Cannot Reconcile Two Civilizations

(London Times)

All men of English blood, all those who inherit our religions, our laws, our manners, and our habits of thought, now realize with a conviction which is unshakable that between the civilization of England and the civilization of the German State the gulf is impassable. They cannot be reconciled, and they cannot be accommodated.

Shells Pouring Into German Battle Lines

Paris, Sept. 2.—For a week the French have been pouring an avalanche of shells into the German lines in the west. It is not believed that this ammunition would be used simply for the purpose of damaging the German trenches, and, therefore, an early general offensive is looked for.

COLONEL GEO. H. HAM

Honored

An Old Home Dinner in Honor of Col. George Ham, by his old friends, on his Sixty-eighth Annual. This tells the whole story and tells it well. To really honor George Ham, the experience has taught that it must be an "old home dinner" participated in by "old friends."

the Canadian Pacific Railway Company transmitted to some thoughtful friends his own idea of perfection in dinner catables. Lo and behold, he picks up the card at his birthday dinner and finds the very items in "old time" style. Therefore, to read the menu is to study and covet the personality of George Ham.

"Sliced tomatoes; celery; olives; pea soup, thin, like mother used to make; a little cold liver and bacon; Irish turkey and cabbage; new boiled Murphys with the sweaters on; battered white beans, a la Orchestra; dear apple pie; poor pumpkin pie; tea or coffee; Home Ham cigarettes, on application to Col. Ham."

That the above bill of fare tickled the fancy of the guest of honor was indicated in his confession to the effect that he had attended more banquets than any man in Canada, but this was the only one that did not send him home hungry. That he was truly surprised was illustrated in Mr. Ham's remark that he had expected to have dinner with three or four friends, and to take them all home in rotation. The gathering was generally presided over by Mr. C. E. E. Usher, Passenger Traffic Manager. The speakers included Mr. Alfred Price, Assistant General Manager; Mr. Robert Miller, Windsor Station Superintendent; Mr. J. Murray Gibson, General Publicity Agent; Mr. R. G. Chamberlain, Chief of the Investigation Department; Capt. Walsh, Chief Superintendent Marine Department; Mr. William H. Hurst, Central News Agency, New York; and Mr. Ham. Toasts to the King, Canada, and the guest of honor were drunk, the last being proposed by Mr. Miller. Mr. Ham is one man who will not go down to his grave without knowing that he is esteemed, though considering the vast number of his friends, from one ocean to the other, he can scarcely know the affection in which he is held. Some of this was in evidence in the words of the speakers, and in the response of all listeners' hearts.

Mr. Price paid tribute to Mr. Ham's refreshing, unconquerable, smiling cheerfulness. "Chief" Chamberlain informed the company that he had never had to look after Mr. Ham in Vancouver; Mr. Gibson quoted words written about Mr. Ham being a "large body of superlunary humanity, entirely surrounded by the C. P. R.," Captain Walsh added his tribute of admiration. Mr. Miller credited the honored guest with unselfishness and illustrated by recounting incidents.

Mr. Ham's reply was appropriate and characteristic. That he deeply appreciated the honor done him was apparent, though he said that he was either worthy of a halo and a harp with a thousand strings, or else he was among a crowd of affectionate friends. If he were able to believe that it was the latter, then he believed that they were honoring what a man ought to be rather than what he was. He did not deny having labored ceaselessly for half of the sixty-eight years to make the C. P. R. what he believed it to be, the biggest and best transportation company in the world, and prayed for the privilege of working for it as long as the good God would give him breath. Even after death he hoped to find on his own tombstone. He did his best for the C. P. R. Mr. Ham paid touching tribute to the personality of the late Mr. William Stitt, and the large group of C. P. R. officials indicated that his words were shared by all. He also spoke of other chances and complimented the railway on having worthily filled the places left. Mr. Ham did not fail to work in his accustomed humor, and it was the real George Ham variety that has made his name a by-word throughout Canada.

"For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" was heartily sung by the company for Mr. Ham, and later for Mr. Usher, when Mr. Ham closed for his health as one of the most respected men in the C. P. R. The dinner closed with "Auld Lang Syne" sung in the "old home" style. After rising, Mr. Ham was subjected to general good wishes and happy returns.

Prefacing the menu was a poem, "How Laughter Came to Canada," written in 1903 by Neil Munro, of Toronto, being a sort of parody on the creation according to Genesis, reaching its point in the fourth verse, which follows:

Long thought the Lord, and one bright day He made Him a man of His suit and clay, And set him forth in the sun to dry, In a place where waters were rippling by, Said the Lord, "The laughter whosoever thou art, Stand forth, George Ham, of the C. P. R."

LABOR DAY "DRY," BARS MUST BE CLOSED

License Board Reminds Hotelkeepers of Change in Law

Labor Day will be "dry." A reminder to this effect has been issued by Vice-Chairman Dingman of the Provincial License Board.

Labor Day was put in the list of "dry" days by the Ontario Legislature last session, so that the commission is not giving the hotelkeepers something fresh to worry about. It was thought, however, that many hotelkeepers might have forgotten the change in the law, and a caution to them would be of service.

BRANTS STEP INTO FOURTH PLACE BY LOSING BOTH GAMES

FIRST OF FAREWELL GAMES WAS VERY LISTLESS—SECOND WAS LOST THROUGH GROH'S HOMER OVER CENTRE FIELD FENCE. SCORES 8-0 AND 3-2.

The first game of yesterday afternoon's double bill can only be described as listless and very one-sided. The same old story was the cause. Hamilton got off to such a good lead that the Brants were discouraged.

Hamilton 320 200 100-8 Brantford 000 000 000-0 Summary—Home runs—King, McGroarty. Sacrifice hits—Zeimer, Lindholm. Stolen bases—Todd, King, Zeimer.

Close didn't give the Hams a hit while he was in the box, but they scraped up three runs, first through four walks, a wild pitch and a boot. He was hauled out just before the end of the innings and Hughey scoted in. This twister allowed three hits, one of them a homer which soared over right field fence, from King's bat. Two singles caused another run to be chalked up.

Extra innings had to be played in this game to break the tie which had been made in the sixth. It was a home run which finally settled the game, in the Hams' favor. It was a faster and more interesting battle than its predecessor.

It was crucial the way the Brants were treated all through the game. Cossy Dolan certainly had them eating out of his hand. Only through a few passes and Comstock's single in the fourth and Todd's hit in the ninth, could Brantford get on the bags.

It has been the custom for the Brants to allow the visiting team to get a good lead in the first or second frame, but in this game they managed to hold their opponents to 30 hits and no runs, although two were passed by a walk and a hit by pitcher.

Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 2—Buffalo won the first game 4 to 1 and tied the second 2 to 2, with Jersey City yesterday. The opening game was a hard-hitting affair, Sherman yielding 12 hits and giving the Bisons a three-run lead in the first inning. Fullenweider held the Skeeters safe throughout. The second game was called in the seventh to allow Buffalo to catch a train.

Second game: R. H. E. Buffalo 2 6 0. Jersey City 2 7 1. Tyson and Onslow; Crutcher and Schmidt.

Sporting Comment

It is always a rather melancholy affair, the last games of the season, but yesterday's contests were particularly sad only three pitchers, which makes four in a row. They tried out about every pitcher they had, and they are now in 4th place and are likely to stay there if they don't improve.

HESTER, AND A LEGACY

"I don't think it would add anything to my happiness," she said slowly.
His face clouded; the eagerness in his eyes died out.
"Is it because I am unworthy?" he asked.
"No; it is simply that the compact is an impossible one."
"It is not impossible unless you make it so."
"There I disagree with you. But, if, as you say, it rests with me, I shall make it impossible."
She held out her hand for the books which he gave her without a word, and turning quickly, she pushed open the wall door and went quickly through the shrubbery to the house.
CHAPTER XIII.
Miss Violet Langworthy, although of a romantic turn of mind, had not so far aspired as high as Lord Lynmouth. Her shrines had up to the present been of a lowlier type, such as the drawing-master at the boarding school in Dunstable where she had been for some years. But late she had transferred her romantic attention to Mr. Penfold, and had weaved around that unsuspecting individual dreams of a future in which she shared not only his parochial duties but his home and life.
In view of this future, which sooner or later she felt it probable would be offered her, she applied herself with ardour to the affairs of the parish, and took leading part in district visiting, Sunday-school teaching, choir singing, and all the rest of it. Morning, noon and night she was to be met by Mr. Penfold in the cottages or country lanes, intent on some errand of mercy, and attired in the most becoming of hats—hats wreathed in convolvuluses in summer, and gay with smart little velvet bows and birds' plumes when the dreary days of winter made a touch of scarlet a cheery thing to see. On such occasions she would greet him with a sweet smile and a soft "Good morning, Mr. Penfold," as she hurried by, and would waylay him with some tale of woe—some sick cottager or poverty-stricken family that needed aid—and display for his inspection not only the violet eyes and convolvulus wreath, but delightful womanly traits of pity and compassion, so eminently suited to a parson's wife.
But Mr. Penfold was not responsive. In fact, he was quite the reverse—in deadly fear of her, and went to hurry by, cutting short the little interviews by any means in his power and beating a hasty and apologetic retreat. He had a wholesome distrust of violet eyes, soft voices and alluring hats, having returned to stricter views than ever on the subject of female charms after his rebuff by Hester. No, if ever Mr. Penfold married, the lady of his choice would be no violet-eyed or soft-voiced charmer! The future Mrs. Penfold would be distinguished for her worth alone, and by the plainness of her face and the brusqueness of her manner would testify unquestionably to the high degree of virtue within.
This somewhat pronounced desire on Mr. Penfold's part to avoid her was misunderstood by Miss Langworthy. She saw in it a tribute to her power over him—he was afraid of her because he placed her so high. He felt his own unworthiness and was too timid to speak. He dared not hope to win the prize that he craved so ardently to possess. He needed a little encouragement; she must help him to unbosom himself of his secret by aid of that sweet womanly tact which she knew she could exercise whenever the opportunity occurred.
With this intention in view she eagerly awaited the decorating of the church for Easter. She felt that during the day or two that she would be so constantly in his presence she engaged in such picturesque work—seated in becoming attitudes on the chancel-steps, nailing primroses to a cross, or stooping with damp moss at the base of the font, and alluring moon sunshine illuminating her cheek and touching up her hair—surely somehow, in some way, she would be able to make him understand that the prize might be his if he laid claim to it? He would not show a marked preference for her in the church of course, for that would be irregular, not to say irreligious, but on the way home, in the twilight, when they were alone together, he might go so far as to propose. It would not be her fault if he did not.
Such was to have been Mr. Penfold's line of action at Easter if Fate had not interfered in his behalf at the expense of another man. The other man happened to be Lord Lynmouth—in every way a more suitable hero for romance—better-looking, of higher birth, with more distinguished manners and a somewhat mysterious character. She would not, in all probability, have raised her eyes and hopes so high if Fate had not cast him, so to speak, at her feet; and, having cast him, her imagination seized upon him. In one moment her affections were transferred from Mr. Penfold to Lord Lynmouth, and the Curate was never again restored to the high place in her imagination from which she had so ruthlessly thrust him.
On the Thursday before Easter Mrs. Parsons, the Vicar's wife, had arranged for a little party of church-workers to meet at the vicarage armed with scissors and baskets, with the object of making a raid into the woods and lanes in search of spring flowers for the church decorations. On receiving the notice of invitation Violet hastened to trim her spring hat, and lay coy little man-traps in the shape of bunches of violets beneath the brim. Surely in wandering together through spring woods and along primrose-decked lanes the moment would

VIOLENT ATTACKS OF DYSPESIA

Suffered Tortures Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"
ST. JEAN DE MATHA, Jan. 27th, 1914.
"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been made well by 'Fruit-a-tives.' I suffered so much that at last I would not dare to eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of 'Fruit-a-tives' and after taking them I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was well. I quickly regained my lost weight—and now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am fully recovered, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives.'

a lord of such distinguished appearance and exclusive manners, but it takes longer than that to be off with the old love before one is on with the new. The sense of disappointment and the pain in her foot made her cry afresh, but she took care to do it becomingly, and awaited the approach with a little flutter of excitement.
Lord Lynmouth, sauntering down the lane with Colley at his heels as usual, came upon this picture of beauty in distress and to a full stop at the same moment. His first thought was a wish that he could catch her—a very pretty girl sitting creaking at the bottom of a bank, her lovely hair in disorder around her, her hat and a basket of primroses at her side—his second that she was in some trouble or had hurt herself. He recognized her as he came up, though he knew her very slightly, and one glance at her outstretched foot showed him what was the matter.
He knelt down at once before her and, cutting the lace of her boot, pulled it off. Then he dipped his handkerchief in a trickle of water at the lane side and bound it tightly round her ankle, soothing and encouraging her as he did so in his gentlest manner. She sobbed pitifully all the time, but she was aware in spite of her tears that the situation was an interesting one and had its good points.
By the time the ankle was bound up in the wetted handkerchief she would not have exchanged Lord Lynmouth for Mr. Penfold for anything the Fates could offer, and he was exalted to a foremost place in her imagination, the Curate being relegated to a back seat many rows behind.
