THE FARM

Experience Versus Information.

A Short Story with A Good Point For Practical Farmers.

"Hello, their George!" Starting a shrubbery over their in front of the house?"

The farmer thus addressed looked up quickly from the work he was doing in front of the open drive house door.

"Looks a little like it, doesn't it?" he answered good humoredly, as he surveyed for a moment the hedge around the front yard which had been set early in the spring. Then he added, an improvement in his tone:

"Well, it certainly looks better than that old fence," his interviewer admitted as he took the proffered seat, "but it must have cost you quite a speck."

"On the contrary, Bill, the trees only represent the labor of digging them up and setting them out again, I got them in my own woods."

"It is that so, George? Why, I believe there are some in my woods, too, come to think of it; but what are you building I see you are making something."

"Why, Bill, that's a corn marker, it is made of two twelve-foot planks with four shoes and there are heavy strap hinges, you see, so arranged that the two outside runners will fold upward toward the centre when moving or in coming to a tree or other obstacle."

"Where did you get your idea, George?"

"Why, I saw that described in the paper awhile ago; don't you take the same paper, Bill?"

"Yes, I guess so; but I don't get much time to read, I'm busy all the time."

Then his eyes wandered toward the orchard and beyond where the wetland showed smooth and straight as far back as the ridge, which hid the rear fields from view. Then suddenly he turned to George, "Say!" he blurted out, "I wish you'd tell me the secret of your making so much money, George; I know you make two dollars to my one, and I know, too, that you didn't have as much to start with as I had. I think my farm is just as good as yours."

His neighbor was silent a moment before he spoke. "I'll tell you, Bill," he said at last. "The biggest mistake a man ever made was to content himself that he knew about all there is to learn about any particular business. This country of ours is full of hard thinking men, specialists in their line, and when a good idea is hit upon the public is going to get the benefit of it. The idea probably came to them as the result of an experiment, but it comes to us in the form of information, which we can digest with our slippers on."

"It pays to observe the methods of the successful man. The other day I drove 12 miles to interview a successful bean-grower. Along with other things he told me how he gets three crops from one ploughing. His method was this: Have the ground tilled and keep the weeds down all summer and you have a pretty good chance for fall wheat. His beans average him 18 bushels per acre, his fall wheat 20 bushels, and by sowing with clover he has, the third year, a fine crop of hay to plough down, or cut for feed. So I consider that I learned something."

"And a good farm paper contains many a hint useful to the farmer, even the medical and veterinary column can be read with profit and it is surprising how, after a while, choices bits of information will come up in the nick of time, and be of inestimable value to the reader.

"I got the idea of the force pump in the stable from reading the paper. It doesn't cost much more, and it saves me walking sixty feet and back three times a day in cold weather. Then you remember five years ago I went up west to visit my brother. He had some fine Holstein cattle. I remarked that I would give fifty dollars for a certain cow when he told me he could take one hundred and twenty five dollars apiece for the whole herd. This set me thinking, and ended in my getting five calves the following spring at twenty dollars apiece. Since then I have sold more than five hundred dollars' worth of Holstein cattle and have a pretty good herd of my own.

Perhaps one of your Ayrshires is as good a milker, put people want Holsteins, and are willing to pay for them. In fact the man with money is looking for a good, up-to-date article whether it be farm implement or stock."

"I know you've made some pretty good deals, George, put how do you find time to make improvements?" and he looked again back long lines of well kept fence and field and then again to the neat stables and cozy farm house.

George's glance followed his companion's for a moment, then he answered: "The improvements, Bill, the force pump, the warm stables, the clean fields, fences, lanes, the painted buildings, I consider, pay for themselves when you come to think of the time, labor, machinery and stock saved, and it pays to paint buildings they look better and last longer. Then if you have any paint left touch up the farm machinery, they will last longer too."

"You know, Bill, I gave five thousand dollars for this place five years ago, and it was anything but neat when I moved in, yet the other day I was offered eight thousand for it. I consider it pays to improve."

"And I haven't forgotten my wife, she has all the labor-saving appliances, too; the force pump, cistern, washbasin, etc., and I consider it pays. No matter what the cost we've simply got to have them nowadays, Bill, for labor is scarce, and pretty high too."

"And there, Bill," he continued, "comes the man who wants to buy the farm; but I guess I won't be in a hurry to sell it yet; it seems as though I'd just got to enjoy farming."

"I don't blame you for that, George, and I want to thank you for the information and for the hints you have given me; I have decided on two or three improvements already. Goodbye, George."

"Goodbye, Bill, and remember that a few of us can originate, but all of us can imitate a good idea profitably."—J. A. K.

Reasonings On War.

War never settles, the justice of a cause and no more important lesson in history can be taught than this.

The remedy for war barbarism is arbitration. Law for war, reason for battleships, good judgement for slaughter.—Clark.

National provincialism and suspicion of other peoples is not patriotism. "My country is the world; my countrymen are all mankind."—Above all nations is humanity.

Whoever teaches a child to count something human as foreign to him; whoever makes distant lands and alien peoples seem familiar and interesting is helping to overcome race prejudice and promote a true sense of human brotherhood.—Lucas A. Mehl.

In South Africa mutual goodwill, concessions and compromises have accomplished what the war in the Transvaal itself could not have brought about.

If the rulers of these lands had had the sense and the determination to adjust their differences, the same result could have been obtained ten years ago with out a fearful waste of human life.—The Nation.

All future expansion must be of a peaceful kind. Settlements of territory belonging to other countries whatever pretext it may be done, is condemned by public opinion and calculated to arouse hostile throughout the civilized world.

Count Okuma.

In 1795 John Jay was burned effigy in the United States for inserting an arbitration clause in a treaty with Great Britain. Since then there have been nearly 200 arbitration treaties 130 of which have been made within the last seven years; and 135 treaties of obligatory arbitration have been made by nations, in pairs or groups, since 1899.

Never since history began were so many millions of people consciously and voluntarily altering their political, industrial and social conditions. Steam, electricity, the newspaper, the telegraph and telephone are forcing nations to become interdependent.—Mead.

It is because rival armies and navies never aim to bring about judicial decisions that civilization is demanding that they be replaced by an international police. War is doomed, not primarily because it causes misery, death and devastation, but because it never can be relied upon to achieve justice, and because justice can now be achieved in other ways.—Mead.

Although the Empire was the envy of the world, it would pass away the same as majestic Rome had passed away, unless they realized and believed in the Divinity of Christ. If they were to remain strong, they must emulate the deathless imperial of Him, and strive to build up a universal human brotherhood instead of boasting and feasting, they should cultivate the kind heart and the eager hand. Commercialism was not the only thing to look for; life was something far more important. Nations, like individuals, would profit nothing in gaining the world if they lost their souls.—Canon Abbott Limlisy, broker, charged with conspiracy in connection with the obtaining of the Farmers' Bank charter and the case was adjourned for a week. It is now thought that the hearing of the case will not be taken up until the return of Magistrate Denison from England in a few weeks time Mr. Corley states that this magistrate is the only one already familiar with the bank cases.

HYOMEI! Death to Catarrh Germs!

Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me) means death to catarrh germs in a few hours. It is the only guaranteed catarrh cure.

When you use Hyomei, you don't swallow nauseating drug. You simply breathe in the soothing, pleasant and antiseptic Hyomei air through a little pocket inhaler. As this medicated vaporized air passes over the inflamed parts relief comes almost at once and a cure follows.

Your druggist J. Sutton Clark will sell you a complete outfit for $1.00 and what is more he will refund your money if after using Hyomei according to directions, it fails to do all that we claim. Hyomei is guaranteed to cure catarrh, croup, grip, cold in head, asthma, etc. Hyomei can be obtained from all druggists and dealers, or postpaid on receipt of price from the R. T. Booth Co., Ltd. Fort Erie, Ont.

Scientific And Useful.

Animal life existing under a pressure of five and a half tons to the square inch has been found in the Tonga basin, near New Zealand, at a depth of four and three-quarter miles.

An Italian medical journal, states, that while water will not quench the flame of burning petroleum in a limited space, milk accomplishes the object by forming an emulsion with the oil, disturbing its cohesion and thus attenuating the combustible element.

To keep hailstones for winter study, Professor Weinberg of Tomsk, Siberia, encloses them in a little cell with double walls holding ice and copper sulphate. August hailstones so preserved were examined under the microscope in December. Professor Weinberg suggests immersing in oil to prevent agglomeration.

A scientific photographer has succeeded in increasing the sensitiveness of ochrome plates by eight times, so that useful exposures may be made with large aperture lenses in from the tenth to the fiftieth of a second in a good light out of doors. This is effected by bathing the plates in a solution that renders them much more sensitive to red, a bath containing pinaverdol or pinacyanol.

During a recent reception of prominent residents in New York by the college of that city, the earth was a public weight in the laboratory. According to Professor Wetzel, who conducted the experiment, the earth was found to weigh 7,000,000,000,000 tons. Professor Wetzel used a delicately-balanced instrument resting on a pillar sunk into bed-rock. He says this is the first time that the experiment has been made in America.

Paper Motor Tires.—It is surprising that paper, which is used for wagon wheels, has not yet been adopted for motor car tires. An ingenious inventor has now undertaken to replace the strips of rubber used in such tires by compound strips of paper attached to each other by chemical binders under great pressure. These paper tires are claimed to be as strong as steel, as elastic, as india-rubber impervious to water and oil, and silent in action. The additional advantage is claimed for them of picking up small pebbles, and thus becoming automatically sanded so that skidding is impossible.

New Tungsten Filament.—The announcement that it is now possible to produce ductile tungsten in the electric furnace means much for the tungsten lamp which has heretofore been hampered by its filament fragility. Under the present methods of manufacture tungsten particles have been welded into a continuous filament by passing an electric current through a binding material containing the metallic tungsten can be drawn into fine wire, much stronger and more rugged than the sintered filament. It is expected that the incandescent lamp made with these filaments will not only have a longer life but also be even more efficient than the present tungsten lamps.

The Shipping of Canada.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The list of ships registered in Canada at the close of the calendar year 1910 shows a continuation of the conditions noted since the development of iron and steel shipbuilding and the appearance of the tramp steamer put wooden shipbuilding into a decline. There is growth in the number and tonnage of craft built or owned in Canada, but it is practically confined to vessels for inland navigation and fishing and coasting schooners. The sailing craft that figured in the list of thirty years ago or so, when Canada's registered vessels were credited with a tonnage of 1,320,000, are few now when the total is but 75,000 tons. The list, indeed, contains only the names of only fifty two square-rigged sailing vessels, twelve of them being brigantines. There used to be hundreds. Those that are left, ships, barques, brigs, etc., are also old and every year sees their number decline, and not to increase again. This is why Ontario has become the chief vessel owning province. At the close of 1910 the number and tonnage of craft on the register by province was:

Ontario 2,027 227,157

Quebec 1,499 186,945

Nova Scotia 2,045 149,737

British Columbia 1,109 105,414

New Brunswick 951 59,637

P. E. Island 150 10,100

Manitoba 94 5,565

Yukon 16 2,784

Saskatchewan 4 290

Total 7,994 759,919

In 1910, so far as new registration was concerned, Quebec was in the first place as regards tonnage, the year with the Ontario yards having built a dull one. Here is the record:

No. Tons.

Quebec 58 7,012

Nova Scotia 82 5,572

British Columbia 84 5,177

Ontario 46 3,612

Manitoba 5 490

New Brunswick 17 397

Prince Edward Island 2 23

Total 291 22,283

The increase in 1910 over 1908 was 136 vessels, of 32,376 tons, 247 names having been removed from the register in the twelve months. The estimated value of the vessels on the register, at $30 a ton, is $22,527,000, and it is estimated that fully 40,000 men and boys are employed in operating them. Both as to value and a factor in the transportation interest, therefore the shipping of Canada is still of importance. Compared with the other countries the record shows that Canada at the close of the past year stood tenth on the list, coming after Great Britain, Germany, the United States, Norway, France, Russia, Italy, Japan and Sweden in the order named. In reality, however, Canada's rank is lower than is thus shown, as, besides ships engaged in the transportation service by sea or other water route, which only are registered in some countries, Canada's ships includes the names of sloops, horse ferries, dredges, pile drivers, scows, cat boats and like craft down to two or three tons measurement.

The taking of human life in secret shows a sweeping change from the time when a condemned prisoner was followed and pelted by a holiday crowd on his way to execution. Some venture to suggest that we are not yet perfect in this regard, and that there may be further changes in the same direction.

Law Between Nations.

Hamilton Holt in the World's Work, says: "The peace movement is only the process of substituting law for war. Peace follows justice, justice follows law, law follows political organization. The world has already achieved peace through justice, law and political organization in hamlets, towns, cities, provinces, and all nations of the world. What possible reason is there why the fundamental principles which civilization applies to the settlement of differences between individuals cannot now be applied to the settlement of differences between nations?"

The peace problem, then, is nothing but the ways and means of doing between the nations what has already been done within the nations. International law follows private law.

Toronto, June 17.—A rabies outbreak in Toronto is imminent. The provincial health authorities are now administering Pasteur treatment to a number of persons who have been bitten by rabid dogs. For a time the rabies cases have been confined to the northwest of the city. But now they are spreading over the city. During the last two weeks ten rabid dogs have been destroyed.

Granfield was known to be wealthy, but was not supposed to carry a fortune with him. His widow and daughter came here for the body and later began looking over his extensive mining interests in the state. An attorney told the public administrator that he should take charge of the estate and that officer went to the hotel where Granfield had registered, found the trunks and opened them. He was surprised by the discovery of a $50,000 government bond, a $10,000 bill, much other currency and gilt edged railroad bonds, jewelry, etc., valued at fully $500,000.—Ex.

King George Cent Ready Next Week.

Ottawa, June 26—King George's effigy will appear on a Canadian coin next week. The honor of the first appearance will go to the humble cent, which is the only coin for which dies have been received by the mint. The demand for currency is increasing and the government must meet it.

There is a reluctance to keep on making King Edward coins with King George on the throne. The die makers are therefore being urged to produce in steel as soon as possible the designs of the silver tokens.

The designs for the new gold coins have not yet been agreed upon.

The monster White Star line steamship Olympic arrived at New York on her maiden trip. The voyage across was an exceptionally calm one. Her time of passage from Dunt's Rock was 5 days, 16 hours, 42 minutes, her average speed 21.17 knots. The Olympic is the largest steamship in the world. She is 882 1/2 ft. in length overall. She carries a crew of 860 and can accommodate 2,500 passengers.

It was pointed out that no good could be accomplished by anathematizing the decree, as all churches had a right to legislate for their own members, but it was necessary to specify the ways in which the decree might be a menace to the people who were not Roman Catholics and to take action to guard against such cases.

Fly-Swating Time.

(Portland, Aug. 5.)
This is fly-swating time, and Dr. C. F. Hodges, professor of biology at Clark University, Worcester, gives some excellent reasons why people everywhere should make the most of it. He points out that flies carry a large proportion of typhoid fever; that there are 500,000 cases of typhoid fever in the United States every year, costing $350,000,000 in money and 50,000 lives. Epidemics of dysentery are also disseminated by flies, and they bring cholera infantum that is killing babies at the rate of 40,000 a year. Flies bring no end of tuberculosis, carrying it straight from the sputum of tubercular people. Flies carry the eggs of the tapeworm and also of the hookworm; so devastating in the South. Moreover, Prof. Hodges says one female fly killed in June is equivalent to a million killed in August, as they lay eggs by thousands, and their progeny mature rapidly and repeat the egg-laying process until there are millions of flies where only a few weeks before there were but two. He hints that a comparatively harmless fly is really a deadly pest. A fly-swatting campaign should be started and prosecuted systematically and remorselessly. Swat the fly!

Exchange: Chicago takes up arms against the roller towel, and an ordinance abolishing it has been recommended for passage by the council committee on health. "The wonder is," said its sponsor, "that an intelligent public has stood for the public towel as long as it has." One by one the disease spreaders go from the cities. As for Chicago, she will soon face nothing more dangerous to life than her daily crop of thugs and hold-up men who are not as easily legislated out of existence.

The ministry of railways at Berlin has instructed all station masters and train guards to refuse permission for any woman whose hatpin projects dangerously to board a train unless she removes the hatpin. The order is part of a general campaign carried on there against the hatpin. The directors of the Berlin street car and subway lines recently caused an order forbidding the wearing of long hatpins to be conspicuously posted in every car.

ing for the fire when he had consumed little letter than worthless. In his efforts he was materially assisted by the crude but faithful Bunce, his gambling partner, with whom he had shared up and down the Mississippi for years. For two weeks this combat raged, Kirby hovering between life and death, but at the end he emerged triumphant as, ever the gaining table when the odds were as heavily against him, he had emerged from many a hotly contested conflict.

To those who judged Kirby's character from the evil reports which gossip had spread concerning him and to others who, in their righteous ignorance, considered all gamblers legitimate children of the devil his remarkable recovery would have been accepted merely as another proof that the evil one favored him, that the gifts of the gods grind slowly, that justice is blind and that a scoundrel is difficult to kill, together with many similar ancient and reputable maxims which ignorance and self-righteousness love to distribute on every fitting occasion.

Among possessors of the last mentioned attribute Eugene Kirby was regarded as a black sheep who, religiously avoiding the whitewash brush, was deemed beyond redemption, for what man worthy of the name would have acted as had the last of the Kirbys? What if he had been the heritage of an ancient and honorable name, the knowledge that some of the oldest and best blood in all the south flowed in his veins, enough to keep him straight? How assuredly it was. There was absolutely no excuse for his drifting in with a wild and dissolute companionship, becoming a common river gambler and rendering notorious and obnoxious a name which had hitherto been the synonym for honor and integrity.

Kirby had been kept in ignorance of his own heritage until the day when he became conversant with Larkin Bunce marking back the event of that memorable night, informed him, and the invalid, on his part, recognized the occurrence, revealing Colonel Moreau's precipitation of the "honorable" combat.

"The news of Mr. Randall's death is a great shock," he added, gravely moved. "He was my father's friend, Bunce, and when the devil played wits with our affairs did all in his power to be of assistance. But for my great pride I would have accepted his offer of guardian and, under his supervision, I hope, would have been a credit to the name instead of the disgrace I am."

"Now, you quit these here post-mortems," remonstrated Bunce good naturedly, but firmly. "You don't call me a disgrace, do you? And ain't I your old side partner? Bosh, if you play the game straight I guess there's lots of worse ways of making a living than gambling. The sawbones said a lot of rest was coming your way, so just turn over on the other side and forget it."

"No, I can't, Bunce. Don't you realize the position in which I am placed by Mr. Randall's death? I hold a deed to my entire plantation, and I must sign a release without delay. What if it should ever be thought that I entered the game in earnest, with the deliberate intention of robbing Mr. Randall? You know my reputation," he added bitterly, "and how easy it is for a dog to earn a bad name. Bring me pen and ink at once, Larkin, if you please, for I won't have a moment's peace until I sign that paper."

Propped up on the pillows and supported by the still grumbling Bunce, he wrote the following:

I hereby surrender the absolute possession of all the property herein described to the child or children as named hereunder.

"There!" he exclaimed. "Now I feel better, and there is no chance of my old neighbor's children being defrauded out of their inheritance."

"You worry a heap more about them than yourself," observed Bunce, "and there's no call for it. Even if they knew you had got this deed you're reckoned as a dead man by everybody I heard from one of the boys that Moreau had shipped to Mexico, but you know how the river calls, and he'll answer sooner or later. When the line old bucks does return don't be fool enough to give him another chance at your back, for he's a painfully modest cuss and prefers to stay in the rear. By rights he ought to get the same dose he gave you, and I'd do it for the asking."

"You know you wouldn't," said Kirby simply. "The moment I learn that Moreau has returned you may arrange a meeting for us. You can leave the rest to me."

Bunce nodded. "I guess there ain't any one who could get the better of you, Gene, face to face. I ain't much of a hand at the gospel, but I'll scare up a prayer or two for Jack Moreau's soul."

CHAPTER IV.

ALMOST one year elapsed before Colonel Moreau, marking at length to the call of the river, returned to his old haunts in New Orleans. When he did so it was to learn that his supposed victim had entirely recovered from the effects of the "honorable combat" and, in conjunction with his partner, had recaptured his old niche of fame—prominent professional gambler of the Mississippi. Quite aside from all financial reasons—the fact that a more skillful and successful rival was gathering the major spoils of the river—the news of his victim's recovery was seriously disquieting to the honorable colonel, and had he been forewarned he might have indefinitely postponed his acquaintance with the more healthful climate of Mexico. He knew that Kirby was not the type of man to forget or condone a snub in the back or the smirching of whatever life remained of his once fair reputation.

He had, he ever remorsefully suspected, that he would recover (he cheerfully and with such abandon to young Tom, how much did he know? That was the all important question. Kirby, of course, had learned that he stood accused of the late John Randall's suicide, but had he taken the trouble to refute it? Moreau did not think so, and Moreau was right.

Kirby had but vaguely heard of the unjust accusation and, having been long since carehounded to ennui in all its phases, paid little if any attention. Had any member of the Randall family sought him out he would, as a matter of duty, have proved his innocence. But they, believing him dead, had not done so, and he refused to take the initiative, partly because he could not give absolute evidence to the rumor, but to a greater measure because of the demands upon his time. After all, it did not matter. It meant only another tally to the score of Jack Moreau, and all would be wiped out by that gentleman's death, an undertaking upon which he had definitely decided. What stood between them could be eradicated only by the bullet.

Meanwhile the passing year had brought with it many changes for the surviving members of the Randall family. Life is tenacious, and they had persisted in surviving as best they could the shock incident upon their father's suicide. The one small measure of satisfaction in the whole terrible affair was the knowledge that the despoilers of their home had promptly met his death and that in consequence they were at least saved from pauperization, for they were entirely ignorant of Kirby's recovery or the measures he had voluntarily taken for their protection.

To the only girl, Adele, had fallen the brunt of suffering. The General, a child of eight, was too young to fully comprehend his loss, while Tom, a hot-headed youth in his early twenties, occupied all his time with the plantation and devoted all spare moments to nursing his hatred against Kirby's memory. While glorying in the latter's supposed death he deplored that his hand had not effected it. Where grief had paralyzed Adele it had but further aroused the boy's militant and aggressive nature, adding, moreover, a veneer of youthful and bitter cynicism. He abhorred Kirby's memory with an intensity passing the hatred of man and even had he been a stranger to the then prevailing and primitive notions of justice, would, had he known the other lived, have immediately sought him out and killed him. If his father's memory demanded that no resistance should be made to the gambler's claim it likewise demanded that the latter should not live overlong to enjoy his newly acquired property.

More than once, as if uneasy intention sought to prompt the truth, the dog had suggested to his sister the possibility of Kirby having survived. Moreau's sincere attention. Then he would break out in an ungovernable fit of fury and hatred.

"Supposing that scoundrel has lived and intends reaping the reward of his crime?" he would cry. "He gained that deed by the vilest concealment ever practiced. Well, let him make good his claim if he can."

"But who will dispute it?" Adele would fleetingly inquire, pinching at her black dress, while twin patches of scarlet would begin to burn in the dead white of her face. "Do you think we could stoop to ask mercy from a man of that stamp? Whether the deed was gained honestly or not, it does not matter. Father's signature is on the paper, and we must stand by it, Tom. You know that. Any way," she would finish drearily, "what does it matter? What does it matter where we go, what we become? Let this Mr. Kirby—if that be his name—finish the work he began so well."

"I wish you could pick up a little more spirit, Adele," he would return, solemn and resentful in the low breath. "Doesn't the thought of that scoundrel's possible recovery make your blood boil? Don't you ever consider the thought of you and the General and me being rendered almost helpless? Think of what it would mean to leave the only home we have known!"

"I have thought of all that until my brain is sick sick like my heart," she would interpose coherently. "I have long contemplated the possibility, that in the event of my death, you will be left alone and I must learn how to work, Tom. We must provide for the General's schooling, and of course we cannot be a burden on Aunt Devereux one moment longer than is absolutely necessary. Above all, there must be no accession to any opposition to this Mr. Kirby's claim, supposing he still lives."

"Yes, I suppose you're right, Adele," he would reluctantly agree. "We would not doubt your father's memory by resisting the scoundrel's claim."

And had sorrow not dimmed the girl's perception, remained her mind untroubled, she would instantly have suspected her brother's ingenuousness, for, but treated and impulsive, he was not one to be deceived, and the passive course that she had outlined.

As the months passed and nothing was heard of Kirby the possibility of his being alive and ever claiming the plantation was finally abandoned by Adele. But young Randall, although carefully professing to the contrary, still entertained the suspicion that his enemy lived. In time the thought became so insistent that he determined to quietly set on foot a thorough investigation. Visiting in person the town in which Kirby had fought his victorious battle against death, he eventually succeeded in tracing the physician who had attended the wounded gambler, and by him the boy's suspicions were verified beyond the possibility of a doubt. His intuition was vindicated. Kirby lived and, so far as the doctor knew, was at that moment busily engaged with his chosen profession.

Young Randall returned home, carefully concealing from his sister all hint of his mission. The girl had but lately expressed a desire to visit their aunt in New Orleans, for the plantation was pregnant with memories and sorrows that were fast growing unbearable. Taking advantage of this opportune desire and keeping his real purpose in the background, Tom now suggested that the house be temporarily closed and the long contemplated visit paid.

Securing Adele's assent to this and satisfied that Kirby was alive and that justice had yet to be meted out, young Randall, as was the custom in such matters, promptly set about informing his male relatives and friends. Among the latter was Judge Pleydell, a neighbor, whose plantation adjoined on the west that of the Randalls and to whose daughter, Ann, the boy was engaged. Tom's sole surviving relative was an elderly cousin, Aaron Randall, who, ignorant of the details connected with his uncle's death, had for over a year been detained by business interests in the north. To him Tom now urgently wrote, requesting that he come to the home of their mutual aunt in New Orleans, and the following morning the Pleydell and Randall families set out for the same destination. In the Crescent City there resided another gentleman, M. Anatole Veaudry, who, having for years sought an alliance with the Randall family through the medium of Adele, would naturally be expected to cheer heartily in the plans for the annihilation of Cameo Kirby, and to one who were heavy odds, but the secretive gambler in his day had not been greater.

The Encouragement of Thrift.

"There is nothing more admirable than thrift, and there is nothing more pitiable than when the accumulations of thrift are pocketed by the rapacious harpies who prey upon the small investor," says the London, England, Economist. Thrift is both a private and a public virtue, and as a private virtue it gives that feeling of independence and courage which springs from the sense of security, and which are not only virtues in themselves, but are an almost indispensable basis of character. As wages, salaries, and profits grow in all ranks of society there is a natural tendency for the standard of living to rise, luxuries become comforts, and comforts become necessities, and although different views may be held as to the lavish habits of wealthy individuals, there is a general agreement as to the need of thrift among persons of small incomes. It is not only desirable and absolutely necessary that the individual should take care to put aside a reasonable proportion of his income for investment, but that he should shun the maelstrom of improvidence that inevitably leads to the poorhouse, and no better plan of investment could be offered him than that which is provided by the Canadian Government Annuities Act. It is not only absolutely safe, but the benefits to be derived from an investment on the purchase of an Annuity are far more the bountiful than those which may be derived from any other safe investment, the Annuity representing a return to the investor of the portion of his capital as well as the interest thereon in periodical payments calculated upon the number of years he may live, and he gets full benefit of every dollar he invests, not one cent being charged him for any expense. If he lives the number of years from and after 60 which he may be expected to live, he will receive back all that he pays in with compound interest at 4 p. c. If he should survive his expectation, the income will not cease, but will be continued in regular payments every quarter should he live to be too or longer, and this fact will probably concern him more than the possibility that he might die before he had received back all that he had paid in. Starting at 60 to receive an Annuity he would in 14 or 15 years get back all that he had paid in, with the interest thereon. We do not know of any institution which could possibly afford to offer terms so advantageous, and if the people of Canada were able to realize the favorable conditions on which Annuities could be secured from the Government, there would be very few among the thrifty and thoughtful who would not take advantage thereof. If you will write to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, he will furnish you with all the information desired as to cost, etc. Give him your age last, birthday, and state the age at which you desire the Annuity to begin, but do not forget that it cannot begin until you are 55, though you may have it begin at any later age you desire. It will demonstrate to you the tremendous earning power of moneys at compound interest.—EX.

Amazing Things The Future Holds.

Golden Automobiles and the Death Knell of Gold as a Precious Metal. Some of the Changes Predicted. What will the world be like a hundred years hence?

None but a wizard dare raise the curtain and disclose the secrets of the future; and what wizard can do it with so sure a hand as Mr. Thomas Alva Edison, who has rested so many secrets from the vulgar Nature? He alone of all men who live has the necessary courage and gift of foresight, and he has not shrunk from the venture.

Already Mr. Edison tells us the steam engine is emitting its last gasps. A century hence it will be as remote a antiquity as the lumbering coach of Tabor days, which took a week to travel from Yorkshire to London. In the year 2011 such railway trains as survive will be driven at incredible speeds by electricity (which will also be the motive force of all the world's machinery), generated by "hydraulic" wheels.

But the traveller of the future, says a writer in Answers, will largely scorn such earth crawling. He will fly through the air, swifter than any swallow, at a speed of two hundred miles an hour, in colossal machines which will enable him to breakfast in London, transact business in Paris and eat his luncheon in Cheap-side.

The house of the next century will be furnished from basement to attic with steel, at a sixth of the present cost of steel so light that it will be as easy to move a sideboard as it is today to lift a drawing room chair. The baby of the twenty-first century will be rocked in a steel cradle; his father will sit in a steel chair at a steel dining table, and his mother, a boudoir will be sumptuously equipped with steel furnishings, converted by cunning varnishes to the semblance of rosewood, or mahogany, or any other wood her ladyship fancies.

Books of coming century will all be printed leaves of nickel, so light to hold that the reader can enjoy a small library in a single volume. A book two inches thick will contain forty thousand pages, the equivalent of a hundred volumes; six inches in aggregate thickness it would suffice for all the contents of the Encyclopaedia Britannica. And each volume would weigh less than a pound.

Already Mr. Edison can produce a pound weight of these nickel leaves, more flexible than paper and ten times as durable, at a cost of five shillings. In a hundred years' time the cost will probably be reduced to a tenth.

More amazing still, this American wizard reveals the death knell of gold as a precious metal. "Gold," he says, "has even now but a few years to live. The day is near when bars of it will be as common and as cheap as bars of iron or block of steel." We are already on the verge of discovering the secret of transmitting metals, which are all substantially the same in matter, though "combined in different proportions." Before long it will be an easy matter to convert a truck load of iron bars into as many bars of virgin gold.

In the magic days to come there is no reason why our great liners should not be of solid gold from stem to stern; why we should not ride in gilded taxicabs or substitute gold for steel in our drawing suites. Only steel will be more durable, and thus the cheaper in the long run.

See that the girl with the Auburn hair is on every package. Sold and guaranteed by J. Sutton Clark.

In its raptures over its somewhat belated discovery of North in Ontario The Telegram entirely overlooks the fact that it was a Liberal Government that began the building of the people's railway into the north country. It is quite certain that if that Government had remained in power the road would have a terminus on Hudson Bay to day.

FRIDAY, JUNE 30, 1911

The editor last week took a short trip to Nices Bay and vicinity and while there saw one of the worst samples of the wasteful publicans that perhaps has taken place in the province. At Lepreau Basin a retaining wall to cost about $3,000 or more is being built to save a small part of a farm a high valuation for which would be $1,000 for the whole, and to accommodate two families, all which could just as well have been done by a good coat of rip-rap and some brush or grass seed, and the road shifted round back of the house 40 or 50 yards, to cost from 300 to 500 dollars. And if the money was in hand it could be used to great advantage on the road to Lepreau station which is the only outlet for a large and prosperous section of the country, and which in places is in such a scandalous condition as to be a disgrace to a back wood settlement.

We know not and care little who is the nigger in the woodpile who in such an out-of-way place has such influence to bring about such a waste of public money but evidently he, she, or it can handle both federal and provincial as this is the second sample in the same small district; sometime ago plans were made and tenders called for to build a breakwater out at the point of Maces Bay which is much needed and would have been a great accommodation to all the fishermen of a large district, as he point juts out into the midst of the best fishing ground and would make a harbor of refuge for all the surrounding places and a home port for quite a number of boats and could be built at a small expense.

But in some way the same above nigger had influence enough to have it stopped and a wharf (or as the people call it a Monument) in Lepreau Basin which has cost quite a sum and is still unfinished and practically is of no general use and has not been used since its construction on, in the smallest manner at long intervals as the harbor is very much out of the way and can only be entered at high water or when nearly so.

The Foolish Blinders.

If only our horse owners would try the experiment of taking them off! So far as the draft horse is concerned there is no valid reason for the blinders or the blinkers. Why not all fire companies use open bridles? Why do we discard the blinker in the case of our saddle horses? The head makes a finer appearance, in nearly every case where all unnecessary harness is removed. Even the most nervous animal, carefully handled at the start, will soon become accustomed to the open bridle and drive better with it than with blinders. This is not theory. We know from many experiments with highstrung and easily excited horses. And if an open bridle then no flapping blinkers continually rapping the eye, an evil all too common in both city and country.

The only reason we have ever heard advanced for the blinders that has seemed to have weight is the one that is based upon the fact that some horses will learn to watch the whip and become lazy such horses are naturally lazy and may have to be urged a little more. But there is not enough in this objection to overmatch the good of giving the horse the use of his eyes as nature designed. And then the real horse lover is fond of the closer intimacy established between him and his horse by the fact that the horse can see him all the time as well as hear his voice. The chances are that if you love your horse you will do it. If you think of him only as a machine you probably won't. If you do it take great pains at the start in getting him used to the new experience.—L.H.R.

War Aeroplanes.

Russia Has Decided to buy a Big Fleet. An English representative of the Aeroplanes Purchasing Committee of the Russian Government which has decided to spend $4,500,000 without any delay upon military airman'ship, visited the Aero Exhibition at Olympia, London, accompanied by two of the Russian Government air men. Russia has decided to buy a fleet of 300 war aeroplanes, all the machines to be delivered before the end of the summer; and the Russian agent spent a whole day discussing British aeroplanes with the English makers. Already the Russian Government has bought eight British built biplanes, five Farman biplanes, and forty Bleriot monoplanes.

Experts from the British War Office have been examining machines closely since the show opened. "We have now," explained M. Morber, Chereau, manager for M. Bleriot, "no fewer than 80 war aeroplanes to supply the order of the French military authorities. So great is the demand now for war aeroplanes for various countries that M. Bleriot cannot deliver any more two-seated military machines for reconnoitering work for the next five months."

Lightning Twice Hits Trolley Car; 11 Persons Aboard.

Motor on Sticks to Post Although Flame Is Shooting All Around Him.

Atlantic City, N. J., June 13.—Nine passengers, three of them women, fought for their lives through flames to-night to reach the street, when a trolley car of the Atlantic avenue line was hit by two different bolts of lightning as the car sped through Margate City. The bravery of Charles Gibbs, the motorman, who stuck to his post until he brought the car to a standstill, although the flames were playing all about him, prevented a tragedy. Clarke Oslar, the conductor, was the only person aboard seriously injured. He is recovering in the city hospital.

The first bolt struck the motor box on the rear platform, setting fire to the floor in the noise made by the heavy down-pour and the clap of thunder, the motorman did not know of the trouble until passengers told him the back of the car was ablaze.

Then he looked for his partner, but he was missing. Gibbs reversed his motor and started back up the track. The trolley had gained considerable headway when a second bolt tore through the roof, stanning the passengers, throwing all to the floor.

Dazed, but still game, Gibbs, who is a University of Pennsylvania student, crawled to his feet. The car was filled with smoke and burning on all four sides. He managed to stop it and with the aid of A. P. Hoopes, of Westchester, a passenger, he fought his way to the side of the other passengers.

Some of them recovered and started to fight madly to gain the street. The three women were first removed and the others followed. All quickly revived in the rain. They were taken to the home of J. W. Ingersoll at Margate City.

An alarm was sent to the Ventnor Fire Department, and a search started for the missing conductor. When no trace was found after a five minute inspection of the track it was believed that he was still in the burning car. Gibbs and several passengers had started back into the blaze when the conductor was discovered a square way, lying on the inside of the track. The first bolt had knocked him through the door to the ground.

Unconscious and severely burned, Oslar was rushed to the hospital here in the automobile of Victor Fisher, a broker, who was returning home from the Ventnor Yacht Club.

Aside from bruises and shock, the passengers were uninjured. They refused to give their names. The car was burned to the trucks.

Fruit Beverages

Raisin Wine.—Chop fine two pounds of seeded raisins; add one lemon, a pound of white sugar, and about two gallons of boiling water. Pour into a stone jar and stir daily for six or eight days. Strain, bottle, and put in a cool place for ten days or so, when the wine will be ready for use.

Fruit Punch.—One and one-half dozen lemons, one dozen oranges, juice from one quart canned raspberries, eight cups granulated sugar, ten quarts of water, one dozen bananas. Press the juice from lemons and oranges. Add the sugar and berry juice. Let stand until ready to use, then add the water and bananas, which must be sliced. A few strawberries may be added, or cherries if one so desires.

Speed of a Rhinoceros.

Chased a Hunting Party and Got Away in Safety.

Out he burst at last with a crashing of brush and timber, reaching the open just in front of me; stopped for a moment to sniff the breeze, then advanced at a quick trot toward my pony, writes Dora Vandeleur in the Empire Review.

Being mounted and inexperienced, I felt a false sense of security; he lumbered toward us with surprising swiftness, yet it seemed difficult to believe this uncouth animal bent on mischief that I simply sat still and watched it approach.

The pony stood this inaction as long as its nerves allowed, which I should judge was until the creature had gone within eight or ten yards; then wheeled with a most disconcerting suddenness, and set off like the wind across the level.

Fast though the pony flew (and having caught his panic, I was urging him to do his utmost), to my horror and astonishment the rhino not only had no difficulty in keeping up, but gained.

I heard a shot, and then another, and looked back over my shoulder hopefully; the creature was coming on faster than before! A third shot came from somewhere on my right, and I felt the pony slacken his pace; evidently the last bullet had found billet somewhere in the rhino's thick hide, for to my surprise and relief he had wheeled around sharply, and set off at a clumsy gallop across the plain at right angles to his former direction.

The whole party followed in hot pursuit, even the Irish terrier puppy which accompanied us on all our expeditions rushed as hard as he could, tumbling head over heels upon the tussocks of coarse grass, and emitting shrill yaps of defiance.

We could not get near enough to get another shot at the rhino; it was amazing that such a great unyielding brute could travel at the pace he did, far quicker than a horse's gallop. Finally we had to give up our chase, much to our disappointment, for my sister and I had been jangling for a rhinoceros horn to take home as a trophy ever since we started on our month's trip up country.

Lucky Eskimos.

The Eskimos have no physicians, indeed, have no name for drugs or doctors. Nature here acts the good Samaritan; and shuts the door against all disease germs and blends in their food iodine, the most powerful and least harmful of all antiseptics. The use of remedies either inside or out is unknown. Wounds heal up at once without mattering. All tumors, warts and cancers are unknown.

A patriotic London gad, pretty well known to members of the Scottish societies in the metropolis, one occasion after having for some time entertained a number of English friends to a glowing account of the beauties of Scotland and its great superiority over England, was asked somewhat impatiently but very pertinently why he did not stay there. He was not a bit put out. "A very natural question," he acknowledged. "It was like this, ye see. In Scotland everybody was as clever as myself, and I could make nothing o't. But here," he added complacently, "I'm gettin' on verra weel."

given a pretty legend told her in Guana-jay, a town not far from Havana. "Opposite its principal cafe is the plaza, unusually attractive, it seemed to me; in its little plots of soil the roses bloom all the year round. Adjoining the cafe building is the church, its altars are curious, and I have since heard, regarding one of the trees of the small yard about it, the best legend told me with reference to any locality in Cuba. In the shade of that tree one must speak the truth.

"In the early years, the story goes, when Indian chiefs were still powerful enough to make it worth the Spaniards' while to placate them the daughter of a cacique of a Guana-jay tribe was robbed of a wonderful necklace of pearls. So great was her father's wrath that it became necessary to punish someone for the theft, and as the culprit could not be identified, they pitched upon a young man who, by some unhappy circumstance, might safely be charged with the crime.

"The young man was condemned to die, though he denied his up to the very moment of execution. A priest, mounted on a mule, accompanied him to the spot where the church now stands, where death was to be inflicted.

"The victim, still protesting that he had stolen no pearls, asked for ten minutes' final grace, and it was granted.

"The firing squad stood close at hand, and especially near was the officer in charge. The priest, still mounted on his mule, kept close by the prisoner; and he ate apples ripened more than eighteen hundred years ago, bread made from wheat grown before the Children of Israel passed through the Red Sea, and spread with butter which was made when Elizabeth was Queen; and I washed upon the repast with wine that was old hundreds of years before Shakespeare was born." This seems at first blush and incredible story; but it appears that the apples were taken from an earthen jar taken from the ruins of Pompeii; the wheat was taken from a chamber in one of the Pyramids; the butter from a stone shelf in an old well in Scotland, where for several centuries it had lain in a earthen crock in icy water; while the wine was recovered from an iron vault in the city of Corinth.

Of Daily Occurrence.

"Johnnie" broke the school record! announced Mr. Halloran one morning triumphantly to Mrs. Halloran. "Well, now, you can tend to that job yourself, Mike Halloran!" returned his spouse, with her arms akimbo. "I've mended the front gate and the back gate, three chairs and a table that he's broke, all wid my own hands but whatever he's broke at school you can look after, or pay for having it done, and save the money on your pipe, an' that's me last word!"

A Mad Camel.

A Traveller's Experience in the Dead Sea Region.

In fact or in imagination, every one has experienced the terror that follows the cry, "Mad dog!" Other animals, when deranged, may be even more formidable than the dog, Robert Hichens, describing a trip "from Jerichoto Bethlehem," draws a striking picture of the Dead Sea region-lying as if under a hand lifted in imprecation; but in the midst of this lifelessness, presently in the distance appeared a moving object.

It was a camel, quite alone, going slowly toward the Dead Sea, as if it had been driven, like the scapegoat in the wilderness bearing a burden of evil. As I watched it, it turned its head toward us, changed its direction, quickened its pace and began to follow us.

At the same moment my Arab coachman made a furious assault with the whip on his three horses, which broke in to a gallop. My companion, a Syrian, spoke to him in Arabic, received a reply, and looked very grave.

"What is the matter?" I asked.

He told me that the camel which was following us was mad, and that our coachman had been warned of its presence in the wilderness by the Belouin at the Dead Sea.

As we galloped on, swaying from side to side, and often looking back at the beast, which steadily, although at a considerable distance, came after us, my friend regretted that we were not armed, and said that if we were overtaken we should be in serious difficulty. It was then I looked for our Bedouin guard and did not find him. Fortunately, his absence was not of consequence to us, for the maniac in our tracks was evidently too tired to come up with us, and we reached the Jordan in safety.

I have known an instance when one followed an acquaintance of mine, who was mounted on a fine Arab horse, and overtook him after a pursuit that lasted more than three hours. Luckily the man was armed with a gun, and when he was forced to turn to bay, shot the camel.

To the Editor of Greetings,

Dear Sir,
We, The International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, Local Union No. 47 wish to correct the statement which appeared in your paper last week in regard to the strike situation. In speaking of the Union men the statement reads (It is rumored they now ask for the foreman's, Octave Plude's dismissal). This is incorrect, the members of the Union made no such demand. Our bill is in Mr. Murphy's hands, he knows exactly what we want, we would respectfully ask the public to pay no attention to the various rumors going about. The issues are clearly defined and reports emanating from "irresponsible parties" should not be allowed to warp the judgment of well meaning people, who desire peace in the community.
Respectfully Yours,
(Per Recording Secretary),
International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, Local Union No. 47.

Back to Find He Has 16 Grandsons.

Harlem Man, Who Had Ill-Luck In Search for Gold, Returns After Eleven Years' Absence.
(New York Herald.)

Eleven years ago Thomas Cervantes of No. 3,305 Third avenue, went to the Klondyke, and no word of him was received by his family in all those years. Now he is back in his old home in Bronx and is the most surprised man north of the Harlem River. His sons, too, are surprised. They thought their father dead. Mr. Cervantes found himself the grandfather of sixteen boys.

At the time of the first discovery of gold in the Klondyke he was proprietor of a roller skating rink in Harlem. When news came that Nome was full of precious metals he went to Seattle. There he "grabbed staked" a man just from Nome, who contracted to share with him any gold he found. Mr. Cervantes was to buy supplies and go to any mine discovered.

In a few months the summons came. Mr. Cervantes went North. He charges that his partner, after taking 6,000 dollars from the mine, sold it for 12,000 and disappeared.

After a vain search, Mr. Cervantes returned to Harlem, raised more money and declared he would not return again until he had found his partner or made a fortune himself. But he could not find the man. Finally Mr. Cervantes spent all his money and was unable to work or sell a mine, he had obtained at Nome.

Then he went to California to look for his partner, but did not find him. Unable to develop the mine at Nome, he went into business in Tacoma after three years hard work in a hotel enterprise in San Francisco.

"I suppose I never would have written home, I was so despondent; if I had not become ill and was getting more helpless every day," said Mr. Cervantes last night. "I pocketed my pride and wrote a letter. My noble sons responded instantly and forwarded money for my return.

"Imagine my surprise and joy on finding that sixteen grandsons had been born to my three sons and three daughters most happily married. They have put me into a store and I am a happy man. Now that I am in a house full of children, having the time of my life, I can afford to smile, thinking of far away Nome, where whiskey was $6 a quart and was not whiskey either, soap beef $1.50 a pound, lard $100 a thousand, coal $100 a ton, beef and beans $1 a plate, and beer $1.25 a bottle.

The Duke Inspected Canadian Contingent.

His Royal Highness Complimented Col. McLean On Troops Appearance.
London, June 19. The Duke of Connaught inspected the Coronation contingent at Chelsea today. The Duke praised the Canadians highly to Col. McLean, and said he was very much pleased with their appearance and the large number of the contingent. It also added to the pleasure it afforded him going to Canada and that he hoped to meet the officers on his arrival. The Duke shook hands with each officer, and inspected the Winnipeg Rifles, detachment of which he is Honorary Colonel.

Will Send Cannon To Mint.

The French Government has just decided to send several old cannon to the mint to be turned into money. Several old fortresses are being dismantled and these bronze cannon are no longer necessary, so it has been thought better to convert them into coins than to throw them on the scrap heap.

Building permits to the value of $3,700,000 were issued in Calgary last month. A very few ago all the buildings in Calgary were not worth that much money.

The census just taken shows the Australian Commonwealth to have 4,449,495 population.

LOCALS

The Nestorian Society of the High School will hold an entertainment tonight as the closing of the examination exercises of the school term.

During the past few days the herring fishing has very much improved on the shore, some of the weirs doing a large business getting as high as 25 to 35 hogheads a tide.

The Selmon fishing off the coast during last week was quite good on Friday night the Dipper Harlor and Maces Bay boats doing especially well one boat getting over 30 fish.

Word was received from Yarmouth N. S. of the serious illness of Edwin Hubbard at last place from an attack of Cerebral Meningitis, his mother left on Monday, and all hope for word of his recovery.

To-morrow, Dominion Day will be celebrated here in real good style, the Baseball Association have furnished a programme for the day that should draw a large crowd, and we hope to see a large number of our neighbors present to help celebrate.

The first game of ball for the season was played here last Saturday between the St. Andrews and the home team, and resulted in a victory for the home team. The imported battery from Bowdin College arrived here on Tuesday of this week, and will inaugurate their season on Dominion day by playing against the St. Stephen team.

The St. George Cornet Band excursion to Calais and St. Stephen on Coronation day calling at Eastport and St. Andrews was largely attended and a very enjoyable trip the day being all that could be wished. Slightly over 200 people attended and about $40 was cleared, the expense of the boat being quite heavy some what reduced the profit.

The Bank of New Brunswick which during the past few years has changed from its old conservative policy of having no branches outside of occupying outside districts is still farther spreading by entering the Montreal field where they have secured premises and will open a branch in that city in the near future. As yet a manager has not been appointed.

The Pandora schooner and load of scrap iron that ran ashore on Maces Bay ledge some time ago was purchased by H. J. Garson, junk dealer of St. John who for the past few weeks has been trying to recover the iron, for which he has tried several plans, having had clam shell dredge there, at considerable expense but which could not do anything at all. The deck load amounting to about 40 tons was easily got off and taken to St. John, but to recover that in the hold the old fashioned method of hands has to be resorted to, and as the vessel has fallen off 1700 a hole in the ledges which barely leaves her exposed at the lowest tides, this has proved very slow and expensive work.

The Baseball Association are having a Guarantee Subscription list circulated among the merchants and citizens, for the expense incurred by the engagement of a battery for the team during the season. It is not the intention of the association to go in for Professional ball, but to have a Coach and battery, to help the team and show them some of the finer points of the game and also to give the juniors some instruction.

The boys are in hopes to put up some of the best games ever seen in the town, during the season; and should they receive the support of the townspeople in the way of attendance, it is likely that those signing the guarantee fund will be called on for but a small amount.

The management have gone to considerable expense in fitting up the grounds and erecting a Grand Stand; they have also got in touch with local teams of St. John and other places. There will be a series of games with the Camp Utopia boys during the summer, which are expected to be very interesting, as the camp boys are supposed to have a fine team this season.

Exchange: Now that a Chicago society woman has set the fashion, anklets for bathers will be the correct thing at summer resorts this year. It is thought that not all the anklets need be of gold, as were those of the society woman, and filigree silver has been adopted by an Atlantic City dealer, who has provided a varieties calculated to satisfy bathers who simply must be in style.

Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, the American novelist says that she thinks the government of England will be in control of women in fifty years. She says that women have more leisure than ever before, a consequence partly of smaller families, and that they are giving their time to developing their brains. As for brains, the average woman has less than the average man. Mrs. Atherton admits, and the average man hasn't enough to boast about.

Delicious Doughnuts

Good doughnuts are good food. Made from the right flour they are not only a delicious treat but the combination of right flour with fat is distinctly nourishing. You see I put special emphasis on right flour. For it is very important. It means the difference between light, flaky, crumbly doughnuts that melt in your mouth and are easy to digest, and tough, rubbery greasy wads of dough, heavy, soggy, indigestible. Try making doughnuts from

"Royal Household" Flour

Notice how rich, soft, and flaky they are. And the reason is that "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" being richer in high quality gluten than ordinary flour resists the absorption of too much fat in cooking. It doesn't get rubbery, makes a lighter dough, absorbs just enough of the fat for nourishment, but not enough for indigestion. The absolute uniformity of "Royal Household" enables you to get the same splendid results every time both in Bread and Pastry.

Try "Royal Household". Find out for yourself. All grocers sell it or can get it on short notice.

A Handy Man.

The original settlers of southern Texas devoted themselves to cattle-raising, and having no roads, had little or no use for carriages. Consequently when a complete set of new harness came to land the consignee had some difficulty in arriving at the why and wherefore of it. This is the story of a harness shop and the man who worked there as long as they could use him, and had then become assistant to the plumber, but as they had run out of pipe for the last few days he had been painting signs for the grocery store. He was through with that, and had come over to see if I had anything he could do.

"I told him I thought not; I had no signs to paint, what I wanted most just then was someone to shoe my team. The ranches never shod their horses, but mine were not regular ranch horses; and I was driving them a great deal, and they had always worn shoes, their feet had got into bad shape.

"Smith said he had been working as a blacksmith in a lumber-camp all the winter. If I would lend him money to get some tools he would keep my team shod until he had paid for the outfit. This I did, and he soon had regular work.

"The next I heard of him he was putting in a gasoline engine in a boat; and when my canary was run over by one of the wagons Smith promptly mended it.

"So it went on until the town put up a shop for him. There seemed to be nothing he couldn't do. One day he came to me with the request to use our office for a Sunday school, which I of course permitted. The next Sunday I heard the sound of a violin. I went over to the office, Smith was playing hymns on his violin and leading the singing.

"The new hotel was finished by this time. A traveller had been there over Sunday. On Monday morning he was bewailing the fact that he needed a shave and that there was no barber within 25 miles. With a great deal of dignity the hotel clerk informed him that he was mistaken; there was a barber in the town and he pointed out Smith's shop.

"The traveller went to Smith, who was working at his forge. "I beg pardon, but will you tell me where to find the barber?" he asked. "That your man," said Smith, "but you will have to wait a while. I am just finishing a ploughshare!"

Local opinions are varied with regard to the Farmers Bank. One authority claims that the double liability can be evaded because the bank had no legal existence. Another says that if it had no legal existence as a bank it would be a partnership with unlimited liability. Still another says that if it had no legal existence the shareholders would be criminally liable for carrying on an illegal banking business.

Had Him Cornered.

(Richmond Times.) In a sparsely settled region of West Virginia an automobilist was halted before a local magistrate upon the complaint of a constable. The magistrate, a good-natured man, was not, however, certain that the Washingtonian's car had been driven too fast, and the owner stoutly insisted that he had been progressing at the rate of only six miles an hour. "Why, your honour," he said, "my engine was out of order, and I was going very slowly because I was afraid it would break down completely. I give you my word, sir, you could have walked as fast as I was running."

"Well," said the magistrate, after due reflection, "you don't appear to have been exceeding the speed limit, but at the same time you must have been guilty of something, or you wouldn't be here. I fine you ten dollars for loitering."

Distressing Headaches.

Headaches are largely the result of disordered kidneys. Mrs. Hall, 84 Flora St., St. Thomas, Ont., says: "I suffered for years with headaches of a most distressing nature. They would come on me suddenly, and would last for days at a time. These were usually accompanied by spells of dizziness that would leave me unable to attend to any house duties. My back was weak and I suffered much suffering at night. I had doctored for years, but all to no avail. Nothing benefited me and my condition was gradually becoming worse. I learned of Booth's Kidney Pills. One box gave me a complete and lasting cure. I have not had a headache or dizzy spell since and I feel like a new person."

Booth's Kidney Pills are sold by all druggists 50c. a box, under a guarantee to refund your money if they fail to relieve any disease having its origin in the kidneys or bladder. Postpaid from the R. T. Booth Co., Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont. Sold and guaranteed by J. Sutton Clark.

Too Many Beauties.

(Boston Advertiser.) A painful question forces itself upon the attention after going to a party where many triumphs of the dressmaker's art are gathered together. This company of gay gowns almost suggests a company of tropical birds, of macaws and parrots, in the zoological gardens. Yet take any single well-dressed woman alone, who is moderately nice looking, and she is quite charming.

It is the number of beauties that destroys the pleasing effect: the riot of colors that do not blend; the multitude of hats with no affinity in design or shape. A fascination exists in uniformity which lends an assembly of men a dignity which an assembly of women can never attain.

The feminine devotion to individuality is proved by the fact that each woman prefers to suit herself, not her surroundings. She wishes to be distinctive rather than harmonious. And it is this ambition inspiring classes, including those whose desires for personal adornment are trammelled by inadequate means and an uncultivated taste, that causes the stranger wandering in our streets and public places to marvel and grieve over the startling forms in which the loveliness of woman appears.
