The crew were at once called on deck, and the cartain found that the ship was making a deal of water. It was also ascertained that the oil barrels were floating out at the port bow, where the greatest damage was. The captain thought the barrels might to some extest fill in the gap, and thus aid in stop-ping the influx of water, but they con-tinued to float out and the vessel began to sett'e down. It was then decided to get the boats out. On a first attempt stove in but it was repaired with some Both boats stood by the vesse for some time, and eventually made for the shore. The wind was blowing almost directly in shore, and the men allowed themselves to be driven before it. The sea was very rough, and the captain's boat was several times in imminent danger of being swamped. The tide was out when they arrived at Aldwick, was out when they arrived at Andwick, and consequently the landing was much more easily affected than had been anti-cipated. As to the man who was killed, he was an American, and was known by Nev. 1, 1888.

We therefore set the task of recounting their countries glories and collecting the material for her history and poetry to the young people of the schools. It will do them good to dwell on the courage, the self denial and the devotion manifested by those who turned this Canada of ourse thom an unbroken forest into the fair sometivated land that it is. They will be taught a lesson of thankfulness that they now enjoy what has been earned with so much pain and labor. Their youthful energies, also, will stimulate the older ones to greater thought and efforts of remembrance than they would exert without this incentive. It is not necessary that the events recorded should be of the heroic order. Any good story, whether of trouble or of fun, any good story, whether of trouble or of fun, any good sings, may be the groundwork of the tale description of pioneer life and surroundings, may be the groundwork of the tale which is to take the prize.
