LOST THOUGHTS.

My heart's lost children, whither have you fled?
Or wherefore have you left me comfortless?
Ungrateful children, whom I nursed and fed
With my own soul's pure milk, and hoped to bless
By your consoling presence the sad days
When love and friendship shed no more their rays.

Lost in the night wilderness of Mind!
Gone, it may be, to other souls less kind
Than she who gave you birth, and without care
For all the little charms to me so fair!
Will you return no more? Return my own?
Perhaps you have but slept an idle wake.
Awake to bless me—I am all alone—
And let no other your sweet slace take!

Interesting Tale.

ROSABEL'S FAIR.

There was an immense deal of chattering going on in the drawing-room of Mrs. Roxbury. Usually this was the abode of trim elegance, but just now it presented a scene of bright and picturesque confusion. A long table was strewn with all manner of fancy work, rainbow-tinted worsteds, dolls, waxen bique, etc., whose tresses were in all states of progress; these, together with those graceful, useless articles which women do affect and dote upon made a "melange" very pretty if somewhat confusing.

Several groups of excited debaters were gathered about the table discussing points and cons. For all this array was the prelude to one of those exhibitions, the delight of femininity and the horror of masculinity—jeopardy, a fair.

The presiding genius of the occasion appeared to be two brilliant blondes, these Mrs. Roxbury's daughters. The wax dolls waiting for their toilets were not more red and white of complexion than they; just as blue eyed and flaxen-haired were also.

They were called "handsome," were Marion and Clara Roxbury; but I think these same wax-dolls to whom they have been compared had just as much real heart warmth about them as had these two brilliant beauties.

To my mind, little Rosabel Mallory, sitting in the corner there, very busy over a Persian tili, had decidedly the fairest face to look upon. It touched you with its delicate tints, its serene eyes, its gently smiling mouth. Rosabel was Mrs. Roxbury's niece; she had been left a legacy to that lady, who accepted the same with somewhat more of reluctance than is apt to be the case with recipients of legacies in general. However, the lady made a virtue of necessity, gave Rosabel a "home," "educated" her, less slowly, however, than her own daughters, and every one concluded that little Rosabel was excellently well provided for.

I think, however, often and often Rosabel's heart yearned for that tenderness born only of loving sympathy. Father or mother she remembered not; only in the dim distance a sweet smile-face that had looked upon her with kindly eyes, that had kissed her many times, and at parting had given her a little glass slip whereby to remember "Uncle Jack."

This same glass slip reposed upon Rosabel's mantel, its central ornament; when she looked at it she thought of the bronzed, manly face that had gazed upon the motherless child so tenderly, and had said: "Don't forget Uncle Jack. He'll be sure to come back some day, and then you shall want for nothing!"

In the mean time, while I have been telling you of Rosabel, it had begun to grow dusk; when the large drawing-room was flooded with light from the many branches of the great bronze chandeliers, beneath whose rays every thing looked brighter and gay than ever.

Then it was time for tea. So the servants brought in the service of frosted silver, and an informal meal was served, for every body was so busy with chattering and discussing divers plans that they could hardly stop to eat. The fragrant Bohemian and aromatic Mocha loosened even tongues that had been silent before. Rosabel's delicate cheek owned the magic, and began to flush. Her handsome cousins, Marion and Clara, looked still more like the wax-dolls they were dressing, so cherry-red grew their cheeks. And when every one was looking her prettiest the bell began to ring, and divers gentlemen made their appearance, some of them admirers of Mrs. Roxbury's daughters, and some of them to play the part of escorts to the other ladies.

There was Mr. Delacy Primrose, a youth with a slender mustache and a flourishing cravat, who straightway began to pay his "devoirs" to Miss Marion.

"Mr. Primrose, of course we can depend upon you to come to our fair?" asks Marion with her most winning smile.

"Of eth, of course," responded he with a faint lip.
But secretly Mr. Primrose's mind misgives him; he knows that fair are expensive luxuries for individuals of slender purses, and truly Mr. Primrose's purse was as slender as his moustache.

It took all his income to support what he was pleased to consider the character of a "gentleman." Oh! if people only knew how much less it really costs to be radically a lady or radically a gentleman the character would cease to be burdensome!

It is the "appearance" that is so expensive. As for the reality there are none so poor that they may not bear "without reproach the grand old name of gentleman or lady."

But Mr. Primrose imagined that the title for his recent immaculate kids, French boots, shining broadcloth, astonishing neckties, etc., and so found himself at his wits' end continually to support the title.

Among those who had entered was one young man, whose face differed from the others. It showed thought, feeling, intensity. His broadcloth was far from being as fine as that of Mr. Primrose, but he had that quiet repose of aspect and manner that nothing but that best grace of good-breeding can give—utter unconsciousness of one's self and one's belongings. It did not at all surprise you that he gravitated almost at once toward the corner occupied by Rosabel, whose lap was filled with bright colored worsteds, which with deft fingers she was rapidly changing into tassels for the aforesaid Persian tili which had fallen to her share.

Rosabel looked up; a swift shy-glance with a soft smile to keep the same company, but did not stop an instant in her work.

"You are very busy, Miss Mallory."
"Oh! I am always that, Mr. Eustace," answers Miss Mallory with a very tiny sigh, under her breath as it were.

Yes, Rosabel was never idle. Aunt Roxbury was too good a "manager" not to look out for that; Rosabel had always enough to do and to spare.

"Don't you think it is well to be kept busy?" questions Mr. Eustace, evidently with the intention of "drawing out" his companion.

"Certainly. But then, Mr. Eustace, I think all labor is not congenial. And sometimes I do wish more than I can tell that I could find time to learn many things of which I am very ignorant."

"I'm sure, Miss Mallory, that you know many, many things which most of us ought to know; one could tell that by a single glance at your face."

"Oh me! I'm sure I haven't a wise face by any means," said Rosabel, laughing so that a dimple showed for the first time in either cheek.

Mr. Eustace thought, what he, at all events was too wise to say, that Rosabel's face was to him beautiful, with the best kind of beauty—the sweetness of a lovely Christian womanhood.

The next day the fair was to be opened. Every thing, of course, was to be put in readiness.

Rosabel, as was apt to be the case, was placed on the working committee, and dispatched to see that all the necessary arrangements were made for the evening. Her handsome cousins, Marion and Clara, elected themselves to "stay at home," that they might be perfectly bright and fresh for the evening's campaign.

The room where the fair was to be held presented a somewhat desolate aspect upon Rosabel's arrival. It was "cluttered up," as the phrase is, with odds and ends of various kinds, all of which must be gotten rid of before any thing further could be accomplished.

"Good morning, Miss Mallory," said a voice particularly musical just now when a friend's presence was so much needed.

"Oh Mr. Eustace! this is more than fortunate; I was just beginning to despair."

"Never do that, Miss Mallory; when the cloud is darkest look out for the silver lining, you know."

How efficient Mr. Eustace was; how well he understood every thing. Then some of the other damsels interested in the fair made their appearance, bringing "big brothers" with them, and every thing began to go as merry as a "marriage bell." After a little, matters fell into "ship shape," the long tables clad in white grew bright with knick-knacks of every description. Underneath the skillful supervision of Mr. Eustace a fairy-like bowser arose upon a platform in the centre of the room, and in fine—to make a bad pun—the aspect of every thing became decidedly fair (y) like.

In the meantime Rosabel, like some gentle spirit, flitted to and fro calling order out of confusion wherever she came. "The little room which had been dedicated to culinary purposes assumed a comfortable aspect. A tiny apartment found itself deftly metamorphosed into the 'ladies' dressing-room,' until at length, satisfactorily fitted, yet with a face that wore its brightest, sweetest smile, Rosabel pronounced every thing 'in order.'"

Mr. Eustace brought her safely home then, and as he lifted his hat for good-by, Rosabel said with the shy, sweet glance that became her so well:

"You will surely be there to-night, Mr. Eustace? You know every thing will be so new to me, that a friend's face will indeed be welcome."

"I will surely be there," responded Mr. Eustace, with that earnest, kindly smile that is to a man's countenance what the soft, shy glance and 'flush of rose-tint is to a woman's."

"Rosabel, Rosabel!" rang out in chorus from the cousins, Marion and Clara, as soon as the former made her appearance.

"Coming, coming!" answered Rosabel, like Cinderella in the play.

"Your hair, your hair, your hair," demands Marion.

"Ah! no, she's to crimp mine first," frets Clara.

"Patience, patience, cousins mine. I'll do both in good time!"

The two sisters by-and-by are equipped, when they suggest more than ever two waxen dolls on a grand scale with their cherry cheeks, little red mouths, and flaxen hair, crimped and curled.

Rosabel, whose heart overflows sometimes even toward them, says:

"You both look so pretty I must kiss you."

"There, then, just on our cheeks, Rosabel dear. Don't muss our hair for any thing."

So, gently inclining toward her, first one tucks her cheek, and then the other; Rosabel kisses them both in a very subdued manner, and, embracing themselves in velvet cloaks and ermine furs, they depart in the waiting carriage.

Rosabel's work is not yet done, however; the house-maid is absent; it is her "afternoon out."

So the former descends to the kitchen and superintends tea. Cook is very cross to-night, ready to snap and snarl like Cerberus at any unlucky wight that ventures into her domain.

But somehow Rosabel's presence acts like a charm; growing subsides into a subdued grumble that sounds like this:

"I've coaxed that other two has gone off in their floundings and fixers; can't neither of them party to look at as Miss Rosabel, with all their pink cheeks and yaller hair; and left this poor lamb to do the work."

"Dear me, cook, what are you thinking of? Why there's nothing to be done. There, the coffee's ready; now for the cake and preserves. Come, bring the water, that's a dear soul, and we'll all have tea."

"It's the saint's that ye are, Miss Rosabel. Heaven bless ye, me darlint!"

Yes, cook, Heaven will bless Rosabel. Fatherless, motherless, there is one in heaven that keeps watch and ward. Holy angels will not be wanting to guard the motherless one!

Mrs. Roxbury has a "sneak-ache?" "The fair has worried her into it, the house has been so upside down;" so Rosabel presides—graciously, gracefully, as she does most things, a quiet, sweetly smiling household spirit. Surely the amber tinted coffee must taste nicely as she turns on the urn, if the flavor of her smile gives it relish; and certainly it does not need "Sovereign" china to brighten the excellence of the Delecta that she always makes "exactly right!"

Tired Uncle Roxbury thinks so. He wishes, sometimes, in a vague wondering way, that his daughters were "more like Rosabel." But their mother tells him that "they are poor dears, girls," and supposes they must be put after all Rosabel is a "nice little thing." Once his wife had lamented the care and burden that other people's children were. Whereupon the quiet gentleman, who usually said nothing, had dryly responded that he guessed Rosabel paid for her food and clothing.

A battery was opened upon him forthwith that would have silenced any man. It did Mr. Roxbury at any rate; but the next day a package came—for Miss Mallory. It contained the first silk dress that Rosabel had ever possessed. Uncle Roxbury presented it. It cost him dear, however; to appease the angry excellent gentleman was called upon to present wife and daughters with respectable fabrics at the expense of five dollars per yard. Rosabel's had cost possibly, one third of that amount.

Being a damsel however, of moderate aspirations in the line of dress, Rosabel proceeded on this occasion to complete her toilet with the same in a very contented and grateful frame of mind. She was about descending kitchenward to prevail upon cook to assume the character of escort, when she was saved that trouble by the appearance upon the field of Mr. Eustace, who had a remarkable and praiseworthy facility of always being a friend in need.

Tucking Rosabel under his arm, he conveyed her off with him, a state of things which by no means diminished her grateful and contented frame of mind.

The scene of the fair re-echoed, a delightful aspect greeted them. Within the bowers blimped in gilt cages—varied; flowers blooming in swinging baskets were offered for sale by pretty, bright faced girls, whose invitation to buy it would indeed be very hard to refuse.

Rosabel, remembering how bare and despolate had been the aspect of the room in the morning, could hardly believe the place to be the same.

Mr. Eustace found Rosabel's table, and led her to it, saying playfully:

"Now I shall discover, Miss Mallory, the contents of that mysterious package you hold in your hand, and which I have been unable to prevail upon you to trust with me."

Smiling, Rosabel took from its wrapping a little ship of glass, which she set upon her table as its central ornament.

Something in the aspect of Rosabel's face touched Mr. Eustace.

"Has that crystal vessel a history, Miss Mallory?"

"Yes. My Uncle Jack gave it to me for a parting gift years ago. It is a token he will come back some day, I try to think, though he may be lying fathoms deep, it may be."

But Rosabel had no time just now for sentiment there were buyers at her table, so she turned her attention to them.

Almost for the first time Rosabel heard one and another whisper, "What a pretty girl!" Did they really mean her or some body else? Women like, she wondered to herself, if some body else thought so, then blushed that she should be so noticed!

The room began to fill until it was crowded, and with the crowd, Mr. Delacy Primrose made his appearance. Mr. Primrose, coming to the fair, had made a sacrifice. He had contemplated the purchase of a new tie, but had surrendered the idea that he might invest the amount at Marion Roxbury's table, there by giving incontestible proof of his devotion.

By-and-by, making the circuit of the room flattered himself that he was one of the "favorites" of the occasion, Mr. Primrose lounged up to Rosabel's table.

"Been successful, Miss Mallory?"

"Not so very, Mr. Primrose. Every body admires, but few buy."

"Every body admires, eh? Well, speaking of that, have you noticed that queer-looking old covey sitting by the door? He's been there for half an hour, and he's done nothing but look at you. One of your admirers in disguise—must be!"

Rosabel looked and saw sitting near the doorway a man, elderly yet not old, of visage smart and sun burnt, yet blimming over with bonhomie.

In a moment she had left her table, and standing before the weather beaten man, flushed with timid blushes fair and sweet to look upon, in her fresh girlhood she had said:

"It is lonely for you sitting here, sir. Wouldn't you like to look at some of the pretty things?"

"Bless your heart my little girl. I'm looking at the prettiest sight now I've seen, this many a long day. But I'll come with you, and if you have got any thing to sell to an old fellow like me why I'll buy."

"You're a sailor, then sir?"

"That I am; sailed all the way over, as the song says."

Rosabel with that same strange feeling thrilling her, brought her new acquaintance to her table.

In the most indiscriminate manner he began buying right and left; dolls, pin cushions, tidies, nothing seemed to come amiss. In the midst of it all his eyes fell upon the ship of glass. The bronzed visage lighted up.

"Is that for sale, my pretty child?"

"If it was though, I'd like to buy. It was just such a one that I gave, ever so long ago, to a child named Rosabel."

"I'm Rosabel, I'm Rosabel!" cried the young lady, laughing and sobbing in the same breath. And you—you are Uncle Jack—come home at last!

Rosabel and Uncle Jack then proceeded to make a spectacle of themselves, and the fair beheld Miss Mallory in the embrace of an elderly gentleman bronzed and weather beaten to the last degree, both of them sobbing away as heartily as possible.

After a while the twin settled down, and Rosabel, with humid eyes and cheeks like roses washed in dew, brought Uncle Jack first of all to Mr. Eustace, murmuring softly:

"He has been so kind to me, Uncle Jack."

The elder man eyed the younger one with a grain of suspicion in his aspect but the frank manly bearing annulled every thing but confidence.

Now that I've just found her, you won't think of robbing me of her, will you youngster? questioned Uncle Jack somewhat sternly.

"Oh! we are only good friends, began Rosabel laughing and blushing.

I've heard of those very good friends before I declares Captain Jack with a twinkle of humor in his eye.

Mr. Eustace is silent, but he looks at Rosabel, and voluminous wouldn't have said as much as his glance.

In the mean time every body hears that Miss Mallory's uncle has suddenly come to light.

I suppose he's as rich as Croesus says somebody to Mr. Primrose.

Yes, very likely. Sorry I called him an old covey. Maybe she won't remember it, though, in the excitement.

And Mr. Primrose settling his tie, begins to think that really it might be worth while, &c.

Mrs. Roxbury is delighted, of course. She has so faithfully superintended Rosabel's education; if she had been her own child she could not possibly have given her more time and attention. So anxious as she has been about her, too, for Mr. Roxbury is not over rich, and if anything had happened to him what would become of them all?

Captain Jack, in his bluff sailor fashion assures Mrs. Roxbury that her anxieties are at an end, and that good lady set him down as a "booby."

Presently, however an immense chest filled with exquisite fabrics from the looms of India and China, and containing all manner of quaint and beautiful things, makes its appearance.

A slight token from Captain Jack to Mrs. Roxbury and daughters for all their kindness to his dear niece Rosabel.

Mrs. Roxbury and daughters immediately conclude that Captain Jack is a most delightful man, one whose acquaintance is worth cultivating and they cultivate it assiduously.

Miss Rosabel Mallory told no secrets. In very truth she had imagined them all kind enough until she learned that a heaven upon earth a home sanctified by loving hearts and fond appreciation may make for a woman.

If there was sadness in the past the present is so bright that Uncle Jack's niece finds neither time nor inclination to remember it. She has masters enough now to reach her all that she has longed to know; she has two true hearts that love her better every day—Mr. Eustace and Uncle Jack, and she thanks the Giver of all good for the happiest home that the sun ever shone upon.

And that was the end of Rosabel's fair.

TWO CALIFORNIA BOYS KILL A PANTHER.

The following story, narrating how two boys killed a panther and a cub, is told in the Sacramento Union, by a subscriber, residing in Colusa county, California.

"The particulars are related by a gentleman residing in the vicinity of Newcastle, upon whose veracity you can safely rely. He says two young lads, with whom he is personally acquainted, started to the mountain, as is customary, with a flock of sheep. One was named Orlando Durie, aged fourteen years, and the other Charles Hill, aged eighteen."

After getting thoroughly settled in their camp, and the sheep under good control, they started off one bright morning trout fishing, having with them a sheep dog and a jack knife, the latter in possession of a young bull, and the only weapon of defense in case of an attack from any wild animals. The dog had gone far when they came to an old moss grown log, and where about to step on it, when out sprang a large she panther and her two cubs. Young Durie, hissed the sheep dog on the panther, and was pushing him in a frightful manner, when young Durie came to the rescue, catching the panther by the tail and endeavoring to pull her off the dog. In case the panther let go her hold it would have been sure death to the young adventurer. Just in the nick of time young Hill, seeing the danger his companion was in, drew his jack knife and rushed to the scene of conflict. Running his hand down over the panther until he felt the pulsation of the heart he raised the knife, and with unerring aim, put it straight into the panther's heart. The animal fell dead between them. Thus, by the merest accident, the lives of the two young heroes were spared. A few days afterwards they hunted up the two cubs which escaped during the fight with the old one, and killed them also.

Any person paying a visit to their father's residence can see the three skins hung up as a trophy of the victory they accomplished. The dog recovered and is as faithful as before his encounter.

The Standard.

SAINT ANDREWS, FEB. 21, 1872.

THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT is being pummeled unmercifully by some of our contemporaries, preparatory to a vote of Want of Confidence being introduced. The Government like its predecessors has failings, but they introduced and carried the School Law, which has won a host of friends for them both in and outside the Legislature; and it is not possible to form a government out of the present House which would attempt to repeal the Law. The effort to oust the Government would be expensive to the country, as we before stated, besides who in the present Legislature among the opposition would form a better Government than the one in power? Should a vote of Want of Confidence be carried the Government should dissolve the House and appeal to the people. There has been enough political turmoil, let us have peace.

Sudden Death.—Mr. William Stinson, an old and respectable resident, was suddenly struck down by an apoplectic fit on Monday morning last. He rose apparently in health, partook of breakfast and shortly afterwards went to the door, when he was seized with the fit, and remained unconscious until death. Medical aid was summoned, but before the Physician arrived life was extinct. Mr. Stinson was well known here, as a sober and industrious man, and followed the business of a caulker. He was in the 62d year of his age and leaves a widow and two sons.

During the past week some American gentlemen, capitalists from New York, visited this place for the purpose of purchasing and working the Mines in this County. We trust that they will accomplish the object of their visit, and develop the resources of our County.

DEATH OF MR. D. D. MORRISON.—Under the obituary head, will be noticed the death of a former old and respectable resident of this place, Mr. Donald D. Morrison, at South Boston. Mr. Morrison resided here for many years, and was largely engaged at one time in shipping cattle to the West Indies, and also as a builder. He was for several years Secretary of the C. C. Agricultural Society, the duties of which he performed with credit to himself and the Society. He also took a prominent part in County affairs, both through the press and at public meetings, and was a determined and able exposé of corruption. Although absent for several years from St. Andrews, he always evinced a lively interest in its welfare and that of the County generally.

Our facetious friends of the "Globe" cut both ways at times; their random shots are as likely to hit others besides the one aimed at. The "dangerous individual" would be as harmless as a lamb, in this section; the gentlemen who were so "overwhelmingly polite" as the "Globe" puts it, are genial good fellows, who treat friend and foe with that courtesy which distinguishes gentlemen everywhere. Neither Charlotte or York are led by politicians outside the borders of the respective Counties. The "great man" alluded to "drops the shop" outside the Commercial County, when traveling as a private citizen.

ALBERT COUNTY RAILWAY.—John Wallace, Esq., M. P., occupied the chair at a public meeting held at Petrolia on Tuesday, to further the Albert County Railway project. Mr. N. Smart, of St. Stephen, bound himself to build and equip the line—30 miles in length—for $14,500 per mile. The Railway will be a narrow gauge. The subscriptions for stock already amount to about $50,000. Another meeting is to be held at Hope-well on the 21st inst.

RAILS FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL.—The German barque "A. Klockman," from Barrow for Halifax, which put into Belfast, Reaky, repaired and sailed on the 21th ult.; and the brigantine "Golden Light," also from Barrow for Halifax, which put into Queenstown in distress, repaired and sailed on the 23th ult. Both these vessels are laden with rails for the Intercolonial Railroad. The "Golden Light" is owned by Messrs. Oulton Brothers and others, of St. John.

CONCERT POSTPONED.—The Vocal and Instrumental Concert by Mr. & Mrs. Butler, was postponed in consequence of the storm, it will take place this evening, in Masonic Hall. Their performances are favorably noted by the Press.

To the Editor of the Standard.
CLARK'S HOTEL,
St. Andrews, Feb. 17, 1872.

SIR:—During my sojourn with my friends from New York in your hospitable Town, I have had the pleasure of some very pleasant chit-chat with some of the noted men of your Dominion. As our conversation was chiefly on Religion and Politics, I find that in these particular topics that they compare admirably with our own institutions in these two branches of modern "science." The science of Religion is so various that it is not possible to describe all in this letter, but the science of Politics you may infer from the style of the politicians in your Dominion and in the United States by reading the petition of three worthy Protestant gentlemen who were office seekers under the government where they happened to live. These gentlemen were willing to do anything that would best serve the interest of some particular individuals, that would assist them obtaining their situations to office.

Mont.—Gratitude is a keen sense of favors to come.

Yours,
J. M. H.

PETITION.

To the Honorable Commissioners of the Excise.

The humble petition of Patrick O'Connor, Barney O'Brien and Corney McQuire, to be appointed Overlookers, vulgarly called Excisemen, for the Kingdom of Cork, in the County of Ireland, and whereas we your afforesaid petitioners will by night and by day, and all night and all day, will come and go, will walk and ride, will take and bring, will fetch and carry, will see all, and seize all, more than all and nothing at all, of all such goods and commodities as may be, can be, and cannot be liable to pay a duty, and we your afforesaid petitioners will at all times and times past be present and absent, be backward and forward, and behind and before, and be here and there, and every where and no where at all, and we your afforesaid petitioners will come and give information duly, truly, wisely and honestly, according to the matter as we know, and don't know, and we will not rob or cheat the King any more than his lawfully practised, and we your afforesaid petitioners are all of us Protestants and Gentlemen of Reputation. We love the King and will fight for him or against him, and run for him or from him, and serve him or any of his family or acquaintances as far and as much farther as lies in our power, dead or alive as long as we live.

Witness our several and separate hands in conjunction, all three of us both together,
PATRICK O'CONNOR,
BARNEY O'BRIEN,
CORNEY MCQUIRE.

Mr. EDITOR:—Can you inform your readers what the "Lantern Ring" are driving at? I heard they are plotting to enslave a recent importation into their desecrated and, if not destroyed, one of our educational institutions. It is too bad that the town is to be disturbed by such everlasting pests. Their evil deeds will live after them.

To the Editor of the Standard.
Sir:—It would be rather to be desired if the St. Andrews correspondent of the "Courier" could by any possibility be induced to confine himself to truth.

In the statement of the "Courier" of the 15th inst., on the Schools in St. Andrews, an leather is made to bring Mr. White conspicuously before the public, and may lead to an untoward episode. I think that person might well exclaim "save me from my friends," and that he would much prefer the past month of his career in St. Andrews should be lost in oblivion, rather than exposed to public criticism through the medium of the press.

The people of St. Andrews need no sympathy for the departure among them of Mr. W. on the contrary they sympathize with the Trustees at Shediac who have accepted him, owing to other teachers having made early engagements. Some idea may be formed of Mr. White's estimation in St. Andrews, from the fact that he applied for the Grammar School, and was rejected; his abandonment of the Advanced School here is matter of notoriety.

I am informed that the Shediac Trustees have been made aware of the fact by the Board of Education, and must feel annoyed at what necessarily obliged them to accept.

The misstatement in regard to Mr. Davis is rather insulting than flattery, as it is well known here that he is not nor does he profess to be a "first class" teacher; yet I think the inhabitants are satisfied.

OBSERVER.

TELEGRAPH CARDS.—On and since the 5th February the British post-office has issued for public use postal telegraph cards bearing a shilling stamp, for the accommodation of those for whom is more convenient to deposit the card in the nearest pillar, letter or other post-office letter-box than to send a message to the nearest telegraph station. The telegraph cards are taken from the boxes along with the other contents at the regular collecting periods, which are always specified on the table on or over the box; and on the arrival of a collection at the proper office, the telegraph cards are at once picked out and handed over to the telegraph-counter clerk, who deals with them in the ordinary course, obliterating the stamp. No postage is charged, the shilling stamp covering that, and also franking the message on the card to the same privileges as are granted to messages handed in to offices in the ordinary way.

SCHOOL WARRANTS.—Considerable dissatisfaction is expressed by School Teachers, who have not been paid for their services, although the returns were furnished up to 31st Dec. Why such unnecessary delay?

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—The letter of F. P. S. is received. He has not complied with our rules, and furnished his name, and he has made statements which require to be authenticated before being published.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE for March has taken a "New Departure," with Gail Hamilton as its editor-in-chief. In her salutatory unflinchingly avows that, "The original and governing motive of this Magazine is to make money." We know that this is a fact unparalleled in the history of literature, and we might disguise it in finer phrases, but the underlying motive would still be the same. Profoundly as we believe in virtue, morality, and the power of the press, we would never publish a periodical if we did not hope to advance our fortune thereby. Yet just how far we are to be advanced by the publication of an original Magazine of nearly sixty pages, contributed by such writers as Greeley, Parton, Bangs, Beecher, etc., and edited at an expense of nearly six thousand dollars—all for one dollar a year,—this is not so apparent to the general reader, and is explained only by the fact of its enormous circulation, which now exceeds that of any other Magazine published. Any person not acquainted with the Magazine may receive a specimen free, by addressing S. S. Wood & Co., Newburg, N. Y.

GOV. DOYLE.—The "Army and Navy Gazette" says: "In May, 1873, the service of Sir Hastings Doyle as Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia will expire; his Excellency's term of command, renewed as it has been for the third time, will then run out, and he will probably make his bow to the Legislature of his province and to British North America, where he will be remembered as a most popular administrator in time of no ordinary trouble."

Sad Affair in Prince Edward Island. Three Persons Poisoned.

The Charlottetown Examiner of Monday contains the following particulars of a melancholy occurrence which took place there last week: "We have to record to-day the most dismal tragedy that has, perhaps, ever happened in this Island. On Saturday last, two boys, Samuel Hill, belonging to Tracadie, and by the roadside containing Brandy. They drank some of the contents. Ellis took the bottle home and told his mother it was brandy; she drank some and gave a portion to her child. In less than a quarter of an hour Mrs. Ellis, her son, and the boy McEneaney were found dead. The child, we hear, is still living. It is supposed the bottle contained poison. As we go to press, these are all the particulars we can get." Dr. Jenkins, the Coroner, has proceeded to the scene of the affair to investigate it,—which it is to be hoped he will thoroughly do. The case is another instance of the careless manner in which people use articles of which they know nothing.—Globe.

MCADAM JUNCTION.—The Carleton Sentinel this describes the first slight rise in the Junction:

The Horse—Haddock's one of the only two that pastures in summer, amid the stumps in this neighborhood—is not as yet celebrated on the turf; the harness not such as Ferguson or Cliff would take pride in; not much leather, less mounting and much rope; the sleigh, not just from Loan Brothers or Boyer's, an extemporized arrangement, the base being a bob sled, the superstructure a hay rack, with hemlock seats; upon these seats some what less than a dozen of resident and visiting ladies and gentlemen crowded themselves in empty out seats, the nearest approach to Buffalo robes available and started off happy and demonstrative, for a cruise to "Little Lake," there to witness the strange manipulations by which a son of Erin, aided by a buck saw blade and hand spike, prepared the blocks of ice for transportation to the icebergs of the Junction.

It is just as well to record the first sleigh ride—there are those alive who may yet see sleighs and carriages dash along handsome streets at the Junction.

THE PRUSSIAN SCHOOL INSPECTION BILL.—which opened the places to laymen at the discretion of the Government—created a terrible stir in the German church. It looked so much like the beginning of a separation of Church and State that the Emperor himself received thousands of petitions from churchmen. He told them all that the new bill was not directed against the church, but merely against certain encroachments of individuals. The highest Protestant church authority in Germany, the Upper Lutheran Church Council of Berlin, joined the Catholics in a demonstration against the appointment of secular inspectors. More than a thousand petitions came from Silesia alone. The Emperor was considerably frightened and explained to the best of his ability, but the bill will be enforced.

SEVERE WEATHER ON THE ATLANTIC.—The German steamer "New York," from Bremen for New York, which put into Halifax on Wednesday last for coal, experienced terrible weather on the voyage. Her boats were carried away and her bridge broken.—The captain was lamed and the chief officer badly cut in the face by being knocked about the deck. One man fell from aloft to the deck, breaking his back and receiving other injuries, and lived four hours afterwards.

SUMMARY.
NEWSPAPER CHANGES.—Mr. James Davis retires from the "Morning News" with which he has been connected many years. We do not know whether he intends to print a new paper of his own, or to accept a Dominion office.—(Globe.)
The Royal Artillery at Halifax is under orders for England, and will leave shortly. It will possibly be followed by the 60th Rifles.
—Sir Edward Kenney and lady, accompanied by two of their daughters, left in the last steamer from Halifax for Liverpool—with the intention of visiting Rome and other continental cities.

A barn and shed connected with the residence of Mr. George O'Brien, on Union Street, St. Stephen, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. O'Brien's carriage, sleigh, etc., with a large stock of hay, was destroyed. The house sustained slight damage.

The Rothery Hotel (formerly the old St. John) was seriously damaged by fire last week.
A new Smoking Car, made at the Company's Shop here, by Mr. Ferguson, has been placed on the Road. Like all work turned out by him, it is a pattern of neatness. It also has another nearly ready for being placed on the road.

The Rev. Kenneth McKenzie is to be ordained and inducted minister of the Presbyterian Churches, at Richmond, to-morrow, Thursday, 22d inst.

Guarona—the seed of a Brazilian fruit—is a new rival to coffee.

There are six hundred printing telegraph machines for giving quotations of gold, foreign exchange and cotton, now at work in America.

Two corpses recently passed through London, Ontario, on the Great Western Railway, from San Francisco to New York, one of them a man who had yielded up the last breath in China, and had been sent by steamer to San Francisco, and thence sent as described. The cost of the transportation on each was $280— in the one case, the charges were "paid on," and in the other were for "collect on delivery."—There is a tendency everywhere to adopt new methods of swelling the mortuary register. Illinois young girls are just now dying from the effects of chewing the wax used in sealing fruit cans.

A very enterprising young lady in St. Louis managed to get caught to eight different men within twenty-four hours and told them all to come at the same time the next day to get her father's consent. They did so, and the scene which ensued can hardly be described. The lady in the mean time had left the State.

A young gentleman who recently took the school census at Burlington, Vt., was met at one house by fun-loving young lady, who in answer to the usual question whether there had been any births in the family since the last school census, replied: "The occupants of this house are three old maids, two of them sick, and a foin-cant; don't you think the prospect pretty poor?" The young man blushed and left.

The meanness of Biddleford recently took a barrel of flour from a poor tenant in payment for rent. The flour had been given to the poor man by the members of the Methodist church, to which he belonged.

The Maine Central loan bill has been signed by the Governor.

A Lewiston Journal says a well dressed woman so intoxicated that she could walk only with great difficulty, was picked up on Park street, Friday by some kind-hearted pedestrians and removed to a pum in which she was taken to her home.

The Brunswick Telegraph says an explosion took place in a large lamp used in the house of the late Mr. John Owen, on Tuesday night. A man was sitting up with the remains, when the lamp exploded with great violence, throwing its broken pieces in all directions. The room was set on fire, but fortunately the flames were extinguished. The man escaped uninjured as at the moment of explosion he was standing behind a stove in the room and was partially protected.

YARMOUTH AND ANNAPOLIS RAILWAY.—The Directors of the Western Counties Railway of Nova Scotia have issued a prospectus. One half of the capital is to consist of 12,500 shares of $100 each, for the other half $1,250,000, or any portion of it which may be required, the Directors are authorized by the Act to issue debenture bonds. The route will be through valuable timber and farming lands in the counties of Yarmouth, Digby and Annapolis, terminating at the seaport of Yarmouth distant from the city of Portland, Me., only 170 miles.

A NEW INDUSTRY.—A firm in Peabody extract grease from leather chips made by curriers, called whitenings, by patented process. They began business at their present factory in March, 1871. What was once considered of little value now some of the curriers in that vicinity ten or twelve hundred dollars a year. The whitenings are boiled by steam, then pass through a press of one hundred tons to power. The grease goes through a cleansing process, and is then ready for curriers' use again. The "cheese," or refuse from press, is sold for fuel at $5 a ton, and eagerly sought for at that figure. They produce about one half ton grease per day, or three barrels.

Harbour, thence Southwesterly following the several courses of the said Black's Harbour to a gulch or gully, distant about twenty yards to the Eastward of the Southwesterly course of the lot number Two, thence North twenty degrees West, parallel with the lines of the said lot number Two, twenty-seven chains and fifty links or thereabouts, until it intersects a line running Northwesterly from the Northeast corner of the said Lot number Two, across the shore of Little Sturgeon Cove, on the L'Eau River, to the point of intersection between lots numbers
Nine and Ten, thence along the said last mentioned line, to the said point of intersection, thence North seventy degrees East to a Spruce tree on Big Sturgeon Cove, thence Northwesterly following the several courses of the said Big Sturgeon Cove to the place of beginning; containing sixty acres more or less, with all the buildings, erections and improvements thereupon, being or appertain-ing thereto.
