Our sales this year have been larger than last, although there has been more competition. A good many who have purchased trashy watches are waking up sorry, and the reaction will have the effect of creating a better demand for reliable goods.

We have no fault to find with honest competition so long as right goods are sold but do think the sale of dishonest goods ought to be prohibited.

Important Items.

(From the Ave Maria.)

Truth is mighty—but it is mighty slow sometimes. Falacy is hard to overthrow; however, truth always gains ground when falacy has over-crowded itself. In the case of the Spanish-American war misrepresentations could not possibly have gone farther or faster than they did. But now that hostilities are over, facts are coming to the fore. The most stubborn of all is set forth by the Hon. Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia: "A more unnecessary war one people has never waged against another." According to the venerable Mr. Angell, President McKinley might have settled our difficulty with Spain without the loss of a single life, had Congress been so disposed. A writer in one of the Boston papers, who was in Cuba, declares that he did not come in contact with a single officer of the regular army that had not been opposed to the war before it broke out. It is a fact asserted by Joseph Barle Stevens, who spent two years in the Philippines, that many of the islands are filled with aboriginal savages who have never recognized the rule of Spain at all. There is much more to be learned about the Spanish-American war; its causes, its conduct, the nation we fought against, and the people we fought for—that is, if the war was not in reality merely one of conquest on our part.

Those who take a gloomy view of the progress of the Church in England, and hold that the return of the English people to the ancient faith is likely to take place only in the dim future, would be more hopeful if they were to consult the records. Prejudice against the Catholic religion in England was incomparably more general and more intense sixty or seventy years ago than now. It is astonishing how it has died out. In his enjoyable life of Cardinal Wiseman, Mr. Wilfrid Ward relates that old Dr. Arober (who died only in 1838) would describe the days when Bishop Challoner, forbidden to preach publicly, allowed to say Mass under the protection of the Sardinian Embassy, would deliver his sermons in a cockpit hired for the occasion. Sometimes he would assemble a knot of the faithful at the "Windmill" public-house, each ordering a pewter pot of beer; and then, when the waiters had left the room, would preach in comparative safety. Clay pipes were added as an additional precaution when the more dangerous experiment of a meeting of the clergy was attempted. Dr. Arober used to describe a similar stratagem when he himself preached at the "Ship" public-house in Turnstile. Some of the tables were preserved as relics of those days, bearing still the marks of the pewter tea-kards.

In a letter to Les Missions Catholiques, Father Bonaldi, of the Saskatchewan district, relates a touching incident of his missionary career. An epidemic that had been raging in the glacial regions where his life is cast had prevented him for some weeks from visiting one of the villages entrusted to his spiritual care. When he was finally able to harness his dogs to his sledges and visit the village in question, he found sickness and death reigning supreme. The good missionary writes: "I found eleven bodies stretched out on the cabin mats, rigid in death, with the temperature 40 degrees below zero. I approached the remains to breathe a prayer; and found, to my astonishment, that in the right hand of each corpse was clasped a little package—pieces of starch-bread folded in two. On the outside was written: 'Only our Father (the priest) may read the enclosed lines.' It was a confession. My poor people, feeling death approach, and unable to come to their savior's ministrations, had written them on 'ships of bark'—the papyrus of these Northern latitudes. At the bottom of each sheet was some such request as 'Pray, Father, say a Mass for the repose of my soul. I leave to you, in gratitude for this service, a beaver skin,' etc. Before such an evidence of the faith and the noble dispositions of his departed children, we can readily believe that the good missionary was moved to tears. His ministry had not been in vain. His people had heard him explain that, in default of a confessor, perfect contrition and a desire to receive the Sacraments suffice to justify the sinner; and they desired to testify to God, their conscience, and their spiritual Father, that they had died in these salutary dispositions.

The most difficult problem with which we are confronted as a result of the annexation of Hawaii, according to a writer in the current North American Review, is the leprosy question. It has been estimated that nearly ten per cent of the Hawaiian natives are lepers, and many thousands have died in the last fifty years. In spite of all the efforts of science, the loathsome disease continues to spread, threatening the ultimate extinction of the race. During the present century there has been a decided acceleration in the spread of leprosy in various parts of the world; and the danger, now increased, of its becoming prevalent in this country has often been dwelt upon. It is a fact well known to medical science that a race hitherto free from a certain specific infection, when once infected, presents an ideal soil for the development of that disease. Leprosy seems to defy the efforts of science. Although described as the most ancient and the most human of all diseases, next to nothing is definitely known about it. Medical men are not even agreed as to the manner of its contagion, some of them holding that it is not contagious at all. One thing, however, is certain: the origin of this horrible disease can always be traced to human importation. Largely increased immigration to and emigration from Hawaii will undoubtedly be an immediate result of annexation, and thus leprosy may be spread throughout the United States. Although lepers are segregated in the island, it is asserted on reliable authority that there are three times as many as large as are restrained in the leper colony. They have a natural dread of being sent to Molokai. All who come into contact with these unrecognized lepers will, of course, be liable to exposure to the infection. Such being the nature of leprosy, and the conditions favorable to its development, our government would do well to consider without delay the problem with which it is confronted. No means should be neglected to prevent the spread of the horrible disease which has been the curse of Hawaii.

The extension of the rule of the Tar means the extinction of the Catholic mission wherever a powerful advocate of their interests is wanting. The action of Russia in Northern China is a menace to the interests of religion in that vast district; the heathen there will be worse off than ever before. The national church carries out no missionary propaganda, and the government always opposes the evangelization of its heathen subjects by priests of the Latin Church. Some time ago a writer in the London Tablet gave an account of the efforts made by the Year-Apostolic of Manchuria to found a mission at the new Russian settlement of Nicoldefak, at the mouth of the Amur, for the conversion of the Tartar tribes in its neighborhood. Permission to pass the winter at Khabarovka was the utmost concession that could be obtained. When, two years later, he renewed his efforts, the missionary was threatened with arrest if he preached or officiated in public. This portion of the vicariate of Manchuria had, therefore, to be utterly abandoned,—an experience of sinister omen for the fate of the remainder, now that it has fallen into the same hands.

The extension of Russian rule signifies everywhere the exclusion of the foreigner (whether he come in the guise of merchant or missionary), and the strict reservation of the territory acquired to Russian interests. Whatever portion of the globe the Russian flag flies over is lost to the Catholic Church, and, in regard to its heathen population, to all forms of Christian teaching. On this ground the predominant position taken up by Russia in the far East, and the question of her relative to shape out on her own lines the future destinies of Northern China, constitutes a formidable menace to the interests of religion in that part of the world.

The Mexican correspondent of the Boston Sunday Herald thus refers to one of the noblest works of charity in the city of Mexico and the devoted priest who conducts it: "A busy clergyman here is the Rev. Father Hani, a most active man, rosy of cheek, bright of eye, with Spanish at his tongue's end, his English a little limping from long disuse, and with a wonderful command of the old Mexican, or Nahuatl language, in which he sometimes preaches to the Indians. It is a soft and melodious tongue, like Italian in beauty; and the good padre is called among the Indians the 'White Indian,' so well does he talk their language. This excellent man, whose fame as a Nahuatl scholar has reached the savants of Europe, has here a school for street boys, where he teaches, feeds, and generally looks after newsboys, shop apprentices, and the young peddlers magiloquently called comerciantes, or 'merchants.' It is one of the noblest here; and this erudite priest, instead of devoting himself to his favorite studies, gives two-thirds of his time to his Master's business.

A father guardian of the Convent of St. Anthony at Pegli, in Italy, was drowned while bathing some days ago.

The Salesian Fathers have just held a general chapter at Valdocchio, near Turin, for the nomination of their rector major. Don Ras was unanimously elected to the post.

His Holiness the Pope has been pleased to appoint Rev. Father A. Jondert, O. M. I., the parish priest of Yennappu and superior of the Chilaw district, Ceylon, as coadjutor to His Grace, Most Rev. Dr. Melizan, Archbishop of Colombo, with right of succession.

In the course of a leading article on "Miraculous Shines in France," the London Times, referring to L'Esprit, says: "That cures have been effected there seems no reason to doubt;—whether permanent or mere temporary effects of faith healing it is impossible to say." In whatever way we look at it the phenomenon is an exceedingly curious one, offering most interesting problems to the pathologist and psychologist.

On the 30th. of August the Cardinal members of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, together with the prelates and consultants belonging to the same congregation, held a preparatory meeting at the Vatican in order to investigate the circumstances attending two miracles which, it is alleged, were performed through the intercession of the Blessed Jean Baptiste de la Salle, founder of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, and which will be produced as evidence in the cause for the canonization of Blessed de la Salle.

The London Daily Chronicle Khar-toum correspondent telegraphs: An expiatory service was held at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning in the ruins of Gordon's Palace at Khartoum. The Presbyterian chaplain read the fifteenth Psalm and the Anglican chaplain said a "Pater Noster," while the Rev. Robert Brindle, the Catholic chaplain, read a special memorial prayer. The pipes of the Seaforth Highlanders performed a coronach and the Spadassene bagpipers and band played "Abide With Me," Gordon's favorite hymn.

Prince Philip Hohenlohe, the second son of the late Chamberlain of the Emperor of Austria and brother of the German Chancellor, has just been ordained priest at Sankten, in Austria. It is said that it has always been the father's wish that his second son should enter the Church. Prince Philip was an officer in a crack cavalry regiment, a man of very handsome appearance and a great favorite with his colleagues, but all at once he left the army and society saw no more of him. He has been pursuing his theological studies for some years. His contemplates entering a episcopate order.

There is not the slightest truth in the report that Leo XIII. intends to bestow the Golden Rose on Queen Wilhelmina of Holland. The Golden Rose can only be conferred on a Catholic Prince, and it is not at all likely that the Pope should make an exception to the time-honored rule in this case. The relations of the Holy See with Holland are very cordial, however, and Leo XIII. has sent a magnificent mosaic table and a letter warmly congratulating the young Queen on her accession to the throne of the Netherlands and wishing both her and her people all prosperity and happiness. At the official ceremony of the Queen's coronation the Holy See was represented by Mgr. Tarnelli, the Papal Intendant at the Hague.

The forthcoming consistory will, it is said, be held in the month of November, the Holy Father having decided to anticipate its date. Two commissions of Cardinals: "de eligendis episcopis," composed of the Eminences Cardinals Parocchi, Vergerio, Serafini, Vannutelli, Rampolla and Di Pietro, and the Organizational Congregation, have already begun the completion of the necessary lists and documents. The most probable candidates to the purple are Mgr. Closs (secretary of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda), Mgr. Olari (Papal Nuncio at Paris), Mgr. Della Volpe (major domo to His Holiness) and Mgr. Trombetta (Secretary to the Sacred Congregation of Bishops and Regulars). Mgr. Della Volpe will be succeeded in the office of Major-domo by Mgr. Edmond Stonor, Archbishop of Treviso, or by Mgr. Merry del Val, son of the Spanish Ambassador to the Holy See and "camere" or "grotesco" part" to the Pontiff.

Bismarck's Last Years.

An estimate of Bismarck's closing years that seems well formed is found in the concluding paragraphs of the paper upon the late ex-chancellor of Germany that appears anonymously in the Catholic World. After reviewing in detail the leading events of Bismarck's public and official life, the writer of this paper says that in the days when he was driven from power, and when, for a man who had occupied such prominent positions, dignified retirement was the only fitting condition, he felt him publishing state secrets for petty purposes and blasting the reputations of men who never did anything one-tenth as criminal as himself. "Indeed," adds this writer, "it is difficult to determine what should be said concerning this man, in many respects so great and in many so mean, possessing the virtues which belong to the home, while cold and pitiless in carrying out his schemes of personal ambition and patriotic aspiration." And adding to Bismarck's belief in exaggerated feudal homage, he declares that it would be difficult to believe that any such a great chond should be allowed to shape a nineteenth century policy did we not know that this man, who permitted it to shape his policy, had, in his strong, coarse, hypocritical nature, an element of that strange buffoonery, akin to madness, which is sometimes found in the world's great statesmen, as they are called. Cromwell, remarks this essayist, had this element in his make-up; so, too, had Henry II. of England and Louis XI. of France. Bismarck, he adds in concluding his article, was so full of it that in his last years it only left him when the disappointment of dismissal turned into spleen. In the angry, jabbering complaints of those years we have a key to his character; and we find him a man without dignity in old age, as in youth and manhood he was without honor and conscience. "This is not a flattering estimate of Germany's 'grand old man,' but who can deny the truth of the graphic portraiture! Even Mr. W. R. Thayer, who writes eulogistically of Bismarck in the September Atlantic, confesses that the method whereby he won his greatest successes were dynamic, not moral, ones.—Sacred Heart Review.

When Senator Lodge speaks of "a monkish hatred of all that is generous and human and uplifting," he betrays either an ignorance of the monastic character which is not creditable in a man of his scholarly attributes, or a prejudice which, for his own sake, he would do well not to parade in public.

According to the Christian Register King Humbert, in the hope of bettering the condition of his realm, is said to be contemplating the removal of his court to Turin. If his royal father had never undertaken to set up his court in the papal city, Italy would have been spared many of the ills she has experienced during the past twenty-eight years.

TOBACCO HEART.

HAVE you been smoking a good deal lately and feel an occasional twinge of pain round your heart? Are you short of breath, nerves unbalanced, sensation of pins and needles going through your arms and legs? Better take a box of two of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and you will find things become so serious. Here's what Mr. John James, of Calumet, Ont., has to say about them: "I have had serious heart trouble for four years, caused by excessive use of tobacco. At times my heart would beat very rapidly and then seem to stop beating only to commence again with unusual rapidity. I tried many medicines and spent a great deal of money but could not get any help. Last November, however, I read of a man, afflicted like myself, being cured by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I went to Roper's drug store and bought a box. When I had finished taking it I was so much better I bought another box and this completed the cure. My heart has not bothered me since, and I strongly recommend all sufferers from heart and nerve trouble, caused by excessive use of tobacco, to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a fair and faithful trial."

Many persons cannot take plain cod-liver oil. They cannot digest it. It upsets the stomach. Knowing these things, we have digested the oil in Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites; that is, we have broken it up into little globules, or droplets. We use machinery to do the work of the digestive organs, and you obtain the good effects of the digested oil at once. That is why you can take Scott's Emulsion.

РАТНОГО ПО ВЪЯТИ.

TRANSLATED BY REV. L. AUG. REUBNER (Sacred Heart Revue.)

Sister Rose was about to tell her what she had seen, when I imposed silence on her by a sign. "I would not be surprised," Mrs. Weston continued, "if her husband had done it. If he has, he must be brought to justice. Prison would be too good for him; he should be treated like a murderer."

Then the sick woman opened her lips, and the anxious look directed itself to me. She drew me tenderly to her and whispered: "Tell her she should not speak thus. Nothing must happen to my husband."

Weak and exhausted she fell back, and I feared for a moment her death might be hastened by the incautious words of her neighbor. We sent Mrs. Weston home and passed the night with the sick woman in her lonely room. Often we thought she was dead.

I noticed that every time when her sufferings seemed to be more acute, she took the small medal and pressed it to her lips. "Poor Sister Rose laid her head on the chair and fell asleep, exhausted as she was from the day's exertions. I sat there listening to the falling rain and to the moans of the poor sufferer. Although she lived in the greatest poverty, yet it was beyond doubt true that she had been a lady of social standing. Her lean hands, which she now and then folded spasmodically, were small and almost transparent. The long raven black hair was soft and glossy, and betrayed the careful attention it had formerly received. There was something unusually attractive in her speech and countenance. Moreover she had won my heart by the noble zeal with which she tried to hide the cause of her fall, and the way she endeavored to shield her husband, whom I was obliged to accuse as the perpetrator of the deplorable deed. This not only bespoke a true love for her depressed husband, but was also proof that true Christian goodness was deeply rooted in his heart. And the look of bloodless hair which she carried on her bosom—whose presence and why she carried it I did not then know, but it told a tale of love and sorrow."

The rain ceased at last and a dense fog enveloped the city. Sister Rose awoke and the sufferer fell into a deep sleep. An hour later two of our Sisters came to relieve us, and we returned to our convent. I always liked to pray in our little chapel, but it seemed to have never been as pretty as it was during the short visit which I made before retiring that morning. The sun lit up the altar, the sanctuary was aglow with golden rays of light. Oh how quiet, how peaceful it was! No low voice of sobs or sobs. There was no human presence, no human presence. Everything was light, warm and peaceful. The surroundings touched my heart and relieved the depression caused by the terrible sight of wrong and suffering. But in the short sleep that followed, I was haunted by the sweet face which had just left, and now and then heard that terrible cry of anguish.

CHAPTER II.

After a few hours of rest returned to the sick woman. The Mother, having heard my report of the case, left her in my care. I found her somewhat better and able to talk. She took hold of my hands and said in a weak voice:—"Sister, were you the one who was so kind to me last night?"—"Yes, dearest, and I am pleased to find you somewhat better."

"Thank you, very much; I feel as if I am very sick, that I must soon die. Will you please call the priest?"—"Yes, at once; but you must not talk any more, or else you will be too tired when the priest comes."

"I want to ask another question, Sister, only one," she replied, taking hold of my dress. "Are we alone?"—"Yes, dear, all alone."

"I know you will never betray me. Tell me, Sister, did you not pass through this street last night? It seemed to me two Sisters went by me, one of whom gave me a friendly, pitying look. Was it so or was I dreaming?"—"It was so, but do not excite yourself."

"But you did not say anything? Oh! for the dear Lord's sake, never tell any one about it! Promise me, Sister."

"I promise you. I understand you, and will help you to keep your secret."

"She could speak no further, but a sweet smile lighted up her pale countenance. After some time she continued:—"Sister Mary Grace" (I had told her my name), "something has happened to my hand. I can scarcely move it."

"I looked. It was the left hand. A dark blue ugly spot was visible on the fourth finger, as if some one had bruised that finger by wrenching something from it. Her wedding ring was gone."

"Have you lost your ring?" I asked. "My ring!" she replied hastily, "no!" Then followed a painful moan, and a look full of agony and bitter recollection. "Oh! yes," she continued, "I remember now, I have it no longer." She hid her hand under the cover and remained silent.

Soon afterwards the priest came, and I left him with the sick woman. I went upstairs. The rooms were dark, cold and empty; not even a chair could be found. It was a sad picture of the most oppressive poverty.

When her confession was finished, Father Thomas called me and said, "Sister, the poor woman seems to be very weak and sick. I think I had better prepare her for death and give her all the sacraments."

"Has she expressed this wish to you, Father?"—"Yes. She is ready for heaven. The bitterest ordeal which a woman can drink has been her portion here on earth. I have known her here for a few years, and consider her one of my most sincere penitents."

"Do you know anything of her past life, Father Thomas?"—"No, not much, for she never complained. I know that her existence for the last few years has been nothing but a martyrdom, which she has endured with truly angelic fortitude."

We entered the sick-room, and the same sweet, contented smile, which I had seen that morning, welcomed us. I hastily prepared a small altar, and kneeling near her I supported her during the reception of the Viaticum and Extreme Unction. Her intense devotion I can not picture. But when she had received my Lord, such a heavenly trace of holy calm and peace rested on her face as is usual only with a soul prepared for heaven.

could remember the last half of a stanza clearly:—"Life's undivided pleasure 'Tis not for mortals here to share."

"Not true, thought I—for I am perfectly happy. I have no cares, no sorrows. Life is so pleasant, so beautiful. The words of the poet are not true. I myself can give him the lie. What is wanting to my happiness? And I repeated with a proud heart:—Yes, I am happy."

"In my wretched life of poverty and labor, I have often, with bitter pang, thought of that hour when my girlish imagination boasted of a happiness so soon to be blasted. During dark, sorrowful nights, when too weary to sleep, I have often had that picture before my eyes. The luxuriant apartments, the ferocious tongues of fire, the fantastic shadows on the wall, and my own voice mockingly resounding in my ears. Truly the Lord has His ways to bring us to Him. I was a good Catholic according to common estimation. I attended Mass on Sundays, went to confession now and then, but that was the extent of my religion. I had never tasted of that bitter and almost mysterious elixir called human suffering, which often ennobles life and gives it a higher aim. I had never pondered over the words of our divine Saviour: He who does not take the cross and follow Me, is not worthy of Me. I had never carried the cross; its burden was unknown to me. Ah! it was later on, in the bloom of my life, weighed heavy on me, and the Lord be praised for it."

"At last the time of my debut came. I was naturally longing for that event. If more happiness were to be had than I already possessed, then it must be sought in the brilliant circles of society. My mother arranged a ball. The fête was to be one of the most brilliant of the season. Long consultations took place about my toilette. 'No diamonds,' said my father, 'Anne shall wear nothing but flowers.' Dear Good Father! I have often remembered how tenderly and proudly he kissed me that evening when he arranged the rosettes in my hair. The ballroom was a scene of splendor. I was presented to different gentlemen, none of whom interested me especially. After dancing, I grew tired and sat down next to my mother. However, some one approached and introduced Mr. Layton to me. He at once asked me for the next dance, and I granted his request."

"I fancied I saw a look of concern on my mother's face, but gave it no further thought, since my partner had aroused my entire attention. I tarry long over this, dear Sister, and perhaps am tiring you; but every word, every action of that evening is deeply rooted in my memory. It was the most fatal hour of my life. Mr. Layton, or Charles, as his friends called him, was the very man who could captivate a young girl who was without experience. He was handsome, amiable, obliging, and highly educated. When the dance was over, he led me through the ballroom to look for my mother. But she had gone."

"We sat down to watch the quadrille just forming. It seemed to me to be more pleasant to sit and talk with Mr. Layton than to dance or do anything else. When he left me all joy seemed to have gone. I found the music melancholy and sad. When he returned, everything changed. My mother, who as it appeared, did not like our tete-a-tete, approached and remarked that I looked pale and tired; he bowed politely and wished us good night. It was as though all light had died out. The very thought of love was yet far away from me. When my father asked me next morning at the breakfast table, 'Well, Lady Anne, this was his pet name for me, which one of your dancers did you like best?' I answered without a moment's hesitation, 'I liked Mr. Layton better than the rest, papa.' It seemed for a moment as though a light shadow were passing over my father's face. 'Oh yes, I know him; but I have heard that he is a gambler.'"

"The following day I saw Mr. Layton again, and at last our relations to each other became an established fact. One day my father said to me:—"Lady Anne, would you like to take a short trip to Paris?"—"Yes, very much, papa."

"I shall start tomorrow, on account of very pressing business; pack your trunk; you and mamma may accompany me."

Suddenly I remembered that I had made an engagement with some lady friends for an excursion that was to have taken place the next day, and I said, therefore:—"If you have no objection, I shall notify Miss Leslie of our departure."

"Do not do it," my father replied curtly; "I wish that you speak to no one about this trip. Remember this well."

"I was silent because of father's brusqueness. Then I remembered that I would not be able to see Mr. Layton either. I had some books, partly hidden from view behind a large palm tree, I heard my father say to mother, as he stepped into the sitting-room, 'She took much easier than we thought she would. I have no good reason for hope. She is young and has had so little experience that she does not know herself how she clings to him. A change of air, new impressions and faces, will soon make her forget him.'"

"May the Lord grant it!" my mother replied, with a sigh. (To be continued.)

SCROFULA.

"My little boy, aged 7 years and 15 months, was a victim of Scrofula on the face, which all the doctors said was incurable. To tell the truth he was so bad that I could not bear to look at him. At last I tried a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and before it was half used he was gaining, and by the time he had three bottles used he was completely cured. I cannot say too much in recommendation of B.B.B. to all who suffer as he did." JOSEPH P. LABELLE, Manawake P.O., Que.

They acted promptly and effectively in removing the trouble with which I was afflicted, and restored me to my old-time form. It is a pleasure for me to recommend them to others."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE EDITOR'S PROTEST. The editor of the Clarion was a very patient man. A startling crash from the direction of the composing room caused him to push his spectacles upon his brow and cease writing. When he found that the copy had not been set in the galley, he took it up in an incoherent manner, he shook his head reproachfully and exclaimed:—"Lament, I do wish that you could manage to break the news more gently."
