SEEKING AN EXPLANATION. SECANTILE FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mdlle. Francesc.. was in the hands of very clever people, people who thoroughly under-ATTORNEY - AT-LAW, stood the way to insure a transatlantic success. The peculiarity of the Americans apice, Winslow's Building, Chathem, N. aterers to our otherwise shrewd cousins cross the water. This process of puffing and praising, of oing before and preparing the way, of stimulating the public curiosity by a hundred and one little personal paragraphs, narrating some adventure, extravagance, or eccentricity of the approaching star, is an art in itself—an art of which the masters are few and far between, and vafued accordingly. Their services are eagerly sought after by those who have a new and great attraction to offer to the American public. The organizers of the present venture had secured the services of one who knew his business to a aicety. So that shortly after his arrival in America Allan might have gleaned enough from the various papers to compile several interesting biographies of his wife. Many of these paragraphs he was able to look at from the comical side and exchange pleasantries with Frances as to her adventurous life; but there were others which contained sly hints and veiled insinuations, which made his blood boil and set him longing for the sanctity and seclusion of private life. The whole affair was most ably managed.

was not until she had sung and had fully justified the appearance of the laudatory paragraphs that the fact of Mille. Francesca being an American was officially announced. This stroke, now that success seemed assured, was a clever one. Enthusiasm rose to a high patriotic pitch. Even the singing born under the wings of the American eagle were going to whip creation as far as music was rned. One paper gravely announced that Francesca would disappoint the British-

The interviewers interviewed Frances whenever they could and the organizers of the tour whenever they chose. Allan was not spared, shining as he did with the reflected 1 ghtso they interviewed Allan. It was no use his declining the honor; in that case they answered every purpose. As Mdlle, Francesca's husband, he was an life he ought to have led should be substituted for the real one. It was but natural he should be depicted as the heir to an immense estate, a leader of fashion, a poet, We are now making Cabinet Photographs at $3 and $5 per member of the ring who had won £80,000 over the last Derby; that he should have wooed and won Francesca in a most romantic way; that he should have killed a couple of rivals in duels, which were described with exquisite accuracy. Had Allan wanted an easy road to fame or notoriety he had nost certainly found it by his marriage with Mdlle. Francesca.

He had sense enough to see he was power ess, but not sense enough to refrain from looking at or troubling himself about the paragraphs and accounts given by interviewers. He read them all, feeling that if ne neglected to do so he must fancy they would be more vexing and in worse taste He read in the papers of every large city they were bound to an elaborate description of his wife, her dresses, her jewels, wha she ate or drank, her mode of life from the hour she rose to the hour she went to rest It stopped there, although one correspon dent ventured to delight his readers with the description of the color, material, and pattern of Mdlle. Francesca's dressing-gown and combing-jacket.

And the travelling about, the whirl from one city to another, the theatres and concertecoms, the living in huge, overgrown hotels-he hated it all. Again and again his thoughts turned to Redhills. He pictured a PROF. SMYTHE'S CLASSES clear, bright, frosty day; the ride, drive, or walk they would have together; the return to dinner; the pleasant evening spent together afterward. Or he turned to London -saw himself in Parliament, working hard to make a name : saw his wife sharing his ambition, aiding him with her advice-a queen of society, perhaps but Mrs. Allan Bourchier, not Mdlle. Francesca. Would the good time come at last? Yet, he would have undone nothing. He was, he told himself, amply repaid for all annoyances by the prize he had won; for as yet not a cloud had come between them. In the short intervals of quiet they could snatch they were as bride and bridegroom still. The American venture, with its trumpet ings, puffings, flowings, and successes, came to an end, and Allan felt his spirits rise as he bade a glad but ungrateful adieu to the shores which had welcomed his wife so heartily, made so much of her, and parted with her so reluctantly. He never wished to visit America again in a like capacity. They had settled, upon their arrival in England, to go at once to Redhills. No one was more entitled to a holiday than Frances; Allan also deserved one. They were to stay at Redhills a week or two, then pay a visit to Mabel at Short!ands, and then a house nust be taken in town, and Frances must prepare for the London opera season. Her friend, the manager, was delighted to ascertain that, so far as was known, the fear he expressed to Allan was not to be realized. Allan, on his side, was disappointed. He quire less butter and will produce lighter had counted on the maternal affection as crust than others.

A fortnight after Digby's interview with Mr. Bouchier Mdlle. Francesca and her husband returned from America. The expedition had been a highly satisfactory one to all except Allan. The anomalous position in which a country gentleman, sighing for the calm pleasures of married life, is placed as the husband of a prima donna, became painfully evident to him during his wife's triumphant tour through the States. The days spent on the return voyage were periods of unbroken delight, but to the remainder of the time he ever afterward looked back with something like a shudder. He had found left him, his love for his children still re comething like a shudder. He had found Manders, for irstance. Yet, since the armuch to complain of in England, but in America matters were ten times worse. How could be meet this girl, sit at the same There private life seemed to have vanished table with her, hear her speaking to him with the affection due to her husband's father, knowing that his crime had rendered by complying with his demands. So the money was sent. Not the two thousand pounds asked for, but fifteen hundred; and as he posted a banker's draft for that amount to his son-in-law, Mr. Bourchier felt that it was but a sop to Cerberus, and that, sooner or later, it would be a question between ruin and exposure. Digby, who felt certain that his money would be forthcoming, returned home in the very best of spirits. He told Josephine nothing as to the failure or the success of his expedition, and she did not condescend t inquire; but the way he laughed to himself, and the general air of self-satisfaction he wore, made her long to hear news from home. She wrote, begging her mother to LEON. DERAVIN, Consular Agent for France. send tidings of her father's health. Mrs. Bourchier replied, and from her letter Josephine was able to gather that there had been a most trying scene between her husband and her father. Mrs. Bourchier wrote that her husband had been completely prostrated by whatever had occurred at the allow Digby to visit Redhills again on any pretence. The poor girl smiled as she read this request. What voice had she in her husband's comings or goings? A few days afterward her husband broke open a letter, and showed her the order for the money. His exultant and triumphant manner as he did so was hateful to her. 'There,' he said, 'you see that I know how to get over para. You couldn't have asked The Peerless Creamer, him the right way. He is very easy to manage, if you know how.' She was surprised and mortified. She felt the money had in some way been wrung from her father, and feared whether her letter had done anything to increase the force brought to bear upon him-whether he had

Josephine by this time had grown t loathe her husband. It seemed to her that every day, every hour, revealed some new meanness of character, hinted at some new vice. From the end of the first year after their marriage until lately she had felt more

On Thursday last Mr. George Smith, who is ferryman between Black Brook and the north side of the Miramichi, left Newcastle in his sail-boat with a quantity of supplies for spool wood operations at Bartibog. Just before dark he was seen in the boat on the north side shore below Gordon's ed that he was all right. Soon after, the boat was seen standing across the river, by which time it was getting dark and no more was seen of it, Smith did not reach home, and up to four o'clock yesterday afternoon nothing further had been seen or heard at Black Brook of either the boat or occupant.

Beginning with the issue of November 6th, 1890, when the ADVANCE entered upon its Seventeenth Year of Publication The publisher made an important change in the terms on which the paper isfurnished to Subscribers. These include

1st. Strict adherence to the system of cash in advance for all subscriptions.

2nd. The reduction of the price of the paper to

One Dollar a Year

It is to be particularly understood that all outstanding subscription accounts due after November 6th, 1890, are to be settled on the old terms, viz., $2 per year, the advertised credit rate.

I have made special arrangements with the

AND THE FAMILY HERALD AND WEEKLY STAR

One Dollar and Sixty Cents a Year!

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE for two reasons.

The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the ADIANCE to those non-paying subscribers.

The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially for it.
