THE PATH OF WEARINESS.

We all pity the victim in the clutches of a sudden and severe onslaught of illness; our hearts are wrung at the thought of his sufferings and we long to help him. All of us who have a spark of humanity in our make-up are sorry for the really ill. But there is another class of people, who are, per haps, even more in need of our sympathy, and who too seldom receive it. They are the people who, although not dangerously ill, are yet far from well. the earliest wall has undoubtedly disappeared, and from century to century much of the structure was repaired or entirely rebuilt. In the course of this work the lines of the wall for long stretches were wholly changed, and the work of different generations is apparent in the various architectural aspects of the structure. The eastern part of the wall, north of Pekin, is supposed to have been the latest to be repaired and rebuilt, and it is now in a very good state of preservation, while for stretches further west it has disappeared entirely.
