!" thundered the chorist.

Next day the plutocrat wrote cheques for most of his fortune in favor of his business rivals, who immediately thought he had gone crazy, and so they played the market against his corporations, and as a result they had to fork over the cheques and twice as much more to him when the market closed.

HIS KICK. A traveller putting up at a small hotel in California brought the porter up to his room with his angry storming. "What your room charged, sir? What is the matter?"

"The room is all right," fumed the guest, indignantly. "It's the fleas I object to, that's all."

"Mrs. Hawkins!" shouted the porter, in an uninterested sort of a voice, "the gent in No. 7 is satisfied with his rooms, but he wants the fleas changed."

NOTHING WRONG.

James Whitecomb Riley, in company with the gentleman who used to manage his lecture tours, was once examining a hall in a town in Ohio where it was proposed Mr. Riley should give a reading.

The two men had as their guide a colored janitor who was quite talkative. Mr. Riley observed that the janitor made use of long words of whose meaning he was ignorant. So the poet determined to have a little fun with him.

All at once Mr. Riley began to sniff the atmosphere critically. "It seems to me, Jim," he said sternly, "that the acoustics in this place are pretty bad."

"Why, boss," said the janitor reproachfully, "col' shure must be mistaken; I don't smell anything."

HANNAH'S COMING IN TO INSPECT THE TOWN

Editor Times: "Tell me not in mournful numbers Building fires is with pleasure fraught. If you ask the man that slumbers, Hannah is a hard road. Now I believe."

I just put the last load of hay in the barn, the other day, and went in the kitchen to eat. Hannah said I looked tired. She gave me a dipperful of buttermilk—as a tonic. Hannah said she thought of 'Poor's Book of Martyrs.' 'I'm of loyal stock, I made up my mind not to flinch, but I made a deep groan when the shears took a little piece off my ear. 'The last straw breaks a little piece off myself—but Hannah does everything under 'The speedy trials act.' I thought of an old song—

Roll up your sleeves, boys! Roll up your sleeves, Jordan is a hard road. Now I believe."

I told Hannah I'd take the early train, next day, carry a basket of eggs to market, and while in town, get my hair cut. It's about three years ago, I've had a cut. I looked like the Lost Ten Tribes in the wilderness. Hannah said she thought of 'Poor's Book of Martyrs.' 'I'm of loyal stock, I made up my mind not to flinch, but I made a deep groan when the shears took a little piece off my ear. 'The last straw breaks a little piece off myself—but Hannah does everything under 'The speedy trials act.' I thought of an old song—

Roll up your sleeves, boys! Roll up your sleeves, Jordan is a hard road. Now I believe."

Governor Harris of Ohio, who passed through on his way back after it had been explained to the inquiring foreigner that Mr. Hemenway was the vice president's political manager that he understood the peculiar view of that statesman.
