PREVENTING MEN LEAVING CANADA

Immigration Officials Have Authority to Hold Up All Males From 18 to 45 Years of age

Under an order-in-council, effective from coast to coast, it is illegal, under punishment of heavy penalties, for any male person within the ages of eighteen and forty-five, inclusive, ordinarily resident in Canada, to leave or attempt to leave the country for any purpose without the written permission of a Canadian immigration inspector or other person authorized to grant such permission, who must be fully satisfied, by sworn declaration, that the intended departure is not with the object of avoiding liability to be called upon to render military or other service, "which might conduct towards the success of his majesty and his allies in the present prevailing war."

Violation of the regulation is punishable by a fine not exceeding $2,500 or imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both fine and imprisonment. The order applies to every male person within the ages specified, save members of military or naval forces on duty, or members of crews of boats, trains, ferries, street cars, etc., plying between points within and without Canada, when in the performance of their duties as members of such crews.

It is of greatest importance for anyone desiring to temporarily absent himself from Canada for a legitimate purpose to familiarize himself with the regulations, which are explained in the official announcement. To obtain a permit it is necessary to make application on a printed form obtainable from any postmaster or railway ticket agent. The forms must be filled out in duplicate. Formal permission to leave the country, if granted by the immigration inspector, is inscribed on the duplicate, which is then retained by the applicant and must be kept on his person for production at the demand of any immigration official.

The information called for on the application schedules is:

"Name and address, date of birth, nationality and length of residence at present address."

"Names and addresses of four persons for reference as to identification."

"Destination and reasons for desiring to leave Canada; expected length of absence."

"Height, weight, color of eyes and hair; occupation."

Each schedule must have attached thereto a photograph that is a good likeness of the applicant. The declarations must be signed by the applicant and sworn to by him before a notary public, justice of the peace or commissioner.

Applications must be signed by a sponsor, who must be a bank manager, chief of police, clergyman or dominion government official, who must state how long he has known the applicant, that he recognizes the photograph as a good likeness, and that he believes the statements in the information are correct.

CENTREVILLE NEWS

A unique entertainment was given in the Baptist Vestry Friday evening by the members of the organized class "Count on Us." Parents of the children were invited, also the other teachers and some other friends. The children under the leadership of their teacher, Mrs. F. D. Tweedie, provided an excellent program and after speeches by several of the visitors and parents a time was profitably spent socially. The children passed round home-made candy. The collection amounted to about $7 and is to be used for class purposes.

Rain and cold weather, then more rain and cold. Frost Saturday and Sunday nights. Farmers who planted potatoes early find the seed rotting in the ground which will necessitate replanting. This will be a large expense with seed potatoes as high as $8 per barrel.

HARTLAND BOY TWICE WOUNDED

Hopes He May Not Have to Go Back to the Trenches

Edward Downey, son of Mrs. L. M. Stephenson of Hartland, has had his fill of war, "good and plenty," as witnesses the following plaintiff letter dated in England on May 9:

Dear Mother: Just a few lines to let you know that I am getting on well and hope I will soon be out of hospital again.

The weather is very nice now and that is something we haven't had here for some time.

Well, I am away from the shells once more and I hope I will stay out of France until this war is over for I have had quite enough of it—just a little over a year, and I have been wounded twice.

I have seen some very heavy shell-fire and some very hard times, but I think it will come to a close this summer. If it don't I can't see how any one will ever stand another winter of it out here.

I don't know of much to write about as I haven't been here long enough to see the place. I have been out town this afternoon, but did not feel much like going very far as I am not very strong yet.

I haven't had a letter from Loran for some time so don't know how he is making out.

Herb Bradley was wounded on April 9.

I suppose you saw the account of the scrap at Vimy Ridge as I know that the 26th was mentioned in the papers.

Well, this is all for this time so I will close. Good bye from your loving son,

Edward Downey,

Sad Death of Summerfield Lady

News which came as a great shock to all the people of Summerfield last week was that which announced the sudden and unexpected death of Mrs. Carey Gee at Augusta, Me. She was only 27 years of age and was always thought of as the embodiment of health and activity. It was learned that, with little anxiety as to the result, she was seeking relief from a slight trouble in a surgical operation at the hospital in Augusta. Everything in connection with the operation, it is said, was developing normally, when to the horror of all she suffered a collapse from which medical skill could not rally her.

The body was brought to Summerfield on Tuesday, the funeral being held from the residence of James Hamilton. Service was conducted in the Methodist church by the Rev. G. A. Ross, interment being made in the local burying ground.

General and deep sympathy is felt for the bereaved relatives of the young woman thus so suddenly taken off. There is her young husband who is left with two little children, her aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Smith, four sisters: Mrs. Herbert Antworth, Mrs. G. A. Giberson, Mrs. James Hamilton and Mrs. Robert Hamilton, also Allan Smith, a brother, who lives at Mars Hill.

The very large attendance at the funeral revealed how deeply the people all felt for their neighbors in their sudden affliction.

The late Mrs. Gee was a young woman greatly beloved by those who knew her best, and was respected by all.

Be Ready For Emergencies.

The best way is to always keep a bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the house ready for emergencies. Then when croup, or colds come suddenly they can be promptly cured before they have time to reach an acute and dangerous stage. To meet this requirement we have to put the syrup up in family size bottle which contain nearly three times as much as the 25-cent bottle and sell at 60 cents.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Clark of Limestone announce the engagement of their daughter Miss Adeline Estella to Frederick William Pirie of Grand Falls. THE GREY FOX OF THE SHAGLANE

How a crafty night hunter fooled a trapper and his dog.

By Archie P. McKinnane

Dawn had broken silently over the big forest of pine and tamarack. Low down in the sky drifted slate-colored snow clouds. Almost the spear points of the slender trees seemed to pierce them as they rolled sullenly westward.

Through the forest reigned a solitude known. The voices of the forest food-seekers had died with the night, the voices of the day were yet unborn. The light broadened. The clouds lifted. A few feet of falling snow drifted down. Throughout the forest passed a long sigh of awakening. Far somewhere a squirrel chattered, a chickadee tittered. The trees shivered and the grey lake which had grown up out of the shadows twisted its face into a million white-edged wrinkles.

So dawned day in the kingdom of wild things.

Far back where sky and forest met, a red line grew and spread until the eastern horizon was shot with flames of red and amethyst. A drab lump on a drab log awoke and with a whirr of wings sailed off above the spear-tipped trees; then a great fox whose silver grey coat seemed a part of the silver grey moss on the log against which she had crouched, rose slowly up and pointed a sharp nose westward.

All night the silver-grey had hunted for just such juicy meal as the grouse who had so ignominiously taken flight down along the shooting arrows of dawn, and always had her quarry sprung up and away before she could make the spring and the cutting slash with her needle fangs.

Now, hungry and angry, she stood in the cold dawn and sniffed the breeze in little panting breaths. There was that in the breeze which she mistrusted, a smell which warned her of danger.

The clouds dropped lower and the snowflakes fell thickly upon the frost-killed sward between the bramble clumps. The lake sang sullenly and lashed itself into long white-capped waves as the strengthening winds swept its bosom.

A lone duck, out in its centre, arose and drifted northward. Far back along its shore a whisky-jack barked hoarsely.

With voiceless whine the big fox flunk back against her log. She was a beautiful animal and wore a glistening coat worth thousands of dollars. It was silky and shot with beautiful light grey guard-hairs that depended to a darker grey at the ends. Her tail was long and bushy and almost black in color.

As she crouched now with back bristled and upper lip drawn magnificently back from sharp teeth, she looked a very formidable animal indeed. Through the gloom of the thicket her eyes gleamed like pale green points of light. On the far side of the brambles there came the sound of a crackling twig and the fox crouched and melted silently away in the forest.

Swiftly and soundlessly she sped away until she reached a tiny thicket of birch. Here she tarried for a moment, sharp ears pointed forward, keen nose sniffing the breeze. Then she turned and leaped through the thicket towards the lake.

Down along the shore, keeping well within the protection of the timber, she picked her way, pausing now and again to lift her head and sniff the breeze. Coming to where a noisy brook emptied into the lake, she lingered for a moment to sniff suspiciously a stake, driven into the ground. To the stake was attached a slender chain with a steel trap and beneath the trap was the severed head of a chicken. But the fox did not pause to further investigate. That she would do later. Daytime was to her a time of danger. She wished for but one thing now and that was her den deep beneath the roots of the old elm on the creek bank.

So she passed on, swiftly, noiselessly, making many strange dodging motions as a twig ahead or behind her cracked as the winter sun fairies threw a splash of light down through the trees on her pathway.

Once she paused to peer beneath the elm and to gaze in the same opposite direction as in the forest in which she stood. She had seen a shadow after a moment's pause, a shadow low to earth, a shadow on the edge of the second growth, a shadow low in the valley where the cabin from whose small chimney a thin spiral of smoke ascended had been seen.

Outside this cabin, on the log doorway, lay a big, shaggy dog, gnawing a bone. The fox's eyes met his and she turned away, a member of a great blooded breed, be waiting for a moment's rest.

The house was to the right, the log for the moment, the fox's eyes met his and she turned away, a member of a great blooded breed, be waiting for a moment's rest.

Then, as she turned, she remembered that she had seen a shadow low to earth, a shadow on the edge of the second growth, a shadow low in the valley where the cabin from

Silently she shunk a protecting thicket and fully for a space, ran the distance to her own log, made the safe of the assurance that close behind her danger that must not be seen.

The old trapper who lived in the cabin in the clearing had sought on this fertile trapping ground early in the autumn. He had seen the big silver-grey fox of the woodlands but twice since locating in the clearing. Once he had fired at her at long range in hopes of adding her fine pelts to his store. But he had missed, clean, and now all he could hope for was another opportunity or to catch her in one of his traps along the lake.

Being an experienced trapper, however, he knew that his chance of doing either was very small. A red fox is crafty and suspicious enough, but a silver-grey is craft and suspicion itself. Nevertheless he kept a sharp lookout through the autumn and early in the winter he saw the big fox again. He was returning at dusk from some traps he had set in a gorge on the far side of what was known as the Pine Lick Swamp, and for the first time that season he carried no rifle. As he emerged from the timber crowning the gully bank, he came almost face to face with the silver-grey.

She was standing between two clumps of evergreens and in her mouth was a newly captured grouse. She did not so much as move when the trapper stepped from the trees. For one long moment man and animal stood taking stock of each other, then the silver-grey twisted about and disappeared in the forest.

Never again was the trapper so foolish as to leave his rifle behind him when making the rounds to his traps, but he did not so much as glimpse the big fox again that winter. Deep, deep beneath the roots of the elm tree was the burrow nest of the silver-grey and in it just as the winter snows were being licked up from the forest aisles and lake bosoms, and the first warmth of Spring was in the air, she gave birth to five little baby foxes.

For a few days she stayed almost constantly with the hungry wee ones, then her own hunger asserted itself. She must have food and she must find it without seeking too far.

It was just about this time that the trapper began to notice that his fathoms, which he had so carefully wintered were disappearing. Whether the robber of his roost was skunk, owl or fox he was unable to tell. The snow had melted and the thief, whatever it was, left no tell-tale signs for him to read.

He tried various methods of bringing the culprit to time. He set traps, made pitfalls, set snares and "figure-fours" but to no purpose.

But had the man guessed who the robber was, he might have saved himself all that trouble, for the animal that had almost nightly carried off one of those plump fowls was none other than the big silver-grey who was, as he well knew, too cunning

PAINS SHARP AND STABBING

Woman Thought She Would Die, Cured by Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ogdenburg, Wis.—"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and finally I had to go to the doctor. The doctor said I must listen to it. I thought of what I had read in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and the pains have entirely disappeared. All women who have female troubles of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. F. J. Denton, Ogdenburg, Wis. "Physicians undoubtedly did their best, but I was not getting any better, and I could do no more, but I read the most scientific treatment is supplied by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. If any complication exists it pays to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special free advice."

to be caught by trap or dead-fall. Perhaps the old fox reasoned with her crafty brain that it was needless for her to journey to the far uplands in search of grouse when there were such juicy birds well within her reach. Naturally her mother's heart prompted her remaining close beside the puppies who were by this time fat blue-eyed fellows who played all night long and clamored for food by day.

One spring evening the trapper happened upon the track of a giant fox in the soft mud of a creek's edge, and followed it to a narrow bed, and a great elm. The old fellow nodded his grizzled head and chuckled. He knew a way of bringing robbing foxes to time. That night he stepped a piece of fresh venison in strychnine, and carrying it to the burrow of silver-grey, placed it just outside.

That night he went across the slushing to a neighbor-trapper's cabin to tell him all about it, leaving his dog chained to the chicken coop, to guard it while he was away.

And that night the silver-grey fox stole softly down through spiky woods to the clearing, her head low and in her mouth something that she held carefully.

From the neighbor's cabin the trapper heard his faithful old dog barking and hurried home, knowing that his remaining chickens were in peril. But he did not so much as catch a glimpse of the robber that had been on his grounds.

The night following, with a big moon swimming low down above the forest carpeting the open woods with a blanket of glorious light, the big fox crept from her den and sought the clearing again.

For long moments she stood half in the tangle, half in the moon-flooded open and sniffed the breeze. Then, as though satisfied, she crept forward, belly close to earth, sharp ears pointed forward. A dead animal lay on its back straight before her on the moon-flooded path. Carefully, with back bristles erect and heavy brush sticking straight out behind, she approached the dead thing and reaching out her sharp claws, snatched it.

Then in this open place of danger, under a moon that made the forest night almost as bright as day, the big fox lifted her head and sent a shrill cry out on the night. It was her challenge to the man who was her enemy.

Next morning when the trapper came from his cabin, he found his dog dead beside him lay a tiny piece of poisoned meat.

Spring vanished into golden sunmer. Across the lakes hung a haze, sweet-melling of the pines and water plants. On upland and in valley the rare northern flowers blossomed and waved. The pines and tamaracks burst into glorious verdure and all throughout the forest was life and song. The cock grouse clucked to his mate or drummed his vital challenge from decayed logs. The truce of a new mating time hung above the world of the wild things.

The fox puppies were now lurchy, wide awake chaps. Often through the dewy, moonlight nights they accompanied their mother on her near-home jaunts. If she hunted alone they were always ready to receive her at the mouth of the den, hungry, alive, clamoring.

She was proud of them, a though she often chastised them soundly for fighting and otherwise misbehaving. But they received whatever she brought them thankfully, whether it was rabbit, grouse or squirrel, and they grew and played and were happy. Gradually she took them further afield with her, and by and by they took to hunting by themselves.

Autumn with its golden blanket and silvery mists found the family scattered. Full grown and strong, the young foxes had sought new hunting fields. The big silver-grey was alone once more.

And one night, warned by the intuition she never failed to obey, she too left the old hunting ground. Far back where the forest offered secure protection she found another field and waiting for her there a big red fox who touched noses with her lovingly and led her through a glorious dark smelling tangle to a new den in a tree-locked valley.

Hurrah! How's This?

Cincinnati authority says corns dry up and lift out with fingers.

Hospital records show that every time you cut a corn you invite lock-jaw or blood poison, which is needless, says a Cincinnati authority, who tells you that a quarter ounce of a drug called Freeze can be obtained at little cost from the drug store but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus. You simply apply a few drops of Freeze on a tender, aching corn and soreness is instantly relieved. Shortly the entire corn can be lifted out, root and all, without pain. This drug is sticky but dries at once and is claimed to just shrivel up any corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. If your wife wears high heels she will be glad to know of this.

I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and the first box helped me so much that I used several, and believe that this treatment saved me from having a paralytic stroke. It has built me up results of neglecting to keep the nerves in healthful condition. Arthurette Red Cross

On the afternoon of Oct. 24, 1916, the ladies of Arthurette met at the home of Mrs. George Brown for the purpose of organizing a local Red Cross Society. After a few brief preliminaries, a society comprising fourteen charter members was formed.

During the past six months our membership has grown from 14 to 41. Also during that time weekly meetings have been held in the home of the various members, with a public supper once a month, and a large number of our "soldier boys" have been made happier and more comfortable as a result of a number of parcels forwarded there.

Our finances are in a very healthy condition. Each week parcels containing socks, writing paper, envelopes, pencil, towel, handkerchief, gum, tobacco and candles, are despatched to soldiers in France and England.

At present the society is making up a box of necessary articles for use in the hospitals. Anyone desiring to help in this, or any other way, can communicate with the local president, Mrs. Fred A. Campbell, or Mrs. (Rev.) Neil McLean, secretary.

New officers are elected every three months.

The Transformation

Right in the heart of the great city of Toronto, in the centre of the principal business district, close by the cross-roads of main traffic, stands the "second longest bar" in all Canada. Observers say they used to count hundreds of men entering this stronghold of the Traffic. Were the frequenters of the bar better men when they came out?

On September 16th, 1916, Prohibition went into force in Ontario, and, of course, the bar lost its license. On the 16th of April, 1917, the old bar was better than ever! But what an arresting, beautiful transformation! Would that you and your sons could have been there to see the sight. The old bar-room was a heap of flowers. Fifty fair ladies served refreshments to Toronto's most prominent citizens and their wives, and not one of them all but was proud to be seen in the old bar-room.

The aching, weary hearts of the army's mothers are relieved now when they see their sons enter this building—for the old bar is helping to save men now instead of ruining them.

The hotel is now the "Y.M.C.A. Soldiers' Club," one of the Young Men's Christian Association's long chain of clubs, marquees, huts and "dug-outs" extending from Vancouver to the firing line in France—those helpful sentinel-posts that safeguard our precious soldier men and boys wherever soldiers are congregated. To the Y.M.C.A. Canada owes a debt of gratitude she never can adequately repay.

Like New Brunswick, the Traffic in Ontario has the opportunity, after the war, of putting Prohibition to the test at the polls. But Prohibition in Ontario is being enforced, and the old strongholds of the Traffic—the long bars we mean—are one by one being turned to useful purposes. Many of the hotel buildings that depended for existence upon bar trade are now devoted to commercial enterprises—constructive instead of destructive.

Does New Brunswick want to return to the destructive license system, and again be a partner in the old firm of John Barleycorn and Company, Limited?

Or does New Brunswick want to maintain Prohibition for ever? If so, Enforcement must be province wide, must be both strict and effective.

Help to Enforce Prohibition

Every man and woman in this province shares the responsibility for the enforcement of Prohibition—not the duty of the law alone. Your duty is clear.

Nursing Sister Ethel Boyer, now the wife of Dental Surgeon Capt. Jack Fairchild, of the New Zealand forces, is visiting relatives here, after serving upwards of two years with the British Red Cross in Egypt, Greece and France. Mrs. Fairchild came over from England in charge of wounded soldiers and she has not yet received her discharge. She enlisted in British Columbia and will necessarily have to take out her papers of dismissal from that district.

Mrs. Fairchild was born at Victoria Corner, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nehemiah Boyer. Her father died during her infancy and she spent her girlhood in Hartland with her mother. She became a graduate nurse about ten years ago and practised in the west, where at the outbreak of the war she offered her services to the suffering soldiers, going overseas in August, 1915.

War has its romantic side and it was not strange that Miss Boyer met her life partner while "in action." She was married in Europe a few weeks ago and her future home will be in the antipodes. At present a guest of her uncles, Henry and George Tedlie, she will on Saturday go to St. John, thence to British Columbia, where are her mother and two brothers. Dr. Fairchild has gone to New York for a post graduate course, after which he will go west, meet his bride again, and sail for their future home in New Zealand.

Quite by accident Nursing Sister Boyer met and saw much of Dr. Macintosh, also from little old Hartland, in far-off Saloniki.

Old Maids Convention at Glassville

At the request of the Glassville Institute the Florenceville Branch went out to Glassville and held an Old Maid's Convention, on May 24.

We wish to thank the Glassville people for the delightful refreshments served after the play, and for our entertainment at the hotel. We also wish to thank the gentlemen, who so kindly took their cars, and to thank those who helped with the program, although not members of our Institute.

Considering the condition of the roads, and it being a very unpleasant evening, there was a large attendance, and we realized $60.

LIBERAL VIEW OF CONSCRIPTION

Compulsory Service Must Not Stop at the Door of the Man of Military Age

The following extracts from an article on compulsory service in the Toronto Globe, leave no doubt as to where the Liberal party stands in relation to the matter:

"That the situation is serious admits of no doubt. German submarines have reduced to an alarming extent the essential supplies of food in Great Britain. Until the harvest is gathered in, the British people will be dependent on the United States for food. Yet here in Canada no adequate steps have been taken to control the food supplies or to organize its available resources. Compulsory enlistment for overseas services implies the application of the principles of compulsion and government control to everything necessary the successful carrying on of war. There must be no class exemption. Everything that Canadians possess must be at the disposal of the nation in times of national necessity. To fight and if necessary die for one's country, in all ages has been regarded as the highest form of patriotism. Who is deficient in patriotism or so poor in spirit as to weigh wealth and ease and luxury against the life of a single soldier? The conscription of fighting men carries with it an obligation to conscript all the essential resources of the country and to replace the nation on a war footing.

No Canadian who dons khaki fears to risk his life in the cause of freedom—but he goes out with bitterness in his heart as he reflects on the men who live through these momentous times with gold as their god, and who are permitted by a supine government to exploit the necessities of suffering humanity. Compulsory service must not stop at the door of the man of military age.

"This war has emphasized the duty of the citizen to the state. The community idea has been quickened. The freedom of the individual is bound up with the defence of the nation. The small nations that seek freedom and independence and the untrammelled development of their civil life are forced to adopt a system of universal service. This is the case with Canada. In her search for honor and military strength and freedom she finds it only in compulsory national service.

"National service covers every field of human activity. Jaures, the well known French Socialist, who was murdered on the outbreak of the war, says that the final effect of a national army will be 'not to militarize the democracy, but to democratize the military system.' The same idea applies to all national service, whether it be given as a soldier or a taxpayer. The final effect should be to democratize citizenship."

Used For Shaving.

Many men are troubled, more particularly in the cold weather, with a sort of roughness of the skin or eczema caused by shaving. The application of Dr. Chase's Ointment after the shave soon cures the trouble and by using it after each shave you keep the skin soft and prevent irritation and soreness. Because of its antiseptic qualities this ointment prevents and cures Barber's Itch.

The Strength of the Empire Lies in the Homes of Her People

"New occasions teach new duties," and this war is bringing to a crisis a food famine unless we immediately get down to the business of producing more and saving more.

That the food famine may be averted, we strongly urge the women of our land and especially organized societies like the Women's Institutes, to do their "thinking caps" and do all in their power for national service.

The individual can do much by preaching and practising, and becoming so enthused in this much needed production campaign that others are bound to "catch" the enthusiastic germ and work with such a will as to bring desirable results.

The organization can lighten the task and give it a more cheerful aspect by inviting competition and awarding prizes. If the organization would award prizes for most attractive vegetable gardens or hold Autumn Fairs and give prizes for best grown vegetables; in fact consider it a duty, sooner will we be enjoying the blessings of peace.

The woman in the home has always done considerable preserving and canning, but this year it is a patriotic demand that her yield be at least double that of former. She must devise schemes whereby she can preserve the produce of her garden, whether it be by canning, preserving, drying or cold storage. And again the organization has its part to play. Any woman is sure to take a deeper interest in the preservation of food if the works of her hands are to be exhibited and there is a possibility of her carrying off the prize.

It is proposed to give the delegates at the Fifth Annual Convention of the New Brunswick Women's Institutes an opportunity to see the results of women's efforts to save the foods to be used during next winter and spring. A canning exhibit will be an attraction. Liberal prizes will be awarded to the Institutes for best quality of New Brunswick grown canned fruits and vegetables. Particulars as to this exhibit will be forthcoming in the near future.

"Pity 'tis, 'tis true" that this war needed to bring to light many dormant talents. The war has given woman her opportunity but, alas, the suffering, the misery, the sorrow involved! would she not willingly have waited until woman's part in the economic development of her country had come as a matter of course? This latest talent should be scattered abroad and the organization should make use of the woman to spread the gospel along all lines of economy and production. As never before, woman should make a study of foods, their composition, selection, combination and preparation, so as to meet the needs of the family without waste of money or material.

The Department of Agriculture is ready and willing to co-operate with any society wishing information along all lines of Thrift and Production, whether it be a canning demonstration, a lecture, or both. In response to a circular as to the nature of a public meeting to be addressed by a Departmental representative, Women's Institutes are asking for talks on Institute work, demonstrations in various lines of cookery, lectures on Women's Responsibilities of To-day, etc. If anything is desired in addition to what has been requested, they will meet the wishes of the Institutes, providing same are confined to subjects that stand for National Service and requests are to hand by June 15th. In order to comply with these requests to the Department is engaging a number of trained workers for the summer and fall months, and every effort will be made to meet the needs of these strenuous times.

Let the slogan of the individual and the organization be: "Our grand business is. Not to see what lies dimly at a distance, But to do what lies clearly at hand."

The women's Institute Division of the Agricultural Department will be glad to furnish further particulars. Communicate with Hazel E. Winter, Supervisor Women's Institutes, Fredericton.

Good Advice

Yes, credit is a good thing, in fact is vitally necessary to most people some time in their lives, especially when they begin business with little capital. But it is often abused greatly. We think it is a duty of every person to work toward a cash basis just as rapidly and surely as possible. Such a year as the present is a mighty good one in which to make a start at least in this direction, going the whole way if possible. Why should a person that has handled a lot of money this year want a month or two extra time on his bills, when he should have money enough to pay them now? If a man can't pay his bills now, not asking for extension of credit, when can he pay them? Think this over seriously, friends, and then make up your minds to go out and pay your bills. You will find the cash system by all odds the best and most satisfactory in the long run.—Fort Fairfield Review.

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

From all parts of the world we receive words of praise for Gin Pills as the great remedy for kidney troubles. The following is from Jamaica where Gin Pills enjoy a very large sale.

"I was a clerk in a store in Jamaica but had to give up my position on account of kidney trouble. I purchased one box of Gin Pills from a local Druggist and before it was all finished I was entirely better and able to return to my work. I recommended them to a friend who was also in a similar condition and he tried them with the same good results. I may tell you I tried many remedies in Jamaica before I got your Gin Pills."

Yours very truly,
