next day, pondering over his present and his future; and it seemed to him that it was absolutely necessary that he should marry Eva. In the first place, the earl wished it; and he felt that only complying with his uncle's wishes could he obtain more money, and a large sum, he must have. And after all, where was the difficulty? It was true there was Rachel; but most young men of his position had 'pasts'; and he was no worse than others. As to the false marriage, why he could deny it altogether. White had disappeared - had probably gone abroad. Rachel had absolutely no witnesses; the bogus certificate was in his position; there would be nothing but her bare assertion, and what would the word of such a woman be worth against that of a man of his standing? He would give her a large sum of money - make her an allowance; but he would be rid of her at any cost.

As for Eva - well, she had always been kind and gracious to him; no doubt, like most women, she would be willing enough to make a good match - and what a good match he was. Besides, he could get at her through her brother. Edward was just the reckless, easy-going man who could be influenced and pressed into persuading his sister to carry out his wishes.

The Doctors' Preference

One of the leading physicians of New York says: 'I like the effect of Abbey's Salt so well that I prescribe it instead of Citrate of Magnesia, Seidlitz Powders, etc. It is the best general laxative I know of.'

Salt has proved its value. Pleasant to take - invigorating - gentle in action - and does not gripe.

At all dealers - 25c. and 60c.

He took a drink of his soda-and-whiskey, and smoked in silence for a minute or two.

'I don't know that it would be so easy,' he said at last, and with a slight shake of his head. 'I've been spending a great deal of money lately, and in fact, my dear Edward, I dropped round this afternoon to see if you could pay me back a portion of the money you owe me.'

Edward took his cigar out of his mouth and whistled ruefully. 'Like that, is it?' he said, disconsolately. 'By Jove! it's always the way whenever you ask a friend to lend you a bit he always wants money himself! But I thought you could put your hand upon anything you liked. Surely the earl - he is not illiberal, whatever else he may be - would fork out; or you might raise some from Oldham.'

don't see my way to getting any more unless -'

'Unless what?' asked Edward. 'Unless I fall in with a wish of my uncle's,' said Sidney, watching out of the corners of his eyes Edward's rueful countenance. 'We had a talk last night - quite a family kind of confab. He wants me to marry.'

Edward nodded. 'Well, that's natural enough. Of course he wants to see the next heir to the title - wants to be a grand father. That's the nuisance of being a landed swell, you see. We're always obliged to look to the future - always want to carried on the family. It's a kind of duty don't you know. As for me, it doesn't matter. I shall not have much to leave - nothing at all, in fact - the estate's mortgaged up to its neck. But it doesn't worry me much. Thank God! Eva's got her portion - it's small enough, goodness knows, but it will keep her from the door.'

Sidney shook his head again. 'I've already done that; and I

Which Was The Heir?

CHAPTER XXXVII. (Concluded.)

'AST Ronnie off! Oh, no, no!' he said. 'But his consent! Of course he'll consent!'

'You don't know,' she argued. 'At any rate, you have promised. Don't forget your promise.'

'Do you think I have forgotten?' he said, with a tender reproach. 'Every word I have said to you is sacred. I don't understand why you insist upon this - I won't ask. I have said I will do whatever you ask me, and I will do it without questioning. Why, I'd go to the end of the world to gratify your slightest whim! I'll find Ronnie and bring him to you; and you'll see he won't stand between me and the happiness of my life.'

'I hope not; but we shall see,' she murmured.

He caught at her words, his heart flooded with joy. 'You hope not!' he exclaimed. 'Oh, my darling -'

His hand went out towards hers. She knew that if he touched her again she would melt like snow in the sun, and she rose and drew back from him trembling and affrighted.

'No, no! All right! Dearest, I will not touch you - will not say another word! Put your hand on my arm. You shall see I can keep my word, hard as it is not to take you in my arms, and -'

He set his face resolutely from her and in silence, both of them trembling, they went down the slope.

'Oh, you've come back!' said Mrs. Seton. 'What a time you have been!'

Cottie bit her lip and studied her voice.

'Mr. Bell had been saying goodbye,' she said, her voice sounding in her own ears as if it came from afar. 'He is going to Starborough - to-morrow to look after his boy - Ronnie.'

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

NOW, the earl's advice - for advice it had been - ran parallel with Sidney's inclination. He was tired of Rachel, and being tired of her, was in a fit state of mind to compare her with Eva Rasleigh; and it is scarcely necessary to say that the comparison was all in Eva's favour. She appeared to him an angel of light compared with Rachel, who, he had learnt, was mercenary and selfish; who, he more than suspected, had married him for his position and future title.

It is just possible that if she had not showed herself quite so plainly to him in her true colours that he might have felt some compunction, might have remained faithful to her - at any rate, for a time - but the kind of passion that he felt for her soon wanes, and is succeeded by an indifference quickly followed by dislike, which as rapidly develops into absolute hatred. He had not the least pity for her, for he felt he had been diamond cut diamond, Greek against Greek. He had been the keener diamond and the more cunning Greek that was all.

He wandered about the castle grounds for the greater part of the

In the afternoon he walked over to the Hall, and just inside the gate met Edward.

'Hallo!' exclaimed the latter. 'Back again, are you, Bassington? What a time you've been away! Any thing the matter? You look rather pale about the gills, and you're thinner, too.'

'I've not been very well,' said Sidney; 'and I've had a lot of bother.'

Edward smiled at him, not without a certain amount of good-natured contempt.

'Been going the pace, eh?' he said. 'Some fellows can stand it, some can't. Come into my den and have a smoke.'

They went into the den, and cigars and whiskey and soda were produced. 'I'm jolly glad you've come back, remarked Edward. 'I wanted to see you. Oldham has been bothering me about money matters. Says he must have some coin to pay some interest which I'd overlooked.'

As he spoke, the sunset light fell upon his face, and Sidney noticed that there was some marks upon it as of recently healed wounds.

'What's the matter with your face?' he asked.

'Oh, I had a bit of a scrap with some gipsies while you were away. Set upon me in Bardley's lane. Should have come off badly if it hadn't been for a fellow - a rattling good sort! - who turned up at the critical moment and cut in and helped me. He got knocked out himself, and has been staying here until this morning, when he rushed off in search of that young devil of a boy - don't know whether you remember him - a boy Eva found, and who lived at Betty's. Turns out that he was this chap's long-lost brother, who had given him the slip come over to England. Boy disappeared from Betty's last night, and Geoffrey Bell - that's my friend's name, and a rattling good friend, too! - bolted off in search of him. So, you see, we've been busy while you've been away.'

'Sidney listened indifferently enough. Neither the boy nor the stranger interested him.

'But about this coin, eh?' continued Edward, in his easy-going way.

'It's a matter of little over two thousand. Could you let me have it, or help me fly a kite - do a bill? It would be easy enough for you, with all your loaf and your prospects.'

It was just the opening Sidney wanted

CHURCH POINT, July 31, '08.

Blacking & Mercantile Co.'y, Ltd., Amherst, N.S.
Dear Sirs.—Nearly one year ago I had my first order of "Mathieu's Syrup" from you. It was not known in this country, and I gave samples to several families whom I knew would use it. After a few weeks I began to have a call for it, and trade has increased wonderfully since. I have not the least doubt but that it will soon be the best selling remedy for coughs, colds, etc., on the market. In my store here sales are good and our people ask for it. Several stores in this country now keep it in stock and report sales increasing. I have bought from you since August 16th, 1907, 4 Gross and have only 3 dozen on hand at this date, and which I am holding for retail trade in my store. Yours truly,
LOUIS A. McLANSON.

AGAINST HEADACHE there is no remedy so active as Mathieu's Nerve Powders which contain no opium, morphine or chloral. 25 cts. per box of 18 powders.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"Dorothy, I think you'd better go upstairs to your room," said Dorothy's mother, "and stay there until supper. This is the fourth time you've torn your dress this week."

Dorothy had a come into the room where her mother and I were sewing, to show her mother a terrible three-cornered tear she had just given her pretty gingham dress.

"I don't usually believe in punishing children for mistakes," said Dorothy's mother, after the small person had turned with quivering lip and tear-filled eyes to go upstairs, "but this is really the fourth time this week she has torn her dress, and she is always tearing or breaking or some way ruining something, and it doesn't seem to me there is any need of it."

"Look at Ellis. She plays the same games that Dorothy does and goes everywhere and does everything with her and yet she almost never tears her clothes, and she keeps them clean just about twice as long as Dorothy does."

Of course, I didn't dare say very much then.

I knew it wouldn't be quite polite to defend Dorothy too vigorously when her mother had thought fit to punish her.

But I'm going to take the opportunity now to say what I wanted to say then.

And I'm saying it not only for Dorothy's mother in case she chances to read this, but for mothers of Dorothy's everywhere.

I don't believe it was any more Dorothy's fault that she tore her dress than it was Ellis' that she didn't.

I truly believe that some children are born with a tendency to have things happen to them.

Their clothes tear, their stockings get holes in them, their toys break, their pinafores get dirty, their shoes wear out faster than other children's, just naturally, without their being any more actively naughty.

Poor kiddies.

So often in disgrace, so often scolded, and yet most of the time very little to blame.

Be good to your Dorothy's, mothers. Be as patient as your wonderful mother heart teaches you how to be, and then a lot more. I know it is a pretty hard task sometimes, this being the mother of a Dorothy, but sometimes it pays. For sometimes when they grow up, the nervous energy, and the harum scarum ways, and the flyawayness that caused the torn aprons and worn out shoes and soiled pinafores, may be developed into qualities that will make you proud to be the mother of a Dorothy.

Help them to try to conquer and subdue themselves, of course. Help them to try to acquire the poise and self-possession that it will make it possible to partly overcome their tendency to mishaps.

But please, oh mothers of Dorothy's everywhere—and of course this means little boy Dorothy's, too—please pray for patience if you need to—and I'm pretty sure you will—not to blame them for those things that are truly "their misfortunes, not their faults."

Patriotism

The stomach is a larger factor in "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" than most people are aware. Patriotism can withstand hunger but not dyspepsia. The confirmed dyspeptic "is fit for treason, stratagems and spoils." The man who goes to the front for his country with a weak stomach will be a weak soldier and a fault finder.

A sound stomach makes for good citizenship as well as for health and happiness.

Diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition are promptly and permanently cured by the use of

HOUSEHOLD NOTES.

Salt and vinegar are good to clean brass work.

Bags of heated salt are excellent to relieve neuralgia.

White pepper is preferable to black for seasoning chicken soup.

Crisp celery should be served with cold meat. It is a nerve tonic.

If a knife is slightly heated, it will cut bread and cake much more easily.

Flour sprinkled generously over suet will make the chopping process simpler.

Keep tacks in bottles. It saves opening many boxes to find a particular kind.

Except in extraordinary cases, every sick room should have some sunlight every day.

To keep cheese moist and fresh and free from mold, wrap in cloth wet with vinegar.

To clean white paint, dip a cloth in hot water, then in bran and rub it. Rinse with cold water.

Fat will not burn if a crust of bread or piece of raw potato is placed in the kettle with it.

When cleaning house use plenty of turpentine in the scrub water. It is certain death to moths.

In cutting garments it is sometimes better to fasten the pattern in place by weights instead of pins.

Left-over cereals need not be wasted. They are excellent fried like mush and eaten with syrup or honey.

A teaspoonful of glycerine, given in a wineglass of hot milk, will relieve a severe paroxysm of coughing.

Cheese wrapped in wax paper and put in the refrigerator will keep for a week and look as if freshly cut.

To keep the tubes of macaroni from sticking together the water must be kept at a galloping boil, as with rice.

For washing coarse clothes, soft soap is the best and has the advantage of going further than yellow soap.

Oxalic acid in the proportion of one to twenty may be used to remove perspiration stains from wearing apparel.

Bacon fat may be saved and used to fry fish in. It gives the fish a good flavor and keeps it from falling apart.

If a tiny pinch of soda is put into a sauceman in which fruit is being stewed less sugar will be needed to sweeten it.

Green lima beans boiled until they are nearly tender and then fried in butter are better than when merely stewed.

A little tin ruler should be with every sewing outfit. It is very much easier to use in measuring bands, hems and tucks, than tape.

KEEP MINARD'S LINIMENT IN THE HOUSE.

New School at Allan's Isle.

On the 12th inst. the new school just completed was blessed, dedicated to St. Anne, and turned over for educational work to Miss M. Greene, as Principal, by Rev. A. J. Maher, P.P. The building was begun last fall and is now fully completed inside and out, and is an ornament to the place. The main room has a flooring space of 924 sq. feet, well lighted and equipped with new and up-to-date apparatus. The interior colour scheme is both artistic and pleasing to the eye. There is a large vestibule with boys and girls dressing room, lavatories, etc. The whole being surrounded by an extensive playground.

Much free labour was given in its erection, and both pastor and people are to be congratulated on an achievement so fraught with good in the welfare of the rising generation.

Before Father Maher departed the people of the place assembled, and Miss Greene, on behalf of the Catholic population, presented an address of appreciation, and asking him to accept an accompanying purse as a mark of their esteem and gratitude, for the large interest he has taken in both Church and educational work in this part of his extensive parish. Father Maher briefly replied, with much feeling, retaining the purse as a souvenir of so much good will, but craving permission to devote contents to better adornment of the building. The children under direction of the talented teacher, Miss Greene, sang some appropriate songs in keeping with the occasion.

A centre for C. H. E. Exams. will be held in June—the first in Lamaline. There will be sixteen candidates representing the three grades to go up. The writer wishes them success.

Defends "Tim."

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—In a recent issue of your paper a correspondent takes umbrage at certain writings of our old friend Shannahan and waxes wrath. I am sorry to note that anyone should find offence with the Celtic utterances of Tim—first, because Shannahan as Shannahan has, like the notable Mr. Dooley, an unlimited scope of visionary writing; and second, because his outpourings from time to time strike many a homely chord in our hearts and give to our (alas) grave features a smile of charming significance. Tim (and mark you, sir, I know him well) would not hurt a fly, not even the disgusting mosquito, and that his object was to injure any budding poet, as your correspondent "One of the Common People" would suggest, I cannot believe. I am aware full well that he is fond of giving advice and being "original." He has not the secret of being able to spice his advice with flattery. He speaks the truth, very much the truth, and, as everybody knows, he who speaks the truth never escapes. I may say right here that I fully agree with him in his comments on the "would-be poets."

Go ahead, Shannahan! Let not the petty vapourings of the would-be critic throw you from that place you have won in the hearts of us all.

Yours sincerely,
May 19, '10. K—A.

Are You in Danger?

You May be Neglecting a Small Ailment and Thereby Inviting Serious Disease.

That little maladies grow upon serious diseases we all know. Upon the stomach, liver and kidneys rest mainly the work of maintaining health. Most of your little sicknesses come from derangement of these organs. Experience proves that they are very frequently out of order, not badly perhaps, but even if only slightly out of order, it acts upon the mind and the spirits and upon the strength and regularity of the system.

It won't pay you to neglect your health; at the first sign of headache or languor take Dr. Hamilton's Pills and know how bright you feel next morning. You'll have a grand appetite, enjoy your breakfast and feel full of energy to go to work upon.

Your food soon tastes so good that you eat more than ever before, and, of course, you grow stronger, ruddy, vivacious, just sparkling with energy and good health.

Soon your friends will notice the improvement, and by continuing to tone up your system with Dr. Hamilton's Pills you lay the sound foundation of permanent health.

He Knew the Dodge.

In Berlin the waiters in beer-gardens are very sly in securing tips. When a guest pays his bill and the waiter has to give change the latter returns all the change correctly except ten pennings—one penny. The waiter searches industriously in all his pockets and displays ostentatiously all his change, but he has no ten-penny piece.

As a rule the departing guest becomes impatient, and tired of waiting for the small amount, tells the waiter to keep the change.

Professor Muller, who used to be a frequent visitor to the beer gardens, had his curiosity excited to find out what the waiters did with the ten-penny pieces, so he watched them.

He soon discovered that the waiter put all the ten-penny pieces in the left-hand pocket of his vest.

When Professor Muller came to pay for his beer, as usual, the waiter could not find a ten-penny piece to complete the change.

"I am afraid," said the waiter, going through his pockets, "that I haven't got a ten-penny piece."

"Suppose you feel in the left-hand pocket of your vest," replied the Professor.

The waiter did so, and as he handed out the requisite coin he whispered in the Professor's ear:

"I suppose you were a waiter yourself once upon a time!"

Precept and Practice.

The old couple were eating their first meal with their son after his return from college.

"Tell us, John," said the father, "what have you learned at college?"

"Oh, lots of things!" said the son, as he recited his course of studies. "Then," he continued, "I also studied logic."

"Logic?" said the old man. "What is that, my boy?"

"Well," replied the young fellow, "let me give you a demonstration."

How many chickens are on that dish, father?

"Two," said the father.

"Well," said John, "I can prove there are three."

Then he stuck his fork in one, and said, "That is one, isn't it?"

"Yes," said the father.

"And this is two"—sticking the fork in the second.

"Yes," replied the father again.

"Well, don't one and two make three?" said John, triumphantly.

"Well, I declare," exclaimed the father, "you have learned things at college! Mother," continued the old man to his wife, "I will give you one of the chickens to eat, and I'll take the other, and John can have the third."

Memorial Services in the Church of England Cathedral, at Gower St. Methodist Church, St. Andrew's Church, Masonic Temple and British Hall.

HIS LORDSHIP BISHOP JONES.

OFFICIAL MEMORIAL SERVICE IN THE N.F.L.D. CATHEDRAL.

The beautiful Cathedral of the Church of England, with its classic pillars and Gothic arches, took on a sombre aspect yesterday, draped as it was in black and purple for the official memorial service of His late Majesty King Edward VII. This service afforded to many in the city the opportunity of joining in corporate prayer and in a communion of soul with their brethren throughout the Empire as the mortal remains of the Peacemaker were committed to its resting place. The noble proportions of the structure, the festoons of purple and black, intercrossed in the arches above the pillars, the purple and black background of the altar, its lights, its chaste white flowers, the plaintive tones of the organ, the soft voices of the choir, the sad setting of the chants, anthems, hymns, the simple grave, homely and patriotic note of the Bishop's address, the solemn mein of the mourners, were all in unison and blended and harmonized with the feelings of grief which dominate the citizens of the Empire. Especially appropriate was the text which spanned the altar with the inspiring words, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a Crown of Life." His Excellency the Governor, Sir Ralph Champney Williams, K.C.M.G., with his suite, Mr. T. Fitzherbert, P.S., Lieut. Gale, A.D.C., and Capt. Goodridge, A.D.C., were received by the Rector and his staff of Churchwardens. His Excellency was in official uniform, as was the Right Hon. Sir R. Bond, K.C.M.G., who wore the uniform of Privy Councillor. The organ played "Requiem Aeternam," Harwood, and Chopin's "Funeral March" as the choir, theological students and clergy and Bishop filed into their places in the stalls.

The clergyman in attendance were: Rt. Rev. Llewellyn Jones, Bishop of Newfoundland, who was attended by Rev. G. H. Bolt as Chaplain, carrying the Pastoral Staff; Canons Pilot, Temple (Topsall), Dunfield, Smith (Portugal Cove), and White; Revs. T. G. Netten (Pouch Cove), J. Hewitt (Ferry Harbor), G. H. Godden (St. Thomas), W. C. Booth (Bell Island), J. Bell and J. Brinton (Cathedral), I. Uphill (St. Mary's), C. H. Barton (Queen's College), G. Hewitt (Bay Roberts), E. L. Birchby (St. Thomas's), and J. Prescott (Random). Next followed the hymn "O God, our help in ages past." Rev. C. Barton, Vice-Principal of Queen's College, read the opening sentences of the Order for the Burial of the Dead: "I am the resurrection and the life saith the Lord: he that believeth on me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die. "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: who I we beseech Thee, O Merciful Father; through Jesus Christ our Mediator and Redeemer. Amen." "The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore. Amen." Whilst the choir and congregation were singing "When the dark waves round us roll," His Lordship the Bishop attended by his Chaplain, bearing the Pastoral Staff, proceeded to the pulpit and delivered the following address:—

ADDRESS OF THE LORD BISHOP.

On a day like this, when there is one topic in every household, one question on every lip, it is impossible to stand in this place, and take part in this service, and not endeavor to give some expression to that of which every heart is full. By a natural Christian instinct the whole nation is gathered into one focus. We all press, as it were, round one open grave, we all feel that with the mourning family who are there assembled, we are indeed one. God is at this moment holding up the uncertainties of life, and the great realities of death before every eye, and casting a funeral pall over the whole Empire. The shadow of mourning is resting not only on the British Isles, but on the remotest extremities of the earth where the English language is spoken, even among the children of that New England now parted from the English Crown, but hastening to communicate through their late Chief Ruler, as their representative at the grave, the assurance of their sympathy with that Crown. "The King who has just passed away from us, and whose body is being even now consigned to its last earth-probably his characteristic. And how much we have owed to that calm and well-ordered mind which has presided over the destinies of this nation during the last nine years, we have yet perhaps painfully to know. Never was a King more deserving of the affection of his people. Surely we may say that since his accession he has been inspired by the blessed memory of those beautiful associations which surround the whole long reign of his beloved and honored mother. Surely it has been his unswerving devotion to duty, his constant labor to promote the peace of the world, and his zealous endeavor to aid in the alleviation of human suffering, which at so critical a period as the present has won irresistibly for his person that homage from all his subjects which some probably would have denied merely to the position of the Sovereign. Only put the case that during this first decade of the twentieth century a ruler obstinately addicted to his own will, standing very rigorously up on every point of his prerogative, had wielded the sceptre of England, instead of one wise enough to make all reasonable concessions to his people, and gracious enough to secure their affections—would the machine of the State have worked as well, or passed as smoothly over the ruts and rugged places which in these days of new ideas and popular commotions, all machines of State must encounter? Bless God, my brethren, for that greatest of all national gifts, a thoroughly wise and good ruler, to whom any man may be loyal from conviction of his personal attributes, no less than of his exalted station. It is not my intention, however, to occupy the short time at my disposal is upon these lessons that I wish now for a few moments to fix your thoughts. I confine myself to those which apply to all of us alike. The first lesson of such an event is that it calls us out of ourselves. Nothing is so narrowing, contracting, and hardening, as always to be morning in the same groove, with no thought beyond what we immediately see and hear close around us. Any shock which breaks the even course, anything which makes us think of other joys and sorrows besides our own, which teaches us to rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep—is of itself chastening, sanctifying, edifying. Secondly, it touches a chord which vibrates in the least responsive hearts. It appeals to our sense of the sanctity, the preciousness of family ties; it draws us round one family hearth. It makes us feel according to the trite saying, that Royal persons are of the same flesh and blood with us; but it also makes us feel—which is no less important—that we are of the same flesh and blood with them. Let us, as we think of the loyal mourners at the open grave to-day, thank God that he has implanted these instincts within us. Let no one be ashamed to own, let every one be eager to cherish, these pure and sacred feelings, which the whole nation has before now been proud to exhibit, and which are in fact the foundation of all true national and all true Christian life. Thirdly, it brings before us how amid all our dissensions and party strifes we are still Englishmen—Englishmen first and foremost—whatever we may be besides. This it is which gives to the Family that represents the whole people, so rare, so singular course we can bear is the tenderest and the most intimate. Let us ask for our new King and Queen—let us ask not one gift but all. Not comfort alone, but every office of the Holy Ghost—wisdom for the station—peace for the mind—strength for the day—grace for the soul. And for ourselves, my brethren, the lesson of death is indeed the same, whether it comes from the palace or the cottage. It speaks—and let it speak. And what does it say? "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." I believe there is in many minds a dark apprehension of the future. I believe that they see in this affliction the rising of a cloud which is to envelop our nation's happiness. I cannot so read the providence. But so long as the Divine Presence is so manifest amongst us, in a loyal and loving, and united people, I can only see sunshine in the grave—the dawn of a brighter and a better day.

After the Bishop finished his address the hymn "God of the living in Whose eyes" was sung, and the Bishop pronounced the Benediction. After this there was a pause for silent prayer. Next came forth the plaintive and solemn strains of the Dead March. The Bishop, clergy and choir retired in processional order, and after His Excellency had left the vast congregation wended their way out of the sacred structure whilst Organist Allen played Beethoven's "Funeral March."

Matins were said at 7.30 a.m., and at 8 a.m. the Bishop celebrated Holy Communion, assisted by Rev. Jas. Bell, Gospeller, and Canon White, Epistoller and server. In the prayer for the Church militant supplication was made for those who departed this life in Thy faith and fear, especially Edward, our late King and Governor.

GOWER STREET CHURCH.

If an immense congregation and profound reverence be a mark of loyalty to our late King, then it was essentially expressed at Gower Street Methodist Church last night. The entire service was a becoming memorial for so great a monarch, and it was not only expressed, but it was felt by all present. It was a service not soon to be forgotten. It was truly British, deeply spiritual and personally helpful.

The pastor of the church, Rev. W. D. Dunn, conducted the service, and was supported by the city ministers, each of whom took some part in the ceremonies of the hour. The service opened by the rendering of the Dead March in Saul. This March is always impressive. To listen to it is to feel a desire to be better; but it seemed to appeal to us in an especial manner last night. True, it was the Dead March in Saul, and for over a half century we have been hearing it in memorial; but as we stood with bowed heads and remembered it was for the King—for our King—for the Peacemaker, and that he was gone—that day, this 20th day of May, 1910, he had been laid away among the dead, and over him—as over all the sons of men—had been pronounced the words "Dust to dust," we indulged in a moment's reverie as the last notes of the March died away.

The service then proceeded as arranged on the programme, and each part of it displayed preparation and discretion. The choir was a full one, and with the rich organ under the control of such a master as Mr. King both the music and song were quite in keeping with the solemnity of the hour. "Crossing the Bar" and "Now the laborer's task is o'er" were certainly most impressive; but we think that Miss Russell's rendition of Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair" was the climax of the evening. Every word of the solo was heard and every note listened to its fullest value.

The honour, as well as the responsibility of preparing and delivering the address was conferred upon the Rev. James Nurse, of Topsall; and both his preparation and his delivery of what he prepared were worthy the resting place, was endowed with gifts such as are given to very few of us. Perhaps it would not be too much to say that very few men in the history of the whole world ever occupied a loftier or a more difficult position, and that very few could have sustained it with more singular wisdom and grace.

Of all his moral qualities, judgment, and taste as part of judgment, were yond and above all sects and parties there is such a thing as an inextinguishable light.

In dwelling at any length upon the qualities which by universal consent made the career of our King so remarkable. Such a treatment is rendered almost unnecessary by the tributes which have been paid to his memory from every pulpit and by every section of the press. But there are lessons which we may carry away with us from the event which has left so deep an impression on palace and cottage, abroad and at home, wherever the tidings have reached. And it is living, present shape the fact that beguiling feeling towards our common country, a sacred bond in the thought of one familiar name calls up all our patriotic emotions. There are nations, and there have been times, in which the devotion to the reigning family has been a thing separate and apart from the love of country. There have been times and places where the love of country, has existed with no loyal feeling to the reigning family. Let us thank God that with us it is not so. Loyalty with us is the personal, romantic side of Patriotism. Patriotism with us is the Christian, philosophic side of Loyalty. Long may the two flourish together, each supporting and sustaining the other.

And lastly, let us learn by this mournful event to go forth in more earnest prayer for those most nearly affected by it. Prayer for the King and the Royal Family is a prominent feature of all the public services of the Church. But perhaps with some of us the very familiarity of the words and the frequency of their utterances deprive them of much of their force and reality. Let us in this time of sorrow supplicate the more for the widowed Queen, "the Queen Mother," as we shall love to speak of her. For it to every one of us the death of our King comes not so much as a national loss, but rather to everyone as his own personal bereavement, what must it be to her? The very exaltation of her rank aggravates the trial. For sorrow seeks the shade. To be observed is itself a pain. To be alone with God is best. And the only in-occasion. The speaker paid a high tribute to His late Majesty, and showed how far-reaching was his sway, and laid special emphasis upon the magnitude of His Majesty's influence among the nations of the earth. He depicted the great sorrow that had come upon the Royal household, and especially upon the Queen Mother. He dwelt strongly upon his beautiful characteristic of the Peacemaker and moralized upon his last words, in which he said, "Well, it is all over, and I think I have done my duty." PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

At 11 a.m. yesterday the memorial service for the late King Edward VII. began in St. Andrew's Church, a very large congregation being present. The church was draped in mourning and the service was one of deep solemnity, bringing home to the minds of all who took part in it the advancement of things material. The anthems rendered by the choir were "What art thou?" (Stainer), and "Blest are the departed," from Spohrs Last Judgment. Mrs. McKinnon's beautiful voice was heard in the hymn "O Rest in the Lord," and the organist, Mr. Mawer, rendered the Dead March in Saul and Chopin's "March Funebre." The preacher was Rev. Dr. Cowperthwaite, who took as his text "For death is come up into our windows and is entered into our palaces."—Jer. 9-21. The rev. gentleman's discourse was as follows:—

This text is quoted because it is suggestive of the circumstances that have called us together to-day. Death, unbidden, almost unannounced has entered the palace of our King and terminated his busy life and beneficent reign. We bow in humble submission to the King of Kings in the exercise of his prerogative over the lives of men.

"Death loves a shining mark," and in entering the palace of our King, he has with unerring precision struck a shining mark. None more so, perhaps, could have been found among the inhabitants of the earth. The news of the sudden death of our Sovereign flashed by the electric current under the seas and over the hills and vales, has brought sorrow to millions of hearts and homes throughout the Empire. Yes, his death is more than a national bereavement, it touches a sympathetic chord in the brotherhood of nations. For King Edward was almost universally known, revered and loved. Our King was royally born, having come of a long unbroken succession of sovereigns from William the Conqueror.

As a ruler he was wise and tactful, and filled a difficult position with the highest credit to himself and advantage to the realm over which his sceptre extended. As a diplomatist he exerted a strong influence in the different courts of Europe. An English monarch, in these days, has fixed constitutional limits to his power, by skill and judgment, exercise of great influence than even absolute monarchs, and this our own Sovereign did, always using that influence with wise moderation.

As a man, he possessed in an eminent degree, those qualities that went to make him what the world ever admires—a man of man. His sterling honesty, his love of fair play; his passion for work, as well as the deep sympathy he ever manifested for his people in their pleasures or misfortunes, made him beloved among all classes. Somebody has said of our late King that he was a very human man. This estimate of him is correct. Whilst a stickler for form, ceremony, etiquette in royal functions, he was the plain brotherly man in his intercourse with ordinary people. He had no particular affection for the collectors of royal revenues, but the plain, breezy, mat-fact man who went to his work without official or society veneer, he took to his heart.

There was no cant or hypocrisy about him. He would readily disclaim that he was either a seer, or a saint ready to be canonized, though in his early training and education every effort was used to make him a prodigy of learning and a bright example of all the virtues. That he always took kindly to this unwearied concern of tutors and advisors, is very doubtful. He lived for years in the lime-light of a criticism, often unjust and even merciless, bearing in silence and truth dignity, both praise and censure, and when he came to the Throne, vacated by Queen Victoria, of Blessed memory, he revealed a seriousness of purpose and a delicate understanding of the duties of his high office, that have been the delight of his subjects and the admiration of the world. Very justly has he earned from the grateful people of his own and many nations, in consequence of his untiring efforts in the interests of peace, the title of "Peacemaker." And "Blessed are the Peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

King Edward "has ceased at once to work and live." During his all too short reign, no obstacle could daunt him in any effort for a nation's well-being, no foe intimidate him, but the last enemy whose name is Death, has conquered. When he saw this foe approaching, he said, "No, I will not give up, I will stand with my back to the wall and work to the last." And he did, with the pluck of our unbeatn race, but the empire of death is stronger than the strength of a royal arm and a royal will. With the words upon his dying lips that will be historic, "Well, it is all over, but I think I have done my duty," he has been gathered to his fathers, the best, the noblest of his hand over us for good. The simple, tender, womanly message of the heart broken Queen Mother that she and her royal son, our new King, should have a place in our prayers, will find a ready response in a nation's love. And He who healeth the broken in heart will assuredly send them his help in time of trouble.

Our hearts are very sympathetic to-day as we follow, in thought the funeral cortege that bears to its resting place the body of our Sovereign. A nation's tears fall upon his bier, but God's sun shines through these tears, giving us the rainbow of promise that His presence shall still be with us and his hand over us for good. The simple, tender, womanly message of the heart broken Queen Mother that she and her royal son, our new King, should have a place in our prayers, will find a ready response in a nation's love. And He who healeth the broken in heart will assuredly send them his help in time of trouble.

MASONIC SERVICE. Some 250 Masons assembled in their various lodges last night at eight o'clock for the purpose of attending the Memorial Service of His late Most Gracious Majesty, King Edward VII., Protector of the Craft, and late Grand Master of the United Orders of England.

After the lodges were closed they proceeded to the blue room. This room was somberly draped in black and purple. Bro. W. Spry presided at the organ, Bro. N. Snow played the violin, Bro. A. Miller, the cornet, Bro. W. Gray the tenor horn and Bro. Morgan the euphonium.

There were present:—The District Grand Master, E.C., Rt. Wor. Bro. J. A. Clift, K.C., in the chair, the Officers and Members of his District Grand Lodge being present; the District Grand Master S. Masters, Officers and Brethren of St. John's, Avalon and Tasker Lodges and Visiting Brethren.

Dead March in Saul was played while members enter.

Address of the District Grand Master. During the past fortnight we have been bowed in sorrow and we have mourned with genuine grief the loss of him, who as Masons, we were privileged to honor as our Grand Master and as the Protector of the Craft. The King is dead and we are assembled this evening, in the character of Masons, to pay a humble tribute of respect to his memory. At noon to-day the body of Our Sovereign, King Edward VII., was consigned to the earth whence it came. A nation mourns the loss of a Sovereign, the world is in deepest sympathy, it has lost a Peacemaker. Before proceeding with the ceremony this evening it may not be out of place if I were to relate a few incidents in the Masonic life of our late Grand Master. Initiated into the mysteries of Masonry in 1869 by His Majesty the King of Sweden, it was not long before His late Majesty took a prominent part in the work of the Craft. We find that a special communication of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, held in October, 1870, he was installed as Patron of Scottish Free-Masonry. On the resignation of the office of Grand Master by the Marquis of Ripon in 1874, the Heir Presumptive to the Throne was on the 2nd of September of the same year elected to that office and subsequently on the 28th of April, 1875, was duly installed and invested as Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of England. Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, in May, 1882, received a deputation at Buckingham Palace from the Grand Lodge, headed by the Prince of Wales, Grand Master, and wearing Masonic clothing, to present an address to Her Majesty on her recent escape from the hands of an assassin. In 1885, the late Prince Albert Victor, eldest son of the Prince of Wales, was initiated by the Grand Master in person. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales presided at a large assemblage of Free-Masons in the Royal Albert Hall in June, 1887, when an Address on the occasion of her Jubilee was proposed to Her Majesty. On the 2nd of August following, the Queen received a deputation, headed by the Grand Master, when an address was presented. In 1888, the Grand Lodge presented an address of congratulation to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their silver wedding. On June 7th, 1888, His Royal Highness presided at the centenary celebration of the Royal Masonic Institute for Girls, when the contributions to that institution amounted to the handsome sum of £57,500. On June 14th, 1897, His Royal Highness presided over another assembly of Masons, when an address was passed to Her late Majesty Queen Victoria on the occasion of her Diamond Jubilee. The fees of admission, amounting to £7,012 19s., were without deduction equally divided between the Prince of Wales Hospital Fund and three Masonic institutions. At the celebration for the Royal Masonic Institute for Boys, held in the Royal Albert Hall, on June 10th, 1898, under the chairmanship of His Royal Highness, solemnity of this kind as a summons to prepare for our own approaching dissolution. What are all the pomp and splendour of majesty, the pride of wealth or the charms of beauty when nature has paid her just debt? Fix your eyes, my brethren on the last scene; view life stripped of her ornaments and exposed in her natural meanness and you will be convinced of the futility of all those empty delusions. In the grave all fallacies are detected, all ranks are levelled and all distinctions are done away. "Well, it is all over, but I think I have done my duty," were the dying words of our late Monarch and Grand Master. May and, in quiet meditation, attempt to justify the ways of God with man. Touching this Master Spirit, which has passed from this earthly kingdom to the immediate Kingdom of its God, should we not feel that

"The silent organ loudest chants The Master's requiem." For in our common sorrow, heart responds to heart in silent sympathy. Imbued, as are our spirits with "thoughts that lie too deep for tears," do we not feel the force of the majestic silences, and the sublime truth of the great philosopher's aphorism that speech is silvern, but silence is golden?

Can anything be more thrilling in its contemplation than that solemn pause in the whole world's work, which marked this day in every portion of the Imperial territory; and even on the distant seas, which own no sovereignty save to the keels which cleave them, and these in great part the keels of British Commerce and Britain's defence. Surely that was an eloquent silence when the throbbing pulses of unnumbered ships, in all the oceans of the world, ceased for a time to beat; when thousands of British trains, freighted with sorrowing subjects, stayed their motion into reverent rest "like Joshua's moon in Ajalon," when the whirring wheels of factories ran down, and the din and clangor of labour sunk into a solemn hush.

Far down in the depths of our spirits we feel the "tirl" of the emotions, which these things stir into existence. Intuitions they are, evidence it may be of a higher but undeveloped spirit power. Elusive they may be, but they are none the less persistent. Language is impotent to express their subtle ineffable reality.

Even in these latter days there are men of learning and of science, men of illustrious names in letters and in art, who hold that the Heavens declare the glory of God even by some mystic connection with the destinies of men and nations. I propound no such theory. But I cannot refrain from comment on the fact that in all ages, and among all peoples, this belief,—call it superstition if you will,—has obtained. "They fought from heaven," says the Sacred Book.

"The stars in their courses fought against Sisera." The star in the East heralded the great event to which the whole creation had moved. Into the mouth of Brutus Shakespeare put the words: "The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of Princes," and again, "When beggars die there are no Comets seen."

Comets have always been associated in the minds of the people with national disasters; and certainly there are many instances of the coincidence of the appearance of these wanderers from the interstellar space with terrestrial disasters of plague and famine and fires and floods and deaths of mighty men.

There is a marvellous and striking analogy in the present surrounding and the death of Henry V. This was a King who, by his splendid exploits, had become the idol of the English people. The First Part of King Henry VI., a play which, by the way, is not altogether Shakespeare's, has the following opening: Scene I. Westminster Abbey. Dead March. Enter the funeral of King Henry V., attended by the Duke of Bedford, etc.

Bedford speaks: "Hung be the heaven with black, yield day to night! Comets importing change of times and states, Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky. And with them scourge the bad revolting stars That have consented unto Henry's death. Henry the Fifth, too famous, to live long! England ne'er lost a King a King of so much worth, England ne'er had a King until his time."

Upon this great Monarch's fame the lustre of magnificent achievements has shone for nearly five centuries; and his is a name still dear to English hearts, to whom he is the embodiment of Patriotism, of Valour, and of Honour; the type of the stalwart fighting Englishman of the days when Kings led their troops to battle and to victory. At the time of his death, as the ancient chroniclers inform us, calamity, such as has befallen us, it seems almost presumptuous to endeavour to express in mere vocal utterance the feelings which lie deep in our individual bosoms. How much more audacious would it be to attempt to clothe in words that thrilling sense of sorrow and loss which has pervaded that greater heart of the Empire, that heart which we can realize as a living force, that heart of the nation which dispenses its life-blood through all the veins and arteries of the British world?

Overwhelmed by the magnitude of this sentiment, one naturally asks if it were not better done to cherish a silent sorrow for a loss so great; and, in quiet meditation, attempt to justify the ways of God with man. Touching this Master Spirit, which has passed from this earthly kingdom to the immediate Kingdom of its God, should we not feel that

At the time of his death, as the ancient chroniclers inform us,

Mr. W. H. Goodland delivered the introductory address, after which Rev. Canon White delivered his very able address of which we give the following synopsis:—

The British Society is assembled to pay a tribute to the memory of the late King in that spirit of loyalty which we have seen emphasized since the demise of our monarch. There possibly may have been kings as great and good, but in his own particular age it is hard to imagine one greater. To appreciate his greatness we should recall the conditions that existed when the King was called to the Throne on the death of Victoria the Good, who had completed a reign of sixty of the most prosperous years, the affections of her people growing more deeply rooted each year. The standard of sovereignty which she left behind was the admiration of the world, and who could hope to live up to it? The verdict of his own people, as well as that of the whole world, is that King Edward has realized the high ideals of his mother, and besides increasing the prestige, the dignity and splendor of British Kingship, has by his example and influence elevated the science of kingship all over the world. As a diplomatist his reputation was world-wide. He also was keen to take a deep interest in the great body of toilers and the poor, and it always afforded him the greatest pleasure to relieve distress. We will all the others of his subjects throughout the Empire stand at his graveside to-day and pay our tribute to his memory. The world is poorer for the loss of Edward the Peacemaker, but we all trust that our new King (whom God preserve) may worthily the mantle that has fallen upon him. King Edward lies dead, but we must all bow to the will of Divine Providence who rules the affairs of nations and individuals. We must conclude that He does all for the best. Prophets of evil say that he nation has passed the noonday of its day. We must prove that this prophecy is without foundation. We are obliged to condense for want of space.

We are honoring a great man, one to whom duty was ever a watchword. We may learn many lessons from his life. A great landmark in our history having been removed, an opportunity is given to make men think. If we will to learn the lessons that are laid open to us as citizens of the Empire, our tribute to the King will be lacking in what makes sympathy rich and bidding. Devotion to duty and country, to God and King, is the best tribute. If the deceased King could impart his wishes to us from the other world, I believe the first one would be to ask us to do all in our power to make the reign of the new King more glorious, if possible, than his own. In his last dying words, "I think I have done my duty," the King beautifully summed up his whole life, and every heart looking back over the past nine years will answer, "You have." From the moment that he ascended the Throne till his dying day he was ever influenced by the idea of duty. Nine years ago no one believed Queen Victoria's reign could be excelled. It does not detract anything from the fame and honor of Queen Victoria to say that she left a son whose reign excelled her own in the increase of peace, honor and glory of the Empire. The historians of the future will speak of his reign as one of the greatest in the history of the Empire. The rights of the people have been safeguarded and the King as many times during his reign taken a direct personal interest in the wants of the laboring people. His memory will be also treasured as the Peacemaker, not alone at home, but broad in international affairs. He has set an example for rulers that will for all time to come have an influence for good. Our tribute should not end at the graveside. He did his duty. We should do ours.

A great landmark in our history having been removed, an opportunity is given to make men think. If we will to learn the lessons that are laid open to us as citizens of the Empire, our tribute to the King will be lacking in what makes sympathy rich and bidding. Devotion to duty and country, to God and King, is the best tribute. If the deceased King could impart his wishes to us from the other world, I believe the first one would be to ask us to do all in our power to make the reign of the new King more glorious, if possible, than his own. In his last dying words, "I think I have done my duty," the King beautifully summed up his whole life, and every heart looking back over the past nine years will answer, "You have." From the moment that he ascended the Throne till his dying day he was ever influenced by the idea of duty. Nine years ago no one believed Queen Victoria's reign could be excelled. It does not detract anything from the fame and honor of Queen Victoria to say that she left a son whose reign excelled her own in the increase of peace, honor and glory of the Empire. The historians of the future will speak of his reign as one of the greatest in the history of the Empire. The rights of the people have been safeguarded and the King as many times during his reign taken a direct personal interest in the wants of the laboring people. His memory will be also treasured as the Peacemaker, not alone at home, but broad in international affairs. He has set an example for rulers that will for all time to come have an influence for good. Our tribute should not end at the graveside. He did his duty. We should do ours.

Mr. W. H. Goodland delivered the introductory address, after which Rev. Canon White delivered his very able address of which we give the following synopsis:—

The British Society is assembled to pay a tribute to the memory of the late King in that spirit of loyalty which we have seen emphasized since the demise of our monarch. There possibly may have been kings as great and good, but in his own particular age it is hard to imagine one greater. To appreciate his greatness we should recall the conditions that existed when the King was called to the Throne on the death of Victoria the Good, who had completed a reign of sixty of the most prosperous years, the affections of her people growing more deeply rooted each year. The standard of sovereignty which she left behind was the admiration of the world, and who could hope to live up to it? The verdict of his own people, as well as that of the whole world, is that King Edward has realized the high ideals of his mother, and besides increasing the prestige, the dignity and splendor of British Kingship, has by his example and influence elevated the science of kingship all over the world. As a diplomatist his reputation was world-wide. He also was keen to take a deep interest in the great body of toilers and the poor, and it always afforded him the greatest pleasure to relieve distress. We will all the others of his subjects throughout the Empire stand at his graveside to-day and pay our tribute to his memory. The world is poorer for the loss of Edward the Peacemaker, but we all trust that our new King (whom God preserve) may worthily the mantle that has fallen upon him. King Edward lies dead, but we must all bow to the will of Divine Providence who rules the affairs of nations and individuals. We must conclude that He does all for the best. Prophets of evil say that he nation has passed the noonday of its day. We must prove that this prophecy is without foundation. We are obliged to condense for want of space.

S. MILLEY

Little Tips for Small Gardeners.

How to Make Your Plants Thrive and Your Beds Blossom.

Soot is a good fertilizer; but that from coke fires is deadly to plant life as well as insects, because it contains so much sulphur.

Never use soot and lime in conjunction—one kills the other, and both are useless. Soot is not good for light or sandy soils, but very valuable upon stiff, clayey ground.

Avoid the use of soot in town gardens; lime is a more-suitable remedy against enemies in the soil in these positions.

Soil of a rich dark colour is generally full of humus from the constant use of animal manures. Lime will release this and make the plant food more assimilable, besides cleansing the ground.

Ashes are Good for Lawns. A few worms do good, but a large number is sure proof of too much humus.

Ashes from wood and burnt soil with a little sharp sand soon bring a lawn into good condition, and are a great check upon worms and their castings.

Never use salt upon a cold or stiff soil. It makes it wet and close. Leaf soil and turf should be looked over very closely for insects. This applies more particularly to that collected from the roadsides and ditches, which has a wireworm and other larvae from the beetles and other insects being checked in their flight.

In using this for carnations it is well to bake or thoroughly roast the compost, which will kill the eggs and not detract from the plant food.

Where turf falls from the drip under trees, ivy will succeed. It is also a great improvement upon turf edgings by the pathways in towns. It can be cut as one chooses, is never bare, and one avoids the breaks in curves and under trees, so often found when turf is employed.

Never give artificial manure to runner beans. It is deadly. A trench six inches deep with plenty of well-rotted manure at the bottom is better. The trench is a great help when watering, and the beans must never suffer from draught.

Runner beans often fail to set their fruit during a spell of hot or dry weather. Sprinkle the blossoms frequently. This is a great help to them. Never allow pods of beans or peas to get beyond the stage for kitchen use. If allowed to mature the whole strength of the plant goes towards that natural purpose, and the plants cease giving a succession of young pods.

The black-fly so prevalent upon broad or house-beans, cannot be killed without injury to the plant. Pick out the tips of growth as soon as this enemy appears and burn them. It is well to pick out these points whether affected by insects or not, as it pushes the beans into mature growth quicker.

When sowing peas or beans, let the boughs spread a little from the top rather than draw towards the centre. There is great advantage in this.

Before sowing seeds, water the drills well, if the ground is at all dry. It is better than watering on the surface afterwards. Most summer-sown seeds will germinate quicker under this treatment.

Do not sow seeds deeper than two or three times their own diameter. This is a safe rule.

In the case of small seeds it is well to keep them dark until germinated. This applies more particularly to seed sown in boxes, and in the greenhouse, such as mignonette, asters, and begonias.

See that the soil is moist enough not to need watering before, or just as the seed is sprouting. Numbers of failures can be traced to this first use of the water-can.

You can transplant runner and dwarf beans, also beetroot, as freely as lettuce or cabbage.

Use black, not white, cotton when protecting from birds. Thrushes and blackbirds do no harm except for a short time with fruit. All the rest of the year they are insect feeders and the gardener's best friends.

A little powdered red-lead dusted over radish and peas will keep mice away. Roll the seed in this before sowing, but use it very sparingly.

Keep Away the Weeds. If you want good fruit or specimen flowers they must be thinned as soon as they can be handled. This throws the energies of the plant that would have gone to many into a chosen few, and you do not lose in weight, only in quantity.

Keep the hoe going, even if there are no weeds. A loose, or even dusty, surface soil insures bottom moisture. Do not let hammers come into direct contact with seed or the roots of newly-planted subjects. Rather let them find it as they advance in growth.

Never be in haste to sow or plant because the calendar says it is the proper time. Study the season and conditions of your soil a little. Remember that all subjects that have a natural tendency to run, such as strawberries, violets, and mint, are seeking for fresh ground, and this is a proof they need new soil, and should not be retained in the same position too long.—P.W.

Fishermen Regard Them as a Boon to Mankind—Mr. Frank Bantfield Tells How They Cured His Backache.

Garnish, Fortune Bay, Nfld., May 20 (Special).—Among the fishermen here who through exposure to wet and cold are subject to those pains and aches which come from diseased kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills are looked upon as a positive boon to mankind. They are never tired of telling how their Backaches and their Rheumatism vanish before the great Kidney remedy.

Among many others Mr. Frank Bantfield, after many years of suffering, has found relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills, and here is what he is telling his friends:—

"I find Dodd's Kidney Pills the best medicine for Backache I have ever used. I only used two boxes and they cured me of Backache I had had for five years. It started through a strain. My father's back also bothered him, and he got some relief from me pill I gave him. They were too precious to give him more. All persons suffering from Backache should use Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Why do Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Backache? Simply because Backache is a Kidney ache, and Dodd's Kidney Pills positively cure all Kidney aches and ills. This has been proved in thousands of cases in Canada. If you haven't used them yourself ask your neighbors.

Cars Stop Running.

As part of the Reid Nfld. Co.'s system the street cars came to a standstill in different parts of the city at 11:30 yesterday and did not start to run again until noon. The shore train which arrived here at 12:35 p.m. was held up at Duff's Station, and the regular which left here at 8:45 a.m. stopped between Woodford Station and Wyndale. Everything on the whole system, steamers, trains, machinery and men ceased work for an hour as a mark of respect to the memory of the late King Edward whose interment was taking place.

The Restraint of Wisdom is Silence.

It was Solomon who said "There is a time to be silent and a time to speak," if everybody only knew when to be silent and when to speak, what unpleasantness could be avoided, what good could be accomplished. There are people who have ready tongues, a quality not always to be made use of. Prince Bismarck said: "First be sure that you are right then speak." This is we are right, our words are right, our prices are right, and we do right by selling clothing, dry goods and furniture for cash or credit.—B. FRIEDMAN, 301 Water St., Water Side, Phone 546, P. HINARD'S LUMBER MAN'S FRIEND.

Mr. A. D. Rankin Dead.

It is with feelings of sincere regret that we record the death of Mr. A. D. Rankin which sad event took place at his residence on Circular Road, Thursday afternoon. Mr. Rankin who had hosts of friends in the city and all over the country, was in his 61st year and succumbed to a painful and lingering illness. For many years he successfully conducted a grocery and wine business on Water Street, carried on extensive farming, and owing to his knowledge in this respect rendered valuable assistance to the Local Board of Agriculture. Of a genial and kindly disposition Mr. Rankin was liked and respected by all classes who will be sorry to learn of his death. A widow and a son and daughter survive Mr. Rankin and to them the Telegram extends its sympathy.

Narrow Escape.

When the schr. Resolute, of Westleyville, was coming up the shore on Tuesday, at dark, the tide dragged her in on the land near Pouch Cove, and a boat was put out to tow her off. After doing so David Rodgers stood up, on the gunwhale as the boat ranged alongside and overturned her. Rodgers went into the water and was carried a long distance astern by the current. The boat was uprighted and others of the crew pulled to his aid. He had gone down repeatedly before being rescued, was nearly gone, and narrowly escaped drowning.

ESCAPED BROKEN LEG.—As Edward Mansfield was helping shift the Crissie C. Thomey at Duder's wharf this morning he fell between the stib and the pier. He struck a spike projecting from the wharf and his left leg, which was badly cut, narrowly escaped being broken.

FUNERAL CEREMONIES

In London and Windsor

Special to Evening Telegram. LONDON, May 20.

Sovereigns and representatives of all the Powers of the world paid a last tribute to-day to England's great monarch, Edward the Seventh, whose body now rests in St. George's Chapel at Windsor Castle where the bodies of Edward the Fourth and Sixth and with William the Fourth are entombed. At Westminster Hall the widowed Queen, who spent a last minute beside the body of the King, was assisted from her carriage by the German Emperor, upon whom the loss of his Royal uncle has laid heavily. The Emperor kissed the hand and cheek of Alexandra and passed her to her son, King George. Here the Queen Mother, glancing up, caught sight of the King's charger waiting to follow his master to the bier and near at hand the King's favorite dog, and she faltered, gripping the arm of the King and pathetically gazed upon the animals Edward loved so well. Then she entered the Hall with King George, Emperor William and the Duke of Connaught, there to offer a silent prayer and watch the removal of the coffin to the gun carriage. The order of precedence in the procession was governed by kinship as related to the position of the sovereigns. Bluejackets dragged the gun carriage through a line of purple to St. George's Chapel, and the simple services were said by the Archbishop of Canterbury and York, assisted by others. King George with Alexandra on his arm walked up to the grave behind the coffin with the German Emperor and Queen Mary following. During the silence the widowed Queen moved to the foot of the Catafalque and knelt, and just before the coffin was lowered to the crypt King George placed upon it a Royal Standard.

Nervous Headaches—Sick Headaches.

Men or women who suffer from either will find instant relief in using "Nerviline." Externally it acts with startling rapidity as a pain destroyer. Penetrating the surface deeply, "Nerviline" carries a soothing, pain-subduing power to the delicate nerve tissue affected. A few drops in sweetened water supplies an antidote for the inward conditions that cause both nausea and neuralgic pain. Its effect is immediate. Nerviline is as nearly specific for pain as human knowledge has yet devised. It is offered with a guarantee, if not efficient, money will be refunded. This looks like a big proposition, but Nerviline in many hands and for forty years has given millions of consumers such universal satisfaction as to warrant its introduction to the American public on the basis, "if not satisfied money refunded." Could anything be more convincing? Sold under guarantee by druggists, large size 50c, trial size 25c.

Eczema's Tortures

All treatments failed for three long years—Cure complete with Dr. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

Mrs. Link, 12 Walker St., Halifax, N. S., writes: "After three years of miserable torture and sleepless nights with terrible eczema, and after trying over a dozen remedies without obtaining anything but slight temporary relief, I have been perfectly and entirely cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment. After the third or fourth application of this grand ointment I obtained relief, and a few boxes were sufficient to make a thorough cure. It is six months since I was freed of this wretched skin disease, and as there has been no return of the trouble I consider the cure a permanent one."

Such cures are not brought about by imitations and substitutes for Dr. Chase's Ointment. It is therefore necessary for you to be certain that the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M. D., the famous Receipt Book author, are on the box you buy. 60 cts. a box, at all dealers or Edmundson, Bates & Co., Toronto. Write for a free copy of Dr. Chase's Recipes.
