"Thought You Could Down Me," He Says, and Proves Otherwise.

Sworn Evidence on the Winnett Matter-Declaration Includes a Second Charge-Was Sworn to Before Cooper Himself-Defendant

July 6, 1901.

I, Thomas Ings, do hereby make oath and say that I did and was working for Ald. Winnett last year and part of this, and that I did deliver for the said Ald. Winnett scantlings, and also boards, made by McKinley lumber, supplied by the said Mr. Ald. Winnett to the contractors laying down the cement walks in this city, and also, I did deliver coal and wood to the smallpox hospital for the said Ald. Winnett, for the city, and am prepared to go to any court of law and declare the same to be true.

(Signed THOS. INGS. Witness, MRS. MARY GOODWIN. Sworn before me, Neil Cooper, this day, July 6, 1901.

This sworn declaration, read in open council last night by Ald. Cooper, was the center of a very whirlwind of words. Ald. Cooper had come to the city hall primed for a conflict, and ready to show that what he had said regarding Ald. Winnett's connection with civic contracts was true. He did not at all like the treatment that he had received at the meeting of No. 1 committee Friday night, nor did he like the idea of it going abroad that he had been beaten; that, in fact, he had charged, but could not prove. His purpose last night was to show that would not only charge, but was pared to stand the test of veracity. Friday night's meeting he had said at it was all very well, they could do as they pleased, but he would show them Monday night, and the declaration he read contained the kernel of his showing. It was not made public without a tussle-Cooper on one side. and most of the council on the other. Ald. Greenlees objected strenuously to the reading of the declaration on the grounds that it had nothing to do with the matter under discussion, viz., the and signature of Z. Cooper was persistent; not only did he read the affidavit, but he declared he would have had the man who made it before the committee Friday night, had not Ald. Winnett sent his foreman to keep him from attending. Ald. Winnett spoke just once, to deny that he did this, but Ald. Cooper threw out the challenge to take the matter to court, and he would prove all that he charged. He had intended, he said, to let the charge regarding the sale of lumber to contrac tors suffice, but since he had received such treatment, he had decided to add the one about the supply of coal and wood to the smallpox hospital. An added interest was depicted upon every countenance around the board when Ald. Greenlees began to read the following clause in No. 1 committee's report: "On the reference from council re investigation of complaint by Ald. Winnett, and Ald. Cooper's state-ment re sale of lumber, your commitee begs to recommend that Ald. Cooper having failed to substantiate in any way his charge against Ald. Winnett, your committee recommends that the committee be dropped."

Wealthy Idaho Miner Came Home to Find His Friends He Had Worked for

Were Dead. Owensboro, Ky., July 9.—B. B. Widt-mer, a wealthy miner from Seven Devils Hill, Idaho, stepped from a St. Louis train last Friday and began a search for a sister-in-law who formerly lived here. No one at the depot could tell him about her, and he came on down into town, inquiring of people as he met them as to Mrs. Pauline Widtmer's residence.

Finally he found someone who remembered the tragic suicide on the night of June 30, 1897, of Mrs. Widtmer and her only child, Pauline, and told him the circumstances attending the death of herself and daughter. The poor man became grief-stricken. He had come all the way from Idaho, bringing with him 20 $500 bills to give to his sister-in-law and her daughter.

and to take them with him to his mining camp in Idaho. He expected to find them alive and well. Widtmer and his brother came here 30 years ago from Switzerland. They operated a small dye works establishment, but it did not pay, and he went west to seek his fortune. His brother soon died, leaving a widow and daughter. Until Josiah Flynt and Walter A. Josiah Flynt's knowledge of the habits and customs of the genuine tramp was gained by years of consorting with them all over the continent, living their life, thinking their thoughts, sharing at all endurable, than in the unwholetheir joys and sorrows, their dangers and privations, their crimes and their punishments. Wyckoff left a comfortable home and a respected place in the world to learn by actual xperience what is the common lot of the members of a class which is often confounded with that of the hobo, but which is nevertheless a distinct genus -the honest but unfortunate workn an who wanders far in search of employ Wyckoff traveled the breadth of the continent, from New York to San Francisco, working as an unskilled laborer, and in the course of his journey, as did Flynt in his nomadic life with the tramps, he learned more of the actual workings of the world of the submerged tenth than could the heoretical student of such conditions in a hundred years' perusal of books. The writings of these two men have nuch to throw light on a subject which should not only contain a certain degree of interest for every intelligent citizen, but which is being recognized by the student of social problems as a very serious factor in the vexed questions which remain to be settled ere existing evils and social inequalities can be remedied. There is little need to speak here of the causes which have led to the adoption of their strange mode of life by the thousands-yes, tens of thousandsof tramps who are scattered over the entered it because of the sheer dislike of labor, while others have done so for the opportunities it presents of living by petty crime. But how many there be who have drifted into it because of real misfortune, disappointed love or ambition, or the thousand and one things that make or mar human desinies, who can know except the great Power from Whom nothing is hidden? absence of responsibility, the freedom from care for the future, the absence all combine to render almost impossible a return to a more regular and con-

Farming is in name to be engraven on the walls of Fame's temple.

The real life of the tramp or the peripatetic searcher for employment nondescript inthem only as was 50 years ago. I noticed the towns dividuals, oftenest with breath redolent of alcoholic stimulants, who stop the wayfarer with pathetic appeals far a few cents to appease his gnawing hunger which has been torturing them for various periods, ranging from one to five days. If it is not food that they want to procure, it is a bed for the night. Generally the heartrendpeople are upon the soil, but are not ing story has its effect, and the tramp departs richer by a nickel, a dime, or a quarter, some giving "according to their means, and some according to their meanness." even though the giver is morally certain that the nearest saloon till will ere long receive the tendered coin. Occasionally the urban citizen is made the subject of more unwelcome attentions from criminally-inclined individuals of the roving fraternity, in the shape of nocturnal hold-ups and assaults. To the housewife, the tramp is a person to be placated with handouts of cold meat and pie. To the farmer, the tramp is a source of constant annoyance and real terror, for apart from his propensities for annexing loose articles of apparel and provisions, many a fine barn has gone up in flame from a spark dropped from some Weary Willie's pipe as he lay curled

Your tramp is the true Ishmaelite of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, for verily his hand is against every man, and every man's hand against him. The tramp's greatest enemies are the policemen and the train hands. The antipathy of the hopo for these two foes is the greater because the attentions of one bring him into conflict with the other, in that the constant aim of the law and its minions is to keep him traveling, the railway man is equally solicitous that he shall not travel in the fashion that is most congenial to him. a tramp will tell you stories of policemen, with drawn revolvers and flourished clubs, ordering him to board a departing freight, while on the train

Thus "B. E." or "E. B." So the tramp is a pariah, an out-cast, his way embittered by constant intrepreted as "bound east," battles with his herditary foes, and scarcely brightened by so-called kind-"B. A cross seems to be a nesses which are for the most part cabalistic sign which takes the place bestowed either in contempt or in fear. It remained for Flynt and Wycof the word "bound" or its alternative "B." One Kingston refugee foreshadkoff to tell the world that the tramp is a brother man, with the same power ows the finish of the fatted calf by the announcement that he is "Bound to feel joy and sorrow, despair and home," while a humorous individual more fortunate mortals varies the monotony by enrolling himpossess, and that even the lowest and

On another portion of the wall are the words, "Pater Noster," and underneath them are half a dozen lines of well-formed shorthand characters. Some of the knights of the dusty road have evidently tried to exchange their prosaic modes of expression for a flight on Pegasus, for in more than one place rhymes adorn the walls. What Grover Cleveland's subsequent movements were must be left to the reader's memory or the newspaper files, for the "brief chronicler of his time" was evidently again overcome by the desire to shed uncontrollable tears over the loss of his little Sarah. John O'Grady waxes quite confidential in his screed. After setting down that he lives on Joseph Campau street or at 69 Atwater street, Detroit, that he is better known as "Crazy Grady," and that his "Kid is fighting in Cuba for his country," he halts in rhyme as follows: "When far Graceful penaway and friends are, manship some of it is, with the neatremember this is the place for me and you. A good tramp over night after losing my kicker. This is my this side and last." on Which would seem to indicate that John, crazy as he was, did not approve of his apartment. A postscript: Toddy, if you don't find me in London you will in Detroit," calls up a heart-touching picture of the meeting of long-parted friends. Some unoriginal but wistfully reminiscent soul has penned a verse from the old song of "The Little Brown

Some of the sketches display considerable talent. There are some large flowers, done in colored chalks, that show that whatever their limner was, he had an eye for nature's beauties A ship and a large Union Jack, both drawn in colors, were the work of 'Windsor Slim" on different occasions one being dated 1, 2, '98 and the other 30, '99. "Plain Pilgrim," who was "B. W., 3, 1900," left his handiwork in the shape of two flags, one with the Jack upside down, which, in the language of the sea, is a signal of distress. England and America clasping hands under the Union Jack and Old Glory was the work of "Liverpool Jimmie, B. E., 12, 20, '98." One artist, with a taste for the ring, has left a crude but spirited sketch of Corbett and Sharkey. The design of the birds and scroll is a favorite, and the bestexecuted one bears the name of "Phila Bill." in neat old English lettering, with the date "March 17, '98" in a ircle underneath. Conn. Curly's name appears on a couple of patriotic emolems. The names of "Buffalo Blinkey" and "Mushrat Kid" appear on the Stars and Stripes, together with 'L. O. L., 107, Toronto." These same etters, preceding different numbers, occur with other names, but whether they indicate Orange affiliations or not it is impossible to say.

The lewdness which too often characterizes the work of foolish scribblers in public places is here surprisingly conspicuous by its absence, and in this respect these unfortunates show their superiority to many who have much greater opportunities for refinement and less excuse for outraging the decencies. Some of the guests have not been backward in expressing their dissatisfaction at the quarters assigned them. One disgruntled lodger unburdened himself thus: "London ought to be looked after for their dirty kind-"A horrible freezeout-Cananess." dian charity," was the caustic comment of another kicker. "Our Jim, Bound West," indicates his probable destination by the blue pencil drawing of a fish, with the words "Crow's Nest" on the tail. A Sarnia man is "now going to Manitoba," while 'Cohoes Slim' is "boun to Buffalo." "Baltimore Red" is nearing his journey's end, for he is "bound to Galt, 4 monnt, 8 day, '97." There is one other much-used though probably not useful function which the tramp fulfills that is as a foil for the good fortune of others. To the modern Pharisee, his smug contentment with his own virtue and prosperity, the tramp must come as a positive benefactor, for what an opportunity does the soiled wanderer present for the Pharisee to draw away his garments, roll his eyes to heaven, and say "Lord, I thank thee hat I am not as this man is.' And, after all, is it not something to be able to sing, with the poet of "the old trail, the long trail, the trail that the psalm of the is always new."

Should it rain the water drips through the roof; should the wind be keen the chinks in the wall afford it easy entrance. Two other thoughts impress themselves upon the beholder of these records of the sojourners for a night. One is the fact that the cell has evidently been little used of late, for most of the dates given range from 1895 to 1899, while for the years of 1900 and 1901 only a couple appear. But, as when the prison door closes on a man, he ceases to have a name and is known only by a number, so when one of these unfortunates enters that mysterious fraternity of the tireless foot, he drops the cognomen which he has borne and his companions know him only by a nickname borrowed from his original locality, some personal habit or peculiarity, or perhaps from a combination of both. It is urged by some that the fact of leaving home, and striking out in the world for one's self, is an experience that develops the best that's in a boy; that never until a boy does leave home and find himself among strangers, does he size himself up, and exercise the power he possesses to size up other men, and measure his own powers and possibilities by theirs. years-to look in again as nearly as may be at the old home spot and its old associations-must call up many memories, pleasant and sad.

Live o'er the fancied suns which ne'er shell roll, And woo the charm of song to soothe my Paint the fair scenes which charmed And in the infant stamped the future

It is a stock-taking time. It is of inquiry. Every boy is asked for; where he is; which failed, and which succeeded, and why. The answers open up by actual experience the fact. The experiences of life show the causes of success or failure: and disclose the fact which cannot be too strongly driven home into the mind of every young boy, that success is almost certain, in a moderate degree, to every boy who behaves himself, and uses with diligence the ability he posesses to the best advantage. It is within the reach of everyone so acting, to acquire a moderate competence, which is probably more to be desired than greater success.

We hope the Old Boys' union this year will be more successful than ever; that every happiness resulting from every profit obtainable, will be realized by the Old Boys; and that they will return to their new homes cherishing fonder feelings than ever for the old town; and that from these reunions many friendships will spring ip, and a greater percentage than ever Lendon's boys become successful

Condition of Agricultural Labor.

The question of obtaining farm employes is assuming proportions quite as momentous as that concerning the scarcity of domestic help. Probably not in many years has such difficulty experienced in securing farm hands as at present. Before the invention and introduction of labor-saving machinery had enabled the agriculturist to a large extent to dispense with his men, laborers were fairly plentiful. At present so difficult has it become to obtain help, that various devices in many instances have been resorted to. Some endeavor to secure desirable men under yearly contracts, in order to retain their services for the busy season. Should the scarcity of ability that it will, it may be found necessary to change the methods and is capable of adjustment, if those en-

A Large Problem of the Future.

The Boston Herald comments on and must, in obedience to the law of cleavage which separates those who are contented with their lot from their lot. Under whatever disguises, called by whatever names, inheriting or seizing whatever partisan organizations, the alignment of the two great political divisions of American voters, who will sooner or later struggle against each other for the possession of the government, will inevitably be upon the basis I have named. * * * The one party will be under whatever name, the party of capital, and the other party will be the party of labor."

The signs of this future conflict he thinks to be plainly discernable in past and present phenomena. The passage in which he sets this view forth is worth repetition and earnest consideration by all thoughtful citizens: "If any doubt had existed upon this subject among men accustomed to seriously reflect upon political problems, it ought to have disappeared in view of the developments of the last two presidential elections and of the present growing tendency alike of capital to more and more consolidate itself in great masses as in preparation for the coming struggle, and of the brotherhood of American labor to more and more consolidate itself in one organization in like preparation. Ominous signs are indeed almost daily discernable that those leaders of federated labor who are really loyal to it and are not purchasable by the party of capital have discerned that the true remedy for what seems to them the present unjust inequality in the distribution of wealth is through legislation. If yesterday they foolishly resorted to attempts to overawe the nomnees of the party of capital, sitting as legislators, by a display of force and threats of violence, by tomorrow they will probably have learned that the pallot in America, while not so noisy is far more peremptory than the dynamite bomb. It does not explode, but it controls; and its control will be as resistless as fate if the party of labor lecides to clothe all its demands, as it has already clothed many, in acts of legislation, for then will occur what whether she ought to remove the firerevolution under the forms of law."

There is no doubt that the enormous aggregations of capital in the United States will require the guidance of strong men, with strong minds, in the formation of the laws, if serious conlabor continue, and there is every prob- flicts are to be averted. But ashes of this kind are difficult to find, and one looks in vain for them in the smoking car. the public smoking-rooms, and even in private dens. To hear the pessimists rave one would imagine that it would soon be necessary for merchants to consider the advisability of placing warnings against smokers in their stores, and that society ought to be concerning itself with such questions as whether a lady is insulting a gentleman by smoking in his presence and the Duke of Wellington foresaw, a brand from her mouth in passing a gentleman, even though her husband is not treated with the same consider-

There was never a time when we men did not smoke, when one could not point to some who secretly loved this vice. And many a staid matron of today can reby the knowledge that she was tasting of a forbiden, if fearful, joy. as a rule even the charm of forbiddenness is not sufficient to tempt the feminine amateur to further bitter delights of this kind, and most women have remained content with a limited number of puffs.

There are men who take what they are pleased to term a broad and philosophical view of the subject, and who declare that inasmuch as tobacco is a vegetable that has a soothing upon the nerves, there is no reason why such tender-nerved beings as women should not enjoy this solace. but it must be confessed that popular prejudice is against these philosophers, and the fact that feminine supersensitiveness precludes the increase in numbers of women smokers.

He had evidently been in the water some time, as his clothing was pretty much stripped off. His shoes and socks were still on. The top of the head is almost entirely gone. From appearances on the part of the clothing found on him he had been a well-dressed man. The body was taken to Undertaker Butler's rooms, where it awaits, if possible,

WOODSTOCK BOY WHO WAS FULL OF GRIT

He Calmly Climbed Upon the Kitchen Table for an Operation.

Woodstock, Ont., July 9 .- A touching case of juvenile pluck has developed here. Fourteen-year-old James Pollitt, the son of a plumber, was taken ill with diphtheria Friday. The father is at Chatham working. There are ten children, most of them small, in the Pollitt family, and the family is poor. Dr. Melford went to see the He left him some medicine. On Saturday the doctor called again. He found the boy much worse; in fact, he was almost choking. Dr. Melford hastened away and got Drs. Murhastened away and got Drs. Murray and Mearns. The mother of the boy seemed to be in a dazed condition as the result of caring for the sick boy and the other children. did not seem to know what to do. So the doctors went into the sick-room where Jimmy was lying. The lad was unable to speak.

"My boy, we must leave your case entirely to yourself," said Dr. Melford. "You are in a very serious condition. An operation is necessary. Your father is away and your mother is overcome. We must leave it to yourself. I must say the operation

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS. St. John, N. B., July 9.-The King's Daughters' convention resumed business yesterday. The matter of raising the fee for the Dominion from 20c to 25c, in order to benefit the provinces, was carried. Owing to the deficit in the fee it was presilved to reduce the funds, it was resolved to reduce the salary of the Dominion secretary to $200 per annum. Accepted Toronto's invitation to meet there in 1904. Officers were elected as follows: Secretary, Miss Annie Brown; recording secretary, Miss Thorne, Fredericton; Dominion treasurer, Miss Austen, Toronto. Miss Nichol thought a form of introduction to members going to strange places would be beneficial, and it was resolved that a card of intro-

IT IS A LIVER PILL.—Many of the allments that man has to contend with have their origin in a disordered liver, which is a delicate organ, peculiarly susceptible to the disturbances that come from irregular habits or lack of care in eating and drinking. This accounts for the great many liver regulators now pressed on the attention of sufferers. Of these there is none superior to Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Their operation, though gentle, is effective, and the most delicate can use them.

MUST TAKE SAME TREATMENT

AS BOERS. Americans who fight in the Boer armies and are or hav been made prisoners by the British, will have to endure captivity until the close of the South African war. Britain has declined to comply with the request of United States Government to release an American now confined in the Island of Ceylon. The test case was that of a naturalized American named Morgan, who claims residence in Virginia. Alfred Milner, the British high commissioner in South Africa, disapproves of the release of foreigners who fought for the Boers. He has announced that a person who serves as a belligerent with the Boer forces loses his nationality, and must be treated as an enemy. This view is concurred in by the legal officers of the United States State Department. The department is satisfied, from investigation made by American con-suls and the British authorities, that all reports that the British are illtreating their prisoners are without foundation. The only hardship that Americans captured in South Africa will have to undergo will be that of confinement until hostilities cease. PAY TOO SMALL.

BRITISH LIBERALS IN COUNCIL

The Air at Least Temporarily Cleared.

All Sections of the Party Represented—Resolutions of Confidence in Sir Campbell-Bannerman Passed.

London, July 9.-The much-discussed meeting of Liberals called by Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader in the House of Commons, with the object of ascertaining whether he still retains the confidence of the party, was held at the reform club this afternoon, and resulted in the adoption of a vote of confidence in the leader of the opposition. All sections of the Liberal party attended. The Liberal Imperialists, headed by H. H. Asquith, were there almost to a man; but Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Sir William Vernon Harcourt were the only two who received any marked recognition on entering. greeted them with cries of "How's your friend Kruger?"

A CONCILIATORY SPEECH. Sir Henry made a conciliatory The Imperialists showed that they would not be associated with any anti-national policy, but the gathering was harmonious, and seems to have resulted in a temporary clearing of the air. During the course of his speech Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman met the Imperialists so far as to say the war must be brought to a victorious conclusion, but he thought the Liberals ought to insist on amnesty in the settlement. While the country had the sword in one hand it ought to have the olive branch in the other and show a disposition to come to terms with an enemy that had fought so bravely. MR. ASQUITH'S REPLY. Mr. Asquith expressed the highest appreciation of the qualities of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, but at the same time he regretted that the Liberal leader in the house had not been more outspoken in a policy of honest difference, rather than in impossible attempt to reconcile differences. He urged that those taking the views which he himself held should be free to express their opinions with-in the pale of the party.

A Deserved Recognition.

The presentation last night by the Liberals of London to Mr. George M. Reid was a deserved recognition of his half of the Liberals during many campaigns.

Mr. Reid is one of those who take a warm interest in a political contest for the love of it. He is energetic, able, and willing to work, and those who are willing usually get the work to do. London has a very large number of loyal, conscientious Liberals, but among them all no one has undertaken ed for two trains in the morning and among them all no one has undertaken more ungrudgingly to do his part, and sometimes the part of others as well, to get London into the Liberal ranks, will leave Port at 4, 7, 8:30 and 9:30 and to keep it there.

principal of the theoretical department and organist of St. Andrew's Church, Toronto.

Rev. Mr. Bethune and His Congregation Disagreed.

> He Was Accused of Displaying Passion in the Pulpit and Decided to Give Up Charge.

The Presbytery of London met this morning, and considered, as its most important business, the resignation of committee in the present bye-election Rev. Mr. Bethune from the pastoral campaign. The Springfield people were unanimous in regretting that his action was thought necessary, but the representatives of the Aylmer members spoke as though no other course were open. upon the subject. He said that the disagreement arose through Mr. Bethune's stand on the question of amusements. They did not object to his views upon the subject, but that he showed, in the pulpit, evidences of passion and anger, not proper there. Since so much had been said, Mr. Bethune added that if he had shown passion, it was passion for Christ. What appeared to have aroused the dissen-sion particularly, what they all took fault with, was that he had said it was like "casting pearls before swine."
"That's a good Scriptural expression, surely," said the moderator mildly.

Mr. Bethune added that he had done all he could to bring the congregation to the idea that if he had spoken strongly it was because of his earnestness to present the Word of God as he saw it. He had not succeeded, and wished his resignation to take effect

BEAUTIFUL MUSIC AT SPRINGBANK

Several Vocalists of Repute at the Park This Wee-

The special attractions at Spring bank during the present week are of a high order. The aim throughout has been to supply only such attractions as would please a mixed audience, and in this particular the company has been very successful. This week's programme is refined and attractive and should attract very large crowds. Among the artists who contribute to it are Fairman, the gifted singer, who will give comic sketches with his wife; the Roberts family of four, father, mother and two daughters, and the Llewellyns, high-class operatic artists, from Australia. The programme is interesting throughout, and of a character to please all classes.

FORMALLY OPENED

Large Crowd at Oxford Park Saturday-Successful Contestants for Prizes.

Saturday was the opening day at Oxford Park, and a charming day it was, but more charming than the day was the galaxy of youth and beauty which had gathered from far and wide to contest for the free lot to be given to the handsomest woman present. And babies-there were babies galore! Mr. Leslie De Voe, the company's judge, assisted by two local gentlemen, finally picked out Roswell Macdonald,

18 months old, son of Mr. Macdonald, of the Queen's Hotel, as the prettiest When the hour arrived for judging the ladies, the judges seemed some what bewildered. Mr. De Voe stated that during the past nine years he had presided at over 100 beauty contests for Messrs. Dodge & Draper, but never before had he seen so many beautiful women at one contest. Mrs. Percy Cassaday, of 558 Maitland street, awarded the free lot as being the hand-

It includes Fairman, the clever singer, who delighted thousands at Springbank last year; the Roberts family of four, who appear in comedy sketches, and the Llewellyns, high-class opera singers from Australia. "Among all those who will have spoken of me when you read this note, Douglas, there is but one man who will not have cursed me, but one who will think of me in days to come with any gentle feeling, and that is he whom I have injured the miost, whose very name I have covered with shame and dishonor. I do not ask him to forgive, Douglas. I know he will feel but pity for the erring, unhappy ather, who, ruined, dishonored, wretched as he is, thinks of him and loves him now—if that be possible—with yet more love than he has ever done before. I dare not look into the future for you, my son. I see in it nothing but sorrow, nothing but suffering for my sin. I was mad, surely, to risk all in such blindness; and, coward that I am, I leave you yet more sorrow in not daring to face the consequence of my sin. I see but one gleam of brightness in the future for you, and if the prayers of such as I are heard it will be given you. May the love and tenderness of the heart you have won still remain yours. That it will I hope, I believe, for she is true and steadfast, and she loves you; and when she is dearest to you, when her children and yours climb upon your knee in years to come, let the childish voices plead for me; and when you love them best you will pity me with yet greater pity, knowing how your father's heart bled for the wounds he caused his son to suffer, by the depth of your own love for her and them; and tell her that with my last breath I prayed—ed—even I pray. Douglas—for a blessing on her and you. One more charge I of your own love for her and them; and tell her that with my last breath I prayed—even I pray, Douglas—for a blessing on her and you. One more charge I leave you, Douglas; I need hardly name it here—the child, Kathleen. I can write no more; my hand fails."

The last few lines were almost illegible, so uneven and blotted was the writing, as all 6 was that on the envelope.

Douglas tolded up the letter, not quite, in the numbness of his great grief, understanding it all, but with the words "in not daring to face the consequences of my sin" cancing before his eyes in letter, of fire. What did they mean? Of what explanation did they admit? Could it be, great heaven; could it be that—No—no—no! It was impossible!

Staggering like a men intoxicated, Douglas left the room, clutching blindly at the empty air as if for support. He would assuredly have fallen had it not been for the assistance of the gentleman who was still writing on the landing, and who sprang forward and caught him in his strong arms.

Staggering like a men intoxicated, Douglas left the room, clutching blindly at the empty air as if for support. He would assuredly have fallen had it not been for the assistance of the gentleman who was still writing on the landing, and who sprang forward and caught him in his strong arms.

For one moment of natural weakness, the consequence of this terrible trouble, combined with long fasting and traveling. Captain Lancaster's head sank on the friendly shoulder which supported him; then he raised it, pale and calm.

"Thank you," he said quietly, but in a husky voice. "Did I understand you to say that you belonged to the medical profession?"

"I am Sir Frederic Palmer's assistant, the little Clarent and and entreaty, to which he protective than the heather." He

I am Sir Frederic Palmer Philip Clement," replied the other. "He, Sir Frederic, is absent."
"It is very late," resumed Douglas, as they went slowly downstairs, the young doctor's kindly blue eyes looking full of doctor's kindly blue eyes looking full of pity as he glanced at his companion's anguish-stricken face—the face of the man he had seen at Sir Edward Marchmont's ball, and sometimes since then so full of happiness and love, riding or driving with Andree during his short intervals of leave. "It is very late, and I ought hardly to detain you any longer; but can you give me five minutes?"

"Fifty, if you like," was the instant answer. "But first, Captain Lancaster, I must insist on your taking some re-answer. "But first, Captain Lancaster, I must insist on your taking some refreshment."

A faint attempt at a smile crossed Captain Lancaster's lips, and when they entered the dining room together he allowed his companion to pour out some wine, which he drank with a kind of nervous eagerness, as though he would gain strength. Then he sat down at the table, and, shading his face with one hand, remained silent for a moment.

"You were with my father when he ted, Dr. Clement?" he said, half interrotatively, half affirmatively.

"I was not," he answered. "Unfortuately I arrived too late, although I came with all possible speed when summoned. Mr. Lancaster's death was almost a sudgen one."

And over the young man's ruddy, open countenance passed a slight expression of anxiety; it seemed as if he feared the next question.

"But you can tell me," resumed Douglas, still with his face shaded, "surely you can tell me the cause," and his voice quivered with eagerness as he spoke.

"I can surmise, of course, but I can say nothing definite." nothing definite."

"And what do you surmise?" And Douglas removed his hand from his face and looked up with eager, searching eyes so full of an unspoken but terrible doubt that the other could not meet them.

"I think it is possible—I mean probable—that Mr. Lancaster's death proceeded from heart disease. You can tell me, perhaps whether he suffered from—"

"I have never heard so," said Douglas, his heart beating with such force as to make speech difficult.

"You see, he has undergone much anxiety and trouble lately. I believe Sir Frederic has been attending him for some little time past," and again Dr. Clement hesitated, fidgeting nervously with an ornament on the mantel-piece on which he leaned.

There was a pause; Douglas still kept his eyes fixed upon his companion, who still studiously avoided his glance.

"Doctor," said Captain Lancaster, at length, "will you answer me with all truth and sincerity if I ask you one question?"

"Certainly," fidgeted Dr. Clement. "Can you doubt it?"

"It will be mistaken kindness not to do so," the other went on. "I can bear

"Tertainty, higgeted Dr. Clement. Can you doubt it?"

"It will be mistaken kindness not to do so," the other went on. "I can bear anything better than this uncertainty. Have you any suspicion—has the idea crossed your mind that—that—that my father destroyed himself?"

The young man hesitated, but finding words difficult to find, he bowed his head silently, and turned away, unable to meet Captain Lancaster's glance.

For some minutes there was a silence in the room; no sound disturbed the profound stillness save the ticking of the timepiece on the mantel-piece, the hands of which pointed to eleven o'clock, and the unhappy son's hurried breathing as he sat by the table, his head bowed upon his crossed arms. Dr. Clement spoke at length, having cleared his throat once or twice before he could do so.

"Captain Lancaster," he said, gently, "you must remember that I have really nothing to go by, and that my own doubts go for nothing. I may be mistaken; recollect that I am by no means sure, have no real grounds for the supposition, that it is only an idea in connection with the last sorrowful events." Still the same silence from Douglas. "I am anxiously expecting Sir Frederic; he is coming down tonight by the mail, and will be here in the morning. I hope he will be able to set your mind at rest on that point. I hope, I believe, that I am mistaken."

The honest young doctor was not very clear in his consolations, but his tone was one of exceeding friendliness and sympathy, which was pleasant to Douglas in his great strait.

"I need hardly say," he went on, "that my suspicions have not passed my lips, and will never do so, Captain Lancaster, to any other but yourself."

Douglas stretched out his hand and the other gave it a cordial grasp; from that moment Douglas Lancaster and Philip Clement were friends.

Then, with a sudden impulse, the desire to unbosom himself which is so strong sometimes, the former turned and spoke:

Philip Clement read it attentively, and his face fell. Looking at the words from an impartial point of view, they only confirmed the suspicions he had been so loth to entertain, and Douglas, reading the confirmation of his fears in the sac face of the young doctor, turned away with a heavy sigh.

"This is very dreadful for you, my poor Kathie," he said, after a long pause, bending to press a kiss on her white brow as she lay sobbing and trembling in his arms. "I wish I could have been with you sooner."

"Oh, Douglas! Papa—dear, dear papa!"

"Kathie," he cried, lifting up his hand with a gesture of acute pain, "try to be brave, darling! Tell me, if you can, all about his last words—his last moments."

GIRL ELOPED WITH MARRIED

Guelph, Ont., July 8 .- Belwood village is in great excitement over the elopement of a well-known married man with a girl of 19, and the subsequent charge of horse stealing laid against him, his arrest in Midland, and escape from jail after appearing before the magistrate. The man is Thomas Richardson, about 35 years old, who has a wife and three children. Richardson and the girl lived together at Midland for a week, then they quarreled, and the girl ran away going to her uncle's house in Fergus for refuge. Here she told her story, and Richardson was arrested for stealing the horse he hired at Belwood. He escaped from the Midland lockup, but the owner of the horse recovered his property. Question of Taxes.

To the Editor of The Advertiser: Noticing in one of the city papers that my taxes were not remitted, but charged against my pdoperty, which will no doubt prevent the sale of it, in order to live, after many years of hard struggling to have a little home head, and now must part with it on account of exorbitant tax-ation. Last year I sold my stove to help pay taxes, and this year I presume my bed must be sold rather than have any encumbrance on the property

Now, Mr. Editor, why are such things allowed? It is well known that one man gets $2,500, an over-abundance, while poor widow over 70 years must give up all that she has that such salaries can be maintained. I am 37 years a resident of London. ANN GRANT.
