A FOX-HUNT IN THE SOUTHERN HILLS

THAT the 17th of March should be lestablished as the birthday or lestablished as the birthday o an attractive little tune that suits well the streams ran down to the bogs. Along with Lover's words, that expounds the dazzling frieze of children's faces; lovely

But the song goes on to say that Father Mulcahy ("who showed them their sins"). having assured them that "no one could have two birthdays, barrin' a twins," and had, indeed, indited the mellifluous suggested that they should not be "always letter that had invited the Hunt to the Combine eight with nine, sivinteen is the mark, Let that be his birthday 'Amin' says the clerk." And so the dispute ended peacefully, and St. Patrick's Day and March 17th are for ever and ever synony-

In spite of Father Mulcahy's peacemaking, the celebrants of St. Patrick's Day have not often been at a loss for an excuse for breaking a head or two on March 17th. Head-breaking reasons are still plenty as ever, and when all the world and his wife are making munitions and cutting each other's throats in the sacred cause of Peace, precedent is not lacking. Peace and Compromise were in the air last year in Ireland; St. Patrick's Day passed this year in abstemious, even in somnolent propriety. What is to be expected of the next? Have Peace and Compromise been scared away by the horn-blowings, the tom-toms (not public? Peace Militant and Compulsory road like water out of a basin, and follow Compromise preside precariously in some regions; they have retreated in confusion from others. Nevertheless, the not yet lost the ennobling power of reverfollowers of the pack of fox-hounds here treated of might have been excused if, on a certain saint's day, they had believed that the oft-foretold rising had taken place. The hounds were there by special high and worthy. The handful of ladies invitation of the people, a request so that practically formed the Hunt, rode all gratifying that it could not be ignored, even though a country less fitted by "mountainy men" "backwards people" Providence for fox-hunting would be far as they would have described themselves, to find. A landscape must be pictured the hills begin, grey with rock, dark with furze and heather. Squeezed in among the rocks are the white cottages, with a about its knees like a brown blanker.

(For the game in the matter of tillage is being played, even in South-West Ireland.)

At a baseh and hideous National School after one horse had gone down by the At a harsh and hideous National School (adjectives that are unhappily appropriate head, even to his ears, and another by to most Irish National Schools), the long hack, fifteen miles from kennels, came to an send, and it was then that the wartime field, the few faithful women and time field, the few faithful women and farmers who had followed the Hunt into the wilderness, might have been justified in thinking they were in for trouble. Suddenly and incredibly the bare and quiet country became, alive. Not a ridge of hill but had its black fringe of figures, hardly a fence but a lad or two was sliping over it with the effortless case and ing over it with the effortless ease and tremely smart, and suitable to the distinspeed of a hound. The Meet was an occasion not to be missed by any selfrespecting young man, and the boys of two parishes were afoot. It may be said

HANDS ALL ROUND

IRSt drink a health, V is solemn night. A health to England, every guest;
That man's the best cosmopolite,
Who loves his native country best.
May freedom's oak for ever live With stronger life from day to day; That man's the true Conservative,
Who lops the moulder'd branch away.
Hands all round !

God the tyrant's hope confound!

To this great cause of free om drink, my friends,
And the great name of England round and round.

A health to Europe's honest men.
Heaven guard them from their tyrants' jails!
From wrong'd Poerio's notsome den,
From iron'd limbs and tortured nails!
We curse the crimes of southern kings,
The Russian whips and Austrian rods—
We, likewise, have our evil things; Too much we make our Ledgers, Gods.

Yet hands all round! God's the tyrant's cause confound!

To Europe's better health we drink, my friends, And the great name of England round and round.

What health to France, if France be she, Whom martial prowess only charms?
Yet tell her—Better to be free Than vanquish all the world in arms. Her frantic city's flashing heats But fire, to blast, the hopes of men.
Why change the titles of your streets?
You fools, you'll want them all again.
Yet hands all round!

God the tyrant's cause confound! To France, the wiser France, we drink, my friends, And the great name of England round and round.

Gigantic daughter of the West, We drink to thee across the flood, We know thee most, we love thee best, For art thou not of British blood? Should war's mad blast again be blown. Permit not thou the tyrant powers To fight thy mother here alone. But let thy broadsides roar with ours. Hands all round!

God the tyrant's cause confound! To our great kinsmen of the West, my friends, And the great name of England round and round.

O rise, our strong Atlantic sons, When war against our f vedom s They can be understood by kings. You must not mix our Queen with those That wish to keep their people fools; Our freedom's foemen are her foes, She comprehends the race she rules. Hands all round!

God the tyrant's cause confound! To our dear kinsmen of the West, my friends. And the great cause of freedom round and round.

middle of that desolate hill-country there stands a cliff that is like a tremendous door, closing an entrance to the heart of a hill. Legends whisper round that mighty door, but what is behind it, a dead King, a Cluricawn's treasure, a Phooka, or a pathway to Fairyland, they do not profess to tell. The door is not a good fit; there is a space beneath it, hollowed out, one imagines, by the stream that flees from those hidden mysteries. The legends are afraid to tell us what they think is there, but there was no uncertainty as to the matter in the minds of the hounds. They Philip Davis told us that the fox was there, and they said it at the tops of their voices, and made no secret about it.

SUBMARINES HELD

London, July 25.-Conclusive proof of the diminution of the U-boat menace is afforded by the Admiralty's latest statement of losses in merchant tonnage.

This reveals that the total losses for the month of June were 275,629 gross tons comprising 161,062 British and 114,567 Allied and neutral ships.

These figures show a month's drop in world's sinkings of 81,905 tons as compared with May, 37,786 compared with April, and 125,834 compared with March of this year. Compared with June of last year. the drop is 437,092 tons. Purely British drops at 64,627, compared with May, 67,-

"I demanded at the office if a distinguished lady of title, possibly a Russian, had just entered the hotel.

"As I expected, she had not. I sprang into a cab and inquired at two other hotels, and then I saw the folly of trying to catch her without outside help, and I ordered the fellow to gallop to the office of the Chief of Police. I told my story, and the ass in charge asked me to calm myself, and wanted to take notes. I told him this was no time for taking notes, but for doing something. He got wrathy at that, and I demanded to be taken at once to his Chief. The Chief, he said, was very busy, and could not see me. So I showed him my silver greyhound. In eleven years I had never used it but once before. I stated in pretty vigorous language that I was a Queen's Messenger, and that if the Chief of Police did not see me instantly he would lose his official head. At that the fellow jumped off his high horse and ran with me to his chief,—a smart young chap, a colonel in the army, and a very intelligent man.

"I explained that I had been robbed in a French railway carriage of a diamond necklace belonging to the Queen of England, which her Majesty was sending as a present to the Czarina of Russia. I pointed out to him that if he succeeded in capturing the thief he would be made for life, and that he would receive the gratitude of three great

"He wasn't the sort that thinks second thoughts are best. He saw Russian and French decorations sprouting all over his chest, and he hit a bell, and pressed buttons, and yelled out orders like the captain of a penny steamer in a fog. He sent her description to all the city gates, and ordered all cabmen and railway porters to search all trains leaving Marseilles. He ordered all passengers on outgoing vessels to be examined, and telegraphed the proprietors of every hotel and pension to send him a complete list of their guests within the hour. While I was standing there he must have given at least a hundred orders, and sent out enough commissaires, sergeants de ville, gendarmes, bicycle police, and plain-clothes Johnnies to have captured the entire German army. When they had gone he assured me that the woman was as good as arrested already. Indeed, officially, she was arrested; for she had no more chance of escape from Marseilles than from the Chateau

"He told me to return to my hotel and possess my soul in peace Within an hour he assured me he would acquaint me with her arrest.

"I thanked him, and complimented him on his energy, and left him. But I didn't share in his confidence. I felt that she was a very clever woman, and a match for any and all of us. It was all very well for him to be jubilant. He had not lost the diamonds, and had everything to gain if he found them; while I, even if he did recover the necklace, would only be where I was before I lost them, and if he did not recover it I was a ruined man. It was an awful facer for me. I had always prided myself on my record. In eleven years I had never mislaid an envelope, nor missed taking the first train. And now I had failed in the most important mission that had ever been intrusted to me. And it wasn't a thing that could be hushed up, either. It was too conspicuous, too spectacular. It was sure to invite the widest notoriety. I saw myself ridiculed all over the Continent, and perhaps dismissed. even suspected of having taken the thing myself.

"I was walking in front of a lighted cafe, and I felt so sick and miserable that I stopped for a pick-me-up. Then I considered that if I took one drink I would probably, in my present state of mind, not want to stop under twenty, and I decided I had better leave it alone. But my nerves were jumping, like a frightened rabbit, and I felt I must have something to quiet them, or I would go crazy. I reached for my cigarette-case, but a cigarette seemed hardly adequate, so I put it back again and took out this cigar-case, in which I keep only the strongest and blackest cigars. I opened it and stuck in my fingers, but instead of a cigar they touched on a thin leather envelope. My heart stood perfectly still. I did not dare to look, but I dug my finger nails into the leather and I felt layers of thin paper, then a layer of office that he wished my father to come at once to Chetney House and cotton, and then they scratched on the facets of the Czarina's dia- to bring with him certain papers. What these papers were is not essen-

"I stumbled as though I had been hit in the face, and fell back into one of the chairs on the sidewalk. I tore off the wrappings and spread out the diamonds on the cafe table; I could not believe they were real. I twisted the necklace between my fingers and crushed it between my palms and tossed it up in the air. I believe I almost kissed it. The women in the cafe stood up on the chairs to see better, and laughed and screamed, and the people crowded so close around me that the waiters had to form a bodyguard. The proprietor thought there was a fight, and called for the police. I was so happy I didn't care. laughed, too, and gave the proprietor a five-pound note and told him to stand every one a drink. Then I tumbled into a fiacre and galloped off to my friend the Chief of Police. I felt very sorry for him. He had been so happy at the chance I gave him, and he was sure to be disappointed when he learned I had sent him off on a false alarm.

"But now that I had found the necklace, I did not want him to find the woman. Indeed, I was most anxious that she should get clear to get a sharp reprimand, and sure to be laughed at.

"I could see now how it had happened. In my haste to hide the iamonds when the woman was hustled into the carriage, I had shoved the cigars into the satchel, and the diamonds into the pocket of my coat. Now that I had the diamonds safe again, it seemed a very natural mistake. But I doubted if the Foreign Office would think so. I was afraid it might not appreciate the beautiful simplicity of my secret siding-place. So, when I reached the police station, and found that the woman was still at large, I was more than relieved.

"As I expected, the Chief was extremely chagrined when he learned of my mistake, and that there was nothing for him to do. But I was feeling so happy myself that I hated to have any one else miserable, so I suggested that this attempt to steal the Czarina's necklace might be only the first of a series of such attempts by an unscrupulous gang, and that I might still be in danger.

"I winked at the Chief and the Chief smiled at me, and we went to Nice together in a saloon car with a guard of twelve carabineers and twelve plain-clothes men, and the Chief and I drank champagne all the way. We marched together up to the hotel where the Russian Ambassador was stopping, closely surrounded by our escort of carabineers, and delivered the necklace with the most profound ceremony. The old Ambassador was immensely impressed, and when we hinted that Zichy. He would not even give them the address of her house. "I gave a roar like a mad bull, and I jumped down the stairs six already I had been made the object of an attack by robbers, he assured us that his Imperial Majesty would not prove ungrateful.

"I wrote a swinging personal letter about the invaluable services of the Chief to the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, and they gave him enough Russian and French medals to satisfy even a French soldier. So, though he never caught the woman, he received his just

The Queen's Messenger paused and surveyed the faces of those about him in some embarrassment.

"But the worst of it is," he added, "that the story must have got about; for, while the Princess obtained nothing from me but a cigarcase and five excellent cigars, a few weeks after the coronation the Czar sent me a gold cigar-case with his monogram in diamonds. And I don't know yet whether that was a coincidence, or whether the Czar wanted me to know that he knew that I had been carrying the Czarina's diamonds in my pigskin cigar-case. What do you fellows

CHAPTER III.

IR ANDREW rose with disapproval written in every

"I thought your story would bear upon the murder," he said. "Had I imagined it would have nothing whatsoever to do with it I would not have remained." He pushed back his chair and bowed stiffly. "I wish you good night," he said.

There was a chorus of remonstrance, and under cover of this and the Baronet's answering protests a servant for the second time slipped a piece of paper into the hand of the gentleman with the pearl stud. He read the lines written upon it and tore it into tiny fragments.

The youngest member, who had remained an interested but silent listener to the tale of the Queen's Messenger, raised his hand commandingly.

"Sir Andrew," he cried, "in justice to Lord Arthur Chetney I must ask you to be seated. He has been accused in our hearing of a most serious crime, and I insist that you remain until you have heard me clear his character."

"You!" cried the Baronet.

"Yes," answered the young man briskly. "I would have spoken er," he explained, "but that I thought this gentleman"—he inclined his head toward the Queen's Messenger-"was about to contribute some facts of which I was ignorant. He, however, has told us nothing, and so I will take up the tale at the point where Lieutenant Sears laid it down and give you those details of which Lieutenant Sears is ignorant. It seems strange to you that I should be able to add the sequel to this story. But the coincidence is easily explained. I am the junior member of the law firm of Chudleigh & Chudleigh. We have been solicitors for the Chetneys for the last two hundred years. Nothing, no matter how unimportant, which concerns Lord Edam and his two sons is unknown to us, and naturally we are acquainted with every detail of the terrible catastrophe of last night."

The Baronet, bewildered but eager, sank back into his chair.

"Will you be long, sir?" he demanded.

"I shall endeavor to be brief," said the young solicitor; "and," he added, in a tone which gave his words almost the weight of a threat, "I promise to be interesting."

"There is no need to promise that," said Sir Andrew, "I find it much too interesting as it is." He glanced ruefully at the clock and turned his eyes quickly from it.

"Tell the driver of that hansom," he called to the servant, "that I take him by the hour."

"For the last three days," began young Mr. Chudleigh, "as you have probably read in the daily papers, the Marquis of Edam has been at the point of death, and his physicians have never left his house. Every hour he seemed to grow weaker; but although his bodily strength is apparently leaving him forever, his mind has remained clear and active. Late yesterday evening word was received at our tial; I mention them only to explain how it was that last night I happened to be at Lord Edam's bedside. I accompanied my father to Chetney House, but at the time we reached there Lord Edam was sleeping, and his physicians refused to have him awakened. My father urged that he should be allowed to receive Lord Edam's instructions concerning the documents, but the physicians would not disturb him, and we all gathered in the library to wait until he should awake of his own accord. It was about one o'clock in the morning, while we were still there, that Inspector Lyle and the officers from Scotland Yard came to arrest Lord Arthur on the charge of murdering his brother. You can imagine our dismay and distress. Like every one else, I had learned from the afternoon papers that Lord Chetney was not dead, but that he had returned to England, and on arriving at Chetney House I had been told that Lord Arthur had gone to the Bath Hotel to look for his brother and to inform him that if he wished to see their father alive he must come to him at once. Although it was now past one o'clock, Arthur had not returned. None of us knew where Madame Zichy away, for if she were caught the truth would come out, and I was likely lived, so we could not go to recover Lord Chetney's body. We spent a increased 1,050 during the week comparmost miserable night, hastening to the window whenever a cab came into the square, in the hope that it was Arthur returning, and endeavoring to explain away the facts that pointed to him as the murderer. I am a friend of Arthur's, I was with him at Harrow and at Oxford, and I refused to believe for an instant that he was capable of such a crime; but as a lawyer I could not help but see that the circumstantial evidence was strongly against him.

"Toward early morning Lord Edam awoke, and in so much better a state of health that he refused to make the changes in the papers which he had intended, declaring that he was no nearer death than ourselves. Under other circumstances, this happy change in him would have relieved us greatly, but none of us could think of anything save the death of his elder son and of the charge which hung over Athur.

"As long as Inspector Lyle remained in the house my father decided that I, as one of the legal advisers of the family, should also remain there. But there was little for either of us to do. Arthur did not return, and nothing occurred until late this morning, when Lyle received word that the Russian servant had been arrested. He at once drove to Scotland Yard to question him. He came back to us in an hour, and informed me that the servant had refused to tell anything of what had happened the night before, or of himself, or of the Princess

"He is in abject terror,' Lyle said. I assured him that he was not suspected of the crime, but he would tell me nothing.'

"There were no other developments until two o'clock this afterpoon, when word was brought to us that Arthur had been found, and that he was lying in the accident ward of St. George's Hospital. Lyle and I drove there together, and found him propped up in bed with his head bound in a bandage. He had been brought to the hospital the night before by the driver of a hansom that had run over him in the fog. The cab-horse had kicked him on the head, and he had been carried in unconscious. There was nothing on him to tell who he was, and it was not until he came to his senses this afternoon that the hospital authorities had been able to send word to his people. Lyle at once informed him that he was under arrest, and with what he was charged and though the inspector warned him to say nothing which might be used against him, I, as his solicitor, instructed him to speak freely and to tell us all he knew of the occurrences of last night. It was evident to any one that the fact of his brother's death was of much greater

"That,' Arthur said contemptuously, that is damned nonsense. It is monstrons and cruel. We parted better friends than we have been in years. I will tell you all that happened not to clear myself, but to help you to find out the truth.' His story is as follows: Yesterday afternoon, owing to his constant attendance on his father, he did not look at the evening papers, and it was not until after dinner, when the butler brought him one and told him of its contents, that he learned that his brother was alive and at the Bath Hotel. He drove there at once, but was told that about eight o'clock his brother had gone out, but without giving any clew to his destination. As Chetney had not at once come to see his father, Arthur decided that he was still angry with him, and his mind, turning naturally to the cause of their quarrel, determined him to look for Chetney at the home of the Princess Zichy.

concern to him, than that he was accused of his murder.

"Her house had been pointed out to him, and though he had never visited it, he had passed it many times and knew its exact location. He accordingly drove in that direction, as far as the fog would permit the hansom to go, and walked the rest of the way, reaching the house about nine o'clock. He rang, and was admitted by the Russian servant. The man took his card into the drawing-room, and at once his brother ran out and welcomed him. He was followed by the Princess Zichy, who also received Arthur most cordially.

"'You brothers will have much to talk about,' she said. 'I am going to the dining-room. When you have finished, let me know.'

"As soon as she had left them, Arthur told his brother that their father was not expected to outlive the night, and that he must come to him at once.

"This is not the moment to remember your quarrel,' Arthur saidto him; 'you have come back from the dead only in time to make your peace with him before he dies.'

"Arthur says that at this Chetney was greatly moved.

"You entirely misunderstand me, Arthur,' he returned. 'I did not know the governor was ill, or I would have gone to him the instant I arrived. My only reason for not doing so was because I thought he was still angry with me. I shall return with you immediately, as soon as I have said good-by to the Princess. It is a final good-by. After to-night, I shall never see her again.'

"Do you mean that?" Arthur cried.

"'Yes,' Chetney answered. 'When I returned to London I had no intention of seeking her again, and I am here only through a mistake.' He then told Arthur that he had separated from the Princess even before he went to Central Africa, and that, moreover, while at Cairo on his way south, he had learned certain facts concerning her life there during the previous season, which made it impossible for him to ever wish to see her again. Their separation was final and complete.

"'She deceived me cruelly,' he said; 'I cannot tell you how cruelly." During the two years when I was trying to obtain my father's consent to our marriage she was in love with a Russian diplomat. During all that time he was secretly visiting her here in London, and her trip to Cairo was only an excuse to meet him there.'

"Yet you are here with her to-night,' Arthur protested, 'only a few hours after your return.'

"That is easily explained,' Chetney answered. 'As I finished dinner to-night at the hotel, I received a note from her from this address. In it she said she had but just learned of my arrival, and begged me to come to her at once. She wrote that she was in great and present trouble, dying of an incurable illness, and without friends or money. She begged me, for the sake of old times, to come to her assistance. During the last two years in the jungle all my former feeling for Zichy has utterly passed away, but no one could have dismissed the appeal she made in that letter. So I came here, and found her, as you have seen her, quite as beautiful as she ever was, in very good health, and, from the look of the house, in no need of money.

rehabilitate the market day? Let those for whom this article is specially written ponder over the query carefully and seriously. Why not revive the market, and have a market day every week, Saturday by preference?

The very fact of any town's existence usually implies a market, which is a gathering place for the sale and purchase of food and livestock. The three cities of New Brunswick, and perhaps most of the towns, have their markets, and even in the case where the market is open daily it is usual to have one special day in the week called "Market Day." LABOR STRIKES

THE labor strikes, actual, averted, and threatened, that have been announce ed in different parts of Canada in the past two weeks seem to an ordinary observer to be both untimely and unwarranted. If there is a just and reasonable cause for the strikes referred to, then nearly every wage-earner in Canada would be justified in striking. A threatened strike of a section of the railway men was averted by Government intervention whereby practically all the men demanded was granted, and the railways concerned were authorized to recoup themselves by increasing their rates. Other railway men threatened to strike, and their demands will probably be granted, and still higher will go the railway rates.

MISS AUGUSTA B. WADE

The people of St. Andrews heard with sincere regret on Thursday afternoon of the death of Miss Augusta B. Wade, from pneumonia, at the residence of her sister. Mrs. John P. Cougle, St. John West. Miss Wade was born in Calais, Me., in 1857, and was the youngest daughter and fifth child of the late John and Mary A. Wade who came to St. Andrews in 1860, originally from Fredericton, but directly from Calais. Miss Wade began the teaching profession at the age of 18 years, her first school being at Chamcook, where she taught for one year. She then took a primary school in St. Andrews, and had Plumbing, Town schools ever since. A few months ago she went to St. John for medical and surgical treatment for an ailment that had troubled her for some years, and from which she obtained relief, but she contracted pneumonia, which proved fatal.

She is survived by three brothers: John, Mrs. N. M. Clarke, Mrs. E. A. Cockburn Shaw with a pendant and chain by the A. of St. Andrews, and Charles F., a a retired Conductor of the C. P. R., now Mrs. John R. Cougle, of St. John West, Special attention given to and Mrs. James Rowland, of St. Andrews. with whom the deceased made her home. To these the heartfelt sympathy of the whole community will be extended in Estimates cheerfully givtheir gaeat bereavement.

The funeral will take place on Sunday, services to be held at the residence of the deceased at 2.30 p. m.

MISS MARGARET FORTUNE The body of Miss Margaret Fortune, who passed away in Boston, was brought to St. Andrews for burial. The funeral services were held in the church of St. Andrew on Tuesday morning by the Rev. David O'Keeffe. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Thos. Britt, Daniel Coakley, A. B. O'Neill, and Edward Cummings. Interment was in the family lot at the St. Andrew Cemetery.

ART IN THE FAR EAST

A large and enthusiastic audience filled the Casino on Friday, evening, July 26, when Mrs. Ayscough, of Shanghai, China, delivered her lecture on "Art in the Far East" in aid of the local Red Cross. The headings taken up by Mrs. Ayscough were Chinese Poetry, Writing, and Painting, and were illustrated by lantern slides. The charming personality of the speaker, and the many anecdotes so de-lightfully told, added to the interest of the lightfully told, added to the interest of the subject itself, gave to those present a for the different wards: town as for the past 40 years he has been rare intellectual treat.

The Red Cross Society are most grateful to Mrs. Ayscough, also to Lord Shaughnessy for permitting the Casino to be placed at their disposal for the evening to Mr. A. Allerton, the manager of the Algonquin, who made special arrangements in the Casino to fit it for the occasion, to the friends who so generously contributed other expenses, to the ladies who interested themselves in selling tickets, and to all others who were so good in many ways. The total receipts were $166, a welcome addition to the funds of the Society.

ONE word is too often profaned For me to profane it, One feeling too falsely disdain'd For thee to disdain it. One hope is too like despair For prudence to smother,

And Pity from thee more dear Than that from another. I can give not what men call love But wilt thou accept not The worship the heart lifts above And the Heavens reject not;

The desire of the moth for the star,

Of the night for the morrow,

The devotion to something afar From the sphere of our sorrow? PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY, (Born August 4, 1792; drowned July

MAKING FORESTS FIREPROOF

People are becoming aware of the trenendous loss to Canada through forest fires. Fire is not the necessary accompaniment of settlement and can be stopped. The cost of equipment and patrol necessary to stop fires amounts to only a small fire insurance premium on the value of the forest. How fires are caused. the influence of the weather, and what amount of damage they do are told in Bulletin No. 64, "Forest Fires in Canada 3418 Dr. J. F. MacAuley, Castalia, Grand 1914-16", just issued by the Director of Forestry, Ottawa. This is the first attempt on systematic lines to give the statistics of fires for the whole of Canada and to classify their causes. By this means the most prolific sources of fires are shown so that means may be applied for their prevention. Those interested in this subject will receive a copy of this bulletin free upon application to the Director of Forestry, Ottawa.

THE HIGH COST OF FISHING

FISHERMAN paid us a visit one day and left us a message exciting that he would be glad to direct us the way to where black bass had been biting. In a moment we were all agog and astir, and started to round up our tackle, and buy some new spinners at $3 per, tin minnows, a coachman and hackle.

We found that we needed a new fishing rod, for last year's was now out of season. The new one we bought put a crimp in our wad, but fishermen can't stop to reason. A patented steel and multiple reel we bought with some silk tape to fasten, with faith in our prowess to purchase a creel (that's a basket to carry the bass in).

We planked down our coin for enameled silk lines, enough to reach halfway to Texas, with doodads for hooks to protect them from vines and weeds in the rivers that vex us. A bushel of hooks, with new fangled crooks and barbs pointing every direction, with some meant for fishing and others for looks, just to make an Haiti Honduras found that we had to go summon a dray to carry our paraphernalia. The fish that we caught amounted to naught, and now we are searching and wishing for some place to store all the junk that we bought—we've discovered the high cost of fishing.—Philadelphia North American.

"the man in the street."

To give one instance out of many, I was greenish grey uniform becomes his dark walking along a crowded market street three weeks ago, and happened to knock up against one of the suspended baskets contents somewhat. The magic syllables mokuai (Don't take offence") instantly produced the rejoinder: "I knocked up against you, sir, and you apologize to me!" And had I been Chinese and uttered those syllables, there would have been very much the same sort of genial response.

The rougher politeness of the street may not be unmixed with humor. The other day an itinerant vendor of sweetmeats had a square of peppermint candy abstracted from his basket as he passed along. He instantly turned, identified the smiling pilferer, and said: "Matey, if, you a deep obeisance" The copper was produced and the deep bow made in fine style. Then, as the sweetmeat vendor rose erect he added: "For two cents I'll ko-tow to you. True words!" A general laugh followed, in which he gained sever-
