

Technical and Bibliographic Notes / Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- Coloured covers /
Couverture de couleur
- Covers damaged /
Couverture endommagée
- Covers restored and/or laminated /
Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- Cover title missing /
Le titre de couverture manque
- Coloured maps /
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black) / Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- Coloured plates and/or illustrations /
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- Bound with other material /
Relié avec d'autres documents
- Only edition available /
Seule édition disponible
- Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin / La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distorsion le long de la marge intérieure.
- Blank leaves added during restorations may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming / Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.

- Coloured pages / Pages de couleur
- Pages damaged / Pages endommagées
- Pages restored and/or laminated /
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- Pages detached / pages détachées
- Showthrough / Transparence
- Quality of print varies /
Qualité inégale de l'impression
- Includes supplementary materials
Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image / Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
- Opposing pages with varying colouration or discolourations are filmed twice to ensure the best possible image / Les pages s'opposant ayant des colorations variables ou des décolorations sont filmées deux fois afin d'obtenir la meilleure image possible.

- Additional comments /
Commentaires supplémentaires:

Pagination is as follows: [1], [2559]-3476, [i]-cxlv p.

Pages 2735-2736 are incorrectly numbered pages 2991-2992.

OFFICIAL REPORT
OF THE DEBATES
OF THE
HOUSE OF COMMONS
OF THE
DOMINION OF CANADA.

---

THIRD SESSION—FIFTH PARLIAMENT.

48-49 VICTORIÆ, 1885.

VOL. XX.

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF JUNE TO THE TWENTIETH DAY OF JULY, 1885.

OTTAWA:
PRINTED BY MACLEAN, ROGER & CO., WELLINGTON STREET.
1885.

House of Commons Debates

THIRD SESSION, FIFTH PARLIAMENT.—48 VIC.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 16th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CHARLTON) asked, What was the amount of the deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank of Canada on April 30th, subject to payment on demand; and also the amount of deposits subject to notice of withdrawal, on the same date?

Mr. CARLING. The balance due to depositors payable on demand, on the 30th of April, was $14,536,747. No portion of the amount due to depositors is payable on previous notice.

WAYS AND MEANS—DISTURBANCES IN THE N. W.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the report of the Committee of Ways and Means (June 15), reporting a resolution granting to Her Majesty the sum of $1,700,000, to defray certain expenses connected with the disturbances in the North-West Territories, be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Militia stated that he would give some further information.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no recollection of that. I understood the hon. Minister to say that he had no information that he could give other than he had given, but that he had received a very large package of receipts and vouchers for money expended in the North-West, which were then under the consideration of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. He said he hoped to be able to give the information to the House in a short time, and he stated it should be given at a subsequent stage of this Bill.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will allow this motion to pass, so that I can introduce a Bill and take another stage, I will ask the Minister of Militia about the information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Minister of Militia is unwell to-day, and is confined to his house.

Resolution read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL introduced Bill (No. 149) to grant to her Majesty $1,700,000 required to defray certain expenses now being incurred in the North-West Territories.

Bill read the first time.

WASHINGTON TREATY.

Mr. MITCHELL. With the consent of the House, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. the First Minister to a matter referred to in that very reliable paper called the Montreal Gazette, a paper that is characterised by a great deal of literary ability and truthfulness. In a letter to that paper I find this matter referred to, which is of great interest, certainly, to the people of the Maritime Provinces. The letter refers to the fact that correspondence has been had and an arrangement entered into between the Cabinet at Ottawa and the Government at Washington, in order to promote a settlement of the fishery question. The substance of the article is this, that an arrangement has been arrived at between the Cabinet at Washington and the Cabinet here, that no steps shall be taken to prevent American fishermen coming into our fisheries until Congress meets in December next, in the hope that in the meantime such arrangement will be arrived at to settle the question, not merely for a year or ten years, but for all time. Now, as this is a very important matter, one that is creating a good deal of interest in the Maritime Provinces, and to which, I am sure, the Government is giving a good deal of attention, and as the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty will expire in a couple of weeks, I would like to know what foundation there is, if any, for this article.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has asked the question. I think the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) asked a similar question some time ago, and I told him the subject had occupied the attention of the Government, and that the papers would be brought down before the end of the Session. At this moment we are applying to the Governor General for leave from the Colonial Office to lay certain papers before the House, and I have no doubt that consent will be given at once, unless the late change there will cause some little delay. I fancy, however, it will not, and we shall bring down very important documents to be laid before the House as soon as we have authority to do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the right hon. gentleman feel himself at liberty to declare whether the tendency of the article, the declaration that arrangements are likely to be come to whereby our fisheries will be open to Americans during the present season, is correct or not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say that is correct, but I do not think it well to be more specific in my statement. It is not correct, however, that there is any engagement by which the waters will be open to the Americans, but the papers speak for themselves. I may say, however, that the tendency of all this correspondence is to give strong hope that negotiations will take place, not only with regard to fisheries, but with regard to extended reciprocity.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman should state at once whether this statement in a Ministerial organ is correct or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, the Government has no organ.

Mr. MITCHELL. Except the Herald.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the second place, I have not seen the article; in the third place, I do not think the Government can at all be forced, if they think it inexpedient, to make statements prematurely, and they cannot make a full statement now, or one full enough to be at all satisfactory to the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is certain some Minister has made the statement to the editor of the paper.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; that is not the case. Any statement that has been made has come from Newfoundland, which is also interested in this matter. I have no doubt as to how the statement referred to has been made. Sir Ambrose Shea, who is not a member of the Newfoundland Government, and holds no official position whatever under the Government, went to Washington not long ago, on behalf of the St. John Board of Trade, on a matter relating to Customs, and had some communication with the American Government, and some unofficial communication with the British Ambassador, and I presume these rather imperfect statements have been made from the information he gathered when at Washington.

Mr. VAIL. I am sure I need not remind the hon. gentleman that this is a very important matter. As we are getting to the 1st of July I am quite sure he feels the necessity of taking early action, so as to arrive at some conclusion as early in July as possible. I presume any arrangements that may be come to to leave our fisheries open to American fishermen will enable our fishermen to send fish to the United States free of duty?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have already stated that we merely wait for permission to bring down communications which have taken place between the Imperial Government and the Government of the United States.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. POPE. In moving that this House resolve itself into committee on the proposed resolutions for the Canadian Pacific Railway, it has been customary, on the part of my distinguished and honorable predecessor (Sir Charles Tupper) to make a general statement as to the railway, giving, as nearly as he could, all the particulars, all the incidents that had transpired, and the prospects of the railway. I do not intend to follow this example by going over ground that has been gone over before, and so well gone over. I do not propose to enter into a discussion of former transactions, explained to this House time and again, but what I propose to make is a statement generally of what has transpired since the loan of last year, and perhaps in some particulars I may have to refer to former years. In the first place, let me say that the company have proceeded with their work during the last year, under the loan given by this House, with great vigor and energy, that not one particle of that energy we have seen in former years exhibited by the company has been lessened or decreased in the slightest degree. I do not believe that you could get any other men in this country who would have undertaken that work and pushed it to the extent these gentlemen have. Consequently, in starting, I may say that I think they are entitled to every consideration from this House and from the country, and that we may feel proud that we have found Canadians who could undertake this work and carry it through almost to completion as they have done. When I travelled through that country last fall I found that the line was a much better road than the contract they had entered into demanded, and I found that they must have expended large sums of money beyond what the contract required. I found that they had constructed the road, not only across the prairies, but into that sea of mountains going into British Columbia, which my hon. friend opposite has so graphically described. When you get into the Rocky Mountains you wonder that so few men could have performed this work, for there 100 or 1,000 or 5,000 men appear as nothing. I felt at that time that we owed a great deal to these men, and I feel now that we owe a great deal to them, and that they have done the work well, and have done a great deal more than they agreed to do by their contract. It is for that reason that I am here to-day to propose the resolutions that are now before the House. It is because they have expended large sums of money beyond what the contract required that I am forced to ask the House—I believe a willing House, a House that will appreciate the great work that has been done by these men, a work that could not have been done if they had adhered strictly to the contract—to agree to these resolutions. These gentlemen do not ask for one dollar to complete their contract. We all believe, they believe, and the chief engineer himself says, that the money provided for the completion of that contract is amply sufficient to carry it through and finish the road; but it was found necessary to do considerably more than that, in order to make the work one which would be in the interest of the country, according to its latest developments, and consequently they found that, while they could complete the work in the terms of the contract, they could not do that which must be done in a few years, in order to compete with other transcontinental railways, without the additional expenditure. Consequently, they found themselves involved in a large expenditure, and found it necessary to make an outlay which was unprovided for by the loan of last year. I think that was wise. I think I appeal to a House which will appreciate the wisdom of getting that road completed at once in a proper shape, rather than having to go over it a second time. The only thing the company are going to ask from this House in the shape of money is that they may be assisted temporarily to the extent of $5,000,000, with ample security for repayment, and to be allowed to cancel stock of $35,000,000 and issue bonds, in order to pay the loan and complete the road. This is the sum and substance of the resolutions as they stand. There is no money to be given for the completion of their contract—not one farthing—they do not ask it. The arrangement is to be made, if at all, not in the interest alone of the company, but of the country; that the road shall be, in all respects, superior to the contract, and as good as any of the other transcontinental railways between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and in every respect in a position to compete with the other roads. The company desire to get possession of their property in order that they may use it for the equipment and completion of the road. And, to put it in first-class position, they propose to pay off the indebtedness already incurred with the Government; to cancel $35,000,000 unsold stock, issuing instead same amount of first preference bonds, $20,000,000 of which will be held by the Government as security, the proceeds of which, when sold, to be appropriated to pay off $20,000,000 of the loan of last year. The other $15,000,000 of bonds will be deposited, or the proceeds when sold, first $8,000,000, as security for a loan of $5,000,000 to pay off their floating debt, which loan is to be repaid in July, 1886; the balance is for the purpose of equipping and completing the road in first class style—far above the standard contracted for, and as security we take the whole 21,000,000 acres. I think no hon. gentleman will say that the security we take is not ample, and does not secure us fully. My hon. friend may say, and probably will say, that we are releasing the security we had before, but the first mortgage bonds on that road of $20,000,000 must be as good as the security we had before. The $35,000,000 of stock in the hands of the Government was only to be sold, as explained by Sir Charles Tupper last year, for the purposes of the road or for the purpose of repaying the loan to Government. They are applying that now exactly, as was indicated by Sir Charles Tupper in his speech last year, towards the completion of the road, and eventually, also, towards paying back the loan—there can be no question about that matter. There can be no question about the point that he made in his speech last year when he indicated to the House, and when the House quite understood that whatever use was ever made of that it never could be used without the consent of the Government, and if used at all, it was either to be used in the completion of the road or in paying back the loan. Now, Sir, it is proposed to use it in both ways. The first $20,000,000 is to be kept towards paying off the loan of last year. No one can doubt that these first mortgage bonds upon the road for $35,000,000 only are good security, and that they are available security. The reason that they have come to us this year, and the reason that they came to us last year for a loan, was simply because their securities, which everybody in the country believed were available, and could be used for the completion of that road, had turned out not to be available; there was no market for them; the times had gone against them, and they are exactly in that position to-day; though I believe that in a short time the securities will become better in the market, and I have not the slightest doubt that the company will be able to avail themselves of the proceeds of those bonds and to pay back the $20,000,000. I have no doubt, also, they will be able to avail themselves of the $15,000,000 in bonds, in order to pay us back the temporary loan, which they will have to pay in July, 1886, and also to build the road, as I said before, and to put it in such a condition as that it will be able to compete with other roads. Sir, I travelled over that road last year, as far as they had gone, and I found it superior to any thing that I have travelled over on the prairie yet—in many instances much superior. There is no possibility of their being troubled with snow. The cuts are wide, and the slopes are taken to an extent of from 100 to 200 feet from the railway, involving an enormous expenditure on that account. The excess of expenditure has been brought about from that and various other ways. Of course, they have built iron bridges across the Saskatchewan and across the Bow River, and all these things, which are outside their contract, have cost them a great deal of money. Now, Sir, it was explained by my hon. friend and my distinguished predecessor, last year, that certain contracts were entered into by the Government, one north of Lake Superior and one at Port Moody. At the time he explained to the House he said there were certain amounts that must be paid hereafter upon these contracts, and there had been certain amounts then paid—I forget exactly the amount he fixed as having been paid north of Lake Superior, but a considerable amount was required to complete the work. I am happy to say now to the House that that work has been completed, with the exception of about $60,000 worth. There is a little more filling to be done on that section, but $60,000 is the estimated cost of completing that work. Now, Sir, when he spoke of the Port Moody section of 213 miles, if I remember rightly, he explained that there had been $7,000,000 worth of work done on that section, and the estimated cost was $9,000,000. That work has proceeded favorably, and will undoubtedly be completed within the contract time, which expires early in July, I think the 1st. But there remains to be done yet, stated in money, about $350,000—I have not the odd figures exactly—to complete the whole line, which we expect will be by the 1st of July, when the road will be handed over to the Government. Sir, this is not all. There is a bad side to the case, which I must present to you, because I think, in explaining a question of this kind, my friends, as well as my opponents, expect a clear and frank statement which they can rely upon, and they want to know the unfavorable as well as the favorable side. Now, this is the position in which I find myself in respect to the section between Port Arthur and Winnipeg. The estimated cost of that work was $28,000,000; I find it is going to cost us about $29,500,000, an excess over the estimated cost of about $1,500,000. This is partly accounted for in this way : On the portions which were early built by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) when he was Premier of this country, trains had been run over that road and cars had been carrying supplies for the contracts beyond, without any section men being upon the road, and had been used—I presume my hon. friends would know the time better than I do—but I think the road had been used from six to eight years since it had been built. Nothing had been done to keep it in repair, except what those men pleased to do themselves; consequently, not only the roadbed had got very much out of repair, but many of the rails had got very much injured and bent, and the sleepers were invariably rotted away, because anyone that knows anything about a railway knows that the life of a sleeper only lasts from six to eight years, and everyone of those sleepers, without any exception, had to be taken out, and I believe the last of them was taken out this year. The wooden structures, the trestles on that section were about in the same proportion as they are on other sections of a like character.

Mr. POPE.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman must not commit himself without looking at the figures. I assure him that I have looked at the figures, and these wooden structures are about in the same proportion as on other parts of the road of the same character.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. POPE. I say that all these structures have either been renewed, or must be renewed this year, because everybody knows very well that timber does not last very long. Most of this timber was spruce and the ties could not live more than six or eight years—six years would be about the life of a spruce tie, eight years, perhaps, of hemlock or tamarac; cedar would last longer. But those were largely spruce, as the hon. gentleman knows, and exactly the same thing took place. Now, Sir, in calculating $28,000,000, account was not taken of the work that had got to be done to repair the rails that had been injured, to replace those ties, and to place this road in the shape in which it should be. Not only were the ties and rails worn out, but the road bed itself had gone very much to rack, as the hon. gentleman knows a road must go to rack where there is nobody to keep it in repair. All the materials, all the rails and supplies that were used upon that road beyond that point, went over this line without there being anybody to look after it. I presume something like $300,000 of work had to be done on that part of the road, and it was done at the same cost that work is done elsewhere, for similar kind of work. Then there was another thing that was not taken into account in making this estimate. We believed that we had offered to Manning, McDonald & Co. a fair price, but found that the arbitrators, when it was referred to arbitration, brought in a sum of about $400,000; that being the case, you can easily see how quite a hole was made in the one and a half million dollars, which is in excess of the estimate. Taking all matters into consideration, I am not disposed to blame any engineer, if on a heavy piece of work, representing millions and millions of dollars, there should be a million either one way or the other different from the estimate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask whether in what he has just stated he referred to the road north of Lake Superior or was it not to the road running for a distance of 400 miles between Port Arthur and Winnipeg?

Mr. POPE. I was referring to the road between Port Arthur and Winnipeg. Last year when my predecessor laid his figures before the House he told the House—I will not say to a mile—that something like 800 miles of road yet remained to be built. He explained that that was the heaviest work upon the whole line; that it included the heavy work north of Lake Superior—and I am glad the hon. gentleman opposite corrected me just now—and to the very heavy work through the Rocky Mountains. I have said this distance was about 800 miles. At this moment I desire to refer to those portions of the road to which the loan applies, and which cover a distance of 800 miles. The section of the road from Sudbury to Nepigon is 487 miles; from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Savona Ferry, 295 miles, making a total of 782 miles. The line is completed so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon for a distance of 568 miles. The amount expended on that mileage is $19,483,369. The value of the work to be done thereon is $918,000. The work executed upon this part of the road before was $3,000,000; these items making the cost of these 568 miles $23,401,000.

Mr. CASEY. Where is that?

Mr. POPE. On the incompleted 782 miles, part north of Lake Superior and part west of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. BLAKE. Part of the two sections?

Mr. POPE. Yes. Of the line yet to be completed so as to admit of the running of regular trains there remains 214 miles, the estimate for the completion of which is $5,420,510. The value of the work executed is $1,597,810, making $7,018,320 as the cost of the work. I may say that at this moment there are about 150 miles to grade, about 200 miles on which to lay track, and that work is included in the sum mentioned. These 568 miles have cost $23,410,469, equal to $41,199.77 per mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Are you talking of the completed road?

Mr. POPE. Yes, of the 568 miles; 214 miles are estimated to cost $7,018,320 or $32,795.88 per mile. The rolling stock considered sufficient for the main line, is placed at $286,000, making $30,705,789, less 10 per cent. which is kept back on all work, $3,070,578, or $27,635,211. On the 568 miles to complete the road as estimated, there is a very heavy section north of Lake Superior and heavy work from the summit of the Kicking Horse Pass to within six miles of the summit of the Selkirk range. This completes what I have to say on that part of the road. I think it shows what has been done with the loan of last year. If I remember rightly, my friend and predecessor explained to the House that other companies and other people had taken very strong positions against this road, and the troubles of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were due to the action of those people and those companies. I am not disposed to blame other roads for any action they may take in this matter. I believe any road, no matter where it might be outside of Canada, is quite justified in any action it may take to protect itself. I quite understand that if they find their trade is slipping from their grasp, or trade which they otherwise would obtain is passing by them, they will be ready to do everything they can to embarrass what is likely to prove a serious competitor. And I am not inclined to quarrel with them for doing so. I had hoped, however, that our own roads and our own people would have taken a more decided stand in favor of this great national undertaking; this great work which in the future must become, and which now is becoming, such an essential part of Canada, that our credit and every interest Canada has is affected either by pushing forward and completing the road or by allowing it to stop where it is. I had a right to look, and I did look, to the people of this country and to the press to pursue a somewhat different course from what has been pursued, although I have been challenged and we all have been challenged to produce a single article or argument from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, or their organs in the press in which the road has been traduced. We have been so challenged, but the proof that such has been done is patent to everybody.

I could go to the Hansard of past years, I could go to the speeches made in the House by these gentlemen, and I could find their papers in this country stating that any man who went west of Moose Jaw would find a country unfit for civilisation, and that it could not produce enough to pay for the grease on the railway wheels. Do you suppose the people of this country and other countries have not been cognisant of those statements? Is it possible that such reports could go through interested men in this country—it would be invidious to mention any particular man—but, can any person suppose that when men were playing into the hands of the enemies of the road on the other side, and doing their utmost to injure the road, that it would not have an effect? I do not blame them, but I do blame the men of this country who should have had the interests of this country at heart. Every word they could have said, every act they could have done, should have been in the interest of building up this great transcontinental railway of Canada. Though there may have been some reason for others, there was no reason why our own people should have acted in that way. Before going into the floating debt of the company, I may say that I consider it of the utmost importance that the company should find their way as early as possible to the great summer seaport of Quebec. They feel it important that that connection should be made as soon as it prudently can be made; they hope to be able to do it before long, and I am glad that that is their hope. I cannot join with those who think that they should not find their way to secure the trade of the seaports of New England. I am certain that every man in this House knows that they must have the trade of the seaports of New England, but from whatever direction they get their trade, let us do all we can to look after our own ports. For my own part, I shall be glad in the future to give every encouragement I can in that direction, and therefore I hope that everything will be done that can be done to secure a road as far east as Louisburg, which will give the shortest line through to Liverpool. I am sorry that circumstances have been such that nothing has been done for that part of the country; that it has lain so long in abeyance, but I hope it will not be very long before hon. gentlemen from Cape Breton will have the advantage of railway communication, for it is a section of country which has never had the advantage of a dollar's outlay on railways, while the rest of the country has had very much. I hope it will not be very long before we will be able to assist those people in getting to the nearest port from which they could reach Great Britain, the port of Louisburg.

Mr. BLAKE. Could you not put some more bait on that hook?

Mr. POPE. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to laugh and to sneer, but he knows when I speak, I speak because I feel it; he knows that I never put any bait on my own.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what I say.

Mr. POPE. I wish to say to the House that while we propose to make these changes which are mentioned in the resolutions we believe that we have a perfect security in every shape. We believe that the penalties these gentlemen would have to pay, are so very great—so monstrous as the hon. gentleman said about the Franchise Bill—that they never would under any circumstances fail to meet these obligations. I know it is not probable, and I do not believe it is possible, that men in the position in which these men are placed, with a road in a position in which that road is placed—I say I do not believe that such a thing as their failing to meet their obligations is possible. I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me when they remember that the penalty is that they would lose the whole road, the whole of the lands, and all of the money they have put into the road. If anybody can believe that men of their experience, energy and push would do such a thing, all I can say is it passes my comprehension. Hon. gentlemen know that in October, 1883, the Government became trustees for the payment of dividends of 3 per cent. per ten years upon $65,000,000 of the company's stock, and the company deposited with the Government sufficient in cash and security for that purpose. In December, 1883, the company being financially embarrassed, applied to the Government for relief in the form of a loan of $30,000,000. This is the loan we have been treating of to-day, and it is that loan which I have tried to explain to this House. The company were asked for an explanation how the sums already received from the Government were disposed of; and they replied by submitting the following statement of receipts and expenditures:—

Mr. POPE.

Statement of Expenditure and Receipts up to 31st December, 1883.

First—On the main line—
Construction of line comprising 112 miles completed.....	$23,078,929
Equipment of main line, including $495,567.88 for steamers.....	8,638,307
Expenditure of portion of line received from Government.....	353,606
Materials at different points on the main line.....	4,025,604
Callender to Port Moody.....	$36,096,446
Extension to Montreal and Brockville.....	$3,203,051
Real estate for termini, shops, &c. ....	390,790
	3,593,841
Montreal to Savona's and Brockville. $39,690,287
Second—Branch lines—
Total expenditure on branches.....	3,827,093
Third—On access to the seaboard—Expended out of company's funds on connections, &amp;c.—
Advances towards acquiring access to the seaboard.....	3,965,899
Fourth—on interest on stock, &amp;c.—
Interest on capital stock.....	$2,128,000
Interest on bonds and expenses of land grant.....	372,880
Deposited in advance of dividend.....	8,710,240
	11,211,120
Total.....	$58,695,389

Receipts.

Amount received from cash and land subsidies, stock, and sale of town sites, and net revenue—
Cash subsidy.....	$12,289,212
Land grant bonds.....	9,029,012
From sale of town sites.....	477,775
	21,795,999
Net revenue.....	891,875
Net receipts—
From stock.....	25,356,828
Advance on $10,000,000 of stock....	4,950,000
	30,306,828
	$52,994,702
Balance.....	$5,700,687

The company offered to pledge as security for the repayment of the proposed loan (with 5 per cent. interest per annum, payable half-yearly) on the 1st day of May, 1891:—First, the trunk line between Montreal and Port Moody, with all the branches, aggregating 3,327 miles; second, the rolling stock, machinery, tools and plant; third, the company's three fine iron steamships; fourth, the unsold lands, amounting to 21,246,600 acres. The question of granting the loan was submitted to Parliament in the Session of 1883-84. when Sir Charles Tupper, in laying the case before the House, explained that if the company were to fail to fulfil the terms upon which it is proposed to grant the loan, the Government would be seized of possession of 21,246,600 acres of land, 3,327 miles of railway, and three iron steamships, and for the following sums, viz. :—

3,753,400 acres of land (sold) say its value...	$ 7,506,800
Advance on rails.....	339,235
Cash subsidy paid.....	12,289,212
Loan of.....	22,500,000
Loan for guarantee dividend on stock proposed.....	7,380,912
Lien on Canada Central and Q. M. O. and O. railways.....	5,333,333
Land grant bonds sold with no sales of land to reclaim them.....	1,123,500
Estimated cost of Government work.....	28,000,000
Balance of cash subsidy.....	12,710,788
Total.....	$97,183,780

Or if the land be assumed to be worth $2 per acre—which would amount, in the aggregate, to $42,493,200—the cost of 3,327 miles of railway, equipped, and three steamships, would be $54,690,580. Parliament, on the 5th of March, 1884, 47 Vic., chap. 1, granted the loan, to be applied as follows:—

To pay off floating debt of Dec. 31, 1883.....	$ 7,500,000
To complete the contract.....	15,000,000
To complete the guarantee of 3 per cent on stock.....	7,380,912
Total.....	$29,880,912

The work has continued to be vigorously prosecuted, and is rapidly drawing towards completion; there remaining on the 30th April, 1885, only 150 miles of grading, 206 miles of track-laying, and 640 miles of surfacing to be done. Up to which date (30th April, 1885) the following named sums have been paid to the company:—

Subsidy under the Act of 1881.....	$12,289,212
Subsidy under the Act of 1884.....	9,126,205
Total cost subsidy paid.....	$21,415,417
Loan under the Act of 1884.....	20,307,600
Total.....	$41,723,017
Leaving a balance available for completing the contract of, on subsidy account.....	$ 3,584,583
On loan account.....	2,192,400
Total available for completing the contract	5,776,983
Available for paying dividends on stock.....	7,390,912
$13,167,895

The Chief Engineer expresses a strong conviction that the balance above named of $5,776,983, is amply sufficient to complete the contract, and he expresses his belief that the contract will be completed by the summer of 1886. The company have submitted a statement of expenditure up to the 31st December, 1884, similar in form to their statement of 31st December, 1883. And, in order that the position may be taken in at a glance, I have placed the two statements side by side :

THE COMPANY'S STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE.

	Up to 31st December, 1883.	Up to 31st December, 1884.	During the year 1884.
	$	$	$
On Main line and branches.. ..	30,499,863	52,596,842	22,095,979
Equipment of main line.. ..	8,638,307	9,168,755	530,448
Improvement on Government lines.....	353,606	1,241,780	888,174
Materials on hand.....	4,025,604	3,687,729	337,875
Expended out of company's funds on connections, &c.....	3,966,889	5,857,223	1,890,334
Paid interest on capital stock.....	47,484,269	72,552,329	25,068,960
Sum now in hand of Government to pay nine years interest.....	2,128,000	5,378,000	3,250,000
Interest on land grant bonds and expenses.....	8,710,240	14,288,288	5,578,048
	372,890	582,734	209,354
	58,695,399	92,801,351	34,105,962

Less floating debt of 1883.....	7,500,000
Plus do.....			7,500,000
	51,195,389	92,801,351	41,605,962
Received from cash and land subsidies and Government loans.....	21,318,214	55,532,651	34,214,437
	29,877,175	37,268,700	7,391,525
Less received from bonuses, net earnings, town sites, &c., after deducting payment of interest, exchange, &c., not included in above statement.....			496,063
			6,895,462

In order to make the thing as clear as we could, and if possible, give satisfaction to hon. gentlemen in this House and to the people, we thought it well to send an accountant to Montreal that he might examine the books of the company, and on his own responsibility be able to give the figures according to his examination. Now, I will state what those figures show :

STATEMENT prepared by Mr. Miall of the Expenditure of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to date, showing the floating debt contracted in 1884.

	DETAIL.	TOTAL.
West of Callander, including branches... Construction .....	$48,382,084
Improvements.....	1,241,780
Material.....	3,687,729
		$53,311,593
East of Callander..... On main line.....		4,213,758
Equipment..... do do.....		9,168,755
Interest, &c..... On financial matters in connection with main line construction handling material, &c.....		1,389,474
		$68,083,580
Received from Government..... Subsidy.....	$20,240,317
Loan.....	18,626,600
Land proceeds.....	8,702,088
		47,569,003
Expended on main line out of company's resources.....		$20,514,577
Expended out of company's funds on connections.....		5,857,224
Dividends.....		5,378,000
Deposit with Government to guarantee dividends.....	$ 8,710,240
Less dividends paid.....	1,802,863
		6,907,377
Expenditure made and liabilities incurred out of other than Government resources.....		$38,657,178
How provided:—
Capital (proceeds of stock).....	$29,568,123
Bonuses.....	232,600
Town sites.....	504,675
Earnings.....	$1,626,063
Less balance due.....	169,745
	1,456,318
Floating debt.....	6,895,462
		$38,657,178

Now, it will be interesting to the House to know what are the items of which this indebtedness is composed :

STATEMENT showing the services which occasioned the floating debt contracted by the company in 1884, as shown by their accounts, books, &c.

	DETAILS.	TOTAL.
Expenditure not covered by estimates—
Callander to Port Arthur construction $	918,917 26
Red River to Savona's Ferry do	1,117,040 63
Rolling stock.....	71,737 77
		$2,107,695 66
Port Arthur to Winnipeg construction.....		758,769 67
		$2,866,465 33
Construction of branches west of Callander.....	$ 705,772 28
Improvements on Pembina Branch.....	130,435 80
		$ 836,208 08

Less bonus on South-Western Branch..	200,000 00
Lake steamers.....		636,208 08
		145,118 24
Expenditure west of Callander.....		$3,647,791 65
Montreal to Callander (main line).....	$786,868 83
Branch east of Callander.....	72,276 26
		808,645 09
Expenditure on works, Montreal to Port Moody.....		$4,456,436 74
Administering land grant.....	$109,437 59
Expenses of London office, handling stores, &c.....	230,096 63
Fire insurance premium 3 years in advance.....	122,763 62
	$462,297 84
Less receipts on land sales.....	305,569 00
		156,728 84
		$4,613,165 58
Interest and exchange.....	443,761 19
do on land grant bonds.....	100,416 95
Deposit on guarantee fund.....	147,136 87
		691,315 01
Expended out of company's funds on connections, &c.....		1,890,334 00
		$7,194,815 49
Less receipts from town sites, municipal bonuses, and net earnings.....		299,353 00
		$6,895,462 49

In case, by any possibility, the company failed to fulfil the terms, what would be the position in which the Government of the country would stand? This is the position: The Government would have the possession of the following property:—Land, 21,246,600 acres; railway and branches, 3,327 miles; steel steamships, 3. This will cost us:

3,753,400 acres land (sold) say at $2.....	$ 7,506,800
Cash subsidy paid.....	$21,415,417
do unearned.....	3,584,583
	25,000,000
Loan of 1883-4, paid.....	$20,307,600
do unearned.....	2,192,400
	22,500,000
Proposed loan of 1884-85.....	5,000,000
Lien on Canada Central & Q.M.O. and O. Railway.....	5,333,333
Guarantee dividend on stock proposed.....	7,380,912
Land grant bonds, sold with no sales of land to redeem them.....	1,123,500
Estimated cost of Government work.....	29,500,000
	$103,344,545
Assuming the lands to be worth $2.00 per acre the following would be the position:—
21,246,600 acres at $2 00 per acre.....	$42,193,200
Leaving the cost of 3,327 miles of railway at $18,327 per mile.....	$61,151,345

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. POPE. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman cheer me. I knew I should show him a statement which would be very satisfactory, and I am glad to see that he recognises it as such. The following is the statement of amount of cash subsidy and loan, showing the amount of each earned and paid to the company up to 30th April 1885:—

Cash subsidy.....	$25,000,000
Loan to pay off floating debt.....	7,500,000
do complete contract.....	15,000,000
do do guarantee of 3 per cent.....	7,380,912
	$54,880,912
Up to the 30th April, 1885, the following sums have been earned and paid to the Company:
Cash subsidy.....	$21,415,417
Loan to pay floating debt.....	7,500,000
do complete contract.....	12,807,600
do pay dividend.....
	41,723,017
Balance available.....	$13,157,895

Mr. POPE.

I think, from those figures, if I had not convinced the hon. gentleman already, and heard him say "hear, hear," in recognition of what I said, I still should have been certain that I had convinced him that it was a good transaction, one that he would like to go into, and that we ought to lay our shoulders to the wheel to complete this road. I have no doubt that he feels in his heart of hearts that every dollar of this loan has been properly expended, that a great deal of work has been done and a great deal more money expended upon it than he ever expected would be expended in the next ten years. I quite believe that it is a pleasure to the hon. gentleman, as is shown by his saying "hear, hear," when I explained these matters as frankly as I have. I must not occupy the time of the House much longer. I am sure I have tired you all with these explanations, but I wish for a few moments to call the attention of the House to a comparison between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other transcontinental railways in America. If you take the mileage of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, and the Southern Pacific Railways, and then take the expenditures upon them, I think you will find reason for congratulation so far as the cost of our own line is concerned.

	Canadian Pacific.	Northern Pacific.	Union Pacific.	Southern Pacific.
Mileage—Main line...	2,895	1,889	1,922	2,115
Branches....	432	578	1,128	1,936
Total....	3,327	2,467	3,050	4,051
Share capital.....	$65,000,000	$109,749,464	$120,144,000	$152,459,700
Funded debt.....	$35,000,000	$50,122,200	$213,394,564	$85,617,200
Cash subsidy from Government.....	$25,000,000		$61,395,192
Acres of land grant....	25,000,000	43,756,800	33,401,600	56,862,384
Gross earnings.....	$5,750,521	$12,955,971	$45,746,963	$15,375,117
Net earnings.....	1,191,891	4,994,870	18,742,151	7,739,499
Working expenses.....	4,558,630	7,961,101	27,004,812	7,635,618
Maximum grade per mile.....	116	128	116	128
Minimum curve....	10°	12°	11°	14°

Now, Sir, I will not detain the House much longer, but I think the figures I have given here, the comparison that I have been able to make between the expenditure of this road and that of other roads, must be very satisfactory to the House. In most cases the cost per mile of the Canadian Pacific Railway is not more than one half the cost of other Pacific railroads. I am bound to say that I am certain there is no better road than the Canadian Pacific Railway. Though it has been built with great rapidity, and my hon. friend thinks it has been built a little too fast, I say it has cost but little more than half, and in some instances less than half, what these other roads have cost. In view of these facts I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will not complain; I am sure they have great reason for congratulation that this road has been built in four years, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, or will be built in about four years and a-half. Although we gave the company until 1891 to build the road, they have shortened the time by five or six years, and in the spring of next year we shall be able to travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific on our own line, when our immigrants will be able to go from the seaports of Canada to the North-West or to British Columbia without their being tampered with by American immigration agents. In all the experience I have had with immigration I never had so much difficulty and trouble as I have had during the present year in getting our immigrants through the United States, or even to get them into Manitoba, where they had to pass through American territory. Even when they have secured a passage from Germany to Manitoba on through tickets, we have had the greatest difficulty in keeping them from being enticed away by American agents. And what is the course pursued by these agents? Two of them, perhaps, will come into a car filled with immigrants and begin to talk to one another. One of them says: "I was in Manitoba lately and they are having great trouble there; there is an Indian war going on, and the frosts and floods are so disastrous that I could not afford to stay there and I moved away." This is the kind of conversation that goes on. Only a short time ago about 50 families started from Roumania to Manitoba, what was my experience with reference to these people? I found that these land sharks from the United States came among them and enticed more than half of these people to go away to the United States, and I am sorry to say, that I learned afterwards that some of our own people, some of the German societies, co-operated with these American agents to get these families away. A gentleman of great ability, a man of world wide fame, Dr. Meyer, and an associate of his, arranged for the immigration of 200 Swiss families, and 50 of them sailed for Manitoba a little while ago. But we did not receive them, they did not get to Manitoba, and I determined to find out what the reason was, and I set a man to work for that purpose, because I looked with great favor upon what that gentleman and his associate were going to do in the North-West. I regarded this little band of immigrants as a nucleus for a large Swiss and German emigration in the future. Well, Sir, I sent a man to New York and he found that they had been enticed away to Kentucky. I never in my life have found so much opposition to our immigration on the part of the land and railway societies and others in the United States, as I have this and last year. They have not forgotten our Indian troubles, and they have been careful to spread the fact abroad that we had an Indian war, and I am afraid that my hon. friend's constituency in Manitoba is also pressing very hard upon people who reach Manitoba not to go any further west. But I say that when we have completed this road, when, next spring, or perhaps this autumn, we shall be able to bring immigrants from Liverpool to Manitoba for $25, we shall be able to take them through our own country and thus prevent them falling into the hands of the American agents. But it is hard to bring German immigrants by Liverpool. In Germany the law does not allow you to send immigration agents among the people, and you must use the agents that have got certificates, and who have a right to act, not as immigration but as steamship agents. Well, Sir, all the steamships from Germany to America are plying to New York, and the consequence is that the steamship agents in Germany are all endeavoring to get immigration to New York. I found this year, at all events, that they had a great advantage over us from the fact of our Indian war. They talk about trials by field and flood, and no doubt, a great many of the people, the majority of the people, who came by New York destined for Manitoba have not reached their destination. By the end of next year this may be put an end to, so far as the English, Scotch and Irish immigration is concerned, and a good deal of the Belgian immigration—we must except the Germans—a large portion of which comes via Liverpool. Unless we enlist some of the great steamship companies having large agencies and entrust to them the German immigration, we shall never, I fear, have that immigration to the extent we desire to obtain it. But we shall obtain the old country immigration, if we can put our immigrants in the North-West. It remains with us to look forward with confidence as we ought to look forward with hope and confidence to the future of the country, remembering that it is not only for to-day we are legislating. It remains with those of us who have children at home to work out the future destinies of the country, to show that we are men enough to open up and occupy this vast country and see to it that we make the best use of the heritage we have obtained, so that we may hand it down to our children unimpaired, and that we may build up in that country a healthy, prosperous British people, living under the British flag, under which they were born in the older Provinces and in the old land. I am sure you need not fear for the future of the country. In a few years more there will be no need for us to send volunteers there, if we develop its great natural resources. I am quite sure the future of the country is clear; that every man will be proud of what has been done towards its development; that every man who has given a vote for the Canadian Pacific Railway, every man who gave a vote to sustain it the second year, and every man who supports the resolution now submitted will have the satisfaction of knowing that his children and his children's children will declare, those were the men for the time.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In seconding the motion before the Chair I wish to ask the indulgence of the House while I offer some remarks upon the wide question which the resolution covers. My remarks will cover pretty large ground, no less than the discussion which has taken place since the inauguration of this enterprise. I shall have to refer very often to discussions that have already taken place, and for this and other reasons I shall have to ask the indulgence of the House and the permission of hon. gentlemen if I make use, more than is ordinary, more even than is allowed by custom and rules of the House, of the notes which I have been obliged to take to try and grasp the vast subject and endeavor to do it justice. Within a few miles from Montreal, in the county represented by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, we find a parish and a small town with an allegorical name, a name bestowed by a man of true prophetic instinct, the noble de La Salle. He was indeed a prophet, that brave Cavalier de La Salle, when leaving Montreal in 1679, on his way to China, he christened by the name of Lachine the spot from which he started after having ascended the foaming rapids of that name. The dream of La Salle has taken two hundred years to be realised, but it has been realised, and the piercing whistle of the locomotive has awakened the silent wilderness of the Rocky Mountains, which were reached in 1732, after a thousand perils. Another Canadian, one of the great family that founded the native parish of my friend from Richelieu, the adventurous Gauthier de Varennes, sent across the mysterious continent by the Governor of La Nouvelle France, the Marquis of Beauharnois, whose name has been given to one of the finest counties of Lower Canada. Singular and happy coincidence is this! Three Canadian names, which have survived through two long centuries, are embodied in that grand idea that through Canadian territory was to be found the straightest, the shortest, the easiest, route between Europe and Asia. This recalls to my mind an utterance of Lord Carnarvon, the foresight of which must have struck all those who read it at the time. Before the Royal Society of Geography, in London, Lord Carnarvon said, in 1859:

"It is not unreasonable to look forward to the establishment of a regular system of transit, commencing from Nova Scotia and the shores of New Brunswick, passing through Canada, touching upon the Red River settlement, crossing the prairies to the Vermillion Pass, till it reaches the gold-bearing colony of British Columbia, creating fresh centres of civilization, and consolidating British interests and feelings."

Before Lord Carnarvon, a man of mark, Major Robert Carmichael Smyth, in 1849, if I am not mistaken, pictured, in the following glowing terms, the destinies of the British nation. I quote from a pamphlet on the subject of British colonial railway communications, dedicated to Haliburton, but really addressed to the Duke of Wellington:

"Did His Grace's imagination picture to his mind's eye swarms of human beings from Halifax, from New Brunswick, from Quebec, from Montreal, from Bytown, from Kingston, from Toronto, from Hamilton, from Red River settlement, rushing across the Rocky Mountains of Oregon with the produce of the west in exchange for the riches of the east? Did His Grace imagine the Pacific Ocean alive with all description of vessels sailing and steaming from our magnificent colonies, New Zealand, Van Dieman's Land, New South Wales, New Holland, from Bornea and the west coast of China, from the Sandwich Islands and a thousand other places, all carrying the rich productions of the east, and landing them at the commencement of the west, to be forwarded and distributed throughout our Northern American Provinces, and to be delivered in thirty days at the ports of Great Britain? Did His Grace weigh and consider that to the inventive genius of her sons England owes the foundation of her commercial greatness? We will not go to the length of asserting that she retains her proud pre-eminence solely upon the condition of keeping twenty years ahead of other nations in the practice of mechanical arts?

Did His Grace, in short, look forward to a grand national railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific? If not, let His Grace do so now. Let the people of Great Britain do so! Let her colonial Ministers do so. No country can have all the blessings and advantages of England and have them for nothing! Nor can she retain them without great exertion. Her accumulated wealth cannot be allowed to remain idle, nor will it. But the undertaking proposed has a higher claim to our attention. It is the great link required to unite in one powerful chain the whole English race. Let, then, our railway kings and our iron kings, our princely merchants and lands millionaires, let stirring and active spirits of the age, the great reformers and the modern politicians, many of whom are now proclaiming through the land that economy alone can save the country, condescend, for a short time even, to consider the undertaking proposed."

We can to-day, from this House, address ourselves to England, and we can tell her: What was then asked of you, the mother country, to maintain your pre-eminence and to unite in one powerful chain your immense colonies, we have done ourselves, and we have done it alone. We have done it through our statesmen, through the princes of Canadian finance. They have asked, it is true, some assistance from that accumulated wealth which your genius had gathered, but even those advances have been secured by us in an indisputable manner. In taking up the question of the Canadian Pacific one must bear in mind that that railway project was the largest ever brought out in the world as a single enterprise. There may be found networks of railways more extensive, such as the Pennsylvania Railway, composed of several links, born of isolated enterprises, afterwards amalgamated; and it is not impossible that some European Governments may have, in the course of time, added to their systems of railways a greater number of miles on the whole surface of their country. France, for instance, has disbursed at this moment more than $300,000,000 on 9,000 miles of railway; Austria has guaranteed a sum of $250,000,000 on 3,694 miles; but in no country in the world was there undertaken, in one stretch, the construction of 3,000 miles of railway, five or six hundred miles of which traverses a mountainous region, presenting almost insuperable difficulties. That vast conception which raises our position amongst the nations of the world, which renders us the equals of our proud and powerful neighbors, should not be belittled nor discredited by those most interested in its success—the citizens of this Dominion. Unfortunately, party spirit is such that the desire to destroy is stronger than patriotism, hatred dominates intelligence, and, in certain quarters, people have come to this, that they regret that all the catastrophes which were predicted have not happened. The Canadian Pacific is the offspring of two great ideas: 1st. The necessity of uniting into one great empire the British colonies of North America as a barrier against the absorbing power of the neighboring republic. 2nd. The importance of opening to the coming millions of immigrants the vast area yet unexplored, and of finding for the commerce of Europe, and of America itself, the best, the shortest, the quickest route to the unbounded wealth of Asia. I shall not dwell here upon the wisdom of the policy that has won for Confederation that immense and fertile North-West, and that wonderful country, British Columbia. No one has any doubt to-day upon that question. I only wish to say that out of such a sudden development of forces, there have grown sacred obligations which no good citizen should think of ever evading. The page of our official record upon which is written the attempt to repudiate our engagements will always remain a dark page in our history, whilst the most striking fact standing out in the present period of our national life, the event that has averted the stigma from us and the calamity from the nation, will be the return of the Conservative Government at the head of Canadian affairs. I know that to palliate their own shortcomings our adversaries have tried to ridicule, to bring into contempt, the Administration that had promised the construction of the Canadian Pacific within the period of ten years. Hundreds of times in this House, in their newspapers, on the hustings, they have denounced that promise as absurd, ridiculous, impossible of realisation, and men for whom I cannot help feeling great respect, on account of their high character and their intelligence have allowed themselves to be so carried away by the errors of their party as to make the most solemn declarations, the most gloomy prophecies, prophecies, however, which have been completely and loudly contradicted by what has happened since. Five years had elapsed since a solemn pledge had been given to British Columbia that the transcontinental route would be built in ten years, when the hon. member for East York, then Prime Minister, declared as follows, in this House:

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

"I have been an advocate of the construction of a railway across the continent, but I never believed that it was within our means to do it in anything like the period of time within which the hon. gentleman bound Parliament and the country. I believe the bargain was an act of madness, of utter insanity, and an evidence of political incapacity that has had no parallel in this or in any other country that I am aware of. After careful examination I found that while there was comparatively little difficulty in ascertaining the probable character of the prairie country, nay, from the Lake of the Woods westward to the Rocky Mountains, it must be a work of Herculean magnitude to ascertain the exact character of the country through British Columbia and from Lake of the Woods, eastward to Lake Nipissing."

Herculean magnitude! The word was well chosen, and I call attention to it when I fully accept it as a striking illustration of the immense success that has crowned the broad policy of the present leader of the Administration, and the intelligent confidence of the party supporting him. Yes, in 1871, the project of constructing the Pacific was a sublime audacity. It revealed the foresight of the men who had conceived and brought out that great scheme. But in 1876 there should have been no room for doubt. The Premier had then before him extensive and precise information. Elaborate surveys had been made, if we can judge by the following statements of their cost, as I find them in the Blue Books:

For the section east of the Rocky Mountains:—
Surveys up to the 30th June, 1872.....	$194,125 40
do do 1873.....	345,967 52
do do 1874.....	199,156 26
do do 1875.....	290,873 82
do 30th Dec., 1875.....	246,769 13
Making a total of.....	$1,276,892 16

Section of the Rocky Mountains:—
Surveys up to the 30th June, 1872.....	$295,302 00
do do 1873.....	215,850 00
do do 1874.....	111,068 00
do do 1875.....	183,656 00
do 30th Dec., 1875.....	204,137 00
Making a total of.....	$1,010,016 00

Giving for all these surveys an aggregate amount of $2,286,907.54.

Shall I compare the policy, the confessions of incapacity, and the failure of the Liberal party in 1876, with the action of the Conservative party and its results, after a period of nine years? In 1876, the leader of the Government announced to the House that the works on the main line of the Pacific had reached the following points:—East of Fort William, 22 miles of grading; in the direction of Lake Shenandouan, 13 miles of grading; and east of Red River, 25 miles of grading. I say grading only; not a rail was laid, not a piece of iron work, only grading. Three years afterwards, in December, 1878, the following was the statement of the work done on the main line:—From Fort William to English River, 60 miles with rails laid and 53 miles of grading; from Lacrosse to Selkirk, 75 miles with rails laid; from Keewatin to Lacrosse, 36 miles graded. In five years the Mackenzie Administration had succeeded in completing 135 miles of railway and 89 miles of grading, and the Dominion had already absorbed $10,203,000 from its treasury towards the great work of the Pacific. I may add, Mr. Speaker, by way of comparison, that the present Administration has secured the constructed and completed 3,121 miles of the main line and branches of the Pacific within the period of six years. And to obtain that result the Government have not even benefited by the costly surveys of the preceding Government, whose plans and lines have been set aside from Callander to Fort William and from Selkirk to Port Moody. More than that, the company has been obliged to change nearly 100 miles of the 150 miles built on the line adopted by the last Government.

That undertaking, to build the railway in ten years, characterised as madness, as an act of insanity, the evidence of political incapacity—that project, condemned as an impossibility for the time fixed for its execution, which demanded an effort of the “Herculean magnitude” for its location alone—that project, I say, has been accomplished within six years, without any extraordinary effort, without danger, without commotion, without any burthen on the people of the country. At the rate they were going, the late Government—building 150 miles in five years—would have taken the greater part of the next century to cross the Rockies and reach the Pacific Ocean. One is led to ask the question, what would have become of the allegiance of that magnificent Province of British Columbia, to which the pledge of this Government with the solemn sanction of the Imperial authorities had been given in 1875? Stimulated by the marvelous development of the great Pacific State, California, the British Columbians, who knew that their country was as well situated, better gifted in certain respects, called by its resources to achieve high destinies, and to play on this continent as important a part as California, the British Columbians, I say, would not have consented to stagnate and sleep in the expectation of a railway ever promised and never done. They have the noble ambition of manly work, the great school of material progress is within reach of their hand across the Straits of Fuca. Having right on their side, they would not have failed to make us pay heavily for our breach of faith in the treaties made with them. Fortunately, and thanks to the intervention of Lord Carnarvon, further delay until 1890 was granted. But it did not appertain to the late Government to save the honor of the country, since, on different occasions, the then leader of the Cabinet, whilst accepting the obligation to complete the work within fifteen years fixed for the building of the road from Port Arthur to the Pacific Ocean, declared himself unable to build the section north of Lake Superior, and I believe that the present leader of the Opposition was more emphatic in the expression of his fears. He considered the enterprise such a gigantic one—such a fantastic one, I may say—that he even then raised the question of the disruption of Confederation. On the 15th of April, 1880, he expressed the following serious and sinister views:

“I had taken occasion in the fall of 1874 to declare my individual views on the subject of the Pacific Railway. I then stated that I thought the fulfilment of the agreement with British Columbia impossible; that unless she choose to be reasonable and to agree to a relaxation of the terms, I saw no hope of performing them; and that, if she insisted on secession as a consequence of the non-fulfilment of the terms of Union, I for one was ready to say: ‘Let her go rather than ruin the country in the attempt to perform the impossible.’ I have never changed that opinion, and each succeeding year has strengthened my view as to the wisdom and soundness of such a decision.”

I do not believe that any bolder words were ever uttered in this House. Nothing but the eminent position of the gentleman who uttered them could have secured them from condemnation. An ordinary member would surely have been denounced, if he had ventured so far. It was in 1880 that the hon. member for Durham so expressed his views; it was after he had been willing to join a Cabinet by which all the Carnarvon conditions has been accepted, it was after he had belonged to a Cabinet whose chief had said, on the 31st of March, 1876:

“We have felt from the first, that while it was impossible to implement to the letter, the engagements entered into by our predecessors, the good faith of the country demanded that the Administration should do everything that was reasonable and in their power to carry out the pledges made to British Columbia, if not the entire obligation, at least such parts of it as seemed to be within their power, and most conducive to the welfare of the whole Dominion, as well as to satisfy all reasonable men in the Province of British Columbia, which Province had fancied itself entitled to complain of apparent want of good faith in carrying out these obligations.”

Not only that, but one year later, the Opposition, to better express the new views of their chief, proposed on the 26th January, 1881, the following amendment, which was supported by their leader and all his followers:—

“Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Rodgers, that all the words after ‘that’ to the end of the question be left out, and the words, ‘The present construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia is premature, and will involve the country in an expense beyond its reasonable capacity, and will result in the maintenance of too high a rate of taxation, while the postponement of that part of the undertaking till after the completion of the prairie section, will enable it to be constructed at much less cost and within a reasonable time.’”

And all those accusations of folly, all those “impossible enterprises,” that “probable dissolution of the Confederation” had no ground whatever, no figures, no arguments of any value to support them. The Opposition were aware of the engagements that bound the Dominion Government, but they had so little care for the honor of the country that they were ready to ignore those solemn engagements for a mere caprice. Well, Mr. Speaker, after all those fears, all those threats, I am able at this hour, from my place in Parliament, to say, repeating the celebrated words of Sir George Cartier: “All aboard for the west! All aboard for the Pacific!” Yes, all aboard for the Rockies, for Columbia River, for Yale, for Port Moody, Coal Harbor and Victoria! By the contract of 1881 with the Syndicate the road was divided into four sections, as follows:—

	Miles
Callander to Port Arthur (built by the Co.)	657
Port Arthur to Red River (“ by the Gov’t.)	428
Red River to Savona’s Ferry (“ by the Co.)	1,252
Savona’s Ferry to Pt. Moody (“ by the Gov’t.)	213
Total	2,550
Add Pembina branch	65
	2,615

On the 1st of May, 1885, we had the following result:—

	Miles.
Callander to Port Arthur (built by the Co.)	657
Port Arthur to Red River (“ by the Gov’t.)	428
Red River to Savona’s Ferry (“ by the Co.)	1,252
(Less 150 miles to be graded.)
Savona’s Ferry to Port Moody	213
Total	2,550
Add Pembina branch	65
	2,615

So that out of 2,615 miles first intended to be the Canadian Pacific Railway, 2,470 miles are now built, if we include 56 miles all graded, but not ironed towards Savona’s Ferry. And here is the exact amount to be spent by the company to entirely complete the railway from one end to the other:

Callander to Port Arthur	$ 773,279
Port Arthur to Red River	60,000
Winnipeg to Savona’s Ferry	5,004,704
Total	$5,836,983

Up to the 30th of April, 1885, the following sums have been paid to the company:—

Subsidy under the Act of 1881.....	$12,289,212
“ “ “ 1884 .....	9,126,205
Loan of 1884 .....	20,307,600
Total.....	$41,723,017

Leaving a balance available for completing the contract of:

On subsidy account .....	$3,585,583
“ loan “ .....	2,192,400
Total.....	$5,776,983

That is to say only $60,000 short of what is required to finish the road; so that we may now say that the road is completed inasmuch as the means to construct it are in the hands of the company. Going back to the opinion expressed by the late Government and their unwillingness to build the section north of Lake Superior, I confess I am unable to understand the persistence of the Liberal Government in opposing the construction of the section north of Lake Superior, whilst they were ready to spend $20,000,000 for the portion of the road between Lake Superior and Winnipeg. During at last five months of the year that section to Winnipeg would have necessarily been closed, and if navigation was declared to be our only resource, we would not have been in a worse position in having to use, altogether, the American route to which we were thus forced, and in having to pass through Pembina to reach Duluth, at the other end of Lake Superior. The interest alone of the $20,000,000 saved would have allowed the Government to give material assistance to its proposed navigation of Lake Superior. And if Fort William was not to be connected by rail with Lake Nipissing, why that persistence in building, at a cost of $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, the section of the Canada Central and Georgian Bay branch to reach at Lake Nipissing, a terminus that would not, in reality, be used as such unless connected with Fort William? Was it intended to receive the traffic that the navigation of the lake would bring there? But, then, a few more miles of navigation south of Georgian Bay would have brought that traffic to railways already built and nearer the ocean port of Montreal. It is a fact that whereas from French River to Montreal, via Mattawa, the distance is 424 miles, it is but 400 miles from Midland to Montreal. The opposition of the late Government to the construction of the section north of Lake Superior was in direct contradiction to the decision of Lord Carnarvon. The reasons for that opposition are found in the despatch of the 7th September, 1874:

“The fourth condition says the despatch, involves another precise engagement to have the whole of the railway communication finished in 1890. There are the strongest possible objections to again adopting a precise time for the completion of the lines. The eastern portion of the line, except so far as the mere letter of the conditions is concerned, affects only the Provinces east of Manitoba, and the Government have not been persuaded either of the wisdom or the necessity of immediately constructing that portion of the railway which traverses the country from the west end of Lake Superior to the proposed eastern terminus on Lake Nipissing near Georgian Bay, nor is it conceived that the people of British Columbia could, with any show of reason whatever, insist that this portion of the work should be completed within any definite time, inasmuch as if the people who are chiefly if not wholly affected by this branch of the undertaking are satisfied it is maintained that the people of British Columbia would practically have no right of speech in the matter.

“It is intended by the Government that the utmost diligence shall be manifested in obtaining a speedy line of communication by rail and water from Lake Superior westward, completing the various links of railway as fast as possible, consistent with that prudent course which a comparatively poor and sparsely settled country should adopt.

“There can be no doubt that it would be an extremely difficult task to obtain the sanction of the Canadian Parliament to any specific bargain as to time, considering the consequences which have already resulted from the unwise adoption of a limited period in the terms of Union for the completion of so vast an undertaking, the extent of which must necessarily be very imperfectly understood by people of a distance. The committee advise that Lord Carnarvon be informed that, while in no case could the Government undertake the completion of the whole line in the time mentioned, an extreme unwillingness exists to another limitation of time; but if it be found absolutely necessary to secure a present settlement of the controversy by further concessions, a pledge may be given that the portion west of Lake Superior will be completed so as to afford connection by rail with existing lines of railway through a portion of the United States and by Canadian waters during the season of navigation by the year 1890 as suggested.”

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

And whilst that excuse of an excessive expenditure was put forward against the building of that important part of the main line, and the importance of that part has been fully demonstrated during this unfortunate revolt in the North-West, the Government was authorising a large expenditure, which, if not wholly useless, was, at least, unnecessary for the fulfilment of our engagements under the Carnarvon award—I refer to the building of the 85 miles of the Pembina Branch—$1,600,000. There was also the famous Foster's contract of the Georgian Bay Branch, on the following conditions: $850,000 in money, $609,000 by a 4 per cent. guarantee, and $3,400,000 in lands, say a total of $4,859,000. That contract involved the necessity of spending another $1,500,000 for the 30 miles remaining between the end of the Georgian Bay Branch and the terminus at Lake Nipissing. The route between Winnipeg and Lake Superior was lengthened by 40 miles by lot making it direct to Lake Nipigon, thus adding an expenditure of at least $16,000,000. There was also the subsidy to the Canada Central, $1,400,000. The Government was willing to spend $6,000,000 on the Nanaimo line, on Vancouver's Island, a work which could easily have been delayed. So that at the moment when they declared the building of the section north of Lake Superior an impossibility, the Government of my hon. friend from East York, breaking in that respect a sacred engagement on the plea of too large an expenditure, undertook to the amount of $16,959,000 works, the postponement of which would not have signified and would not have been a violation of our engagements. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the merits or the utility of those works; this is not the time to do so. I only want to state that the then Government was not unwilling to spend a sum of $16,959,000 on works which were not included in our obligations, and that they refused to undertake the works which the Imperial arbitration had ordered us to complete. I want to state that the Government of the hon. gentlemen on the other side hesitated, pleaded, refused, and then unwillingly consented to build 1,900 miles of railway from Lake Superior to the Pacific coast in fifteen years, and as a contrast to show the present Government completing 2,400 miles of the main line and 701 miles of branches in six years, saving the good name and the pledge of the country, and opening, five years sooner, the door to that great commercial prosperity which must follow the completion of our great Canadian transcontinental railway. I know what answer our friends on the other side will give us. It is invariably the same answer, and it is an easy one, avoiding all effort in the direction of accuracy: “You have been extravagant with the money of the people; you have obtained the rapid execution of those immense works at the expense of the public chest.” Nothing is more unjust, Mr. Speaker, nothing is more untrue than that assertion thrown in our faces in the place of an answer. Who has forgotten that once the Mackenzie Government offered to any company willing to build and then become the sole proprietors of the 2,797 miles of the Canadian Pacific, the following terms: Subsidy in money per mile, $10,000; 4 per cent. guarantee during 25 years per mile, on $7,400; land subsidy, per mile, 20,000 acres. I say that the guarantee of 4 per cent. was on $7,400 per mile, although the call for tenders did not mention the sum, but the Government could not give less, having themselves chosen that proportion in the Foster contract. That offer represented in round figures: in cash subsidy, $27,970,000; by the net 4 per cent. guarantee, $20,977,500; by 55,940,000 acres of land at $2 an acre, $111,880,000; or a total of $160,827,500. That assistance was a complete gift for the building of the road, and we can compare it with similar items in the subsidy granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway by the present Government which are as follows:—

Sections built by the Government and given to the company .....	$29,500,000
Cash subsidy.....	25,000,000
25,000,000 acres of land, at $2 an acre.....	50,000,000
	$104,500,000
The surplus offered by the late Government being.....	56,327,500
	$160,827,500

I need not add that the class of road we present to-day to the country is, to say the least, not inferior to the road which the late Government expected to get under the most favorable circumstances by their offer, and far superior to that road with regard to equipment, terminal facilities, connections and branches. And it is far superior to the expectations of the people, who had already been informed that the estimates for the road, as prepared by Mr. Sandford Fleming in 1879, were estimates for a cheap road, covering only $1,300 per mile for rolling stock, and not allowing more than $13,000 per mile for construction of the prairie sections. The present company has already a rolling stock of the value of more than $3,000 per mile, and if we grant them the power of raising the $15,000,000 additional contemplated by the measure proposed another $1,000,000 is to be added at once to the value of the rolling stock of the company's road, so that instead of having a road equipped to the extent of $5,100,000 on 2,550 miles of the main line if we take the calculations of the hon. member for Durham at $2,000 for a mile, we shall have the same length of road 2,550 equipped to the extent of over $9,000,000 not including the branches. On that single item we have a net gain, in favor of travelling accommodations and accommodations for traffic, of $4,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend says "hear, hear." I have taken his own figures for the estimates I am giving the House. Those figures of his, I may say, have varied immensely since the hon. gentleman first began to discuss this question in the House. If his political opinions had varied to the same extent he would, by this time, be sitting on this side of the House and perhaps be a colleague of the right hon. First Minister. His estimates have varied like his appeals and demands on the Government for a different construction of the railway, and it is in spite of the hon. gentleman that the road has been built at all. I might also remark that the company have largely exceeded the 2,797 miles to which the contractors by the late Government for main line and branches were limited. They have added 712 miles to their line of 2,550 of main line and 65 miles of branch, which is now 3,327 miles, not including 600 miles of leased lines. The terminus has been extended to Montreal by the purchase of 345 miles of road and the expenditure of over $4,213,753. Another sum of $4,000,000 has been expended to secure access to the Atlantic seaboard. The system of railways which the company now controls in Ontario has cost over $5,000,000. There remains comparatively but little to do to reach Sault Ste. Marie and the American North-West, the Algoma Branch having already cost $2,000,000. In one word, the company has expended, and wisely expended, over $15,000,000 of its own resources to add to the earning capacity of its main line and to complete its vast and uninterrupted system of transcontinental transportation. My hon. friends on the other side would be the last to find fault with those changes, with those improvements. The gravest charge which the hon. gentleman brought against the Government in 1880 was that we were not building a road sufficiently solid and complete. The present leader of the Opposition, speaking on the 15th of April, 1880, said:

322

"But except by most seriously degrading the road, by altogether lowering the style of construction, by changing it from a good, through line to an inferior colonisation road, it will be necessary according to the estimates of the hon. member for Lambton, if they be correct, to expend a very much larger sum than the hon. Minister calculates to reach this result. On the other hand, we must look to the ultimate conversion of the road into a first-class road, a cheap carrying road, for the North-West, without which it will be useless for that long stretch of country towards Battleford and beyond, for the grain will have to come down along the Pacific Railway a great many miles before it reaches Selkirk or the Red River. The House must remember that, according to the theory on which the hon. Minister advocates the completion of the road, he is bound to give reasonable grades and curves to the prairies of the west * * * Again, of course, the through traffic depends on the road being first-class, and we must remember that after we have spent all the hon. Minister proposes, we shall have not a Pacific but a colonisation road."

It is true that my hon. friend has travelled from one side to the other on that point. One would think, from his utterances at the beginning of this Session, that he is now making it a crime for the company to have given the country a first-class road. He seems to be afraid that the road is too well built to be able to carry freight at cheap rates. He is scandalised at the announcement that a first-class road has cost in the prairie section as much $16,000 or $17,000 a mile, and he charitably insinuates that dishonesty or incapacity must have presided at the building of that work. In 1880, the Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper gave instructions to the Chief Engineer to construct a cheap road. We see in his letter of the 15th of April, 1880, this passage:

"With regard to the location and character of the railway, I am aware that your own preference has been for a line with light easy gradients. The Government recognises the advantages of this feature between Lake Superior and Manitoba, but west of Red River we attach less importance to it than to the rapid settlement of the country and the immediate accommodation of settlers. The policy of the Government is to construct a cheap railway following or rather in advance of settlement with any workable gradients that can be had, incurring no expenditure beyond that absolutely necessary to effect the rapid colonisation of the country."

And in further evidence of what I want to demonstrate, I shall cite an extract of Mr. Fleming's report in answer to the above letter:

"OTTAWA, 15th April, 1880.

"SIR,—I have the honor to submit the following estimate of expenditure necessary to place the Canadian Pacific Railway in operation from Lake Superior to Port Moody, West of Red River, 100 miles have been placed under contract, and tenders have been received for a second 100 mile section. These two sections are designed to be constructed and equipped in the most economical manner, dispensing with all outlay except that necessary to render the railway immediately useful in the settlement of the country. It is contended that the line be partly ballasted to render it available for colonisation purposes, full ballasting being deferred until the traffic demands high speed. It is intended to provide sufficient rolling stock for immediate wants, postponing full equipment until the country becomes populated and the business calls for its increase.

"On this basis and on the other data furnished, the railway may be opened from Lake Superior to the Pacific coast within the following estimate:

Fort William to Selkirk (406 miles) with light gradients, including a fair allowance of rolling stock and engineering during construction.....	$17,000,000
Selkirk to Jasper Valley (1,000 miles) with light equipment, etc.....	13,000,000
Jasper Valley to Port Moody (550 miles) with light equipments etc. :—
Jasper to Lake Kamloops, 335 at $43,660.....	$15,500,000
Lake Kamloops to Yale, 125 at 80,000.....	10,000,000
Yale to Port Moody, 90 at 38,888.....	3,500,000
	$29,000,000
Add.....	1,000,000
	30,000,000
Total miles, 1,956.....	$80,000,000

"The above does not include cost of exploration and preliminary surveys throughout all parts of the country north of Lake Nipissing to James' Bay in the east, and from Equimault to Port Simpson in the west, between latitudes 49° and 56°, not properly chargeable to construction, $3,119,618, or the cost of the Pembina Branch, $1,750,000, or with other amounts with which the Pacific Railway account is charged."

Another report of the Engineer-in-Chief to the Minister of Railways, dated Ottawa, 16th April, 1880, says:

"In compliance with your directions, I have the honor to consider the cost of the eastern section of the Pacific Railway extending from Thunder Bay, Lake Superior, to the eastern terminus, Lake Nipissing.

"It is impossible to say what labor and materials may cost some years hence, when the period arrives for the eastern section to be undertaken. Taking the basis of present prices and present contracts, and adhering to the economic principles of construction set forth in the letters of yesterday, I feel warranted in stating that $20,000,000 may be considered a fair estimate of the cost of opening the line from Fort William to the eastern terminus.

"In order that the estimates of the cost of the line from Fort William to the Pacific and from Fort William to the eastern terminus near Lake Nipissing, be clearly understood, I deem it proper to submit the following explanations:—

"I have in previous reports laid before Parliament, advocated a location for the railway with generally light gradients and other favorable engineering features. The policy of the Government, as stated in your letter, likewise the change of line by the abandonment of the old location west of Red River, render it necessary on my part to modify the views I have previously held.

"I have likewise estimated the amount of rolling stock as limited to the extent considered absolutely necessary for colonisation purposes, and I have not overlooked the fact that the transportation of rails and other materials, after our own line from Lake Superior to Manitoba shall have been completed, will be reduced to nominal charges to cover actual outlay, instead of the very high rates we have been compelled to pay by the railways in the United States.

"It must be borne in mind that if present defined policy with respect to the gradual progress of the work be modified, or if the extent of the work be different from that assumed, or if its general character be altered, the cost may be affected by the change. The same result may be looked for if a higher price has to be paid for materials, or for labor, and if through these or other causes the contractors failing to perform what they have undertaken, the work in consequence has to be ret at higher prices. Under these circumstances the cost of the whole line may be increased.

"The estimate submitted is based on the data set forth, and on that data the whole main line, from Port Moody, on the Pacific coast, to the eastern terminus, in the neighborhood of Lake Nipissing, may be constructed in the manner and under the circumstances referred to, for about $80,000,000. But to meet any of the possible contingencies to which I have referred, I beg leave to recommend that in considering the subject of capital required for the undertaking, a liberal percentage be added."

My hon. friend from Durham was greatly scandalised when he read the documents I have just quoted, and he took the first opportunity that presented itself to lecture the Government upon that point. He laid special stress upon the fact that the prairie section would not be built for $13,000 a mile. All that part of his speech in the Session of 1880 is worth quoting; I shall content myself by adding to my last quotation, the following:—

"It would be very easy to tell, if only it were convenient to let us know, what the estimated cost of the equipment is. It is included for example in the estimate of $13,000 a mile for the prairie road. But the hon. Minister of Railways would not tell us how much he could squeeze out for equipment in dollars from the $13,000 a mile, and I am not surprised because I daresay he would have to go into decimals to give it to us. When you recollect that an adequate rolling stock, according to the former estimates, costs $2,000 a mile, that the steel rails, plates and fastenings, cost many thousands more per mile, you will find how very little remains of the $13,000 a mile to construct the railway.

"At a point seventy miles north-west of the longitude of Edmonton, you get to the end of the prairie. * * * I take, therefore, the longitude of Edmonton which is also the point of divergence, in case a northerly route should hereafter be adopted, as, for present purposes, the point of separation between the prairie and the British Columbia sections, and my hon. friend from Lambton, upon all the information which the official documents and the engineer's report give, added to his own knowledge (assuming the continuance of the same gradients and curves and the same style of construction and equipments, which were always intended up to the time he resigned) estimates that the 256 miles from Edmonton to the summit would cost $9,400,000, which, added to Mr. Fleming's and Mr. Smith's estimates of over $36,500,000 for the road from the summit to the Pacific, would give a total of over $45,000,000, as the cost according to the old estimates.

"From Selkirk to Edmonton, according to the old grades and styles of construction, the hon. member for Lambton estimates at $17,650,000. * * * I do not think we can decide that $13,000,000 will pay for the work according to the present plan of construction."

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have before us a most extraordinary fact, Mr. Sandford Fleming having said in his report: "Selkirk to Jasper Valley (1,000 miles) with equipment $13,000,000." The hon. member for Durham comes up and, fortified with the opinions of the hon. member for East York, says: "Jasper Valley to Edmonton (256 miles) $9,000,000; Edmonton to Selkirk (744 miles) $17,000,000—$26,000,000." Exactly double the chief engineer's estimate. The hon. gentleman was not afraid to put Mr. CHAPLEAU.

his reputation at stake and to declare from his seat, a place which allows its occupant to say only what he believes is true; "the section will cost $26,000 a mile." And if we take his estimate for Selkirk to Edmonton, alone, that is to say 744 miles at $17,000,000 it is $22,850 a mile. And now, Mr. Speaker, what do we see? The hon. gentleman getting up in his seat and saying: "My calculations of 1880 were all wrong, the Minister of Railways whom I was then fighting was right; I now declare emphatically that dishonesty or incompetency alone can have absorbed $16,000 a mile in that prairie region which I said, five years ago would cost $22,000 a mile." The whole country must congratulate itself upon the happy result we have obtained to-day. Surely there must have been at times a great deal of uneasiness, not to say fear felt, in the community, if public opinion could have been affected by the declarations of my hon. friends opposite. It is within the recollection of everyone that the most fabulous statements were made as to the cost of the railway, and the hon. leader of the Opposition was far from reassuring the public mind, by his elaborate calculations upon the subject. He once informed us that the Pacific would cost the country no less than $144,500,000 in cash. I am not exaggerating, Mr. Speaker. I quote from the hon. gentleman's speech at the sitting of this House on the 15th April, 1880:

"There are 550 miles of a very difficult road to build from Jasper House to Port Moody. For a part only of that road, for the 493 miles between the divide and Port Moody, Mr. Fleming's estimate was about $36,000,000. The estimate of Mr. Smith was $36,500,000, and the estimate of Mr. Cambie was, I think, $31,000,000. But the average estimate of the Chief and Assistant Engineer may be said to be over $36,000,000 for this 493 miles, which would run up the 550 miles to $40,000,000. The Canada Central Railway subsidy reaches $1,410,000; the surveys, including those location surveys, which, after all, come out of the pockets of the people, whether called exploratory surveys or location surveys, amount to $4,000,000. The road from Fort William to Selkirk was estimated at $17,000,000; the Pembina branch cost $1,500,000, and, adding $100,000 for the Red River bridge, we reach a little over $15,000,000. From Selkirk to Edmonton, according to the old grades and style of construction, the hon. member for Lambton estimates at $17,650,000, which, added to the $25,000,000, makes a total of over $42,500,000 as the amount, including what has been spent for surveys which it will have cost the country, irrespective of interest and construction to reach the point which I suggest as the reasonable terminus for the prairie section of the road.

"According to the old system of construction, that central section would cost including the other items, I have mentioned, altogether over $42,500,000 leaving out entirely both ends. What are the ends to cost? $45,000,000 as I have stated the cost from Edmonton to Burr's Inlet on the west; and from Fort William to Nipissing on the east, the hon. member for Lambton estimates at a length of about 650 miles and a cost of $32,500,000. Thus the ends make up together $77,000,000, the centre part expenditure $42,500,000 making a total of $120,000,000 and that wholly exclusive of the legitimate and necessary charges which must be added in all cases, the charge for construction. * * *

"Taking the returns of ten days ago, if $80,000,000 are expended in the next ten years, there will be a total of over $24,500,000 for interest, calculating interest on future loans at 5 per cent., the lowest rate, as I believe, at which the money can be raised.

And even, during the last Session what did the hon. member say:

"It is quite true that I submitted to the House, as the result of the calculations of my hon. friend the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), based upon the estimates of the engineers up to that date, the probable cost of a first-class railway, from Callander to Port Moody, at the sum he mentions—$120,000,000. That is perfectly true; I do not understand that the hon. gentleman now finds fault with that estimate. He did find fault with it—

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

"Mr. BLAKE. Yes, he said to-day that he could not controvert my argument about his estimate being too low, because my estimate was true. I venture to say that I heard a great deal of complaint against my argument when I used it. I was told that it was extravagant, and the hon. gentleman thought it was too much altogether; but neither my hon. friend from York, nor myself, was responsible for more than this, that the estimates were the fair results of the estimates of the engineers laid on the Table of the House and printed in the Sessional Papers. I believed them to be so, and that was all we said. I say that the estimates of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company last year came exactly to that figure. They were to spend $91,000,000 on the road from Callander to Port Moody. The Government sections were to cost $28,000,000; and if you add $28,000,000 to $91,000,000, you get just about $120,000,000, as nearly as possible; and if you allow a trifle—if the hon. gentleman would be bending enough to night to allow a trifle or so for the $5,000,000 for surveys—you will find that the estimate of the company last year does accord with the estimates of the engineers made so long before."

That road which was to cost us $120,000,000, not counting the interest, we have to-day for $53,000,000 in cash disbursed by us, with 712 miles of branch lines and 600 miles of leased lines in addition to the road upon which the hon. member for Durham made his calculations. And instead of being obliged to pay 5 per cent. on the money we want, we have borrowed at 4 per cent. and at 3½ per cent.

Mr. TROW. I rise to a point of order. I read a few extracts and was called to order by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman is now reading his speech.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Let us see now what this Government will show us, next fall, when the road will be completed? What has been done, during these six years of power, for that gigantic work which my hon. friends from Durham and from East York declared an impossibility so far as execution was concerned and the conception of which they termed "an act of insanity?" We have before us two estimates for that work; Mr. Fleming's estimate, $80,000,000; Mr. Blake's estimate, $120,000,000, or an average of $100,000,000, and this calculation is based on the main line alone, without reference to the branch lines. Mr. Fleming's estimate allows only $1,300 per mile for rolling stock, I find that proportion of rolling stock repeated in Mr. Schreiber's estimates as published in 1884, page 211 of the 9th volume of the Sessional Papers. The $80,000,000 estimated cost of the building of the road is thus reduced by $3,387,800 leaving a balance of $76,612,200. Let us compare that sum with the actual cost of construction of the road as it stands to-day:

Cash subsidy .....	$25,000,000
Built by the Government.....	29,846,148
Loan of last year.....	29,880,912
New obligations of this year .....	15,000,000
Land grant bonds .....	8,702,086
Town sites.....	504,875
Paid on stock .....	29,568,123
Bonuses.....	232,660
Earnings.....	1,456,318
Surveys.....	3,263,482

$143,254,344

Deducting from that sum:—

1. Balance of the deposit to pay dividends.....	$ 14,288,287
2. Paid dividends.....	5,378,000
3. Interests paid by company.....	1,389,474
4. Equipment.....	7,359,930
5. Steamers .....	697,369
6. Advances to the South Western Railway.....	1,595,280
7. " " St. Lawrence and Ottawa Ry..	227,155
8. " " Atlantic and North-West Ry..	202,837
9. " " Manitoba South-Western Colonisation Company.....	1,254,678
10. " " Ontario and Quebec and to the Credit Valley Railways.....	1,265,450
11. Acquired lines.....	8,981,955
12. Branch lines .....	4,605,172
13. Displacing 100 miles near Winnipeg.....	400,000
14. Renewing inferior material building.....	253,000
15. Indemnity to Manning, Macdonald & Co.....	395,000
16. Shops and machinery near Montreal.....	903,165
17. Construction plant, outfit and tools .....	208,291
18. Real estate at or near Montreal.....	408,207
19. Grounds and building at Winnipeg .....	1,040,701
(To be taken out of the $15,000,000 now asked for.)
20. For cars and material.....	1,000,000
21. For elevators, terminal facilities .....	1,500,000
22. For workshops on nine different points.....	600,000
23. To reach Coal Harbor.....	760,000
24. Snow sheds in mountains.....	450,000
25. Lake Superior.....	160,000
26. Terminal facilities at Quebec.....	200,000
27. Surveys .....	3,263,482

Total.....$ 59,079,433

Total cost—Less amount outside of main line.....$143,254,344

Cost of main line..... 59,079,433

$ 84,174,911

The hon. member for Durham has estimated the rolling stock at $2,000 a mile in his calculation of $120,000,000, reducing it for construction to $114,788,000. We have seen that Fleming's estimates were $76,612,200, and we find that the real amount expended for construction is $84,174,911, or not $9,000,000 more than the quasi colonisation road for which estimates were asked of Mr. Fleming, and $30,000,000, or more exactly $25,000,000, less than the amount calculated by the hon. leader of the Opposition, if we deduct from his calculations the amount applied to branches. The specifications of Mr. Fleming, with light grading, heavy curves and high grades, have been set aside and the demands of the hon. member for Durham for a first class road have been complied with. If we had not, in that respect, the testimony of the most competent railway men who have inspected the road, I would cite the opinion of the Chief Engineer of the Government, in his report as far back as the 22nd September, 1883:

"It affords me much pleasure to be able to state that the Pacific Railway Company are doing their work in a manner which leaves nothing to be desired. The road is being most substantially built. The larger streams are being spanned by strong iron bridges, resting upon abutments and piers of massive masonry, and the small streams on the eastern section will be passed through solid cut stone culverts. On the central section, the streams are for the most part crossed by substantially built pile bridges.

"The work so far as it has been done, up to the present time, has been performed most faithfully and in a manner fully up to the requirements of the contract. I am enabled to speak with confidence upon this point, having made a personal inspection during the last two months of the work from a point east of Port Arthur (formerly Prince Arthur's Landing) to Port Moody."

The statement I have just given shows that the company has actually spent for branches and for the lengthening of the main line, $15,330,823. Instead of blaming the company for that expenditure and raising the cry of extravagance, I say that nothing is better calculated to inspire confidence in the future of the enterprise than the energy which the company has shown in completing its railway system in view of future competition. It is now admitted that intelligently chosen branches are the strongest elements of success for a railway. I read some days ago, in an official report to the United States Government, at a chapter concerning the Internal Commerce of the United States for 1884, p. 37, the following remarks:—

"The work of constructing transcontinental railroads and their branches, and of equipping them and organising their agencies and methods for active participation in the world's commerce, has been an achievement unparalleled in the history of material enterprise. Soon after the completion of the main lines of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads, those lines began to secure a large and remunerative local traffic, consequent upon the development of the resources of the country through which they ran. This was not at first expected. The growth of local traffic at once suggested the construction of branch roads, and this line of policy has been adopted by all the companies owning and operating transcontinental lines or parts thereof, and mainly with the object of thus promoting the financial interests of the main lines. The construction of such lines has also proved an important instrumentality in the development of the resources of that vast territory situated between the Pacific coast and the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, a region which but a few years ago was unhabited by civilised men. The State of Colorado, in all its material interests, is mainly a result of this development. The States of California, Oregon, Nebraska, and Kansas and Washington Territory and the Territories of Utah, Montana, Idaho also owe their present wealth and prosperity mainly to the contribution of the several transcontinental railroads and their branches."

There are to-day seven different railways working their way from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. Every one of them has a large proportion of branch lines. With the Union Pacific the number of miles in operation is larger for the branches than for the main line. The following mileage table of those roads speaks for itself:

	Main Line.	Branches.	Total.
Oregon Railway and Transportation Company.....	518	139	657
Northern Pacific.....	2,054	495	2,549
Union Pacific.....	1,695	2,815	4,510
Central and Southern.....	1,964	1,047	3,011
Denver and Rio Grande.....	897	420	1,317
Atcheson, Topeka and Santa Fe.....	1,692	1,064	2,756
Burlington and Missouri River	682	795	1,477
	9,502	6,775	16,277

All those lines show a large earning capacity, and the local traffic resulting from the branch lines constitutes a very large element in their success. On a total of 1,442,800 tons carried by the Northern, only 67,276 tons were through traffic; the balance, 1,375,525 tons, was local traffic. The Union Pacific had $10,427,540 of local traffic, against $2,512,507 of through traffic. The Central Pacific carried 844,793,100 lbs. of through freight and 3,888,308,510 lbs. of local freight. The Atcheson and Topeka had only 6 per cent. of through traffic, the Missouri Pacific only 3 per cent., and the Denver and Rio Grande shows $500,000 of through traffic, as against $7,361,545 of its total traffic. The Canadian Pacific Company has recognised these facts, and has shown itself worthy of the confidence we placed in it by making the fullest and the most intelligent preparations, in view of the great battle it will have to fight to secure a fair share of the American traffic against its formidable rivals. A railway man of high experience, largely interested in the Northern Pacific Railway, was obliged to admit that the general organisation of the Canadian company, with regard to its protection of the great channel of traffic which it will represent in North America, was admirable. Another remarked that the victory in the struggle for inter-oceanic trade must belong to the company that will not have to share with others the most remunerative part of its traffic, the through traffic to the point of destination, the Atlantic Ocean. Last year the hon. leader of the Opposition took exception to estimates of the company as to the reduced cost of the road, pretending that the company proved thereby that every shilling necessary to build that main road was drawn by them from the public chest. I suppose my hon. friends will adopt the same line of argument this year but with no more success, I am sure, an account of the unfairness of the argument. If the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House declare that they are satisfied to get a Pacific line merely connecting Callander and Port Moody, we must believe that the future of our commercial relations does not trouble their dreams much and I understand how it is that they have, at various times, endeavored to suppress the Lake Superior and the British Columbia sections, to endow the country with a mere local line the only object of which would be to develop the local resources of the North-West. I understand now the significance of what was said to the people of British Columbia: "You may go." I see why the efforts made by the Province of Quebec to secure the terminus of the Pacific, have been called ridiculous. But statesmen, business men, and men of judgment, or if you prefer the expression, "the enthusiasts" who have faith in the future of the country and who believe that the Pacific is a great national enterprise, attach as much importance to the connections as to the road itself. Without branches, without a considerable amount of rolling stock, and station accommodation, without elevators and important property at the terminal points, without the credit necessary to create business and traffic, the main line of the Pacific would be quite as useless as a body deprived of its limbs. It is not mere fancy or a thoughtless act on the part of the company, if they have invested alongside of the line proper, very near the value of a second road in the shape of lateral and supplementary enterprises. They have applied to their case the word of Archimedes: "Give me a point of resistance and I will raise the world." They had at their disposal a powerful lever in the shape of the road extending from Callander to Port Moody; they wanted, besides, a fulcrum to utilise their powerful means of action; each dollar judiciously spent to add to the facilities necessary to the traffic of the road will return one hundred per cent. A simple car costing $300 will bring to the road an additional traffic of $1,500 per annum. Good accommodation may have entailed an expenditure of a million, but it may be worth millions in lessening the cost of loading and unloading and in giving to the road the advantage over rival lines. Each branch line is an artery which brings to the body life and circulation, because everything brought by it to the main line is an additional source of profit. Instead of depreciating the efforts made by the company, we ought to thank its members for their broad and far-sighted views. Had the directors been common speculators, they could have dealt with their enterprise as with a simple contract; they could have endeavored to pocket as much of those millions as the circumstances would have permitted them; they could have pretended to finish the road, appropriate to themselves our subsidies and loans and then leave the contract. I am gratified to be in a position to declare, to the credit of Mr. Geo. Stephen and his colleagues, that the suspicion of such an attempt has never tainted their reputation. Mr. Stephen, during the construction of this railway, has proved himself to be more than a business man, more than an upright man, more than a man of ability; he has been an apostle of the progress of the country. He has turned the Pacific into a work of love, and, with a force, an energy I admire, he has succeeded in infusing his convictions and his enthusiasm through the whole country. We have seen him at work—this man who owns many millions, rich enough to dispense with labor and anxiety, and having no need to increase his income—we have seen him, I say, confine himself to unceasing labor, and risk his fortune in this gigantic undertaking. This I do not say as a matter of personal flattery to a man whom I know only in the official relations which I have had with him; but I think it is a duty I owe to pay this tribute to a gentleman who has not only undertaken this work, but has shown an enthusiasm in the work and faith in the progress and wealth and resources of the country that I wish had been shared by our friends on the other side of the House. I wish our hon. friends opposite, who are so often admiring and citing the great success of American enterprise, had shared a little of that enthusiasm which has been shown by the president of the company. I wish the hon. member who has been termed here—I believe erroneously, because in his heart he is not so—the champion of American supremacy on this continent, I wish he and other gentlemen on that side of the House had that good quality of American citizens—that is, never to cry down their own country, never to say that that enterprise, costly as it may be, is not worthy of the genius of the nation, and shall not be carried to success by them. But, Mr. Speaker, this is not all these gentlemen have done for this undertaking. I regard their work, their experience, their intelligence from a higher standpoint, by far, than that of their subscriptions. If the country had the largest share of money, the company had the largest share of labor. Men of the highest ability have superintended the execution of the work, and I am at a loss to know which we must admire the most, in the result we shall have before our eyes; the astonishing rapidity with which they have achieved a task declared impossible by the leaders of the Opposition, or the extreme economy with which they have been able to accompany such diligence. I am not afraid to proclaim it; the company has done more than the Government towards the construction of the Pacific, and it should reap the benefit. Our own title to credit, in the eyes of the country, will rest in the judicious choice we have made of the men we intrusted with that enormous undertaking. Sir, that magnificent railway establishment must bear its fruit. From ocean to ocean it has the shortest, the most compact, the best equipped line of the continent; it has not and need not have for some years any competition over two-thirds of the continent; its bonded debt is by far smaller than that of any of the similar roads which are flourishing. With all these requirements combined it must succeed. In his speech of the 15th April, 1880, the hon. leader of the Opposition quoted the figures brought out by my hon. friend, the member for East York, as to the cost of operating the Canadian Pacific. The hon. gentleman accepted those figures as approximately correct. And what were they? The amount of the earnings of the road were fixed at $6,750,000 a year to cover simply the working expenses of the line. Well, I am ready to accept those figures, Mr. Speaker, and I say that the most skeptical of the hon. gentlemen opposite will be convinced that the future has no disappointment in store for the warmest believers in the success of the Canadian Pacific. When the line and its accessories are completed the Canadian Pacific will have a mileage of over 4,000 miles, a large portion of it located in the best sections of old Canada, and possessed with the most convenient facilities for its ocean termini. Last year, with a mileage of about 3,000 miles of disconnected lines, its earnings reached $6,084,345. The first months of the present year have shown an increase of $782,741 over the same period last year. Surely this shows what the earning capacity of the line will be after its thorough completion, organization and equipment. It would be unfair to say that the heavy extra expenditure has been useless or unwise. The obligation entered into by the company is not limited to the mere construction of a road from its two terminal points. It includes the keeping of the road in operation. And if the company takes so much precaution to secure a profitable working of the line the country need not complain. It owes, on the contrary, a tribute of gratitude to the company for having largely increased the cost of the contract as a guarantee that the road is to be operated in a permanent and profitable manner. It is gratifying to the country to see that the company is confident that its profits will be derived from the working of the road rather than from the mere construction of it. The purpose of the company is a bold one but it is one commanding the praise of the whole community. I have demonstrated that, leaving aside the large difference in the land grant, if the present contract implies an increase in the cash subsidy of $4,000,000 for the construction of the Pacific, it has secured to the Government a value of $30,000,000 if you deduct from the $54,254,293, the amounts for interests and dividends, over and above what the late Government expected and had exacted from its contractors in their proposed bargain with them, and I am in a position to show that amount should be doubled. And without putting a figure to the actual value of the lands one cannot deny that the policy of the present Administration has secured the keeping of 25,000,000 acres of land in the public domain. I admit that, after this Session, the $54,600,000 in money already given to the company in cash and in work done, will be increased by the loan of $35,000,000. But there is not a man, who has carefully looked into the whole matter, who would seriously pretend that the $35,000,000 are to be reckoned as lost money. I care very little for those irresponsible prophets who predict that the Government will never make the demand and exact the payment of that well secured loan. We know what little risk those evil foretellers run if their predictions turn false. However that point needs no further reference as nobody knows what the Government of to-morrow will be. But if the country does not run a worse risk than to be long governed by the Administration of the day, I can solemnly assert that every dollar of that $35,000,000 may be considered as a safe and productive investment, as a sacred deposit not to be surrendered. We have not exceeded the prudent limits of official liberality; we have discerned between a useful and an excessive generosity. To go beyond what we have done, would have exposed the Government to the charge of extravagance. To have refused that assistance would have been courting a disaster for the country. And I feel I am not mistaken when I say that the strongest guarantee that these $35,000,000 shall be considered and administered as part of the patrimony of the people, lies in the deep sense of the high responsibility which rests upon this Government as it will upon any future Government. There exists to-day this undeniable fact, that 3,327 miles of first-class road and 21,246,600 acres of cultivable lands is a safe and undisputable guarantee for a first mortgage loan of $15,000,000. Everybody knows that the company has, during the last four years, realised $8,702,086 out of its lands in spite of the difficulties that have been in the way. Last year, the receipts of the unfinished sections of the road gave the following results:—

MR. CHAPLEAU.

	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Surplus.	Deficit.
January.....	$274,645	$401,915	.....	$127,270
February.....	224,638	363,965	.....	139,328
March.....	278,575	359,275	.....	75,700
April.....	343,966	318,938	25,028
May.....	424,556	349,739	74,816
June.....	550,661	399,030	151,631
July.....	549,367	394,673	154,694
August.....	565,814	383,983	181,830
September.....	639,839	407,628	232,211
October.....	735,731	438,082	297,448
November.....	640,573	395,160	245,213
December.....	521,552	350,236	171,315
	$5,750,521	$4,558,630

or a total of nearly $6,000,000 of receipts and a net revenue of $1,191,891. We can easily make our estimates for the future when we consider that the above result has been obtained when there were not more than 2,000 miles of railway in good working order, or a proportion of $3,000 a mile. Have we not before us the experience of the Northern Pacific. That road is less advantageously situated than our own Pacific, having no outlet of its own at Minneapolis or at Duluth, and still its traffic for the last ten months ending 30th May, 1885, hardly a year and a-half after its completion, was as follows:—

Gross earnings, for 10 months ending 30th May, 1885 (over $5,000 per mile).....	$10,218,941
Operating expenses.....	5,518,235
Total net profits for 10 months.....	$ 4,700,706
The total mileage of the Northern Pacific, including branches and leased lines, is..	2,546 miles.
Its bonded debt, at 31st December (selling over par).....	$69,536,221
Its preferred stock.....	38,255,565
Its common stock.....	49,000,000
	$157,791,786
Annual Charges.
Interest on bonds.....	$4,050,648
Rents, leased lines.....	778,000
Other fixed charges.....	493,918
	5,320,566

Now, with the new engagements contemplated by the legislation before the House, the fiscal charges on the whole of the Canadian Pacific Railway are as follows:—

Bonds, $20,000,000 at 4 per cent.....	$800,000
do 15,000,000 at 5 per cent.....	750,000
Interest on purchase of C. M. O. & O.....	175,000
do do do Canada Central.....	58,400
do do do Land grant bonds.....	180,000
Rents on leased lines.....	778,000

On a total of.....$2,741,400

The $10,000,000 additional guaranteed by the lands will draw interest out of the annual sales of the lands. The company will have next year the benefit of the earnings of nearly 4,000 miles of road in operation from ocean to ocean, without paying any tribute to other lines as is the case with the Northern Pacific. Allowing only $3,000 per mile which is $2,000 a mile less than the Northern Pacific, we find, for the year, a total of $12,000,000 of gross earnings. Deducting 70 per cent. for working expenses (the Northern Pacific has reduced their tariff nearly 50 per cent.) there remains a sum of $3,600,000 for the net earning of the road. I do not think any one will question the sufficiency of the guarantee of the lands for our $10,000,000. Otherwise the boasted assistance given by the land grant would have been a delusion; the attempt to belittle the value of the lands would become a strong argument in favor of the increase of the cash subsidy (the necessity of the transcontinental line having been admitted by all sides in Parliament.) If our lands are worth any thing at all, they must be worth, at this moment, at least 50 cents an acre, and this is hardly the amount of our advance to the company as guaranteed by the lands. But I am sure I shall not be contradicted in saying that the lands are worth to-day $1.50 an acre and will increase in value in the same ratio as the capital of their value would increase at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, taking into account a very moderate current of immigration in the North-West during the next 25 years. The results obtained by the other railway companies would warrant a higher figure than the one I have given. I do not think we shall have to wait for a year to be reimbursed the $5,000,000 of the temporary loan, the $8,000,000 of bonds of the company will soon find their place in the market when the returns of the road begin to show their security as an investment. We remain with $20,000,000 of first mortgage of the company. The total bonded debt is $35,000,000, so that we rank equally for $20,000,000 with other bondholders to the amount of $15,000,000 as the first creditors of the company. That total bonded debt of the company is the first lien on the following roads:—

	Miles.
Callander to Coal Harbor.....	2,565
Winnipeg to Stonewall.....	284
do to Manitou.....	102
do to St. Vincent.....	64
do to West Selkirk.....	22
do to Colville Landing.....	2
do to West Lynn.....	15
do to Maryland.....	51
Rosenfeld to Gretna.....	14
Total .....	2,864

Making a fixed charge of about $12,237 a mile. But the debt is, in addition, secured by the lines from Callander to Ottawa, 225 miles, and from Carleton Place to Brockville, 46 miles, or a total of 271 miles. Considering that the amount due on these two last lines is only $1,600,000 or $5,900 a mile the fixed charge on the whole line remains but little over $11,000. And when, added to that, we calculate the value of the rolling-stock of the company which will be not less than $10,000,000; when we consider their vast property in Montreal, at Ottawa, at Winnipeg and all along the line up to Coal Harbour, property, which the natural development of the country increases in value every day; when we consider their immense and costly workshops, their steamers, we may safely scout the idea that the securities we have retained are not equal to the advances we have made. The Canadian Pacific Railway, after its completion, will have earning capacities superior to any transcontinental route in America, and inferior to none of the great railway systems of North America. Some may have larger traffic and a greater volume of business. None will be in a better position, comparing its actual value with its liabilities and the possibilities of its traffic. The Canadian Pacific will represent the following values;

MR. CHAPLEAU.

Portions built by Government .....	$29,600,000
Cash subsidy .....	25,000,000
Loan of last year.....	30,000,000
Amount raised by present legislation .....	15,000,000
Paid for stock .....	29,568,123
Land grant bonds.....	8,702,086
Bonuses .....	236,600
City and town lots.....	504,675
Earnings.....	1,456,318
	$140,067,800
Less deposited and paid for dividends and interests say.....	20,000,000
Total amount spent on the road.....	$120,400,000

In other words our margin of guarantee is 350 per cent—and if we go to the extreme in any supposition of failure, so as to test in the most rigid manner the value of our securities; if we take the absurd hypothesis of the stoppage of the road by the withdrawal of all those interested in the enterprise, there would still remain the following assets respecting a commercial value, as follows:—

Rolling stock.....	$10,000,000
Rails, &c., &c .....	10,000,000
Workshops.....	1,500,000
Steamers.....	500,000
City properties .....	1,000,000
New station and terminal facilities, elevators and other improvement contemplated by the present measure .....	2,900,000
Telegraph Lines.....	2,000,000
Amounts paid on lines from Callander Eastward.....	15,000,000
21,000,000 acres of land.....	21,000,000
Total.....	$63,900,000

I have made that supposition of an impossible event to demonstrate the absurd pretensions of those who assert that we might be exposed to the loss of the capital of our loan; and to show at the same time the perfect safety of our investment. I had, therefore, good grounds for saying Mr. Speaker, that the loan of last year and the loan of the present year cannot be classed among the subsidies, that we do not lose a dollar of them and that they will not oblige us to disburse a single cent of interest. In return, we shall find that we have ensured the completion of the Canadian Pacific, five years before the time specified, and that in so doing, we have saved many millions to the railway. The dividends alone to be paid on the capital during the process of construction, represent a considerable amount, as the money furnished by private parties must always bear interest, and as a road during that process cannot give any profits, it had been agreed that the company should pay a dividend of 5 per cent. out of their capital, during the time of construction. A reserve amounting to 3 per cent. has been made for that purpose; but the company would have had to pay 2 per cent. on $65,000,000, during a period of five years, or $6,500,000 which we save; and it may happen that the railway may be such a successful enterprise as to be in a position to pay dividends immediately. We have, in another manner, protected the company against fruitless expenditure. They had only two modes of raising funds by themselves, that is: selling shares or floating bonds. The state of the money market shows that the shares could have hardly realised more than 50 per cent. The company, then, could only have realised $17,500,000, by losing a like sum; so that it has not to be taken into account. As regards the bonds, it would have been impossible for the company to place them on the market last year (on account of the uncertainty which existed regarding the completion of the road, and also of that terrible "unknown" which always has so much influence on business men), at a rate exceeding 80 per cent., so that on a sum of $45,000,000, the company would have lost at once $9,000,000. They would have had to pay 5 per cent. on the whole amount, whilst they will have to pay only 4 per cent. on the $30,000,000 of last year, which saving of $300,000 during six years represents $1,800,000. There is then, a net gain of $17,300,000 to the company without our being poorer by a dollar. Instead of passing into the hands of European capitalists, these $17,000,000 will have been employed for our own benefit, and spent towards the construction of the numerous branch lines and other important improvements which the company has been in a position to undertake, thanks to that wise policy. All we enable the Pacific Railway to save is a "saving" for the country. Governments do not exist to speculate; their object is to manage the interests of the people so as to give the most fruitful results. Railways are more and more becoming national institutions; they take the place of former highways, and even of navigation. Although a railway belongs to shareholders nominally, it is not the less a national property; it ranks amongst its best assets; and the national wealth increases in proportion to the wealth and power of the railways. And if the result of the intervention of the Government has been to leave in the treasury of the Pacific Railway over $17,000,000, the whole country can boast of this fact. The results will be visible everywhere: in the improvement of the roadway, the comfort afforded to passengers, the shipment of freight, the greater facilities of intercourse, and the reduced rates. The working of a railway in fact depends upon its financial standing. It is hardly possible for a railway crushed under heavy liabilities to show its full efficiency. This is why I am not afraid to declare that the Canadian Pacific will soon rank as the first of all trans-continental lines because not a cent of its liabilities will have been misapplied. Take, for instance, the most prosperous route of our neighbors, the Union Pacific Railways. The length of this route, to-day, is 3,050 miles, and the liabilities are as follows:—

1st mortgage bonds .....	$138,131,132
United States Government bonds.....	75,263,232
Paid-up capital .....	120,144,000
	$333,538,564
Debt, per mile .....	$ 109,357
Debt, per mile, besides subscribed shares.	70,000
Debt, per mile, besides Government claim.	42,000

Supposing the portion of that debt due to the Government cancelled, and putting aside the interests of the shareholders, the Union and Central Pacific have still a debt of $40,000 per mile, while, under the same circumstances, the Canadian Pacific is responsible for nothing but $13,000 per mile. If we turn to the Northern Pacific, the total length of which is 2,549 miles, we find it encumbered with the following amounts:—

Bonds.....	$ 50,122,200
Shares subscribed .....	109,749,464
	Total .....
	$159,871,664
A debt per mile of .....	62,800
Bonds, per mile .....	19,700

The Southern Pacific which, with its branches is 4,051 miles in length has the following debt:—

Bonds, per mile .....	$85,617,200
Shares, per mile .....	152,459,700
	Total, per mile .....
	58,785
Bonds only, per mile .....	21,140

If we take the total liabilities of the Canadian Pacific on 3,327 miles, we find them to be as follows:—

Bonds .....	$35,000,000
Bonds Q. M. O. and O. and Canada Central...	5,500,000
Shares (less deposit of $15,000,000) .....	50,000,000
	Total .....
	$90,500,000
Total debt per mile .....	27,200
Total for bonds.....	12,000

So that we have the following result:—

	Total charges.	Bonds.
Canadian Pacific, per mile.....	$ 27,200	12,000
Northern " " .....	62,800	19,700
Union " " .....	109,357	70,000
Southern " " .....	58,785	21,140

Should the state of things remain as it is, we could say that the Canadian Pacific will have a debt of $12,000 only, per mile, on a line stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, while the American routes all terminate midway, and depend for an outlet on other roads, absorbing a part of their profit. But there is another contingency in favor of the Canadian Pacific; if the 21,246,600 acres of land are disposed of at, say, $1.50 an acre, to have no dispute over figures, the company, after deducting 6,666,666 acres for the $10,000,000 due to the Government, might receive $21,869,851 for the remaining 14,579,934 acres, or more than one half of their bonds, which would reduce the real debt of the railway to less than $6,000 per mile. And why should not the Pacific Company sell their land within the next ten years? They occupy the best situation, lying, as they do, alongside of the railway; they are very fertile; they suffer less from cold weather and snow than those of the Northern Pacific. Let us not forget that the snow fall is only 6 inches deep at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, and that all along the prairie section generally it is only from 20 to 21 inches, when it is 50 inches in Toronto and 74 at Montreal. The agriculturists and cattle men have the market of the United Kingdom, which the Americans are partly deprived of, and this advantage is so striking that the inhabitants of Montana are sending their wheat through Canada to secure a better price, while ranchmen have already taken serious steps with a view to sending their cattle through the North-West. As the distance between Coal Harbor and Montreal is but 2,911 miles, while between Yacoma and New York it is 3,457, it is evident that wherever an immigrant settles, he will, on the Canadian route, always be nearer the Pacific or Atlantic shores in proportion to this saving of 546 miles on the distance. Take, as an example, two places on the same meridian, say Swift Current, on the Canadian Pacific, and Billings, on the Northern Pacific, towards the 109th degree. The distance from Billings to New York is 2,359 miles, while from Swift Current to Montreal it is but 1,940 miles, a difference of 419 miles in favor of the Canadian Pacific. On the Northern Pacific, the station corresponding to Winnipeg is Moorhead, and Moorhead is 1,660 miles from New York, while Winnipeg is only 1,430 miles from Montreal. And when the Northern Pacific can attend to its immigrants after submitting to the demands of several other companies between St. Paul and New York, having to make a choice between the Pennsylvania, Erie, New York Central and Baltimore and Ohio, from New York to Chicago, and between the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Chicago and North-Western and Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, from Chicago to St. Paul, the Canadian line has the sole control of its rates and accommodation, and gets the whole benefit of the receipts from the immigration traffic which it will have stimulated. Let us add that the fertile belt is longer alongside of the Canadian than on the American line. We have 839 miles between Winnipeg and Calgary, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, when, on the Northern Pacific, we have the Rocky Mountains at Livingstone, 757 miles from Moorhead, and notwithstanding this excess of fertile lands, Calgary is only 2,269 miles from Montreal, while Livingstone is 2,419 miles from New York; and moreover Calgary is only 644 miles from Coal Harbor on the Pacific, while Livingstone is 1,036 miles from Seattle on the Pacific Ocean. But as we are speaking of these lands, and as the question is inseparable from the financial aspect of the case, since, we accept them as security, I may remark, by the way that the Opposition cannot accuse me of exaggeration if I definitely fix the value of these lands at $1.50 an acre, as on several occasions, they have expressed their opinion on this point, in the desire to compel the House to declare the Pacific Railway lands were worth over $2 an acre. The leader of the Opposition himself has taken much trouble to prove that they ought to be valued at more than $2 an acre. Here is what he said, on the 15th of December, 1880 :

"Then, what about these lands? These lands are to be within twenty-four miles of the railway. According to the estimate of the Government made by them in the recess before the last Session of Parliament, and which they published to the world as the terms of sale of railway land; confirmed by them during the last Session of Parliament, when they brought it down and declared it to be a moderate estimate; confirmed and re-confirmed by them when they asked Parliament to sanction their going on on those regulations and principles, and still further confirmed, in this sense, at any rate, when they announced, as they have repeatedly announced, that the prospects of selling lands in the North-West are infinitely brighter to-day, and that land is worth more to-day than it was a year ago. According to this view, which we may take as a minimum estimate established for lands there to be found within twenty-four miles of the railway, it gives an average price of $4.04 an acre."

"I think, Sir, it may not be useless for me to prove, by a public document, something of the value of such a privilege. I have before me the prospectus of the Manitoba and South-Western Colonization Railway Company, which is placing on the London market its bonds, and the statement it makes is :

"And the statement is there made that the length of this railway is 295 miles, of which the first section of 119 miles is under contract, and at least 50 miles are to be opened by the 1st of September, 1881. It is further stated that the Governor General has approved of a report of the Privy Council of Canada, recommending a grant to the company at the nominal rate—mark you, the nominal rate—of $1 an acre, of an area of land equal to 840 acres per mile, commencing at the south-west of the boundary of the Province, so that it is outside of the Province of Manitoba that this land lies. The prospectus further states that it is estimated that a judicious realisation of the land would produce to the company the sum of £2,000,000 sterling, or $ 0,000,000, and that the company has refused offers made to them for large portions of that lands at $5 per acre. In another part it is stated that this line is to be constructed for £3,000 sterling or $15,000 a mile, and the calculation is that the fortunate stockholders—and if there are members of Parliament among them, I hope they will share among us all—will have an admirable commercial railway constructed free of cost, and probably four or five millions besides from the sale of their lands."

"Well, Sir, you thus find that there are lands of very great value to be had, outside of Manitoba, beyond the range of twenty-four miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which can be opened up and made saleable at $4 or more per acre, by railways which shall be, as this railway is declared to be, good paying commercial enterprises."

The Opposition, unreservedly accepted these views and calculations, and took advantage of them to stamp as extravagant the conditions of the contract of 1881 with the Syndicate of the Pacific. And the hon. member for South Huron, therefore, on the 26th of January 1881, proposed :

"That the contract respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway involves a total expenditure by the country in connexion with that work of about $80,000,000 exclusive of interest, and the cession of 25,000,000 acres of choice lands, worth, at the estimate of the Government last year, at least $79,500,000, making a total consideration of about $140,000,000, while the railroad itself is estimated by Government to cost not more than $84,000,000, and that the consideration proposed to be given is excessive, and that the contract is in the highest respect objectionable."

I need not say that all the hon. members forming Her Majesty's loyal Opposition voted in favor of this amendment. It will be claimed to-day that, by this speech as well as by this vote, the Opposition meant nothing but to offset the Government valuation; but such an attempt would be childish, since the opposition do not only quote it, but adopt it; and their hon. chief declares it, when he says :

"According to this estimate which we will take as the minimum value of these lands, we can fix their average value at $4.04 an acre. There are lands, then, of very great value outside of Manitoba. And the amendment itself implies the assent of the Opposition to this valuation when it says 'exclusive of the cession of 25,000,000 acres of choice lands, worth at least, $79,000,000.'"

The added words: at the estimate of the Government, are there only as an argument to strengthen the affirmation that the lands have a great value. Otherwise, why should the Opposition have declared that sum excessive, if they had not believed it was real? Why should their hon. chief have declared that he was taking a minimum valuation if he had not believed this minimum well founded. It will be claimed that we have no use for these 21,000,000 acres of land, because we possess a territory of 300,000 square miles, or 200,000,000 acres. But when we have deducted from this the lakes, rivers and impracticable marshes, we are left with only 160,000,000 acres already, half of which is unfit for anything but cattle ranches. Not more than 80,000,000 will ever be under cultivation, and can yield a profitable return, and these figures soon lose their fantastic and embarrassing appearance, when we consider that 13,500 immigrants, taking yearly 320 acres each, would swallow up the whole of these lands in twenty years. The distance between Winnipeg and the foot of the Rocky Mountains is 900 miles. These 900 miles give, consequently, 45 sections of blocks of 20 miles on each side of the railway, or 90 sections in all. In other words, there are but 23,000,000 acres of land lying alongside of the railway in the prairie district; this gives at once quite a different aspect to the land question, and these lands acquire at once a value far superior to that of those lying elsewhere. The Pacific Company cannot receive more than 45 sections, although they have a right to 98 blocks of 256,000 acres. They will have, therefore, to take 13,568,000 acres, either outside of the prairie section or in a belt removed from the railway; and if they choose to raise the price of the land alongside of their road, in order to get rid of those less favorably situated, they can do so now. It was exactly one of the inconveniences felt at the time. But as the question was to give, not an apparent, but an efficient assistance to the company constructing the railway, the lands had to be given without restriction, or else money had to be substituted. To impose obligations in the disposal of the lands was to make it an impossibility, because no moneyed man would have advanced funds on a property held conditionally. The whole or nothing was wanted. I cannot do better than quote the 8th and 9th resolutions which the Government caused to be adopted on the 12th May, 1879 to show how well they understood the inconvenience of such a system. Here they are :

Mr. CHAPLEAU,

"8. Resolved, That the withdrawal for sale and settlement of the lands for twenty miles on each side of the located line of the Pacific Railway has, in part, had the effect of throwing settlement south and west of Lake Manitoba."

"9. Resolved, That in the existing state of things, it is desirable to combine the promotion of colonisation with railway construction on the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Red River."

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the House rose I was about to say that if necessity forced the Government, in 1881, to abandon this line of conduct, it is because it was not deemed prudent to engage deeper in money disbursements without knowing exactly what were the resources of the company, the means and disposition of the directors, and their ability to construct the railway; but the Government always watched for an opportunity to resume a policy more favorable to colonisation, and that is what we are doing in taking back the control of the sale of lands, and in forcing their sale under certain conditions. The Opposition must be unanimous in the approval of a plan which they unanimously proclaimed on the 27th of January, 1881, when Mr. Rinfret moved, in amendment :

"That the said resolutions be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that the contract respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway contains provision for ceding to the company 25,000,000 acres of choice lands in the North-West, but it does not, as it should, embrace any provision that such lands shall be open to sale to actual settlers at any maximum price; that the absence of such provision will enable the company to lock up the lands at their pleasure for a long time, and so be injurious to the progress of the country, and add to the labors and difficulties of the early settlers, and that the said contract is, in this respect, objectionable."

This resolution was singularly ill-timed; for, as I have said, to have accepted this amendment of the Opposition at that time would have been to make such grant of lands illusory, because we would have made it impossible for the company to negotiate a single land grant bond. But now that the condition of the company is completely changed, and that experience has convinced business men that the financial assistance derived from these lands cannot be immediate, we have applied the principle enunciated by the Conservatives in 1879, and re-affirmed by the Liberals in 1881: that it is possible and necessary to reconcile the encouragement given to the Canadian Pacific Railway with the development of colonisation. We do not desire the company to make a fortune with these lands, by laying them aside to sell them in ten or twenty years; we intend that they aid immediately in the construction of the railway. It is not in our power to force capitalists to advance their money on that security, —the only alternative for us, who know the value of the property offered, would be to take their place. In doing this, we would not lose a cent; we risk nothing, and we would contribute to the development of the North-West. It is possible that my expectations will not be shared by several members of the other side of this House, and, amongst others, by the hon. leader of the Opposition, who has already put on record in the Hansard his views upon the development on the North-West, and as these views have not been uniform, and that he may select those opinions which will best suit him, to oppose this plan, I will anticipate his wishes, by recalling them for the benefit of this House. On opening the Hansard, at page 1055, of the year 1880, I find, on 5th April, the following:—

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is believed from the best information we can get that 20,000 people went into the North-West last year.

"Hon. Mr. BLAKE. There was not more than one tenth of that number.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we are to judge from reports, we may rely upon it that 50,000 will go this year, but let us put the number at 25,000 (this year). I would ask the hon. member for Lambton if he does not really believe that sum—

"Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE. I will tell him that I do not believe so, nor do I believe that 20,000 went in last year. I think a large number will go, but not the number stated.

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the hon. gentleman is the first person that I have heard, say that 25,000 was not altogether too small an estimate. That number, of course, includes the baby as well as the adult. In ordinary cases the estimate is the average family number, five. If you take four to a family, we estimate that of the 25,000 or 24,000 that go there 5,000 will be heads of families, occupying homestead and pre-emption claims."

Subsequent events have proved that the leader of the Government was correct, and as I have already shown on another point, that the prophecies of the Opposition with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway were particularly unfortunate. I often wonder if there is ever a time when the Liberal party is sincere in regard to this question. Is it when it opposes, not the Government, but the Canadian Pacific policy itself? or when it pretends to defend the principle of the construction of the Pacific? For, in the same Session of 1880, only a month later, when the Government proposed to put aside 100,000,000 acres of land, and to build the Canadian Pacific with the proceeds of the sales, we find this motion in the journal of the House for the sitting of 5th May:

"The Hon. Mr. Blake proposed that the sales of railway lands shall be on condition of actual settlement."

According to the arrangement accepted by the Mackenzie Government, of which the present hon. leader of the Opposition was a member, Canada was committed to the construction of the Canadian Pacific, at any rate, from Port Arthur to Port Moody, by 1890. In the year 1880, therefore, there remained ten years for the completion of the work; and at the time that the House was deciding to complete the work only with the proceeds of the lands, the price of which was fixed at $1 per acre, the hon. member for Durham desired that the Government should stipulate that sales of these lands should be made only in favor of immigrants who would settle upon them at once. As it would have been necessary to sell nearly 80,000,000 acres of land at $1, to realise the desired amount, it was consequently requisite that the North-West should receive not less the 50,000 families per annum, at the rate of 160 acres per head of families. I will not do the hon. leader of the Opposition the injustice of believing that he wished to break a solemn covenant entered into by the Dominion of Canada, or even to evade the law, which provided that the work should be carried on as vigorously as possible, in order to keep faith with British Columbia. He was, therefore, from his point of view, favorable to the construction of the Canadian Pacific, and if he wished that actual settlement alone should supply the source of revenue which the country would have at its disposal for the completion of that enterprise, it was because he was convinced that his plan was feasible, and that there would be an annual influx into the North-West of 50,000 families, paying cash for their pre-emption lots. Upon that particular occasion, I presume, he adopted the opinion expressed by him on the 5th March 1875, which is entirely at variance with that I mentioned a moment since. In 1875, I should have been of his opinion, when he said:

"You cannot hope to force immigration into a country beyond a certain point. You should look at the experience of the western States, at a recent date, where the railways had spread most rapidly, and with respect to the State nearest our North-West Territories, you will observe that, even with their wonderful progress, they have not made any such extraordinary progress as that which the hon. member for Northumberland has vaguely pictured as that which should take place in the North-West. I hope, Sir, that we shall see a degree of progress and settlement greater, in this country, than that which has been shown in the States at any recent period. I aim at surpassing the rapidity with which their territories were established."

Mr. Speaker, I will not go so far as the hon. member, when he takes the view that 50,000 families would be required yearly; I would content myself with a small proportion of those expectations. If it were found that in order to dispose of 21,000,000 acres of land in ten years, only 13,000 families would be needed, no one could find fault with our calculations. And if one-half of these families should take two lots each, 8,625 families per annum would be sufficient—say, about 35,000 souls to complete the sale of these lands, and to that we may assuredly look forward—in view of the figures I have given for past years. I have alluded to the sale of these lands at \$1 an acre; my own personal opinion would unhesitatingly be in favor of a regular sale at \$1.50 per acre. It is natural that these lands should be more sought for than others, on account of there being situated, for the most part, along the line of the railway. If the Canadian Pacific were obliged to sell these lands at a higher price, to cover any considerable deficit, as the American lines have to do, it would be necessary to submit to such a state of things, but settlement would be thereby retarded. Such a monopoly is not to be feared to-day. The Government takes back the control it gave up. If we sell these lands at \$1.50 per acre, without doing an injustice to the Pacific, let us do so. What is wanted is population. The day when there are 200,000 more whites in the North-West there will be no need to spend millions in protecting ourselves against the Indians. Immigration will be the safeguard of the Territory. When the construction of the Northern Pacific was undertaken the engineers were accompanied by regiments of the United States army. From the 20th of July to the 22nd of November, 1872, for instance, Mr. Hayden, one of the engineers, had to be protected by 400 soldiers, who were in constant conflict with the Indians in the Yellowstone valley. In 1873 it became necessary to increase that force to 1,700 men. In 1876 the Custer massacre occurred, on the meridian of Battleford, between Rosebud and Bighorn, on the Northern Pacific. The warfare continued in 18.7, and, I may even say, up to the moment when the railway introduced an active civilisation. Who, now, minds the Indians in Montana? There is another reason why I wish for a rapid filling up of our North-West, viz, that it will give a market of consumers for our manufactures. When we consider what is taking place among our neighbors, we have a right to count upon the prompt development of our North-West and upon the sale of our lands. In the course of the past year the Union Pacific has placed 4,342,200 acres, at a price of \$8,000,000. There was sold, last year, in the Territories of the United States, a total of 18,300,000 acres of land. We have as much of lands as they; indeed, we have more, and ours are more fertile, nearer the seaboard and less costly. The average price of the American lands is \$3.40 per acre. The railway companies are so much involved that they cannot part with them for less than \$3. Our highest aim is to sell our land at \$2; and, if advisable, to dispose of them at \$1.50, the Canadian Pacific will not stand in our way. The Pacific possesses this advantage, this immense advantage, namely, that having but small interest to pay, the sale of each acre will give them more benefit. In the United States many companies have failed because the interest has swallowed up their capital, and because the sale of lands barely sufficed—or did not suffice—for the payment of coupons. We might have been less liberal, and possibly, at the same time, have effected a commencement of the iron band to connect the Atlantic with the Pacific, but I question whether we should not thereby have taken precisely the means of destroying the value of our subsidy, by forcing the company to expend, in interest, the money which we gave them to build the road. In going over this array of figures, my object is not limited to a mere calculation. There lies at the bottom of these facts a vast question of political economy. My pretension is less to solve than to submit to a class of thinking men in this country and outside of this country a problem which will soon impose itself to the general economy of modern nations, that is, cheap and, at the same time, rapid transportation. It is a common saying that water transportation is cheaper than steam transportation, and it is true. The maker of the universe, in his foreknowledge of the expansive power of civilisation, has made us the gratuitous gift of the great water highways in the interior as well as around the continent, whilst the genius of man has had to build his overland routes by dint of work and money. Independently of the cost of the road itself, if you compare the cost price of a locomotive and of the thirty cars composing a train to the cost price of a steamer, the railway will have the advantage. A first-class steamer, with a tonnage of 3,000 tons, representing, as a motive power, nine trains of thirty cars, of the capacity of eleven tons each, will cost from \$300,000 to \$500,000, nearer the latter figure than the first. Nine locomotives will cost \$72,000, and 270 freight cars about \$125,000: let us say, \$200,000 for both engines and cars. The advantage, as I have said, remains with the railway, each ton of merchandise representing in the steamer a capital of \$166 $\frac{2}{3}$ , and only \$66 $\frac{2}{3}$  in the railway. On the other hand, the steamer will cost only \$100 in operating expenses for each day of 300 miles voyage, whereas each train of the railway will cost an average of \$300 for each 300 miles run, or \$2,700 for the ten trains; so that each mile of railway transportation costs as much as three miles of water transportation. It is evident, therefore, that the greatest economy must be exercised in the operation of a railway, and that it is of the highest importance to bring to the lowest possible figure the first charge on the railway, that is, the first bonded debt on the road itself and its equipment. The less the railway is loaded with a bonded debt the better its position to compete with its neighbors. For instance, let us suppose a uniform volume of traffic on the following transcontinen-tal roads; that traffic, exclusive of the working expenses, would have first to pay, on account of interest on the cost of those roads:

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

On the Union Pacific.....	$5.47	per mile.
“ Northern Pacific.....	3.200	“
“ Southern Pacific.....	2.939	“
“ Canadian Pacific.....	1.400	“

In other words, each of these roads would have to charge, per mile, on its freight on 1,000 miles of road:

The Union Pacific.....	$5.47	per ton.
The Northern Pacific.....	3.24	“
The Southern Pacific.....	2.94	“
The Canadian Pacific.....	1.45	“

A tariff of $5.47 per ton on the Union Pacific would be equivalent to $1.45 for the same quantity of freight on the Canadian Pacific. And take 1 cent as a basis of calculation, the charges in respect to payment of original cost price would be:

Union Pacific.....	$1.00
Northern.....	0.57 $\frac{1}{2}$
Southern.....	0.53 $\frac{1}{2}$
Canadian Pacific.....	0.26 $\frac{1}{2}$

If our great national enterprise has not been the outspring of a caprice, if it has been built to develop the great resources of our country, and to create new industries and a great continental traffic, we know what our duty is towards that enterprise. I cannot say it too loudly or repeat it too often: Let us bring to its minimum the charge on construction, for fear of hampering the first efforts of the company with the cares and difficulties of pressing financial wants. I am sure this is the only means of obtaining the full measure of the earning capacity of the company, the only means to give it a chance of creating new fields of action for its activity and energy. I am aware that up to the present time none of the American transcontinental lines have succeeded in controlling a single ton of the commerce between Europe and Asia, with the exception of a special order of silk worm's eggs for France, and a small lot of furs for Great Britain. I know that even the wheat of California has not been exported overland to Europe, and that the 16,000 miles from San Francisco to Liverpool, around Cape Horn, have not frightened the exporters and driven them across the continent to New York and Liverpool. I have read the humble declarations of the proud Yankee, confessing his inability to solve that problem, having before his eyes the fiascos which have met his attempts in that direction. I have seen the declarations of Mr. Whittoy, the general freight agent of the Central Pacific, ridiculing our right hon. Premier in his attempts and his hopes of bringing the Anglo-Asiatic trade through the British North American continent, and calling those anticipations mere absurdities, and doing so with the approval of the United States Government, who are opening their official reports to those productions of Mr. Whittley's wisdom. Well, Sir, in spite of the experiments that have been made, in spite of the declarations of the railway scientists of the great Republic, in spite of the admiration that I have in the superior ability which our neighbors have shown in all their attempts in the direction of commercial success, nothing that has happened has yet shaken my firm belief in the future conditions of Asiatic commerce in relation to our country, to our great transcontinental route. In all those questions the question of cost is everything; and I confess I cannot see how the American routes could compete for that commerce, time and distance being the elements of cost. If we compare the respective distances, we find:

	Miles.
By Suez Canal, Yokohama to Liverpool.....	11,275
By way of New York.....	Yokohama to San Francisco... 4,650
	San Francisco to New York.... 3,320
	New York to Liverpool..... 3,040
A total of.....	11,010

Making a difference in favor of New York, over the Suez route, of only 265 miles, or a little more than 2 per cent. of the whole distance. The distance of 4,650 miles is the average between 4,500 miles to come to and 4,800 miles to go from San Francisco, as the course is necessarily different. The difference in favour of the Canadian route is shown by the following comparison:—

	Miles.
By way of Suez Canal.....	11,275
By way of { Yokohama to Coal Harbor.....	4,180
{ Coal Harbor to Montreal.....	2,911
Montreal. { Montreal to Liverpool.....	2,790
A total of.....	9,881
Making a difference in favor of Montreal of.....	1,394
(or more than 12 per cent. of the whole distance.)

Let us take an average of 240 miles a day for a steamer making that trip. I know the great steamers average more than that; the Allan and Dominion lines have an average of 12 nautical miles; the grey hounds of the sea (as they are sometimes called) have a speed of 15 to 18 knots. But the Oriental trade is carried by steamers of less value. The fact that the Suez Canal is not safe for steamers drawing more than 20 feet or exceeding 350 feet in length, has prevented the use of very large steamers on that route. A steamer takes 45 days to go from Marseilles to Yokohama. It gives about 9 knots an hour for the 9,200 miles, taking three days for the passage through Suez Canal. For the whole voyage from Yokohama to Liverpool it takes 50 days, at about 10 miles an hour. From Yokohama to Liverpool via the Canadian Pacific, we have, taking the same average of steamers as those of the Suez Canal route:

Yokohama to Coal Harbor, 4,180 miles, at 10 knots an hour.....	17½ days
Coal Harbor to Montreal, 2,911 miles, at 30 miles an hour.....	4 "
Montreal to Liverpool.....	11½ "
	33 "
For freight trains (20 miles an hour) extra time.....	2 "
For transhipment of freight.....	4 "
	39 "

What do we find for the route via New York:

Yokohama to San Francisco, 4,470 miles	19½ days
San Francisco to New York, 3,320 "	5 "
New York to Liverpool, 3,040 "	12½ "
	36 "
For freight trains (20 miles an hour) extra time.....	2 "
Difference of grades, extra time.....	2 "
For transhipment of freight.....	4 "
	44 "

These figures will show clearly that whatever doubts might be raised about freight there can be none with regard to passengers, who will not only gain 17 days, but who will travel through a healthy and temperate zone. The difference of passenger rates by steamers or by rail is not marked. The average rate is about 3½ cents per mile for long distances. From Quebec to Liverpool, 2,630 miles, it varies from $80 to $100, or about 3 to 4 cents a mile; from New York to Liverpool, 3,040 miles, it is between $90 to $120, being also 3 or 4 cents a mile. From San Francisco to Yokohama, 4,470 miles, the fares are $250, or about 5½ cents a mile. From Liverpool to Yokohama, by Suez, 11,275 miles, the price is £88—or $428—or 3½ cents per mile. From Marseilles to Yokohama, 9,200 miles, the Messageries Maritimes are asking $415, or 4½ cents per mile. From San Francisco to New York, the passenger rates are 3½ cents per mile—$126 for the trip, exclusive of the cost of meals and sleeping car, which adds about ½ of a cent per mile. But very seldom does the charge of railway companies exceed 2½ cents per mile. Freight rates are altogether different; $7 per ton of merchandise from Montreal to Liverpool is equal to ¼ of 1 cent per mile. From Marseilles to Yokohama the rates are $40 per ton or 7/8 of 1 cent per mile. From Liverpool to Yokohama the ocean steamship company charges an average of ¼ of a cent per mile. Up to the last few years, freight rates for railways were 2 cents per ton per mile. Since then the rates have gone down considerably; the Union Pacific charges hardly 1 cent per ton. Between New York and Chicago the rates will soon reach ½ cent per ton per mile, grain being now carried between those two cities for $48 per car load of 24,000 pounds, and I think I am safe in saying that those reduced rates are not likely to be increased in the future, every year adding to the experience already acquired in the methods of operating railways at a cheap rate. The following tabular statement gives us the average rates of all the freight of the last fifteen years on the railways mentioned, showing the gradual reduction on each road:—

	1868	1873	1883
	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.
New York Central.....	2.74	1.57	0.91
Pennsylvania.....	1.90	1.41	0.81
New York, Lake Erie & Western.....	1.81	1.45	0.78
Boston and Albany.....	2.81	1.95	1.19
Lake Shore & Michigan Southern.....	2.33	1.33	0.71
Michigan Central.....	2.45	1.89	0.83
Chicago, Burlington and Quincy.....	3.24	1.92	1.42
Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul.....	2.50	2.50	1.39
Illinois Central.....	2.20	1.43
Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago.....	0.79	0.79

Or an average, in 1883 of..... 1.055

These statements run up to 1st January, 1884. Since then the tariff rates have been continuously decreasing, as is shown by the following return for the year ending 31st December, 1884:—

Name of Company.	Length of Line.	Operations.	Cost per ton per mile.
Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis R'y.....	391 miles.	Rec. $ 3,600,346 Exp. 2,768,749	Cts.
		Profit. 843,597	0.633
Pennsylvania and New York Canal and Railway.....		Rec. 2,151,338 Exp. 1,541,794
		Profit. 609,544	0.86
Northern Central Railway.....	323 miles.	Rec. 5,528,876 Exp. 3,468,394
		Profit. 2,053,483	0.825
Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburg Railway.....	636 miles.	Rec. 4,398,840 Exp. 3,602,213
		Profit. 794,627	0.6
New York, Lake Erie and Western Railway.....	1,900 miles	Rec. 21,637,435 Exp. 16,358,077
		Profit. 5,279,358	0.685
Lake Shore and Michigan.....			0.652
Michigan Central.....			0.646
New York, Chicago and St. Louis (Nickel Plate).....	523 miles.	Rec. 3,207,591 Exp. 2,389,234
		Profit. 818,357
Pennsylvania Railway:
Main line.....	1,470 miles
Philadelphia and Erie.....	287 "	Rec. 48,566,917
Lines east of Pittsburg and Erie.....	2,201 "	Exp. 30,527,016
New Jersey and branches.....	443 "	Profit. 18,039,901

These tariff rates have yielded profits, as shown by the net earnings above mentioned. The fact that the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railway has, during the past few weeks, passed into the hands of a receiver, is not an argument against the lowering of the rates, but it merely demonstrates the necessity or not increasing the cost of construction of a road. That road is responsible for $70,000,000, or $132,000 per mile. The Pennsylvania Railway Company shows, by the following return, taken from their report, that their rates are remunerative:—

	Receipts.	Expenses.	Net earnings.
Main line.....	0.740	0.441	0.299
Philadelphia and Erie	0.576	0.365	0.211
Line east of Pittsburg	0.804	0.518	0.286
New Jersey.....	1.365	1.081	0.284

I desire to dwell on a point which may appear of a purely technical nature, because the transport by rail, at a low cost, is the great problem of our time. Political economy must necessarily deal with this question as well as practical economy. It is impossible for railways to maintain themselves unless their working expenditure is very low. A good authority on those matters, Mr. Chanute, consulting engineer of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railway Company, has given particular attention to that point; and after laborious research and study as to the composition of the various trains on the New York Central, he has come to the conclusion that the actual cost to a company for freight traffic on its line is as follows:—

Nature of Freight.	No. of tons per car.	Distance run in miles.	No. of cars in a train.	Running expenses per car.	Cost per ton per mile.
Cattle.....	10	440	30	16 13	0.344
Grain .....	12	298	35	8 77	0.245
Flour.....	11	448	35	13 18	0.268
Canned goods.....	10	298	35	8 77	0.294
Pork.....	10	440	35	12 95	0.292
Wool.....	5	440	35	12 95	0.588
Tobacco.....	11	440	35	12 95	0.027
Oil.....	10	440	35	12 95	0.292
Leather.....	8	142	35	4 18	0.003
Paper.....	10	114	26	4 15	0.004
Hay.....	10	73	26	2 66	0.364
Butter.....	10	42	26	1 53	0.364
Cheese.....	10	26	26	0 95	0.369
Iron.....	12	440	35	12 95	0.245
Hosiery.....	5	440	35	16 15	0.731
Boots.....	8½	440	35	18 13	0.461
Dry goods, carpets...	9	440	35	17 99	0.432
Sugar and liquors....	10	440	35	16 95	0.383
Coffee.....	10	440	35	18 05	0.433
Stockery.....	10	440	35	18 35	0.439
Toys.....	6	440	35	16 85	0.636

We must add to this, cost of loading and unloading about 50 cents per ton, altogether, which, for a distance of 3,000 miles, gives a merely nominal amount. But, in making those calculations, we must not forget that the proportion of cost bears upon the whole traffic of the railways mentioned, the local traffic as well as the through traffic. All economists, as well as practical railway men, agree in saying that the local rates must be calculated on a different scale from the through rates. In fact, the localities through which a railway line runs derive a direct benefit from the line, and must contribute towards its success in a manner proportionate to the value accruing to them from it. The through traffic must not be charged with the expenditure for the administration and maintenance of the road; so that the running cost of that traffic must not exceed a third of the running cost of the local traffic. Consequently, instead of saying that a freight train costs $1 per mile, it ought not to cost, as regards through traffic, more than 50 or 60 cents at most; this being considered the exact proportion, the Canadian Pacific will then be enabled to carry, with profit, the freight of the east at a price of ½ or ¾ of a cent per ton per mile. When I say that ½ of a cent per ton per mile is the possible rate which could be fixed in the future, I know that I shall meet with some approval in this House. The hon. member for Durham said, on the 15th December, 1880, that it was possible for a railway to realise profits with a rate of ½ of a cent per ton per mile. Speaking of the St. Paul and Manitoba, the hon. gentleman said:

“A reasonable tariff should be 1½ cent per bushel per 100 miles, or 17½ cents for the 1,900 miles. In fact, I believe that the tariff from St. Paul southward is much lower than 1½ cent per bushel, and, as a consequence, a much larger proportion than what that tariff would amount to is collected by the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway.”
MR. CHAPLEAU.

Being 60 pounds per bushel, and 37½ bushels per gross ton, 1½ cent per bushel would give 49½ cents per ton, making, for 100 miles, within an insignificant fraction, exactly ½ of a cent. per ton per mile. My opinion, as I have said before, is that through traffic can be profitably carried for ½ a cent. per mile. That traffic should not be charged with the cost of administration, nor with office or station charges, which should be charged to local traffic; and if the actual wear and tear of rolling stock, the fuel and handling, be taken into account, a tariff of ⅓ of a cent. per mile per ton would leave a margin for profit, the cost price of haulage not exceeding ¼ of a cent per ton per mile. The laws of commerce are now being revolutionised. The tendency to sacrifice everything to celerity is growing constantly. Competition has necessitated rapidity. The costly steamers have driven away the sailing vessels. The desire to forestal one's neighbor in the acquirement of every new article is, to day, one of the mainsprings of trade and commercial life. When I said that the transhipment of freight would entail a disadvantage against the Canadian Pacific route from Asiatic ports, I should have added that the cost through Suez Canal is increased by the toll rates on the canal, viz.:

	Fr. Centimes.
Canal toll..... Per ton.....	9 50..... $1 90
Anchorage.....	0 2..... 0 00½
Towage.....	2 0..... 0 40

Added to that is the disadvantage of being obliged to have comparatively small steamers for that trade. It has been established that a steamship drawing 23 feet of water touched bottom fifty times during the voyage. Then you have the increased rates of insurance, in consequence of the dangers of the canal and its approaches; that increased expenditure represents not less than 2 per cent. In one word, the whole question is reduced to this: The difference between the two routes, from Liverpool to Yokohama, is the difference which exists between 2,911 miles of railway transportation, from Coal Harbor to Montreal, and 4,305 miles of transportation by water, including the passage through the Suez Canal.

	Miles.
The distance run by steamer from Liverpool to Yokohama is.....	11,275
The distance between Yokohama to Coal Harbor, and from Montreal to Liverpool, being.....	6,970
There remains.....	4,305

of the Suez route to bring against the 2,911 miles of trans-continental railway remaining to complete the Canadian Pacific Railway route. The extra cost of transhipment by the Canadian route is compensated for by the canal tolls and other charges, with the additional rates of insurance on the Suez route, so that we remain with the difference of cost between 2,911 miles of rail and 4,305 miles of water transportation. I do not hesitate in saying that the gain in time and the gradual reduction of railway tariffs will inevitably turn the scales in favor of our Canadian route. If I am told that a difference of thirteen days in the voyage is not important to the merchant, which I deny, I say that sailing vessels employed from Yokohama to Coal Harbor would not lengthen the time of the voyage as compared with the Suez route, and would reduce the rates from Liverpool to Yokohama in the following proportion:—

From Liverpool to Yokohama the rates are, on the average, $38 per ton, or about ⅓ of a cent per ton per mile.
From Yokohama to Coal Harbor, by a sailing vessel, the freight would cost....	$ 3.48 per ton.
From Coal Harbor to Montreal (¾ cents p. mile).....	21.83 “
From Montreal to Liverpool (¼ cent per mile).....	6.97 “
	$32.28

Leaving, in favor of the Canadian route, a difference of.... $6.10 per ton.

Another advantage, and this is perhaps the strongest point in favor of my belief in the future success of our Canadian route between Europe and Asia, is the fact the Asiatic trade is almost wholly in the hands of British merchants and capitalists, who will carry that trade through the channels of their own choice. In vain did the Americans struggle against that state of things; their efforts failed. It is impossible to find the confession of a defeat more plainly made than in the following extract from the reports of Commerce and Navigation of the United States, for 1884, page 104:—

"I will answer your question, says Mr. Atkinson of Boston, to the chief of the Bureau of U. S. Statistics, in respect of the export of our goods and ware. You will observe that it is a matter of necessity, and not of choice, for Europe to purchase grain, meat, oil and cotton in greatest measure from this country, paying for these supplies, as far as possible, in such goods and wares, commonly called manufactures, as we are accustomed to take, and passing to our credit the remainder of the sum due us in cash. Against this cash we draw bills in payment for sugar, tea, coffee, hides and other articles, which are furnished us by nations which are not yet 'manufacturing nations,' according to the common use of that term. This balance of cash due us for grain, meat, cotton, etc., is transferred in London to the credit of merchants in China, Java, Africa, South America and other countries, whom we owe for tea, coffee, wools, hides, etc., and is applied by them in payment of British manufactures, viz, cotton fabrics, woollen fabrics, worsted fabrics, metal work, and other commodities, commonly called manufactures. That is to say, Great Britain imports from the United States cotton, meat, oil and grain in greater amount than she sells manufactured goods to the United States. We import from China, Africa and South America, tea, coffee, sugar, hides, etc., in greater amount than we sell manufactured goods to them. Great Britain works up or converts our raw material into manufactured goods and sends those goods to China, Africa and South America, in payment for the raw material, or the tea, coffee and sugar we have purchased.

"Why should this three-cornered traffic continue. Why do we not convert our own raw material into manufactured goods and exchange directly with the non-machine using nations, of whose products we are large purchasers.

"Many of the goods of these several classes are made in the United States of better quality, sometimes at a less cost and sometimes at a slightly greater cost than in Great Britain. Why, then, is not this cash, which is at our credit in London, applied directly to the purchase of American goods rather than of British goods?

"For a long time this question puzzled me: I could not solve it, until I had studied the conditions of commerce in Great Britain on the spot.

"My conclusion was that while quality and price enter measurably into the conditions which control that exchange of products which constitutes commerce, yet modern science and modern instrumentalities for production have brought the quality and price of manufactured goods—such as textiles, hardware and the like—so nearly to the same standard that commerce is no longer controlled, in any great measure, by either quality or price in respect to such manufactured goods. But such differences in quality and in price as exists, being very small elements, are more than counterbalanced by facilities in respect to transportation, in respect to banking or exchange, in the technical sense, and more than all, in respect to the facilities for obtaining credit on the part of the middlemen who work the trade—this last being the greater factor. For instance, there is no doubt that buyers in South America would greatly prefer to buy American cottons at their relative quality and price rather than British cottons. Why don't they do so?

"We buy a great deal more from South America than we sell to her, and we pay cash in London for the difference.

"Why don't they take goods in place of cash, if they prefer the goods?

"Why has not a system of steamship communication been established, without any bounty or subsidy, between the United States and South America, as has been done between Great Britain and South America?

"The reason was far to seek; but I think I will give you the true one.

"All the traffic of South America in manufactured goods and wares is done on a very long credit. How is it done?

"The credit is not granted by the manufacturer of the goods, but it is worked in this way:

"The manufacturer of cotton goods, for instance, sells the cloth 'in the grey' to a warehouseman, so called. The warehouseman pays him the cash for it, substantially, on delivery. This warehouseman, middleman or merchant, causes these goods to be bleached, printed, or otherwise prepared for each particular district or market in South America, packs them, according to the exact section to which they are to be sent, in small packages, suitable for a mule-back (if they are to be carried into the heart of the Andes), makes his arrangements to ship them by one of the daily steamers to South America, then makes his bill of lading, ear-marked with the designating marks and number of the packages, with the invoice attached, to a banker, and gets his bill discounted on for four or six months, with the expectation of renewal for four or six months longer, if necessary, and the cash or proceeds of our wheat, cotton and oil which we have remitted for our South American purchases forms a part of the deposit of this very banker, on the basis of which he is enabled to grant this credit. But this would not suffice. These goods are carried to the interior of South America, to great fairs, to interior towns, and to various points of distribution, and are there practically bartered for whatever the people, who have no money, but who have other commodities, desire to sell. These other commodities, whatever they may be—wool, hides, ores, nitrates, or anything else—being freely admitted into Great Britain, for the purpose of distribution, wherever they are needed, therefore come back to England to be sold, and out of their sale the warehouseman ultimately recovers his money, and pays up his credit granted by the banker in London. London being a great free port, has become, of necessity, the money centre or credit centre of the world.

"In other words, commerce is now carried on so small a margin, and on such a greater scale, that the profit or loss depends on the cost of transportation, the rate of exchange, and the facilities for credit."

In examining the causes which have prevented the traffic of Asia passing through the United States, Mr. Nimmo, the chief of the Board of Trade in the United States, says, in his last report, page 57:

"But a third, and perhaps the most important condition restraining a large and general exportation of products of American manufacture, is the fact that commercial enterprise in this country has shaped itself to the habits and requirements of our vastly larger and more profitable internal commerce, and that our merchants have, from the prompting of self-interest, left the more complex and less remunerative field of foreign commerce to be explored and cultivated by the merchants of countries whose internal resources and possibilities are incomparably less than are those of the United States."

In other words, the Americans, who have a genius for manufactures and railroads, have less aptitude for trade and navigation, and are as much behind in the latter as they are ahead in the former. Under all these circumstances, it is not unreasonable to believe that the Canadian Pacific will become the national route of England, and be preferred to the Suez Canal, a neutral route, which, besides, is controlled by a majority of French shareholders; and when the time comes, as it soon will come, when vessels of a larger class will be the only ones to plough the seas, Englishmen, forced to adopt the Canadian route, will do it the more easily that they will be induced to do so by all sympathies of race, of flag, and, if I am allowed to use the expression in its highest sense, by national prejudices, a most potent motive among all nations; and gradually one will reach from Yokohama to Shanghai, Manila, Yeddo, Saigoon, Hankow, Chefoo, Singapore, etc., and finally to all commercial centres in Asia. But whatever may happen with reference to through trade, it is undeniable that the Canadian Pacific Railway will change the route of a portion of our own trade. We import about 40,000,000 pounds of rice, tea and coffee, without mentioning large quantities of drugs, spices, essential and volatile oils, etc., the products of Asia. If we consider that last year, for instance, we used the Union Pacific for our importation of nearly 4,000,000 pounds of tea, we can well understand that the Canadian line will get the traffic. Last year the United States exported to China and Japan 45,000,000 yards of cotton cloth, over 1,000,000 pounds of fish, 30,000,000 gallons of lighting oil, etc. What is there to prevent us, with the advantage of a route shorter by 444 miles of railroad and 470 of navigation, competing for this trade? For instance, the freight rate on tea, from Shanghai to New York, is \$47.50 per ton. The distance being 5,515 miles by sea and 3,320 miles by railway, it may be said that the steamer receives \$13.89, or  $\frac{1}{4}$  of a cent, and the railway \$33.71, or 1 cent per ton per mile. The Canadian route would make the same profit exactly if asking \$42.16 for the same goods, that is to say,  $\frac{1}{4}$  of a cent for 5,135 miles of navigation and 1 cent for 2,911 miles of railway. Here is the way, then, for a reduction on the freight rate of \$5.34 per ton, or of 11 per cent. The Canadian Pacific will soon have the control of the Asiatic trade, if not for the whole of Europe immediately, at least, immediately for North America. But I will go further, Mr. Speaker; I claim that the Americans will use our route to reach both the Pacific and the Atlantic shores, and they do not make a secret of it themselves. In the official report on internal commerce for 1884, by Worthington, I find, on page 97, the following significant passage:

"The main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway will extend from Montreal, in the east, to a port in British Columbia.

"This new transcontinental rail line will, by virtue of the reciprocity of transportation facilities which exists with respect to traffic over railroads of the United States and of Canada, become essentially a part of the railroads of the United States. The proprietors and managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway can also acquire the ownership and control of railroads in this country, if they be inclined to do so, and they possess the energy, tact and financial ability requisite to the accomplishment of that object, just as such control of railroads in the United States has already been acquired by the management of the Grand Trunk Railway. By this means, or by means of traffic arrangements entered into with railroads of this country, the Canadian Pacific Railway, like the Grand Trunk Railway, may be enabled to compete sharply with the railroads of the United States in the conduct of our internal commerce."

It is a singular fact that the distance from Chicago to San Francisco is exactly the same as that from Chicago to Coal Harbor via Winnipeg, viz.:

	Miles.
From Chicago to San Francisco via Omaha.....	2,357
" Chicago to Winnipeg, miles.....	874
" Winnipeg to Coal Harbor, miles.....	1,483
	2,357

And Coal Harbor is nearer China and Japan by 470 miles. As to the trip towards the East, there is not, it appears, the least doubt in this House, since the Opposition have already recorded their opinion. We read in the Minutes of Parliament of the 26th of January, 1881:

"Mr. Laurier then moved, in amendment, that the said resolutions be not now read a second time, but that it be Resolved, That the contract respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway provides for the construction of between 600 and 700 miles of railway to the north of Lake Superior, between Lake Nipissing and the junction with the road from Thunder Bay, through a difficult and uninhabited country and at a vast expense; that a mere fraction of the cost of this road would, if applied as a basis of credit, secure the construction of those 63 miles common to the through line and to the Sault Ste. Marie Railway, and also of the remainder of the line to Sault Ste. Marie, within three years; that the line by Sault Ste. Marie would give Ontario, Quebec and the East railway connection with the North-West of nearly the same length and of better quality than the proposed North Shore line; that it would also give to Canada a great trade from an enormous area of the Western States, extending from the boundary to a point south of St Paul, and even now inhabited by about 1,200,000 souls; that it would secure a way traffic; that it would thus give, within three years, and at a fraction of the cost of the other line, greater benefit than can be secured by that line in ten years, which is the period stipulated for its construction; that it would bring both the Western States and the Canadian North-West into connection by rail with the ocean steamers at Montreal and Quebec on a route shorter, by about 300 miles, than the existing route to New York; that this advantage, together with the further gain of about 250 miles in the ocean voyage to Liverpool, would give this route a commanding position, and secure great benefit to the country at large; that the construction of the line to the Sault or Goulais Bay would also give a first-class rail and water route via Sault Ste Marie and Thunder Bay, within our own limits, by the shortest possible line, for the transport of emigrants, goods and produce; that the construction of the line from Sturgeon River to or beyond Thunder Bay to the north of Lake Superior is, under the circumstances, premature, and should not be now undertaken."

Let us take Brainerd, for instance, one of the stations on this end of the Northern Pacific Railway, and we find the following distances:—

	Miles.
From Brainerd to Pacific Junction .....	91
Pacific Junction to L'Anse.....	158
L'Anse to Marquette .....	26
Marquette to Sault Ste Marie .....	150
Sault Ste. Marie to Callander.....	244
Callander to Montreal .....	345
Total .....	1,014
From Brainerd to New York, via St. Paul and Chicago, the distance is .....	1,509

Here is, for the Northern Pacific, that is to say, for the whole North-West, from Portland, an outlet 500 miles shorter than by any other route. The distance between Montreal and New York being 382 miles, the Northern Pacific will, therefore, save 113 miles in reaching New York via Montreal, instead of passing through Chicago. I believe in the future of the North-West, because our geographical position gives us the advantage, because the climate of the Assiniboine and the Saskatchewan is better than that of Montana, because British Columbia has advantages superior to those of Washington Territory, and because, intellectually, we are not inferior to our neighbors; and with the supply of labor which Great Britain is sending us, as well as with the market which she liberally opens to our agricultural products and to our cattle industry, we must inevitably follow the same ratio of development as was obtained by the construction of the Northern Pacific. That ascending march in the path of wealth and progress which that great American enterprise has opened is too interesting not to be examined. It is not difficult, in our day, to make a study of the philosophy of railways. The results obtained in the past clearly demonstrate that every dollar invested gives in return one hundred dollars. If we study the western part of the United States, we see that the two American Pacific railways, the Northern and the Central, had to cross tracts of wild and waste lands, as in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The regions more especially of this character were—for the Northern: Dakota, Montana and Washington; for the Central: Wyoming, Utah and Nevada. Let us follow the increase of those territories, in population and wealth, after the construction of the railways:

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

	Popula- tion.	Wealth. $	No. of Miles of Railway.
1860.
Dakota.....	4,837	.....	.....
Montana.....	.....	.....	.....
Washington.....	11,594	5,600,000	.....
Wyoming.....	.....	.....	.....
Utah.....	40,273	5,596,118	.....
Nevada.....	6,857	.....	.....
	63,561	11,186,118	.....
1870.
Dakota.....	14,181	6,000,000	65
Montana.....	20,595	15,200,000	.....
Washington.....	23,955	13,580,000	25
Wyoming.....	9,118	7,000,000	447
Utah.....	86,786	16,160,000	257
Nevada.....	42,491	31,134,000	593
	197,126	89,054,000	1,387
1880.
Dakota.....	135,177	118,000,000	1,265
Montana.....	39,159	40,000,000	48
Washington.....	75,116	62,000,000	274
Wyoming.....	20,789	54,000,000	472
Utah.....	143,963	114,000,000	770
Nevada.....	62,266	158,000,000	769
	476,470	544,000,000	3,598

Those territories, which contain 639,485 miles in superficies, had, in 1870, a value of $89,000,000, viz., $149 a mile. Ten years after the national wealth had increased by $455,000,000, and the same area was valued at $850 a mile, and an increased population of 279,344 inhabitants were contributing to the development of the national industries. The North-West Territory and British Columbia have a superficial area of 895,000 square miles, equal to the territory of the following States:—

	Miles.
Illinois.....	56,000
Michigan.....	57,030
Minnesota.....	78,205
Iowa.....	56,000
Dakota.....	149,100
Montana.....	149,060
Washington.....	69,180
Wyoming.....	97,890
Utah.....	84,970
Nevada.....	62,266
	858,121

In 1880 these eight States or Territories represented the following totals:

Population.....	5,970,000
Wealth.....	$7,847,000,000
Number of miles of railways.....	23,827

The history of the development of the Western States is full of interest and of information. Let me give you the total increase, in the construction of railways, at each census, in the following States and Territories :—

	1850.	1860.	1870.	1880.
Illinois.....	110	2,790	4,823	7,953
Michigan.....	342	779	1,638	3,931
Wisconsin.....	20	905	1,525	3,130
Minnesota.....			1,072	3,108
Iowa.....		655	2,683	5,235
Kansas.....			1,561	3,459
Nebraska.....			1,812	2,000
Missouri.....		817	2,000	4,011
California.....	23		703	2,320
Oregon.....			159	582
Nevada.....			593	769
Dakota.....			65	1,265
Arkansas.....			256	896
Colorado.....			157	1,581
Utah.....			254	770
Washington.....				274
Wyoming.....			429	472
Montana.....				48
Total	472	5,969	19,075	41,426
				5,969
				35,457

Average in twenty years..... 1,773

Let me now give you the increase in population and wealth :—

POPULATION.

	1860.	1870.	1880.
Illinois.....	1,711,000	2,539,000	3,077,000
Missouri.....	1,182,000	1,221,295	2,168,308
Wisconsin.....	775,000	1,054,000	1,315,497
Michigan.....	749,000	1,184,000	1,636,937
Iowa.....	674,913	1,194,000	1,624,615
California.....	378,994	560,000	864,000
Minnesota.....	122,000	439,000	780,000
Kansas.....	107,000	364,000	996,000
Oregon.....	52,000	90,000	174,000
Utah.....	40,000	86,700	144,000
Colorado.....	34,200	39,864	194,327
Nebraska.....	28,000	122,093	452,403
Washington.....	11,594	23,955	75,118
Nevada.....	6,857	42,480	62,266
Dakota.....	4,837	14,180	135,177
Idaho.....		15,000	32,610
Montana.....		20,595	39,159
Wyoming.....		9,118	20,784
Total	5,828,395	9,519,790	13,692,198
			5,828,395

Increase in population..... 7,863,803
Average of yearly increase of population..... 393,190

WEALTH.

	1860.	1880.
Illinois.....	$ 871,860,000	$ 3,210,000,000
Missouri.....	501,214,000	1,582,000,000
Wisconsin.....	273,671,000	1,139,000,000
Michigan.....	257,163,000	1,580,000,000
Iowa.....	247,338,000	1,720,000,000
California.....	207,874,000	1,340,000,000
Minnesota.....	52,294,000	792,000,000
Kansas.....	32,327,000	760,000,000
Oregon.....	28,930,000	154,000,000
Utah.....	5,598,000	114,000,000
Colorado.....		240,000,000
Nebraska.....	9,131,000	385,000,000
Washington.....	5,601,000	62,000,000
Nevada.....		156,000,000
Dakota.....		118,000,000
Idaho.....		29,000,000
Montana.....		40,000,000
Wyoming.....		54,000,000
Total	$2,491,949,000	$13,055,000,000
		2,491,949,000

Increase of wealth..... $10,563,051,000
Average of yearly increase of wealth..... 528,000,000

The foregoing statements give the following totals :—

Average of yearly increase in Railways....	1,773 miles.
do do Population..	393,190 inhabitants.
do do Wealth.....	$528,000,000.

This will prove that every mile of railway has caused, in twenty years, in those States or Territories, an increase of 222 inhabitants and of $300,000 to the country. In the course of last year the exports of agricultural products from the ports of New York, Boston, Portland, Philadelphia and Baltimore, amounted to $536,315,318. And it has been ascertained, by the statistics, that 95 per cent. of those products came from the States or Territories before mentioned. The same causes always bring identical results, and we find a proof of that in making a comparison with the Canadian North-West. Since 1873 the population of the North-West Territory has increased by 250,000, and the increase in the Customs and Excise is as follows :—

	Customs.	Excise.
1874.....	$ 66,509	$ 4,287
1875.....	179,377	8,176
1876.....	262,492	19,716
1877.....	235,314	24,018
1878.....	314,305	39,022
1879.....	294,591	53,741
1880.....	321,179	64,665
1881.....	471,845	97,878
1882.....	1,109,678	156,794
1883.....	1,833,655	183,872
1884.....	735,544	156,219
1885 (9 months).....	475,132	115,992

The quantity of lands sold is another proof of the development of the country. Excepting the sales made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Dominion Government has received the following amounts since 1877 :—

1877.....	$ 3,799
1878.....	19,424
1879.....	23,828
1880.....	120,479
1881.....	131,124
1882.....	1,744,456
1883.....	1,009,019
1884.....	951,636
1885.....	400,165

There seems to have been a diminution in the last months. But we must not forget that the greatest amount of sales is generally made in the spring, and that the North-West troubles have this year stopped the influx of emigrants and the business in those regions. We must also consider the fact that immigration, here as well as in the United States, decreases at certain times. For instance, I may give you a statement of the yearly immigration in the United States :

1875.....	227,698
1876.....	169,986
1877.....	141,857
1878.....	188,769
1879.....	177,826
1880.....	457,257
1881.....	669,431
1882.....	788,992
1883.....	603,322
1884.....	518,592
1885 (1st December—6 months).....	243,413

But if there is a momentary lull in our immigration, there is still a great number of new settlers going to the North-West, as may be seen by the following statement :—

Sales from 1st July, 1884, to the 1st May, 1885—
Homesteads—1,860, of 160 acres.....	297,600
“ 520, of 80 “.....	41,600
		339,200
Pre-emptions—1,016, of 160 “.....	162,560
“ 520, of 80 “.....	41,600
		204,160
Sales.....		$109,40
Not including 153 McLean town lots sold...652,760 acres.

It has been said, in this House and in the press : Why does not the Government exercise its right of taking possession of the road, if this company cannot finish it, rather than make a further advance of funds ? A poorer policy could not have been adopted. We must not forget that private capital to the extent of $29,000,000 is engaged in this enterprise, and that investors would not likely abandon their money, perhaps, their whole fortune, on the mere bidding of the Government. Private capital has the right to protect itself; it is its duty to do so; and in the present case, as there is still six years in which to deliver the road, they would do it. The Government has no interest in the ruin of individuals. The Northern Pacific has been the cause of two catastrophes of this kind, the shock of which has been felt in every part of the great Republic. The failures of Jay Cooke and of Willard have each produced a sharp financial crisis, even in such an immense market as New York, with the enormous business transacted there for the whole Union. If the shock has been so severe in the States, I wonder what would have become of our moneyed community under similar circumstances? I cannot imagine anything but a mass of ruins, under which our commercial institutions would have been buried and our banks shaken to their foundations. No Government would dare to take the property of the company without indemnifying it for disbursements already made. Governments cannot despoil individuals in such a way and take advantage of their difficulties and helplessness, to "grab" the fruit of their labor and savings. When the Government requires money it raises it through a tax borne by all equally; it cannot seize the pocketbook of any citizen and enrich itself at his expense. It is true that the law enacted last year seems to have established a contrary principle; but, in fact, it had no other object than to secure the control of negotiations, and to prevent, without our leave, the inconsiderate use of the railway resources. No serious man would venture to say that in taking the road the law has provided that the Government should not indemnify, at least partly, the shareholders who have, in good faith, invested their money in that enterprise. These words, I know, will be taken up by the hon. leader of the Opposition, who, imbued with this elementary truth, said last year: "Why such rigor, why such a terrible clause, authorising you to take possession of the railway without legal proceedings? You would not bring yourselves to take back this railway without indemnifying the individuals who have invested their money in it?" Nobody, as far as I am aware, has specially contradicted the hon. member on this point. We needed this rigorous clause to watch the construction of the railway and the operations of the company, and to make the company and the people understand that in an extreme case we would go as far as propriety would allow. We never thought of using it as an excuse for spoliation. To take possession of the road the Government, then, would have to disburse a good portion of the $29,000,000 of paid up shares, less the deposit already in their hands to secure the payment of the interest. Since the company requires $15,000,000 because new necessities have arisen, we could not have avoided this responsibility, and therefore we would have had to begin by adding something like $30,000,000 to our national debt, and this when we had an amount of $25,000,000 of our bonds to redeem and $30,000,000 to borrow. Who can say how much Canadian securities would have fallen under the immense temptation for stock-jobbing that such an important loan negotiation would have created? I do not hesitate to state that the result of such an operation would have been an enormous loss to the Treasury. What I say now is not a new argument. The hon. leader of the Opposition used that argument before me. It is true, he apparently used it in a sarcastic manner, but he felt, all the same, that the argument was a sound one, when he said:

"And in what position would the Government and Parliament be, if, at the end of these two years, default should be made? Are you going to sacrifice the interests of those shareholders—those poor people who have spent money on the road, who have done so much good to the country, who have built a road faster than ever a road was built before and spent more money upon it than ever was spent before? Your charity and confidence and sympathy are immense: are you going to foreclose, hard hearted usurers that you are? You, who said yourselves that the security was worth two or three times the sum advanced, are you going to shut down and turn these people out of house and home, strip them of their palaces, take away their lordly equipages? Surely you will not behave so badly! That will be the appeal which will be made; that will be the appeal which will be listened to. The past tells us what the future will be."

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we could not take possession of the road under circumstances which would have been so burthen-some for us and so unjust to the company. Naturally, the Opposition would seek to turn the argument against me as to another part of my remarks, when I demonstrated that this year's legislation leaves us all our guarantee. If we cannot touch the road now, how could we do so later? There is this difference in the two situations: It is, that the shareholders, who have willingly risked $29,000,000 in this enterprise, should have the benefit of their venture. We should not take it away from them before they could see the results of their attempt. They would have the right to tell us: "Since we have had the pluck to risk $29,000,000, give us the chance to see the end of our undertaking. We are now on the eve of success. A general crisis strikes us, as it has struck all institutions and all countries; give us time to tide it over. You shall lose nothing, as we are going to borrow ourselves what you yourselves would have to borrow should you take our place." The demand would have been a just and sensible one; but it will have no force when, once the road completed, the company shall have seen the result of its ventures; when, once the road is under full operation, it will have to derive from it the resources required to meet its obligations. If the road pays, nothing will remain to be said, since we will receive our interest; if it does not succeed as well as expected, then the Government will be in the position of business men looking to their own protection; I have no doubt that the $15,000,000 of bonds will soon be taken by the public. When the company has placed itself in the hands of the public it will not have the same reasons to call upon us for assistance; the transaction will have reached another stage, and if, even then, we can protect ourselves in protecting the shareholders, it will become a duty for us to do it. But what I want to say is, that it will no longer be our bounden duty to incur any further risk, and that we will always have such a control of the situation that we can protect ourselves against any disaster, if the company is not prepared to ward off the blow. In other words, it is the duty of a Government to be patient in all transactions affecting the financial position of private persons, and to do its best to protect them; but when all is said, when nothing is left but to choose who will bear the loss, the Government or the private individual, then it is soon enough for the Government, if its titles are properly secured, to claim its due. We do not want to lose a cent of our advances to the Pacific, and we have taken the proper means not to lose them. I am not of those who believe that the Government ought to be anxious to take possession of a railway, because they cannot work a railway with the same advantage as private individuals. However great may be the integrity of the employees, the zeal and public spirit of the Ministers, it is impossible for any Government to compete with individuals when economy is concerned. They do not possess the same resources, and cannot give the same excuses. A step, shabby or mean, sometimes, that personal interest would justify in a company, would become a grievance, or leave a stain, if taken under the patronage of the Government. The outside pressure weighing on a Minister is irresistible, sometimes; and how can a Government be free enough in its action to compete with the marvellous activity of railroad men, who never back down before any obstacle. These great organisations are generally profitable only because they stimulate trade themselves. They have their steamers, their warehouses, their commercial firms; they build up their own freight, when the public do not give them enough; they have to defend themselves against such cut-throat schemes as are organised against them, or to organise some such themselves. How can you expect a Government to become a trader, ship owner, manufacturer, miller, stock jobber, bull or bear on the money market, destroyer, if need be, and an implacable rival of the people under their jurisdiction? It would give rise to ceaseless accusations of favoritism or injustice. Should their tariff be regulated by those of other companies, a cry of monopoly would follow; if they reduced them, it would become a disloyal competition. Were they fixed permanently, the trade so delicately influenced by the supply and demand, by over-production or scarcity, would not really find its proper level. At times they would be too high, at others too low. In a word, you would have destroyed what is the greatest strength of a nation—the individual initiative; you would have subordinated the intelligence of the business man, so quick and so flexible, to the theories of the political man groping among experiments on economy, without knowing the value of audacity and a spirit of enterprise, which, for individuals, are worth dollars and cents. Traffic would be guided according to local instead of commercial views; no force in the world can counterbalance political laws, which are the same everywhere; therefore, English ideas do not favor the working of a railway by the Government. The Intercolonial is an exception imposed upon us by circumstances. But such a state of things cannot exist as far as the Canadian Pacific is concerned, this line being necessarily always fighting and competing with others for existence. At the time of the enquiry made by the English Parliament in Great Britain, in 1867, on the opportunity for the acquisition of the railways by the State, public opinion was unanimously against the scheme, and in quoting a few sentences of the report resuming the evidence, I establish, without any doubt, the theory I am now trying to develop. This report is found in the 38th and 39th volumes of the Sessional Papers of the House of Commons of 1867. We read:

"We have next to consider, if the State owned the railways, if it would be able to improve the system of management. None of the witnesses have recommended direct management by Government officers, but in the opinion of some, great advantage would be derived from the adoption of a plan of leasing the railways in groups." Pap. xxxv., Report 1867, vol. 38, p. 12.

"The practical result of any scheme for the national purchase and leasing of railways would be merely to substitute the lesser sense of responsibility of a lessee for a limited period, administering the property of others for the heavier and more durable responsibilities of owners managing their own property." Pap. xxxvi.

"In France, the absence, almost complete, up to the present time, of all competition amongst railways, discard that valuable equilibrium which is the safeguard of British industry." Pap. xxxvii.

"The plan of direct management by the Government itself seems to meet with condemnation on all sides, the chief objections raised being the want of a direct interest, the want of thorough knowledge or peculiar aptitude, the habit of costly management, and the danger of abuse in patronage." Page 112, same Report.

The country, on different occasions, has expressed its opinion, and its decision has never varied. The Act of 1872, authorising the construction of the railway, declared positively that it should be constructed by a private company, and in order that no doubt should remain about the unanimous disposition of the country, when the Mackenzie Government came into power, in 1874, it entered afresh in our statutes this universal preference in favor of private companies. And even were the weighty considerations which I have just pointed out not in existence, there still remains another, and the most important one, as it affects the relations of parties with politics. I ask what a storm would be let loose in this House if it were asked at this moment, Mr. Speaker, to invest us with the property of the Pacific Railway and the millions of patronage which it implies. With what terror would we not see the Opposition contemplate the fact that all the resources of the Pacific would lay in our hands. It would be then that all the philippics, all the violent denunciations of past and present days, would wake all the echoes of this Chamber, and no eloquence would be found expressive enough to invoke upon us the wrath of electors. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if we had lived for the love of power, we could have armed ourselves with this invincible weapon; but before thinking of the sweets of power, we must consider the duties which devolve upon it, and we must not sow dissensions in the political world. We want a frank, open and loyal contest, free from the elements as well as the appearances of undue influence. Now, it is my duty to again ask this House to pardon me for having occupied its time so long in making the remarks I thought it my duty to make on this important question. It is not very often that I trespass upon the good will and patience of hon. members, and it is on this plea that I ask to be forgiven. I have, I think, proved that it was right for the Government to have done what they did last year; I think I have demonstrated by the facts I have put before this House that it was right for the Government to come to the assistance of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the manner provided for in these resolutions, not by giving the money but by assisting their credit in the money markets of the world. We have not to deal with a company who have proved they are a company of jobbers, of mere contractors, but with a company who, as the whole country knows, have shown that their intention is, not to make money out of the contract, but out of the returns to be obtained from the great railway they have built. I hope that we shall have the support of my hon. friends even on the other side. We anticipate criticism; we know we shall have criticism; it is right, perhaps, that there should be criticism; it is right that the acts of the Government should be scrutinised; but, in this matter, the Government has acted honestly, frankly, with the sole and the pure object, not of putting the finances of the country in a more difficult position than they were before, but of insuring the credit of the company to whose existence and success the credit of the whole country is so closely united. I know that fault will be found with our conduct, but there is one hope which I must express before taking my seat, and I shall, in this, for a moment, be a lecturer in favor of American institutions, of the American people, and of the sentiment which prevails in the United States. Let us unite at least in one sentiment, and that is, not to defame our country, not to decry our credit, not to try to put down our institutions or to pull down those things which we have built up, which are noble works, which are grand works, which, in the future, will redound to the credit, not only of Governments—because what have Governments to do with that?—but of the whole country. I do not object to the hon. gentlemen criticising our conduct. I would not object even to see the hon. gentlemen coming to this side of House and taking the places we occupy at this moment. I, for one, would be ready to give my place up to those hon. gentlemen. Those who have had experience know that it is not for the pleasure we have in being in the Ministry that we desire to remain here; it is certainly not worth as much as the people are led to believe; and I would give my seat up to my hon. friends, and my colleagues in the Cabinet, I am sure, would willingly give up their seats, if they could only think that the hon. gentlemen who would take our places would be imbued with a greater spirit of patriotism. If we are not to have our friends on the other side coming to the rescue, not of the Government—we do not want that—but of the credit of the country, if we are obliged to say that they are always trying to defame the good name of the country, instead of upholding its honor, they may rest assured that they will not, by this means, destroy the good name of Canada, they will not destroy the good name and fame of the statesman who has presided over the destinies of the country for the last twenty-five years, they will not even destroy the Pacific Railway, the greatest of all the enterprises we have undertaken. Since I first entered political life I have been accustomed to see the persistency of my hon. friends on the other side in speaking of the bankruptcy of the nation. I heard it in 1854, when I was not fourteen years old, on the first occasion, when I heard two of the greatest orators of our Province, the great Morin and the great Papin; I then heard statements that the Grand Trunk Railway system had brought the country to ruin and bankruptcy. I heard the same thing years afterwards, and still I have seen the country growing more and more prosperous year after year. I heard the same thing in 1866, when the scheme of Confederation was before the country, when, from parish to parish and from county to county, I, though a young man, was fighting the battle of Confederation; I heard gentlemen saying that Confederation was to be the ruin of our Province, and was to result in the bankruptcy of the whole Dominion; that the vast stretch of country embracing seven Provinces, and extending from ocean to ocean, without any backbone, would result in disaster. But, Mr. Speaker, there was a backbone; there was the energy of British subjects, the energy of the men who had made this country; and that backbone has saved the country, in spite of all that defamation, in spite of all those who have been decrying our country. I heard the same thing again in 1870, and I remember, in 1872, when I was contesting one of the seats for this Parliament, that I heard one of the best champions of Liberal ideas in the Province of Quebec, my hon. friend from Verchères (Mr. Geoffrion), saying that the price paid by the Government of the day for the North-West, £300,000, was a loss to the country, and that those wild Provinces, where the buffalo still roamed, would be no profit to us. Since that, I have seen millions upon millions of capital invested in that country, and thousands and hundreds of thousands of people flocking to that region, which will become the granary of British North America, as the north-west of the United States became the granary of that country. I have witnessed the progress of our country, in spite of all that has been said to retard it. And, after that, when this great enterprise of the Pacific Railway came before the public, I heard a repetition of the same thing which I had previously heard in 1854, in 1866 and 1867, and in 1869 and 1870. I heard it in the beginning of that scheme, and still we have seen the result; we have seen the country growing more and more, and becoming the admiration of statesmen and men of business in the United States, and creating a feeling of jealousy on that side of the line. But there is one thing which I have not heard, and which I should wish to hear from my hon. friends. During my trip through the United States last year, the campaign for the Presidency was in progress. Never was there a campaign in which personalities were so freely indulged in as that; personalities were at the top of all discussions that took place. It was to be regretted, and good men regretted it; but I found what I regretted I did not find in my own country, that while every one who spoke on the platform referred to his opponent as the worst and the meanest of men, not one of them dared to cast the least shade upon one of the stars of the flag of the United States, but all united in upholding the credit of the country and of every State in which the campaign was conducted. Sir, the calumnies of those who want to villify the Government and who desire to destroy the credit of the country, of those who want to destroy the great work of the Canadian Pacific Railway, will be of no avail. They will be like loose winds, blowing smoke and sand, and carrying dark things with them. Their dark ideas and their dark thoughts, everything that is dark in their heart, and which is blown and breathed against us and against this enterprise, will not do more than those winds which cannot destroy the monuments of the old world. They may give a darker shade to the granite and the marble, but the solidity of the pyramids and of the great monuments of Europe remain, as the Pacific Railway will remain, as solid as if these winds had not passed over it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, if the rest of the Cabinet do not desire to continue the discussion, I will trouble the House with some reference to the speeches we have heard, and the proposals on the table. I congratulate the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) upon the events of this day. I congratulate the High Commissioner upon the events of this day. Government brought him out before, and specially for the purpose of engineering the last Canadian Pacific Railway aid measure through. He came at their call and spoke, although not qualified to vote. He comes no more.

"Oh, for one blast of Roland's horn
On Fontarabian echoes borne!
Through the dark Ronces Valles pass."

As he came not, it was necessary to fill his place by a double performance. It was not exactly a duet. I can hardly call it a concerted piece, for there were some discords between several of the expressions and phrases. There was not that degree of harmony which I should like to have observed between the arguments of the hon. gentleman who moved and the hon. gentleman who seconded the resolution. We have had a speech, in at least two volumes, with this peculiarity about it, that the authors of the speech seemed to reverse the proper order of these volumes, because the modern history came in the first volume and the ancient history came in the second. We have had a joint composition. One was a speech composed of figures, and the other was composed of figures of speech. I will admit that there were a good many tropes in both. But, Sir, although I have, upon this occasion, to meet these two hon. gentlemen, who have taken a course unprecedented in my brief parliamentary experience, on the occasion of a Ministerial proposition, of pressing two speeches in support of their measure before a voice from the other side was heard; although I have got to meet them both, the same spirit which induced them to think it was necessary that there should be two opening speeches, may, I hope, serve to sustain me in this unequal contest, as I have been sustained in former contests against the eminent statesman whose place they have attempted to fill. This is a great day for Quebec. Her Ministers have opened the battle. Her Ministers have commenced the war—in the absence, it is true, of the Minister of War, who may have gone away by the Grand Nord, for aught I know; but they have commenced the war. But would not one of them have done? Was it absolutely necessary that they should both speak. Would no one hon. gentleman from Quebec have been adequate to open the Ministerial proposition? Now, the hon. gentleman who spoke last at some length, closed his speech somewhat in the tone of Sir Charles Tupper, and in a course and strain of exhortation which we have heard not unfrequently when from that side of the House, they invite us to discuss the question. They say that they invoke criticism, that they challenge it, that they are not at all afraid of it, that they rather relish it. If our observations indicate that their policy has been injurious to the country, and that the country has been injured by their policy, oh, they say, you are decrying the country, you are injuring the country. Criticise us as much as you like, but admit that we have caused the country to prosper, and that our policy has been all that it should be. These are the conditions under which the hon. gentleman invites us to discharge our duty. Now, Sir, we have just as great a stake in the prosperity of the land in which we live as the hon. gentlemen opposite. Our fortunes are as much bound up in its prosperity as their fortunes—perhaps more. Our hearts beat as true to this country as theirs can. Why should they not? What interest have we to decry our country? Here we live; here the most of us were born; here our children, those we love, abide; here it is that we hope, when the day of rest shall come to us, to lay our bones; and why in the world should we desire to decry, or defame, or depreciate our country? But if we see that those who are entrusted with the reins of power have abused their trust, if we see that those who have had control of public affairs have mismanaged those affairs, if we find that their policy has been such as to injure the country, to interfere with its prosperity and lessen its chances of progress, I should like to know whether it be not true patriotism to point out those defects, to signalise those errors, to indicate those abuses, in order that they may be remedied. Therefore, Sir, no such language as the hon. gentleman has used, in which, under pretence of patriotism, he seeks to evade criticism of transactions which cannot stand a searching criticism—I say no such language as he has used to-night, any more than like language on former occasions, shall deter us, at all proper times and seasons, and upon all proper occasions, from explaining clearly what we think the condition of this country is, and to what cause that condition is due. Now, Sir, the Secretary of State, in the second volume of the joint speech, as I said, entered upon the ancient history of the question, and he pointed out that the mistakes of the Liberal party had begun at the beginning, that we were mistaken in objecting to the original contract that was made, and to the proposal to ratify that contract by the Parliament of this country in the years 1871-72. He declared that we did object, and that we ought not to have objected. How did the hon. gentleman himself describe that transaction? He said it was an audacious transaction. It was a thing unexampled in the history of the world, up to that time, that a contract and undertaking for the construction of so many miles of railway at one time should have been projected. He said: True it is that France has built large numbers of miles of railways; true it is that Austria has entered into large railway operations; but not even France, with her 40,000,000 of people, not even Austria with her power and strength and population, ever did that which was proposed to be done by Canada in the year 1871. We objected, not that we objected to a Canadian Pacific Railway being built, not that we did not desire that a Canadian Pacific Railway should be built; but we declared then, what events have verified most certainly, that it was not reasonable or prudent to agree that a Canadian Pacific Railway should be built by us within ten years, as prescribed by the obligations of that day. That was our declaration. We declared that it would take a very long time properly to ascertain the route, and that it would take a very long time, without imposing great burdens upon the country, to build the road. And mark you, Sir, at that time that happened which has often happened since. Hon. gentlemen met our declarations with promises of the impossible. They declared to Parliament, they declared to the people of Canada, that they were about to build that railway without increasing the then rate of taxation, and to build it within that time without increasing the then rate of taxation. They boldly stated that that was their policy, that that would be accomplished, and by that means, by a narrow majority of 10, they succeeded in inducing the Parliament of the country to agree to their proposal. I have said that that was the original statement. That was the statement made in the Act of Parliament itself: that the road should be built without any increase of taxation. The Liberal party declared that it was not prudent for Canada to agree to build the Canadian Pacific Railway within ten years, as was then proposed. I want to know how many of the business men of Canada, if the question was put to them to-day, would not say the Liberal party was right in that declaration. The Liberal party declared it was not possible for Canada to build the road as proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, that it was not possible to implement the obligation without imposing heavily increased burdens on the country. I want to know how many of the business men of the country would answer that proposition in the negative, would dissent from it to-day. How many members of this House would dissent from it; would say to-day that although that promise has not been fulfilled, although the road has not been built within the time, although a longer time has been taken, yet our burdens of taxation and burdens of debt have not been heavily increased in order to secure the construction of this road. The Act of Parliament passed on 14th June, 1872, says:

“Whereas the House of Commons of Canada resolved during the said now last Session that the said railway should be constructed and worked as a private enterprise, and not by the Dominion Government, and that the public aid to be given to such undertaking should consist of such liberal grants of land and such subsidies in money or other aid, not increasing the present rate of taxation, as the Parliament of Canada should thereafter determine.”

That was the resolution brought in by the Government of the day; that was the resolution incorporated in the Act of Parliament, forming the preamble of the original Act for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Has the pledge been kept? Has the road been built within the time, and has it been built upon the terms? Have we not had the taxation enormously increased? Have we not had boasts from those benches opposite that $20,000,000 have been paid into the coffers of the country by means of enormously increased taxation, and spent in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Do we not know that loan after loan has been brought down; that a loan was made last year largely for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that a Loan Bill passed through the other day, partly for the Canadian Pacific Railway; and that having raised the taxes to the highest point, and so dragged all we could out of the pockets of the people, and having borrowed all we could and given the cash to the company, we are now told that, having first taken all the taxes and given the amount to the company, and, in the second place, borrowed all we could and handed that too over to them—having come to the end of both those sources of revenue, we are now to give them our notes for the last advance. That is the position we occupy to-night. Under those circumstances, I say the prediction of the Liberal party that the policy of the Administration in 1872 would prove not a realisable policy, not a policy of which events would indicate the wisdom, has been proved by an accumulation of testimonies melancholy in their cogency, their force and their influence, on the future destinies of this country. Then the hon. gentleman has said that this general policy of 1872 was a policy which has conquered the North-West. This is the third conquest of the North-West which hon. gentlemen opposite have made. They made a conquest when they first took hold of the country—a military conquest. Then it seems there has been a peaceful conquest—I admit there is a domination by means of the Canadian Pacific Railway—and they have had another conquest since the Session opened. So, Sir, we find they are fond of conquest. They are a military form of Government; and now we find, not content with the conquests made under Wolseley and Middleton, they have conquered the North West with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and through the Canadian Pacific Railway they hold it in subjection. The hon. gentleman says that in 1876, at all events, whatever difficulties there had been before, however excusable might have been that short-sightedness, that want of courage, that cravenness of spirit, which shrank from committing the people of Canada with three and a-half millions of people to undertaking within ten years to build this work, a work from which France or Austria would have shrunk, as I judge from the hon. gentleman's statement, that calculating spirit which induced us to come to the conclusion that it was impossible to realise the policy of hon. gentlemen of building it without an increase of taxation—whatever justification or palliation there might have been for those errors of judgment which the Secretary of State thinks we committed in 1872, but of which we are not at all ashamed to-day, and which we are quite prepared to reiterate to-day, and at all times, to which we point as proofs of our prescience and judgment, and as indicating our superiority in those ingredients of statesmanship to hon. gentlemen opposite—whatever palliation there might have been for errors of judgment and cravenness of spirit in 1872, there was none for our course in 1876, 1877 and 1878. In those years there was a confession of folly and incapacity, said the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), at the very commencement of his Administration, having come back to this House with a victory at the polls, upon a Canadian Pacific Railway policy which he had submitted to the people, which he had submitted in his speeches and Address, and in regard to which he had received the endorsement of the people, proposed his Canadian Pacific Railway Act. In that Act he proposed a re-enactment of the resolution and preamble of the former Bill, and repeated the declaration in these terms. I translate from the French :

"Considering that by the legislation of the present Session, with a view to fulfil the obligations of the Dominion, the Customs taxation has been raised to a figure much higher than that which existed at the period of the said resolution, and considering it is fitting to take measures for the execution of the said work as rapidly as it can be accomplished, without further raising the Customs taxation, etc."

His proposal then was to adhere to the view that the rate of taxation should not be raised, at all events, beyond the figure to which it had been raised by existing legislation, and that the road should be built after that fashion. An hon. member near, reminds me that the House was unanimous in sustaining those propositions. Then we were not wrong in 1874. I go further, namely, to the years of which the hon. gentleman has spoken. The hon. gentleman said—I took it down—that there was no room for doubt in 1876; and then he said, there was a confession of folly and incapacity because my hon. friend did not grapple with the work and did not do a great deal more than he did do, or propose a great deal more than he did propose. Sir, on the 7th April, 1876, the year in which the hon. gentleman says we demonstrated our incapacity to grapple with this subject, a motion was made to annex to the vote for the expenses of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the year these words :

"While granting this sum, this House desires to record its view that the arrangements for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be such as the resources of the country will permit, without increasing the existing rates of taxation."

So we find that once again, after all the negotiations which had taken place with British Columbia, after the discussions about the failure of the Carnarvon terms, when the question came clearly before Parliament, Parliament was called upon to decide whether they would adhere to the view that the arrangements, whatever they were, were to be limited by this condition, as to taxation, and Parliament did adhere to that view. It adhered to it, Sir, not by the ordinary party majority of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie)—he had 149 votes for that proposal. There were but ten who voted against it, and amongst those who voted for it, I will read a few names, for the edification of the Secretary of State, to whom this appears to be not merely ancient history, but history so ancient that he has but very obscurely learned it. Here are some of the names: Baby, shortly afterwards a member of the Government of the hon. gentleman, and since elevated to the bench; Costigan, shortly afterwards a member of the Government, and who with a slight interval of twenty-four hours, has ever since, continued a member of the Government and still graces the Cabinet by his presence; Desjardins—a well known and prominent supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite; Kirkpatrick—now Speaker of this House; Langevin—shortly afterwards and still a Minister; Masson—shortly afterwards a Minister, and now Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec; Mousseau—shortly afterwards a Minister, and now a judge—they seem to go up, these Ministers from Quebec; Ouimet—a firm and persistent supporter of hon. gentlemen, whether in or out of No. 8; Plumb, an ardent supporter of hon. gentlemen—rejected by the people, and elevated to the Senate; Robitaille—formerly a member of the Administration, and upon their regaining power, resuming his seat as a member of the Administration, and who having fitted, as so many of these Lower Canadian Ministers have done, became Lieutenant-Governor, and is now a member of the Senate; Rouleau—promoted to the Table. I will not go further, but I say, for the benefit of the hon. gentleman's colleague, the acting Minister of Railways, that he was amongst the ten who voted against the resolution.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. McCALLUM. You raised the taxes afterwards; you did not carry that out.

Mr. BLAKE. The duties were raised, I think, to 17½ per cent. before that.

M. LANDERKIN. Two years.

Mr. BLAKE. At least a year before that time. We made no obligation that the duties should not be raised for any purpose; the resolution of the House of Commons was that the arrangements for the Canadian Pacific Railway should be such as that they should not interfere with the existing rates of taxation. Now, Sir, I think you will see that in the year 1876 there was a tolerably unanimous opinion in Parliament, and, at any rate, I hardly think that the successor of these many distinguished gentlemen from Quebec, who comes late from his Province, to fill the place of the worthy men who have gone up higher—I do not think that he is very well entitled to declare that the policy of my hon. friend from East York was a policy of confessed failure and incapacity, in the face of that resolution, assented to by all these gentlemen, which was its governing feature. He wanted, Sir, honestly to abide by the terms which hon. gentlemen opposite had professed to the country they would comply with, and he was determined to adhere to those terms, so far as he could. Then the Secretary of State, dealing with this ancient history still further, and, as it seemed to me, rather gleaming some of his information at second hand—in short, if I must say it, a good deal of what he gave us reminded me of some articles I formerly read in La Minerve—gleaning a good deal of this information at second hand, criticised severely the policy of my hon. friend from East York in building the railway from Fort William to Winnipeg, and not proceeding at that time with the construction of the line on the north shore of Lake Superior; and he also criticised our action in not proceeding vigorously in British Columbia. Why, Sir, I can point to another resolution during the time of my hon. friend's Premiership, moved by Mr. De Cosmos, formerly a member of this House, pressing for the construction in British Columbia, which was opposed, not merely by the vote, but by the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, including the present First Minister, who thought that it was premature, that it was unreasonable pressure, that the circumstances had changed, and that construction was not to be hurried in that way. And with reference to the north shore of Lake Superior, I can point to the fact that when these gentlemen resumed office and propounded the Canadian Pacific Railway policy in 1880, Sir Charles Tupper, acting as their spokesman in propounding that policy, himself declared in favor of the deferment of the line to the north shore of Lake Superior. He proposed to build into the prairie and to commence the construction in British Columbia, but he proposed nothing for the north shore of Lake Superior. On the contrary, he expressed the opinion that we could not undertake that construction at that time, and at that time the work of connecting Port Arthur with Winnipeg was approaching completion. Now, the hon. the Secretary of State passes very harsh criticisms on the conduct of my hon. friend in the matter of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He declares that he expended much money, that he expended it fruitlessly, and that very little had been done. I shall read you, Sir, a juster appreciation of my hon. friend's policy. I shall read an appreciation which, since the hon. gentleman seems to have been studying the literature of this subject, I am sorry he did not himself discover. The eminent man, whose utterances I am about to quote, said, in the year 1878:

"I will briefly refer to the amount of public money required in order to carry to completion works already undertaken, and contracts to which the country is now pledged. The amount of money required to complete the road from the shores of Lake Superior, at Kaministiquia or Thunder Bay, to Red River, is estimated, in round numbers, with a fair equipment, to cost about $18,000,000. To that, of course, the country is committed."

He then refers to the subsidy to the Canada Central, to the Georgian Bay branch, to the Pembina branch, and the telegraph contracts, and so on, as making up the sum of $23,456,000. Now, this eminent public man said:

"I have no hesitation in saying that the work I have referred to as involving an expenditure of over $28,000,000 of public money has largely contributed to remove the difficulties and promote the progress of the entire undertaking. I believe, that as we originally looked to the development of the great North-West as the only basis upon which any Government or company could undertake the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, so we cannot but regard the expenditure of $28,000,000 of public money in permeating that difficult, almost inaccessible district of country, between Lake Superior and the Red River, as money expended in a way that is most likely to so develop, so improve and so people the great fertile country of the North-West, as to give us a substantial basis upon which we may hope to succeed in permeating the still more difficult and extensive region, from the Rocky Mountains down to the shores of the Pacific, and although the expenditure of public money has not been made within the Province of British Columbia I am free to say that that expenditure, in my judgment, has been made in a way much better calculated to secure the actual realization of this work than if every dollar had been expended in British Columbia, commencing at the shores of the Pacific, because no expenditure in British Columbia could materially contribute to the opening up of that great North-West region, upon the development and upon peopling of which must necessarily depend the successful prosecution of that gigantic undertaking, the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, Sir, I have stated that we have great advantages in the construction of such a work as this. There has been a great advance made within the past five years; not only have we accomplished an important work in providing for an early, rapid and easy communication to our own country, from the shores of Lake Superior to the Red River, but we have acquired information with reference to the North-West Territories which is invaluable in its character. High as was our estimate a few years ago, high as was the opinion we were warranted in entertaining as to the capabilities of the great North-West, we were comparatively ignorant of the vast extent of fertile lands of that country. The surveys which have been made, though attended with a large amount of expenditure, are cheap, compared with that which has really been accomplished, inasmuch as that we can only hope for the successful accomplishment of this great work by showing to the world the value and character of that country. I hold that the explorations that have been made and the increased knowledge that we possess of its resources place us in a position to appeal to capitalists much more confidently and successfully for this great work than would otherwise be the case."

Such, Sir, is the language of Sir Charles Tupper, speaking as the spokesman of the Government, in introducing their Canadian Pacific Railway policy of the year 1879, with reference to the administration by my hon. friend of matters connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway during the period of his Government. Such was the juster appreciation, such was the fairer view, such was the greater knowledge, which that hon. gentleman had of what had been done, and of the results of what had been done, than the Secretary of State, who comes late into this House and seeks to fill his shoes, by making speeches diametrically opposite to those which Sir Charles Tupper made. Knowledge was fresher then; the Government had just come into power; they were just chosen, after fighting the battle for five years, which had terminated in their success at the polls; and fresh as they were from that combat, this was the measure of criticism of the policy of my hon. friend which the exponent of the Canadian Pacific Railway policy of the Government of the day gave on that occasion. I want no better vindication of the Liberal party or of my hon. friend, the member for East York, as its worthy representative, than the statement of the hon. gentleman who had been his political critic in Opposition for five years made, when he, himself, had assumed the responsibility of Administration. What, Sir, was the work my hon. friend was doing? Nothing? Were the survey moneys wasted? I have Sir Charles Tupper's word for that. Was the work between Port Arthur or Fort William and Winnipeg a waste of money, unless the line north of Lake Superior was completed? I have Sir Charles Tupper's word to the contrary, and I have the facts, too. We all know that the immigration to the great North-West takes place during the season of navigation, and that the moment we completed a road from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, the season of navigation gave us a route for immigrants within our own territory, from the moment they touched the shores of the Atlantic to the time they were landed in the North-West. I do not know whether hon. gentlemen opposite do not exaggerate the dangers to which the guileless immigrant is exposed in travelling on foreign soil; I express no opinion on that; but the step my hon. friend took was such as to provide us, during the whole season of navigation, with a safeguard against those dangers. What of the grain of the country? During those early years it would not be too great in quantity for shipment to come down by water from Port Arthur. So that that construction was, I believe, a wise construction, as part of a system largely taxing our resources, it is true, but still commensurate with our resources—a system which was to develop the great North-West and give us a means of communication with it. We felt, just as Sir Charles Tupper says, in the language I have quoted, that the North-West must inevitably be the backbone of any Canadian Pacific Railway; we felt that the development of the North-West was the prime condition on which the success of a Canadian Pacific Railway was possible; and the step my hon. friend was taking, though, perhaps, a bold step, in the circumstances of the country, was certainly an important step, as acknowledged by his adversaries, in that direction. Shall I go further? What charge was made in the contest of 1878 against my hon. friend, in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway? Why, Sir, the charge that was made was one I read the other day in this House. I read from a pamphlet of Sir David Macpherson, in which he attacked my hon. friend for going too fast and too far. His soul quavered at the idea of Canada having spent, from the time the project commenced up to the close of the financial year 1876, the heavy sum of $6,250,000, but he has not blanched since, when the expense went to $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 a year. He pointed out that the proper course should have been to rely on the American roads, and not to attempt to obtain even the Port Arthur connection with the North-West by water and rail. That was his view, and when I read it the other day, I did not tell, for a minute or two, from whom I was reading; and from the usual corner arose the derisive cheers, because hon. gentlemen were sure it must be some Grit who said that.

Mr. McCALLUM, You did not read far enough.

Mr BLAKE. Well, the hon. gentleman, I dare say, will finish it some day; but I think he won't read that passage. I say, I heard the derisive cheers of hon. gentlemen opposite, because they thought that was the sentiment of some Grit, although we know it was the sentiment of an annexationist, who is fit to enter a Tory Ministry; but when I mentioned the name, hon. gentlemen ceased to cheer, and I thought they looked a little chop-fallen. Well, this was the criticism we met with; and I maintain that my hon. friend's policy in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the circumstances in which the country stood, was endorsed by the Parliament and the country. There was no issue on that subject, except the issue raised by Sir David Macpherson and his friends, through the circulation of this pamphlet. When hon. gentlemen opposite took office they did not depart so much at first from the policy of my hon. friend. In 1879 they proposed a policy of comparatively slow progress. They then thought British assistance was necessary; they thought we could not do this work alone, and they decided to apply for Imperial assistance. They declared that they would build a colonisation railway through the North-West, and they declared that they would make a commencement in British Columbia, but a commencement of a road in both cases of very inferior quality to that which had been before projected. To their proposition to build through the prairies, no dissent was offered; on the contrary, it was deemed a very good proposition. But, Sir, the eastern connection was at that time postponed. The hon. gentleman has shown the danger of getting out of one's depth. He has pointed out, amongst the evidences of incapacity shown by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), that there was 100 miles of railway which he had built and which the Canadian Pacific Railway was obliged to take up and remove. Now, I admit frankly that there was about 100 miles of railway built by the Government which the Canadian Pacific Railway found useless and removed, but it was not built by my hon. friend; it was built by this Government; it was built by hon. gentlemen opposite; it was built by Sir John A. Macdonald's Government; and therefore, if that be an evidence of incapacity, let the hon. gentleman take it to his own heart. The hon. gentleman then referred to my speech in 1880, and he read that portion of it which alludes to the view I expressed in 1874, with reference to these terms of building this railway within ten years. It is true that I entertained, rightly or wrongly—I thought then, in 1880, rightly, and I think now, in 1885, rightly—the view that it was not possible to comply with the terms of that bargain, and that it would be ruinous to this country to do so. I thought the country was deluded into that bargain, under the false pretence that it was possible to do it without creating an increase in taxation; whereas it was impossible to do it without increasing the rate of taxation; and I was disinclined to ruin my country, and British Columbia, as part of it, in the attempt to perform what I considered to be impossible. But I was not disposed, if British Columbia, after a frank, fair and loyal statement of that opinion, said: We insist upon the bargain being carried out; we will not relax the terms; we insist on the letter of the bond, and if you say you cannot do it, we wish to be released—I certainly was not disposed to hold British Columbia against her will; I was not disposed to say: Yes, we trapped you into a union with Canada upon a bargain we now find it impossible to fulfil, but we will not let you go, even if you want to; we will insist in holding you, though you wish to go. On the contrary, I was disposed to say to British Columbia: We are willing to go on and do our best to build this road as rapidly as the resources of the country, of which you form a part, will allow; if that will not suit you, if nothing but the letter of the bond will satisfy you, and if you wish to separate, we will not hold you against your will, on the terms of a bargain which we are unable to fulfil. I said that, and I do not think it was an unjust, a dishonorable thing to say. I think it was a fair, plain statement of what honesty and justice demanded of any man from the old Provinces of Canada to say to

Mr. BLAKE.

British Columbia. It was the least one could say to that Province, to tell it we would not hold it a slave and leave unperformed the terms of the bargain upon which it entered Confederation. Then the hon. gentleman says that my hon. friend made a proposal for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that it was a very expensive proposal, because, he said, my hon. friend, besides a subsidy in money and a subsidy in land, proposed a guarantee of 4 per cent. on a certain sum for twenty-five years. Now, a portion of this statement is true, but only a portion. It is not all founded on fact; for my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) did not state a sum; but the hon. gentleman himself stated a sum, the lowest he assumed it would be, and, therefore, he claims that the hon. member for East York made that offer. Now, what the hon. member for East York did was to advertise for offers to build the railway, stating, such a subsidy, in cash and in land, will be paid; if you want more, state for how much more of this guarantee of 4 per cent. will build the road. My hon. friend did not offer a particular sum; he did not say he would accept the tender; but he was determined to endeavor to secure an offer, to be submitted to Parliament with the advice of the Government, in accordance with the liberal policy which we insisted on while hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. But the hon. gentleman, to make up a large sum of money, puts in this middle and unknown term. He assumes to be a tenderer, and he puts in a tender. I heard the words "bogus tenderer" applied a few days ago to a number of very respectable gentlemen; I will not insult the hon. gentleman by saying that he was a bogus tenderer, but certainly he comes late with his tender; and certainly, if he had come, in 1876 or 1877, and made that offer, he would have received the response that his proposal was too high. But there is another difficulty. The hon. gentleman names a sum, and he declares that a guarantee of 4 per cent. on that sum per annum for 25 years is equal to the capital. He declines the actuarial calculation. He declines to recognise the fact that a portion of this sum out-runs, in 25 years, a portion in 24 years, a portion in 23 years, and so on, and he actually multiplies 4 by 25, and says that is the proposal; and that is what he calls fair play and frank and loyal criticism. Then the hon. gentleman pointed out that there was a great difference in another point between this suggested offer of my hon. friend and the present position. He said the rolling stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway was nearly $9,000,000, and would be $10,000,000 very shortly. I do not so understand it. The term that is used in most communications that reach us upon the subject of that part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's enterprise, is "equipment," and I do not understand the word "equipment," as they use it, signifies only rolling stock. I understand it to signify in part fixed equipment, and I base that understanding partly upon the report of the company, which appeared in yesterday's papers, under which, if I rightly recollect the figures, the company declared their rolling stock to be something like $7,300,000, instead of $9,000,000, so that the hon. gentleman, in that respect, also, has acted upon inaccurate information. The hon. gentleman then adverted to my speech in 1880, and pointed out the estimates that I had laid before the House of the cost of a first-rate road, which had been projected in former years, by the engineers, over the prairie country, and he declared that I had staked my reputation upon the fact that the cost of that road would be so much per mile, and that this was the same route as the Canadian Pacific Railway had followed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; the same route. Probably the hon. gentleman did not mean to say it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say it. I was very careful, and my hon. friend knows why, because the line was not on the same route.

Mr. BLAKE. I know it was not, and I want to know why the hon. gentleman, if he knew the line was not the same, ventured to attack me for having given an estimate that applied to the present line. He knows well that the present line is a cheaper line, that it has greater natural facilities than the line to Edmonton. If he will read the reports of the engineers carefully, he will find that the river crossings and the bridges are infinitely more expensive and the country, is much more broken, on the Edmonton route than on the southern route.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is not the point. The hon. gentleman said I said the same line, and I never said so.

Mr. BLAKE. I so understood the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. You could not have so understood it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has no right to say I could not have so understood it. I say I did so understand it, and I will go further: I will say that a belief in the fair play of the hon. gentleman could have led me to no other conclusion than that he meant it, because, if he knew it was a different line, and if he knew that the comparison was useless, why did he state it? What is the use of comparing a line over one region of country with a line over another region of country, and saying that the particulars in regard to one region of country are applicable to a different region of country? What I stated upon that occasion I have more than once repeated in this House. My hon. friend, the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), was familiar, from his experience and knowledge as a Minister, with the reports of the different engineers, given from time to time, as to the cost of the railway over the then located road. My hon. friend examined those reports and those estimates, and from them he brought out a statement of what the result of those estimates was. It was not my hon. friend's estimate; it was not my estimate; it was the estimate of the engineers. What my hon. friend, and what I, as the utterer of his statement, though I gave my authority, were responsible for, was taking reasonable care that we had correctly interpreted the estimates of the engineers, because that was what we proposed to lay before Parliament. That statement has never been controverted. No hon. gentleman has ever pointed to the reports of the engineers and shown that their estimates would lead to different conclusions than those which my hon. friend produced and put into my hands, and which, he sitting beside me, I gave upon his authority to that extent, and to that extent only. He made no estimate; I made no estimate; but we took the estimates of the permanent officers of the Government and laid before Parliament the result of that information. But we all know that this question is not to be decided upon the estimates of that day, and, in fact, these were estimates, not of that day, but of many years earlier. We know that railway construction in the year 1881-82 was very much cheaper than it was in the previous years. We know that railway construction in the year 1883 and in the earlier part—perhaps the whole—of 1884, was cheaper all around, steel rails and all, than it has ever been in the history of the country; and are you not to consider these circumstances when you deal with estimates? Are you not to consider the expense, the cost of labor, the cost of materials, the cost of rails, when you consider the question of the estimates which are given for a road? What we had to do with was the cost, at the time and under the circumstances under which construction took place. Now, the hon. gentleman has said that I gave the cost on that occasion as $120,000,000, and the road will only cost—so he says—$53,000,000. Now, what did the hon. gentleman mean by that statement? What did he mean by putting in juxtaposition the two things? I gave the estimates of the engineers for the construction of the road by the Yellow Head Pass in earlier years at $120,000,000, and no one has ever disputed that that was a correct statement of what the estimates were. The hon. gentleman says I estimated the cost of the road, and staked my reputation upon it, at $120,000,000, and now it is costing the country only $53,000,000. I will come to what it is costing the country presently; but, supposing it is costing the country only $53,000,000, I want to know what was the meaning of his putting those two things in juxtaposition? Did I say it would cost the country $120,000,000? I only stated what the road would cost, and if a company is to build it, paying a part of the cost, it is very different from the country building it and paying the whole cost; but the hon. gentleman puts the two in juxtaposition. Then, the hon. gentleman refers to the value of the railway lands. I will deal with the question of the value of railway lands a little further on. But, if you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I will just touch it for a moment now. I was amazed to hear the hon. gentleman make his statement, and I had a mind, if he had not anticipated me, to have delivered, not in his admirable style, but with such humble approach to his histrionic powers as I could make, that lecture upon patriotism which he inflicted upon this side of the House. The hon. gentleman told us we need not be afraid of the cultivable lands in the North-West not being valuable, because there was not so much of them; it was a great mistake; half were rivers, and lakes, and marshes, and, of the other half, as I remember, one-half were ranching lands, and that left only eighty millions of cultivable lands. There is the statement of the hon. gentleman, depreciating this country, belittling our resources, minimising our assets, pulling us down to a poor, beggarly eighty millions of cultivable wheat lands in the North-West, when time and time again we have heard, in the thundering tones of the High Commissioner, the statement of the hundreds of millions of cultivable lands in the North-West. Only eighty millions! Only the small trifle of eighty millions, which will soon be taken up by—I forget how many families he said would take them up—and therefore you may expect your land to increase in value, because the supply will not exceed the demand. Well, that is a great source of congratulation. We will get the more for our land, because it will all be taken up, because it will soon come to an end. I have always believed, that after all said and done, the main dependence for Canada in regard to the lands of the North-West would be to put settlers upon them, who would be prosperous, and whose prosperity and the Customs duties they would pay would be the source of our wealth; that the main and ruling ingredient in our policy in the North-West, the ingredient to which all else should be subordinated, should be to keep the land for the settler and to give every facility for the settlement. But, if our estate is so small a farm, so comparatively small as the hon. gentleman has stated, perhaps the prospects are better of getting more out of the settler and making more money than we could when we supposed we had hundreds of millions of cultivable lands, since it appears that after all we have only this trifle of eighty millions. Then the hon. gentleman says that this side wants no road east of Callander, but only a local road. Where will he find that? He seems to think it is an absolute necessity, first of all, that the railway should be one railway, and secondly, that, if the railway is one railway, it should be made so by virtue of some great expenditure. Now, I have always believed that arrangements could have been made—and perhaps they were, in fact, made, for the mysteries of these transactions have not yet been revealed to us—whereby existing railways, when their availability and usefulness and value would be much enhanced by their being part of a trunk line, could be made part of the trunk line by the proprietors becoming stockholders in the great trunk line, and putting in their property as part of the stock. But the hon. gentleman thinks it is only by paying hard cash, which the company is to pay out of its own resources, or of some resources, that this thing can be accomplished; and I dare say this thing will grow. I should not be surprised, since we see that the subsidy for the Short Line is to be nearly doubled this Session, that a proposal should be made to buy the line of the Acting Minister of Railways, to buy the Townships lines, to provide public money to buy these lines, which are to be parts of, and greatly enhanced in value by the construction of, a through line; that they are to be enhanced in value by the transaction, and then we are to pay more money because of the enhancement of the value. That seems to me to follow, from the hon. gentleman's line of argument; that seems to me pretty clear from the hon. gentleman's speech. Then, the hon. gentleman says: The company had given much more than this; that they brought a railway to Montreal, 345 miles. I was surprised that the hon. gentleman did not proceed to give us the benefit of all he knows in that direction. How in the world did the hon. gentleman come to forget the Laurentian Railway? I thought he knew all about it. I really did think that that was one phase of the transaction with which the hon. gentleman was perfectly familiar. But when he was stating the eastern acquisitions of the Canadian Pacific Railway, he did not tell us one word about the acquisition of the Laurentian Railway, for about $300,000. At the same time that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company bought from the Government of Quebec, of which the hon. gentleman was First Minister, the line from Ottawa to Montreal, they also effected the purchase, under an Act passed under his auspices, of the little Laurentian Railway, which they wanted, to use a vulgar illustration, just as much as a toad wants a tail; and it was very handsomely paid for to the hon. gentleman's particular friends. Then the hon. gentleman pointed out that there was a new policy adopted in 1881. I have pointed out that when the present Government took office, in 1878, their Canadian Pacific Railway policy was, relatively speaking, a cautious policy. I could read you large extracts from speeches, showing the necessity of going slow, and of caution in the view of the Ministers at that time; but in 1881 they took the great step and decided upon a contract policy, a policy of rapid progress and of completion of the line by 1891; a contract policy of enormous money grants, if we include the works the Government was to construct as cash—because, if the Government did not build them, the company would have to build them; therefore it is the same thing as cash—of money grants far in excess of anything that had ever been contemplated in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. That which had been talked of was $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, but at one fell swoop it was proposed to give $25,000,000 in cash and $28,000,000 in work, and to pay the surveys, at least $3,500,000. We now find the Government works have cost $29,500,000, so that you approach $33,500,000 in money, or $58,500,000 altogether. I say they then proposed that policy, and to that is to be added the Canada Central Railway subsidy, which had been already made, and which will give you $60,000,000 as their cash proposals. I say that was an entire reversal of all former policies, because $30,000,000 had been talked of as the extreme amount of cash we were to give, and here was a policy to give double that amount of cash and about the same quantity of land, here was a policy of comparatively rapid progress, of completion by 1891, of great grants, pecuniary and otherwise, and a policy of great monopolies. We opposed that proposition, and we declared there ought to be no monopolies. We declared that the country ought not to be bound for twenty years, as the hon. gentlemen opposite propose to bind it. We declared the future of the country ought not to be fettered, as they proposed to, and have, fettered it. We pointed out that the prairie country ought to be developed, and we were anxious to see it develop, but we said that many lines would be required for its proper development. We insisted that the ends of the road ought to be proceeded with more slowly, that more pains ought to be taken as to the route, that the progress ought to be slower than was proposed, that the grants should be less, and that the distribution of the grants should be such as to secure the completion of the work with those grants, instead of being made, in the way which was proposed, we insisted that the early and easy part of the work would be done first, and that we should be called on to fill up the gap afterwards. We insisted on these things. We said: There is no finality here, because we do not know how much the Government work will cost, because, in the mode in which you are locating these grants, there is no security for the road being built by means of the grants; you are not reserving enough for the heavy work. The Government promised finality. They declared that the aids were ample, were appropriately divided, for the thorough completion and adequate equipment of the railway, in the first place, while they declared that we would be entirely recouped out of the lands. They declared there would be no grievances whatever from the monopoly. They declared that the railway company itself would build plenty of branch lines. They declared that Manitoba could not and would not be checked, and that the proposed policy, therefore, would not apply to that Province. These were their statements in answer to our views. Now, Sir, as we have been called upon last year, and are called upon this year, to give further important aids, to alter seriously the position of the country, with reference to this railway, it becomes expedient to understand what the declarations and promises were upon which the original contract was entered into, so far as the hon. gentlemen are concerned. The First Minister declared that by the contractors taking up the enterprise "they relieved the country of immediate responsibility for building the road, in a great degree." But, I will prove that the contracted line has been built with our money, and that we have not been relieved from the responsibility of building the road in any sensible measure whatever. Sir Charles Tupper, estimating the amount of money for which Canada would get quit of its obligation to build and to work this railway, used these words:

Mr. BLAKE.

"For the construction of the road from Lake Nipissing to Fort William, 650 miles, and from Selkirk to Kamloops, 1,350 miles—2,000 miles in all—the Government have agreed to pay, in addition to the $28,000,000, $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres in land, making a total subsidy in cash of $53,000,000, and in land—estimating the 25,000,000 acres at the same rate that I have estimated the land under the contract of 1873 and under the Act of 1874, $1 an acre—of $25,000,000; or a total sum to be expended by Canada for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway of $78,000,000."

That was the declaration as to the terms upon which we were getting quit of our liability. Fifty-three millions in money is all that we were to spend, and twenty-five million acres of land was all we were to give. What we have in fact spent and what we are now asked to give I will investigate farther on. Then Sir Charles proceeds to say:

"We have reason to know that all that a command of capital can do they have the advantage of; we have reason to know that all that skill and energy and a knowledge of precisely such work will do, has been secured in order to make this a successful contract."

Then he makes a further unfavorable statement of what would happen if the English contractors, even of the greatest skill and capital, had undertaken the work. He points out that they probably would have failed, and predicts that horrible things would happen, many of which seem to have happened since. Then Sir Charles Tupper says, again:

"I have the satisfaction of knowing that throughout this intelligent country every man breathed more freely when he learned that the great, enormous undertaking of constructing and operating the railway was to be lifted from the shoulders of the Government, and the liability the country were going to incur was to be brought within, not over, the limit which, in its present financial condition, it is prepared to meet; within such limits that the proceeds from the sale of the land to be granted by Parliament for the construction of the line would wipe out all liabilities at no distant day."

There was the pledge made when we were asked to make a contract. Our liabilities were $53,000,000, and the proceeds of the land at no distant time were to wipe out every cent of that money and leave us free. Then the Minister of Public Works took up the cudgels, and he is generally rather cautious and precise in his statements. But influenced, I suppose, by that patriotic exuberance of spirit which his colleague, Sir Charles Tupper, sometimes showed signs, and with which, in his closing remarks, the Secretary of State also indicated he was occasionally afflicted, the Minister of Public Works made a very positive statement as to the result. He said:

"According to the contract the amount of money to be given to the Syndicate is $25,000,000, and the amount of land 25,000,000 acres, worth, say, $1 per acre. To these two sums you have to add the cost of the sections completed or now under construction, as far as Burrard Inlet, amounting to twenty-eight million dollars, so that the whole amount that will have to be expended by this country for completing the Pacific Railway is $53,000,000, to which you must add the value of the land at a dollar an acre, making altogether $78,000,000. Thus, according to our plan, we shall have the whole Pacific Railway completed for $78,000,000, and with the guarantee that the company now to be inaugurated will work the road for all time to come."

At that time it was not deemed unpatriotic to insinuate a doubt that there might be difficulty about working the road. On the contrary, those hon. gentlemen who think it very unpatriotic that this matter should be questioned now, themselves took security in $5,000,000 that the road would be operated. On the contrary, they told us that an enormous sum would have to be paid by the company during the earlier years to operate the road, and if we were paying large and liberal subsidies in money and land, it was to recompense the company and make them strong enough to operate the line. Then, the hon. gentleman, getting into that patriotic fervor to which I have referred, said:

"Does he (Blake) want to drive a hard bargain with these gentlemen? What reason could there be in attempting to cut them down to as small a figure as possible, in order to make the company a poor company? It is to our interest, and to the interest of the country, that the company should be able to construct the railway and work it afterwards, so that they shall not come back to us, year after year, and ask us for new terms. We want, once for all, to settle the whole question," etc.

Those were the opinions of the Minister of Public Works upon the question. Why should we cut the company down; let us deal with them liberally; let us not make them a poor company; let us make them a rich company, so strong that they will not come to us, year after year; that they will not come to us in 1884, for example, or in 1885, or in 1886; that they will not come to us, year after year, and ask for new terms. We want, once for all, to settle the whole question. Has the hon. gentleman, once for all, settled the whole question by the contract of 1881? Have they not come back, year after year; and who will say they will come back no more? Then the hon. gentleman said something which I thought was exceedingly sensible. I have heard something during the discussion to-day which was entirely opposed to the views of the hon. gentleman. I have heard it pointed out that we ought to regard ourselves as under a deep debt of gratitude to the contractors for and constructors of this road, and should deal with them in that spirit. What did the Minister of Public Works say:

"These men are not going to work that railway for the mere pleasure of doing so. They are not undertaking it for the sake of patriotism. They are undertaking it to make money, and they will make money, because they know that a railway through that beautiful country, settled with a large and thriving population, must give large returns."

That was the hon. gentleman's statement—a plain, business-like statement, such as the hon. gentleman knows how to make. We can see it all now. There is no longer a hazy atmosphere about it. It was the business, and not the patriotic motive; it was in order to make money out of the undertaking that the promoters undertook it; and the hon. gentleman said he was sorry if they did not make money. I hope they will make money; if they do not, it will not be for the fault of hesitating to come here. The hon. gentleman further said:

"The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) has referred to the obligations and liabilities of Canada in connection with the railway. He says they are undetermined—that they have no finality."

How much are they nearer finality now?

"I generally find the hon. gentleman very logical, but I fail to see his logic in this case. I think our liabilities in the matter are as well determined as they could possibly be. Taking the land at $1 per acre, we have a total of $78,000,000 as the sum we have to pay. Surely there is sufficient determinativeness and finality in that calculation to suit hon. gentlemen."

The hon. gentleman was losing his temper; he ridiculed the idea of there being any want of finality and determinativeness in the calculation. What has happened since? We have altered the figures. We have given them $29,500,000, or almost thirty millions since. We are to give them some more presently. The Secretary of State tells us to-day that although, when we gave them the loan, we took a mortgage, and were told we had absolute security under which we could get the road at figures appallingly small, dirt cheap, if they failed in fulfilling their bargain; still the Secretary of State tells us that was all a form, that we all understood it so; but the hon. gentleman was not here to understand it, and he did not hear the fervor and earnestness with which any such idea was repudiated by hon. gentlemen, his colleagues, or he would not have said what he did say. When that contingency was suggested, we were told that it was a fair and square bargain; that we were asked to advance money because it was clear we were going to get rid of paying so many millions if the company made default. The Secretary of State says we would have had to have bought up the stock. What is the use, then, of a mortgage, and of being on the top? The hon. gentleman makes a distinction, but it is entirely without a difference. He says it is an old loan; that it never was intended to deprive those people of their cottages; that, in fact, our bark was much worse than our bite. We took a very stringent mortgage, but we never intended to enforce it; it would not have been right to enforce it; it would have left a stain on the Government to enforce it; therefore, you are not to believe all you hear from us. That is the effect of the statement. For we certainly were told last year, when the bargain was made, that the mortgage was a good and valid mortgage, and was to be enforced. The Minister of Public Works said in 1881:

"I have shown, moreover, that not only will the railway be built by the Syndicate, but worked for all time to come; and that we have sufficient guarantees in our land to ensure both these objects."

That is quite true, if you make a little addition to it—if you pay the necessary further sum in order to accomplish that result. The Minister of Public Works further said:

"The leader of the Opposition asks why so monstrous a contract as this was brought down to Parliament. I tell him it was to secure our institutions, to increase our population, to enrich the country."

There was the object—it was to enrich the country. After another pause he goes on:

"Hon. gentlemen may or may not see that this is one of those great measures that a party, even in Opposition, should not hesitate to support. This is one of those rare opportunities that public men have to show how they can appreciate great measures and how they can foresee the future of their country. This is a measure which we, at all events, as public men, as the representatives of the people of this country, consider will be the crowning act of our lives."

Well, Sir, you may see that our appreciation of the results of the contract have been somewhat more accurate than that of hon. gentlemen. We declared that the bargain would not be observed; we declared that more concessions would be made, and these concessions have been made. They declared that there was ample security, ample funds; that they did not want any further applications for aid. They wanted the matter settled then once and for all; but these suggestions have not been borne out. Then, during Christmas vacation, while the great debate was going on there was a meeting at Montreal, on the 9th of January, 1881, at which Sir Charles Tupper made a speech. He said:

"We must go on with the work, and now we are going to build the whole railway without costing the people a single dollar."

Then the Minister of Public Works, who could not attend the meeting, sent a letter, and litera scripta manet :

"By giving 25,000,000 acres and $25,000,000 we will, by our scheme secure the building of the railway and its working for all time to come"

And persuaded by the assurances of the Minister of Public Works and the eloquence of Sir Charles Tupper, the meeting came to a resolution approving of the policy of the Government on this condition :

"While it limits our outlay and responsibility to a fixed annual sum."

That was the ground which had been pressed upon the meeting, and upon that ground these worthy citizens gave it their support. There followed, very shortly, a period of expansion, which we know and remember to our cost. There came the time of the boom, the season of the boasts of the Government—their boasts of progress; the time at which the company announced to them that they intended to complete the road in 1886, and great joy was uttered at that announcement. There came the time of inflated stock, the time of the changed policy about branches, of the outside schemes, the time of the inflated estimates of the results to the country itself; there came the good time for hon. gentlemen of 1882 and early 1883. There came the time, on the 4th May, 1883, when the Minister of Railways read a statement to the House, for its information, in making his annual Canadian Pacific Railway report—a statement from the Department of the Interior, declaring that, after a careful and exhaustive examination, they had come to the conclusion that the country would receive, within the nine years ending in 1891, $58,000,000 in cash from the lands of the North-West. This statement was solemnly read, with grave face and measured tones, to prove to us that we were going to be recouped for our expenses. What were our expenses? We had heard nothing at that time of the loan of $30,000,000, it was the original expenditure of $28,000,000 or thirty-three and a half millions, just as you may count it, in Government works and subsidies, and $25,000,000 subsidy. It was an expenditure practically to be covered by $58,000,000. They had declared, in 1881, that they were going to pay this out of the lands of the country, and they brought proof to show it by an official document from the office of the Interior, running out the result with a critical, and, perhaps, I might say, an almost suspicious degree of accuracy, to a figure which neatly covered the required amount. The Minister of Finance, too, at the suggestion of the Minister of Railways, forecast the future and gave us estimates for several years. For the years 1882-83 he estimated that we should make out of public lands $1,750,000; we made $1,009,019. For 1883-84 he predicted a surplus from consolidated revenue of $3,000,000; we got $754,255. He estimated, as the proceeds of the lands for 1883-84, two millions and a quarter; we got $951,636. He estimated a surplus from consolidated revenue for 1884-85 of one million dollars. Early in the Session, when he made his Budget Speech, he estimated $350,000, apart from the lands, as the surplus for 1884-85, but I am sorry to say that even that modest surplus has long since disappeared, and has been replaced by appalling figures on the other side of the account. He estimated, as the proceeds of the lands for 1884-85, one million of dollars; in his Budget Speech for this year he estimates half a million. He estimated a surplus from consolidated revenue, for 1885-86, of one million dollars; in his Budget Speech of this year he estimated it at nil. He estimated the proceeds of the lands for 1885-86 at one million dollars; in his Budget Speech of this year he puts it at $700,000, and I think, when the figures come to be revised, when the Supplementary Estimates come down, it will be found that that calculation will be largely cut down. He carried on these estimates down to 1891, estimating the comparatively neat round sum of $1,000,000 from lands, and $1,000,000 surplus from consolidated revenue each year, and he proved that we could pay for the Canadian Pacific Railway very handsomely in that and other ways. Well, the figures I have given you down to 1885-86, show 11,000,000 of an estimate, against the present estimate of $4,164,000, or thereabouts, so that there is a large deficiency there. Meanwhile, while the boasts of hon. gentlemen were filling the land, while they were boasting of the great progress of the Canadian Pacific Railway, of the great progress of the country, of its wonderful development, of the great success of their schemes, of how everybody was going to be made rich, while they were calling on everybody to put on more sail, inviting prudent men to sink their hardly-made earnings in speculation, doing all they could to press on that inflation which we all remember—monopoly and disallowance were doing their work in the North-West, and the pressure for the main line construction overshadowed the earlier and wiser plans of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, to prosecute branch lines forthwith. That company brought forward a plan for the prosecution of branch lines of many hundreds of miles in length throughout the country. They were to be proceeded with soon—not when the main road was completed, as the First Minister said the other day, but almost immediately; but the moment that this project of completing the road from end to end in 1886 took shape, of course it was necessary that the company should strain every nerve and devote all its energies to the prosecution of a single long line, to the exclusion of the branches, and the people were worse off than if these promises had not been made, worse off than if these lines had not been projected. Large blocks of land had been reserved as railway lands; large territories had been pointed out to the country as to be permeated by railways; settlers went on these lands; other settlers were thwarted, and disappointment and distress prevailed through a wide extent of country, in consequence of unhappy alterations of plans. Then came the change of scene, in the fall of 1883, when hon. gentlemen opposite took the responsibility, executive, of agreeing to a thing in excess of their powers, namely, the arrangement to make the guarantee for the company. It was an arrangement the financial element in the success of which I have never been able to discern. The Minister of Railways declared that it ought to have succeeded, because all the most eminent financiers of Canada, New York and London had agreed it ought to succeed, and he could not make out why it had not succeeded. Well, I never could make out how it was expected to succeed, on the theory that money's worth was being given to the Government for the guarantee, and that money's worth was being extracted from the company to provide a dividend. How in the world that was going to increase the value of the stock to the holders I have never been able to see, and the public seem to have taken the same view, because the arrangement has been an entire failure. But the Government had committed themselves to the policy of agreeing that the company should appropriate enormous portions of its capital to the payment of dividends during construction and for years after construction; the Government sanctioned that policy and agreed to invoke the aid of Parliament, in which they were all-powerful, to make it lawful and to carry it out. The most injurious consequences flowed from that great error of judgment on the part of the company and from that abuse of power and error of judgment on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. Well, what followed? We met in the year 1884, and we were told that a loan was necessary, and a loan of $22,500,000 was proposed, and a pledge of $7,380,000 to meet the arrangements for the guarantee. We were told at that time that full investigation into all elements of the calculation was absolutely necessary, and that that full investigation had been made. Hon. gentlemen better their course with time. At that time they sent down two inspectors, Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Miall, to the offices of the company, to inspect their books, to strike balances, and to make such a calculation as would be proper, in the event of a party being about to enter into partnership with, or to advance a large sum to, a respectable mercantile firm—I think that was the language of the late Minister of Railways. These gentlemen went down, and a few days before the final decision of Council was made, they sent in their report; I believe the decision had actually been made before the report was in. In point of form, only, hon. gentlemen opposite investigated the matter, but with reference to the engineering schemes of the company, with reference to the various sums they proposed to expend and the various purposes for which they proposed to expend them, there was the full report of the engineer on the letter of Mr. Stephen, in which he went into these matters, and staked his professional reputation as to the accuracy of the estimates and the propriety of the proposed expenditures. Then the proposal was brought up in Council; the Minister of Railways brought up these reports and laid them before the Council; the Council considered them, and they came to the conclusion to submit the matter to Parliament, and the Order in Council was brought down. Well, what is the action this time? The hon. gentleman lays a resolution on the Table, and about four days afterwards, speaking from memory, Mr. Miall makes the report. Did that inform the hon. gentleman's mind? He had decided his policy before Mr. Miall's report was made; everybody knew that he was going to lend the money, though not on the basis of Mr. Stephen's letter; the resolutions were laid on the Table, and after the Government had committed themselves to their policy, forsooth, they send down Mr. Miall to see whether they were right or not; and, strange to say, he finds they are quite right. Well, Mr. Miall sends down condensed balances—very condensed indeed. Twice I asked for the two large detailed balances from which Mr. Miall constructed his condensed balances, and hon. gentlemen have not thought proper to bring them down. They bring down the condensed balances, from which you cannot extract the true state of the question, and they decline to give up the detailed balances which would enable us to obtain some idea, even without the books, as to the state of the expenditure. Even as to the road, there are enormous expenditures proposed; there is a statement of a very large expenditure between Callander and Port Arthur; a large expenditure for snow sheds; $910,000, or thereabouts, at Coal Harbor; in the works at Montreal, $1,500,000, and large sums elsewhere; and on none of these has there been a single report. Neither the engineer nor the Minister has reported on one of them; and no evidence has been furnished to this House, even as to the propriety of one of these expenditures, at all. Even the form of an investigation has not been gone through, still less the substance. So far from that, when we met here, the Speech from the Throne contained no reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I called attention to this at once, and the First Minister said that the Speech contained no reference to the railway because it was not the intention of the Government to invite this House to legislate concerning the railway this Session. Another time I enquired whether he was going to bring down anything. He said it was not the present intention, and so forth. Then, had there been any negotiations? There had been no correspondence—there had been verbal conversations, which he did not care to mention. Then comes the letter of Mr. Stephen, on the 18th of March; and then long negotiations with the company, stretching from that time till about the end of April, about six weeks; and then, at the end of April, come down these resolutions. Well, Sir, it is clear that if it was plain and obvious and reasonable, and in the public interest that these resolutions should be made, that the Government hesitated very much indeed about bringing them down. It is clear that the company were at their heels before Parliament met; it is clear that they have been dogging them ever since; it is clear that the Government having failed to come to any agreement to bring down any measure of relief, the company put their proposition on paper on the 18th of March; it is clear that the Government did not think that a proposition that they could reasonably ask Parliament to assent to. And they took six weeks more before they made up their minds to bring down any proposition at all. It is very clear, therefore, that in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite this was a matter involving very serious considerations. We met on the 29th of January, and it was not until the close of the normal period of the Session, when we ought to have been proroguing, that they brought down a measure for the Canadian Pacific Railway, although the subject had been under consideration from a time anterior to the commencement of the Session. Why this hesitation and difficulty about these negotiations? Why this pressure on one side and this resistance on the other, if the matter was so clear and straight and obvious—if hon. gentlemen opposite would have been so plainly recreant to their duty if they had neglected to bring down the measure at all? It is therefore very plain that hon. gentlemen opposite felt that they were in a painful position—a position of great difficulty and doubt as to whether they should bring down any measure at all. But other efforts were made to get information. I, myself, a little misdoubted the Government's power of resistance. I knew, of course, it would take a great deal of pressure, after what had happened in 1881, and after what had happened in 1884, before they came down, but I always was inclined to believe that the pressure would be applied, and that to it they would ultimately yield. I felt, it therefore, very important to attempt to be prepared and that this House should be prepared, with full information with reference to the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway, financially, and as to the earnings and working expenses of the road, and as to construction, and as to estimates from the period of the last loan; and very early in the Session I moved a series of motions on that subject, almost all of them being motions which were based on information given and thought proper to be given on the occasion of the last loan, or information given under Addresses granted by this House. The House unanimously adopted these motions; and by the unanimous consent of the Commons House of Parliament, it was indicated to His Excellency that it was in the public interest this information ought to be obtained. This information should be obtained. I shall not now, having a large area of ground to travel over, go over the several Addresses which, at a very early period of the Session, have been passed, asking for this information; but I will say this, that it was the duty of the Government to have pointed out to the Canadian Pacific Railway that if that company expected the Parliament of Canada to grant their application for aid they must comply with the demands of Parliament for information as to the operations of the company, and to have declined to bring forward measures for aid, unaccompanied by that information which Parliament unanimously decided it was in the public interest should be obtained. That information is a most important element. As to the working of the road, as to what has been done with the public money and with the resources of the country, as to the results of operations, as to the expenditure and the fate of large sums of more or less questionable character which were in the accounts of last year—for example, the $600,000 alleged to be due by the Northern American Contracting Company to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other sums—you find no information given at all, and a few of the less important papers are placed on the Table to-day, five minutes before this debate commences, by the Minister of Railways. Almost as a mockery, he says, I will give the papers just about when I am about to make the motion. I have not been able, of course, to investigate these papers; but, on glancing over them, I find they are not so full as they ought to be, and are not the papers of importance the House desires to possess. I ask, why should not these papers have been prepared by the company earlier, because they were asked for three or four months ago, many of them early in February last, why should they not have been brought down here in time for us to examine them in such a way that we might intelligently proceed to a discussion of the question. I say that the accounts of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as they are submitted to Parliament and the public, are in a shape so condensed and contain figures that vary so that it is difficult in the slightest degree to analyse them. I think, that when information which would throw some light on this grant is asked for by Parliament, the company, which is demanding Parliament for further assistance, ought to comply with the demand of Parliament. Full information is a condition precedent to our acting. We are not, to use a vulgar phrase, to go it blind; we ought to get the information before being asked to vote the money. The Acting Minister of Railways, at an earlier period of the Session, also made a speech on this subject. He pointed out that he had visited the country, that he had gone over the railway, and he spoke in terms of enthusiasm of the railway itself, and of the Syndicate, and of the scenery of the Rocky Mountains. I was delighted to hear him, ordinarily some what unimpassioned, cool, and calculating, so exhilarated by that mountain air and those glorious prospects, that he indulged in these unwonted expressions of joy, and in such an appreciation of the picturesque. His railway journey reminded me a little of another railway journey that is memorialised in verse by Mr. Leland, and which I will take the liberty of paraphrasing:

Mr. BLAKE.

"John Henry went to Shtephen;
He drafel fast und far.
He rided shoost drei thousand miles
All in von rail-roat car.
He knowed foost rate how far he goed—
He gounted all de vile,
Dere vash shoost von bottle of champagne,
Dat bopped at efery mile."

I have no doubt, in the hon. gentleman's case, it was Apollinaris water and not champagne, but that would not suit the metre, and so I am obliged to use the ordinary liquor. The hon. gentleman went in a railway car, as several of his colleagues have done, without seeing very much of the railway, and he declares that the company has done more than they agreed; but after all what they have done and propose to do is what is necessary in order to have a good road. If there be one thing more than another which, at the time of the contract, and since, has been impressed upon our mind, it is that the road was to be a first-class road. We objected to the standard of the Union Pacific, as the Government put it in the contract, because it was a very imperfect standard. "Oh, well," they said, "there is no use to talk about that, because the company is certain to build a first-class road in every way; it is in their own interest to do so." "Why then," we asked, "put in any standard?" "We must," they said, "put in some standard." We urged that they should not put in a low standard, and they actually got a letter from the contractors to say that they consented to the standard of the Union Pacific, as it was at the time of the completion of the road in or about 1873, and not as it was at an earlier period; in fact, as it was when they had got it up to something like a first-class standard. Then, and every year since, whenever the Pacific Railway was touched, we were told that the road the company agreed to build was no mean, shabby, colonisation road, but a first-class railway; that the standard was a high standard, and that they were building a road as good or better than the standard. Now, the hon. gentleman says they have done more than they agreed to do; but what they have done it was necessary they should do in order to make the road a good one. Did they not agree to do all that was necessary in order to make the road a first-class one? Was it not to be a first-class road? If they are indulging in fancy expenditure more than is necessary for a good road, I do not see why we should furnish them with the money. By the agreement they are bound to do all that is necessary to have a first-class road. That was the interpretation of the contract forced upon us by hon. gentlemen opposite, and that is what we have a right to expect. The hon. gentleman said we owed a great deal to the company. I thought, until he told us so, that it was the other way—that the company owed $30,000,000 to us. But he said we owed them a great deal; and I suppose by these resolutions we are to pay them what we owe. His colleague joined, in a minor strain, in the same harmonious chorus. He said we owed a tribute to Mr. Stephen, and he proceeded to pay Mr. Stephen an oratorical tribute. I have no objection to his paying Mr. Stephen as many oratorical tributes as he pleases. No doubt Mr. Stephen deserves them, and I would be the last to say a word reflecting upon his title to the tribute; but while the hon. gentleman may pay his magnificent oratorical tributes to Mr. Stephen—and I am quite willing to give cordial assent to almost any tribute of that kind he may pay—I am opposed to the proposition to add to the oratorical tribute this other kind of tribute mentioned in the resolution. That is the sort of tribute people object to. They do not object to speeches lauding public men, but they do object to the hon. gentleman saying we owe the president a tribute, and moving a resolution declaring that we pay the company cash. We owe tribute to the president, therefore let us vote the money. It really becomes serious. I would like to know when we shall have done paying tribute to the company in the shape of money. I did suppose we had entered into a business transaction, in which we had given a particular price for the accomplishment of a particular object, and that there was no obligation on either side, except the obligation on our side to do our part as contracted, and on theirs to do theirs as contracted. Then the hon. gentleman said that they did a great deal more work than they were required to do, and they did this at this time, because they could do the work cheaper while the main work was going on; and he declared, in another part of his speech, or his colleague did, that the statements about extravagant expenditure due to haste were entirely erroneous. I can hardly think that either of these gentlemen have read the papers which have been laid upon the Table on this subject. Will you believe it, Sir, that these hon. gentlemen, who declare that it was cheaper to do more work than the company were doing at the time, while they were pressing on construction, these hon. gentleman who declare that no increased cost was produced by speed, have laid upon the Table of this House papers with reference to the work through the Kicking Horse Pass, which are to the following effect: Mr. Van Horne declares, on behalf of the company, that in the estimate which the company made, with reference to the sum required to complete the railway last year, on the occasion of the loan, he included a sum for a temporary line round a portion of the Kicking Horse Pass, as well as for a permanent line at that part. I will not pledge myself to absolute accuracy, but my recollection is that the figure for the permanent line was $960,000, and the estimate for the temporary line a trifle over $400,000. Mr. Van Horne declares that he made that double estimate because it had been his intention to build the temporary line first and then the permanent line almost immediately afterwards, within the period prescribed, by September, the temporary line to be built in order to get on with the operations beyond. He then proposes, in this letter to the Government, to get permission to postpone the construction, for some years, of the permanent line, for reasons to which I will allude a little further on, and he says: If you will allow me to do so, it will be a positive saving, because, by taking time and by using the ties and rails in the temporary line, I can build the permanent line for so much less that it will save actually the amount of the cost of the temporary line; the price of labor is so high, and it costs us so much more to do the work quickly within the specified time, that we will save the whole cost of the temporary line we are going to construct if you will allow us to postpone the permanent line; it will cost us 50 per cent. more to build that $960,000 of work within this time we have stipulated for than it will if you allow us some further time to do it. The report of the chief engineer of the Government is that his opinion is, and that he himself estimated for that twelve or thirteen miles of permanent line, about $960,000, and that in that estimate he added 50 per cent. to the cost, in consequence of the speed of construction, and that he believed it will cost no more than, I think, some $630,000 or $640,000—as I said, I will not profess to be accurate to a few thousand dollars—if time is given for the construction of this permanent line, being less by 33½ per cent. than he had estimated, when he added 50 per cent. to the cost of comparatively leisurely construction for expeditious construction. Now, there are the papers on the Table of this House proving how much extra it has cost to build this line at the speed at which it was built, and with these papers and the company's statement, and the Government engineer's statement, brought down by hon. gentlemen opposite, they ask us to vindicate this extra expenditure as a prudent expenditure, because it could be done cheaper now, while they were straining every nerve, hiring every available man, and raising the price of labor, than it could be done later on! How are we to take it? I have the statement of the vice-president of the company and of the Government engineer as to its costing 50 per cent. more in this particular part to build this railway with speed. I have the statement of the Acting Minister of Railways, that it is cheaper to do the work in a hurry than it is to do it with more time. Which am I to believe? Then the hon. gentleman said—and he came there to a very tender point—that we had no right to anticipate the necessity for these works last year. He said that was the difficulty, and there we get back to the allegations of last year. We find that last year the statement was made as to the plan upon which this company was to construct the road. We find last year that their plans were made for completion. We know that they were plans for a first-class road. We know that they were plans involving large expenditures. We know that they contemplated the construction of elevators and of great works, and we were told last year that the subsidy, the aid that we were giving was ample to complete the road. The contract is to complete the road. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the contract will be completed in September. I deny it. I say our contract will not be complete in September. Our contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was to have a completed road. They will have the iron down by September, but they themselves say they are not going to open the road for business till the spring following. Why are they not? Why in the world are you not going to open the road and to reap all the profits which are to accrue the moment the road is opened? What means this insanity, of keeping a road some thousands of miles long closed to traffic some months after it is completed? Open your doors, run your trains, take your freight trains across, from one side of the continent to the other, and reap your dividends. Oh, no, they say; we are not going to begin till the spring of 1886. And why? Because the road is not going to be completed till the spring of 1886, because all that is going to be done is to get a pair of rails from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Of course, there are parts of the road, and considerable parts of the road, which are completed; but according to the confession of the company, the entire road will not be completed till next year. They say, forsooth, that the contract is completed. They say that all they have agreed to do will be completed by September. I say our contract was to have a road quite complete, a road fit to carry traffic, a road in such a condition that the traffic could be carried over it, a road to be opened, and then, from the time of opening, the agreement as to maintenance went on. They say: We will have completed the contract in September, but the road will not be so far finished that we can open it up for traffic. No, it will not be completed; else, I presume, they would open it for traffic; but in many respects, even if it were open for traffic, it would not be complete, in the proper sense of the term. I observe that an eminent engineer, who was for many years connected with this road, and is now a director of it, Mr. Sandford Fleming, after passing over a portion of the road the other day, sent a telegram, in which he stated—I cannot remember the exact words—that either a large quantity or a considerable quantity of work remained to be done, but it was of the simplest character. Well, we know that a large quantity remains to be done between Callander and Port Arthur, because a great portion of the places that have to be crossed are crossed by trestles, not only small rivers, but ravines and depressions in the ground of various kinds, are crossed by trestles. Of course, these trestles are intended to be filled up with earth, and I presume the simple kind of work Mr. Fleming speaks of refers to that. Now, I do not care whether the work is simple or complicated; what is important to consider is, that there is a large quantity of work remaining to be done, and that is the statement in this very telegram. The circumstance to which I have just alluded, and the other circumstance, of the road not being intended to be opened for business to the Pacific until the spring of 1886, are sufficient indications that we are not getting a completed road. The hon. gentleman says we are getting all we really bargained for, because the road is completed within the meaning of the contract. But it is not completed so as to be fit for use; it is not completed so as to be serviceable for the purpose for which we wanted it; for that purpose you have got to pay more money. The statements which are made upon this subject, and also with reference to the effect and consequence of this loan, are material in considering our present condition. Sir Charles Tupper said:

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. BLACK.

“They are in a position to say to the Government, we can fall back upon our contract; we can disband our force of 9,000 men now operating near Lake Superior; we can draw in our engine, and by 1st May, 1891, we shall be able, to sell land enough to provide with the net revenue for operating all that we require.

“We shall have the means of completing our contract; but if you want that great work completed by the end of 1885, we ask you not to give us an additional dollar, but to advance to us, as the work proceeds, the amount of $22,500,000 for that purpose. I have told the House, in the first place, that they do not ask an additional dollar of subvention for the purpose of completing the contract they have made with the Government.

“I have told the House the company have the strongest confidence in the value of the subvention already given; that with the amount that can be obtained from the outside public and that has been obtained from the outside public, they have the means of completing their contract. But while they do not ask the House to give them a single additional dollar, they ask us to use the credit of this country which, thanks to the management of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, never stood in a higher position, to obtain the means of accomplishing this great national work by the end of 1885, and that without imposing the slightest shadow of a shade of additional burden upon the Government or upon the country for the repayment of every dollar by the time the contract was to be completed, the 1st May, 1891."

First of all, then, Sir Charles Tupper declared that the contract was to be completed and the road was to be completed, and now we are told that the contract is completed but the road is not completed. Then, Sir Charles Tupper says: "You are to do this without imposing the slightest shade of a shadow of additional burden upon the Government or upon the country for the repayment of every dollar by the time the contract is to be completed, the 1st of May, 1891." I wonder to what date the new loan, now under negotiation in London, is to run; I wonder for how many years the Minister of Finance is asking the public to loan us the $30,000,000 which we authorised him to borrow the other day. Is it a short loan, to mature in 1891, so that he may not be embarrassed, as he stated a while ago he would be embarrassed, by the circumstance of getting so much money from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by 1891? I wonder whether it is a short loan of that kind that the Minister of Finance is now making, or whether he has abandoned those golden dreams which, so late as the Budget Speech, haunted him, of receiving from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $30,000,000 by 1891, and earlier. Perhaps some hon. gentleman—perhaps the Minister of Customs—who knows the date of that loan, would relieve our minds, and would tell us whether it is a short six years' loan, that the Government may use until they get the $30,000,000 from the Canadian Pacific Railway, in 1891. I am afraid that they have abandoned that hope; I am afraid they have decided it will be a good many more years before they get back their money. I am afraid that there now exists more than the slightest shadow of a shade of an additional burden upon the Government or upon the country, for the repayment of every dollar by the time the contract was to be completed, the 1st of May, 1891. You know that already, in consequence of this loan, we deferred negotiations for the exchange of 5 per cent's. for 4 per cent's. for six months, because the Minister, having to provide a large sum of money for the Canadian Pacific Railway, felt that he could not call in the old loan. You know that we lost the interest, being the difference between 5's and 4's for the half-year, and have been making various other short loans in order to pay this Canadian Pacific Railway; we have been making various other loans at some pretty fair rates of interest for them, too. The hon. the First Minister sometimes says that a little bird told him something. Well, Sir, a little bird told me something, it told me that 5½ per cent. has been paid for a portion of this money borrowed for a certain time from some of the banks. Well, when we are borrowing money from the banks in order to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when we have got to give our Exchequer bills for other money; when we are told now, as we are in effect told, by the silence of the Ministers, that the expectation of getting the loan in 1891 is abandoned, and that we have to make a long loan instead of a short loan, it is evident that the words of Sir Charles Tupper, which I have read, have hardly been verified. Then, says Sir Charles Tupper:

"I do not rest these resolutions for a single moment on the low ground of any claim that these gentlemen (the Canadian Pacific Railway Company) have. They have no claim. They made a contract, and they received, by the terms of that contract, a magnificent subvention for the work, great as it was, that they were undertaking to deal with; and they have, no doubt, prospective profits of a large character before them. I do not ask, for a moment, that these resolutions shall receive the consideration of this House on any such claim."

At that time, also, it was as a business operation this was treated, though now, it seems, there is an attempt to treat it on some other and so-called higher ground. Now, the Acting Minister of Railways declared that our security was actually improved by this operation—it was not a loan unimpaired; that would not satisfy the Minister; he wants to improve our position, and so he improves it by this operation. Why? Because the money had been put into the work. But it was contracted that the money should be put into the work. That was the security on which the old loan was made. It was upon the express agreement that the money should go into the work. It has gone there, and the money is going to stay in the work. To tell us that our position is improved by the money going into the work seems to be perfectly absurd. The hon. gentleman says that thirty-five millions of stock was to go into the work. I deny it. The whole theory of the arrangement of last year was that the stock was not saleable. The Government took it, and said: We take power to sell it, if we think it rises to a price at which it should be sold, and we take power to use the proceeds at our discretion, either in payment of the debt or for the purposes of the company. The company could not have disposed of the stock, because the Act of Parliament gave the Government the discretion to say when it should be sold, and whether the proceeds should be applied towards payment of the debt or not. The Minister of Railways, who was presiding over the measure, proclaimed that it was to be so applied; that the amount was to be used as a means of repaying the loan. But the hon. gentleman said, what are we doing? We are making another arrangement in respect of $35,000,000. This new arrangement, about $35,000,000, is an arrangement of an entirely different character. If the money had been realised from the stock and had gone into the work below our security, and the stockholders had no special claim, our mortgage would be improved by the value produced by the amount that went into the work. But if we gave power to the company to place, say, $15,000,000 on a par with ourselves, and that sum goes into the work, we occupy a different position. Let the Minister of Railways, as a first mortgagee of a farm, consider a mortgage transaction, and see what is the situation supposing a second mortgage is put on after the first, for improvements on the mortgaged property. He then would be in a very good position, because he would be able to cut out the second mortgage, and his property would be made more valuable. But suppose the mortgagor came to the Acting Minister of Railways, his first mortgagee, and said: Mr. Pope, I want to improve the property, and for that purpose to put a mortgage on it, which will stand in the same position as your mortgage; in fact, I want to have a joint mortgage. I think the Minister of Railways would be acute enough to see that he would be placed in a different position; that his position, although the money went into the property, would not be quite so good as if it had been placed there under a second mortgage. So with respect to the stock. Then, the hon. gentleman declares that this arrangement will give satisfaction. He makes a statement with respect to the Government work, and admits an error in the calculation of a million and a-half. He excuses the error by saying it is due to the deterioration, the wear and tear, that resulted during the six or seven years since the road was constructed. Was that not known last winter? Did not the Government, which had charge of the road, know its condition? Were they not aware of what was necessary to put it into proper order? Is it only this Session that it is known that ties and rails wear out and the roadbed gets into a bad condition? Last winter we were told emphatically that twenty-eight millions was the cost of the Government work. It is strange, indeed, that they were not in a position, last Session, to say that this large sum would be required. I remember there were loud boasts made, when this Government came in, as to the savings on this section. They said they had cut down the amounts very low; but it has since turned out that they have increased the expenditure. The hon. gentlemen who have brought this measure forward have submitted a statement by Mr. Stephen, which is the foundation of the measure. Mr. Stephen's letter contained a proposal on his part as to what the Government, in his opinion, ought to do for the company, and what the company would do if their wishes were complied with. The Government declined to accede to Mr. Stephen's proposal. I enquired whether, under the arrangements made for the altered proposals, the company had agreed to perform those things which they said in their letter they would perform, provided their own proposals were acceded to. And I could not get a satisfactory answer. I got it yesterday. It came in the report of the company, at their annual meeting. They think they have been rather hardly used by the Government. Mr. Stephen's letter will show the House that last Session the company remonstrated earnestly but ineffectually against the harshness of the Government, and pointed out the bad results that would flow from that harshness. The company says :

Mr. BLAKE,

"The company, it will be remembered, at the time of the passage of the Act, earnestly, but ineffectually, remonstrated against the severity of the conditions on which the loan was granted, especially pointing out the damaging effect on the future credit of the company of the stringent and apparently inequitable character of the remedy taken by the Government, in the event of default by the company, and their apprehensions in these respects have been fully realised."

You will see, though we were not told it last year, that we were held to be harsh creditors, dealing with a reluctant debtor, and that we were going to injure the company by the severe terms imposed. They appear to be very good terms. The company, however, it seems, remonstrated against the Government lending them thirty millions, part at 5 and part at 4 per cent., and taking over the road if the company fail to pay back the money. We find now that the Government, on default being made, would not have taken over the road. We find that it was all a farce and a deception, and that it was useless to append that condition to the loan. I believe in making a bargain in plain terms, which will be carried out, and that a contract should express what is really intended. Hon. gentlemen opposite have told the House and the country that the arrangement with the company meant one thing, while they had a personal understanding with the company that it should mean something entirely different, something much less; that, if it became necessary to take over the road, the stockholders were to be dealt with on reasonable terms. Such is the statement of the Secretary of State, who then, as now, was a member of the Administration. If that be so, it is a most extraordinary commentary on the decision of Parliament, on the speeches made and the representations given to the country at that time. But we see the fatal effect. Mr. Stephen comes forward and says that if the Government grant the terms he asks the company will be enabled to complete the whole railway, to build the line to Coal Harbor, to construct the terminal works at the various points, to provide additional equipment, to build elevators and to pay off the floating debt, and so on; and then, after this is done, he says :

"It would then be in a position to proceed, 1st, with the much wanted extension of the Manitoba South-Western Railway; 2nd, with the completion of the line to Sault Ste. Marie; 3rd, to secure, in some way, a connection with the city and harbor of Quebec; 4th, with reasonable aid from the Government, to extend the Canadian Pacific system to the ocean-ports of the Maritime Provinces; 5th, it would also be in a position to aid indirectly in securing the early completion of its Ontario division to the Detroit River, and at the same time removing for ever all necessity for any further application to the Government for assistance on the part of the company."

These seven things he speaks of, showing that we have not removed that necessity by the last Act, though we were told so, and unless we grant this condition we do not remove that necessity, yet I find that in the report of the company, as it now stands, they say :

"This measure does not afford means for so complete and advantageous an arrangement of the company's affairs as would have been obtained under the conditions suggested in the president's letter of the 18th March last."

They go on to say :

"But the company is being pressed in several quarters for extensions and additional facilities beyond its main line, some of which it desires to provide; and although the directors hope that the measure proposed may also enable them to meet the more important of these requirements, it remains to be seen how far the Government measure, in reducing so largely the relief the company requested, may not restrict its power of providing for the extensions of its connections which the company and the public, and, it is believed, the Government, also, so desired to see carried out; any may not also interfere with the intention and wish of the company to anticipate the period of the repayment of the Government loan."

There you see, Sir, the direct statement, very pointed, that it is not expected to be within their power to carry out these various things which they proposed to carry out, which they pledged themselves to carry out, if they got their own terms. So we have not now the assurance that the conditions of Mr. Stephen's letter will be fulfilled; but, on the contrary, we have a fair and frank statement, which it does him credit to have made, that those terms are inadequate to produce such results. In that point of view, I think we have important considerations presented to us. It does seem to me that it is necessary for us to know what this arrangement will accomplish. Sir, we have been asked to assist this company once and again, and now for the third time—to make the contract first, to assist secondly, and now to assist again. And we want to know distinctly what is going to be accomplished. Is this to be the last time of calling? How much is the deficiency? What changes are to be made? What additional expenses incurred, in order that these things shall really be done; else this will not be the last time of asking, and we must expect to be called upon again? The hon. gentleman dealt, in this portion of his speech, with the question of the route of the road, and he gave us some statements as to the route, and some comparative statements with reference to this road, and the other Pacific roads which demand some attention at my hands. I did not intend to say much upon that topic, nor, indeed, had I intended to touch to any great extent upon the topics which have occupied me up to this time, but the unusual course which was pursued, in making two speeches, and dealing with all phases of this question, from the earliest period to the end, of course rendered it necessary that an answer should be made at the earliest practicable moment, and as fully as it could be by one individual, with such disadvantages as one individual labors under in speaking at this hour in the night, and after the House has been sitting nearly 12 hours. But those statements demand from me, and they shall receive, reply. I have not been able to agree to the wisdom of the change in the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have never been able to see that it was dictated by a wise appreciation of all the facts, properly collected, before the decision was arrived at. I maintain that the decision was arrived at and acted on by the company, long before they had found the route through the Kicking Horse Pass. I maintain that they, having determined to risk the Kicking Horse Pass route, have in the end, persuaded the Government, during the absence of Sir Charles Tupper, and while the hon. gentleman who is now acting was acting as Minister, to agree to a modification of his former policy. Mr. Speaker, it has just been intimated to me that the Government is willing to consent to an adjournment. I am sorry to ask it, but as I am answering two speeches late at night, it would be a convenience to me, as I have a good deal to say yet in reply to them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was intimated just now that the hon. gentleman was about one-half through his speech, and that he was desirous of an adjournment. Under these circumstances, perhaps he will move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. BLAKE moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12:20 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 17th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the consideration of the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) 'An Act further to amend 'The Canada Temperance Act, 1878,' and 'The Liquor License Act, 1883,' be made the first Order for Thursday after Routine Proceedings.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on Mr. Pope's proposed motion, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. BLAKE. When the House adjourned last night, I was adverting to the question of the route of the railway, upon which something requires to be said, not merely in consequence of the intrinsic importance of the question, but also because reference has been made to it by hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with the other important question of grades, curves and alignment of the road. I pointed out that I had not been able to assent to the views that it was a prudent thing to change the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman, the Secretary of State, declared—as I showed from the language of Sir Charles Tupper last night, erroneously—that the surveys which had been made under the auspices of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) had been entirely useless. I admit a portion of these was less useful than it would have been had the route adopted by both Governments, that by the Yellow Head Pass, been fortunately retained. It is to be remembered that the present Government, as well as the Government of my hon. friend, formally adopted that route which these surveys led them to conclude was the proper route; and it was not until after the enterprise had been placed in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the present Government agreed to a change of route. That change was dictated by considerations which did not give due attention to the topographical features of the country through which the road was to pass. I make that statement without hesitation, because the public papers prove that there had been no ascertainment of a real practicable route when the company began to press upon the Government to accede to their determination to go south. I believe the company speculated on the possibility of a route being found through the Rockies, the Selkirk and the Gold ranges, and that they were anxious to secure a southern route through the prairies for two reasons. First, because it was known to be an easier line, one requiring no considerable bridges, requiring none, in fact, of importance except one across the Saskatchewan and a much less expensive one across the Assiniboine, thus being a better railway country, in that respect, than the other line, and therefore affording cheaper construction. Secondly, and perhaps a more important object to them, because they believed it would enable them more effectually to control and dominate the traffic of the North-West. The nearer they got the main line to the international boundary, the less danger there would be for them of pressure for the construction of a line south of their line. These were the points of view of the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway which led to this conclusion. They built their line through a country which is not equal to the territory of the central route. I point to the fact that the statement made by the First Minister is before the House, which shows that not a single homestead has been taken up between the 3rd and 4th meridian on the 48 mile belt, and between the 4th and 5th meridian only 23 homesteads have been taken up, thus giving a total of 23 homesteads on more than 400 miles of railway, stretching between a point close to Moose Jaw and a point close to Calgary. I point to that fact as one of great consequence and importance. I point also to the second fact, that between the 3rd and 4th meridian, the company has accepted 524,100 acres, while in that same area between the 3rd and 4th meridians it has assumed to reject 126,720 acres, or about one-fourth the area accepted. That figure is also of great consequence. I do not believe there is any serious dispute as to the proposition that the territory is in fact inferior. I observe that in the speech of Sir Richard Temple, made in Winnipeg, in September, 1884, he used these expressions on this subject:

Mr. BLAKE.

"They were anxious to impress the consideration that the Canadian Pacific Railway was only the beginning of the vast railway system, nothing more or less than the main artery from which must branch out many veins, the backbone of the body politic, the limbs, arms, toes and fingers yet to come.

"The Canadian Pacific Railway runs through a rich country no doubt, but still not the richest, the richest country was far to the north, and to that country branches must extend. Critics said that the main line ought to have been taken farther north, but no doubt the wisest course has been followed, because the main trunk runs nearly as straight as an arrow from ocean to ocean.

"The remaining work of constructing branches was what ought to be called the crying want of the North-West.

"They had heard many remarks from many farmers to the effect that branch railways were wanting towards the south from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway so as to make connection with the railways advancing upwards from the United States.

"The great and pressing importance of these matters should receive consideration."

Now, this gentleman voiced, I suppose, the general information of those whom he had met in the extended tour which he and his confreres of the British Association took through the North-West, and gives them as the impression of the people of the country with reference to the relative quality of land on each route, and also as to the necessity of branch lines southward as well as northward. He also points to the wisdom, in his view, of building a straight line, but we know that, in railway construction, it is not always the straightest that is the shortest line. The question of curves and the question of grades tend materially to determine the practical shortness of a line of railway. There is also the question of the comparative character of the climatic conditions of the two passes. In the Yellow Head Pass, as is found by the reports of the engineers who visited that region for a long time, who traversed it frequently, and also by the reports of explorers and travellers for many years through that country, there are no traces of avalanches or snowslides. But, both on the Rockies and on the Selkirks, and perhaps on the Gold Range, at the crossings of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the case is entirely different. If you refer to the papers laid on the Table, you will find that Mr. Vice-President and General Manager Van Horne applies, I think in the month of September last, to be allowed to make permanent for some years the temporary line round a portion of the main proposed line in the Kicking Horse Pass, and the reason why he proposes to make that line permanent for some years—a line with gradients of 237 feet to the mile and with very severe curvature—is, as he declares, that there are several boulder slides along the main located line, and there is one avalanche or snowslide moving from a glacier high up in Mount Stephen, that the engineers have been observing the movement of these boulder slides and this snowslide for a considerable time past, but that they have not been able to decide what would be the proper route in order to avoid the dangers and difficulties arising from them, and that several years, I think, is the phrase, but at any rate a very considerable time of observation will be necessary in order to establish the proper permanent route across the Kicking Horse Pass; and therefore, says Mr. Van Horne, I ask your approval of our opening the road and working it for some years to come with the temporary line we have built to facilitate construction. He proceeds to point out, rather in contrast to the glowing terms which we hear as to the great traffic that is to go over the road from China and Japan, and to China and Japan, that the severe grades to which I have referred, the grade of 237 to the mile, the severe combined grades and curves, are of less consequence there because the traffic will be comparatively light for some years to come, and will not compare at all with the traffic in the prairie country. So I find a complete proof, from the application of the president of the company and the assent of the Government to that application thus formally made, agreeing in the force and strength of his reasoning, and determining that for some years the temporary line is to be used, in order that they may see what the permanent location should be; that there are difficulties in the Kicking Horse Pass which do not exist in the Yellow Head. Then I come to the question of the Selkirks, close to the Illecillewaet Creek, which descends from a point close to the crossing of the Selkirks, going westwards towards the Pacific Ocean, and I find that, in answer to a question put by me early in the Session, the Minister of Railways declared that they had no reports upon the subject of snowslides in that region at all, but that the engineers had been ordered to observe. Later on, in answer to a question put by me, on information I had received from the west, he declared that the company had made an application to change the location they had already made at that point, and to make a new location, because the location which they had adopted was an impracticable location. Why? In consequence of the snowslides there. And the other day I applied to know whether the new location had been laid before the Government for approval, and the hon. gentleman said it had not yet been laid before the Government for approval. But in his former statement he had said the proposal was to adopt a location which would lengthen the line some  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles. The Government, then, has not yet got a practicable location across the Selkirk Range, the company has not yet got a practicable location across the Selkirk Range, because unquestionably, if the company was in a position to submit the profiles and plans and the requisite information for that practicable location, having long ago informed the hon. gentleman that they could not use the location which they had adopted and which he had approved, and would be obliged to resort to a new one and having given some general information upon it, they would have submitted the new location and the evidence. But the hon. gentleman has not yet submitted any evidence upon the subject of the snowslides. Now, this is a most material and important question. You find, at the two great crossings which are involved in the change of route, if there be not three, if the Gold Hills be not considered a third, the question of boulder slides and snowslides or avalanches assuming great and disagreeable prominence, and you find us actually to-day without information in the hands of the Government or in the hands of the House that there is a really safe, practicable location across these mountains. The hon. gentleman has received, or at any rate has brought before the House, no evidence as to what the condition of things has been in reference to the snowslides on the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Selkirks; but I have found some information which has been accessible to the public, and I read it to the House in order that we may understand if it is not possible to obtain some authentic official information upon a question so critical and important as this is; and I beg the House to observe that by the course which has been taken, in determining the location through the North-West before these important, crucial questions of the crossings of the Selkirks and the Rockies had been decided, by sufficient length of time in exploration, by sufficient length of time in observing the climatic difficulties, we were plunged into that particular route and pledged to that particular crossing. I say that was an act of great imprudence for which the Government is responsible. Long ago difficulties had been stated by the aboriginal inhabitants to exist in that part of the country. Of this very place, in 1865, Mr. Moberly, an engineer, said:

"I tried to induce the Indians to accompany me all the way across the Selkirk Range."

In another passage:

"All my efforts were unavailing, as they affirmed that, if we went in, we should be caught in the snow and never get out of the mountains."

In another passage:

"We soon found ourselves 500 feet below the summit. The adjoining mountains are steep, and tracks of avalanches are frequent."

The Calgary Herald of the 19th February last contains this statement:

"Corporal McDonald left the second crossing of the Columbia on February 8th, and rode for 30 miles east up the west slope of the Selkirk Range. Having gone thus far, he found himself 14 or 15 miles from the summit, and unable to proceed further unless on foot, and that with difficulty. The reason Corporal McDonald was unable to ride that stretch of mountain road was that from where he had dismounted, straight up to the summit, the pass was one mass of avalanches, and snowslides, and fallen glaciers. The snowslides were solid packs of ice, and were sometimes 50 feet in thickness. Muir's men, under the direction of Foreman Garner, were hard at work cleaning the Toro road, which had been a chief sufferer by the slides. On February 8th, the day McDonald left the second crossing, a slide had occurred six miles west of the summit, at McKenzie's camp, and a man named Robert Miller had been killed by it. Miller was the cook of the camp. On the same day another slide occurred four miles on the west of the summit, at Ross McDermott's camp. In this slide three men were buried alive, and have not since been seen. One of these men was known to be Dulac, a Frenchman. When the slide occurred the Frenchman and two others were known to have been overwhelmed by it, and none of the three were subsequently seen alive. A third slide occurred at the summit of the range where Hill's store was. There were a number of men in the store at the time. Luckily only the skirts of the avalanche swept the store, the consequence being that only the west corner was buried and the men succeeded in escaping through the windows east of the Selkirks. It took McDonald a day and a half to reach the summit of the Selkirks. Arrived there he got a horse from the detachment stationed there and rode to Beaver Creek, a distance of 28 miles or 30 miles. The eastern slope of the Selkirks was free from the slides, and was a more favorite resort for the workmen on the road than the western slope. In fact, the men at work on the west slope were quitting work on account of the dangers. They evidently had the same opinion as Mr. Moberly's Indian, "That if they went in they would be caught in the snow and never get out of the mountains, in fact the road from the summit of the Selkirks west beyond the second crossing in the Gold Range, was having a hard time of it. In the Gold Range the road had been overflowed by a slide and Wright's teams were all blocked out."

Then I find in the Moosomin Courier, of March 12th, 1885, this statement:

"Mr. Bowen found the chief topic of conversation at the Creek was the abnormal amount of snowslides obstructing work. The workmen on the road seem panic-stricken, and many of them are refusing to work on account of the danger, others are striking for higher wages, the demand being for $3.50 per day. The slides seem to occur chiefly on the west slope of the Selkirks and on the east slope of the Gold Range. Some, however, have taken place on the east slope of the Selkirks, in one of which Holt, the contractor, had $65,000 worth of supplies swept away about a fortnight ago. Monday it was recovered, however, the loss amounting finally to about $10,000. Hill's store at the summit of the Selkirks was also swept away. West of the summit the road is blocked with the snow, the slides occurring nearly every day. Wright, the contractor, whose men are working on the east slope of the Gold Range, is now getting his supplies from Beaver Creek, the road to Kamloops being completely blocked. So far there are six men known to have perished in these slides, but there are others whose names have not been ascertained, who also got buried in them. There was a rumor among the men that the line of route was being slightly changed on account of the dangers from avalanches. Instead of seeking the centre of the passes the road was being led along the mountain side, the rock being scooped out to afford more shelter to the passing trains."

Now, Sir, that is the statement of the newspapers as to the condition of things. I should have been glad if the hon. gentleman had given us an authentic statement from the reports of the Government's and the company's engineers and from the contractors, of what the state of things is. I think it was his duty to have done so. I think that Parliament has a right to be informed as to the results of the operations, as to what the results has been with reference to the climatic difficulties on the route which was chosen without those precautions and explorations, which should have been insisted on before the Government allowed themselves to be committed to it at the solicitation of the company. In the same connection I may advert to the circumstances that we now find in the papers on the Table an estimate for a further large sum of money for snowsheds, not merely on the north shore of Lake Superior, but the largest part in the Pacific region. Now this was either considered as an essential for this road originally or it was not. If it was considered as an essential originally and was included in the estimates of last year, it is embraced in the money that is voted to finish the road; but, if it was not considered a necessity then, it has become a necessity on account of these subsequent developments, and, therefore, you have additional proof from the company itself that there have been developments of a serious character with reference to the climatic difficulties in passing this way—how serious, what the drawbacks may be, what the difficulties may be, arising therefrom, it is of course impossible for me to tell. I have endeavored, before reading in this House what is notorious to the public through the medium of the newspapers, to obtain authentic information from hon. gentlemen opposite, and having so endeavored in vain, I have brought the subject once again before the House in the hope that we may even yet obtain that information to which we are entitled. Then passing the climatic question, which is a very serious difficulty, we come to the question of grades and curves. As I have said, it is not only a question of mileage with reference to a railway, it is a question of gradients and a question of curves. In the debate which took place last year, when the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) undertook the duty of sustaining, after I had spoken, the position of the Government, he, in a very elaborate speech, dealt with many topics, amongst others with that of grades and curves; and he stated, as you will find in the report of the Debates, that the utmost care had been taken to give easy grades and easy curves to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, by the Yellow Head, the maximum grade was 1 in 100, or 52·80 to the mile. The stiff grades there of 52·80 were all concentrated within 30 miles, and the longest stiff grade was but 3½ miles. That is the condition of the Yellow Head Pass. By the Kicking Horse Pass there are over 52 miles of 116 feet or 117 feet; there are over 52 miles of that grade, more than double the maximum of the Yellow Head Pass grade, and more than three times the mileage of that grade. Contrasting these things you have got in one case 16 miles of a grade of 52·80, and you have got in the other 52 miles of a grade of 116 or 117. This is altogether apart from the temporary line, which temporary line is to be the permanent line for several years to come, and to carry this immense traffic which is expected to go over the line from China to Europe, and back from

Mr. BLAKE.

Europe to China. On that line the grades are 4½ to the 100, or 237 to the mile. The grades are so steep that already serious accidents have occurred. In one case a construction train ran away and a large number of men were injured, and there are in the course of the grade two of what are called switch backs, arrangements by which, if you find the train is overpowering you, you can run it off the main track and run it up a little hill so as to stop it. That is the kind of track over which the traffic on the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be carried on for some years to come—237 feet to the mile, protected by switch backs. Taking the 119 miles west from the summit of the Rockies, there are only 11½ miles about as near as I can make out, of levels. Now with reference to curves. On the Yellow Head line, on the line of my hon. friend from East York, there was but one curve of 8 degrees, and there were several of 7 degrees, and those curves of 7 degrees were on levels, or very low grades, and I need hardly tell the House that that is a very important consideration, that the combination of a steep grade and a sharp curve intensifies the difficulty, and that therefore it is customary, wherever practicable, to compensate for the curvature by the grade. But, as I say, on the Yellow Head Pass, the maximum curve was one of 8 degrees, and there were several of 7 degrees. Now, what is the case in the 119 miles west of the summit of the located line? Why, Sir, there are no less than 103 10-degree curves, 37 9-degree curves, and 76 8-degree curves and under 9 degrees, making 216 curves of that very severe character. And this does not include all, because there are several very sharp curves on the line beyond the 119 miles. The investigation which I have made did not enable me to go through the whole of the line, and therefore I took this particular section of 119 miles, and from the imperfect information before us I gleaned such facts as I could. Now, Sir, the total number of curves on that 119 miles is 691. On one mile there is about 2,000 feet of tangent, as near as I can make out; on another of 1,500 feet; on several more about 2,000 feet. In one place, in about 2,200 feet of line, there are five curves, thus: 10 degree right; 10 degree left; 8 degree right; 8 degree left; and 6 degree right. They take as many and as sharp turns as this Administration does. In 12 consecutive miles there are 123 curves, 18 of 10 degrees, 9 of 9 degrees, 19 of 8 degrees, 15 of 7 degrees and under 8, 2 of 6 and under 7, or 63 curves over the minimum curve of the Union Pacific; and these are on grades which average about 116 feet. That is the condition of things. I say that the hon. gentleman authorised this location; authorised a location by way of Kicking Horse Pass, before he had before him plans and profiles, showing that there was a practicable road within the conditions of the contract, by the Kicking Horse Pass. They had realised that duty of theirs at an early stage. I can call your attention to the Order in Council, and the reports of Sir Charles Tupper, showing that he declined, on the advice of the engineer, to recommend the location of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the prairies of the North-West, beyond a particular point on those prairies, because they were pointing towards Calgary and Kicking Horse; and because he said beyond this point, which is a common point for both routes, the route by the Yellow Head and by Kicking Horse, I will not authorise the location until you show me a line within the contract by the Kicking Horse. That was his determination, and he declined to authorise a location beyond the common point I have mentioned. I can show subsequent Orders in Council passed under the rule of the Acting Minister of Railways in which, with the former Order in Council staring him in the face, and without information that there would be a practicable line within the contract by the Kicking Horse, the Acting Minister of Railways did authorise the location of the line to a point which was running southerly, and by which in effect he pledged the Government to agree to the Calgary and Kicking Horse route.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Let the hon. gentleman contrast the Order in Council and the reports of Mr. Schreiber and Sir Charles Tupper with his own Order in Council and reports, and he will be unable to say "no" without conflicting with those reports. Already the route was authorised towards the Kicking Horse before he had the proof that a line within the conditions and terms on the contract was practicable by that route. They adopted that route in excess of their powers. They were authorised to approve a location within the contract, and, in the earlier Orders in Council and reports approving the section of the location of the line, the grades and curves are shown to be within the standard of the Canadian Pacific contract, and upon those reports the Government approved of those locations. But on this occasion they have acted in excess of their powers, because they have approved of grades and curves which are in excess of the standard of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman declared the other day, with a view of escaping from that statement, that the maximum grade on the Union Pacific was 116 and the minimum curve 11 degrees. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in that statement. Some years ago I put the question to his predecessor, or the then Minister of Railways—because the hon. gentleman is not yet Minister of Railways—whether the maximum grade of the Union Pacific was 90, and he told me across the House that it was 90. But in anticipation of some questions arising on the subject, and being aware that sometimes grades and curves which occur not on the line of the Union Pacific but on some branches or extensions, are referred to as being those of the Union Pacific, I took occasion to get an official statement from the proper authorities of what the grades and curves on the Union Pacific were. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) wrote at my request to the Commissioner of Railway at Washington a letter in March, and this is the reply to that letter:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF RAILROADS,
"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12th, 1885.

"HON. JOHN CHARLTON, Ottawa, Canada.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your enquiries about the grades, curvature and character of bridges upon the Union Pacific Railway, I have the honor to make the following statements:

"(a) As to maximum grades, number of miles of same, &c. The maximum grade is 89.76 feet per mile, and total length of same is 16.32 miles; the aggregate length of all lesser grades is 833.18 miles; the average grade is 24.33 feet per mile; length of level is 188.18 miles.

"(b) As to the curves upon the road, radius of each, &c. The total curvature is 22,508.43°, giving an average per mile of 119.37° or 2.26° per 100 feet chord, the shortest radius is 942 feet. There are no means in this office for ascertaining the length of curves that occur upon grades.

"The total length of curved line is 183.56 miles, being about 18 per cent. of the whole length of road.

"(c) As to material, class and character of bridges, &c. More than three-fourths of the whole length of trussed bridging is constructed of iron, of excellent design and abundant strength; all the other bridge structures are of wood, in excellent condition, and fully able to bear a heavy traffic.

"Yours very respectfully,
"W. H. ARMSTRONG,
"Commissioner."

You will find in numerous printed documents and in official reports to which I have had access, and I speak after having read them, confirmatory statements, although there is one report dealing not with the Union Pacific proper, but with some branches and extensions—

Mr. POPE. That was putting the Central with it.

Mr. BLAKE. We discussed both the Union and the Central when we had the Canadian Pacific Railway contract before us; and we were told that it was the Union Pacific which was to be the standard, not the Central Pacific. The hon. gentleman takes the Union and the Central, and the whole system of those two lines, and joins them together for the purpose of his argument, because he finds on the Central a 10 or 11 degree curve and 117 feet grade, and he says that is the standard to which we agreed.

Mr. POPE. It is part of the Union.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not part of the Union Pacific. It was not part of the Union Pacific at the time the Canadian Pacific contract was made. Their standards are different, and it was the standard of the Union Pacific and not the standard of the Central we adopted. Compare the grades. You have a maximum grade on the Union Pacific of under 90, and there are only 16.32 miles of that maximum grade. On the Canadian Pacific there is a maximum grade on the intended permanent line of 116 or 117, and over 52 miles of that. But you have got also on the temporary line, to be used for a long time, a grade of 237. On the Union Pacific there is a minimum curve of 6 degrees, and on the intended permanent line of the Canadian Pacific Railway the curves are even in excess of 10 degrees, for there is one of 10.40 on the intended permanent line. But on the temporary line there is a curve of 11.30 degrees. What is the curvature of the Canadian line? On the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway there are, apart from the temporary line and leaving out the 11.30 curve, 142 curves of 10 degrees 62 of 9 degrees, 338 of 8 degrees, 114 of 7 degrees, 39 over 6 degrees, or 687 curves in excess of the minimum curve on the standard line. What as to the total number of curves? There are no less than 4,258 curves of 6 degrees and under, or no less than 4,945 curves in all. The total curvature of the line is 900 miles, or 35 per cent. of the whole length of the line. On the Union Pacific the total curvature is only equal to 18 per cent. of the length of the line. So you have about double the curve mileage on the Canadian Pacific Railway which there is on the standard line, and no less than 206 double curves, and I suppose everybody knows what a double curve means in railway works. This much was gleaned from answers to questions put to the Minister, and from imperfect information supplied by him. No proper table of grades and curves divided into mileage sections has ever been laid before this House, or has been prepared. When my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) was engaged in the task of finding a location for the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway he took the proper and usual precautions, and you will find in the Blue Books tables of the engineers divided into mileage sections, giving information in that form, and showing the grades and curves and the alignment of that line. When the hon. gentleman was bringing down his statements with reference to the comparative merits of the lines to form the short line from Montreal to Halifax, he brought down in his Blue Book these tables of grades and curves. He knew you could not tell what the line meant without them, and they are down here on the Table before you, forming an element in your decision. But, Sir, the Government has never caused the company to prepare, it has never itself prepared, it has not now in its possession—or had not the other day, for when I asked the question I was told that the tables were only in course of preparation—analogue tables with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has been under construction for four or five years, so that the essential, the usual preliminaries, even to a final location, have not been taken. Although the final location has passed, although construction is advanced and almost completed, although the country has paid for the road, the Government has not caused to be prepared those tables of grades and curves which were necessary to a proper determination to themselves, and necessary to the proper information of the House and the country. But, Sir, from the general statements I have been able to glean, I have brought before you these results, and I maintain that the statement I have made indicates a very unfortunate condition of things for our great transcontinental highway, and a condition particularly unfortunate with reference to the change in the route. The reason why this route was changed, was that it was going to decrease the mileage length of the line by a certain number of miles—or rather, by an uncertain number; I cannot well make it out, as it seems to vary a good deal; sometimes 69 or 70—sometimes about 100, I know not what it was or what it will be, but something in that neighborhood. I say that any such shortening as that is far more than counterbalanced by the climatic difficulties to which I have referred and by the steep grades and the sharp curves to which I have referred in the statement I have made; and I believe that my hon. friend's wisdom in the choice of his route has been already demonstrated by what has already taken place, and I regret to say that I believe it will be more demonstrated hereafter as the road comes to be worked and the traffic upon it comes to be heavier. Now, Sir, looking at the two speeches of the hon. gentlemen, looking at the glowing prospects they held out to us as to this line, looking at the magnificent future which they depicted—the immediate future and the grand prospective future of the line, and considering its strength, its power, its capacity for competing with other lines, considering its unique advantages, considering its infinitesimal debt compared with other lines, I ask you whether these speeches did not lead rather to the conclusion that we should apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway to lend us some money than that the Canadian Pacific Railway should apply to us for a loan. If such be the strength and the magnitude of its resources, which have largely come from us, it does seem to me that while we are begging and borrowing, taking from the people inside and outside, from the banks in London and the banks in Canada, from the poor in the country and the rich in the country, while we have exhausted our cash and are signing our names for bills for which we cannot find the cash, it does seem to me that we should rather apply to this rich and powerful creation of ours for a moderate and temporary assistance from the temporary embarrassment in which we are placed, than that the situation should be reversed. They do seem to me most extraordinary speeches if you look at them as destined to support the conclusion to which they were directed, that we should lend the company some more money—no, we cannot do that any more, but that we should lend them our names, and put ourselves under discount at the banks, endorsed, no doubt, by the company; for after the statement of these hon. gentlemen no doubt the endorsement of the Canadian Pacific Railway would add much to the value of the Canadian Exchequer bills, and probably that is the reason that they are going to be financed more advantageously by them than if we borrowed the money ourselves and paid it over to the company. The company is so strong that it can do more with 4 per cent. Exchequer bills of Canada than we could, and thus we give them a great advantage, and they get this money on better terms. That seems a reasonable explanation, otherwise I do not see why we should not raise the money and hand over the hard cash to them instead of giving them our names. Now, I have always said, whenever I have addressed the House on this subject or spoken to the public, that the Canadian Pacific Railway had received enormous advantages. I think so still, and I think they had a great prospective future before them if prudence and not rashness, good management and not mistaken management, had guided them and the Government together. But I have also said, and I have signalled the fact for the last two Sessions at any rate, that great prudence was required in order to avoid danger and disaster, and certainly to avoid the marring of these fine prospects. I have never believed that the very early prospects of that road were such as hon. gentlemen depicted, but I believed that it had a future, and I believed that that future was bound up in a concentration of effort to construct the road not with extreme speed, but with moderate speed, at as low a rate of cost as was consistent with stability of execution. I knew that a low rate of cost was not consistent with extreme speed of construction; we all knew that. I knew also that its future was bound up in a comparatively moderate rate of speed, because we wanted the people to come into the country, that there might be something to feed the road with business when it was constructed, and I believed that its prospects were therefore marred to a considerable extent by the policy which it and the Government together had equally adopted of late years. I should not have entered on this subject at any length except for the statement of the hon. the Secretary of State. He predicted a great boom when the through line should be opened next year. He said they were opening the door of commercial prosperity for Canada, and he told us that the cry would then be echoed: "All aboard for the West." Now, I fail to see the ground of this prediction of a boom. The company itself in its report of the other day, does not say very much about the great through traffic, water-borne on each side from China and Japan to Europe, and vice versa, on which the hon. the Secretary of State dilated so eloquently. There are three classes of traffic upon which the road has to depend. There is the transcontinental water-borne traffic. Now, as to that, the hon. gentleman admitted that there had been none of it heretofore. There have been a few cargoes of silk worms carried from the East to Europe, under special circumstances, on Pacific lines, but up to this time the traffic of the world, so far as it is composed of traffic between the Orient and Europe, is water-borne traffic; and thus, although it cannot be done by other lines, although he says the almost irresistible Yankee has been obliged to admit that he fails to induce this traffic across the continent, yet he declares and predicts that the Canadian Pacific Railway will obtain it. Well, I am sure we all heartily hope they will obtain it. But I think it will be admitted by the House that that is a speculation, and I am not very sure that the learned prelection of the hon. Secretary of State has added very new or very valuable materials to the prospect of determining that speculation. The hon. gentleman declared that the rate of expense between land and water transport was about one to three, that is to say, one mile of rail to about three miles of water; and he declared that these proportions would be diminishing proportions, the land-borne traffic more approximating to the water. I will not enter into the calculations with which the hon. Secretary of State assumed to support that conclusion; but I will say this, that as far as I know the most learned practical men who deal with this subject believe that it is a varying quantity, from one mile by land to between three and eight by water, depending very largely on the size of the vessels and the length of the voyage. If you have a trade which you can carry in very large-sized vessels, which are known to be the most economical, and if you have a very long voyage, the cost of transport diminishes until the cost for eight miles by water is about equal to that of one mile by rail. An experiment on this question, interesting in its character, I perceive, is being tried or is about to be tried, with reference to one of the most southerly Pacific lines, under the auspices of Mr. C. P. Huntington, who, taking the traffic by land across the most narrow part of the continent to a southern port, intends to compete with the all-rail route to New York by putting the freight on a steamer at that port and bringing it to New York; and by calculations similar to those we have been using, he expects to compete with the all-rail routes. So much with reference to the relative cost of rail-borne and water-borne traffic. There is another element, however. The cost of rail-borne through traffic itself varies very largely, being dependent not merely on climatic questions but also on the quantity of the local traffic. If you have a very large local traffic, which necessitates and makes profitable a very large equipment, a very large staff all along your line, and numbers of those things which are adjuncts to your total traffic, you can carry a through traffic and make money on it at very much lower rates than if you have not that large local traffic. A large local traffic is essential to low rates for through traffic. So that there are varying factors in both questions of great importance. The hon. Secretary of State declared that it was material to look at the capital account of other railways as contrasted with that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the theory apparently that the capital account controlled the rates. Sir, the capital account does not control the rates at all. Wherever there is competition, it is competition that controls the rates, and the road that can and does carry cheapest governs the rates for the rest. It is a question whether the rest will take the traffic at the rate of that road or not have it at all. As a rule they do take it at that rate even though they may obtain no compensation or an inadequate compensation for it. They charge no more upon the traffic because of enormous capital accounts. I admit that there is an aspect of this case in which the capital account is of vital importance. I admit that the capital account is a matter of great urgency with reference to the non-competitive traffic—that traffic which, either by law, as is the case in the Canadian Pacific, or in practice, which is more or less the case with reference to some traffic of all railroads, is monopoly traffic. By law a large amount of the traffic of the Canadian Pacific is non-competitive, because the people of the North-West are not allowed to get competition by connections with the south. The Canadian Pacific can fix its own rates, and therefore with reference to that traffic, it will have regard no doubt to the amount of its capital account, so as to be enabled, if possible, to pay fixed charges and dividends thereon. Even if there were power to make through connections, this would largely remain a monopoly traffic. It is more or less the case with every railway, that there is a kind of strictly local traffic in which there is no competition, on which the company fixes higher rates because it is master of the situation. In the case of any company which is master of the situation either by adventitious circumstances or by the law of the land, its capital account will tend to regulate its rates; but if the company is not master of the situation, its rates will be regulated by those who are masters of the situation, and they are masters of the situation who can carry the traffic the cheapest. With reference to the trade between China and Japan and America, and between Europe and America on the one hand, and with reference to the through transcontinental all land-borne traffic on the other, there are of course other considerations. In our country, even as to some of this traffic our great interior seaboard offers for a great distance means of effective competition. But putting that to one side, though it is a valuable regulator of rates—for without it the rates would sometimes be very different from what they are now—and dealing with the land competition alone, there is a very severe competition, whether you refer to the Atlantic or the Pacific with reference to this great transcontinental traffic. The facilities have been greatly increased both to the east and the west until at present they are fully, perhaps more than, adequate to the present demands of trade, though we hope, of course, that the demands of trade in a progressive country, such as the North American continent, will at no distant day overtake and tax to the utmost the facilities provided for this traffic. The amount of traffic on the trunk lines, having 13 termini on the Atlantic, including Boston and New York, and 33 western termini, for the last few years, exclusive of beef, has been as follows—and these figures are very noticeable :

Mr. BLAKE.

EAST BOUND.

For 1880.....	$7,500,000
“ 1881.....	8,250,000
“ 1882.....	5,500,000
“ 1883.....	5,400,000
“ 1884.....	5,300,000

That is a little more than two-thirds in 1884 of what it was in 1880. The decrease being principally in grain and provisions, as this traffic varies largely according to the crops and to the demand abroad.

WEST BOUND.

For 1880.....	$1,920,000
“ 1881.....	1,150,000
“ 1882.....	2,400,000
“ 1883.....	2,120,000
“ 1884.....	1,920,000

So that in 1884 it became about what it was in 1880. So, if you look to that portion of the traffic across the continent which is carried by the roads having their termini on the Atlantic, you find facilities proved to exist by the traffic carried in the year 1881 and 1882, far in excess of the facilities which were required as proved by the traffic carried in the years 1833-84; and you find in truth that railway construction has got quite abreast of, if not for the moment somewhat in excess of, the demands of the producer and the consumer. If you take the Pacific roads—I will not trouble the House with the figures—you will find they show a great increase in the last two years in the number of roads. It may be said, although some of the roads are common links for the transport of freight, that there are now somewhere about 6 Pacific roads, the result being a very considerable increase of traffic on these roads. It was inevitable from the increase of these roads that a large local traffic should be developed, but although there has been a very considerable increase of local, and even of through traffic, there has yet been an increase of the power of transport in excess of the increase in traffic. The consequence is that there is a very severe competition now for the transcontinental traffic both east and west. The old rates of freight can no longer be obtained for the same classes of goods, and I pointed the other day to an instance in which goods water-borne from Europe are being carried from Atlantic ports to Victoria, B.C., at $2.10 per 100 lbs., even of the highest class, which tells you what transcontinental traffic means at this time. Another great difficulty we Canadians are involved in is the need of ocean ports with a very large number of seeking ships. For the purpose of that continental traffic, which is to be in part water-borne, you must always consider as one line your rail and your water communication. You must consider the question of transshipment and of freight rates on the ocean as well as the charges on land; and those of us who pay attention, as we must, to the difficulties which are besetting the shippers of the St. Lawrence at this moment, will all recognise, on looking at the figures the importance of these considerations. If they ascertain the cost that is involved in getting the stuff from a common point in the west to the port of Montreal and to the port of New York, and if they ascertain the cost from the port of Montreal to Europe and from New York to Europe, they will find how very important are the considerations of port charges, shipping charges, cost of transshipment, to freight. Now, the freight depends very largely upon the ocean port being an emporium of commerce. Take the case of the port of New York, to which immense numbers of seeking ships constantly go, which is an ocean tramp's resort. These ships go there because that port happens to have accumulated a very large amount of the traffic of the western world, and therefore you find it is a low rate ocean port, through the free application of the principle of competition. These are considerations we have to grapple with, and we have also to grapple with our dependence for a cheap through rate upon the existence of a large local traffic to which I have alluded. All these things point to that to which the hon. the Secretary of State pointed, and in that part of his observations I entirely coincide, that is the great importance to this line of a large local trade. The Pacific roads which were for a long time inclined rather to ignore that, recognise it now. All roads recognise it more fully than they did before; it behooves us to recognise it too. It is a consideration upon which, I think, much will turn. Now take the thousand miles of this road west of Callander and the thousand miles east of Port Moody, in round figures, and I ask this House what the present development is and what the immediate future is for the local traffic on that 2,000 miles of the line. I do not need to put the question, certainly do not need to give the answer. There are capabilities in both ends of the line; there is a future for both ends of the line, but built as this road has been, rushed through as it has been, in the insane haste which has characterised the policy of the Government, what to-day are the prospects of a local traffic for the 1,000 miles from Callander and the 1,000 miles from Port Moody east, say 2,000 out of the 2,550? On this 2,000 miles, there are a few thousand souls of white population. From Callander to Port Moody, 2,500 or 2,600 miles, there is a population of perhaps 150,000, perhaps 200,000 white men. Therefore, when you look to those figures of a couple of hundred thousand white men, you find in a moment the vast importance of settlement to the future of the country and the future of the road. You cannot have a trade without having people to trade with; you cannot have traffic unless there be persons to traffic with; you cannot send goods unless there be those who will receive the goods; you cannot sell unless there be people to buy. What you have at present is about a couple of hundred thousand souls for your local traffic. Now, the hon. gentleman compared the immediate prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway with those of the Northern Pacific. The Northern Pacific has, over a large section of its road, owing to the adventitious circumstances to which I have referred—and which give to all railway companies, more or less, the command of the situation, and a practical monopoly, to a certain extent, within a certain range—the power of exacting very high and unreasonable rates for a very considerable part of its traffic; and to that circumstance are due the large profits, compared with the amount of tonnage moved, which you find the Northern Pacific realises. But the Northern Pacific has about 2,000,000 of people tributary more or less to its road, while, from Callander to Port Moody, the Canadian Pacific Railway has about 200,000 people tributary to its road. That is the difference, and we want to adjust that difference by an increase of population which will be tributary to the road, before we can expect results such as those to which the hon. gentleman has pointed. Thus the Canadian Pacific has a traffic, so far as its local population is concerned, of somewhere about 80 souls to the mile, while Minnesota has a railway population of about 300 to the mile, Dakota about 350, Montana 350, and Illinois 370 to the mile. Unless you lay down the proposition that you are going to take as much toll from 200,000 people as the Northern Pacific can take from 2,000,000, you cannot fairly compare at this time the traffic prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, as regards local traffic, with those of the Northern Pacific. The problem is, what is the price you can exact for the traffic you have to take? How far have the prospects for local traffic changed since 1833? Have they greatly improved since then? I deny it, and I will proceed to prove it conclusively and incontrovertibly when I come to deal with the question of the land.

Mr. BLAKE.

If that be so, I refer once again to the language of Sir Charles Tupper, delivered only two years ago, in which he said:

"I do not hesitate to say that the tariff which is now on the Table of the House cannot pay the Canadian Pacific Railway, and will not pay them for a considerable number of years."

There was the utterance of the Government two years ago. Now why?

"It would be impossible, until a large number of people go into that country, to construct a tariff which would pay them."

A very sensible observation, one in which I entirely concur, but which the hon. gentlemen opposite seem almost to repudiate—

"Because the climatic difficulties of the country are such that I have no hesitation in saying that the cost of hauling per ton per mile would be four or five times as great in the North-West, in the present sparsely settled condition of the country and the small amount of traffic, as it would be on the Grand Trunk railway with the enormous amount of traffic which I am glad to say it is carrying, and the milder climate in which it operates."

I do not think the climate of the North-West has changed much since Sir Charles Tupper made that speech two years ago. I do not think the settlement of the country has improved enormously since that time. I do not think its prospects of immediate settlement have very much brightened within the last few months. Therefore that speech as to climatic difficulties, as to the tariff of the railway company, however high, being not high enough to make the road pay, for how long? for a considerable number of years; until what? until that sparsely settled condition of the country was changed by a large population being brought in; that argument, that until then, you could not construct a tariff which would pay, why? because, if you constructed a tariff which would pay on the assumption that the goods would be carried, you would put it so high that you would prevent the goods being carried; you would kill the goose that laid the golden egg; and you would interfere with the settlement of the country. That speech and argument are true to-day. One must consider the prospects of settlement. The prospects of settlement, so far from the seaboard, where the farmer's produce has to pay so large a toll in any case in order to get to the market, depend upon low rates, and therefore you must have low railway rates if the country is to prosper. Therefore, Sir Charles Tupper was perfectly correct when he said we cannot construct a tariff which would enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to pay for some years to come, that we must have a large local traffic, the essential for which is a large population. I hope the respectable authority to which I have referred will cause me to be saved from charges of want of patriotism because I have told a few plain truths. I hope that I shall escape under the mantle of Sir Charles Tupper, who was speaking as the exponent of the views of the Government, who was speaking in his Ministerial position and upon his responsibility as a Minister, with his present colleagues, excepting the Secretary of State, sitting beside him; I hope his statements will not, now that he is in England, be altogether repudiated by hon. gentlemen opposite. They cheered them then, they affirmed them then, they confirmed them then, they assented to them then. Do they repudiate them now, and, if they do not, how do they accord with the statements given yesterday by the hon. gentleman the Secretary of State? Real progress required, then slower apparent progress than hon. gentlemen made. It required more branch lines in order to induce more people. It required a policy which would satisfy the people that were in the country. But, instead of attending to the settlers who were in, instead of recognising the great cardinal fact that the best advertisement you could give to the world for the North-West was so to handle the men who were in the country that they would send back word to the places from which they had come that this was the land of promise, that this was the land of milk and honey, and advise their old neighbors to come out; instead of recognising that on the question of surveys, instead of recognising that on the question of land rates, instead of recognising that on the question of railway communication, instead of recognising that on the question of opening lands for settlement, instead of recognising that on the question of tariffs, instead of recognising that on twenty other administrative and legislative points, the contentment and facilities for the settler were the prime considerations. Hon. gentlemen opposite were so maddened by this notion of expansion that befell them in the years 1881, 1882 and 1883, that they went to work to survey sixty or seventy millions of acres of land, and had not a surveyor ready to survey the old settlements of the country, where the settlers were pining for surveys. The pioneers of the country were left without survey because the surveyors were surveying township after township where there is not a man to-day, and those who were there became discontented, and the worst results have come from that policy. And so you find in regard to the land companies, the bubble and expansion policy as to land companies; you find the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government together going into this policy, you find the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sustaining and supporting the North-West Land Company, which has done us more damage on the English market than any other company of late date, whose stock is now standing on the English market at 38, whose stock was largely bought by people in England on representations which have been very far from being realised; you find influential men, political men, men supporting and sitting behind hon. gentlemen opposite, creating colonisation companies, creating land companies, getting timber limits, getting ranches, getting coal lands, creating local railway companies in order to get large land grants, you find everything tending in the direction of expansion in the North-West, of undue and unhealthy speculation, of a boom, and you find a feeling pervading the eastern parts of the country, so far as hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are concerned, that the North-West was a sort of reserve for the hon. gentleman's parasites and hacks, a great domain that they could cut up and utilise to promote their private fortunes. These vast promises of material gains and immediate gains which hon. gentlemen have made have resulted in scattered settlements, in enormous expenditure, in great engagements, in widespread dissatisfaction, in an enormously exaggerated expense of construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in necessarily increased rates of freight for that railway, in the embarrassment of the railway company, in the distress of Canada at large, and in the ruin of a great many of her citizens who were seduced to enter into these transactions by the course that hon. gentlemen proposed. With the great aids that we gave to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the enormous advantages which we gave it, had prudence marked the course of hon. gentlemen opposite and the course of the company its capital account ought to have been insignificant to-day, it ought to have been able to transact business at the lowest rates by far of any company at all similarly circumstanced geographically and climatically, and it ought to have transacted it more profitably, because, its capital account being so small, a very small margin of profit for handling would have realised a very large dividend. But, at present, you have an enormously inflated capital account, you have a road built so fast that even the centre is not developed so as to be able to sustain itself, so fast that the ends must depend wholly on the weak centre—for it is weak to-day—for their sustenance, and thus the great prospects which, had prudence reigned in the management of this business, would have been assured to the company, have been marred, those bright skies have been obscured, and we are face to face with a condition of things very different indeed from what we might once have hoped. I showed awhile ago that the company did not now, under these resolutions which are before you, promise to accomplish those other objects which they had declared they would accomplish if the proposals of Mr. Stephen, which are on the Table, had been accepted by the Government. What are these other objects? The hon. the Secretary of State called out: "All aboard for the west." I doubt extremely that he is a very good conductor. From what point does the hon. gentleman call out: "All aboard for the west?" Is it from Quebec that he calls out: "All aboard for the west?" This good conductor sold the North Shore Railway to a private company and his sale has blocked the effective cry of "all aboard for the west" ever since. It blocks it to-day, and at what cost to this country we are to remove the obstacle in the way of the railway train, on which the hon. gentleman, duly decorated is to call out "all aboard for the west," we do not yet know. It is true we have some indications on the Table, we had indications last Session. They were indications only, though they were said to be finalities. We have more indications to-day, and perhaps to-morrow we shall have still further indications. The hon. gentleman, the Acting Minister of Railways, called out in effect—though he did not venture the oratorical flights in which the Secretary of State indulged—still in substance he did call out: "All aboard for the east." He is most anxious that the Canadian Pacific Railway should reach Quebec. He, too, duly decorated, would go a considerable distance to get to Quebec. I daresay he proposes to take the first train and call out to the passengers "All aboard for the east." To what east he did not say. He says: "I am most anxious, I do assure you"—and he looked around in a certain quarter which we used to call the nor-west corner—"I am most anxious, I do assure you, to give the Canadian Pacific Railway Company facilities for getting to Quebec. All in my power I will do;" and he spoke with a tone of such frantic earnestness that I almost believed him for half a moment, until he went on to say, after expressing his strong feelings on that subject, "and I think it ought to go to New England." And there the New Englander broke out; there the shrewd, calculating New Englander broke out. By what line? I suppose by the straight and narrow way. But I cannot call it straight, for I am afraid it is very crooked. It is a crooked way, like a great many of the ways of the hon. gentlemen opposite. They are to go by the crooked International line, and all the hon. gentleman promises is that the road shall reach both points. There shall be a pair of rails to the Atlantic coast in the New England States, and a pair of rails to Quebec. But he knows very well that it is not a pair of rails to Quebec that the people of Quebec want. It is the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway. And he says to them: "Gentlemen of Quebec, I will take care that you get a pair of rails to Quebec; but, gentlemen of the International Railway Company, I will take care that the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall go over the Megantic line." That was not all. The hon. gentleman felt that the proposals on the Table had supplied him with sufficient argument to dispense with some oratory, except as to Quebec. But there were some other ocean termini which he seems to have forgotten, which were not mentioned in his proposals. Do we not remember how the names of the old termini used to be rolled out by the Minister of Railways? Do we not remember now he used to call out: St. John, St. Andrews, Halifax, Louisburg, Sydney, Shippegan?—and I know not how many more. But now I hear nothing about Sydney from the Minister. But he says, turning towards my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron)—he says: "I assure the hon. gentleman that it is the dearest thing to my heart to secure at no distant date a connection with—which is it?"—he was obliged to be prompted as to the name, and he got the name "Louisburg"—"with Louisburg."

"Why," says he "the county of"—and again somebody prompted him with the name "Cape Breton"—"I know," says he, that the county of Cape Breton has no railways and it ought to have railways." Thus we found the deep interest and the intelligent information that the hon. gentleman has on this subject. It reminds me of the well known story of the Duke of Newcastle, who also was a Minister of the Crown in former days, when a public functionary, one of those busy permanent officers, came unto him one day at the time when they were engaged in struggles with North America and in struggles with France. He said to him: "My Lord, my Lord, Annapolis is in danger; it must be defended." "Good heavens!" says the Duke, "do you mean to say Annapolis is in danger? Certainly it must be defended. Where is Annapolis?" Another day, in discussing a subject pertaining also to the Maritime Provinces, he was informed by his permanent officer that Cape Breton was an Island. "Good gracious! Cape Breton an Island? Why this is very interesting. I must go and tell His Majesty that Cape Breton is an Island." And so the Acting Minister of Railways, in attempting to satisfy my hon. friend from Inverness, balked at the port he was to name, balked at the county he was to name, and was obliged to be prompted both as to the port and the county when he was telling how near to his heart was railway connection with those points. I do not wonder that he altogether forgot Sydney; in fact I do not think he ever knew of it. Well, Sir, these, it seems, are not to be provided for this Session. But this Session has seen a good many unexpected turns. Few of us expected to be here at the present time, and how much longer shall we be here? I do not know, I am sure, whether we may not see a subsidy for Cape Breton yet, if my hon. friend from Inverness stands to his guns, even this Session. I know that I was assured most positively two years ago—for I have always taken an interest in this Cape Breton Railway; I have always felt that the Island of Cape Breton had been hardly treated with respect to railway facilities—I heard the Minister of Railways propose a moderate subsidy for the purpose of that railway. I said that I was very glad to hear that the Island of Cape Breton was going to have a railway, and the terms were discussed, and I asked the Minister, being anxious to secure that railway, whether he was quite sure that he was going to get that railway for Cape Breton at that price, and the Minister, Sir Charles Tupper, assured me he was quite satisfied, that the arrangements were made, that the company was solvent, that the conditions were settled, and that Cape Breton would have a railway. My hon. friend from Inverness and myself, metaphorically speaking, shook hands over it, and some hon. members thanked me for having said a good word for Cape Breton. And so it happened that three years ago we were to have a railway for Cape Breton, and now the Acting Minister of Railways says the best thing he can say to Cape Breton is, when he remembers the name, that at some time or other in the future, he proposes to make some further provision for a railway in Cape Breton; and that in the face of a direct statement made, I believe, by the hon. member for Inverness, that if that thing was not done before the federal elections, Cape Breton would return six members hostile to the Administration—and he could not say anything fairer than that. Now, Sir, we were promised last Session that all these objects should be obtained for the price, which was stated. The subject was discussed, the short line was discussed, the various connections with the Atlantic ports were discussed; and we were told the financial proposals of the hon. gentlemen opposite were made after full consideration, were made after full enquiry, were made after having counted the cost, and with the certainty that the results expected would be reached by that proposed investment, and upon the faith of that promise the House

Mr. BLAKE,

assented to the policy and agreed to the vote. And this Session votes of $2,200,000 more are brought down to accomplish the same results which we were told would be accomplished by the votes of last Session. Now we are told that the Administration was out by that amount of money, that it is a comparatively small amount; and we know not at all, as yet, how much farther we may have to go to accomplish this object. Sir, I maintain that it is a disgraceful thing to have to say of a Government, that they bring forward proposals committing the country to very large financial expenditures upon such incomplete and inaccurate information as to render it utterly impossible for the Government to carry out those objects upon the terms on which we were assured they could be carried out. They come down Session after Session and say: We find we were mistaken and we want more money. Is it on purpose, is it by design? Is it intended to get the people and Parliament accustomed to these expenditures by degrees; is it intended that the country shall get accustomed to the notion of an expenditure of one or two millions and then the Government shall come down the following Session and say they require three or four millions for the work, and the people will be disappointed if the additional amount is not given and the work carried to completion? Is that the reason? Or is it simply incompetency and incapacity. What is the reason why hon. gentlemen commit the country to proposals on terms which turn out afterwards to be totally incapable of execution? The information given by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government upon which to base this very large proposal now before us is altogether scanty and inadequate. I am not going to discuss at this moment the information given by Mr. Stephen in his letter and the statements given from the opposite benches. I say no man can examine that information without feeling that it requires more thorough investigation and more full reports from engineers and experts and others before we can come to any reasonable conclusion upon it. We have before us no evidence whatever of the necessity or propriety or even of the character of many of the proposed expenditures, or of the necessity or propriety of many of the expenditures in the past. It is in the absence of such evidence and information as business men would require that we are called upon to act. How are we called upon to act? We are called upon to act in this way. Our interest is to be reduced to 4 per cent., although, as I pointed out last night, for the last six months we have been paying 5 per cent. on a loan which might in January last have been reduced to 4 per cent., and we are paying it because our Canadian Pacific commitments rendered it inconvenient for the country in the opinion of the Finance Minister to take the course of effecting the conversion, and we have been paying high rates of interest to the banks in the meantime as well. This company cannot borrow money anywhere else at 4 per cent.; I do not know whether it can at 5 per cent. I find that last fall it proposed a loan on the Ontario and Quebec system with its own guarantee for 5 per cent. at 92½, and it is said there were no takers or very few takers. They could not borrow at over 5 per cent. on what they say is a very profitable part of their system, with the guarantee of the whole Canadian Pacific Railway. It required a higher rate to tempt investors. Last year hon. gentlemen opposite, when they wished to induce the House to agree to the loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway told us that the country should get 5 per cent., and that it was a reasonable rate for such a company to pay and for the country to obtain; that the country was engaged in borrowing transactions and 5 per cent. would be a fair rate. Having so declared, they induced the House to agree to the loan. It was the boast of hon. gentlemen opposite that we were making a good commercial transaction because we were getting 5 per cent. Only one Session passes, and the Government come down and say: Let us reduce the interest to 4 per cent., which for the five or six years the loan has to run will amount to a loss of something like $1,350,000 compared with our position last year. I want to know why? Do you tell me: I am shabby, that it is mean to ask 5 per cent. from the company. It is you that are shabby and mean. It was your bargain. No; it was the company's offer. The company offered to give 5 per cent. for the money. The Government thought it was right, and fair, and reasonable to exact that rate, and that rate was given as an inducement for making the loan. They induced the House to make the loan, because the rate was at 5 per cent., and now it is proposed to throw off 1 per cent. and thus save the company $1,350,000. Were you shabby and mean last Session? If you say you were, let us discuss it. If not, if it was not a shabby and mean act then; it was the company's own proposal; in fact, it was that which induced the House to assent to the loan then; it is not shabby and mean now; and any such assertion would be absurd, particularly when we are dealing with a company so powerful and with such brilliant prospects as hon. gentlemen opposite have indicated. Then the Government impair our security. As to the $20,000,000 of our loan, we are to be placed in partnership with the public which is to have $15,000,000. I put to one side the temporary loan; I assume it may be repaid out of the sale of bonds at some price or other, and the whole $15,000,000 of bonds will then get into the hands of the public. These being in the hands of the public, the Dominion will be holders of $20,000,000 first mortgage bonds of the railway, the public having $15,000,000 ranking equally with the securities held by the Dominion. That is nearly halving our security. While we will obtain only 4 per cent. for six years, the public will get 5 per cent. Hon. gentlemen opposite say it does not impair our security to put other $15,000,000 alongside of our $20,000,000. Such a statement is perfectly absurd. Reasonable men would not make such a statement. It is an attempt to gull the House and the public to say that you do not impair the security if you place $15,000,000 on equal terms with our $20,000,000. We do not go in even on equal terms. While I do not admit the theory of hon. gentlemen opposite that we would be bound as first mortgagees to pay off the stockholders if there was default, still it follows from that proposition, and it follows even without that proposition, that if there be default in this new arrangement, Canada will have to pay those $15,000,000. The Dominion cannot take over the road without doing so. It is interested as a partner in the concern. If default is made, is the Dominion going to work the concern with the other bondholders of the company, they having $15,000,000 in the partnership and the Dominion $20,000,000? No. If there is default, the Government are going to pay the $15,000,000 to the bondholders and take the road. That is the practical result. We are making ourselves in effect second mortgagees, because we are bound to pay off the $15,000,000 if there is default in order to get the road. That is an unsatisfactory state of things. There can be no doubt that instead of being partners, we are practically, I say, second mortgagees, considering our relation to this enterprise in the present and in the future. It is a bad arrangement anyway. It is a bad thing to have a partnership between the Government and the public; it is an unfortunate arrangement which is sure to lead to complication. As to the price of the securities, the public may not take them up at par. They would not take them at par, if the interest were at 4 per cent. for six years, as we have done. We have taken our bonds for $20,000,000 at par. It is true we have taken them as securities, but we have substantially taken them at par, irrespective of the price that the public is offering for them. The Montreal Gazette and other organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, when the proposal was first suggested, stated this was an objection; that if the Government took those securities, they should take them at the same price they brought in the market. Now, it is said we should take them at par, and no doubt we shall have hon. gentlemen saying that it is all right. The time for payment is indefinitely extended. For what time are the bonds to run? I do not know. The resolution does not indicate it. The company may issue mortgage bonds for 40 or 50 years. If for 50 years, our loan becomes a long loan. We see what we are doing, and although Sir Charles Tupper told us last year that there was not the slightest shadow of a shade of doubt but that we would get our principal and 5 per cent. interest by 1891, we find now that we are throwing off an extra 1 per cent. interest, reducing it to 4 per cent. interest up to 1891, and giving the company a practical option of postponing the debt for the whole expected currency of the bonds, which may be 50 years. Then for the $9,810,000 we take the land as security, and in effect if not in form, release the railway, because we take a third charge on the railway, after paying off $35,000,000 and all the fixed charges, which include the interest and rentals upon the leased and acquired lines. And more than that, this is a fourth charge, because there are several millions of land grant bonds outstanding, not cancelled, and $5,000,000 in the hands of the Government as security for the operation of the line—outstanding in this sense that they are our security. Is it intended to release them impliedly, and to say that there shall be no security for the working of the line? Is that term of the contract to be departed from? It is not said so here, and it surely is not intended to do so without saying it. Then there are $5,000,000 of bonds in the hands of the Government for security, and those bonds and the portion in the hands of the public are charges, of course, over our charge for the $10,000,000. So you have first of all the expenses of administering the lands; then you have the cost of the interest upon the loan, you have outstanding land grant bonds—those in the hands of the public; then you have the security for the operation of the line of $5,000,000 of land grant bonds, and lastly you have our own $9,810,000, or say, in round numbers, $10,000,000. These are the charges, and this is the order of the charges upon the land of the company. Now, the hon. gentleman referred to my valuation of the North-West lands, as he called it, in 1880-81. I pointed out what the Government valuation had been in the preceding year. I was not, therefore, measuring their corn in my bushel, but in their own, and I think that is a fair way. They had valued the lands at such and such prices, and the following Session, within a few months, with no variation of circumstances except one of improvement having occurred, they brought up a proposal to hand over the picked lands—nothing which was not cultivable—lands fairly fit for settlement—that was the character of the lands; they were proposing to hand them over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I said: Now you are bringing forward this as a bargain. You told us the lands were worth on the average so much money last year. Are the circumstances worse now? No; they told us they were better. Then the lands must be worth as much? Yes, that could not be denied. Well, if you are giving so much lands to this railway, and if, according to your conception, they are worth so much money, then of course you are giving them the equivalent of so much money. That was my argument. But I have never said that the price of the North-West lands was a fixed figure. On the contrary, I have pointed out that under different circumstances, in varying years, under varying influences, the price of the lands in the North-West, as in other new countries, would rise and fall, and that we have to deal with the facts as they were presented to us at the time at which we were called upon to deal. I cannot say what the North-West lands will bring in the near or the distant future, but I can refer to some tests of the value of those lands at the present time, and that I will venture to do. I say that their value in the future is speculative; on the average, no doubt, in the long run, the value will improve, the country will improve, but what you should deem them worth to-day, or in the near future, is a question which passes my poor head to answer, although hon. gentlemen answer it in various ways according to the exigencies of the situation. I pointed out last Session that they could not be relied on as present sources of revenue, to meet the interest on the loan, and now after the collapse which occurred during and since last Session, and after the outbreak of this Session, what are we to say is their value? Now, I will give you some tests. Take the North-West Land Company which obtained a share of the choicest lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in part along its line of railway, and in part the best lands of Southern Manitoba, which besides obtained a half interest in all the town sites of the Canadian Pacific Railway west of a certain point—I think it was Brandon—which obtained these advantages, and which bought its lands at a price of $2.23 net per acre with the sites thrown in. The stock is $7,500,000 paid. That stock is worth in the market 38 per cent, or $2,850,000. Now how much will you allow for the town sites? Will you allow $650,000 for them? If you do, there will remain $2,200,000 for agricultural lands, and as there are 2,200,000 acres of those land the price will be $1 an acre. If you allow only $400,000 for the town sites you increase the price of the lands to $1.10 cents per acre as the estimate placed by the public, of the agricultural lands. There is a company whose whole property consists of 2,200,000 acres of the best agricultural lands in the North-West, and half the town sites on a large section of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The stock is valued by the public at $2,850,000, and dividing that between town sites and agricultural lands, and deducting the value of the town sites, the residue being agricultural lands—that gives you the public's value of those choice lands so situated. Well, then take the colonisation companies. We do not know of course what the Government measure is; they have promised to bring one down and they admit that they are about to bring a proposal to relieve the colonisation companies whose bargains made with them by the Government are too hard and cannot be performed. Take again the calculation of the Government itself. On the 4th of May 1883, they brought down calculations that they would realise $58,000,000 in cash for the lands in the North-West by the year 1891. How many millions will they dare say they will realise now? Will any man amongst them say they will realise $58,000,000? Will any man say that they will realise one half of $58,000,000? If they will not, will they say that circumstances have not changed, or that their calculations have been verified? Take their action in June, 1883, when they passed an Order in Council declaring that in future they would give no lands to railway companies in the North-West at a price which would net the Government less than $1.50 per acre. They were afraid that the former price gave too large a margin of profit to the railway companies, and so all railway companies which had not been fortunate enough to secure land at $1 per acre, were to pay at least $1.50. In the year 1884, the Minister of Railways stated that there were some 23,000,000 of acres applied for by colonisation companies, that $10,000,000 were already provided for, and that the rest would be provided for very soon, because they would go on selling an increased acreage and enlarging the price. Now, we had this condition of things, that while in June, 1883, the Government declared that future sales to railways should be at a price which would net the Government $1.50 per acre, the companies making their profit beyond, in September, 1884, they decided upon the policy of giving lands free to the railways, and why? Because they found that the railways could not sell the lands at one dollar even and make money on them, and in order to make that money which they intended the railways should make, it was necessary to give them free. Does not that show a change of situation as to the lands of the North-West? Surely there is but one answer to that. When you find the Government declaring in June, 1883, that it would be sufficiently profitable to the railway companies to get lands at $1.50, and in September, 1884, saying, we must give them free to the railway companies in order that they may make some profit on them, who will deny that there is a change—I do not know how long it will last—with reference to the North-West lands? And what more? Why, Mr. Van Horne, in September, 1884, declared that he was not sanguine, with a gift of practically 9,600 acres a mile for 100 miles of the Manitoba South-Western Railway, passing through the best part of Southern Manitoba and long settled, that he would be able to build that line, although he started out with a basis of credit of 50 miles of completed line, for which the company charges something like $25,000 a mile. That is the statement of a gentleman who in his other capacity as Vice-President of the Canadian Pacific Railway is certainly deeply interested in not depreciating the value of the lands of the North-West. Does not that show a change? Take the dealings of the Bell Farm Company with the Government, by which their agreement is modified very materially. Take the fact that there are only 23 homesteaders on a 400 mile stretch of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the prairies. Taking all these facts, I ask you, whether there is any immediate prospect of realising considerable sums from the sale of lands in the North-West. Now, these gentlemen do not like this, because they told us when they asked us to assent to the Canadian Pacific Railway contract in 1881, and again when they asked us to assent to the loan of 1884, that they were going shortly to pay off the railway obligations which the people of Canada were incurring out of the lands of the North-West; they told us they would all be recouped out of the lands; and having told us that they do not like to hear these statements which convict them out of their own mouths of gross miscalculations. How are we to get at the facts? I have more than once pointed out how inadequate are the accounts which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company render to the public—how impossible it is to find out anything with regard to their traffic returns from the different sections, so that we may judge of the prudence and the wisdom of those acquisitions and leases by the test of their result in profit. We know now something we did not know a little while ago. We find among the expenditures made a sum of over $1,200,000 on these leased lines. We were told they were going to help the company on; but at a time when the company are straining every nerve in order to carry out their contract, we find them obliged to pay this large sum of money, we do not know for what—whether for working expenses, for rolling stock, or for something else—in connection with the leased lines. Are we to have no account or audit such as in the United States is provided for the subsidised lines of that country? By Act of Congress it is provided that there shall be a railway auditor, who shall have access to all the books and accounts of railway companies which are subsidised by the public. Are we to have nothing of the kind? Is that to be refused this year, as it was refused last year? Are we to have no opening of Manitoba to the south, closed as it has been by virtue of the exercise of the power of disallowance, contrary to the spirit of the constitution and to the declaration made by the First Minister and re-echoed by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) when the contract itself was made? Are we, I say, to have no opening of Manitoba to local lines? Is the power of disallowance to be continuously exercised?—Last Session, when we were asked to vote the loan, the Minister of Railways told us that they would desist from exercising the power of disallowance when the main line was opened over the North Shore, and that it was expected to be opened this year. It is open now in a sense; trains have passed over it with traffic. There are railway companies waiting to know whether the power of disallowance is to be exercised or not; they are afraid to go on with their work, because they remember that one company spent a considerable sum of money in grading their line, and that it was swept out of existence by disallowance; and they want to know whether the pledge of the First Minister and of the Minister of Railways is to be fulfilled, and whether that which I regard as an unconstitutional exercise of the power of disallowance is to prevent any longer that Province from building railways as freely as other Provinces in this Dominion. Is it to be all give and no get? Is it to be nothing on one side and all on the other? If we had to take over this line after all these arrangements are made, what would we have paid and have to pay? The $25,000,000 of subsidy; $11,000,000 which have been received by the company from lands, land grant bonds, and so forth; $20,000,000 on our railway mortgage; $10,000,000 on our land mortgage; $30,000,000 on our works; $3,500,000 on our surveys; $15,000,000 for the public bondholders, making a total of $114,500,000; and there would be besides $14,000,000, which is the sum of the proposals now on the Table and those which have been voted by Parliament before for eastern and western arrangements in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but not included in the original contracted line. That makes a total of $128,500,000 in cash, besides the defaulted interest, which we would not of course get,—$128,500,000 which, under the present proposals, this country would have to pay before it could get control of this railway. Now, the Acting Minister of Railways made a statement the other day, of the most extraordinary character. He summed up the expenditure in case of default at $104,500,000. In that he included the lands sold, calculating them at $2 an acre, a price below what they brought to the company, and he included the $5,000,000 for the new loan; but he omitted the interest account, and the $15,000,000 of bonds, altogether, and in that way made up the $104,500,000. That is bad enough; but he then went to work to deduct, and he said, there are 21,500,000 or more acres of land, worth $2 an acre, which we will get back, and they are worth $43,350,000. Deducting these the road will cost us $61,150,000 only. The land which we gave over for the construction of the road is not charged in the expense when he sums up its cost to us, but he credits it when we get the road back. He puts it down on one side, and not on the other; and that is the principle on which the hon. gentleman deals with the railway company. I wonder if that is the way he dealt with the affairs of the International line—whether he handled its contractors in that manner—whether he agreed that what was paid should not be accounted in the payment, but should be credited when the road was got back. Let us simplify this transaction. Instead of mixing together acres and dollars, let us talk only of acres or only of dollars. Is it fair or reasonable to put in the account of expenditure $104,500,000 and say nothing about the twenty one millions of acres, and when you go to the account of what you will get back, to say: I will get back 21,000,000 acres? If you say you will get it back, you must acknowledge that you gave it away in the first instance. Take it in dollars, take the 21,000,000 acres as represented by $43,000,000, then is it fair and reasonable to say: I did not count in what I gave that 43,000,000, but I am getting that back, and I will give credit for it, and yet that is what the Minister has done, and by that sort of book-keeping does he reduce the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the country to $61,150,000.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. ORTON. The value of the lands is created by the construction of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh dear, Oh dear! Is the grant of land of no value? I hope that I will hear the Minister of Railways give that reason, and I will wait to answer it until then. Is it decent that a deliberate statement, a revised statement, a written statement, a statement carefully made up and calculated, should be laid before this country by this Administration, based upon such principles as that, and that they should strive so to persuade the people that the road will cost the country only that sum? A very unhappy reference was made by the Secretary of State to the aids to the American roads and to the cost of those roads. No road in the United States, not one of the Pacific roads, was given a money gift; not a single Pacific road was given a money subsidy. Two of those roads were loaned bonds; the bonds were not given to them; it was a loan of the credit of the country to the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, and it aggregated somewhere about $60,000,000 of bonds, for which a first mortgage was taken, which mortgage was afterwards made a second mortgage to ease the financial operations of the company. So that I say no road was given a present of money. Our road has been given a present of money and of works, which were built by the Government and are therefore equivalent to money, according to my calculation, amounting to something like $58,500,000. As I have said, no American road received any grant of money, and only two received loans of money—the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific. They were built—we know when, we know how, we know at what era of railway building, in what condition of the country, and under what circumstances they were built. Why, to read the account of the construction of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, at the time they were constructed, and to compare it with the work of railway building to-day, or when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, will show you the difference; and as to the question of cost, why some of the iron rails, and those of a character which were not very good and did not last very long, cost the Union Pacific more than $100 a ton. The iron rails on a large portion of the road cost alone $17,000 a mile. They cost more per mile than the entire construction of the 615 miles west of Winnipeg, which cost, supplied with steel rails, $16,800 a mile, against $17,000 a mile for iron rails alone on the Union Pacific. Then the stated combined mileage of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific, because in some of the statistics this system is now combined—their branches and main line together—is 3,554 miles. Their land grants, as I believe is the case with all the land grants in all the American States, were of the land as it came. There was no provision whatever for bad sections, whether rivers, marshes, or unfertile lands. They took their chances with the country, each taking one-half, and it was a question, in fact, of lot. It was good and bad. That is an enormous difference. Again, they took it only out of the sections that happened to be unallotted when they were entitled to claim their grant, and they were not entitled until every particular section had been constructed and accepted. In the meantime the United States were entitled to sell or settle the lands, and whatever the United States had sold and settled came out of the railway company's grant, and the railway company did not receive the money or any allowance. Many millions, fives and tens of millions, were lost in this way from the different land grants of several of the Pacific roads. Since the first two roads were built circumstances have wholly changed, and since that time not one dollar of money has been given or lent by the United States to an American Pacific railway. All that has been done is to give land grants, great quantities of which are desert, and of the great quantities which are not wholly desert, but are mixed up, good, bad and indifferent, they of course come under the operation of deduction to which I have referred. The Central and Union Pacific systems received about 32,000,000 acres. The Atlantic and Pacific, whose intended mileage is 2,500, of which but a small portion is constructed, is to have only 17,000,000 acres. The Southern Pacific, 929 miles, has 10,445,000 acres; the Texas Pacific, 1,901 miles, 12,000,000 acres; the Northern Pacific, 2,700 miles, may get, but it is disputed, 42,500,000 acres, of which 15,000,000 is all that is vested, and it is claimed the company has forfeited its right to the whole or to a very great portion of the remainder, and of that which may not be forfeited, a large portion is hilly country. Comparing these in every aspect you please, whether in the figures, in the quality of the land, or in the cost of railway building, you find no comparison whatever between the American lines and the Canadian line. The Acting Minister of Railways was imprudent enough to refer to the cost of these roads, when he compared them to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I quite admit the nominal cost was enormous. They were constructed on the good old-fashioned plan, the plan which has caused American railway investments to stink in the nostrils of Europeans, and even of the American investor of late years. They were constructed on the old plan of watered stock, of enormous bond issues, of crédits mobiliers and construction company contracts, of which we saw a specimen on this Table a little while ago in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. They were constructed according to these principles, and by these principles was this enormous apparent capital account created. The apparent cost of the Union and Central Pacific systems was $91,150 a mile or $324,000,000. The real cost was estimated to be about $30,000 a mile, as estimated when the road was just about completed, by the engineer of the Government. In the year 1881 again the Government officer estimated that the road would cost, laid with good steel rails, $25,642 a mile or $91,150,000, instead of $324,000,000. Between one-third and one-fourth the nominal cost of the road. Let this be a lesson to us how we permit the system of stock watering to invade our subsidised roads, how we permit the system of crédit mobiliers and construction companies to invade our Legislative halls, as well as our companies' headquarters. Then of the Atlantic and Pacific, the nominal cost was $35,526 per mile or $88,816,000; the real cost of that road, as estimated in 1881 by the Government, was $20,000 a mile or $50,000,000. The Southern Pacific, nominal cost $81,020 a mile, or $75,250,000; the real cost, estimated in 1881, was $25,000 a mile or $23,225,000. The Texas Pacific, $37,416 per mile nominal, or $71,130,000; the real cost, estimated in 1881, was $20,000 a mile, or $33,020,000. Look at what was fictitious on the one hand, and on the other look at what was real. Look at the nominal amount, the enormous amount of fictitious capital which has been palmed off upon a credulous public of investors, and under which so far as the law of competition has not admitted of relief, the public tributary to the railways is obliged to stagger, because, as I said, I entirely admit that, so far as your road is a monopoly road, the capital account will be regarded in considering the tariffs; and therefore I am glad that hon. gentlemen opposite referred to these American roads and to their system of finance, because they furnish lessons to us, to which I have alluded formerly in this House, which were not heeded by the majority at that time, and the melancholy results of which we are now to reckon with. The hon. the Secretary of State said, and I quite agree with him, that it was of prime importance to keep down the cost of construction; but it is also of great importance to keep down the nominal cost; because you already find this company rating its stock at $65,000,000, as if a dollar had been paid for every dollar of that $65,000,000. You find it estimating the cost of the main line at a sum including the aggregate of that nominal stock; you find it already trying to persuade the public that there is value there for all the stock it issued at a discount of 60, or whatever it may be; you already find it trying to pile up a capital account under which it may ask this House a little later on to sanction tolls upon that portion of the road which, under the monopoly provision is subject to and tributary to the company. It was a sound and prudent proposal of the Secretary of State that we should keep down the cost of construction, and it is also a sound and prudent proposal which I have made that we should keep down the issue of fictitious capital. I turn now to the nature and extent of our own Pacific Railway aids, and one cannot but be amazed and confounded at the nature and extent of those aids. What are they? There were 1,909 miles of road to be built by this corporation, and 2,550 miles to equip. That is what they had to do. What is done for them? The Government builds and hands over to them 641 miles of the main line, besides the Pembina branch, the probable cost of which I estimated, before the hon. acting Minister of Railways made his statement, at $30,000,000. He says now $29,500,000. I dare say we shall entirely agree by next Session, but I will leave it now at $30,000,000, because, I am sorry to say, half a million more or less in the figures I am about to deal with is of very little consequence. The Government surveys cost $3,500,000 about, really, I believe, $3,440,000. The Government subsidy in cash was $25,000,000. The Government provision of lands and powers has already realised to the company about $11,000,000 in cash, under the operation of the land grant bonds system, the sales of town sites, and so on. That makes a total of cash or its equivalent of $69,500,000, besides which there are 20,000,000 acres of land, because I throw off 1,400,000 acres with the $2,060,000 now due for land sales, to meet the outstanding $3,600,000, of land grant bonds in the hands of the public. Throwing this off—the proceeds of land sales yet to be collected and this fourteen hundred thousand acres of land to which I refer gives you a net 20,000,000 acres of free lands. So there were $69,500,000 in cash aids, and 20,000,000 acres of land. If you value that at a dollar, you get public aids, not loans but gifts, of $89,500,000. If you value that at $2, which hon. gentlemen opposite and the company in their report of the day before yesterday value it at, you get public aids of $109,500,000. There is the condition of things. Remember these are not loans, these are gifts. Besides that, there were those monopolies, those exemptions and those privileges to which I have referred more than once, which are of enormous value to the company and are of still greater disadvantage to the country. The sternness with which they are clung to shows their value to the company and shows their injury to the country. Throw them in at what you please, you find the aids in cash or its equivalent and in land, according as you value the latter at $1 or $2 an acre, amount to either $82,500,000 or $109,500,000 given to the company. Now add the loans of 1884. They amount to $29,810,000. Then you have gifts, as before, $69,500,000; loans, $29,810,000, or a total of cash aids of $99,310,000. Then add the 20,000,000 of acres and, if you value the lands at $1, you have $119,310,000, or if you value them at $2, it gives you a total of gifts and loans, a total of aids of $139,310,000. And the cost of the whole line, the Government and the company's sections, according to their own estimate was $83,500,000, and the equipment $8,000,000, making a total of $91,500,000; and it is to be the property of the company, and the company and the Government both declare that it is going to pay from the day it is opened. Not merely does the Government declare that the whole line is going to pay from its opening, but the First Minister has declared in this House that the ends of that line are going to be the most profitable parts of the line, that the British Columbia end and the North Shore of Lake Superior end are going to be more profitable than the middle. We have all agreed that the middle would be profitable; the hon. gentleman says the two ends are to be more profitable still; so the prospects of the company as a paying road are of the brightest description, and, as I have shown, we have given them the means, and far more than the means, to build that paying road. Well, then, the hon. First Minister gave a reason for the faith that was in him the other day, for he told us the road could carry freight at one-fourth the cost of other roads; and a road that can do that will certainly be a highly paying road. It is quite true that the late Minister of Railways said that it would cost the Canadian Pacific, for some years, four or five times as much to carry traffic to the Grand Trunk Railway which, in its through traffic, is burdened by all the disadvantages of making connection with other lines from which the Canadian Pacific Railway is free; but the First Minister's statement is that by which, I suppose, the Government is bound; and it contrasts curiously with the statement of Sir Charles Tupper who said the road would cost four or five times as much to carry traffic as other roads, while the First Minister says it will cost only one-fourth as much. But if we take the statements of the First Minister as the real determination of the Government upon this question, it will certainly be a most profitable enterprise. We build, and they are to own, they are to enjoy; and, besides owning and enjoying the railway, by virtue of the monopoly they are to own and enjoy the country as well. The company themselves have declared, in the report the other day, and the Secretary of State has practically declared that they are going to make a profit from the opening. Now, then, that is the position of this company, and what is our position at this moment, when we are asked to impair our securities and to make this new arrangement? I have pointed out that for the last six months, just in consequence of our financial embarrassments in connection with the Pacific, we have been paying 1 per cent. extra upon twenty-five millions of money. We borrowed $25,000,000; we have borrowed temporarily $15,800,000 from the banks, and we are to make new loans, chiefly to pay off these borrowings and in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of $40,000,000, which makes a total of fresh obligations of $65,000,000. We have a war debt on hand and we are in danger of a deficit, despite the monstrous taxation from which we are suffering. We have to pay increased permanent charges in the North-West, along with diminishing receipts from that country, and we have demands from various Provinces which claim railway aid and governmental aid of various kinds, at the peril of discontent, dissatisfaction, and some people even say—threatening only, I hope—disruption. We have depression and difficulty. We have a statement now made from those benches, and from the financial institutions, and from the company's reports, of unexampled depression. We even heard the word "crisis" used yesterday, a word we thought had disappeared from the dictionary with the incoming of a Conservative Administration. That is the condition in which we are, when we are called upon to make this new arrangement between the Government and the company, after we were told that the arrangement of last year was ample, ample and final—that there was an end to all. It behoves us to be cautious. The proposal, apart from the danger of the old loan, increases the aids by $5,000,000, irrespective of the $1,350,000 for interest; and this increases the total amount of the aids to the Canadian Pacific Railway in this wise: assuming the 20,000,000 acres to be unvalued, the gifts are to be $69,500,000, loans $34,810,000, or an aggregate of $104,310,000 of aids, besides the 20,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. BLAKE.

Assuming the land at $1 per acre, and gifts become $39,500,000, loan $34,810,000, or a total of aids of $124,310,000. Assuming the land at $2 an acre, and you get a total of $144,310,000. Nor is that the sum of our Canadian Pacific Railway engagements. I alluded a little while ago to our present and prospective Pacific Railway engagements outside the contract, which sum up to about $14,000,000, apart altogether from the value. I know not what value the hon. member for Inverness attaches to them, or at what rate he would discount those several promises the Minister of Railways made to him yesterday; but apart altogether from that, there is about $14,000,000. First of all, in British Columbia, aid to the Island Railway and the dry dock arrangement, both made in compensation for the Pacific Railway, $1,000,000. In the Province of Ontario, the Canada Central, $1,440,000; Gravenhurst and Callander, $1,320,000; total, $2,760,000. In Quebec, New Brunswick and Maine—Ottawa to Quebec, $3,350,000; the Junction, $200,000; proposed addition of this year, $360,000; in that connection, $3,910,000. Rivière du Loup or Rivière Ouelle to Edmundston, $240,000; proposed addition of this year, $258,000; total $498,000. The Short Line proposal, which, as I understand, applies to Quebec, New Brunswick and Maine, is this: value of the grant of $170,000 for 15 years, $1,890,000; the present value added this year by making the grant $250,000 for 20 years, or $1,510,000, make a total of $3,400,000. I will slip in here, as low a voice as I can, for fear it should reach the ear of the Acting Minister of Railways—the International, $158,000, making a total of $3,558,000, and a grand total for Quebec, New Brunswick and Maine of $7,966,000. In Nova Scotia, Canso to Louisburg, $256,000; Oxford to New Glasgow, $224,000; Eastern Extension, bought to carry out that arrangement, $1,236,000; Oxford and Sydney, $30,000 for 15 years capitalised, $333,600, or $2,100,000 in Nova Scotia; making a total of $13,827,000 as the aggregate of the proposals of the previous and the present Session, outside the Canadian Pacific Railway, but in connection with the scheme of a grand trans continental railway. So that you are about to add that sum. Then, if you do not value the lands, your total aids, including the proposed loan, to the whole scheme, inside and outside the contract, will be $118,310,000, and 20,000,000 acres of land. If you value the land at $1, your total aid will be $138,310,000. With the land at $2 an acre, the total aids will be $158,310,000. But, Sir, let us revert to the contracted line and omit any reference to these outside engagements, which yet belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway policy: there is another way of viewing the case. Apply the means which are provided by the country as a basis of resources to build 1,909 miles of railway, and to equip 2,550 miles of railway, which was the company's obligation, the result is as follows, on the mileage basis of 1,909 miles: cash subsidy, $25,000,000; cash realised from land grant bonds and powers of that kind, $11,000,000; summing up, $36,000,000, or making cash gifts in this way of $18,858 per mile, available now, or in September, when the line is completed. Government works and surveys, $33,500,000, making a gift at the rate of $17,548 per mile on the 1,909 miles; thus making an aggregate of gifts in cash or its equivalent of $36,406 per mile, with 20,000,000 acres of land, or a balance of 10,470 acres per mile by the original contract. And if you value the lands at $1, the original gifts are equal to $46,877 per mile; or if you value them at $2, they are equal to $57,348 per mile. Then, if you add the loans of 1884 these loans are equal to $15,091 per mile on the 1,909 miles of contracted line. That makes gifts, cash and works of $36,406 per mile, and a loan of $15,091 per mile, or a total of cash, gifts and loans of $51,497 per mile, besides the 10,471 acres per mile; if you value the land at $1 per acre it gives gifts $46,877 per mile; loans $15,091 per mile, or a total of $61,968 per mile. If you value the lands at $2 per acre the amount of gifts is $57,348 per mile; loans $15,091 per mile, or a total of $72,439 per mile. Now, if you add the proposed loan of $5,000,000, that makes the total loans equal to $17,710 per mile—the old loan and the new loan; and that makes the aids of cash gifts and loans $54,110 per mile and 10,471 acres per mile. Valuing the land at $1 per acre makes the amount, of the gifts and loans, $64,487 per mile; and valuing the land at $2 per acre the amount is $75,058 per mile for the 1,909 miles which the company are to build. Now, of course, I am not prepared to say, without going into further calculations, that this is too much; one has to consider what was to be done in order to find out whether this was too much or too little. I propose now to proceed to enquire what was to be done for those aids. One year ago, when the loan of 1884 was asked for, the official statement as to the cost of the contracted line was as follows: expenditure already made, $23,078,950; materials on hand, $4,028,604; total amount required to complete the contract, $27,000,000, from which I deduct, for the moment, $1,700,000, being the amount out of that estimate attributed to equipment, because I am dealing with the construction, and have for the moment no reference to equipment. That is to say that $25,300,000 were required to complete the road; and thus the total cost of construction would be $52,407,500. That is a plain and clear statement of the case given to the country by the Government and the company last year, namely that $52,407,500 was to be the cost of building that line, in accordance with the contract, apart from the equipment. Mr. Van Horne, in a paper on the Table, says this estimated cost includes the permanent road round that part of Kicking Horse Pass which is now arranged for by a temporary line; that the cost of both the permanent and the temporary line was estimated at about $1,360,000, of which $960,000 was estimated for the permanent line. He has obtained permission to use the temporary line for some years to come, and therefore the permanent expenditure will not be incurred. I deduct, therefore, from the estimate of last year, $960,000, since we are not to have the permanent line built, and that reduces the cost to $51,440,000. But Mr. Van Horne also says that $4,000,000 have been saved in British Columbia since the estimate of last year. Mr. Stephen, however, in his letter of 18th March, says that the saving in British Columbia has been off set by extra expenditure on the North Shore. Now, when you come to the brief, condensed and unsatisfactory statement placed before us, unverified and unsupported by the statement of any engineer, you find that the extra expenditure on the North Shore is stated by Mr. Stephen at $2,500,000, and that only. I deduct that sum of $2,500,000, unsatisfactory though the statement is, from the $4,000,000 which Mr. Van Horne said was saved at the other end, and I find a net saving of $1,500,000 in that respect, as estimated last year. That being deducted from $51,440,000 reduces the cost of the line, by the estimates and statements which are before us, to a trifle under $50,000,000. Now, as to the cost of equipment. When the loan was asked for, we were told that $1,700,000, which was included in the loan, was quite adequate, in addition to the existing equipment. The existing equipment of all lines and branches was said, at that time, to be of the value of $3,638,000; and the amount added, which was put into the loan for equipment, was $1,700,000 and it gave, as necessary for all the lines and branches, according to the estimate, $10,328,000. There is the required equipment for the main line and branches. I will make another calculation, by which to ascertain the cost of the equipment. I take Mr. Stephen's own letter of the 18th March, in which he states the expenditure for equipment up to 31st December, at $9,168,755; and that there will be required $1,000,000, making a total of $10,168,750 for the main line and branches. That is on average within a fraction of the result of the former calculation. I take the larger of the two figures, so as to err on the safe side, and taking $10,338,000 as the cost of equipment of all lines and branches, and observing that there are 2,550 miles from Callander to Port Moody, $8,000,000 would be the proper proportion for equipment. This accords, so far as I can see, with the figures given on the last occasion. I have thus arrived at the cost of the construction of the contracted line and the cost of equipment for the Government and contracted lines: $50,000,000 for the one, $8,000,000 for the other, total $58,000,000. That is the result of the information which was given in January, 1884, as modified by the information we have since received. I ask, next, having arrived at what the cost of the work for the company to do was—a work which they say is to be completed a few weeks from this hour—what are the cash resources available to meet that work? They are easily ascertained. There are, subsidies, $25,000,000; the loan of $22,500,000, the land grant bonds, which realized, in 1883, $9,200,000, and in 1884 the company received more than $1,000,000 more of land grant bonds, which have always been saleable at something approaching par, from 97 to par. I put in $1,000,000 for that. Then there are bonuses and town site sales $800,000. These three figures give you $11,000,000 of cash resources actually available to the company, in addition to the subsidy and the loan. Then I come to another point, and that is the net profits of working. The company state the profits from all the lines to be $1,626,000. There I am in the region of conjecture, because we have not got a statement of what the net profits were from working the leased and acquired lines, and therefore it is impossible for me to declare what proportion of profit is due to the main line, the line from Callander to Port Moody. But my belief is, that I overstate the case when I assume $66,000 to be the amount of net profit derivable from the acquired and leased lines, in excess of the fixed charges to the company, and charges for interest on purchase money which the company have already paid. If you take the purchase money paid for the Canada Central and for the Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, and the Laurentian Railway, and other lines, and calculate the interest on the purchase money; and if you take the interest on the unpaid purchase money of the Canada Central, and Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental, and the interest on hypothecated bonds and for stock, for the other line, the Ontario and Quebec proper, if you take the charges on the Credit Valley arrangement, the rent of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, and deduct them from what are called the net earnings, which are the gross earnings, less the actual expenses, I think you will find it very probable that I erred in assuming that $1,626,000 were the earnings in excess of those sums. I do not know whether that sum is the result of the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway, after deducting those charges. It ought to be, because if those charges are not deducted, then the main line has been charged with the cost of buying and leasing lines and branches. I did assume that those charges were deducted and that the result of $1,626,000 was after the deduction of those charges. Assuming that, and assuming that $66,000 would be the surplus upon the leased and acquired lines, after their bearing the cost of their acquisition, I take $1,560,000 as the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line from Callander to Port Moody, and I add that to the resources I have already stated, which gives $60,060,000 cash resources—or, say sixty millions. Now, I have shown you the cost of construction, and equipment, to be $58,000,000, and I have shown you the cash resources provided altogether outside of the company, provided, in fact, by the public, to be $60,000,000, or $2,000,000 more than the whole cost of construction and equipment, and that without touching the company's original stock. Now, that stock was to be touched; it was part of the contract that the company should subscribe that stock and pay it up in full; it was part of the contract that that should be done; that the money should go into the fulfilment of the contract. They did subscribe it, and they did pay it up and put it in the contract, and therefore that $5,000,000 is to be added, which gives you the total available assets of the company—of which the company provided only $5,000,000—$65,000,000, to meet the expenses due under the contract of $58,000,000, or a surplus of $7,000,000. Then, Sir, you may make certain deductions and additions, and I am about to state those for which there is more or less plausibility. You may say now: You have charged us with the whole amount which has been realised for land grant bonds, but we had to pay interest on them, and that should be deducted. I admit the fairness of the statement, but I do not admit the fairness of the whole deduction, because, if they deducted $582,000 for interest on land grant bonds, while the money received from them was deposited with the Government, of course the interest they receive on the money goes against the interest they pay for the money, and so, deducting the $192,000 which they received in that way, we have a net charge of $390,000 for interest on the land grant bonds. They have also paid interest on the Government 5 per cent. loan, which was one of the assets, and I have credited that interest to the amount of $265,000 to date. That gives a total interest of $655,000, which is a fair deduction from the surplus of $7,000,000. Then, do you dispute my deduction of $960,000 for the permanent line? I do not see upon what ground you can dispute it, but if you do, let us throw it off. Do you dispute my deduction for savings of one and a half million? I do not see upon what grounds you can dispute it, but throw it off. Then, you still have $3,115,000 against the surplus of about $7,000,000, you still find about $4,000,000 remaining. If you even ask me to include what the company says is a betterment to the Government lines, it is only some $1,200,000, and still there is left a balance of $2,700,000, out of these resources all provided by the public, excepting the original $5,000,000 provided by the company. Now, I invite your consideration to those figures, and I invite those who challenge them to show in what respect they are substantially inaccurate, and if accurate, how it is that ample provision in cash has not been made for every dollar which was required to be expended to complete this contract, upon the contract itself. But, Sir, I have entirely omitted, up to this moment, enormous additional resources of the company. There is the Government 4 per cent. loan on securities. These securities were available; they were securities which might be used in order to get cash or credit; they were used in order to get credit, in order to get the Government deposit of $7,380,000, and therefore there is that available asset created by this work of $7,380,000, and in respect of which the company obtained from the Government a loan to that amount. Then, as to unsold lands: after settling for the land grant bonds, as I explained a little while ago, there remains a balance of twenty millions on that account, and that, also, was an additional asset. Then the Government works and surveys were an additional asset of thirty-three and a half millions. And the company actually realised, in cash, for the sixty millions of stock which they issued and sold, subsequently, under the new scheme of finance, to which I will presently allude, $24,493,000, or, say twenty-four and a-half millions. So, outside altogether of the line of assets which I have given to you before, I show you enormous additional assets and resources which were available towards the completion of this contract. And you cannot overlook the consideration of those assets when you come to consider the proposal to grant additional aid and to impair the existing securities to Canada for the aid already given. Now, Sir, so far I have been dealing with the figures as of the 1st September next, when it is said this contract will be completed, and the loan and the subsidy will be actually realised to the last dollar. That is the proper date to handle. We are now within a few weeks of the 1st of September, and all of our calculations may be fairly directed towards the condition of things on that day, and on that day, therefore, you find the results such as I have indicated. But I will turn back, and I will deal with the figures which were given—deal with the figures of Mr. Stephen's letter as of the 31st of December, 1884, and I will enquire what were the expenditures and what were the assets up to that time. There were, in the shape of assets, cash receipts on account of subsidy, up to 31st December, $19,773,027; loan up to that date, $17,970,720; land grant bonds, etc., of which I have explained the details, $11,000,000; working profits, $1,560,000; original paid up stock, $5,000,000; making an aggregate of $55,640,000 received up to the 31st of December last. Now, I cannot make out in the same satisfactory manner the expenditure on the contracted line up to that time, because the statements of Mr. Miall and Mr. Stephen are short, obscure, vague, condensed, and give no reasonable practical information upon which one can make it out. But I give you my deductions from figures the accuracy of which I do not admit, which I am unable to reconcile with the statements made in January last and the statements made since; but such as they are, assuming them to be correct, these are the figures. Mr. Stephen says the expenditure on the main line and branches up to the 31st of December was $52,595,842, and for the material on hand $3,687,729; making a total of $56,283,571. From that I deduct, according to Mr. Stephen's own figures, the company's expenditures on the acquisition of lines east of Callander, $4,213,758; their expenditure on branches—the Algoma branch, $2,269,798, and on the western branches of 176 miles, $2,335,374, or a total for branches of $4,605,172; those deductions aggregating $8,818,930, which, deducted from the principal sum, leaves, according to Mr. Stephen's statement—which is inexplicable to me—$47,464,671 as the expenditure on the construction of the contracted line up to the 31st of December last. My opinion is that that may include a large sum for interest or dividends; I think that is the negro in the fence corner. But I only conjecture it. Then, as to the equipment up to the 31st of December, Mr. Stephen's statement is that it is $9,168,750 for all lines. Deduct for the line east of Callander and the branches, say 670 miles, their proportion, $1,890,000, leaving the expenditure for equipment on the 2,550 miles $7,178,750. That gives me an aggregate of $54,641,000 for construction and equipment on the contract, as against the receipts to that date of $55,643,000, leaving an apparent surplus of $1,000,000. But that surplus is properly subject to the deduction of $655,000 on interest account, so far as I can judge. I do not know, of course, whether this $47,464,671 may not include some interest. If it does, then the deduction I suggest should not be made; but, if it does not include the interest I have referred to, then that deduction should be made; and that would still leave a surplus. And, even if you add the improvements on Government sections to the amount of $1,240,000, you only get a deficit of under $1,000,000, after paying up to the handle for everything that was expended on the contract up to the 31st of December. The assets which produced that result being entirely public assets, except the $5,000,000 of the original stock of the company, that deficit of under $1,000,000 is, at any rate, not embarrassing, because a floating debt of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 is customary in such operations; they said it only became abnormal when it reached $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. All they required to do was to carry this $1,000,000 as a floating debt, and of course the drawback which was kept on the Government subsidy, and which obviously rendered plain the cause of the narrow circumstances, would pay for that, practically, under the contract. So that on 31st December there was no ground for embarrassment, irrespective altogether of those other enormous resources to which I have referred. I have pointed out that these enormous resources had netted on the new stock of sixty millions, $24,493,000; the Government 4 per cent. loan was $7,380,000; and their credit enabled them to owe $6,895,000, of which you can strike off $1,000,000 as due on the contracted line, which would leave owing on other accounts than the contracted line $5,900,000; so that their other resources had actually produced, up to the same date, the 31st December, applicable to other purposes than the contracted line, an aggregate of $37,780,000. Now, the next question to which I address myself is what has become of this $37,780,000; because I have shown you enough assets to accomplish all they were bound to under the contract, without having reference to that sum at all. They obtained it and the 20,000,000 acres of land besides. Well, what became of it? The explanations of that are not absolutely clear; but they are sufficiently clear for our purpose, dealing, as we are, with sums so enormous, that an inaccuracy of even half a million or so is of little consequence. I divide this $37,780,000 into two grand heads; the first of these is outside expenditure in one way or another, and I will give you the items which I find in the company's various statements:

Mr. BLAIR.

Main line and branches east of Oallander.....	$4,658,622
Algoma branch.....	2,269,798
Western branches.....	2,335,374
Steamers.....	897,369
Real estate at Montreal.....	408,207
South-Western Railway.....	1,593,280
St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway.....	227,155
Atlantic and North-Western Railway.....	202,837
Manitoba and South-Western Railway.....	1,254,678
Ontario leased lines.....	1,265,450
Proportion of equipment for these Outside lines.....	1,890,000
Interest on financial matters, &c., &c., &c.	1,399,484

Total..... $18,195,264

The sum of $1,399,484 is stated by Mr. Miall to be interest on financial matters and other charges, some of which I have very probably included in my estimate of interest already charged against the other receipts, and therefore should not now be included; but still I include it all, for I have not the details, though the Government have them; and all these sums give me the aggregate of $18,195,264 spent by the company on outside matters out of the $37,780,000. Well, that leaves the larger half to be yet accounted for. I have found for you where $18,200,000 have gone; I have to find for you where $19,600,000 have gone. And that comes under the second grand head of the two grand heads of expenditure by this company of its resources—dividends, dividends, dividends. The statement of Mr. Stephen on the subject of dividends is not, according to my judgment, absolutely accurate, but I will use it, in the first instance, so as to state the amount from his own lips. He states that there were paid by funds provided by the company, partly paid by the company itself and partly by the Government, out of the funds provided by the company, $5,378,000 in dividends up to the 31st December last; and that the sum remaining in the hands of the Government for future dividends was, on the 31st December last, $14,288,000, making an aggregate for dividends of $19,666,288. My task was to account for $19,600,000. I have got you the $19,600,000, and I think I have practically squared the account. I think I have practically shown you where this $38,800,000 has gone—that the smaller half of it has gone in outside enterprises and that the larger half of it has gone in dividends, past, present and to come. This shows where the money has gone and to what the trouble is due. There were extravagant expenditures, according to my belief; my belief is that this road cost more than it need have cost. There was haste and waste. There is proof in Mr. Schreiber's statement and Mr. Van Horne's also, to which I referred yesterday, of the necessary cost involved in the speed; there was inordinate expense on outside objects, on the Laurentian Railway line, on the South-Eastern line, the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Company, the North American Contracting Company, the North-West Lands Company, the leased lines and other objects. There were on these various heads, grounds for saying that more money had been expended than ought wisely to have been expended. With reference to the whole of this outside expenditure questions arise, various questions, differing questions, questions which may make some of the expenditure prudent, and some of it very rash—but granting all, wiping out all the extravagance and assuming there was no extravagance; wiping out all the imprudence and assuming that there was no imprudence; saying that it was right and wise for the company, assisted and egged on by the Government, to spend the sum of over $18,000,000 on outside enterprises, while they were, or ought to have been, straining every nerve to build the contracted line—admitting all that, for the moment, yet with the resources they had and have in hand there was a margin up to the 31st December last of $20,000,000 to keep them out of embarrassment: $20,000,000 is absorbed in repayments to subscribers. Now, let us examine this question of repayment to subscribers, this question of dividends. The law allows a railway company during construction to pay not exceeding 6 per cent., if they please, on the amount actually paid up in cash, in hard cash, on the stock that has been subscribed for construction. That is all which the wisdom of Parliament has provided that railway companies should be allowed to pay. No watered stock payments, no payments on anything that was not solid cash, but you might, if you pleased, having got in hard cash, which had gone into the works, say $1,000,000, pay the subscribers of that amount 6 per cent. a year on that or $60,000. That, in the wisdom of Parliament, was the sound rule established. Let us consider this company. Did it occupy an exceptional position? It did. What was the exceptional character and position of this company? It was this, that it was subsidised by the Government on the understanding that it was not going to make an early dividend, but that it was to be recouped out of the sale of the lands for its actual losses in the early working of the road. The proposal was, not that we should furnish money to the company to give subscribers who had stock 6, 10, 12 or 20 per cent. on their money, but that we were to give the company, in addition to cash, land, the ultimate result of which would repay them for the loss of interest or dividends in the early working of the road. That was the position of the company, a position against the paying of dividends out of capital instead of in favor of it; a position in which the impropriety of paying dividends out of capital was recognised, and in which the source of recoupment for losses was to be the great resources the Government were giving the company. Now, the stock was fixed at $5,000,000, to be all paid up, in actual cash, within a short delay, with the power of increasing it to $25,000,000; but I need not say that when the $5,000,000 was paid up in full in cash it would be impossible to put out the other $20,000,000 at a discount, or on any other basis than par, without creating an entire revolution in the scheme of finances of the company. The principle recognised by Parliament was that every dollar of the stock first subscribed should be paid up in cash; $5,000,000 was paid up in cash, and if the company were to issue the rest at 50, the subscribers at 50 would get the stock at half the price of those who had subscribed the first $5,000,000. No one thought of more capital being issued, at any rate, beyond the $20,000,000 additional; $25,000,000 was the extreme capital talked of. We were anxious the capital should be kept down, because the great object was that there should be a small dividend to be paid, since the burden on the commerce of the country was to be measured, first of all, by the cost of carriage, and secondly by the dividend; and it was vital to us that the dividend-bearing capital should be kept down to the lowest possible figure, so that the burden on the commerce of the country might be kept down to the lowest possible figure. That being the principle, and these being the expectations of Parliament, I now address myself to the question: What has actually been done? I leave out of consideration, for the moment, the original $5,000,000, because that was contemplated, that was arranged, that was subscribed, that was paid in full, that went into the fund; but, besides that, the company has issued $60,000,000 more, and in connection with its stock operations it has raised $7,380,000 from the Government. Now, I want to know, having stated the millions of stock that it has issued, $60,000,000 of new stock and $7,380,000 raised from Government in connection with stock operations: what has that produced? The original stock of $5,000,000 would have reaped its whole profit out of the working earnings; $1,000,000 would have paid a fair and reasonable dividend during construction on the $5,000,000 of capital, and that would have been paid out of the working earnings of the road; but that abominable system of stock watering to which I have referred, which, I have pointed out, in two years resulted, in the United States, in the increase by two thousand millions of interest and dividend-bearing stocks and bonds, or presumably interest and dividend-bearing stocks and bonds, while the betterments represented by that two thousand millions only cost one thousand and fifty millions, or, practically, $2 of obligations for every $1 of real value was to be introduced. That abominable system which has destroyed the credit of the American railways, which has rendered it impossible for the ordinary mind, with ordinary acquaintance with things, to judge of the real value of an enterprise at all, which even induces an Acting Minister of Railways to talk of the cost of a railway system as $323,000,000 when it has cost only a trifle compared with that amount; that system which renders everything vague and speculative, which gives every opportunity to the dishonest man to deceive and gull the simple investor, was to be carried out. The principle of an honest paid up stock was to be given up, and the first thing that was done was to commence the creation of this load of fictitious capital. They issued to the original proprietors of $5,000,000 of paid up stock $20,000,000 more, realising only $5,000,000 in cash, or 25 per cent. of the nominal value. They got $5,000,000 in cash, and they issued $20,000,000 in stock. Having done that, they sold $30,000,000 more at prices which netted the company only $15,281,754, or under 51 per cent. of the nominal value. They then proceeded to borrow on, and ultimately to sell, $10,000,000 more, selling at a price which netted the company $4,211,294, or 42 per cent. of the nominal value. They thus produced from the $60,000,000 of nominal capital $24,493,000 in cash, or, on the whole average, under 41 per cent. of the nominal value. And, if you choose to throw in the honest $5,000,000, and to put it together with these tainted matters, you find that an issue of $65,000,000 nominal realised $29,493,000, or 45½ per cent. of the nominal value. And if you choose to average the holdings of the original proprietors, the $5,000,000 honest and the $20,000,000 at 25, their special holdings cost them 40 per cent. of the nominal value. Now, remember, if you please, when you hear talk of a ruinous price for Canadian Pacific Railway stock, when you hear talk of risks, when you hear talk of difficulties, when you hear talk of embarrassments, that the whole of this stock, the first five millions paid up and all, was issued by the company at prices which realised only 45½ of the nominal value. Remember that the original proprietors put their estimate of value upon their whole holding by taking the $20,000,000 at 25, thus averaging for their holding 40, and remember that the stock has fluctuated from 37 and 38 for a little while, up to 64 and 65. Now, what is 50 on a stock, the real value of which, as represented by the money given for it, is 40? Why, of course, when you pay 50 for a stock of which the real value is 40, it is an advance of 10, it is a premium of 25 per cent.; if you pay 60, it is an advance of 50 per cent.; and, if you pay 80, the price to which Mr. Stephen said he expected the stock to advance, it is an advance of 100 per cent. on the 40 which was paid, and at which he could have sold, if his expectations had been realised. The original proprietors, if the glorious visions in which they indulged, and which they expected the House to help them to realise, had been realised, having paid $10,000,000 for $25,000,000 of stock, would have realised 80, and thus taken $10,000,000 clean profit, apart altogether from the question of interest or dividend. I am going to deal with the question of interest and dividend presently, by itself, because it is too large a question to mix up with capital. But I am dealing now with the new finance. The $60,000,000 of the new finance netted $24,500,000. The Government loan in connection with the stock was $7,380,000, or a total of $31,880,000. I enquire, now, what has become of the proceeds of the new scheme of finance? What has become of that $31,880,000? There is what the company realised by the issue of stock and by a mortgage, in connection with its stock operations, of its assets, irrespective of the sales of the public lands, the grant of the public moneys, and the grant of the public loan. Now, Mr. Stephen states that the company itself paid, not out of the Government moneys, not by virtue of the moneys placed in the hands of the Government at all, but itself paid, in dividends, up to the 31st December, 1884, the sum of $3,428,000. The company itself paid, on the 17th February, 1885, a further dividend of $650,000, or 1 per cent. To these sums which the company itself paid, not through the medium of the Government, I add the company's deposit with the Government and the company's loan from and deposit with the Government to meet dividends, which amounted to $15,942,645; and I add also the interest which was paid and allowed on that item up to 17th February, 1885. That interest amounted to $318,852.96 for one half-year, $305,729.56 for the second half-year, and $292,344.56 for the third half-year, making an aggregate of $916,927, which was produced by the means of the deposit of $15,942,645. These sums make a grand aggregate of $20,937,572, or, in round numbers, twenty-one millions of dollars already devoted by this company to the purposes of dividends. Now, what is the short result? They raise by the new finance on stock twenty-four millions and a-half of money, and they have devoted by the new finance to dividends twenty-one millions of money, making $3,500,000 to go on the work, and $21,000,000 to go into their own pockets. What is the amount they actually paid on dividends up to the 17th February last? On the first $5,000,000 of cash stock they have paid about $1,000,000; on the $20,000,000, which represents $5,000,000 cash, they have paid $2,610,000; on the $30,000,000, representing $15,281,000, they have paid $2,640,000, and on the $10,000,000, representing $4,212,000, they have paid $750,000, or a total of $7,000,000 already paid in cash to its shareholders by this embarrassed company, which has to come to us for help in its urgent need. And having paid $7,000,000 in cash they have deposited with the Government now, at interest at 4 per cent., $13,934,572.42, which with interest, at 4 per cent., would sum up to about $14,100,000 at this moment in the hands of the Government. Now, Sir, there is the finance. A portion of that $15,942,645 was paid in by the company itself, how was it raised? It was raised by the sale of this stock at a price which makes the dividends on that stock between 12 and 13 per cent., and it was deposited with the Government at 4 per cent. interest to secure the dividends at 12½ per cent. interest on that very stock and the other stock. They sell the stock, agreeing to give it at a price which is to net 12½ per cent., and they take the money and put it into the hands of the Government at 4 per cent. and they say: Keep this to secure the 12½ per cent. dividends—I ask you what is to be expected from finance like that? Now, Sir, the original proprietors who took the additional $20,000,000, have on their $5,000,000 of cash, for which they received $20,000,000 of stock, already received 52 per cent. on their capital investment. They got for part of the time 24 per cent. per annum on their investment, and for the rest 20 per cent. They promised themselves a continuation of this same dividend until the completion of the road, and honorable men, fulfilling their promise, they kept it, Sir, in the dire distress of the company in last September, they kept it in the still more dire distress of the company on the 17th of February last. What mattered it that the contractors were unpaid? What mattered it that the section men on the line, the employés, were unpaid? What mattered it that their credit was being destroyed? What mattered it that they were embarrassed in every way? Their promises to themselves must be observed. They took out the money and they put that money into the extra dividend producing these enormous profits, and left the contractors and section men, honest debts and everything else, unpaid, and destroyed the credit of the company. We could not collect our interest in May. We gave them time to pay it in May, because we did not want to interfere with their use of the money in the prosecution of the work; but they took care to pay their dividends, although they would not pay us our interest. There is one thing that must be done: the dividend must be paid, no matter who is left out. Having got this 24 per cent. for part of the time, and this 20 per cent. for the rest of the time, they have secured themselves, by this arrangement, 12 per cent. for eight and a-half years to come upon this investment. Blow high, blow low, do ill or do well, give up the road, if you like, to-morrow, still there will be 12 per cent. up to the end of eight and a-half years. By the end of ten years, for which this arrangement is made, they will have taken on that $5,000,000 the sum of $7,810,000, apart altogether from the future earnings of the road, on which the company declared, just the other day, they expected to make a profit in the first year; so that, leaving the earnings out, it will repay them their whole $5,000,000, with 10½ per cent. interest, until repaid. They are absolutely secure to get back every shilling of that $5,000,000 and 10½ per cent. interest on it under this arrangement, and to own besides in respect of that investment twenty-sixty-fifths or nearly one-third of the whole enterprise, land and all. But they say you ought to average their investment; that it is very unfair to deal separately with the second $5,000,000. I deny that, but I shall go into the account on the average investment, too. Now, taking the average on the $10,000,000 cash they put in, $5,000,000 of honest cash, $5,000,000 for which they get twenty millions. They have got $3,610,000 in dividends already, and they get, in eight years and a-half, $6,875,000 more, or $10,485,000 of dividends, apart altogether from the road and the land and the future earnings of the road, on $10,000,000 capital.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. HAGGART. Why don't you buy some of the stock?

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know what the hon. gentleman's interest in the company is.

Mr. HAGGART. I have none, but you say it is a good investment.

Mr. BLAKE. But the law forbids any member of Parliament to be an owner of stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, Sir, these are figures in respect to which I challenge contradiction. If you put to one side the question of a return of the capital, and assume that the capital will be represented by twenty-five sixty-fifths or more than one-third of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its lands, at the end of ten years then their dividends have been in the earlier stages from 15 to 12½ per cent. on their whole ten millions, and they are to have 7½ per cent. for the rest of the term, after the completion of the road, with the chance of dividends from earnings to be added. So that they will have more than one-third of the enterprise, with dividends already secured, varying from 15 to 7½ per cent., during the ten years after its inception. Now, as to the other stock. That stock realised $19,500,000 cash for $40,000,000 of stock, and it has obtained, and will obtain, in secured dividends, $14,390,000, an enormous interest; and, besides that, forty sixty-fifths, or nearly to two-thirds of the whole enterprise. Now, Sir, take the average date of the payments of the $29,500,000. I have averaged the dates of the payments at which those men put in their money, and I find the average date of the whole, including the original $5,000,000, was the 16th January, 1883, and by the 17th February, 1885, or in two years and one month, they had received $7,000,000, or 11½ per cent. per annum profit on the whole $29,500,000. And the future secured dividends, allowing the September 1 per cent., which they have promised themselves—and I have shown the desperate fidelity with which they have adhered to those promises of the past—will give for the future 8 per cent. per annum of profit, apart from earnings, up to 1st September, 1885. In all, if you include the September, 1885, and February, 1886, extra dividends, there will have been paid and provided for dividends $24,875,000; or a sum equal to the whole amount realised from stock by the new finance. They will have paid $24,500,000, and there will have been paid and provided for dividends, even including only the September payment, just about $24,500,000. So far from these resources of the company being invested in inside or outside operations, the net result of the transaction has been to invest money with one hand for the purpose of taking it out with the other. In substance the proceeds of the stock are divided among the stockholders; we are to raise money to build the road; and the country is to pay tolls for all time to meet the stock so divided. The company are seeking to secure $15,000,000 of additional capital to use, although they have $14,100,000 available in the hands of the Government. The Government are asking the permission of the country to reduce interest on the public debt and to create an interest charge on the new capital, while the company are saying that whatever happens we must take care of ourselves and the Government must take care of us, and we must lay by a nest-egg for ourselves. I maintain that the proper place for the company's money is the company's road. I maintain that we have no right to connive at transactions like this, to approve or to endorse them. We never contemplated such an act as this, that millions upon millions would be emitted, representing a nominal capital of $60,000,000 and an actual capital of $24,500,000, and then that we should be called upon to lend about $29,500,000 and then be asked for $5,000,000 more, and to impair our security and lower our rate of interest, in order that those gentlemen may run no risk at all, but ensure to themselves large interest in the meanwhile and a magnificent enterprise subsequently. They say it will pay a dividend from the start. It is just about to start. Let them take their dividend out of the earnings, and use their money to complete the road which is to produce the earnings. Do not let them do like the man of old, put their money in a napkin and bury it in the ground; but let them put it where it will do the most good for the country, put it where it is destined to go, put it where it belongs. For what purpose was the stock issued—the stock of $60,000,000? To make dividends for the stockholders? Was it not that the money might be got to build the road? Use the money then to build the road. The company have already taken $7,000,000 out of the nominal capital and put it in their pockets. Let the company take the $14,000,000 in the hands of the Government and put it into the road. That money will pay off the floating debt; it will give the required new money; it will keep our securities just as they are, and it will prevent the necessity of reducing our rate of interest. If the shareholders want $14,000,000 more let them ask us for that money of theirs which the Government now holds. My view is that the company ought to apply to Parliament for what Parliament would, no doubt, willingly give them; that these shareholders should say: Gentlemen, we find that we miscalculated, that we took too much of our money as profits on our stock. We find that we want some of that money for the object to which it should be devoted, namely, to put it into the road which we were to build, and from the earnings of which we were to receive dividends; will you please hand it back to us, this $14,000,000, so that we may put it into the road, that it may go to its proper destination and earn its appropriate dividend. Let the shareholders make that statement to us, and we will willingly comply with their request. We will say: That is where the money should always have gone, certainly where it ought to go now. I believe no ground whatever has been made out for granting the application of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or the proposal of the Government, which is calculated to impose for all time to come a further charge of fifteen millions of dollars on the commerce and trade of this country, to exaggerate to that extent the rates and tolls required to make the Canadian Pacific Railway remunerative; and all this is to be done because the stockholders in this enterprise, having realised from $60,000,000 of stock $24,500,000, have chosen to appropriate $24,500,000 to pay dividends upon their stock. I say they ought to be told: Gentlemen, you can have the $14,000,000 when you desire to obtain it. Assemble in general meeting, and if you want that money, come and ask us for it, and it will be handed over; it is your money, deposited as a fund for you; but while it is there, it is nothing less than impudent for you to come to us and ask us for more money, ask us to impair our security, and ask us to allow you to make further permanent charges on the road, simply in order that your dividends may be assured beyond peradventure. Holding these views, I oppose and I protest against the passage of these resolutions.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. IVES. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has succeeded, after the years that have elapsed since 1878, in getting up what might be called a rather hearty cheer.

Mr. DAVIES. The occasion called for it.

Mr. IVES. Yes, the occasion called for it, because it is the first time the leader of the Opposition ever announced a policy upon any subject, and having announced a policy on this subject, the occasion called for a cheer, which the hon. gentlemen gave him. I congratulate those hon. gentlemen upon having got up a hearty cheer, and it was a proper return for seven weeks of arduous labor on the part of the leader of the Opposition, and of eight hours labored speaking in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. IVES. You are showing your natural tendency by grunts, but you will not disturb me. There was a time, a few weeks ago, when Conservative papers intimated that the leader of the Opposition was not exactly in accord with those of his followers in this House who were obstructing the business of the country, week after week, in the discussion of the Franchise Bill; and it was said, as a reason why the leader of the Opposition was not in the House, that he was not in accord with the course which hon. gentlemen were taking. But after the evidences of labor which he has now given us, I think he deserves to be acquitted of that charge. I think it is a quite satisfactory explanation that during the last seven weeks he has been preparing this long array of figures, which we have heard a dozen different times before, and which are served up to us in as many different forms as the hon. gentleman has made speeches. As it is nearly six o'clock, I propose, for the few moments remaining before that time, to deal with one of the matters which the hon. gentleman referred to, for the purpose of inspiring a joke, occasionally, in the somewhat dry details of his speech. The hon. gentleman referred to a number of matters beside the question, for the purpose of amusing us, but he only made one really successful hit and that was the reference to the Secretary of State crying "All aboard for the West." He asked at what point would the hon. the Secretary of State embark; would he embark at Montreal or at Quebec? He also referred to the Acting Minister of Railways as the conductor of that train, and he said the only difference between him, as conductor, and the Secretary of State, was that he would say, from Montreal: "All aboard for the East," and sotto voce—so low, in fact, that I could hardly hear him—he made a subsequent reference to the Acting Minister of Railways in connection with the proposed short line subsidy from Montreal to the Maritime Provinces. I would ask the hon. gentleman what sort of conductor he would make for this train? Where would he get aboard? Would he get on board at Callander or in the prairie region? If he only built the prairie section of the road, as he has always advocated, I fancy he would have to use some of the water stretches of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) to get there, and then taking his prairie road, he could not go to British Columbia. He could not get on board at Port Moody, at Calgary, or even at Montreal or Quebec.

Mr. McCALLUM. He would get on at the Fort Francis locks.

Mr. IVES. If he were there he would have a fine place to start from, as he would spend the night in the Neebing Hotel. I quite understood why the hon. gentleman spoke sotto voce about going away from Montreal, because I observe that it is necessary for the hon. gentleman in order that he may avoid wounding the feelings of some of his own supporters, to speak very delicately on that tender subject of the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Maritime Provinces; so delicately, in fact, that although so many days have elapsed since the resolutions were brought down, the Globe newspaper has not had a word to say with regard to building a railway from Montreal to the Maritime Provinces. It was necessary for the hon. gentleman to speak low, more particularly on account of his hon. friend on his left (Mr. Laurier), who certainly must be pleased with the prospect of extending the railway from Montreal to his own constituency at the port of Quebec.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MACMASTER. I rise to ask the permission of the House to bring up a matter by way of privilege—to make an explanation personal to myself. In the Montreal Witness of the 16th of June there occurs the following article, under the heading of "Tampering with the Hansard:"

"After recess, Mr. Blake, on a question of privilege, pointed out an interpolation which had been inserted in the revised or permanent form of the Hansard, in a way which leaves little doubt that some one has been tampering with the official debates. The alteration is made in the debate in the Hansard of 8th June, in which Mr. Macmaster made his unfortunate statement that the Highlanders of 150 years ago were practically savages. In the first draft of the Hansard, which appeared on the day following the debate, there is no break in Mr. Macmaster's remarks, but in the permanent edition of the Hansard, after members have had an opportunity of correcting their speeches, there appears, just at this point, an interruption by Mr. Blake, to the effect that the ancient Highlanders stole cattle. The rule with regard to correcting the Hansard is that a member may make any necessary corrections in his own speech, but no member is allowed to insert remarks and attribute them to another member, as was here done. Besides, no such words were ever uttered by Mr. Blake, and one—”

I suppose it should be “no one”

“had any reasonable pretext for making the alterations.

“Mr. Bowell, Minister of Customs, substantiated Mr. Blake's denial of having used the obnoxious words, but said they were certainly used by some one in the House. It appears the interpolation was inserted in a correction of Mr. Macmaster's speech, handed in by himself, and without the knowledge of the Hansard management, and it appears, further, that Mr. Macmaster has caused a large edition of his speech thus corrected to be issued for circulation amongst his constituents in Glengarry. Mr. Macmaster was not in his place in the House yesterday to make any explanation of the affair, which, in the meantime, looks decidedly colorable.”

I understand that an editorial article appeared in the Toronto Globe to the same effect. I was not in the House when the leader of the Opposition referred to this question, a few days ago, and this is the first opportunity I have had of bringing it to the attention of the House. Now, the charges contained in this article are substantially these: First, that I attributed my own words to another; secondly, that I inserted those words in the official report of the debate without the knowledge of the Hansard management, and thirdly that I had ordered a large issue of the Hansard, containing the corrected or revised edition of my speech, with a view of sending an erroneous copy to my constituents. Now, Mr. Speaker, the whole of this article, in so far as it relates to me, is either directly or indirectly false. It is necessary for me to explain the circumstances under which the occurrence took place. I was speaking in the franchise debate on the extension of the franchise to the Indians. I was pointing out the progress the world had made since 1642. An hon. member of the House cited the condition of the Indians at that period, and argued against the admission of the Indians to the franchise, upon the ground, to some extent, if not entirely, of the uncivilised condition of the Indians in 1642. I was pointing out the progress that had been made throughout the world since that date, and the inapplicability of an argument of that kind; I was referring to the progress of my own countrymen, the Highlanders of Scotland, in comparatively recent years. At that stage the hon. leader of the Opposition made an interruption; and the statement I now make with regard to that is in accordance with the statement he himself made to the House. I did not hear distinctly the words of the hon. gentleman's interruption; I was anxious to hear them, and I at once said: “I beg your pardon.” The hon. leader of the Opposition did not answer; he seemed to have turned to engage in a conversation or to exchange a smile with the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). I then turned about, being anxious to ascertain what words he had used, and said: “What did he say?” When an hon. member answered: “He said they stole cattle.” The hon. gentleman now smiles.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not smiling in the slightest degree with the view of casting any doubt on the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. MACMASTER. I am glad to hear that. I am stating the matter exactly as it occurred—

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt whatever.

Mr. MACMASTER. And I hope to satisfy the hon. gentleman that I am incapable of committing the act I am here charged with in the press.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not charge the hon. gentleman with making a false statement.

Mr. MACMASTER. The answer was: “He stated they stole cattle.” There had been previously no reference whatever in my remarks to the stealing of cattle. I assumed that the information I received was correct, and that the hon. leader of the Opposition had made that statement. I never had the slightest doubt at all until I saw his statement yesterday morning in Montreal, that he denied it. Assuming that he had made that statement, I proceeded with this remark:

Mr. MAOMASTER.

“I have no doubt my noble ancestors stole cattle and proved their prowess in war by going down to the southern country; and no doubt they crossed the Channel to where my hon. friend's ancestors were.”

Thus plainly showing, from the words of the original copy of Hansard, that I supposed I was replying in good faith to a remark made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. On the following day, Mr. Boyce, the revisor of the Hansard debates, came to me and delivered, as he is in the habit of doing, in the case of other hon. gentlemen, the first print of my speech. It was in the afternoon, I think, of Thursday last. I was to leave town on the following morning. A few hours afterwards he came to me and asked me if I thought I would be able to have the revise of my speech by that evening. I told him I would endeavor to do so, although I was very much hurried. I had in the meantime read my speech through, and when I came to the passage about which this controversy has arisen, I saw that the remark which I supposed the hon. leader of the Opposition had made was entirely omitted from the first print of Hansard; and hence it would appear that the words:

“I have no doubt my noble ancestors stole cattle, and proved their prowess in war, by going down to the Southern country, and no doubt they crossed the Channel, to where my hon. friend's ancestors were”—

were volunteered by me, whereas, in fact, they were uttered by me on the supposition that the hon. gentleman had made the remark: “They stole cattle.” Mr. Boyce came to my desk where I am now standing, and my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa city (Mr. Mackintosh), was also present; and I pointed out to Mr. Boyce, in presence of my hon. friend, that there was an omission in the first print of the Debates—that the statement of the hon. gentleman was not inserted, and that without that statement my remark was perfectly meaningless, and did not indicate to what hon. gentleman's ancestors I referred; and I said that in order to have a true record and to show my meaning and the reason I used these words, the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition should be inserted in the report. He said: “Very well, Mr. Macmaster; if it is correct, insert it.” I said: “I shall do so, and I assure you it is correct.” I inserted it myself, and if there be any blame in connection with it, the Hansard revisor, Mr. Boyce, is entirely free from blame, and so is everybody else, except myself, if blame there is. I asked Mr. Boyce if it would be necessary for him to call the attention of any one else in connection with the Hansard staff to it, and he said: “No; if it is correct it is not necessary.” I inserted the words, delivered to Mr. Boyce the copy of Hansard so revised, just as I always did on former occasions, and he took it, I presume, to the Hansard office; and the copy so revised was printed with the statement I have indicated attributed to the hon. leader of the Opposition. A copy of it was forwarded to me in Montreal, where I received it. Yesterday morning I read in the morning papers that the hon. leader of the Opposition had stood up in his place in this House and had said that these words were not uttered by him. He did not accuse me, it is true, of wrongfully inserting them. He made another remark, that was not germane to the matter, that the only responsibility he attached to my noble ancestors was that they had produced me. I do not think that remark was essential to the correction the hon. gentleman intended to make, because I trust, before I die, if my life is spared, that I may not be entirely unworthy of my noble ancestors; and I am very certain that I have nothing to be ashamed of in the record of my ancestors. I do not make these remarks, as hon. gentlemen will see, in any acrimonious spirit, and I would not interject into the statement I am now making the slightest circumstance that might tend to encumber it or give anyone reason to suppose that I make any attack on the hon. gentleman for using those words, or do anything to divert the attention of the House and the public from the plain, honest statement I am now making. Immediately I saw yesterday morning in the public press the statement the hon. leader of the Opposition had made, I telegraphed to my trusted personal friends in this House, the hon. member for Ottawa City (Mr. Mackintosh) and the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) calling their attention to the statement the hon. leader of the Opposition had made, and requested them at once to proceed to the Hansard office and see that the necessary correction was made in the official reports of the debates. That was all that I could have done, under the circumstances. The hon. gentleman will perceive that the charge of altering the speech of the hon. gentleman opposite is entirely unfounded. The only thing I did was to attribute to him a remark which I supposed in perfect good faith he had made. The hon. gentleman will also perceive that the second charge made in this article against me, that this change was made in Hansard without the knowledge of the Hansard management, is entirely false, because I made the statement clearly and distinctly to the reviser of Hansard of all the circumstances connected with it. There remains, therefore, only the explanation with regard to my ordering copies of Hansard to be distributed among my constituents. I found, whether it be that I spoke very quickly on the occasion, or that my sentences were long, or whether it be that I am difficult to report, or through not having obtruded myself very frequently on the House, the Hansard men are unfamiliar with my style of delivery, or whether there may be other imperfections in my style of rapid delivery, I know not—that there were many errors in the first printed copies of my speech, and I desired a correct copy, to go to my constituents. I desired it, in the first place, because I wished the plain, honest truth to be put before them, and, in the second place, because I had precise information that certain gentlemen, in sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposite—I will not say any member of this House, because, I do not know the fact with regard to that—had intended, and were actually taking steps to have printed and circulated in my constituency many more than a thousand copies of the first print of my speech, in order to convey to my constituents an erroneous impression of what I had said. I, therefore, thought it was due to myself and my constituents that a true version of what I had said should go to them, and I therefore ordered copies of the correct version of what I had said. But I never dreamed or contemplated for a moment, when I was ordering the copies, that there was any improper statement attributed to the leader of the Opposition, or to any other hon. gentleman in this House; and when I found that the hon. gentleman stated distinctly—and when he makes a statement I believe him—that there was an error in the revised copy, I took all the steps I could, by wire and through the double medium of two gentlemen who I knew would spare no effort to serve me in the right way, to have the correction made, and I am now able to say that through the diligence of my hon. friends not a single copy of the speech of which the hon. the leader of the Opposition has made complaint has been distributed among my constituents. I believe one or two copies were sent out for examination, but not one single copy, either of that or of the speech as it is now properly corrected, with the amendment the hon. gentleman has suggested, has been sent to my constituents. If there is a mistake on my part, an unwitting mistake, in attributing a remark to the leader of the Opposition which he did not make, I trust, by the course I have taken—and I have taken,

I think, every step I could to repair the mistake—that he will be able to say to this House, as I think he ought, in justice to a public man, occupying the humble position I do in this House and the country, that upon the full and, I trust clear and explicit, or, whether clear and explicit, the truthful statement I have made, that there was no intentional wrong-doing on my part, and not for a moment the slightest intention to do him an injustice or to save myself from any consequence that might result from the remarks I had made.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman misinterpreted my smile. I repeat the statement which I made, that I had not the slightest idea of indicating, by a smile, any degree of incredulity whatever as to the perfect accuracy of the statement the hon. gentleman has made. I accept his statement as the statement of a gentleman, literally and absolutely accurate. I did not charge the hon. gentleman; I would not have charged him, in his absence, with having done a fraudulent or improper thing in that sense at all. I felt it essential to state, at the earliest moment—and it is fortunate I did so, from what the hon. gentleman has said—simply the facts as they were—and I was sorry the hon. gentleman was absent, the facts that I had not used the language which was attributed to me in the report, and that it had not been submitted to me for correction in any way. The hon. gentleman has now stated how he derived the information upon which he took the responsibility of inserting that interpolation. I am sorry I did not notice, in the course of the debate, that the hon. gentleman indicated that he had not caught my remark. I learn now, for the first time, that he did indicate that, or I would have repeated my remark at the time.

Mr. MACMASTER. It is so indicated by Hansard itself.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not indicated that the hon. gentleman said: "I beg your pardon." I am sorry I did not happen to hear his "I beg your pardon," and when he answered, as I supposed, the observation I had made, I could not be supposed to discern that he was answering some remark I had not made. I supposed he was making a jocose answer to my jocose observation. I was endeavoring to congratulate the hon. gentleman on the progress of development since that period, 150 years ago, when he said his ancestors were savages. He had pointed out: "the Indian will advance by the progress of development" go on and progress; and I said: "The progress of development." I thought he was a striking instance of the progress of development, a proof of the hon. gentleman's theory. That was the whole of my remark, and when the hon. gentleman answered, I was not paying much attention to the response. I did not think it very appropriate, but it did not lead me to the idea that he had misunderstood what I had said. I may express the regret which, I think, the hon. gentleman shares, that when the interpolation was inserted no suggestion should have been made, either by the official reporters or by anybody else, to enquire of myself whether the words attributed to me were correct; but I assume, with the utmost confidence, that the hon. gentleman absolutely believed the statement which was made to him by his friend, that he was quite convinced, from the statement he had heard from his friend, and that he took the responsibility which he and I regret he took, entirely innocent of the slightest desire or design of imputing to me words I did not utter or which he thought I did not utter.

Mr. MACMASTER. I was not familiar with the way in which the Hansard reporters submit these corrections, or whether it was customary to submit amendments of that kind to hon. gentlemen. I see that some of my own interruptions during the debate were not entered, interruptions made during the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. IVES. Until the House met this afternoon, and you had taken the Chair, Sir, I had not expected to take part in this debate at this stage, and I can only express my regret that the gentleman whom I expected to have seen taking part in the debate at this stage, and who is, I regret to say, obliged to be absent, is not here to perform the task much more ably than I can expect to perform it. I regret it all the more because I was not able to be present during the debate of yesterday, and did not have the opportunity of hearing the hon. gentleman during that part of his speech which was delivered yesterday, and I shall therefore be obliged to confine myself, in whatever notice I take of his remarks, to that portion of his speech which was delivered this afternoon. The hon. gentleman, in the first part of his speech delivered this afternoon, I presume, in order to show that the anticipations of the railway company, of being able to pay their fixed charges, are not likely to be realised, stated that the company, unfortunately, had selected the wrong route, that it would have been very much better, for a variety of reasons which he gave, if they had adopted the route through the Yellow Head Pass, which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) had approved of before his retirement from office, and that, as several of the results of this change of route from the Yellow Head Pass to the Kicking Horse Pass, the land through which the road passed was much inferior in quality to what it was further north, the grades and curves were much less favorable, and he then gave us a most harrowing account of snow slides and avalanches that had occurred, and are likely again, at any moment, to occur along the route of the existing line. I am sure the first travellers—and they must be the most courageous of our population—who undertake to travel through upon the first train that goes to the Pacific Ocean, will have occasion to tremble, and probably will not enjoy their ride, more particularly if they read the somewhat lengthened remarks of the hon. gentleman, in order to appreciate his opinion of the danger which results from snow slides and avalanches in the Kicking Horse Pass. He then told us that it could not be expected that this railway company could obtain anything at all worth considering, in the way of China and Japan trade, that is to say, through trade from Asia to Europe. He told us they could not expect it, because, up to the present moment, the trade which had been done by the American railways, of that character, had been very small indeed. Next, he told us that the company must expect a very small local business throughout the extent of their line, because the population at the present time is not over 200,000, and it was not worth our while to compare the prospects of the Canadian Pacific with the prospects of the Northern Pacific, because the population more or less tributary to the Northern Pacific amounted, not to 200,000, but to about two millions of people. The hon. gentleman then proceeded to minimise the earnings of the road, and in order to minimise the earnings of the road, he laid down, what I think railway men, with all due deference to him, would declare to be something entirely new in the matter of net earnings.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh, no.

Mr. IVES. He objects to the company's taking from the gross earnings the operating expenses, and calling that net earnings.

Mr. BLAKE. No, I did not.

Mr. IVES. I beg pardon; I so understood the hon. gentleman. I understood him to object to that, and to say that from that result should be deducted the fixed charges, the rentals and the interest payable on the purchase of the Canada Central and the Quebec, Montreal and Occidental Railway.

Mr. MACMASTER.

Mr. BLAKE. What I pointed out was, that if I was endeavoring to ascertain what the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, the contracted line, were it would be essential not to charge those net earnings with a portion of the interest, expenses and fixed charges connected with the acquired and leased lines. I do not at all object to the usual mode of ascertaining the net earnings of a railway, which is to take the working expenses and the gross earnings, and then deduct the working expenses from the gross earnings, to show the net earnings, but I said that the earnings of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway ought not to be charged with the fixed charges of the leased lines and the acquired lines.

Mr. IVES. I certainly misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I understood him to mention $60,000 as what he considered the proper net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway to be, rather than what they returned.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all. I estimated $1,560,000.

Mr. IVES. Then he refers to the excessive cost, by reason of its rapid construction, and goes on to say that the grades are much greater and the curves much worse than those on the Union Pacific, which he insists, without the Central Pacific, which is part of the Union Pacific, is the standard fixed by the contract. He then proceeds to tell us that the price of land is very much less in the market than it was; that it can hardly be expected that any more revenue can be derived from the sales of land very soon. I fail to understand why it was necessary for the hon. gentleman on this occasion, quoad the purpose of his argument and the conclusion to which he finally arrived, to repeat the line of argument which he has almost invariably used whenever he has addressed the House upon this particular subject. It was necessary for the company, and it was necessary for the Acting Minister of Railway, in laying his statement before the House and suggesting the changes which he does suggest by these resolutions, to induce the House and the county, if possible, to believe that the prospects of the road were such that the company would be able to repay to the country the loan as it would stand after the proposed arrangement is effected; but how it could serve the purposes of the hon. gentleman, how it could strengthen his position or his argument, or could assist him to arrive at the conclusion at which he finally arrived, in the peroration of his speech, I have not been able yet to understand; and it is to be all the more regretted that the hon. gentleman found it necessary to take this line of argument, because I am afraid that its tendency will be to defeat, so far as it has any effect at all, the purpose which the Government have in view in asking the House to approve of the resolutions now before the Chair. What is the purpose of the Government? The proposition is to so change the arrangements now existing under the Loan Act of last Session as to enable the company to use $15,000,000 of bonds, first $7,000,000 and afterwards $8,000,000, and to sell them in the markets of the world, in order to obtain money with which to repay the temporary loan of $5,000,000 and to complete this great undertaking. But, Sir, certainly the tendency of the hon. gentleman's arguments in this part of his speech would be to persuade the investing public not to invest in these bonds, but, on the contrary, to treat them as they did the $35,000,000 stock, when it was in the market for sale. The hon. gentleman says: You have taken the wrong route; you have got bad land, whereas you might have got good land; you have got heavy grades and sharp curves, and, on account of the operating expenses, your road cannot be successful. You have snow slides, which will endanger the lives of your passengers, and may sweep away your track. You cannot expect to receive any advantage from the trade with China and Japan. You cannot expect any great local traffic from 200,000 people—although I admit, as he must have admitted, that the amount of produce awaiting transshipment in that country now is considerable, and would go a long way towards furnishing traffic for the railway. He says: You cannot expect very much from that small population, when the Northern Pacific, with a tributary population of 2,000,000, has yet hardly attained a sound financial position. He further minimises, as I understood him, the earnings of the road, and pointedly called attention to the fact that the lands are practically unsaleable. If the hon. gentleman has no particular object in decrying this land, it is unfortunate that he should have done so, as the tendency is to defeat the object the Government had in view in introducing the resolutions, and to defeat the successful floating of the scheme which the company have asked the Government to sanction. Now, if a wrong route was taken, as the hon. gentleman says, it may not be too late to make a change. He did not propose to make a change. The grades and curves may be amended and, as I shall show, they have been amended in the case of another railway. Does he propose that the grades and curves should be ameliorated? Not at all. Does he propose any change in location which shall avoid the risk of snow slides? Not at all. Does he propose to take any steps to increase the possible trade that may be derived from China and Japan? Not at all. Does he propose to assist in securing a large number of emigrants? Not that I heard. Nor does he propose, by anything I heard him say, to assist in enhancing the value of the land which the company has to sell. Cui bono then this old and much abused reference to the disadvantages under which it is said this company labor? It certainly did no good for the purposes of the hon. gentleman's argument; it was outside the general scope of his argument, and so far as it has any effect, it will be disastrous upon the financial standing of the company. But, Sir, what is the fact with regard to this matter? Was the wrong route taken? It would be admitted at once that at least 100 miles in distance was saved by the route adopted, over the route by the Yellow Head Pass. That of itself is a very important matter. As to the land, the hon. gentleman would admit, I presume, that considering the climate the farther south the road goes, everything else being equal, the more valuable would be the land; and we have the testimony of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) that, far from the land on the route of the existing railway being poor, it is good land; and I had supposed for the past few months that that testimony had settled the pretensions of the hon. gentlemen opposite with respect to the land along this railway. Then I have already mentioned that small as the population in the North-West is, the quantity of grain raised there last year, and which has been and is being shipped, is very considerable, and is so great that it goes far towards furnishing business to the railway, and certainly gives promise, at an early day, of a traffic so large as to make the railway profitable. But the hon. gentleman says, that the Northern Pacific has a tributary population of 2,000,000, and I noticed that he included in that population the State of Minnesota. Now, Sir, I beg to inform you that the State of Minnesota is not in any appreciable degree tributary to the business of the Northern Pacific. The State of Minnesota furnishes business to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, and to those several lines of railway which, starting from Chicago, centre in St. Paul, Minneapolis and other cities of Minnesota. But with respect of the line to Duluth, the Northern Pacific, does not derive any considerable part of its business from the State of Minnesota. These remarks would apply with almost equal force to a considerable portion of the State of Dakota. After you go west of Dakota the population is very sparse, nearly as sparse as the population of our own North-West, and it is a population which, man for man, furnishes less railway traffic than the population of our own North-West. Then I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that so large an extent of country as to contain 2,000,000 of a population is tributary to the Northern Pacific. Why, Sir, in the same sense in which this large extent of country which he mentioned is tributary to the Northern Pacific, the Saskatchewan country, the country about Edmonton, Prince Albert and Battleford, and the southern portion of Manitoba, would be equally tributary to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is tributary in the sense that branches leading from those more distant portions of the country will eventually bring the traffic to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir, with reference to the earnings of the road, it is only necessary to refer to the fact that in the last full year of the operations of the company, as established by their own books, and as set forth in Mr. Miall's statement, the net earnings were $1,191,891. Then there is the point of rapid construction having involved excessive cost, which is a favorite point with the hon. gentleman, and that is one of the reasons he always gives why it has taken so much money to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway. Upon that point I, for a moment, propose to take issue. I will admit that under ordinary circumstances excessive haste means excessive cost, but under the circumstances in which that railway has been constructed, considering the remarkably cheap rails that have been used, the saving of interest that has been effected, and the saving in engineering and other expenses, I believe these savings will amount to more than the increased cost from the increased wages that have to be paid, as a rule, where large numbers of men are required on short notice. Then, with reference to the matter of grades and curves, the hon. gentleman says that the Union Pacific is to be the standard. Well, that was never my understanding, except in the sense that the Central Pacific formed part of the Union Pacific. Why, Sir, there is no such road as the Central Pacific except as a portion of the consolidated road. The whole road is known as the Union Pacific, and is so understood among the people of all the western towns and cities. If you were to say to a man: By what route are you going to San Francisco? he would tell you, by the Union Pacific; not by the Central Pacific and Union Pacific, or by the Northern Pacific and the Southern Pacific. What would be the sense of taking for our Canadian Pacific Railway the standard of a line which does not pass through a mountainous country at all, which does not pass through a country in any respect analogous to that the hon. gentleman has characterised as a sea of mountains.

Mr. BLAKE. By the Yellow Head Pass.

Mr. IVES. I do not mean to say there are no mountains within sight of any portion of the Union Pacific line; but I mean to say that, comparatively speaking, as compared with the sea of mountains which the hon. gentleman delights to refer to, as compared with British Columbia, whether by the Yellow Head Pass or the Kicking Horse Pass, the Union Pacific—what was formerly known as the Union Pacific—is a comparatively level and easy road. The Central Pacific, however, passes over a difficult country, and has a maximum grade of 116 feet to the mile and a maximum curve of 11 degrees. I am sorry for the hon. gentleman's authority that he read to-day from Washington, on account of the trouble which he and the member for North Norfolk took to obtain it, that a change should have been made in the grades of the Union Pacific since the contract was entered into between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. All railway men know, and the hon. gentleman can get the information without going so far as Washington, that mouths since the Union Pacific was selected by the Government as the standard, a very considerable change was made, which reduced its maximum grade, which was formerly 116 feet, to about 90 feet, or a trifle less. The hon. gentleman, in order to give us one of those breathing spells, to which I referred before the adjournment, asked—and it certainly was very amusing—if the statement of the Secretary of State was a correct one, why the company applied to the Government for a loan, and said he could more readily understand the matter if the Government were applying to the company for a loan. I will retort on the hon. gentleman, and ask what objection there can be, after the dismal picture he has drawn with respect to the line, the land, the earnings, the grades, the curves and the prospects of business of this road. Certainly, after his dismal picture, there is as much propriety in asking him if there is any more objection to the road asking further assistance? The hon. gentleman, in the second part of his speech, referred to the proposed new arrangement, the resolutions before the Chair, and said, as near as I could understand him, that he was opposed to them because of certain objections. He said there was a reduction in the rate of interest from 5 to 4 per cent., which he complained of; and he said the arrangement would impair the security which we now hold. So far as this change from 5 to 4 per cent. is concerned, the hon. gentleman himself will admit, I presume, that the Government can afford to make the reduction without any, or, at most, a very trifling loss to the country. There is this much further to be said. This company comes to the country and says: We must have some modification of the terms established by the arrangement of last Session. We want such a change as will, in part, release the main line of our road, so that we can put a bond upon it, that a portion of that bond may be disposed of to the public. The object which we have in view in seeking to adopt these resolutions is to place the company in a position to obtain from the public the additional capital necessary to complete the undertaking in all its entirety and completeness, in accordance with their plans and desires. If we can, without a loss to the country, reduce the fixed charges, so as to enable the company to show that their earnings now are, or are soon likely to be, sufficient to meet their fixed charges, then we are in a position to give a value to the bond, and the company will be enabled to go into the market and secure the sale of that bond, which could not be done if we insisted on the rigorous terms and the rate per cent. of interest that would augment the fixed charges beyond what the company could show they could pay by their earnings. If we have in view the special object, without loss to the country, of changing the arrangement of last Session, so as to enable the company to obtain from the public the additional capital which all admit is necessary, then I say let us frame our present arrangement so as not to defeat the object we have in view; let us, if we can, do it without loss to the country, as we certainly can in this particular instance, and assist in convincing the public that the fixed charges of the road will not be beyond what may be considered to be the net earnings from its operation. Then, the hon. gentleman said this proposition would impair our security. What is our security under the Act of last Session? Our security is a statutory lien or mortgage. How could you dispose of it? You cannot sell it, or even foreclose it, until 1891. Suppose the railway company were not to move another shovel full of earth, I would ask members of the Opposition to state what course the Government could take in order to enforce the loan of last Session.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Take possession.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman ought to be too good a lawyer to suppose that by our own act, by our own will and volition, without legal proceedings or taking steps to show we have a right, we could take possession, and take the road out of the hands of the contractors, until 1891, which is the time by which the contract has to be completed. I do not see very well how we could take the road out of their hands. That is the hon. gentleman's security, which, he says, is going to be impaired. What do we get instead of it? A marketable bond, something we can dispose of for what it is worth.

Mr. IVES.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Hear, hear.

Mr. IVES. If you please, yes; and I trust it is worth more than par. I do not think that would please you. We get something which is marketable, something which can be disposed of and realised upon. The hon. gentleman, during the debate of last Session, when it was proposed to make the loan, argued, and it was what had most effect with the people, that while this was made as a loan it would eventually amount to a gift. The hon. gentleman said: "You will do with this company precisely what you have done with the Grand Trunk; you will waive the claim of the country in favor of somebody else's claim, and move it down in the scale of values, until it will be valueless, and it will thus become a gift." That was the argument of the hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches. That cannot come, under the arrangement now proposed. Under the arrangement now proposed, that marketable commodity can be disposed of. The public may be asked to take this twenty millions, as well as the fifteen millions which is to be handed over to the company, and instead of this arrangement impairing the security, I undertake to say that it makes a better security, that at least it is as safe a security, and it puts it in a position where it may be realised on or disposed of. But the hon. gentleman says we are taking in partners to the extent of fifteen millions, and that in case of default by the company we would be obliged to buy up this fifteen millions dollars worth of bonds, and that that will be a needless expenditure. I cannot concur in that view. If there is a default there may be a foreclosure by a holder of any of these bonds; there may be a sale of the railway, but the Government will only have to take care of themselves, and will have no obligation to take care of the purchasers of those $15,000,000 of bonds. More than that; in the case of default we would have embarked and interested in this enterprise capitalists to the extent of fifteen millions, who would be interested in preventing default, in assisting the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry out their obligations, and who, in case of default, would certainly not be a disadvantage to the Government of the country. Then, the hon. gentleman says that the 21,000,000 acres of land would be insufficient security for the ten millions of last years' loan, for which we do not take bonds, considering the present depreciated value of land, because, he says, the five millions of land grant bonds which the Government holds as security for the operation of the road, together with the $1,123,500 of land grant bonds which are in the hands of the public, will stand before our claim of ten millions of dollars. I ask the hon. gentleman if those amounts do not stand before it now to the same extent as they will afterwards? Certainly they do; and it does not change the position at all in that respect. Even at 80 cents per acre, which is a less amount than the hon. gentleman has dared to mention even sotto voce, the land would be sufficient to redeem the whole three amounts he stated. In the third part of his speech the hon. gentleman attempted to show what the road will cost the country, in case of default, under the present arrangement. Of course, Sir, it is impossible for me, without seeing his voluminous statements presented in Hansard, to attempt a criticism of the tables and figures which he gave in the course of his speech this afternoon. It was impossible for me to take down those figures, or to grasp them during their delivery, and it will only be possible for some other gentleman who will look over those figures to attempt to answer them. One thing, however, struck me, in connection with what the road will cost the country in case of default. He reckons, amongst the items of cost to the country, not his valuation or anyone else's valuation of the land which has been sold, and which we are necessarily deprived of, but $11,000,000, which he says they have derived from the lands. Now, I could understand that as being fair if he were figuring what the road will cost the company; but when he is figuring what the road will cost the country, I should say that it would be more proper for him, seeing that he was very critical with the Acting Minister of Railways in his statement, to give us an estimate of the value of the lands sold rather than to charge in that statement the gross amount, making no allowance for administering the lands—the gross amount of what was received from the sale of these lands, namely, $11,000,000. Then, the hon. gentleman makes even a more questionable entry than that in his statement. He charges $15,000,000 in that statement as the cost of the road in case of default—the amount of the bonds which are to be given to the company to float. Now, that is on the assumption, as he stated, that the country will be obliged to buy these bonds and pay for them, an assumption with which I certainly do not agree. The hon. gentleman did not find any fault with the statement of the Acting Minister of Railways as to the cost of the road to the country, in case of default, if there should be default. He only found fault with the credit entry of the 21,000,000 acres of land at $2 an acre. Now, what is this statement of cost which the hon. the Acting Minister of Railways gave, and which, as I take it, the leader of the Opposition admits to be practically correct. That statement certainly includes everything which can possibly be charged as the cost of the railway, in case the worst comes to the worst, and there should be default. At the risk of seeming prolix, I shall give you this statement, which is not a very lengthy one. We have 3,753,400 acres of land sold at the value of $2 an acre, amounting to $7,506,800; cash subsidy paid and to be paid, $25,000,000; the loan of the last Session paid and to be paid, supposing it is all paid, $25,500,000; proposed loan of this Session, $5,000,000; debt on the Canada Central, $5,333,333, and guaranteed dividend, $7,383,912; land grant bonds sold, with no sales of land to redeem them, $1,123,500; and cost of Government work, $29,500,000; making a total of everything that can be fairly included in connection with the cost of this railway, $103,344,545, an amount that is within the hon. gentleman's estimate in his former speeches of what would be the cost of this railway. The hon. gentleman, as I said before, made a large number of statements as to the cost of the road, as to the amount the company had received, and as to the disposition they had made of it; but I do not gather, from all his speeches, that he thought any of the money had been stolen by the company or anybody else. On the contrary, his explanation of the money which he claimed had not gone into the main line was that it had been invested in outside enterprises and appropriated in paying dividends. I would ask you, Sir, to note especially what the hon. gentleman said as to the effect of a large local traffic upon a road with regard to through business. The hon. gentleman truly said that if we can give to the Canadian Pacific Railway a large local traffic we will make it possible for that railway to carry through business at a low rate, but that, on the contrary, if it has not a large local traffic, the charges upon through business must necessarily be large and excessive. Well, Sir, the company took that same view of the matter. How would you obtain local business if you did not find it within the reach of your main line? Manifestly, by building branches, by extending your connections, by reaching out in different directions to tap business centres. Well, Sir, that the company have done. You certainly would not object to the extension from Callander to Montreal. What position would the Canadian Pacific Railway be in if, on reaching Callander, it were obliged to hand over all its traffic to some independent company, to charge what they saw fit from Callander to Montreal? Why, Sir, if the people of the city of Quebec complain, and justly complain, of the charges made at the present time by the Grand Trunk Railway, between Montreal and Quebec, how much more would they, as well as the people of all this part of the Dominion, including the people of the great Province of Ontario, complain if the Canadian Pacific Railway, on reaching Callander were entirely dependent, in distributing its traffic at that point, on what other and independent lines of railway saw fit to charge? Then, Sir, you cannot object to the extension from Ottawa to Brockville, which gives you connection with the American line of railway at Morristown, N.Y.; you cannot object to the extension from Ottawa to Prescott, which gives you connection with the Rome and Watertown road, at Ogdensburg; you cannot object to the Algoma branch, which, in my opinion, when completed, together with the road from St. Paul to Sault Ste. Marie, will furnish a much larger volume of traffic to the Canadian Pacific Railway than will be given by any other branch of that line. I look forward to the day as being not very distant when a very large portion of that traffic which now centres in Chicago will not go by Chicago at all, but by the proposed new line from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Sault Ste. Marie, and over our own Canadian Pacific Railway system. Then, the Manitoba South Western Railway, in which a considerable amount of money has been placed, the hon. gentleman himself declared the other night, was an enterprise that should be completed, and completed without delay; and, so far as I was able to understand, his objection was that construction had not been proceeded with more rapidly. So that, with regard to investments made by this company in outside enterprises, when we come to consider these enterprises it must be admitted that they are as important to the general scheme as the construction of the main line itself. But the hon. gentleman, in the fourth part of his speech, complained that the company have paid dividends, and he kept this sweetest morsel of his speech, in his opinion, apparently, to the very last; he kept the best of the wine, in his estimation, until the last of the feast; and he drew a very eloquent and harrowing picture of the wrongs which have been suffered by the navvies and the section men of this railway, who have been going without their pay while these bloated stockholders have been drawing their dividends. The hon. gentleman, I presume, was quite right, from a political point of view, in giving great prominence to that part of his speech; and if his statement, which was certainly very plausible and very forcible, was the only statement that could be made, it would be very effective, and taking in the country. But what are the circumstances of the present case, and what has led to the state of things he mentions? The circumstances are these: Canada, in 1881, had a great deal more knowledge of this enterprise, and of what it would cost than it had had in previous years; but we did not know half as much about it as we know to-day. The Government have been learning, the country have been learning, and the Opposition have been learning, ever since the contract has been let to the Pacific Railway Syndicate—

Some hon. MEMBERS. • Hear, hear.

Mr. IVES. Yes, you have a good deal to learn yet. When this scheme was first set on foot, as the hon. gentleman truly said, it was proposed that the capital stock should be $5,000,000, and it was understood that the gentlemen who composed the syndicate, and who afterwards became stockholders in the company, should, either themselves or by others, pay into the Treasury that sum. It was expected at that time—so little did we know what this enterprise would really cost, and so little did we know of its great magnitude and the necessity of branches, extensions and connections—that the $5,000,000 put into the road by the original company, with the $25,000,000 of subsidy, and what would be received from the sale of lands, would be sufficient to complete the undertaking. I take it that the hon. gentleman will not dispute that position.

Mr. BLAKE. Oh, no; we agreed to increase that stock to $25,000,000.

Mr. IVES. If necessary; but I am speaking of the original idea of the Government, who took the responsibility of the measure, and of the hon. gentleman who took the responsibility of criticising it. It must be admitted that there was not much attention paid at that time to such matters as building elevators or providing for the extension from Callander to Montreal; no provision was made for that at all. Well, Sir, if it was thought that $5,000,000 would be sufficient, what was it expected that the company, as a company, would do? Their original undertaking was to risk $5,000,000 of their own money in the enterprise for $5,000,000 of stock; that is all they ever undertook to risk. The hon. gentleman himself admitted, after some two hours of most elaborate figuring, that the company had invested in equipment and construction of the main line—independent of the branches, independent of the extension from Callander, and independent of all outside investments and of all provision for dividends—the sum of $6,800,000. Then, Sir, if the company only undertook to put $5,000,000 into the main line and equipment, while they have put in $6,800,000; what point is there in the hon. gentleman's saying that the company have failed to risk their money, but, on the contrary, are only making provision for themselves? In other words, he would lead us and the country to suppose that the object of these gentlemen was to invest their money at a high rate of interest. What were the circumstances that led to the change of the original plan? The company very soon found that they could not stop at Callander. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), years before, saw that this line must be extended south of Callander, and he subsidised the Canada Central Railway to make the extension; but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, soon after that arrangement was made, foresaw that provision must be made for the extension from Callander. They foresaw that they must get access to these boards in one, two or three or more directions. They foresaw that branches must be built to Algoma, and in Manitoba itself. There were no funds to do this. It was understood that $5,000,000 would be required to build and to equip the main line, and it was found that amount would be required. They ran into debt; they must have these connections, these extensions. What did they do? They came to the Government and asked for power to increase the capital stock, and the capital stock was increased to $100,000,000. Now, what three courses were open to the company at this stage? They must have money; they must have these connections and extensions. The three courses open to them were these: The company might apply to the Government for an increased subsidy; that would not have suited the hon. gentlemen. They might have applied for power to issue bonds, but if they had taken power to bond the road, some new arrangements would have to be made, with reference to the stock they themselves had taken. That stock would have to be converted into bonds if the road was permitted to be bonded.

Mr. BLAKE. Why?

Mr. IVES. These men were not making a present to the country of $5,000,000 for the honor of being connected with this contract. They proposed, under this first arrangement, to be the owners of the road, subject to what it owed. Nobody understood anything else. It was supposed they would be the owners of the road, subject to what it owed, free from bonds; and if the second course were adopted, of putting bonds on the road, manifestly some arrangement would have to be made with reference to their purchase at par of the capital stock of the company. That course was, in many respects, more objectionable than the course of increasing the capital stock. But the increase of the capital stock meant the sale of that stock below par, and its sale below par, when the original members of the syndicate had paid par for their $5,000,000 of stock, would have been manifestly unjust to the members of the syndicate, the original promoters of the company. Therefore, although they took $5,000,000 stock at par, the hon. gentleman tells us they took the other $20,000,000 at 25 cents on the dollar. Supposing his statement to be correct, and I am not prepared to dispute or admit it, they paid, according to his statement, for $25,000,000 of stock $10,000,000, or 40 cents in the dollar, which is more than its market price to-day, or at any time within the last three or four months; so, there was not so very great advantage obtained by the original members of the syndicate in the purchase of this $25,000,000 of stock at 40 cents in the dollar. But that course was taken. It was taken with the consent of the country, without objection from anybody, as the most feasible plan of meeting the necessity of increased capital, for the purpose of making extensions and connections, which it was at that time considered necessary for the success of the undertaking to make; $30,000,000 of stock was disposed of to outsiders, I understood the hon. gentleman to say, at an average of 51 cents in the dollar. Then it was found that the balance could not be sold. There remained $15,000,000 unsold, which the company depended upon for raising the money to complete the undertaking; and owing to the course of hon. gentlemen opposite, about which I will have more to say later on, it became impossible for the company to dispose of this stock, and they were obliged to come to the Government for a new arrangement. Now, what was that new arrangement? It was this: The company represented that if the public could be assured that at least 3 per cent. would be paid annually for ten years, as a dividend on that stock, the stock would become marketable. I admit I should myself have considered such would have been the case, but I remember very well what the hon. gentleman said, with reference to that matter, last Session, when this same subject was being discussed. What course did he take last Session? Did he move against the course of the Government in permitting this arrangement to be made? Not that I am aware of. Did he ever move a vote of censure on the Government with reference to that arrangement? Not that I am aware of. What was the complaint made last Session, with reference to this matter? Was it that it was placing all that the stockholders had given for the stock in the hands of the Government to secure repayment to themselves? No; the hon. gentleman's objections, last Session, were that it was perfectly useless as a financial scheme, that any fool would have seen it was useless, that the merest tyro in finance would see that taking the resources of the company out of one pocket and putting them into another could not possibly enhance the value of the stock. That was what he said. If this money was taken out of the pocket of the company on the one side, and put into its pocket on the other, it was as valuable on the one side of the leg as on the other, and the objection the hon. gentleman raises to it is entirely a new objection. But the Government consented to that arrangement. They consented to receive a sufficient sum of money to guarantee 3 per cent. dividend for ten years; an Act of Parliament was passed, ratifying that arrangement, and under that arrangement stock has since been sold—$40,000,000 being held in Europe, $10,000,000 in the United States, $15,000,000 in Canada. But still the arrangement did not succeed, owing to the same causes which prevented the sale of the $45,000,000 of stock. This stock, with a guarantee of 3 per cent., which the hon. gentleman would lead us to suppose was a bonanza, was not marketable, and the company, instead, found themselves in the position of having stripped themselves of all their available cash capital, which they had placed in the hands of the Government, and which had not enhanced the stock one dollar. Under those circumstances, they were obliged to come to the Government again, and say: "Under the circumstances of the company, under the course which hon. gentlemen of the Opposition have adopted, with reference to us and our undertaking, your guarantee is useless to us, and we must stop, or you must make us a loan." Under these circumstances, the loan of last Session was made. The company's available cash had been deposited with the Government. It was placed there, not for the purposes of speculation, not to enable these gentlemen to draw a large rate of interest, but because it was supposed that it would render it possible to sell the remaining block of stock, and that the company would thereby obtain the funds necessary for the completion of the undertaking, and the Government of the country would have, in this way, avoided the necessity of making the loan which they afterwards made. But the hon. gentleman says that only applies to 3 per cent. dividend on your stock; what about the other 3 per cent., which was paid for three several half years? Why was that paid? I can only say that under the original prospectus issued by the original promoters of the company when they sold the $30,000,000 of stock, they promised that during the construction of the railway 6 per cent. would be paid on the stock. That was published in the prospectus, and the promoters of the enterprise could not, during the construction, refuse to pay it, without being guilty of a breach of good faith. The hon. gentleman has said that the terms made at that time were illegal, that it was paying a higher rate of dividend than the law admitted; but I have reason to know that when the directors asked for subscriptions to that stock they expected that the stock, with the guarantee, with the promise of 6 per cent., would bring an average of 75 or 80 cents on the dollar. If it had, the financing of the company would have been easy. It was under these circumstances that these dividends have been paid. The 3 per cent. paid by the company was paid under a promise put out in their prospectus. They have kept that promise, and continued to pay it until the current half year, when I noticed that the directors have asked the stockholders to forego that dividend. The other was paid under Act of Parliament, under a solemn arrangement made between the country and the company, and the people who took stock, and it cannot be avoided. And the hon. gentleman's policy, for which he was so loudly cheered, is repudiation and spoliation. After seven or eight weeks' study and after eight hours' speaking, the hon. gentleman arrives at a conclusion, and he says: I cannot support this proposition, but if you will ask the gentlemen who hold the $40,000,000 of stock in Europe, and the gentlemen who hold the $10,000,000 of stock in the United States, to consent to the Government handing over to the company the money thus deposited to secure the dividend, and will ask them to pay back the moneys that they have already received as dividends—

Mr. IVES.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. IVES.—I will approve of that proposition.

Mr. BLAKE. No; I did not say that.

Mr. IVES. And in the face of the House of Commons, in the face of this country, upon a solemn occasion of this kind, when an enterprise in which this country has invested millions of dollars comes before us, and says it needs our assistance, when we are solemnly proposing to assist it, that is the policy which the hon. gentleman proposes as an alternative for the resolutions before the Chair. He says these gentlemen, under Act of Parliament, promising a 3 per cent. dividend by the Government of this country, took this stock and paid for it, in faith that the Government of Canada would implement its promise; but the Government of Canada has got hard up, says he; the company have got hard up, says he; they want more money, and you, widows and orphans, and others who have purchased this stock in the expectation of receiving that 3 per cent. interest, should come here and lay your money that you have already received upon the Table of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. IVES. You should consent to the repeal of an Act of Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. IVES. You should change all you looked to when you purchased this stock, and should thus help us out of the difficulty.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Mr. IVES. If the hon. gentleman had confined himself to an expression of regret that the Government had made the arrangement, and of regret that he had not objected to it, and of regret that he had not proposed some resolution condemning it, when it would have been useful to have done it, if the hon. gentleman had said: I am sorry that you will not consent, at this late day, to give up your rights under Act of Parliament, I could have understood it; but, when this company, upon which we all look for the success and development of the North-West, comes before us for assistance, all he has to suggest, all he has to offer, all he has to declare as a policy, is that if the stockholders will return their dividends and consent to no longer claim the 3 per cent. interest promised them by Act of Parliament, he will support that, and he gravely suggests that, until such time comes round, the Parliament of Canada should take no action in the matter at all. I can only repeat the congratulation which I offered to the hon. gentlemen who sit behind that hon. gentleman for having very loudly cheered him when he resumed his seat, because that approaches more nearly to a pronouncement of a policy upon some question that interests the people than any statement that they have had the opportunity before of hearing from him. As I have said, it may be regrettable that this arrangement did not succeed, that it did not answer the purpose for which it was intended, that it did not afford the capital which was necessary. It may be regretted that it was afterwards necessary for the company to apply for the loan of last Session, but these facts exist, and we have to meet them as facts, and it seems to me perfectly childish that we should act in the hope that people who have purchased their stock upon the fact that the Government of Canada, sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada, had entered into an arrangement, would give up their rights and return the money they have received as dividends.

The hon. gentleman made one remark to-day which I heartily approve of. He said he was willing to be measured by the measure with which he measured others. I think, perhaps, it would be worth the attention of the House for a few moments to refer to a most remarkable extract from a most remarkable speech delivered by the hon. gentleman upon an important occasion. The speech which the hon. gentleman made on the occasion I refer to was made before he had been long in public life. I think it was made during the first Session that he had the honor of a seat in this House. It was made before he had become spoiled, I will suppose, by struggling and assisting others to struggle for power. It was made at a time when he was more accustomed to the practice of the legal profession, and when his opinions were certainly more judicial than, I am afraid, they have been on the occasion of the present debate. On the 1st April, 1871, the hon. gentleman made a very important and a very able speech in this House, upon the resolution for admitting British Columbia into the Union and constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway; and at that time, when he was more judge than politician, when his mind was judicial, when he had not become contaminated with the struggle for power or demoralised by it, he made a declaration as to the obligation which rested upon Canada and upon the statesmen and people of Canada by the arrangement with British Columbia. He said:

"The man who would vote for this proposition with the secret intention, not to sink the last dollar, if necessary, to fulfil the obligations thus contracted, was a dishonest man. If the obligation be now incurred, then we will be bound by the highest sense of honor to fulfil it at whatever sacrifice. If we were not prepared to do that, then we were not worthy to have national existence, and national existence would be not worth having. This was not a mere measure for the construction of a railway, which could be repealed at any time if necessary, but, if once passed, is irrevocable."

I had not the honor of a seat in Parliament at that time, but I well remember reading the hon. gentleman's speech and the principles laid down in the extract I have read, and thinking then, as I do now, that they correctly and fairly stated the obligation which rested upon the Government and the people of Canada, under the arrangement which was made with British Columbia to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway, I believe that the hon. gentleman was right when he said that the man who voted for that proposition, with the secret intention not to sink the last dollar, if necessary, to fulfil the obligation thus contracted, was a dishonest man, and that if the obligation was once incurred, as it was incurred, then the country would be bound by the highest sense of honor to fulfil it. Well, Sir, the Bill was passed, the obligation was incurred and the Dominion of Canada, its public men on both sides, whether they voted for or against it, were bound to fulfil that obligation which the hon. gentlemen then described. And moreover, as he very truly and ably said, the obligation was irrevocable, and was binding upon all political parties. Sir, with reference to a great national obligation of this kind, an obligation which is not merely a measure to build a railway, as the hon. gentleman says, the respective duties of the Government and the Opposition in one respect are precisely the same. The Administration, it is true, has to take the responsibility of proposing the ways and means by which to fulfil the great national obligation, but the leader and the members of the Opposition are bound, by the same obligation, to give assistance to those ways and means, unless they can show sufficient and tangible reasons to the contrary. They are certainly bound not to offer factious opposition. I look upon the obligation the hon. gentleman described in much the same light that I would look upon the obligation of the Opposition and their leader in the case of an invasion of the country by a foreign enemy, or in the case of a war like that in our North-West. If I am right, if the obligation and duties of the hon. gentleman who leads this Opposition, with respect to this railway, are analogous to his duties in the case of an invasion of Canada by a foreign enemy, what would be said of the political party or of its leader, that had advised a surrender to the enemy, that discouraged enlistment, that had extolled the bravery of the enemy, that had magnified the strength of the enemy, that had encouraged him by reports that we were starving, poor and without resources, unable to pay our debts, much less any future loan; who refused to assist, and, in every case, opposed everything the Government proposed? Sir, I undertake to say that in the case of an invasion by a foreign enemy the leader of an Opposition who would advise surrender, and who would give aid in every possible way to the enemy, would be called unpatriotic, and could not be said to be assisting in the fulfilment of an obligation to which the country was bound by the highest sense of honor. Sir, I undertake to say that the hon. member has advised a surrender to the enemy. He advised a surrender to the enemy in the matter of the Canadian Pacific Railway, by endeavoring, with all his power, with all his influence and eloquence, in the House, on the platform, in the press and in the country, to prevent the construction of anything that could be called a Canadian Pacific Railway. I undertake to say, and the experience of the last few months has proved it, that a railway which began in Chicago and ended at Calgary would not be a Canadian Pacific Railway. I undertake to say that the scheme which the hon. gentleman still owns—though somewhat timidly, more timidly this Session than ever before—which he still calls his policy, and which was to build the prairie section, leaving the ends unbuilt—I say that scheme was not a Canadian Pacific Railway. By advising that course, I contend he advised a surrender to the enemy. He has not only done all he could to prevent the fulfilment of an obligation to which, in his own language, he was bound by the highest sense of honor, but he has discouraged enlistment—to continue the analogy. And how? By depreciating the value of the lands in the North-West and along the line of railway, by saying that it is bad land, and that you could have got better land by going somewhere else, by depreciating the country generally, and the character of the railway, by exaggerating the cost, by minimising the business to be done, by exaggerating the operating expenses, by discouraging immigration, by encouraging emigration, by understating the amount of immigration and overstating the exodus—in all these particulars the hon. gentleman has discouraged enlistment. And, Sir, he has extolled the bravery of the enemy, he has magnified his strength, by praising the United States, by praising their lands, their climate, their land regulations, their railway facilities, their trade policy, their land policy—in every possible way giving the impression to intending immigrants that the States of the Union were preferable to our own North-West. He has encouraged the enemy further, by declaring that Canada is poor, that our people are discontented, that they are leaving the country; that taxation is enormous and burdensome; that our debt is enormous; that we are unable to borrow further; that our credit will be ruined, and that the obligations we were assuming were far beyond our capacity. Sir, I undertake to say, on my responsibility as a member of this House, that so far as I have been able to gather from his speeches on this subject, he has, in every possible way, hindered, and in no way assisted, the fulfilment of an obligation which he, in common with all other Canadians, was bound by the highest sense of honor to fulfil. Sir, it may be said that a parliamentary Opposition may, in time of war, fairly criticise the methods of defence adopted by the Administration; and that the leader of an Opposition has a right to criticise the means taken by the Administration to fulfil a national obligation to complete a Canadian Pacific Railway. I admit that; but it seems strange to me that the Government of the right hon. Premier, if it were as bad and incompetent as the hon. gentleman thinks, should by any chance have been always wrong. And yet, unless the leader of the Government has been always wrong with reference to this enterprise, then the leader of the Opposition has sometimes been guilty of factious opposition, because, Sir, without any exception that I have been able to discover, he has always opposed everything that has been proposed with reference to this railway, its construction or completion. He opposed the construction of a railway altogether; he has opposed it by depreciating the value of the land; by depreciating the value of the country; by exaggerating the cost of the road; by minimising the business that would be done; by exaggerating the operating expenses; by discouraging immigration and by encouraging emigration; by praising Dakota, Texas and Kansas, and by exaggerating the depression in trade. These are not honest criticisms of the means taken by the Administration; but these are persistent efforts to ensure failure. Sir, let me review the course the hon. gentleman has taken with reference to the proposals of the Government to secure the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway. In 1880, if I mistake not, the Minister of Railways introduced a resolution setting aside 100,000,000 acres of land for the purpose of forming a fund to construct a Canadian Pacific Railway. What was the course of the hon. gentleman when that proposition came before the House? Sir, was the land worth $2 an acre then? was it worth $3 an acre then? was it worth $4 an acre then? No, Sir; it was absolutely valueless for the purpose of constructing a Canadian Pacific Railway. Not the hon. gentleman, but his former leader, in my hearing stated that you could just as well expect to build the Canadian Pacific Railway with one acre of the North-West as you could with 100,000,000 of acres. That statement was made in my hearing and in the hearing of the hon. gentleman, and it was not rebuked by him. His cue then was to depreciate the value of the land. That was in 1880. In 1881, just one year afterwards, the Government came down with a proposition to take 25,000,000 of acres of those 100,000,000, which were set apart in 1880, and $25,000,000, and give them to this company, which undertook to build the railway—mark you, a work, the cost of which the hon. gentleman had estimated as high as $120,000,000. What did the hon. gentleman then do? Was the land worthless then? It had grown in value with extreme rapidity during that short year, from 1880 to 1881. He gave full play to his imagination, and it seemed as if he could not imagine a sum large enough to represent the value of 25,000,000 of acres of land, added to the enormous advantages which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, according to his view, received under that contract. The hon. gentleman then opposed the Government, not because the land was worthless as an asset for constructing a railway, but because they were giving too much, an unnecessary quantity, towards the construction of that road. That was the course of the hon. gentleman in 1881. What was his course next? The moment the contract had been signed, sealed and delivered, the moment the company went on the markets of the world to raise money on the land, and offer their capital stock for sale, there was another change. There was a relapse to the feelings of 1880. The land then became very greatly depreciated in value. The enormous advantages which the company had formerly possessed under the contract began to fade away. The operating expenses began to look very formidable. It began to be ascertained that it would be impossible to operate the road for anything like the gross earnings for years to come, and everything possible was said that could dissuade the public from purchasing the lands and investing in the stock of the company. That relapse was an unfortunate one for the hon. gentleman's sake, for the credit of assisting in any possible way in the performance of an obligation to which he says he, in common with all other Canadians, is bound by the highest sense of honor. The policy of the hon. gentleman has been too retrogressive, indefinite and halting for a live and enterprising young country, stimulated by and competing with the push and energy of our great neighbors to the south. The intelligent and progressive portion have decided that life is too short to wait for the hon. gentleman to decide upon a policy, and they have constantly preferred to entrust the destinies of their country to those who believe in its resources and its capabilities, and who have the courage of their convictions. The hon. gentleman shines as a Liberal when, in a prepared and set oration, redundant with long-drawn-out and well-rounded sentences, he deals with questions outside of living issues; but he is a veritable Bourbon when the progress and advancement of the country is proposed by the measures of his political opponents. His theatrical Liberalism and Bourbonism is well described by language long ago used of another distinguished lawyer—Thurlow :

Mr. IVES.

“ He saw nothing clear but the obstacles to any course ; was fertile only of doubts and expedients to escape deciding, and appeared never prompt to act, but ever ready to oppose whoever had anything to recommend.”

Nothing in the history of this country or of any country ever showed in a stronger light the evils of political partisanship and the evils of struggles for office than the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the connection of the Parliament of Canada with it. If it had not been for political partisanship, if it had not been for factious opposition in this House, in the press and in the country, if we, as Canadians, had worked shoulder to shoulder, as patriots should do, in the performance of a national obligation, we should have been spared the necessity of the loan of last Session, and of the application which is before us for an additional loan. As has been very well said, in matters of this kind, in which the interests of the country are bound up, we should take a leaf out of the book of the friends of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). If we could forget party and think only of country when it came to questions of railway construction, of immigration and of the settlement and development of the country, it would not have been necessary for this application to be made or for the application which was made last Session. But, fortunately, the Government have been strong in the House and in the country. Fortunately, they have not only been strong, but they have been courageous. They have realised that the people have decided that this road shall be built and completed, and that the country shall be settled and developed, and their policy has been a settled and consistent one from first to last, and I trust, before the fall of the Administration, they will have the pleasure of seeing a completed enterprise. I remember last Session the hon. gentleman taunted the Government with being partners, sleeping partners, he said, with the Canadian Pacific Company. He never said a truer thing.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Hear, hear.

Mr. IVES. You are entitled to all the pleasure you can get out of that statement. The Dominion of Canada is a partner with the Canadian Pacific Railway in this respect: they are jointly interested in the settlement and development of the North-West; they are jointly interested in the flow of immigration and the development of the wealth of the country. In that sense, in that most important sense, the people of the country at large are partners of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I am very sorry to say they have received no assistance from members of the Opposition. Fortunately, in this discussion there are some objections upon which the hon. gentleman formerly consumed a great deal of time, but which are no longer heard. We hear nothing now about the people of the North-West being ground under the heel of a soulless monopoly. The experience of the people of Manitoba in the disposal of their wheat last fall, when the poor, down-trodden, ground-down people of Minnesota were obliged to haul their wheat over the international boundary and pay a duty on it, in order to bring it over the Canadian Pacific Railway, that put an end to the well-rounded phrases which the hon. gentleman on several occasions was wont to indulge in, that the people of Canada were being ground down under the heel of a soulless monopoly. The hon. gentleman used to doubt whether the road would be completed in its entirety. He believed that the prairie section only would be built; but we hear no more of that. He used to tell us that if the road was completed, it never would be completed in the time fixed by the contract, and it would be depreciated in character. We hear no more about the railway having depreciated below the character fixed in the contract. Everybody admits, the hon. gentleman himself does not dare to deny, that in the construction of the railway the company have built a road of a character far above the character fixed by the contract. Sir, the Acting Minister of Railways yesterday gave a table showing the capital stock and other particulars with respect to the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railways. I have drawn some important facts from that tabular statement, which I take to be accurate, important as bearing upon the charge that the Canadian Pacific railway has cost too much money. Sir, the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway is only 52 per cent. per mile of the cost of the Northern Pacific, 21 per cent. of the cost per mile of the Union Pacific, and 69 per cent. of the cost per mile of the Southern Pacific. As to the bearing of these facts upon the charge that the stock was sold too cheaply—and the hon. gentleman says that it yielded 46½ per cent.—just compare it in that respect with these other Pacific roads, and you will find that in the case of the Southern Pacific, if you call the land grant $2 per acre, which appears to be the favorite price to-night, and add the land grant to the funded debt, and subtract the total from the total cost of the road and rolling stock, only $10,000,000 remains as derived from share capital, or 6 cents on the dollar. In the case of the Union Pacific, the funded debt added to the cash subsidy paid by the United States Government makes an amount forty-two and a-half millions larger than the total cost of the road—and that reminds me that the hon. gentleman said to-day that none of these roads received a cash subsidy; but they received what amounted to that; they received a guarantee of bonds which the United States Government long since paid.

Mr. BLAKE. They owe the money.

Mr. IVES. So does the Canadian Pacific Railway owe us the money, but you are not satisfied. I say it makes that amount larger by $42,500,000 than the total cost of the road and rolling stock, and if you add the land grant at $2, there would be $109,000,000 over and above the total cost of the road and rolling stock. The share capital was all water, and besides there was a steal of many millions of dollars.

Mr. BLAKE. A big steal for a big country.

Mr. IVES. I want the hon. member for Norfolk, who, on other occasions, has found our southern neighbors to be perfect in wind, limb, and every particular, to note that in this case, at least, they made a big steal. By the same process of reckoning, I find that the Northern Pacific share capital yielded thirty cents on the dollar, so that the Canadian Pacific, which yielded forty-six and one-half cents on the dollar, stands out in favorable comparison with these other Pacific roads.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Another big steal.

Mr. IVES. I challenge the hon. gentleman to-night, or at any other time to suit his convenience, to show where even one single dollar has been stolen or misappropriated out of the funds of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What did they do with it?

Mr. IVES. Your leader told you to-night. He said that $19,000,000 had been invested in outside enterprises, and $19,000,000 laid up to pay dividends.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Which they steal.

Mr. IVES. That is stolen, is it?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Part of it is stolen.

Mr. IVES. You will have your chance to deal with that by-and-bye. This statement shows what are the comparative chances of the Canadian Pacific Railway to earn dividends upon its share capital. The share capital of the Canadian Pacific Railway is only 59 per cent. of that of the

Mr. IVES.

Northern Pacific, 54 per cent. of that of the Union Pacific and 31 per cent. of that of the Southern Pacific. The funded debt is 69 per cent. of that of the Northern Pacific, 10 per cent. of that of the Union Pacific and 40 per cent. of that of the Southern Pacific. I say, Sir, that under these circumstances the outlook for this company is of the brightest character. Taking the leased lines with the branch lines, when, by connections at Detroit River, it is enabled to compete with other trunk lines for the transport of the product and imports of the western States; when, through connections at the Sault Ste. Marie, the products of the north-western States are transported over the eastern section of the trunk line to the seaboard; when, through the settlement of our fertile prairies, there is a large movement of cereals from our own great west; when the surplus stock of the numerous herds grazing upon the foothills of the mountains is transported eastward; when there exists that immense local traffic necessitated by the settlement of the country traversed by the railway; and when, at its ocean termini, lines of steamers are feeding it with the wealth and products of Asia and Europe—who will say that it will not be as valuable railway property as can be found upon this continent. The company has already revolutionised railway travel in Eastern Canada; it has stirred up the dry bones of antiquated management and given us the comforts and improvements of modern times. Through its stimulus, there is being provided at Montreal the necessary terminal facilities for the economic and expeditious shipment of grain—something which the Grand Trunk has never accomplished, and owing to the lack of which, this trade has seriously declined, and been diverted from the St. Lawrence route. We are thus assisting a road controlled by Canadians, operated in the interest of Canada, and for its material development and prosperity, a road that will prosper as we prosper and develop. True, the cost has been large, and the obligations we have incurred are heavy. But it is a consolation to reflect that our nationality has not been founded in bloodshed, nor our debt created by the ravages and destruction of war. It has been founded in peace, and the debt occasioned by the construction of national public works, which have excited the admiration of both continents and placed us in the van of nascent powers. In the years to come, when over the myriad fields of waving wheat the autumnal glow throws a golden splendor; when, from town, hamlet and farm-house resounds the din and hum of a contented and peaceful people, where now is a noiseless and uninhabited solitude, then shall the people of older Canada reap the meed of their public spirit and enterprise, and then shall be related, not the deeds of war, through which national debts have arisen, but how each man, from the bronzed fisherman who braves the dangers of the Atlantic gale for food for wife and children, to the farmer by the great lakes, who fells the tree and tills the soil—each contributed his share to provide happy homes for his children and the expatriated of other climes, upon these boundless prairies, and to set hard and fast the lines of a great nationality.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have listened with very great attention to the speeches of the two members of the Government, and the speech of one prospective member of the Government. We had the Acting Minister of Railways and the able speech of the Secretary of State yesterday, and to-night we had the address of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), who commenced before dinner by promising to tell us a story, by way of introduction. The hon. gentleman called it a joke. I did not hear the joke. The only joke I heard was the hon. gentleman venturing to answer the able speech of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and the hon. gentleman's advocacy of the resolutions before the House, granting the Canadian Pacific Railway $5,000,000 and a change in the security, and the expectation of a grant to the International line of $250,000 a year for 20 years to come, were the huge jokes of the Session, but these were no jokes for the people of this country. Now, the hon. gentleman did to-night as he has done on former occasions. A good part of his speech was devoted to my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake), and he adopted the old role of charging my hon. friend with depreciating the Great North-West, and thereby, as the hon. gentleman said, interfering with and hampering the financial operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman told us that my hon. friend minimised the earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Where did the hon. gentleman get that valuable information? He did not get it from the speech of the hon. member for West Durham, and I challenge him now to state where he got it? When the hon. gentleman made that statement in the early part of his speech, my hon. friend called him to task for it, and he partially apologised. I excused the hon. gentleman, because it was part of his peroration, and could not well be left out, in the way the hon. gentleman, following the illustrious example of the hon. Secretary of State, delivered the closing part of his speech. He charged the hon. member for West Durham with exaggerating the cost of constructing the railway. Why, Sir, no man in Parliament or out of Parliament can exaggerate the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway; it is not possible to do so. He charged the hon. member for West Durham with, by his actions and his speeches, discouraging immigration into that country; he charged the hon. member for West Durham with minimising the ordinary advantage of settlement in the North-West and lauding to the skies the policy adopted by our friends on the other side of the line, and with praising Dakota and Kansas. I challenge the hon. gentleman again on that subject. It is very well for hon. gentlemen, time and again, in the House and out of the House, to make these vague and general charges; but let the hon. gentleman come down to particulars; let him state the occasion when and the place where the hon. member for West Durham, or any other hon. gentleman on this side of the House, said or did anything that would tend to depreciate the character of the soil or climate of the North-West Territories. I know that has been done; but it has not been done by gentlemen on this side of the House. I challenged the hon. First Minister the other night on that subject; but the challenge has not been accepted yet, although I observe that the Mail newspaper of yesterday says that the challenge will be accepted, and will be answered. I say again that if the character of the North-West has been aspersed it has not been done by the Liberal party, but by the Tory party. I do not know the politics of the Sherbrooke Gazette, but I read the following extract from it:

"As Mr. Riley has gone to the sunny South, you may not hear that the inhabitants of the North-West are having the severest winter known to the oldest settler. Sixty degrees below zero is nothing here this winter. Stock are having a hard time, especially pilgrim cattle. I fear Senator Cochrane's thirty-seven thousand head at Hillhurst, on the Belly River, will look small in numbers next spring."

Who do you think signs that letter? It is signed by Mr. G. C. Ives. I do not know him, but I am told he is a strong friend of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). He publishes, in a Conservative paper, scattered abroad throughout the country, what would do more injury to the reputation and credit of that country than all the Liberal members of Parliament have said for the last ten years. We have unbounded confidence in the future progress and prosperity of the North-West Territories; and we believe that that progress and prosperity will commence just as soon as hon. gentlemen opposite cease to occupy the Treasury benches. So much do we believe in the progress and prosperity of that country, that any of us who have a dollar to invest invests it there. Do the Tory members of this House invest their money in the North-West Territories? Do they invest it under the British flag?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No, Sir; they invest it in Dakota and Kansas. It was not very long ago that I received a circular which was sent to me, in which Conservative members of this House laud in the highest possible language the soil and climate of Dakota and Kansas for stock-raising purposes. It was the circular of a company in which several hon. gentlemen, members of this House and members of the Senate, were large stockholders.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No; do not ask me. It is stated in the circular that they had 36,978 head of cattle, valued at $932,712; that the assets of the company were $1,105,220; that they had under fence 40,000 acres of land; that they had under lease 234,000 acres of land, at 2 cents an acre, and that they paid a dividend of 20 per cent. This circular was scattered all over this country. And who do you think the manager of that company was? Why, my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives).

Mr. IVES. It was only less profitable than your enterprise in southern Manitoba.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Yet this man poses as a patriot, who never does anything, except in the interest of the country, who charges hon. members, in season and out of season, with saying everything they possibly can to depreciate this country at home and abroad. Yet he has not the confidence of his expressed convictions in the North-West; he won't invest $1 in the North-West Territories, but he invests a fortune in stock-raising in the State of Kansas. The hon. gentleman has his thousand herds roving over the valleys and hills of Kansas, and yet he lectures us in this House because occasionally, in the course of our duty, we undertake to point out that hon. gentlemen opposite, by their wicked and criminal policy, have done more to retard the progress of that country for the last 10 years than 25 years of the best Government Canada ever had could undo. The hon. gentleman went further; he blamed my hon. friend from West Durham for speaking of this railway as being subject to snow slides and avalanches, as having heavy grades and sharp curves. Well, who did that? Was it my hon. friend from West Durham? No, Sir; it was this Tory Government, who, in their Blue Books, have published it abroad to the country, as the First Minister, in his Blue Books, has told the world that north of the Canadian Pacific Railway and along the line of that railway they cannot grow wheat, on account of the July and August frosts. He complains of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) for blaming the Government for having changed the route of the railway, and he blames my hon. friend for not insisting on the construction of a new railway. He says it is a simple matter that we can have a new railway. No, Sir; one Pacific Railway is enough for us, especially under the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. We do not want any more Canadian Pacific Railways, while the hon. gentleman's friends have seats on the Treasury benches.

Mr. HACKETT. We would have none if you were here.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman says that the security we propose to take is not a security which we shall hold in common with the holders of $15,000,000 of bonds. The hon. gentleman did not pledge his reputation as a lawyer on that point; he was careful not to do that. As I understood it, this company by these resolutions get the power of issuing $35,000,000 of first mortgage bonds, secured by a first mortgage upon their estate, $20,000,000 of which are to be handed to the Government and $15,000,000 to the company. The hon. gentleman says that in case of default in paying the Government bonds there will be no difficulty in the Government taking possession of the road; that the holders of the $15,000,000 bonds cannot interfere with the Government in taking possession of the road. The holders of these bonds are not precisely in the same position as the Government of the country, but the First Minister knows that the Government cannot take possession of the road without paying the $15,000,000 of bonds which are held by outside parties. The hon. gentleman further says: Why, you cannot complain of the expenditure of this company; you cannot object; you ought not to object to the expenditure of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander to Brockville and to Montreal; you cannot object to the construction by the Canadian Pacific Railway of the Manitoba and South-Western Railway; you cannot object to the acquisition by the Canadian Pacific Railway of other lines leading to the seaboard. We do not, we never did object to that, but we do object to the enormous subventions placed at the disposal of the company by the Government of this country for the construction of the main line from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, being misappropriated and applied for the purpose of the acquisition and leasing of other lines. It is the business of the Canadian Pacific Railway to find the means for extensions where they will; our business was to find the funds for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) charges my hon. friend with not having complained during the last Session that this company had deposited with the Government $20,000,000 to secure dividends to themselves upon their own stock, and he thinks my hon. friend, now, is not in a position to complain of this application of money because he did not complain of it last year. Last year the company obtained from Parliament $30,000,000 of money. It was not our business to complain. The Government were not then asking for this $5,000,000. I do not know that Parliament was then aware that the company had $20,000,000 of money deposited with the Government to secure these dividends. I do not believe we were aware of all the facts; but even if we were, that is not any reason why we should not now point out that the money the company has in the hands of the Government ought to be applied towards building this road, and therefore, in the interests of the people and the Parliament of Canada, the company ought to take this money, part of the capital of the company deposited in the hands of the Government to pay these dividends, and devote that money to the building of this road. The hon. gentleman says this is a solemn, a grave, a serious matter; that thirteen years ago we entered into a solemn contract with British Columbia to build the Canadian Pacific Railway; that we are under obligations, as honorable men and a free and independent Parliament, to build this road. We have taken every step required by the terms of union to implement to the letter every term of that contract. We have given this contract to a company to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway; we were assured by the First Minister and the Minister of Public Works, and their colleagues, when this contract was ratified by the Parliament of Canada, that we were giving it to men of undoubted ability and of unlimited means, who would complete the work by the 1st May, 1891, from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. That day has not yet arrived. We were assured last Session, by the ex-Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) that, on the subvention granted in 1880 by Parliament to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway would be constructed, beyond peradventure, from Callander to the Pacific Ocean by the 1st May, 1891, and it was only with the view of hastening the completion of the road that he ventured to ask this Parliament in 1884 to loan the Canadian Pacific Railway the sum of $30,000,000. We are as anxious as the hon. gentleman is to implement this contract, but he must recollect that those are not the only terms upon which Canada agreed with British Columbia to construct the railway. One of the terms was, and this was declared by Parliament over and over again, that by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway the burden of taxation should not be increased, and throughout the whole of our legislation, with respect to the construction of the railway, that was always considered as a fundamental consideration. The hon. gentleman told us a good many things in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but he failed to tell us a good many other things in this connection that would have been of interest to this side of the House, and to the people of Canada. My hon. friend from West Durham, in his statement to the House, gave the figures to show that this company obtained from the people of this country in cash and other assets the sum of $119,000,000, apart from the unsold land, to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was only to cost, according to the estimates of the Government engineer $53,000,000, apart from the Government works. It would be interesting to know exactly what became of the difference between the $119,000,000 and the $53,000,000. The president of the company, on the 13th June last, while addressing the shareholders in Montreal, declared that the assets of this company, when the road would be completed and available for any purpose, would amount to the sum of $177,000,000, without any charge against that sum, except the $65,000,000 of stock. If this company has unencumbered assets valued at $177,000,000, I would like the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe to tell us why it is now knocking at the doors of Parliament, asking for a loan of $5,000,000 and a change in the securities. The papers submitted to Parliament by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company show that on the 1st of January last this company had in hand over $7,000,000 of the money placed by the people of Canada at their disposal, more than they expended in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman did not tell us what became of this $7,000,000, or why the Canadian Pacific Railway does not appropriate that sum towards the completion of this road. It was stated by the hon. member for West Durham, and it is capable of proof, from the documents submitted by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to Parliament, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has now in hand, of the moneys placed at their disposal by the people of Canada, after having charged every dollar that they have expended on the construction of the main line, the amount of $7,000,000, excluding the proceeds of sales of stock. The hon. gentleman did not tell us what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company proposed to do with this sum of money, or why they do not, out of this sum of money thus under their control, appropriate $5,000,000 to complete the railway. Further, it is capable of proof, the documents submitted to Parliament by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company prove it, and the statement of my hon. friend from West Durham cannot be contradicted, that out of the moneys that ought to have gone to the completion of this railway the shareholders in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have drawn out of the capital of the company $7,000,000 by way of dividends, some of those dividends ranging from 12 to 24 per cent. This company, now begging at the door of Parliament for an additional grant of $5,000,000, ought to pay back to the treasury of this company enough, at all events, to complete this road out of the $7,000,000 they have improperly extracted from the capital to pay these extravagant dividends. But my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) says how unfair and unjust this would be, because a large portion of this money has passed into the hands of the widows and orphans of England and Canada, and it would not be right or fair, after these people had taken their stock upon the faith of an Act of Parliament, to refund this to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to enable the company complete their road. Well, that is a matter between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Government and the holders of this stock. It is no concern of the people of this country. That money was placed in the hands of this Government as part of the capital of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the Government had no right to permit these men to draw extortionate dividends upon that capital, until, at all events, the final completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. We know, further, that according to the letter of the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, transmitted to this Government during the sitting of this Parliament, bearing date 18th March, 1885, that this company had, on the 1st January, 1885, in the hands of the Government, $14,288,288 to pay additional dividends upon their stock. The proposition of my hon. friend from West Durham is to appropriate a portion of that money to the completion of this road. They report to the Parliament of Canada that $5,000,000 will complete and equip this road; they say they have $14,288,000 in the hands of the Government to pay dividends to themselves. If this is so, why not appropriate this money, says my hon. friend, to the completion of this road? That proposition is wholly unanswerable; there has been no attempt to answer it by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, and it cannot be answered successfully. It is no answer to say that many of these stockholders are in England. We know that in Canada there are enough stockholders to obtain from the Government upon their own stock enough to complete the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. So much for the observations of my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe. I have only this further to say in respect to them. The hon. gentleman discussed a great many things, but he did not discuss the real question. He gave no reasons, that I am aware of, why the Parliament of Canada should come to the assistance of the Canadian Pacific Railway on this the third time of their demands. The hon. member, when discussing the proposition of 1884, stated that my hon. friend from West Durham, whose objections were strong and powerful then as they have been to-night, had not pointed out any alternative proposition. He said: The Canadian Pacific Railway Company say that they cannot build this road without disposing of and realising on their assets, and to do that now would be practically to sacrifice all their valuable assets; they say they cannot complete the road unless you lend them $30,000,000, and if you are not willing to give this money, submit some alternative proposition, and, if it is reasonable, it will receive my assent. Well, my hon. friend from West Durham has to-night submitted an alternative proposition. He has said: Instead of saddling this country with an additional $5,000,000 to be loaned to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, let the Canadian Pacific Railway Company take out of the hands of the Government, the monies deposited there to secure them enormous, outrageous, extortionate dividends, the $5,000,000 required, and apply that towards the completion of this railway. What will the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe do? Will he accept the alternative proposition? Verily, no. He will vote with the Government, and if my hon. friend from West Durham had submitted even a more plausible and reasonable proposition than that—and he could not well do it—my hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe, and other hon. gentlemen in this House, who are the unwavering supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, would not adopt any alternative proposition. We had a speech from my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, and a speech from the hon. the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State occupied five hours in the delivery of his speech. He discussed everything beneath the sun, except the proposition before the House. He steered clear of that. He told us something of the French Canadian voyageurs, of their indomitable energy and wonderful perseverance in exploring the great North-West; he quoted a little poetry and read a good deal of prose—he gave us what the First Minister would call a microscopical history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from Adam down; he gave us a sketch of the Union Pacific Railway, the Central Pacific Railway, the Northern Pacific Railway, and all their branches, their bonded and other debts, and their exact financial position. The hon. gentleman approached dangerously near the resolution before the House, but he kept prudently clear of it in the five hours speech that he delivered to the House, and he assigned no reason whatever why the Parliament of Canada should give to the Canadian Pacific Railway—because I look upon it as giving this sum—an additional $5,000,000, and change, in the most material parts, the security the country holds. The Acting Minister of Railways gave us a plain and business-like statement of the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from his own standpoint, but he had to admit the fact that on the 30th of April last the company had in its hands the sum of $5,776,983 with which to complete this railway. If the company had this sum in their hands then, why are they here asking for five millions more? The Minister told us, further, that they had in the hands of the Government the sum of $7,390,312 that might be used for the same purpose, or in all, the sum of $13,167,295 which they then had at their disposal for the purpose of completing this railway. Sir, I ask again if they had that sum of money in their hands for the purpose of completing this railway why are they asking this Parliament to grant an additional sum of five millions and a change in the security? Now, Sir, I say that the whole course of the Government in relation to this railway is of the most extraordinary character, and it is worth while spending a few minutes in briefly reviewing the dealings of the Government with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—not for the last fifteen or twenty years, but since the 1st of January, 1881, when the contract to build the Canadian Pacific Railway was ratified by this Parliament, and pointing out the shuffling and vacillating conduct of the Government; their unreliable and untruthful assurances given to the Parliament of this country when this contract was ratified; the misrepresentations that were made by the hon. gentlemen opposite, and the false pretences under which that contract was ratified by the Parliament of Canada, and the consistent attitude the Liberal party have occupied for the last ten years, with respect to the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir, the propositions of the then Minister of Railways, for the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway under the contract, were submitted to Parliament on the 13th December, 1880, on that day, Sir Charles Tupper moved that on the following Tuesday the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to consider the following resolution:—

Mr. CAMEBON (Huron).

“That it is expedient to grant and appropriate $25,000,000, according to the terms of the contract relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, transmitted to this House by His Excellency the Governor General, by his Message, dated the 10th December, 1880.

“2 That it is expedient to grant and appropriate 5,000,000 acres of land in the North-West Territory, according to the terms of the contract so transmitted as aforesaid.”

The propositions then submitted by the Minister of Railways to Parliament were of the gravest possible consequence to the people of this country. They involved a grant of 25,000,000 acres of land to this company; they involved the grant of $25,000,000 in money; they involved the grant of such portions of the railway as the Government of this country had constructed or had undertaken to construct under the terms of that contract; they involved, as we pointed out, a large increase in the national debt of this country, and they involved, as we contended, a direct violation of the terms upon which British Columbia became a part of this Confederation, and about which the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) has spoken so much. Those terms were that the railway should be commenced within two years after the compact between British Columbia and Canada was assented to; that the road should be completed within ten years thereafter, that the burdens of the people of this country should not be increased; that the rate of taxation then existing should not be increased for the purpose of the construction of this railway. I say, further, Sir, that the circumstances under which this contract was submitted to Parliament were of the most suspicious character. We know that the First Minister of this Dominion and some of his colleagues went to England, in the year 1880, with the view of enlisting the support of the capitalists of England in the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway, and assurances were given to us from time to time in the Conservative press that the mission of the First Minister had been successful, that, in fact, he had accomplished the crowning achievement of his life and had been able to obtain the assistance of capitalists in England, France and Germany, in the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway, and that the people of this country would not have to spend a single dollar for that purpose. We had the most solemn assurances from hon. gentlemen opposite that this contract was signed, sealed and delivered in England before the First Minister left the shores of England that the hon. gentleman had succeeded in obtaining the assistance of English, German and French capitalists in the construction of the road, that the construction of it had passed from the Canadian Government to the control of monied men, men whom we were told were men of immense resources, of unlimited means, and that the people of this country would not be called upon to pay a single dollar for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir, the hon. gentleman, on his arrival in Canada from England, was feasted in many parts of the country, and among other places in the city of Montreal; and for the purpose of completing my review of the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite in relation to this railway, I shall read to you a few remarks made by the First Minister on the 27th of September, 1880, in the city of Montreal, about the success of his mission:

"I have great pleasure in telling you, gentlemen—though I cannot go into the matter fully, because I am merely the agent of the Governor in Council, sent to Great Britain along with two of my colleagues, and must submit the arrangements we have made for the approval or rejection of the Parliament of the country—that we have made a good arrangement with a number of capitalists, not alone in England, but in Germany, France, the United States and Manitoba; we have made a combination of forces which will not only be quite sufficient to build the road, but will have additional influence to turn the great current of German emigration from the United States to Canada. We have received security—satisfactory security—for the proper construction and running of the road for ten years after its completion, which will be twenty years hence. We have made an arrangement, not that the road shall be built through a fertile district and left untouched in the wilder parts, but that it shall be constructed, whether through a wild or a fertile district. We have made an arrangement by which the land will be put upon the market and sold at once, by which means there will be a continuance of systematic emigration to the North-West. We have secured the running of it for ten years after it is built, and when I tell you that when the road is finished it will not cost the country a bit more than the arrangements would that I made with Sir Hugh Allan in 1873, you will, I am certain, rejoice with me. * * * We have made an arrangement by which the road is to be built; we have caused a desire on the part of a settler to emigrate to Canada, and the road will be built without costing one cent to the people of Canada. We have made the arrangement 'a contract firm.' The contract will be carried out, the railway will go, on whether Parliament meets in November or February. The railway will go on all the same, and we will trust to Parliament and the country to sustain us in our course. The contractors are men of means, millionaires, capable of building a dozen railways. They are quite willing to take the risk of going on at once, and they will do so."

At that very time, when the First Minister was deceiving and misleading the people of Canada by these boastful utterances, the hon. gentleman had accomplished nothing. The hon. gentleman had no contract. The hon. gentleman had not a scrap of paper binding anybody in Canada, England, France, Germany or elsewhere, to construct a single foot of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The contract subsequently submitted to Parliament bears date 21st October, a month after the hon. gentleman had delivered that boasting speech to his admirers in Montreal. The contract itself, when submitted to Parliament, was of the most extraordinary nature. It involved such extraordinary concessions, grants in money and in land, such extravagant privileges, such extensive franchises, such extensive exemptions, such great monopolies, that the representatives of the people in Parliament, even the friends of the hon. gentleman, were surprised and astounded at the magnitude of these subventions. What were the subventions? I wish to direct the attention of the people of this country to a short historical sketch, which I propose to give, of the connection between this Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the terms upon which this Government purposed to give the contract to the company. By the terms of this contract the syndicate agreed to construct such portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway, extending from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, as the Government of Canada had not constructed or agreed to construct, by 1st May, 1891. The Government of this country agree to hand over to this company, completed: 1. The Lake Superior section of the Canadian Pacific Railway; 2. The road from Kamloops to Yale; 3. The road from Yale to Port Moody; 4. Suitable station buildings and water service on the portions so constructed by Government or to be constructed; 5. The road from Emerson to Winnipeg; 6. 25,000,000 acres of land; 7. $25,000,000 in cash; 8. All land required for the road bed, stations, station grounds, workshops, dock ground and water frontage at the termini on navigable rivers, buildings, yards, and other appurtenances required for the convenient and effectual working of the railway; 9. Government agreed to admit free of duty all steel rails, fish-plates and other fastenings, spikes, bolts and nuts, wire, timber and all material for bridges to be used in construction of the railway and telegraph line; 10. Also, all telegraph apparatus; 11. Government agreed to convey to the company, at cost price, and without interest, all rails and fastenings bought by it since 1879; 12. The Government agreed to extinguish the Indian title to the lands so to be conveyed to the company; 13. The Government gave the company the right of locating the line of railway as the company might see fit; 14. Government gave the company the unlimited right, the monopoly, of constructing branch lines; 15. And the monopoly of constructing all lines south of the Canada Pacific Railway; 16. The Government gave the company the right to prevent the construction of any line to within 15 miles of international boundary; 17. Government agreed to the exemption of railway stations, station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards, and other property, rolling stock appurtenances and capital stock of the company, from taxation for all time; 18. The Government agreed to exemption of lands from taxation until sold or occupied. Those conditions, concessions, grants, privileges, monopolies, were so different from what the First Minister led the people to believe they were in his speech delivered on 27th December, 1880, in Montreal, that the people were astounded at the nature of the propositions. The hon. gentleman submitted the proposals to Parliament on 10th December, 1880, and on the following Monday the Minister of Railways moved the House into committee to consider the resolutions. Up to that time no information had been given to the people or Parliament as to the nature and extent of the concessions made and the grants given under the contract. No information was given as to the steps taken by the Government to call for tenders and invite competition for the construction of the railway. No information was given as to the circumstances that led up to the signing of the contract between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Information was asked by the leader of the Opposition, and by other members, on this subject, information was persistently and consistently refused. In order that the people might be informed upon the subject, that members of this House might be able to discuss the propositions intelligently, fairly and understandingly, in order that they might know something of these extraordinary subventions, and as to whether the terms by which British Columbia became part and parcel of the Dominion had been violated and as to whether the contract, necessarily involving an increased rate of taxation, information was asked for and refused. The leader of the Opposition moved a resolution, in order to obtain time and to secure that full and ample consideration which the question demanded. He moved:

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"That in view of the magnitude and gravity of the proposition, this House resolve itself into committee, on Monday, 5th January, 1881."

That amendment, which was a reasonable proposition, was voted down by the majority. Even two weeks were refused the Opposition in Parliament to consider the obligations to which the Government of Canada, in their mad folly, were committing the people of Canada. The discussion proceeded and the leader of the Opposition and other hon. members on this side clearly pointed out the enormous subventions, grants and concessions proposed to be given under the resolutions. We pointed out that in the work completed and to be completed, in the land grant, estimating the land to be worth $2 per acre, and in other subventions, the Government were placing at the disposal of the company a sum equal to $111,800,000. We pointed out further that the Government were giving the company enormous concessions, franchises and monopolies which were worth no less than $40,000,000. We pointed out that in money, lands, railways completed and to be completed, concessions, franchise exemptions and monopolies, the company received no less than $161,800,000. We pointed out, in addition, that we gave the company the Canadian Pacific Railway finally completed, for all time to come. We pointed out that this road, which, under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, was to cost this country this enormous sum of money, would not cost for construction, according to the estimates of the Government engineers, made in 1880, more than $84,000,000. We pointed out in the strongest possible language to Parliament that those concessions, grants and subventions should not have been given; that the people of this country should have an opportunity of pronouncing upon the terms of this contract. Sir, the Liberal party were not satisfied with mere protests in Parliament. We adopted the most solemn and formal way known to Parliament of recording our opinions upon this question. Every vulnerable point of the contract was challenged by amendments submitted by gentlemen on this side; our protests were crystallised into amendments against the obnoxious features of the contract, and the votes of the representatives of the people in Parliament were challenged on this question. Our protests were unheeded; our warnings were in vain. The First Minister, by the majority he had in Parliament, succeeded in forcing those resolutions through the House, and this country, in 1881, became saddled with these gigantic obligations, which, I fear will rest upon it for many years to come. We pointed out that an undertaking of this kind, involving such gigantic obligations and enormous concessions, should not have been entered upon by the Government in a private contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway; that tenders ought to have been called for and competition invited, and that it was unwise and unsound policy for the Parliament of Canada to ratify a contract without calling for tenders and allowing fair and reasonable competition. How were we answered? We were assured by the First Minister and by the then Minister of Railways that this was an admirable contract; that the Government had succeeded in removing the responsibility for the construction of the road from the shoulders of the people to the shoulders of the company, and that for the construction of this railway the people of Canada would not be required to pay another dollar. The Ministers of Railways, who was in charge of the resolutions in 1880, as he was in charge of the resolutions of 1884. The Minister of Railways, who was always daring, bold and defiant, declared, in his place in Parliament, with reference to this contract:

"Hon. gentlemen do not like the company, but one would suppose that their ideas had undergone a revolution on that subject. The gentlemen who have undertaken this work stand before the people of this country to-day in the strongest position that it is possible for gentlemen to occupy in relation to a great enterprise such as this is. The Canadians engaged in the enterprise are men who are second to none in respect to commercial standing and capacity, and by their success in carrying out other great railway enterprises they have afforded us the best possible guarantee for the manner in which they will fulfil their engagements with the Government and Parliament of Canada."

He proceeded:

"I say that this company embraces capitalists, both your own and other countries, who are men of the highest character, men whose names are the best guarantees that could be offered the people of Canada, that any enterprise they may undertake will be successful."

Sir, unfortunately for this country, the assurances of hon. gentlemen opposite, in 1880, when Parliament proposed to ratify this contract, have been scattered to the winds, and to-night we have not a particle of reliable security upon which this country can fall back for the completion and running of the road for the ten years for which the hon. gentleman declared he had a money security. Sir, we protested further against the vague, uncertain and indefinite terms of the contract. We knew we were pledging the credit of this country to an enormous extent, that we were placing in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company an enormous amount of money and assets for the completion of this road, and we pointed out to hon. gentlemen opposite that we had no security, that the end had then been reached. The element of finality was wanting, and we had no security, but that we might be called upon to pay additional sums to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the construction of this road. How were we answered on that occasion by hon. gentlemen opposite? By providing that ample security which the First Minister declared he had obtained, when addressing his friends in Montreal on the 27th of December, 1880? No, Sir; the only guarantee we had was the statement of the Minister of Railways, in the following language:—

"We will not only have the proud satisfaction of seeing Canada assume an advanced and triumphant position, but that she will be relieved from the expenditure of a single dollar in connection with the construction or operation of this railway."

Now, in the face of the declarations of the Minister of Railways and the First Minister, three years afterwards we had this same Canadian Pacific Railway Company, whose members, we were told, were men of unlimited means, men of great fortunes, men whose character and standing were such that they would carry out the contract—we had these men knocking at the doors of Parliament, asking Parliament to aid them to the tune of $30,000,000. And what have we now? We have these same wonderful moneyed men, men of such great ability in the completion of such enterprises as these, men of such unlimited means, knocking for the third time at the door of Parliament, asking for additional aid, and the abandonment of the security we took in 1884 for the repayment of the loan of that year. Sir, in 1880, when we protested against the ratification of this contract, the First Minister and his colleague, the Minister of Railways, assured his followers that they had ample security, that the road would be constructed from end to end, without costing the people of this country one dollar. The hon. gentleman's followers believed him, and they cheered him lustily. In 1884 we had the Minister of Railways coming to Parliament and practically admitting that the calculations made in 1880 were not reliable. We had him coming to Parliament and practically admitting that the Canadian Pacific Railway was then in financial difficulties; that they were practically on the eve of bankruptcy, and that the work would stop unless the public purse came to their relief. Hon. gentlemen opposite received the same assurances and they ratified the resolutions of 1884, amid uproarious cheers; and now, in 1885, just twelve short months after we had the solemn assurances of the hon. First Minister, of the Minister of Railways, of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) and of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), that the loan of 1884 was more than ample to complete the railway from end to end and thoroughly equip it, this same Canadian Pacific Railway Company come knocking at the doors of this Parliament and boldly demands, as a matter of right, that they shall get $5,000,000 additional, and that the security we obtained for the repayment of the loan of 1884 shall be materially changed; and I have no doubt, from what I see to-night and from what I heard this afternoon, that these resolutions will be affirmed amid the cheers of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. We further pointed out, in 1880, that in money grants, in completed and to be completed works, in land at the Government valuation, and in franchises exemptions and monopolies, this company got $161,800,000, although this road was only estimated to cost the contractors $84,000,000; and, therefore, the country was asked to pay for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway a sum enormously in excess of the real cost. Sir, those objections were of the first possible importance; they impressed themselves on hon. gentlemen opposite; they required to be met and answered, and they were met and answered by hon. gentlemen opposite; but how? In order to strengthen the wavering faith of the supporters of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, in order to give them courage to vote for the resolutions then submitted to Parliament, assurances had to be given. The assurance of the Minister of Railways was given. "But they had not faith in that. His reputation as a stretcher of facts, especially in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, was too well known. Other solemn assurances had to be given. They were given; the hon. the Minister of Public Works, who is known, if not in reality, at all events in appearance, to be the honestest man on the Treasury benches, took the stand and stated:

"We want a good and great railway, and also to put it on a proper footing, so as to prevent its owners coming back to us and saying, 'you starve us to death, and we want more money.'

"Mr. CASGRAIN. We have the guarantee.

"Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have the guarantee, no doubt; but perhaps the hon. gentleman would prefer to have them come to ask for better terms. I am not of that opinion, nor is the Government."

Again, he says:

"I have shown, moreover, that not only will the railway be built by the syndicate, but worked for all time to come, and that we have sufficient guarantees in our hands to insure both these objects."

Now, it is perfectly clear that when hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches gave those assurances they misled and deceived their followers; because it turned out, in 1884, that there was no such security. It turns out to-night that the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches are entirely at the mercy of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and are bound, whether the country's interest requires it or not, that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall get exactly what they require. Sir, the Opposition were thoroughly impressed, in 1880, with the recklessness of hon. gentlemen opposite. We knew perfectly well that they would stick at nothing to gain a point; we knew that they would not hesitate to violate an Act of Parliament and the solemn declaration of Parliament, that the burdens of the people of this country should not be increased by the construction of this railway; we knew that they proposed to create and when created to utilize this great corporation, and so we protested that no contract should be made and no obligation entered into by the Government or Parliament of Canada, that would be a violation of the terms on which British Columbia became part of this country, namely, that the national debt and the rate of taxation should not be increased. How were we answered? We were answered as follows, by the Minister of Railways:

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"We would relieve Canada of all additional responsibility in the further construction of the railway. And just when we are lifting from our shoulders to the shoulders of a private company all responsibility, I ask this House, in candor, to tell me whether they do not think that, as far as we could, we ought to post those gentlemen in as favorable a position for the construction of the road as we occupied ourselves."

Did the hon. gentleman succeed? No, Sir; what was the result of the course he took? The result was an application within three years for an additional grant of $30,000,000, and an application this year for $5,000,000 more. We pointed out, further, that the mountain sections of this railway should not be constructed until the prairie sections were completed; we knew that to do so would press heavily on the people of this country and would not be in the interest of the country; but we protested in vain. What are the consequences to-day? There is no intelligent man in Manitoba or the North-West Territories but will admit that it was a huge mistake to construct the mountain sections before the prairie sections and branch lines, extending both north and south of the line, were constructed, thus securing the filling up of the prairies of the North-West with an active and thriving people. I say it was a huge mistake, to encourage such settlements along the line of railway surrounded by a fierce, untamed and uncivilised barbarians. In 1880 we protested against giving this company the monopoly of constructing all railways south of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We were told by the First Minister that our fears on that subject were groundless—that we could not check Manitoba. What has been the result? The result of that monopoly has been to create dissatisfaction and discontent from one end of Manitoba and the North-West Territories to the other. The existence of that monopoly is one of the grievances that have been presented to the Government by the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. The result has also been to check the tide of immigration that would otherwise have flowed into that country, to stunt the growth and to check the prosperity of the country. It is utterly useless for us to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to encourage immigrants to leave their homes in the old country, to settle in the North-West, when we cannot give them railway facilities after they reach there. The Premier of Manitoba, discussing the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite declared:

"At present we are on the verge of a crisis from which we must emerge in a better or a worse condition. Not, however, until the masses were made aware of their condition, would they stand up and maintain their rights? The time has come when Manitoba must be placed on a level with the other Provinces of the Dominion. Not one new arrival had been in the Province three months before he, who before was loud in its denunciations, was equally loud in demanding its right. The eyes of the farmers had been opened and they were alarmed at the prospect. These matters should strictly engross the attention, not only of the Provincial but of the Dominion Parliament."

Such are some of the circumstances under which the contract of 1880 was ratified. Some of the protests made. Some of the answers given and some of the consequences that followed. I have drawn the attention of the House to the circumstances under which the contract of 1880 was ratified; I have shown that the assent of Parliament was obtained by promises, pledges and assurances from hon. gentlemen opposite, every one of which has proved to be baseless. I have shown that the grants, the privileges, the monopolies and the exemptions were simply enormous, more than double what was sufficient to construct the railway. I say again that the resources placed at the disposal of the Canada Pacific Railway by the people were out of all proportion to the cost of construction of the Canada Pacific Railway. Let me point out for a moment what the cost of construction was, and what these resources really were. I know my hon. friend from West Durham has given his own figures on this subject; I know that he has dealt with the question, and nobody is able to deal with it more ably, but I have also investigated the documents submitted by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Parliament, and have made up calculations, the aggregate results of which are substantially those which my hon. friend arrived at, and practically the same as the statement made by the president of the company to the shareholders, in Montreal, on the 13th June last. I propose to submit a brief statement of the cost of the railway and the resources this country has placed at the disposal of the company. The cost of the Government sections, that is, such parts of the main line as were to be constructed by the Government, amount to the sum of \$33,500,000. This includes, of course, the cost of survey. I am aware the hon. Minister of Railways protested, during last Session, against this item being added to the cost of the Government section, but you cannot build a road without having first surveys made, and their cost is an addition to the cost of the road. The costs of the sections constructed and to be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway is estimated to be \$51,500,000, the cost of equipment is \$3,000,000, or a total in these three items of \$93,000,000 to construct and equip the Canadian Pacific Railway from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. Let us consider for a moment the resources placed at the disposal of the company to build and equip this road. We gave the company, in lines constructed and to be constructed by the Government, including surveys, \$33,500,000, \$25,000,000 cash subsidy, 25,000,000 acres of the choicest land in the whole North-West, estimating these lands at \$2 an acre that would be \$50,000,000, I observe that in the report brought down last year by the company the land sales averaged \$2.36. The president of the company says that the lands sold this year averaged \$3.01 $\frac{1}{2}$  per acre. Putting the price, however, at only \$2 an acre, would give, for the 25,000,000 acres, \$50,000,000. Then there was the loan of 1884, \$29,810,000, and the loan obtained by the company on the security of transport and postal service and other effects, \$7,380,000, making a total of \$146,490,000 of resources. These were the total resources placed at the disposal of the company to complete the road that really cost \$93,000,000, but that was estimated, in 1884, to cost only \$84,000,000. This would leave a balance in the hands of the company, after paying for the completion of the road, in money and land grants, \$53,490,000, and, in addition, the company would have the road in perpetuity. But this is not all; these are the sums placed at the disposal of the company in cash and other aids. I have shown that after the road was completed and paid for by the people of Canada and handed over in perpetuity to this company, there would be still a balance of \$53,490,000 to divide among the shareholders. In addition to this, the company had and has at its disposal, from various other sources, large sums of money, which ought to have been used in the construction of the road. First, under the old contract, the syndicate was bound to take stock to the extent of \$5,000,000 at par. It did so, and that placed at its disposal to complete the road \$5,000,000 more. Second, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company placed in the market \$60,000,000 of the stock of the company, \$20,000,000 of which was sold to the members of the old syndicate at 25 cents on the dollar, yielding \$5,000,000 more; and \$30,000,000 of this stock were sold at 51 cents on the dollar, the larger portion of it being sold to the old syndicate. That yielded \$15,281,764; \$10,000,000 were sold at 42 cents on the dollar, most of it to the members of the old syndicate. That yielded \$4,211,294. Mr. Stephen, the president of the company, in his letter of the 18th March, 1885, states that the net earnings of the company, up to 1885, amounted to \$1,626,063, or a total of \$31,119,111, being all assets outside of the cash and effects placed at the disposal of the company by the Government of Canada; or, in other words, the sum of \$177,609,111 which this company had at its disposal to construct, build and equip a road that will cost only \$93,000,000. This will leave in the hands of the company \$84,609,111 more than sufficient to build the road; and in addition to all this, this company own the road so completed and equipped for all time to come. Mr. Stephen, in his address to the shareholders in Montreal, arrived at precisely the same result by different calculations and a different mode of reasoning. He says the assets of the company, when the road is equipped and completed, will amount to the sum of \$230,960,585, less the sum of \$53,892,245, which is the debt properly chargeable against the road. In other words, according to Mr. Stephen's calculation, the company will have, in assets, when the road is completed, \$177,068,340. No wonder Sir Charles Tupper, in 1884, when submitting his proposition that year, declared that the people of Canada had given this company a magnificent subvention, and that this company had no claims on the liberality of Parliament or the generosity of the people; and no wonder Mr. Stephen, in his address to the shareholders, on the 13th June last, could with pride point to the wonderfully profitable speculation which the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were engaged in, when they would have at their disposal, on the completion of the road, assets valued at \$177,068,340. I have shown you, out of the documents submitted to Parliament by the company, and from the address delivered by the president to the shareholders, that this company has in cash and assets \$177,609,000 after paying for the construction and equipment of the road. It may be said, however, that a large portion of those assets were not in cash or were unrealised. That is true; but I ask what have the people of this country to do with that? Parliament ratified the contract with this railway company, giving them these aids, and the railway company undertook to provide the funds necessary for the completion of the road, outside the money we granted. It may be also said that the company could not construct the road out of unrealised assets. That is also true; but again I ask what have the people of Canada to do with that? The president says these assets are worth their face value, and it cannot be contended that the company are unable, with assets worth \$177,000,000, to raise the paltry sum of \$5,000,000. Further: the people of this country paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in hard cash, more than the Canadian Pacific Railway Company paid in hard cash to complete such portions of the road as they were bound to complete between Callander and the Pacific Ocean. I prove this out of the documents submitted by the company and from the address delivered by the president to his constituents at the meeting in Montreal, on the 13th of this month, and this also is apart from the \$29,493,000 realised by the company from their stock manipulations. In the Session of 1884 the company submitted to Parliament statements showing what they had expended and what would be necessary to complete the road. The company had expended in construction, \$23,078,950; they had expended, in rolling stock, materials and other works, \$10,871,050; the estimate of the cost to complete the road was \$27,000,000; or, in other words, the company had expended, or were to expend, on the construction of the main line, \$60,950,000, and these are the figures given by the company themselves to Parliament. Mr. Van Horne, the engineer of the company, stated subsequently that they would require four millions less than the estimate, because it was found, owing to the easy nature of the works to be constructed, that they could be constructed for this amount less. Then, all the company expended and required to expend to complete the Canadian Pacific Railway was \$56,950,000. Let us see, from the documents which have been submitted to Parliament, how much the Canadian Pacific Railway received in hard cash out of the funds provided by the people of this country. They admit having received, or that they will receive by September of this year, \$25,000,000 subsidy. The land sales and the land grant bonds and bonuses make \$10,900,000. There is the loan of 1884, \$29,810,000. This makes in all \$65,710,000. I take no account in this of the loan of over \$7,000,000 on the security of the postal and transport service. According to Mr. Van Horne, they expended and required to expend only \$56,950,000. In other words, the company received, including the loan of 1884, in hard cash from Canada, \$8,760,000 more than they paid and required to pay to complete the whole line from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. This was the condition of the account on the 1st January, 1884. Let us see the condition of the account in 1885. We get that from the document submitted to Parliament, and from Mr. Stephen's letter of the 18th March, 1885. Mr. Stephen says, in that letter, that on the main line and branches they had spent \$52,595,000. He does not condescend to particulars; he does not say how much was spent on the main line and how much on the branches; but, in 1884, he said that \$23,078,950 had been expended on the main line, and, according to his estimate and the estimate of his engineer, it required \$27,000,000 more to complete the main line, and for rolling stock \$8,000,000; or, in other words, they spent and required the expenditure, to complete the main line and the equipment, of \$58,078,950. How much did they receive up to the 1st January, 1885, according to their own documents submitted to Parliament? They received in cash subsidy \$25,000,000; loan of 1884—and again I do not take any notice of the loan of \$7,000,000—\$29,810,000; cash for land grant bonds, sales of land and bonuses, \$10,900,000, making an aggregate of \$65,710,000; and they paid out \$58,078,950, leaving a balance in cash, over and above what they paid out, of \$7,631,050. That is quite clear, because Mr. Stephen, on the 13th June, says:

"In considering the financial position of the company it may be well to remind the shareholders that at the beginning of the present year there remained in the hands of the Government an unexpended cash balance of $9,633,032, available for the work under contract with the Government. This sum, as has already been officially stated, is sufficient to complete the work remaining to be done, according to the terms of the contract."

Here are the statements made by Mr. Stephen, that they had cash on hand of over $8,000,000, and that that was more than sufficient to complete the works that remained to be done. Yet this company, with these statements submitted to Parliament and before the country, have the assurance to ask for a loan of $5,000,000 and a total change in the character of the security, and hon. gentlemen in this House are found advocating their claims. I have thus shown the enormous sums which have been placed at the disposal of this company by the people to complete this road; I have shown that they have received from the people of Canada in cash and aids $53,490,000 more than they required to complete and equip their main line; I have shown that they received in cash, in assets, and sales of their own stock, $84,609,111 more than sufficient to complete and equip this road; I have shown that Canada paid, up to the 1st January, 1885, in cash, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, $7,631,050 more than they paid out on the construction of the main line, and this apart from their stock-jobbing transaction. If you add to this $7,631,050 the cash proceeds of the sales of stock, amounting to $29,493,048, you have the aggregate of $37,124,048 in cash received by the Canadian Pacific Railway up to the 1st January, 1885, more than they expended or were to expend in the completion of the road. In addition to all this, Canada was generous enough to hand over to this company this road, with all its rights, powers, monopolies and franchises, for all time to come. It is worth considering for a moment, from my standpoint, how this enormous surplus at the disposal of this company, placed at the disposal of this company by the people of this country, was expended. The document submitted to this Parliament, the address of the president of the railway company to the shareholders, on the 13th June, showed beyond doubt that the company spent a sum of over $38,000,000 on transactions outside the construction of the main line. They spent, according to their own showing, on the line and branches east of Callander, $4,213,758; Algoma and western branches, a sum which I figure at $4,733,798; on financial transactions of their own, $1,389,474; on the equipment of branch lines, $1,877,000; upon the improvement of Government section, $1,241,790; advances to secure access to the sea board, $5,858,473; on dividends upon their own stock, obtained by themselves at the lowest prices, $5,378,000; and according to the president's letter they had in the hands of the Government on 1st January, 1885, to pay additional dividends, $14,288,088. Now, according to this letter of the 18th March, to which I referred a moment ago, the company spent $35,131,813 in transactions outside the main line, up to the 1st of January 1884. So the result of these calculations is that this company has exhausted, in transactions outside the contract, and with which this Parliament has nothing to do, a sum of $7,631,050, the amount which the company received in cash from the people of Canada in excess of what they paid on construction of the main line, and the sum of $29,493,048, which the company received on stock transactions, and an additional sum of $1,855,000, or, in all, the sum of $38,979,000, which this company has spent on transactions outside the main line. This, I say, accounts, to some extent, for the extraordinary condition in which this company now says it is placed. Now, Sir, it is worth while to pause for a moment and ask ourselves two or three serious questions. Why should the people of this country be charged with $1,241,780 for keeping in repair the road which the Government of Canada handed over to the company well constructed and in good repair? Why should this fund, which the people of Canada placed at the disposal of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to construct the main line from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, be charged with $4,233,758 for the main line and branches east of Callander; or with $4,733,798 for the Algoma branch and the western section; or with $5,875,223 to obtain access to the seaboard and for leased lines? These transactions are private transactions, outside the contract, and entered into by this company upon their own responsibility, and with which the people of this country have no concern. Why should this fund be charged with $5,578,000 for extortionate dividends and with the sum of $14,288,288, a sum still in the hands of the Government of this country to pay the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company extortionate dividends upon the stock obtained by them, some of it at 25 cents on the dollar and some of it at 42 cents on the dollar? As well might you charge this fund and this country with a $4,000 piano, or with a $2,000,000 mansion, built in the Dominion of Canada. Sir, I am satisfied although we have not yet got to the bottom of the financial transactions of this company. Still the statements submitted to this Parliament exhibit a most scandalous disposal of the moneys placed by the people of this country at the disposal of this company for the construction of this railway. After wasting and squandering, a large portion of the money placed at their disposal for the construction of this railway; after having watered their stock and divided it up among themselves, after having placed in the hands of the Government a sum equal to $20,000,000, to pay themselves extortionate dividends, and after having drawn from the Government those extortionate dividends, they have the assurance, the unparalleled impudence, to come to Parliament and ask us for additional aid and a change in the security. Sir, I do not propose to discuss the stock transactions of this company; that has been done by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake); I propose simply to give you one or two specimens of the dealings of this company with their own stock. The company emitted $30,000,000 of their own stock at 51 cents upon the dollar. Upon this stock the holders obtained a dividend of 6 per cent. on the face value of the stock, or nearly 12 per cent. upon the real value. The company issued $10,000,000 of this stock at 42 cents on the dollar. A large portion of this emission passed under the control of members of the old syndicate, some of whom still survive as the incorporators of the present company. Upon this stock so emitted they drew dividends at the rate of 6 per cent. upon its face value, which would be equal to 14½ per cent. upon the real value, or the sum which these incorporators paid for their own stock. Another issue was made of $20,000,000 of stock, at 25 cents on the dollar. Every dollar of that emission was taken up by and passed under the control of the members of the old syndicate who, I say again, are the incorporators in this company—passed under the control of George Stephen, president of the company, D. McIntyre, J. S. Kennedy, J. J. Hill, Donald A. Smith, Morton, Rose & Co.; and upon this stock they drew and will draw for ten years dividends equal to 24 per cent. upon the actual value of the stock; and yet these people have the boldness to come to this Parliament and ask us for an additional amount of $5,000,000 and a change in the security taken by this Parliament in 1884. Sir, I do not know what this Parliament will do; I know what this Parliament ought to do, and that is, to refuse the application made by these gentlemen. Now, I want to say a word or two with respect to the advance made in 1884, and the conditions upon which it was made. It is known that in 1884 the Government undertook to guarantee a dividend of 3 per cent. upon the stock of this company; the company asked for a guarantee of the 3 per cent. upon $100,000,000, and the Government undertook to guarantee a dividend of 3 per cent. on $65,000,000 of stock only. When Parliament met, in 1884, I am satisfied the members upon both sides of the House were startled at the propositions and at the resolutions that were submitted by the then Minister of Railways, in which it was asked that this Parliament should give the Canadian Pacific Railway Company what was, in substance, a loan of $30,000,000. Well, Sir, we were aware, out of the mouth of the Minister of Railways that this company had no claims upon the generosity of this Parliament; that this money, if voted at all, would be voted for the purpose of hastening the completion of the railway. It was admitted to us by the Minister of Railways, then, that the subvention made in 1880 was more than sufficient to construct the road, and yet he submitted certain further propositions. What were these propositions? That the time for the payment of the $2,853,912, due by the company to the Government on the 1st of February, 1884, should be extended to the 7th November, 1888; that the sum of $4,527,000, which was to fall due on the 7th November, 1888, should, with the previous sum, making together $7,380,912, be paid on the 7th November, 1888; that, in addition, the Government should loan the company $22,500,000, payable on the 1st May, 1891. The Minister of Railways justified these propositions; he was good enough to submit to Parliament, in lump sums, the cash received by the company from the country for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the condition in which the railway then was, the condition in which the works then were, and the hon. gentleman proceeded to declare:

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"I will stake, Sir, my standing in this House on the accuracy of the statement I have presented; and if the hon. gentleman can show that I have not given a fair, frank and unvarnished statement of the figures and facts as they stand out in the public records of the country and the documents before the House, then I will admit that I have no claim to the confidence of the House in regard to the statement I am making on this question. I have said there is only one point which is a question of estimate at all. There are two points. The one is the estimate that the work with the supplies on hand can be completed for $47,000,000. Well, all I can say is, that the chief engineer of the Department has gone carefully into that question, and, as the House is aware, has committed himself to the statement that he believes the figures of the company may be accepted as accurate."

Here we have the assurance of the Minister of Railways that the work would be finally completed, according to the estimates of the engineer, for $47,000,000. The hon. gentleman staked his character and reputation for veracity on the accuracy of his figures. We had not much faith in the hon. gentleman's accuracy in dealing with the Canadian Pacific Railway. What is the result? The result is that inside of twelve months the Minister of Railways' calculations are shown to be erroneous, and the company is here asking for additional aid; and I suppose, if the company receives at the hands of Parliament the treatment which the company usually receives, it will obtain that aid. The Minister of Railways upon that occasion stated, in order to justify the application then being made to Parliament, and to induce his followers to vote for the ratification of the proposition, that the conditions upon which British Columbia became part and parcel of the Union would in no way be violated by the ratification of the resolutions of 1884. The hon. gentleman declared:

"But while they do not ask the House to give them a single additional dollar, they ask us to use the credit of this country—which, thanks to the management of my colleague, the hon. Minister of Finance, never stood in a higher position—to obtain the means of accomplishing this great national work by the end of 1885; and that without imposing the slightest shadow of a shade of additional burthen upon the Government or upon the country, giving security for the repayment of every dollar by the time the contract was to be completed, the 1st May, 1891."

The hon. member for Cardwell, who is a staunch supporter of the occupants of the Treasury benches, added his testimony to that of the Minister of Railways. He declared:

"If we receive but $1,250,000 a year from the sale of lands—and remember that every dollar received from the sale of lands goes into the hands of trustees, for the payment of the interest and principle of the loan we are now advancing, we have the interest upon this $22,500,000 paid to us, and the loan is not a charge upon the people of this country at all."

Here we have a statement made by the Minister of Railways and confirmed by the hon. member, for Cardwell that it is a possible thing to create a debt of $30,000,000 without adding to the debt of the country, that it is possible to pay the interest thereon without adding to the burdens of the people. We pointed out the folly, the unmitigated nonsense of that statement, that it was possible to create a debt of $30,000,000 and not have the debt, and to pay interest on those $30,000,000 and yet not pay interest. We proved, by the course hon. gentlemen were then taking, that they were misleading the people and misleading this House, and inducing hon. members to ratify the proposition on the faith of the representations made. Our protests were vain, and our warnings fell upon deaf ears. What are the consequences to-day? The consequences are grave and serious—the consequences of encouraging the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in extravagance, in mismanagement, in squandering the money placed at their disposal, to construct the main line expended in constructing lines outside of their main line, in a system of stock watering and stock jobbing in their own stock, unparalleled in the history of the construction of any railway on this continent or of any railway in the world. The hon. member for Cardwell and the Minister of Railways told us last Session that $27,000,000 would finally complete this railway. We were told by the Minister of Railways that the subventions of 1880 were more than sufficient to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway from end to end, but in the condition of the money market it would not be proper to compel them to realise on their assets. We were assured, in 1884, that the loan of $30,000,000 would be $3,000,000 more than were required to finally complete the railway from Callander to the Pacific. What have we to-day? The president of the company, in his letter of 18th March, inst., declares that the company find themselves compelled to ask for other and better financial arrangements, otherwise the work will stop. It is admitted that the company is in financial difficulties; it is admitted that the company is unable to pay the contractors, and that the laborers are on strike. They are in financial difficulty, and the president of the company admits it. What a humiliating and degrading position do the hon. members on the Treasury benches occupy to-night, in the face of Parliament and the people after the assurances given in 1880 and repeated in 1884, that the grants subventions and loans were more than sufficient to complete the railway, when they are now obliged to come to Parliament and ask for an additional loan of $5,000,000 more and enter into what are new terms of arrangement. The Minister of Railways, in 1884, declared:

"I say that they had such confidence in this work that they imperilled their own capital; and if we had not had the good fortune to make this contract with men of great wealth, great resources, great energy and enterprise, and great experience, we would have had a most disastrous collapse in connection with this work; and none of the progress and advancement and development which has taken place in connection with the rapid prosecution of this enterprise would have existed to-day. I do not rest these resolutions for a single moment on the low ground of any claim that these gentlemen have. They have no claim. They made a contract, and they received, by the terms of that contract, a magnificent subvention for the work, great as it was, that they were undertaking to deal with; and they have, no doubt, prospective profits of a large character before them. I do not ask for a moment that these resolutions shall receive the consideration of the House on any such claim."

These were represented to be men of great wealth, great resources, great energy, great enterprise; they were men of enormous and unlimited means; men whose fortunes were reckoned by millions; men who had no claims on the liberality of Parliament, or the generosity of the people of this country; men who would not, and could not come back to Parliament to ask for additional assistance; and that is just what these men did in 1884, what they have done in 1885, and what I am sure they will do in 1886, if this Parliament were foolish enough to give them what they want now. The hon. gentleman then proceeded:

"The Canadian Pacific Railway have property which, if realised at its fair value, is abundant to complete their contract, without any assistance from any source. Having an enterprise on hand that has established itself beyond controversy as an enterprise based on a sound commercial foundation, they are in a position to say that with anything like a fair realisation of the value of the property they possess, they do not require assistance from any person. I have told the House, in the first place, that they do not ask an additional dollar of subvention for the purpose of completing the contract they have made with the Government."

Yet, Sir, these men who have spent a large portion of the subvention of 1880 and the loan of 1884 in transactions outside of the contract, are here for the third time asking this Parliament to give them $5,000,000 of money, and to change the security of 1884. Take Mr. Stephen's letter of 1884, and you will find that the sum of $35,000,000 was spent in transactions outside of the contract—transactions of a questionable character—and having done so, they came to Parliament for $30,000,000 more. If you take the letter of the 18th March, 1885, you will find admission made by the President of this company, that large sums of the money of this country, which was placed in their hands, had been wasted and squandered in speculation outside the terms of this contract. I say, with these facts staring us in the face—and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to successfully contradict one of these statements—it would be a scandalous thing for any Parliament to sanction the proposition which is now before us. If the security is good for any thing, and we were assured that it was valuable, this Parliament ought not to give an additional sum of $5,000,000, and it ought not to touch this security. We find, further, that while discussing the resolutions of 1884, respecting the loan then to be made, the Minister of Railways made the following statement:—

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"Then, Sir, as to the $22,500,000, it is not proposed to pay the company one dollar of it, except as the work proceeds, and in instalments proportionate to the value of the work remaining to be done; so that, when the $22,500,000 is exhausted, together with the $12,710,788 of cash subsidy remaining in the hands of the Government, the Government shall have the certainty of the work being completed from end to end."

Sir, to-day, experience has taught us that we ought to have had some other guarantee than the personal assurance of the Minister of Railways as to the standing and financial position of these men. He proceeded:

"We have reason to know that all that a command of capital can do they have the advantage of, and we have reason to know that all that skill and energy, and a knowledge of precisely such work will do, has been secured, in order to make this a successful contract, and I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite what more is desirable or necessary?"

The First Minister confirmed the statement of the Minister of Railways. He found it necessary to strengthen the faith of hon. gentlemen supporting him, and he declared as follows:—

"It makes no difference if the security is good; if the capital is in the hands of gentlemen of honor and means, it is of no consequence where the money is expended." I believe the men who signed the first contract are men of honor and great wealth, who cannot afford to lose their character, prestige and credit in the markets of the world by breaking a contract."

The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), on that occasion, spoke as follows:—

"The assurance we have from the chief engineer of the company, and the assurance we had to-night from the Minister, that there is to be proper supervision in the expenditure of this money, in such a way that it shall only be spent having regard to the completion of the railway within the amount voted, affords to us the most perfect guarantee that can be afforded in any business transaction that the railway will be completed within the time, and for no further sum of money than is here proposed to be voted."

No assurance could be stronger, no statements clearer, than those I have just read, that the road would be finally completed on the subventions which were previously made and the loans which were then given. The Minister of Railways who pressed on the attention of Parliament the consideration of those resolutions, in 1884, is not here to answer for misleading the House. The hon. member for Cardwell is here, and I am curious to know what stand he will take on this occasion. Will he do as he always has done—eat his own words, and support the Government, or will he act the statesman and the patriot, vote against this loan and abandonment of the security—we shall see. We pointed out, in 1880 and 1884, that in addition to the company obtaining a monopoly in the construction of railways in the North-West Territories, north of this road—a monopoly which was injurious to the progress and prosperity of the country—they had obtained the monopoly south of the Canada Pacific Railway, that neither the Government nor the people of the Province of Manitoba were in a position to construct railways south of the line. The Province of Manitoba incorporated companies to construct railways south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, those charters were disallowed, because the Canadian Pacific Railway insisted upon that disallowance, considering those charters a violation of the terms of the contract. We protested against that in vain, year after year, and Session after Session, but ultimately we succeeded, and the Minister of Railways last Session announced that the Government proposed to insist on the company abandoning the monopoly clause in the contract. He said:

"I am glad to be able to state to the House that although, true to that policy, the Government refused to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, to connect with American railways to the south, such is the evidence presented by the operation of the line, so far as it has gone, such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, in regard to the ability of a through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and by the inherent power of its own advantages to maintain its position, notwithstanding any competition to which it may be subjected we are now in a position to review and to reconsider the policy of the late Government, and the policy of the present Government, as to the continued necessity for any long period of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition within the Province of Manitoba, and I am glad to be able to state to the House that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, than when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south."

Now, we will see what the Government will do. By these resolutions the Government do not propose to abolish the monopoly clause in the charter of 1880, or to grant relief to the struggling settlers in the outlying districts of Manitoba and the North-West. They propose that the railway company shall have $5,000,000 more, and that the security shall be seriously impaired, but the monopoly remains untouched. Now, I say that time, the great solver of all problems, has solved the problems of 1880 and 1884. It is conclusively shown that the policy pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite was a wrong policy. It is shown that every assurance, every promise, every pledge on the faith of which this Parliament was induced to ratify the resolutions of 1880 and of 1884, have all been shattered. It is shown that the protests made and the warnings given by the Opposition in 1880 and 1884 have been more than justified by subsequent events. Time has shown that the line pursued by the Opposition, from beginning to end of the discussions of 1880 and 1884, in relation to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the policy of the Government with respect thereto, has been amply justified by subsequent events. To-day, Sir, the company and the Government occupy the most humiliating position that the Government of this or any other country can occupy. By coming to Parliament and asking for additional aid they admit that the assurances, representations and promises made in 1880 and 1884 have all been foundationless and false. Now, Sir, let us consider the loan that this Government are now asking Parliament to grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have shown, out of the mouth of the Minister of Railways and the supporters of the Government, that the subventions of 1880 were amply sufficient to complete the road from end to end, without touching a single dollar of the land grant or the proceeds of the sales of such; I have shown out of the mouth of the president of the company, and from documents submitted to Parliament, that the moneys placed at the disposal of this company by way of loan, in 1884, were more than sufficient to finally complete and equip the road from end to end, without touching a single dollar of the unrealised assets at that time, and without taking into account the money realised for the stock-jobbing transactions of the members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in their own stock. Now, why is this company here now begging from Parliament an additional $5,000,000? They are here because, as I say, they have wasted and squandered and misappropriated the enormous subventions placed at their disposal by the people of this country, in transactions outside of the construction of the main line from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. What do they want? They want $5,000,000 and a radical change of the security we took in 1884 to secure the repayment of our loan. That security appeared to be ample; we were assured by the Minister of Railways and the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), that it was ample; on its face it appeared to be ample. It is worth pausing here for a moment to consider the nature of that security for the repayment of the $30,000,000. We took security on the entire property of the company, real as well as personal, owned or thereafter to be acquired and owned by the company, including the main line of railway, the extensions thereof, their branch lines of railway, and the whole of their equipment, rolling stock and plant, and all their steamers and vessels; also, the land grant of the company earned, and to be thereafter earned, saving the rights of existing mortgagees on the extension of the line of railway from Callander to Brockville and Montreal, and subject to the mortgage on the land grant. The Government also held security on all the moneys earned by the company for postal service and for transport service. The Government also held a lien on $35,000,000 of the stock of the company, then deposited with the Government. Under section 6, subsection 2, of the Act of 1884, the Government had the power, in case of default in payment of the principal or interest for twelve months, to take possession of the road; in fact, the whole of the property should then become ipso facto the property of Canada, without any foreclosure at all. Now, the proposition contained in these resolutions is to add another $5,000,000 to the magnificent subventions, grants, exemptions, franchises, monopolies and loans already granted to this company, and to change the nature of the security in material parts to the advantage of the company, the injury of the country and thus putting in peril the repayment of the loan 1884. Let us see what these changes are. By these resolutions we are asked to abandon absolutely the security we now hold from the company, created by the Act of 1884, to secure the repayment by the company to the Government of the $30,000,000; such security covered all the property, real and personal, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Government, by these resolutions, agree to reduce the rate of interest payable on the loan of $30,000,000 made to the company last year, from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent. The Government, by these resolutions agree to abandon the first lien or charge held by the Government on all the property, real and personal, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as a security for the payment of the loan of 1884. The Government, by these resolutions, permit the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to issue $35,000,000 of first mortgage bonds, secured by first mortgage on all the real and personal property of the company, and to give such mortgage the priority now held by the mortgage to the Government, securing the payment of the loan of last year to the Government. The Government propose, by these resolutions, to take from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $20,000,000 of these bonds at par, in full payment of such portion of the loan of 1884, and secured by a first mortgage on the real and personal property of the company. The Government propose, by these resolutions, that $9,880,912, the residue of the loan of 1884, made by the Government to the company, shall be secured by a second mortgage on the land grant, thus also releasing the security held by the Government on the other real and personal property of the company for this loan. The Government thus propose to place at the disposal of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $15,000,000 of these first mortgage bonds. These are the proposed changes. Now, let us consider for a moment what are the effects of the proposed changes with respect to the security now held by the country for the repayment of the loan of 1884. We reduced the rate of interest from 5 to 4 per cent. As to $20,000,000 of the loan of 1884, we take a second mortgage on the real and personal property of the company, except on the Algoma branch. It is only a second mortgage, notwithstanding what the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) says, because before we can take possession of the road, in case of default, we must pay $15,000,000 of first mortgage bonds held by others than the Government. Under the agreement of 1884 the Government had a first lien, and on default for 12 months, at once became ipso facto owners of all the property, real and personal, of the company. As to $9,880,912 of the loan of 1884, we now hold a first mortgage on all the property of the company. The Government propose, by these resolutions, to abandon the whole of that security, and to take a second mortgage on the land grant only for that sum. By these resolutions, it is proposed not only that we abandon our first lien on the road and branches, and all the other real and personal property of the company to secure the payment of the loan of $30,000,000, but that we agree to take, in lieu thereof, a second mortgage on the road and branches, and on the real and personal property of the company, except the land grant, to secure $20,000,000, and we add $5,000,000 to the loan. Not only do we do this, but we are, in addition, asked to take these mortgage bonds to the extent of $20,000,000 at par. They may not be worth 50 cents on the dollar; but we take them at par, all the same; the loss may be very great, but we cannot estimate it, as we do not know the value of these bonds. The important question that now stares us in the face is, what should Parliament do under these circumstances? This company, having wasted and squandered a large portion of the assets placed at their disposal by the people, in transactions outside of the contract to build the Canadian Pacific Railway from end to end, should we come to their assistance and give them the additional sum of $5,000,000, and change the nature of the security? Whether we can do so or not is scarcely open to discussion just now. This company have taken the precaution to pay the interest due on the mortgage out of the capital placed at their disposal by the Government, so that we cannot take possession of the road just now. But should we advance this $5,000,000 and change this security? I say no. The company has ample means to build the railway on the subventions of 1880 and the loan granted by this Parliament in 1884, without even touching one single dollar of the proceeds of their stock-jobbery or the 20,000,000 acres of land that still remain in their hands. The president, in his letter of 18th March, says that the company found itself compelled to seek some new arrangement of its financial affairs to enable it to procure the necessary capital to finish the road. Mr. Stephen said what is not the facts, and what is not supported by the figures submitted by himself. In his letter he points out that on the 31st December, 1884, the company paid Mr. Stephen and others the sum of $5,378,000 as dividends out of the capital of the company, which ought to have been expended in the construction of the road. These stockholders, it must be borne in mind, are substantially the members of the original syndicate, who agreed to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway on the subvention of 1880. I say, let these men pay back to this company the $5,378,000 which they never ought to have taken out of the capital of the company, but which ought to have been expended on the construction of the road, and they will have more than is sufficient to complete the road, according to their own estimate. Mr. Stephen, in the same letter, says there was, on the 1st January, 1885, in the hands of the Government, $14,288,000 to pay additional dividends. The money is there. What is it there for? Why was it not utilised by the company for the purpose of completing the railway, instead of coming to this Parliament and asking Parliament to lend them an additional sum. Let them be contended with moderate dividends, with reasonable dividends, with no dividends at all, until the road is finally completed, if necessary, and they will have more than sufficient to finish the road, according to the estimate of the company. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe said it would not be fair to use this money which is in the hands of the Government, because this stock is in the hands of widows and orphans in England. I say a large portion is in the hands of the original

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

corporaters. Let them pay back to the company, at least, the money they have illegally and improperly drawn by way of dividends, or let them apply a portion of the sums provided by themselves to pay dividends to themselves, out of the moneys in the hands of the Government, towards the construction of the road. Ought we, therefore, in this state of facts, yield to the company's demand? Ought we to sanction and affirm these resolutions, in the face of these facts? I say that in the face of these facts Parliament ought not to vote these additional millions. I do not know what this Parliament will do; I know what it ought to do. I know what the people of this country would do if the question were submitted to them. They would refuse to ratify these resolutions. Surely this Parliament will not be so unwise, will not be so weak, as to make this additional grant. No language can be strong enough to characterise the whole course and conduct of the Government with respect to the matter. There is not a particle of security provided by these resolutions for the final completion of the road, even with this additional grant of $5,000,000. There is no security given to the people that even with this additional advance the road will be completed and in running order by the 1st September, 1886, or at any other time. We are asked to ratify this contract in the face of the fact that no security is offered for the final completion of the road. That is a thing this Government ought not to do and this Parliament ought not to sanction. The name of any Parliament that would sanction the ratification of these resolutions, in the face of the facts submitted by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Parliament; in the face of the admission made by the president of the company, that the assets of the company are worth $177,000,000; in the face of the fact that these men have drawn out of its capital over $5,000,000 to pay dividends, and that they have in the hands of the Government over $14,000,000 to pay future dividends; in the face of the fact that the president of the company, on the 13th June, admitted that on the 30th April over $8,000,000 were in the hands of the Government, sufficient to complete the road, I say the name of any Parliament, in the face of these facts, that would ratify these resolutions, will stink in the nostrils of every honest man, and the names of its members will go down to future generations as political time-servers and slaves, who for the third time, at the bidding of an unscrupulous and corrupt Government, sold this country to this corporation. I say to the hon. gentleman who has charge of these resolutions, I say to this Parliament, I say to the people of this country, that if this company desires to stand well in the confidence of the people, if it desires to deserve that confidence, and the sympathy and the support of the people—if this company desires to escape the well-founded suspicion, if not something more than suspicion, of the misappropriation and misapplication of the funds placed at its disposal by a generous people to construct this railway, to transactions entirely outside of the original contract; if this company desires to escape the conviction, in the minds of many of the people of this country, that it has not only misapplied and misappropriated this money, but has used it for wholly illegitimate and illegal purposes, this company must give, what it has refused to give, a full and frank disclosure of its financial transactions, and must submit to an audit of its accounts by a capable, a competent, a reliable accountant; it must cease its stock-watering and stock-jobbing transactions, that have reflected no credit upon the company and great discredit upon the Government of this country; this company must abandon its unjust and unfair monopolies, monopolies that have proved so injurious to the best interests of the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territoriss; this company must not expect to control every railway in the Dominion of Canada, and to grasp every pound of freight on this continent; this company must let live as well as live; this company must conduct and manage its business upon prudent business principles; this company must cease knocking, year after year, at the door of the Parliament of Canada, asking for more, more; this company must open wide the gates of legitimate railway competition in the North-West Territories and Manitoba; this company must not throw obstructions in the way of the progress, prosperity and development of the North-West, by insisting upon this Government checking, vetoing and disallowing all legislation for the opening up of that vast region to the west of us; this company must keep itself clear—what I fancy it has not hitherto done—of political entanglements and political alliances of a questionable character; the original proprietors of this company must refund to this company the millions they have illegally and improperly extracted from the capital of this company, which ought to have gone to build the railway, but which they have applied in the payment of illegal and extortionate dividends, or else this company must authorise this Government to appropriate at least a portion of the fourteen million dollars in their hands on the 1st January last, for the purpose of completing this road, instead of retaining it in the hands of the Government for the purpose of paying these extortionate dividends. Believing that to be the true principle, the honest principle, and the principle upon which the Government ought to act, and this Parliament ought to act, and the people of this country would act, I beg to move the following amendment:

That all after the word "that" be left out, and the following inserted "Canada, in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, gave the company vast aids, which were declared to be ample and final; Canada, in 1884, gave the company great additional aids, which were again declared to be ample and final; the shareholders of the company have already divided among themselves about $7,000,000 in dividends, and have on deposit with the Government about $14,000,000 more, to provide future dividends for themselves for over eight years to come, while they affirm that the railway will be profitable from the day of its opening; in the opinion of this House, the shareholders, if they desire more money for their operations, should propose to utilise their deposit for future dividends instead of asking Canada to impair its existing securities to make large further advances, and to allow the enterprise to be charged with $15,000,000 additional capital, the interest upon which must be borne by the trade of this country."

Mr. CHARLTON. I have a few remarks to make on this subject, and I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We adjourned very early last night, in consequence of the leader of the Opposition desiring not to proceed any further, and I think we had better go on to-night.

Mr. TROW. I think it is very unreasonable to compel members who are tired to go on to-night. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that this is a reasonable motion. The amount of speaking to-day has been more than usual. Only one member on the Government side has spoken, and to require our side to go on with this motion, with the expectation of reaching a division to-night, is unreasonable.

Mr. MILLS. I have no doubt that the more the subject is discussed before we reach committee the more brief the discussion will be in committee. The motion of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Cameron) was made with a view to record the opinions of the House. I am sure that hon. gentlemen on this side, who followed the leader of the Opposition, are anxious to record their votes upon this motion, and I dare say the First Minister and his followers will have no objection to recording their votes also. It does seem to me unreasonable that we should be forced to a division at this hour. We must remember that the Government, in 1880, proposed to give a large subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was to be once for all. In a short time we were asked for a further sum, and now there is another application to Parliament for still further aid. The motion that is now put in your hands announces that there are fourteen millions of money in the hands of the Government at the disposal of this company. That is a very important statement, and we have had no statement from the hon. gentleman who followed the leader of the Opposition in defence of the proposition of the Government. How is it that a company, having fourteen millions of money in the hands of the Government, of which the Government are simply trustees, comes here and asks that we shall contribute something more to the support of this corporation.

Mr. HESSON. I think it is most unreasonable that the business of the House should be delayed in this manner. I submit that, after the eloquent and lengthy speech of the leader of the Opposition, very little more can be said by hon. gentlemen opposite. The question has also been ably discussed on the side of the Government. The Secretary of State gave us a very able and eloquent speech, and the Acting Minister of Railways also gave full information to the House as to the position of the company. The House knows perfectly well how the matter stands now.

Mr. CASEY. It is asking too much of hon. members at this hour of the night to speak upon this important question, especially after the light that has been thrown upon it by the discussion of to-day, a light that I think was new to many members on both sides of the House. And we ought also to hear from the Premier himself on the question. No matter who may propose these resolutions, we know that this is peculiarly the right hon. gentleman's own scheme. He must have important opinions about it, and important information to lay before the House, and we cannot suppose that he will so far forget his duty to the House as to allow this matter to go into committee without giving us that information. A number of us wish to discuss the matter, and an adjournment should be now taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will point out to the First Minister that he could hardly expect that a discussion of this character should be closed with four speeches, two by Ministers who are in charge of the measure. This measure is one of the most important, as the hon. gentleman must admit, we have had, and must evoke a good deal of discussion from this side of the House. Moreover, the hon. gentleman must remember that, with the exception of the leader of the Opposition, who had an opportunity, but only very recently, of perusing various documents for which he had asked, we were left in considerable ignorance by the direct action of the hon. gentleman's own colleagues of a good many points we ought to have known. In fact, the chief information I have had on the subject has been derived from the report only published two days ago by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It contained a good many startling statements, and the country at large will expect that the measure should not be hurried through. I regret, perhaps, as much as the hon. gentleman does, that the circumstances of this Session have been such that an immense amount of time has been consumed in matters which appear to me far less pressing and important than the discussion of the vital alteration of the terms on which the loan was made twelve months ago. If I thought there was any possibility of closing this discussion to-night and not renewing it at length on other stages, I should say that the hon. gentleman had some reason for the course he is pursuing; but he knows, and we all know, that in these money Bills numerous stages have to be taken, and it will be better that we should discuss it more fully first rather than at the three or four separate stages which this measure will have to take.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows there must be and will be a discussion on the paragraphs of the resolution. If the hon. gentleman will undertake that we will get into committee in another day, I will agree to the adjournment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I certainly do not think hon. gentlemen desire to obstruct the measure; they only desire a reasonable discussion. There is one question which ought to be pretty thoroughly understood, and that is, that the whole time might be occupied by a couple of long speeches on the hon. gentleman's side, and that would render it very difficult for me to answer for hon. members on this side. If anything of that kind were likely to occur, it would be only reasonable to have speeches turn about.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; I agree to that. To-morrow is to be devoted to another subject. If the hon. gentleman will agree that we get into committee on Friday, we can adjourn. I do not understand that we will get out of committee on Friday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there ought to be no difficulty in getting into committee some time on Friday night.

An hon. MEMBER. Or Saturday morning.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman sees that there is but a small number here just now, but I think there would be no difficulty in getting into committee on Friday night, some time or other.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well; on that understanding we will adjourn.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

Mr. CHARLTON moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1:10 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 18th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. JAMIESON moved that the House proceed to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) further to amend the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, and the Liquor License Act, 1883.

Motion agreed to.

On the 3rd amendment,

"Page 2, line 7, after (5) insert:

"Section 99 of the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, is hereby amended by inserting after the word 'intoxicating,' in the 15th line thereof, the following words: 'Provided, however, that duly licensed medical practitioners may dispense alcoholic liquors for exclusively medicinal purposes and not otherwise.'

"Provided, also, that nothing in this Act shall be held to interfere with the purchase or sale by legally qualified physicians, chemists or druggists, of the following articles, that is to say:—

"1. The official preparations of the authorised pharmacopœas when made of full medicinal strength, and sold only for medicinal purposes.

"2. Physician's prescriptions containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than eight ounces at any one time.

"3. Any patent medicine, unless such patent medicine is known to the vendor to be capable of being used as a beverage, the sale of which is a violation of 'The Canada Temperance Act, 1878.'

"4. Eau de Cologne, bay rum or other articles of perfumery, lotions, extracts, varnishes, tinctures or other pharmaceutical preparations containing alcohol, but not intended for use as beverages.

"5. Alcohol or methylated spirits, for pharmaceutical, chemical or mechanical uses."

Mr. JAMIESON. As to the first clause of the amendment, that is, the clause permitting doctors to dispense liquors for exclusively medicinal purposes, I move that it be disagreed to for the following reasons: Because it has already been rejected by this House, on the ground that it would be a violation of the principle of the Act, which precludes a medical man having an interest in the sale from giving a certificate, and does not oblige a medical man to keep a register of sales and make a return, which provisions are deemed necessary safeguards. As to so much of the second clause of the amendment as is numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4: Because it is unnecessary, inasmuch as the Act does not prohibit such sale. As to the second part of the said second clause, numbered 5: Because it contravenes the principle of the Act, which provides that the sale of alcohol and spirits for the purposes mentioned shall be made only on the certificate of two justices of the peace, accompanied by the affirmation of the applicant and registration of the sale, which are considered necessary safeguards against any abuse of the law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not think the hon. gentleman's motion is correct in form. It begins by professing to set out that this House has already rejected this particular proposal for reasons so-and-so. This House has given no reasons for having rejected it. This House has simply voted against it, and one reason may have influenced one hon. member and another reason have influenced another hon. member; and this House has not, by any proceeding on its records, given any reason, up to the present time, for rejecting that proposal which the Senate thought fit to put in the form of a clause. The House simply voted against it. I think the hon. gentleman should not put authoritatively as reasons for the action of the House what certainly have not been put so by the House itself.

Mr. JAMIESON. It will be recollected that an amendment of this kind was made at the time the Bill was in Committee of the Whole, and it was afterwards moved to re-commit the Bill on the third reading. So far as the reasons are concerned, if the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) does not think that branch of the reasons is correct, he can easily strike it out, and we can go upon the remainder of the reasons, which I think are quite sufficient—that is, that it does not oblige medical men to keep a register and make a return, which are deemed necessary safeguards. This whole question has been discussed in this House already, and I do not think it necessary to enter into any lengthy argument in support of the reasons we have given here for not concurring in the amendments of the Senate. I have a strong opinion, however, that when this House rejects an amendment of that kind it should be conclusive, and that the other branch of the Legislature should not, in defiance of the opinion of this House, insert such a clause as is put into the Bill. The amendment is objectionable on various grounds. We believe it is open to a great deal of abuse in counties in which the Canada Temperance Act is now in force, and will be in force after it is adopted by the people. There is no safeguard whatever in this case, because a medical man dispensing liquor himself is not required to keep a register and make a return. Under the law as it stands at present, if a medical man gives a prescription to a chemist it is provided that the vendor of the liquor shall keep a register of the sale and make a return annually to an officer of the Government. No return of that kind is required by the amendment, and in my judgment it would be an unfortunate thing to open a door of this kind. If the medical man was an honorable practitioner, I grant there would be no objection to this amendment; but, unfortunately, in the medical profession, as in other professions, men are to be found who are not honorable, and who, perhaps, for a fee, will abuse any power which may be given to them by law, such as the power of dispensing liquors. I had better refer also to a part of the amendment in regard to druggists, more especially to clause 5. However, before proceeding to discuss that, I may make a few remarks in regard to those parts of the amendment numbered consecutively from 1 to 4. There was a difference of opinion in respect to the rights of druggists to sell. That so far as my judgment goes, and the judgment of those with whom I have consulted on this question, we have come to the conclusion that there is no prohibition of the sale, such as is indicated here, under the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, and hence this provision is entirely unnecessary. But I think, even if there is a doubt, instead of opening a wide door like this, it would be advisable to wait until the difficulties arise, and then, if necessary they can be remedied by legislation in this House. So far as the 5th clause of the amendment is concerned, I object to it in toto as being very objectionable in its character. At the present time, under the provisions of the law, if a person wants alcohol or spirits of any kind for chemical or manufacturing purposes, he requires to procure a certificate from two Justices of the Peace, and endorse that certificate by his own affirmation, and the vendor of liquor requires to keep a register of the sale. Now, under this amendment, all these safeguards are done away with, and it will readily occur to hon. members of this House, how frequently a provision of this kind would be abused. A man requiring liquor for any purpose, would go into a drug store and say: Here, I require liquor for pharmaceutical, chemical, or mechanical purposes, and he would not be required to make any affirmation. All that is necessary is his own statement of the facts, upon which the druggist is bound to sell him the liquor, and he is not required to keep any register of the sale. Practically, there would be, to a certain extent at least, free trade in liquor through the medium of all drug stores in the country, and also through the medium of the medical men of the country. I do not understand why medical men require to be included in this provision as well as in a separate provision. This amendment is intended to apply to legally qualified physicians, chemists and druggists. The case of the physician has already been provided for by another amendment, if that amendment is agreed to by this House, though I hope it will not be.

Mr. BLAKE. I think, Sir, as a question of convenience, and in the interests of the hon. gentleman's motion, he had better adopt a different procedure. This amendment which we have under consideration, and with which he proposes to disagree, contains three distinct provisions, and he proposes in one motion to disagree, first with the first, then with the second, and then with the third, and for different reasons. Now, different reasons and different considerations are applicable to each, and the result of the hon. gentleman's proposal will be to unite in opposition to his motion, all those who desire any one of the limbs of the amendment to succeed, and who fail to agree to any one of his reasons. Therefore, it is better to take each distinct limb of the amendment by itself and to move disagreement for proper reasons. There is another reason. I think the hon. gentleman's motion is complex, and we have a rule on that subject that complicated motions may be divided. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he himself should divide them, but if he does not think that is expedient, I invite you under the general practice with reference to complicated questions, to consider whether the parts should not be put separately.

Mr. JAMIESON. So far as the consideration of the question is concerned, with the permission of the House, and if it can be done, I would agree to the proposition of the leader of the Opposition. I found a difficulty, inasmuch as it is embodied here as one amendment, and I supposed that under the rules of the House, they would have to be dealt with together. I would therefore move that the first clause be considered separately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps the hon. gentleman had better withdraw his amendment, as suggested by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, and introduce them separately. The point taken by the hon. member for Victoria is a good one. He says there is no ground stated, and the hon. gentleman said in his remarks that the Senate ought not to have acted in defiance of the well expressed opinions of this House. Well, that is an unconstitutional doctrine. The Senate are not supposed to know what passes in this House, and it would be a violation of Parliamentary principle for them to take notice of what takes place in this House unless by ascertaining from our journals what we have done. If the Senate were to treat the subject stating that they knew what was doing in here, they would be committing a constitutional impropriety.

Motion (Mr. Jamieson) withdrawn.

Mr. JAMIESON moved, that Proviso 1 of the third amendment be disagreed to for the following reason:—

"Because it would be a violation of the principle of the Act, which precludes a medical man having an interest in the sale, from giving a Certificate, and does not oblige medical men to keep a register of sales, and make a Return, which are deemed necessary safeguards."

Mr. HICKEY. I think when this question was before the House before, it was unfairly lost, because a great many members of this House were called away on account of the troubles in the North-West. Be that as it may, the argument, as presented by the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) is that physicians would have an interest in the sale of liquor, and also that no register of such sales will be kept. Alcohol and the different spirits will be kept by physicians like every other drug. I do not see why physicians who are educated and skilled in these things, should be required to keep a register of the sales of alcohol or spirits in any form, while they are permitted to deal out strichnine, arsenic, and other violent poisons. The fact of the matter is, it is absurd, and it is only the overstrained ideas of intemperance on the part of some people who cannot see anything right in views differing from their own, that would induce men who are sensible in other things, to try to enforce restrictions of this kind upon an honorable profession. They say it would lead to a free trade in alcohol. Well, that has not been so in the past, when the restrictions were no greater than they will be to-day. There has been no inducement for physicians to make bars of their drug stores, and I am sure that if there is a man in the profession who will sell liquor for five or ten cents a glass; if there is a man in the profession who would do so low and mean a thing, who would so far forget the amenities of his profession, he would be mean and low enough to sell a prescription for that five or ten cents worth of liquor and let a man go to a drug store and get it, because there is no restriction on his prescriptions. But, forsooth, if he found it necessary to administer a dram or an ounce or two of brandy the same as any other medicine, that is a crime. It need only be looked at for a moment to see what puerile suggestion the Temperance Alliance are seeking to force on the public at large. Supposing such an indecent trade should be carried on by any physician, there could be no possibility of restraining it even by the means proposed; the same deed could be done under another form; and why should we, as an honorable profession, be branded in this way, and be prevented from prescribing one drug and not another? If a physician should be brought up by some miserable creature before the court and convicted under this proposition, there is no doubt in my mind that on an appeal to a higher court the judgment would be set aside, on the ground that this Parliament, by a law of this kind, has no right to say what a physician shall or shall not use as a medicine in the practice of his profession. But the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) gives his case away. He says that if all physicians were honorable men, it would make no difference. I believe they all are; but it is possible there are a very few in our profession who would do this wrong, and should the whole profession be branded as rascals and scamps because a few might so far forget themselves as to take this unworthy advantage of their position? The amendment made by the Senate is very clear. It says:

"Provided, however, that duly licensed medical practitioners may dispense alcoholic liquors exclusively for medicinal purposes, and not otherwise."

Now, if that is not enough to protect the interest of temperance, I think words and law will fail to restrict an evil disposition on the part of anybody. It is impossible to prevent every person in the community from transgressing the best laws we have. The intention of the Bill is that it shall not restrict physicians in the prescription of alcohol as a proper medicine, and why impose a fine on them for dispensing the same? The next step taken to brand the profession still more is to allow priests and other clergymen to give prescriptions of these medicines. The hon. gentleman says it is opening a wide door. There are very few physicians in the profession who would take improper advantage of this provision, and the few will not open a wide door, and if these restrictions are imposed on respectable men, the law will only be systematically broken by men who are merely striving to accomplish their legitimate ends. Therefore, this provision throws no safeguard around the cause of temperance, which we all desire to advance, and I hope the House will say that it is only just to the people, for whom we have to do as physicians, and to the physicians themselves, not to impose on them any further restrictions than the amendment of the Senate provides for.

Mr. ORTON. I think the amendment of the Senate is a very proper and wise one; and notwithstanding the very unfavorable opinion the hon. member has of the profession to which I belong, I cannot help looking upon his motion and his remarks as only a wanton insult to that profession, one of the learned professions of our country; and I think neither the temperance men nor this House are in possession of such facts as to warrant them in placing an embargo on the medical profession in the discharge of their duty. We all know that medical men are frequently called on in an emergency, and that stimulants in some form or other are constantly prescribed by them; and I think it is nothing more than proper that they should be allowed to use their own judgment in the cases they are called upon to deal with. I cannot, for the life of me, see how this can possibly open the door to the indiscriminate use of alcohol for other than medicinal purposes. If any medical man in this country were known to prescribe in order to sell liquor, he would soon be discarded by the profession and would not long continue to hold a license to practice; and when this amendment simply provides that duly licensed medical practitioners may dispense alcoholic liquors exclusively for medical purposes and not otherwise, I do not see anything unreasonable in it. I do hope this House will not try to place such a restriction upon the profession. Then, with regard to keeping a register, why should a medical man be required to keep a register of the number of doses he administers of alcohol any more than of opium or morphia? Every medical man who has had a practice in a city knows that opium and morphia, and various other drugs of the same kind, are becoming daily more and more used to the great injury of the public; yet medical men are not obliged to keep a register of the various doses of these drugs which they administer to their patients, and I think it is very unreasonable to ask them to do so in the case of alcohol.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentlemen who have spoken, both of whom I believe are physicians, should not be too quick to take offence where no offence I am sure was intended. No one ever thought of wantonly insulting the medical profession; this is in the main a noble and splendid profession, composed of honorable men; but we should be going too far, if we subscribed to the opinion that it contains no black sheep. The fact has come out during the administration of this law, that there are physicians who have made it a strict purpose openly stated to defy the law, and to have its provisions broken under the guise of their medical position; and the framers of the Act believed that if physicians were allowed to sell as they pleased, without making any certificates of returns, it would be opening a very wide door indeed. It would make the enforcement of the law very difficult, and give our enemies one more and stronger point than all, in the strong reasons they urge against an Act of this kind—that it will be violated and that it cannot be enforced. It will be observed that under this amendment, all medical practitioners duly licensed may dispense alcoholic liquors. There is no limit. We had provided in this measure a penalty against doctors who would give certificates under false pretences, but that has been stricken out by the Senate, so that there is now no way in which they can be made liable to penalties. I acknowledge it is very hard in some cases that a physician, who is far away from a place where liquor can be obtained, cannot keep liquor and dispense it himself; but we have to make an average, and it is a question for the House to decide whether they will open the door wider for abuse, or shut it, as closely as possible, even though in some unusual cases it may work hardship. There is, however, the practical experience since the law has been in force, that in the many counties in which it has been in force, not a single case of hardship has been shown to have occurred under the operation of the Act. That goes far to show that in practical experience, the hardship is not so great as one might otherwise think it would be.

Mr. HICKEY.

Mr. FISHER. I agree with the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster), that to refuse concurrence in the amendment of the Senate is in no sense an insult cast upon the medical profession. The question raised in this amendment was fully discussed when the Bill was before the House and an adverse vote given on it, and I am a little surprised to hear the hon. member for Dundas now alluding to things which were then, I think, effectually disposed of. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey), a few minutes ago, seemed to consider that in passing the amendment now before us, the temperance people were casting a reflection on the medical practitioners, since we allow clergymen to give certificates permitting druggists to sell liquor for medicinal purposes. If the Senate amendments were one that proposed to allow physicians to give certificates to other persons for the sale of liquor, there might be some force in that argument, but as it is to allow medical men themselves to sell liquor, without a certificate from any other medical man or from anybody, the question is a very different one from that of giving the privilege to clergymen of granting certificates authorising others to sell liquor. Under the Act, as originally conceived medical men were allowed to give certificates to their own patients that the liquor was required for medicinal purposes. Those patients then had to go to a druggist or other authorised vendor and obtain the liquor, and it was specially provided that the medical men who gave the certificates should not have an interest in the sale. But under the amendment of the Senate, no certificate is required; the man who prescribes the liquor may sell it, and you can understand at once that he will have an interest in the sale, and will therefore be more apt to prescribe liquor for his patients. The hon. member for Dundas says that medical men, who are allowed to sell poison, ought to be allowed to sell what he says is not poison. I am not going to discuss the question as to how much of a poison alcohol is, but it is a very different thing to allow a medical man to sell poison, which everybody knows to be dangerous, and which the medical man has to label as poison when he sells it, and to allow him to sell liquor, which a great many people, including probably the medical man himself, do not consider to be poison. Everyone knows that the selling of poison is hedged around by a great many safeguards. People are not liable to take willingly what they believe to be poison, but unfortunately many people are tempted to take liquor for the mere pleasure of drinking it, and it is to prevent medical men selling liquor for drinking purposes that we object to this amendment of the Senate. I do not wish to cast reflection on the medical profession, as a profession, but I regret to say I know instances of medical men who cannot fairly be called the honorable men, to whom the hon. member for Dundas and the hon. member for Wellington have alluded, but who would not hesitate to sell liquor. It happens that in my own county, where a prohibitory law has been long in force, one of the first men fined under the law for selling liquor illegally was a medical man. About a year ago in my county, a medical man was prosecuted for selling liquor, the proof was conclusive that he had sold it for drinking purposes, but in consequence of a legal quibble he was not convicted. From my experience and from what I have heard from other parts of the country where a prohibitory liquor law has been in force, I consider it absolutely necessary for the proper enforcement of the law that medical men should not be allowed to sell liquor as much as they choose. True, the Senate amendment says only for medicinal purposes; but when we hear members of the profession say they will do all they can to prevent the Scott Act being enforced, we can understand they will prostitute their position and sell liquor, which is not for medicinal purposes, assuming it to be for medicinal purposes. Medical men are not supposed to be traders and merchants, and if they desire to have liquor given their patients, it is much better in the interests of their own profession as well as of morality and good government, that they should not sell liquor themselves, but allow the ordinary dealer to sell it. In the Scott Act, it is specially provided that only one person in a country municipality, two in towns, and one to every 4,000 people in a city, should be allowed to sell liquor, but under this amendment we will have an unlimited sale of liquor. That is a contravention of one of the principles of the Scott Act, which is that the sale of liquor for medicinal purposes should be restricted to a few in the community. For these reasons, I protest against the adoption of the Senate amendments.

Mr. McCRAVEY. I can corroborate all that has been said by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) as well as by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher). I quite agree with the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) that the medical profession is as honorable a profession as we have. In fact, if all the members in the medical profession were as honorable as those who have seats in this House, there would be no danger in passing this amendment, but I am sorry to say that the medical profession, as far as I know, are like other men. There are good and bad among them. I think that I can speak somewhat feelingly on this question. We have a very large number of very honorable medical men in the constituency which I have the honor to represent. We have some men who have declared that they would do all they possibly could to destroy the efficiency of the Scott Act. The House will recollect the return brought down last year showing the number of certificates given by physicians for liquor, and it will be recollected that one of these physicians granted some 1,700 certificates in about eight months, or about eight per day. This physician was a man who had very little practice compared with what others had, and it would be very dangerous to grant this privilege to such physicians as these, who would practically have power to dispense liquor to his patients whenever they came to him and insisted upon having it. This is not an isolated case. I know of several cases of the same kind, and I think this is a very dangerous amendment, and I trust this House will not agree to it. I am strongly opposed to this amendment, as I believe it to be one of the most dangerous amendments which have been incorporated in the Act.

Mr. PLATT. I do not attach as much importance to this amendment as hon. gentlemen who have spoken upon it, both for and against, seem to attach to it. However, I have striven to discover some disability that would attach to medical men if this amendment were not carried, and I can imagine no position in which I could be placed as a medical man in which I could suffer at all as to the dispensing of liquors if the amendment were not carried. I do not think the medical profession require or ask that such an amendment should be made. I believe it would be placing the medical profession in a worse position than we stand at present. We do not wish to be made an exceptional class as to the handling of intoxicating liquors. We do not wish to have patients coming to us at all times of the night and all times of the day, writing their own prescriptions for us to dispense. I think if a vote of the medical profession of the country were taken, they would say that no disability attaches to the profession from the law as it now exists. The law is not intended to interfere with the legitimate dispensation of any drug or medicine that a medical man sees fit to administer or dispense, and I would have no fear of any interference of the law, so far as my practice of medicine is carried out, or will be carried out in the future, nor need any medical man have any fear, who uses alcohol in the strictly professional sense. I know there are black sheep in every flock, and there seems to be a suspicion in the minds of some hon. gentlemen that there are some black sheep in the medical profession. If that be the case, let a safeguard be thrown around the profession, as it is around other professions. I do not think that any insult has been thrown upon the profession in this matter, and I do not ask for myself or for the members of the profession in the section of the country in which I live, that this amendment shall be concurred in.

House divided on motion of Mr. Jamieson to disagree with proviso 1 of amendment 3.

YEAS :
Messieurs

Allen,	Fisher,	McDougall (C. Breton),
Allison,	Forbes,	McIntyre,
Armstrong,	Foster,	McIsaac,
Auger,	Gillmor,	McLellan,
Bain (Wentworth),	Gordon,	McMullen,
Baker (Missisquoi),	Guillet,	McNeill,
Barnard,	Gunn,	Mills,
Bernier,	Hackett,	Mulock,
Blake,	Harley,	Paterson (Brant),
Bourassa,	Hilliard,	Platt,
Bowell,	Holton,	Ray,
Burpee,	Innes,	Scraper,
Cameron (Huron),	Irvine,	Sommerville (Brant),
Cameron (Inverness),	Jamieson,	Sommerville (Bruce),
Cameron (Middlesex),	Jenkins,	Springer,
Cartwright,	Kaulbach,	Sutherland (Oxford),
Cassey,	King,	Taylor,
Catudal,	Kinney,	Temple,
Cimon,	Kirk,	Trow,
Cochrane,	Langelier,	Vail,
Colby,	Laurier,	Wallace (York),
Davies,	Lister,	Watson,
Dundas,	Macdonald (King's),	White (Hastings),
Fairbank,	Mackenzie,	Wilson,
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren.),	McCraney,	Wright—75.

NAYS :
Messieurs

Abbott,	Dodd,	Mitchell,
Bain (Soulanges),	Dupont,	Moffat,
Baker (Victoria),	Farrow,	Montplaisir,
Beaty,	Ferguson (Welland),	Orton,
Bell,	Fortin,	Pain,
Benoit,	Gaudet,	Paterson (Essex),
Bergeron,	Gault,	Pinsonneault,
Blondeau,	Gigault,	Pruyn,

Bossé,	Girouard,	Riopel,
Burnham,	Grandbois,	Robertson (Hamilton)
Burns,	Guay,	Robertson (Hastings),
Cameron (Victoria),	Guilbault,	Ross,
Campbell (Victoria),	Hall,	Royal,
Carling,	Hesson,	Rykert,
Caron,	Hickey,	Shakespeare,
Casgrain,	Homer,	Small,
Chapleau,	Hurteau,	Sproule,
Costigan,	Kilvert,	Stairs,
Goughlin,	Kranz,	Taschereau,
Coursol,	Labrosse,	Tassé,
Curran,	Landry (Montmagny),	Tupper,
Outhbert,	Langevin,	Vabin,
Daly,	Lesage,	Vanasse,
Daoust,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Wallace (Albert),
Desaulniers (Mask'ingé),	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Wells,
Desaulniers (St. M'rice),	McCarthy,	White (Gardwell),
Desjardins,	McGreavy,	Wood (Brookville),
Dickinson,	Massue,	Wood (West'm'land)—84.

Motion negatived.

Mr. HICKEY moved that the amendment be now concurred in.

Mr. JAMIESON moved, that so much of Proviso 2 of the third amendment, as is numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4, be disagreed to for the following reason:—

"Because the same is unnecessary, inasmuch as the Act does not prohibit such sales."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford). I wish to call attention to one fact as a reason why the motion should not prevail, and is not, in my opinion, necessary. The College of Pharmacy has taken a high legal opinion upon this matter, and that opinion is, that druggists are liable to prosecution under the Act as it now stands, and they ask for these amendments to protect themselves. I think the amendments are in the interests of the people, and will not lessen the prohibitive character of the Scott Act. This legal opinion having been given, and the amendments having been inserted by the Senate in accordance with the wish of the College of Pharmacy, and not opposed by strong supporters of the Scott Act, I think they should be allowed. The members of that college are very respectable citizens, and I am sure they have no intention of destroying in any way the effect of the Scott Act by these amendments.

Mr. JAMIESON. So far as some of these amendments are concerned, I do not suppose there will be any objection to them. Of course, my impression is, and it is the opinion of others with whom I have conversed upon this question, that the Scott Act does not prohibit chemists and druggists from dispensing many, or in fact all, of the preparations which are enumerated here. The most objectionable one—and if it were eliminated I would have no objection to the rest—is the fifth one, alcohol.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not now before us; we have not reached the fifth.

Mr. JAMIESON. Then only one question arises in connection with this matter. Under the Canada Temperance Act a chemist or druggist requires to hold a license before he can dispense intoxicating liquors of any kind, even under the certificate of a medical man. I do not quite understand the effect of this amendment. A druggist, if this amendment became law, would be able to dispense liquors under the certificate of a medical man without holding any license.

Mr. SPROULE. I entirely disagree with the opinion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), because, if you accept the plain wording of the Act, no other interpretation can be given of the provision than that druggists will be prevented from selling. The Act says that from the day the Act comes into force no person shall be allowed to sell alcoholic liquors, etc., or any mixture containing alcohol, capable of being used as a beverage—except for medicinal purposes. It does not make any exception when, for medicinal purposes, it says they shall only be sold by druggists or other vendors who may be specially licensed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. It may be that in a large village or small town there are two or three druggists and as many medical men. Each medical man sends his prescriptions to his own druggist. But one druggist only will be fortunate enough to secure a license, and the other druggists will be unable to dispense or sell any alcoholic liquor, even under the prescription of a medical man, however small the quantity. This is the opinion given by a very respectable legal firm in Toronto—as mentioned by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland)—at the request of Mr. Elliott and other druggists of Toronto, some druggists of the city of London, Hamilton and other places. The professional opinion given by that legal firm was this: That it was impossible for any druggist to dispense or sell liquor not only for medicinal purposes but for preparations contained in the pharmacopœa, without violating the law. As I understand the wording of the Temperance Act, it is this: That all classes of alcoholic liquors that may be used as beverages are prohibited. There is no denying the fact that the ordinary tinctures can be used as beverages. Therefore, they are included within the law, and any person dispensing or selling them violates the law. With respect to bay rum, which is a preparation in the pharmacopœa, it may be used as a beverage. So the selling of that article will be a violation of the law. To sell tinctures and many of the medicinal wines will be a violation of the law. When we have the high authority I have mentioned, that the sale of these articles will be a violation of the law, I think the House ought to concede the necessity of the amendment, so as to prevent a very large class of the community from violating the law. If the law is framed so that an ordinary business cannot be carried on without violating it, it would only make the vendors disregard the law, and druggists would dispense them whether they violated the law or not, when they believed such articles were essential to the health of the people.

Mr. PLATT.

Mr. CASEY. There is no question as to the violation of the principle of the Scott Act in the point under discussion. This matter was very fully discussed when the Bill was before the House in the first instance, and I understood there was a general consensus of opinion among legal gentlemen that the Scott Act as it stands allows the sale of such preparations as are mentioned in the amendment. There seemed to be no question, then, as to the liberty given to druggists to sell medicinal preparations and dispense prescriptions containing alcohol. For that reason I suppose no action was taken in the House. But attention has since been called to a very high legal opinion given on the other side of the question to the effect that the Scott Act does not protect the druggists in making prescriptions or selling medicinal preparations containing alcohol. As this is a purely legal question concerning the meaning of the Act, I do not intend to pronounce an opinion of my own, but I will merely say that in the meantime, unless and until we have an equally strong and influential legal opinion to the opposite effect, I should feel bound to follow the legal opinion already given as that of gentlemen who are paid for giving it and who have given it their full attention. For that reason I intend to support the retention of the Senate amendment. That is my position at present; but, of course, if the House is satisfied that the Scott Act does afford sufficient protection to these tradesmen, I think it would be introducing needless surplusage to retain this amendment. We have not yet heard from the legal authorities of the House on the subject. If they say it is absolutely unnecessary, I am willing to vote to strike it out; if they say there is the least doubt, and that it is necessary to protect the druggists, I shall agree with the amendment.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the reason the hon. gentleman has offered to the consideration of the House for disagreeing with this amendment, is somewhat unfortunate. It has been stated that there is a doubt as to the real meaning of the Temperance Act, and that this amendment is proposed in order to remove that doubt. The hon. gentleman now proposes a motion to disagree with the amendment on the ground that it is unnecessary. He does not say that he objects to the provisions of the amendment but simply that they are unnecessary, that the Act as it stands means what the amendment proposes. Well, of course, it is, as a rule, a very futile procedure to make an amendment in order that the Act shall continue to mean that which it already means, but if there have been well grounded doubts as to the interpretation of the Act, and if that interpretation be obscure, I do not know that it is a very strong reason to disagree simply because the amendment is unnecessary. Now, I do not state with any degree of positiveness—for I have but just looked at this amendment—but I do throw out for the consideration of the House the suggestion that there is a great deal more in this amendment than the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) appears to think, and that we have a much graver question before us than that which he has raised in the speech he has made. As I understand it, under the Temperance Act, as it now stands, prescriptions of alcoholic liquor can be filled only upon a special form of prescription and by the specially licensed druggists. Now, the question has been suggested, as the only question arising on this amendment, is the doubt whether prescriptions of the character of compounds, but not really capable of being used as beverages, are safely to be supplied by the ordinary licensed druggists, not specially licensed nor under a special prescription. I confess it to be my opinion that under the Temperance Act, as it stands now, a prescription that is really a medical prescription, although it may contain alcoholic liquor, is prevented from being filled by the ordinary druggist. It must, however, be a medical prescription in this sense: that it is not alcoholic liquor, and that it is not capable of being used as a beverage. If the prescription be, for instance, of brandy, or rum, or whiskey, 8 ounces of it, with a little taste of something put in in infinitesimal quantities, which will perhaps enhance the agreeability of the dose of 8 ounces of alcoholic liquor, then that is capable of being used as a beverage, and I fancy the prescription is to be filled only under the special safeguards of the Act. But now I find this amendment, and I would suggest that in certain of its clauses it goes so far as to open the door to prescriptions really of alcoholic liquor by all licensed druggists, although those prescriptions be not prescriptions containing the special certificate, and although druggists be not specially licensed druggists under the Temperance Act; because the 2nd clause of this amendment says:

"Physicians' prescriptions containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than 8 ounces at any one time."

Now, under that, I maintain that the physician may prescribe 8 ounces of brandy, or whiskey, or rum, and that it may be sold without a special certificate, and the prescription may be filled by any ordinarily licensed druggist. Then you get no registration of such prescriptions, you get none of the safeguards which were provided by the Temperance Act. Therefore, it appears to me, at this moment, that the effect of this amendment is very much wider than the hon. member for North Lanark seems to have supposed, and that in effect it opens the door to an unregulated sale, by all the druggists in the country, of prescriptions of alcoholic liquor not exceeding 8 ounces, without special certificate, without requiring a certificate, and without those prescriptions which, under the Temperance Act, surround the sale of alcoholic liquors. If that view be correct it is clear we have now a much more important question before us than the hon. member supposed, and that the reason for disagreeing with this amendment ought to be of a different character from that which is in your hands, namely, that it is unnecessary, because in the opinion of some it may be unnecessary, and in the opinion of others it may be very harmful indeed.

Mr. ORTON. I have not heard a legal opinion expressed upon the subject, but I do know that wholesale druggists consider the Act as it is now interferes very seriously with their business—not only with that of the retail druggists but with that of the wholesale druggists. Mr. Elliott, of Toronto, told me that the Act under the present shape prevents him from carrying on his ordinary business as a wholesale druggist, and that it interferes with the manufacture of the ordinary preparations required in his business. I merely state what I said to be the opinion obtained by the Pharmaceutical Society, and I have no doubt the question was considered carefully by them. For that reason, and as the hon. gentleman who moves to disagree has given only one reason for dissenting from the amendment, namely that the Act already gives the power, I think this House can do no harm by removing any doubt upon the question.

Mr. SCRIVER. In justice to my hon friend from Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), I wish to state that he did not state that the only reason for dissenting from the amendment was that there was no necessity for it. I heard him distinctly raise the point suggested by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, namely, that it would greatly increase the powers of selling on the part of unlicensed druggists, whereas, in the Act as it now stands, the sale is confined to one particular druggist in each municipality, or to druggists representing a certain number of inhabitants in cities and towns. He held that if the amendment is passed, there would be no restriction in this respect, and that all properly licensed druggists would be permitted to sell under such restrictions as are given in the Act.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly there are much stronger objections to this amendment than those which have been put forward by the hon. member for Lanark, if the opinions which have been given by the hon. member for Durham are correct. It practically allows any and every druggist and chemist in the Scott Act county to sell liquor without keeping a register and without requiring a certificate from a medical practitioner or a clergyman. I confess that in reading over the amendments of the Senate I did not so understand it. I supposed it only meant physicians' prescriptions containing alcohol, but not those made entirely of alcohol; but I do not profess to be able to say whether that is the case or not. I should suppose that if it meant simply physicians' prescriptions of alcohol it would have stated so specifically, but that if it said "containing alcohol" it would mean that the compound contained something else besides. If it does not mean pure alcohol, there is no great objection to the amendment, and if it does the objection is absolutely necessary. If the House does not wish to impair the whole working of the Scott Act in those counties where it is adopted, or in which it may hereafter be adopted, they should reject the amendment. I was not at first myself disposed to think that there was any particular objection to this amendment of the Senate, but now I must concur in the motion to reject it, for if the opinion of the hon. member for West Durham is the correct legal opinion, there is no question but this clause, if passed, will practically annihilate the good working of the Scott Act in those counties in which it is adopted, and if this House wishes to take upon itself the responsibility of doing that, then they should concur in the amendment. But I protest vigorously against its passage, if it is possible that the amendment may be construed to have that effect; and I think that it is my duty and the duty of every one who has at heart the practical and efficient working of the Scott Act, to reject the amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt that the second paragraph of the amendment from the Senate, is very wide, and it is liable to the statement made by the leader of the Opposition. However, the House must remember that we have already decided that the duly licensed medical practitioners may dispense alcoholic liquors for exclusively medicinal purposes, and if they can then certainly druggists can prepare the physicians' prescriptions to the same effect. It does not make any alteration; it only gives the druggist the right to make up the prescriptions which the physician prepares, and which we have already decided to-day they would have a right to do. With respect to the restrictions of the Canada Temperance Act, there is no doubt that a druggist even for medicinal purposes, cannot sell any intoxicating liquors without a special license from the Lieutenant Governor. The only question is whether he is confined to the sale of the liquor itself, or whether the druggist can make up a prescription, one of the component parts of which is alcohol. Well, I think there is more than a doubt upon that, but I speak with hesitation, as my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition thinks that on the whole it will not interfere with the prescriptions which are made up legitimately by a medical man, although such prescriptions contain alcohol. I think there is more than a doubt upon that point. I think if the article sold contains alcohol, although it may be mixed with other ingredients, yet the statute may apply.

Mr. FOSTER. The Act as it stands at present, says that certain druggists and vendors shall be licensed, and those shall be the only persons duly authorised to fill prescriptions. They have to keep a register of those certificates and have to make a return of them. Now, by the amendment already passed, you have allowed physicians to dispense all prescriptions they chose to give. That certainly takes away all these cases of hardship spoken of by our friends the physicians, who were in favor of that clause. Now, in addition, if this passes, you are going to allow every chemist and druggist to sell physicians' prescriptions without license, to keep no register, to make no return, and it will certainly take away all the safeguards of the Act, and leave a widely opened door to continual abuses.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We are certainly under great disadvantage in discussing this question, inasmuch as we have not before us the amendments passed in the Senate. We have only been supplied with the Bill as passed in Committee of the Whole in the Senate, not the Bill after its third reading, and in this particular case, it is very awkward to be obliged to talk on a subject like this when we have not really had an opportunity of looking at the precise words of the amendment made by the Senate. Why we should be called upon to disagree from amendments we have never seen, I really do not understand. I think we ought to have some means by which we could get possession of the exact words of the amendment, especially such an amendment as this, before we are called upon to vote on it.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I agree with my hon. friend on that point, but if he will look at the Senate's proceedings of the 26th of May he will find that they are all set out at length. With reference to this particular question, I cannot say that I see any difficulty in disposing of it. The reason my hon. friend from Lanark proposes to give for dissenting to this amendment is that it is not necessary. The hon. member for Oxford has stated, I presume from his own knowledge, that a high legal authority has pronounced that it is necessary. In that state of affairs, surely we are not going wrong in simply voting to remove a doubt; because that is all we are doing. If these particular articles are not covered by the Scott Act, as my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) says, there is no harm in saying they are not. If there is a doubt about it, and it is not intended they should be covered, the doubt would be removed. That being the only reason he gives for his motion to reject the Senate amendment, it seems to me it is wholly without foundation.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. JAMIESON. So far as I was concerned, I did not think it necessary to cover a quire of paper with reasons; and, moreover, in looking into this matter, I was not very sure as to the meaning or the extent of the second paragraph. I had my doubts with reference to it, and I suggested these doubts, I think, when I spoke a few moments ago. Now, I agree with the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) and some others, who say that the adoption of this amendment in the present shape, and with the light we have now thrown upon it, would be a very serious obstacle in the way of enforcing the Canada Temperance Act. Are we prepared to allow every chemist and druggist throughout the country, in counties where that Act has been adopted, to dispense alcoholic liquors to the extent of 8 ounces? I think it would be a most unwise thing to do, and as one who has a strong opinion of the efficiency of the Canada Temperance Act if properly worked, I most decidedly object to it. So far as any legal opinion is concerned, I hold it is not binding on this House. We, as the representatives of the people and the guardians of the rights of the people, have to exercise our own judgment on all questions of this kind, and I trust that in dealing with this question the members of this House will act independently, and not be governed by any legal opinion which may be given.

Mr. HICKEY. I think the Canada Temperance Act of 1878 was not intended by its promoters or supporters to operate against the legitimate use of alcoholic spirits. It was only intended to meet the ordinary sale of liquors in bar rooms. But now it is desired by these people to interfere, not only with the legitimate use, but the skillful use, of these things. We allow druggists to handle morphia and other poisons of various kinds, but because it is liquor, which these people wish to keep out of bars, they seek to annihilate this trade as well. The Act asks to restrain and prevent the general sale of liquor, but when these gentlemen attempt to interfere with the legitimate sale of alcohol as a drug I think sensible men cannot sympathise with them.

Mr. McMULLEN. I just rise to say that several counties in the Dominion are making very large sacrifices for the purpose of giving the Scott Act a fair trial, because they will virtually lose all the license money which they have been accustomed to receive for the privilege of selling liquor. If the Act is going to be so amended as to allow druggists and doctors to sell liquors, the efficiency of the whole Act is going to be virtually destroyed. The people are deeply interested in this matter, and if we are going to give the Scott Act a fair trial, we should allow them to have their own way; but if we are going to allow druggists and doctors to sell indiscriminately, without any restriction, we are going to produce a demoralising state of things in connection with the liquor traffic that is going to have a serious effect. After the opinion expressed by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think it quite clear that, if this clause is allowed to pass in its present form, it will enable druggists to deal out liquor without any restriction whatever. If we are going to do that, we had better annul the Act altogether, and leave things as they are.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I suppose that as this amendment is printed in the Minutes of the Senate, we may refer to what took place there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In another place.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The remarkable circumstance is that this particular sub-section was actually accepted by those supposed to be the friends of the Canada Temperance Act in another place. There are five sub-sections; the first relates to preparations authorised by the ordinary pharmacopœa, the second to physicians' prescriptions, the third to patent medicines except such as are known to the vendor to be capable of being used as beverages, the fourth to eau de Cologne, bay rum and articles of that kind, and the fifth to alcohol or methylate spirits for pharmaceutical, chemical or mechanical uses. The only objection made by the Hon. Mr. Scott, whose name has been attached to the Canada Temperance Act, as its original promoter, was to the third and fourth of these sub-sections, but he made no objection to the one relating to physicians' prescriptions. It appears to me, looking at what occurs in cities and large towns, that it would be exceedingly inconvenient if this amendment were not inserted. It is well known that these medical men do not make up their own prescriptions, generally speaking, but send them to the druggists whom they favor. There has been a suggestion—I think an improper one—that there has been a kind of partnership between the medical man and the chemist; but the ground on which they put this practice is this, that as they are responsible for the medicine they prescribe, they should have some choice in the way in which it is put up, and they therefore hold themselves responsible for the character of the chemist to whom they entrust the dispensing of their prescription. A medical man will generally advise his patient to go to a particular druggist to have his prescription made up. In a large city a druggist might be appointed who is not in the confidence of the medical faculty; and surely it would be inconvenient if a medical man were compelled to send his prescriptions to a druggist in whom he had no confidence, or else adopt the plan of making up his own prescriptions, which he had abandoned long years ago. I fancy that must be the reason why this particular sub-section was accepted, and in fact it was accepted in another place without any division at all. Under these circumstances, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. McCRANEY. It is quite clear, from the position taken by the hon. the leader of the Opposition and the hon. the leader of the Government, that there is a great deal more in the amendment than at first appears. It appears quite clear that any druggist can sell up to the amount of 8 ounces of liquor. Now, we have passed a clause giving to physicians the right to prescribe up to 8 ounces, and I think it is a very dangerous clause. While I agree there are many honorable physicians, I know there are a great many who are not so honorable; and what is there to hinder a hotel keeper taking a physician who would be dishonorable enough into his hotel and having him prescribe and dispense liquor? Or what is there to prevent a hotel keeper engaging a licensed druggist in his hotel and having him prescribe liquor, and sell it? Or what is to prevent an unscrupulous physician from turning his drug shop into a common dram shop and dispensing liquor up to 8 ounces, to all who require it? Or what is to prevent a dishonorable druggist from doing the same under this clause while he is exempt entirely from paying any license? The Parliament of 1878 gave the country the Scott Act, and I think it is the duty of this Parliament to make that Scott Act workable. It is unfair to the people who have spent much time and money in order to carry out this principle of prohibition to put them off in this way, by inserting an amendment which will tend to destroy the efficiency of the Act.

House divided on motion of Mr. Jamieson to disagree with proviso 2 of 3rd amendment.

YEAS :

Messieurs

Allen,
Allison,
Armstrong,
Auger,

Foster,
Gillmor,
Gordon,
Guillet,

McIntyre,
McIsaac,
Melélan,
McMullen,

Bain (Wentworth),
Baker (Missisquoi),
Barnard,
Bourassa,
Bowell,
Burpee,
Cameron (Huron),
Cameron (Middlesex),
Oimon,
Oochrane,
Colby,
Dundas,
Ferguson (Leeds & Gren),
Fisher,

Gunn,
Hackett,
Harley,
Hilliard,
Holton,
Innes,
Irvine,
Jamieson,
Kaulbach,
King,
Kinney,
Kirk,
Macdonald (King's),
McCraney,

Mulock,
Paterson (Brant),
Ray,
Scriver,
Shakespeare,
Somerville (Brant),
Somerville (Bruce),
Springer,
Taylor,
Trow,
Wallace (York),
Watson,
White (Hastings),
Wright.—54.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Abbott,
Bain (Soulanges),
Baker (Victoria),
Beaty,
Bell,
Benoit,
Bergeron,
Bernier,
Billy,
Blake,
Blondeau,
Burnham,
Cameron (Inverness),
Cameron (Victoria),
Campbell (Victoria),
Carling,
Caron,
Cartwright,
Casey,
Casgrain,
Catudal,
Chapleau,
Costigan,
Coughlin,
Coursol,
Curran,
Cuthbert,
Daly,
Daoust,
Davies,
De St. Georges,
Desaulniers (Mask'ngé),
Desaulniers (St. M'rice),
Desjardins,
Dickinson,
Dodd,

Dugas,
Dupont,
Fairbank,
Farrow,
Ferguson (Welland),
Fortin,
Gagné,
Gaudet,
Gault,
Gigault,
Girouard,
Grandbois,
Guay,
Guilbault,
Haggart,
Hall,
Heason,
Hickey,
Homer,
Hurteau,
Jenkins,
Kilvert,
Kranz,
Labrosse,
Landerkin,
Landry (Montmaguy),
Langelier,
Langevin,
Lesage,
Lister,
Macdonald (Sir John),
Mackenzie,
Mackintosh,
McMillan (Vaudreuil),
McCallum,
McCarthy,

McDougall (O. Breton),
McGreedy,
McNeill,
Massue,
Mills,
Mitchell,
Moffat,
Montplaisir,
Orton,
Paint,
Paterson (Essex),
Pinsonneault,
Platt,
Pope,
Pruyn,
Rioppel,
Robertson (Hamilton),
Robertson (Hastings),
Ross,
Royal,
Rykert,
Small,
Sproule,
Stairs,
Sutherland (Oxford),
Taschereau,
Tassé,
Tupper,
Vail,
Valin,
Vanasse,
Wells,
White (Cardwell),
Wilson,
Wood (Brockville),
Wood (Westm'land)—108.

Motion negatived.

Mr. BLAKE. I could not assent to the motion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), being of opinion that the second proviso is not the law as it stands. It is tolerably clear with reference to the prescription of 8 ounces, that the proviso cannot be carried out under the existing law and therefore it is an enlargement of the Act. I therefore could not support the motion of my hon. friend on the ground that the amendments are unnecessary because the powers given in them can be exercised under the law as it is. I am, however, opposed to the second sub-section or proviso and cannot record my vote in favor of its passing. As to the other ones, although there is some doubt as to their being susceptible of passing, yet upon the whole I have decided to give my individual support to the other 3 provisos which were under discussion on the motion of my hon. friend from Lanark. There remains 5 to be dealt with under different circumstances to all those 3. It seems to me the hon. gentleman's argument is quite correct that they are practically unnecessary, although I felt some little difficulty about them, and on the whole I think the argument is in favor of passing them in view of the doubt. As to the second sub-section, I think—and this view, I believe, is concurred in by the First Minister—that this is a very wide clause, being, in fact, quite a new proposition which was not in the Act. The First Minister pointed out that the House had just agreed to an unregulated sale by physicians themselves of alcoholic prescriptions. That is true, but it is carrying the case a good deal further to provide for the unregulated sale by druggists, on prescriptions. At any rate those who voted against the unregulated sale by physicians will feel it necessary to vote against the unregulated sale by druggists.

Mr. CASEY. I wish to say, in view of the course I am going to take, that I have voted against the amendment of the hon. member for North Lanark for the same reasons as those given by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, and that I intend to vote against this amendment for the same reason. There is in my mind a doubt as to whether the Scott Act exempts druggists from the penalties of the law, because we have a legal opinion one way and a legal opinion the other way. My hon. friend from North Lanark says we should not regard legal opinions but use our own judgment. We must use our own judgment in making or amending laws, but one thing on which we form our judgment must be the interpretation of the laws as they at present stand. When we are asked to amend a law, we must know how that law stands, and must take the best legal opinions, if there have been no judicial decisions. In this case, the legal opinions show that there is a doubt, to say the least, as to the position of the druggist under the Scott Act. I am quite willing to support as much of the Senate amendment as is intended to remove that doubt, without going any further, but I must refuse to accept sub-section 2 of that amendment which seems, on the excellent authority of the leaders of both sides, to go a great deal further. If that sub-section is removed or changed, I will support the rest of the amendment, but until it is so struck out or amended, I shall feel it necessary to vote against the amendment as a whole. I have no doubt the hon. gentlemen who have charge of this Bill will be able to express their views on the subject by way of some amendment or resolution to meet the case.

Mr. ORTON moved concurrence in the amendment from the Senate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In order to be logical, I think we must vote in favor of the second paragraph now before the House, that is to say that nothing in this Act shall interfere with physicians' prescriptions containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than 8 ounces at any one time. We have already voted that duly licensed medical practitioners may dispense alcoholic liquors for medicinal purposes. If the medical man himself can dispense alcoholic liquors for medicinal purposes, I see no reason why he may not give a prescription for the druggist to make up. If he had the drugs and appliances himself he would make the prescription up himself, and I think this is a necessary consequence of the first vote on this question. We know that, as a matter of fact, in cities the medical men do not keep dispensaries and do not make up their own medicines, and therefore, if this were objected to, the result would be that, in the country parts, where medical men do make up their own prescriptions and have the alcohol in their dispensaries, they would be able to make up the prescriptions, but, in a town or city, they could not do so. The medical man would have to keep the alcohol on hand in his own dispensary in order to avoid the provisions of the Act. I must support the second paragraph.

Mr. MILLS. As I understand the second section, the prescription might be pure alcohol; it need not contain any other ingredient, as it would if prescribed by a physician; and to authorise the sale by an ordinary druggist would be scarcely consistent with the other provisions of the Act already agreed to by this House. It was provided in the Canada Temperance Act that, if alcohol is to be used as a medicine, it must be sold by a party who has no interest in the physician's prescription, and there must be a registration as well. There is no provision for registration here; there is no provision that it shall not be pure alcohol. What we are doing here is to render the Act wholly inoperative.

Mr. BLAKE.

We ought either to repeal the law altogether, or to give it a fair trial where the majority of the electors have adopted it; but this House, by these amendments, is doing everything in its power to make it impossible that the law can be fairly carried out.

Mr. JAMIESON then moved, that the second paragraph of proviso 2 of the said third amendment be disagreed to for the following reason:—

Because it is not in accordance with the spirit of the Act.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Surely that amendment is not in order. My hon. friend, first of all, moved that the amendment to four paragraphs be not assented to. Then, that having been voted down, he moved that one of those amendments be not assented to. Surely we are not called upon to vote a second time on the same thing. The whole includes the part.

Mr. BLAKE. There are two reasons against the views of the hon. gentleman. The whole may include the part, but some parts of the whole may be unobjectionable, and others may be objectionable. In the first place, while some of us were opposed to the passing of the clause, others were opposed also to the reason which was proposed to be given. This is a very different reason to that proposed formerly.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Then the motion should have been by way of amendment—

Mr. BLAKE. No, not at all.—

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria)—to the motion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson).

Mr. BLAKE. No, it is a fresh motion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford). I wish to say one word in explanation of my position on this amendment. The House has adopted the amendment to allow physicians to dispense liquors in limited quantities, and if we leave this clause in this amendment allowing druggists to fill prescriptions of 8 ounces in Scott Act counties, many doctors, if they cannot give these prescriptions to druggists, will be compelled to keep the liquor and dispense it for themselves. This clause in this amendment, I think, is a considerable improvement to the amendment already adopted by the House, and for that reason I shall have to vote against the amendment of the member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson).

House divided on motion of Mr. Jamieson as above.

YEAS :
Messieurs

Allen,	Ferguson (Leeds & Gren.)	McLelan,
Allison,	Fisher,	McMullen,
Armstrong,	Forbes,	McNeill,
Auger,	Foster,	Mills,
Bain (Wentworth),	Gillmor,	Mulock,
Baker (Missisquoi),	Gordon,	Paint,
Barnard,	Guillet,	Paterson (Brant),
Bernier,	Gunn,	Ray,
Blake,	Hackett,	Scriver,
Bourassa,	Harley,	Shakespeare,
Bowell,	Hilliard,	Somerville (Brant),
Bryson,	Holton,	Somerville (Bruce),
Burpee,	Innes,	Springer,
Cameron (Huron),	Irvine,	Taylor,
Cameron (Middlesex),	Jamieson,	Temple,
Cartwright (sir Rich'd),	King,	Trow,
Casey,	Kinney,	Vail,
Catudal,	Kirk,	Wallace (Albert),
Cimon,	Laurier,	Wallace (York),
Cochrane,	Lister,	Watson,
Colby,	Macdonald (King's),	Wells,
Davies,	Mackenzie,	White (Hastings),
Dickinson,	McCraney,	White (Renfrew),
Dundas,	McIntyre,	Wilson,
Fairbank,	McIsaac,	Wright.—75.

NAVS :
Messieurs

Abbott,	Dupont,	McCallum,
Bain (Soulanges),	Farrow,	McCarthy,
Beaty,	Ferguson (Welland),	McDougall (O. Breton),
Bell,	Fortin,	McGreevy,
Benoit,	Gagné,	Massue,
Bergeron,	Gaudet,	Mitchell,
Billy,	Gault,	Moffat,
Blondeau,	Gigault,	Montplaisir,
Burnham,	Girouard,	Orton,
Burns,	Grandbois,	Patterson (Essex),
Cameron (Inverness),	Guay,	Pinsonneault,
Cameron (Victoria),	Guilbault,	Platt,
Campbell (Victoria),	Haggart,	Pope,
Carling,	Hall,	Pruyn,
Caron,	Hesson,	Riopel,
Casgrain,	Hickey,	Robertson (Hamilton),
Chapleau,	Homer,	Robertson (Hastings),
Costigan,	Hurteau,	Royal,
Coughlin,	Jenkins,	Rykert,
Coursol,	Kilvert,	Small,
Curran,	Kranz,	Sproule,
Cuthbert,	Labrosse,	Stairs,
Daly,	Landerkin,	Taschereau,
Daoust,	Landry (Montmagny),	Tassé,
De St. Georges,	Langelier,	Tupper,
Desaulniers (Mask'ngé),	Langevin,	Valin,
Desaulniers (St. M'rice),	Lease,	Vanasse,
Dejardins,	Macdonald (Sir John),	White (Cardwell),
Dodd,	Mackintosh,	Wood (Brockville),
Dugas,	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Wood (Westm'land)—90.

Motion negatived.

Mr. JAMIESON then moved, that that part of the said clause 2 numbered 5 of proviso 2 of the said third amendment be disagreed to for the following reason :—

Because it contravenes the principle of the Act, which provides that the sale of alcohol and spirits for the purposes mentioned shall be made only on the certificate of two justices of the peace accompanied by the affirmation of the applicant and the registration of the sale, which are considered necessary safeguards against an abuse of the law.

He said : I have a few words to say upon this motion before it is put to the House. At the outset I beg to say that if this House wants free trade in liquor they had better adopt this 5th section. That is my judgment of what is proposed in this 5th paragraph. Under the Canada Temperance Act if liquor is required, alcohol or methylated spirits, which mean pretty much the same thing, if they are required for manufacturing or mechanical purposes, or for the purpose of any art or trade, a person can get them by procuring a certificate under the hand of two justices of the peace accompanied by his own affirmation, and the sale must be registered and a proper return made. Now, I contend that these are necessary safeguards to the effectual working of the law. What is proposed by this amendment? Why, the proposition here is to allow any druggist, any chemist, and any physician, in the event of any party wanting liquor for any purpose whatever, to sell it to him without his producing a certificate, or without a register being kept, and without any check whatever being placed on the sale of it. Under this paragraph all the purchaser requires to say in going into a drug store is that he requires liquor for any one of those purposes. I ask you whether this House is prepared to adopt a principle of that kind. I trust the good sense of this House will not allow any provision of this kind to prevail in counties and cities where the people have adopted the Act in good faith believing that it would prohibit the sale of liquor for beverage purposes; because there is no doubt this will permit the unrestrained sale of liquors in all counties where the Scott Act has been adopted. I have most serious objection to it, and I trust the House will see it in a proper light. It is simply an attempt to destroy the effectiveness of the Canada Temperance Act and to render the efforts of the people to enforce that Act, completely abortive.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I agree to a considerable extent with my hon. friend. I think this 5th clause is opening a very wide door, and I shall vote with him that it be not concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FISHER. I wish to move an amendment to the 3rd amendment from the Senate, by adding the following words :—

Provided also that all such physicians, chemists and druggists, selling alcoholic or spirituous liquors under the provision of said amendment, shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions that govern vendors licensed by the 4th sub-section of the 99th section of the Act.

Mr. ORTON. The adoption of this proposition will subject medical men to a great deal of trouble. There are hardly any prescriptions for eight or four ounces but what contain spirits either as tinctures or some other shape. Nearly all the medical prescriptions are made up in that form. There will therefore have to be kept a record of every prescription, and that will cause unnecessary trouble.

Mr. FISHER. Under the Scott Act as originally passed, those who were licensed to sell for medicinal purposes were obliged to receive certificates from medical men that the liquor was really for medicinal purposes; and they were also obliged to file that certificate and keep a record, and make a return to the Department of Inland Revenue once a year of all such sales. If either druggists or chemists are allowed to sell only under such regulations, physicians should be made subject to the same regulations as licensed druggists under the Scott Act. It seems to be very unfair that under a license given to one man he is hedged round by regulations, while all other druggists and chemists and physicians will be allowed to sell without those restrictions.

Mr. HICKEY. This is an attempt to make a farce of the action which this House has already taken. The idea of an hon. member making a motion that a physician who has already been authorised under this Bill to dispense certificates should be called upon to obtain a certificate from another physician. That is what the amendment amounts to. The amendment is beyond my comprehension, and it looks to me to be absurd.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The meaning of this resolution is this: That no physician, chemist or druggist shall sell alcoholic or spirituous liquors unless he obtains the certificate of another medical man.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is so. One of the provisions of the Act is this:

"Provided also that the sale of intoxicating liquor for exclusively medicinal purposes, or for bona fide use in some art, trade or manufacture, shall be lawful only by such druggists and other vendors as may be thereto specially licensed by the Lieutenant Governor in each Province, the number not to exceed one in each township or parish, nor two in each town, and in cities not exceeding one for every 4,000 inhabitants; such sale, when for medicinal purposes, to be in quantities of not less than one pint, to be removed from the premises, and to be made only on the certificate of a medical man having no interest in the sale by the druggist or vendor, affirming that such liquor has been prescribed for the person named therein."

This resolution destroys the whole effect of the resolutions we have carried already. It is a direct contradiction of what we have already voted in favor of.

Mr. JAMIESON. There may, of course, be something, and perhaps a good deal, in what the leader of the Government has said, but such was not the intention of the resolution. I think, with the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), that there should be some record kept of the sales which are made under the amendment we have adopted to day. I really see no reason why persons, who under the amendments which the Senate have made to the Act should be placed in a better position than the parties who are appointed to sell under the original Act. I have no doubt this amendment can be changed in such a way as to avoid the difficulty suggested by the leader of the Government, and I think if an opportunity is given for a few moments' consultation we might be able to frame such an amendment as would commend itself to the hon. gentleman and to the House. I think the spirit of the amendment is correct. We ought to adopt something in the direction of that amendment, if not in its very language.

Mr. FAIRBANK. It simply amounts to this: That in any county where the Scott Act has been carried it is possible, nay more it is probable, that there will be a certain number of vendors of liquor who neither have licenses nor are required to keep a record. That will be the practical effect of the matter as it stands just now. It is asking very little after the House has seen fit to pass the amendments that a record shall be kept. Those medical men who do not propose to abuse the law can have no objections to the proposal, and there should be some check on those medical men who might seek to abuse the privilege.

Mr. FISHER. In drawing up the amendment I had not the intention of accomplishing what the leader of the Government intimates this amendment would accomplish. All I desire is that all physicians, druggists and chemists who might sell under the provisions of the amendment should be made subject to the same regulations as those who are licensed under the original provisions of the Canada Temperance Act. I believe the leader of the Government is correct, and that by the wording of the amendment a physician selling would be forced to get a certificate from another physician. I think, however, an addition might be made to the amendment by which physicians themselves selling would not be obliged to obtain such a certificate. But I think it is very desirable that they should be made subject to all the other restrictions and regulations contained in sub-section 4 of section 99 of the Act. It is also especially desirable that chemists and druggists should still have to obtain a certificate and should have to keep a record of their sales and to make a return to the Department of Inland Revenue. If such an amendment as I speak of, excepting physicians who sell from requiring the certificate of another medical practitioner, should be added to the amendment, I think it would meet the views of the leader of the Government and would still accomplish what I desire by my amendment.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If you refer to the Votes and Proceedings of the 13th April, you will find the following motion by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey):—

“Provided that nothing in this Act shall interfere with the rights and privileges of medical men in the use of alcoholic liquors, when required and kept for professional purposes.”

I think that the House is committed to that proposition, and that we cannot go back upon it now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. That was struck out.

Mr. HICKEY. I think it is impossible to obtain the result which the hon. gentleman wishes by this motion. He says that his object is to keep track of the quantity sold. Well, that is one of the objects of the Scott Act, I admit, but the result of this would be that if there were one ounce of spirits, or a small quantity, in a prescription, he would have to keep a record of it. In fact, he would have to make a separate prescription for the spirits, apart from the other ingredients, which would be wholly impracticable to physician and druggist. Besides, as I understand it, the great object of the Scott Act is not to show how much is sold, but to restrain the selling for beverage purposes. I think the motion should be withdrawn.

Mr. FISHER. I would rather it were voted upon.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw, withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. Perhaps the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) would move his amendment.

Mr. SCRIVER. I do not propose to move it as an amendment to the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. JAMIESON.

Mr. SCRIVER. I wish to move the following amendment to the 3rd amendment from the Senate:—

Provided always that such physicians, druggists and chemists selling alcohol or spirituous liquors, shall keep a register of all such sales, indicating the names of the purchasers and the quantity sold, and shall make an annual return of such sales on the 31st of December in every year, to the Collector of Inland Revenue within whose revenue division such physician, druggist, or chemist resides.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not see any great objection to this amendment if it were not that it would cause an infinite degree of discomfort and trouble to the medical profession, and I hope it will be well considered by the medical men. We will suppose a doctor in practice gives 200 or 300 prescriptions in a year, and perhaps more—some of them giving them by the thousand. Well, for every one of the prescriptions in which there is a table-spoonful of spirits there must be a record of the quantity, however small it is, and a return made to the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. This amendment only refers to this section, which provides that they may dispense alcoholic liquors for exclusively medicinal purposes, and chemists and druggists are mentioned in the same connection.

Mr. BLAKE. The prescription of alcoholic liquors was limited by the Canada Temperance Act. There were certain precautions, and now the House this afternoon has agreed to an amendment which gives enlarged power to physicians to prescribe and to fill the prescriptions themselves, and when they are doing that under a new clause, we propose to introduce some regulations enabling the people to learn how much is done under this new power, and not with reference to the old powers.

Mr. HICKEY. I do not wish to put any blocks in the way of putting the Act clear and right to the people, but I cannot see how a druggist selling liquor on a physician's prescription, could keep track of it at all. The right hon. Premier correctly stated the case. If one drachm of alcohol were in a prescription containing other ingredients—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. HICKEY. That is what the clause says.

Mr. FISHER. It says spirituous liquors.

Mr. HICKEY. If it is not a prescription, of course I have nothing to say. If it is pure alcohol, the druggist might be compelled to keep a record; but it would be impossible for a physician to do it, especially a country physician, and he would be made to systematically break the law every day.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The question is whether this amendment is large enough to include the case of a physician or druggist selling alcohol or spirituous liquor mixed with some other ingredients. If it is intended only to apply to prescriptions of pure alcohol or spirituous liquors qua such, and not as ingredients of other medicines, it would be reasonable enough, perhaps, that a record should be kept. But if these words are so large as to include prescriptions of alcohol or spirituous liquors used as the component parts of other medicines, it would be a very onerous duty to throw on the physician or druggist to compel him to keep a record of that.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). From a medical standpoint I do not see any objection to this requirement, if it is only intended to apply to the case where a medical man becomes a retailer of liquor. If he wishes to take that position and to benefit by the profits of that sale, he should take the responsibility of keeping a record. I am not a lawyer, but I sometimes try to view things from a practical, common sense standpoint; and as far as this House is concerned, I think it cannot determine whether I prescribe alcohol or buttermilk to my patients; it cannot force me to keep any record; but if I go into the market as a retailer of whiskey, you have a right to make me keep a record.

Mr. JENKINS. I think these amendments are intended more for the convenience of the public than for physicians or druggists, and I think it would be rather a hardship to force them to keep a record of the very small quantities of alcoholic liquor they prescribe or sell. If a physician prescribes for a patient, he may wish to prescribe at the same time brandy or other alcoholic liquor, and if he does, he has to write a separate prescription for the stimulant, and the patient, in order to obtain the liquor, is obliged perhaps to go to a different part of the town from where the druggist lives who makes up the medicine. If a druggist is allowed to make up a prescription of half a pint of brandy or wine, which is of great convenience to the patient, I do not think he should be called on to keep a record of this. In the first place it is a small matter; and in the next place the object can be attained without the record, because every druggist keeps a copy of the prescription sent to him, and if the Act were so amended as to compel the druggist to show the copy of the prescription, the same object would be attained without putting him to extra trouble.

Mr. FISHER. I think these amendments to which my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has alluded, are intended for the benefit of the public at large, and not particularly for the benefit of druggists or chemists to whose business they apply. It is because in places where prohibition has been adopted, some restrictions have been placed by the original Act upon the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the hands of druggists and chemists that this sub-section 4 of section 99 of the original Act was inserted; and when we are now very much enlarging the powers of these druggists and chemists, inasmuch as we are giving all of them the privileges which by the original Act were only given to a few, I think it is fair and right, and the only measure consistent with the original Act, to hedge them around with the same restrictions which we apply to the licensed druggists. My hon. friend opposite was mistaken in supposing that this amendment applied to medical compounds containing liquor. As I understand the amendment, it has only the same scope as sub-section 4 of section 99 of the Canada Temperance Act; it only applies to intoxicating liquors, and not in any sense to medical compounds containing alcohol; it is only when those compounds might be used for drinking purposes as beverages, that this amendment applies to them; and then and only then I think it is absolutely necessary that some such restrictions as this amendment provides should be imposed upon the sale by chemists and druggists. As the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Ferguson) very justly and aptly remarked, if chemists and druggists choose to descend to the retail sale of liquors, it is just and right that the same restrictions should be imposed on them as are imposed on hotel keepers or other vendors. When they sell liquor made up in prescriptions with other drugs, neither this amendment nor the Scott Act interferes with their sale; but if medical practitioners choose to engage in the retail sale of liquor, it is proper and consistent with the Scott Act, to restrict the sale.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Add the words "as a beverage" and we will not object to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONADD. I merely wish to state that personally I saw no objection to this provision; but I pointed out that I thought it would be a great inconvenience to the medical men. However, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Ferguson) who is a medical man, sees no objection to it, and I have none.

Amendment agreed to; and 3rd amendment from the Senate, as amended, concurred in on a division.

On the 6th amendment,

Mr. JAMIESON. I move that the 6th amendment be disagreed to for the following reasons:

Because abuses have arisen in counties in which the Act has been adopted, owing to the absence of a penal clause of this kind and a provision is necessary in order to the proper and effective enforcement of the Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to state what the clause is, as it passed the Commons, and what the amendment is of that clause?

Mr. JAMIESON. The clause as amended by this House is as follows: Section 99, sub-section 4, Canada Temperance Act, by adding to it, amongst other amendments, the following words:

"And any medical man who gives such a certificate for any other than strictly medicinal purposes shall, for the first offence, be liable, on summary conviction before any one or more justices of the peace under the Act thirty-two and thirty-three Victoria, chapter thirty-one, to a penalty of twenty dollars, and for a second or any subsequent offence shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty of forty dollars."

This clause, which we call the penal clause, has been struck out by the Senate, and I have just moved that we disagree to that amendment for the reasons given in the motion. This question was fully discussed when the Bill was before the House, and at that time it was the deliberate judgment of the House that a clause of that kind is necessary. I do not think it necessary to repeat the arguments used in favor of the clause. Hon. gentlemen who have experience of the working of the Canada Temperance Act, more especially in Halton, have found that it was absolutely necessary that an amendment of this kind should be made to the original Act. This clause is not intended for honest, but for dishonest, medical practitioners. In fact, I know that many respectable medical men are in favor of this clause, on the ground that it is a protection to them. Where a penal clause of this kind is hanging over the head of a man who is required to do a certain thing, he is not so liable to be importuned, at all hours of the day and night, to give certificates when they are not absolutely necessary. It is only proposed to punish a medical man when he gives a certificate colorably. No honest man would do anything of the kind.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not recollect that that clause was exhaustively discussed in this House. My recollection is that it was at a late period of the night, after the whole House was tired out with the prolonged discussion on other points, that the clause was passed through on division, and I believe the great majority of the House did not thoroughly appreciate what they were doing when they passed it. There was so much confusion, so many contradictory amendments moved, that by the time this clause was proposed, the great majority of the House had got into such a muddle as to what was proposed and carried, that they did not thoroughly understand its import. I am afraid from the laughter that greets my remarks that it may be supposed to insinuate that the strong temperance advocates in this House had, during the prolonged sitting, been indulging in non temperance stimulants to such an extent, that they had become a little befogged. I mean nothing of the kind. I never meant to insinuate directly or indirectly that any gentleman who voted for rigid prohibition ever exceeded or indulged in the improper use of stimulants. I have heard it said that such was the case, but for my part I made no such imputation and I had no such thought. But to come seriously to this question, I think we ought to well reconsider the matter now that the Senate in their wisdom have thought fit to strike out this clause. I think it behoves us now, before dinner, if you like, instead of after dinner, now at an early hour of the day, when we can enter upon this discussion in a fair and impartial way, and when everyone here knows what has been going on and what has been moved, to consider what we are doing. What are we doing if we refuse to agree to the amendment of the Senate? We are saying that the learned profession of physicians is to be put on a par with every tavern keeper and with every bar-room loafer who violates the Scott Act. All are placed in the same category, to be dragged before the police magistrate and fined a paltry contemptible $20 for the first offence and $40 for the second for violating their solemn duty as members of an honorable profession, for violating the law deliberately and knowingly. Surely it is not intended to pass such an insult upon a profession so deserving of public confidence, so deserving of the respect and confidence of the House, instead of its contempt, as the medical profession. That will be the result of striking out the amendment. My hon. friend says: We do not intend this to apply to the respectable members of the profession. What does that mean? It means that the members of the profession who are not respectable and are not to be trusted are so numerous that they require the paltry terror of a $20 or $40 fine, or commitment to gaol for ten or twenty days if it is not paid, to deter them from a dishonorable breach of their duty as medical men. Surely such measures are not requisite to sustain the temperance cause. Surely, if that cause requires to be bolstered up by an attack of that kind on the medical profession and by a measure so objectionable as that, there must be something rotten in it, there must be something of an improper character, and Parliament ought not to be asked to strike out the amendment made by the Senate in the interest of the public and of the medical profession, and I think properly made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I certainly cannot agree with my hon. friend who has just spoken. We have given very considerable powers to medical men, we have enlarged their powers under the Canada Temperance Act in order that they may more freely exercise their profession for the public good, but, as we have given them very large powers compared with those given to them in the original Act, I think it is quite right that we should see that there shall be no abuse of those powers. We know that, while it is a most respectable profession, yet there are black sheep in it, and, if a medical man to whom these powers are given for medicinal purposes, should use alcohol to a considerable extent and basely betray the provisions of the law, he should be signally punished. I think the clause is a very good one, because there ought to be some punishment provided for those who deliberately break the law.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the First Minister why he imposes a penalty upon physicians, when two magistrates or a minister can give a certificate and no provision is made for punishing anyone but a physician? All I want is that the magistrate should be placed in the same position as the physician.

Mr. DAVIES. I think the committee are under a misapprehension as to the character of this penalty. It does not refer to any new powers conferred upon physicians, but only to the old powers conferred upon them under the Scott Act; and I am sure that anyone who comes from a Scott Act county knows that it is essential to the carrying out of the law to provide these penalties. Nine-tenths of the profession do not give these certificates wrongly, but there is a small residuum who require to be looked after.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MILLS. We were discussing the propriety of restoring an amendment providing for the punishment of a certain class of persons who violated the terms of the Temperance Act respecting the sale of intoxicants upon medical or other certificates. The clause as it stood in the Bill was inserted when none but a certain class of persons were to be authorised to sell. Then there was a proposition by the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Bourbeau) to include clergymen in the number of those authorised to give certificates, and retaining the penal clause. Now I think it is right and proper that the penal clause should be restored. I wholly dissent from the amendment proposed by the Senate in this particular. I dissent, also, from the views expressed by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) who stated that physicians were a highly respectable class of the community, and that it was an insult to them to insert such a penal clause in the law. Well, Sir, I think the days for class legislation of that sort have gone by. Before the law all classes of the community ought to stand upon a footing of equality. We do not know anything about one class enjoying alone the title of being a respectable class, and free from the penalty imposed upon others. What we propose to deal with is that particular class of persons who violates its provisions. If a medical man disregards the law and violates its terms and sells contrary to its provisions, there is no reason why he should not be subject to punishment in precisely the same way as any other man; he should be dealt with in exactly the same way. Now it seems to me that we ought to provide that medical men or others, if they give certificates improperly and contrary to the intent of this Act, should be punished. We should not designate medical men for we have given up the notion that there are no others but medical men grant the certificates; but every person, no matter what his profession, who has the power of granting a certificate and who violates the law, ought to be punished. I think there is no obstacle to our amending a defect in the section as it originally stood and as the Bill left this House. The section, when it was first introduced, was right and proper as it now is, but when this House extended the class who are authorised to grant certificates, it ought to have altered the phraseology of this particular section, and I think that ought to be done now.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

Mr. HICKEY. I quite agree with the remarks of the member for Bothwell, and I have no objection to the penalty clause, as moved by the hon. member for North Lanark, being made to apply to medical men; but, I think, in justice to medical men, that others who are qualified or authorised under this Act to grant certificates, ought to be liable to the same penalties that physicians are. I therefore move that the clause be further amended by adding after the words, "medical men," the words, "or other person authorised to grant certificates under this Act."

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman's amendment will not be in order until this House resolves to restore the clause which has been struck out by the Senate. This clause has been struck out by the Senate. The motion now before the House is to restore that clause and disagree to the amendment made by the Senate. As soon as the House resolves to restore that clause, then this amendment will be in order so as to amend the words so restored. Until the clause is restored it cannot be amended.

Motion (Mr. Jamieson) to 6th amendment, agreed to.

Mr. HICKEY. I now beg leave to move the amendment I have just read.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I should like to know whether we can carry that amendment, for the reason that if we can, it seems to me that we can amend the Bill in another particular as it went from this House. The clause which has just been restored was put in by this House and went up to the Senate. It refers to the persons who are proposed to be included in the class who may issue certificates. The power given to issue certificates was given in this House and not in the Senate at all. This House at that time made no amendment whatever, and did not require that these persons should be subject to this penal clause. We are therefore amending the Act as we passed it; and what I would like to know is whether we can do it now simply from the accident that we restored the clause that was taken out, and, if we can, it seems to me we can amend it in another particular. The reason I ask is that I am anxious that it should be amended in another particular, in order to restore words which were inserted in this House in Committee of the Whole, but by some mistake were not in the amendments that were concurred in by the House afterwards.

Mr. BLAKE. The House has just disagreed to the amendment to the Senate who had expunged words which this House had left in the Bill. The result of disagreeing with that amendment has been that the Bill now stands as it left this House. Well, then, is the amendment which is now proposed by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) a consequential or relevant amendment to anything the Senate has done? I think not, Sir. As long as the Senate had stricken out our amendment altogether, the amendment of the hon. member for Dundas, of course, could not be relevant to anything they had done, because they had expunged the whole thing. What we have now done is to wipe out their alteration, and we have left the clause as it was in our House. Then, is the proposal of the hon. gentleman consequent to, or relevant upon, anything the Senate has done?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly not.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is. I think this amendment is consequential to or relevant upon the amendment adopted by the Senate. These amendments proposed are for the purpose of making the clause adopted by us, and sent by this House to the Senate, acceptable to that House. In this view I am supported by the decision of Speaker Brand, who decides that:

"If the House decides to disagree with an amendment by the Lords to strike out words, the effect being to restore the words struck out by the Lords, the words of the clause kept alive by the disagreement of the Lords' amendment, will then be open to amendment."

So this amendment is in order.

Amendment agreed to.

On the 8th amendment,

Mr. JAMIESON. I move that this amendment be concurred in.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. JAMIESON. The object of this amendment is simply to apply the search clauses of the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, to the Temperance Act, 1864. I think the amendment is a proper one. This was certainly an oversight at the time the Canada Temperance Act was passed. Anyone looking over the clauses of the Act will come to the same conclusion. There are a few counties in Canada where the Temperance Act of 1864 is at present in force, and I think it is only right that in those counties and places they should have proper facilities for enforcing the law. This amendment is for the purpose of giving them those facilities.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I confess I have tried to understand the explanation of the hon. gentleman, but probably owing to the density of my intelligence, I have been quite unable to do so. If the hon. gentleman would give us in Saxon English what is proposed to be done, we might understand it. What clauses of the Act of 1864 are proposed to be brought into force by the Act of 1885; what are the particular provisions intended to be brought into force? What does the hon. gentleman mean? I do not understand his explanation, and no member in this House, except ardent temperance advocates will understand it. No doubt the hon. member for King's and the hon. member for Bromo understand it; but I think, if you except those three hon. members, no one else understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Victoria should accept it as coming from the Senate in whose wisdom he has already expressed great confidence.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). We want to give an intelligent vote upon it.

Mr. JAMIESON. I am sorry I have not been able to reach the comprehension of the hon. member for Victoria. I am afraid that perhaps he is in the condition in which he described the House to be in when a certain amendment under discussion this afternoon was passed. However, when I stated a few minutes ago that the object of this amendment was to incorporate into the Temperance Act of 1864 what are known as the search clauses of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878; that ought to be quite clear to any hon. member.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What are the clauses.

Mr. JAMIESON. There are a few counties in the Dominion where the Temperance Act of 1864, popularly known as the Dunkin Act, is still in force.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Why could you not have said so at first.

Mr. JAMIESON. I did say so. Probably I was misunderstood because I used the legal name of the Act, instead of the popular name. I referred to the Temperance Act of 1864, popularly known as the Dunkin Act. That Act is in force in a few counties of the Dominion, and the object of this amendment is to give the advantage to the counties in which that Act is in force of what are known as the search clauses of the Scott Act or Canada Temperance Act of 1878. The Senate in its wisdom thought proper to make this amendment. I think it is a wise amendment. I wish all the amendments were of this character.

Amendment agreed to.

On the 10th amendment,

Mr. JAMIESON. I move that this amendment be disagreed to, for the following reason:

Because forms are necessary for the efficient enforcement of the Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not think any explanation is necessary. The effect of the Senate amendment is to strike off the schedule of forms which was passed by this House. It was the judgment of this House that those forms would be necessary in order to the efficient enforcement of the law. Now, I do not see any reason why a schedule of forms should not be appended to an Act of this kind. It is well known that magistrates, as a rule, are not skilled in the law, and it is a very great aid to them in the administration of the law to be able to fall back on statutory forms. Moreover, we have a precedent, because the Liquor License Act of 1883, which was passed by this House, contains a set of forms, and nearly all the license laws of which I am aware, have similarly attached to them such schedules of forms.

Motion agreed to.

On the 11th amendment,

Mr. JAMIESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the 11th amendment be disagreed to for the following reasons:—

Because it is a violation of the fundamental principle of the Act which, when adopted, prohibits the sale of all intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes; and because the Act has already been adopted in good faith by the electors of sixty-one counties and cities of the Dominion, believing that under the express provision of the law it would continue in force unimpaired for three years, and would then only be repealed by the same authority which adopted it; and the passing of the amendment would be a breach of faith on the part of Parliament with the electors of those counties and cities; and further, because the amendment is in direct opposition to the wishes of a large proportion of the electors of the Dominion, as manifested by the petitions presented to Parliament.

In dealing with an important amendment of this nature I think the House will indulge me for a few moments while I express my views in reference to the character of the amendment. It cannot be concealed from this House that the amendment which has been made by the Senate and which is now under consideration is a very important one; neither can we conceal from our minds, as the representatives of the people, the fact that the people of this Dominion to-day, or a large proportion of them, at least, have their eyes turned towards this House, watching anxiously and earnestly for our action upon this question. In my judgment, should this amendment become the law of this country, it would be perhaps more far-reaching in its effect than any law we have passed in the present Session of Parliament. Years ago, in the history of this country, the people, by petition and otherwise, knocked at the door of Parliament and asked, and almost demanded, that the prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes should be granted by Parliament. After repeated attempts a half-way measure was granted in the Temperance Act of 1864. No doubt it was a step in the right direction. No doubt the temperance people at that time regarded it as a boon. However, when the Act came to be adopted by the people, it was ascertained that there were serious defects in the law, which rendered the enforcement of it very difficult. But few counties in the Dominion availed themselves of that law. In some counties where the Act was adopted it was not enforced, and was afterwards repealed by a vote of the people. The temperance men of this country came to the conclusion that another step in advance should be taken. In 1874 a convention was held in the city of Montreal, composed of representative men and prohibitionists from all sections of the Dominion. I had the honor of being present at that convention, and I can truthfully say it was a representative body of men. This question of the evils flowing from the traffic in intoxicating liquors was fully discussed by that convention, and finally, as the deliverance of the convention, certain resolutions were proposed to ask the Parliament of this Dominion to submit to the people the question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, by means of what is commonly called a plebiscite. It was thought that would be the better way, in order to dispose of the question once and for all. I believe that was the proper course to take, and, for one, I regret that the demand of that prohibitory convention was not acceded to by the Government of the day. Had it been acceded to, it is probable that this question would have been settled ere this by the people of the Dominion. It was, however, urged that that would be an unconstitutional means of ascertaining the opinion of the people, that in no colony of the British Crown had such a course hitherto been adopted. Well, we are often adopting lines of action that have not been adopted in past times; and, in my judgment, it was a mistake at that time not to settle the question in the way proposed by that convention. However, when the Government of the day refused to accede to the proposition made by that convention, they proposed that a more stringent prohibitory local option law should be passed by Parliament. The temperance people of the Dominion concurred in that view; and as a result, in 1878 the Canada Temperance Act became the law of this country. Now, as I understand it, the object of that law was two-fold. In the first place, the object was, that if in certain defined localities the majority of the people were in favor of the prohibition of the liquor traffic for beverage purposes, by a certain process provided by that Act, they could, by their votes, prohibit the sale for a period of three years. In addition to that, I believe the object of that law was that there should be some machinery upon the Statute Book of this country by which, in some proper and legitimate way, the sense of the people of this Dominion could be had on this great question. Now, Sir, what has been the result of that law? If the House will indulge me for a few minutes, I will give them a few figures, showing the manner in which it has been received by the people of this Dominion. In the Province of Ontario, containing 38 counties and unions of counties, and 10 cities, 24 counties and 2 cities have already adopted the law. In the Province of Nova Scotia, containing 18 counties and 1 city, 12 counties have already adopted the law. In the Province of New Brunswick, containing 14 counties and 2 cities, 9 counties and 1 city have already adopted the law. In the Province of Quebec, containing 56 counties and 4 cities, 5 counties have already adopted the law. In the Province of Manitoba, containing 5 counties and 1 city, 2 counties have adopted the law.

Mr. JAMIESON,

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). How many in British Columbia?

Mr. JAMIESON. None in British Columbia, from the simple fact that the law in its present shape is not applicable to that Province. Now, there have been seventy-five contests in all, under the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, including repeal votes; in thirteen cases the verdict of the people was against the adoption of the Act, and in sixty-two cases in favor of the adoption of the Act. At the present time the Canada Temperance has been adopted in sixty-one counties and cities in this Dominion; and, what is perhaps more remarkable still, in not a single instance has the Act been repealed by any county or city in which it has been adopted. I do not think that in the history of any country or of any political party has such a victory been scored in favor of any principle or any movement, whether political or moral. At the present time, contests are in progress in 21 counties and cities of the Dominion; and to day, in the Province of Ontario, the poll is being held in three counties, with what result I am not advised at the present moment, but I have no doubt the result in those counties will be similar to the result in the great majority of the other counties in which a poll has been taken on the question. Now, Sir, we come to the question, what has given rise to the Bill now before the House? It will not be contended that in all cases an Act when passed by the House, is likely to be a perfect piece of legislation. A law has to be in operation for some time before the defects, which are necessarily incident to all laws, can be discovered. In the operation of the Canada Temperance Act certain defects have become apparent and certain machinery has become necessary for the more efficient enforcement of that law; and I ask this House whether it is not a reasonable proposition that the Parliament of Canada, having given to the people this law, were bound to make it as efficient as possible. With the view of doing so, I, at the instance of the legislative committee of the Dominion Alliance, had the honor of introducing into this House the Bill now under discussion. I may say, further, that owing to an unfortunate oversight at the time the Liquor License Act of 1883 was passed by this House, it has been found, or at least it was decided by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, that the penal and enforcing clauses of the Canada Temperance Act were repealed by the 145th section of that Act. On that ground alone, those in favor of the Canada Temperance Act were justified in coming before this House and asking for such amendments as would put an end to any trouble arising under it in consequence of the decision of the court of New Brunswick. I ask, then, Parliament having passed this law, and it having become necessary to amend it in some respects, and the amending Bill having been brought before Parliament—whether it was just or fair on the part of another branch of the Parliament of Canada to tack on to that amending Bill a provision, the effect of which is absolutely to destroy the Canada Temperance Act of 1878. I do not wish to speak in disrespectful terms of any branch of the Legislature of this Dominion; I should be sorry to do so; but, I have no hesitation in saying that I believe the branch of the Legislature which made that amendment is out of sympathy with the people of this Dominion. The object of this law is to promote temperance, we are told. Take up the preamble of the Canada Temperance Act, and we are told there that it is desirable to promote temperance in the Dominion. If these amendments become law, I, for one, will ask Parliament either to repeal the Act, or, at all events, to give it a new preamble, and not make a farce of the whole matter; for I contend that the amendment which is proposed, and which is now under discussion, is not calculated to promote temperance, but is calculated to give the people of this Dominion, under the present circumstances of the law free wine and beer. I ask whether the people of this Dominion, who have in so many counties and by such overwhelming majorities adopted this law, should be treated in this way by Parliament? I say that to treat them in such a manner is unfair and unmanly. I would like to know what authority will grant licenses for the purpose of carrying out the provision of this amendment. Can the Parliament of Canada do so? That is a problematical question. There is confusion in reference to the liquor laws of the Provinces and of this Dominion, and to pass the amendment in question will make confusion worse confounded. In my judgment, this House has no power, in the event of the amendment becoming law, to pass a Bill to grant licenses. In view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court, I contend this Parliament has no power to pass a law granting licenses for the sale of wine and beer under this amendment. If this Parliament has no power—and I do not think, under the present circumstances, it will assume the power—I ask is there any provincial law under which licenses can be granted. In my opinion there is none such, and the simple effect of the amendment will be to give the people of the Dominion free trade in wine and beer, and to destroy most effectually and for ever the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878. That is the issue which is presented here to-night in the amendment now under our consideration. I have no hesitation in saying that should this amendment become law by the joint action of this House and the Senate, I, for one, instead of attempting to have the Canada Temperance Act enforced, instead of aiding to bring about its adoption in any county, will take the earliest opportunity to ask Parliament to repeal the law, because I believe the passage of this amendment will be nothing more or less than a repeal of the law. It will be actually worse than a repeal of the law, because it will leave it a dead letter upon the statute book; and, above all things, Parliament ought to be careful not to pass laws that will be inoperative or to amend them so as to render them inoperative. Now, I hold that the Canada Temperance Act should have fair play; I believe that I am but voicing, when I say so, the sentiments of the large majority of the people of this Dominion. In the contests which have already taken place for the adoption of that law, the majorities in favor of it have been wonderfully large, aggregating a majority of over 46,000 of the electors. Can we, as a Parliament, professing to represent the popular sentiment of the country, go back on such a record as that? Can we take away from the people, or render less effective, a law which has been received with so much favor by the people? I trust this Parliament will pause before they take that step, the consequence of which may be very serious to the people, and, I have no doubt, to many gentlemen sitting in this House and voting on this question. There is another view to be taken of this. No doubt it was the duty of Parliament to enact laws for the good government of the people, but Parliament has also the power to enact laws and give to the people the privilege, the opportunity, of saying, in some solemn, binding manner, whether such laws will be adopted by them. This is the principle of local option, and it is a principle which is embodied in the Canada Temperance Act of 1878. Now the electors of a large number of counties in this Dominion have adopted the law. Is it proposed that the law shall be repealed; that it shall be abrogated by the same authority that enacted it? Not at all. Here, in my judgment, is a compact entered into between the Parliament of Canada and the people. The Parliament of Canada said to the people. Here is a law which, in your option, you may put into force in your municipalities for a period of three years, and that law cannot be repealed, once adopted, except at the end of that three year period, and then it must be repealed by the same authority by which it was enacted, namely, the sovereign people. What is proposed by this amendment? It is proposed that, after having granted that privilege to the people, after having induced the people to act on that privilege and put into operation the law—the Senate, in their wisdom, propose to say that the people, after having solemnly ratified this law, shall not receive what they believed they were receiving at the time they solemnly cast their votes in its favor. The proposition is a monstrous one. It is well known to every lawyer that it is a principle of constitutional law that no law can be repealed or abrogated except by the same authority, or at least as high an authority, as that by which it was enacted. But that principle is being cast to the winds in the amendment before us. I do not know how it may be in the other Provinces of the Dominion; but speaking for my own Province, I know that where the municipal council submit a by-law to the people for ratification, and the people have ratified it, the council are prohibited from interfering with it in any shape or form until the time prescribed for its duration has elapsed. Here, however, in a much more important matter, after the people have sanctioned the law by their vote and gone to a great deal of trouble in the different municipalities of the Dominion, for the purpose of putting the law in force, it is now proposed by the action of the Senate, in which they ask the concurrence of this House, to deprive the people of their right. I trust Parliament will never do so, but will have respect for the higher parliament, the sovereign people of the Dominion, and not attempt to take away from the people one of their most cherished rights, granted to them by the law which is now under our consideration. Perhaps it will be said that a large number of petitions have been presented to this House and to the Senate in favor of the amendment. I have no doubt that a great many petitions have been presented with that object in view, but we must not lose sight of the fact that a very large number of petitions, a two-fold greater number of petitions, containing at least double the number of signatures, have been presented to this House since the commencement of the Session against any interference with the Canada Temperance Act which would make it less restrictive than it is at the present time. I cannot say that I lay very great stress on petitions got up in that promiscuous way, but, under the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act, petitions are gotten up in such a way that they can be relied upon. In that case, the petition must be signed by an elector and by nobody else; the elector must have affixed his own signature to the petition; that signature must be attested by a subscribing witness; that subscribing witness must make a declaration in reference to the signature which he attests. And what are the facts? In twenty-one counties in the Province of Ontario the signatures to the petitions now filed in the Department of State foot up to the number of 66,000, and, in addition to that, the votes of the people, in counties in which the Act has been submitted for their ratification, have been largely in favor of the principles contained in the Canada

Temperance Act. Let us look a little further. It perhaps may be said by some of the gentlemen who are about to address the House on this question, that this House will not be asked to concur in the amendment made by the Senate pure and simple: that this House will simply be asked to apply the amendment to counties in which the Canada Temperance Act has not already been adopted. The effect of that would be, at the present time, to put an end to this agitation, from one end of the country to the other. I have no hesitation in saying that there would not be found a corporal's guard of men in any county who would be foolish enough to attempt to adopt the law if the amendment now under consideration were inserted in the Act, and I say it would be a breach of faith on the part of Parliament. Take the action of Parliament in the past; take the action of this House at the last Session, when, by an overwhelming majority, we pledged ourselves to give the people prohibition, when we were able to convince Parliament that public sentiment was in favor of that principle. What would be the effect of this amendment? It would be to take away from the people the only means they have of ascertaining public sentiment upon this question, and I say such a proceeding would be unfair. The Canada Temperance Act, a few years ago, was sneered at, was looked upon as an innocent measure, that would never accomplish anything in the direction of prohibition or of promoting the temperance sentiment; but, now that it has been received with favor by the people, we have a proposition submitted to Parliament, and sanctioned by one branch of our Legislature, with the view of strangling that Act and putting an end to all agitation, putting an end to every effort on the part of temperance men in this Dominion to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquors. I do not know that I shall discuss this question at any greater length. I have no doubt that other hon. gentlemen in this House will consider it of sufficient moment and importance to give their advice to the House upon it. I must say that the matter has assumed a very serious aspect, and that there is an attempt by this amendment to deprive the people of a cherished principle, that is, the principle of local option, as applied to the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and I trust the members of this House will consider well the situation before, by their votes here to-night, they say to the large majority of the people of this Dominion that they shall no longer have the benefit of a law which has been so beneficial in the counties in which it has been adopted, in putting an end to the traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. I leave this question with the House. As the member having charge of this Bill, I deemed it my duty to discuss the question at greater length than, perhaps, I should otherwise have done; but I know that, under all the circumstances of the case, considering the gravity of the situation, considering the importance of the question now before the House, I shall be pardoned for the time I have occupied in discussing the question.

Mr. SMALL. I beg to move, in amendment:

That all after "that" be struck out, and the following be added to the said amendment:—In counties or cities hereafter adopting the said Act.

The effect of that is that the amendment made by the Senate to the Canada Temperance Act shall not apply to counties which have already adopted the Scott Act. The amendments made by the Senate have been considered retroactive, and the amendment I now propose is to the effect that they shall apply only to counties in future adopting the Scott Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it possible that we are to have a piece of legislation like this brought down to the House; that we are called on to vote upon it; that by adopting it we shall essentially alter the character of an Act, the passage of which we have been years in obtaining from Parliament, which has remained on the Statute Book for seven years, and in that time is supposed to have taken a settled position, and against which we have scarcely had the first scintilla of popular opinion, asking this Parliament to take that law off the Statute Book? Is it possible that a measure so important as this is brought down to the House, and that hon. gentlemen are asked to vote upon it, with no further reason being given for this fundamental change than a simple statement that this does so-and-so, and thereby partially takes away from what the Senate amendment proposed? Are there any reasons why this legislation should prevail? If there are, let us have them. But let not hon. gentlemen bring a measure like this down to the House, claiming, as they did, and do, that the weight of intelligence is upon their side of the question, claiming that while we may be strong-headed, while we may be fanatical and given to enthusiasm, they have the cool reasoning power. If they have the cool reasoning power, let them exercise it now, and give this House some substantial reasons why we should make such a fundamental change.

Mr. JAMIESON.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I confess I am somewhat surprised if the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster) means the few remarks he has just made to be in opposition to the amendment made by my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Small).

Mr. FOSTER. I have much more behind.

Mr. CAMERON. Well, I suppose, then, his speech is not addressed to the amendment but to the original motion. I take it that his speech should be addressed to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Small), which we are now considering, and whether the Senate amendment—which, I have no doubt, is retroactive in its operation, and applies to all counties in which the Act has as yet been passed—should be made to apply to them or should be restricted to the counties in which the Act has not yet been adopted. If the hon. member for King's and my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) think it is better that the Senate amendment in reference to beer and light wines should apply to all counties, whether they have yet adopted the Scott Act or not, then I suppose they will vote against the amendment of my hon. friend. If, on the other hand, they think it is better that the Senate amendment, if ultimately adopted, should apply only to counties in which the Scott Act has not yet been adopted, then I presume they will vote for my hon. friend's amendment. I do not understand the observation of my hon. friend from King's. He said he has more, that he holds back. Well, if he wants to express any opinion on this question, he ought to have expressed it on the amendment. If he means to oppose the adoption of the Senate amendment in toto, he should have addressed his remarks to that, and not the amendment of my hon. friend from Toronto. For my part, it is no secret, I have before now expressed in this House my opinions against the constitutional propriety of Scott Act legislation in toto. I think my opinions on this subject are sufficiently well known; but I confess that a good deal is to be said in favor of the amendment of my hon. friend from Toronto, and it is a matter of considerable surprise to me that the advocates of total prohibition in this House should oppose that amendment. They choose thereby to place themselves in the position of saying that they would rather the Senate amendments to the Scott Act should apply to all counties, whether they have carried the Act or not, than to have it applied only to those counties in which the Act has not yet been carried. That is the effect of their voting against the amendment of my hon. friend from Toronto. The motion of my hon. friend from North Lanark is, that the Senate amendment be rejected. My hon. friend from Toronto proposes a middle course, and he says: I am prepared to allow the Senate amendments to apply only to those counties which have not yet adopted the Scott Act, instead of applying it to all counties. My hon. friends who support prohibition in this House oppose that; so they would rather have the amendment applied to the whole Dominion than have it applied only to those counties in which the Scott Act has not yet been adopted. I should like to understand what their position is. Before sitting down, I wish to say one word about a remark made by my hon. friend from North Lanark. It was hardly a remark that ought to have come from a personal friend—to say nothing of a political friend. If he meant it in earnest, it was, I need hardly say, wholly unfounded—I mean his remark that probably my observations were attributable to the fact that I was under the same influence that had misled the House in their former action, as I ventured to point out before dinner. I say if he meant it in earnest, I need hardly say it was unfounded; if he meant it as a joke, I think it was impertinent.

Mr. JAMIESON. I certainly meant it only as a joke.

Mr. CAMERON. I have already expressed my opinion of it as a joke, and I must leave my hon. friend to apply the remark I have made to his observation; because this kind of personal jokes approach very near, if they do not quite reach, what is generally described as impertinence from one gentleman to another. I regretted to hear the observation of my hon. friend, because, I need hardly say, that I do not think I am open to an insinuation of that kind, either in earnest or as a joke. I think that I am as well prepared to discuss this subject in a sober and serious manner as my hon. friend—in fact, I think I am a great deal better prepared. I think there are several kinds of intoxication. There is an intoxication arising from a too free use of spirituous or vinous liquor; I think there is intoxication arising from success, and I am afraid the hon. gentleman, and his friends who think with him, are laboring, to some extent, under that kind of intoxication. When the Bill was before this House, on a former occasion, they met with what they considered great success. They carried things right and left, and as they chose. We, poor unfortunate members, who honestly and conscientiously thought they were going too far, were howled down. We were not allowed an opportunity of discussing even the proposition placed before the House. I know several members on this side of the House, and some on the other side, who wished to propose amendments, who abandoned the idea of doing so, because they felt that the House, under the influence of the hon. member and his associates, were intoxicated with the success of the prohibition cause. And, so intoxicated were they that they would not listen to reason. There is, also, another kind of intoxication. There is intoxication arising from credulity and bigotry, which misleads and misguides men's judgments so that they cannot form a candid and impartial opinion upon the subject under discussion. That kind of intoxication, I think, has affected the hon. gentleman and his associates. I think, therefore, that the remark I made just now is quite justified, that there are various kinds of intoxication, and that kind of intoxication under which the hon. gentleman and his associates labor is far more prejudicial to a proper discussion and fair judgment upon any question of this kind even than the intoxication arising from the undue use of spirituous or vinous liquors. I think, also, perhaps it might be said that some of the most enthusiastic supporters of the prohibition cause occasionally labor under the other kind of intoxication. I do not allude to any hon. gentleman in this House; I allude to the well-known fact that some of the most noted prohibition stump speakers occupy their leisure time in indulging in bouts of beastly intoxication from spirituous liquors. That is what I allude to. I do not mean to say that any hon. member who votes conscientiously for prohibitory measures is ever under any influence of that kind; but there can be no doubt that some of the most vehement and loudly-spoken advocates of temperance by no means practice that noble virtue.

Mr. FOSTER. I believe—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoken.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. Did the hon. gentleman speak to the amendment?

Mr. FOSTER. I have spoken once; I have not yet spoken to the original amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is now on the amendment moved by Mr. Small. I think the hon. gentleman has spoken to that.

Mr. FISHER. I regret that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) has not been able to continue and address the House upon this occasion; but I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) to pass unchallenged. That hon. member has taken upon himself to accuse the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) of impertinence, and in making that accusation against him he has founded it upon an allusion made by the hon. member for Lanark to the state in which the hon. member for Victoria happened to be when he made a few remarks a little while ago. I think the hon. member for Victoria, having taken that ground, can be fairly accused of impertinence, not to one individual member, but to the whole House, individually and collectively, in consequence of the words uttered before dinner, when he declared that the House did not know what it did when it passed the amendments to the Act. If that reasoning is to apply to the hon. member for Lanark, they must react on the hon. member for Victoria. That hon. member has been guilty of impertinence—not that I would have alluded to it, except for his attack on the hon. member for Lanark—but he has gone a little too far in accusing that hon. gentleman, and other people in the country, who are advocates of temperance, with being intoxicated with their success. It is true that on many occasions the temperance people have been blessed with success attending their efforts. But, unfortunately, I regret to say this afternoon, if we have been in the past at all inclined to be intoxicated, to-day it has been taken from us, because our efforts this afternoon in this House did not meet with that success which I should have been glad to have seen them meet with. I regret to say that, in consequence of the action of the House this afternoon, the temperance cause in this country has received a severe blow, from which it will take some time, until the next general elections, to recover. But I believe the proposition which is now before the House would, were it to be passed, be even a much greater blow than we received this afternoon. The proposition before us is that for the future the Scott Act, where adopted, will not apply or interfere with the sale of wine or beer. This is, as the hon. member for King's said, a few minutes ago, a very important question, and I regret that such an important question should have come up in the manner in which it has come up on the floor of this House. I regret it should have come up towards the close of a very long Session, and at a time when hon. members are wearied with their labors, when hon. members have not really time to give to its consideration. I call it a very important question, because I believe that by the acceptance of the proposition now before the House the practical good effects of the Canada Temperance Act will be entirely destroyed. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) has given us a short, and, I think, effective account of the history of temperance legislation in this country. And now we are called upon to take a retrograde step, because we are to consider the term "intoxicating liquors" very much more limited in its nature than that term has ever yet been considered to be. If light wines and beer are no longer to be considered intoxicating liquors under the terms of the Canada Temperance Act, I ask this House to consider to what it is to lead. I am not going now to discuss the question at length, as to whether greater evils of intemperance are likely to arise in consequence of indulgence in light wines and beer than in consequence of indulgence in whiskey and other strong drinks. I believe, however, the effect of the amendment will be, not to induce greater consumption of light wine and beer, but that it will also practically continue the use of whiskey and other strong drinks in such counties as might adopt the Scott Act with this amendment tacked on to it. Were the amendment carried and the temperance people were to secure the adoption of the Scott Act, then, in those counties, with light wine and beer allowed to be sold, while whiskey and other strong liquors are forbidden, those strong liquors would go into the light wines and beer, and be sold in great quantities as wine. I do not believe pure beer and pure light wine will be sold. I believe that a small quantity of beer and light wine will be sold with a very great quantity of whiskey added thereto, so that the intoxicating effects of the beverage will be just as bad as the alcoholic effects of pure whiskey. In fact, Sir, I might go further, and say that the effect of that beverage would be worse than the effect of pure whiskey, because, I regret to say, that I believe it to be the case, that light wines and beer, as produced in this country, are more likely to be adulterated by all sorts of poisonous trash than is the whiskey of this country. Whiskey is probably the cheapest and most easily procured intoxicating beverage in this country, and the result is, that persons desiring to become intoxicated, or to use stimulants, are more likely to take whiskey than any of the various concoctions sold under the names of light wines and beers. And, Sir, whiskey is so cheap in this country that there is not the temptation to adulterate it that there is to adulterate light wines, at all events, even if I do not, in that respect, include beer. We find that in this country light wines are not made to any great extent, and those sold are almost invariably adulterated. It is scarcely possible for the people of this country to obtain, except by paying a very high price for it, pure light wines, such as claret or Sauterne. The result is, that if this amendment were passed, the people in the counties that adopted the Scott Act so amended, would be tempted and almost forced, if they did not wish to evade the law, to buy an adulterated article; and I believe that one of the greatest evils connected with the use of intoxicating liquors is the evil arising from the adulteration of those liquors. Were wine, whiskey and beer to be sold pure, as they are made, when rightly made, I believe the evils of intemperance would be greatly reduced. I do not wish to say that the extent of those evils would not still be very great, but that they would be greatly reduced; and it is because I believe this amendment points in the direction of encouraging the adulteration of pure drink, whatever it may be, that I am most earnestly inclined to oppose it. I am inclined to oppose it, furthermore, because I believe, as I have long believed, that even the use of wine and beer when pure, when not so strong and bad in their alcoholic effects, would still be worse than the prohibition of the sale of those liquors. But I consider, even putting that aside, that the argument which I have brought before this House is a very strong one against the adoption of this amendment. It is true, Sir, that the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto takes away a great objection that I had, and that no doubt others had, to the amendment passed by the Senate, which was retroactive in its effects. As representing a Scott Act county, with others representing such counties, we could not for an instant accept the original proposition from the Senate, knowing that the counties, which have, with their eyes open, knowingly and designedly adopted the Scott Act, believing it to be an Act involving entire prohibition, would not for an instant consent to allow the proposition that the sale of light wines and beers, should be permitted in those counties. But I consider the proposition of the hon. member for Toronto is unfair to a very large body of people in this country. I allude to the large body who have already petitioned the Secretary of State and the Governor in Council to allow the Scott Act to be submitted in their counties. The hon. member for Lanark has just stated that there are to-day twenty-one counties in which steps have been taken for the submission of the Scott Act. Now, those people have taken those steps with the full expectation and intention of getting a chance to vote on the Scott Act, as it stood before it was amended by the Senate, and those people, representing, I think, the majority of the electors in twenty-one counties and cities of this Dominion, would be very unfairly treated were this amendment of the hon. member for Toronto accepted. Speaking, as I can speak, of the sentiments of a large number of the temperance people of this country, and speaking of the sentiments of those counties which have brought about that petition, I believe they would probably not act upon them at all, and the consequence would be that they would have been put to a very large amount of trouble and expense, all to no purpose. I think it would be fair to consider the breach of faith to those people. But, Sir, I think there is another objection to the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto, and that, Sir, is, what I can, perhaps, fairly call a breach of faith to the temperance people of this country. It is a well-known fact that during the last year the temperance people have made a strong, vigorous and very successful campaign throughout the country, for the adoption of the Scott Act. That campaign was largely due to the initiation of the Dominion Alliance, which holds its annual meetings in the winter time, in Ottawa, and that Alliance, and the people who support it, having been successful in their campaign last year, are now entering upon another campaign, similar to the one of last year. They desire by these means to submit the Scott Act in various parts of the country, and to bring to bear that pressure on the House of Commons, that influence on the House of Commons, which is a legitimate influence, to bring about total prohibition in this country. Every hon. gentleman within these walls recollects very well that last year we passed here a prohibitory resolution, by which, when this Parliament becomes fully convinced that the temperance people of this country were in the majority, and that this country was prepared to enforce a prohibitory law, this Parliament would pass such a law. By what means can this Parliament be shown that the people of this country are in favor of a prohibitory law, except by the submission and adoption of the Scott Act. In the various counties of the Dominion, at the time when the discussion took place in this House, the Scott Act was pointed to as a way by which the people who desired prohibition could get prohibition, and the result was that the Dominion Alliance answered that challenge and passed the Scott Act in very many of the counties of Canada. The result has been, I think, pretty fair proof to the Parliament of this country that the people are in favor of prohibition. But that proof is not conclusive, and if the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto is passed, I see no way by which that proof can be made conclusive. It is possible, and I think probably it is the fact, that the hon. member for Toronto, and his friends supporting him on this question, do not wish to see that proof made conclusive. I think, probably, those supporting the amendment wish to prevent, and think that by this means they can prevent, this proof to the House that the people of Canada desire prohibition. I think, perhaps, that if their motion were allowed to pass, they might so prevent it, but I believe that even that will not accomplish the object, because I believe the temperance people of this country will find another way by which they can prove to this House, or if not this House, to a succeeding House, to the Parliament of Canada, that they do desire a total prohibitory law. I do not believe for an instant, Sir, that I have exhausted all the arguments which would show the evil effects of the law which the hon. member for Toronto wishes to pass through this House. But there are other gentlemen in this House who can bring forward these arguments and proofs, and I will merely add that I am quite convinced that this amendment, if passed, will put an end entirely and wholly to the Scott Act agitation now going on in this country, that it will prevent future Scott Act agitation, and will inflict a blow on the temperance progress of the country which it would be difficult indeed for the temperance people of the country to recover from.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not understand that the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small) implies at all an undertaking on the part of those who vote for it that they will vote for the amendment of the Senate as amended by that amendment. The underlying principle of the Scott Act, as it is popularly called, is that the people themselves shall decide whether they desire, or do not desire, prohibition; and the ground on which the Senate amendment is proposed to be modified by the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto, as I understand it, is, that in a number of counties of this Dominion the Scott Act has already been adopted by large majorities, and it would be exceedingly unfair, in the face of an expression of opinion of that kind, to impose on those counties a condition different from that which they believed would exist when they adopted their by-laws. Without, for myself, intimating that I will vote for the Senate amendment, by voting for the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto, I intend to cast my vote for that amendment. I do so simply because it affirms the principle that the people having in several counties decided in favor of the Scott Act, it is not fair for this Parliament to interfere and create a condition of things different from what existed when they adopted that Act. I should deeply regret if anything was done by this Parliament to interfere in the slightest degree with the people in the future, in doing as they have been doing in the past, with possibly some modification, enabling them to express their opinions in any of the counties, either as to the license laws, as to a modified system of prohibition, or as to whether they desire that no intoxicating liquor shall be sold at all. I rise for the purpose of simply explaining my own position, that I shall vote for the amendment, without stating that I shall vote for the Senate amendment, as amended by the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto.

Mr. COLBY. Listening to the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small) and to the remarks which have fallen from my hon. friend at my right (Mr. White, Cardwell), I think it may be accepted now as being the unanimous sentiment of the House that retroactive legislation, which would affect those constituencies which have already enacted the Scott Act, would not receive sympathy or support in any quarter of this House. I think I may say that, judging from the amendment now before the House, from the known views of the gentlemen who have supported that amendment, and from the resolution proposed by the hon. member opposite that I agree not only with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, but with all the members of this House, in going that length. But I must go a step further than the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has gone. I must say, I could not support these amendments—as high a respect as I have for the hon. body that passed them—as applicable to the Scott Act in any form whatever. I think this is a question which very nearly concerns the honor and the dignity of this House. We passed the Scott Act with unanimity; we adopted the sentiments embodied in the preamble and the various sections of that Act as the unanimous will of the Parliament of Canada. Up to the present time, on every occasion when any proposition affecting the Scott Act has been made, this House has, with unanimity, done everything in its power to improve the working of that Act, according to the views of those most interested in its well-working. A year ago, as the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) has said, this House placed itself on record as affirming that in the opinion of this House total prohibition was the true remedy for the evil which all admit to exist. Strengthened by that resolution, the friends of prohibition have exerted themselves with extraordinary vigor during the past year in order to show that the sentiment of prohibition was largely participated in by the people of this country; and every expression, up to this time, is confirmatory of the wisdom of Parliament in enacting the Scott Act, and in adopting the resolution of last Session. Why is it that now, at this stage, after this expression of opinion from the people at the polls, when 27 counties out of 33 which have voted on the Scott Act have decided favorably to that Act—why is it that now, for the first time since the Scott Act was passed, propositions subversive of its principles are received with favor? Are we to stand before the country as having been disingenuous when we passed that law—in having been disingenuous when we adopted the resolution of last session? Are we to stand before the country as a Parliament ready to trifle with a great moral question, which exercises the thoughts and the hearts of the people of this Dominion, from one end to the other? Are we to reverse our former expressions by a side wind? Have we not the courage of our convictions? Has anything occurred since our past actions that would justify us in receiving with favor propositions not made in sympathy with this Act, not made or supported by persons in sympathy with the Act, but made by opponents of the Act, and advocated on the ground of hostility to it? Do we do this on account of any new light we have received since the last session of Parliament? Are we going to change about in that way? Then, assuredly, we ignore the sentiment of the people, so far as they have given evidence of it. Now, I do not believe we can consistently do so. I do not believe we should allow a measure to be foisted on this country that will, in the sentiment of those who most favor the Act, be subversive of it. I have the highest respect and regard for many gentlemen who advocate a different method of treating this great evil; I have the highest regard for those who believe that a stringent license law is the best remedy; I know there are good temperance men in this House and the country, who do not believe in the Scott Act—who believe that a stringent license Act well enforced is the proper way of meeting the evil, and I respect the sentiments of those people. I believe, also, that there are gentlemen who believe in the doctrine, which is somewhat new in this country, that the true remedy is not in total or local prohibition, but in the permissive use of light wines and similar beverages used in other countries. I do not believe all those who advocate that doctrine do it with the view of subverting the principles of temperance in this country; I know that a good many good temperance men, who have given thought to the subject, believe that the true remedy is not prohibition on one side, nor in the licensing of liquor on the other, but in that other course, by which light wines, beers and ciders may be used. I respect their opinions as sincere; I feel bound to acknowledge that they are honest when they express them; I am disposed to give them every opportunity, individually, of having those opinions tested; and if any gentleman will propose in this House that they shall have the same opportunity of testing their experiment that the prohibition party have, I will concur in that.

I will concur in a proposition to the effect, that if, at any time, one-fourth of the electors of any municipality, other than Scott Act municipalities, represent, in the manner provided in the Scott Act, that they desire an Act which will contain this clause, and this alone, the permission to sell ale and light wines, I have no objection to that experiment being tried. Then you would have the two side by side; but do not make a mongrel thing of it; do not graft this clause on to a prohibitory law, and say, afterwards, the law is a failure. Do not spoil both experiments; do not spoil the experiment that is being tried by those who are in favor of prohibition, by bringing in something which is incongruous with that idea. If a certain number of counties want a prohibitory Act, let it be enforced in those counties; if other counties want to carry out the sentiments and opinions of those who believe that the use of wine and beer is the true remedy, let that experiment be tried in those counties. You will then have both experiments tried side by side, and the public will be able to judge as to the value of each. The members of this House, one and all, profess to desire, in the best possible way, to lessen or prevent certain evils which are universally admitted to be evils; and I believe that all reasonable experiments in that direction should have a fair trial, so that after they have been tested for a period of years the intelligent public will be able to recognise which is the best. If I believed, as many do, that the Scott Act, if enforced, would show its own defects and satisfy the people of its own worthlessness, I would want to have the experiment so tried that I would be able to say: Here, you have the Act; here, you have your own method of enforcing the Act, and here is the failure that results from it. But, just so long as you tamper with it, just so long as you graft on it features which the supporters of the Act do not approve of, just so surely will they not be satisfied with any adverse experiment, but will account for its failure by other causes. If you had let us alone, they will say, if you had not tampered with the Act, it would have been a success; now it is not a success, through your interference. The advocates of the Scott Act are sufficiently handicapped already in their efforts. They have against them the thousands who oppose it from motives of self-interest; they have against them all those who believe that prohibitory Acts are restraints on the freedom of the subject; they have against them all those who believe the true remedy is a thorough license Act. They are handicapped further by the evident fact that their experiments cannot have a fair trial, through any system of local option, since, while in one county the Scott Act may be in full force, in an adjacent county the Act may not be in operation, rendering violations of the Act less difficult. Holding these views, respecting the convictions of those who believe honestly that the true remedy lies, not in prohibition, but in other methods, I think they ought also to respect the convictions of those whose sentiments are embodied in the Statute Book, endorsed by the action of this House, and who now desire to work out that problem which Parliament some time ago gave them an opportunity of working out. Under these circumstances, I feel bound to oppose any proposition to graft this clause, in any shape or form whatever, on this Act, believing it will spoil both experiments, believing that neither will have an opportunity of fair play, the two things being incompatible. I would be willing to see both experiments worked out separately and fairly, so that the people would have an opportunity of judging which was the best; but I am opposed to any proposition to combine these two incompatible things together in the one Act; and I may say, I for one, cannot very well afford to disregard the expression of public opinion which has been had during the past year. In my own county there were as many votes of the electors passed upon the Scott Act—less 46—as at the last parliamentary election, and the Scott Act was supported by as large a majority as that which sent me to this House. I certainly cannot, under these circumstances, disregard the wishes of my people; and if I were not prepared to carry out the clearly-expressed wishes of my constituents in this particular, I would feel it my duty to resign my position as their representative, and allow them to send some one here whose sentiments, actions, votes and speeches in Parliament would be more in accordance with their expressed views and wishes.

Mr. COLBY.

Mr. SCRIVER. I do not understand the effect of the motion of the hon. member from East Toronto (Mr. Small) to be what my hon. friend from Cardwell explained it to be. I do not understand its effect to be simply limiting the amendments passed in the Senate to counties in which the Scott Act had not been passed. I think there is something in addition. I think the motion says that the amendment of the Senate shall be approved of.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is taken out.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion, as originally put in my hands, is, that all the words after "that," of the said motion, be struck out, and the following words added: "In counties and cities hereafter adopting the said Act, and that the said amendment be agreed to with the amendment hereinbefore set out." But these last words I must strike out, because they bind the House to a future motion, and the motion stands, that all the words after "that" be struck out, and the following words be added: "In counties or cities hereafter adopting the said Act."

Mr. SCRIVER. Then I see no reason why the House should not accept the amendment. If I understand the motion rightly, it would not have any effect on the action of the House, with regard to the amendments made by the Senate, but simply limit them, if they should be approved by the House, to counties in which the Scott Act may hereafter be adopted.

Mr. MILLS. As I understand the proposition of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small), it practically limits the operation of the Scott Act to counties in which it may hereafter be submitted to the people. In all these counties it is provided total prohibition shall be destroyed; you may prohibit the use of spirituous liquors other than light wines and ale and beer, but these you have no power of prohibiting. That is the effect of the amendment put into the Speaker's hands. It is perfectly clear that it is a repeal of the Scott Act, so far as the light wines and the ale and beer are concerned, in all cases where that Act may in future be submitted to the people. I am opposed to any such limitation. I believe that, if the people choose to adopt the principle of prohibition in any counties where the principle has not yet been adopted, they should be as free as they have hitherto been under the Scott Act. If the hon. gentleman had submitted to the House a proposition to say that those who did not wish to go so far as to adopt the principle of total prohibition, but believed they would promote Temperance better by allowing the use of light wines, ale and beer, might have the three alternatives of total prohibition, light wines and ale, and a strict license system, that would be very different; but that is not the proposition. The proposition now in your hands is to permit the present Temperance Act to operate in all those counties where it has been adopted, but to provide that in all other counties that power shall not in future exist; the people shall only have liberty to prohibit the use of ardent spirits.

Mr. CURRAN. In attempting to reply to the hon. member who spoke a few moments ago, (Mr. Colby) I feel that the task I am undertaking, in giving expression, in a few words, to my ideas upon this very important subject, is far more difficult than it would be under ordinary circumstances in following one of the usual prohibition orators who speak upon this subject. It strikes me very forcibly, judging from the admirable tone of the eloquent speech which my hon. friend has delivered here to-night, that he seems to have fully conceived the idea of the great theologian and philosopher, who said that in all essentials there should be unity, in matters doubtful, liberty, and in all things charity. Certainly he has taken, so far as his expressions go to-night, a most charitable view of the situation. He has not mixed up, as most people do, on occasions of this kind and on prohibition platforms, hatred and holiness; he has not sought to impute sinister motives to those who disagree with him, and I must say that his address this evening was one of those most likely to carry conviction, because he has studiously avoided that grievous error into which the advocates of prohibition in this country have fallen of late, that of holding up to contempt even the highest body in the land, because they venture to differ with them, of hounding down those who may happen not to entertain the same ideas as themselves, and refusing all liberty of thought, and exercising, instead of the charity which my hon. friend has extended to all, downright and unqualified coercion. I desire, on this occasion, to say, in opening these remarks, that, so far as I am personally concerned, I do wish, from the bottom of my heart, that every man, woman and child in this land, whose health would permit, should be a total abstainer from intoxicating liquors. I, myself, am a member of the oldest temperance organisation in the city of Montreal—the parent society of all the Catholic total abstinence organisations in that great city, and have been for some years past. I have followed anxiously the progress of that body and of the sister societies, and I have sought to find out for myself what the true principles were upon which those with whom I have been associated endeavored to act. I think there is a wide difference, a marked difference, between temperance and prohibition, and I believe that I am justified in the course which I am adopting here to-night, in giving expression to these few words in favor of the amendment, because those organisations to which I have referred, and which have been in the field of temperance for so many years, acting consistently, acting generously, acting nobly and religiously, have laid down what they conceive to be the true platform upon which this question should be agitated; they have promulgated, in a document which has been submitted to the Local Legislature only in the last Session, their programme as to what should be done in reference to the temperance question. They have asserted that the way to deal with this question is not by prohibition, but is by a strict licensing system, which will restrict these licenses to persons whose character would entitle them to carry on a legitimate business, and in whose conduct the State might repose confidence; and in the second place, they have laid down as a rule that there should be, on the part of the Government of the country, a strict law, faithfully and rigorously carried out, to analyse those liquids which are handed over the counters in various parts of the country, to see that they contain nothing that is injurious to the human system. These are the two rules they have adopted, and I feel that, in following out the precepts indicated therein, I am following a true course. But we have been asked to-night, in a very empathic manner, by one of the most powerful and polished orators of the temperance cause, one who, I am happy to say, generally avoids those extravagances of language which characterise others who are high up in authority in the camp to which he belongs, we have been asked by the member for King's (Mr. Foster), what are the reasons; are there any; why is this attempt made; has any agitation taken place; have we any expression of opinion? Are there any reasons, moral or material, any reasons of any kind whatsoever, that would induce this House to adopt the amendment that has just been proposed? Well, I think there are reasons; I think there are powerful reasons; I think there are great moral reasons; and I think we have seen arrayed, on behalf of this amendment, or something in its nature, gentlemen occupying eminent positions in the ecclesiastical world, not exclusively gentlemen belonging to one denomination, but gentlemen of different denominations, who have spoken, and spoken out vigorously, and honestly, and frankly, and have not hesitated, whatever might be the consequence, to give expression to their views upon this question, which is being so violently agitated. Why, Sir, I think I can afford to stand in company with such a distinguished man as Archbishop Lynch, of Toronto, who, only a short time ago, addressed such a strong and vigorous letter to the public press of this country on this very question. And, Sir, let me point out—and I promise not to weary the House long, because I thoroughly understand that at this late stage of the Session short speeches are far more palatable than long ones—allow me simply to point out one or two of the passages of that letter. He tells us that prohibition is not a sound doctrine; he tells us that it cannot prevail, and he says, to use his own language:

"It is difficult to enforce a moral virtue on unwilling people. They will always claim the right to do as they please, provided they do not injure their neighbors. The church has encouraged voluntary temperance by means of associations; and the Pope has even granted indulgence to these temperance societies."

And so forth. And he goes on to say that he himself, as well as his clergy, have endeavored to exercise all their influence to suppress intemperance, and that he has no reason, and neither have they, to be discouraged at their results. But he goes still farther, and he lays down a doctrine by which I have always been guided in voting against prohibition in this House. I have felt that this doctrine of prohibition is an anti-christian doctrine, and I have the high authority of the Archbishop for saying so, and that is quite good enough authority for me. He tells us:

"It has been asserted that the use of wine is prohibited in the bible. This is not the case. Our Divine Redeemer instituted one of his greatest sacraments in bread and wine."

And so forth. Having referred to this distinguished authority, I may now refer to the remarkable discourse that was made only a few days ago by the Rev. Principal Grant, of Queen's College, Kingston. Amongst other things, he said:

"There were various currents of opinion on this subject, and they should endeavor to embrace such opinions as were reasonable and moderate, instead of forcing them to adopt extreme opinions. There was only one opinion amongst them with regard to the sin of intemperance, but some of them might think that too much was made relatively of the one sin, and that there were even greater evils in the land."

I thoroughly agree with the reverend Principal in that respect; I thoroughly agree that this one sin of intemperance does not overshadow the whole decalogue, and that it is rather too cheap a certificate of all the virtues merely to be a supporter of the Scott Act. He says:

"Men who wished moderate measures were just as strong in their advocacy of temperance, and hatred of intemperance, as the more extreme of them. There was only one opinion with regard to the end to be obtained, which was to get a sober community, but they might differ as to the means that were best calculated to attain that end. Was moral terrorism to be exercised upon men who were not such extremists as others. Those who attempted to terrorise over others, who did not go as far as they, were the greatest enemies of the good end desired—for they were driving out of the ranks those who would feign co-operate with them for the suppression of the great evil of intemperance."

And, Sir, can we find more striking proof of the truth of the assertion of that distinguished gentleman than the utterances of public orators and the writings of the press on behalf of this Scott Act, in the means they have adopted to drag down to the lowest point possible the Senate of this Dominion, who speak of those men as unworthy of any respect, and to use towards them the grossest epithets. But that, after all, I believe, is nothing but the ordinary language of those who have spoken upon this subject with reference to those who are opposed to them. I can mention still others—speaking on the moral point alone—who are equally strong men, whose opinions are worthy of the greatest respect from this House, or from any other body in the Dominion. It is not merely one section of the community, as I said, who have pronounced in favor of the proposition of my hon. friend from Toronto; but we find that the professors of Trinity College; that the professors of St. Michael's College; that a large majority of the physicians of Hamilton; that a large number of the physicians of Toronto—I think, 37—that the mayor of Toronto, and 36 aldermen of that city, and a large number of other persons in exalted positions, whose opinions are worthy of respect, entertain the views that are set forth in the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Small). I shall not say one word about the petitions that have poured in here. We all understand the value of petitions, but certainly we have seen laid upon the Table of this House, from various sections of the Dominion, a sufficient number of petitions to convince us that in this country there is a very strong feeling in the direction of the motion of my hon. friend from Toronto. But, Sir, there is something more than the names of the prominent men and the influential bodies to which I have adverted. There is something more, and it is this: That this law is practical confiscation; it is practically robbing men of their property; it is practically taking from men their means of subsistence; it is depreciating, without any compensation, property that they have honestly acquired. I am not one of those who believe that the brewers and distillers of this country are a set of rascals and scoundrels, who deserve to be denounced. I cannot agree with those who speak of men like the Dow's, the Scott's, the Molson's, the O'Keefe's, and hosts of others through this country, men who stand high in the social circle, men who contribute largely to public charities, men who have done their duty nobly by their country in various ways, men who have carried on a legitimate and legalised business—I say I cannot agree with those who denounce those men on account of the traffic in which they engaged. Sir, let me ask if there is still another ground upon which we can base our argument; are there not other reasons which can be urged? Apart from moral reasons altogether, I say we have good material reasons why this amendment should carry. If we desire to promote temperance in its true sense, if we desire to see the country progress in sobriety—although to-day it appears, from statistics, that Canada is as sober a country as there is in the world, that there is no reason why a feeling of terror should creep over us, on account of the intemperance of our people—I say if we desire to promote true temperance we should look at the experience of other countries. We find that in almost every one of them there is a larger percentage of alcohol used than there is in the Dominion of Canada. Beginning with the United Kingdom, we find that the people consume 1·92 gallons of wine, beer and spirits per head; in France, 2·65 per cent; Germany, 1·60 per cent.; Holland, 2·05; Belgium, 2·07; Denmark, 2·60; United States, 1·31 Canada, only 75 per cent. of 1 gallon. Yet how is it that in France there is little drunkenness among the people? Simply because they use the wine of the country, and are not addicted, outside of the cities, to the use of ardent spirits. There we have a sober people, a people who are not addicted to the habit of drunkenness, and we have a country where the idea of introducing prohibition would be laughed at from one end of the land to the other. The form of our alcohol is far more injurious, and I am satisfied that, in a moral sense, and in that particular we would be making a great step forward by adopting the amendment now before the House. Let me ask, how are we going to deal with those people whose businesses are going to be destroyed? Have they no stake in the country? Let me give you a few statistics. The number of licensed hotels in Ontario is nearly 4,000; in the whole Dominion about 6,000. The assessed value of those in Ontario, in 1883, was from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000. The number of brewers in Ontario and Quebec is 104, and the capital employed, as estimated by the Inland Revenue Department, is $4,112,888; value of buildings, $2,397,470; of plant, $1,331,227. The capital invested in distilleries is $4,000,000. We have all this capital invested; we have all these men, not only having their own capital employed and their industry threatened, but we have those who are engaged in those industries, those who earn their bread in those establishments, thousands and thousands of them employed directly and indirectly, and we would deprive them, without one cent of compensation, of their occupation, and deprive their employers of what is justly their own—depreciate their property in value and beggar them by the operation of this Act. But we have still more. We have heard here to-night that there was some amount of sympathy with those who favor wine and beer, but apart from the brewers, there is an immense amount of money invested in the vineyards of the Dominion, and you will find, apart from the brewers and distillers, there are coopers, hop-growers, barley-growers and various other branches of business, that are directly and indirectly affected by this legislation. But there are still other arguments. I spoke a few moments ago from the purely moral point of view. In regard to the material aspect, we have the opinions of those whose opinions are worthy of respect. We have had laid upon this Table petitions from bankers, from loan societies, from various monetary institutions, all showing the great depreciation in value that would take place in the country under this system; and I think, with all those facts staring us in the face, we cannot have much hesitation as to how we should vote upon this occasion. But I ask this question: Is it likely that this particular movement will be a success, without having behind it the great moral force of the actual total abstainers? I say you cannot make a people sober by Act of Parliament. Surely you cannot expect that a greater good, a more effective temperance movement and more permanent results can arise from this Act than from the great temperance movement that took place in Ireland some years ago—the greatest movement ever known in the world. I refer to the movement of the celebrated Father Matthew. One or two lines from an authority who has written on this subject. I refer to Mr. A. M. Sullivan, one of the ablest men in Ireland, who died only a short time ago, a distinguished member of the House of Commons of Great Britain, a man who stood high for his abilities and eloquence; and I may say he was one of the foremost champions of temperance, as we understand it—that is, by moral suasion, the effect of temperance societies and of religious conviction. In writing upon this great movement led by Father Matthew, what does he say? Speaking of the two great leaders of that day, O'Connell and Matthews, he said:

Mr. CURRAN.

"In widely different characters, however, these two men won eminence and praise. One was a political leader, the other was a moral reformer. The one commanded the allegiance of a party in the State; the other received the homage of all. There is scarcely a country in the civilised world in which the memory of Father Matthew is not revered. Wherever good men are laboring for the elevation of humanity, the story of his career is an incentive to brave endeavor; and how far his work has perished with or survived him is a question which excites solicitude."

Speaking on the same subject, at another passage he says:

"I have said that the astonishing success of the Temperance movement, from 1838 to 1845, was largely the product of enthusiasm, and was certain to be followed by a reaction. Even if no unusual misfortune had befallen, some such retrocession would, I am confident, have been suffered, but nothing that would have seriously impaired the reformation which Father Matthew had wrought."

So spoke that eminent historian and distinguished temperance advocate of the work of the temperance apostle, which was aided, not only by his own eloquence and ability, but by the religious enthusiasm that accompanied the work.

Yet he says reaction was sure to follow. Under the Scott Act there will be something more than reaction. It is certain some day to be repealed, but not until the law itself has fallen into contempt and that the country has suffered deeply both in its moral and material interests. I say, in this case, just as in the case of every other movement of this kind, it is better to adhere to the good old idea, leaving the morals of the people to the clergy who have charge of them. They are the men who have most influence, who strike most deeply into the hearts of the people, and instead of seeking to supply their place by legislation, let us honestly and sincerely labor in the direction which is indicated in the admirable letter with which I opened my speech, from His Grace the Archbishop of Toronto, and I am satisfied that by working on these lines men who are honest and sincere, men who desire to see their fellow-countrymen and women abstaining from intoxicating liquors altogether, will have far more influence, will have far greater weight, their words will go further, their example far more effective; and I am satisfied that just as in this work the author pays the highest tribute to the brewers and distillers of Ireland, during the time of the Matthew movement, and pays the highest tribute to their magnanimity on every occasion, when they were appealed to on behalf of works of charity and benevolence, so I say that the men engaged in the trade in this country will not regret the temperance movement which will go on—not a movement of confiscation, not a movement under which, by law, a certain section of the community cajole some and terrorise others, by which they close the mouths of one section of the community and intimidate another from acting; but I say these men will hail with general satisfaction a genuine temperance movement, a movement which will have a lasting effect, because it will be based on the principles of true Christianity, will find its way deep into the hearts of the people, and will have a lasting and permanent effect, which no legislation like the Scott Act can ever give.

Mr. CASEY. I do not rise to discuss the question of the Scott Act in the abstract, or the propriety of using alcoholic liquor, but I shall simply confine myself, as far as possible, to the question directly before us, which is, in the first place, whether we should accept the Senate amendment as it was adopted in that House, or, in the second place, whether we should accept it with the change proposed by the motion now in your hands. I think the amendment as it was made by the Senate is so evidently against the sense of the House that it is hardly worth while discussing it. It would be so eminently a breach of faith to those counties where the Scott Act has been adopted, with the intention of securing total prohibition, to change the Act, after they had adopted it, and allow the sale of some intoxicating drinks, that the House appears to have rejected that idea altogether, for I understand that the amendment now in your hands proceeds from those who are, in the main, favorable to the general line of the Senate amendments, and it will be accepted by them, I suppose, as the shape in which they would wish the matter to be submitted to this House. With regard to the question of whether the Scott Act, when submitted in future, shall not apply to ale and light wines, I have simply to say that I consider the Scott Act still an experiment. In 1878 this House unanimously agreed to give the people of any county in this Dominion the right to try this experiment. They have been trying it here and there ever since, and, of late, to a greater extent than formerly, and it has been found necessary to ask for certain amendments, not to the enacting clauses of the Bill, but to its machinery, in order that the experiment might continue to be tried—I do not say necessarily with success, but with fair play. The Bill which is now sought to be amended was brought before this House, and it appeared to be the opinion of the great majority that we should confine ourselves to doing what was asked for by the Bill, and so amending the machinery of the Act that it would be completely workable. That seemed to be the opinion of the House, because nearly every amendment looking to changes in the enacting clauses of the Bill was rejected by the large majority of this House. That was the general impression as to the feeling of the House on that subject, and the amendment which has since been proposed in the Senate was not, so far as I can remember, proposed here at all. It was not supposed that it would have the slightest chance of being accepted, after the opinion which the House had expressed on several other divisions. I think, under these circumstances, and looking at the state of public opinion in the country, looking at the numerous and very recent victories of the Scott Act in the different counties, I take it still to be the view of the majority in this House and the country that the Scott Act experiment should be still further continued, that the people of Canada should have it in their power to adopt the Scott Act, in the shape of a really prohibitive Act, as it is at present. I am not discussing whether the people should adopt it or not, but I say that they should continue to have the right, as they have had for some years back, of adopting that local prohibition, if they see fit. And I think it is equally clear that the sense of the country generally, and I believe the sense of the majority of this House, is to the effect that the proposed changes in the law would not only allow wine and ale to be sold, but would break down almost entirely the prohibitory character of the Bill. I do not know how fully such an experiment has been tried elsewhere, but it does seem to me that if you allow bars to be kept open for the sale of ale and wine you will, to say the least of it, enormously enhance the difficulty of preventing the sale of whiskey and other distilled liquors in the same bars, perhaps out of the same packages and in the same glasses, as those used for the sale of light wines. In the case of wines, it is easy to fortify them with spirits to such an extent as to make them a great deal more exhilarating than they are in their natural condition, and no doubt wines so fortified would be very strong, if wine was allowed to be sold. I think, then, Sir, that the proposed change would virtually do away with the object of the Scott Act. The object of the Scott Act is to prohibit the sale of alcoholic liquors, and if you permit the sale of such liquors under the Scott Act, I do not see much use in allowing the people to try the experiment at all, or to pass a so-called prohibitory Act, which is not prohibitory. I think, if you make these changes in the Bill, it would be much better to wipe it off the Statute Book altogether, and not go through the farce of pretending to try local prohibition when we are really trying only what is, at the best, partial prohibition, and what will be, in the majority of cases, no prohibition at all; for I am quite certain that if bars are open for the sale of these light drinks something harder, as the phrase goes, will be sold along with the light drinks. The hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), who spoke just before me, said that the Scott Act was a confiscation of property. That question has been discussed a good deal already, and may be discussed again, but I do not believe this is the time to discuss it. We are not discussing whether there should be a Scott Act or not; we are discussing whether it should be modified in certain respects. The House is clearly in the mood to retain that Act in some shape; it is therefore quite out of place to discuss whether it involves the confiscation of property or not. If it does, and if the House and the country can be made to see that it is unjust to any body, then compensation can be demanded and undoubtedly could be had; but this is not the place or the time to raise that question, and it is not, I think, in accordance with the propriety of debate, to attempt to arouse feeling against those who take the temperance view of the question by pointing to alleged injustices in the Act itself, which are not involved in the question now before us. The same may be said of the hon. gentleman's remarks as to the respectability of brewers and distillers, and the unchristian nature of the Act altogether, and of the high authorities he quoted against it. These are all debatable subjects, but they do not concern the case before us at present. The opinions of archbishops and other high dignitaries must be received with respect, of course, even by those who do not feel those opinions to be obligatory on their consciences; but I do not see that they have any bearing on the present question, whether we should accept the amendments of the Senate or not. These are arguments directed against the question of prohibitory or permissive legislation of any kind, and do not concern the immediate question we have to consider. My hon. friend, also speaking of the amount of capital invested in the liquor traffic generally, referred to a very large amount as being invested in Canadian vineyards. I know that the amount is very considerable; I know that pretty extensive vineyards exist in my own part of the country, but the hon. gentleman is very far out in quoting these figures, because, as it happens, native wine is exempted from the provisions of the Scott Act altogether, which does not prevent the owners of these vineyards from deriving a full profit from them. Sir, to learn the opinion of the people on this question we need not go further back than this very day. I have been informed that the Act has been adopted in Middlesex and in Lincoln by large majorities, while in Perth the result appears to have been unfavorable to the Act, though there are a number of places to hear from; but when we find that out of three counties in which the Act is submitted on a given day it has been adopted in two, I think we are bound to conclude that the opinion of the country, as shown in the only way in which it can be shown, is still in favor of trying the experiment. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) dropped one or two suggestions which I think are worthy of attention, and which should, perhaps, be put into practical shape before this question is settled, if it be considered necessary to put them into practical shape this Session. He suggested that the people might have the option of voting on the Scott Act as it stands as against the Scott Act with beer and wine in it. I do not see so very much objection to that, although I do not believe the adoption of a partially prohibitory Act would have much meaning; but if there be a county which is not willing to adopt prohibition pure and simple, but is willing to adopt prohibition of distilled liquors, I think that experiment might be tried. I think, however, that this should only be done in counties where the Scott Act has been submitted and has failed to carry, or in counties where there was not a sufficient number of petitioners to obtain a submission of the Act itself. There may be places where a modified Act is the only one which would suit the people, but I think it would be wrong, in the interest of the experiment we are trying, and in the interest of public morality, if we prevented those counties which prefer the Scott Act as it is from having that kind of an Act, in order to suit counties which prefer modified prohibition. Several schemes have been canvassed in my hearing for the submission of those alternatives to the people; there may be a chance, later on, of discussing some scheme of that sort; but what I wish to point out is, that if there is any injury done by making the Scott Act, at all times and in all places, a wholly prohibitory measure, the way to remove that injury is not by providing that the Scott Act, always and in every place, shall be merely a partially prohibitory measure, but by providing that the people shall have an opportunity of trying two or three alternatives at different times, until they find one which will meet their peculiar views. With these views, I cannot help voting both against the amendment in your hands and against the amendment which has come down from the Senate, either in its present shape, or amended, as it will be, if this amendment passes.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. GIROUARD. I rise, not for the purpose of making a speech. I wish to call the attention of the House to some statistics which came under my notice four or five weeks ago. In the Cincinnati Enquirer of the 28th of March last, I find a condensed report of a commission which was appointed by the Swiss Government, upon the causes of the spread of intemperance into that country; and as I believe the figures and statements contained in that report have a great bearing upon the question under consideration, I will ask the permission of the House to trouble it with a few extracts. The article is headed: "Drink in all Countries," and is taken from the London Times:

"The consumption of alcoholic drinks in Switzerland, especially in the objectionable form of ardent spirits, and that of the still more pernicious absinthe, has so portentously increased during the last ten years, and the evils resulting therefrom are so great and manifold, that a short time ago the Federal Council resolved to undertake a searching inquiry into the whole subject, with a view as well to setting the facts in their true light as to the suggestion of such corrective measures as the necessities of the case may appear to demand and legislation be able to compass. The work, as all who consult the message of the Federal Council on the subject will agree, has been well and thoroughly done. The message is supplemented by a report from Dr. Schuler, Federal Factory Inspector, and accompanied by a bulky volume, in which are set forth the laws and experiences of several foreign States on the drink question, prepared by the Federal Bureau of Statistics. All these productions are published in the two principal languages of the Confederation. The message and Dr. Schuler's report are admirable examples of compression. They contain, within a small compass, not alone pretty nearly everything that behooves Swiss legislators to know, but much that must needs prove highly useful to all who are interested in the condition of the people and the great question of drink."

Then the article goes on to say, that between 1851 and 1855:

"The imports of spirits are increasing much faster than the imports of wine. Between 1851 and 1855 they were 35,588 quintals; according to the latest returns they are now 130,000 quintals. Here, again, we have to note the significant increase that took place after the war. This increase has been going steadily on ever since."

On the other hand, when the importation of spirits was increased, the production of the native wines in Switzerland decreased:

"The vineyards of Zurich, Scallhausen and Aargau, which gave nearly 500,000 hectolitres in 1874, and upwards of 800,000 in 1875, gave only 314,000 in 1881 and 113,000 in 1882, and the annual average falling off in the Confederation at large is estimated at from a-fourth to a-third, as compared with 1874, 1875, 1876, and previous years. Cider, which was once produced more largely than wine, has suffered even a greater diminution."

Then, in this report is a table carefully compiled from the latest returns, showing the consumption per head in divers countries, of spirits, wines and beer, and in this statement Canada stands as the most sober country in the world:—

	Spirits 50 Deg. of Alcoholic Strength. Liters.	Wine. Liters.	Beer. Liters.
Canada .....	3·08	0·29	8·51
Norway .....	3·90	1·00	15·30
United States.....	4·79	2·64	31·30
Great Britain and Ireland.....	5·37	2·09	143·92
Austria-Hungary .....	5·76	22·40	28·42
France .....	7·28	119·20	21·10
Russia .....	8·08	Unknown.	4·65
Sweden .....	8·14	0·36	11·00
German Zollverein.....	8·60	6·00	65·00
Belgium.....	9·20	3·70	169·20
Switzerland .....	9·40	55·00	37·50
Netherlands .....	9·87	2·57	27·00
Denmark .....	18·90	1·00	33·33

This table is followed by a condensed report of the liquor-drinking habits of the people in different countries:—

"France is thus, of all nations, the largest consumer of alcoholic drink; next come Belgium and Switzerland, almost neck and neck; Denmark makes a good fourth, while England ranks only fifth and Germany sixth. If the facts on which these conclusions are based had any less trustworthy warrant than that of the Swiss Government and its excellent statistical bureau, their accuracy might be open to doubt, so widespread is the belief that an abundance of light and low-priced wines necessarily promotes moderation, and that we English are heavier drinkers than our continental neighbors. But these wines, though light, are dearer than they used to be, and contain more than twice as much alcohol as beer, and Frenchmen take wines almost as freely as Englishmen take malt liquor. Everybody in France, even women and children, drink some wine, and for a man in fair health, two liters a day are not considered too much. Frenchmen, moreover, are very fond of black coffee, and a half cup of black coffee is almost invariably accompanied by a 'petit verre de cognac.' The consumption of spirits in the shape of cognac, absinthe and vermouth must be very great, and has, doubtless, as in Switzerland, been increased by the relative scarcity and high price of wine. Then there are no total abstainers in France, and though there is more drinking than in England, there is probably less drunkenness. An English workman takes his 'drop too much' on the Saturday and Sunday, and redresses the balance by taking next to nothing on other days. A French workman makes no difference between one day and another; he may never get drunk, yet at the end of the week he has probably swallowed twice as much alcohol as his English confrère."

I call especially the attention of the advocates of prohibition to the following statistics:—

"A singular and suggestive fact brought out in the message is that, contrary to the generally received theory, there seems to be no direct connection between drunkenness and facilities for drinking. Two maps are given side by side, one colored, so as to show the proportion of deaths from alcoholism in every canton of the Confederation; the other shaded, so as to show the number of taverns per 1,000 inhabitants in the same district. The canton in which there are most deaths—10·1 per 1,000 of the total number certified—is Solothurn, and in Solothurn there are eight public houses per 1,000 inhabitants. In Thurgau, on the other hand, with twelve public houses per 1,000, the proportion of deaths from alcoholism is only ·9 per 1,000. Graubunden, with ten public houses per 1,000, has 2·7 deaths per 1,000; while Berne, with 8·3 deaths per 1,000, has no more than four taverns per 1,000. In Ticino it is just the reverse—ten taverns and a death rate of 1·3. The same in Canton Schwyz, twelve public houses and 2·9 deaths. The only canton in which the number of public houses seems to have any relation to intemperance is Neuchatel, where they are nine per 1,000, and the deaths 10·2 per 1,000."

My attention was also called, the other day, to a little paragraph which appeared in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Paper of 30th May, which said:

"The assembling of 600 brewers is the rare sight that New York has just witnessed. They represented 3,000 breweries, which manufacture 16,000,000 kegs of beer every year and employ 500,000 men—one thirtieth of all the able-bodied workmen in the United States! No beer was served to the convention, though it was held in a beer garden, and the brewers all sat around drinking cold water! Then, stranger yet, there was a 'temperance address,' in which the orator bewailed the evils of intemperance after the best style of Gough, and urged that temperance be promoted by encouraging the use of malt liquors and by controlling, and, if necessary, prohibiting the sale of distilled liquors. To effect this end, he called for the abolition of taxes on beer and the increase of taxes on whisky and other spirituous liquors, 'which are the curse of the world.' The view taken is by no means new, but it assumes a novel aspect, by being put forth seriously, and no doubt sincerely, by brewers, who appear in the role of reformers. The question raised is not to be lightly laughed down or safely ignored. It will make itself heard and demand consideration. Neal Dow's recent statement, that ardent spirits were causing more distress in Maine than ever before, coupled with the admitted failure of prohibition in Kansas and Iowa, makes it imperative that the problem of drunkenness be re-examined."

I submit these statements and figures to the serious consideration of the members of this House, who, I have no doubt, are all interested in the promotion of the cause of temperance. My own opinion is, that the amendment which has been proposed, to permit the use of light wines and beer, is the best one—not only the best one, but the only one—for promoting the cause of temperance. When I was in Europe last year, not spending a very long time, but long enough to notice whether there was any drunkenness or not, when I travelled through France and Italy, I was greatly astonished that I did not find a single man under the influence of liquor, although light wines were distributed at all the railway stations, hotels and restaurants, and were taken by everyone—men, women, and children—the same as water in this country. From the statements which I have read and from the experience of the past, I believe that the system of permitting and encouraging the use of light wines and beer will be the best mode of promoting the cause of temperance. I must admit, however, that there is a great deal of force in the argument of the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby). Many people believe that this moderate mode, between the licensed tavern, where all sorts of liquors are to be found, and prohibition, is not the right one. I must admit that there is a great deal of force in my hon. friend's argument, when he says: Let the two plans be tried; let the people judge for themselves, in regard to this matter; and I hope that some hon. members who have paid more attention to this subject than I have, will, before this discussion is over, bring in an amendment to meet this difficulty, so that the people will have the option of trying the Scott Act with a prohibitory clause, or of trying the Scott Act with light wines and ale. Finally, if any measure of that kind is to be adopted, I hope the Government, in order to give more effect to it, will do something towards promoting the cause of temperance in the sense in which I understand it, and in the sense in which it is understood by so many. I hope that the Government will remove all duties upon light wines and beer, so as to make them a cheap drink, that will be accessible to the mass of the people of this country. My firm conviction is, that if you have prohibition as far as ardent spirits are concerned—prohibit strong drinks if you like; I have no objection to that, if we have cheap light wines and beer instead, with no duty—that would be not only the best mode, but the only mode of promoting the cause of temperance.

Mr. FAIRBANK. With the theory of those who honestly believe in the doctrine that it may be better to indicate, by legislation, to the community, what they should drink, rather than prohibit their drinking altogether, those who maintain that the moderate use of pure wines and light ales is not injurious, those who maintain that for certain communities that settle in this country—I refer more particularly to the Germans—an absolute prohibitory law is severe, with those who maintain, and honestly maintain those ideas, I certainly have no quarrel, and it is a matter of no importance to this House whatever as to what my individual opinions upon these points are. But, if any scheme of this kind was at any time seriously proposed for our consideration, it would be necessary, I think, for those who proposed it, to indicate somewhat clearly how those pure articles are to be obtained. We are well aware that the use of the compounds of almost everything, and that wine adulterated in almost every manner, is not carrying out the idea that those hon. gentlemen have. Representing, as I do, a county which has, by an overwhelming majority, adopted the Scott Act, I may be asked, as this amendment cannot affect my county, why I should occupy the time of the House. It is not clear that the amendment does not affect those constituencies which have adopted the Scott Act. I believe it is always a sound principle in military matters to guard well your frontier. If the counties which have adopted the Scott Act are to be surrounded by counties in which it is prohibited, the chance of success is very materially reduced. The amendment is not to allow any county which has not yet adopted the Scott Act to exclude these lighter drinks; and that is an undermining principle, with regard to those counties which have adopted the Scott Act already. It does not propose directly to cut down the Scott Act, but it proposes to girdle it so that it will naturally die. Again, the proposition would tend largely to prevent the adoption of the Scott Act with this amendment added. There are many, as you are well aware, zealous temperance men, who have no sympathy whatever with the movement in favor of light wine and ale. They believe, and honestly believe, that it is only the door to more intoxicating drinks, and that its tendency is not good. That class of men would not move in the direction of the Scott Act with this amendment. They would unite with those who are entirely opposed to the Scott Act; they would unite and conquer. The amendment, to my mind, simply means that this House shall assert that the Scott Act is wrong, and that it must be allowed to go no farther—in fact, that it is of the nature of an infection; that we must deal with it as we do with infected cattle, and segregate it. I do not believe this House is prepared to do that. The proposition, as it comes from the Senate, involves an amount of trifling with the people which I do not for a moment believe this House will entertain. To my mind the proposition is monstrous. Having granted seven years ago this local option to counties, many of them have taken hold of it vigorously, and have adopted it, and now the opponents of the Scott Act, finding that they could not successfully defeat it in an open fight—because great exertions have been made to defeat it, and great sums of money have been spent in the trial counties—finding that they cannot oppose it in a fair and legitimate way, they now attempt to undermine it by means of this amendment, which I think, is entirely opposed to the sense of fair play which should prevail in this House. I believe it is contrary to the sentiments of a majority of the men of this country, and of 95 per cent of the women of this country.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not desire to detain the House, but I must say that I am decidedly opposed to the amendment. It pro tanto endorses the amendment of the Senate, and I have no doubt the object of it is to render the Senate amendment a little more palatable to some members of the House. Now, Sir, I trust that all who are opposed to the Senate amendment, permitting beer and light wines to be sold in the Scott Act counties, will vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Small).

House divided on amendment of Mr. Small.

YEAS :

Messieurs

Abbott,	Dugas,	McDougall (C. Breton),
Bain (Soulanges),	Dupont,	Massue,
Baker (Victoria),	Ferguson (Welland),	Mitchell,
Beaty,	Gagné,	Moffat,
Benoit,	Gaudet,	Montplaisir,
Bergeron,	Girouard,	Paint,
Billy,	Gordon,	Patterson (Essex),
Blondeau,	Grandbois,	Pinsonneault,
Bryson,	Guay,	Pope,
Burnham,	Guilbault,	Pruyn,
Burns,	Hall,	Rinfret,
Cameron (Victoria),	Hesson,	Riopel,
Campbell (Victoria),	Homer,	Robertson (Hamilton),
Carling,	Hurteau,	Robertson (Hastings),
Caron,	Kilvert,	Ross,
Costigan,	Kranz,	Royal,
Coughlin,	Labrosse,	Rykert,
Coursol,	Landerkin,	Small,
Curran,	Langevin,	Stairs,
Outhbert,	Lesage,	Taschereau,
Daly,	Livingston,	Tassé,
Daoust,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Tupper,
Vessaluniers (Mask'ngé),	Mackintosh,	Vanasse,
Vessaluniers (St. M'rice),	McMillan (Vaudreuil),	Wallace (York),
Desjardins,	McCallum,	Wells,
Dodd,	McCarthy,	White (Cardwell).—78.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Allan,	Ferguson (Leeds & Gren)	McIntyre,
Allison,	Fisher,	McIsaac,
Armstrong,	Fleming,	McLellan,
Auger,	Forbes,	McMullen,
Bain (Wentworth),	Fortin,	McNeill,
Baker (Missisquoi),	Foster,	Mills,
Barnard,	Gault,	Mulock,
Bell,	Geoffrion,	Paterson (Brant),
Bernier,	Gigault,	Ray,
Blake,	Gilmor,	Scriver,
Bourassa,	Guillet,	Shakespeare,
Bowell,	Gunn,	Somerville (Brant),
Burpee,	Harley,	Somerville (Bruce),
Cameron (Huron),	Hickey,	Springer,
Cameron (Inverness),	Hilliard,	Sproule,
Cameron (Middlesex),	Holton,	Sutherland (Oxford),
Cartwright,	Innes,	Taylor,
Casey,	Irvine,	Temple,
Oasgrain,	Jamieson,	Trow,

Mr. FAIRBANK.

Catdral,
Charlton,
Cimon,
Cochrane,
Colby,
Davies,
Dickinson,
Dundas,
Fairbank,
Farrow,

Jenkins,
Kaulbach,
King,
Kinney,
Kirk,
Langelier,
Laurier,
Lister,
Macdonald (King's),
McCraney,

Yail,
Wallace (Albert),
Watson,
White (Hastings),
White (Renfrew),
Wilson,
Wood (Brookville),
Wood (Westmoreland),
Wright.—86.

Amendment negatived.

On the main motion,

Mr. FOSTER. Having been so unfortunate as not to be able to present my argument at a time when it might have been more appropriate, I seize the present opportunity to say a few words on this question. I took occasion, when up before to ask any hon. gentlemen who were in favor of this amendment and the principle it involved to give their reasons why this legislation should pass. In reply to that, several hon. gentlemen have spoken, amongst them my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Cameron), my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Curran), and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard); and these hon. gentlemen have certainly not been wanting in mental ability nor in experience in parliamentary debate to present the best side of the case that it was possible to present. I respectfully call the attention of the House to the arguments which have been presented by these hon. gentlemen, in order to induce the House to pass this legislation. And first I will deal for a moment with my hon. friend from Victoria. The first argument he gave why the wine and beer clause should be introduced into the Scott Act was this: that he had an opinion; he had expressed it before and he adhered to it yet, that this Act was unconstitutional, and I suppose the thought that the unconstitutionality of the Act would immediately disappear when the wine and beer clause was added to it. The second argument that he advanced in favor of the wine and beer clause was this: He said to the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), "if you do not vote for one of these, you will vote for the other, I suppose." His third argument was that the member for Lanark had either made a joke or had spoken in earnest, and if he had done the former of these two things it was an impertinence. He then proposed this statement: That hon. gentlemen of his way of thinking were just as able soberly to discuss this question as the hon. gentlemen of our way of thinking. Then he undertook what he called his sober argument, I suppose; he launched out into a description of the different kinds of intoxication. He declared there were at least three kinds—there might be four. One was the intoxication of spirituous liquors, and of that he said but little. Another was the intoxication of enthusiasm, which he blamed upon gentlemen who are opposed to his amendment. The third was the intoxication of prejudice and bigotry, which he tried to show belonged to those who advocated the Canada Temperance Act, and no others. The fourth was a kind of intoxication which he insinuated was indulged in by gentlemen who stood upon temperance platforms, although he disclaimed an intention of imputing it to any members in this House. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that those were the sole arguments which the hon. member for Victoria advanced as a reason why we should introduce this legislation and destroy the Canada Temperance Act that far. It is not because the hon. gentleman lacks ability; he is an able man. It is not because he is unaccustomed to debate; he is a lawyer of a great many years' standing, and therefore he cannot be accused of lack of skill in presenting his ideas. I cannot account for it in any way other than this: he had no case, and he beat about the bush for a little while, to allow him to retire under cover of the noise. I next come to speak of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). He proceeded to give his reasons why the wine and beer clause should be introduced.

But that hon. gentleman let the cat out of the bag entirely. He did not bring forward one single argument why wine and beer should be introduced, but he proceeded to make an anti-prohibitory speech from first to last, and that is just exactly what, in my opinion, this movement means. It is not simply that you may get a better proposition before the public, that you may get a better modus operandi in the counties and cities; it is to place something in the Canada Temperance Act which, if it had been inserted as the Senate put it, would have destroyed it in every county and city where it has been carried, and if the amendment were adopted it would have immediately stopped all agitation for the further adoption of the Act. These are arguments against prohibition entirely. Let us examine them for a moment. The hon. member went on to say that a temperance advocate united hatred and holiness. Very well. If that is his opinion, I am willing he should enjoy it. It is not, however, any argument why wine and beer should be placed in this Act. He said that temperance and prohibition are widely different. I grant that in part. I hold that every honest prohibitionist is a temperance man, and that a man may be a good temperance man, so far as it goes, although it does not go the length of temperance legislation, and still be opposed to prohibition. But that is not an argument why wine and beer should be put into the Act. He goes on, and gives reasons why this legislation should be made. What are they? The first reason is that Archbishop Lynch says prohibition is bad; that Principal Grant says prohibition is bad; that the professors of Trinity College, the professors of St. Michael's College, and thirty-seven physicians in Toronto, all say it is bad; and because of those incontrovertible reasons why the Scott Act is a bad measure, the wine and beer clause should be put into the Act. I give as much respect to Archbishop Lynch as to every other high dignitary, every other able man; but I decline to bow and give up my private opinion, the result of my observation and experience, to Archbishop Lynch or any other man in this Dominion. Archbishop Lynch has said that prohibition is not sound. I give him, with all due courtesy, the freedom and right to his opinion; I honor him for stating it; but that does not make me, one way or the other, in conjunction with that opinion. Archbishop Lynch says you cannot force moral virtue on an unwilling people. I believe that, and I stand on that statement with Archbishop Lynch and the member for Montreal. But when you protest or try to protest against the opening of a saloon opposite your own home, you are not trying to force virtue upon an unwilling people, but you are trying to take away an immoral vice from over against your own door; and there is a wide difference between the two. The hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) says that Principal Grant does not believe in the Scott Act. Principal Grant is a clever man, an experienced man, in several directions, a man for whom I have the highest respect; but he is only one man, and I do not care what he believes with respect to the Canada Temperance Act or the principles of prohibition; I propose to have my own opinions. I will take his opinions and weigh them, and give them all proper attention, but at the same time I will not sink my entity. Principal Grant is but one. One of what? One of an immense christian assembly in this Dominion, which has its great body of ministers and a great body of adherents, and that general body met in its representative capacity the other day in Montreal, and after it had gone over its temperance report it made this emphatic assertion:

"This Assembly records its emphatic protest against the recent action of the Senate of Canada in passing amendments to the Canada Temperance Act, calculated to destroy its usefulness; and that in the face of the popular will previously expressed in the manner provided by constitutional Government; and hereby expresses the earnest hope that the House of Commons will reject said amendments, and consent to no change of the Act, except in the direction of strengthening its prohibitory character and increasing the means of enforcing it."

The newspaper, which may be relied upon as regards its reports, was no doubt correct in making this statement:

"Rev. Mr. Macdonnell, of Toronto, and Rev. Robert Campbell, having spoken in favor of the amendment, a vote on Principal Grant's amendment was called for, and on its being put to the vote was lost by an overwhelming majority, amid loud applause. The recommendations of the committee were then carried en bloc, several members of the Assembly dissenting. The Assembly then adjourned at 11:30 o'clock."

There is the opinion of the Presbyterian Assembly of the Dominion of Canada, of which great, learned and earnest Christian body Principal Grant is one member, one honored member, but only one; and that great body, coming up with its wealth of experience and observation from every part of the Dominion, from counties which have had the Scott Act in operation for several years, that body with overwhelming force and earnestness gave an emphatic nay to Principal Grant's contention, and made its appeal to this House of Commons, which I believe must give it as much consideration as it would to Principal Grant's assertion or the opinion of Archbishop Lynch. Grant that the professors of Trinity College are opposed to the Act. I can bring you professors from other colleges who stand equally as high, who are in favor of prohibition. Grant that thirty-seven physicians of Toronto are against it. I can bring you thousands of physicians who are strongly against the use of alcohol, even in moderate quantities as a beverage, and who believe that the dram shops should be taken away by legislative enactment. The member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) gives another reason why the amendment should pass. He says the Scott Act means confiscation. The hon. gentleman wants beer and wine allowed and the breweries exempted from the Act. Why? Because of the confiscation of property. Are there no others who have property in like businesses. Why are the distillers, who have millions of capital invested, not to be excepted? Yet my hon. friend makes such a talk about the confiscation of the property of brewers. He is willing to sweep away the distilleries and give them no chance of obtaining any business in the country; yet he is opposed to the Scott Act because it implies confiscation. He believes all that would be cured if wine and beer were allowed to be sold. The hon. gentleman's fourth reason is that you cannot make men sober by Act of Parliament. Sir, I say that no prohibitory law proposes to do that, but if there is anything proved in the experience and observation of men now living in any country of the world, it is that facilities for drunkenness, and drunkenness itself go hand in hand, and it is quite possible for legislation to increase the one as it is possible for legislation to decrease the other. That is all that legislation proposes to do. He spoke of Father Matthew, the eminent apostle of temperance, and of that bright era in the history of Ireland when that great apostle of temperance drew, by his strong, magnetic qualities, and his earnest, eloquent powers of persuasion—drew the Irish people to him on their knees, and pinned on the breasts of millions of them, the medal with his name upon it, and which there are Irishmen who yet wear, and wear proudly as a memento of Father Matthew. But where is Ireland to-day? Where was Ireland then, within ten years after his magnetic influence was over? Ireland has not the same bright record for sobriety it had then. Father Matthew, before he died, placed on record his unalterable opinion that he believed in the principle of prohibition, and if he had that at the back of his great moral suasion, if the work of keeping the whiskey out of Ireland had gone hand in hand with the work of getting the people to give up using it, his great reform would have been better, more effective, more permanent. The hon. gentleman says: Leave the morals of the people to the clergy, and stop making laws. That proposition will carry him to the abrogation of nearly every law we have on the Statute Book. If it is right that we should not have a law on the Statute Book, prohibiting the liquor traffic, it is equally right that we should not have laws passed against the various vices which become crimes when they are carried out to the detriment of society. I give the clergy the highest place; I honor them for their work and for their office, but I say the morals of the country are not to be left to the clergy alone; I say that in the homes of the country, is the strongest and best moral teaching that the future citizenship of any country can get; where the home influence is sweetened and purified, where the father and mother reflect their virtues on their children, and instil into the young hearts principles which will never leave them. But I say that these homes, too many of them in this country, have over against them the dram shop, which takes away the purity and sweetness of home, which reduces its educative influence to a minimum for good; nay, makes it, in hundreds and thousands of cases, an educative influence for worse instead of better. Next we had the hon. gentleman for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), who gave us a most astounding argument in favor of beer and wine being introduced into this country. He read from the Cincinnati Inquirer an extract from the London Times, which stated that the Swiss Government had formed a Commission. And what did it form a Commission for? To inquire into drunkenness, into drinking, and the drinking system of Switzerland and what made it do that? Because the evils of drink were becoming intolerable, because there was a great increase in the consumption of liquors, strong as well as light, and particularly in absinthe, strongest and most dangerous of all, and this was going on so rapidly that a Government Commission was appointed. He read to us that wine was decreasing as to its consumption and import, that spirits had increased, and that cider has suffered a still further diminution than wine. What does this prove but that in the native home of light wines, where light wines are produced in the country, spirits and strong drinks have invaded the country and are driving wine and the lighter drinks out, and are increasing in greater proportions. But if in that country, where wines are native to it, a country which has been the home of the vine for centuries, strong drinks and spirits can come in and drive them out in an increasing ratio, how can we expect to engraft in a country, where spirits have had a dominant influence for years, facilities for light wines and beer which will cause them to overcome these rougher drinks? If that is an argument that we should undertake here legislation which has failed in Switzerland, I fail to see the point of it. He then read an extract from some paper—I do not know what paper it was—a wonderful argument in favor of his proposition. The brewers held a convention in New York; the men who make the beer which they wish to force upon the people willy-nilly, in sixty or seventy counties and cities of this country; the brewers who make the beer and who know what it is, who have their living from it, who crack up its good qualities—and when they met in convention, what did they drink? Their own beer? No, Sir, not their beer but sparkling water, the cup which cheers and does not inebriate. They knew too well the quality of their own beer, and they drank water, and that forsooth is a reason why we should have a wine and beer clause introduced into this Act. I like to see physicians willing to take a dose of their own medicine. But I think the fact that the brewers, at their New York convention, instead of drinking beer, drank water, is an argument, not that we should have less prohibition in this country, but that we should have more. They had a temperance oration there, after the style of Gough—almost, not quite; and the difference between the “almost” and the “not quite” was in this: that while Gough does not crack up the splendors and beauties of wine and beer, this orator was here for the purpose of cracking up the wares of a convention which would not drink its own product. Now, my hon. friend wishes at last that the duties should be taken off wine and beer. This is entering the wedge. To-day emasculate the Canada Temperance Act and force on those counties beer and light wine, and then take off the duties on beer and wine, and its friends will be perfectly satisfied until something else is wanted. I say the proposition sent us by the Senate is a proposition which is so tyrannical in its nature, which is so opposed to the principles of free representative government, which is such a relic of that Toryism which I had supposed was long since buried in the grave, never to arise again—it is the manifestation of such a spirit as the people of this country will not submit to for a long time, whether this House of Commons—as I do not believe it will—carries out the proposition of the Senate or not. Sir, I have but a few words to add, and they are these: I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the difference in legislation by the men who advocated prohibition and these men who are advocating the insertion of the wine and beer clause. The men who ask for prohibition sustained the agitation for ten or twelve years, until the Canada Temperance Act was obtained. They did not come in by any side window. They agitated it before the country; from every pulpit almost, from every platform, they put forth their views; they leavened the public sentiment; they brought petitions before this Parliament; they asked for an investigation. They said to this Parliament: If you do not believe us, investigate the workings of prohibition and we will abide by the result. This Parliament investigated it; they appointed their own commission; that commission reported; and upon the recommendation of this commission the Senate passed a prohibitory resolution, and this House also passed a similar resolution in Committee of the Whole. That was the mode of procedure that the friends of prohibition took to obtain what they have now in the Canada Temperance Act. Contrast that with what has been done in this case. A proposition that has never touched the heart of the country, that has never been discussed on the platforms of the country, is, in the dying days of the Session, in a hidden way, sprung upon the other branch of the Legislature, put through it, and brought down to this House; and when it is brought down here there is not a gentleman who will get up and give a fair and square reason why this beer and wine provision should be introduced into the Act. I give a challenge to gentlemen of that way of thinking, that they cannot prove that it is the genius of beer and wine to drive out drunkenness or the use of stronger liquor. In Switzerland, in France, in Germany, in England—in all those countries, for the last twenty-five years, there has been an increasing ratio in the consumption of spirits, although these are the native countries of wine and beer. My hon. friend says he has travelled through Italy and other countries in Europe, and did not see a drunken man, and he therefore inferred that there was no drunkenness. I remember a few years ago George Jacob Holyoake passed through Canada and the United States, and at a farewell dinner given to him in New York, when congratulating the gentlemen who had assembled to do him honor on the country and its characteristics, he said that he had travelled through the United States, from one end to the other, and had not met a drunken man, and he therefore thought there was no drunkenness in the country. It is possible in well regulated countries for the casual traveller, who goes from the railroad to his hotel, and upon the public streets, to pass through and see little evidences of their hidden and secret vices; but it is a fact that there is drunkenness in all these countries, that it is on the increase, with the evil results that are becoming more and more apparent, and that strong drinks in the very homes of wine and beer are driving out the consumption of these, and are themselves increasing in consumption. Suppose this amendment is made to the Canada Temperance Act, I want to ask hon. members of this House four or five questions. Will there be any restraining hand upon these beer and wine shops in the counties where the Canada Temperance Act is in force? Here are the statutes of Ontario, and they expressly declare that no licenses for the retailing of alcoholic liquors of any kind shall be granted by the Provincial Government of Ontario, in any of the counties where the Scott Act has passed; that Assembly has adjourned and will not meet for another year; therefore, you pass this amendment, and in every one of the counties of Ontario where the Scott Act is in force there will be the free use and the free sale of wine and beer. This Parliament has not power to regulate that sale, and there can be no licenses issued for its sale. When this difficulty was brought to the mind of the Minister of Justice of the Government, in another place, the only way he could get around it was by promising that if that was correct he would bring in a Bill to provide for that contingency. Further, I want to ask who will see that only 12 per cent. of alcohol is in the wine and beer that is sold? Are you going to have an analyst at the door of every beer and wine shop, at every hour of the day that the sale is going on? Is there any machinery in this country by which, when you open your beer shop, you can make it even approximately certain, or have the least idea of certainty, what percentage of alcohol there is in the wine and beer sold in that shop? Is there any one who will see that they are pure? There is no person who will do it. Is there any one who will see that spirits are not sold? If you open up these places you will do what was done in England years ago, when the experiment was thoroughly tried of removing the intoxication of the people of Great Britain by giving them beer shops, and two-guinea licenses were issued—when honest and good men, in the belief that it would do away with drunkenness, introduced that measure and carried it through, and a few years afterwards publicly recanted their opinion, and a commission of the House declared, that it had been a failure in reference to the object aimed at, in its being placed on the Statute Book. Sir, I have to put one or two other considerations. One of them has been alluded to by my hon. friend from Stanstead in the manly and able speech he made here to-night; it is this: Last year, by a majority of 122 to 40, what did this House of Commons say? It said that whenever the people show that they are ready for prohibition we will grant them a prohibitory law. Did we mean that, or were we simply pulling the wool over the eyes of the people of Canada? We meant it, certainly; we cannot take any other position; we do not wish to take any other position; and now we are asked to go back on that declaration. When the people show by their majorities in favor of the Canada Temperance Act, that they want prohibition, shall we go back on that profession, tear it to shreds and say to the people: Even when you have declared that you want prohibition, we shall step in and say: Whether you want it or not, we will not let you have prohibition? Hon. members have talked of petitions. They have brought in petitions in favor of this wine and beer clause, the genuineness of which I am not going to impugn for a single moment; I take it that they are genuine and have been fairly obtained; but we have brought into this House equally good petitions, as fairly and genuinely obtained, having nearly twice as many signatures as those petitions brought in by the other side. We have had petitions from the Niagara Conference of the Methodist Church, representing 23,000 members; from the West End Christian Temperance Society of Toronto, numbering 500 members; from the Yarmouth Temperance Convention, numbering 300 members; from the Grand Division Sons of Temperance of Nova Scotia, representing 17,000 members; from the Manitoba Branch of the Dominion Alliance, and from the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa of the Presbyterian Church—2 petitions, representing 41,800 members; we have had every Methodist Conference that has assembled within the month of June; we have the great Presbyterian Assembly, which is now in session in Montreal; and we have the Church Diocesan Synod of Montreal, making declarations in the same way. These things ought to appeal to us; they ought to say to us: Preserve the compact you have entered into with us; give us the chance of expressing our opinion on this matter; and if there be any gentlemen present who wishes to give the counties of this country a chance to try an Act which will prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors of a distilled kind, I see no objection to their doing that; but I ask them to put it in a separate Act, and give the people an opportunity to have their choice of prohibition, as the Scott Act would give it to them, or as the beer Act would give it to them. For prohibitory legislation is, in Canada, an experiment; and we can only find out whether it is good or not by results, and we can only get a fair average of results when we give an Act which is good in its provisions, and has machinery for its own enforcement.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). My hon. friend who has just sat down has at last delivered himself of that oration in which he was cut short at an earlier period of the evening, and cut short by his own free will, because he chose to take his seat after saying a few words. It is an oration I have no doubt he has often delivered before. There is a ring about the manner in which it has been delivered that sounds amazingly like a platform utterance or a set speech. In fact, his political opponents and mine have accused him of being what I may call a professional temperance orator, speaking for pay, and I should judge, from the fluency with which he has addressed the House, that he is well accustomed, at any rate, to deliver orations of that kind. He, however, in reference to my observations this evening, has with more ingenuity than candor misstated what I have said completely, and misrepresented the point of view from which I addressed the House. I did not profess to enter for one moment into the discussion of the general scope of the Senate's amendment. What was before the House, when I spoke, as my hon. friend well knows, was simply the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small), and I merely pointed out to the House that the object of it was to prevent that amendment being retroactive, and simply to give it operation in the future, and I added some observations of a personal character, in reply to observations which I hold were uncalled for on the part of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson). I did not profess to enter into a general discussion of the subject, of the merits or the demerits of the Senate amendment; but because I did not do so, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) has perverted my position, by saying I did not because I had no other arguments than those I advanced to bring forward. I brought forward no arguments on the subject; I did not profess to go into a general discussion of the subject at all, and I do not profess to do so now, because I think it is unnecessary and useless. I rise only for the purpose of moving an amendment which will have the effect of removing some of the objections which he has pointed out, and one or two of the objections which are referred to in the reasons the hon. member for Lanark gave by his motion for the rejection of this amendment. The hon. member for King's says we want to thrust upon those counties in which the people have expressed their will in favor of the Scott Act this amendment, whether they like it or not; and that is given as one of the objections to the Senate amendment. I do not think it is proper that in those counties which have voted upon the Scott Act, as it stood, the provisions of the Act should be altered in such material respect, without an opportunity being given the people of expressing their opinion as to whether that alteration should take place or not; and I propose to move that in all the counties in which the Scott Act has been adopted the vote of the people may be taken to decide whether the amendment of the Senate shall apply to those counties or not. I believe some hon. gentleman has it in contemplation to move a still larger amendment, an amendment to provide that also in counties in which it may hereafter be voted upon, the same question may be put to the electors. But in the meantime, the amendment I propose is intended to remove the objection that we are altering the Scott Act in respect to counties in which that Act has been adopted. I beg to move:

That all the words after "that" be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof: "Provided, always, that in all counties or cities in which the Canada Temperance Act, 1878, may have been heretofore adopted, and after the same has been in operation for one year, the question shall be submitted to a vote of the duly qualified electors, under a proclamation to be issued by the Governor in Council, whether this amendment to the said Act shall apply and be in force in any such county or city, and the vote upon the said question shall be taken in the manner by the said Act provided; and the form of ballot in such voting shall be according to schedule A to this Act, and all the provisions of the said Act, as to the proceedings in reference to voting thereunder, the qualification of voters, the powers to be exercised and the offences that may be committed, and the penalties that may be incurred in the course of, and in connection with, such proceedings, shall apply to a voting under this Act; and if a majority of the electors voting on the said question, to be ascertained as provided by the said Act, shall be in favor of applying and bringing the said amendment into force in said county or city, the same shall be in force therein from and after the passing of an Order in Council published in the Canada Gazette declaring the same.

That amendment will cure some of the objections, at any rate, which my hon. friends have urged. As I said, I do not purpose on this special amendment to go into a general discussion of the question as to whether the Senate amendment is a proper one. Much might be said about that question. I believe I could, with advantage, if it were necessary or proper to go into the subject at much length, occupy a very considerable portion of the time of the House in answering my hon. friend, but I do not think it desirable or necessary to do so. The subject has been discussed over and over again elsewhere ad nauseam, and I have no wish to make a speech for sensation sake, or for the purpose of making a speech. I have no desire to ingratiate myself with any class of the community or to say one word more than my duty as a legislator requires me to say. All I can say is, that ample and many arguments can be advanced in favor of the Senate amendment. Personally, I have always taken the position that the Scott Act is not an Act that ought to be passed at all; and, personally, I would vote in favor of the Senate amendment as being a modification of what I consider to be an improper Act, an Act which, if I could not cause it to be repealed in toto, I would wish to see repealed in part. It is idle to attempt to say for a moment there are no reasons why ale and light wines should not be prohibited when the use of spirituous liquors is prohibited. No doubt the evils of intemperance arise almost wholly from the use of spirituous liquors, and by allowing the use of beer and light wines you tend to diminish those evils and mitigate the intemperance that exists in the country, although it is undoubted that there is much less intemperance than there was some years ago. And the decrease is not, in my opinion, attributable to the introduction of the Scott Act, or the efforts made in that direction, but to the improved state of feeling in the country, the improved morals of the people, so that it is now considered a disgrace to indulge in liquor to excess, and to be seen in a state of drunkenness, while years ago that general feeling did not exist and public opinion was not as it is now on that point. There are other reasons for the improvement of public morals, as regards the temperance question. No doubt much of it is due to the application of the License Act, which has been in force some years. The more we improve that Act the more effectually will we restrain, in a proper, constitutional way, the excessive use of spirituous liquor. As to this particular amendment, I touch briefly in that way on the reasons in its favor. There is one other reason in favor of that amendment and that is this: It is the ruinous and, in my opinion, most improper sacrifice of property and injury to the interests of a large class of the community, people who have invested money on the faith of existing legislation, which the introduction of the Scott Act has worked. My hon. friend reproaches my hon. friend from Montreal for advocating this amendment and leaving the distillers out in the cold. We need not discuss the case of the distillers now, because it is not before the House, but can it be doubted that the men who have invested large sums of money in the brewing business, which, at the time, was a legitimate and proper investment, and whose property is rendered valueless by this legislation, in fact, is confiscated, have a grievance, and that that is a reason why this ought not to be passed? I believe that every member in this House knows many honest and upright men in his own constituency whose property is sacrificed and who will be ruined by the introduction of the Scott Act into their counties, and yet these extremists say that this is honest and proper legislation, and that these men are not entitled to any compensation. At this late hour, however, I only touch upon these questions. It is useless now to go into them. It is not pertinent to the particular amendment I have moved. I only say that my hon. friend and those who think with him must not suppose that their utterances are the expressions of the will of the people. Because they have succeeded in a certain number of counties in carrying the Scott Act that is no proof that they are expressing the will of the people or of the majority of the people. I defy them to point to a single county in the length and breadth of the Dominion of Canada in which the Scott Act has been carried by a majority of the people entitled to vote.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

Mr. CHARLTON. Middlesex went by 3,000 to-day. That is an absolute majority of all the votes.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not know the circumstances of that county, or when the vote was taken.

Mr. CHARLTON. To-day.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Well, that is news to me, and very probably, if the circumstances were investigated, a perfectly satisfactory explanation could be given. I admit that the opponents of the Act have been apathetic; they have not exerted themselves to oppose it as strongly as they should. However, in reference to that county, and any other county in which it has been carried, my amendment would only place them in a proper position, and would prevent any alteration of the Act, making the law different to what it was when they voted, and only coming into force after they had an opportunity of voting upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. Just for the information of my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), who seems to know less about the affairs of the day than he does about the state of my private accounts and my private diary, I will read the following telegram:—

"Middlesex majority 3,753. More places to hear from. Regard this as an emphatic protest against Senate alterations to Scott Act."

Mr. IRVINE. I do not intend to speak more than five minutes, and I hope I shall have the same toleration as others. After the member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) had spoken, I felt that he ought to have been answered, but as the House desired to take a vote at once, I did not attempt to answer him. Since that, the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster) has given a better answer than I could; but there is one aspect of the case which I wish to look at for a moment. There was one sentiment the member for Montreal uttered in reference to the good qualities of our people, their religious and temperance sentiments, which I endorse, and I have always great pleasure in listening to any hon. gentleman who speaks well of this country. I am pained sometimes to hear one hon. gentleman accuse another, or one portion of this Dominion accuse another portion, of being unpatriotic or disloyal. I am, I think, a loyal man, I may say an Irish Canadian, proud of the land of my adoption. I never like to hear anybody run down our institutions and our people, and when I hear hon. gentlemen speaking of the greatness of our territory, the length of our rivers, the miles of railway we have constructed, and even the height of our mountains, I feel proud; and when I hear statements in reference to the temperance and religious sentiments of our people I feel still more proud. When I hear people speak of our educational institutions and our schools of learning and our institutions of trade, I feel rather proud; but there are other institutions which we do not feel so proud of. We have the gaols and the lunatic asylums and the penitentiaries, and they are filled with inmates, and if we enquire as to the prolific source which supplies those inmates, we find one fruitful source whereby those places are supplied with inmates; and when we think it our duty to stop the supply, we wish the same right to judge for ourselves that we accord to others. We only ask for a spirit of fair play, a spirit of tolerance. We do not wish to enforce our views upon others, nor do we wish others to enforce their views upon us. I say that a very large proportion of the people of this country, and they are not the worst people of the country either, believe that the most prolific source of crime, of poverty and of degradation, is the drinking and gambling saloons in our country—is the liquor traffic, in one word. These people have spent their money to build educational institutions, they have spent their money to send missionaries to teach people better, to teach people habits of temperance. They have been led by the clergymen of this country, by the praying fathers and the praying mothers, to persuade men and women to be better, and they believe that the only means that yet remains to be tried is to close up the rum saloon. They believe that when they cannot persuade the rum seller to close his saloon, the strong arm of the law should come to their assistance, and compel him to close it. A few years ago there were laid upon the Table of this House petitions from half a million of the Canadian people, praying that Parliament would step in and close up the liquor traffic. In addition to these petitions we had the Provincial Legislature of Ontario, and also the Provincial Government of New Brunswick, petitioning Parliament to legislate against the liquor traffic, and in answer to these petitions this Parliament gave the country what is known as the Scott Act. And I am very much mistaken—and if I am mistaken, the hon. gentleman will set me right; but I believe the First Minister boasted that he supported that Act, although he was then sitting in the cold shades of Opposition. That Act was passed in the Upper Chamber, composed of a majority of Conservatives, and when it came down to this House and became law, the right hon. gentleman boasted that he voted for it. On more than one occasion since, when it was found that the law was inoperative in some respects, the right hon. gentleman declared to those who approached him on the subject that it was the duty of Parliament and the duty of the Government to make the law workable. If I am not mistaken, he promised the same thing this year. But to his shame and his discredit—humble a man as I am, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that it is a discredit to the people of this country that that hon. gentleman should stand up in the House this year and vote against a proposition to give precedence to the consideration of a Bill amending the Canada Temperance Act. He has voted against it to-night again. I ask him what reason he has to believe that the people of this country, by any act of theirs, have changed their minds upon that point? On every occasion when the people of this country have been appealed to, have they not declared in favor of the Act? Has the hon. gentleman any reason to give for assisting the passage of these Senate amendments, which virtually destroy the Act? For with this amendment the Scott Act is valueless. The spirit and the principle of the Act are destroyed, and the right hon. gentleman has led his hosts in the attempt to destroy it. But there is more than that. I have always taken a great pride in thinking that Parliament placed that law upon the Statute Book. It was a great credit to the people and the Parliament of that day. When the Finance Minister was in England, a few years ago, and addressing a temperance meeting, he referred to the Canada Temperance Act as an Act of which the Canadian people ought to be proud. Well, Sir, who placed that Act upon the Statute Book of which the Canadian people ought to be proud?

Mr. SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to keep to the amendment?

Mr. IRVINE. I regret very much if I am out of order. But I say, Sir, that I feel proud when I reflect that the hon. gentleman who led the Government of that day, who is now bowed down with years, and perhaps with sorrow, at the treatment inflicted upon him by a base and ungrateful people—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. IRVINE. I am confining myself to the amendment; I am confining myself to the law of the land.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order unless he confines himself to the amendment before the House. The question is on the amendment made by the Senate respecting beer and light wines, and the amendment thereto of the hon. member for Victoria. It is not the general Act at all; it is not the general principle of the Act that is under discussion.

Mr. IRVINE. Very well; I will abide by your decision. I have less ground to work upon, of course, Sir.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Very coarse.

Mr. IRVINE. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is very coarse, I can say the same of the assemblage. The assemblage is certainly coarse enough. Well, Sir, I cannot say that I care very much upon this point as to whether beer and light wines are to be excepted or not from the Canada Temperance Act, and for this reason, that we have practically destroyed the law already by the amendment we have passed to-night. There will be no scarcity of alcohol in beer and light wines. It will not make much difference now whether we tack on beer and light wines or not. It will not make the Act any worse than it is now that the druggists and physicians of this country have liberty to sell; this amendment will not make much difference. So far as I am personally concerned, I care but very little whether it passes this House or not. Then, Sir, there is another thing that I want to say—and I may as well be hung for stealing a sheep as for stealing a lamb—I do not think it is a very edifying spectacle to see a Government in the place of the old Government, with seven members of it voting to destroy the law. I do not think that it is to the credit of the people of this country that a bar should be in this House without a license.

Amendment (Mr. Cameron, Victoria) negatived

Motion (Mr. Jamieson) agreed to.

Mr. JAMIESON moved that the said amendment be disagreed to for the following reason:—

Because the House has reinstated the clause providing schedules.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12:55, Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 19th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that when this House adjourns this day it stand adjourned until Saturday at 1:30 p. m., and that Government measures shall take precedence next after routine.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that on the 11th June certain papers which had been very long promised were presented, with reference to North-West affairs. Most of those papers had been prepared on the 21st of April, and although the copying was said to be an obstacle, they were all re-copied in the space of 24 hours after they got into the possession of the copyists of the House. I enquired the following day, or within two days, as to whether these completed the information on the subject which the Government proposed to lay before the House this Session; and the First Minister said no, there were other papers to be presented, and there were also other papers coming down from the North-West, that would be presented from day to day. We are now arrived at the 19th June, and no further papers have been presented. It is quite obvious that all the papers of events which have occurred prior to the rising ought long before this to have been presented; as to the papers that are coming down from the North-West from day to day—of course, I do not complain of the non-presentation of papers which have not yet reached the Government; but certainly all the papers prior to March and April ought, long before now, to have been presented. I therefore press very earnestly on the hon. gentlemen opposite, they having declared they would present the papers in time for us to exercise our judgment on this subject this Session, it being now far advanced, that they ought no longer to delay in bringing those papers down. I may say that the papers which are brought down contain in themselves the evidence—and I have also been furnished with similar evidence from other quarters—that very great gaps exist, and that the most important papers have not been presented. While I am on my feet I may call the attention of the Government, formally, to the fact that the 30th June is approaching, and the condition of Supply is of such a character as it seems to me will lead to great public inconvenience unless the ancient and customary rule of Parliament, which has been departed from already in a most extraordinary manner this Session, of going frequently into Supply, be at once resumed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to remind the First Minister that some weeks ago certain returns with regard to timber licenses were promised, and the only return which has yet been brought down is a return of the applications.

Mr. IRVINE.

The returns of the licenses granted, which have been asked for, have not yet been brought down, although they might have been laid on the Table before this time.

VENTILATION OF THE HOUSE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to invite the attention of the Minister of Public Works, as I suppose he has more to do with it than anybody else, to the fact that frequently, within the last few days, the condition of the atmosphere of this House has been very unwholesome for all of us, and especially for himself, who is so much in his place here. Of course, I know it is very difficult, in a building so constructed as this, which is practically nothing better than a well, to ensure ventilation, but it has been exceedingly defective within the last few days, and it seems to me that we might contrive some means of getting ventilation better than that afforded through the half dozen panes in our windows, which are all that can be opened. I think it would be highly desirable if at least the superior windows in this House were made so that they could be opened. I may say that from my own recollection of the Session of 1866—which was the only Session we ever spent here in hot months—serious results to the health of many members, and especially those who are most attentive in their attendance here, will result, if the condition of the atmosphere cannot be improved.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. member for South Huron, I may say that I agree with him that the atmosphere is not always very good in this House, especially during this hot weather. I am sorry I have nothing to do with the atmosphere. The heat must be borne, no doubt, though we are doing all we can to bring fresh air into the building. If it is to be customary for Parliament to sit five or six, or seven months of the year, of course we will have to improve the ventilation of the building, not only in winter but in summer. I have called the attention of the chief architect to the state of the atmosphere here, to see whether we could not, by these windows opposite me, obtain an additional supply of fresh air, and I think he will be able to report to-morrow how the case stands.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would suggest that an opening or two in the ceiling would enable the foul air to escape that rises to the top, and would undoubtedly very much improve the ventilation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would allow the gas to escape.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Pope, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and the motion of Mr. Cameron (Huron) in amendment thereto.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I am conscious that it is almost an act of presumption on my part or on the part of any member of the Opposition to continue the discussion of this question after the speech made by the leader of the Opposition, which was as able, exhaustive, indictment of the Government as to its policy, which was comprehensive and conclusive, and which leaves very little to be said, and whoever follows that hon. gentleman must necessarily speak under most unfavorable circumstances. The utmost I may hope to be able to do, in the brief time I shall detain the House, will be possibly to present a few facts that may have escaped the attention of the hon. gentleman, and present, from a different standpoint and possibly in a different light, some o the facts he has presented, and reiterate, as it is necessary to do, some of the more important statements presented by that hon. gentleman to this House.

I shall first review or attempt to review a few of the statements made by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate. The Acting Minister of Railways, in introducing this resolution, sought to create a favorable impression by making a comparison between the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the various American Pacific Railways. But such a comparison is not a fair one, because the cost of the American Pacific lines is the nominal cost, is not the actual cost, and a large amount of fictitious capital is represented in the capital account of those railways. We have first the Union Pacific; and anyone acquainted with the history of the construction of that railway must be aware of the fact that the nominal cost is a very large sum in excess of the actual cost of the road. Those of us who are familiar with the operations of the Credit Mobilier, the company that was the construction company; that made a contract with itself as the railway company, and took from the pockets of itself, the railway company, vast sums of money, and put it in its own pocket, as the construction company; the company which paid dividends on its stock, in some instances it is reported at the rate of 40 per cent. per month; the company by which the cost of the road was increased to three times the amount of the actual cost—I say it is unfair to institute a comparison between a road such as the Union Pacific, constructed under those circumstances, and the capital account of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The cost of constructing railways at that time was necessarily greater than at the present time. This road, the Union Pacific, was constructed while the finances of the United States were in an inflated condition; currency was inflated and everything had a nominal price much above its value in gold. We have also the Central Pacific, another portion of the trunk line, built by a company which, by its manipulations of the affairs it has had in charge, has placed itself in a position where to-day, starting with an actual paid up capital of $12,500 that company has an inventory of clear profit of $187,000,000, this immense sum of money having been made by manipulations such as are best known to railway men, and representing as the portion of invested capital, the watered stock of the company. Then, with respect to the statement made by the hon. gentlemen, that the subsidy and land grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway were smaller than were given to those American roads, I have to state that such is incorrect. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with its subsidy of 25,000,000 of acres of selected land within the fertile belt, and not extending to the ends of the railway and taking in mountain and desert, with its land grant amounting to about 12,500 acres per mile of selected lands, has a better, larger, more favorable land subsidy than any of the American Pacific Railways, with the possible exception of the Northern Pacific. The land grant is much more favorable than that of the Union Pacific, or the Central Pacific, or the Southern Pacific, and probably better than the land grant of the Northern Pacific, which includes the sage plains of Montana and districts of the Rocky Mountains, and comparatively barren land extending along probably one half of the road. With respect to the subsidy in cash: No American railway received any bonus in cash. The United States Government did subsidise the Union Pacific and Central Pacific, in order to aid in the construction of these roads at the time that the United States was in dire extremity, and required, as the price of the retention of the Pacific States, railway communication with those States—I say that, under these circumstances, the United States Government loaned to this railway a certain amount of money per mile, and for that loan the Government took a first mortgage. Afterwards, the necessities of these railways led the Government to substitute a second for a first mortgage, but it still retained its security on these roads, and to-day they are actually redeeming that debt, paying the interest and paying instalments on the principle. The security of a second mortgage is ample for the Government, and the result is, therefore, that it was not a bonus but a loan, which will be repaid. So that the comparison in this respect between these roads and our own does not hold good, because in our case it is a gift and in theirs it is a loan. Sir, speaking of the American railway system in this connection, and instituting comparisons between the costs of those roads and the cost of any road honestly built will be misleading, in the case of almost any railway corporation in the United States. I believe there is but one of the great seaboard trunk lines of the United States which has an honestly-built railway, which is honestly managed, and whose statement of affairs represents truthfully the actual condition of the road. I refer to the Baltimore and Ohio, which, with its trunk line and extensions, has 1,646 miles of road, with a capital stock of $14,792,000—a capital stock which has not been increased since the organisation of the road, a capital stock which was paid up at 100 cents on the dollar, a road which, under the management of Mr. Garrett and his successors, has been extended until it had paid, in 1883, net dividends to the amount of $8,705,000, and had a rest or surplus account amounting to $45,763,000; a road which has gone on paying 10 per cent. dividends on stocks, and using its surplus revenues to increase its business and extend its road—a road whose stock never has been on the market, which could not be bought to-day for 400 cents on dollar—that is a road well and honestly managed, and one which defies competition with the trunk lines, because it has no watered stock on which to pay dividends. I believe that, with that one exception, none of the great railway corporations I have indicated is in a position to institute a fair comparison between its capital stock and that of any honestly-constructed road.

So much for the comparisons of the Acting Minister of Railways. Next, we had an eloquent essay from the Secretary of State, and I am most happy to return the compliment which he was good enough to bestow on me, on the occasion when he congratulated me on having given an essay to this House on the subject of Sabbath observance. His essay was an elegant production, and I would not venture to compare mine with his. It smelt of midnight oil and ink, and nothing more elegant or polished has been delivered in this House, for its language was choice, and every period was properly turned. The only objection I had to it was that he saw fit to introduce in it a vast amount of irrelevant matter, information which might be valuable enough in its place, but information which had no practical connection, that I could see, with the question under discussion. I was much pleased with one feature of that essay. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to take us into—what shall I call it—an imagination hall. He was kind enough to invite us to go in the spirit to the contemplation of the scenes of other days. He brought us back to the early history of Canada, and he pictured the condition of things when the Chevalier de la Salle, with the iron determination which characterised him, was pushing his journeys into the interior wildernesses of this continent. He spoke of the times which were made memorable by the deeds of such men as Frontenac, Champlain and Montcalm —

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not speak of them.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not say you did; I said you brought us back into the period made memorable by the achievements of these men, and I could almost hear, in imagination, the roar of the rapids of Lachine awakening the echoes of the wilderness. I could almost imagine that I was there, and saw these tribes of savages, the Ottawas, the Algonquins, the Chippewas and the Hurons, with their loads of fur, assembled at Montreal from the depths of the northwestern wilderness; and I was only recalled from the imaginative scene which, with his power of word-painting, he pictured so vividly, by the cry of "All aboard for Winnipeg, Fort Moody, Yokohama, and Shanghai;" and I could almost imagine I saw the hon. gentleman with a gold band around his cap and a lantern on his arm about to start his train for the west. The hon. gentleman came down from the region of fancy, and one of the first things that he professed to be unable to understand—for evidently there are some things in nature, as well as in politics, which he does not understand—was why the Liberals were unwilling to build the section of the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior, and why they were shut up to a scheme which would cut them off in winter from access to the North-West. Well, Sir, that question has often been debated, and I do not think it is worth devoting much time to it to-day; but perhaps it might be as well to explain to the hon. gentleman, from a Liberal standpoint, why the Liberals were in favor, as a temporary measure, of building a road to Sault Ste. Marie, to connect with an American line south of Lake Superior, and there to connect with lines in the North-West at the boundary. The Liberals thought that by saving the expense of some $20,000,000 and securing, practically, the same results that would follow from the construction of a line north of Lake Superior, temporarily, that it would be wise to adopt this course; they believed that, as a temporary measure, the construction of a line to Sault Ste. Marie, connecting with an American line, running to the boundary between Minnesota and Manitoba, would answer practically all the purposes of a line to the north of Lake Superior; and, foreseeing the strain upon the finances of the country, which we are now feeling so severely—foreseeing that we were about to plunge ourselves into financial difficulties, by proceeding with this mad scheme of building a line north of Lake Superior, they thought it was worth while to save the expenditure of $20,000,000 if they could reach the same practical results that would be secured by the expenditure of that money. Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman descanted on the advantages of branch lines. He informed us that all the American Pacific lines had branch roads striking out in various directions, developing the country, serving as feeders to the trunk lines, bringing a vast amount of business to them, and the hon. gentleman was kind enough to inform us—and I am glad he did so, because it rests on his authority—of the small percentage of the through business that these American lines possessed. He informed us that the Atchison, Topoka and Santa Fe and its connections, does a through business amounting to only 6 per cent. of its gross business, and that the through business of other lines was very small. That argument is one we have often presented against pushing the road through vast stretches of wilderness for the purpose of securing a through trade, which he says amounts to a mere bagatelle, in the case of these American roads. Well, Sir, these roads all have branches, and it is a wise policy for roads of this kind to have branch lines. The Canadian Pacific Railway, so far as the portion in the prairie section is concerned, needs numerous branch lines, leading off in various directions, but I would ask the hon. gentleman how much money has that company expended for the construction of branches in the North-West. Of the sum of $40,000,000 diverted from the original purposes of building the main line from Callander to the Pacific, how much has been used in the construction of branches in the North-West. Only enough, Sir, enough to build 134 miles, at an expense of some $2,000,000, out of a total of $40,000,000 and more, which were diverted by that company from the purpose for which it was organised. The hon. Secretary of State, in the course of his speech, informed us that he had fallen in with one of the American railway potentates, in a journey to California—no doubt a kindred spirit; and in conversation with that railway potentate he was informed that in the war for the control of transcontinental trade, the victory would belong to the company that could protect its local traffic from intrusion. Well, Sir, that is sound. It is a very great thing for a railway company to be able to control its local business and protect it from intrusion; and in that respect I am ready to admit that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company does occupy a vantage ground, for, by virtue of its monopoly clause, it is able to protect its local business from intrusion in the North-West. But why is it necessary that a railway company should have control of its local business in order to compete successfully for transcontinental trade? It is because the profits of the company are derived from the local business, because the wars of rates between trunk lines from one terminus to another often result in loss, and these companies must have control of their local business and derive from that the profit necessary to enable them to bear the losses incurred by the through competition. There is an admission on the part of that railway magnate that the through business we are aiming for has to be done at such rates that the company must have a source of profit to fall back upon in order to enable it to sustain the losses incurred in retaining that through business from its competitors. The hon. gentleman then alluded to the member who advocates American supremacy, and wishes he could approve of a scheme characterised by American energy and push. It was a general allusion; I am at a loss to know whether he referred to my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) who is accused or taking a term or two in an American university, or to my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Fairbank), who, I believe, had the misfortune to be born among the Adirondacs of New York, or whether he alluded to myself. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us to whom he alluded in that general statement.

Mr. CHARLTON,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman may see for himself; he may see whom it suits.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, I will challenge the hon. gentleman to find in our debates one word uttered by me since I entered Parliament in August, 1872, that will bear out that assertion. I give the hon. gentleman that challenge, and I leave the matter there until he has shown some ground for such a statement. The hon. gentleman went on to exhort the party on this side in very fervid tones. He said: Do not try to pull down; we are grieved to see you always defame the good name of the country; strive to elevate and unite and strengthen. Well, that is the very thing we have been doing for years. We have often fainted by the way; the task has often seemed difficult, well nigh an impossible one; but we have been striving to elevate by condemning that which drags this country down; we have been striving to unite by deploring the policy which was separating the Provinces of this Dominion and sowing the seeds of future discord; we have been striving to strengthen by urging the adoption of a policy more in consonance with the needs and resources of the country; we have labored to elevate, to unite and to strengthen, and in every effort we have made in this direction we have been opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. Then the hon. gentleman tells us that he was in the United States during an election, and he saw there a model of what the conduct of public men and the people should be. This gentleman who accuses members of this House with advocating American supremacy saw there a model for us to imitate—saw there perfect political institutions—

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say that.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, I infer that. He saw there that nothing was said to belittle the country, but everything was said in glorification of it. True, there might have been some personalities; one of the candidates for the presidency might have been accused of a base act and of great immorality; but nothing was said against the country. I ask him if he did not hear every act of the Government keenly criticised; did he not hear any Democratic orator accuse the United States Government of corruption of the funds, of failure to deal with the Mormon question, of allowing the navy to decay, of allowing the foreign commerce of the United States to become almost obliterated. In no country on the face of the earth will you hear keener criticism of the conduct of the Government and of its management of public affairs than in the United States; never in this country have we had the conduct of parties more keenly criticised than in the daily criticisms in that country. Then, the hon. gentleman came to his peroration; and he said that notwithstanding the prophecies of evil he had heard, he had lived to see this country progress, to see the North-West settled, to see Canada become great. Yes, Sir, and we grieve to say he had lived to see some other things; he had lived to see 1,000,000 Canadians leave this country; he had lived to see the settlement of the North-West retarded in consequence of a policy inimical to that country; he had lived to see Canada attaining development, great it is true, but much less than it should and would have attained under a proper administration of affairs; and he had lived to see piled upon this country a debt of $250,000,000, a large portion of which has been incurred for purposes that confer no benefit on the country.

So much for the the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State. And now, a few words in reference to the speech of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives). That hon. gentleman gave us some information which was not correct. He told us that the statement that the Union Pacific road and the Central Pacific road were separate corporations was incorrect—that there was no such road as the Central Pacific except as a portion of the Union Pacific. Well, Sir, here is Poor's Manual for 1884. We have seventeen of these manuals, and since the year 1869 the Union and the Central Pacific have been given by this authority as separate corporations under separate and distinct management. They connect with each other, it is true; they are sometimes hostile to each other; the Central Pacific at present diverts all the traffic it can to its southern route, and that is against the Union Pacific and works against the interests of the Union Pacific. There are no two corporations in America more distinct, or that have been more distinct, than these two. Possibly the hon. gentleman may have been misled by the fact that the Union Pacific has a branch 300 miles long, called the Central Pacific branch. Then he told us the Union Pacific does not pass through mountains, that it is a level and easy road. The authorities of the United States must have been very much misinformed. The authorities of the United States assumed that 517 miles west of Omaha, at Cheyenne, the Union Pacific commenced ascending the mountains, and upon that assumption they granted the company $48,000 per mile for 150 miles, three times the subsidy granted for the level portion, and beyond that, for the balance of the road, they assumed it was sufficiently mountainous to entitle the company to $32,000 a mile, twice the subsidy of the level portion. The Union Pacific passes over the Rocky Mountains, over the Wasatch range of mountains, and enters the basin of the Great Salt Lake. Then, the Central Pacific continues on its course through the Humboldt Valley, and across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, there are three ranges of mountains on the lines of the Union and the Central Pacific, two of which the Union Pacific crosses. With regard to the standard, judging by the letter of Mr. Stephen, the standard of the Union Pacific in 1873 was to be the standard of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The standard of the Union Pacific, according to Poor's Manual, in 1872-73, was 80 feet to the mile, whether correct or not I will not venture to say. My impression is that the maximum standard of the Union Pacific, 116 feet to the mile when first opened, was reduced to 90 feet to the mile, which was the maximum grade in 1873. So much for the question of the Union Pacific passing through the mountains and the standard. Then the hon. gentleman informs us we cannot object to the Brockville connection and the Montreal extension. We do object to that. We hold that the Canadian Pacific Railway had no necessity to extend their line; we hold there was no necessity for them to invest money east of Callander. Their business was first to complete the main line and open the necessary branches in the North-West, before investing money east of what was fixed as the eastern terminus. The hon. gentleman told us the Sault Ste. Marie branch will tap Chicago trade. That is the assertion we have always made. We have always asserted that if the proposal had been carried out to build the road to Sault Ste. Marie, connecting with the lines passing south of Lake Superior, we would not only have afforded all the facilities necessary for an outlet for the North-West, but would have secured control of a large proportion of the traffic of the American North-West. We would have given to St. Paul a route to an ocean port 430 miles shorter than the route it has now. The hon. gentleman's assertion fortifies the position that was taken by the Opposition in 1881, when we pointed out that that route should be adopted as a temporary expedient for the purpose of saving $20,000,000, the cost of building the section north of Lake Superior; and in addition to the saving of money, the reason was urged that it would make tributary to Canadian roads the trade of the vast connections in the United States.

Mr. IVES. They would have tapped our trade and the trade of the North-West as well.

Mr. CHARLTON. Not more than at present, for they have lines at present reaching to Emerson and various points on the border. The hon. gentleman says the Canadian Pacific Railway required two or three connections with the seaboard. What necessity existed for those connections, when they had not even located the line they were to construct north of Lake Superior, when they had no cars and no trade? The necessity would not become apparent until the road was built and had trade, and then an outlet would be furnished by other roads only too willing to make connections with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman says the company paid for $20,000,000 of stock 40 cents on the dollar, and that that is more than its present value, and that no objection was made. But objection was made. The watering of the stock at this great discount was objected to from the very commencement, on the ground that it would increase the capital account, the dividend paying account of the road, enormously and improperly. The company, he says, needed this money for extensions and so forth. Well, about the only extension to which they have applied this money, is the extension of their dividend account. The greater part of it, instead of being invested in extensions and in construction account, has been placed in the hands of the Government to secure a series of dividends covering a period of ten years. Then the hon. gentleman informs us that the leader of the Opposition asked that the money in reserve for dividends be taken by the Government, and the money paid on dividends also. The hon. leader of the Opposition made no proposal that the money already paid on dividends should be taken, under any circumstances, and the proposal he made with reference to the amount of money in the hands of the Government as security for dividends, was that the company should consent to use their own money to relieve their own difficulties instead of asking the country to lend them money, while they were paying this amount into the hands of the Government for another purpose. Then, and it is the last allusion I shall make to the speech of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, he says the hon. member for North Norfolk, who always justifies the Yankees, should talk of their stock watering. I have taken notice of that to-day, and I took notice of it one year ago, on the discussion of the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions, perhaps in language rather severe; and I have always pointed out, in connection with American railway monopolies, the fact that their railway management has been in the last degree dishonest and in the interest of speculators rather than the public.

I now proceed to the discussion of a few points in reference to this measure before the House, which are not directly in the line of the criticisms I have been making on the speeches of the Acting Minister of Railways, the Secretary of State, and the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe. We will look at this question from two standpoints. First, from the standpoint of the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Like all corporations, it is in their interest to take what they can get, and to keep what they can, and I do not know that they have gone far beyond what may be called a proper attempt to look to their own interests. They made, in the first place, the best bargain they could with the Government, and they made an exceedingly good one. Since then they have looked sharply after their interests, and in every case their interests have been properly attended to; and so far as the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway are concerned, they are perhaps less reprehensible than the operation of nine-tenths of the railway corporations of the United States. I am not dealing with that question from that standpoint particularly. They are looking after their own interests, and are abundantly capable of doing so. Another standpoint is that of the people's interest, and by the people's interest I mean all the varied interests of the great Dominion, all the business interest and social interests—the interests of all the people. The hon. gentlemen occupying the Government benches are the custodians of the interests of the people. They are managing this Government. This Government is instituted, as all civil governments are, for the protection of the people, for maintaining law and order, for guaranteeing the liberty and rights of the people, and it has been and is to-day the duty of the Government to look after the interests of the people. If we look at this matter from that standpoint, I hold the Government have failed in their duty, I hold they have not looked after the interests of the people as they should. The interests of the people have been sacrificed, whether wittingly or unwittingly it is not for me to say, by the Government of the day in their dealings with this company. That being the case, the duty of the Government in these premises has not been performed. The Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate has looked after its interests, the Government has failed to look after the interests of the people, and the failure of the Government to perform its duty and the extent of their failure I shall proceed to show. But before doing that, it is perhaps quite pertinent to the discussion to ask whether this Canadian Pacific Railway is a solvent corporation, whether it will prove a remunerative investment. That is a matter of interest to us all. There are two questions to be answered before this can properly be decided. The first is: Is the North-West a good country? Very much depends upon the answer. If the North-West is not a good country, of course a railway there is not likely to prove a remunerative investment. If it is a good country, as I believe it is, then the business will be developed in such a way as to sustain a railway there. The next question to be answered is: Will the management of the road be prudent? That is a question I am not capable of answering. I should hope that the management will be prudent. Judging from the astuteness of these gentlemen in looking after their own interests, they certainly possess the ability to have a good management of that road. I answer these questions, then, by saying that, if the country is a good one and the management is to be a prudent management, then the company is solvent, and it will prove a remunerative investment. If we look at the road and its sources of business, I think we shall be satisfied that it has a fair future before it. I see in the report of the company issued yesterday that, in their summary of business, they give various items of the business of their road during the past year. They have transported nearly 1,000,000 barrels of flour, 6,500,000 bushels of wheat, 244,000,000 feet of lumber, 367,000 tons of manufactured goods, and 375,000 tons of other articles. This road penetrates what we are led to believe is the best wheat belt of this continent. In that case that amount of 6,500,000 bushels will be indefinitely increased. It penetrates a great lumber section on the east, and a great lumber section on the west in British Columbia, and it must be expected that the lumber will be carried from the east to the prairies and to the eastern Provinces, and that it will be carried from British Columbia to the prairies of the fertile belt. Then, when our difficulties in the North-West are at an end, when our Indian troubles are settled and the various difficulties that the country now labors under are arranged, we must necessarily have a large immigration into the North-West. The very country that is a rival to it to-day—Dakota and the newer Territories of the United States—are being filled up, and soon will be filled up, and the immigration that is now passing to those Territories must pass over them and come into our North-West; so that, whatever may be the policy of the Government, we are to have an immigration into that section, an immigration which may be accelerated by the adoption of a liberal policy. If that is the case, I think we may assume that the Canadian Pacific Railway is not a bankrupt concern, and has no need to appear here as a mendicant, but that, if properly managed, it will be a remunerative investment.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, the hon. gentleman says "Hear, hear." I say that, in all probability, as I have always asserted, it will be a speculation which will exceed in the magnitude of its returns any railway speculation which has ever been entered into.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. May I ask the hon. gentleman one question? If he has a rich neighbor and a poor neighbor, which would he rather lend money to? To the rich man? If the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be a very rich company, why should we not lend them the money?

Mr. CHARLTON. If I had a rich neighbor who had a surplus of $14,288, and he applied for a loan of $5,000 to carry out a certain work, and it was not convenient for me to loan it, I would say that I would rather he should draw on that amount of $14,288.

Having made these admissions, which I freely do, with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I ask why is the road in difficulties? There are four palpable reasons for the condition which that road is in at present, and the first of those is that the road has been pushed too rapidly, rapidity of construction, pushing the road through the wilderness far in advance of settlement and of that business which a railway must have in order to make it remunerative. If the population that is scattered along a line of 1,000 miles of railway has sufficient room along 200 miles of railway, then, if the business that 1,000 miles does could have been concentrated upon 200 miles, it could have been done at one-fifth the expense, and for that reason the construction of the road so rapidly through a great stretch of wilderness has not only led to an increased cost in its construction, but has deprived the company of the business which should have grown up as the road progressed and should have been tributary to it as it progressed towards the west. That is one reason why the road is in difficulties. Another reason is the investments made by this company which were not warranted by its resources and were not contemplated by the conditions of its contract with this Government. That road was subsidised for a specific purpose, for the purpose of building a line of railway from Callander to the waters of the Pacific, with as many branches as the company might be able to build, but no condition was made as to branches. The specific condition of that contract was the construction of a main line from Callander to the Pacific. The resources were provided for this work, and to a great extent they have been diverted from that purpose, and the company has made investments of those resources for purposes not contemplated by the original contract. That is the second of the four reasons for the difficulties in which the road is involved. The third reason is that the company issued $25,000,000 of stock under the conditions of its contract, and the Government, without consulting Parliament, permitted the company to increase that stock to $100,000,000, and permitted the issue of $40,000,000 at prices ranging from 51cts. down to 42cts. on the dollar, and the Government held the balance of that stock in order to enable the company to manipulate the rest of it in any way it chose. In consequence of this watering of the stock, public confidence was shaken in the concern, because, as I will show in a moment, the people of this country and the people of Great Britain and of the United States were just awakening to the mode of manipulation in vogue among railway men with the purpose of increasing their share capital and their bonded capital beyond the amount actually invested in the road. Then, to cap the climax and to increase the difficulties under which the company labored at this particular juncture, it confessed its want of confidence in itself, confessed its inability to earn dividends for years to come, by taking a large sum of money out of its capital, out of the money derived from the sale of its stock at these ruinous prices and by placing it in the hands of the Government to secure dividends upon its capital for ten years to come. This, above all other things, shook the confidence of the public in this concern, and that measure, taken, in the belief of the company, for the purpose of placing its finances on a secure basis, destroyed all confidence in it, and the result was that it was unable to sell any stock at all. These are the four reasons for the difficulties in which the company is involved. But there were other reasons over which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had no control whatever. I have referred to one, that general distrust which existed in the public mind with regard to railway securities, and I will take the liberty, in connection with that matter, to read a page from a standard authority on railway matters—Poor's Manual—with reference to the extent to which railway stock-watering had been carried on, and, when this discovery was made, the effect upon the public mind as to the value of railway securities. Mr. Poor, after giving a statement as to the number of miles of railway in the New England States, the Middle States, the Southern States, the Western States, and the Pacific group, and the cost of the roads in each group, proceeds to say:

"The preceding statement is an abridgement of the much more extended one, embracing in detail all the railroads of the country. It shows that since 1880, a period of three years, there have been opened in the United States 28,405 miles of railroad, and that 6,091 miles were opened the past year up to the close of the fiscal years of the several companies.

"The increases of share capital and indebtedness of all the companies for the three years ending December 31st, 1883, was $2,093,433,054, the cost of the new mileage as represented by share capital and debt being about $70,000 per mile. The increase in the three years of the funded debts of all the companies was $924,165,440; of their floating debts, $169,880,406; of the two $1,094,045,846. It is not probable that the cost of the mileage constructed in the three years equalled the funded and floating debts by at least the sum of $200,000,000. The cost of the mileage constructed certainly did not exceed $30,000 to the mile. The whole increase of the share capital, $999,387,203, and a portion of the funded debt, was in excess of the cost of construction."

He goes on to say, and this is worthy the attention of every member in this House:

"It is in this immense increase of fictitious capital that is to be found the cause of the general distrust which prevails, and the enormous decline in the price of railroad securities. From 1879 to near the close of 1883, a most singular delusion reared upon the public as to their value, and this delusion was taken advantage of on a vast scale by able and unscrupulous adventurers. Whatever was manufactured and put afloat was seized with avidity by an eager and uninformed public. The delusion was increased and prolonged by payments on a very large scale of interest and dividends from capital. In this delusion the most loud mouthed and unscrupulous promoters usually had the greatest success. The delusion culminated about the time of the opening of the Northern Pacific, in connection with which visionary schemes of immense magnitude had been put upon the market. Their worthlessness and the rapid decline of their securities, exerted a powerful influence over the public mind, which continues unchecked to the time of writing this. The distrust extends alike to good and bad, so that prices at the present time have as little reference to values as they had at the beginning of 1883. The distrust will probably continue until time shall show what securities are really well based. One cause of the great decline in the shares of lines which were dividend-paying, is the competition resulting from the construction of rival lines. The result of this competition is particularly shown in the two great Pacific roads, the Union and Central, both of which, for many years have regularly paid dividends, but both of which have now been compelled to forego them. A few years ago there was, in public estimation, no more inviting field for railroad enterprises than the State of Colorado. A vast system of railroads, covering the whole State, was constructed with very great rapidity, involving a nominal expenditure of nearly $100,000,000, almost the whole of which is unproductive."

And further down he says:

"If it be assumed that the cost in money of all the roads in operation in the United States in 1883 did not exceed, as it certainly did not, the amount of their funded and floating debts, $3,787,410,728, the actual investment was a most profitable one. The net earnings for the year were $336,911,884, a sum equalling about 9 per cent. on that cost. If the fictitious capital could be eliminated from their accounts, their success, as investments, would have no parallel. If to net income be added the advantages that flow from them, the result would be a matter of especial wonder."

Here, then, is the reason why railway securities have declined, why they are unsaleable in England, in the United States, in Canada. It is the loss of confidence in the roads, it is the lack of ability on the part of the public to discern between the good and the bad, and for that reason distrust extends to all, and that state of things affected the Canadian Pacific Railway. That state of things, with other difficulties, placed them in an embarrassed position, for which they were not to blame except to the extent that they themselves had engaged in the same class of manipulation—stock watering. According to Poor's Manual, in 1883, there were 121,000 miles of railway in the United States, with a share capital of $3,708,000,000, and a funded and floating debt of $3,787,000,000. According to that manual the actual cash cost was within the amount of the funded and floated debt, was but 51 per cent. of the share capital and funded and floating debt of these companies. According to that manual 49 per cent. of the entire nominal cost of the railways in the United States was water and stealings; according to that manual, for the period from 1880 to 1883, 28,000 miles of road were built with a share capital of $999,000,000, and with a debt of $1,094,000,000, and the actual cost of these roads was $200,000,000 less than their funded and floating debt, and the whole share capital of $999,000,000, with $200,000,000 of the funded and floating debt comprised the stealings of the manipulators who had organised to build these roads. So it will be seen that, bad as matters were before, these matters were growing worse. During this period the roads, which had nominally cost $70,000 a mile, had actually cost but $30,000 a mile; and the manipulators of these roads had about $40,000, out of over $70,000 of the nominal investment, to put into their own pockets. For this reason mistrust was cast upon railway securities, and the Canadian Pacific Railway shared in the disaster that fell upon all enterprises of this kind. With regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway stock operations, the company itself has not been innocent. It is the very fact that the company was not innocent that visited upon its head the consequences of these developments that were made with reference to American railway securities. What were these developments with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway? They placed upon the market, after the first $5,000,000 was taken up, $20,000,000 that was sold at 25 cents on the dollar. They then placed on the market $30,000,000 of stock which was sold at 51 cents, and they afterwards sold $10,000,000 at 42 cents. Now, Sir, when this company deposited this dividend guarantee with the hon. gentlemen opposite, they provided for the payment of 3 per cent. dividend for the next ten years. That amounts to 3 per cent. on the first $5,000,000 sold at par, and it amounts to 12 per cent. per annum on the next $20,000,000 sold at 25 cents on the dollar; it amounts to 6 per cent., within a fraction, of the $30,000,000 sold at 51 cents on the dollar; it amounts to 7 per cent. per annum on the $10,000,000 sold at 42 cents on the dollar; or it yields an investment on the whole $65,000,000, on the actual money invested in that share capital, of 6·87 per cent., within a fraction of 7 per cent. per annum is to be yielded upon the actual money invested in this road from that dividend security deposited with the Government to pay a nominal interest of 3 per cent on $65,000,000.

Now, Sir, I proceed to show that the first endowment of the Canadian Pacific Railway was ample for the purposes contemplated in this contract with the Government, when that company applied for a loan in 1884 of $22,500,000, and an extension of time on the sum of $7,500,000. According to the showing of Mr. Stephen's letter, published on 15th January, 1884, the company had spent on the main line up to that time $23,563,564, less $484,614 paid to the Government to release its security deposited for $1,000,000 included in the construction account; or a net sum of $23,078,950 expended on the main line. The amount expended for equipment was $8,638,306, $697,369 of this comprising the cost of three steamers; and I charge one-fourth of the cost of that equipment to the account of its leased lines and branches upon the basis of mileage, making a further deduction of $1,984,734. These amounts make the construction account, including equipment of the main line on the date of Mr. Stephen's letter, $29,033,153. That was the expenditure made by the company on the contract with the Government. We have nothing to do with other enterprises entered into by those gentlemen, whether they were imprudent or reckless speculations or not, they were not covered by the contract, and the Government and the country did not furnish millions of money to this company to do with it what they pleased. What have they received from the Government towards this expenditure of $29,000,000 odd made on the main line? They received a subsidy in money of $12,289,211. They sold land grant bonds and from the amount sold they obtained $8,876,000 covered by land sales. From town sites and bonuses they obtained $730,000 more; or a total of $21,895,711, against an expenditure on the main line and equipment of $29,033,000; or they had received from the people within $7,137,442 of the total amount they expended; and the company received other sums of money. They received from the sale of $55,000,000 of stock $25,281,754, they received from the pledge of $10,000,000 $4,950,000, and, according to the company's own statement, the net earnings to January 15th, nine months, were $978,000; the sale of land grant bonds of $10,000,000, not covered in the land sales, amounted to $1,123,500; or a total from these sources of $32,333,254. They received directly from the Government and from all other sources in cash $25,195,812 more than they had expended on the main line with its equipment. And at that very moment, under those conditions, with receipts $25,000,000 in excess of the expenditure, they came here to ask for a further loan. They had other resources besides these. They had earned in addition to this 10,000,000 acres of land valued at $2 per acre amounting to $20,000,000 if you deduct from that $1,223,000 to provide for land bonds issued and not covered by land sales. The total assets, cash and land, at the time they applied for this loan amounted to $44,072,312 in excess of the sum they had expended on the main line. At that time, according to their own statement, the estimated cost of completing the road was $27,000,000 and the general manager stated that that amount would be reduced by several millions, $4,000,000 I think. At this time, in addition to the estimated cost of completing the road of $27,000,000, there was a further sum of $2,000,000 required to complete its equipment; and the company would have had $25,000,000 of cash resources in prospect if it had confined its operations to the main line; and with its cash resources and land, in all amounting to $37,905,802, the company would have been able to have completed the road for $29,000,000. And yet the company was an applicant for a loan. They were to receive further aid. They were to receive, when the road was completed, $12,710,000 of subsidy. That was in addition to $25,195,802. If you deduct $29,000,000, the cost of completion and equipment, the company with proper management would have had the main line completed and equipped for $8,905,802 less than the company received from bonds, sales of land, town sites and other items. There should be added 21,246,000 acres of land at $2, amounting to $42,492,000, less unprovided land bonds $1,123,500. Thus, the total resources in cash and land, in excess of the cost of the main line, counting the $10,000,000 of stock pledged at $4,950,000, and not counting the issue of $35,000,000 additional stock, would be $41,368,500. In addition to this the company would have power to issue preferential stock to the extent of $26,000,000, power to borrow $26,000,000; or further resources to the extent of $52,000,000 in excess of the $46,000,000 which the company should have had when the main line was completed.

Mr. CHARLTON.

What does Mr. Stephen's letter of the 15th of January, 1884, show that the company had expended on contracts outside the contract with the Government? That letter shows that the company had expended on branch lines $3,827,000; Callander to Brockville and Montreal, $3,203,000; equipment outside of main line, as estimated, $2,682,000; interest on capital stock, $2,128,000; lines to the sea board, &c., $3,482,000; acquiring a terminus at Montreal, 345 miles east of its proper terminus, $390,000; paid to the Government for dividends, $8,710,000—making in all $24,422,000 expended outside of the contract. In addition, they had created a preferential charge to secure ten years' dividends on $8,250,000 securities. This involved a further sum of $7,380,912, which, added to $24,422,000, makes $31,802,912 spent by the company outside of the contract entered into by the Government with the company. This state of things was enough to embarrass any company; this state of things was enough to create difficulties in any corporation; this reaching out prematurely for fruits not yet ripe was the cause of the company's embarrassment. The company should have been content with completing its main line, with constructing the necessary branches in the North-West, and, finding that the construction of this great work would give the backing it required, it could then have reached out for the acquisition of those lines—the line to Montreal and in various other directions, and its approach to the sea through the United States. It should have been content to have refrained from entering upon those vast projects until the main line had been completed, instead of prematurely undertaking the construction of vast works which they were not in a condition to assume, and when its finances were not in a proper condition to accomplish such a work. It was perfectly feasible that this should have been done by the company, if it had not attempted to perform the task prematurely. The Central Pacific Railway Company after starting on a capital of $12,500, with its Government subsidies, and its land grant credit, first built the line from Promontory Point to Sacramento. It did not attempt to acquire branch lines and western extension until it built the main line. With the main line built as a basis of credit, it reached out to San Francisco, and after accomplishing that it built its extensions to Southern California, then it constructed the Southern Pacific, and step by step, starting with that meagre amount of capital, it has placed itself in a position where its assets are $187,000,000, and it had nothing like the vantage ground that the Canadian Pacific Railway has. But it conducted its business prudently; it did not attempt to seize on all advantages it saw, in view at once, but it waited and took one step after another as its resources would warrant. The fault of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not that they could not secure all that they saw in view, but they wanted to get it immediately, they wanted to secure their connections before they made the main line. The calculations made by the company in 1883, I have no doubt could have been carried out successfully, with all the enterprises that the company has undertaken, if they had been attempted two years earlier. I have no doubt that any time between 1879 and 1882, the Canadian Pacific Railway could have floated the whole of its $100,000,000 of stock, and could have carried out all the enterprises it has engaged in triumphantly. But when the crash came and railway securities were unsaleable, the company found itself loaded up with too many enterprises, and its difficulties were not in consequence of the lack of a proper amount of subvention for the purpose of constructing the main line, but in consequence of its outside speculation.

We have here the annual report to the shareholders of this company, made at the meeting of the 13th of June, which was received yesterday, and if we are to credit this report, and the statements made in it with regard to liabilities and assets of this company, it certainly is very far from being in the position of a company in a state of insolvency. This report claims that the railway company on the 31st of December last was the possessor of assets consisting of railway line, steamships, telegraph lines, dividends reserved, etc., to the extent of $216,711,000; that its liabilities, consisting of capital stock, bonded debt, land bonds, Government loan, and floating debt, amounted to $106,914,000; and that its net assets on that date were $109,797,000. In the same report, casting the horoscope of the future, the company estimate the prospective condition of the road, on the 1st of June, 1886, as follows: Assets consisting of railway system, 3,371 miles, besides leased lines, steamships, telegraphs, land at $2 an acre, dividend reserved, outside assets, cash balances, etc, $230,960,000; liabilities, capital stock, mortgage bonds, Government loans, land grant bonds, &c., $118,892,000. The net prospective assets of the company on the 1st of June, 1886, $116,068,000. Now, how much of those net assets have been furnished by the people of Canada? In this statement of the company, the estimated value of Government roads is put at $35,000,000, which will warrant us in stating that they are worth $33,500,000, the cost of surveys included; and in summing up the assets, or the portion of them given to them by the Government of Canada, we have first the cost of 713 miles of railway, $33,500,000; next we have the cash subsidy, $25,000,000; then 25,000,000 acres of land, valued by themselves at $2 an acre, making $50,000,000, or a total of $108,500,000, or of that professed surplus of $112,000,000, the sum of $108,500,000 was given by the company to the people of Canada, or a balance remaining of $3,500,000 after what was furnished by the people of Canada as a free gift. The proceeds of the lands may be exceeded largely, because the company profess to have sold those lands during last year, at an average of more than $3 an acre, and if you take that basis, and add $1 an acre to the value of the lands, we have subsidy paid by the people of Canada amounting to $133,500,000, instead of $108,500,000.

Now, Sir, a few words with regard to the main line account at the present time. I pointed out what, according to Mr. Stephen's letter, was the condition of the main line account last year, when the loan was applied for. I have pointed out how large a proportion of the resources of the company, according to his own statement, had been diverted from the original purpose for which those resources were granted by the people of Canada. Now let us have a summary of the main line account according to Mr. Stephen's letter of January 15th, 1885. There was expended according to this statement on January 1st, 1884, $23,078,000; estimated cost of completion $27,000,000; proportion of equipment due to main line $5,954,000; additional equipment necessary, in round numbers, $2,000,000; cost of the road built and thoroughly equipped, $58,000,000; furnished by the Government $108,508,000, or in other words, the Government furnished to the company more than was necessary to build the main line from Callander to the Pacific, and to equip the same, by $50,500,000.

And now, Sir, for the diversion of the resources of this company up to the recent time, according to the latest statement. According to the letter of Mr. Stephen, of 13th March, 1885, and this report of 13th June, 1885, the acquired lines have cost the company \$8,981,000; the branch lines \$4,605,000; steamers \$697,000; Montreal real estate \$408,000; to leased lines and access to the seaboard, \$5,857,000, of which \$1,312,000 is chargeable to advances made to American lines; in the hands of the Government to secure nine years' dividend \$14,288,000; dividends paid previously to that, \$5,378,000—less net earnings according to their statement, \$1,191,000, leaving a balance of dividends, \$4,187,000; payment on capital stock as per letter of 15th January, 1884, \$2,128,000, less net earnings as per same letter, \$978,000; net balance of capital stock \$1,150,000; equipment of line east of Callander, of branches, and leased lines, including share of machine shops on the basis of mileage \$2,920,000; total diversion of resources of the company from the original purpose that company was created for \$43,093,000. I have given the proportion of the value of workshops and other property, chargeable to diverted resources, according to the mileage of the branch lines and leased lines, as compared with the main line, at one-third. Now, we should include in this portion other large sums, for general equipment, for maintaining the staff, for tools, etc., as money diverted from the original purposes for which the company was chartered. Now, I wish to draw your attention to a point of very great importance in connection with this diversion of capital. If the company were to divert capital at all from their contract for the construction of the main line from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, that diversion should certainly have been for the construction of branch lines in the North-West. That company was chartered for the purpose of affording access to the North-West and connection with British Columbia; it was not chartered for the purpose of creating rival lines in Ontario or for extending its lines to the seaboard. Those roads were in existence already; the Grand Trunk was serving the west; the St. Lawrence and Ottawa and the Canada Central were performing their respective functions. It was not necessary for the Canadian Pacific Company to own these roads. I repeat that we could forgive the company if a very large portion of this \$43,000,000 which was diverted from the original purposes of their contract, had been expended for the construction of branch lines where they were needed in the valleys of the Saskatchewan, the Assiniboine and the Red River; but how much was expended for this purpose? Of that \$43,000,000, the company have probably used \$2,000,000 for the construction of 134 $\frac{1}{2}$  miles of branch lines in the North West, while \$41,000,000 was devoted to other purposes never contemplated by the contract. Of course, Sir, the company could wait for the development of the North-West; that was their preserve; they could bide their time; they were not compelled to consult the wishes and interests of the people of that country, so far as they might conflict with their own interests; the Government had taken abundant care that that preserve should not be interfered with. The company had, as the hon. Secretary of State has said, absolute control of their local business; they had a monopoly clause in their contract, and if they did not choose to build lines of railway in the North-West, other people could not do so without the consent of their friends the members of the Government. But it was different in the east; there was an empire to grasp, and they thought it best to grasp it soon. They acquired 345 miles of railway, reaching from Callander to Montreal, the road from Carleton Place to Brockville, the road from Carleton to Perth, and the St. Lawrence and Ottawa; they secured the construction of a road from Perth to Toronto; they acquired the line from Toronto to St. Thomas, and the line from Toronto to Owen Sound; they made provision to secure an outlet to the seaboard through American territory; they expended millions for these purposes, because they wished to grasp an empire, because they wished to establish themselves as the great monopoly railway corporation of Canada. It was a far seeing scheme; and but for untoward circumstances, they would have carried it out triumphantly; they would have sold their \$100,000,000 of stock but for the breakdown of railway securities in the financial world. Under the circumstances, we have a right to criticise severely perhaps not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but the Government that permitted these things, that paid out this money for the purpose for which it was being used, that permitted the issue of this stock, knowing the prices at which it was being sold, that allowed this company to hold in its hands a reserve of \$45,000,000 to be subscribed for as they might think proper, and that permitted the investment of these large sums in schemes not involved in their contract, knowing by the development and signs we had, that these schemes were embarrassing the company and placing them in a position where, to carry out their original contract, they would be obliged to appeal to the Government for additional aid. We have a right to criticise and to condemn the Government for permitting these things on the part of the company, although we may have nothing to do with the affairs of the company itself. Now, the ultimate solvency of the company seems to be a matter that admits of no doubt. I see by its report, the company estimates its fixed charges at \$3,000,000 for the future, 4 per cent. on the Government loan, 5 per cent. on \$15,000,000 of first mortgage bonds; the interest on the sum owed to the Government of Quebec; the interest on the Canada Central bonds, &c., and the interest on \$9,800,000 of the Government loan, making up that sum. These are the fixed charges of the company; and with its unrealised assets in lands at \$2 per acre of \$42,799,000, and with the fact that on the 31st of December last it had in the hands of the Government the sum of \$14,288,000, it does not seem to me that this company is in such desperate straits; it does not really seem to me that there is any necessity for its calling upon the Government of this country for an additional \$5,000,000, when its credit is already so badly strained; it does not seem to me that it should require to ask for a change in the security on which the Government loan is based. According to their own statement, they have available assets in cash of \$14,288,000 now in the hands of the Government, placed there to secure dividends on their capital stock. Now, I will tell you what I think they had better do. The position reminds me of a story of an insolvent who had failed several times. A friend who had not seen him for a long while, called to see him, and after conversing with him a while, he said, "I suppose you have heard of my misfortune." "No," said his friend, "what is the matter?" "Well," he said, "I have failed again." "That is too bad," said his friend; "What do you propose to do?" "Well," he said, "I have made a proposition to my creditors; I propose to pay them 25 cents on the dollar." "Well, Smith," said his friend, "you know that when men fail they are very apt to over-estimate their resources; I have known a great many cases of compromises at a certain number of cents on the dollar, that men have failed to meet. Now, you want to be careful not offer more than you can possibly pay; you want to think this thing over, before you offer to pay 25 cents on the dollar." "Well," he said, "I have thought it over, and if the assets come short, I will pay the balance out of my own pocket." That is what this company had better do; they had better pay out of their own pockets this money they are now asking from the Government. I think they had better do that. It would relieve the country of a great deal of difficulty, it would be greatly in the interests of the First Minister, it would relieve him from difficulty; and if the company is at all generous to the Government who have seen them through so many difficulties, they had better put their hand in their own pockets and pay this money, as they have it in hand. Now, this is merely a matter of advice on my part.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Of course we do not deal with this company; in one sense Parliament does not deal with it. It is the Government that deals with the company, and we have to deal with the Government, and that is what we are attempting to do. I am not arraigning the Canadian Pacific Railway, although I have set forth very fully, I think, their mistakes; although I have shown that they have not proceeded in a business like way, but have involved themselves in difficulties, when their resources were ample for the purposes of the contract they made with the Government. But these very mistakes made by the company are largely due to the faults of the Government, and the Government, throughout all this transaction, from its very inception down to the present, has deserved the condemnation of the House and the country. It is to the Government that we direct our attention. The very first step they took was an unfortunate step; the subvention granted to the company was too large. The Government proceeded to make this contract in an improper manner. They should have taken the public into their confidence; they should have asked the capitalists of the world for proposals; they should not have made a contract in secret. They should have published to the world for months their intention to build the Canadian Pacific Railway by contract, and they should have invited the capitalists of the world to tender for the construction of that great road. The law required it, common sense required it; but in place of complying with the requirements of the law, in place of complying with the dictates of common sense, they proceeded to make a contract in secret, and for the doing of that they are worthy of condemnation and have been from that day worthy of the condemnation of the people. If their political existence be dependent upon that, and that alone, that fact would furnish sufficient reason for withdrawing from the Government the confidence of Parliament and the people. Then, when a better offer was made as soon as the terms of the contract became known—as soon as its conditions became known, conditions which could scarcely be credited by their supporters, when this offer was made public and a better offer received, it was their duty to retrace their false step; and not having done that, it was the duty of the House to refuse to sanction the contract made in these circumstances. And when the contract was consummated, bad as it was, it was the duty of the Government to keep that company within proper limits, to insist that that company should use the land and the money subvention granted to them for the purposes for which they were granted, to see that the money was judiciously expended in securing the very thing that the country needed and that the company was chartered to do. Talk about eastern connections and extensions of the line and the necessities resting upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to expend a portion of its subvention in the extension of the main line from Callander east. Why, that was unnecessary. Favorable connections could have been made at Callander whenever the road was completed to that point, as other railways would have been only too glad to extend their roads to that point for the purpose of sharing in the traffic created by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Not one of the American Pacific lines constructed has found it necessary to seek seaboard connections. The Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, the latter terminating in the valley of the Sacramento, over 100 miles from San Francisco, the former at Omaha, on the Missouri, 1,500 miles from the sea coast, did not deem it necessary to extend their lines to the Atlantic; for before the Union Pacific was completed three lines were pointing towards Omaha to make connections with it—the Chicago and Rock Island Railway, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road, and the Chicago and North-West line, all three converging upon Omaha, and making connection with the Union Pacific, and creating competition from Omaha to the seaboard. The same was the case with the Northern Pacific. The Northern Pacific reaches Duluth and St. Paul's, and it was unnecessary, for the purposes of that company, to extend its line further, as it has ample connections with the Chicago and St. Paul's route, the Chicago and Rock Island Railway, and the Chicago and North-Western. The same with the Southern Pacific. It does not find it necessary to waste its resources in extending its trunk line to the sea coast, for numerous roads are glad to make connections with it. So it would have been with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was entirely unnecessary for the Canadian Pacific Railway to build one mile east of Callander, for ample facilities would have been furnished by the Canada Central and other companies for the purpose of carrying forward all its traffic, and consolidation could have been effected, without the expenditure of one dollar of capital, with the lines reaching towards it for the express purpose of doing the business that it created. Now the Government knew, for I will not charge them with that degree of stupidity that would be inferred if I claimed they did not know, that to undertake other works on the part of this company would weaken its resources, and the Government should have held the company to the construction of the main line at first with the branches in the west. In failing to do so, the Government have failed to perform their duty to the people. In permitting that company to divert $43,000,000 from the construction of the main line, at least $40,000,000 of which have been diverted to purposes east of Callander and not on the main line, the Government has done that which, in the interests of the people, whether of the company or not, it should not have done. The Government, in its whole course throughout this matter, has aided directly the creation of a great railway monopoly, the very thing we do not want. It was not in the interests of the people that the Canadian Pacific Railway should control lines east of Callander at all, that they should control a railway system from ocean to ocean. It would have been better to divide that up among different companies, so that competition could be secured; and the Government, in permitting the company to acquire all these leased lines and branch lines in the east, in allowing it to monopolise these different lines, have played into the hands of the company, and have betrayed the interests of the people. The Government furnished the credit, the country furnished the money for the carrying out of these gigantic schemes, for carrying out this rivalry in railway lines, this cutting up the business of lines already established, this rivalry in steamship lines, this cutting up the business of steamship lines already established. The Government have acted the part of a partner with the company, from the beginning to the end, in all these transactions. They have upheld the company in all these transactions, acting as a partner and furnishing the money. Why, now, should the Government strain its credit for the purpose of furnishing this company a loan at 4 per cent., when the company can borrow nowhere else at less than 5 or 6 per cent.? Why should the Government furnish the company at the very price the Government have to pay for it and assume all the risk without receiving any of the emoluments or having any margin?

Another thing the Government is chargeable with in this matter is the incidental difficulties incurred in connection with this scheme. The Government has been obliged to purchase support for the measures it has offered to this House in connection with relief to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Last year, we had the caucuses in No. 8, we had the credit of this country pledged to the extent of $9,000,000 to subsidise railway lines to the east. We have the same trouble on a smaller scale repeated this Session. We have that dangerous precedent set of the subsidising of railway lines which will place the Government of Canada at all times in a position of danger, the danger being that whenever they are in a tight place, the promoters of certain railway schemes will take them by the throat and say: Come down with your aid or we will withdraw our support; a most dangerous precedent, a most dangerous course for the Government to pursue, one of the incidental punishments which are to be inflicted upon the country for the sins of the Government in connection with this scheme.

I would like to point out to the Government at this late day what was pointed out to them in 1831; I would like to point out to them a scheme by which a very large portion of this outlay might have been saved, and at the same time railway facilities might have been afforded to the west fully as good as those which they have obtained by this scheme. In 1831, when the syndicate contract was under discussion, I pointed out to the Government what, if the policy that was then being pursued, the policy that the Mackenzie Government had adopted, the policy of building a line from Lake Superior into the west and extending that line as the wants of the country required, would probably be the result of the continuance of that policy; and I desire to call the attention of the Government to it to day, when we have so much added experience with regard to this matter, as to what would probably have been the outcome of the continuance of that policy. We will suppose that the line from Port Arthur to the Red River has cost $16,500,000; we will suppose that the Government had continued the construction of that line and had completed it to the base of the Rocky Mountains at an expense of $12,000,000, the estimate was $10,000,000; we will suppose that, during the construction of the main trunk line from Port Arthur to the Rocky Mountains, the Government had constructed 500 miles of branches, at $10,000 a mile, making $5,000,000; and we will suppose that they had equipped the whole of this railway at a cost of $6,500,000. What would have been the result? The Government would have had the line from Port Arthur to the base of the Rocky Mountains, 1,413 miles in length, and 500 miles of branches, and the whole of this system, with an equipment at a cost of $6,500,000, would have cost $40,000,000, and the North-West would have been placed in a better position, so far as railway facilities are concerned, than it is to-day, because it would have had about 400 miles more of branch railways than it has to-day. That being the position, the Government would have expended $10,000,000 less than it has already given as a gift; it would have had this road for $10,000,000 less than the money which has been actually given out of hand; and, when this road had been completed—and it was not necessary to build it faster than the country developed—does any man in this House suppose that that would not have been a bonus large enough to have secured the completion of the line in its eastern and western sections? It would have been more than sufficient for that purpose, and the grand result would have been that we would have saved by this scheme $15,000,000 in money and 25,000,000 acres of land, if we had continued to build that road to the Rocky Mountains, had built 500 miles of branches in addition, had expended $40,000,000 for that purpose, and had taken that system when it was doing a paying business, and offered it as a bonus for the construction of the balance of the road. The cost of the portion we have given to the company, without surveys, is $30,000,000, and we have given a subsidy in cash of $25,000,000, making $55,000,000, so that the saving would have been $15,000,000, and the entire land grant. In addition to that, we would have saved the necessity of making the loan of $30,000,000 in 1884, and the necessity of making the loan to-day of $5,000,000; we should not have had the necessity of sending a sick Minister and his Deputy to England in consequence of the pressing financial difficulties of the country to raise a loan, when he ought to have been here attending to the Estimates that we are waiting to have him come back to attend to. We were proceeding in that direction. It was the natural result of the policy which had been pursued for years, a policy which it is most unfortunate that we did not continue, a policy the advantages of which were pointed out to the Government when the syndicate contract was made, a policy the pursuance of which would have saved us, I repeat, $15,000,000 in money and the entire land grant.

I have detained the House longer than I anticipated, and I must draw to a close; but this is a subject of great importance, and I trust I shall not be charged with wasting time or with introducing the discussion of irrelevant matters. Feeling its importance, I have entered somewhat fully into some of these calculations, perhaps more fully than I am justified in doing. I repeat what I have said with relation to this matter, that the syndicate, in its management of its affairs with the Government, has shown ability, that it has shown astuteness, that it has promoted its own interests ably, and that its chief purpose, which is the chief purpose of all corporations, to make money for its members, has been carried out most effectually. It has moreover shown energy. It is useless to deny that great energy has been displayed by that company in the opening and in the prosecution of its work; but, above all things, it has shown its astuteness, its ability, its comprehensive ability, in the management of this Government. It has taken this Government and moulded it like clay in the hands of the potter, and it has moulded it to a vessel of dishonor. It has taken this Government and used it for its own purposes and has taken from it millions upon millions more than it would have required if the Government had held it to the terms of its contract. It has, in short, done with the Government what it pleased, and has made the Government of this country an appendage to the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate. But, whatever the company has done, the Government has failed in its duty, because its first and primary duty was to the people. It has failed in that duty and has betrayed the interests of the people. It is open to the charge of having sold its client. I do not charge that it has, but it is open to the charge. One of the most prominent supporters of the Government, when the syndicate contract was under discussion, declared that he could only account for the contract which has been entered into on the supposition that the Government was drunk, or mad, or bought.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is no question of order; that was the statement. I do not profess to explain how it was that that hon. gentleman finally swallowed the thing himself, but that was a declaration warranted by the conditions of that contract and by the conduct of the Government, first in making the contract in secret, and subsequently in refusing to retrace its steps when it found that it could save $3,000,000 of the people's money and 3,000,000 acres of land by accepting an offer from another company. If the Government has acted honestly in this matter, as I presume it has, it has shown incapacity unequalled and almost incomprehensible.

I wish to refer to the dividend paying basis that is about to be established by the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate, a dividend paying basis which the Government is consenting to, and has taken no steps to prevent. We know that the nominal capital of that company is \$65,000,000. The cost of the stock is \$29,493,000. Now, the fixed charges, we are told, of the company are about \$3,006,000 a year. The company estimates its net earnings for the year commencing 1st June, 1886, at \$3,600,000, and it states that the net earnings have been: for 1883, \$561,000; 1884, \$1,191,000; the first four months of 1885, \$604,000; and in the same proportion for the whole year of 1885 the earnings will be \$1,113,000. But the company estimates its net earnings will increase, and that at the end of the year they will be found to be \$2,400,000. This shows a gain from 1884 to 1885 of 107 per cent., from 1885 to 1886 50 per cent., and a corresponding gain between 1886 and 1887 would make the net earnings \$5,400,000, or \$2,400,000 more than the fixed charges. If the company can reach that position at this early stage in its history, it is certainly not in a position to demand more aid from this country. If it can reach the position that its own estimates warrant, all it will have to do is to take this fund deposited with the Government as security for dividends and use that, instead of paying dividends out of its surplus earnings. Now, with regard to the basis it is establishing for dividend payments. If we take this balance sheet contained in the report of the 13th June, we find it estimates its main line to cost \$88,000,000 although it will cost, probably, only \$50,000,000; rolling stock, \$7,350,000; steamers, \$697,000; shops and machinery, \$903,000; construction plant, &c., \$208,000, or \$97,167,000 chargeable to the main line. Real estate at Montreal, \$408,000; Government lines, \$35,000,000, making a total of \$132,575,000. Acquired lines, \$3,981,000; branch lines, \$4,605,000; or a grand total of \$146,161,000 as a basis for paying dividends at the present moment. In this balance sheet they estimate that the value of their property on the 1st of June, 1886, will be 2,658 miles of railway and appurtenances—\$128,850,000; 713 miles of Government road, \$35,000,000, or a sum of \$163,850,000 as the capital of this company upon which it will be entitled to a dividend of 10 per cent. before the Government can meddle with it. Deduct from that its fixed charges of \$3,006,000 and the company will be entitled to divide dividends of \$13,385,000. This will pay very well on a nominal capital of \$65,000,000 for it will be a dividend of 20½ per cent. But on the actual cash value or cost of that nominal capital of \$65,000,000, on the \$29,495,000, it is a cash dividend of 45⅓ per cent. per annum, and there is nothing to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway Company paying a dividend upon the actual cost of its stock of 43 $\frac{3}{4}$  per cent. per annum if it can earn the money. Now can this limit be reached? If the company's estimates of their future are correct it can be reached. Recollect, Sir, they will have 3,994 miles of line, of which 695 miles will be leased lines. Now, if we take, for purposes of comparison with regard to dividend earnings, the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific, what do we find? We find that, in 1883, the Union Pacific, 1,834 miles of railway, earned as a net dividend \$10,648,000; that the Central Pacific, with 1,215 miles of railway, earned \$8,094,000; that these two roads, with 3,049 miles of railway and branches, earned \$18,743,000 of net dividends. Now, if this was done with 3,000 miles of road, then I hold that 4,000 miles of road, in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when the country is developed, is quite likely to earn \$5,000,000 less than these two roads earn. If we take their calculation as correct, we may assume that that company will be ultimately in a position to pay 45 per cent. dividend on the actual cash cost of its stock.

Now, if that is the case, I think we may say that the company is solvent, that it is able to put its hands into its own pocket, where the money is, instead of asking us to furnish it; that it is able to take its own $14,288,000 laid by as a nest egg to pay dividends with, instead of requiring us to re-arrange the terms of our security, and to furnish $5,000,000 additional. What is this dividend deposit? It is money, cash, the proceeds, really, of the sale of stock. It is a part of the capital of this company. The truth is, that this company has taken more than one-half of the cash capital of the actual cost of its capital stock, and stored that away as a reserve—not to complete the road, not to create property, to earn dividends, but stored that away for the purpose of paying dividends out of capital. What is the proper use of that? Why, the proper use of that money was to build the railway with. The proper use of that money, the proceeds of the sale of that $65,000,000 of stock, was to build the road with. It was not a proper use of that money to call on the people to complete the road, and allow the stockholders to put the money away and pay dividends upon their stock with it. Who put that money into the hands of the Government? The stockholders. Did the Government know where it came from? They did. Did they know for what purpose it was put there? They did. Did they know what was the proper use to make of that money? They did. Are they not, then, participators in this act, this fraud upon the people of Canada? They are. Now, will they ask these friends of theirs to take this money they hold as a nest egg to pay dividends with, and to pay these sums their friends ask them to pay? These same parties who put the money there can take it out. I dare say they will do it if the Government asks them to. Now, Mr. Speaker, investors usually wait for dividends until they get the road built; they usually wait till they have earned some money to pay dividends. It is not customary for a railway company to take its capital and put it away in some secure place, to be doled out to them in small sums of 3 per cent. on the nominal amount to pay dividends with. That is an unusual proceeding among railway corporations, even among the worst of them. The trick that is performed with this money is a very curious one indeed. It pays a dividend upon itself, and it leaves a void that is to be filled up in some way. It leaves a void that the people are to fill up, to such an extent that after you use two-thirds of this money in paying dividends upon itself, the void filled up by the people is to go on and pay 45 per cent. on that whole sum that the company paid out in the shape of dividends, instead of using its capital. Now, paying interest from capital is always unsound and always wrong. Whether in the business of a corporation or in the business of a private individual, the payment of dividends from capital is an unsound and improper proceeding. Mr. Speaker, if you were embarking in business and investing $20,000, and paying interest amounting to $1,400 per annum out of capital, in about fourteen years your $20,000 would be gone, and you would have no more reserve to pay dividends with; and unless you had some good friend like the Canadian Government to supplement the amount and put you in a shape to continue drawing dividends at their expense, you would be in a tight place. And so with the railway company. Such action would bring any railway company to grief.

In summing up, and taking a view of the whole situation, I say that, taking the Canadian Pacific Railway matter from the commencement, the Government may be charged with four great sins, and small sins without number, and of which I shall not attempt to furnish the category. They may be charged with making a secret contract in violation of the law, a contract which they might have known, and did know before it was ratified, was not in the interests of the people of Canada. They may be charged with violating the law by having refused to ask for tenders. They may be charged with having refused a better offer. They may be charged with having inserted in the contract special clauses exempting the company from taxation and taxes on their materials imported, which has enabled the company to import material and steel rails from the United States to the detriment of the Canadian manufacturers. We find this company, with its huge subventions from the Government, which should have been a Canadian company, it being a company existing upon Canadian funds, is a company officered by men who are largely Americans, with an American general superintendent, an American general manager, American bosses, American contractors, a great proportion of the engineers Americans, a company which seems, other things being equal, to prefer to discharge a Canadian and put an American in his place.

The Government is chargeable with the sin, in consequence of the management of its affairs with this company, of having driven this country into desperate financial straits, driven this country into those straits for the purpose of furnishing money for the extravagant and mad speculation into which those gentlemen have plunged. And we propose now, as a last act, to do what no business man would do, to impair the security we have and to exchange good security for poorer security, to add $5,000,000 to the present loan, and we propose to do that in face of the fact that the company making this application, asking for this rearrangement of securities and this additional loan, is a company with $14,500,000 of its own money which it can use. The people of Canada will condemn this act of the Government, and insist that the company shall use its own money for the purpose of extricating itself from its own difficulties before it calls on the people of Canada to furnish money for that purpose.

In the past 20 years the keen observer of public events will have noticed many remarkable things in connection with the railway development and the railway history of America. Anyone who has followed the events of the last 20 years will have noticed the operations of the Credit Mobilier in connection with the Union Pacific Railway. He will have noticed, on looking over the field in the United States, that the enormous sum of $3,700,000,000 in that time have been abstracted by railway monopolies, equivalent to over $70 per head for every man, woman and child in the United States. He will see that Vanderbilt has secured of this amount $100,000,000, that Jay Gould has secured $80,000,000, and he will be able to run all the way down to the small fry, who have taken $1,000,000 apiece. He will see all these things; but this is the first instance in railway history of a Government being chained to the chariot wheels of a triumphant and unscrupulous corporation, and robbing the people of money for its masters to spend. The people of Canada have a right to demand that the Government shall answer why they have not called upon the company to expend its own money, why this country has been asked to furnish $5,000,000 and to impair the value of their securities, when the company has $14,288,000 laid away, to be paid to itself from time to time as dividends. I shall support the motion of the hon. member for West Huron.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not propose to follow the arguments of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, or to travel very much outside of the record, which appears to me as quite sufficient to engage the attention of any hon. member who desires to address the House. The building of the road, the original contract, the various matters which have been dealt with by the hon. gentlemen who have addressed us from the other side of the House, have all been discussed before, and some of them have been passed upon by the people. The original contract was made in the Session of 1880-81. All the charges which can be formulated against that contract were argued, and argued with great ability, by hon. gentlemen opposite. Public meetings were held shortly afterwards, and we had the general election, in 1882, with a result which I need not state and which we all know, that the Government that made that contract was returned here with a majority as large as it had in the preceding Parliament. It would be absurd, therefore, to follow the lead the hon. gentleman has offered, as to the propriety of making that contract. It would be absurd to follow into many matters which have been discussed since 1882, and last year especially, when the loan was made, and the Act was passed by which that loan was secured. At present we have to deal with this matter: that the company have come down and have announced that they require more assistance; that their calculations have failed; that in order to carry out the work they have undertaken they will need from us, or need to obtain elsewhere, more money than was anticipated. And the Government of this country—they have had the alternative presented to them of saying that we will close the security we hold upon you, we will go into possession of your road, we will exact the terms of our mortgage; or they have had the option, which they have adopted, of giving to this company power to raise other $15,000,000, by which it is hoped and believed the company will be able to carry to a conclusion the great work of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with its branches and connections, and with those branches and connections, together with the main line, fully and completely equipped. Well, I need not discuss, Sir, which of these alternatives would have been the proper one to adopt, because on deliberation hon. gentlemen opposite, in a resolution which was no doubt well considered, have placed before us their alternative scheme. That scheme relieves members of this House from addressing it on the subject of other matters outside the proposition of the Government and the one presented by the Opposition. On the part of the Government, holding as we do a lien upon all this property, it is proposed to divide our security. They propose a limit as to one portion of the loan; they propose to say that it shall be on the railway itself, and as to the other they are willing to trust to the security of the lands. And so far as the railway is concerned and its various branches and connections, they are willing that, in addition to the security which we hold upon it to the extent of our loan, that they should invite others to come in and participate with us, and, in point of fact, to become sharers with us in the security, provided they advance the other $15,000,000. Now, that is the proposition, and it is one which I think the House and the country will accept in preference to the one proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, which is as follows:—

"Canada, in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, gave the company vast aids, which were declared to be ample and final; Canada, in 1884, gave the company great additional aids, which were again declared to be ample and final; the shareholders of the company have already divided among themselves about $7,000,000 in dividends, and have on deposit with the Government about $14,000,000 more, to provide future dividends for themselves for over eight years to come, while they affirm that the railway will be profitable from the day of its opening; in the opinion of this House, the shareholders, if they desire more money for their operations, should propose to utilise their deposit for future dividends instead of asking Canada to impair its existing securities to make large further advances, and to allow the enterprise to be charged with $15,000,000 additional capital, the interest upon which must be borne by the trade of this country."

Mr. CHARLTON.

I shall confine myself, in the few observations I propose offering, to these two different propositions. It is, Sir, I admit, but proper and fair and right, when the company has come again to the Government to ask for assistance, that we should scrutinise and see that the money that they have already received—the vast and great sums, as no doubt they have been, which the country has given to the road—have been properly, fairly and reasonably expended. And it would be a good ground for refusing further relief, further extension, if we became satisfied, from the papers which have been laid before us and the enquiries which have been made on behalf of the Government, that those moneys have not been properly and fairly allocated. I will deal very briefly with that part of the subject. I find, Sir, that upon what is called the main line, what may be termed, to use the language of the leader of the Opposition, the contract line, there has been an expenditure, according to the return made to us by Mr. Miall,—and, of course, I am speaking of the expenditure up to the end of the year—of over $53,000,000. East of that main line, on what is known as the Canada Central, the Occidental Road to Montreal, which is no doubt a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway system, there has been an expenditure in acquisition and in keeping the road in repair and renewal of $4,213,758, while to the east and west I suppose, mostly, however, to the east, there has been an expenditure in the acquisition of branches and connections of $5,857,224. Equipment on the main line, and I suppose that also covers equipment on the branch lines—it is needless, in the view I take, to divide them—$9,168,755. Now, these are the sums which we find have been expended, and the cost, according to the enquiry which was made, and which satisfied the officer sent on behalf of the Government, that that sum of money had been actually expended in the construction of the road. To aid in that they have received from the Government $20,240,317 on the subsidy, and they have received on the loan the sum of $18,626,600. Then in addition to that, they have realised by the sale of land grant bonds $8,702,080. Altogether in round numbers from public sources, $20,000,000 on account of subsidy, and $18,000,000 from the loan made last Session, and $8,750,000 out of the proceeds of the public lands, or altogether $47,569,000. If we take the money that they have expended, and which I have stated to you, except the one sum of interest, you find they have expended $68,083,580, to which has to be added the $5,057,000 which I spoke of a moment ago as being laid out in the acquisition of branch lines and connections—altogether, something over $35,075,887. In excess of the moneys they have received from the Government. Now, if these expenditures have been wisely made, if they have been made with due regard to the interest of a great transcontinental line, although we may criticise them, we have no right to refuse further assistance, because those expenditures have not exactly been made as we expected when the contract was first given. Speaking for myself, I supposed that the company would have confined their building operations to what is called the main line, that they would have done, as the hon. gentleman who last addressed us said they ought to have done, expended the money in building the road from Callander, westward. The company, however, preferred the other course, and I believe their course was the better one. They preferred not to end the line at Callander, not to build a Canadian Pacific Railway terminating in the wilderness, but to acquire at the earliest possible moment, the means by which the seaboard could be reached, and at an early day, and I believe with the concurrence of the great majority of the members of this House, they acquired the Canada Central, and ultimately that part of the Quebec railway terminating in Montreal. And but for unforeseen circumstances, they would long since have reached the city of Quebec. Now, it is possible for us to say that that was not a wise expenditure. It is possible to say that the expenditures in acquiring these other feeders, which help so much to insure the success of the Canadian Pacific Railway were not proper and wise expenditures. The choice to make, as it appears, was this: If this great trunk line is built without feeders or assistance, it must be operated for several years at a very great loss; and we have only to refer to the report made by the Government during the period my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was leading the Administration, to show that it was then assumed that the road must be operated at a great loss, and that loss would have to be charged to the capital account. The company said: We will connect the line to reach the seaboard, so that the moment the road is opened up it will be operated on a paying basis; and I venture to say that between these courses, the one adopted by the company has been the more prudent one. I am quite willing, and I believe the people of this country are quite willing to assume that was a wise and prudent expenditure. It is useless, then, to separate the money expended east of Callander or west of Callander, or in connections here or there. I do not mean to say that those expenditures should be endorsed in every respect; but taken as a whole, I venture to say that the course taken by the company was the best in the interest of the company itself; it was taken by wise and prudent men anxious to make this company a success. But it is said—and this is the gravamen of the charge which I principally rise to answer—that may be so; but that the money has come out of the pockets of the people, and these speculators, while spending the public money, while nominally complying with the terms of the contract, while nominally paying in $5,000,000, while raising their capital, first to $25,000,000, and afterwards to $100,000,000, have taken good care that what they gave to the company with one hand they took back from the company with the other. It has been said, and almost demonstrated—because figures can be made to show almost anything, as they are used, as some are inserted and some omitted—that the $24,500,000 odd, which the company had subscribed over and above the original $5,000,000, had been actually taken back by the company and kept to secure high dividends. That was a grave charge to make, and if true, it should cause this House to pause before granting aid to a company which had dealt in this manner; and if the further charge was proved, that they had $14,000,000 on hand, it would certainly be the height of absurdity for a company in that position to come to the people of Canada and say: Notwithstanding all the aid you have given us, notwithstanding the loan of last year, and notwithstanding that we have $14,000,000 to our credit, we want you to lend us $5,000,000 now, and permit us to borrow on equal terms with you another $10,000,000, while in the meantime we retain in our own hands $14,000,000 for the purpose of securing our future dividends. Let us look at the figures and see how far this charge is correct, and what the proper answer is to make to it, if answer there be. In the first place, the amount advanced for the acquisition of stock has been correctly stated by the officers of the company, and is not at all in controversy by any one. It is in the neighborhood of $29,500,000. That money is represented, it is quite true, in the sum of $65,000,000 of stock, as paid-up capital; and that is a matter I propose to deal with later on. Well, what has become of that $29,500,000? According to the representations made by hon. gentlemen opposite, $24-

000,000 of that amount has been actually swallowed up in dividends, past, present, and to come. Is that really so? I think I shall be able to show that that is not an accurate statement, to say the least of it. The dividends which have been paid up to the 31st of December, as shown by the returns, amount to the sum—a very considerable sum, I admit—of $5,378,000. The money intended to secure dividends for the future is properly stated at $14,288,288. But, Sir, here is just where the main point comes in. That $14,000,000 did not come out of the money of the company—the money that had been provided by the company—or, all of it did not. Of that sum, there was the sum of $7,380,912 advanced by the Government, which forms a part of the debt of the company, which is a charge upon the undertaking, and which is to that extent a burden on the stockholders interest in the road. If it is to be taken on one side of the account, it must be taken on the other. If you treat it as capital, you will add it to the $29,500,000; if you do not treat it as capital, but just as it is, then it is an indebtedness of the road to the Government at present, charged on the security of the undertaking, which diminishes the value of the stock and the property of the road to the stockholders. The result is that of that $14,000,000, the company really advanced out of their own funds the sum of $6,907,376, making a total of $12,285,376 appropriated to the payment of dividends already earned or to be earned during the next eight or nine years. To make this statement perfectly clear and complete, I add $650,000 paid as a supplementary dividend on the 1st of February last, in addition to the 1½ per cent. paid by the Government out of the moneys deposited in their hands, and out of which they agreed to pay 3 per cent. per annum. But from this statement there is in fairness to be deducted the net earnings of the company during the period, which no person will say are not fairly applicable to the payment of dividends. These net earnings during the period amounted to $1,626,064. So that out of the $29,568,123, there have been appropriated in the way I have stated to dividends—not, as was stated on the other side of the House, or, as proved by figures which were certainly delusive, 24 per cent.—amounting to $11,309,312. The other $18,000,000, the balance of the $29,500,000, has gone into the road, every dollar of it, and in addition to that the company have borrowed, and at the end of the year had a floating debt of nearly $7,000,000 more. Now this transaction is an extraordinary one. I do not at all pretend to say it is not an unusual and an extraordinary one, but there can be no object in exaggeration. Let us know the facts just as they are, let us deal with those facts as they are, for there is no object in misrepresenting or distorting them. If this company had deliberately and for the purpose of securing to themselves the payment of this dividend for a given term of years, if they had stored that money away in the hands of the Government as they did, there would be no language too strong for their condemnation. But I do not think any person has asserted that when Mr. Stephens, in 1883, upon the advice, as I have understood, of the most able financial men, not merely in this country but in New York and elsewhere, resorted, in order to float the stock, to this plan of putting money in the hands of the Government. I do not think there is an hon. member in this House who will say he did not do it in the most complete good faith. Whether it was a wise scheme or not is another question, but that he did it honestly and with the desire of floating the securities, in order to carry out the scheme which he had undertaken and build the road without coming back to Parliament, I think is beyond all question and doubt. How was it done? The stock had been floated, as the House will remember, at that time, to the amount of $55,000,000. $25,000,000 had been taken by the original promoters, the other $30,000,000 had been floated by a syndicate in New-York at $10,000,000 at a time, and at prices varying a trifle over—I do not remember the exact figures—50 per cent. Well, the stock was selling at these dates at prices something over the amount at which the syndicate had undertaken to float it; and it is not unknown to us all that in a large operation of that kind, the stock, taken by the syndicate in vast quantities must be taken at a sum which will allow some margin to the gentlemen who are speculating or endeavoring to float it, and that it is not taken at the actual prices at which it can be sold at retail in the market. But the stock began rapidly to decline. The impossibilities of floating another dollar of it became apparent. It was down to 50½ somewhere about the day that Mr. Stephen approached the Government with this scheme. It had been put upon the market by these gentlemen as is shown in one of the returns here, some at 50, some 52½ and another lot, I think, at 51. But it could be acquired in open market in any quantity, no matter how small, for somewhere about 50½. Now what was to be done? Let us understand the scheme of finance which the company had started with. They had paid their $5,000,000 according to their contract. I do not know whether it was anticipated at that time that that $5,000,000, with the Government assistance, would be sufficient for the work; but if that was the anticipation, the company were soon disturbed from any such pleasing delusion, and they had then to do one of two things. They could not, and no person acquainted with financial matters will suppose it was possible, to sell the stock at par. There is not any financial man who will pretend to say, upon his standing, that the balance of the stock to raise this money could have been floated at anything like par. Then they might have done what is usually done and what later was proposed. They might have bonded the road and placed their bonds at the head of their stock, and sold them for what they could realise. Now, after what we know, seeing that with all these great advantages of which we hear so much, and of which hon. gentlemen opposite are never tired of telling us, we find the stock was down the other day to 35 or 36 per cent, is it possible to suppose that, if they had bonded the road, they could have bonded it on any terms better than those on which they afterwards floated the stock? And there would have been this difference: If they had bonded the road, they would have been virtually wiping themselves out and allowing the bondholders to step in and become the contractors of the Government instead of those who originally undertook to build the road. Their argument was this: We cannot float the stock in this way, that is perfectly certain, at par; we cannot bond our road and sell our bonds for anything like the par value. If we do bond it, we run the risk, at an early day, of having ourselves wiped out, because the bonds will be in default. The other scheme is this. We will place no bonds on the road, but keep it as a stock transaction and sell the stock on the best terms we can, and the new stock holders and we will stand on an equal footing. I do not know there is very much fault to be found with that; I do not know that it made any very great difference in the matter of finance; I do not know whether there was very much choice except the one that they desired, to keep control of the enterprise in which they had so great an interest. They floated of their stock $30,000,000 for about half its par value, realising $15,750,000, and they were done; but the road was not built. Something else had to be tried. What was the scheme that was formed? They said: We will make this stock, $45,000,000 of which we have yet to dispose of, such a security that there will be no difficulty in disposing of it for a fair sum, and we will deposit in the hands of the Government, in order to do that, enough to guarantee a minimum dividend of three per cent. for the next ten years. That will enable us to go into the market and float our stock, and what will be the result?

Mr. McCARTHY.

Here they were holding $55,000,000 of stock. They desired to bring in as partners with them, as stock holders upon an equal footing, in the building of the road, the holders of $45,000,000 more of stock, and they said: We will hypothecate, in order that you, coming in and representing $45,000,000 of stock will have a certainty for a limited period, at all events, of a reasonable dividend, the whole concern, our own as well as yours, which will guarantee to you, during that period, a minimum dividend of three per cent. But although for 10 years you are guaranteed this dividend you as business men, understand perfectly well that when the 10 years will be up, you will find that sum which has gone to pay your dividends ahead of you; you will find it a charge upon your concern; you will find it a sum that you will have to meet out of the future earnings, if there are any; in point of fact, you have merely anticipated the earnings of the road for the first 10 years and trusted to luck for the period that will come afterwards. That was the plan, and it did not succeed. And why? Because people saw very clearly that that was after all really paying themselves out of their own money, paying themselves dividends out of their own capital, and that, at the end of 10 years, they would be met with the difficulties which ordinary stock-holders would have to meet in the inception of a transaction, as to whether there will be sufficient not merely to pay dividends in the future, but to recoup to the capital what had been in the meantime drawn upon in order to make the security available. Well, it failed, and the result was the application to the Government made immediately afterwards for the loan which was granted by the Act of last Session. But how was the transaction carried out? I may as well mention it here, although I will have to refer to it later. It was carried out by a solemn agreement made between the Government of the one part, the bank of Montreal on the second part, and the Canadian Pacific Railway on the third part, in which the Government undertook to pay the bank enough to put the bank in funds to pay this 3 per cent. during these 10 years to all the stock-holders; by which the credit of the bank, the highest financial institution of the country, became pledged to see that that was done and that the very highest possible security was therefore accorded to the stock-holders who might embark in the enterprise. I mention that now, though it is not very pertinent to my present line, but I will come to it by-and-bye, when it becomes a most important matter in the consideration presented to us in the resolution moved on the opposite side. Let me for a moment deal with the figures which I find presented to the House as bringing about the other result. As I understand the argument of the leader of the Opposition—I have since read it and I think I correctly understand it, I listened to it with much attention, and it was of course put before us in a very striking manner, and was calculated to arouse and did undoubtedly engage the attention of us all—the hon. gentleman spoke of those $14,000,000 as having come out of the capital of the company, whereas, as I have demonstrated, something less than $7,000,000 was the amount. It is true that there are $14,000,000 in the hands of the Government, but, if you are to charge this $14,000,000 as against the capital, so as to reduce the balance of that capital, you must, as a fair book-keeper, add to the $29,500,000 the $7,000,000. You cannot charge it on one side of the account without taking it into consideration on the other, and, if you do that, then the result is just what I have indicated. It is said that this system of watering stocks is abominable. It is stated that the result will be, to us or to those whom we represent, an increase in their burdens for all time to come. It is stated that these results have followed from like causes on the other side. I do see that there is much analogy in watering the stock of a company which has been already established, which, as has been stated correctly is frequently done on the other side of the line, to the destruction of the value of this kind of securities, and this particular case. In this case there is no misunderstanding. All the facts are before us as clear as daylight. What the proper construction of law is, may be a matter of doubt. The facts, however, are perfectly well-known to us all, and those facts are that that $65,000,000 of capital is in reality represented by only $29,500,000. Then, in the settling of the rates which this railway company is to be permitted to earn, if the question of capital comes into account at all,—and of course it must come into account at some stage or other—the Administration of the day, whoever they may be, when that time arrives, will be negligent in their duty, will fail in their duty, if they calculate that the company are to realise profits on that $65,000,000, when, as the whole country knows, that only represents $29,500,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Why does the company pay the dividends on the full face value of the stock?

Mr. McCARTHY. I think my hon. friend misunderstands me. I have passed from that question of dividends and am now speaking about the earnings they would be entitled to get, not on the $65,000,000, but, as we know, on the $29,500,000. How are the rates fixed? They are fixed, as we know, by by-law. No toll can be levied until the by-law is in force, and the by-law does not come in force until the Governor General sanctions it. The rates are fixed from time to time, as we were promised they would be, because we know that a rate which may be fair to-day, with a small traffic, would be unreasonable and excessive in a few years when the traffic increases; and it would be the duty of the Government—nay, I trust it will be the duty of a railway commissioner before that day comes—to see that these rates are fixed upon a fair scale, not in regard to the watered stock or the watered capital of which we hear so much, but in regard to the money which has gone into the building of the line, and which has been $29,500,000 and not $65,000,000. It may be that, by-and-bye, some other administration—possibly the hon. gentlemen or their successors in a direct line—may at a distant day occupy seats on this side of the House, but, if so, I trust they will so regard the true meaning of the Statute, the true meaning of the law and the intention of Parliament, that the dividends will be regulated, not upon what is presented as the nominal sum, but upon the real actual sum which has been raised and paid into the coffers of the company by the various shareholders. That is a matter which, of course, it is important for us to consider with reference to this proposition, but after all, we find ourselves in this position: We find that we have to assist the company. I take it that the resolution proposed on the other side is an admission of that.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. They do not propose, of course, that it shall be done in this manner.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will deal with that presently, but I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman saying "Hear, hear."

Mr. BLAKE. I say "Hear, hear," to that dissentingly.

Mr. McCARTHY. You admit that we ought to assist the company, though you do not agree as to the mode?

Mr. BLAKE. No, I dissent.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, we will say that you dissent sub modo.

Mr. BLAKE. I dissent in all ways.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is not proposed—

Mr. BLAKE. It is opposed.

Mr. McCARTHY. I said proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is not proposed that we should foreclose our security.

Mr. BLAKE. The Secretary of State said so.

Mr. McCARTHY. I had not the pleasure of hearing the Secretary of State, but I am speaking from my own knowledge of this transaction. That was not proposed; it is not proposed here and it is not proposed on the other side. What is proposed to be done? We say you want $15,000,000 more; is it reasonable that you should have it? What do you require it for? You have a floating debt of $7,000,000. If we took over the road, these section men of whom the leader of the Opposition spoke in such feeling terms the other day, will not be allowed to go without their wages. We know that the honor and good name of this country would require that, if we took over this road, we should take over the honest debts, and should provide for the pay of the laborer whose labor has helped to build the road. That $7,000,000 is a proper expenditure. Then there is $5,000,000 more, as shown either in the report or in Mr. Stephen's observations, which are required for the better and more complete equipment of the road. Amidst all that we have heard of the history of railways in the United States, ending at Omaha and elsewhere, we have heard no objection to our Pacific railway being equipped in a manner second to none on the continent. This $5,000,000, added to the $7,000,000, makes $12,000,000. You want a little more to come and go upon. We think, therefore, that it is not unreasonable that you should be permitted to borrow $15,000,000 more or to float bonds to that extent, and we hope you will get as much as you can. In that case, where are they to get the money? I suppose they will obtain it if this scheme does not wholly collapse, if the hon. gentlemen will for once be patriotic, if they will not decry the securities the road has to offer, if they will confine their remarks to a criticism of the manner and the means, and will not run down the country and ruin the road and enable those who are opposed to the road—and the history of this railway shows that there are opponents on both sides of the Atlantic—to take the speech of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition in their hands in order to prove that, because of the curves and gradients and double curves, and the difficulties of the snow-slides, and all the rest, this road must be a failure and no one should lend the money. If the hon. gentleman will only merge the partisan and remember that Canada has some interest in this transaction, he will see that there will be no difficulty in the railway company floating this security and obtaining this $5,000,000 we are loaning to them as a temporary loan. But what is the alternative he has offered us? Why, if it had not been in the very phraseology of the leader of the Opposition, although it had been faintly hinted at by that hon. gentleman in his address, I would have thought that my hon. friend was incapable of asking this House or this country to accept such a proposition as that. What does it say? It is pretended on the face of this resolution that there are $14,000,000 belonging to this company in the hands of the Government but controlled by the company; that they have only to come to us and say: We want money to go on with the construction of our road and to pay our floating debt, and we ask you to release that $14,000,000 that we have, and we will pay our $7,000,000 of floating debt, we will pay the $5,000,000 we want for the equipment of the road, and we will require no more assistance. Was that an honest statement to present to this House, or to the people of this country? Is it possible—will any gentleman who has any reputation as a member of the profession to which I have the honor to belong, rise in his place here or anywhere else, and pretend that such a thing could possibly be done by the company in any shape or form? This money was placed in the hands of the Government and the contract was made with the Bank of Montreal, and the shares were sold upon the faith of it, as we know ten millions of it were, and we do not know how many shares changed hands between that time and this, how many people are interested in these shares, who have invested their money upon the good faith of Canada, with 3 per cent. in hand to pay them for the next ten years to come. Why, it was a proposal of repudiation, and in which the Bank of Montreal, the great financial institution of Canada, was also to be dragged down and disgraced. Sir, it is utterly impossible. A man who holds a share in that concern has a right to his dividend of 3 per cent., has an individual right and interest to that which not everyone of the other shareholders, if they were all united, could deprive him of. It is his individual property. It is not a matter which can be decided or dealt with by the stock-holders in meeting assembled, or by any number of stock-holders, but it is the individual property of men who have acquired that stock, either directly or indirectly, and on which they have the Government guarantee, backed up by the bank of Montreal, and they cannot be deprived of it by any person or by any means less than an Act of Parliament, which would be spoliation and depriving people of their private rights. Now, that is the alternative offered to us. Can we hesitate which we will accept? We may have been wise or unwise in undertaking the building of a Canadian Pacific Railway, but the most that can be said of us is, that we, a young country, are undertaking to build a great public work which in the whole history of nations has never been equalled by a country of resources so limited. But it cannot be said of Canada that its fair fame has yet been stained, as is proposed to be done by the leader of the Opposition, backed up by all his followers, and formally proposed here as the policy of a great party. Sir, one word more as to this dividend and I am done. I have stated and indicated that to some extent this was an unusual transaction. I have stated the justification of the railway company, but, whether that justification is a good one or a bad one, at all events it was an honest one. But I would ask these hon. gentlemen who are so careful of the interests of this country, who care little for its fair fame but are anxious for its dollars, I would ask them for one moment to say: Did they expect that the men who are building the Canadian Pacific Railway were to do it as an act of grace to the people of Canada? Did they expect that these men were to be remunerated and were to have a reasonable profit upon the investment which they made? Why, we know the law sanctions the payment, during construction, of a dividend not exceeding 6 per cent; we know that on the Statute Book that is deemed to be a reasonable dividend. My hon. friend from West Durham stated that, looking at this contract, looking at all that had taken place, that that dividend would not be exacted. The contract has adopted the general provisions of the Railway Act, but he says that that particular clause is not applicable to this company. If my memory does not fail me there never was a suggestion made that during the period of construction they could not get a reasonable and proper dividend. Now let us see what these dividends are going to be. I have shown you that there is $11,000,000 of the company's capital paid or hypothecated for that purpose. I have to add to that that they have borrowed and the company is mortgaged for another some of over $7,000,000 which was advanced by the Government for a certain period. When that period has expired, when the 10 years are up, instead of that coming into their hands, as the hon. member represented, free and clear, that great road, with all its prospects and great future, will be burdened to the extent of that sum of over $7,000,000 that it has not in point of fact received, but that is due to them in the ordinary course. And what would they have earned during the same period? What would have been the amount during the same period. My hon. friend who last addressed the House has made a calculation. He tells us that taking the stock of the original contractors, the $5,000,000 first deposited, and the $5,000,000 afterward paid, and the whole stock transactions together, spread over a period of years, it yields an interest of something less than 7 per cent. I accept the statement. And, Sir, is 7 per cent. such an unusual profit? Is it so unusual a profit that we are all to stand aghast here at the hon. gentleman's statement?

Mr. McCARTHY

Mr. CHARLTON. In addition to that are the net earnings of the road.

Mr. McCARTHY. The net earnings of the road, but the first thing the net earnings of the road have to do will be to pay back this money which is a burden on the road, the seven millions which have been anticipated. The company in their last statement have announced that from this time out the last dividend of 5 per cent has been paid, and the stock-holders must be satisfied with the 3 per cent. dividend which is provided for them in the hands of the Government. Well, we know, if we know anything about railways, what will happen; we know that will happen which has happened with other lines, and I think we may say it has already happened to some extent. A road is built, the Government engineer and the Governor in Council permit trains to run upon it; to that extent it is open. But by no means is the capital account closed. There are the sidings, the transportation facilities and other matters to be provided for, which are not needed in the first five or six years of the road. I am glad to know that the hon. member for North Norfolk has told us that it is undoubtedly good security, that this is a paying road, that there are millions in it, that there is more in it than there has been in anything of the kind ever known. We accept that. We are glad to know that not merely the $15,000,000, and this $5,000,000 we are about to advance temporarily, will come back, but we are also glad to know that the balance of the whole sum advanced last year will be restored to us, and restored with interest, and if it is restored to us with interest, if the people of this country do not pay more than $25,000,000 of money and 25,000,000 acres of land, which was valueless until this road pierced the prairie, and which is estimated by some at $1 and by others at $2 per acre and which has been sold in some places at an average of over $3 per acre—the people will be perfectly satisfied with the result of the contract. Taking it all in all I think I have shown that the scheme which is proposed is a fair one. Although the financial transaction of 1883 was an unusual one, it was an honest one. If it has damaged any person it has damaged the company, because it is a charge on the undertaking, and the company and the share-holders are one in that, and the interest not coming up to quite 7 per cent. is not so extravagant as will alarm the people. I think I have said enough to induce this House on the simple question of repudiation, and bearing in mind that the good faith of Canada has been for the first time deliberately proposed to be bargained away for a money consideration, to reject with indignation the proposal made from the other side of the House.

Mr. DAVIES. I regret very much that the hon. gentleman should have lent the weight of his distinguished name and reputation to the charge which has been made against the proposition made by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron). The hon. gentleman has not scrupled to use language which, coming from his lips, is somewhat extraordinary. He has not scrupled to charge hon. gentlemen who have made a proposition which to my mind seems a very simple one and one very easily understood, with desiring to repudiate the solemn contract made by this country and to be guilty of the crime of spoliation of widows and orphans. He has been cheered by hon. gentlemen behind him, and I am willing to credit those hon. gentlemen who cheered him with having cheered in utter ignorance of the meaning of the resolution. I cannot express the same opinion with respect to the hon. gentleman who made the statement. I believe that hon. gentleman did understand the meaning of the resolution, and I very much regret that he should have lent the weight of his acute intellect to an attempt to mislead this House, to draw the wool over the eyes of hon. members, as it were, and to try and lead the country to believe that there has been a proposition submitted from this side of the House, of spoliation and repudiation, involving the dishonor of the country of which we are all so proud. In dealing with a few of the arguments presented by the hon. gentleman, I will call attention to his opening statement. The hon. gentleman asked the House to recollect that if the money which has been received had been expended by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, we had no cause to complain. The hon. gentleman went on to say that the company, preferring not to confine their operations to the contract, but to enter upon projects of their own, went outside of the contract with the Government. That they entered into large speculations in other parts of the country, and some of them for different objects, and it was useless to confine the discussion to the subject matter of the contract entered into between this country and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and that he did not propose to address his argument on that line at all, but to discuss this question as between all the contracts, all the undertakings which the company have entered into, and if he could show the House and the country that in any operation the company got into deep water, and are in debt, whether with the object of carrying out the Canadian Pacific Railway, or of putting millions into their own individual pockets—if he could show they have lost money and are in need of money, then he had proved the proposition that it is right for the country to come to their assistance. That is the statement with which the hon. gentleman started, and it is on that line that all his argument has proceeded. I call the attention of the House to that fact, because we have to watch his specious arguments, in order to see if they have any application whatever to the contract, which alone we have a right to discuss, and which alone we have a right to imply that the company intended to carry out. I find it very difficult to discuss this question calmly and coolly with hon. gentlemen opposite, for this reason: that the ground they take one day is changed the next. I remember when we discussed this question last year, or a question akin to this one, one involving the advance of a large number of millions to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, when they found the country stood aghast at the proposition they then made, were quick to come to the front and say it must be remembered that our proposition was to be discussed simply upon the basis of the contract we have entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and on no other basis. I find the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) laid it down in black and white. He said we must not go outside of the contract. Here are his words:

"It should never be forgotten that the contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the people of Canada is for the construction of a railway west from Callander to the Pacific Ocean. Everything they do east of that is done simply as an ordinary business corporation, and Parliament has, in fact, little or nothing to do with it."

Mr. DAVIES.

Now, when it suits the purpose of the spokesman of the Government, he comes forward and says that we have everything to do with the operations of the company east of Callander. I shall have very little to say, he says, with the operations west of Callander; but I will confine my argument to the operations they have entered upon east of Callander, in which they have sunk money, which they now ask the country to come forward and supply. The hon. gentleman remarked, and I think he remarked very fairly and honestly, that when the contract was entered into between the company and the Dominion it was understood by both parties that for many years the running of the road would be a losing operation. He said it was so stated by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He might have gone further, and remarked that the statement of the hon. member for East York had been endorsed by the late Minister of Railways and by leading members on his own side, and by the Prime Minister of the country. But does the hon. gentlemen forget, or can any hon. gentleman who has read the debates of that day forget the fact, which the hon. gentleman states to-day, that the running of the road would be a losing operation for some years to come, and that that very fact was made the reason for granting to the company subventions largely in excess of what otherwise would have been granted, magnificent subventions, exceeding those ever granted to any railway corporation in the world, and that it was necessary to put the company in that position, so that they should not be absolutely ruined in operating the road during its early history.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIES. I therefore say that the great subventions, the large grants of land, the grants of millions of money, the monopolies, hateful in themselves and adverse to the interests of the people, and which, in the future, will be a curse to the land, were attempted to be justified by the fact that this company were said to be entering into a contract the carrying out of which would involve them in much loss. I am not surprised at the jeering allusions with which my references to monopolies have been received by a certain class on the other side, and by the Acting Minister of Railways himself. Monopolies which are odious to the people are not odious to railway corporators. Monopolies which are hateful and injurious to the people are not hateful or injurious to those whose interests are not with the people, but opposed to the people; and therefore I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman should jeer and sneer at any allusion to the monopolies which were given to that company, and which his distinguished predecessor promised this House, only twelve months ago, were to be surrendered by that company—a promise which he, a few weeks ago, took care to repudiate.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. DAVIES. "No," says the hon. gentleman. I intend to call the attention of the House to that matter a little further on, and I leave it now, while I refer to two or three other remarks which were made by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The hon. gentleman stated that the remarkable speech made by the leader of the Opposition in this House contained statements so serious in their character that unless they were refuted there could be but one conclusion remaining in the minds of the House and the country. The hon. gentleman essayed the task of exposing the misrepresentations, as he terms them, of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman did not scruple to say that his task was to show the House and the country that the statements made by the leader of the Opposition regarding that road, the building of that road, the location of that road, the grades and curves of that road, the money expended on that road, the manner in which the road was financed by its corporators, were incorrect in themselves, I leave it to the House to say; I leave it to the country, after it has read my hon. friend's speech; I leave it to the gentlemen, who are about to invest in stock, and whom he feared would be frightened from their investment after reading the speech of the leader of the Opposition; I leave it to them to say whether my hon. friend, with the exception of one statement, has even made an attempt to answer any one of the serious and grave charges made by the leader of the Opposition. I say, deliberately, at the outset, that the learned and able man put forward by the Government of this country to answer the serious charges of the leader of the Opposition never attempted, never dared to refer to one of those charges, excepting the one with reference to the depositing of the money for the purpose of paying interest to the stockholders. I want that emphasised and remembered; I want the country to remember that the charges made by the leader of the Opposition in that remarkably able and brilliant speech, which, up to this moment, has not been answered, which he rose to answer, was not attempted to be answered by him, except with reference to one particular charge to which I shall refer. Now, my hon. friend stated that if the charge made, that they had repaid themselves the capital which they invested in that company, was true, it was a very serious charge, so serious as, in his opinion, to destroy all confidence in the company. The hon. gentleman stated that the total receipts from capital stock were $29,000,000. He went on to say that the $14,000,000 deposited to secure dividends, and the $5,000,000 already paid out of previous deposits, were not paid out of the proceeds of stock, but out of something else. That was the hon. gentleman's statement; it was that, or nothing at all.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. That was the very language he used. Sir, I want to ask that hon. gentleman what money were they paid out of? You say that money came from another source. Did it come from a source provided by the company? That is the point. Was the money which was deposited by the company in the hands of its trustees for the purpose of paying interest on their stock the company's own money? If it was their own money, it matters not 10 cents whether it came from the sales of stock or from other sources provided by them. The proposition is this, that they have taken money capital of their own, raised by them, either from the sale of stock or other some source, and have placed that money in the hands of a trustee on trust, and repaid it out to themselves and others as stockholders, year by year, in the form of dividends, and they have taken care that in the repayment out of that money in the form of dividends, they themselves, the originators of the company, the corporators of the company, shall be repaid at the rate of 24 per cent. on the $5,000,000 they have invested. Now, Sir, that is the proposition. The money is theirs. The hon. gentleman says we propose a policy of repudiation, a policy of spoliation. I deny it. We do not propose to touch the money, and the hon. gentleman knows it. There never was a proposition from this side to lay violent legislative or other hands on the money. The money is there on trust, and we propose that it shall remain there. We do not propose, we do not suggest, that it shall be touched, but we say this: We say, if you gentlemen, the shareholders of this company, are in want of money, if you come to us and ask us to give you this money which you have deposited with us to pay your interest, then we are willing to yield to you, and to pay this money out. Sir, what is the proposition? I do not know that I would have spent any time upon this subject if the learned gentleman, who has a character in this country for honor and probity, the reputation of having an acute intellect—had not waxed wroth and strong in his denunciation of this side for doing what he must know they never proposed to do. What is the proposition moved by the hon. member from West Huron (Mr. Cameron):

Mr. DAVIES.

"Canada, in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, gave the company vast aids, which were declared to be ample and final."

Is that true? Was it not only said, when the aid were first proposed, that they were ample and final, but was it not heard from every gentleman on that side who spoke last year, that when the supplemental aid was given it was to be ample and final beyond all question?

"Canada, in 1884, gave the company fresh additional aids, which were again declared to be ample and final."

That is true. The hon. gentleman does not deny it.

"The shareholders of the company have already divided among themselves about seven millions in dividends, and have on deposit with the Government about fourteen millions more to provide future dividends for themselves for over eight years to come, while they affirm that the railway will be profitable from the day of its opening."

Is that proposition true? Is it true that at the present moment, in the coffers of this Government, held by them as trustees for the shareholders, those shareholders have on deposit to their credit $14,000,000 of money, and that the Government are bound to dispose of that year by year in the payment of dividends? Is that true? Does the hon. gentleman deny it? He does not; he admits it. The money is there for the purpose of being repaid in the form of dividends. It was capital money put there for that purpose, which they should have applied in the prosecution of the work. They had other objects in view, I acknowledge—objects which the hon. gentleman sought to justify; but the facts are, that it was capital, that it is the capital, that it is lying there now, that it is upon these trusts I have mentioned that the Government are bound to pay it out, if it is ever paid, to these men. Ah, says the hon. gentleman, the securities of the president and the other corporators, for the payment of interest upon the money they have invested, are known. They are secured, come weal or come woe. The railway may fail; the North-West may fill up with immigrants, or it may not; riots and rebellions may come; Canada may become crippled in her resources; she may become almost bankrupt; but one thing we have secured beyond peradventure, that for the next five or six years we shall get 24 per cent. on five millions of money. With these facts staring us in the face, what does the proposition of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) declare? I want to ask calmly and coolly hon. gentlemen opposite, and my hon. friend who has just sat down, whether he has given a fair explanation of this resolution:

"In the opinion of this House, the shareholders—"

Shall be spoiled of their money? Canada shall repudiate her obligation, if it be an obligation, for the payment of dividends? No:

"The shareholders, if they desire more money for their operations, should propose to utilise their deposits for future dividends instead of asking Canada to impair its existing securities to make large further advances."

How can the hon. gentleman, in the face of that resolution, so plain and distinct, justify his serious charge. We do not propose any repudiation, any spoliation of the widow or orphan, or even of the millionaire. We propose that these gentlemen, having got into deep water in their financial and railway operations, shall not get $15,000,000 more money to carry on their financial operations in the future; but having that $15,000,000 in their own hands, ready to be paid by us at any time they ask for it, we say: If your desire more money take this $15,000,000; we will hand it over to you whenever you want it; but do not come upon the tax-burdened people of Canada, whose backs already bear sufficient burdens, and ask them to take the $15,000,000 in their coffers and dispense it to you at the rate of 24 per cent. upon $5,000,000 of the capital you invested in the enterprise, as well as to put their hands in their pockets and give you $5,000,000 more as a loan,

Sir, a more impudent proposition was never made to any Government. Only a Government who felt themselves absolutely secure from the people, because they have a majority that will vote anything they ask, would allow such a proposition to be submitted to them. Common sense, common justice, every consideration that should weigh with these gentlemen, who have the fortunes of Canada in their charge, should induce them, at the time this syndicate came to ask for more money, to reply: Of course, gentlemen of the syndicate, you can have the money; we have lots of it; there are $15,000,000 lying to your credit there in the bank; call your shareholders together; let them express their desire to have $10,000,000, or even the whole of this money, and you can get it without any hesitation on our part, and use it to implement the contract which you have entered into with the people of Canada, and which you say you are unable to carry out without more money. Now, I think I have answered the hon. gentleman upon the only serious point on which he challenged the statement of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. But the hon. gentleman goes on to say: You must remember that large numbers of these shareholders have been induced to take the stock because of this deposit being made. Does anybody deny it? Nobody is seeking to take that money from them; the Opposition are not asking that; they are only saying that if these men, who have invested their money on the faith of that deposit being made, now see that it is necessary in their own interest to withdraw the money, in order that they may do better with it, let them come forward and express their desire. It is not for the injury of the widow and orphan. Oh, how these hon. gentlemen's hearts bleed for the widow and orphan. I have heard a good deal about millionaires in this country and in the old country; if I have heard it once I have heard it fifty times ad nauseam, that this company is composed, not of widows and orphans, but of rich men, millionaires, any one of whom could build the railway without the assistance of the Government; and now, when it suits their purpose, the millionaire is dropped and the widow and the orphan come to the surface. Who are they? Let us hear their names. The president of the company is not a widow, nor an orphan either. We were told, only two days ago, I think, by the hon. Secretary of State, that he is a man possessed of untold millions. What about the other gentlemen who compose the syndicate? Have we not been told—has it not been thundered in our ears, Session after Session—that they are millionaires, and that in that fact we have the best guarantee that they will carry the railway to completion, and that we shall secure the running of it afterwards? But it turns out now that they have all been transformed into widows and orphans. But, says my hon. friend, nobody can deny that Mr. Stephen, when he took the $15,000,000 from the capital and deposited it with the Government, for the purpose of guaranteeing the dividends on the stock, did it in good faith. Perhaps he did; but I will take his own statement in the month of May, last, and according to that statement, whatever may have been his good faith, his object was to boom the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway from 40 per cent., the average price at which it was issued to him and the rest of the syndicate, up to 80, which he hoped it would reach, and thereby put into the pockets of himself and his coadjutors $10,000,000 of cash. Sir, we have the statement here, not made haphazard, in the heat of debate, but the written statement, over the signature of George Stephen himself, that his object in doing that was to send the stock of the company up; and neither he nor any other financial man could understand why that stock did not go up to 80, and why he did not pocket his $10,000,000. I doubt very much if the scheme he had in view had succeeded—if the stock had boomed up to 80 and had then been disposed of—whether you would have had the same gentleman applying for aid to-day. Recollect, there is no personal responsibility on the part of these gentlemen. If they could have realised $10,000,000 profit on $10,000,000 invested, shrewd financial men as they are, they would have pocketed their $20,000,000 and walked out of the undertaking, and said: Let you, people of Canada, finish the contract as you please. No matter what his good faith was, look to his object, and I say it was personal gain for himself and those associated with him. There is nothing wrong in his desire to make money; he has a right to make it in every honest and legitimate way; but when his schemes "gang all a-glee," when they go to rack and ruin, when he cannot raise the money to carry out his contract, and will not put his hand into his own pocket in order to get it, it is pretty hard lines that he will leave the $15,000,000 in the Bank of Montreal to his credit, and ask the people of Canada to supply him with an additional advance of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. But, says my hon. friend, he had no personal object in view. He was going to put a large amount of other stock on the market, which had not already been taken up, and his object was to secure the dividends to his new shareholders. I like my hon. friend's ingenuousness; it was refreshing in the extreme. Everything that was done was done for the benefit of the new shareholders, for whom this little bait was set to induce them to take stock in the company. It was not at all for the benefit of the gentlemen who put in the first $5,000,000 and the second the $5,000,000, in order to hold $25,000,000 of stock. Oh, no. What is the fact? Did Mr. Stephen deposit money in the hands of the trustees simply to secure to the new stockholders the payment of their dividends? I say that is not true. He deposited the capital of the company for the purpose of diverting it to the payment of interest on his stock, which he held himself—to the $5,000,000 he and his associates have put in and the other $5,000,000 for which he and they took $20,000,000 of stock out of the company; and it was not simply or solely, not even largely, for the purpose of securing to these new stockholders the payment of their dividends, but for the purpose of making a sure nest egg, an investment which cannot be touched or impaired, an investment which will bring him 24 per cent. interest on a part of the money he and his friends invested, and 8 per cent. on the balance, for the next eight and a half years, the unexpired portion of the ten years. I was astonished that my hon. friend should have adopted the role which has been adopted for the last few years by one or two of the gentlemen on the front benches opposite; I was astonished that he should have added himself to those who claim the monopoly of honesty and patriotism. The hon. gentleman lectured the leader of the Opposition because, forsooth, he was devoid of patriotism, because he had no love for his country, because, in his career, heretofore, he had shown nothing but a desire to injure the country and the people. But I will place the record of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition against the record of the hon. member from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), or any gentleman on that side they can produce, and I will ask the people of the country who has shown the most self-abnegation? Who has shown the most patriotism? Who, at all times, has been most ready to sacrifice himself and his material interests on behalf of his country? My hon. friend asked him to become patriotic—and do what? Patriotism, in his eyes, consists in the suppression of the truth. My hon. friend asked him: Do not tell these awful stories about the curves, these dreadful stories about the gradients, do not tell the fact that the company have not yet got a line located through the Kicking Horse Pass and over the Selkirk hills, because, if you do, you may prevent the syndicate selling their stock in the English money market. I want to ask my hon. friend a solemn question. Was one, or were all of the facts stated by the leader of the Opposition, in the connection to which I have referred, untrue. Sir, we have had those statements made now for two or three days. We know that, if true, they are most damaging, if not ruinous, to our great transcontinental railway, to the great enterprise that we are now being called on to vote more millions of the people's money to sustain. If they are not true, patriotism calls upon my hon. friend to deny them. He was prompted; he had his brief from the Canadian Pacific Railway; I have no doubt he had his instructions and information. I do not say this in an insulting way at all. He had, when he took the responsibility of replying to statements carefully weighed and accurately made by the leader of the Opposition, to ascertain whether he could deny them or not; and if my hon. friend, with his heart bursting with patriotism, overwhelmed with love of country, not having any selfish interests to serve, but simply and solely desiring to advance the interests of the country to which he belongs, and at the same time to give a push to the Canadian Pacific Railway; if the hon. gentleman, standing in that position, and determined and desirous, and justly so, to deny any serious misstatement made by the leader of the Opposition, was not able, after a consultation with the solicitor of the company and with its vice-president, after consultation with all those who manage the Canadian Pacific Railway—if he was not able to deny any one of those serious statements, I say that this House has arrived at a more serious state of the debate than it has arrived at heretofore. I must say that when those statements were made by the leader of the Opposition I stood aghast at them. I hoped my hon. leader had been in some way or other misled in his estimates of the grades and the curves, and the total repudiation of the standard which the company had adopted a few years ago; and when I saw my hon. friend opposite calmly and coolly rise in his place and make the promises he made in opening, of what he was going to do, I hoped that some of the statements of the leader of the Opposition were going to be denied.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to say to the hon. gentleman, as he has repeated this several times, that I thought I had made it perfectly clear, when I opened, that I did not propose to discuss any except the one matter which I deemed pertinent to the subject in hand.

Mr. DAVIES. I took down the hon. gentleman's language, and I heard him say: "If the leader of the Opposition can, only for once, become patriotic, and sink his desire to injure the Canadian Pacific Railway, and cease making these statements about curves and grades, I will then respect him more than I do." I want to press that home. Are those statements true or untrue? If they are true, it is the highest patriotism to declare them, and I say the man who has the industry to find them out, in the first place, and the ability and moral courage to present them afterwards, is the man who has true patriotism. It is neither honest or patriotic to suppress the truth. I say, to go home to the monied men of England with a statement in your hand which is a suppression of the truth is tantamount to telling a lie; and I say that the man who is patriotic, is honest, because he desires to place his country in a true light. I am sick and tired of those men who are never satisfied except when they are indulging in wild exaggeration as to the present condition and future prospects of Canada. Our present condition is good enough and our future prospects are good enough, if fairly told, to justify us in claiming a share of the emigration of the old world, and in asking the monied people of the world to place a share of their investment in Canada, without telling a lie; and I say, if it is necessary, in order to obtain money from our English friends, to tell a lie, the sooner Canada's name is blotted out from the list of nations the better for her. Dishonesty and patriotism never have been associated, heretofore. They are inconsistent the one with the other. The true patriot must be an honest man, and he who tells the truth, not only to the foreigners but to his own people, is a patriotic as well as an honest man.

Mr. DAVIES.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DAVIES. When the House rose I was endeavoring to reply to the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), as to the impropriety or injustice of the proposition of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron). I contended then, as I contend now, that we have knocking at the doors of this Dominion the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We have them coming here in their corporate capacity, asking Parliament to advance them, in addition to the moneys we gave them last year, further sums of money, and to rearrange and readjust the securities we then took upon their property, so that they may be able to go into the money markets and place first mortgage bonds on those markets, and raise thereby $15,000,000 extra; and I said it was perfectly just and proper that we should reply to these shareholders, so knocking at our doors, that we had no money of our own to give them, but that we had a large sum of money belonging to themselves, which we held in trust, and which we were perfectly willing, at any time when their work required it, to hand over to them. I shall deal no further with that branch of the case, because it seems to me that the proposition is a just one, and the contention of my hon. friend was not tenable. I wish to refer shortly to the remarks made by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), when he replied to the leader of the Opposition. That hon. gentleman, with a modesty which was becoming to him, said at once that he would not attempt to reply to the great mass of figures which had been presented to the House by the leader of the Opposition. It could not have been expected that he would. He acknowledged the terrible force of the argument contained in the speech of my hon. friend. He acknowledged that, unless it could be replied to, it was irresistible, but he expressed the hope—nay, he went so far as to express the almost certain belief—that some gentleman who was to follow him would completely answer this financial argument and refute the conclusions drawn from the presentation of the figures which the hon. the leader of the Opposition presented. When he referred to the enthusiastic reception which the conclusion of that hon. gentleman's remarks met with on this side of the House, he said he was not surprised at it, because, for the first time in this Parliament, the leader of the Opposition had announced a policy, and it was something so very novel and so very strange that he was not surprised at his followers cheering him. I am not going into the general political history of the country; I am not going to refer to the numerous prominent points or disputes between the parties, wherein a policy has been formulated by the leader of the Opposition, a clear, a distinct and a definite policy; I am going to confine myself to the special question now before the House—the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway—and I am going to ask the House whether there is any truth whatever in the charge. I will recall the attention of hon. members to the facts as they are to be found in Hansard, in the year 1880, when the proposition of the present Government to construct this road by means of this syndicate was first presented. It is within the knowledge of everybody who heard or who read the debate that the proposition was denounced by this side of House, and notably by the leader of the Opposition; but he did not stop at mere denunciation. It is known, it must be known to the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, it is known to the country, that at that time the hon. gentleman not only denounced the proposition then presented as unfair and unjust to the people of this country, but he presented a proposition of his own, a policy of his own, for the construction of that road, a policy worthy of a statesman, a policy which, I venture to assert, if it had been adopted when it was proposed by him, this country would not be in the difficulty and trouble it is now, and we would not be paying out the millions and millions of money we are asked to pay year by year in support of this syndicate. That policy was—instead of entering, upon the mad, the insane attempt to construct a Pacific Railway from ocean to ocean in the manner it has been attempted as fast as money can be obtained, by borrowing on the credit of this country; instead of rushing it into the Rocky Mountains and into a pass not previously surveyed, changing it from one place to another, before it is even ascertained that the latter route is passable at all; instead of rushing it through with an unprecedented haste, and boasting of that haste, when the result of it is injury instead of good—that proposed policy was that this road should be built as Parliament originally pledged itself to build it, as quickly as the resources of the country permitted, without unduly over burdening the tax payer; that it should be pushed through the prairie with energy; that it should be pushed through so as to be kept ahead of settlement and ahead of immigration; that it should be pushed through so that, when people flocked into that great country and settled it, branch lines might be built north and south; that it should be pushed through so that, when that country filled up, and we had a population there numbering millions, and the population of this Dominion, instead of numbering three or four millions, numbered six or seven, then we would be in a position, having our surveys completed, having a better knowledge of that country, having a better development of that country, having more money at our command and greater credit in the markets of the world, to push through the hitherto inaccessible mountains, the Rocky Mountains and the mountains beyond them. What is the result of the policy which has been adopted? It is that hundreds of miles of railway exist to-day, with hardly a settler upon them, and that the line has been pushed with such haste that, while it created a boom for a time, the pendulum swung, and swung with such a crash that it left hundreds of our best men in financial ruin, and spread disaster and dismay throughout the North-West; and that, instead of that country progressing as we expected it would, such has been the mismanagement and the reckless haste and the extravagance which has marked the course of the company, and of the Government, in regard to it, that we find them unable to complete the contract, and that year after year they are coming back and asking for more money. No policy? What hon. gentleman opposite will dare to get up and say that the policy of prudence and economy, the statesmanlike policy proposed in 1880 by my hon. friend, was not a policy to make that country prosperous, a policy which to-day would meet the approval of the best men in Canada? They dare not say so. They laughed at it then, and they laughed at it the next year, when my hon. friend said that the company were rushing much too fast, when he told them what the results were going to be, when he told them, with a prescience which they should commend instead of decrying, that the results would be ruin and disaster, and that if they rushed it through the Rocky Mountains without proper surveys, without knowing the grades and curves, they would be sure to meet with results such as he depicted in his speech the other day, which remains unanswered. Yet, in the face of this, we have the hon. gentleman saying that, for the first time in the history of this party, a policy has been announced. That is the usual course. One makes a ridiculous statement, another takes it up, and then, parrot-like, it is repeated through the press and by the claqueurs throughout the country, and on every platform, until the people almost believe it is true. I say that from the first an honest, prudent, statesman like railway policy has been propounded on this side of the House, which, if adopted, would have made this a happy day for the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman, as usual, of course had to have his little shy or fling at the want of patriotism. Those hon. gentlemen cannot get through any speech without shouting want of patriotism. As I made some remarks upon that subject before dinner, I will not repeat them now; but the hon. gentleman went on to say, and he evidently thought his argument a very strong one, that we were not free, as a Parliament, to refuse this money; that we had entered into a compact with British Columbia to build that line in a certain time and in a certain way; and with the grandiloquence becoming a man of his position and expectations, he declared that every man who had voted in favor of that compact was bound to spend the country's last dollar to carry out this Canadian Pacific Railway undertaking, irrespective of the prudence or the propriety of granting this five millions; irrespective of the justice of the propositions made to us, we were bound to spend every dollar we could beg, borrow or—I was going to say steal—in order to carry this out. Sir, the hon. gentleman puts me in mind of Artemus Ward, who, during the late rebellion in the United States, announced that he was prepared to sacrifice all his wife's relations to maintain the honor of the stars and stripes. So the hon. gentleman himself, while declaring that he is ready to sacrifice the last dollar of the finances of this country, and every dollar we can lay hands upon, has taken care to remove some of his own dollars into the State of Texas, where they shall not be appropriated for the purposes of completing the Canadian Pacific Railway. Wonderful patriotism! I wonder if he thinks it is worthy of imitation. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman should know that this proposed loan, which we are now discussing, has nothing to do with carrying out the compact with British Columbia. That is not the proposition before us. I have heard it stated, time and again, and I have not heard it denied—it comes from the other side of the House—that the company are perfectly able to carry out their contract. Did we not hear it asserted and re-asserted last year by every leading light on the other side, that the money then voted to them was not needed to enable them to carry out the contract? It is to enable them to do something wonderful, that never was known before—I hardly know what it is myself. But they pledged themselves two years ago that, with these resources at their command, they could finish this contract by 1883, and they now want more money. They do not want to carry out the compact with British Columbia. They previously stated that the company could finish the construction of this road by 1886 without money. What do they want money now for? They want money because they have taken the money which they bound themselves to use for the construction of this contracted line and have appropriated it to their financial operations in other outside objects, with which the people of this country have nothing to do, and which it would have been better for the company if they had left entirely alone. Now, the hon. gentleman went on to complain that while we heard a great deal last year against monopolies, against the manner in which the contract was being carried out, this year, he said, we heard nothing from the hon. leader of the Opposition against the monopoly clauses, we heard nothing from him against the character of the work. Why, Sir, the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) was evidently in the position of a man who had prepared his speech beforehand. He thought he knew what the leader of the Opposition was going to say, and he made his speech ready to answer it, and it was such a good speech, that although it was not an answer, he could not resist the temptation to deliver it. If he had been in his place and had listened to the leader of the Opposition, or if he reads the Hansard now, he will find that page after page is taken in proving, to a demonstration, by evidence taken from their own papers, mark you, not from newspaper reports, not from outside reports, but from the official papers made by these gentlemen themselves, and filed by these gentlemen themselves, in the office of the Minister of Railways, and laid upon the Table of this House, that the contract running through the Rocky Mountains, over the Selkirk Range, is not up to the standard, is not nearly up to the standard; it is not pretended to come within a mile of the standard; that both as regards grades and curves, and as regards other points in the standard which was selected, namely, the Union Pacific road, this road does not pretend to come up to it. He would find, further, that the leader of the Opposition denounced the monopolies in the most scathing terms, not only as being unjust in themselves—nay, he went further—as being unconstitutional; he denounced the monopolies and the manner in which the Government continued them in Manitoba. But he went further, and he denounced, as a breach of faith on the part of this Government with the people of Manitoba, their refusal to carry out the promises made by Sir Charles Tupper last year, when he applied for the loan of thirty millions, and stated that if we gave that loan the Government would see their way clear to relieve the people of Manitoba from this monopoly. So, Sir, I maintain that the very points which the hon. gentleman complained had been ignored by the leader of the Opposition were the points that received very great attention at his hands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this process of re-arranging securities and of advancing more money to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is becoming an annual treat. In 1880, when the contract was entered into, it was contended that the people should accept it, because, in the first place, the men who composed the syndicate were men of great financial ability, were millionaires, were men possessing unbounded wealth, were men whose possession of wealth gave a guarantee to the country that the contract they entered into would be carried out faithfully; and secondly, that by letting the contract in this way we would be relieved from all the uncertainty and doubts which surrounded the construction of the road by ourselves; that we knew exactly what we were going to spend. We were asked to give them a princely subvention; we were asked not to withhold our hands, but to deal fairly, even lavishly, with these men, because in doing so we would have the best guarantee in the world that they would carry out their contract, and the company would not come back knocking at our doors for more help. We were to have an absolute guarantee, and to be relieved from all uncertainty. The House supported the proposition made by the First Minister, and these gentlemen got this contract. Last year, when we met here, the first thing we were called upon to do was to discuss this marvellous financial operation which they had entered into with the Government in the previous November, 1883, a scheme by which, by depositing a large amount of capital in the hands of the Government, they hoped to float their bonds, to boom their bonds, up to a figure in the market which would enable some of them to realise large fortunes. They hoped to realise such enormous sums of money by this financial operation that not only would they enrich themselves, but they were to have a large surplus with which to carry on all the operations connected with the contracted line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other outside enterprises in which they had engaged. We discussed that proposition, and we were told by the then Minister of Railways that that scheme had met with a great disaster. It had proved disastrous in every sense. Instead of booming the stock, the public had lost confidence in it; the stock had gone down, and they were obliged to come to Parliament and ask us for a loan of thirty millions more. Well, Sir, that proposition scattered to the winds every argument they had used when they proposed this scheme first to the House. The finality part of the scheme was gone. And, Sir, when he made that statement, and was obliged to tell us the condition in which that road then was, the manner in which those gentlemen had carried on their operations up to that date, it was evident that the operations had been carried on with an absence of all prudence and foresight, and we were again launched upon a wide sea of uncertainty and doubt. We were asked then to give the thirty millions, and we were told that this would end the difficulty. We were asked in the first place, to give up the million dollars of money they had deposited as a guarantee for the completion of the contract. We gave that up. We were asked afterwards to alter the mode of payment, so that they might have a more favorable mode of receiving their money than they had before; and we were asked, thirdly, to give them thirty millions of money. So the security which we had previously supposed we derived from the fixity of our obligations was gone. We replied, that in the absence of more reliable information, in view of the impossibility of reconciling the discrepancies existing between the different statements of this company, which they have put forward from time to time, we ought to decline to give this money. We had no guarantee that if we would give the money it would be final; and we had not sufficient information before us to justify reasonable and prudent men in giving the money. What information had we? The president of the road had made two or three authoritative statements as to the cost of the road. In December, 1882, he had published a statement, in which he was asking the capitalists of the world to take stock in the road, and he estimated the cost at $99,000,000. In May, 1883, he published a manifesto to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, and he repeated the same statements and made the same estimate. He pointed out that the subsidy was $25,000,000, land grant bonds $20,000,000, and the proceeds of $90,000,000 of stock to realise $54,000,000, which items would cover the $99,000,000 which he had given as an estimate to the world; and a sum for which, after long consideration and consultation with his engineers and sub-engineers, he had come to the conclusion the road could be built. When the company came down to this House, instead of keeping to that statement, instead of continuing to abide by the calculations the president had made in that regard, they say: No; if you will give us $30,000,000 it would be sufficient with which to build the road, being $22,000,000 less than the sum the president told the public the company could build the road for, only six months before. The first estimate the company submitted was for $99,000,000, as I have said. The last one, submitted last year, was $85,000,000, being a difference of $14,000,000. When we come to examine the estimate of 1885 we find it is composed in part of three items that do not appear in the first estimate: $5,000,000 deposited in the hands of the Government for the payment of future dividends; $3,500,000 to secure an extension to the seaboard; $500,000 which had been paid for Credit Valley bonds, making $9,000,000, not included in the previous estimate of $99,000,000. And those $9,000,000 added to $13,000,000 makes a difference on the face of the estimate of $22,000,000, that is, a difference in the estimate submitted in 1882, and repeated in May, 1883, and the one submitted for the loan in 1884. We said that unless we had something clearer and more definite it was not proper for the people and their representatives to vote the money asked. The House voted the money. What was said when the discrepancies were pointed out, when we showed there was a decided possibility that, as the company was going into large outside speculations, they would come back at a future time and demand additional money. We pointed out that in the case of the Grand Trunk similar subventions had been given, and time after time they had come back for aid. We pointed out that the circumstances of the two cases were parallel, and there was a danger that before long the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would again be knocking at our door? What reply did we receive from hon. gentlemen opposite? They laughed our fears to scorn. They told us that although we might assume the role of prophets there was nothing in our prophecies—no ground or data to go on; and they did so, although we had pointed out the discrepancies in the figures, that the case was parallel with that of the Grand Trunk, and that we were voting money in the dark; although we showed that the line had not been properly surveyed, and that, as regards the new line proposed to run through the Kicking Horse Pass, the company did not yet know what it would cost. I remember, when I had the temerity to express my fear that the country would be called upon at a future day to pay more money, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) was very facetious on the point. He represented how utterly absurd it was; he knew more of the future; he had considered the whole question and determined that this application would be final. He could afford to laugh to scorn the fears of those who, having examined the question, thought it very probable that the company would be back again asking for more. I will read a few remarks from the hon. gentleman's speech, as he referred to me at that time. Referring to me, the hon. gentleman said:

Mr. DAVIES.

"The hon. gentleman delights in representing this amount as a drain upon the Treasury, and not having the fear of many hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in his eyes, he indulges in precise prophecies. Sir, the preciseness of Vennor's prophecies amounts to nothing beside his; Wiggins' snow storm fame has no business to light a candle beside the hon. member for Queen's, comparing the preciseness, the earnestness and the certainty with which they respectively predict. And he is equally precise as to the time; he does not leave himself much of a margin. He does not say, at some future time, or in a number of years, but in two years. In two years he says the company will be—where? They will be here; they will not be importuning the Government somewhere else, but before this House, this Parliament, and for what? Asking them for a sum of money."

"And with what delightful precision the hon. gentleman states that sum of money; it will be exactly twenty-two and a-half millions, not a dollar less or a dollar more. Now, Sir, let me hold up before the eyes of the gentlemen present this prophecy. Let me ask my hon. friend from Queen's, especially, to jot it down in his note book, for fear he may forget, and if he and I live just two years from this day of February, 1884, we will meet some place, and compare notes with reference to this prophecy. If I am not greatly mistaken, if I had a reputation to lose, I would not care to risk it in such a reckless way as the hon. gentleman has risked his reputation to-day."

He was sure on the point. He needed no more guarantees because he had the assurance of the Minister of Railways and of Mr. Stephen, president of the company, that $30,000,000 would place the matter beyond all doubt. Then he had the assurance of the member for Cardwell (Mr. White), who said it was an absolute certainty. With such a magnificent trio as the hon. member for Cardwell, Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. Stephen, the idea of a member of the Opposition daring to insinuate the possibility of another application was monstrous; and the hon. gentleman had his joke for a little time. We are here now. I have got my note book. But we are a little in advance of the time. The gentlemen are knocking at the door of this House again, before the two years are up. The hon. gentleman's friends could not wait for the two years to pass without making another grab at the Treasury. Equally is the hon. gentleman ready to vote more money and proclaim that they will not come again. He will be perfectly certain, as he was before, that this arrangement will carry them through. Has he not the assurance of a greater man than Sir Charles Tupper—the Acting Minister of Railways, and then there is the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) to back him up. There is no need to examine figures, to look at the returns, in order to see that the company have not to this day got their line located through the Kicking Horse Pass. There is no need to tell him that the company have thrown up a location through the Rocky Mountains which was fixed and practicable, and where the grades and curves were within the standard, in order to go on a wild goose chase in search of a location through the unsurveyed Kicking Horse Pass. The hon. gentleman knows everything. I am told, with a preciseness, with an assurance which no other gentleman can rival, that they will never be here any more. All you have to do is to vote this money; and if they ever come again, the hon. gentleman will be equal to the occasion. I hope now, that hereafter, when a fear is expressed, which is not a mere prophecy, but is based on ascertained facts, he will devote himself to answering those facts, and not laughing at the prophecy, which is the result of them. Now, Sir, I said that we had the assurance of the hon. member for Cardwell that there was to be no doubt about this. Other men might have doubts, but he had fathomed and probed the thing to the bottom. He would not allow that there was any doubt.

An hon. MEMBER. Louder.

Mr. DAVIES. I guess you can hear. At present I am interested in letting the hon. member for Cardwell hear, and I notice by the smile on his face that he does hear.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Hear, hear!

Mr. DAVIES. I always admire his speaking; he speaks very fluently, and he generally manages to master his facts before he speaks. But he is a dangerous man, because, if it happens, as it often does, that his conclusions do not agree with the facts, then it is so much the worse for the facts. What did he say on that occasion last year:

"What we know is this, that we have the statement of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways as to what the cost will be of the completion of this railway. What we know, further, is this, that the money which is to be paid for it, the money which we are voting, is to be paid pro rata as the work proceeds, having regard to the amount required for the absolute completion of the road"—

Mark you, there was no risk about it. It was not to be paid in a lump sum, but as the work proceeded, so that there would be no hazard. Everything was to be arranged to be paid pro rata as the work proceeded; we had, in the certificate of the engineer, a guarantee of absolute certainty that for this money the road would be completed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). So it will.

Mr. DAVIES. Why, then, do they ask us to give them $5,000,000 more for nothing, and ask us so to rearrange the security that they can go to the money market and get $15,000,000 more, we becoming second instead of first mortgagees.

"and that therefore, we have, in these arrangements—first, in the report of the chief engineer, which confirms the reports of the engineers of the company itself, and next in the fact that the money is only to be paid out as the work proceeds—a sufficient guarantee that at any rate the money will complete the railway as is proposed. But we have further than that. I believe that the difficulties which the company have had up to this time in selling their stock upon the open market have been due very largely to the determination on the part of rival companies to prevent the completion of this railway. The moment you prove to these rival companies, and to all interested in these rival companies, that this railway is going to be built, the moment you prove to them that the company have been able to make arrangements by which they are practically independent of the stock market altogether in the completion of the railway"—

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Hear hear.

Mr. DAVIES. They were to be practically independent of the stock market altogether, but now they want to put $15,000,000 more on the market:

"that motive, at least, is gone for the depreciation of the stock, and that being the case, the investing public will have the opportunity, quietly, without influences of that kind surrounding them, of investigating the character of this enterprise, its commercial value, the probability of its paying dividends upon the stock it has issued, how it stands in relation to other transcontinental railways of this continent; and I believe that, before the two years are up within which this road is to be built, the stock will be at such a rate that it will be a question for the Government whether they will allow the $25,000,000 to be sold on condition of the $22,500,000 being repaid to the Government. But, independent of that, the assurance we have from the chief engineer of the company, and the assurance we have had to-night from the hon.

Minister, that there is to be proper supervision in the expenditure of this money, in such a way that it shall only be spent having regard to the completion of the railway within the amount voted, affords to us the most perfect guarantee that can be afforded in any business transactions, that the railway will be completed within that time, and for no further sum of money than is here proposed to be voted."

That is the statement of the hon. gentleman. We had an hon. gentleman laughing and sneering at the prophecy, at the fear expressed that they might come here for more money, but the hon. member for Cardwell expressed his absolute certainty, his firm conviction, that by no possibility could they come here again; that they had enough money and they would have the road finished within the time, and for that amount and no more. Sir, where are we to-day? Where is the hon. gentleman to-day? The same hon. gentleman, with the same silvery tongue that persuaded the House to vote $30,000,000 more, is here to-day asking that we should give up the security we took at that time, and advance $5,000,000 more; and I have no doubt, I fear very much, that the same influence which secured the majority before will secure the majority again. Sir, I believe the country are beginning to be awake on this question. I believe that these annually recurring demands, enforced as they may be with all the eloquence and power of the hon. gentleman, are beginning to be seen through by the country, and that the country are now arousing themselves to the fact that no reliance is to be placed on the statements made by these gentlemen, on which they obtained the money before, and that as no reliance could be placed on them then the presumption is that no reliance can be placed on their statements now. They are in no better position now than they were then; they had not located the line then, and they have not located it now; there is the same doubt and uncertainty, and we are in a worse position, because we know now what we only feared then, that the grades and curves are such as to make it almost impossible for this railroad to compete with the roads to the south.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the grades?

Mr. DAVIES. I will come to them in a moment. I intend to read them. I had almost persuaded myself not to read them, but as the hon. gentleman does not know, I will quote them again, from the speech of the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. FOSTER. You said, a moment ago, that I knew everything.

Mr. DAVIES. If you don't, I am much surprised, because you always pretend to know everything. Now, Sir, I am not going to quarrel with my hon. friend, and he had better let me get through with my argument. I want to submit to the House that there were three grounds upon which the loan was carried last year. First, there was the finality clause. It was to be absolutely final, and there were to be no demands afterwards. In the second place, the loan was to be absolutely secured—secured beyond peradventure; and third, that loan, if granted, was to secure the abolition of the railway monopoly in Manitoba. In what position do we stand to-day, with reference to those three grounds? Their presence here to-day shows that the loan is not final; their presence here, asking that the security be given up, and your consent to their request, shows that your security, which you said then was absolutely good, is now to be made insecure. You propose to become partners with the public for $15,000,000 of the $30,000,000.

An hon. MEMBER. Mixed.

Mr. DAVIES. No; there is no mixing about it, but you are going to mix the security. You submitted that the arrangement last year made the security beyond a doubt, and you propose to-day to alter that security, so as to take in $15,000,000 of the bondholders as co-mortgagees with yourself, and thus become second mortgagees to that extent. Then, Sir, as to the third promise, it was more than a promise. I contend that it was a compact. I contend that the official statement made by Sir Charles Tupper, in submitting that proposition to the House last year, with reference to the abolition of the railway monopoly in Manitoba, amounted to a compact. He said, in distinct terms, that if the House would vote that $30,000,000, such was his confidence in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in their ability to carry out the road, such was his confidence in the success of their undertaking, such was the absolute certainty they had that their undertaking would be a great success, and that they would be able to compete with other lines, that we would be able to do away with this monopoly and throw the country open for the building of other roads to compete with them. Where are you to-day? A month has not passed by since we heard, in the Railway Committee Room, that pledge which was given by Sir Charles Tupper repudiated by the Acting Minister of Railways, who told us there that the Government had changed their policy.

Mr. DAVIES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Hear, hear:

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. member for Cardwell may laugh as long as he likes. I challenge him to deny it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do deny it.

Mr. DAVIES. Every member who was in that committee room heard the Acting Minister of Railways say that he did not propose that that pledge should be carried out, heard him say that the monopoly clause would not be interfered with for some time to come, and that he could not give any guarantee that it would be interfered with until the road became a thoroughly paying road. Therefore, I say that the pledge given by Sir Charles Tupper has been violated, that the grounds on which you justified the granting of the $30,000,000 last year are now proved to be worthless, that your security is being tampered with, your contract is being broken, and the company are here asking that a new loan may be given. What is the arrangement asked to be made to-day? We are asked to reduce the rate of interest from 5 to 4 per cent., to begin with. We are asked to share the security with the public, so that while we shall have first mortgage bonds for $20,000,000, $15,000,000 of the same kind of stock will be held by the outside public. Every one knows that if you come to foreclose your mortgage you will have to buy up and pay for every dollar of that $15,000,000 of outstanding stock. The Government will have to pay that $15,000,000, and you might as well pledge your credit for it fairly and squarely at once as to do it in this roundabout way. More than that; we had the guarantee given us last year that the money then granted would be repaid in a short time. Remember, a number of gentlemen on this side of the House, who thought the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would not be able to pay the money back, were told there was not a doubt of it. What position do we stand in to-day? Are we assured that the money payable in 1886 or that payable in 1891 shall be paid at those dates? No, Sir; the payment has been postponed indefinitely; there is no time fixed; the bonds may be issued for fifty years, and even the bald promise of payment in any definite time that was made last year is taken away from you; you are lending your money indefinitely, without any fixity of time, and you are at the same time sharing your security with the outside public. I want to know how this transaction can be defended. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) said he had no doubt others would come forward and challenge and refute the accuracy of the statements made by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I will wait, and the country will wait, with great interest, to hear—not a fine, eloquent speech, not a grand display of declamation, not a lot of nonsense about patriotism—but an answer to the statement of facts prepared with great care by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and as to the accuracy of which he pledged himself he had no serious doubt. He said he had gone carefully over them; and I suppose he has mastered the papers in a way that no other hon. member of this House has done. The papers are there. The Minister of Railways knows that the statements are true; and the country are bound to believe that they are true, unless some hon. gentleman can rise in his place and refute them. If default takes place in the payment of this money, if we are obliged to take over this road, what position shall we be in?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Have the road.

Mr. DAVIES. And what shall we have paid for it? Anything like the sum hon. members were last year so fond of declaring we should have to pay for it? Look at the figures. First of all, the country will have to pay the cash subsidy of $25,000,000; the cash received by the company from the sale of lands we gave them, $11,000,000; the money we lent them, secured by railway mortgage, $20,000,000; the money we lent them, secured by land mortgage, $10,000,000; the cost of the portion of the road constructed by the Government, $30,000,000; the cash paid for surveys, $3,500,000; and the money we shall have to pay the bondholders, $15,000,000; and you will have to pay, outside of the remaining lands at all, more than $114,000,000 in cash before you can get possession of that road; $114,000,000, I suppose, will be laughed at as a flea bite; but that is going to strain the resources of this country to the utmost, taxed, as they are, by the extravagance and the mismanagement of the present Administration; I question very much if it is not going to overtax them, and if, in the near future, you will not find that you have paid ten times too dear for your whistle. What is the character of the road, so far as the Rocky Mountain section is concerned? The hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Foster) asked me if I would read something as to its character. I will do so, but before I read a very short extract from the statement of the leader of the Opposition, compiled, not from his own private information or on his own responsibility, but from official returns, let me give you a statement made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves, and we shall see if the official declarations they make are consistent with the official documents filed. In the report of the company, which was only published yesterday or the day before, we have this statement:

"The directors, therefore, can confidently assure the shareholders that by the early spring of next year the through line from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean (a distance of 2,895 miles) will be finished and in perfect condition, thoroughly equipped, possessing every requisite facility for doing its work economically and efficiently, and at least equal to the best of its competitors in all respects, particularly as to the curves and gradients, permanent way and rolling stock, the quality and character of the railway being far above the standard fixed in the contract with the Government."

Well, Sir, is that correct or not? Hon. gentlemen will see that they pledged themselves, in this statement which they sent forth to the public, that, particularly as to curves and gradients, etc., the railway is far above the standard; they are not satisfied with its being up to the standard, but they claim that it is far above the standard fixed in the contract. What was the standard fixed in the contract? I hope that this House will not have the statement repeated again, which was made here the other day, that the standard up to which they were to build their road was not the Union Pacific, but a branch or portion of that road, called the Central Pacific. When we turn to Sir Charles Tupper's statements, based upon the company's own written guarantee, we find that not only last year, but the year before, he declared that the standard was to be the Union Pacific; and, for the first time, we find now an attempt made to shield this company from keeping up to the standard of the Union Pacific, by the statement that they kept up to the standard of another line, called the Central Pacific, the curves and gradients of which are not up to those of the Union Pacific. Let me read what the leader of the Opposition said. It was in reference to an interpolation of the Acting Minister of Railways, who said that the Central Pacific was part of the Union Pacific:

"Mr. BLAKE. It is not part of the Union Pacific. It was not part of the Union Pacific at the time the Canadian Pacific contract was made. Their standards are different, and it was the standard of the Union Pacific and not the standard of the Central we adopted. Compare the grades. You have a maximum grade on the Union Pacific of only 90, and there are only 16-32 miles of that maximum grade. On the Canadian Pacific there is a maximum grade, on the intended permanent line, of 116 or 117, and over 52 miles of that. On the Union Pacific there is a maximum curve of 6 degrees, and on the intended permanent line of the Canadian Pacific Railway the curves are even in excess of 10 degrees, for there is one 10-40 on the intended permanent line. But you have got also, on the temporary line, to be used for a long time, a maximum grade of 237 as against a maximum grade of 90, or under 90, on the standard line. What is the curvature? On the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway there is, apart from the temporary line, and leaving out the 11-30 curve, 142 curves of 10 degrees, 69 of 9 degrees, 338 of 8 degrees, 114 of 7 degrees, 39 over 6 degrees, or 687 curve sin excess of the maximum curve on the standard line. What as to the number of curves? There are no less than 4,258 curves at 10 degrees, or no less than 4,945 curves. The total curvature of the line is 900 miles, or 35 per cent. of the whole length of the line."

Is the hon. gentleman satisfied? I have given him the curves, the figures of the leader of the Opposition, extracted from the reports. Will he deny their accuracy? Will he dare to assert, after this, that the standard has been kept up in the matter of grades and curves? Will he dare to assert that they have gone far beyond the standard in the contract which they promised to keep up? They have gone beyond it, but in the wrong direction. They have fallen off and given us a line which is impracticable as a transcontinental line. Those curves and grades, I am assured by those who know, will make the line impossible as a transcontinental line. Yet to-day you are asked to rearrange the securities, to give up your security, to reduce your interest and advance $5,000,000 more, in order to do what? In order to enable this company to do what they have asserted, not once but twenty times, they had sufficient money and resources to do without additional aid. A serious charge against the Canadian Pacific Railway is, that when they made their contract they found a line surveyed and located, they found a practicable line, with curves and grades within the contract, which they could have adopted. They chose, however, to deflect their line away to the south, to run the risk of running their line through a pass in the mountains which had never been surveyed, to run a risk no sane man would run. They ask you to take all the risk, because they ask you to give the money to carry their enterprise out; and doing this, they are reprehensible in the highest degree, and instead of being fondled and petted and advanced money by this Parliament, year after year, at the expense of the people, they should be told that this Parliament intends to keep them up to the contract, to exact from them something like a compliance with the contract they made, and their repeated promises to carry it out. I will not weary the House with any more figures upon this point. I had intended to do so; I had prepared some schedules; but until those which have already been given by my hon. friends have been answered, it is only wearisome to have them repeated, either in the same or a different form. They lead to the same conclusion, and until they are repudiated or challenged, their accuracy must be accepted by this side and the other side, too, if they want to act honestly. I will not occupy the attention of the House any longer. I think I have satisfied the House that the argument of the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is untenable. I think I have shown that we have no guarantee, if we make this new arrangement, that it will be final. I think I have shown that the company have no line located which they can carry through the mountains; I think I have shown that they have made statements in their reports on most important points which are not strictly accurate; and I believe I may fairly challenge the House that, at this period, and after the statements that have been made on this side, we might have a cessation of the claim to a monopoly of patriotism, which hon. gentlemen opposite constantly put forth. The Liberal party stands here as representatives of at least one-half of Canada, as men who have as much at stake in the country as hon. gentlemen opposite, and whose patriotism is as great as theirs. When they charge the Liberal party with being unpatriotic, they are making a most unpatriotic statement, because, in charging the Liberal party with being unpatriotic, they charge more than half the people with being unpatriotic. It must be remembered that, although the numbers on the opposite side are very much larger than on this, the numbers we represent are not in the same proportion. We claim to represent, and we do represent, at least one-half of the people; and I think I may be pardoned, from a party point of view, when I say that we represent fairly the better half. But whether that is so or not, I contend this House is tired, and this country is tired, of the constant claim these gentlemen put forward to a monopoly of patriotism. Of patriotism in its highest sense they seem to know little. They confound their party with their country, and as allegiance to the former generally brings large spoils in its train, they flatter themselves when the spoils are the largest the patriotism is the deepest. Experience has shown that with them, at any rate, the plant only flourishes in times of party prosperity, and that its depth can at any time be gauged by the amount of the spoils they are allowed to appropriate for themselves and their friends.

Mr. FOSTER. I have listened, as I am sure all must have listened, with a great deal of interest and a great deal of amusement to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. If I may venture upon a little mild and not ill-natured criticism of my hon. friend, I might say that he, in my opinion, in a very susceptible gentleman, and when I say that I do not say anything to his discredit, for that is not at all an unamiable quality in any man. I might go a little further, and say he is somewhat excitable in temperament, and even in that I do not blame him; and when his susceptibility comes to be played upon by the exciting plaudits which he received from his friends who are about him, he runs a very great risk of becoming somewhat reckless in his statements, and as the more reckless the statement, generally, the greater amount of applause it receives on that side the applause acts upon and heightens the recklessness, which reacts upon and heightens the excitability, and the effect is to make his speaking, picturesque indeed, but not as effective as it might be. Now, the hon. gentleman does himself an injustice. Being a lawyer, I suppose, he begins, as sometimes lawyers are apt to do, by depreciating the qualities of the opposing counsel. The hon. gentleman did an injustice to himself at the very beginning of his speech, in trying to make it appear that the principal part of his auditors, those on this side of the House, were a very ignorant set of people. Now, no man of intelligence, no man of great breadth of mind and great scope of intellect, wishes to speak to an ignorant audience, to an audience the ignorance of which is so gross that it cannot by any means serve as a draw to the powers within him; and I almost came to the conclusion, when I hear my hon. friend beginning in that way, that he feels a little misgiving in himself, as if he had not the mental power or the facts at his command that he ought to have, and therefore he feels he is in a better position if his audience are imagined in a similar situation. Then he goes on, in true lawyer-like style, to depreciate the good faith and the honest purpose of the person whose arguments he is attacking; so he says, of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that he was put up to speak by the Government. That immediately minimises the effect of my hon. friend's remarks, for no one should be put up to speak; not even my hon. friend from Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies) should be put up to reply, and that, of course, takes away, in the eyes of his friends, from the force and reliability of the arguments to be replied to. Not only that, however; but he goes further, and says my hon. friend is been put up and has a brief placed into his hands by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself. That is still worse, to have a brief in Parliament, to have a brief at the hands of a company, and at the hands of a company which is asking for a certain loan. If he could once put that insinuation out, as far as it went, it would carry this with it, that the arguments coming from a gentleman in that position were arguments which deserved no reply and should have no weight at all. Then he goes on to talk of the press, which does not agree with him, as being parrot-like, and of all who repeat any ideas which swell up from this great fountain of ideas the Parliament of Canada, on our side of the House, at least, as claqueurs; and then the hon. gentleman has everything fixed to his own liking; his audience is an ignorant one, his opponent is just put up as a sort of spokesman for some person, and whatever is said against him in the press opposed to him is a parrot-like repetition, and whatever is said outside by others is merely the echo of the claqueurs; so the hon. gentleman, having fortified himself so far, thinks himself justified in making the most extravagant statements I have ever heard any man make. He is very cross, too, in his very mild and gentle manner, because every person who speaks on this side does not make a line-for-line, word-for-word answer to the speech delivered by the hon. the leader of the Opposition. I rather suspect my friend of a little sinister motive in this. There has been so much of what some gentlemen have called obstruction this year, and it is said in some of the papers that it is going to be carried on a little further, that I almost suspect that the taunts of my hon. friend are intended to goad all on this side to attempt an eight-hour answer to the eight-hour speech of the member for Durham, to the end and purpose that this Session shall be indefinitely prolonged. I almost fear that that is his motive. But life is short, and you must give us the poor satisfaction of speaking for a moderate length of time, and allow four or five of us, in point of time, at least, to take the task of answering the elaborate and lengthened speech of the hon. member for West Durham. My hon. friend, after his susceptibility had been excited and his reckless mood had come full upon him, gave utterance to a number of statements, some few of which I will very briefly review. He spoke, in the first place, of this demand for a loan of $5,000,000 as for money which had been recklessly sunk in the building of the road to the east of Callander. Now, that is not quite true, for this $5,000,000, so far as we can judge, from the statement put before us, is money which has already been expended by the company in providing the equipment which is necessary for the operation of this great road, and I have as yet heard nothing said against the quality and kind of that equipment, so that this $5,000,000 has not been sunk in the construction of the road east of Callander; it is money which has been placed in the equipment of the road, without which the road could not be operated, which equipment, if we can judge from what we have seen and heard of it, is an ample and good equipment for the purposes of the road, so far as it goes. My hon. friend then spoke of the railway monopoly, and grew eloquent, and denominated it a curse to this land for all future years. Now, this railway monopoly which is so much talked about ought to be somewhat analysed by my hon. friend before he characterises it by such strong statements. It cannot be such a great monopoly in the matter of prices, for I think the leader of the Opposition stated here that the Northern Pacific road itself, owing to circumstances peculiar somewhat to it, charged more unreasonable rates by far, and was in a position to do so, than the Canadian Pacific Railway itself. It cannot be such a terrible and fatal monopoly, as far as rates are concerned, if it bears that good comparison with the road built nearly contemporaneously with itself, and an equally good comparison relatively with older and longer constructed roads than itself. The Farmers' Union, which could not be supposed to be very much affected in favor of the railway company, has borne testimony, over and over again, to the fairness of its rates and to the great benefit which has come to the country in the treatment this company has given it in the matter of rates. It cannot be proved to be a monopoly in the sense of grinding upon the people, in the way of the rates which it fixed and the tariff it placed upon the movement of passengers and freights. Of course, it is a monopoly in one sense of the word, because it is the only line which runs through a large section of the country, but it will have to be first proved that it does not give fair treatment, in the way of fair rates and tariffs, to the country through which it passes, before you can show that that monopoly is a dangerous one. My hon. friend then said that some of the original investors in this guarantee fund were getting 24 per cent., were being paid that upon the original investment. Now, if he takes a certain small portion and carries out the investigation upon it alone, he may find sufficient to justify a statement something like that, but he has not put the whole truth before the country, and he ought, in fairness—that hon. gentleman who said he would not even tell a lie to get money from England—to put the whole truth with reference to this matter before the House and before the country. The impression I took from his speech is that these bloated monopolists had prepared for themselves a 24 per cent. interest on their capital, and were then coming to this heavily-burdened country for more aid. Sir, that is not the whole truth. I have had placed in my hands a statement of the accountant of that road, which I believe will be found to be correct, and I will read it to the House, so that the whole truth may be known with reference to the interest on those investments:

Mr. DAVIES.

Interest on first $10,000,000, to 17th, February 1883, say two years, average...	9½ per cent.
From 17th August, 1883, to 17th August, 1885, these shareholders received 5 per cent on $25,000,000, say for two years, average .....	12½ "
From 17th August, 1885, to 17th February, 1893, inclusive, say 8 years, these shareholders will receive 3 per cent on $25,000,000, say, per annum.....	7½ "
Average of the whole period.....	8½ "
Average of the whole stock, say....	7 "

After August, 1883, guarantee ceases.

Sir, this is the truthful statement, and when you place that before the country, an investment of money running over that period, and all the reasons involved, with the guarantee to stop at that time, with, if hon. gentlemen opposite are to be believed, little prospect for net earnings above the fixed charges, I say no fair minded jury of our people would hold that that is an excessive rate as an investment upon money which they have put into the enterprise. The average that the whole number of shareholders receive out of this guarantee fund until the time it ceases is somewhere, as the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) stated, in the region of 7 per cent. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman stated that we were so liable to change on this side of the House that it was impossible to argue with us. He said that in the early inception of the work we argued that large subventions were necessary, because there would probably be a period of years of indefinite duration during which the receipts from the road would be very small. Now, he says we contend that the running expenses, taken in connection with the receipts, will give a good net earning, and so there is a prospect for the payment of the interest on our loan. Well, Sir, I think if there has been any good reason why large subventions were necessary for this railway, in order to get a company to take hold of it, those reasons have been supplied by the hon. gentlemen opposite. From 1870 up to 1880 it was constantly held by them that even though you built this railway through from Callander to the Pacific Ocean it must be run at an enormous expense, amounting up, as had been calculated by prominent gentlemen on that side of the House, to $8,000,000 a year; while others stated that it must be run at a loss for an indefinite period. Those statements being spread throughout the country, created the impression that before a company could take hold of that road enormous subventions must be given it, in order to guarantee it against alleged loss; so that if large subventions had to be given in 1880 it was a direct consequence of the multiplied arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman disclaims the idea that they have an intention of repudiation upon that side. He says: No, we do not intend to repudiate; we simply say to you that you have $14,000,000 of your own money, and we want you to use it before coming back and asking us for more. Now, I wish the hon. gentleman had taken the time to explain to this House just what that resolution means. Does it mean anything? If it means anything, what else does it mean but practical repudiation? When Mr. Stephen comes here and places the case of the company before this House, the hon. gentleman says to him: There is your $14,000,000; it is your own money; use it; and not until it is used up do you come here asking for more. Now, is that the money of Mr. Stephen and the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Is it money that they can take hold of and do as they please with it? Or is it capital placed there for the benefit of every individual shareholder, whether he be in Canada, the United States, in Europe or in Asia? I want to ask that hon. gentleman to give us a practical way by which we can get the consent of everyone of those shareholders to the conversion of that sum of money in the way he indicates. I say that, though not a lawyer, I believe that we cannot find a practical way. He simply says: Do thus and so; knowing, at the time, that it is impracticable and impossible. Not until you can get the unanimous consent of the shareholders who have subscribed can you have that conversion made, as the hon. gentleman seemed to assert that this resolution aims at. But what does that amount to after all? We, as a Parliament, have given our faith, have passed a solemn Act, by which we state that we hold in trust sufficient to pay 3 per cent. to all who invest in these stocks. That goes forth to the public. Men see that. They read it over, and they say this Dominion is solvent; this Dominion has pledged that guarantee, and on the strength of that pledge we will make the investment. The hon. gentleman's proposal is to withdraw that guarantee; it is to deal unfairly by the shareholders, who have subscribed on the faith of that guarantee, and who look to it as providing them for a certainty with 3 per cent. until the time expires. Grant that no other money must be asked for until this is exhausted. The company needs now for its equipment and its floating debt somewhere in the vicinity of twelve millions in a short time, and that would almost totally exhaust the guarantee fund. So that after a single year had passed, instead of having a guarantee of 3 per cent. upon their investment for eight years and a-half, they would have the cessation of that guarantee, and they would lose what they supposed had been a permanent investment for that time. But, Sir, it is an impossible thing to do; it is impracticable. You cannot get the shareholders, widely scattered over this country, even if they were willing, to submit to that scheme.

Mr. DAVIES. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the compact was made between the Government and the individual shareholders, or between the Government and a corporate body?

Mr. FOSTER. The person who, with his money in his hands, looked about for investments, simply read this, and upon that he made his investment. The Government of this country had fourteen or fifteen million dollars in its possession, and had guaranteed to pay into the trustees' hands, the Bank of Montreal, every half year, a sufficient amount of money, so long as that guarantee lasted, to pay the 3 per cent. upon the sum which was invested. The element of faith ought to be maintained in that transaction, and in such a way it would be neither for the credit of the country nor for the future good of the company which may run the road, that it should be interfered with. The hon. gentleman then declared that the request of this company for $5,000,000 as a short loan for one year was one of the most impudent applications that had ever been made to any Parliament; and it must be made to a Government which had lost all wholesome fear of the people to be entertained at all. So far as that is concerned, it is a simple matter of business arrangement—a loan upon certain securities. Taking into account the nature of the company's transactions, the road which it has in charge and the vast national interests which centre around it, it is on a different basis as regards the Government, and is entitled to greater consideration than would a smaller business arrangement. The company comes to this House and says: We have undoubted security to offer you; we want a short loan of $5,000,000, until we can convert our bonds, which are being arranged for, into money; we will pay you interest, and return you the principal at the end of one year. If it is impudent for one man to go to another and propose to borrow money on approved security, then it is impudent for the company to ask the House for an advance of money on good security and payment of interest. If not, this cannot come under the denomination of an impudent transaction. The hon. gentleman has the most unbounded faith in his leader, and I commend him for that. But the hon. gentleman has also an almost obtrusive way of expressing his admiration of his leader's wonderful brilliancy and power, whenever he gets upon his feet. Seldom does he rise to address the House that he does not shower on his leader, if he happens to be in the House, and sitting just in front of him, a great many high flown and often well deserved compliments, until I almost imagine that it excites the jealousy of some hon. gentlemen near him, lest he may have an ulterior end in view, and hope that, when the day of reconstruction comes, he may, by a judicious use of judicious compliments, stand a chance of promotion to the Cabinets which are to be.

An hon. MEMBER. We do not do that over here.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman said his leader was worth half a dozen members on this side, in point of patriotism.

Mr. CASEY. Three dozen.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for West Elgin says three dozen, and the House has always unlimited respect for his opinion. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., stated that his leader is worth a dozen men on this side, and that he is most self-sacrificing in his labor. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the leader of the Opposition does an immense amount of very hard and earnest work. I believe he deserves credit from both sides of the House for that ability which he possesses and that industry which he displays. I am willing, as one on this side, to pay that compliment to him, which is as hearty as I think it is well deserved. But I imagine the hon. member for West Durham has to exercise a good deal of self-sacrifice in other ways. He had to exercise a good deal of self-sacrifice, not long ago, in being obliged to remain two months while a very long and dreary discussion was taking place on the Franchise Bill; and no doubt his patience was tested when thus called upon to learn a lesson of resignation to evil, which, though he would like to have cured, yet he did not seem, at the time, to have the power to cure. But I was amused at the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), who said that when the member for West Durham was making his eight hours' speech, and bringing forward those awful facts, dragging them out of the limbo of past years, where they had lain, after having been brought out and stored away again and again, that he sat there and hoped that his leader was wrong in the statements he was making. I can imagine the hon. gentleman sitting in alternate hope and fear, hoping, when his better nature got the upper hand, that the statements were wrong, for the sake of the country, and fearing, sometimes, when his other nature gained the ascendancy, that these hopes might prove to be false, and that he would not lose a very splendid and efficient instrument with which to triumph over his opponents. But there was this fact to be noticed: Although he stood up to-day and stated that he hoped that those statements were not true, I looked straight at the hon. gentleman, and I did not see one sign of the deep grief that was gnawing out his heart. I did not hear any tremor in the tones of his voice, or any sign of melancholy in the eye which generally denotes heart-felt grief; and I almost think the hon. gentleman would be glad if those statements should prove true, so that he might have a weapon with which to belabor his political adversaries. Passing over some other remarks made by that hon. gentleman, I may remark that the hon. gentleman stated, as he came to an honest moment in his speech, that he would not tell a lie—under certain conditions—not even to get money from England. I thought the hon. gentleman would have had more consideration for a very able and earnest member of his party, who sat not very far from him, and who is said to have gone to England, once upon a time, and to have made certain statements which he wrote on the silver side of the shield, in order to obtain a loan of money, and when he came back he stated, and has stated often, propositions quite different from the statements he made in order to obtain a loan in England. Now, I come to the hon. gentleman's prophecy business. It is amusing to see the hon. gentleman in his quest for real eggs, and to notice that he finds, in almost every respect and on every occasion, nothing in the nest—a mere mare's nest. He has rather spoken against my power of prophecy, and has stated his own powers, and has declared that he made certain prophetic declarations last year, after he had carefully looked into and investigated the matter. What was the prophecy? If the hon. gentleman wants to be called a prophet no one will more gladly grant him those powers than myself: but if not, I shall feel it a public duty to expose his claims to prophecy if they have not a good foundation. What foundation have they? He went over the same statement last year as he went over to-night. He made two calculations. He put $77,000,000 in one estimate and $99,000,000 in the other, and then he said:

Mr. FOSTER.

"There is a discrepancy of $22,000,000. I can never satisfy my mind that there can be any finality in this measure, with that discrepancy existing. I have no doubt, in my own mind, that I may be wrong, but I form my conclusions from what I have stated to the House, and it seems to me the argument is a good one—I have not the shadow of a doubt—"

At first the hon. gentleman had no doubt. Then he gets a little stronger, owing to his susceptible and excitable temperament, and he states there is not a shadow of doubt:

"that before two years roll over the heads of the people of this country, an application will be made here to advance that $22,000,000 additional."

That is the hon. gentleman's prophecy, that before two years were passed $22,000,000 will be asked for at the hands of this Parliament, and will be asked for—for what purpose? For the purpose of the construction of the road. He makes the declaration that before two years roll round $22,000,000 will be asked for by the company for construction purposes. Well, before the two years have passed away the hon. gentleman hastens ahead of time to reap the results of his prophetic declaration. Better wait, my good friend, until the two years roll round; it will be time enough then. At present, there is not even a beginning of the dawn of the fulfilment of that policy. In the first place, the money granted last year for construction purposes is sufficient for construction purposes. We have the statements of the company, of the Minister of Railways; we have the statements of the Department; we have the calculations to show that there is sufficient of the money granted last year for construction purposes, every dollar of which is to go into construction purposes; and what the company asks for this year is not for construction purposes, but simply for the equipment of the road. Now, then, if the right to be considered a true prophet, if the proof of that reputation can be established by a representation like that—by his foretelling, in his prophecy, $22,000,000 for construction purposes, when not a dollar has been asked for construction purposes—if that can be a foundation sufficient upon which to claim a prophetic reputation, then any of us can be a prophet. In the first place, I suppose there is no difference between $5,000,000 and $22,000,000, and there is no difference between $22,000,000 for construction purposes and $5,000,000 for the equipment of the road. It is only a small matter, that; it would not interfere with the hon. gentleman's claims to be considered a prophet. Now, in speaking with reference to that, I stated that we would meet in two years after that time, and the hon. gentleman would see whether it happened or not. It is not begun to happen, and next year we will be able to compare notes, but before that time I beg him not to leave the category of ordinary, fallible mortals and enshrine himself among the prophets. What was the policy of the parties in the matter of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway? I do not intend to go back into a long-past history. I do not intend to take up this matter from the year 1870, and follow it to the present time. That has been done over and over again; and, Sir, we have had the same matters brought before us, year after year, and in the same year the same matters gone over again, and again, and again, with reference to these things. I merely wish to put the broad points of difference between the policy of the two parties since the year 1880. I say that in the year 1870, in those first years, it was impossible to have done, with reference to a railway policy or railway construction, what it was possible to do after 1880, because the conditions of the country were not known, the surveys had not been approximately completed, the resources of the country were not even dreamed of, and it was impossible to have that faith or confidence, that intelligent power of direction which could be obtained under the conditions of past years. But in 1880 the surveys had been fairly well completed, the resources of the country had been pretty thoroughly studied, and that faith and confidence and intelligent direction in these matters might well have assumed to shape themselves into a policy. What, then, was the policy of the leader of the Opposition, and I suppose of my hon. friend who took his seat a little time ago? The first point was this: that it was a policy of indefinite postponement of the building of the far west section of this trans-continental railway. That was the policy of the hon. gentleman, as enunciated over and over again, and enunciated particularly in his famous railway speech in this House in 1880. He proceeded to consider the western section as extending from the longitude of Edmonton to the Pacific coast, and he proposed the indefinite postponement of the building of that road. Here are his statements, with reference to it:

"It is because, in our opinion, it is desirable that a postponement of the western section of the Pacific Railway should take place, that I propose to place my amendment in your hands.

That amendment was this:

"That the public interests require that the work of constructing the Pacific Railway in British Columbia should be postponed—"

Mr. DAVIES. Is the word "indefinite" there?

Mr. FOSTER. Now, my hon. friend was away ahead of time in his prophecy, so I hope he will have patience this time, and I will come to that. That proves that his policy was a policy for the postponement of building the western section. My hon. friend asks where the indefinite part comes in. If he will listen, I will prove it to him. The hon. gentleman made many calculations as to what would be the cost of that road. The lowest of these calculations was the sum of $45,000,000, as the sum necessary for the construction of that road; and the hon. gentleman laid down the platform that it should not be built until a sufficient fund for the building of it had been gained out of the sale of lands in the North-West. And when you come to read over what he says about the sales of the lands in the North-West, you will find that the postponement, if the theory was to be carried out, must be an indefinite postponement, for he proposed to put on the sales of land in the North-West these charges—the charge of all expenses connected with the survey of the lands and the sale of them:

"Indeed, he says, I may go further, and say that the cost of payments for Indians, of over $550,000 a year, and for the Mounted police force about $300,000 a year, in all $850,000 a year, and other local charges, are prior charges on the price of the land."

He states elsewhere that not until these lands are sold, and there are purchasers of them, and a fund is raised for the building of the road, did he propose to build the western section. We had before the postponement idea, and this added to it makes the policy one of indefinite postponement. Well, the other feature of his policy was that of the prolonged postponement of the building of the eastern section of the road. The eastern section might be built at some future time, and the period was an indefinite period. In speaking about that, he states that the eastern section may be begun in 1891, and it is possible it may be finished in 1897, and he says to his Quebec friends: I hope you may all live to see it completed at that distant date. He looked upon these two things as essential parts of his policy; but he believed in another thing, and that was the building, as my hon. friend has said to-night, of the prairie and central sections—the building of the road from Lake Superior to Winnipeg, and from Winnipeg out into the prairie. Gradually go as far as the longitude of Edmonton, and there stop, until a purchase fund was obtained from the sale of lands sufficient to build westward to the Pacific Ocean. There was another feature in this railway policy, and it was this: Connection of the central and prairie railroad system of the North-West with the United States system of railways, not at one point only, but at all available points. That must be true, because he and the gentlemen associated with him have been continually talking, since the charter to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was granted, against the terrible wrong inflicted on the North-West, in having the monopoly clause in it, and the disallowance power exercised by this Government. Therefore we must infer, if he and those thinking with him are earnest and honest in their position towards disallowance, that if they had been in power there would have been no disallowance, and this central and prairie railroad system of the North-West would have connected with the United States railroad system at all convenient points. Another feature of the hon.

gentleman's policy was to subordinate the trade of the eastern portion of Canada to the trade of the United States, so far as the North-West is concerned. Hon. gentlemen inveigh against the national policy, which they say bears upon the people of the North-West specially hard; their natural market is just to the south of them; and here you raise a barrier between them and that natural market. What is the supposition we must draw from that? That if the hon. gentleman was in power we should have no such barrier, but that there would be as free trade between the North-West and the great centres of population of the western States as there is between the North-West and eastern Canada. The result of that would be to have thrown the trade and the thoughts and sympathies of the North-West with the trade and thoughts and sympathies of the United States of America; and it would have cut off from Eastern Canada, by the very nearness of the competition, the increasingly profitable trade that is growing up between the eastern Provinces of Canada and our great North-West, which they have bought and upon which they have expended so much money. Another feature of the hon. gentleman's policy was a generally expressed distrust of the resources and capabilities of Canada for the completion of this road. In this speech he states, over and over again, that it will beggar the country. That everything we can borrow or beg will be absorbed; that the resources of the country are not sufficient for the undertaking; that it will tax the country so greatly as to bring it to ruin; so that he had not that firm faith in the resources and capabilities of Canada for completing this great transcontinental railroad which should have been held by a statesman believing in the future of that great country. These were the lines of the railway policy of my hon. friend opposite. Let us contrast them with the lines of the railway policy of the present Administration, which meant, in the first place, the speedy union of all the Provinces. They said: As speedily as the country's resources will permit we will build the railway through all the Provinces and join British Columbia; we will build around Lake Superior and join that part of the country with Eastern Canada; and so we shall have an all-Canadian route, a bond of union between the Provinces, which will carry our trade and be the chief factor in the development of the country. This, together with the preservation of Canadian trade for the Canadians, a hopeful appreciation of the credit and resources of Canada for the building of this railway, and its successful accomplishment, were the broad features of the policy of the present Government. I am willing to let those two policies go to the country in their broad features and in the results which flow from them, and let the country, in the present and the future, decide between them. The hon. gentleman in his speech the other day made considerable sport of the hon. Secretary of State for calling "All aboard for the West." Well, if the policy of the hon. gentleman had prevailed, no man in the city of Montreal or in the city of Quebec could have called out, all aboard for the West and the Pacific Ocean over a railroad of our own, in territory of our own, for many and many a year to come, and perhaps never; but just because, not his policy but an opposite policy is carried out, we are enabled, in all truth and reality, if not to-day, yet within a very short period of time, to stand in the city of Montreal and hear the conductors cry out, all aboard for the west and the Pacific Ocean, on a railroad which runs through Canadian territory, and which has been built by the pluck and indomitable energy and enterprise of the Canadian people.

Mr. MILLS. Not by a short line.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Bothwell is anxious to get ahead of time. He wants to know what about the short line. I will yet say a word on that, to accommodate my hon. friend. But while I speak of these two lines of policy,

Mr. FOSTER.

I want to read a short extract, to show you how the hon. leader of the Opposition, and hon. gentlemen associated with him, have gone down from that high ideal which animated the fathers of Confederation on the Liberal side, when Confederation was young, in the year 1870 or 1872. The Globe, over which George Brown presided, and which was the organ par excellence of the Liberal party of that time, took a view in direct opposition to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and in direct accord with the policy which has been carried out by the Government. It says:

"Apart from all other considerations, the very fact that the line under consideration is through American territory would be a fatal objection to its being made the Grand Trunk line for the Canadian North-West. Those who had the command of it would in a very few years command the country. All the intercourse, both social and commercial, of the people of the North-West region, would be directly with and through a foreign people, and what might at any moment become a hostile country. By a mere stroke of his pen the foreign ruler might lay an embargo upon the whole intercourse of that part of Canada with what lies to the east. The bonding system, as we have lately had hinted at, in connection with a region nearer hand, might stop capriciously, and on very short notice; the tide of immigration might be turned away from our border, to a certain extent, at any rate, while everything would conduce to make the absorption of the whole territory by the States a mere question of time, and of time very shortest at the longest. The connection of all that region with the more eastern parts of the Dominion would be merely nominal, and when the year would be ripe it would naturally fall, as from the first had been desired, into the lap of our very astute and enterprising cousins over the way. * * * Instead of the fact that the Northern Pacific is under construction being an argument for allowing the Canadian project to lie in the meanwhile in abeyance, it affords the strongest reason possible for its being pushed through without delay. Politically, it is a manifest and pressing necessity, while commercially it is as evidently of the very highest importance for Canada. In this way alone can this country have any chance for her fair share in the lucrative trade of the North-West which will assuredly spring up, and in the varied traffic with the Pacific world, which, to a great extent, will pass through Canadian territory, if once what will be the shortest and easiest route from ocean to ocean is in working order."

These were the sentiments of the organ of the Liberal party at that time, and they are in accord with the railroad policy as it has been worked out by the present Government. It has been stated that the extensions of the Canadian Pacific Railway eastward from Callander ought not to have been undertaken, and that they have been burdensome rather than otherwise. I am one of those who consider that one of the best points in this whole matter has been the fact of the extension of that great system of development from Callander eastward, through its branch lines, its acquired lines, and the lines which it has leased. For the same expenditure of money, $54,000,000 in cash, and railway worth cash of $25,000,000, we have not only got a complete line from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, but have that line extended from Callander to Montreal and Brockville. We have 345 miles from Callander to Montreal, 432 miles of branch lines in Ontario, and 695 miles of leased lines—in all, nearly 4,000 miles of line which are under the control of the company, and which go to make up a vast system of development which this country will feel in after times in the way of its growth and progress. And, to-day, we see this system creeping down towards Quebec for its summer port and down towards the Maritime Provinces ports of St. John and Halifax, and, it may be, Cape Breton ports. We see this idea gradually approaching its completion; an idea which, I feel, would never have approached its completion if it had not been for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the working out of the idea which is embodied in that scheme. So I say, I hope that within a very few years, working on in the expansion of this idea, we shall not only be able to say "All aboard for the West," but for the East as well, and reach the great cities which lie on the Atlantic seaboard, and have a system of railway extension from ocean to ocean, under one continuous management. One of the strongest advantages in getting the eastern branch lines extension is that, while they pay a revenue, as they do, according to the report put before us, they also serve to attract and to control the traffic which must be had for the successful operation of the road and the development of the country. Having thus contrasted briefly the two broad lines of policy on this matter, as between the two parties, I have a few more words to state, and with reference to the matter in hand. It did not seem to me, at first, to be necessary, in order that we might discuss and come to a conclusion upon a question before us, to take up the whole history of the railway management as it has been taken up. It would seem to me that after certain issues had been settled they might remain settled, and that it ought not to be necessary to spend days and nights in going over questions which cannot be unsettled, in referring to policies which cannot be changed, and in discussing roads and lines, selected and built, which cannot now be altered. When these things are once settled they might be allowed to remain settled, and we ought to address ourselves simply to the investigation and conclusion of the question directly before us. That question is simply this: Whether, after the policy has been settled, the line surveyed and the road built, after the country has approved of that, and of the subventions necessary for that, after a loan has been granted for a number of years, as settled by Parliament a year ago—whether, when the simple question comes up for the rearrangement of the security and an additional loan of $5,000,000, we might not let the past be and devote our energies to the settlement of that question alone. The mere going over battles already fought and decided will not hurt or help anything. The question to consider is whether we shall or not make this loan and re-arrange the securities as set down in the resolution. It has been proved that it is necessary the company shall have money for equipment, that they will require a certain time to convert the bonds placed in their hands into cash, and the question is, whether we can, profitably to the company and the country, give the company a short loan of $5,000,000 for a year, on undoubted security. If the security is sufficient, as I believe it is, I am in favor of making the loan. If the loan of last year was well secured it cannot be denied that the additional loan of this year is still better secured. Last year we gave a loan of $30,000,000 in all, and we took security in roads and equipment and lands to the value, in round numbers, of $90,000,000. To-day we add $5,000,000 additional of lands, and we get the security enhanced by at least $25,000,000 in hard cash put into the construction of the line. While our loan appreciates $5,000,000, the security has appreciated $25,000,000. If that is not a sufficient appreciation of the security in comparison with the appreciation of the amount of the loan, then we cannot come to any conclusion based upon fact. Having satisfied my mind, last year, that the security then given was sufficient for the loan then given, I have no hesitation in approving of an additional loan of $5,000,000 for a year, seeing that the security has been greatly enhanced. We have, as security for the additional $5,000,000 added to last year's loan, a main line, or will have, when the amount unexpended and remaining for construction is expended, with $56,097,723 of actual cash placed in it as the cost of construction. We will have the extension from Montreal to Brockville, $9,357,091; branch lines, $4,607,172; steamers, $697,369; real estate, $408,207; equipment, $8,471,386; making a total of $79,816,948, deducting from which charges on the Quebec road and the Canada Central, $5,323,333, leaves $74,493,615 net railway security on which we have a first lien for the loan made. Then, the lands have depreciated but little in quantity, being now 21,399,737 acres, which, calculated at $2 an acre, gives $42,799,474, and subtracting from that the outstanding land grant bonds, leaves a balance of $41,189,760. Adding this to the railway security, we have a total of $115,683,375 in railway constructed at cost and lands valued at $2 per acre. I believe that security is amply sufficient.

Some hon. gentlemen have taken exception to the terms of the security. Let us see what they are: $20,000,000 of that loan is secured by $20,000,000 of bonds, and that $20,000,000 of bonds is the first mortgage on the road, the branches, the steamers and the equipment, and is the second lien on the lands after the first lien has expired, for the $10,000,000 of indebtedness, and this is worth, in cost, $74,493,615. Surely, for $20,000,000 of loan a security of $74,493,615, is an amply sufficient security. For the other loan of $9,880,912 we have the 21,399,737 acres of land, which give us a value, taking out the land grant bonds outstanding, of $41,189,760. Surely, that amount of land, at $2 an acre—a sufficiently small valuation—is a security amply sufficient for the $10,000,000. Then we have the added $5,000,000 of loan, for which we hold $8,000,000 of bonds, which, along with the $20,000,000 of bonds, are the first mortgage upon the railway security of $74,493,615. Now, we must argue upon one of two bases. Either this is a bond fide loan, and will be repaid to us, and in that case the country loses nothing, getting the same percentage which it pays and getting the road at the original subvention of $54,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land, or it will not be paid, and we shall have to go to the securities; and, looking at them as I have stated them, I think they are amply sufficient, and there is no risk, and there is no burden put upon the country if there is no risk, for the interest paid to us by the company is almost exactly the same as that which would be paid by the Government on the money loaned. Just a moment, to show that this security is still further enhanced than I have stated it. The lands to-day are certainly not a whit less valuable than they were a year ago. It must be in the very nature of things that, with the railway being built there, with certain lands being sold and settled up, the remaining quantities of land must be appreciating in value, and cannot be becoming worth less than they were in the past. The road has been bettered by the increase of $25,000,000 applied in construction alone, and by equipment to an appreciable degree; but, more than that, the current of traffic which is necessary to the sustenance of a road has begun to be set in the direction of this road, and that is one of the most important features. Build a railroad wherever you please, through the most thickly settled portions of country, where other roads run side by side with it, and before that railroad can come to its best, you have to get the ingenuity and the energy of the management directed towards attracting traffic to the road; and, during the year past, the management of this road, with its leased lines and branches, have been devoting their energy to that with remarkable success, and the current of traffic is setting in favor of this road, and the commercial public are beginning to know that there is such a road, and that it has advantages of which they may have the use. Then there is greater confidence in the public with reference to this road. The enterprise commenced under a load of disability, with one-half of the people of this country having no great faith in its fulfilment; it commenced without any great confidence in the commercial world outside of Canada, and it has had, not only in the money markets but in the commercial world, and amongst people generally, to battle its way up to something like confidence and security; and it has made in the past year a large stride in this direction. The security is becoming more undoubted, men are beginning to feel that it is not a road which is to be thrown up as soon as the construction money is exhausted, but is there for great purposes, and has a future before it which warrants the confidence they are placing in it; and the fairness of treatment, the good running, and the equipment of the road, have drawn to it a great deal of sympathy as well as a great deal of traffic during the past year. There have also been added considerations of national and Imperial importance. The disturbance in the North-West, unfortunate as it has been in many respects, has not been without some lines lighter than the darker shades of the picture which we have looked upon, and one of these is the effect which it has had in raising the Canadian Pacific Railway into national importance as a line along which the sentiment of this country may run and the power of this country may be exerted whenever it is necessary to exert it at any point. Alongside of that, the road has taken, within the last year, even within the last two months, a large place in the estimation of the people and the Government in the old country as to the Imperial importance which attaches to it. They see that this road, stretching from ocean to ocean, communicating on shorter lines of latitude, and having the shortest route across the continent, is of Imperial importance in case of complications which no statesman can foresee, and no man can say will not sometime happen. And then there is an increased amount of traffic on this road. In 1883, deducting the expenses from the earnings of the road, and so leaving the net earnings, we find that they amounted to $561,143; in 1884 the net earnings were $1,191,890, or more than 100 per cent. of increase in the earnings. But, when you compare the four months of 1885 with the four corresponding months of 1884, you find this difference more plainly set forth. The month of January, 1885, showed an increase over the same month in 1884 of $211,975; the month of February an increase of $206,472; March, $204,227; April, $309,237; so that the four months of the year 1885 show an increase in net earnings over the corresponding four months of 1884 of nearly a million dollars, and those who have the management of the road and who should know more about its traffic prospects than others, estimate that the net receipts for 1885 will be $2,400,000, and for 1886 $3,600,000. That is a calculation based upon the last two years and four months, and I set that against the cry that there is not sufficient trade to carry on this road which we are building, and that its operating expenses will not be paid. The Northern Pacific, which runs nearest on the American side to our line, has increased in its net earnings very largely, and the line to the north of it possesses advantages which in some respects are not possessed by the Northern Pacific. As to the climatic and other difficulties, the report laid upon the Table shows that the operation of the road during the last year has been freer from climatic difficulties, from snows and frosts, than other roads in Canada, and that there is no fear that this will operate injuriously to the carrying on the road and the transportation of its traffic. So that we have this one road, controlling its own traffic from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with its large network of leased lines and branches, with its immense line of immigration to take into that great country, and with its immense yield of cereals and other products which will be taken from it; and, taking all these things into consideration, it is a fair conclusion that its earnings will be fairly able to maintain the fixed charges, including those placed upon it within the last year. There is a fair probability that the traffic will be sufficient to pay what is necessary to carry on the road and to pay these fixed charges. The hon. gentleman who spoke before me said something with reference to a promise which had been made by the Minister of Railways last year, to take off the disallowance clauses, and he found fault because they had not been taken off. I think it but fair to read what was really stated by the Minister of Railways on that occasion, and which will scarcely bear out the construction put upon it by the hon. gentleman. He said:

"But I am glad to be able to state to the House that, although true to that policy, the Government refused to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American railways to the south, such is the evidence presented by the operation of the line so far as it has gone, such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in regard to the ability of a through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and by the inherent power of its own advantages to maintain its position, notwithstanding any competition to which it may be subjected—although we have no power, under the contract, to touch any portion of the country in the North-West Territories, we are now in a position to review and to re-consider the policy of the late Government, and the policy of the present Government, as to the continued necessity for any longer period of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition."

Mr. FOSTER.

It was his statement that this year, either at its commencement or now, or during any of these years, which was to take place, but the statement bears a different interpretation than the hon. gentleman has put upon it. It goes on to say:

"I am glad to be able to state to the House that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon themselves to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing the consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting with American railways to the south."

The statement is that the Government will be in a position to review the necessity of any longer continuance of that policy which had been taken with reference to the railway. Sir, I am in favor of granting a short loan for one year upon the conditions laid down in the resolution, for the reasons I have given, believing that the security is undoubted, and that it will be for the benefit as well of the country as of the company that the short loan be made.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think it is necessary that any additional argument should be made on this side of the House in opposition to this proposition, from the fact that the hon. leader of the Opposition has presented the whole case so conclusively that no hon. member opposite has succeeded in answering a single point that he made. The speeches of hon. gentleman opposite remind me of a man shooting with a pop-gun at Gibraltar. Feeble efforts have been made to reply to the masterly speech of the leader of the Opposition, but not a single point that he dealt with, not a single conclusion that he submitted, has been successfully assailed. Hon. gentlemen opposite have tried by some side issue to get round the solid facts he has presented, and they find it impossible. Now, I contend that from the commencement of this road to the present time there has been a continuous repetition of blunders. In the first place, it was exceedingly imprudent on the part of the Government to enter into a contract to build that road in ten years. They committed the country to the expenditure of a large amount of money without the slightest evidence as to the probable cost of the work. That was the first unfortunate blunder. Then there was an effort to form a company, of which Sir Hugh Allan was to be the head, and that ended in political disgrace. That was the second unfortunate blunder. The third blunder they made was when they made the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company now existing, and gave them such enormous powers. I think it is quite evident, from the course of that company, that they went into the arrangement with a determination not to lose one dollar in the transaction, and I think that has been clearly shown by the arguments of the leader of the Opposition. It has been shown that the whole question has been made the basis of a railway speculation, and that an amount of money has been extracted out of the pockets of the people of his country altogether in excess of what was necessary. If the Government had stuck to the first arrangement made with that company we would not be in the unfortunate position we are in to-day. It appears to me there have been favors granted by the company to the Government, and the Government in return are asked to grant favors to the company. They appear to be linked together in the relation as exists between man and wife. The life of the one depends largely on the life of the other. They have got so closely intimate that one cannot do without the other.

The Government of the day have been granting favors to the company, and the company will be expected to grant favors to the Government. In the first place, if the Government had carried out the arrangement in regard to the manner in which the money was to be paid, which was that the company would be entitled to receive a proportionate share for every 20 miles completed, we would not be in the unfortunate position we are to-day. Now, that was a wholesome course for the Government to adopt, and they ought to have held the company to the arrangement. It would have protected them against the necessity of advancing more money upon different occasions; because, under that arrangement, they would only have advanced money when the company were justly entitled to it, after each 20 miles had been constructed, and the balance of the first grant of $25,000,000 would yet be in the Treasury, for the purpose of carrying out the construction of the line. But they broke a way from that arrangement and they advanced money on progress estimates. Sir Charles Tupper stated last year that they found it necessary to do that. He said it was so hard to make an accurate calculation of the exact cost of each 20 miles that it was necessary to take the other course, and to advance the money to them on progress estimates. Well, Sir, anyone who knows anything about the construction of railways is aware that to advance money on progress estimates is a dangerous course for any Government to pursue. I know it is done in some cases, but is a very risky procedure; for it very much depends upon the way the engineer makes his monthly estimate of the work done, and if he happens to make errors, or is disposed to favor the contractor, you may find yourselves in the position of advancing far more money than the actual value of the work performed. The estimates returned to the Government of work done have no doubt been far in excess of the actual work performed, and the resources of the Government have been drawn upon in excess of the amount to which the company were entitled, and the Government have found themselves in the position of having less money than required to complete the work as a result of the change of policy. Under the system followed by the Ontario Government, no railway company can draw anything until 20-mile sections are completed and in running operation. I suppose this proposition with respect to 20 miles, applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway, was copied from the Ontario Government. In fact, I notice that many of the actions of Mr. Mowat's Government are followed here. It is unfortunate that the arrangement made between the Government and the company has been broken. Last year the company came to Parliament and asked for $22,500,000. There was, however, a distinct understanding entered into by the Government with the company that for $25,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres of land, and the Government constructing certain portions of the railway, the company would build the road, and no other demand would be made on the country. We are told that the company were subjected to such enormous opposition by the Grand Trunk and Northern Pacific in the money markets of the world that they were driven to desperation, that they could not sell their bonds or borrow money. Nothing of that kind was anticipated when the company was formed. The people were told that the princely financiers of the Dominion had undertaken to build the road. The offer of another syndicate was rejected because it was feared they had not sufficient financial backing to carry out the undertaking. The Government threw away millions in order to get hold of this particular company to do the work. We were told the country did not want to pay a second time, and we will let the contract to this company, in order to have the work completed. That was all a delusion, because the company have since made additional demands. Nothing that was put forward by the Grand Trunk and Northern Pacific so seriously injured the company as did the connection that existed between the construction company and the railway company of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That construction company was composed of several members of the syndicate, and there might have been some other people in it. It drew a very large amount of money. We have the fact that the construction company drew $600,000 more than they were entitled to, and there is no evidence that that company has returned the money to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They were one and the same company. No doubt, when that fact was pointed out to investors in London, they would hesitate before purchasing their securities. Mr. Stephen, as president of the railway company, let certain work to Mr. Stephen as president of the construction company. He drew payment as president of the construction company, and they thus kept the profits to themselves. Those transactions did more to depress and discredit the company than any acts of rival companies. It was understood the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were to build a line from Callander to Port Moody, and their efforts were to be directed to that work; but we find them speculating all through the country, and making an effort to grasp other lines. It is not to be wondered at that the Grand Trunk were driven into opposing them. That company had built the pioneer line, and rendered very desirable and admirable service. Look at the position of the railways in this city. The lines to Prescott and Brockville are controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the only exit of the Grand Trunk is by the Canada Atlantic. The public money has gone into those speculations. The company have been guilty of the most outlandish extravagance. I have it from a man who travelled on foot from Callander to Algoma Mills, that on that section of 80 or 90 miles there are over $500,000 worth of supplies actually going to waste. That road is useless, and $2,000,000 have been sunk in it. That is evidence of haste and lack of knowledge on the part of the company. These men, who made a successful speculation in Dakota, seem to think they are fit to build a railway round the world. As a rule, wholesale merchants are very good men to go out and advocate a by-law for the granting of a bonus, but when they come to the practical carrying out of railway construction they utterly fail. And, Sir, we have been educating a lot of men in this country at the expense of the country, to understand railway building, and it is evident that they know nothing about it when they started, and in place of taking into their employ a number of our men fit for the position, they went across the line and brought over a number of Americans; and I believe that half the money earned on the road went into the pockets of these Americans. The policy of hon. gentlemen, as they professed, was to keep Canada for the Canadians, that Canadian money should go into the pockets of Canadian people; but in this case Canadian money has gone out of the country altogether. With regard to the tolls to be charged on the road when it is constructed, it is understood that the Government, after the actual cost of construction is summed up, and after the company has received 10 per cent. of their cost, will have the right to interfere in the way of saying what shall be the tolls that shall be collected. It is difficult to see how the Government will ever arrive at an idea of what the actual cost of construction is unless the figures of the company are nearer the facts as to the cost of construction than those they have submitted in their annual statements, which have been shown to be grossly wrong. I think the Government will have hard work in coming to a correct conclusion on that point. The company will consider themselves entitled to add to the cost of the road every item, directly or indirectly, and the cost will increase continually as the earnings increase, and thus prevent the Government from interfering to limit their rates. The hon. member for King's said that no person could complain of the present rates. I have no doubt that at present they are reasonable, more particularly when they are trying to cultivate the good feelings of the people and of this House, in order to get this money, and that they might expect, if their rates were not reasonable, they might meet with a refusal. But, Sir, I venture to predict that as soon as they have extracted out of the pockets of the people all the money that they expect to get, their rates will go up to the highest notch that the law will permit. The hon. member for King's made some comparisons with regard to the securities we are getting, but his figures compare very ridiculously with some he gave us last year. Last year he told us that they offered a security worth $141,247,953, and now he says that all the security, with the lands and everything else, is only $115,000,000, or, with all their vast assets, $28,000,000 less than their assets of the last year. That, however, is on a par with all the rest of his calculation. These hon. gentlemen have tried to go back on the calculations in the speeches made by hon. gentlemen on this side, but if they look into their own calculations they will find that they are more ridiculous than any made on this side. I wish to refer now to the Government engineer's report, with regard to the actual value of the work and its cost. I have no doubt that the Government engineer is a thoroughly capable man, although I doubt very much if he does not take the calculations on which the monthly payments are made from his subordinates. On this point I may say that a contractor informed me that last summer, when they made the monthly estimate with regard to the amount of money the company would be entitled to, they were told that they would have to go back again, because they could not draw within a million of the amount, and they actually went over the entire work a second time, and increased the sum to about the amount required. This shows plainly how easy it is to increase or lessen the monthly estimates made by the engineers, and how unreliable these estimates are, unless they are carefully made. With regard to the statement of the Government engineer, he says, in his report of 1st October last:

"At the time I made my estimate, during last winter, of the amount which would probably be required to complete the contract, and of the earliest date at which railway communication could be effected between Montreal and Port Moody, the information at my disposal was neither so full or so complete as I could have desired. I have, therefore, all the greater pleasure in being able to state that the knowledge acquired during my official tour has convinced me that the funds at the company's command are fully adequate to the completion of the contract, and also, that connection from ocean to ocean will be effected by the autumn of next year, if the prosecution of the work proceeds with the same vigor as hitherto."

He says that he believes the company have ample means at their disposal to complete the work; and after the very short period, from the 1st of October last down to the present time, something over six months, we are asked to make an additional loan of $5,000,000. Now, I care not what security is offered; before making that loan of money belonging to the people of this country, we should have had laid on the Table of this House an estimate from the Government engineer, showing the true position of affairs as they now stand, where that money is going, and what is going to be accomplished by it. We have not a single vestige of information of that kind; we have nothing to show that the engineer has been over the road, or that the report he made last October was incorrect, or that he has had any reason to change his views from what they were then. But the company simply come to us, without any certificate from the engineer, and say, we want $5,000,000 more. They want it for a year, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) says. I wish we were certain that they wanted it for no longer; but I am afraid it will meet with the same fate as other loans which have been given to the railway companies of this country, and perhaps become worthless to the people of this Dominion. In connection with this amount which has been set aside for the purpose of securing dividends on the bonds held by the stockholders, we find that $3,000,000 of a postal subsidy has also been set aside, which will reduce the earnings of the line that would otherwise form part of the receipts of the company. Even if that road should come into the hands of the Government, they will have to pay over to the bondholders the amount of money earned by the postal service, in order to provide for the dividends on these bonds. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) also referred to a prediction that had been made by an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, that before two years the company would be asking for $22,000,000 more. Well, we are not aware what they first asked; we do not know but that they asked the Government for $20,000,000 when they first waited upon them; possibly it may have been $10,000,000; but they have figured it down definitely to $5,000,000. Now, I cannot understand, if the stockholders have confidence in the line, and in their investment, as one likely to be profitable, why they cannot place bonds in the hands of the manufacturers of rolling stock for the purpose of equipping their line. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) tells us that they have money enough to construct the line, and that now they want rolling stock. If rolling stock is all that is wanted, and if they are able to make as excellent a showing as the president says in his last letter, we must certainly come to the conclusion that they must be idiots or fools, or the public would not believe him, and would not take bonds for rolling stock, if he offered them, instead of asking the people of this country to contribute their money for that purpose. But the secret of the whole thing is this: The earnings of the road will regulate the value of the security, just in proportion as that road earns a certain percentage on its actual cost above the necessary expenses for operating the line. In that proportion must you measure the security which this country will hold for the money it is advancing. Suppose we had constructed the Intercolonial Railway in the same way in which we are constructing this road; suppose a syndicate had been formed, and this country had given that syndicate $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 to enable them to build that road; and suppose the country were asked by the same syndicate to advance $15,000,000 more and to take bonds on the road, and the country had agreed to do that. What would be the value of those bonds to-day? The Intercolonial Railway has not shown a profit in a single year; it just about pays running expenses, and if every item were charged in the proper way, it would not do that; but year after year the Government have added to the capital account, until it is now something like $43,000,000, against $38,000,000, which it was in the time of the Mackenzie Government, and I say that to-day it is not paying running expenses. If we held a mortgage on the Intercolonial Railway for $15,000,000, what would its value be? It would not be worth a cent on the dollar, because the only security is the net earnings over running expenses, and the railway is not earning running expenses to-day. Now, I say that our mortgage on the Canadian Pacific will just have to be measured in the same way; just in proportion as the earnings exceed the actual annual cost of running the railway, just in that proportion will it be a valuable security, and in no other proportion. The Grand Trunk Railway was running some eight or ten years before it earned anything above running expenses. If the Canadian Pacific runs for eight or ten years without paying anything beyond running expenses, what will be the position of this country? It will hold a mortgage on a property that is not more than self-sustaining. No man would pretend to say that that is a good security. I would rather to-day, in the interests of the country, say that the $10,000,000 of the money granted last year should be made an absolute present to the company; the country would be in better condition to-day, because our experience of all the railroads in this country shows that once the Dominion has invested money in them, it never gets back a dollar. That is the case with the Grand Trunk and the Great Western. I admit that these lines are a great advantage to the country, and I admit that the Canadian Pacific is going to be of great advantage; I think we are going to have a great country opened up, and a great future before us; but at the same time we must not blind ourselves to the fact, when we are talking about $100,000,000 as a security for the paltry sum of $20,000,000, that that is putting the matter in a wrong light, because the only basis on which we can value the security is the amount the railway will earn beyond running expenses. Now, Sir, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) tried to show this House that the stockholders were not in a position to deal with this money; he said the stock had been issued to the public on the distinct understanding that a guarantee of 3 per cent. was in the hands of the Government for the next ten years to come, on the strength of that deposit with the Government that the public had accepted that stock, and in order to get that money released it would be necessary to have the sanction of every stockholder. I am not going to challenge the statement of the hon. gentleman. He is a man of very high legal mind, and I do not wish to challenge him, but I will make a proposition. We know, according to the last showing of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that there is $15,000,000 of stock held by the company themselves in Montreal. We say to the company: If you cannot reach all the stockholders, we want you to endorse on the back of the stock you hold that you cancel this right to your share of the deposit. If you do that we will give up $3,500,000 of the money now deposited with the Government. The directors themselves hold that stock. It is but fair to ask those directors: If, as you say, you have every confidence in the road, show us your confidence, by bringing your bonds here and endorsing on the back that you forego your right to ask the guarantee of the Government, and release them from $3,500,000 of that guarantee of $15,000,000, and then you will be entitled to get $1,500,000 of the loan of $5,000,000. That is a fair proposition, if they say the road is what they claim it to be. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) made some reference to the fact that the statute provided for the payment of 6 per cent. on the stock during construction. I believe that is the law. I believe, however, that the company have violated the law. The law, if closely looked into, will bear no other interpretation than this, that the company are entitled to only 6 per cent. on the money actually expended in construction. But they have paid this 6 per cent. on the face value of the stock, and that is how the directors have extracted a very large amount out of the funds of the company. I say that is a fraud upon the country. In looking over the report of the engineer, last October, we find that he reports that on the Lake Superior section there were 90 miles on which no work was done; that there were 180 miles graded and half completed, and 438 miles to ballast. That was the work remaining to be done on the Lake Superior section. We find that on the Rocky Mountain section there were 34 miles cleared and graded, almost completed, 100 miles on which no work was done, 20 miles on which work was just commenced, and 55 miles of grading partly done. That was the entire work to be done on the 1st October last, and the company said they had ample money to complete that. Hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to escape from the statement, proved to be inaccurate, that the money is wanted for the construction of the line, and they now put forward the plea that it is wanted for the purpose of getting rolling stock. I do not think it is necessary that I should discuss this question in detail, from the simple fact that the statements made by the leader of the Opposition have not been successfully confronted by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McMULLEN.

men opposite can successfully assail the position the hon. leader of the Opposition has taken and the statement he has made, it is unjust to the people to vote the very large amount of money the company are asking. We should carefully husband the resources of the country. As has been shown during the Budget debate, the amount of taxation per capita is increasing very rapidly, and we should hesitate before increasing it, by adding to our burdens sums of this kind, year after year. At the inception of this scheme it was declared that the people would never be asked to pay one dollar towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but notwithstanding that, it has been successfully proven by the leader of the Opposition that some $26,000,000 of the people's money has actually gone into the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and year after year the amount is increasing. I say that is not right. I say that the Government of the day, if they are prepared to hold to the policy of yielding to the demands of the company, should manfully endeavor to point out where the statements of the leader of the Opposition are incorrect; but in place of doing this they urge their supporters to make speeches in their behalf, which, as far as argument is concerned, are as effective as would be a pop-gun firing against Gibraltar. They have not successfully assailed one single point the leader of the Opposition has made. There has been an enormous amount of blundering in connection with this whole affair. It has been a continuous repetition of blunders, not only with regard to the building of the road and the transactions of the company, but with regard to the disposal of the land. It is unfortunate that the Government should have permitted an enormous amount of land to fall into the hands of speculators and, in that way, retard the settlement of the country. Instead of giving the land to the actual settlers they allowed a number of companies to be formed; they allowed advantages to be taken in securing large tracts of land; and when settlers came here, for the purpose of taking up homes in the North-West, they found that instead of what was represented in the agricultural pamphlets issued in the old country—and particularly in one we had under consideration here, and in which there are photographs of the Ministers of the Crown—instead of the glowing accounts of free grants and the advantages given settlers in taking up homesteads being verified, they were confronted with a different state of things. I believe a large amount of money expended on immigration has been lost, owing to the policy of the Government. When a settler finds out he is deceived he sends letters home to his friends; he informs his friends, who possibly intended to come there, of the unfortunate disappointment he met with and the fact that lands cannot be got as easily as they were led to suppose, and the result of that will do more to scare emigrants from coming to this country than the spending of thousands of dollars on immigration on the other side. Serious mistakes have been made in that way, and had it not been for the policy the Government adopted in regard to the handling of the lands, we would have had far more settlers than we have now. They should certainly have controlled the price of the lands that they gave to the company, instead of allowing the company to make their own terms and exact prices in excess of what they led people to believe they would get lands for. I shall not detain the House, but hon. gentlemen should present some arguments in opposition to those of our leader. I demand that they shall get up and present those arguments; I demand that Ministers of the Crown shall give reasons against the arguments which have been presented, and until they do, it is a fallacy to ask members of this House to vote $5,000,000, which they have no right to be asked to vote until the figures submitted by the hon. Mr. Blake are shown to be incorrect. I have carefully examined all those figures, and I think they are correct.

to the letter, and the leader of the Opposition can honestly challenge their criticism, and if they are criticised they will be found to be unassailable in any point whatever.

Mr. ROSS. In rising to speak upon these resolutions, I do not do so with the object of defending the policy of the Government with regard to the North-West country and the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but I wish to point out some misstatements and some misapprehensions as to the true position of affairs in the North-West, and also to point out what, in my opinion, is the future of that great country, the future prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway and hence the future of Canada. When the charter was granted to the present company, and was ratified in this Parliament, we in the North-West never imagined that the line was to be built north of Lake Superior, nor were we, in Manitoba, very anxious that it should be built, because we thought it was not so important that that part of the line should be constructed; but recent events have shown us, and we are now convinced, that that line is not only important, but is—in a political sense—the most important part of the line in the whole chain of the Pacific Railway, because it is a link that cannot otherwise be bridged on important occasions. We thought, too, that the road would now be constructed very rapidly by the company. In the past we had seen the action of both Governments, and considered that while they were pledged to push the road on, they had not built as rapidly as we wished, and we congratulated ourselves on the especially rapid construction of the road by this company when they commenced work; but, unfortunately for ourselves, in Winnipeg, and in the vicinity of Winnipeg, we did not anticipate the dire results that would follow from this rapid construction. But the road has been built west of Winnipeg to the mountains, and now we believe that it is all-important that it should be constructed across the Rocky Mountains, and completed from ocean to ocean. Recent events have further shown that the rapid construction of the road has been of immense service to that country and the whole Dominion. The following statement has been made, which I read in the Globe of 2nd April:—

“The events of the past few days in the North-West prove unhappily too well how great was the folly of hastening the construction of the railroad, and thus causing the people to form scattered settlements along its whole length. If to-day the settlements extended only a few hundred miles from Winnipeg, there would probably be no rebellion; or if there were, it would not be so formidable.”

I simply say that the rapid construction has had as much to do with the war in the Soudan as it has had to do with the rebellion in the North-West, and that the settlements on the Saskatchewan were formed some years before a mile of railway was built west of Winnipeg. Some of my own constituents, when I was a member in the Local House, left my constituency and, contrary to my advice, went to settle upon the North Saskatchewan, and these settlements were formed, not because of the rapid construction of the railway, because the line had been built away to the south, and a thin line of settlement had been formed there, several hundreds of miles south of this district in which the rebellion took place. If this rapid construction had not taken place, how would the volunteers have got off from Fort Qu'Appelle to Fish Creek; how would they have been able to go to Swift Current, in order to reach Battleford, and to Calgary in order to get to Edmonton to the relief of the various settlements? The settlers on the North Saskatchewan would have been unassisted, as, in order to reach them, the volunteers would have had to march across the prairies from Winnipeg, or to wait for the ice to be removed from Lake Winnipeg, which would mean about five or six weeks' longer delay. The rapid construction, while it has brought financial ruin to many of us in Winnipeg, has been of immense service to the North-West in the light of recent events.

Mr. McMULLEN.

It is unfortunate that this company has to come here and ask for more money, but they are here, and now, shall we say that we will not grant it? Some gentlemen say that the Government should take over this road, but I think it would be one of the most disastrous things for Canada if that were to take place. The red tapeism and the patronage which would result from such a measure would destroy the successful operation of any road with such a length as this. Another question is, how have the company conducted their affairs since they obtained the loan of last Session? Have they managed the road in the interest of the settler of the North-West, in such a way as to entitle them to the consideration of this House and of the country? I think they have. Notwithstanding their monopoly clause, their freight charges are so low to the settlers that I think they do merit the consideration of this House and of the country. In 1868, when the railways easterly from Chicago had been in construction for years, the charges for wheat to New York, by the all-rail route, were 42.60 cents a bushel, while the charges, to-day, from Winnipeg to Montreal, are only 25 cents a bushel, showing the relative positions of an Illinois farmer then and a Manitoba farmer now. The Farmers' Union, through their officers, have expressed time and again that the company have dealt fairly with the settlers in the North-West. That being the case, the question arises: Will this railway ever pay, and, if it will pay, have we got security for the loan? The question whether it will pay or not depends entirely upon the character of the country through which the road runs, and its speed of development. Let us look at the United States and see what was done there. Between 1852 and 1856, the four great trunk lines from New York to Chicago were completed, and afterwards connections made from Chicago to Louisville, Cincinnati and St. Louis. In 1856, when the connection was made with Chicago to New York, the total exports of breadstuffs from the United States were only $73,664,431, while in 1880 they were $430,526,483. In 1866 the total exports of wheat from the United States only amounted to 10,827,721 bushels, only four years before the first Riel rebellion in the North-West. But in 1883 the amount of those exports has risen to 147,098,885 bushels. This was largely due to the development, by railway construction, of their Great West. More important still is the increase in the internal commerce of that country, and especially of the eight wheat-growing States. Let us take five of the eight wheat-growing States, California, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri and Dakota, and see what railway development has done for them. In 1866 they had, unitedly, only 465 miles of railway. In 1884 they had 19,105 miles, and what were the results? They had last year 181,500,000 bushels of grain, or 33,801,315 bushels over the total exports of the whole country in 1866. That is what has been done by rapid railway developments in the United States, and hence the rapid development of the western prairies. Out of the total amount of exports, in 1883, coming into the ports of Boston, New York, Baltimore and Philadelphia, for foreign shipment, 95 per cent. of the grain, 95 per cent. of the beef, 93 per cent. of the pork, 85 per cent. of the live animals, came entirely from the western and north-western States of the Union. All this was done since the rapid railway construction in those western States. Can we expect to receive similar results from our own North-West? Look at our soil. That soil is not only equal to the best in the United States, but it is superior in extent to that of any part of the American continent, there being more good land found in one solid block. Last year I made some remarks on this point, and in answer to that some statements were made that were not exactly true. I will read a few remarks I made last year about the soil of the North-West. I said:

“There is no line of railway in America of the same length as this 900 miles, from Winnipeg west, which passes through such uniform good land as that through which this line passes. For any 300 miles west of Moose Jaw there is better soil to be found than along any 300 miles over any line of railway in Canada. The soil, Sir, is excellent. But here comes the question about the dryness of the climate. I examined the grass in the North-West country, and I came to the conclusion that, where such grass as that can be grown, though it does not compare with the grass in the east part of that vast plain, there is moisture enough in the soil to produce any quantities of crops we wish. People in travelling across that country came to the conclusion that, because the grass is short the country must be poor. It does not follow. The grass which grows in the North-West plains is peculiar, and it does not follow that because the grass is short and apparently withered, the soil is poor. When people travelling over that country in August or September, or even in July, see the grass brown and colored, they come to the conclusion that the country is withered up and good for nothing, whereas the grass is hay, with its roots attached to the soil, undergoing a curing process."

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) challenged my statements. He said :

"I must differ a little from some hon. gentlemen as to the character of the land west of Moose Jaw. From all I have learned I believe those lands are of very little consequence for the purpose of cultivation. I have not been over that section myself west of Moose Jaw, but from all I can learn—and I think I have as good sources of information as any other hon. gentleman—that country is almost a barren wilderness. I had information long before the Canadian Pacific Railway was built in that western country, and that information was that from about 12 miles west of Moose Jaw for many miles west it was a barren country."

The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) also spoke :

"I do think without egotism I know as much about that country as any hon. member in this House. After leaving Regina and more particularly Moose Jaw, the country is not adapted for successful settlement. It may, in course of time, but it is my impression that it is barren. It is denuded of its timber. As to the member for Lisgar, his vocation in life did not lead him to travel much through the country. He was principally in the city of Winnipeg. He may speak of the city and its surroundings, but he does not know as much about that country as the member for Marquette."

Now, I do not wish to compare what I know about the country with the knowledge of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) or the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow). But I am satisfied to leave to time and its developments the fulfilment of all I said about that country in comparison with any remarks made by both hon. members. Now, Sir, I have two evidences this year for the truth of last years statements about the country. The one was given by the hon. member for Ottawa county (Mr. Wright), who last year thought that if we said anything in favor of the North-West we were veritable Baron Munchausens, that we spoke in such flowery terms that there could be no such country in existence as we described. That hon. gentleman has been to the North-West country and has seen it for himself. He went up a doubting Thomas, and he comes back no longer a doubter but one of the greatest enthusiasts with regard to our vast prairies. I have another authority, one of the highest, if not the highest in the country, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), a man whose honesty of purpose and clearness of judgment are believed in and accepted by every man in this country. He has gone up to the North-West. He was not biased in favor of that road south because it followed another route than the one he had chosen. He went into that country and examined it carefully. Some gentlemen who go up to the North-West have various ways of examining the country. Some go in a Pullman car, and while having good wine and enjoying themselves, they find that everything is all right. Other gentlemen form their opinions from what they learn at a dinner table, or in a club room; while others derive their opinion from their own superior inner consciousness. Some gentlemen go there with their theories of the country already formed, and if the facts do not bear out the theory and exactly coincide with it, so much the worse for the facts. Some men go to that country who are strong political partisans, and who endeavor to make the country bear some relation to their politics and still more strongly confirm them in their political opinion. If they find four facts, three of which do not bear out their political opinions, they reject the three facts and keep the one that does. The hon. gentleman from East York did not adopt any of the courses. He went over the line of railway and examined it carefully and took information from all the farmers that he came in contact with. Here is his testimony, as given by a reporter of the Globe. And I would say further, with regard to that published interview, that I consider his statement a true representation of the North-West and matters there, and I only wish the people of Canada would read and digest it more fully. I have read it over and over again, and in my opinion it is the ablest and truest representation of that country that has ever appeared in print from any of our public men. He was asked :

"Did you observe particularly the capabilities for farming farther east, between Calgary and Manitoba?"

To which he replied :

"I arranged to visit 7 out of 10 excellent farms. I observed throughout the whole length of the road that there was scarcely any poor soil to be seen. In quarters between Medicine Hat and Moose Jaw there was an appearance of dryness in the general aspect of the prairie visible, which was not apparent where the land was ploughed. There is a sort of crispness in the grass in some places that would seem to indicate a prevailing dryness. * * * What is known as buffalo grass, where it has a dry appearance, still continues to preserve its nutritious qualities and cures as well standing as if cut. Generally speaking, the soil is deep and good. As to climate, I am convinced that sowing early and properly taking care of the land will almost invariably ensure a good early crop."

On being asked his opinion on immigration he replied :

"Immigration has been stopped largely from Ontario by reports of complaints coming from the west, and also, I fear, by the action of some portion of the Ontario press in dwelling too persistently upon unfavorable aspects, though, no doubt, largely based upon former official reports. I found a general impression to this effect prevailing among intelligent men in the North-West, the general effect of which was prejudicial to the best interest of the settlement."

After his evidence, I think the hon. member for South Perth should throw aside his native modesty and become egotistical. We have another test, and a still higher one in proof of my statements of last year, in the ten experimental farms started west of Moose Jaw for the production of grain. On the whole the average yield was 21½ bushels of wheat to the acre; oats 44½ to the acre; barley, 23½; peas 12½. How many counties in Ontario can show better results; and yet the above results were from first sowing on the sod, not even broken in the proper season, viz, June, but late in September and first week in October. With such a magnificent soil and such produce raised in a portion of the country which has been described in the past as a barren desert, and in the Globe of 13th June, 1884, described as being such that 400 miles of this part of the line can never earn enough to pay for locomotive tallow, unless "alkali" should become of great commercial value, what may we not hope from other portions of the country, and what may not the future of the country turn out to be. With respect to climate; Though we may not have the variety of climate they possess in the United States, yet we have a climate which produces a vigorous, hardy, intelligent and enterprising race, samples of which, and in endurance and bravery, have been furnished in the half-breeds on the Saskatchewan and the 90th Battalion of Winnipeg. With respect to the capacity of the soil for wheat growing, the following describes fully the capabilities of soil and climate for growing No. 1 hard wheat:—

"The qualities of climate which bear on wheat raising in the North-West, and contribute more regularly, uniformly and efficiently to the growth of the crop than any found in more southerly climes, are: more daily sunshine—the days, by reason of the higher latitude, being longer.—cool nights, which always favor the cereal crops; deep frosts, which gradually melt and supply moisture to the growing plant; less intense heat during the maturing months, fewer injurious caprices of weather at the critical period of growth, and natural climatic conditions, which render possible the production of hard spring wheat—a cheap crop, by reason of its being a quick crop of only about 100 days from seeding to maturity."

This No. 1 hard wheat cannot be produced except in the North-West and in northern Dakota and in northern Minnesota. South of latitude 46, efforts have been made time and again to grow this wheat. Northern seed has been brought south, but it has always failed and turned into soft wheat. Another advantage which our North-West possesses in common with Dakota and Minnesota, is that it is not subject to tornadoes and cyclones, which prevail further south. In Kansas they have had two or three annually for the last 20 years, and they are also subject to them in Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Indiana and Ohio, while in the North-West we have not been subject to them. Our grazing lands are also going to prove most valuable in future years. Experience is showing that these lands are going to be of large dimensions, especially in southern Assiniboia, which has not been looked upon as a grazing country, owing to the roughness of its surface; but owing to this very character and its climate it is going to prove among the most important grazing lands in the North-West. The future of our country entirely depends, however, upon the outlook of the wheat crop of the world. Is there any other country where wheat can be raised cheaper and of better quality than in the North-West? If the answer be in the affirmative, then the future of the North-West is not assured, the future of the Canadian Pacific Railway is certainly not assured, and the future of Canada is undoubtedly not assured. In looking at the wheat crop of the world I find the number of bushels required for Europe 1,375,000,000, and the production 1,100,000,000 bushels, and the number required for England alone is 210,000,000; the average number of bushels England has grown annually is 60,000,000, so there is a shortage of 150,000,000 of bushels. Last year this deficiency was supplied principally by the United States, Russia, India, Germany, Australia, Canada, Chili, Egypt and Turkey, and in the order mentioned according to amounts furnished. Our only two rivals are the United States and India. The former furnished England last year with 75,833,720 bushels, India with 20,988,864 bushels. In looking at the wheat crop of the United States, the first State of the Union as regards wheat is California. Last year she grew about 45,500,000 bushels; but this year her wheat crop will not exceed from 18,000,000 to 25,000,000 bushels. The farmers of California are abandoning wheat growing and are entering more into fruit, because they are enabled to make $100 per acre from fruit instead of $10 per acre from wheat, and the fruit crop is a much surer crop than is wheat. In the future, therefore, California will drop out entirely as a wheat competitor, and grow principally fruit and the vine. Kansas last year raised 43,500,000 bushels; this year 15,500,000 bushels, and the prices received last year by Kansas farmers were from 19 cents to 50 cents per bushel. In all the wheat growing States where winter wheat was sown the wheat crop is almost an entire failure, and the estimated shortage of the wheat crop of the United States is 150,000,000 bushels. Only two States may be considered as our competitors, northern Minnesota and northern Dakota. Do they possess superior advantages to our North-West, or are our advantages equal to theirs. In the matter of climate and in soil and in other respects they are very much equal. A great deal has been said about our farmers deserting Manitoba and the North-West and going into Dakota. I find the hon. member for South Huron the other day said:

"But hon. gentlemen opposite, by their sympathy, aid and assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway, so hampered the Winnipeg and South-Western Railway that the latter was never able to extend their line beyond 58 miles of Winnipeg. What has been the result of this policy? It is apparent to every body in the country that of the large number of immigrants settled in Manitoba, 50 per cent., I venture to say, have left the country. Why have they left the country?"

"Mr. WHITE (Hastings). No; they have not.

"Mr. CAMERON. The hon. gentleman says no. I make no statement on the floor of Parliament that I am not prepared to prove, and I am prepared to prove it out of the mouth of hon. gentlemen opposite, especially the organ published in the city of Winnipeg."

Mr. ROSS.

He referred to the paper in Winnipeg supporting the Government. I do not care whether he brings up all the papers supporting the Government and all his friends—I know the statement is not true. I have looked up the report of Mr. Nimmo, a report showing, according to nationality and Province, the number of immigrants for ten years going into the United States, up to 30th June, 1884. I find by that report that the number of persons who went from Manitoba into the whole of the United States in that period was: Males, 2,726; females, 2,041; total 4,767. During the same time I am satisfied that more than this number came and settled in the North-West from the United States. That is not 10 per cent. nor 5 per cent. of the people who have gone into our country. No doubt, some have left it and come back to Ontario. To satisfy myself still further on this point, I sent a telegram to the chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington. I wanted to get the numbers for the last four years, because I knew that the numbers during those years of the people who had left Manitoba were larger than in the previous years, and contained nearly the whole amount. In reply, I got this answer: "Immigration from Manitoba for following years: 1881, 1,163; 1882, 1,398; 1883, 1,143; 1884, 924." Those are the figures furnished by the Washington authorities of the number of people who left Manitoba and went into the United States during those four years. This number is not anything like 50 per cent. The hon. member thus shows his gratitude to that country by furnishing its enemies with such a weapon to fight it. Here is another telegram. It is from Mr. J. H. Mactavish, dated June 18th, 1885, and is as follows:—

"Crops on experimental farms looking excellent, considerably ahead of last year, same date. Prospects for good crops throughout, from Winnipeg to Calgary, never so good as at present. Confidence of settlers in Regina and Moose Jaw thoroughly restored. Farmers and business men generally throughout North-West very hopeful."

I am very sorry that any people had to leave the North-West, and that any went into Dakota; but I strongly object to this exaggeration of the facts to the injury of the country. There was one mistake which was committed, and it was continued for a year's season of immigration, and that was the reserves south of the railway belt, and their not being open for settlement. Some settlers have, no doubt, gone into Dakota on account of such statements as have been made by the hon. member for South Huron, published all over—that Dakota offers superior advantages to our North-West, and the people went directly from Canada to Dakota, on account of a misapprehension of facts, and never went to the North-West at all. There has never, however, been any moment when sufficient land for settlement could not be got in the country—not south of the railway belt during one year and a few months—but north and north-west of Winnipeg there have always been lands enough for settlers. In my opinion, in seven years from to-day the great volume of immigration to the North-West is going to be from the United States. I am satisfied as to that. The wheat lands of the United States are being rapidly taken up, and those in the future who want to go into grain-growing will enter our North-West, and they in the adjoining Republic are beginning to appreciate our country, as they will do more fully at no distant date. Our great source of immigration, I repeat, will be the United States, in seven years. Seventy-five per cent. of the wheat lands of the continent lie north of latitude 49. I am backed in this opinion by the United States consul in Winnipeg, than whom there is no higher authority on the American continent. The United States has reached the limit of its wheat production and its non-wheat producing class is increasing, hence year by year its wheat export is going to diminish and become less and less our competitor in the English wheat market. The other day a statement was made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) which I regretted, because that hon. gentleman has always shown a fair knowledge of the land laws of the United States and Canada. The statement he made is not according to the actual facts. It was as follows :—

“The difficulty with the North-West is not the criticisms of the Opposition, not that the Opposition has decried that country, but the policy of the Government with regard to the land regulations, the holding lands at a higher rate than they were held in the United States, the placing of inducements for immigrants to go there on a lower scale than in the United States. While the United States offered him a homestead wherever he could find public land, the homestead grants in the North-West were restricted to only a portion of the public domain, while the whole public domain of the United States was open to the settler.”

Now, what are the facts? In the railway belts of the United States every alternate section is held for homesteads and pre-emptions, just as with us; and the price of pre-emptions is the same, namely, $2.50 per acre. Outside the railway belts there is this difference and this much to back up the statements of the hon. member for Norfolk: Outside of the railway belts all the public lands of the United States can be taken for homesteads or pre-emptions, but inside the railway belts they are the same as with us. Now, what is the railway belt of the Northern Pacific? Going through Dakota, it is 50 miles on each side, or a belt 100 miles wide.

Mr. CHARLTON. There are very few.

Mr. ROSS. In the railway lands they are just the same as with us. Inside the railway belt—the alternate sections can be taken as homesteads or pre-emptions, and the other sections are railway sections. Outside the railway belt every section can be taken, but in our country the Government have reserved every odd-numbered section for railway purposes, to be given for future railways, but every alternate section is public domain.

Mr. CHARLTON. My assertion was absolutely correct: that all the public lands in the United States are open for homestead settlement, while in Canada they are not. Outside the railway grants, in the townships where there are no railway lands, the homesteads are laid off only in certain sections, in some townships, but not in all.

Mr. ROSS. But all sections taken for homesteads and pre-emptions belong to the public domain, and if the settler goes to Dakota, does he want to go 50 miles away from the railway? He wants to get within marketable distance of the railway, and 50 miles is too far for that purpose. That is the distance on the Northern Pacific, and on the St. Paul and Manitoba it is 20 miles on each side, which is too far for the farmer to reach a market. Then he goes on further:

“Then, lands were granted to colonisation companies at half the price of those same lands to the settler; they were sold on credit instead of cash, and this was another cause for discontent.”

Now, the pre-emption with us is also a sale on credit. In fact, a man can take a pre-emption and a homestead, and not pay for the pre-emption inside of four years, and I do not believe there is a case of a man in the North-West losing his pre-emption, simply because he does not pay for it in time. As to the colonisation companies, I do not defend them; I do not think they have done any good to the North-West, but I think too much has been made of them. All the odd-numbered sections held by colonisation companies in the North-West amount to little more than 1,000,000 of acres. They are simply as pin points on an elephant's hide; they amount to a very little in the whole extent of that country, and even in the lands granted to colonisation companies the alternate sections are open for homestead and pre-emptions, as well as any other lands in the North-West, and each company must settle two settlers on every section, odd and even, before getting title. He goes on to say:

“If the settler had a choice between Dakota, on the one side, and Manitoba and the North-West on the other, he found, on one side, that there was competition in railway rates to bring in supplies and take out the produce of his farm.”

Now, with regard to that, while on our side to the farmer shipping his grain there is a monopoly in name, on the other side there is a monopoly in reality, because the two roads on the other side, the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul and Manitoba, have only two points in North Minnesota or Dakota where they come in competition, those points being Fargo and Glyndon. The companies have arranged what shall be their respective fields in that country, and they do not come in competition at any other points. The St. Paul and Manitoba has one part of the State or Territory to itself, and the Northern Pacific has another part to itself. That is the competition which exists there, and does not bear out the statement of the hon. member. With regard to that point still further, I will read the following report from Robert A. Lynn, secretary of the Farmers' Alliance of Walsh county, Dakota, sent to the Chicago Board of Trade:

“At a meeting of the Acton district Farmers' Alliance, No. 138, Walsh county, Dakota, held April 13, 1885, a resolution was passed instructing the secretary to communicate with you, with a view of testing the feasibility of shipping wheat from points on the Red River via the Canadian Pacific Railway to Port Arthur, and thence by the lakes to Chicago, and to this end I would call attention to the following facts:—

“The expense of extra hauling and Custom dues by the proposed route would be more than compensated for by the cheapness of freight on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the slight cost of shipping by water, leaving a favorable margin of profit when compared with all-rail routes.

“The superior quality of the Red River wheat is well known, and in order to sustain this reputation it is necessary that it should reach the east without filtration through the Minneapolis market.

“The idea suggested above has been operated to some extent last season by the Canadian wheat buyers, who erected a bonded warehouse at Emerson, Manitoba, and bought wheat for export along the Red River at and near the international boundary line. All that is needed is an extension of the system, which would meet with the hearty co-operation of the Red River farmers.”

Here are the farmers of northern Dakota, where they have the competition which the hon. member for Norfolk speaks of as existing to the south—they are going to ship their wheat round by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the monopoly road, and then bring it to Chicago, cheaper than they can get it there now. Last winter the farmers of Dakota were actually bringing their wheat across the line, paying duty on it, selling it to Canadian buyers, and then making money by so doing. Now, I wish to repeat again, as I did last year, a comparison between the land laws of the United States and our own, because there is still a misapprehension on that subject:

“The laws of the United States provide that citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become such, who are heads of families, or over the age of twenty-one years, can obtain lands as follows:”

Now, it appears that a man in the United States must be twenty-one years of age before he can take up his homestead or pre-emption. With us, he can take it up when he is eighteen, and by the time he is twenty-one years of age he has secured a homestead and pre-emption; he has 320 acres of land, paying all round $1.25 per acre for the whole 320 acres, by the time he can begin to take up land in the United States. Now, as to pre-emptions:

“Heads of families, widows or single persons (male or female) over the age of twenty-one years, citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become such, under the naturalisation laws, may enter upon any ‘offered’ or ‘unoffered’ lands, or any unreserved lands to which the Indian title has been extinguished, and purchase, not exceeding 160 acres, under pre-emption laws. A fee of $3 is required within thirty days after making settlement, and within one year actual residence and cultivation of the tract must be shown, whereupon the pre-emptor is entitled to purchase the same at $1.25 per acre, if outside of railroad land limits, and at $2.50 per acre if within railroad land limits. At any time before the expiration of time allowed for proof and payment, the settler may convert his pre-emption claim into a homestead. No person who abandons his residence upon land of his own to reside upon public lands in the same States or Territory, or who owns 320 acres of land in the same State or Territory, is entitled to the benefits of the pre-emption laws.”

Now, under this, a man cannot take up a pre-emption and a homestead at the same time, because he has to live a certain time on each, and he cannot live on both at the same time, and he must not be an owner of lands in the same State or Territory to the extent of 320 acres, in taking up a pre-emption. Such a thing as is known to us as a pre-emption in our North-West is unknown in the United States. What is termed a pre-emption in the United States is similar to our homestead, with one year's right of purchase—purchase after living on it for one year. Residence on a pre-emption in the United States must be commenced at once after entry. Now, take the homestead:

"Any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, or has filed his declaration of intention to become such, is entitled to enter one-quarter section, or less quantity of unappropriated public land, under the homestead laws. The applicant must make affidavit that he is entitled to the privileges of the Homestead Act, and that the entry is made for his exclusive use and benefit, and for actual settlement and cultivation. Within six months the homesteader must take up his residence upon the land, and reside thereupon, and cultivate the same for five years continuously."

With us, a settler must cultivate only three years, whereas in the United States he must live continuously on his homestead for five years. In our country he need not live on it at all, and only within a radius of two miles from it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman must confine himself to the railway resolutions.

Mr. HESSON. Hon. gentlemen opposite call my hon. friend to order simply because he is giving good information to this House—information that should go to the country.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. ROSS. Can I speak of the future?

Mr. SPEAKER. The land resolutions have nothing to do with the question.

Mr. ROSS. I think the advantages of our land laws are a very important feature in connection with the settlement of the North-West.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is too remote.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, the House must yield to your decision; but the same question has been discussed at considerable length by hon. gentlemen on the other side, without their being called to order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not remember any hon. member discussing the land regulations, and even if they did, and I allowed it to pass, I was wrong.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Just the other night, when a matter under discussion had taken a very wide range, and I was closely following the remarks made by others, to which no exception had been taken, an hon. member rose and called me to order, when I had a strict ruling from you, and I had to submit to your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think, when any hon. member calls my attention to the fact that a member is transgressing the rules, it is my duty to call him to order, and I hope the hon. gentleman will confine himself to the resolution.

Mr. ROSS. I would beg to ask the Speaker if I can speak of the future outlook of India as compared with the North-West.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think not.

Mr. ROSS. In 1869, England had under wheat 4,000,000 acres; in 1883, 270,000. In France there was a like shortage of acreage. The world's crop is about 2,065,000,000 bushels, and in time we in the North-West can grow one-half of this. While elsewhere the demand is increasing and supply diminishing, with us the supply is increasing much more rapidly, and we have the future wheat fields of the world. With regard to the carrying trade of this country in connection with the North-West, it is to be done almost wholly by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and a similar work south is being done by a number of railways, and not one only. Even if the Hudson Bay railway is built, and proves a success, which I hope it will, there will be more than enough trade supplied by the future wheat fields of the North-West for both roads; and if other roads are built, there will be enough for them, because the carrying trade of the North-West is going to be immense, but its full extent will depend entirely on the railway development of that country. It has been stated that, in the western part of the North-West, we cannot grow wheat, because the distance from the markets and from the seaboard is so great that it cannot be shipped successfully; and that if we cannot grow wheat west of Moose Jaw or even Qu'Appelle, and carry it to the seaboard at such rates as to enable the farmers to live, then the value of the Pacific Railway and the future of the North-West will be very greatly affected. But there is a prospect that wheat can be grown there. In looking at the United States, we see that of all the grain receipts at Portland, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and New Orleans, 183,689,576 bushels, or three-fourths of the total quantity, has been shipped by all-rail 44,946,146 by lake and canal, 16,058,892 by Mississippi river; even during the summer season only one-third of grain shipments from Minneapolis go via Duluth, balance goes by all-rail, and four years ago an attempt was made to ship wheat from St. Pauls, by Mississippi river, and only 30,000 bushels shipped, and effort was never repeated; thus showing that the all-rail routes of the United States are able to compete successfully, even where there is so much water carriage as is furnished by the Mississippi running through that whole region. And if that can be done in the United States, why cannot it be done in Canada? I believe it can, that farming is going to pay in the centre of the North-West, and that there will therefore be plenty of traffic for the Canadian Pacific Railway in that country. But there is one feature that is often lost sight of, which is going to be of great importance to the future development of the North-West and of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that is, the inter-provincial trade of Canada. The internal commerce of the United States is of great magnitude. In Canada it is not yet a great question, and it is only in embryo here to-day. There are however, in Canada varied and distinct natural resources and our products and manufactures will be interchanged to advantage. The completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway will give a new impetus to our internal intercourse, will stimulate the development of our latent resources, which we possess in so great a variety, and increase the home and foreign trade of our people. What is it that keeps men and women at work on the spindles and in the factories of the New England States but the demand of the farmers of the great west? What makes the railways in Massachusetts pay so well to-day but the internal commerce, and so with the other railways in the various States. So it will be in Canada; we, in the North-West, will send the products of our soil to the Eastern Provinces and the people of the East will be sending their manufactures to the North-West; and this is going to be an important matter, not only for the commerce of Canada, but for the development of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because no other railway can be so constructed in Canada as to carry the produce from one end of the country to the other. Whatever is going to develop the North-West will develop the Canadian Pacific Railway and all the other railroads in the country to the East. The people of British Columbia will be able to send their timber across the Rocky Mountains to the prairies of the North-West, and the people of the North-West will send to the people of British Columbia their wheat and flour. To-day the people of British Columbia import annually 448 car loads of wheat and flour from the United States; when the Pacific Railway is completed this amount of flour will be sent there from the North-West. Last year the people of British Columbia shipped 577 car loads of salmon, some to the South and some to England; but when the Pacific Railway is built, that fish can also be sent over to the eastern part of Canada and England. The shipments on the Northern Pacific for British Columbia alone are three car loads of merchandise per day on an average from the merchants of Ontario and Quebec to the merchants of British Columbia. Here is a traffic that will be diverted to the Canadian Pacific Railway the moment it is completed. British Columbia will also supply the farmer of the North-West with fruit which he cannot successfully grow. The development of the minerals of British Columbia certain to follow railway completion, will be of immense value to Canada and a large source of revenue to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company traffic. The internal commerce of the United States is estimated to be $1,000,000,000, or seven times its foreign commerce. In 1876 10,000,000 tons of goods were sent over the New York Central, Pennsylvania Railway and New York and Lake Erie and Western Railway, roads between the west and New York, which had increased, in 1883, to 46,000,000 tons. If our internal commerce bears the same proportion to our foreign trade, the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway is going to be immense, and larger than most people, or even any of our people imagine to-day. We are also going to have a great through trade for the Canadian Pacific Railway. On the Central Pacific Railway, while the local trade increased between 1880 and 1883 from 15,780,000 to 16,442,000, the through trade had doubled in the same length of time, and in 1883 was one-third of their total receipts. These are the results, and they show that through traffic is increasing very rapidly on the Central Pacific, the earnings per mile on main line of which was $10,804 for 1883. The statement was made by the leader of the Opposition that "from Callander to Port Moody, 2,500 or 2,600 miles, there is a population of 150,000, perhaps 2,000,000, white men. Therefore, when you look to those figures of a couple of hundred thousand white men, not all of whom have white souls"—I do not know what he meant by that; whether it is a reflection on the people of the North-West or not I cannot say, but if so I resent it—"But the Northern Pacific," he continued, "has about 2,000,000 of people tributary, more or less, to its road, while from Callander to Port Moody the Canadian Pacific Railway has about 200,000 people tributary to its road." What are the facts? Take the State of Minnesota, which is one of the largest States touched by the Northern Pacific line, and has over one-half of the whole population along the road. The hon. gentleman might as well connect Ontario with the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the road runs to Callander, as to connect Minnesota with the Northern Pacific. Why, in the State of Minnesota, out of a mileage of 4,442 miles, only one-eleventh is owned by the Northern Pacific; the rest of its mileage is owned by other roads. I am satisfied that State does not even give a twelfth of its traffic to that company. Take Dakota; the Northern Pacific owns only one-sixth of the total mileage of that State; and I am satisfied it does not get more than one-sixth of the carrying trade of that State. In Idaho, the Northern Pacific has one-ninth only of the mileage. It has the whole of Montana. In Oregon and Washington only one-third of the imports are carried by rail, and only one-tenth of its exports, the balance being carried by sail and steamers so that out of the total trade only one-fourth is carried by rail, and even that is divided between two roads, the Northern Pacific Railway and the Oregon Short Line Railway. The total population, therefore, that feeds the Northern Pacific, is but 374,095 souls, and even that is a large estimate for the number that directly feeds the Northern Pacific; while on our road the population is 200,000, and there is, besides, no other road running through our territory, over which the people can get their supplies or send out their produce. Our road is a monopoly, while the Northern Pacific has many roads to compete with for the carrying trade of the country. So that the hon. Leader of the Opposition has based his argument on false premises. With regard to through traffic, the trade with China and Japan and the Pacific Coast, principally San Francisco, for the year ending 30th June, 1884, was $18,756,846. Via San Francisco, last year, there were shipped 3,080 car loads of flour to China and Japan, and about 1,200 car loads of tea shipped east by rail. It is only of late years that China and Japan have commence to use our wheat flour, and there is no doubt their consumption of it will increase largely, and it is also undoubted that their future supply they will have to get another from the North-West, because California is fast becoming a fruit-growing country as I have already stated. This will therefore give a large carrying trade to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and furnish another outlet to the people of our North-West for their grain. With regard to the traffic east: The people of Eastern Canada alone required 670 car loads of rice and 794 car loads of tea for last year, which in the past were brought from Great Britain and from the United States. In future, nearly all of it will come over the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is bound to largely come this way from China and Japan, because we have all the facilities and advantages in connection with our road by which we can secure the carrying trade from China and Japan. The shortest winter route from San Francisco to Yokohama is 5,250 miles; from Yokohama back to San Francisco it is 4,716 miles; and the summer route to and from Yokohama from San Francisco is 4,428 miles. From Port Moody to Yokohama the distance is 4,200 miles; from Port Moody to Montreal the distance is 2,895 miles; from Montreal to Liverpool it is 3,043 miles. Thus, from Yokohama to Liverpool via Port Moody the distance is 10,138 miles. From New York to Liverpool it is 3,431 miles; from New York to San Francisco, 3,331 miles; and from San Francisco and Yokohama, the average of the three routes between those two points is 4,650 miles. The total mileage, therefore, from Yokohama to Liverpool via the Canadian Pacific Railway is 10,138 miles; while via San Francisco it is 11,411 miles, making a difference in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway route of 1,273 miles. The figures I have given are from the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Navigation Company. Even from New York, via the Canadian Pacific Railway to Port Moody, and thence to Yokohama, the distance is 623 miles in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway route. The exports China to England, 1883, were $50,488,655; imports from England, $21,124,270; exports, Japan to England, $3,315,460; imports, $11,382,865; total, $86,511,200 and part of this trade we can secure. Some hon. gentlemen have stated it is no advantage to have through traffic, that it is no advantage to have a number of cars passing our doors. I hold it is a great advantage to have as many cars as we can get to pass over the road. They ask: What advantage is it to have a man go over our road from England to Australia or to India? But there are always advantages to be derived from men of means going over our road and seeing our country. What is the tendency of such travel? Many of these travellers will be men of means, inclined to make investments, or who may have friends in the old country with capital to invest; and I may say that a very large amount of the foreign capital that has been invested in the United States has been invested in the beginning, simply owing to the fact that people who were travelling for pleasure or health over the American railways, visiting Colorado and other States, and seeing what the country was like, began to put their money in it, or induced friends to do so. This was the beginning of some of the investments of the very large amount of foreign capital that is invested in the United States, and the same result will, no doubt, follow in our country, under similar circumstances, and we should, by every means possible, invite foreign capital to develop our country, and it certainly cannot be done by hiding it or decrying it. It may be asked: If the North-West, which is to supply in the future the greater part of the carrying trade for the Canadian Pacific Railway, is as represented, how comes it to be in its present unfortunate condition? The following are the chief reasons: Over-trading and over-speculation amongst ourselves, producing dissatisfaction, discontentment and disappointed hopes; the prostitution of farmers' meetings, led by demagogues, to the basest of political purposes, that of villifying their country; visitation by Providence, in the shape of early frost and followed next season by a wet harvest; low prices for wheat in the markets of the world; mistakes made both by Government and Opposition as to the true character of the country and its requirements. Both political parties are to blame for the manner in which they obtain their information about that country. Only such information is sought for which comes filtered through partisan channels. It would seem that political refugees and partisan parasites have more influence in moulding the views of the two parties about the North-West than men with sound judgment and non-partisans, who know the country from years of actual experience, what its true position is, and what is required for it. The people of the North-West object to having their country being used as a foot-ball by the two parties, with the Treasury benches as the goal. The country has, therefore, been kept back and immense injury has been done to it, but its progress cannot entirely be retarded. There were two important factors which made the adjoining Republic advance so rapidly during the past eighteen years. They were, first, the sinking of the question of States' rights from its prominence, and the consequent obliteration of Dixie's line by their civil war. Then the immediate following of this by the people unitedly pushing forward railway construction through their great west, and thus securing its speedy development. Our country is too much divided and hedged in by sectional feelings. In fact, there is a Dixie line around each Province, and even we, in this House, are making these lines broader and deeper by the class of motions and amendments proposed. While believing fully in provincial rights, yet I consider it to be the duty of this House, as far as possible, to crush out all sectional feelings, and obliterate our various provincial lines, and to endeavor in every way to make our people united, by animating them with one common sentiment of Canadian unity and a great future destiny, and hence drive away some of our extreme pessimism. Our press is thoroughly sectional and provincial, and we have no papers that have yet been able to write for the whole Canadian people. Take the two leading papers in Canada, and along each column of their various editorials the water lines read: Ontario, Ontario. While we do not seem to be able to rise to our duty in this respect, our volunteers are unfortunately doing it for us in the west. The men of Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba, are offering up their lives with patriotic devotion for their country, and, to maintain the integrity of Confederation, are cementing, with their blood, the various component parts of Canada; and while returning to their homes to do the work of immigration agents for our fertile prairies, they are also going to perform a higher and nobler duty. For in their baptism of fire, they have risen from the battle-field politically born again, animated with a stronger love and a new faith, that of their country and its future. They will then go forth into the benighted parts of Canada and with zeal and a worthy cause endeavor to instil into others the teachings of their new birth. May this present unfortunate trouble in the North-West perform for us what the civil war did for the United States. If we vigorously and unitedly take up the building of railways over our extensive prairies and develop our vast heritage there, then we may expect somewhat similar results. The first step in this work is the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, uniting our people by an iron band and developing our resources, which are so vast and varied. When the history of this country comes to be written and the part the right hon. the First Minister has acted in it, nothing will be placed higher to his credit than the part he took in Confederation and the construction and completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. At the same time credit is due to the hon. member for East York for carrying on the work of construction undertaken by the right hon. the present First Minister. Believing in this road as a political and national necessity, also a commercial necessity for our people, and also knowing the country along the line of railway from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean, and having unbounded confidence in its future successful development, and in the great part that the western country is to play in the material progress of our country, and from opportunities of observing and comparing our western country with countries to the south along all the similar lines of railway, and after seeing what has been done there in the development of those countries by railways, and what the countries in return are doing for the carrying trade of the railways, I have much pleasure in supporting these resolutions to secure the speedy completion of our national highway.

Mr. Ross.

Mr. Ross,

Mr. DAWSON. I am sure the House must have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the speech of an independent member, who took a clear and impartial view of the whole subject, and has thrown a great deal of light on the question as it affects the territories of the North-West. I congratulate the hon. member for Lisgar on his very able speech. On an occasion like this, when we are near the completion of the greatest work in which this country has ever been engaged, I think a little latitude may be allowed, and indeed it has been taken on both sides of the House. I think it is not out of place to have a little retrospect, and to see what the condition of that country formerly was. The hon. the Secretary of State, in his very eloquent and able speech, referred to the voyages of the French many years ago, but he might have gone a little further back. As early as 1666 we have clear evidence that the French had penetrated to Lake Winnipeg and had gone, a few years later, from Lake Winnipeg to Hudson's Bay. In a few years more they had explored the country, both by the Mississippi River and by the Saskatchewan to the Rocky Mountains. Following the French there came another race, the Scotch Highlanders who, after the cession of Quebec, came to this country, driven from their own land by political trouble, and they engaged in the fur trade of the North-West. They were men accustomed to lead an active life at home, men accustomed to wars and battle and strife, men of high position, many of them, in the old country; and in the wilds of the North-West they found they could still be chiefs, which they could not always be at home. They ascended the Saskatchewan to the Rocky Mountains; descended the Mackenzie to the Arctic seas; and crossed the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Ocean. It was on the discovery of these men that Great Britain was able to make good her claims to British Columbia. It may literally be said that the flag of Great Britain was carried to the Pacific Ocean and to the Arctic seas to the sound of the bagpipes and the pibroch of the Highlanders. They were the explorers, and it was they who established that great traffic in the North-West long carried on by the company known as the North-West Company. They had large vessels on the Pacific Ocean carrying the furs of the northern part of the continent to China, even in those early days. Then we have settlers coming into the North-West. We have the Earl of Selkirk endeavoring to establish a colony known as the Red River Settlement, now a part of the Province of Manitoba. That settlement, after a time, became firmly established, but in the first instance they had many difficulties to contend with; they had rebellions among the natives, which drove the people from the settlement, some to Lake Winnipeg, and some to take shelter in Canada; so the rebellion which we have heard about of late is not the first that occurred, and the beautiful lamb-like people who were driven to rebellion by the bad management of the Government and all that, were accustomed to such things long ago. In 1816 they had another rebellion, when the Governor and many of his people were killed at the Frog Plains. Afterwards peace prevailed for a long time; but from 1840 to 1845 the people of the settlement became very unruly and troops had to be sent up by the Imperial Government. In 1846 Colonel Crofton brought out a wing of the 6th Regiment of Foot, by way of Hudsons Bay, and they were stationed in Manitoba for several years. It was the English half-breeds who were the rebels on that occasion, and not the French. The English were then very uncontrollable, and the French half-breeds, who have been subsequently in rebellion, were peaceable and loyal.

Mr. CASEY. I do not want to be unreasonable; but we are not discussing the North-West trouble.

Mr. SPEAKER. No; the North-West troubles will come up at a later period.

Mr. DAWSON. I said I thought that, as the Secretary of State and other hon. gentlemen had made allusion to the past, I might also be allowed to allude to it. The hon. leader of the Opposition referred at great length to everything connected with the North-West, to the rebellion, to land grants and many things besides.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will make it very short, so that we can get to concurrence.

Mr. DAWSON. I shall make it exceedingly short. I am not much in the habit of occupying the time of this House, and certainly I do not mean to treat the hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches with the least discourtesy. Now, Sir, in 1846 Colonel Crofton came there with a regiment from England, and they remained for some years. In 1857 the Canadian Rifles were sent out from this country, on account of a then threatened rebellion in the North-West. In that year the Canadian Government sent out an expedition to explore the country to the Rocky Mountains. After that the country was for a long time neglected, but since 1869, when the first Riel rebellion occurred, it has become better known. In 1871 the explorations for this great railway commenced, and were carried on for eight years at an expense of no less than $5,000,000, without any results. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company had great difficulties to contend with in going over the plains and through the Rocky Mountains. The hon. leader of the Opposition and several other members read from a description of the country in the Selkirk range, to show that the line was being carried through an impracticable country, which was dangerous from snow slides. A work was quoted from, written by the former engineer—I suppose it is he—of the road, from which I will read:

“Mountains of great height, in groups, tower above it (a bold, rocky bluff) to the right and left. Some of them have crater-shaped peaks filled with snow.”

“We cross the path of a great snow slide, an avalanche divided into two forks, one about fifty yards wide and the other about one hundred and fifty yards wide. Thousands of trees, two or three feet in diameter, have been broken into shreds by it, and roots, trunks and branches have been swept away, and, with a multitude of boulders of all dimensions, hurled into the lake to form a promontory, of which three or four hundred feet still remain. To the south, beyond the lake, the eye rests upon a mighty mountain, streaked with snow-filled crevices.”

He speaks of thousands of trees of 2 or 3 feet in diameter that have been broken up by avalanches. How, thousands of such trees are to grow in a little place 50 yards across, it would be difficult to say. It takes a tree from 300 to 500 years to grow from 2 to 3 feet in diameter; consequently, it is quite evident that there could not have been an avalanche there within many years, and the traveller will run but little risk in going over that line at any particular time, if avalanches only occur once in every 500 years. In the prosecution of this great work the Secretary of State has said that the president of the company imbued the men engaged on the road with the same spirit he had himself. There can be no doubt that the enterprise has been carried on with extraordinary energy, from the president downwards. Some of the officers in charge of particular sections have certainly distinguished themselves. I may refer to one section, which I know particularly well, and that is the north coast of Lake Superior. They had there many very able engineers, and they had a most able man over them, a Mr. Ross. They tunneled through mountains and built many fine bridges. We have heard a great deal about temporary trestle-work there. Well, Sir, in building a railway it is necessary, in the first instance, to put up temporary trestles, in order that the cars may pass over them in connection with the work beyond. Sometimes they are made sufficiently strong to last for a considerable period. At all events, on the north shore of Lake Superior these temporary trestles are being rapidly replaced with substantial works. They have bridges there across the Pic River, across the Nipigon River, and across many of the other streams, which are magnificent stone structures; and I believe similar stone structures are, in time, to span all the other streams. The whole section between Callander and Port Arthur was under the charge of two gentlemen, Mr. Harry Abbott and Mr. John Ross, and they certainly have both distinguished themselves in carrying out that immense work in one of the roughest parts of the whole continent; in fact, I believe, the section immediately north of Lake Superior will be found to have been more rough and difficult than the passage through the Rocky Mountains. I observe that the company have issued a statement of their affairs, and in it the president has expressed himself in these terms, with respect to a matter which has been of very great importance to the country. He says:

“In the recent unhappy disturbances in the North-West the company has been fortunate in being able to assist in the transport of troops and material to the field of action, and although, of necessity, some discomfort was experienced by the volunteers, in their passage north of Lake Superior, the speed with which that transport was effected contributed in no small degree to the suppression of the outbreak. This circumstance has drawn attention, both here and in Europe, to the probability that the railway may, upon its completion to the Pacific Ocean, bear a still more important part in the defence of the Empire, and that its usefulness in that respect will form an important adjunct to its value as a peaceful instrument in the consolidation and development of the resources of the Dominion.”

The president of the railway has expressed himself with respect to that matter with great modesty. There can be no doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have rendered a most important service to this Dominion in passing through the volunteers with the rapidity they did. If that road had not been available, what might not the consequences have been? I remember—for I had a good deal to do with sending forward troops on a former occasion—that when the first rebellion took place. The Sault St. Marie Canal was shut against us, and roads had to be built round the rapids on the Canadian side over which military stores were carried, and placed on board of steamers on Lake Superior. That occasioned a great deal of delay. When the American officials saw that we got the stores through and were quite independent of the canal they turned round and said: “We will open the canal and you need not send the troops over the portage—we are perfectly willing that you should send troops and stores through the canal.” That permission came a little too late, and the excuse given was that the delay had been occasioned by the State authorities and not by the Federal Government. I give it as my opinion that if we had possessed no way of sending forward troops to our North-West Territory, which we would not have had but for the Canadian Pacific Railway, we would on the last occasion as on the first have been denied the right of sending them through the United States. This would not have been due to any hostility on the part of the Government or American authorities, for I believe they have the most friendly feelings towards Canada, but because pressure would have been brought to bear upon them by certain classes, who are very numerous in the United States, and who would have said that the Government were seeking to aid the Canadian Government in crushing patriots who had risen to defend their rights. The Government might have hesitated, under those circumstances, however willing it might have been otherwise, to grant permission to send forward troops through American territory. Suppose that had been the case, what would the result have been? Two months would have elapsed before the volunteers would have got forward, namely, from 26th March, when we first heard of the rebellion to 26th May, for it would have been impossible to have got a man into the territory in the meantime. As is evident from the extent of the dissatisfaction among the half-breeds and the influence they possess over the Indians, the result would have been that many of the Indian tribes near the Rocky Mountains would have been in arms, many of the half-breeds would have been in arms also, and we should have had to meet them far east of Qu’Appelle, probably on the borders of Winnipeg. All that was obviated by the speed with which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company pushed on the work, and by the energy and expedition they displayed in sending forward troops; and this country owes the company a debt of gratitude for saving us from a possible outlay of more value than this grant at present applied for. The Sault St. Marie line I hope will ultimately be carried out. It is a very important line, although the hon. member for West Wellington (Mr. McMullen) describes it as being in a very deplorable condition; but I think the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said it should be carried out. For my part I think the Sault St. Marie line should be carried out, so that it may connect with the American lines, and when it does so it will draw a good deal of traffic to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will do more than that. It will be the means of developing a very important country along the north coast of Lake Huron. We have good land there, as good as in the North-West, and we have a climate on the shores of Lake Huron and Manitoulin Islands superior to the climate in the North-West, and along that shore we now raise large quantities of wheat. I am happy to say that settlement is fast flowing in. The leader of the Opposition has said that the road was built with insane haste. I do not think so, Sir. I think that rapidity of construction in a work of that kind leads to economy of construction, and that the work has been more economically conducted than if it had been spread over a long series of years. We have heard a great deal about traffic and curves, and all that sort of thing, but I believe the curves are as few and as easy as the character of the country admitted, and that the grades, even in the Rocky Mountains, will eventually be, when the road is completed, such as to enable an immense traffic going over it. I think a great deal too much has been said about the existing population and their wants. It is not the existing population which should be taken into account in considering the location of a great railway like this. This line is being built for future as well as for present generations, and I think the future ought to be taken into consideration, and that the position of the millions who are to occupy that country hereafter is quite as much a matter of consideration as the position of those who occupy it now. The hon. member for North Norfolk commenced his speech by referring to the admirable speech made by the leader of the Opposition, and he said very truly that gentleman had gone so completely over the ground in every possible way that he had left very little for any person else to say. I sympathised with the hon. gentleman as he went on with his speech; I saw that he was a little constrained. As a usual thing, he speaks very fluently, and his perorations rise to a strain of great eloquence; but to-night I think he was embarrassed by finding that everything that could be said was said before. The hon. member for West Wellington appeared to be in the same position. The hon. member for West Huron took a great deal of delight in referring to some early frosts which had occurred. He accused the leader of the Government of decrying the country, by publishing reports in which the statement was made that frosts had occurred in that country. These were reports sent in by local officials; and the delight the hon. gentleman manifested in pointing to them, under the guise of accusing the First Minister, only showed his desire to run down the country. The hon. member for Queen’s, P. E. I., was exceedingly eloquent, and exceedingly loud; but, I think, after all the great demonstrations he made, he was really jubilant that the railway was going on, and I cannot really think that he was serious in his denunciations of it. But, supposing he were, I say that no great enterprise was ever carried out without some little things occurring to cavil at, and I think there have been fewer of them in this case than in the case of most other great enterprises.

Mr. Dawson.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have no desire to speak at any length, because I suppose there was an understanding arrived at last night that we should go into committee to-night, and it is not pleasant to speak under circumstances of that kind. The question before the Chair has been widely departed from. You have been kind enough to allow members to take a very wide range, unless your attention was called to the rules of order, and we have had dissertations on the greatness of the country, and sentiments uttered which we could all wish to be absolutely true, and to which we should find a great deal of pleasure in listening at another time. We are considering a matter of business, as I understand. Gentlemen on this side have not been able to agree to the resolutions submitted by the Government, with reference to a change in our relations with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they have placed in your hands another proposition, and these are really the two subjects for our consideration at the present time. It is necessary, I grant, in order to a proper appreciation of the subject, and also to guide us somewhat in the decision we should arrive at on this question, that we should have some little regard to the history of the previous transactions of this company with the Government. And, Sir, I must say, at the outset, that looking at the application by the Canadian Pacific Railway for a re-arrangement of the terms at this Session of Parliament, it does look to me to be a thing so extraordinary, a thing which ought to have been so entirely unlooked for, if not uncalled for, that you cannot be surprised if members should enquire why it is that this company are coming, year after year, to make fresh demands at the hands of the Parliament of Canada. If we had in our original bargain with them, made what might be termed a hard bargain, if they had been placed at a disadvantage, if we had imposed on them terms unfavorable to them and favorable to us, then Sir, we could with more equanimity regard this annual application for further grants and allowances. But,

Sir, when we remember the facts, that instead of driving hard bargains with them we were so liberal in the terms which were given to them, that the Ministry who made the bargain could only defend the extravagance of their terms by stating that there was a danger that the road would not pay working expenses for some years, and that it was through having regard to that fact that they were led to give them what they have themselves admitted to be unduly favorable terms for the amount of work they undertook to do. That being the nature of the original contract made with the company, it is but natural that there should be a feeling of something more than wonder that that company should, in the short space of three or four years, after they had entered upon the work, come to us, as they did last year, and ask for a loan of $22,500,000, and for a postponement of a payment of a little over $7,500,000 that they have agreed to pay in as part of the sum that was to secure to them their interest for some years; and to find them now, barely twelve months after we were told, for the second time, that the arrangement was a final one, coming here and asking that the whole terms should be re-opened. It is something that seemed to me would have justified a little longer discussion—would have justified hon. members on this side of the House anticipating the proposition of the First Minister, that at this early stage the House should go into committee on these resolutions; for, although there will be an opportunity of discussing them in committee, owing to our being confined to one clause, the discussion is not as free and easy as it can be on the motion for you to leave the Chair. The other night, when I was answering arguments that had been offered by some hon. gentlemen on the proposition to aid branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-West, and was called to order by some hon. gentlemen opposite, I said that there had been a mistake, to my mind, in the action of the Government towards this company, from the very first—that I never understood thoroughly the relations between the Government and the company—that I never had been able to comprehend how the Canadian Pacific Railway had got such a firm grip and hold on the Government of this country as to be able to compel from them almost any terms they saw fit to demand. That there is a mystery about it is very easily explained, because the original contract was so contrary to the announced policy of the Government that we cannot but be filled with wonder that they should have allowed that company to wring from them the terms of that contract. I have pointed out more than once to this House that the Government, when they made that original contract with the company, departed from the declared policy that they announced to Parliament, and that Parliament had sanctioned, for the construction of this road, and that they did it without the authority of Parliament, and in defiance of the expressed statements of the Ministers themselves, that they were about to build this road as a Government work, and not through the agency of a company. I have pointed out, as the official records bear testimony, that we had a statement in March, 1880, from the then Minister of Railways, in which he laid down a plan for the construction of this work as a Government work. He stated, in that speech, that when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) introduced his railway policy in 1874, proposing to construct this work as a Government work, he had felt a degree of alarm in connection with it. "But," said he, "I do not hesitate to say that my views have been entirely changed in that matter—that there is not a man in Canada who does not see that the whole position of things has been altered since then." He had, he said, opposed the road being constructed as a Government work in 1874, when the hon. member for East York proposed that it should be done in that way, but he now thought it was an eminently proper thing to do.

We had also the First Minister, within two or three days of the day the Minister of Railways expressed these sentiments, declaring that when his Government assumed office, after the fall of the Mackenzie Administration, they found that they had commenced some of the most difficult portions of the work as a Government work; "and having found," he said, "that the Government had undertaken the construction of the work north of Lake Superior, we determined to go on with it as a Government work, because the Government having constructed the most difficult portions, we thought we should go on and construct the easy portions." That was the policy of the Government, as declared by the First Minister and the Minister of Railways in this House in 1880, and Parliament assented to that proposition, and told the Government to go on and construct the road as a Government work. Within only eight months after that time, without the will of Parliament being expressed, without any intimation being given by Parliament of a desire to depart from that arrangement, the Government entered into a contract with this company to construct this work.

An hon. MEMBER. That's old.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes; it is old, and old as it is, from that day to this no Minister has got up in his place and given reasons why they dared to depart from what they laid down as their policy in 1880. They did not do it when the Government contract was under consideration; nor have they done it on any occasion since. The hon. gentleman opposite, who says it is old, and who has voted, I suppose, for the Government, in all their different dealings and their immense grants and gifts to this corporation, will perhaps be able to say what induced him to support the Government in departing from their expressed plan of building this road, and giving the work to a syndicate. Will he say it is because they secured the construction of the road at a less cost to Canada through the intervention of a company? Will he affirm that? If he does, we have simply to enter into a calculation as to what the cost of this road will be as a Government work. Are we in the dark with reference to that? Not the slightest. In March, 1880, the Minister of Railways gave us the figures of the cost of the portions of the road this company contracted to build for us, for they did not contract to build the whole road; they simply contracted to build portions which, when completed, taken with other portions the Government were to complete, were to be the Canadian Pacific Railway. They were to build 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper, 335 miles from Jasper to Kamloops, and 600 miles from Thunder Bay to Lake Nipissing. Have we any estimate of the cost of the work, if the Government were to do it as a Government work? Yes; Sir Charles Tupper gave it to us. His estimate was $13,000,000 for the 1,000 miles from Selkirk to Jasper, $15,500,000 for the 335 miles from Jasper to Kamloops, and $20,000,000 from Thunder Bay to Lake Nipissing. These were the figures he gave us, and which he took from Mr. Sandford Fleming, the chief engineer. He said he thought the 600 miles from Thunder Bay to Lake Nipissing should be built for $18,000,000, but that Mr. Fleming, whose ability was only exceeded by his caution, asked him to put it at $20,000,000. What was the sum total of the cost of the portion of the road constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway? $48,500,000 were the figures given to Parliament in 1880 and accepted by Parliament, and on these figures Parliament said to the Government: Go on and construct your road as fast as you desire; and the idea of the Government then was, not to construct the road at once. Sir Charles Tupper said it was not the intention of the Government to construct the section north of Lake Superior at once, but that circumstances would demand it in the course of time, and that then it would be constructed. What did we give the company in the original contract to build that $48,500,000 worth of work? We gave them 25,000,000 acres of land and $25,000,000 cash, and then we were to spend $16,000,000 in building the 413 miles from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, to be given them, when completed, as a free gift, and the 125 miles from Yale to Kamloops, to cost $8,000,000 or $9,000,000, and the 90 miles from Yale to Port Moody, costing millions more, all to be handed over, completed and equipped, as free gifts. All these were given them, the 25,000,000 acres and the $25,000,000 cash, and the $35,000,000 required to complete the works that were to be constructed by the Government and given to them on completion—all these were given them to do what the Minister of Railways said would cost about $48,500,000. In addition, we gave them the Pembina branch which cost $1,750,000, and was running and paying dividends at the time; and we gave them a monopoly of the trade of the country for 20 years, exemption from taxation on their lands as long as the lands remained in their possession, exemption from duties on material used for the construction of the road. Yet, after giving them all that, and when the Ministers of that day and their supporters were unable to defend the bargain, but forced that proposition through the House, after sitting day, after day as they did, and when the excuse they attempted to offer was: We know the bargain is a very good bargain, but we want to give them a good bargain, so that we will not have them coming to us again, so that we will have finality in this. The Parliament of Canada assented to this, and having assented to it, under these conditions and for that purpose, it was perfectly natural that when this company, having received this immense amount over what was anticipated by the Government would be the actual cost of construction and equipment of the road, when this company comes back and asks for millions more of money by loans, and the money was given to them by Parliament, Parliament had the right to enquire into the circumstances, and Parliament would have acted rightly had it refused them any further assistance. But Parliament yielded to their request. A loan of $22,500,000 was given to them, and the payment of $7,500,000, which they were to pay, was deferred. A debt of $30,000,000 was therefore incurred by the company last year, for which they gave us security upon the road and the quipment and the branch lines, and on their steamers and other property; and now we have the other proposition before us, barely twelve months later, after having been told last year that certainly then there was finality, we have the proposition to lend the company more money; and, besides that, instead of their offering to increase, they ask us to reduce the security we hold. That is the proposition before us, and hon. gentlemen opposite are apparently prepared to accede to this demand; they are prepared to tell us that it becomes us, as patriots, to grant this company what they ask. Will those hon. gentlemen tell us when we are to reach finality? Will they tell us whether this company will be back next year? There is an alternative proposition, which is a very simple one and a very good one. I will read it again, because hon. gentlemen opposite admit that if the statements of the hon. leader of the Opposition were correct, which he made with reference to the amount of money the company had raised by way of dividends, the question was a very serious one. What is the proposition?

That all after the word "that" be left out, and the following be inserted:—"Canada, in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, gave the company vast aids which were declared to be ample and final."

Who will deny that statement.

"Canada, in 1884, gave the company fresh additional aids, which were again declared to be ample and final."

Who denies that?

"The shareholders of the company have already divided among themselves about seven millions in dividends, and have on deposit with the Government about fourteen millions more, to provide future dividends for themselves for over eight years to come, while they affirm that the railway will be profitable from the day of its opening.
Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

"In the opinion of this House, the shareholders, if they desire more money for their operations, should propose to utilise their deposit for future dividends, instead of asking Canada to impair its existing securities—to make large further advances, and to allow the enterprise to be charged with fifteen millions additional capital, the interest on which must be borne by the trade of this country."

Is not that a reasonable proposition? It is not a proposition to say that you will not give such aid as you may give to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is a proposition that ought to commend itself to business men, and which, I think, will commend itself to the business men of the country; and the only exception which has been taken to it has been—what? They say that it bears upon its face repudiation, and it seemed to be an idea that some one had devised, or some number of heads had come together and had devised, that it was to be the cry, there is nothing in it. Hon. gentlemen opposite must be conscious that there is nothing in it; but there must be something said; the proposition is such an obviously fair one, one that will commend itself to every man of any intelligence in the country, that there must be something said. Parliament, as conducted under this Government, at this time, Parliament conducted in secret caucus, has determined that this loan shall be granted, and therefore it is said that the taint of the repudiation is upon the amendment. If you adopt the resolution, where is the taint of repudiation, in saying that if the shareholders desire more money to carry on their operations they should not be allowed to use the amount they have deposited to meet future dividends. That is all. There is no compulsion whatever. We have no power to compel them to do this, but the resolution asks us to express the opinion that it would be a right and proper thing, and not such an impudent thing, if they would propose to do that, as it is to come and ask us them to lend them more money and to reduce our security, instead of their giving us more security. Oh, but, the hon. gentleman this afternoon said, the shareholders would have to be consenting parties. Well, the resolution proposes that. Is there anything impossible in getting the consent of the shareholders? Is there any difficulty in that? We do not propose to compel them to do anything, but it is the shareholders who are asking this Parliament to impair their own securities and lend them more money, but we say it would be more proper for you, if you require more money, to propose to utilise the money you have placed in our hands to secure future good dividends for themselves. That is all the resolution proposes, and if there is any difficulty in getting your consent to that, there must be a difficulty in regard to the proposals of the Government. How will this $35,000,000 of mortgage bonds be issued? Will that be with the consent of the shareholders? Are these things to be done outside of the shareholders altogether? Are the shareholders not to be consenting parties at all? Do not the resolutions provide:

"That the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the authority of its shareholders, as provided by the 28th section of its charter, may issue and deliver to the Government first mortgage bonds to the extent of $35,000,000, bearing 5 per cent. interest?"

That is the proposition of the Government, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company may issue these mortgage bonds under the provisions of its charter, and the 28th section of the charter provides that this shall be done under the authority of a special general meeting of the shareholders called for the purpose. As I read the contract, there must be a special general meeting of the shareholders, called for a special purpose, the issuing of the bonds which you are proposing that they may issue, before that can be done; and yet the hon. gentlemen opposite see so much difficulty in the way of a simple resolution to utilise the money they have deposited with the Government to meet future dividends. They say: How are you going to get the assent of the shareholders? How are you going to get them to sign your mortgage bonds? Your shareholders have to sanction them in a special general meeting. No one proposes to say they shall utilise this money. The motion of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) simply proposes that we should say to the shareholders: We think it would be more seemly if you proposed to utilise the moneys in our hands to accomplish what you desire, instead of coming with a proposition to issue first mortgage bonds in the way you suggest. All the talk that is thrust in about patriotism, all that is thrust in with reference to our magnificent country in the west, is beside the question. The country to the west is a grand country—there is no doubt about that; and this company had enough assistance given to them to build and finish their railway out of the public money of Canada. A mystery seems to hang over this transaction. It is a mystery that this company seem to have power enough, year after year, to compel the Government to yield to whatever terms they see fit to propose; but the people of the country will look at the propositions before the House now in a business light. They will naturally ask why those who have millions of money laid by in order to secure immense dividends for themselves in the future, money which ought to have gone into the construction of the road, can ask Parliament to impair its security and to give them further sums of money, and why Parliament should grant their demand, after its attention has been drawn to the fact that these millions are locked up in its Treasury. If you desire more aid, then utilise the money that is laid by for the purpose of securing your great dividends; put that into the construction of your road; there is enough to complete it, according to your own statement, and your road, when completed, you assure us over the signature of your own president, is sure to earn your dividends; your dividends are all safe. That being the case, what argument can be used, what justification can be offered for this Parliament deliberately to impair the security that it holds with the company, when it is not bound to do so by any sense of justice, or of right, or of equity; when there is no plea that the company can put forth in any direction that will warrant it in doing it. Take their own published statement, take their own reports, the flourishing condition of the company, the amount they are worth over and above their liabilities; read the statement issued the other day of their assets and liabilities; see the immense property they are possessed of; see the wealth they have there; and yet with all that wealth, with all that amount of assets over liabilities, this Parliament proposes, with millions of money lying in our hands for their own benefit, to let that money lay there, to be paid out to them to secure their future dividends, with the ample securities we took last year—which we were told were ample and that made us perfectly safe—and on top of that give to them five millions more money. I have no desire to go further into the matter, but I think it is an occasion when every hon. member in this House would have been perfectly justified in standing up and declaring that he is individually opposed to the propositions that are before the House and in favor of the reasonable suggestion contained in the proposition of the member for West Durham.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Cameron (Huron) p. 2643.

YEAH:

Messieurs

Auger,
Bain (Wentworth),
Bernier,
Blake,
Bourassa,

Fleming,
Forbes,
Geoffrion,
Gillmor,
Guay,

McIntyre,
McIsaac,
McMullen,
Mills,
Mulock,

Burpee,
Cameron (Huron),
Cameron (Middlesex),
Campbell (Renfrew),
Cartwright,
Casey,
Casgrain,
Catudal,
Charlton,
Davies,
Fairbank,
Fisher,

Harley,
Holton,
Innes,
Irvine,
King,
Kirk,
Landerkin,
Langelier,
Laurier,
Lister,
Livingston,
McCraney,

Paterson (Brant),
Platt,
Ray,
Rinfret,
Somerville (Brant),
Somerville (Bruce),
Springer,
Sutherland (Oxford),
Trow,
Vail,
Watson,
Wilson—51.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Allison,
Bain (Soulanges),
Baker (Missisquoi),
Baker (Victoria),
Barnard,
Beaty,
Bell,
Benoit,
Bergeron,
Bergin,
Blondeau,
Bowell,
Bryson,
Burns,
Cameron (Inverness),
Cameron (Victoria),
Campbell (Victoria),
Carling,
Cimon,
Cochrane,
Colby,
Costigan,
Coughlin,
Coursol,
Curran,
Cuthbert,
Daly,
Daoust,
Dawson,
Desaulniers (Maski'gé),
Dickinson,
Dodd,
Dugas,

Dupont,
Farrow,
Ferguson (L'ds & Gren.),
Ferguson (Welland),
Fortin,
Foster,
Gagné,
Gault,
Gigault,
Gordon,
Grandbois,
Guilbault,
Guillet,
Haggart,
Hall,
Hesson,
Hickey,
Hurteau,
Ives,
Jamieson,
Jenkins,
Kaulbach,
Labrosse,
Landry (Montmagny),
Langevin,
Lesage,
Macdonald (King's),
Macdonald (Sir John),
Mackintosh,
McMillan (Vaudreuil),
McCallum,
McCarthy,
McDougald (Pictou),

McDougall (C. Breton),
McLelan,
McNeill,
Massue,
Mitchell,
Moffat,
Montplaisir,
Paint,
Paterson (Essex),
Pinsonneault,
Pope,
Pruyn,
Riopel,
Robertson (Hamilton),
Robertson (Hastings),
Ross,
Royal,
Rykert,
Shakespeare,
Small,
Sproule,
Stairs,
Taschereau,
Temple,
Tupper,
Vanasse,
Wallace (Albert),
Wallace (York),
White (Oardwell),
White (Hastings),
Wood (Brockville),
Wood (Westm'ld),
Woodworth.—100.

Amendment negatived.

Main motion agreed to on a division, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman knows that we could not go on with this resolution to-night. There will be a good deal of discussion upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. What business does the hon. gentleman intend to take up to-morrow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These resolutions.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2:05 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 20th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on certain proposed resolutions respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. BLAKE. By this resolution it is proposed to issue a set of mortgage bonds for $35,000,000. It is very plain that $20,000,000 are to replace bonds, and with respect to the other $15,000,000 this would be a suitable place to have a general explanation as to the details of the scheme.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman knows that Sir Charles Tupper, in his explanation to the House last year with regard to the $35,000,000 stock which the Government were to retain, said that would only be sold for the purpose of the road, or for the purpose of repaying the loan to the Government. Twenty millions of that is set apart for paying off the loan, as the hon. gentleman well knows, and when these bonds are sold the proceeds must go to pay off the loan. With respect to the other $15,000,000, $8,000,000 is taken as security for the $5,000,000 loan of this Session. That $5,000,000 loan is for the purpose of paying the floating debt. The other $10,000,000 is for the purpose of completing the road, and it will make it a much better road than that contemplated by the contract. The contract will now be completed in such a way as to place the line in a position to compete with older rivals. It was believed to be necessary that, having a competing line, we should have a road which, when opened, would be able to compete with other transcontinental railways. That will involve considerable expenditure, and a portion of this money will be appropriated for rolling stock and other purposes, as the hon. gentleman has seen from the memorandum laid before the House. A portion of it will be devoted to improving the road so as to bring it up to a proper standard and enable the company to efficiently complete the road. That really is the destination of the $15,000,000: First, to pay off their floating debt, and secondly to improve the road and to put it in a fair condition to compete with other roads.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what is the intended term of years for which the bonds are to be issued?

Mr. POPE. The bonds are 50 year bonds.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say why it is not provided in his proposed resolution what the intended term is, because under this you might make them thousand year bonds?

Mr. POPE. There is no objection in saying "a period not exceeding 50 years."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is to become of the statement of the Finance Minister that he was going to pay off all the money borrowed at the end of seven years, by the repayment of this Canadian Pacific Railway money? This statement was made by the Finance Minister only two months ago.

Mr. BLAKE. Why is it that you fix upon the term of 50 years as a maximum term?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. POPE. Of course that is an arbitrary arrangement, whether you fix it at 25, 30, 40 or 50 years, but 50 years is fixed upon as being probably the best way of arranging it.

Mr. BLAKE. In this connection, as we have borrowed and are borrowing large sums of money, in order to meet these loans we are giving to the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is important that we should know exactly about the repayment of these loans. We have had from time to time statements as to the financial arrangements of the Administration, dependent as they were, to a considerable degree, on their obligations to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the obligations of the Canadian Pacific to them. During the Budget Speech, the Finance Minister told us he was going to issue a short loan in order that we might not be embarrassed by the riches we are to receive in 1891 from the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now we find that the new loan is to be a fifty year loan.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that is exactly relevant to the subject. We will discuss that question when the Government loan comes up. As to these bonds, they are to mature at a period of not over 50 years. The question is what is the usual practice with regard to loans made by railways, and bonds and debentures issued by railways. Well, they vary; but the general practice is to have them from 25 to 50 years—generally 50—redeemable at the option of the railway at 25 or 30 years. It is desirable that we should make the arrangement as to the term of the bonds, according to the suggestion of the railway as much as possible, as they know which is the best way of making their bonds available. If the bonds are limited to 50 years, we know exactly when they will mature—perhaps at 30, perhaps at 35, but they will do that to suit their own ideas of what is the most advantageous period for the maturing of the bonds.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman that this is an irrelevant consideration. Was it irrelevant for the Minister of Finance when he made his Budget Speech, to declare that he was about to arrange the loan, which he is now negotiating in England, as a short loan, because the Canadian Pacific Railway debt was about to mature in 1891, and he intended to have the money to meet that loan? That was certainly relevant. He was explaining his scheme of finance, which depended on the period of the railway debt. He was about to borrow at such dates that his new loan might be met by the railway debt. It is now proposed to arrange for the postponement of the railway debt from 1891 for a period of between 40 and 50 years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. Therefore, it is quite relevant to the question. The hon. gentleman says no, and of course we know that the Canadian Pacific Railway has the option to pay earlier, but they are under no obligation to pay before the maturity of the bonds. What is going to happen if they do not pay? This is going to happen: 5 per cent. interest will be payable on the bonds. You take $20,000,000 of 5 per cent. bonds as your security. You agree that from the railway company until 1891, provided they do not make default in interest, you will exact no more than 4 per cent. on the $20,000,000, if they do not pay before 1891, they will pay 5 per cent. But the bonds will not mature earlier than the period of maturity—they will not mature earlier than the period of maturity to the public. If you intend to declare that there is to be a foreclosure some different proposition will have to be put in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the state of affairs as I understand. The credit of the company expires in 1891, and if they do not pay in 1891, they are in default.

If the Government does not choose to enforce this default then, after the period of default, the interest shall be 5 per cent., but the moment the company is in default; the Government have got all the remedies, and besides the value of the bonds does not depend on the length of time at which the notes mature. The bonds always have a saleable value at any given time before maturity. The moment the default takes place the Government can do with those bonds as they please, as with any other securities. The hon. gentleman says there is no means of enforcing them until the end of fifty years. That is not the case. For instance, consols are not redeemable at any time except at the option of the Government; they run forever; and people take them as securities because they are saleable at any time at the market price. So with the securities of the Canadian Government, no matter whether they are for 10 or 15 or 20 years, they have a market value. I take it that the Canadian Government has the power, the moment the default takes place, to enforce the security and to sell it at any time thereafter they please.

Mr. BLAKE. They are two very distinct propositions to say that the Canadian Government have the power to sell their bonds and to say they have the power to enforce the security. I was not considering at what period of time the Canadian Government might sell their bonds; I was considering what the consequences of default would be; and the hon. gentleman says they will have power to enforce their security. I say they will not have that power, at any rate so long as the interest is paid, until the maturity of the bonds. They might or might not have the right to sell the bonds after 1891; but up to that time I presume they will have no right to sell them. The general public may sell from the time they receive them. The Government would call on the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to pay the $20,000,000 which is represented by the security of the road. All that is to happen is that the general rate of interest on the bonds of 5 per cent. is to commence to run at the time of the so-called default, and possibly at that time the Government may be permitted, if they find purchasers, to sell their securities, but they cannot enforce them against the road.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the 5th resolution.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that to relate to default in the payment of interest.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Not at all—the principal.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon. gentleman says that word default refers to default in the payment of interest up to 1891?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Up to 1891.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is intended that the Government shall have what the public bondholders are not to have, a right to call in the security for the benefit of the bondholders generally after 1891.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I take it that after 1891, if there is a default, the Government can use these bonds which are lodged with them as security. They are not substituted for the Government debt; they are security for the Government debt; and if, after 1891, there is a failure, or if, in the meantime, there is a failure in the payment of the interest, the Government can proceed for default, can sell the security they have at the market price, and can look to the road for the balance, or they can take the road.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Supposing these $15,000,000 of bonds are sold, what position will the holders of those bonds be in? Apparently the Government would have to be trustees for them as well as for themselves for their $20,000,000. The Government could not enforce their security for $20,000,000; they would have to do it for the whole $35,000,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have a claim on the whole road as a matter of mortgage; they take these bonds as collateral security. The holders of the $15,000,000 are not in that position; they take the bonds, and they can only enforce them according to their terms. Their purchase of the bonds is not a security; it is an investment; if they choose at any time to sell the bonds before they mature, they sell them at the market price; it is their own affair. It is a different thing to take the bonds as a security. We can sell these bonds, in case of default in 1891, and if they do not sell at the market price, the balance will remain as a mortgage on the railway, or we can go into possession of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. The result of that is very curious. The balance is to remain as a mortgage on the railway but it is for the benefit of those to whom the hon. gentleman has sold the bonds, and the public bondholders as well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman says these bonds are only to be taken as collateral security, while the mortgage will secure the balance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I said so.

Mr. CASEY. According to the 3rd resolution, it is only the Algoma branch which will remain subject to the mortgage of the Government after the issue and delivery of the bonds.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. CASEY. Well, I should like to know what construction the hon. gentleman puts on these words, if they do not say that the mortgage shall be released and discharged.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The issue of bonds shall not apply to the Algoma branch, for a very good reason, because we want that road to be built; but the original statutory mortgage of the Government will still remain on the Algoma branch, but the bondholders have no claim upon that branch.

Mr. CASEY. That is quite clear; but as to the rest of the road, the mortgage is released and the bonds take its place?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. That is the statement of the clause, and that is exactly what we have been saying, that instead of these bonds being taken as collateral security, they are taken for the whole line, except the Algoma branch, in lieu of the mortgage. The right hon. gentleman said, a few minutes ago, that we have power in case of default to sell the road. That is not the power given by the clause in question. Clause 5 says that in the eventualities therein stated:

"Upon the company remaining in default in respect of either the principal or interest of the said $20,000,000 for a period of 12 months, the trustees shall be authorised and empowered to take possession of the property mortgaged and to administer the same for the benefit of the bondholders generally."

So that the power is merely to administer the property, and the only means of repaying itself the Government will have will be what they can make on the operation of the road. That is taking a very great risk, in view of our experience of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway. We will not have the road as security at all, but only the right of ordinary bondholders of having the road put into the hands of a receiver and administered for the benefit of all bondholders, our share being in the proportion of 20 to 15, or  $\frac{4}{5}$ ths of the profits of the road.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman omitted one important point in this connection. Under these resolutions we will have $35,000,000 of first mortgage bonds on the railway itself, exclusive of the land and the Algoma branch. Twenty millions of that is security for the repayment of the loan made last year to the extent of $20,000,000. We stand in relation to the road precisely in the position of the other bondholders with this exception, that our right to foreclose comes sooner than it would to the ordinary bondholders.

Mr. BLAKE. No, we have no right to foreclose.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Under the 4th clause we have the statement that the time for repayment of the entire loan of the company shall be fixed the first May, 1891. That is the day the loan is payable under the loan Act of last Session, and that loan Act is perpetuated in that particular at present. We have the right therefore to the repayment of the loan at that time; and by the 5th section, the non-payment of it will be practically a default, which will enable us to do as we would be enabled to do if we were ordinary bondholders, and default were made on our bonds. If in 1891, therefore, the Canadian Pacific Railway has not paid back the amount borrowed, we will have the right to foreclose and to take possession of the road as ordinary bondholders, in virtue of our $20,000,000 of bonds, but we will take possession of it on the same footing as the other $15,000,000 bondholders. They will have the same rights in connection with the line that we have, but we have this advantage which they have not, that we have the security of the lands in addition to the security on the road for the payment of interests on our $20,000,000 and the security of the Algoma Branch.

Mr. BLAKE. You have the Algoma Branch just so long as it is useless. When it begins to be useful by a line being constructed from Sault Ste. Marie, there will be a mortgage on it ahead of you.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not consider the Algoma Branch as a matter of serious consideration in connection with this matter at all. The great advantage of that line is this, that by its connection with the Sault Ste. Marie branch and the extension of lines on the American side, we will develop an important trade which will more than compensate the country for the loss of the security.

Mr. BLAKE. That is another question.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). But the lands we undoubtedly have, and if we take the statements of hon. gentlemen as to their value, when we gave the contract, in the first instance, we will derive from them a very considerable amount which will go against the interest of our bonds, supposing the road should not pay the interest. I hope that by that time it will, and eventually it must do so. We will then get the interest and have the sale of the lands to recoup us for the principal.

Mr. BLAKE. Our position to-day is this: That if, in regard to the last loan of \$29,820,000, default should occur in May, 1891, we have the road, we have the possession of this whole enterprise, the road with its extensions and lands all, and it is not simply the possession we will have, but the title of it. It will become ours. But if default is to be made under this arrangement in May, 1891, we will have the right, not to ownership, but to a joint possession of  $\frac{3}{5}$ ths of the road for our \$20,000,000. That is our position under the proposed arrangement. The existing arangement it appears, according to Mr. Stephen's statement, was a severe arrangement against which the company remonstrated—an arrangement too exacting, to which they were subjected by the stern creditor who has dominated over them and compelled them to submit to such severe Jewish terms. The property was to be ours, if default were made in 1891, under that arrangement; but if default be made in 1891, under the proposed arrangement, the property will not be ours. Not merely will it not be ours, but we will not have an individual right to the possession of the property in 1891, but only the right to the possession of it by a trustee in trust for our  $\frac{1}{5}$ ths interest in the road. Therefore our remedy will not be what the hon. gentleman was understood to say a moment ago, that for the balance due us we could sell the road. Our position will only be that we will be able to appoint a trustee to take possession and get what profits are to be got out of the working of the road, during the earlier years when the company has failed to make a profit at all—that we will take the thing off their hands until the traffic becomes developed and the road becomes a paying one, and when that good time comes the road will revert to the company and they will reap the profits.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We will get back our interest.

Mr. BLAKE. You will get back your interest but you might have the possibility of getting back the security, if you had the power of selling the road to somebody else. The new consequence will be we will not have the road under the proposed arrangement. We are to have it now. We will not even have a joint interest in it, but a joint right to possession of it for an indefinite time, to be worked, I say, under circumstances in which the company has made default of working it properly; but there is yet the right to succession, there is yet their right to say, at some future day, if it should become profitable: Now, it is ours again. This is a most important change in two aspects. First, we are admitting others as privileged with us in our security in this enterprise. The practical result of that will be, in the end, if this security becomes necessary to be used, on that theory, and it is on that theory alone it is important to discuss it, we will have to buy off those other people. If the security is not to be used and everything turns out well, there will be no trouble about it; but if it is to be used, we will have to buy off the other stockholders. If you say no, take it as you say. We have joint bondholders with us in the concern. A trustee is to be appointed, and the power of that trustee is, in 1891, if we take possession, to see if he can make it pay, and if he does, it is for the benefit of us to the extent of our securities. But our powers to realise and get hold of the property, to sell it to the best advantage, to give a parliamentary title of it to some new corporation for the amount which will realise our securities, and keep us from the position of being but a mortgagee of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is to be gone altogether. That will arise, if at all, under the terms of this security. I do not know that it will arise at all, but, if it does, it will be under the terms, when the defaults are made, which are general to the whole body of bondholders, but, as to the special default which is made in our case and provided for in the 5th clause, the sole remedy is to take possession and administer for the benefit of the bondholders.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That depends entirely upon what may be the conditions in the deed of mortgage to be executed by the company.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the clause.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Take the second clause.

Mr. BLAKE. I see the second clause.

Mr. CASEY. We take the position of ordinary bondholders, with one very considerable difference, that, until May, 1891, we get 1 per cent. less than the other bondholders.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is another question.

Mr. CASEY. We have no better position in regard to remedies than the other bondholders, and we take 1 per cent. less interest. As to the remedy, it has been by no means made clear what the meaning of clause 5 is.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Had you not better wait till we get to clause 5?

Mr. CASEY. The wording is :

"If the company makes default in the payment of the interest on the said sum of $20,000,000 or of the principal thereof at the time when the same shall become due respectively, the rate of interest upon the whole loan shall thereafter be computed at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; and such default shall be equivalent to a default in the payment of the interest on the said bonds, and shall entitle the Government to the same remedies as if default had been made in the payment of the interest or principal of the said bonds, and upon the company remaining in default in respect of either the principal or interest on the said $20,000,000 for a period of 12 months, the trustees shall be authorised and empowered to take possession of the property mortgaged and to administer the same for the benefit of the bondholders generally."

The last paragraph of the clause seems to mean, and apparently the leader of this side of the House so understood it, that as long as the 5 per cent. interest was paid, as long as the extra interest due on the first default was paid without default, as long as it did not remain in default for a period of twelve months, the remedy of possession, such as it is, does not come in. If it is meant that the words should have a different meaning, and that the remedy should come into force as soon as default was made, either in the payment of the 4 per cent. up to 1891, or of the 5 per cent. afterwards, then the clause ought to state it in words that would be unmistakable. The hon. gentleman who leads this side of the House said we were admitting partners in our security. Not only so, but we are also reducing the security. We have now security on both the road and the lands for the whole sum, and we can make it out of whichever turns out to be the most solid security. Under the new arrangement, we are freeing the lands of all but this amount of $9,880,000.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. CASEY. Not absolutely, but in the first instance we are taking the security for $20,000,000 on the road and, in round numbers, for $10,000,000 on the land. It is certainly the opinion of many of us that the land is the most solid security. The land is something that may be saleable in future, if the railway continues in operation, and we would get possession of it and be able to sell it, but, instead of keeping that as a reserve security for the capital sum, we are, as far as the capital amount is concerned, taking a doubtful security, taking the road of which we are only to enjoy the possession and profits for two-thirds of our entire debt, leaving one-third on the directly realisable security of the land. The hon. gentleman's point, when he interrupted me, was, I have no doubt, the same as that which he made when he was speaking, that the land was liable in the last resort for the $20,000,000, but that is not as I read it. I read that :

"After payment out of the proceeds of such lands of the outstanding land grant bonds, and of the said sum of $9,880,912 and interest, the remainder of such lands shall remain charged with a first lien and privilege in favor of the Government as additional security for the payment of the said sum of $20,000,000 and interest."

It is not until $10,000,000, in round numbers, has been paid off, that you have any lien for the $20,000,000. The lands might remain on hand and sufficient might not be sold at the time when the $20,000,000 become due to pay off the $9,880,000, and therefore you could not depend on the lands to make up any deficit in the payment of the $20,000,000.

You must first get your $9,880,000 out before you can take any action on the $20,000,000, so it could not be looked upon as being collateral security for the whole loan. The largest amount is put on the poorest security.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite true that $15,000,000 of bondholders are admitted on equal terms, so far as the bonds are concerned, with the Government loan of $30,000,000. The Government considered, under the circumstances, that it would be well that this expansion should be allowed, in order to grant relief to the road, and the Government consider that the security is in no degree substantially affected by the change. The Government had a mortgage on the whole road and all its properties for the whole extent of the loan of $30,000,000. It was considered that that property was of infinitely greater value than the amount of the mortgage, and that the letting in of $15,000,000 more of bonds, with such a valuable security, did not really affect the Government security, or the means of enforcing the loan. It is exactly equivalent to this. If there is a property worth $20,000, and you have a mortgage of $5,000, and the mortgagor wishes to improve that property, you have a mortgage of $5,000 on the property worth $20,000, and you allow another party to come in with a mortgage of $500, the amount of which is to be laid out on the improvement of the property, the property being of so much more value than your own security and the amount of the second mortgage, or the party who is allowed to come in with you on your own mortgage, in order to improve the property. That does not affect your security, because the property is certain to be a good security for your loan and the subsequent loan which is to be devoted to the improvement of the property on which you have the security. That is the way the Government looks at it. Now, by the terms of these resolutions, there is no doubt that the default has taken place if the principal and interest are not paid by 1891. Then the question arises: How are you going to enforce the security.

Mr. CASEY. But if there is a default of interest before then?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the default in the terms of payment of that interest is equivalent to the default under any ordinary mortgage. The default takes place, say, in 1891. You can either take the ordinary proceedings on a mortgage and enforce it—but, if you do, you must do it for the benefit of the $15,000,000 of bondholders as well as yourself—or, under the 5th clause, the trustee can take possession upon the company remaining in default, in respect of either the principal or interest on the $20,000,000 :

"But if the company made default in the payment of the interest on the said sum of $20,000,000"—

Not on the $35,000,000 but on the $20,000,000, the Government debt.—

"at the time when the same shall become due respectively for a period of 12 months"—

I may say that ought to be six months.—

"the trustees shall be authorised and empowered to take possession of the property mortgaged and to administer the same for the benefit of the bondholders generally."

That is to say, the trustees will take possession of the road. It must be administered for the benefit of the bondholders generally—I take it, according to their several interests. If it should happen with any of the bondholders, that there is a year's interest due from want of demand or otherwise, the coupons not being handed in, that bondholder would have a claim for his two coupons. I take it that those trustees must administer for the benefit of the bondholders generally, when they take possession it will be after default, as the position of the Government will be that the trustees must deal with the debt or claim the Government holds for principal and interest, and in the case of the other bondholders for interest only. I think that is quite clear. And then still further the question is settled beyond doubt. If the hon. gentleman will look at the 2nd clause :

"That the company may secure the payment of the said bonds and of the interest thereon by a deed of mortgage executed by the Government the trustees to be approved by the Government with the authority and of tenor and purport, and containing the condition, remedies, provisions and powers authorised and provided for by the 28th section of the charter of the company, to such an extent and in a such a manner and form as shall be approved by the Governor in Council."

Now the 28th section simply proves that in default of payment—it speaks about securities—in cases of the issue of bonds by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the bonds :

"And may also contain, with the approval aforesaid"—

That is, the Governor in Council.

"authority to the trustee or trustees, on such default, as one of such remedies, to take possession of their property-mortgage and to hold and run the same for the benefit of the bondholders thereof for a time to be limited by such deed or to sell the said railway and property, after such delay, and upon such terms and conditions as may be stated, in such deed ; and with like approval any such deed may contain provision to the effect"—

And so on about voting. But here it says the Government may take possession, and it will be for the benefit of all the bondholders of the fifteen millions as well as of our twenty millions. They may take possession, and they can either hold it, or run it, or they can sell it. They have all these powers.

Mr. BLAKE. To simplify the matter it is much better to consider what is the position of the whole mass of bondholders in the first place; and then here is an exceptional position for that mass of bonds held by the Government. Now the whole mass of bondholders are in this position, including the Government's bonds: that in case of default they are secured by a mortgage under this 2nd clause, and that by consequence, in case of default, and under these terms and conditions of that mortgage, there may be either a possession taken or a sale, either then or subsequently, a sale out. That, however, is only the common position of all the bondholders, including the Government's bonds, and it is a common right and on common conditions. For instance the bonds are fifty years' bonds. That power would not enure to the Government's bonds in 1891. It is a common right to all. Then the question is, what special rights the Government has in respect to its bonds over the common mass—or in addition to. In the first place, it holds these bonds in a different character; it holds them as security simply, and not as owner, and I presume it would not be right for the Government, unless default were made in the payment of interest to 1891, to sell these bonds, as ordinary bondholders might, from day to day. They are hypothecated for the twenty millions. In the second place, it is entitled to only 4 per cent. instead of 5 per cent., during 1891. In the third place, at the end of 1891, that loan of twenty millions comes due, and therefore, at the same time presumably, the Government may sell its twenty millions of bonds. Now, if it sells these twenty millions of bonds, what right will the holders of those twenty millions have? Just the same right as the other bondholders, and no more. Now, suppose it does not sell those twenty millions, but proceeds to ask for special powers to be used on its behalf under clause 5, as on default. We have got now down to the special powers, not the powers under the mortgage deed, because the powers under the mortgage deed were for the common use of all the bondholders, under common conditions—but the special powers in case of default made in the payment of the twenty millions secured by the twenty millions of bonds—rather to take possession and to hold the property in the name of the trustees for the benefits of the bondholders generally, to administer it but not to sell it. There is no power to sell in 1891. The mortgage is only in case of general default with the whole mass of bonds. If you have the power of 5 per cent. interest on the whole mass of bonds, then there will be a power to sell in common for all, but as long as the 5 per cent. interest is paid, there is no power to sell at the end of 1891 in respect to this twenty million loan; and, therefore, we are placed in that regard in an entirely different position.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. McCARTHY. I quite agree with a good deal that has been said by the hon. member for West Durham. But the intention is, as the First Minister says, that in 1891 all the powers which are given by the mortgage deeds are to be security for the bonds, to be executed in 1891. It is only just altering the terms which we have at the conclusion of the 5th section. I agree that there is an ambiguity, but the intention is there. We have this clause: that the trustees shall be empowered to take possession of the property; and it may be that there would be a doubt. I am not at all saying that my hon. friend's construction is not correct,—whether that would not be the only power, the sole power, that could be used.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly we can amend it.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no use wasting time in discussing the exact meaning of this resolution. As I understand it to be the intention, we can easily put in the proper words to carry out that intention.

Mr. BLAKE. If it is intended to amend the resolution there is no use in discussing it; but of course we were discussing the resolutions as they stood.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I understood the only dispute to be as to the real meaning of these words. If the language includes leased lines, there is no necessity discussing the matter.

Mr. BLAKE. But I have not heard the Minister say that he did not intend to include the leased lines, and I wished to make it clear that the leased lines were included. I am still of opinion that this language is broad enough to include the leased lines, but I want that definitely settled.

Mr. MILLS. It will be remembered that this has not to be interpreted by the courts but by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. I admit that I do not find anything mentioned about the leased lines; but I take them to be included in the language. The language is wide enough to include those interests, and I am anxious that they should be included in the arrangement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Why did the hon. gentleman bring up this point?

Mr. BLAKE. It is desirable, in my opinion, that the mortgage should include the leased lines; and I wish to have it so understood. I have stated my view of the construction of the language.

Mr. POPE. I do not think it was ever contemplated that this clause should include leased lines.

Mr. MULOCK. Is not a lease personal property?

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly, a lease is personal property.

Mr. McCARTHY. The words are first put generally; then particularly, so as to show just what the words cover. I think they do not cover leased lines.

Mr. BLAKE. Shall we have any security on the Manitoba South-Western Colonisation Railway?

Mr. McCARTHY. If it is a branch, we shall.

Mr. BLAKE. That is a company in which the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway has not been defined to us. It appears by the company's report that for 52 miles the company paid something like $1,250,000; and it is put under leased lines. Is it intended that we shall have any security on the Manitoba South-Western or not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not a branch line in any way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I remember aright the argument of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) the other afternoon, it was that we must consider all those extra acquisitions by the company and the large sum they had expended upon them. That would be a very good reason why, if there be any value in those leased lines, it should form part of our security.

Mr. BLAKE. We are paying for the leased lines. In the company's report it is shown that there was paid last year $1,265,450 on account of leased lines in Ontario. As to the Manitoba and South-Western, which is entered as a leased line, we have not been able to ascertain what interest the company had in it; but it paid last year on that account $1,254,978. On the Atlantic and North-Western, $202,000. That is a portion of the scheme of the Montreal connection. On St. Lawrence and Ottawa, $227,253. On the South-Eastern a certain sum, that being a leased line like the others. Are we to have security on any of these leased lines, and on which?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We cannot possibly have security on leased lines whose bonds are in existence and on which the company have agreed to pay interest. Instead of getting valid security, we might be getting an elephant. If we took possession of the roads afterwards, we would have to pay the interest on all the bonds.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member has made a statement which he will be sorry he made. He has professed great faith in the reports of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I find in the statement respecting leased lines, that the Ontario and Quebec Railway made a large profit over all costs and charges. They made a profit not merely over the fixed charges on the purchase money which yet remains to be paid, but on the amount which has been paid for the eastern extension. As to the leased lines themselves, they made a profit after paying all fixed charges and expenses. The hon. gentleman at one time was ready to argue that the leased lines were no burden; now, when it is suggested that we should include them in the security, he says we would get an elephant on our hands. Let us get at the bottom of the whole matter, and not argue one day on a certain set of facts and another day on a set of facts diametrically opposite. If they are profitable investments, and after paying their way, returned a large profit to the Canadian Pacific Railway, why is it that under these circumstances, whatever the circumstances of last year were, this country should not get the security of that profit?

Mr. CASEY. It is not only that, but the directors themselves express the following opinion:—

"The directors are convinced that without the control of tributary lines, reaching all the important centres of trade in the older Provinces of the Dominion, the company could have no adequate command of the traffic to and from the Canadian North-West, and the Pacific coast, and that the greater part of it would continue to be carried by the American lines as it has been in the past, and the Canadian Pacific Railway would fail to accomplish one of the main objects for which it was brought into existence."

It is this helpless trunk line without the necessary connections, of which it is proposed to give us possession, and not to give us the franchises which that company has acquired in the necessary tributary lines.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is rather a barren discussion. It may be that the hon. member for West Durham is correct in his statements. It may be as my hon. friend near me says, that it will not have that effect, because the subsequent language specifies and limits the more general language at the beginning of the clause. But the language is precisely the language of last year. Whatever security the Government got on the loan of $30,000,000, exists now on the $20,000,000 and the $15,000,000. If the hon. gentleman was right, on that loan of $30,000,000 last year we had a claim on the leases. It may be so, and if so, we have that claim now. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman has any object—indeed, he says he has no object—in diminishing the security. If it is so, that is a matter to be settled hereafter, and it will be settled by the courts, if there is any row about it.

Mr. BLAKE. All the hon. gentleman has to do is to put in the resolution the words "securing the lease lines."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I dare say we might do so, but then comes in the question of the policy of doing so which is quite a different affair. The intention of the Government was to let in $15,000,000 of bondholders into the security we took last year, and not to increase that security or diminish it. It may be, and I think it is the case, that the Government could assume that as a matter of course—they could deal with those lines and encumber them to a great extent with all possible encumbrances. I do not think there is any necessity for raising that question now, or increasing the security we had last year. I think we should hold the security exactly as agreed upon under the Act of Parliament; that we should not ask to increase it or allow it to be diminished, the only alteration being that whatever security we have in the clauses of the Bill last year, we should hold the same security undiminished and unincreased for the benefit of the $15,000,000 of bondholders as well as ourselves.

Mr. BLAKE. The idea of telling us that this thing will be settled afterwards by the courts, and that it is to be left in obscurity and uncertainty, seems to me to be one which the hon. gentleman would hardly seriously repeat. Anything that we can make clear ought not to be left obscure; whatever we can make plain, should be made plain now. And when I suggested that it was a matter that could be settled in a moment, the hon. gentleman saw the difficulty into which he had plunged himself, and he said: Yes, but then comes the question of policy. I say that the observations of my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) are of the utmost cogency in this direction. If it be true that as part of a great transcontinental railway, and to accomplish the objects for which that railway was built, it was vital that the Ontario and Quebec, the Credit Valley, the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, and their connections at Detroit, should be controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway, if it be true that the great object of a national highway would be largely defeated, that the traffic would still largely pass by the United States lines, if it be true that it was essential to the successful operation of the Canadian line, that these roads should be acquired—if all that be true, in what position are the public bondholders and others to be, when those lines have passed out of the control of the company? You are telling us that you expect to sell the bonds in the market, and to sell them well, and those to whom you are going to sell them will turn to the company's report and find that it is vital to the successful operation of the company that it should own the leased lines; and they find that the security you tender, does not embrace the leased lines, and therefore when they come to realise that which was vital to realise, the money will not be there. And you expect them to pay you. You tell the people of Canada the same. You say: Place faith in this report; place faith in this policy which we have endorsed. And you propose to take a security which shall not embrace those lines which are vital to the successful operation of the company, and you propose to sever those interests in case default is made. Security is taken in case of default. Security is of little consequence as long as we contemplate the bright side, and assume payment. We have to look at the dark side; we have to look at things as they will be if a storm comes; and when we are considering security, we ought to consider whether it would be secure in the day of the storm. In the event of default, if this report be true, if the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway in acquiring those lines, be correct, how shall we stand then? Why, Sir, we will not be able to get the old traffic of the Province of Ontario; it will be all gone. The Canadian Pacific Railway corporators will be masters of the situation. They may lose the main line, but they will turn round and say, we have got the traffic of Ontario in our hands, if you want it back by the national line, and not by Chicago—and they have got connections with Chicago now—we will send the stuff by the United States unless you make terms with us. And so they get hold of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and you will have to buy at a high price the interest of the corporators in the leased lines. Now, these are certainties in case we want to enforce the securities; if an interest is to be created independently of the Canadian Pacific Railway interest, which we are to acquire afterwards, this is the other nest egg, in addition to the dividends—the other sheet anchor to windward, which these gentlemen are putting by, so that if the worst comes to the worst they can make good terms with the country in case of default.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad to hear this speech from the hon. gentleman. It has been pointed out again and again by the hon. gentleman himself and others, that this company has been wasting money, diverting its funds, withdrawing them from the railway proper; that they have been untrue to their obligations and to their duty to this country, in laying out money in unprofitable and wild speculations. Now, there is no doubt that whether the company have expended their money in wild or in wise speculations, not a farthing of the money which the Government gave them has been expended on these side enterprises. The whole of it has been expended on the road proper. The whole of the money expended on these wild or wise speculations has been their own, got in some way or other. Hon. gentlemen have objected to them; they have thundered against them in the press and in the House, and now the hon. gentleman says these are most valuable; we must have them, although they should not have gone into them, although they have taken their own money and put into these enterprises, we must hold them. We must take the security that they have improperly and dishonestly—and some hon. gentlemen have gone so far as to say discreditably, they have taken their own funds, which ought to have been expended on the main line, for these enterprises, and the hon. gentleman will take the produce of all this dishonesty, the result of all this unwise expenditure—non nolit. The original act may have been wrong, but the hon. gentleman must take the security on these dishonest, these unwise, these improvident investments of the company. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can uphold that style of argument. He has given up the whole thing when he says we must have every one of those leases—when he says our security will be bad, will be prejudiced, will not be as good as it otherwise would be, unless we hold every one of the enterprises in which the company have invested, and keep them for our own use and benefit.

Mr. BLAKE. I pointed out to the hon. gentleman what this statement was, and what the statement of the company was. I said the hon. gentleman had declared that those enterprises were important to the national highway; I said the company had declared the same thing; I said both of the contracting parties had declared that they were essential to the control by Canada of the national highway; and I asked how it was that they should make these statements, that they should justify these extensions and leases on that ground, and then come down to Parliament and propose that we should take a lame, halting, defective security, omitting that which they declared was vital. The hon. gentleman said I admitted all that. I did not and do not admit; but I contend that those who justified and applauded the conduct of the company, representing to the people of this country that it was justifiable because these were necessary links in the national highway, have no right, when they come down here and ask us to meet their desires for a loan, to omit those things which they themselves justified as securities. It is not my statement; it is the hon. gentleman's statement. The hon. gentleman has used stronger words than I ever used with reference to this—putting into my mouth the word dishonesty, which never fell from it. The hon. gentleman has declared other things which—with some added vehemence of expression as they were stated by him—I intimated. He says, because you said it was unwise in the company to do this, it is a pretty strong reason why you should not take the money. I never heard such a thing in my life. What is the reason I objected? I said this company had made a solemn contract with us, the spirit of which was that all their energy and resources would be applied to the construction and control of the Canadian Pacific Railway; I said it was a violation of the spirit of the contract to devote their energy and resources to the building of outside lines; and the hon. gentleman says that, when we come to repair the damages, we are not justified in saying that we should take security on those very things on which the capital we granted has been expended. I said: You take money which the country has granted for the main line and spend it here and there and everywhere, and I objected to that; and the hon. gentleman says that, when they come and ask us to help them out of their difficulty, we must not take security on these things to which they have misapplied funds which should have been devoted to the main line.
Mr. BLAKE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman opposite has raised two or three points which are not very pertinent to the question. First of all, he alluded to an assumption of his own that the sum of money which has been given by the people of this country for the construction of the road has been fully accounted for. One of our contentions is that whether that money has been expended fairly or not, the $70,000,000 that have been given, or will be given after these resolutions have passed, for the construction and equipment of the main line, has not been fully accounted for. But there are two or three other things we ought to know. I think—particularly since the Acting Minister of Railways has expressed himself on the point as differing from my hon. friend—that we ought to know authoritatively what we are granting and what security we are to get. I dissent in the strongest possible fashion from the opinion of the First Minister, that a question of this kind, after it is raised, ought to be put aside as being a question of dispute and litigation afterwards. I warn the Government that this matter having been brought up, it will undoubtedly injure the sale of these bonds to any ordinary parties unless the question is settled. If they are going to be put on the London market, or on any other market, there is not the slightest doubt that attention will be called to the point that has been raised to-day. That cannot be avoided, and it will seriously impair, as I acknowledge it ought, the value of these bonds on the public market, unless those who are selling them are able to say distinctly whether or not the leased lines are included. There is another consideration which the House should take into account. We must suppose that the contingency may arise of the company deciding to throw back the property on our hands. If it turns out, by arrangements with the Government or otherwise, that the leased lines are not to come back to us, we may find that the secured work may be allowed to run down, whereas the property which reverts to these gentlemen may be retained in a high state of efficiency out of the funds which it is quite clear from the company's reports, they do not hesitate to use for their leased property. That is a reason why we should know distinctly where we stand in this matter.

Mr. BLAKE. I may add that the developments which are now taking place with reference to the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific roads throw a flood of light on this question. The most extraordinary diversion of traffic has been taking place since the United States Government commenced its work of honestly endeavoring to secure the adjustment of the debt of these corporations upon their main and leased lines. The result is that the leased lines are being made profitable to the main lines, and that is what may be done in this case. If you give the company two interests, one of which is free from your advantage, and one subject to it, you can depend on it that they will use all their powers to throw the control and the traffic on that which is to belong to them any way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government consider that we are quite safe in making this arrangement, and we did not think it necessary to ask for any further security. We did not think it advisable to ask any additional security. We asked the whole security whatever it was. We have got the whole of that security. The only difference is that the $15,000,000 go in on that same security. The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) said, and there is something in that argument, that it may affect the sale of those bonds in England. I take it that the bondholders will take advice in England, and if there is any doubt about it, all they will have to do is to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to give the necessary security over these leased lines. If that is necessary in order to increase the value, that they can do if they please; and if they do that, it will be for the benefit of all the bondholders including the Government. The Government did not think it was right to impose any harder or harsher or any other terms than were agreed upon by Parliament last Session, as being sufficient security for the $30,000,000, and we think that asking the same security for the loan and for the $15,000,000 was ample.

Mr. CHARLTON. We can readily credit the assertion of the First Minister that the Government are loath to ask any hard terms of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. But there is one statement made by him a few minutes ago, of which I would like an explanation. He told us that the money of the Government has been spent on the main line, and that the company have spent their own money in the speculation, outside the main line. The company have placed $65,000,000 of stock on the market, which realised $29,500,000. That is their own money, I take it. They hold money in the hands of the Government, $14,250,000; they have used for the purpose of paying dividends some $7,000,000; and they have diverted from the construction of the main line, including the amount expended east of Callander, the sum of $38,000,000 or $40,000,000 out of their resources. If that is the case, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he can make his statement stand that the company have used all the funds furnished by the Government in the construction of the main line, and that in all the outside speculations they have used but their own money?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is opening again a question which I think was ably and learnedly discussed yesterday and the day before. If any portion of the money of the Government was expended for anything but the road itself, I can only say that if a single farthing has been expended otherwise, the Government are greatly to blame. I say that no such charge lies against us, whether it be as to the original subsidy of $25,000,000 or the loan of $30,000,000. Not one single farthing has been disbursed except on the certificate of the Chief Engineer who states that the money has been expended on the road under the original contract. The Government must depend on the report of the Chief Engineer. That report is precise, and not one single farthing has been paid except on the certificate of the Chief Engineer that the money has been laid out on the line of the contract between Callander and Port Moody.

Mr. MULOCK. What objection is there to asking security on the leased lines, now that we are rearranging the security and increasing the debt? The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) stated that the general words in clause 1 of the resolution are to be limited by the words that follow in which he argues the securities are especially named. If so, what is the object of introducing these general words at all? We have it stated now by the Acting Minister of Railways that it was never intended to take a lien on the leased lines. If so, the clause should be placed beyond doubt; and before we determine to abandon any security within our right, the Government is bound to show why. I can conceive that the security on the main line may be greatly impaired if the Canadian Pacific Railway are obliged to run a rival line. Even if the line comes under the control of the bondholders who take possession by means of a trustee, still the corporation itself will exist, the board of directors will continue to exist and the board of directors, representing the corporation, has the leases of the leased lines, and can still work those lines and run them in rivalry with the Government line. The Government may have possession of the main line as far as Port Arthur, but the Canadian Pacific Railway, as a corporation, goes on for ever. They own the leased line that extends to Detroit River; they own the leased line from Detroit to Toronto; they own the leased line from Owen Sound to Toronto, and the leased line from Toronto down through the heart of eastern Ontario with its connections down to the St. Lawrence. They will have in their power this leased line system, and could enter into competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway for all its trade east of Port Arthur. Before we allow the company to continue in the management of those rival roads, it is due to the country that the Government should give most cogent reasons for making the advance and altering our security, and failing to take all the security they can acquire.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The security of last year is not at all lessened.

Mr. MULOCK. The money is increased.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This money is also secured. The whole of the security of last year is comprised in the security provided under the proposed arrangement, with the exception of the Algoma branch. I am not prepared to say that by the expression "all property real and personal of the company" is included the different lines leased by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would not venture to give an opinion upon that as a legal man. My own opinion would be that the personal property of the company included the rights of the company in the leases of those lines. We cannot say in the resolutions that the mortgage of the bond would cover the leased lines.

Mr. MULOCK. Why not?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. For the reason that they are not owned by the company. The lien might cover the right of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the leases of those lines. But is this included in the words "personal property of the company" now acquired or hereinafter to be acquired? The First Minister stated that those who have charge of the bonds will see to that, that they will see that the whole of the property which can be secured by these bonds is reserved. I think it does comprise the rights of the company to the leased lines, and I think the resolution, as it is, is extensive enough. I do not think it would be fair to the company to add to the expressions comprised in the last Act. What were those expressions? The Government shall have a first lien in charge upon the entire property of the company real and personal. I read here that this shall be:

"A first lien and charge upon the entire property of the company, real and personal, now owned or hereafter to be acquired or owned by them, including their main line of railway, the extensions thereof, their branch lines of railway, the whole of their equipment—"

And so on. The whole security held last year for the loan of $30,000,000 is kept in these resolutions with the exception of the Algoma branch.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will please remember that this question has changed since last year. He says we ought not to ask anything more than we asked last year. Is not the company asking more than it asked last year?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said the Premier had stated that the Government did not wish to ask for a greater security than it had last year.

Mr. BLAKE. I say that, when the company are asking for something, and we are giving the company something, we may well consider the conditions. Last year, after receiving the statement of the Minister of Railways that this did not include the leased lines, I moved that it should include them, but he answered that it would involve great risk and probable loss to include them, as the leased lines were unprofitable and the Government would be involved in the loss. The Government need not have been involved in the loss even if those lines were unprofitable, but now the company tell us that the leased lines are profitable, and because, when we were told that they formed an unprofitable security, we consented to omit them, we are now told that we must leave them out because they are a profitable security. The First Minister says he does not think these words include the leased lines, he does not intend that they shall, and he does not think, as a matter of policy, that they ought. The Secretary of State declares that he thinks they do include the leased lines, and that he thinks they ought to include them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said I did not wish to venture my opinion as a lawyer, but I think personally that the right to the property would include those rights of the leased lines.

Mr. BLAKE. And he thought they ought to include them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, I did not say that. The hon. gentleman need not do as he has done before, make me say things I have not said. I will not allow him to do that without protest. I was not allowed by the House to contradict him the other day, but was told to sit down, but I will not sit down now.

Mr. BLAKE. I ask the hon. gentleman to sit down; he has interrupted me.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman has taken his seat, and I have the floor, and the hon. gentleman has no right to ask me to sit down, unless Mr. Chairman rules otherwise. We are in Committee and each member may speak as many times as he chooses. My hon. friend will answer me when I have done and not before.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have a right to speak, and I am not going to be told to sit down. I stated, and my hon. friend cannot be mistaken in my words, that the Premier had stated that the Government were not disposed to increase the lien of last year, and that the lien of last year was not increased by the wording or the spirit of the resolutions. I did not say that the Government ought to do it and would do it. The Government might do it, but I am not here to say so. I took great care to say that the Government would not increase the lien of last year.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that the hon. gentleman had said that the Government thought it ought to increase the lien of last year, but I did say that the hon. gentleman said that he thought the lien of last year should be increased, that was the statement I made; that statement I now repeat.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say so; and I have explained that I could not have said so unless I said the contrary of what I meant.

Mr. BLAKE. That statement I now repeat. Then the hon. gentleman said that, if the intended takers of these bonds in London had any doubt, they would get some instrument drawn to settle it. But who are the majority of the intending takers of these bonds? They are the people of Canada, and we want to see, on their behalf, what security we are to have. It is with reference to them that we are principally interested, though of course we are also interested in the success of the operation generally, which will certainly be damaged by the contrast which will be drawn between the statement of Mr. Stephen the other day or the report of the company as to the importance of these lines, and the fact that Parliament declared that they are not intended to be included in the mortgage. Still, our chief interest is in regard to the people of Canada. Can it be said, after this discussion, that this can remain in this state? It should be settled one way or the other. Is the mortgage of last year a sacred instrument? Is the law of last year like the laws of the Medes and the Persians, that it cannot be altered? It has been altered in one way and another, in numerous particulars all round. Is this the only particular in which it is unalterable? Is this the only particular in which it is not to be made clear? Is it determined not to make clear what is doubtful? Are we going to leave an opening for a lawsuit? Do hon. gentlemen insist upon saying that they will leave something for the lawyers to do? Let us say either that it includes or excludes the leased lines, and that settles the whole question. I have said which way I think it ought to be. The Secretary of State has said that I was wrong in saying the Algoma branch was included in the mortgage only as long as it was useless. It is true that apparently it is included in the mortgage permanently, but it is also true that, as soon as it is determined to make it useful by extending it to the Sault Ste. Marie, power is given to have it mortgaged, and therefore to make it useless for the purposes of the security. I am in sympathy in that matter with the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White). I have always been an advocate for the construction of the Sault line. I do not say what course should be taken to have the Sault line constructed, and this may be as proper a mode as it is possible to take, but you cannot say it is to be a security to you for the debt owing to the construction of the line. You may indirectly affect the main line by throwing the traffic of the Northern Pacific on the main line in consequence of the construction of the Sault line, and that may be a very important object, but you cannot say that the Algoma branch per se is to be a really available security for this debt. The First Minister said the Government would be to blame if a dollar had gone in any other direction than in the construction of the main line.

I do not know that anyone has accused the Government of paying out money to the company except on the certificate of the engineers that a dollar's worth of work has been done for each dollar which they paid out. But what does the company do with it? Where is your floating debt? Where are the contractors on the main line and the men under them, with millions owing to them? The money has not been paid on the work. The Government has paid it to the company, on proper certificates I have no doubt, and they are free from responsibility in that regard, but while I know that in February last hundreds of thousands of dollars were due to contractors for construction, and the estimates had been sent in to the Government, and the Government had paid the money to the company, less 10 per cent., and the company had received it, they had not paid it to the contractors, and therefore it had not gone into the work on account of which it was paid. Where has it gone? I believe $650,000 of it went into the shareholders' pockets on the 17th February last.

Mr. POPE. In the first place it has been contended, and we contend now, that we had good solid security last year for our lien. Then the hon. gentleman says they are asking for more. If they are asking for more, we have got very much more security. We have every dollar we paid them as so much added to our security, and we have better security to-day for what they are asking than we had last year. The road is nearly complete, and we have got that as security, and we have got more rolling stock. I say this, that it would be better perhaps if we were to take security on the Grand Trunk Railway too; it would be better if we were to take security on all the roads of the country. But we have got security enough; enough is as good as a feast; and while there was no doubt about our position last year as to our security, there can be no doubt this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It really appears to me that there ought not to be so much difficulty. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not an inaccessible corporation. We have had the pleasure of seeing the majority of its directors here very often, and we can communicate with them at pleasure, I apprehend. Why cannot the Government ascertain definitely what the view of the company is as to this disputed question, and then let us know. Surely we ought to have some intimation of what the other party to this bargain thinks about this question of the leased lines. I think there are some gentlemen here who could give us an opinion without much trouble, if they pleased, and I think we ought to have it. As for the Acting Minister of Railways, I must just remind the House that apparently he is utterly at issue with his colleague, the Secretary of State, as to the point in question. I understood him to say a few moments ago that he did not think we had any claim on the leased lines, while the Secretary of State gave his opinion that we had a claim, as he construed the clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think really we have discussed the subject enough to have a vote. The hon. member for West Durham is not correct in saying that I expressed my opinion that the leased lines were not included in this clause. I simply stated that whether the hon. gentleman was right or whether the hon. member for North Simcoe was right, it was a matter of discussion. I discussed it afterwards without reference to the legal construction of the clause, but I expressed no opinion myself as to whether the clause included the leased lines.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman reminds me of a great lawyer, an ex-Lord Chancellor, Lord Mansfield, I think it was, who, when a very grave disputed question came up in the House of Lords some few years ago, declared that upon that question he had an opinion, but he kept it in his breast; and he kept it in his breast until he died. Now we have the leader of the House, an hon. gentleman whose powers and experience in construing Acts of Parliament are superior to those of anyone else here, but he either has an opinion which he does not choose to announce, or he is not able to make up his mind what the meaning of the clause is. Now in that condition of things, is it convenient that a parcel of legislators should pass a law in this shape?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for comparing me with Lord Mansfield. I accept the censure for the sake of the compliment.

Mr. BLAKE. But the hon. gentleman keeps the opinion in his breast until he dies.

Mr. CASEY. The right hon. gentleman is satisfied with the compliment of being compared with Lord Mansfield, which he considered as a balance to the censure he must bear for asking us to pass legislation which he does not know the meaning of. Now, on this question the Acting Minister of Railways thinks one way, the hon. member for North Simcoe thinks another way, the Secretary of State thinks still another way, and the Premier does not think at all; but they all agree with remarkable unanimity in refusing to make this clause mean something, in refusing to make it mean what the Secretary of State said it ought to mean, namely to include the leased lines. Evidently they do not wish this to be so construed as to include the leased lines. I can easily conceive that that was the intention of the person who drew up the resolutions, for they were doubtless drawn up by the company itself or its attorney. I can understand why the company should wish this clause to be ambiguous, but not why the Government, who are the trustees of the people, should take the position of counsel for the company and should insist upon leaving this clause lax. Their conduct is utterly inexplicable on any ground consistent with their duty as Ministers. If there was any doubt, as there was last year, about the expediency of including the leased lines, they might get out of it, but there is no pretence of a doubt this year as to the expediency. The hon. gentleman himself holds by the report of the company, which says that the leased lines are not only profitable but necessary; but yet, taking it for granted that those lines are not only profitable but necessary, they refuse to give us the additional security, and the only ghost of a reason that has been offered is that the First Minister says he does not think it necessary. He thinks the security is so enormously good that the addition of a paltry $15,000,000 to the company's liabilities will not affect it in the slightest degree. If we take over the road we must take it as a running concern. Our security depends upon profits obtained from it. If it cannot be worked without the branch lines, then it is absurd to ask us to take the trunk without the branches which are essential to its operation. Hon. gentlemen opposite have declared that every dollar advanced by the Government has been spent on the line and put into the undertaking. But it cannot be pretended that the $7,000,000 advanced for dividends and other amounts paid to shareholders have been put into the undertaking. Undoubtedly some of the money furnished by the company has been put into the road, some into the main line and some into the branches. But if the country had not paid the company this money, the company could not have paid any money on the leased lines. The whole property has been increased in value on account of these payments by the Government, and it is perfectly proper that the Government should obtain security on the whole property. In fact there is nothing to show that part of the present loan will not be devoted to improvements and equipment of leased lines. We are therefore advancing $5,000,000 to improve property, which hon. gentlemen opposite do not propose to take as security. The position is one which no Government has ever taken before, and we would have hardly expected the Government to take it except for our knowledge of previous transactions. It is, in a parliamentary sense, indecent to adopt the resolution as submitted, of the meaning of which the Government are ignorant.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Emphasis has been laid by the First Minister on the statement that all the money obtained from the Government from bonus and loan has gone into the construction of the line. I will not dispute it. But the company has received money from land we have given it. In the December statement the president of the company gave these figures: Amount received in cash, loan, subsidy and Government lands 55½ million dollars; expenditure on main line and branches 52½ million dollars, leaving a balance of $3,000,000. After allowing for construction of branches, some 2 millions which are not part of the contract. The company also received finished road built by us at a cost of 29½ millions and 20,000,000 acres of unsold land. The branch lines are not worked on temporary leases but are perpetual leases, and are to all intents and purposes owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, subject to certain annual charges. If I were taking a mortgage on a fiddle, I should want the mortgage to cover the bow as well, particularly if that article could not otherwise be supplied. The Government's proposition is to increase the loan, reduce the interest and lessen the security.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand the interest of the company in the South-Eastern Railway it is this: The company are proprietors of a large quantity of bonds of that road and some rolling stock, for which they paid $1,595,000. I presume that will be covered by the mortgage. It is personal property owned by the company.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand it, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company hold bonds of the South-Eastern as security for an advance of money. That is an arrangement between the South-Eastern and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended that that interest shall be covered by the mortgage or not?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is personal property, of course, and those bonds will be part of the security.

Mr. BLAKE. With respect to the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway. I find this road stated among the assets of the Canadian Pacific Railway at $227,153. Is that to be included in the mortgage?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to explain exactly the nature of the securities taken over from the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, but I understand there is a debt due by that road to the Canadian Pacific Railway. However, we will ascertain that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is put down as a leased line.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, and so is the South-Eastern, which must be incorrect. My impression is from such scraps of information as I have been able to get, that by the operation of that road by the Canadian Pacific Railway, there has been a loss, because the St. Lawrence and Ottawa has been made a sort of side line and it has been almost stripped of rolling stock. This item of $227,153 I believe to be the acquisition of the bonds of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, not from that company, but from the holders of those bonds, or the holders of the interest coupons.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand—and I have no very accurate acquaintance with the matter—that road became the property of the bondholders, and the shareholders ceased in fact, to have any interest in it. The interest or control of the Canadian Pacific Railway over that road must have been by lease from the bondholders, but as to the other point, I will ascertain that.

Mr. BLAKE. And also this money interest—this item in the report.

Mr. CASEY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Then there is the Atlantic and North-Western Railway $202,837. I do not know what is the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway in that, and whether it is to be covered by the mortgage.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand, this sum of money is advanced for the purpose of connection being had by the Canadian Pacific Railway with the bridge which is contemplated to be built—that is, by the road around the mountain at Montreal.

Mr. BLAKE. I was aware of the geography of the situation, but it was the financial part I was enquiring about. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway represent that they paid the procurers of this charter a small sum for the charter and the stock which was paid, and that then they paid the amount which was paid for grading and for rails, and so they seem to have become proprietors of the enterprise, probably the stock being held in the names of some of their friends.

Mr. ABBOTT. Although I do not wish to be considered a representative of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in this House, perhaps I may facilitate the discussion of this item, though my information about it is only casual. This expenditure was made partly for what the hon. gentleman said, namely, the construction of this railway at the back of the mountain to connect it with the Grand Trunk, and also to get connection with this proposed bridge. There is also a small amount for some stock paid in on the charter, and a considerable sum—that is a sum of some tens of thousands of dollars—in making the survey and soundings and plans, all of which are completed, in connection with the bridge. The rights of property of the company in that amount are these: there are the preliminary steps towards the completion of the link between the projected Ontario and Quebec line, and the bridge; and this, with the bridge, will belong to the Ontario and Quebec system. The link between that line reaching Montreal west and the present Canadian Pacific Railway at Mile End, is proposed to belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The lease which was confirmed last year makes the section reaching the west end of Montreal, the contemplated property of the Ontario and Quebec. The titles by which the line between the Grand Trunk and Mile End are to be completely vested in the Canadian Pacific Railway are not made.

Mr. BLAKE. So far as I can understand, the stock being in fact bought and paid for by the money of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I suppose the company at present is controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Now, if portions of this expenditure belong to the Ontario and Quebec system, it is clear that there is a further expenditure on the leased lines than the sums stated in the report, because, if part of this money is to enure for the benefit of the Ontario and Quebec system, it is obvious that there is a displacement of amounts; so that I should judge, from what the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott) has said, that the property represented by this amount—I think, speaking from memory, it was $157,000 last year as against $202,060 now—did not consist of grading and ironing the road, or preliminary expenses, so that a small portion would be for the line. It would be important to have this amount divided, so that we might see what part of this comes to us, and what part to the Quebec Government for the Quebec system. We are face to face here with the more important question of the eastern and seaboard connections of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because, according to the statement of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott), the Lachine bridge will be independent of the portion embraced in the security. The First Minister will recollect that only a few days ago he said the Canadian Pacific Railway would carry freight at one-fourth of the cost of other railways, because it was to be one railway from end to end; but if he is going to separate it into a number of links, I do not know what will become of us when we become the fortunate holders of the enterprise.

Mr. ABBOTT. I do not think I made myself quite clear as to the proportion appertaining to the Ontario and Quebec system. The portion on which we shall have a mortgage will be from Mile End to the extension of the Ontario and Quebec system; the other portion will belong to that system, and was actually leased by the Canadian Pacific Railway. But until the Ontario and Quebec line is laid out, it will have to be kept as a separate account.

Mr. BLAKE. Can we receive any information as to the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Manitoba South-Western Railway. A large amount of capital was expended on that railway last year.

Mr. ABBOTT. I am really assuming a rôle which will necessitate my not appearing in the House during these discussions. At the same time, I hope the House will understand that I am making an exception to the rule I have always observed, and that my present rôle is only a temporary one and will not be repeated. I understand that the interest of the company in the Manitoba South-Western is this: When the construction of the road at the end of fifty miles stopped, and it became clear that it could only proceed under the auspices of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the interest of the company was bought, that interest consisting of the right to the lands which were to be granted in aid of the construction of those fifty miles of the road, the bonds of the company, somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, which had been previously issued, a certain amount of the stock, and some other interests which the company had—representing, in fact, the entire interest of the original Manitoba South-Western Company, and placing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or some persons connected with it, in possession of all the rights of the Manitoba South-Western Railway Company.

Mr. BLAKE. If that be the state of things, it is quite clear that this is a road owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. ABBOTT. One might say no, and one might say yes. The Manitoba South-Western Company was organised under a separate and distinct charter, and has been managed up to this time under that charter. The charter is, of course, controlled by the stock, which is held by friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but the title the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have to the line itself is a lease executed in its favor by the Manitoba South-Western Railway Company, the terms of which lease are that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall pay the entire interest on the bonded debt of the company—in fact all the cost of the line—for its use.

Mr. BLAKE. We know how these arrangements are made. I suppose the Canadian Pacific Railway Company acquired and paid for the stock of the company what they thought it was worth, and organised its board of directors. I see that Mr. Van Horne is the president of the company. Therefore, it is literally, as the hon. gentleman says, a leased line, comprised in the words, "one of the leased lines of the company." Of course, I admit that the Manitoba South-Western Railway may be subject to exceptional considerations. I think it would be fitting to consider the situation of that company, as to whether it ought to be embraced in the clause relating to leased lines, or whether it may not be exempt from this mortgage, just as the Algoma branch is. I should be sorry with one hand, having approved of a land grant to aid the construction of that railway, with the other to injure that security. Am I right in understanding from the hon. member for Argenteuil that this sum of $1,254,654 was actually paid in hard cash for 50 miles of the Manitoba South-Western Railway?

Mr. ABBOTT. I cannot say anything as to the accuracy of the figures. I have not the slightest doubt that that is the correct cost, because it is in the books of the company, and I have, perhaps, greater confidence in them than the hon. gentleman. But I presume this represents the sum which was necessary to be paid in order to acquire the control of this company and the right to the property, which, of course, consisted in the stock, which represented the corporate organisation, and the bonds which had been placed as a charge upon it, and which had been issued in one sense and not in another—they were on hand and ready to be issued, but subject to all charges in connection with the construction of the road. That sum was, so far as I understand, the actual disbursement of the company for the construction of those 50 miles of the road, its entrance into Winnipeg, and its expenditures otherwise during the period of its existence. These rights were acquired, I believe, by some parties in Minnesota. I was not a party to the transaction, but heard all about it as it went on, and I understand that no profit whatever was included in the price which was paid, whatever that was, but that the sum which was paid, represented the actual disbursement in connection with the organisation of the company and the construction of 50 miles of road.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me, if he supposed I imputed the charge or implied that false entries were made in the books. I did not intend to imply anything of the kind. I presume, and have always presumed, when I find figures stating certain cash was paid, that it was actually paid. I simply drew attention to this because we know there are methods of adjusting these things, by which friends of corporations buy in bonds at a price not quite equal to par, and the corporations acquire them at par. These moneys are paid, but the value of them is not received. In view of the desperate condition of the Manitoba and South-Western, that seemed to be a very large sum that was supposed to be actually received by the directors at that time.

Mr. ABBOTT. The hon. gentleman must perceive that the road was not bought from the Manitoba and South-Western itself, but from other people who had acquired the control of it in various ways—in such a way that it was controlled outside of Manitoba altogether. There might be some shareholders in Manitoba, but as a rule the entire road was controlled outside of Manitoba. As to the other point, I am aware that such things are done; but in this particular case the sum which is represented in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's books I am satisfied represents the precise sum paid by that Company, and by the persons who acquired it for the Canadian Pacific Railway. The amounts were paid and charged in the books as they were paid. Apart from the abstract confidence which I have in the gentlemen who control the road, I am satisfied there was no manipulation of that kind, from what I know of the circumstances.

Mr. BLAKE. That is very satisfactory. We find that a considerable portion of the capital has been expended on the leased lines. Is that represented by any mortgage or lien on the leased lines?

Mr. ABBOTT. I am unable to answer that, but my impression is that it is a kind of work which is usually done on a railway during the whole period of its existence, from time to time. The railway, up to within three or four months of last year, was not running in perfect form, and there were constantly expenditures being made in repairing it, in putting it to rights and ballasting it. My impression is, these expenditures were made to perfect the system in various ways.

Mr. BLAKE. It might be convenient, before the next stage is reached, to have fuller information on that subject, which, no doubt, the company can supply, as to what the real condition of the estate is. We are taking a mortgage on the property of the company, real and personal. Is this expenditure, which, under the Ontario and Quebec system, it is bound to make, an expenditure for which it is entitled to be recouped? If it is entitled to be recouped for this expenditure, the expenditure is an asset, but if bound to make the expenditure without return, it is sunken money.

Mr. MILLS. The information of the hon. member for Argenteuil is satisfactory, as far as it goes—no doubt satisfactory to the members of the Government as well as to other members of the House. I think the discussion we have had shows, at all events, it would have been very satisfactory to the House if we had a real Minister of Railways, or, at all events, some one who, under the law, was permanently appointed to take charge of the Department of Railways, and who would be responsible for its management. At present we have an Acting Minister of Railways, who is the permanent Minister of another Department, and has the charge of that devolving upon him. When my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was in charge of the Department of Public Works he was also the Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman seemed to think that railways and canals should be a separate Department; but although he has by Act of Parliament solemnly provided that that rule should be adopted, he has seen proper to set the law at defiance for something like a year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Order.

Mr. MILLS. I am in order. I want information the hon. gentleman is not willing to give, and I am trying to find out how it is neither he nor his colleagues have been able to give the committee the information it requires. I will not press that matter any further, at present, on the hon. gentleman's attention. We have before us a resolution, and the hon. gentleman has not told us what it means. He says he does not know, or, at all events, he is not inclined to say what he thinks it means; and although we are asked to vote upon it, he thinks it none of our business to know what it means. I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman has had correspondence with the company which has led up to these resolutions, whether he has entered into a compact or arrangement with the company that these resolutions shall be submitted to Parliament in this form, or whether he has provided in this matter, as he did in the original contract, that Parliament may approve or disapprove, or amend the resolutions. What reason is there that we should not exercise the functions that properly belong to us?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not the slightest.

Mr. MILLS. Why does not the hon. gentleman seek to make perfectly clear the security he has taken? He has spoken of the provision of the Act of last year. What has that to do with the proposition now before us. He proposes to confer upon the company the power of incurring further liabilities, and he says he does not know what the meaning of one of the propositions is, and to what extent security will be obtained by this resolution. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has been making enquiries as to the nature of the relations existing between the Canadian Pacific Railway and certain lines. Well, the Government could not give the information; the Government did not know whether the security extended so as to embrace these other roads or not. Here we have an Administration proposing to make advances to a railway company and to diminish the securities the country has upon the line, and it has not taken the trouble to make itself sufficiently acquainted with the case to know the extent of the security it is to receive from the company. It seems to me that the words "any other property of the company, real and personal, now or hereafter to be acquired," would cover all the property of the company, and that the word "included" would necessarily embrace all that is afterwards mentioned. But that does not mean all that is before mentioned, in general terms, and if the word "comprised" was used instead of "included," the meaning would be more clear. But it is not so stated, and I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman does not make perfectly plain what is now ambiguous. He says we are not bound to the company; there is no arrangement made with the company by which the Government are bound that these terms should be carried by Parliament. Why not make the matter perfectly clear, and alter the phraseology of the resolution, so as to make it plain whether these leased lines are to be embraced or not. If the lines are valuable, it is important that the country should have the additional security; if they are not, it increases in no sense our responsibility by taking them as additional security.

Mr. ABBOTT.

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to have an answer from the Acting Minister of Railways to the question I put a few moments ago, whether the leased lines, or any of them, were, in his opinion, necessary to the efficient working of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway or for carrying out the object of its incorporation?

Mr. POPE. I believe they are very useful.

Mr. MULOCK. Are they necessary?

Mr. POPE. Not absolutely necessary, but useful.

Mr. CASEY. The question which we have been discussing is only a small part of the question involved. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are going on to extend their connections. They say, in their report, that they have no reason to doubt the wisdom of going on to extend their connections. See what the laxity of this clause opens the way to in that connection. Do you suppose they are foolish enough to make their connections in future of such a nature as to be subjected to this mortgage? No; their future extensions will be put in the shape of what are called leased lines, although, practically, all the money that has gone to the construction of them may have been paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway out of Government subsidies or from some other source, so that they will have in that way a network of lines from the east to the west. Now it extends from here to Toronto and on to St. Thomas. They are proposing to make a connection with the Detroit River and so with Chicago. It is also intended to extend the Ontario and Quebec to Montreal, and the connections with the new bridge at Montreal are to be made by the Ontario and Quebec, so that there will be, practically, an independent line from Montreal to Chicago under the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Premier does not intend that we shall have any lien on that independent line, because he will not amend the clause so as to give us that lien upon it. It will thus be possible for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to make default and allow us to take the main line if we choose, which will not be as profitable as the lines over parallel distances. It cannot be contended that the line from here to the north of Lake Superior will be as valuable as the line from Montreal to Chicago. So they may let us take the main line and collect the profits or pay the deficits upon it, as the case may be, and they will have their complete rival through line to compete with us. We are told that the competition of the Grand Trunk is a very serious item in the estimates of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This series of so-called leased lines will be an infinitely worse rival to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when operated by the Government, than the Grand Trunk. It will be a better and shorter line, running through better districts, and will be altogether a better line for through traffic than the Grand Trunk; so conceive what a rival it will be to the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, which will be in the hands of the Government under this mortgage. What a grand security we have for our $20,000,000, the privilege of taking over the main trunk of a disabled railway, and perhaps having to pay a deficit every year on that line, instead of obtaining profits! They tell you that the greater part of their receipts this year come from the leased lines. It will be a long time before that state of things is reversed. We have to look to the future more than to the present.

On resolution 2,

Mr. BLAKE. We know that under the charter of the company the Governor in Council is entitled to reduce the rates when the profits exceed 10 per cent., and the committee is also aware that the company only make tariffs by by-laws which are to be approved, and which, under the present system, are approved, from year to year, by the Governor in Council. Practically, that is the system which has been adopted, upon the view, which is not an unreasonable view at all, though I thought it was rather straining the powers of the Governor in Council, but was a very good thing if the Governor in Council had the power, that changing circumstances might make very unreasonable tariffs which might be less unreasonable at an earlier period. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to this, which is, to my mind, of vital consequence with reference to both these considerations; that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been in the habit of consolidating the working of its leased lines and its main line in such a way as, according to their own report, in answer to a return here, renders it difficult, if not impossible, to tell what are the earnings and what are the working expenses separately of the leased and of the main lines. My view is that it is very questionable whether the Canadian Pacific is entitled to build branches and acquire other extensions and throw the possible loss of operating those branches and extensions on the main line itself. For example, the branches they build in the North-West. Supposing they choose to enter into another profitable speculation in building branches, I doubt that they have the right to say: We are going to earn 10 per cent. upon those branches, because we are going to make the main line pay 10 per cent. dividend on the money we put into them, although they themselves pay nothing. It seems to me quite clear they are not entitled to charge upon the main line any losses there may be on the leased lines, and yet we cannot ascertain what the real operation of the main line has been, unless the accounts are kept in such a way as to show what the earnings are and what the expenses are, and to show what the working of the lines is. Now, early in the enterprise, of course, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company adopted what they called the Ontario and Quebec division, and they gave you the leased lines from a point near Ottawa to the west; but they have since then consolidated all their system within the Province of Ontario, including their extension east of Callander, the Algoma branch and the main line, so far as the Province of Ontario is concerned, up to Port Arthur, including the leased lines in one division, called the Ontario division. It is possible that they may complete the consolidation as soon as they begin to run the whole line. It would seem as if they intended to unify their receipts and expenditures. Once that is done, it is impossible to analyse the operations of the line that we are concerned in. This is a question independent of the mortgage altogether, but it is also embraced in the question of the mortgage; because, if we are not going to include the leased lines in the mortgage it is all the more important to see what the separate operations of the two systems are; but if we are going to include them in the mortgage, it is important that we should know what the result of the main line is, as distinct from the operations of the leased lines. If the leased lines are not to be included in the mortgage it is very important, for the purposes of the mortgage, that what I suggest should be done. I maintain that they ought to keep the accounts in such a way that you can tell what are the earnings and expenses upon the main line of railway, with reference to which we have this special interest. Ordinarily speaking, we have no right to enquire into the particular affairs of a capital stock company, but of course it is conceded that we have a right to enquire as to the way the Canadian Pacific Railway Company deal with its capital stock, and we have a right to discriminate between the nominal and the real capital stock. We are, therefore, bound to see that no such system of account-keeping is adopted as obscures the necessary means of arriving at that conclusion, and I invite the hon. gentleman, before the next stage of this resolution, to consider this question, as to the mode of their keeping the accounts.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is reasonable enough. I think we ought to have a separate account of the earnings and expenses of the main line, which now extends from Port Moody to Montreal, and I hope will be continued to Quebec. I think we ought to have a separate account of the expenditure on the main line. If the railway have power to build branches as distinct from the leased lines, or running arrangements with any combination of other railways, I think we can afford to consider the branches built expressly as branches and therefore a portion of the main line, as part of the unity, and that the earnings of the different lines may be embraced with the account of the east and the west lines. I think it is all one line. I quite agree, however, with the hon. gentleman, that as regards the branch lines, distinct accounts should be kept of the earnings and expenditures of each branch.

Mr. BLAKE. We gave the Canadian Pacific Railway Company power, unexampled in our history, of building branch lines, which they have exercised and will continue to exercise in the North-West. Now, are we going to require the traffic of the North-West to pay 10 per cent. dividends on all that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company chooses, without our authority, to call branches? That is the difficulty that I feel. I feel that in the general interest, having given up all control over the branches, it is a serious thing to say to them: Gentlemen, go straight ahead, because if you cannot bring enough out of the traffic on your main line to pay 10 per cent. dividend on all you choose to expend, however unprofitably, you can get it out of the branches.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand that. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are worthy of all consideration.

On resolution 3,

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will observe that a very important question arises on this clause. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, when the original Act passed, was given power to create capital stock of five millions, with power to increase it to twenty-five millions; and in very lengthy discussions upon this subject it was never hinted by anyone that there was to be an implied or general power to increase it beyond twenty-five millions. I have a very serious doubt whether, in case of a statutory power to increase the capital stock to a definite amount, there could coincide with it the power which is given by the general Railway Act to increase the capital stock indefinitely. Under the general Railway Act the railway companies can increase their capital stock from time to time, but we gave power to the corporation to raise its capital to a definite sum. The company, and the Government which assented to the operations, by arranging for the guarantee, provided that under the Railway Act, a provision of which was inserted in their Act, to increase the capital stock to $100,000,000. This clause proposes to cancel $35,000,000, being the unissued portion of $100,000,000. There is nothing to prevent the company, if they choose, from afterwards increasing the stock to $100,000,000. You cancel $35,000,000, and the company may pass a resolution at its next meeting to increase the capital stock by a like amount.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it will be well to meet the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, and insert a proviso that after the $35,000,000 stock has been cancelled the stock shall not be increased over $65,000,000, without the assent of Parliament.

Resolution amended by adding: "No further issue of stock shall be made without the special authority of Parliament."

On resolution 4,

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say why the rate of interest has been reduced from 5 per cent. to 4.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a distinct assistance given to the company. The Government, as a general rule, obtains money at 4 per cent., and the reduction of 1 per cent. will be a substantial benefit to the company, and specially valuable at this present and early stage of its existence. As the company is only getting into the earning stage, it is of great importance that the fixed charges should be kept as low as possible. This is a substantial relief, and it is intended as such.

Mr. BLAKE. Although the hon. gentleman says the company is at an early stage of its career, it was at an earlier stage last Session, when the rate was fixed at 5 per cent. What has occurred since to make us change our decision? The company had then more than a year's work to complete construction. Now we hear that the road will be completed in a few weeks. Let the hon. gentleman remember the inviting statements made by his supporters to induce Parliament to grant the loan of last Session; how the Minister of Railways gloated over the transaction as a good commercial bargain, and how the member for Cardwell (Mr. White) pointed out that to borrow money at 4 and lend it at 5 was a good thing. Now it appears that we were wrong. Let the Government consider the credit of the company, as to whether, if Parliament reduces the interest to 4 per cent., it will not be saying to the public that the company is too poor to pay the rate originally fixed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman should ever happen to have a mortgage on his property, and it was at 6 per cent., and the charge was reduced to 4 per cent., he would not consider the reduction diminished the value of his property. I am quite satisfied that we exacted too severe terms from the company last Session; that from a laudable desire to obtain every possible security we locked up everything the company possessed. We have had one year's experience. We find that they want more money, or that they want credit, which is even better than money, in the position of a great railway. We want them to start clear and under as favorable circumstances as possible. We are playing the rôle of pater familias, sending the heir out, and we wish that he may have as few burdens as possible, and that he shall not have a shadow of impending debt hanging over him.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the second part requires some explanation, as I think it is a provision in effect for the floating of a large portion of these bonds. It is quite clear that under these circumstances any payment which would be made before 1891 will be made in respect of the $30,000,000, because if it is made in respect to the lands, no such advantage will accrue to the company as the return of bonds. Now, I think it is a pity that that should be inserted. In this way, the bondholders and the company together might control a majority, and the Government have only a minority.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only way by which the company can pay off the bonds is by selling them, as they will have no funds of their own out of which to pay them.

Mr. BLAKE. It is in effect a provision for allowing the company to negotiate their bonds, subject to the payment to us. In any case, whether we sell them in default, or the company sells them before default, the road will be chargeable with the $30,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another point which requires explanation. So long as we retain $30,000,000 out of the $35,000,000, we have a considerable amount of authority in our hands, but the contingency might arise in which it might be convenient for a syndicate holding the odd $15,000,000 to utilise this provision, so as to buy a few millions more and thus get control of the road, which might be a serious matter.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state how many in number is required to put the trustee in motion on the mortgage? I am anxious that we should avoid any arrangement by which the $15,000,000 outside, with the majority, would be able to control under the general conditions of the mortgage.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be taken care of in the mortgage itself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose that in any case, no matter how you draw the mortgage, the majority of the bondholders would virtually have the control, and would choose the trustee.

Mr. McCARTHY. The trustees are appointed under a deed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We might put in the provision that the company may, at any time, with the consent of the Government, pay, etc.

Mr. MULOCK. As I understand the law in the Province of Ontario, any bondholder who holds a bond in respect of which there is a default is entitled as a receiver. It seems to me it would strengthen the position of the bonds if each bondholder had that right, because I can hardly conceive of the company being justified in paying one set of bondholders and not another. They ought to all be put on the same footing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The deed under which the bonds are put on the market will provide all that, and the bondholders will take the bonds on the terms of that deed.

On resolution 5,

Mr. BLAKE. The result of the discussion which took place on this clause, I understood, was that the hon. gentleman was about to propose that in case of default in 1891 some larger power should be given to the trustees to close the security, of course for the benefit of all the bondholders. What I want to be sure is, that if the principal of the loan comes into default in 1891, the trustees shall have power to act just as if the bonds come into default.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the words in the last line, "and to administer the same for the benefit of the bondholders generally," be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: "and shall exercise all or any of the powers conferred upon them by the terms of the mortgage deed in pursuance thereof, as if the principal of the bonds were in default."

On resolution 6,

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended that the purchase money due on lands now sold is to be embraced in the scope of this resolution?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are about $3,500,000 bonds outstanding, and about $2,000,000 of sales not paid up. The whole proceeds of the lands sold enure to the benefit of the Government in payment of the $10,000,000, after the payment of the $2,000,000 outstanding.

Mr. BLAKE. There are $3,600,000 land grant bonds outstanding in the hands of the public, and $2,060,000 of purchase money due on land sold. It is impossible to reach any conclusion other than that the proceeds of those lands ought to be embraced within this. The hon. gentleman is hardly correct in saying that we have a charge for our $10,000,000 immediately after the payment of the outstanding land grant bonds; because there are $5,000,000, at any rate, of land grant bonds which are our security for the operation of the road, and of course it is not intended to disturb our lien upon them, not impliedly, at any rate; for if it was to be disturbed it would be disturbed expressly. You must recognise the fact, that as to the $3,000,000 land grant bonds which are in the hands of the Government, they form a charge prior to our $10,000,000. So that you have the $3,600,000 of land grant bonds outstanding in the hands of the public, and these $5,000,000 in the hands of the Government, or a total of $8,600,000 land grant bonds, of which only $3,600,000 bear interest, and which will be a charge upon the lands anterior to the debt we are now charging upon them. The lands, therefore, are now held as security for $18,600,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Under the Act of last Session, with respect to the $10,000,000, it is provided that they shall be applied:

"Firstly, in extinction of the interest accrued and due upon the said loan, and upon the said sum of $7,380,912; secondly, on account of the capital of the said sum of $7,380,912; and thirdly, on account of the capital of the said loan. And the Government may make such arrangements as it shall deem expedient for securing the payment to it, after the redemption of the land grant bonds, of the proceeds of all sales of lands granted or to be granted to the company under the contract, to be applied to the purposes and in the order aforesaid. And the remaining $5,000,000 of land grant bonds and money, received from the said trustees in redemption thereof, shall continue to be held on the condition and for the purposes mentioned in the said contract."

Mr. BLAKE. The operation has become very confused. In the first place, there were a very considerable number of land grant bonds issued which have been redeemed and cancelled. Then there are $3,600,000 land grant bonds in the hands of the public, and $5,000,000 of them in the hands of the Government, as security for the operation of the road. Under this provision you say, "subject to the payment of outstanding land grant bonds." You have all the land grant bonds, with the exception of $3,600,000, in the hands of the Government. I would cancel every land grant bond which is in the hands of the Government, with the exception of the $5,000,000 which is to be held for the operation of the line. The others are not issued, and they seem to be no use at all; they are not intended to be issued. Then you would have two blocks, $3,600,000 land grant bonds in the hands of the public and $5,000,000 of them in your own hands. Those are the two primary obligations on your land fund. The public has the first charge, your own $5,000,000 is the second charge, and the third charge is the $9,880,000. Thus, there is an aggregate of between $18,000,000 and $19,000,000. At present it is difficult to understand what issue is to be made of those bonds which are not issued, and which are in excess of the $5,000,000 held as security for the operation of the road.

Mr. ABBOTT. By the enactment of last Session the land grant bonds were kept in force. Those in addition to the \$5,000,000 were, I think, as far as I understood it, for the purpose of keeping the machinery in operation, which has been carefully prepared. Under this arrangement, the trustees will be bound to distribute the money received between the \$15,000,000 of land grant bonds, and the amount outstanding. Those outside would get their proportion and those in the hands of the Government would get their proportion. The outside proportion would go to the extinction of the outside bonds, and the inside would be applied in the manner pointed out by the Act of last Session; one portion amounting to \$10,000,000—or \$9,000,000, I think it is now—to the extinction of the Government debt, and the other \$5,000,000 to represent a fund for the security for the running of the road. As I understand the resolutions now, it is proposed to keep that machinery in operation, as provided in the Act of last year. Perhaps the language used is not sufficient to attain the result which is intended, but that result is clear, that the trustees will proceed with the realisation of these lands, and out of the proceeds will appropriate fourteen or fifteen millions to the Government, and the Government will apply the portion applicable to the \$5,000,000 to that fund, and the portion applicable to the \$9,000,000 to the Government debt. There is really an outside charge of one million and a-half of outside bonds, and then there is the charge of fourteen millions in the hands of the Government, of which  $\frac{1}{4}$  will go to the \$5,000,000 security for the running of the road, and  $\frac{1}{4}$  to the extinction of this debt.

Mr. BLAKE. You will see, however, that by the Act of last Session the outstanding land grant bonds were made a security for the payment of some $7,310,000.

Mr. ABBOTT. Now it is about $10,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Now, you no longer know any $7,310,000. You are dealing now with $9,880,000, and what you have to do to make this right is to provide that the outstanding land grant bonds should be really the security for that, and then they would come in, pari passu, for the portion of the security for the operation of the road. Now, however, a very complicated account would have to be kept.

Mr. ABBOTT. If the resolutions, as now framed, do not sufficiently indicate that the money would go to the $9,880,000, instead of to the $7,310,000, they should be amended in that direction. My impression is that they do, but it is better to make them clear.

Mr. DAVIES. What is the meaning of this 6th clause? As I understand, the Government intend to take the first mortgage or lien, as far as the $9,000,000 are concerned, upon the lands, and that only; and the clause goes on to propose that the interest on that $9,000,000 shall be raised out of these lands, and from no other source, and that until all the lands are sold and the proceeds realised, we shall have no claim or charge upon any other part of the company's property. If that is so, I want to know why it is so. Why should we throw up the ordinary liability of the company to pay the loan, in the first place, and the interest on the loan in the second place, and that out of any of the moneys they may have to pay it with?

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, that is an obvious objection. You have a security which is of an unproductive character, in the sense that there are no revenues derived from it. You expect to realise both interest and principal from the exhaustion of your capital, and it is actually provided that, until you have sold the whole of the 20,000,000 acres, you shall have no charge on anybody for that interest. If the Government finds it impossible to sell the lands, without selling them at a sacrifice, they will have to wait for their interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The object of this clause was to place the whole of the lands subject to the land grant bonds as a specific security against the $9,880,000, or, in round numbers, $10,000,000. It is provided that of the net proceeds the Government shall continue to retain the bonds now in their custody, the trustees shall go on and sell, as they do now, and if the net proceeds shall be insufficient to pay the interest on the last mentioned amount as it shall fall due, if the ordinary sales by the trustees are insufficient to pay that interest or the principal when the principal becomes due, the Governor in Council may order the sale, by the trustees, of any part thereof to satisfy the interest. If the ordinary sales of the lands are not sufficient, the Government will make forced sales, and so we, for the purpose of getting the interest, and the principal when it becomes due, can make a forced sale. The Government can compel the sale of any part of the lands to satisfy the interest, and the whole of the remaining lands will be liable to be put into the market, in the same way, and sold for what they may fetch. I hope that will never occur. I do not suppose it will occur; but, after that is all done, after the $10,000,000 are paid, the remainder of the land will be security, additional security, for any portion of the $20,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. But the hon. gentleman has not met my hon. friend's point at all. In the first place, you must remember that it is not the interest on these ten millions that these sales have to meet, but you have the question of the land grant bonds to deal with. You have got, first, to meet the land grant bonds which are outstanding, and you have also to meet the operation of the land grant bonds, unless you intend utterly to destroy that security. Then, having met them, you have got to meet $400,000 a year on this debt. Then, in the year 1891 the whole of this debt becomes due. The difficulty is, that supposing there is some inadequacy in the receipts which are to pay the charges of administration—for they are to be paid out of the amount—the company is not to pay the expenses of administration—then to redeem the outstanding land grant bonds, then to complete the payment of that $5,000,000 for operation, and lastly to pay the $400,000 a year interest on your loan. All that you can do is to wait for more land to be sold, and that is for principal as well as interest; and it is not until after you have sold every acre of the 21,000,000 acres that you can look to anybody for either principal or interest. Therefore, if you should think that the interest of the North-West at large, or the interest of the railway companies, to whom you are giving grants there, or the interest of settlement, or the interest of the colonisation companies, render it imprudent, on your part, in the general interests, to make forced sales of land to meet the principal of this debt, you would be obliged to say: Now we have no security whatever for present payment of either principal or interest, for we cannot call upon the company or its revenues for one shilling of interest.

Mr. McCARTHY. It seems to me that that is not at all an unreasonable view. The scheme of the resolutions appears to be to divide properties into two parts, one part to be chargeable for the payment of the five millions and the other part to be chargeable for the payment of ten millions, or a sum somewhat less than ten millions. Now, the lands are hypothecated for the latter purpose. But the supposition which the hon. gentleman raises is, that there may be a time when there will not be sufficient sales made to pay the interest of this ten millions.

Mr. BLAKE. Or upon the principal, at the end of nine years.

Mr. McCARTHY. We are speaking first of the interest. I say that is a very improbable supposition. If it arises, however, the Government always have it in their power to force the hand of the company, by saying: We will sell the lands. That my hon. friend admits. I say they have the power to bring about a forced sale. My hon. friend says that the Government may not think it proper to do so, and they may have no other resource. The only resource they could possibly have would be the bonds and the coupons for the thirty-five millions behind the bond debt. Now, if the company have means to pay anything beyond the bond debt, beyond the interest of the bond debt itself, and they are in the position that their land may be sacrificed, I fancy self-interest will require them to pay the debt that way, and it does not require any elaborate machinery to make them do it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should there not be a liability on the part of the company?

Mr. McCARTHY. There is a liability, because the moment they sell their lands, and the lands fail to realise the debt, then the liability will accrue.

Mr. BLAKE. After you have effected the sales?

Mr. McCARTHY. Precisely. Exhaust that particular security and then the liability accrues. Now, the hon. gentleman put the case of the security not being exhausted, the Government not desiring to enforce it, and the company having means over and above what enabled them to pay the interest on the bonds, but withholding these means, in order to save their lands. Now, surely, it does not require much foresight to tell us that under such circumstances the result would be that the Government can force the hand of the company. If they have means to pay the interest, and the interest is in default, the Government may say: You must sell your lands for whatever they will fetch, in order that we may be paid. I think the security will be safe enough, and the interest will be forthcoming.

The committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. We were speaking about the propriety of making a new provision for the liability of the company to pay interest in case there should be a deficiency in the sale of the lands, and the hon. member for North Simcoe suggested that the Government could force the company, by pressure, to sell those lands. But that does not seem to be a satisfactory suggestion. It seems to me there ought to be an obligation on the part of the company to pay interest on that portion of the debt which has been advanced to the company. I cannot see why the Government should insist on its being satisfactory, that until they exhaust the sale of the 21,000,000 acres they shall not be able to force the company to pay interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, the lands are simply a security for the payment of the ten millions. On the 1st May, 1891, the money becomes due, the country being the creditor, and the Government the debtor, for that sum of ten millions, and proceedings can be taken for the collection of that sum. It is true, that for the purpose of enforcing the security certain provisions are laid down in the 6th clause. That clause does not in any way prevent the Government, on default being made, from taking the ordinary steps to enforce the payment of the $10,000,000; and the effect of the whole of the 6th clause is this: That towards the $20,000,000 it is a first mortgage, towards the $10,000,000 it is a second mortgage; because, at the last part of the 6th clause, it will be found that no further or other charges shall be created on the property mortgaged as security for the said first mortgage bonds until the said $9,000,000, and interest, and also the sum of $20,000,000, and interest, shall have been paid in full. On default being made in 1891, the Government can proceed like any other creditor for the $9,000,000, and so on. I believe they can force sales of the land to pay the interest. That is an additional security, besides the security they have, that no other charge can be put upon the property after the issue of the first mortgage bonds.

Mr. DAVIES. I think the hon. gentleman can hardly argue fairly that the $10,000,000 is a second mortgage on the property in the sense in which a mortgage is ordinarily understood.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not technically, but substantially.

Mr. DAVIES. The 6th clause expressly declares it shall be a charge on the lands. In the absence of that clause there might be something in the argument. Until the lands are sold no part of the $10,000,000 can be a charge on the company's revenue. In 1891, if the company make default, you could not take proceedings to enforce payment, in the face of this clause, because the only reasonable reading of it is, that the Government cannot enforce payment of the $10,000,000 as against other property until the whole lands have been disposed of, on which lands this forms a special charge. Circumstances may arise which will render it imprudent for the Government to force a sale of the lands. I therefore suggest that some provision should be inserted, so that the company shall be obliged to pay the principal as well as the interest out of ordinary earnings, if it is not paid out of lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the Government or Parliament should think it to be inexpedient to enforce the sale of the lands, then the matter would stand over. But we have power to sell the lands to meet the interest from year to year, and to pay the principal when it becomes due. If a forced sale were postponed, the security would still remain intact.

Mr. BLAKE. Why should we not have an operative charge upon the company's resources at the end of nine years? The hon. gentleman points out that there is no charge superior to ours, and he is also quite satisfied that by 1891 there will be a large surplus revenue from the railway. In the case of the Northern Railway, the company found ways of spending the revenue instead of making payments to the Dominion. That might be done in this case. The 20,000,000 of acres will have to satisfy payments amounting to $18,600,000 of principal, the charge of administration and interest, and why should we not say that until all the lands are sold we shall have no right to look to the ordinary revenue of the company for repayment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have a right to get judgment against them.

Mr. POPE. Does the hon. gentleman think the land is not good security. I remember that he expressed the opinion that the lands were worth from $2 to $1 per acre, and now he seems to think they are not security for less than $1 per acre. I have no doubt that the lands are first rate security; and why we should look further than to have sufficient security, I cannot well understand.

Mr. BLAKE. In June, 1883, the Government decided that they would give North-West lands to aid railways at $1.50 an acre, because they thought that the margin of profit to be derived by the companies would be sufficient to enable them to build the roads. The idea was, that the Government would obtain $1 and the companies would make $1 per acre. The Government had been giving land at $1 per acre and they thought the companies could make $2. In June, 1883, the Government decided that the price was too low, and proposed $1.50, thinking that the companies would sell them for $2.50, giving $1.50 to the Government and $1 to the companies. In September, 1884, the Government decided that the companies could not make anything by paying such rates, and they decided to give the railway companies lands free, in order that the companies might make $1 per acre from the lands, which amount was necessary to aid the railway enterprises. And yet the hon. gentleman asks me if I do not think the land is not good security.

Mr. POPE. By no act of ours have we said that the land was not worth $1 an acre. I have said that at the time the hon. gentleman speaks of they could not afford to pay $1 an acre, and get enough out of it, at the number of acres we are giving per mile, which is a different thing.

Mr. DAVIES. In the first place, the Acting Minister of Railways does not state the case fairly, because he knows that this is not a first charge on the land, as there are millions of money ahead of it. In the second place, the answer to his question might be put in this way: Does he think that any prudent investor would take a mortgage on these lands now, and advance ten millions on them? I question very much if he would do so. I say it is a monstrous thing that we should have other security at hand and that we should refuse to take it. I should like to know the reason.

Mr. BLAKE. The reason is, because the result of our taking a second security, which shall be available to us as a charge on the company's railway, in 1891, before this land is sold, would be to interfere with their prospects of getting so large dividends paid back to themselves out of the earnings of the road. The hon. gentleman wants the earnings to go into the shareholders' pockets, instead of paying our debts.

Mr. MILLS. We have only to look at the sums received from sales of lands, according to the reports of the Minister of Interior, from year to year, to see what we are likely to realise from the land. The proposition made here is, that we are to look for the payment, not only of the principal, but of the annual interest upon this money, from those lands, as well as the charges of administration. Let the hon. gentleman take from the sales of lands by the Department of the Interior for the past six or seven years the cost of administration, and he has not enough left to pay the interest, or anything like it; and yet he wished the House to consider that this is sufficient security, not only for the principal, but for the annual payment of the interest. Now, I say the Government are bound to show how they expect to realise from these lands, not throughout the North-West, but in a small portion of it, a larger sum than they have realised from the entire property they have in this country.

Mr. POPE. These hon. gentlemen talk about my putting it unfairly, but they put it very unfairly themselves. The hon. gentleman knows that there is no question of paying interest on these $5,000,000, except as security. The hon. gentleman knows that there are $2,000,000 besides, making almost a half, and to say that this is not enough for the balance is to say something which no one in the country will say, who understands the question.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask what amount of revenue the Government has derived from lands in the North-West during the past year, after paying the expenses of management?

Mr. POPE. That is in accord with the hon. gentleman's usual argument; for he picks out the worst year we have seen for sales of lands, and he holds that up as an example.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman should bear in mind that the Government have lands set out for settlement, for homesteads and pre-emptions, and that the only thing which makes the settlers of the North-West buy railway lands at all, which are a mere fraction of the whole area of the North-West, is on account of the superior advantages in getting near a railway. For this reason the amount of land disposed of by the company in one year must form but a small fraction of the land of the North-West actually settled during the year. The hon. gentleman will see that the amount of sales would not pay the interest on the sum in question, unless the settlement of the North-West goes forward at a much greater speed than it has up to the present time.

Mr. McCALLUM. I submit from the amount of money which this Government has spent in making the lands of the North-West valuable, they should have more value than they had in 1881. Here is what the hon. member for Bothwell said about the lands in 1881 :

" We have had, ever since this discussion began, a studied attempt, on the part of Ministers, to depreciate the value of the lands in the North-West Territories. Now, Sir, we are not left in the dark upon this subject ; we can form a tolerably accurate conjecture of the sum that picked lands, such only as this company are obliged to take in the North-West Territories, are likely to bring. When the subject was before the country, on Sir Hugh Allan's contract, I took occasion to address an article to the Canadian Monthly, in which I said :"

Then he quotes from the article, which I shall not read and goes on to say :

" I call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that this statement was made eight years ago. My conclusions were not based upon vague and uncertain estimates of unoccupied lands in the vicinity of railways, but upon the conclusions which a careful induction of facts afforded. Since then, experience in the adjoining Republic has not modified the conclusions based upon the observations of an earlier period. Let me invite the attention of the Minister also to some of the returns for the past year, to the average price of the lands sold by several of the railway companies of the United States. I will now give, and I will mention first, the sale of lands in Texas, the region the mention of which has so greatly disturbed Ministers and their supporters during the last two years. The sales of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway averaged, per acre, $2.11 ; of the Texas Pacific Railway, $2.16 ; of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway, $3.66 ; of the Iowa Falls and Sioux City Railway, $3.36 ; of the St. Louis and San Francisco, $3.81 ; of the Winona and St. Peter's Railway, $3.90 ; of the Southern Minnesota Railway, $3.34 ; of the Burlington and Missouri River Railway, $4.20 ; of the Still Water and St. Paul's Railway, $4.55 ; of the St. Paul's and Pacific Branch Railway, $4.29 ; of the Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railway, $4.79 ; of the St. Paul and Sioux Railway, $5.26 ; of the Sioux City and St. Paul Railway, $5.84 ; of the St. Paul and Pacific Railway, $6.83 ; of the Hannibal and St. Joseph's Railway, $7. These sales, taken together, will average upwards of $5 an acre."

This was the language of the hon. gentleman then ; he thought all the lands in the North-West were worth $5 an acre, but now he thinks they are not good security for 75 cents on the dollar. Hon. gentlemen opposite have a short memory, and it is a good thing we have a Hansard, so that we can correct them sometimes. One year the lands, according to them, are not worth $1 an acre, and the next year or two they are worth $5, just as the circumstances suit them.

Mr. HESSON. The balance sheet of the company on the 31st of December last shows that the company sold 3,600,263 acres, amounting to $10,506,234, less expenses and 10 per cent. premium on land grant bonds, $1,111,947, realising $9,394,286 ; in addition, their town sites realised $504,675, or, altogether, about $10,000,000 for less than 4,000,000 acres of land. Now, I conceive that out of the balance of the land, 21,000,000 acres, there ought to be sufficient security for the amount provided in this resolution. I must confess that the value placed upon the lands does not appear to me to be anything like their real value. The railway company themselves hold the balance of 21,000,000 acres to be worth $2 an acre, or about $43,000,000, although what they sold realised about $3 an acre. What advantage will it be, if the proposition is to give the company some relief, to tie up everything they have, so that they may find themselves in a tight place, and be obliged to come back here and ask us to release some of the security ? I do not think that can be the motive or the desire of hon. gentlemen opposite. In helping the company we help the country and the great North-West, and I am sure hon. gentlemen will not say that the company has sold the best of the land.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman should recollect that the great bulk of the land sold by the company, 2,200,000 acres was sold to one corporation ; and that corporation bought originally, I think about 5,000,000 acres.

Mr. HESSON. No doubt they drove a tight bargain.
Mr. MILLS.

Mr. BLAKE. They drove a bargain so tight that they were obliged to give more than half the lands in order to avoid utter ruin, and throw them back on the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and their stock of $7,500,000 is now represented, according to their stock, by $2,800,000 ; so that the lands, for which they paid on the average $2.23 net, are now valued at from $1 to $1.10 an acre ; and these were the choice lands the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had to sell. There is no use of discussing these matters from that point of view, as these sales were made during the boom. I am glad to hear the amount of the sales of the company last year at good prices ; but the acreage sold is very small and the price not cash. If the hon. gentleman will look at the company's report he will find what their experience has been :

" The experience of the company in the matter of land sales has been to some extent similar to that of nearly all the land grant railways in the United States, where the first speculative fever has almost invariably been followed by a heavy falling off in land sales, owing to the presence of vast quantities of free Government lands ; but as these were taken up by settlers, the sale of railway lands increased, and prices increased as well. Profiting by the experience of others, this company has extensively advertised the free Government lands, and made every effort to stimulate their settlement. The settlements along the main line now extend something more than 400 miles west of Winnipeg, and for this distance the greater part of the Government lands within ten miles of the railway have been taken up, and there are indications of renewed activity in the sales of the lands of the company."

That is the best the company could say as to immediate prospects. The hon. gentleman says that we want to tie the company up. This resolution prevents any other mortgage being put on the company's property while this exists, so that they cannot use their property to raise more money on it. All we want is that, in case that happens which the hon. gentleman thinks will not happen, namely, if there is a deficiency in the sales of land to provide for the payment of interest, the revenues of the company should be made available to pay the deficiency of interest. If it be true that the lands will produce a sufficient sum, the revenues of the company will not be drawn on for the purpose ; but if it should turn out that the depression in the North-West lasts somewhat longer than is expected, and that it becomes somewhat difficult to sell the lands, why should we not get the revenue to pay our interest. We are giving this company an opportunity of getting $15,000,000 more as a first charge on the railway ; why should we not have a second charge for the interest on that on which we have a first charge now ? We have now the first charge on the lands, the railway and all. We are asked for $10,000,000, to become, not a first charge, but a second charge on the lands, and we are asked to take a second charge on the railway, but only after the whole 21,000,000 acres have been sold. I say we ought to have a second charge on the railway, in case the lands do not produce what you expect. If they do, the second charge will do no harm ; if they do not, there are the surplus revenues of the company with which to have our interest paid.

Mr. HESSON. The average sales realised on lands are over $3,000,000 a year. The hon. gentleman says " hear, hear." Will he deny that we have realised about $10,000,000 net on the sales of lands ? and that we have to provide interest on less than $10,000,000 ? Does he suppose that the lands will not realise sufficient to pay $500,000 a year, when they have realised an average of over $3,000,000 a year ?

Mr. MILLS. The statement is an extraordinary one. The hon. gentleman says the company have sold $9,000,000 worth of lands since its organisation, averaging about $3,000,000 a year. Are those lands settled ? Why, those very lands are put into the market and are competing with what the company has in its possession.

Mr. HESSON. They have cash for it.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman expect the Government are going to sell millions of acres to a few speculators, in the same way as the company have sold their lands? The company sold to the Duke of Manchester's company in England; and everybody who has given any attention to the North-West knows that the very fact that this sale has been made will be an impediment to further sales, and years will be occupied in the settlement of those lands then disposed of. We have to look at what is being done now by the Government and the company; we have to look at the progress of settlement. I still adhere to the views I have expressed, and which were adverted to by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum). It is not the price the land brings, but the quantity of land put into the market and the aggregate value of the land sold, that indicates the amount of money that will be at the disposal of the company for the payment of the interest on its obligations. So long as we have such a wide extent of country to settle in the North-West, these sales of land on the part of the company must go on at a comparative slow rate, and the Government are not likely to realise a sufficient sum to pay the interest. That being the case, the security given is not sufficient. We require further security, not because these lands will not ultimately bring the amount the Government have advanced, but because they will not afford the means to pay the interest on the obligations of the company, as the interest matures year by year.

Mr. HESSON. The companies which purchased these lands purchased them on condition, requiring them to make certain improvements which they did not make. The Government will not have to settle these lands. They have their even sections to settle, and so far as the lands sold are concerned, will have nothing to do with settling them. Settling the lands is not a part of the consideration at all. The question is to get back the money. Does the hon. gentleman deny that is the correct position?

Mr. BLAKE. I do.

Mr. HESSON. Does he say that the Canadian Pacific Railway are compelled to settle the lands before they sell them?

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. HESSON. That is all the case.

Mr. BLAKE. The boom is over, and the measure of the sales of land in the North-West is the measure of the settlement of the North-West, without taking the measure of the free settlement of the North-West.

Mr. WATSON. With regard to the sales of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands, a great number were sold in 1882, on conditions of settlement, which were not complied with, and the lands were abandoned. Those lands were situated, in some instances, away from the railway; in other instances they were taken up as a matter of speculation. Any man who had a few dollars to invest put his money in land in 1882; only 10 per cent. was required to be paid up, and the money was invested in the belief that the land would greatly increase in value. Those calculations, I am sorry to say, failed, and the lands are not selling in the North-West as they did during the boom, when the sale was made to the Duke of Manchester. I do not suppose that the company or the Government could make such a sale now.

Mr. HESSON. Does the hon. gentleman know of any Canadian Pacific Railway lands in the market to-day at less than $2 an acre?

Mr. WATSON. I know plenty that would not sell at $2 an acre; $2 is the price they ask, or $1.25 on conditions of settlement; but it is not what they ask, but what they can sell for, that we must look to. In making a bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway we should try and make one that would secure the Government as well as the railway.

It appears that the bargain to be made is to secure the company from all chances of loss and let the Government take all the risk.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not surprised at the hon. gentleman thinking there is not much chance of our getting the money back out of the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for we have his recorded opinion that all the land west of Moose Jaw is not worth a farthing; that it is an arid, barren desert. I am not surprised, therefore, he takes the ground he does. But I think others who read more and perhaps know more than the hon. gentleman, have put a higher value on the land. The hon. member for Bothwell says: "Look at the account of the sales by the Government." That is not a fair comparison. The Government are giving away the lands and homesteads, and the moneys they receive are only for the pre-emptions. They are not, therefore, putting lands into the market in the same sense or way as the Canadian Pacific Railway, or as any other owner of private property is doing. They are really putting the lands into the market free, and taking such money as they can get for pre-emptions, from men who feel themselves rich enough to have farms, partly free and partly at a price to be paid at a future day. The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Blake) says this is not a second mortgage, but it very nearly amounts to a second mortgage. When we are going to assist the company at this moment, I think, if we really believe we have substantial security, we should take warning by experience, and not make what I think was the mistake of the Government last year in exacting too stringent terms. We were so anxious to take every possible thing the company had to offer that we locked them up to such an extent that they were obliged to come here again. If we are satisfied that the country is in no danger of losing the amount of the loan, if they choose to exact it—if Parliament gives it away, that is Parliament's business—let us give the aid without prejudicing the credit or standing of the company in the money markets of the world. I think the House will agree that we ought to help them in that regard. I believe that a second mortgage, eo nomine, put in an Act of Parliament will, such are the prejudices, such is the timidity of capital and capitalists, or may have the effect of keeping down the credit of the company, when the principal object of Parliament and the Government is to raise the credit of that company and to give it a fair chance and a fair start. I think, therefore, that we ought not to put any encumbrance upon the road that we can help, if we are satisfied that the country is in no danger of losing, eventually, the amount of money we have lent to them. It is admitted that the company have a fine property and a good future, and that they will be a prosperous company, with very considerable revenues. That is an important admission, and a very fortunate thing for the country as well as for the railway. Then, although there is no second mortgage, the Government has a right, as a creditor, if there is a default made on the 1st May, 1891, or before that, if there has been been default in the interest, to sell the lands at forced sale. The half-year's interest—say, of $200,000—is due. If the Government desire, they can force a sale to pay off that $200,000, and they can repeat that operation twice a year, and sell sufficient lands—it would not be a very large extent—to pay this amount of interest. Then, besides that, they have a right to get a judgment at any time they please, and an execution following the judgment on all the properties of the railway. There cannot be anything to come in except other executions by other creditors of the railway.

Mr. BLAKE. What can the execution take?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It can take what every execution against a railway can. The Government have a right to come into court and insist upon a receiver being appointed to take possession of the road and all its revenues.

That is practically the effect of an execution against a railway, that you can attach the revenues and have a receiver appointed. There can be no other specific charge put upon the road by way of mortgage or debenture bond of any kind to come in between your judgment for the full amount of the default and the property of the railway. I do not say that this is as substantial a security as a second mortgage, but it comes so near it, with the certainty, from my point of view, with the double purchase you have, first, of selling the land by forced sale, and secondly, by getting an execution and enforcing it upon the railway, that you get, substantially, what you require in this way, and at the same time you do not hamper the company in the markets of the world, by showing it so specifically laden down as it would appear to be by two mortgages. At the same time, the security is substantially sufficient, as it will, without a doubt, pay both principal and interest; and I would appeal to the House to look at it from that point of view, to assist the company, by not overloading it in the eye of the timid investor, the timid stock exchange, by showing that there is not only a first but a second mortgage for the whole amount.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand the First Minister to say that, in case the company made default in the payment of the interest on these bonds on the Government loan, an execution could be obtained against the company, and on that execution the Government would be entitled to the appointment of a receiver. My impression is that the right hon. gentleman is in error in stating that to the House as the law. I am not aware of any court having jurisdiction, at all events, in the Province of Ontario, to deal with property of that kind in that way. The only ground on which the courts appoint receivers is that the creditor is a mortgagee of a thing that is not saleable, and that the only remedy the mortgagee has is to enter into possession of the rents and profits of the place; but that is not the position of an ordinary contract creditor, who obtains an execution against the lands and the property, and the only thing he can attach is some specific property.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole of the decisions in England and the United States show that railways are substantially highways, and therefore an execution in any way interrupting the working of the road cannot be enforced, but an execution will only operate as a charge against the revenues of the railway, after the working expenses are paid. Sometimes it is enforced in one way and sometimes in another, but in the United States the decisions are invariable.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think you can reach the earnings of the road by the medium of a receiver.

Mr. McCARTHY. Every judgment creditor is entitled ex debito justitiæ to the appointment of a receiver. I have not the shadow of a doubt about that. Having an execution and not being able to levy on your judgment, you are entitled to have a receiver appointed. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend make a statement such as he has.

Mr. WATSON. The First Minister stated, not long ago, that there was not one homestead taken up between the 3rd and 4th meridians, and only 23 between the 4th and 5th. I think that is far less favorable testimony than I gave. As regards the section 300 miles west of Moose Jaw, the information I gave was derived from a surveyor, and it has not been contradicted.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. member for North Simcoe surely cannot argue that by any process a creditor can obtain, through any formal machinery, any other right than that which the contract gives him. In this case the contract only gives to the Government a lien on certain funds, and I doubt if a general execution could be obtained against the general assets of the company on the security here proposed. I would ask the hon. member for North Simcoe if he can cite any case in which a receiver to a railway has been appointed, except at the instance of covenant creditors.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD,

Mr. McCARTHY. The case of Fox against the Nipissing Railway Company was exactly in point.

Mr. MULOCK. That was not a case in point. There was a special demand, other than the right of simple contract creditor.

Mr. DAVIES. According to the First Minister, we are first to be driven to a suit of law against the company to recover a judgment, and when we recover it we have got to file a bill in Chancery, setting forth that we cannot realise on that judgment, because the property is already encumbered to an amount of thirty-five millions as the first charge upon it, and we cannot realise until a receiver is appointed. Now, what are we going to do? We have to apply for a receiver to take this road off the hands of the company, in order that we may get paid. Every creditor will sue at the same time we do. We know there are millions of these small contract creditors now, and God knows how many there will be ten years hence. The point is, whether we should say that in this contract we are now making our interest on this land should be secured upon some other property than the mere lands themselves. Are the lands selling now? The company are offering them at $1.25 an acre, with condition of settlement, and cannot sell them. It is true that during the boom large sales were made, but no one expects that there is to be a repetition of that kind of thing. Now, we are not taking first security for this ten millions of money; there are eight and a-half millions of prior securities in outstanding bonds, and our interest comes in as a second charge, and you are making a stipulation that the current receipts of the company shall not be appropriated to pay any interest upon this ten millions. Suppose the Government asked the company, when default is made in payment of interest, to enforce the sale of lands, the shareholders will say: That is a most unjust proposition. You, yourselves, put a special clause in the contract, that none of our revenue was to be chargeable with the payment of this interest until you have disposed of all the lands. Political or national exigencies may require that you shall not force those lands into the market, either now or for the next five or six years. Therefore, you must not touch any of our revenue, and if you are going to appoint a receiver it will be a practical breach of faith. If you wanted to do this and appropriate any of our revenue, why did you not say so in the contract? I think it is reasonable to put a clause in the contract, that in case the land does not sell for sufficient money to pay the interest the interest shall be payable out of the general receipts.

Mr. McCALLUM. Some time ago, when the contract was before the House, the leader of the Opposition valued the land in the North-West at $4.04 an acre. If we had a boom in the North-West it was owing to the action of hon. gentlemen opposite. They have been crying down our own country and booming Texas land.

Mr. BLAKE. The First Minister says that he has not given us a formal second mortgage because he is afraid it will frighten the capitalists. This will do us good, and the public will not know that we have the security. What harm is this going to do the company? It is only interfering with the shareholders' opportunity of drawing money and putting it into their own pockets. We ask that this be a claim only on the surplus after paying fixed charges. The question is, if, after the sales of the land there is a surplus, that surplus should go into the pockets of the shareholders, or go to pay interest. With respect to the question of receiver, I would not pretend to place my opinion against the opinions of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), for my business has been here, and not in the courts, for many years.

Mr. McCARTHY. The importance of the receiver question is quite illusory. No person would pretend to say that the Government, holding the charge on those terms, is not in a better position than simple contract creditors. This is an express charge on the company's assets, in preference to the claims of shareholders.

Mr. DAVIES. When does it come into operation?

Mr. McCARTHY. It comes into operation as soon as the land fund is exhausted. The scheme is, that the lands are to be used for the payment of the debt of $10,000,000. That particular fund having been exhausted, the Government claim becomes a charge on all the resources of the company, coming, of course, after the bondholders' claim for $35,000,000. The company should not be embarrassed in floating bonds by the suggestion that under any possible circumstances any other creditors can rank with the bondholders and disturb their rights.

Mr. BLAKE. We are not suggesting it.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what the hon. gentleman's argument amounts to.

Mr. MILLS. How can the company derive a large revenue from the sale of its lands so long as the Government continues to put its lands at the disposal of such settlers as choose to take possession of them. That circumstance must, of course, largely interfere with the amount of revenue derivable by the company from its lands. Looking at what the company has done and what the Government has done by way of sales, the sales of land belonging to the company will not be sufficient to pay the interest on the company's obligations. It is only fair, under those circumstances, that should the sales of lands prove insufficient to pay the interest the Government's claim in question should be chargeable on other resources of the company. It is an extraordinary proposition, that when money is required to be advanced in the interest of this company and security is being taken, that a reasonable demand for further security should be resisted by the Government. They ought to seek to protect the public interest, instead of appearing simply as advocates of the railway company.

Mr. DAVIES. This is not a question between the bondholders and the Government. No proposition emanating from this side sought to impair the security which is to be given to the bondholders. The question is one simply between the Government and the shareholders of the company. It is whether the surplus revenue of the road shall be applied, in case of default arising from the sale of land, to paying interest on $10,000,000; or whether it should be devoted to paying dividends to the shareholders. So it is a question simply between the people and the shareholders, and the Government evidently prefer that the shareholders be protected rather than the people.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain what he means by fixed charges, which are referred to in this clause.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thought there was in one of the Canadian Pacific Railway Acts a definition of the term, but I cannot find it at the moment. There is no doubt, however, of what it means in railway parlance. The fixed charges, as stated in Mr. Stephen's report, amount to $3,606,070 per annum, and they include the interest on these bonds and other charges, which are special, and specifically secured, and which must be paid in the first instance.

Mr. BLAKE. The reason I asked about these fixed charges is just on account of the passage in Mr. Stephen's report to which the hon. gentleman has just referred. It is an odd thing that we are not going to have the leased lines, and yet that we should be obliged to pay, as part of the fixed charges, before getting the interest on the money, the rent of the leased lines. There is a sum of $778,434 stated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as part of the fixed charges, which is made up of the rental of leased lines. They have given a guarantee to pay that rental, and to-morrow they may give a guarantee for some other operation. Does that then become ipso facto a fixed charge, and is it preferred to our claim? We must have some definition of fixed charges, with reference to this special arrangement.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The hon. gentleman must know that the expression "fixed charges" is a well-understood railway term and is as almost universally used and as well understood as the term "mortgage" among lawyers. I suppose that here it is used in the ordinary sense in which it is used in railway negotiations.

Mr. BLAKE. We are not dealing with the whole railway system. I could understand a fixed charge if we were dealing with the whole Canadian Pacific Railway, leased lines and all; but when you are taking a mortgage, which is yet secret in the breast of the Prime Minister, as to what it means, when it may or may not mean leased lines, it is another matter. What are the fixed charges of the line proper when you are not taking the leased lines? It is a word of a varying application entirely. What is the "fixed charge" on the Ontario and Quebec system by itself? The net earnings of the Ontario and Quebec system are applied, first of all, and the first fixed charges on them are these rentals. The system, as I understand it, has been that a series of bonds have been issued by the Ontario and Quebec, to the amount of somewhere about $10,000,000 at 5 per cent., and those bonds bear the guarantee of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They have given their covenant of guarantee to pay the interest on them. Then the Toronto, Grey and Bruce was leased by the Ontario and Quebec at something like $140,000, and that is a rental. Then, I fancy that the lease of the whole system to the Canadian Pacific Railway has been for an aggregate sum, and equivalent to the interest at 5 per cent. on the bonds and 6 per cent. on the $10,000,000 of stock. I suppose they are lessors, and give a covenant to pay this rental, which they expect to pay out of the profit of the leased lines, but which, in the case of a deficiency, the railway company will be liable for. Now, when you are taking a mortgage, which is said to be only on the main line, is it to be a fixed charge on the leased lines, if this difficulty should occur?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wanted to get us in a trap; but I think it would have been more candid if he had asked the definition of a word.

Mr. BLAKE. I asked the meaning of the word in this resolution.

Mr. McCARTHY. I certainly did not understand the hon. gentleman in that sense. I simply rose to endeavor to assist the committee, by saying what, in my judgment, was the meaning of the term "fixed charges" in a railway contract such as this. With reference to what my hon. friend says, I do not think there is any great difficulty. If it is found difficult or impossible to float these securities I would say that so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway covers any of these branch lines they ought to be covered by this security. I do not venture to pronounce an opinion as to how far this security should go; but let us follow the hon. gentleman's illustration. There is the ordinary main line, with its fixed charges, and there is the branch, with its fixed charges; then there is the Ontario and Quebec line, with its fixed charges, for which the hon. gentleman says the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has given its mortgage. Assuming that to be true, what follows? That charge would not be a fixed charge on this system, so far as the Canadian Pacific goes; it would simply, as I understand, take the guarantee of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the bondholders of another railway. They would hold the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as the guarantors, and they would be simply in the position of contract creditors, and that could not be a fixed charge on this particular railway, which is mortgaged to the Government. So that if this sum of $9,880,912 includes any branch lines not embraced in the terms of the mortgage—

Mr. BLAKE. It includes the Ontario and Quebec system.

Mr. McCARTHY. If it does, that would be excluded. Then, if a dispute arose with the bondholders of the Ontario and Quebec Railway, we would be able to say that under the terms of this document we are prior creditors to them; because, although they have an ordinary claim, to be decided by a suit, we have a fixed charge authorised by Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. I must disclaim any intention of trying to entrap the hon. gentleman. My anxiety was to get a specific answer as to the character of the fixed charges in this contract before us. The reason I asked it, was because I observed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had specified such fixed charges for our security, which I thought were not meant to embrace the branch lines. I think the discussion shows the term "fixed charges" may be very ambiguous. As applied to the company's security, it may mean one thing, and as applied to our securities, it may mean another thing. I think the committee will agree with me that there ought to be no question about it; it should not be determined by a suit at law, but by using some language which will be plainer than the phrase in the resolution.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). By the Grand Trunk Act the rental of the leased line is made part of their working expenses, and working expenses are far ahead of ordinary fixed charges, because they are taken out before the net revenue is arrived at. As to the rental of the Ontario and Quebec line, if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has given its guarantee, it takes all the earnings of the Ontario and Quebec Railway. I think the earnings of that road are considerably more than the rental which was guaranteed. Of course, the company may have another line, of which the reverse is the case; but if they take the earnings and put them into their net revenue from the leased roads, they certainly ought to be able to pay the rental which they carry.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman was not in awhile ago, or he would have heard the First Minister say that a separate account would have to be kept. The guarantee is not an obligation that will have to be met from the net revenue of the leased lines. The pressure on the main line will occur only in case there is a deficiency in the earnings of the leased line. But when the same corporation works the main line and the leased line, you will find that sometimes the traffic on the leased line is very great and sometimes very little; sometimes expensive improvements are made on the leased line, and sometimes it is stationary; sometimes there is competition with the leased line and sometimes not. For instance, assuming that the Canadian Pacific Railway is opened to Winnipeg next summer, for the North-West traffic there are two lines, by Perth, over the Ontario and Quebec and the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railways, and by the boats to Port Arthur, and there is the main line in direct competition with that. The company can make the earnings of the leased lines good or bad, just as they choose; they can create a deficiency or surplus in the earnings of the leased line, just as they give the order; so that you may call the charge fixed, but whether it will be really an onerous charge on the main line depends on how the two lines are managed.

Mr. McCARTHY.

Then there may be others. Take the Toronto Grey and Bruce; the net revenue, according to the last account, was $60,000 and the rent was $140,000. The Canadian Pacific Railway may improve the traffic of that line very much by throwing part of their through traffic on it, but if they do they will be depleting the main line. So that we do not know what the operations of these lines will be. What we want is to have it specifically stated what these fixed charges are. If our mortgage is to include the whole system, the rental of the leased lines is properly a fixed charge. But it is not a fixed charge, in the proper meaning of the word, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, if you are going to cut the system into two, making one part the leased lines and the other part the main line. It would be outrageous, now that we have a security over the whole system, to part with that and take a mortgage on only a part of the system.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite clear, at all events, that the main line will be the most successful portion. To make the clause more specific we might add, "after the sale of the whole of such lands, any deficiency in the proceeds thereof to pay the amount charged thereon shall be a charge on the entire revenue, after providing for the fixed charges on the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Mr. BLAKE. I do not invite the hon. gentleman to make any specific alteration of this kind, for the obvious reason that the character of the alterations depends on what our mortgage is and what our security is on. It is doubtful whether it is on the main line alone or on the whole system, and I was drawing the attention of the hon. gentleman to the obscurity of the meaning of his language in connection with the obscurity of the meaning of the mortgage. Before taking the next resolution, the Government ought to decide on its policy.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it was suggested that some words should be put in to make the first part of the resolution plainer. I move that after the word "Act," in the 8th line of the 6th resolution, the following words be added:—

Applying the money applicable to land grant bonds in the hands of the Government, over and above the sum of $5,000,000, referred to in the second sub-section of section 5 of the said Act, to the interest and principal of the said sum of $9,880,912, instead of to the purposes provided for in the first sub-section of section 5 of the Act of last Session.

Amendment agreed to.

On resolution 7,

Mr. BLAKE. This is a clause which provides as to the application of Government money. It is "to be applied by the company, under the supervision of the Government, to the payment of work done or to be done for the development, improvement and extension of the railway, its connections and equipment, and for the maintenance, and credit and efficiency of the company generally, to the satisfaction of the Government." You might arrange for an extra dividend under that, and place it to the credit of the company. I never saw such words.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The language is decidedly wide, in order to meet the requirements of the company. In the first place, the money is to be applied under the supervision of the Government. They are to see that it is properly applied. It is to be applied in payment of work done or to be done on the railway. The words are wide, but I do not see how they could be limited, because the purpose is a wide one, to restrain the company, from now until July, 1886, by which time we believe the money will be paid and the company's efficiency and credit established.

Mr. BLAKE. Take a case in point. The company announced to the shareholders it would pay an extra 1 per cent. of dividend during construction. They have kept, under very trying circumstances, to that promise, up to this time, I suppose with the view of maintaining the credit of the company. The next payment will be in September. The directors are strongly inclined, as they stated at their annual meeting, not to recommend it any more. Supposing they should change their mind, and think it is in the interests of the company, in order to keep up its credit, that they should pay this 1 per cent. extra dividend, these words are wide enough to allow them to do so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That would not be to the satisfaction of the present Government, and not to the satisfaction of my hon. friend, should he enter office.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish the hon. gentleman had pointed out these views to the company on the 17th February, before they paid the last 1 per cent., which, as I have said, was practically paid out of our money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events, that is a part of the contract.

Mr. BLAKE. They do not say they are inclined to advise the dispensation of it, although it is due under the arrangement. This is the clause under which the application of these moneys more specifically was to come in, and the clause upon which we are entitled to some information as to the probable application of these moneys, which are the motive of the whole transaction, and I would refer the hon. gentleman to the estimate of Mr. Stephen, which is the foundation of the whole procedure, in his letter of the 18th March, and would invite him to state what information he has acquired and can now give to the committee, as to the propriety and necessity of these different classes of expenditures. The first is $1,000,000 for rolling stock of different kinds, which he specifies. The next is:

"For elevators, Port Arthur, Montreal, etc.; coal bunkers, Montreal; additional real estate, Montreal and elsewhere;revetment walls, Montreal; additional depot and tracks and other facilities, Montreal and other points. Additional yard room and track, coal and other docks, and other terminal facilities at Fort William and Port Arthur, $1,500,000."

In one lump sum. Has the Government received any more detailed statement dividing up these expenditures; has it obtained any information as to the propriety or necessity of them, or any report from the engineer or other officer on the subject?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am really not able to give that information at this moment, but I will get it for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. I am a little discouraged, but I am going on:

"For divisional shops and machinery at nine points, coal docks and machinery at two points on Lake Superior section, station buildings, section houses, and miscellaneous buildings at various points, additional station sidings and crossings, tracks at various points, extension of divisional yards, additional engine houses, improvement in water supply, additional tacks, permanent bridge work at various crossings, Bow River and on other sections, additional ballasting, filling trestles and raising roadway, $600,000."

Among other items, I see "filling trestles," which, of course, is a portion of the building of the line, as it was stated by my hon. friend the Acting Minister of Railways at an earlier period of the Session, in answer to the motion of my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), that there was a certain amount of trestle construction, but that he would not give an account of it, because it was not intended to be permanent work; but here I find, in the further and unexpected expenditure, an item for filling trestles. Have the Government got any details of this, showing what amount is due to each of the different items, and any report upon that subject?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid not, but I am not sure.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the Government are in a similar position with regard to the next:

"For completing telegraph system, main line and branches, $275,000."

I see a very large sum stated in connection with the telegraph system. That, however, to me, was not an unexpected thing. From the beginning, they took power to build a telegraph system, and they have been pressing it on and announcing that it would be a considerable source of revenue, and the completion seems now to be one of the unexpected things upon which further assistance is required. I think we should know whether it is in the railway interests or in the interests of developing a general telegraph system as a source of revenue. Another very important item is:

"For connection with Coal Harbor and English Bay, shops, buildings, docks, tracks and other facilities at Pacific terminus, $760,000."

The Government told us very strongly, and no longer ago than last Session—yes, and even this Session. When I called the attention of the Acting Minister to the fact that there were rumors that the company were prosecuting an extension from Port Moody to Coal Harbor or English Bay, and pointed out that I had indicated before that, for the China and Japan trade, something of that kind would be done—he said: If it is done, the Government considers Port Moody the proper point, and if anything more is done it will be by the company itself, and we have no concern with it whatever; and at that moment he was making a contract for the additional expenditure of no less than $70,000 to put down iron piles instead of the wooden piles in front of Port Moody wharf, which, if this arrangement is to be made, will be a structure little required. I do not mean to say there will be no traffic at Port Moody; but, if the terminus is to be some thirteen miles off, at Coal Harbor or English Bay, we have made a permanent structure at Port Moody to repair the ravages of the teredo, costing more than the wharf cost altogether, and in addition to giving that to the Pacific Railway we are to find means for borrowing, and perhaps are ourselves to give them, $760,000 for this extension. The Acting Minister of Railways, early in the Session, said: This is a matter with which we have no concern; it is not our business; we believe the terminus at Port Moody is adequate. I want to know whether the Government have any further information on this subject, whether they have approved of this as necessary and important to the company, and whether they have verified at all the estimates and plans upon which the Canadian Pacific Railway terminus is to be transferred, in fact, from Port Moody to Coal Harbor or English Bay.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand, these estimates are generally rough estimates, but before the money can be expended full details will be given. As to the connection with Coal Harbor, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways was quite right in stating that it was the affair of the company itself. Under the contract and the Act of Parliament the terminus was stated to be at Port Moody, as far as the Government was concerned; the contract ends there, and it is a fine harbor, no doubt, and will always have a considerable amount of trade, I fancy, which will still remain and start from Port Moody, although it is the intention of the company to extend the line to Coal Harbor and English Bay. It appears, on fuller investigation, that the interests of the company and the interests of foreign trade will be promoted by going to Coal Harbor and English Bay, but it forms no portion of the contract, and they get no portion of the subsidy on this part of the line. I believe the extension of the road has been made for the advantage of the general Asiatic trade. You may depend upon it that the company, with the evidence they have before them, are acting in the best interests of trade and of their railway in going to the expense of extending it 13 miles further.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman's answer is not satisfactory. The Government have had this matter under deliberation until the 30th April last; and amongst the things which it was incumbent on them to do, was to scrutinise the ground upon which the railway company stated they wanted more money, to investigate the particulars of their alleged necessity, and to ascertain whether it was reasonable to propose that this large additional sum should be advanced. Now, the hon. gentleman appears to have entered into no such investigation. I see the Acting Minister of Railways is here, and perhaps he will answer what the First Minister was unable to do—whether there are any more details with reference to the item of one million and a-half for elevators, and so forth, mentioned in Mr. Stephen's letter.

Mr. POPE. I haven't them here. I think, probably, on concurrence, I will have them.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the trouble always. I asked whether there was any further correspondence a little while ago on any of these points, and the Minister said there was none. I maintain we ought to have had a detailed statement sent into the Government of this. These must have been estimated, in order to make up the gross sum; the company must have had that information; they ought to have delivered it to the Minister, and the Minister ought to have had a report as to whether this further expenditure was so necessary as that he was justified in inviting Parliament to alter the securities and to advance this large sum of money. Now, if that was done, if, in fact, these details were furnished to the Government, if the Government recognised it to be their duty to obtain these details, if they obtained the examination of their permanent officer upon them, as they did the last time, when Mr. Schreiber's report was concurred in by the Government, then we ought to have it before us. That is one of the elements for our decision.

Mr. POPE. I have talked it over with the engineer. So far as a good many of these things are concerned, you have an estimate. For instance, the cuttings and obliterating the banks. Of course, everybody knows what that is who has travelled over the road. My chief engineer says that for the work that has been done this is a very small item. I have pointed out to the hon. gentleman several times that a large part of this expenditure was to be for improving the road. Some of it has gone to make iron bridges in place of wooden work. A good deal is in the cuttings and a good deal is apparent to anybody who looks at the elevators that have been built at Port Arthur and Fort William. This matter he speaks of at Quebec is largely for elevators, but there is besides a property that they intend to acquire there as well. In all these things you must take into consideration that it would be impossible to give detailed estimates. But I have talked it over with the engineer, and have got his opinion of these items, as he knows about these cuttings and bridges. I may say that I think the best bridge I ever saw in Canada was at Nipigon, a very expensive bridge, both as to masonry and superstructure. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the masonry I saw in that part of the country is as good as any I ever saw in the world, and all that, of course, is over and above that which was expended by the contract. Perhaps a little less might have been done in some of these places, but still the work is there. Perhaps wood might have been used in some places for a short time.

Mr. BLAKE. After all, here is a lump sum of a million and a-half, and we have no report from the hon. gentleman's engineer, and no detailed statement known to have been received even by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The hon. gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that this is with reference to a Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

future expenditure, not to a past. It is only in reference to the mode in which this money is to be expended under the supervision of the Government. We surely can trust the Government to see that the money is not applied to other purposes than those mentioned in the detailed statement presented here. It is not presumed, I anticipate, that the $5,000,000 are sufficient for all those purposes mentioned, or nearly sufficient. The sole duty of the Government will be to see to it that when Parliament decided that the money might be expended under their supervision for certain purposes it would be applied for those purposes. It would be quite impossible for the Government engineers to get up estimates or statements of the entire cost of the different works. The hon. gentleman is asking for further information than he should reasonably require.

Mr. BLAKE. I perfectly understand that they are estimates, and that the reason why the Government asks for money is on the ground that unexpected claims have been made upon them, and unexpected circumstances have occurred which required larger expenditures than were anticipated. The Government concur in that opinion. Parliament is thus entitled to call for evidence on which that conclusion was reached. Just as the Minister of Railways sent Mr. Miall to enquire into the account of the company, and instructed Mr. Schreiber to obtain estimates as to the cost of completing construction, so the hon. gentleman should have investigated the expenditures of the company and secured reports. The lump estimates submitted afford no information. The hon. gentleman has spoken of $100,000 worth of prairie cuttings. Only a little while ago peans of triumph were raised on account of the high quality of the road; that it stands high above the prairie, and that every precaution had been taken to make it a first-class road. Yet it has got to be improved in the respect mentioned. In regard to trestles, the House has not yet obtained a full statement of even the permanent trestles.

Mr. POPE. The company have not received any payment for any temporary trestles; they are paid out of the contract money. But a good many trestles which were first laid have rotted out and had to be filled.

Mr. BLAKE. In what part of the country?

Mr. POPE. On sections 13 and 25.

Mr. BLAKE. Where?

Mr. POPE. Between Port Arthur and Winnipeg.

Mr. BLAKE. That is on the Government work?

Mr. POPE. I refer to a part of the road which was completed a long time ago, where the trestles and all the wood had rotted.

Mr. BLAKE. Who is paying for it?

Mr. POPE. We are paying for it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is making it good to the company at the public expense. It has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. POPE. The payment for the temporary trestles is kept out, under the contract, until they are filled. Then the company are paid contract prices. There are also permanent trestles, and I expect the company to be filling those in during the next eight years.

Mr. BLAKE. That is a sort of work which is not pressing, and which the company can extend over a number of years, and the Government should not be called upon to pay the expense. What will be the cost of the Port Arthur elevator, and when will it be completed?

Mr. POPE. The Port Arthur elevator is completed, and I think that at Fort William is completed or almost completed. They will cost from $600,000 to $800,000; they are very large elevators.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that amount included in this?

Mr. POPE. There must be a portion of it.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman know where the money came from for the elevators at Port Arthur?

Mr. POPE. No, I could not say.

Mr. BLAKE. Then I will tell him that $120,000 that went towards these elevators was paid out of a vote for making a better road between Port Arthur and Winnipeg.

Mr. POPE. Not one dollar.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will find it in a return brought down to the House this Session. Then, as to the snow sheds in the mountains; have there been any particulars about that?

Mr. POPE. I took the recommendation of my engineer that it was a reasonable price, though, of course, it is impossible to tell exactly, until after we have had some more experience.

Mr. BLAKE. Snow protection on Lake Superior; I suppose that is fences?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Is any portion for protection against the seas which break over that portion of the road close to the shore of Lake Superior, and which are said to be a source of danger to the road.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Then terminal facilities at Quebec; are those connected with the North Shore?

Mr. POPE. It is connected with what is supposed will be the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, after a little time.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, as to this amount of $2,500,000 beyond the contract, on the construction between Michipicoten and Port Arthur. Can the hon. gentleman explain that?

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman knows very well that that is a very hard piece of road, and that it will require a great deal beyond what the contract required. On asking my engineer, he did not think that this was too much to apply to that particular section.

Mr. BLAKE. But the contract prescribed that you should have a good road; it prescribed the grades, the curves and the alignment. The hon. gentleman settled all that, and the sum of $70,000 a mile was fixed for a certain distance. The sum of $7,600,000 of public money has been paid, irrespective of the land subsidy, on that portion; I know that it is a difficult part of the road, but I do not know that anything was required beyond the contract.

Mr. POPE. The road, as prescribed, was the sort of road only admitting the running of trains.

Mr. BLAKE. No; the standard was given.

Mr. POPE. Yes; but that very standard has had a great deal of money expended upon it since it was first built.

Mr. BLAKE. It is really a serious thing to tell us that the standard which the Government took was so inferior that it is necessary to expend, in this particular portion, two and a half millions more to make it a workable line. Is it that the alignment was not proper, or that the bridging is defective? I understand that it is hard rock cutting.

Mr. POPE. Well, there is a good deal of that.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it trestle work or the filling up of trestle work?

Mr. POPE. A good deal of the trestle work is being filled, and in every possible way the road is to be made a first-class road. The hon. gentleman knows that the embankments on that part of the road are some of the heaviest we have got, and it must be kept up in first-class condition. For instance, a great deal of ballasting is to be done beyond what was expected to be done by the contract, and undoubtedly there is a great deal to be spent in snow sheds, beyond the amount the hon. gentleman mentioned.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that is a pretty unsatisfactory explanation. We have heard Mr. Stephen's own statement of the snow protection required, and now the hon. gentleman suggests that more is required. I doubt that very much; and I think we ought to know what this extra expenditure of two and a-half millions is intended to cover. Although a portion of the work was heavy, it has turned out that there are long stretches on that line, as you will see by looking at the profile, which will almost compare favorably with the prairie line. They seem to have gone along the top of a divide; there is very little bridging, very little trestling or embankment. You must take the rough with the smooth, and although I admit that there is some heavy work, there is some which is extra easy. Now, I do not very well see that there has been any satisfactory statement from the hon. gentleman as to the details or the reasons why we are called upon to provide further moneys for the construction of the line on the north shore, and particularly when we find that, according to the chief engineers' statement, that $4,000,000 is to be saved in British Columbia, which statement is accepted by Mr. Stephen in his letter. He says that although a large sum has been saved in British Columbia, there is a large sum spent in excess on the line north of Lake Superior, but that does not add to the whole cost. You find an estimate of $27,000,000 to complete. You find, as was not unnatural, that the estimate was in excess in one end and in defect in the other. The chief engineer and Mr. Van Horne both agree about the $4,000,000 saved in British Columbia. Mr. Stephen, in one part of his letter, says a large sum. Mr. Van Horne said $4,000,000.

Mr. POPE. I think Mr. Van Horne said three or four millions, but I am sure he over-estimated the saving there and under-estimated the cost here. The chief engineer said nothing about the saving of three or four millions.

Mr. BLAKE. Assuming that they balance one another, which is the latest statement we have got, the circumstances taken together, furnish no ground for an additional demand, because there is no more wanted than was expected.

Mr. POPE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not quite honest there; in his anxiety to make out a case he goes beyond the mark. I have never said there is not enough money to complete the contract. Undoubtedly Mr. Van Horne made a very high estimate when he said he estimated the saving at $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, because there was no sufficient data at that time to make a close estimate of the cost of the line north of Lake Superior, and when it came to be surveyed and properly estimated it was found that it was going to cost a great deal more money than was anticipated. I have myself ridden over the road from Nipigon to Port Arthur, and I know it would take considerable to put that road into such a shape as I would have it in if I were going to run it, and I consider that the road was quite within the contract, or within the understanding we had when we made that contract.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman's interpretation of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract is simply that the road should be sufficient to run a train over it, that is not mine, and certainly was not the interpretation at the time. Something has been said with reference to the terms on which the advance of last Session was made; but these are entirely different, as I apprehend, from the terms of the contract. The contract was to complete and give us a workmanlike line, up to the standard of the Union Pacific, as it was in 1873, and it does not do to tell us that more money was required because they could not carry traffic over the line. The hon. gentleman said he would not like to carry traffic over the line unless more was done to it.

Mr. POPE. I said that if I were going to have a large traffic I should want more done to the road. Trains could be run on it, but it is not profitable to the company or advantageous to the country. It should be made a first-class road, and in order to make it such it would require more than the contract called for, which was, that trains should run safely over it.

Mr. BLAKE. I deny that the terms of the contract were that it should be a road over which trains could pass, and I deny that any such definition has been given of the company's obligations under their contract during the four years that have passed. On the contrary, we have been told that they were giving a better road than their contract required. Now we are told that we require to give this money to make a road over which trains can pass. I think this was expected to be done without farther advances.

Mr. HESSON. I may read the directors' report of the 13th of June on that very matter :

"It will be remembered that under the contract with the Government, it was stipulated that the line to be built by the company should be of a quality and character equal to the Union Pacific, as it was in February, 1873. But since that date the Union Pacific has been greatly improved, and other Pacific railways of a high class have been built; and it will be obvious to the shareholders, that in order to ensure the complete success of the enterprise, as a commercial undertaking, it is absolutely necessary that the railway, on its opening for through traffic, shall be in all respects, at least equal in efficiency to any of its transcontinental competitors as they now exist; and that it should be provided with ample facilities for taking care of its rapidly increasing local traffic. Recognising this necessity, the directors have made, during the past year, large expenditures for the rolling stock, grain elevators, terminal and other facilities, and for the general improvement of the lines in operation—all necessary to secure the requisite high standard of efficiency, though not fully foreseen at the time the contract was made with the Government. The amount expended towards this object during the past year was $1,702,684, and this sum, it will be noticed, accounts for the greater part of the floating debt shown in the balance sheet. Further additions to the equipment are now being made; additional facilities will have to be provided immediately, and the usual improvements incident to all new lines must be made from time to time. All the various needs of a new railway in a new and rapidly growing country, and everything necessary to secure economical and efficient operation, and the full development and permanent control of its traffic, must be supplied."

On resolution 10,

Mr. BLAKE. As I said awhile ago, I am very anxious to see proper provision made to facilitate the creation of a line to Sault Ste. Marie, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would call attention to the fact that this additional proposal seems to be creating, in this part of the system, the same sort of break which it has created in the other part of the Ontario division. The hon. gentleman does not simply arrange for a mortgage on the Algoma branch, but he entirely discharges it from our lien. Now, I think it will be very unfortunate if that is done. I think it would be very much better to provide that the Government should be allowed to permit a first mortgage to be placed on the Algoma branch, for what sum might be necessary to aid in the construction of the rest of that portion; but we ought to be the mortgagees of the whole line to the Sault, and not merely the Algoma branch; so that, if our mortgage were in default, and we found it necessary to take hold of that system, we should have that line at the cost of the construction of the new link. The Algoma branch, as far as constructed, has cost some $2,400,000. I do not object to that being used as a basis of credit to complete the line to the Sault, but I object to our parting with the Sault line altogether. Hon. gentlemen have said that it is very important, that enormous traffic is expected to come down. I hope it will. I want the Canadian Pacific Railway, if misfortune should happen and the system fall into the hands of the Government and the bondholders, to be enabled to control the channel through which that enormous traffic comes down, at the cost of the construction of the new piece; and that can be accomplished by our retaining a subsequent charge on the Algoma branch and the new line, and yet allow a subsequent mortgage to be put on the Algoma branch, in order to build the new line. I ask the hon. gentleman to consider that before concurrence, and prepare to bring down a proposal to accomplish that object.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 10:55, p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 22nd June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. CARON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to communicate to the House that I received a telegram from Major General Middleton, announcing that the Maclean family and a couple of white prisoners are now free, and were expected to be at Fort Pitt at 9 o'clock this morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. FISHER) asked, Whether a commission was appointed during the year 1884 to devise a scheme for the House of Commons staff as a branch of the Civil Service, or for any similar purpose? If so, who were the commissioners? Have they made a report to the Internal Economy Commission or to the Government? If so, will such report be brought down?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Certain gentlemen were appointed and made a confidential report to the commissioners and to the Government, in order that they might have some data to work upon and to report to the House, as has been done. That report was, however, considered a confidential report, as the hon. gentleman will understand, in order that the Commissioners might be perfectly au fait of the position of the different officers, and sometimes some remarks were made which would not have been made if the report had been intended for presentation to Parliament.

VACANCY IN JUDICIAL DISTRICT NO. 6, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. KIRK) asked, When will the vacancy in Judicial District No. 6, Nova Scotia, caused by the death of Judge Stewart Campbell, four months ago, be filled?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe it will be filled very shortly.

BOUNTY TO FISHERMEN.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. KIRK) asked, When will the Government pay to the boat fishermen of Guysboro' county, N. S., the Bounty for 1884?

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries informs me that the cheques will be issued next week.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD, DRUGS, &amp;c.

The resolutions adopted in Committee of the Whole, on the 15th inst., respecting the remuneration of analysts to be appointed under the Bill (No. 143) from the Senate, intitled: "An Act respecting the adulteration of Food, Drugs and Agricultural Fertilisers," were reported, read a second time, and concurred in, and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee)

Mr. VAIL. The Minister who was in charge of this Bill was not able to give us much information about it the other day. Perhaps, as the Minister of Inland Revenue is present, he will enlighten us on the question.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The resolution which has just been passed and referred to the committee on this Bill, deals with the remuneration of these officers.

Mr. VAIL. I notice that last year there was an appropriation of some $12,000 for the adulteration of food, and this year there is a vote in the Estimates for $20,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We can discuss that when we come to the Estimates. But when this law was passed a certain number of analysts were appointed for some of the principal cities of the Dominion. Since that time analysts have been appointed in one or two more cities; but these appointments do not increase the fees at all.

Mr. BLAKE. But since last year a chief analyst has been appointed, whose salary has been fixed by the Government; but there is no reason, either of convenience or otherwise, for leaving the salary of fees to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and the Act should state what the remuneration shall be.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only appointment the hon. gentleman refers to as having been made last year was discussed last Session, and it was stated then that the salary would be about $2,000—not exceeding that. That appointment was made at $2,000. The other analysts are paid by fees. The hon. gentleman smiles, but that is the same principle that was adopted when the Act was passed, and these officers were always paid by fees when the hon. gentleman's Government was in power—a retaining fee of $200, and an allowance of $100 for laboratory and furnishing it.

Mr. BLAKE. The reason I smiled was that I had refreshed my memory as to the statement of the hon. gentleman's colleague, that the salary of this officer was $2,800, of which $2,000 was paid by the hon. gentleman's Department and $300 out of the Department of Customs; and when the hon. gentleman told me the remuneration had been fixed at $2,000 I smiled; I beg pardon for smiling.

Committee rose and reported.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the amendments be read the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. BLAKE moved:

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by stating the salary or remuneration to be paid out of the public funds to the chief analyst and the other analysts.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Blake.

YEAS:

Messieurs

Bernier,
Blake,
Kurpee,
Cameron (Huron),
Cameron (Middlesex),
Campbell (Renfrew),
Casgrain,
Edgar,
Fleming,
Forbes,
Geoffrion,
Gillmor,
Guay,
Gunn,

Harley,
Innes,
Irvine,
King,
Kirk,
Landerkin,
Langelier,
Laurier,
Livingston,
Mackenzie,
McCraney,
McIntyre,
McMullen,
Mills,

Mulock,
Paterson (Brant),
Platt,
Ray,
Rinfret,
Somerville (Brant),
Somerville (Bruce),
Sutherland (Oxford),
Trow,
Vail,
Watson,
Weldon,
Wilson,
Yeo.—42.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Abbott,
Allison,
Bain (Soulanges),
Baker (Victoria),
Benoit,
Bergeron,
Blondeau,
Bowell,
Cameron (Inverness),
Carling,
Caron,
Chapleau,
Colby,
Costigan,
Coughlin,
Coursol,
Daly,
Dawson,
Desaulniers (St. M'rice),
Dickinson,

Dodd,
Dugas,
Dupont,
Foster,
Gigault,
Gordon,
Grandbois,
Guilbault,
Hackett,
Hay,
Hesson,
Homer,
Ives,
Kilvert,
Langevin,
Lesage,
Macdonald (King's),
Macdonald (Sir John),
McCallum,
McDougald (Pictou),

McDougall (O. Breton),
McLellan,
Moffat,
Paint,
Pinsonneault,
Robertson (Hamilton),
Robertson (Hastings),
Royal,
Shakespeare,
Small,
Smyth,
Sproule,
Stairs,
Taschereau,
Temple,
Tupper,
Wallace (York),
White (Cardwell),
Wood (Westmoreland),
Woodworth.—60.

Amendment (Mr. Blake) negatived; amendments made in committee concurred in, and Bill read the third time and passed.

HARBOR COMMISSIONERS OF THREE RIVERS.

The resolutions adopted in Committee of the Whole, on the 15th inst., with respect to a loan to the harbor commissioners of Three Rivers, were reported, read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 150) to authorise the advance of certain sums to the Harbor Commissioners of Three Rivers.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would the hon. gentleman state what the revenue and expenditure at present are?

Mr. BOWELL. The estimated revenue for the year 1885-86, when the wharf is completed, as I explained the other night, will, from the dues, be some $3,900, and from the rent of wharves, which is assured, $2,000, making a total of $5,900. The interest on the amount invested, which the Government propose to loan, will be $3,280, leaving an ample margin, unless the business falls off, which is not anticipated. On the contrary, as soon as the works are completed, it is expected the business will increase, leaving an ample margin with which to cover the interest for which the Government is responsible.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CARLING moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole, of the 15th inst., on resolution respecting the provisional contract entered into between Mr. Andrew Allan and the Postmaster-General of Canada, for a weekly service of ocean mail steamers be received.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman promised to give us some information about this.

Mr. CARLING. I am not aware what particular explanations were to be made. I think the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked me to bring down a copy of the contract and the Order in Council, which I have done.

Mr. BLAKE. The resolution passed through the committee stage at, unfortunately, an early hour in the morning, without any prolonged debate being had or much information as to the policy of the Government in carrying out this proposed contract. I invite the hon. gentleman to make some statement on that point.

Mr. CARLING. The question was pretty fully discussed by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier). As I stated, it has been considered wise to renew this contract for the term of five years, on the condition that the minimum tonnage shall be some 1,200 tons greater than it was in the previous contract. The Allan Company have given very great satisfaction in the running of their boats and in the carrying of the mails. The company intend increasing the size of their vessels, and that is one of the chief reasons we have for extending the contract for five years.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite time, having regard for the whole history of this contract in early days, to abandon all considerations other than those business considerations which belong to such a contract. Very high prices were paid for a great many years for this contract, and it was the cause of building up an enormous and most profitable enterprise. We have no right, in that point of view, to deal in the slightest degree harshly with those who have been contractors; but, on the other hand, we have no right, in the interest of the public, to deal with them lavishly or otherwise than the public interest at this time demands. My opinion is that the whole question has to be considered. It is unnecessary to make a new contract at this time. The existing contract continues until twelve months' notice is given, and therefore the public and the contractors are both protected by the present arrangements against any hurried or sudden change. It is now proposed, while that is the condition of things, that we should for a long term of years, I think five, make a fresh arrangement. I will not say that since the beginning, but since before our last contract, the whole system of carrying mails on the Atlantic Ocean has been changed, and the other Governments, who had to deal in former days with other companies, have recognised that change, and there is no longer any such system of contract in existence for a fixed term of years and with a single company. The system which they have adopted, as I understand, is one of payment in proportion to the value of the service done, and of the giving of the work to the quickest vessels. I do not argue that necessarily our condition is entirely the same as theirs, but I argue that these circumstances show that there has been an entire change there, and that there is room to enquire whether a change ought not to be made here. I see no grounds for contending that the price proposed to be paid is, at the present day, and under the present circumstances, a reasonable remuneration for the services rendered; it appears altogether an exorbitant remuneration. I see no grounds for contending that the service rendered is efficient. The speed across the Atlantic has been made very much greater within the last few years. It is now stated that the speed of the better class, not simply the crack boats, but the better class of boats of many of the lines is counterbalancing or more than counterbalancing our advantage in point of distance. The truth is, I fancy, that by almost all the Allan liners, except the Parisian, the entire time and sometimes much greater than the entire time which might be saved, if something like the speed of the other Atlantic companies was obtained, is lost because a very much slower rate of progress is maintained across the Atlantic, and the result is we do not get the advantages which are due to the shortness of distance of our route. Again, a competition has arisen, and there are several lines of steamers now from our own ports to the British ports and back again, and one line has more than one crack vessel. It seems to me that the principle of tender would have been very reasonably applied on this occasion. It would be extremely reasonable to have applied for tenders for this service and to have obtained some better provisions than those now proposed. In default of that, we should arrange to have the mails carried on the fast steamers of the other lines when they run. It is ridiculous that our mails should be two or three days behind the time, carried by the contract line, which they might not be if carried by the crack vessels of the other lines. With reference to the amount of money involved, with reference to the encouragement which might be given to other deserving lines, and with reference to the speed of our ocean voyages, it is very important we should understand how things are, and are to be when we arrange for this service for so long a time as that now proposed. A little while ago, I pointed out that the arrangements for the delivery of letters on the other side of the water were very unsatisfactory. I pointed out that, as I had been informed by gentlemen engaged in trade in Canada, who sailed by the mail steamer, that going by that steamer to Liverpool and going hence to Manchester, they were in Manchester 24 hours before the mail, which had been landed at Moville, reached Manchester, so that it not unfrequently happened that the mails were delayed by the attempted expedition supposed to be involved in their being landed at Moville. Another cause of complaint is the assorting of the mails on board the steamer. We have expensive officers, a large number of them, and we pay the Allan liners included in these arrangements, I presume, for their passage money and the accommodation afforded them for their work. Now, that is not done for the whole of the American and British mails. The mails which convey the tidings, commercial and domestic, between Great Britain and the continent and between Great Britain and the North American continent, which convey the great bulk of the whole correspondence in volume, and the still greater bulk in importance, are arranged for as to their sorting at each end of the line—on the land. I do not see why we alone should preserve the expense of mail officers for sorting on the voyage, unless it be to make up for the unnecessary length of time that is taken in traversing the ocean, by diligence used in getting mails in a little later and getting them sorted a little earlier. It seems to me that that is an expense that ought to be saved. The agreement of the 12th April, 1884, between Mr. Andrew Allan and the Postmaster General provides that none of the steamers built or purchased for the purpose of carrying mails between the port of Liverpool and the port of Quebec or Montreal, etc., shall be of less size or power than the Sardinian. It provides for a service of 52 voyages, and it provides, as to the time, that it shall be 13 or 14 days, 13 days on an average in the summer, but special provision is made that, in December, January, and February, it may be 14 days, provided the average of the outward trips does not exceed 15 days, and then allowance is made for reckoning the time for stopping at Londonderry. It seems to me that we are going on in an old-fashioned and behind-the-time spirit in providing that, for the next five years, we shall pay prices far in excess of the prices paid for the conveyance of a similar amount of mail matter by the crack steamers of the Atlantic within a much less period of time between Europe and this continent, and, while we are paying that extravagant price, we are not taking the care that we should to get the most efficient service which could be found now, by choosing the most efficient steamers between the St. Lawrence and

Mr. CARLING.

Great Britain. On the whole, I believe that it would be infinitely better that the confirmation of this contract should be deferred and that matters should remain as they are for this Session, and in the meantime that the Government should endeavor to make some better arrangement so that we might have a more efficient and rapid service, so that, if possible, we might get the best and most efficient steamers that ply on our route to carry our mails instead of vessels which are behind the age in point of speed, although they are safe and commodious.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, but we must look at all the circumstances of the case, and we must look at the position of Quebec and of New York. It must be recollected by everyone that, in the inception of steam lines, they had to be assisted by the Government, by the American Government in the case of the Collins' line, by England in the case of the Cunard line, and, when the St. Lawrence desired to vindicate its position and Canada desired to support it against the United States, the Allan line was inaugurated and established. I would agree with the hon. gentleman that, if the only question was how quickest to get the mail matter from America to Europe and from Europe to America, we might disregard the St. Lawrence altogether.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not propose to disregard the St. Lawrence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I did not mean to say that, but that we might disregard the St. Lawrence altogether if the only question was that of speed from one continent to the other; but the original practice both of the United States and England was to subsidise lines in order to encourage them to carry the mails. Subsequently the increase of commerce between the United States and England was so great that there was no necessity for continuing that system, and the United States as well as England can afford to adopt the policy of sending the mails by the first and the quickest steamers; and they know perfectly well that, as England seems to draw to it all the moveable wealth of the world, so it is the United States, and the city of New York in particular, that draw all the steamships, or most of them, that are running in connection with North America. It is therefore certain that the mails will be transmitted as speedily as possible by the quickest vessels running between New York and England and between Liverpool and New York without the necessity of any subsidy, but we have something more to consider than the mere carrying of the mail. We have to counteract, as well as we can, the attraction of everything—mails, commerce, transport of every kind, traffic of every kind—to New York, that great centre, that great entrepôt and depôt and starting point. We have to meet that as best we can by encouraging the St. Lawrence route against very great difficulties.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You have five or six other lines.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will come to that. We have the New York route against the St. Lawrence route, and therefore we must, I think, unless we desire to hand over the whole of the great passenger trade and the valuable traffic to New York, continue to a certain extent the present system and encourage our lines. The Allan line was the first line which commenced, under very great difficulties, and succeeded to a remarkable extent, and was prosperous. It is true that there are one or two steamers equal to the Parisian, and one, I am told, still more speedy than the Parisian of the Allan line, but these are only one or two vessels, and we cannot depend upon the fact that in the year 1885 there may be one or two steamers which are as speedy as the Parisian, the best vessel the Allans have, because they have a large fleet, and there is no certainty that we shall be able to maintain or keep up at all a system of passenger steamers unless we give them some aid.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, the Government will take care that, in making the final arrangements authorised by Parliament, the Allan Line shall build vessels, to keep up fully in point of speed and in tonnage with the best vessels on the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. MILLS. But that is not in your contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That may be, but we will take care of that.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will take care of that. We know perfectly well that the Allans are very anxious to increase their trade by increasing the size and the speed of their vessels. We know they are going to do so; we know they are going to replace several of their vessels with other vessels, under the encouragement that is given them by this contract. And therefore we press that this Parliament shall sanction the contract for which provision has now been made.

Mr. MILLS. The statement of the hon. gentleman does not seem to be in exact accordance with the facts. Now this is not a subvention given to the ocean steamers of the St. Lawrence as a rival to New York lines, but it is given to a certain line of steamers on the St. Lawrence as competitors with certain other lines of steamers on the St. Lawrence, which are not receiving any aid from the Government. If the hon. gentleman could show that the Allan line were the only steamers that came by the St. Lawrence, and that this vote was necessary in order to maintain the St. Lawrence line, there would be something in his line of argument. But that is not the case. There are several other lines, I believe, on the St. Lawrence besides the Allan line, and the hon. gentleman is proposing to aid one of them unfairly against the others. When this aid was first given it was doubtful whether a line on the St. Lawrence could be kept up. The amount of passenger traffic was much less than it is now, the quantity of freight carried by these steamers was much less, and in fact the lines of steamers that were maintained between New York and Liverpool were far less profitable than they are now. We know that for years the Collins line was unable, it was said, to exist without the subsidies which it received from Congress. But that condition of things has wholly changed. Here you have upon the St. Lawrence route several lines of ocean steamers that are not aided by Government at all. Even supposing matters came to the worst, and you subsidised any New York line, the Allan Line would still continue to exist the same as any other line upon the St. Lawrence. No one is suggesting that, but we are proposing that if a line of steamers is to receive aid, you shall utilise those that are best suited to carry the mails. Now, the hon. gentleman did not propose this; he suggests that the Government will take care that the fast sailing steamers are employed. Well, we have the contract before us, and you have as the standard, of the Allan Line, the Sardinian. It is said:

"The said steamers shall be first-class vessels, and the line shall consist of the Parisian, Sardinian, Polynesian, Circassian, Sarmatian, Peruvian, Nova Scotian, and such other vessels, not of less size and power than the Sardinian."

There is your standard. With regard to the size and power you have named in the contract what the standard is to be, and we know that is not a swift sailing steamer. It does seem to me a most extraordinary course that we, at this day, should continue to favor one line of steamers and pay them, what seems to me, an enormous subsidy, as a competitor to every other line of steamers upon the St. Lawrence. Surely, if we are to employ a line of steamers of our own between the St. Lawrence and Liverpool—and I do not call in question the propriety of doing that—we ought to put them on a footing of equality, we ought to see that the country receives the most efficient service possible, and we ought to see that swift sailing steamers, the property of other companies, should not be passed over and one particular line selected and favored with enormous subsidies in order that they may unfairly compete with other lines engaged on the same route. That is precisely what is proposed, and I think the proposition is wholly indefensible. If we had no other line of steamers than the Allan, then it might be said that unless you subsidised that line you could not keep it upon the St. Lawrence route. But we have four other lines, which fact shows conclusively that the Allan line is not dependent upon the aid given by the Government to maintain its existence, and that being the case, it is the duty of the Ministry to secure the best and most efficient service, and to secure it at as low a rate as possible. It seems to me it is our duty in the public interest, for the purpose of efficiency, for the purpose of keeping down undue charges on the treasury, that some other system should be adopted than that of favoring a particular line. I think that the proposition made by the leader of the Opposition, namely, that this matter should stand over for further consideration, is a very reasonable one.

Mr. LANGELIER. I cannot see any justification for the contract that is now before the House. If it is a simple business transaction that we are making with the company, tenders should have been asked for; the Government should have made their own specifications of the tonnage and speed of the vessels that were to carry the mails, and then have asked for tenders based on those specifications. If that had been done already, I think we would have had something better than the line of steamers which is mentioned in the contract before the House. But this is not intended as a business contract. As stated by the Prime Minister, the price we are going to pay is not a consideration solely for carrying the mails, but it is intended as an encouragement to a certain line of steamers. I think there is no longer any reason for this encouragement. It is perfectly true, as the Prime Minister has said, that there was a time when the Government was justifiable in granting large subsidies of money to encourage the establishment of a line on the river St. Lawrence to compete with the lines running from New York. But that is no longer necessary, because we have now three or four other lines which have been started on the St. Lawrence, composed of splendid steamers, but which have never received one cent of encouragement from this Government. It can no longer be said that we must give this subsidy for something which, without this special encouragement from the Government, could not be had. We have several proofs now that the same service can be obtained from other quarters. We have the Dominion Line, of which mention has been made several times, composed of splendid and fast sailing vessels, but which have never received a copper from the Government, not only to start their line but to maintain it. We have the Beaver line, which also contains some very fine steamers. We have the Ross line, and some other lines, the names of which I do not remember at this moment; but all these lines are so many proofs that it is no longer necessary to pay Government money to encourage the establishment of a line between Montreal, Quebec, and Europe. If it is said that we ought to give this money as a reward for the Allan line having been the pioneers in the ocean steamship traffic between Canada and Europe, there is no justification on that ground, either. I do not say that we have been paying too much, but we paid what was at first considered sufficient to encourage the Allans to start their line. At one time, if I am not mistaken, we paid this company as much as £104,000, or $416,000 a year, to run their steamers between Quebec and Liverpool, but I do not see that there is any longer justification for paying the subsidy that is now given in the contract. The only possible justification that can be offered for giving more than is necessary for carrying the mails, would be that it is given in order to encourage that line to put on larger and faster steamers than some of those which are mentioned in the contract. But what do we find in the contract? It is stated in the contract that the tonnage of the steamers to be built to carry out the terms of this contract, shall not be less than that of the Sardinian; but I see that some of the steamers of the present line are considerably superior to the tonnage mentioned in the contract. I take for instance the Carthaginian, the tonnage of which is 4,600. As a matter of fact the tonnage is much larger than is the tonnage of some of the steamers mentioned in the contract.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. CARLING. The Carthaginian does not carry the mails at present.

Mr. LANGELIER. That vessel has more tonnage, I repeat, than some of the steamers mentioned in the contract. It is quite impossible for the mails to be carried by the seven steamers mentioned in the contract, namely, Parisian, Sardinian, Polynesian, Circassian, Sarmatian, Peruvian, Nova Scotian. The Nova Scotian is an old tub—a very old steamer, which has been enlarged; it is not at all a first-class steamer, not even a second-class steamer. She is a very good and safe boat, but is very slow. No persons in New York or the United States would ever think of sending mails by the Nova Scotian. We should not do so when we have such a steamer as the Vancouver and some of the other steamers of the Dominion Line, which are first-class boats. Very large freight steamers with high tonnage may be very slow boats. If we have large steamers, they must have large power; and if the power is not sufficient they will be slow boats. This contract will place us in a very inferior and humiliating position in the eyes of the travelling public, when they become aware of the fact that at this time in 1885, when there are steamers crossing from New York to England in six and a half days, Canada is giving a contract for 5 years to a line of steamships which makes the passage on an average in 13 or 14 days. We shall certainly be considered a very slow country indeed if we ratify this contract. I repeat that the only justification for spending such a large sum of money, it being far in excess of the actual cost of carrying the mails, would be to secure new boats of equal speed with, if not with the Oregon or some of the very fastest steamers, at least with the regular steamers of the White Star line, the Inman line, or the new steamers of the Cunard line. We should require the Allan Company to provide as good steamers as those, or we have no justification for entering into this contract.

Motion agreed to, and report received.

On motion to concur in the resolutions,

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot allow concurrence to be taken without saying a word with respect to the remarks made by the First Minister. He has given as a reason for adopting the resolutions, that the Government will take care that none but first-class steamers will be built. That cannot afford the slightest justification for carrying the resolution. The contract is here; the obligation proposed to be secured from the contractor is before us, and that is that the vessels shall be of the Sardinian standard. Anything better than that is at the option of the contractor, and the Government have no power to compel him to do anything better. The Sardinian standard of vessels takes thirteen or fourteen days to make the passage. So it is quite clear that Parliament cannot be asked to place any weight upon the statement of the First Minister that the Government will take care that the contractor will do more than he is asked under the contract to undertake. Then the hon. gentleman said special allowances are necessary in order that we should enable the Allan Company to compete with the New York lines. That goes to the question of granting more money than the actual cost of freighting the letters, to the question of granting a subsidy such as this is. It may be a justification for granting somewhat higher inducements, that it is desirable to produce as good results as the general course of trade has produced at New York. What I complain of is that the hon. gentleman gives the inducement and does not produce the result. He does not give us anything like the advantages of our passage. Our passage is a short passage, but it takes as long to run by it to Liverpool as it does from New York; because the rate of the vessels with which the hon. gentleman makes the contract is very much slower than from New York by first-class vessels—I do not speak of the very crack steamers—of the four or five lines which ply between New York and Great Britain. I am willing to pay somewhat more liberal prices if we can obtain the same result. The result I want to obtain is that the Canadian line shall have in practice its theoretical advantage. Its theoretical advantage is having a short route. In practice it does not possess that advantage, because of the extra time occupied on account of the slowness of the vessels. Then the hon. gentleman says this grant is necessary in order to keep the Allan line alive. I deny it. I am satisfied that Mr. Allan and his company would deny it. They have rivals which have struggled into existence while the Allan Company had the contract, rivals which have managed to establish flourishing and substantial lines, not merely without a subsidy, but disadvantage by the high subsidy under which the Allan line runs. The hon. gentleman said there is another line which has one or two or perhaps three steamers equal or superior to the Parisian.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say three.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said one, at all events; but I am told there are three. If this other line has two equal to and one superior to the Parisian, it means that this other line has twice as many fast steamers as the Allan line has. Hon. gentlemen will observe that the memorandum of the Postmaster General on this subject proceeds upon a theory which is hardly to be commended and which will hardly be defended. It says: The Postmaster General having given his best attention to Mr. Allan's proposal, and in the interest of the efficient maintenance of this line of mail steamers, which, for mail purposes, as well as in other respects, have doubtless rendered beneficial services to the country, is of the opinion that the Government should grant a renewal of the contract. There is the question. It is not simply in the interest of the efficient maintenance of a fast line of steamships for the carrying of the mails between Canada and England, but in the interest of the efficient maintenance of this particular line, whose past services, he thinks, should be recognised. I should add that Mr. Allan was not so modest. He demanded that the subsidy should be doubled—that instead of £500 sterling per trip, it should be £1,000 sterling. The Postmaster General proposed to give him the same subsidy, so we have not satisfied the Allans; and in view of past services of various kinds, and in view also of the efficient maintenance of the line, the subsidy of £500 is given. Now, that is not far from the cost of the coaling, and that is the advantage which is to be given. But, besides that advantage, it must be remembered that other advantages in respect of freight and immigrant traffic practically accrue, or the great bulk of them, to this line. My hon. friend from East York has informed me that when the negotiations were going on for the last renewal of this contract, which took place towards the latter part of his Government, he had a conversation with Sir Hugh Allan; and he pointed out to him the importance of increased capacity and increased speed, and better general accommodation on the line. At that time, the Parisian was either contracted for, or partly contracted for; and Sir Hugh told him that that was the principal object in making this contract; that they thought about putting under contract some other steamers of first-class character, or of equal character with the intended Parisian; and my hon. friend pointed out that even so, it was not to be expected that this contract would endure for one term more, and Sir Hugh Allan told him that if the contract could be obtained for that term, this would be done. Not long after Sir Hugh Allan died, and the arrangements were discontinued, save in so far as the Parisian was concerned, and they had perhaps gone too far with regard to that vessel. That is another instance showing that if we are going to contract for five years to come, we had better have in writing the conditions of the bargain; we had better have nothing standing between the Minister and the contractor; if the conditions are to be better than those of the bargain, we had better have them stipulated plainly. Now I must say that instead of using their power for the convenience of the Canadian public, from what I can gather from the papers, the Allan Company are acting in a manner highly inconvenient to the Canadian public, in some instances. I refer for example to the sailing arrangements made as to the Vancouver and the Parisian. The Vancouver, it appears, was advertised to sail on particular days, which were not the same days as those for the sailing of the Parisian. The sailings of both vessels having been established, and the public thus having obtained the choice of two first-class crack steamers sailing at reasonable intervals, the Allan Company altered the sailing of the Parisian to the day upon which the Vancouver sailed, and being approached by the Dominion Company upon that subject, with a view of making a further arrangement, they declared plainly that if the Dominion Company should alter the days of sailing of the Vancouver over again, they would alter the day of the sailing of the Parisian to correspond, so that upon whatever day the Vancouver sailed the Parisian would also sail. What was the reason? It was because they did not wish the sailings of the Vancouver to be contrasted with those of any other ship of their line; because it might be possible to find that the Canadian mails would be arriving two or three days late on a subsidised steamer, and therefore they decided that the one crack steamer should be put against the other crack steamer. Now, all of us who happen to be going to Europe, are discomfited by this arrangement, because but for it we would have the choice, at intervals, of two crack steamers on the St. Lawrence route; but this arbitrary use of their powers has resulted in our practically being deprived of that advantage. It is only those who can sail on these particular days—at intervals of perhaps five or six weeks—who can now sail by a crack steamer on the St. Lawrence route. I tell the hon. gentleman that if he wants to preserve the St. Lawrence route for travel, he is doing that by this contract which is most likely to destroy it. I say we are entirely behind the age. I say there is no comparison in point of speed and accommodation between the average Allan liner and the crack steamers which are sailing from New York to Liverpool on more than one day each week. I agree in the importance of preserving our own line, and of attracting not merely our own Canadian travel, but the travel of visitors coming to this country from the other side of the world. I think that is important, and I am not disposed to look very minutely into the contract, if this result can be accomplished. But I say that for this result, this subsidy is beyond the mark, and the hon. gentleman is calling upon us to give us what, under present circumstances, is actually an extravagant subsidy, and yet without producing the results which should be produced, and you will find that that which has happened heretofore will happen again. I have always travelled by the Allan line—though I am said to be anti-Canadian—I have always travelled by that line since 1847, but I have met many Canadians, commercial travellers and others, who have told me that they had always travelled by the Allan line until, for some particular reason, they went by way of New York, and sailed on one of those crack steamers, and the result was that they never went back to the Allan line. I think it is as well that that statement should be made when we are considering the conditions of travel between America and Europe by the St. Lawrence route, and by these other lines.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad that the hon. gentleman agrees with me so far as to state that it is of great importance to us to encourage the St. Lawrence line as against the lines by New York. It is of very great importance; its importance cannot be exaggerated—I think we must support the St. Lawrence route as much as possible. The hon. gentleman says that this contract does not secure that. Perhaps it does not in its terms, but I am quite satisfied that those of us who are spared to meet here in January or February next will find that that object has been fully secured. I feel quite satisfied that the Government should be judged by that fact. The Government will take care that so far as can be done, and so far as will be done, before the Allan line establishes a legal claim under this contract, there will be most satisfactory arrangements made, and I hope the House will accept that assurance. The real truth is this, that there is very great danger of the first-class passenger lines leaving the St. Lawrence altogether. It is true there are one or two vessels which have attained great speed, but I am under this difficulty and every hon. gentleman in this House is under this difficulty, that it is said that there are four or five other lines which are very successful, and it will not do to say that those lines are not successful. I will not enter into that, but we will suppose that they are peculiarly successful; that they are solvent, going, living, lines. But I will say this, that unless there is special encouragement given to the St. Lawrence line, there is great danger that first-class passages and the most expensive traffic—the carrying of the most expensive and valuable goods, which require speed, will leave the St. Lawrence altogether and that our lines will be simply vessels to carry traffic, particularly cattle, so far as the export trade is concerned, and second-class passengers and immigrants. That is the danger we have to face. I fear that there are not sufficient inducements to these St. Lawrence lines to go on increasing their vessels in speed, in tonnage, and comfort, and accommodation, and fighting and competing with the rival New York lines permanently, therefore I consider it of great importance that we should give them especial encouragement. I am very glad the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) agrees with me so far.

Mr. DAVIES. The objection is not so much that encouragement has been given to a line of Dominion steamers, but as to the manner in which it has been given, and the requirements exacted from that line. The hon. gentleman persists in talking of the Allan line as the St. Lawrence line, as contra-distinguished from the American lines; but the hon. gentleman is not using that expression in a fair sense. He is leaving the public to believe that he is subsidising a Dominion line as contra-distinguished from the New York lines, while the fact is that he is subsidising one Dominion line against two or three other Dominion lines; in other words he is handicapping these two or three lines that have struggled into a position in which they are now competing with the Allan line. He says that unless we take care the travel is likely to leave the St. Lawrence. What has he done to counteract that? Speed and comfort must be had in these modern days; and the hon. gentleman knows that he does not pretend to provide for those in this contract; he knows that the standard provided for in the contract is very much below that of first class New York lines; and he knows that if the company only act up to the standard he asks of them, the consequence will be that the freight traffic and passenger travel will probably go the other way. He is driving it away by placing in the contract a low standard of accommodation and power. The only thing that is secured by this contract is the subsidy that goes to the Allan line, of $126,000 a year. It might be contended with force, and to my mind with irresistible force, that under the circumstances as they now exist, with three or four Dominion lines of steamers competing with each other for the freight and passenger traffic, not only of Canada but a part of the United States, across the Atlantic, if we entered into a contract for more than a year, the least we should have done was to call for tenders; but the hon. gentleman has not asked for tenders; he does not allow any of the other lines to compete. He cannot deny that they have good ships, because he knows that one is superior to those of the Allan line.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. One swallow does not make a summer.

Mr. DAVIES. How many swallows has the hon. gentleman got in the line he has contracted with? Only one; and some of the steamers he has provided for in this contract are very small swallows indeed. Seriously speaking, this is an important matter, and the hon. gentleman has put it in a more serious light than before. He knows that we are in danger of losing this traffic, and he deliberately adopts a plan calculated to drive it away. I say this House should not in the present circumstances sanction this contract. I protested against it the other night; we may protest without any effect, but I hope our protest will be put on record. The principle on which this contract was let was unfair, and the standard you adopted was a ridiculous standard. With the great progress that has been made in the construction of ocean steamships, with the fact that they are trying to cross the Atlantic from New York to Liverpool in six days, you adopt deliberately a low standard and say that you are perfectly satisfied if they cross in 14 days. I wonder what the country will think of that. You say that is all nonsense—that you will take care they do something better than the contract. How are you going to take care? You have made the contract in black and white, and you cannot ask the company to go beyond it unless you give them more subsidy. I say that the Postmaster General has not been alive or up to the age in making this contract; and his Department is one that ought to be alive to all the improvements in speed and accommodation made in the present age. We are behind the times, and I believe this contract will be injurious to the passenger and freight traffic of the St. Lawrence, and should not be sanctioned.

Mr. CARLING. The last contract terminated on the 15th of April, 1878, and I am not aware that the hon. gentlemen opposite, then in office, asked for any additional tonnage or power. If they were not satisfied at that time, they should have given notice that they wanted better terms. The hon. gentleman has said that the average time is 14 days; but we can judge by the past of what the time is likely to be. In 29 voyages made across the Atlantic during the summer of 1884, the regularity of the time has been surprising. I find that the trips were made in 8 days 15 hours, 9 days 10 hours, 8 days 6 hours, 8 days 15 hours, and so on during the whole six months that they went by the St. Lawrence. The time made was certainly far ahead of what was expected, and if they have determined to put on a better class of steamers, I think we may expect that the time they will make will be much better than that of 1884. The company have bound themselves, as the hon. gentleman will see by the 27th clause of the contract, that they will carry the mails on steamers sailing every Saturday from Montreal to Glasgow, and also on the steamers which sail from Halifax by way of St. John to Liverpool, free of charge. As the Prime Minister has stated, I think all Canadians are proud of the way the Allan line of steamers is managed, and the satisfaction given, not only to the country, but to the Government in the transmission of the mails.

Mr. GILLMOR. It appears to me that the action of the Government is rather calculated to prevent competition. The hon. gentleman says that one swallow does not make a summer; but this company with the aid of this large subsidy, can outdo the rival lines which have grown up simply by their energy and enterprise, and have put on steamers equal to those of the Allan line. It appears to me there is no reason why tenders should not have been asked for this service. Owing to the energy and enterprise of these lines, there are now two or three lines of steamers on our route—quite a different state of things to that which existed years ago. In the interest of the public tenders ought to be called for, so as to encourage companies with most enterprise to put on fast steamers. The Government, on the contrary, are pursuing a policy tending to break down rival enterprises, and doing this by the expenditure of public money. The Government assure us that, independent of the contract, the Allans want to put on fast steamers in order to improve their line, and that the company will see that that is done, but I do not see any necessity for giving the contract without this clause. If the company are disposed to put on fast steamers they ought to be willing to bind themselves to do so in order to gain the contract. The Government are doing an injustice to the rival lines by not giving them an opportunity to compete with the Allan line for this service. If they have the enterprise and capital enough to do the work, they ought to have fair play and the competition will be for the benefit of the public.

Mr. McMULLEN. I had the pleasure of crossing in the Sardinian one occasion, and the Dominion steamer which left Liverpool at the same time arrived in Quebec not 2 hours behind us. The Dominion line, it is generally acknowledged, have as good and as fast steamers as the Allan line, and should have a chance to compete for the carrying of the mails. I was astonished to find on the other side that goods can be shipped from Liverpool by the New York lines at considerably less freight than by the Allan and Dominion lines. On my return here I enquired how it was Canadian lines would not carry goods as cheap as the New York lines, and was told that the Allan line fixed the rates, below which the others dare not cut. I shipped my goods by New York, at a freight one shilling and sixpence a ton less than by Montreal. Neither the Beaver nor the Dominion line dare cut below the rates fixed by the Allan line, or the Allan line would make them suffer for it. When a line exercises powers of that kind, to prevent fair and reasonable competition, it is not in the interests of the country that we should strengthen their hands. We should fairly consider the interests of the other lines, and if subsidies be given at all, stipulate for a rate of speed. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he is prepared to give information with regard to the speed of the Dominion and the Beaver Lines in 1884. We should fairly consider the claims of all parties. If the Allan line is exercising the power I believe they are exercising, of preventing other lines from competing in the matter of freight, they are driving commerce from our shores and diverting it to American ports, and we should not lend ourselves, by ratifying this contract, to any such course.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In addition to the great length of time given to the Allan steamers, the penalty they incur is simply £100 for every 24 hours they are over time. They might be five days over time, and the forfeiture would still be less than the subsidy. The time allowed one might consider a libel on the company; and yet if exceeded by five days, they would still not forfeit the entire subsidy for the voyage. A date should be put in the contract for accomplishing the voyage that would give the line a first-class standing as regards speed.

Mr. MULOCK. Should the company make default and become liable to penalty, and should the Government, under the provisions of section 30, have, at any time, to cancel the contract by reason of breaches of the contract, section 30 provides that in such event the Government are not entitled to collect any of the penalties.

Motion agreed to, Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. CARLING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 151), respecting Ocean Mail Service.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope before the hon. gentleman takes another stage, he will give us the information we require on this question. He gave us the number of days during a certain proportion of the summer voyages of this line, but we are anxious to know what the time was during the whole year. He might also give us the average rate of speed attained per hour during the voyages of this line as compared with that of the more modern vessels of the New York lines. I believe there is a difference of 2 or 3 knots per hour. The hon. gentleman said the time made was very good. It was good seven years ago, but times have changed, and we want to keep up with the times. Seven years ago, he says, you did not say there ought to be improvement. It was understood there was to be improvement, but it did not take place except in the case of the Parisian which has since been built. The hon. gentleman says that the service is satisfactory. In a sense it is; a few years ago we would have called it very satisfactory. There is a wonderful regularity in the arrivals, but I do say that the rate of speed is not what it ought to be. Greater expenditure has to be made in construction and fuel to attain the speed of the fast New York liners. If you except the America, which makes speedy journeys with comparatively small expenditure of fuel, more money is expended in fuel than formerly. This subsidy about provides the Allan Company with coal all the year round. It gives them motive power free; and with that positive and relative advantage that we give them, we ought to expect more than we get by this contract. We ought not to be satisfied with the assurance of the Government that they will see the company does more than the contract obliges them to do.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 103) respecting the Electoral Franchise.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The schedules have been altered to meet the amendments made in the Bill, and I now move the adoption of the schedules, seriatim, which have been prepared by the Law Clerk.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are we not to have a reprint of the Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, before concurrence. On section 5,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This section stood over because I thought I could carry out my intention that for the electoral purposes the two cities St. Hyacinthe and Hull should be considered as towns in order to give them the franchise of towns instead of cities, in as much as it was ascertained that in those two places the value of property is more like that appertaining to towns than to cities. I find I cannot do so here, but will move that specifically on concurrence.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman seems to have acquired new light since we discussed the different values in cities and towns and villages, but out of the large number of places in the same position, as regards the franchise, as St. Hyacinthe and Hull, he only selects those two. We all understand the hon. gentleman's reason for interfering with the cherished principle of uniformity in these two cases. They are cogent reasons. There are not the same reasons for excepting a town of 1,000 inhabitants, out of the category of towns, as there are for excepting a city of 10,000 inhabitants out of the category of cities. We will have an excellent opportunity of considering the hon. gentleman's principles of uniformity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have advanced, while the hon. gentleman exactly stands where he did. I have listened to every argument and every statement that seemed to be reasonable and amended the Bill, although I do not know that I have altogether improved it, by listening to the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman was here but a very small portion of the time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was here all the time any arguments were used. I leave it to the hon. gentleman for South Perth if that is not so.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman promised to consider section 58. In case the first voters' list was not completed, the last provincial voters' list should be used. Provision ought to be made that, in case such list is not prepared, the list used should be that which would be in force if this Act had not been passed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We might provide that, in the case of any election before the final revision and publication of the certificates of the first list provided for in this Act, the list of voters then legally existing should be used.

Mr. MILLS. There would be no legal list for local purposes under the new law. It would not be legally existing for the purposes of this Act. The provision should be that the list used should be the last which would have been in force if this Act had not passed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is better. I move in amendment:

Provided that in the case of any election, before the final revision and publication of the certificate of the first list provided for in this Act, the list of voters that would have been used if this Act had not been passed, shall be used at such election.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BAIN. I think the First Minister stated that he proposed to place the tenants of property of sufficient value to qualify the owner, upon the first list, and I will ask when he proposes to do that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will do it when we go into concurrence. We will go back for that purpose.

On the preamble,

Mr. MULLOCK. Before the preamble is adopted, I wish to call attention to a circumstance which took place at an early stage of this Bill which, I think, involves your going back to a preceding clause. When we were considering paragraph 3 of clause 2, the definition of the term "tenant," on the 30th April, a number of amendments were moved to it. The amendments, as you will remember, were put to each paragraph, having been made from time to time in the proper order. A number of amendments were made to that paragraph, and just before six o'clock on that day the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Auger) moved an amendment, which was voted down. I also had an amendment to that paragraph, and I was waiting and watching carefully for an opportunity to move it, but as soon as the amendment of the hon. member for Shefford was voted down, the committee rose and the Speaker resumed the Chair and the House adjourned for recess. I was present in my seat after recess, waiting and watching without the slightest interruption to my watching until the Chairman took the Chair and opened the committee, with the view of moving my amendment to paragraph 3 of clause 2. Immediately that the Chairman took the Chair he began to read paragraph 4. I rose to move my amendment to paragraph 3, and without giving my own recollections of the remarks of that evening I will trouble you with referring to the record of it in Hansard. My reason for making these observations is this: That my impression is that you cannot adopt the preamble and report this Bill until paragraph 3 is declared carried. I do not propose to present an amendment now, nor to argue paragraph 3, nor do I suppose any other hon. gentleman does; but as a matter of regularity, paragraph 3, of clause 2 has never been submitted to the committee for the purpose of adoption, and if it is now submitted and declared carried, I have nothing further to say. If that course is not thought fit to be adopted then I will have to call the attention of the committee to the report of Hansard of the debate that arose on that occasion, and to see whether we can at this stage report this Bill without disposing of paragraph 3 of clause 2.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question is, was the clause passed or was it not?

Mr. MULLOCK. Yes. I do not propose to discuss it at all, but I was ruled out of order at that time. I know perfectly well that the clause was not declared carried, because I was watching with all earnestness for an opportunity of putting in my amendment before six o'clock, and when the committee resumed after recess I know from my own observation that the paragraph was never carried and that it was passed over.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I would remind my hon. friend that at that time we did not put paragraph by paragraph and declare each one carried, but they were called in turn and when discussion was finished we went on to another; but they were not each separately declared carried. But at the end of the clause, when all the paragraphs had been considered, the whole clause was declared carried. Two or three paragraphs were allowed to stand over, but they have since been gone into and adopted, and the whole clause as it stands now in the Bill has been put to the committee and declared carried.

Mr. MULLOCK. No, I beg your pardon. I have turned up the Hansard, and that is not the case.

Mr. DAWSON. I have turned up the Hansard, and at the end of the discussion on the whole clause 3 there is no declaration that the clause was put; there is nothing showing that it was carried at all. It was never carried as a whole clause, and was never submitted to the committee as such.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—it was done afterwards. Several paragraphs, relating to farmers' sons and others, were reserved and allowed to stand over to the end. The clause was not put to the committee until the last day, I think, of the discussion, but that it was so put I am certain, because I put my initials to the clause after it was put and declared carried.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The recollection of the Chairman is accurate. Instead of putting the whole clause, one paragraph was taken up after another, and we came to a sort of agreement and went on to the next paragraph without a formal vote being taken on each paragraph.

Some of the clauses about farmers and farmers' sons were allowed to stand over. At the last sitting we took them up again. I do not think the hon. member was here at the time. The whole clause, as amended, was put and carried.

Mr. MULOCK. Was that since the last discussion on the Indian question?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was the very last time we sat.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it may have happened in my absence. If that had not occurred, I should not have felt that the paragraph had been put. At the same time I feel I have a grievance.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman propose to have the preamble put before section 53 has been adopted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I intend to carry it without that clause.

Mr. MILLS. That would scarcely be treating the committee fairly. We expected it to be submitted for consideration, and the hon. gentleman now proposes to carry through a Bill without making any provision in it for remunerating the officers whom it creates.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I intend to do that, if the House will allow me; and for this reason. The Act will not come into force until after 1st January. The House will meet in January. The judges I hope will in a great degree consent to serve as revising officers. I think so, and I have had a great many communications from them; and they will be satisfied with very small additions to their salaries. I do not propose, therefore, to proceed with the clause in question. I wish to see some of the judges and to settle as moderate a scale of remuneration as possible. That scale I will submit to Parliament at its next Session. This will be a much more economical mode than that of fixing a sum at this moment. I have my own ideas of what the amount should be; but I think it is desirable that we should have an opportunity before the Act will come into force of settling a scale of remuneration which will be moderate and at the same time satisfactory. A question may perhaps arise as to whether in case a revising officer is not a judge there should be any difference in the fee allowed. I do not think there ought to be. Judging from the number of applications that have come from members of the legal profession, on both sides of politics—and a good many have applied—there will be no difficulty in getting competent revising officers at very moderate rates indeed.

Mr. BLAKE. This seems to be a very extraordinary proceeding. The hon. gentleman the other day took the preliminary stage of the money clause, and since then he seems to have decided to abandon it. I hope the hon. gentleman's bargain with the judges of the land may turn out satisfactory, and turn out to be economical, and I trust that those independent suppliants for office who are pestering the hon. gentleman with applications—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say pestering.

Mr. BLAKE. I know they are pestering the hon. gentleman—will turn out as independent after they are appointed as they are at present.

Bill reported, with amendments.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 139) to amend the Act in relation to the Library of Parliament.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. What real necessity is there for having two chief librarians with co-equal powers? The present condition of the Library calls for some improvement. Whoever may fill the office should endeavor to arrange the Library in such a way that persons may know what books are in stock. A short time ago I had occasion to deal with a certain subject, and I took from the catalogue a list of the books upon that subject which were supposed to be in the Library; and I found to my surprise on application to the librarian that about ten of the number—and though I will not say how many were on the list, I think there were about a dozen—were missing from the Library, and no trace of them could be found. From that circumstance I drew the inference that there has been no regular system of stock-taking and it is not known now what books are actually in the Library. The catalogue is entirely deceptive, and discloses a list of books which have been acquired, but which have gone astray from time to time. Now, I think that in every well regulated library there should be a time when there should be a careful examination of all the books which ought to be on hand, and enquiry made as to those that are missing. Such an enquiry might lead to the recovery of many of the books. I do not of course assume that those who take away these books do so intending any wrong, but we know that a great deal of latitude is allowed to persons entrusted with books, and it may be difficult for the librarian to keep track of them; but if he were to take stock, and find what books were missing, he could take steps to recover them, and as to those which he could not recover, the catalogue might be amended from time to time, and any such books as were missing, which were proper books to have in the first instance, might be replaced.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that the librarian should take care to see that books which are taken away are returned. I must say that for a number of years past the librarian has always taken care through his officers to see that books that are taken out of the library are returned. We know that members of Parliament have been called upon at different periods to return books which may have been kept by them for a longer time than was necessary, and then they are returned; but I know that years ago it was found that a number of books which were taken from the Library had disappeared, and upon finding that to be the case, I think the Committee on the Library adopted stringent rules in order that such a thing might not occur in the future. Though I am not a member of the Library Committee, I think that state of things has been remedied, and that now books which go out of the Library are always traced, and if kept too long, the person who has them is called upon to return them. The hon. gentleman recollects very well that at one time members of Parliament were allowed to give permission to others to have books from the Library, and these books were entered in the names of such members. This was a custom which also led to difficulties. When the books were not returned, the member in whose name they were entered was called upon to find them, and he would say that he never had the books, but as they were entered in his name, of course he was bound to see that the order was made good afterwards. I think that custom has ceased to a great extent now, and that books are given to members and not to others. If parties outside of members of Parliament want books, they are allowed to go to the Library under surveillance and read them, but not to carry them away. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in saying that there should be a stock-taking of the books from time to time, and I have no doubt that the attention of the committee having been called to this matter, the librarians will see that this rule should be followed,—that is to say, that from time to time there should be a sort of catalogue made. I think it would be a proper thing that these librarians should take care that stock should now be taken of all the books of the Library. Of course it will take some months, but we have to make a beginning some day or other, and it would be better now, that they may see what books are out and where they are, and if they cannot be traced the catalogue should be corrected accordingly, and more stringent rules adopted to prevent the recurrence of such abuses.

Mr. IVES. I would like to call the attention of the Ministry to the fact that the Library is notably deficient as a law library. It will hardly rank with any of the provincial libraries when, as it seems to me, from the amount of money expended upon it, it should take high rank as a law library. If it is to be of any special use to the Parliament of Canada, it is because it is a good library as a law library particularly. We have not so much occasion to study the sciences or light literature as to study constitutional law here, and it does seem to me that the new librarians ought to give their attention particularly to strengthening the library in those respects, which would make it more useful to the members of this House as members of a legislative body. I find that, comparing it with the law library of Montreal, it is far below it in rank. Now that should not be. I do not know so much of the Osgoode Hall library, but I fancy it is even further ahead of this library than the Montreal library is, and therefore, it seems to me, that if a little more money were spent on legal and semi-legal works, and less on works on light literature and subjects of that class, it would be more useful to us as a library.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman will look at the backs of the books he will find which class are in most request. He will find that the works of light literature bear evident signs of much more careful and frequent use than the books bound in law calf of which he speaks.

Mr. IVES. There is nothing in them of use to legislators.

Mr. BLAKE. And I think, if the hon. gentleman was to dive into the recess wherein the librarians charges us with books borrowed, he will find that legislators do their share in taking out books from that portion of the library. Still, I do myself object to too many books of light literature being bought for the Library. On the other hand, I do not think the Library is specially a law library, as the hon. gentleman seems to view it. We did not pretend that it was to be more than an imperfect and rudimentary law library, until the establishment of the Supreme Court, since which time a large sum has been expended, simply in the view that we could not get along in the Supreme Court without a law library. We do not so much require, for ordinary legislative functions, a perfect and complete law library. We require those books which will be useful to us in the discharge of our legislative duties, but not the books which will be useful to us in the discharge of such professional duties as we may choose to combine with our legislative duties; and if it were not that the Supreme Court requires a great many law books, I should entirely dissent from the view that we should pay more for law books. There are a great many legal books that it is important that we should have. We deal with criminal law, and books on that subject are useful to us, as are books on commercial law. We deal to some extent, and I hope some day we will deal to a greater extent, with questions of international law, and we should have some books on that question. But I do not think we want all the text books and all the reports, simply for the discharge of our functions as legislators. How often are they quoted from, how often do they form the subject matter of hon. gentlemen's speeches, or how often do we have to resort to them? But there is a vast mass of literature in which we are defective, and which should be useful to us. Our Library is not yet at all fully supplied with works relating to the early history of the North American continent, which the Library Committee a year or two ago made special efforts to obtain, and for which they got the assent of the Government to an appropriation. There are also a great many books that throw light on the federal constitution and on the growth and early struggles of the colonies both before and after the disruption between England and the United States, of which our Library ought to be much fuller than it is. I think it would be a great mistake to regard as necessary, except in connection with the Supreme Court, to keep members supplied with legal books beyond those that belong to the task of legislation. In the Parliamentary Library we have much more important gaps to fill up than this; but the librarians of the future will not have as much to do with this matter as the Library Committee, which has to direct the general policy of the library. I do not think we ought to entrust to the librarian the task of deciding the general allocation of the vote; its particular distribution will to a large extent devolve upon him; but its general distribution must devolve on the Library Committee.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman in the principle he has laid down; but there is a great defect in the guardianship of the books of the library—in letting them out and collecting them again. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) said he found a list of ten books that were gone. That is a very large list to have disappeared in the experience of one hon. gentleman. My experience has been that there are a good many books which on enquiry were found to have disappeared, and there was nothing to show how they had disappeared or that anybody was chargeable with them. I do not know how that is to be avoided except by altering our practice, and making the Library a state library instead of a lending library so much as it is. The books are sent to everybody or almost everybody who can get a member to allow the use of his name, and there is no supervision and no means of getting these books back again unless you have a special officer to look after the parties. Members ought really to be chargeable with the cost of any book taken out in their name and not returned within a reasonable period. There is no objection in the world to allowing light literature to go out; but all works of really permanent value in literature, science or art, especially such books as encyclopedias, and scientific books which are very costly—

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not think they are taken out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Many of them. At all events, you find you cannot get them when you want them sometimes. There ought to be a more rigid supervision in that regard. Then I think we ought to have a means of getting a more perfect catalogue. The present catalogue is not scientifically arranged. Perhaps I do not understand the method of utilising it, but I really cannot inform myself of the works on any given subject from looking at the catalogue.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad the hon. Minister of Public Works not only agrees with the suggestions I made, but goes further. These two officers are about to enter on their duties now, and there is no great profit in looking back and finding fault with the past, but I think we are entitled to start with a clean record for the future. I do not say that the books I referred to were lost, but the Library has got into such confusion that they could not be found. In proof of that I may mention that, in looking through the department for fiction and other light literature, I found a book which struck me as not being at home there, a medical book I think—"Gray's Anatomy." It was practically lost.

Mr. LAURIER. The difficulties now complained of have always existed and must always exist so long as this is a general library. Last year the Library Committee endeavored to stop this large circulation of the books, but they found that their order could not be carried out, and they had to rescind it. But the difficulties now existing, great as they are, cannot be lessened, and must be increased, if we adopt the system contemplated by the Act, of having a divided responsibility. If at present when we have only one responsible head for the management of the library difficulties exist, surely it must be admitted that when we have two heads instead of one it will be still more difficult to carry out the rules of the Library. No adequate reason has been given why we should have this double responsibility. These joint officers, wherever they exist, do not as a rule prove to be a success, except in very exceptional cases, and the reason is obvious. When there are two men at the head of a department, having equal power, it must be evident that they cannot exercise the same supervision over their subordinates as one supreme head. In the Province of Quebec these joint officers are pretty common on account of the double nationality of the population, and sometimes it is thought they are appointed for political reasons only. But in this case, I ask myself what reason is there why we should not continue on the old system? There is none. There is not even the question of nationality; for by keeping the present system and promoting Mr. DeCelles, there could be no objection on that score. Mr. DeCelles has proved himself to be a very efficient officer. For a long time the Library was administered under the leadership of the late Mr. Todd, assisted by Mr. Lajoie, the latter of whom was replaced by Mr. DeCelles. Now that a vacancy has occurred, there is no reason why Mr. DeCelles, if he is qualified, should not be promoted and his place filled by an English-speaking gentleman. Then, when a vacancy occurs, the assistant to the librarian will be eligible for promotion, and he will be replaced by a French-speaking gentleman so that there can be no difficulty raised under the present system as regards nationality.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me an outrage. This conjunction of two men in one office is a monstrosity; it reminds me of those fabulous animals, unicorns, griffins, etc.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know if I have the correct figures shewing the salaries of the various classes of officers, but the gross cost of the employes, according to those figures, amounts to a very alarming sum. There are two librarians at $3,000 each—$6,000; two first-class clerks who are receiving $1,800 each—$3,600; two second-class clerks, the minimum of whose salaries is $1,100 to increase to $1,400, say an average of $1,250, or total $2,500; two third-class clerks, salaries from $400 to $1,000, say $700, or $1,400; chief messenger, $700; three messengers at $400 each, $1,200; total $15,600. Some hon. gentlemen could tell us what is the cost of similar services at other public libraries. Take the parliamentary library of Ontario, the salary of the librarian is, I think, $1,400 a year; no doubt, there are some attendants in that library. The salary of librarian at another public institution, at Toronto, where the number of books is over 40,000, is $1,200 and he has only two attendants who get very small salaries, because they are in attendance in the institution in other capacities. The total salary is only $1,400 for the management of a library of 40,000, yet here we are going to an expense of $15,600 for the management of a library which does not contain more than 100,000 volumes. It is to be borne in mind that, with the exception of a special Session such as this, these officers are practically only in attendance three months of the year, for the remaining nine months they are not required. It must be possible to provide some more economical scheme.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman has only given one side of the question. He speaks of the expenses, as he sees them, under the present arrangement, without reference to what will necessarily occur when a number of these officers will disappear, and on the other hand he takes only the figures of the new arrangement, without speaking of the figures as they are now. The salaries now paid to the officers and messengers amount to $16,400, whilst, under the new arrangement, without reducing the present salaries of the present incumbents—because I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would ask us to reduce them—the total amount will be $15,600 which would be $800 less than the salaries paid for many years before. The hon. gentleman must see that whenever some of the officers disappear—for example, there is the house-keeper or the chief messenger; he has got up to $900—his successor will have only $700. That will be a saving of $200. Then the messengers in the Library, which has been under the control of Parliament, managed directly by Parliament and not by the Government, have come up to $700 each, whilst in the Departments, according to the rules of the service, their highest salary would be $500. The successors of these men will not come in at $500. They will come in, as in the Departments, at $300; so that we have before us a number of reductions that must take place hereafter. Even should they remain, these salaries, under the new arrangement, will be less than under the present arrangement, and show a reduction; and the result of putting the officers and messengers of the Library under the Civil Service Act will save the members of the Library Committee, as well as of the House, the importunities of those officers and messengers to have their salaries increased. It is the same idea that has guided the Commissioners of Internal Economy of the House of Commons in bringing, through Mr. Speaker, the other day, a report to put the officers of the Departments of Parliament under the same rule, that is to say under the Civil Service Act. Thus we will avoid all the importunities, if I may say so, or the applications of officers and servants of the House to have their salaries increased; they will be fixed once for all and increased according to law. In this case it is the same, and the hon. gentleman is quite in error if he thinks by this arrangement we are increasing the salaries. Far from it, the object of this is to reduce the expenses of the Library, but, as Parliament has always done, we do not want to reduce the salaries of the present incumbents, but to leave them with their present salaries, allowing the reductions to take place when the present officers disappear. The only increase we have made has been that, instead of having an assistant-librarian, he disappears, and instead of giving $2,400 to that officer, we give each of the joint librarians $3,000, while the previous librarian had $1,200; so the increase is just $400 on that account. There are some officers who must soon disappear; they are old, and are at the top of the list.

Mr. MULOCK. Which are those?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is one whose salary is $1,800. He is an old officer, and before long he will disappear, and his successor will begin at, say, $1,400.

Mr. VAIL. There is the superannuation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The policy of Parliament has been, instead of leaving an old officer, when he becomes unfit for service, to be paid his full salary, to give him a superannuation and bring in another officer at the minimum salary who was able to render good service as being more economical, and it was also considered proper that an officer, after twenty or twenty-five or thirty years in the service, should have a small pension to enable him to enjoy the rest of his life. I am sure the hon. gentleman would not desire to change that policy.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say that $15,600 is not an unreasonable sum to pay for the management of the Library?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The measure the Government brought in, showed that they thought it was too much, because they propose a scale of salaries which, if we had to begin to-day, would reduce it very much. But the salaries have been fixed by the report of the Library Committee from year to year, and Parliament sanctioned them, and we have to accept the decision of Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Public Works tells us he is in favor of reducing the cost of management of the Library, in illustration of that, he says that whereas at one time the salary of the librarian was $3,200, we are reducing it to $3,000. That is true, but he is duplicating the officer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no assistant librarian now. We saved that salary.

Mr. MULOCK. You saved that office by creating a joint head at $3,000 a year each. I am satisfied that there is a waste of public money in this branch of the service. See the number of clerks that you have—two librarians and seven other clerks, besides messengers, to look after this Library. It is an indefensible scheme.

On section 4,

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that this scheme is indefensible. I do not see why we should have a double head in the Library instead of one head. I have never heard any complaint against the management of the Library as it was formerly under Mr. Todd and Mr. Lajoie, and afterwards under Mr. DeCelles. What reason is there to go back on that? I am in favor of reform, but this change cannot be called reform. If there had been any defect, if the Parliamentary Committee had suggested the change, or if any complaint had been made in regard to the management of the Library, that might be a reason for making the change. The Minister of Public Works said the scheme contemplated a decrease in the expense, but all the decreases which are contemplated are contingent on the death or the removal of the actual incumbents, while the increase will at once commence from the appointment of the joint librarian. The decreases are all contingent. Take the chief messenger. He is paid $900 a year. It is proposed that in future he shall be paid only $700, when the present incumbent is replaced, but, as long as he remains, he shall receive his present salary. I do not complain of that salary. The present chief messenger is a most efficient officer and earns his salary, but all these decreases are simply contingent and are not to take place immediately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot kill these officers off.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not desire that you should, but the Government have no reason to boast of their economy on this account. I give them credit for their good motive to economise in the future, but they cannot boast of any actual economy now. On the contrary, in practice, they are making not a decrease but an increase. We have two officers at $3,000 a year each, when we had one at $3,200. These officers are not to remain forever, the most of them are young. Why, should we go into this present legislation? I see no good reason for it at all.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister of Public Works refers to the good intentions of the Government. Well, we have heard of the highway to a certain place which is paved with good intentions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has referred to the subject of the economy that will be effected in the future, Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

but this is an extraordinary way of securing it. Take, for instance, the messengers. Many of these messengers are under 30 years of age, and the hon. gentleman is basing his hope of economy upon the early death of these men who are at present engaged as messengers in the Library Department. I remember very well when it was proposed to pay those messengers the present salaries, and it was thought the employment of intelligent men, men of more than the intelligence of ordinary messengers, would be a source of economy instead of expense to the country, because when they were not actually engaged in the ordinary work of messengers they could, to some extent, discharge the duties of clerks. Take, for instance, Mr. Casault. The hon. gentleman will not say that he is not worth the salary he is receiving, and why? Not because it is worth that sum to discharge the ordinary work of a messenger, but because he is really an efficient clerk; he is well acquainted with the Library. There is no one, perhaps, in the Library at this moment who can more readily give you the information you require or the volume you wish to consult than Mr. Casault. Now, if that be the case, where would be the advantage in superseding a man like Mr. Casault with a man engaged in running messages and doing nothing else? You would have to get another clerk. You would have to have a clerk and messenger both to pay. The whole question was considered by the Library Committee when the former Act was prepared. I was at that time a member of the committee, and I remember very well the discussion that took place, and it was supposed that an economy would be effected by the employment of intelligent messengers who could, a portion of their time, discharge the duty of clerks. Well, Sir, the men are engaged in doing that work at this moment; I do not know whether every man who is acting as messenger at the present time, is also performing the duties of clerk, because I do not know exactly what kind of men the Government have appointed. But I know what the men were at the time the former Act was prepared, and I remember why the salaries of those men were fixed at the maximum, at a higher maximum than the salaries of ordinary messengers. The hon. gentleman knows right well that the members have not been efficiently served this Session. I do not blame the Library Committee or the staff as at present constituted. A very considerable number of them have been away, and the Government have thought it necessary or right and proper that one important clerk in the Library should go upon military duty instead of attending to the duties of his office here. But, Sir, the whole feature of this Bill is this: The Government are anxious, not to economise, not to fix the salaries of the messengers and clerks at a lower rate than they now receive, but they are anxious to provide for a party who is not in the Library at the present time, to give him a position in the Library, and put him upon a footing with Mr. DeCelles, and in order to do so, this legislation is proposed. We have the time of Parliament taken up unnecessarily, we have a discussion of this Bill instead of having a discussion of the Estimates. We are discussing here how to provide for a friend and supporter of the Government instead of considering how we are to provide for the public necessity, and how we are to deal with those important questions which the Government have so seriously mismanaged in the North-West Territories. I say, Mr. Chairman, that Ministers are wasting the public resources, they are wasting the time of Parliament, and we are keeping the House unnecessarily in session, the Government are unnecessarily prolonging the Session by bringing forward measures in order to provide for their friends out of the public Treasury, and that, too, at a time when the public are threatened with a very serious deficit. I do not know what the condition of things may be, but it is rumored that the Government will have difficulty in providing for the public necessities at the present time. We shall know more about that in a few days; yet we have our time and the time of the country taken up with a scheme to provide for a political friend of the Government whom they are going to pension on the public service. He is found, perhaps, inefficient where he is, his usefulness is gone, he can no longer be of service to the Administration where he is, and it is necessary, in order to get rid of him from an influential journal, that he should be pensioned upon the public and put in a position where he can be equally well compensated, perhaps, without doing the party which he serves any detriment and without doing the public any good. We are certainly injured to the extent of having a useless officer pensioned upon the public Treasury by the provisions of this Bill, and we have the time of Parliament wasted upon this subject, instead of being devoted to the consideration of matters of public importance.

Bill reported, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER moved in amendment :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same so as to avoid the inconvenience and expense of the office of Librarian of Parliament being held by two heads, as is proposed by the Bill, and to provide that the said office shall continue to be held by one person only.

House divided on amendment.

YEAS :
Messieurs

- |                      |             |                      |
|----------------------|-------------|----------------------|
| Allen,               | Forbes,     | McMullen,            |
| Armstrong,           | Geoffrion,  | Mills,               |
| Bernier,             | Gillmor,    | Mulock,              |
| Blake,               | Guay,       | Paterson (Brant),    |
| Bourassa,            | Gunn,       | Platt,               |
| Burpee,              | Harley,     | Ray,                 |
| Cameron (Huron),     | Innes,      | Rinfret,             |
| Cameron (Middlesex), | Irvine,     | Somerville (Brant),  |
| Cartwright,          | King,       | Somerville (Bruce),  |
| Casey,               | Landerkin,  | Springer,            |
| Casgrain,            | Langelier,  | Sutherland (Oxford), |
| Catudal,             | Laurier,    | Trow,                |
| Charlton,            | Lister,     | Vail,                |
| Davies,              | Livingston, | Watson,              |
| De St. Georges,      | McCraney,   | Weldon,              |
| Edgar,               | McIntyre,   | Wilson,              |
| Fleming,             | McIsaac,    | Yeo.—51.             |

NAYS :
Messieurs

- |                           |                       |                        |
|---------------------------|-----------------------|------------------------|
| Pain (Soulanges),         | Ferguson (Welland),   | McDougald (Pictou),    |
| Beaugu,                   | Fortin,               | McDougald (C. Breton), |
| Blondeau,                 | Gigault,              | McLelan,               |
| Bowell,                   | Girouard,             | Moffat,                |
| Cameron (Inverness),      | Gordon,               | Paint,                 |
| Cameron (Victoria),       | Guilbault,            | Pinsonneault,          |
| Carling,                  | Guillet,              | Pope,                  |
| Colby,                    | Hackett,              | Robertson (Hamilton),  |
| Costigan,                 | Hall,                 | Robertson (Hastings),  |
| Coughlin,                 | Hesson,               | Royal,                 |
| Coursol,                  | Hickey,               | Small,                 |
| Curran,                   | Homer,                | Smyth,                 |
| Daly,                     | Ives,                 | Sproule,               |
| Dawson,                   | Jamieson,             | Taschereau,            |
| Desaulniers (Maskingé),   | Jenkins,              | Temple,                |
| Desaulniers (St. M'rice), | Kilvert,              | Tupper,                |
| Dickinson,                | Langevin,             | Wallace (Albert),      |
| Dodd,                     | Lesage,               | Wallace (York),        |
| Dugas,                    | Macdonald (King),     | White (Cawell),        |
| Dupont,                   | Macdonald (Sir John), | White (Hastings),      |
| Farrow,                   | Mackintosh,           | Wright.—65.            |
| Ferguson (Leeds & Gren.)  | McCallum,             |                        |

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time on the same division reversed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Charges of management..... $168,709.50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A promise was given that some further explanations would be made with respect to a certain sum payable to our financial commissioner in England, Sir John Rose. I am sorry to observe that in spite of the enormous sum hereafter to be paid to sinking fund, apparently the sum in our Estimates is going to be very largely increased. If I understand rightly, probably $200,000 or $300,000 more will be spent in connection with sinking fund than was estimated for. I observe on the preceding page that the nominal amount estimated for sinking fund is $1,097,000. Now, that excepts the ½ per cent. which was due on the consolidated 5 per cent. Canadian loan, and that apparently, from the terms of the renewal, will almost all be paid in future; at any rate, the sum of about $125,000 will be paid on that account; and I presume that on the loan which is now being effected, whether it be for four millions or six millions sterling, it will be the intention of the Government to pay a similar sum, so that in reality the sum total to be paid on sinking fund will probably amount to $1,372,000 in place of $1,097,000, being an increase of $275,000. The Minister of Customs can no doubt inform us if I am correct with reference to this, and can also inform us more particularly what was the cause of the increase of $2,000 on redemption of Dominion notes. The amount of these notes does not appear to have increased at all, although the charge has increased considerably. I think, too, that some further information was promised about the increase in respect to the sum of $20,000, which is now demanded on account of contingencies of country savings banks. Those have not, so far as I am aware, increased materially in number, nor is there any reasonable ground for the increased expenditure within the past year.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no recollection at the present moment that any further explanation was promised in regard to the amount to be paid under the head of management in England. It was fully explained, when that item was before the committee, that it was to pay Sir John Rose for services rendered in connection with the different loans, extending over a number of years. Since that period I have heard no further explanation with reference to that sum, nor am I in a position to give further explanation. With reference to the supposed increase in sinking fund arising out of the new loan, I can inform the House and the hon. gentleman that the Finance Minister has adopted the principle which has been followed by many other colonies in putting their loans upon the market. The new 4 per cent. loan does not provide for a sinking fund, and consequently the amount which we anticipated would be added to the annual amount required to provide for sinking fund, will not, under present circumstances, be asked. The increase under the head of savings banks was fully explained when we were in committee. It arose from the fact of the establishment of some additional savings banks in the different Provinces, and to provide for the increases which are given to the different savings banks' agents, either by commission or salary arising from the much larger deposits and the consequently larger amount of work they have to perform. These are the explanations which were given when the House was in committee, with the exception of that in relation to sinking fund, and that is a principle which the hon. gentleman himself advocated on a previous occasion. He thought the time had arrived when Canada should place her loans on the market of England without providing for sinking funds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad to hear that the new loan is to be established without sinking fund, for, as I have frequently stated, I have regarded the sinking fund as out of proportion to the requirements of the country, and therefore, if the Minister is certain that it is to be discontinued, I am exceedingly glad to hear it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it is so with regard to the new loan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Minister of Customs has either omitted an explanation, or is not correct as to the renewal of the £5,000,000 sterling of the 5 per cent's. There sinking funds is distinctly promised; I examined the advertisement myself. That would make an addition of $125,000 to the present charge for sinking fund, apparently.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I think that is provided for under the statute which authorises the loan to be made, and consequently, in the redemption of the debt, and not in the exchange in the 5 for the 4 per cent's., the same principle is provided for. I did not refer to that, however, in my first explanation, which related exclusively to the new loan. As to that, it is quite certain, as the leader of the Government has stated, that the sinking fund will not have to be provided for; that is the plain statement of the telegram which the Finance Minister cabled.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the period for which the new loan is to run?

Mr. BOWELL. The information we have in reference to the term of the loan is that it is for 50 years, with the option of redemption at the end of 25 years, and that it is placed on the market at a minimum of 99.

Department of Postmaster General..... $161,620

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there were some details which the Postmaster General reserved. I think they were with reference to the increase in the secretary's office and the money order office.

Mr. CARLING. It was necessary to have three additional third-class clerks in the money order office on account of the increased business of the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount of the increase?

Mr. CARLING. It is in the establishment of new offices in the different parts of the Dominion. I cannot tell the exact number at this moment. If there is any particular point on which the hon. gentleman wants information, I would be glad to give it to him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister was asked to give us some particulars on the increase within the last year or two. He pointed out at the time, I recollect, that there had been, as we all knew, a great increase in the last seven or eight years; but we wanted information in more detail. I know that such a long time has elapsed that the matter may have dropped from his memory; that is the inconvenience of considering these items with four months between.

The Department of Interior..... $110,705

Mr. MILLS. I find that in 1878 this Department, including the Indian Branch, cost only $42,760, while at present they both cost $175,000, including $30,000 charged to capital account for the expenses of the Department of the Interior. That of itself is a rather unusual proceeding; for if the business of the Department has grown to such an extent as to require this large expenditure, I am unable to see why $30,000 should be charged to capital account instead of to the ordinary expenses of the Department. The hon. gentleman stated, when this item was last under discussion, that formerly a large amount went to contingencies, and that this accounted for the difference; but the contingencies are greater now than they were then. I have mentioned that there have been periods in the history of the Illinois Central Railway when the sale of lands exceeded those of the entire Department of Interior; yet we find this Department has increased, including the Indian Branch, which was formerly a part of the Department, from $42,760 to $175,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a great difference between 1878 and 1885 in the progress of the country.

Mr. MILLS. Of course.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the Department of the Interior, last year, the amount was $67,050. It is now $69,305. One clerk more, a second-class clerk, apparently, and the statutory increase will make that up. In the Geological Survey Branch the salaries last year were $32,834; they are now $33,800. That is apparently made up altogether of statutory increases. In the North-West Mounted Police there is a statutory increase as well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another point which was referred to: the fact that the inside service in Ottawa absorbed the further sum of $30,000, making an annual total charge of about $100,000, the only difference being, this is placed on page 12 and the inside service is placed on page 108. It is clearly inside service, and ought to be put under this head.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These are extra clerks, brought in temporarily. The number of draughtsmen is increased or diminished according to the work of preparing the maps, township maps and large maps and topographical maps of every kind. This sum is for publishing maps, which are issued very largely, and these men are paid for their time; and then there is the cost of publication, and the printing and advertising, and other similar expenses, in all making an estimate of $30,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true, but the point my hon. friend was making, and to which I called the attention of the hon. gentleman is, that where you are taking votes for the inside service, whether you put them under the Department of the Interior or under the head of contingencies of the Department of the Interior, they ought to be put in one place.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They ought.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see that they have any business to come in at the end here. It is confusing and misleading, too, because, I think, in the time of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), these identical expenses were charged either to his contingencies or to the general service of the Department, so that, for the purpose of comparison, the item ought to appear under one or the other of these heads.

Mr. MILLS. These items were formerly charged against the contingencies of the Department, when they were unforeseen and no special vote was taken. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman had a charge of this sort last year or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, there was.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know when the system began, but this is misleading; it represents the expenditure of the Department as far less than it really is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Although in one regard, in the point of view stated by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), it might be well that all the charges for the inside services should appear on the same page, there is some reason, and perhaps a good reason, why the Department has placed this where it is, because the extra clerks at the head office are all for the special purpose of preparing the maps and plans affecting the Dominion lands, and this is a charge which should go against Dominion lands. All the sales, leases, timber limits, and so on, are credited to Dominion lands, and all those charges, which are directly for the purpose of putting those lands into the market, are put on the other side of the account, and that is why they are put here. It may be a question whether it would not be better to put this item with the other charges of the Department; but, on reflection, one will see that this sum, being a distinct expense arising out of the preparation necessary in offering Dominion lands for sale, ought to appear on this sheet. It might be repeated and shown in both places, but certainly it is very germane to this account.

Mr. MILLS. So are all the expenses of the Department of the Interior. They are the necessary outcome of the management of the public lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; because the Dominion lands mean really Dominion lands of the North-West, and that Department has a large business to attend to besides the Dominion lands in the North-West.

Mr. MILLS. Well, I do not know where the large business is; the ordnance lands, for instance, form a very small part of the cost of the Department of the Interior. The management of that branch is not very large now, and need not be as large as it is. In regard to the management of the Indian lands, outside of the North-West, they are not charged to this at all, but against the Department of Indian Affairs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This $30,000 does not apply to the Indian lands at all.

Mr. MILLS. All the expenditure in the preparation of patents and in the reports of surveys, and all the work done in the Department of the Interior, is a necessary incident of the management of the public lands of the North-West Territory and Manitoba, and there is no more reason why the preparation of these particular maps should be charged in this way than any other matters connected with the business. The expenditure of the Department is $30,000 more than it appears to be under the head of Civil Government, and it is certainly misleading in that particular.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate.....$57,288

Mr. MILLS. I am not aware that the Senate has had any particular employment this Session. In fact, I understand that their time has been principally taken up in moving adjournments from day to day, because they have had nothing to do, and I think we are entitled to some explanation from the Government as to why a vote should be given at all. What is this vote for? Burying the dead?

Mr. BOWELL. They are waiting for the Franchise Bill.

Publishing Debates, House of Commons.....$47,100

Mr. BOWELL. The estimate of last year was supposed to be sufficient to cover the cost, but I do not think it will.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think that the vote of money last year, for publishing the Debates for the current year, will be sufficient, on account of the lengthy debates we have had. I suppose the Acting Minister of Finance will have to bring down a supplementary estimate, in order to meet the extra expense. I think the amount is $10,000 more than was voted in 1884-85; that may be based on the probable expense of this year.

Mr. BOWELL. There was a promise made, I think, that some further explanation should be made in reference to the $10,000 to which the hon. gentleman refers. I am furnished this statement by the clerk of the Printing Committee. He says:

"The increased estimate is required because, first, the distribution is considerably increased and demands are made authorised by the House; second, from the very large addition of documents of public interest to be printed, and from the increased number of blue books, etc."

This has as much reference, however, to the general printing account as to the Debates.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Several members of the House object entirely to maintaining the Hansard in its present form. It is very cumbersome and certainly very expensive. There is a strong feeling in regard to it, and I would ask the hon. Minister to allow this item to stand over, since a great many members are absent to-night.

Mr. MILLS. Let the absent men speak for themselves.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let the item stand.

New militia pensions ..... $4,457

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before this item is carried I think it would be a proper time for the First Minister to state to the House what the intentions of the Government are with respect to those unfortunate persons who have been deprived of their natural protectors in the trouble in the North-West. That matter has been brought to the attention of the Government on several occasions, and they have expressed their intention to deal with it. I think this would be a proper time for the First Minister to inform us what scale of allowances the Government propose to make to the widows and children of our men who have been killed in putting down the rebellion in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government intend, of course, to take care of those who have been bereaved of their natural protectors during the outbreak. The pensions of relief would be at least as generous as they were on previous occasions—perhaps not on the same principle; but that will be laid before the House in a few days by the Minister of Militia, when the attention of the House will be called to the necessity of pensioning the widows and children of those who have fallen in fighting the battles of their country, on at least as liberal a scale as was adopted in regard to the persons who are mentioned in the items now before the House. The Government will take occasion at the same time to call attention to the conduct of our brave defenders, from the General downwards; and perhaps the attention of the House will be called to the necessity of showing a special mark of gratitude on behalf of the people of Canada to the conduct of our citizen soldiery in the North-West.

Pensions to veterans of War of 1812.....$13,950

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister of Militia promised that when this item came up for concurrence he would give us a list of those who had received pensions last year, and the counties from which they came, in order that members representing those counties might have some idea of the correctness of the list.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry to say that my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia, being unwell, could not attend the House this evening, but I will take note of what the hon. gentleman says, and I have no doubt the Minister of Militia will bring down the information before the next stage of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS. It will be seen that none of these people can be under 90 years of age, and the Government are paying them but $30 each, and as it requires $14,000 to pay pensions to the survivors of a small band in the first instance, none of whom can now be under 90 years of age, it does seem rather an extraordinary vote.

Mr. CHARLTON. With regard to the payment of these pensions, it is a question whether there may not be frauds existing somewhat similar to those that have been unearthed in the United States within the last year, where it was found that pensions were being paid to people who were dead. It seems extraordinary that so large an amount of money should be required to pay pensions for that war, when the numbers were so few in the first instance. I think the Government should make a rigid investigation in regard to this matter, for I am inclined to think there are frauds.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are regular returns to show how this money is distributed, and the Department, no doubt, will be able to show a proper voucher for each of these sums. If the hon. gentleman wants to know how long men live who are pensioned, he has only to look back to item 40, and he will see that John Bright was a messenger of the House of Assembly under the old régime of Lower Canada, previous to 1837.

Mr. HICKEY. I can call to mind four claimants residing within five miles of my place. One of them, about 100 years old, walked four miles recently to get his certificate.

Mr. VAIL. Among the number paid last year there were several whose ages were between 81 and 89. It is quite impossible that they could have served in the war—they were boys at the time. No doubt amounts are improperly paid.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No one would desire that any one entitled to the amount should not be on the list. It is not a question of mere money consideration, but the list is a roll of honor. If people are placed on the list who are not entitled to be there, it is taking away from the honor of those who are fairly entitled to it. The amount does not fairly divide up, for it gives 464½ persons. The Minister should obtain a list, showing the counties from which these recipients of the amount come.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt the Minister of Militia will take care to ascertain more accurately than has been the case whether all those men are entitled to the pension.

Expenses, Antwerp and Colonial Exhibition,
1886.....	$40,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister of Agriculture promised us some further information with respect to these exhibitions.

Mr. POPE. My information is that the exhibition at Antwerp is a success, so far as it goes. It is not so large, and it was not expected to be so large, as will be the exhibition to be held in London. A large amount of material has been sent abroad, and the accounts go to show that the exhibition is a very fair one. It was an exhibition covering all departments. Everything sent over, it is understood, will be also sent to the London Exhibition.

Expenses in connection with Health Statistics.....	$15,000
--	----------

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister promised us some detailed information with respect to the proposed distribution of money for the collection of health statistics.

Mr. POPE. With respect to the collection of the health statistics, as I explained in committee, these statistics have been collected in, I think, eleven of the principal cities of Canada, and now it is proposed to extend the system to as many towns, having a population of 5,000 and over, as choose to avail themselves of it. These statistics for 1884 have been completed, and I hope we will be able to get them out monthly after the 1st of July—not perhaps during the month, but those for each month in the following month.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Minister also gave us to understand that he was considering the advisability of collecting these statistics in rural sections, perhaps by utilising the township boards of health. We have been waiting for him to explain also the machinery by which he collects these statistics. I think it will be only fair that rural sections as well as the cities and towns should have the benefit of the collection of these statistics.
Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. POPE. I thought I had explained all that in committee. I said that the parties who were engaged in collecting those statistics were those appointed by the local authorities, whom we made our officers for this purpose. As to the larger question of collecting these statistics in rural districts, that would involve the expenditure of a good deal more money—more, perhaps, than the House would be willing to give me, and, at all events, I would like to work my way to it gradually.

Mr. WILSON. Would the Minister explain the results of last year's work? As to the expense of collecting in rural districts, in Ontario, at all events, he could utilise the township boards of health very easily. If he would explain the results of his system for the past year we might be in a better position to give him the increased amount for the present year.

Mr. POPE. I am not asking an increased amount.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; but the hon. gentleman says that he only expended a small portion of the vote for last year, and that he expects to expend a large sum this year.

Mr. VAIL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us if he intends to enlarge the scope of his enquiries, as there is to be so much more money spent.

Mr. POPE. It is the same vote.

Mr. VAIL. Yes; but only a comparatively small portion of it was spent last year.

Mr. POPE. As I said, it is intended to extend the system to towns having a population of 5,000 or more.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood that the hon. gentleman paid a certain amount of this to some sanitary journal, and he promised some information as to the amount paid, the distribution of the journal, etc.

Mr. POPE. There is paid to a sanitary journal in Ontario, for Ontario and the Dominion generally, $600, and to a French journal $400, and a large number of these journals are circulated over the country, in consideration of their getting these amounts.

Mr. WILSON. What becomes of these journals, who receives them and what is the object of their distribution? I should like to ask, also, what information he intends to publish in these monthly reports.

Mr. POPE. Diseases.

Mr. WILSON. We have diseases enough; we do not want reports of diseases.

Mr. MILLS. I think we ought to have some further details. I think the hon. gentleman spoke about aiding Mr. Playter's sanitary journal in Toronto and one in Montreal. I suppose there are none of these journals circulated in consequence of what the Minister gives; I suppose the money is only a contribution towards supporting the publications. I do not understand the Minister to say that they shall be sent to any particular party.

Mr. POPE. Yes; they are sent to all the medical men who are interested in this matter, and to different institutions.

Mr. MILLS. Then, are we to understand that the medical men have these journals free of charge—those who are members of the sanitary board?

Mr. POPE. As far as they go.

Mr. MILLS. There must be other parties receiving them.

Mr. POPE. There are.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman know who they are?

Mr. POPE. I cannot say now. I can get the names.

Mr. MILLS. Of course, we may be mistaken, and the hon. gentleman may be mistaken. It may be that the Government are giving support to a publication that would not otherwise be sustained.

Mr. WILSON. If these journals are $1 a year, there are 25 of those officers in different parts of the Dominion, which would be $25. We should like to know what has become of the rest, $575. Who has the distribution of it, and where does it go? We certainly should not be asked to vote that sum of money without receiving some information as to what is done with it.

CANNED GOODS.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 142) respecting Canned Goods.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. I wish to amend the second section by striking out the words "packed in Canada." These words were inserted during the discussion that took place while I was absent, with the view of giving facilities to our manufacturers to export their goods; but the addition of these words would have the effect of confining the operation of this Act to Canadian packers, allowing the same class of goods to come in from foreign markets to compete with them, without the restrictions of the Act, which, of course, was not the intention. I wish also to amend the third sub-section by adding, after the word "shall," in the second line, the words, "on summary conviction before a justice of the peace."

Mr. MILLS. I suppose these words are intended to be sufficient to enable a party to prosecute before a justice of the peace by summary process.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I insert them on the advice of the Deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think they will be sufficient, without something else, to compel the party to bring a qui tam action.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 123) respecting Offences against the Person. He said: This Bill is an addition to the Act 32 and 33 Victoria, chap. 20, and provides that any person who, by false pretenses, false representations, or other fraudulent means,

"(a) Procures any woman or girl, under the age of twenty-one years; to have illicit carnal connection with any man other than the procurer; or

"(b) Inveigles or entices any such woman or girl to a house of ill-fame or assignation, for the purpose of illicit intercourse or prostitution, or who knowingly conceals in such house any such woman or girl so inveigled or enticed;

"Is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is liable to two years' imprisonment."

The second clause provides that, when there is reason to believe that any such woman or girl is concealed in any such house, she can be taken from the house on a warrant and restored to the custody of her lawful guardians.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the Secretary of State to explain why the punishment should be inflicted in the case of a person who procures the ruin of a girl and is not himself the person who has connection with her, while no provision is made for punishing the seducer himself. It strikes me that the law comes very far short of what it should provide for, because, in the majority of cases, the ruin of the girl is due to the seducer himself, and not to the procurer.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have moved the second reading of the Bill as it comes from the Senate. I think my hon. friend has already spoken upon the question of the seducer, and the sense of the House has already been taken upon it.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes; and the sense of the House in each case has been that it is a crime to seduce a girl. This law provides that it is a crime to act the base part of a procurer, but I think we had better amend it, by providing a punishment for the man who seduces a girl.

Mr. SPEAKER. That will come in the committee.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHARLTON moved that a sub-section, to be numbered (c), be added to section 50, as follows:—

Who seduces a girl under twenty-one years of age.

Amendment negatived. Yeas, 24; nays, 43.

Mr. WELDON. I would call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that sub-section (a) provides that anyone who procures any woman or girl to have carnal connection with any man other than the procurer shall be guilty, and the Interpretation Act provides that the context must be taken to show the meaning, and that it is therefore very questionable, if the procurer was a woman, whether any conviction could be obtained.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I believe the wording would cover both.

Mr. WELDON. The context would make it mean otherwise.

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. CHARLTON moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by adding to clause 50, as sub-section (c) the words, "who seduces a woman under 21 years of age."

House divided on amendment.

YEAS:

Messieurs

Allen,
Armstrong,
Bain (Wentworth),
Blake,
Bourassa,
Burpee,
Cameron (Middlesex),
Campbell (Renfrew),
Cartwright,
Casey,
Casgrain,
Catudal,
Charlton,
Davies,
Edgar,
Fairbank,
Farrow,
Fisher,
Fleming,
Forbes,

Foster,
Gillmor,
Guay,
Guillet,
Gunn,
Harley,
Innes,
Irvine,
Ives,
King,
Kinney,
Kirk,
Langelier,
Laurier,
Lister,
Livingston,
McCrane,
McIntyre,
McIsaac,

Mills,
Mulock,
Paterson (Brant),
Platt,
Rinfret,
Scriver,
Shakespeare,
Somerville (Brant),
Somerville (Bruce),
Springer,
Sutherland (Oxford),
Trow,
Vail,
Wallace (Albert),
Watson,
Weldon,
Wells,
Wilson,
Yeo.—58.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Bain (Soulanges),
Baker (Victoria),
Beaty,
Bergeron,

Gagné,
Girouard,
Gordon,
Guilbault,

Massue,
Mitchell,
Moffat,
Montplaisir,

Bergin,	Hackett,	Paint,
Blondeau,	Hall,	Pope,
Bowell,	Hesson,	Ray,
Cameron (Inverness),	Hickey,	Robertson (Hamilton),
Campbell (Victoria),	Homer,	Robertson (Hastings),
Carling,	Jamieson,	Ross,
Chapleau,	Jenkins,	Small,
Colby,	Kaulbach,	Smyth,
Costigan,	Kilvert,	Sproule,
Coughlin,	Langevin,	Stairs,
Curran,	Lesage,	Taylor,
Daly,	Macdonald (King's),	Temple,
Dawson,	Macdonald (Sir John),	Tupper,
Desaulniers (Mask'ngé),	Mackintosh,	Wallace (York),
Desaulniers (St. M'rice),	McMillan (Vaudrenil),	White (Cardwell),
Dickinson,	McCallum,	White (Hastings),
Dodd,	McDougald (Pieton),	Wood (Brockville),
Dugas,	McDougall (C. Breton),	Wood (Westmoreland),
Ferguson (L'ds & Gren.),	McLellan,	Woodworth,
Ferguson (Welland),	McNeill,	Wright.—72.

Amendment negatived.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was greeted with some hearty cheers on my late vote. I am particularly anxious that this Bill should pass, and therefore that it should not be sent back to the Senate. A motion similar to the motion made by the hon. member for North Norfolk was made last year, and the Bill was sent to the Senate and met with no favor there. I fear the consequences of sending this Bill to the Senate at the present time would be that we would hear no more about it.

Bill read the third time and passed.

THE LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 134) respecting the Liquor License Act, 1883.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move the adoption of the first clause. I gave notice of some additions to this Bill, but on reflection I will not press them.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought the hon. gentleman had agreed, on a former occasion, to put in the words, "is hereby suspended." It seems to me that it is important to make some further provision than is made here. I think the proper thing would be to suspend so much of the Act as is declared ultra vires to a fixed period after the decision of the Privy Council. The present arrangements render it uncertain as to what the decisions are to be with reference to those cases in which licenses may not have been obtained under this Act for the current license year. I think that even to the extent to which, if at all, any portion of the Act becomes revived, so to speak, by the decision of the Privy Council, it should come into operation from the commencement of the next license year thereafter—or, rather, not the license year so much as the next period at which the preliminary space for the issue of licenses was to commence. The hon. gentleman will observe that otherwise very considerable confusion would result. Just suppose, for example, that there should be a decision of the Privy Council in November next, declaring that certain portions of the Act which had been declared ultra vires of this Legislature were intra vires; the Act would revive at once for a brief space, and those persons who had not received a license under its operation would be without a license for a brief period of the license year. It seems to me that the proper course, therefore, is not to suspend the operation until the arrival of the first period thereafter for the commencement of taking proceedings for getting a license under the Act. Then the hon. gentleman also promised to amend this Bill at this stage by introducing in the schedule that portion of the opinion of the Supreme Court which we are in fact legislating upon.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is quite true; I really forgot that. I do not think it would be well to alter Mr. CHARLTON.

the clause, which is, in fact, the resolution solemnly adopted by this House. When the licenses have expired, no licenses will be issued until after Parliament meets again. I do not think there will be any difficulty about that; but I do remember now that the hon. gentleman suggested—and I thought it was a very proper suggestion—that the decision of the Supreme Court should be added, by way of schedule. However, in the meantime we might make it read thus: "Is and shall be suspended unless and until."

Committee rose and reported progress.

INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the Order for the third reading of Bill (No. 20) to modify the application of the Consolidated Insurance Act of 1877, be discharged, and the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for further consideration. He said: A short discussion took place as to the propriety of expunging clause 7 from the Bill. Other suggestions have been made, including some modifications; and after consulting those who hold different opinions on this question: first, those who look upon the clause as a direct interference with provincial rights, and those who hold a contrary opinion, it is thought better not to expunge the clause, but to amend it as follows:—"No policy or certificate shall contain or have entered upon it any condition providing that such policy or certificate shall be avoided by any statement contained in the application therefor being untrue, except in cases in which such statement is material to the contract." The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) also desires, in committee, to move an amendment, which will make it clear that clauses 4, 5, 6 and 7 do not apply to the societies mentioned in clause 10.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BOWELL moved that the clause shall read as follows:

No policy or certificate shall contain or have endorsed upon it any condition providing that such policy or certificate shall be avoided by reason of any statement contained in the application being untrue, unless such condition is limited to cases in which such statement is material to the contract.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BOWELL moved the insertion of the words "or registered," after the word "licensed," in the 19th line.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 6,

Mr. MULOCK moved that the clause be amended by inserting, after the word "company," in the 2nd line, the following words: "Not being a company, society or association as is referred to in clause 11 of this Act." Clause 11 being clause 10 in Bill as reprinted, as amended and reported by the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. IVES moved that the following be added as the 12th clause of the Bill:—

1st. In every policy issued by a foreign company licensed under this Act in favor of a resident of Canada, a clause shall be either embodied therein or endorsed thereon, to the effect that an action to enforce the obligation of said policy may be validly taken in any court of competent jurisdiction in the Province wherein said policyholder resides or last resided before his decease.

Mr. WELLS. The House, by making the language of the 6th section negative in form, rather than affirmative, sought to give Parliament jurisdiction in a matter in which it was conceded they had none, but by this amendment they are directly going in the teeth of the case of Parsons vs. The Queen, as it was decided, at all events, by the Ontario Court of Appeal. Mr. Bourinot has stated the law in these words:

"Policies of insurance being mere contracts of indemnity against loss by fire, and like any other personal contracts between parties, governed by local or provincial laws, the Provincial Legislature has the power to regulate the legal incidents of contracts to be enforced within its courts, and to prescribe the terms upon which the corporations, either foreign or domestic, shall be permitted to transact business within the limits of the Province—the power being given to Local Legislatures by the constitution to legislate over civil rights and property."

If this House has thought fit to give jurisdiction to itself by that alteration in section 6, it certainly is going too far by framing a contract in the section now submitted. Sub-section 8 of section 5 declares also what shall be one of the conditions of the contract; in other words, it expressly makes a contract for the parties, a thing which I am sure this Legislature has no power to do.

Mr. IVES. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I may say that this amendment was framed to meet the very objection he raised. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott), who, I think, first raised the point with reference to the original section 7, that it was a declaration of what should be the law rather than a condition upon which the companies working under this Act should do business, suggested the very wording of the amendment which I moved as being calculated to meet the hon. gentleman's objection. As I understand this clause, it fixes a condition upon which companies coming in and doing business under this Act shall work. They are not obliged to come here at all. This amendment does not declare what shall be the law, but it simply fixes another condition, which shall be complied with by companies doing business under this Act, namely, that they shall not do business under this Act unless they endorse in their policy the condition that a right of action for a policy holder exists in a court of competent jurisdiction in the Province where he resides.

Mr. WELLS. It is quite clear, if the law can be evaded in that way, that you can dictate what any contract shall be; it is clear that you are making a contract between the parties; it is clear that is a matter of civil rights, and it is therefore clear that this House has nothing to do with it. It is very ingenious, I admit, but it is only ingenious, and I am firmly of the opinion that being only an evasion of the law you cannot in that way give this House jurisdiction. If that be so, you can always make a contract between the parties by simply declaring that no company shall do business without making a contract in a particular form.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he would have no objection to this being inserted in a negative form, that is, that no policy should contain a condition that an action must be taken at the place where the head office of the company is situated, namely, in the State of New York?

Mr. WELLS. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have no objection to that being declared to be the law; my only desire is that this House should not do anything that will be ultra vires. I did not say I had no objection to this provision being put in a negative form. What I said was, that they had put it in a negative form, trying thereby to accomplish their object. But I think it is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is exactly what I was going to point out. We have already passed one condition in a negative form, and it has been accepted by the committee. It is quite clear that if we declare what shall not be in the policy we can declare what shall be in it. It seems to me the difficulty the hon. gentleman suggests applies to a great many clauses of this Bill as well as to this particular clause. We have already, in another place, where the matter was thoroughly discussed, agreed to insert these as the only conditions on which these companies shall do business in Canada at all. We have the right to declare whether they shall do business in this country or not. If we have that right, we certainly have the right to declare the conditions on which we shall permit them to do business in Canada. Having gone so far, for instance, as to declare that they shall make a deposit and make returns, it seems to me we can go still further, and declare that they shall do business provided they agree to include certain things in their contract; we do not make the contract for them, but we say that they shall put into their policy such and such things. In the committee we had a policy submitted to us which contained the condition that when an action arose it must be taken at the place where the head office of the company was situated. We were told there that that had been abandoned, and that the more recent policies issued contained no such clause, the question being left entirely to be determined by the courts. What we desire here is to avoid all possibility of dispute in the matter; and having inserted so many clauses which are to be embodied as conditions of the policy, there is no reason why we should not require the companies to put in the further condition that when an action arises that action shall lie in the Province where the insured person happens to live.

Mr. WELLS. The hon. gentleman makes a mistake in saying that the policy contained a clause requiring that the action should be brought at the place of the head office. It was in the circuit court in whatever state the head office was in.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I have the policy here:

"The entire contract contained in this certificate and said application, taken together, shall be governed by, subject to, and construed only according to the constitution, by-laws and regulations of said association and the laws of the State of New York, the place of this contract being expressly agreed to be the home office of the said association in the city of New-York; and elsewhere than in the said State no suit or proceeding at law, or in equity, shall be brought or prosecuted, except in the circuit or district court of the United States; and said association shall not be liable, nor shall any suit or proceeding be brought, after the lapse of one year from the date of the death of said member."

Mr. WELLS. In the circuit courts, where ever they are.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). It does not mean the circuit courts of Canada.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman, the other day, framed an amendment himself, and submitted it as a substitute for my motion, that no company should insert a condition like that in the policy just read. I thought he was agreeable to that, and it seemed to me it was preferable it should be declared as a condition to the licensing of a company that our courts should be given jurisdiction.

Mr. WELLS. I have no objection, personally, to that, but it seems to me it is ultra vires.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I do not suppose there is any doubt that if a policy issued by an association did not contain the restrictive clause, action would lie in Canada, but this restrictive clause was put in to compel the assured to bring his suit in the State of New York.

Mr. WELLS. That is omitted in the policies now issued.

Mr. BOWELL. The whole argument is based upon the presumption that in the case of Parsons vs. the Queen Insurance Company the Privy Council declared that this Parliament has no authority to legislate on matters affecting insurance in the whole Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES. No.

Mr. BOWELL. As I read the decision of the judges, they did not go to that extent. They upheld the rights of the Province to legislate on this particular question, but they said, further, that the right of the Dominion to legislate for the whole country was not before them, and therefore they would give no opinion on that question. Inferentially, I draw the conclusion that this Parliament would have the right, when dealing with a question affecting the whole Dominion, to enact such provisions as the court declared the different Local Legislatures had a right to place in policies affecting the Provinces only. I think I understood the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Wells) to say that the courts of appeal in Ontario had decided that these questions were solely within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. Whether that be the case, I do not know; but, looking at the case of Parsons vs. the Queen, I came to the conclusion that the judges gave no opinion as to the authority of Parliament in questions of this kind.

Mr. MILLS. No Legislature, whether it be a sovereign Legislature or a dependent one, can create a corporation for the purpose of carrying on business beyond its own jurisdiction. The Legislature of England can create a corporation, but it cannot create a corporation to carry on business in France or Spain; their power to do business there is a matter of comity. The fact that a Local Legislature can only create a corporation to operate within the Province does not prevent that corporation carrying on business elsewhere. Whether it does or not, is purely a matter of comity, regulated by the rules of comity which are applicable in such cases. It does not seem that because a Local Legislature cannot create a corporation to operate over the whole Dominion such a power exists here. We look at the nature of the corporation, the purposes for which it exists; we look at the British North America Act to see where the power is lodged by which a corporation exercising these functions may be created, and if, as I think my hon. friend has pointed out, it was decided by the courts of Ontario that these powers are lodged in the Provinces, because a Province has no power to create these corporations to operate beyond its own limits is no evidence that power belongs to the Dominion. I think the power does belong to the Provinces, and that we cannot give ourselves jurisdiction by legislation of this sort.

Mr. DAVIES. If the committee before which this Bill was so long thought they could not impose certain restrictions or obligations upon these foreign corporations, the committee would never have allowed them to do business in Canada at all. Whether we have the power legally is not decided. Parsons vs. The Queen did not decide that this Parliament had not the power we contend we have, but merely decided that the Provincial Legislatures had certain powers to determine the conditions on which insurance companies might do business in their respective Provinces. I am not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine of my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) to its full extent, that a local corporation, because it is a legal entity, has power to do business anywhere. The British North America Act provides that the Provincial Legislatures may incorporate them for provincial operations only. We have as much power to pass the clause before the committee as we had to pass any other. If this clause is ultra vires a number of others are also ultra vires; and if they were all ultra vires, and that was known to the committee, these companies would never have been allowed to do business here. It is monstrous that they should issue policies in Canada and by a clause in their policies compel people to sue the companies in the United States.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

RAILWAYS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 147) to authorise the grant of certain Subsidies in land for the construction of the Railways therein mentioned.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BLAKE. The Bill does not accord with my understanding of the statement as to what it should be, and what the hon. gentleman said it would contain. I understood that it was to provide that these grants should be made in accordance with the Orders in Council, but the Bill, as framed, is entirely bare, and is no more than the resolutions. It ought to have some amendments, and I shall have to press them, unless the hon. gentleman accepts the view which I understood him to concede when the resolutions were before us. I have another amendment which I wish to move, at any rate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right in his view as to the intention I expressed, and I think it would be better to let the Bill stand till to-morrow.

Motion postponed.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of Bill (No. 144) to authorise the augmentation of the North-West Mounted Police.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to make some statement as to whether it is intended to carry on the force on the same general system of organisation as to officers and non-commissioned officers, and so forth, under this augmentation, or whether any changes are proposed in that regard.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The system will be the same. The corps has been divided into divisions of 100, which is a larger number than the ordinary number of a company in a regiment. They are each commanded by a superintendent and an inspector. It is proposed that the same system shall be carried on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many officers would that give to each so-called company of 100 men? I think, in the British service, the strength of a company of cavalry is not anything like that. How many officers will there be to each?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Two.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems a small number for a service of that kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; but that is the present intention.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. BLAKE. From what the hon. gentleman has just said, I would understand that the same plan precisely of organisation would be adopted, as to the additional 500 men as is now adopted with reference to the 500 men who compose the force, so that, unless we are able to economise in obtaining cheaper supplies, the expenditure will be on the same scale.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The pay and allowances will be the same.

Mr. BLAKE. And, speaking in a general sense, the expense will be doubled by this.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; the expenditure is decreasing very rapidly. The supplies originally were very expensive, the means of transport were very inefficient, and altogether it was more expensive, in consequence of the state of the country. Now, in consequence of communication being perfected, or nearly so, with the North-West, we find that contractors can be found to tender from all parts of the Dominion. We have had proffers from the Maritime Provinces for supplies—saddlery, and things of that kind. There is sufficient competition now, which there has not been hitherto, and the ranchmen, the cattle raisers in the North-West, are beginning to compete for the supply of cattle. That is only within this year. There is no doubt the prices of everything are going to fall, and though I cannot at this moment give an estimate of the reduction in expenditure, it will be very considerable, and I hope to be able to give an approximate estimate when we discuss the Estimates to meet this augmentation.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman did not observe that I made that hypothesis. I said that, assuming the price of supplies to continue the same, the cost would be doubled. The price of supplies is a variable quantity. The cost of 500 or 1,000 men will increase or diminish according to the price of supplies; but, man for man, the cost will be double.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The pay will be double, of course, for the non-commissioned officers and the men, but not for the commissioner. In fact, we shall not double the non-commissioned officers.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see why there should not be a double head. Is it only in the Library that that system is to prevail?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot have a parliamentary and a general commissioner up there.

Mr. BLAKE. There would be less danger of a difference of opinion up there, where the two heads might be separated by such a distance that the one could not mark his ten commandments on the other's page, than there would be with these pedagogues in the narrow precincts of the Library. Of course, I quite understand that we must expect supplies to diminish in cost, and diminish rapidly in cost. But I make to the hon. gentleman an observation which was made to me in a letter I received the other day, on the very point that is touched, as to competition. It was represented to me in this letter that the facilities for effective competition would be enormously increased if the Government would demand tenders for the delivery of goods that were required at the railway points, and separate tenders for such freighting as they required from those railway points into the interior. It was represented to me that the combination of demand for supplying the goods, and for the freighting to the remote parts of the interior, practically prevented a great many persons from tendering who could well calculate on getting terms from the railway companies, etc., for delivery at such points as Regina, and some other points, and therefore largely to increase the area of competition for the goods supplied to any point of railway. But if the Government, knowing what goods are required at those points on the railway, asked separately for tenders for freighting such a quantity of goods from such a point, they would then get domestic competition; but I am informed that certain corporations and large firms which had done a very large business in the combined work of selling goods and freighting had a very great advantage over other persons, in the knowledge they had and the combined opportunities they had in delivery and in freighting, and certainly rendered it impossible for a great many to tender at all for this combined operation of delivering the goods to the railway stations and the freighting to the interior. I do not express any strong opinion on the subject, because I am not acquainted with the facts, but it seems to me not unreasonable to say that a good many large houses who had not connections in the North-West might make tenders for these supplies if the hon. gentleman would make them deliverable at such and such points on the railway, while there could be other contracts made for the simple work of freighting them into the interior.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That point, of course, has been raised and brought before the Department, and it would enable, perhaps, an additional number of men to tender for the supplies. But it would involve the necessity, on the part of the Government, of transporting the supplies from those different points. If there were twenty or twenty-five places to supply, the Government cannot make economical arrangements by which teams can be got to carry the supplies away from the principal points of delivery on the railway. There are many points far removed from the railway, and you cannot do that. They would have to organise some transport service, and if that system is introduced with regard to the Mounted Police it would be introduced with regard, say, to the Indian supplies, and it would grow to be a large transport service. It is infinitely better to have the present system, for parties to tender to deliver at the different points. Now, some men, perhaps, may be thrown out of competition because it does not suit them to make arrangements for transport, yet there is sufficient competition to ensure the articles now being furnished at the lowest possible prices. The competition is now sharp, very sharp, except in some remote places, where it does not suit people to furnish transportation. In those few remote places the Government are obliged to make exceptions, but on the whole, after consulting people who understand that kind of thing, it is thought to be more economical that the different stations where supplies are wanted should be pointed out, and that without anything further on the part of the Government, and with no further trouble, or expense, or necessity of any further arrangements, parties should make their tender and deliver the articles wanted.

Mr. BLAKE. I should be sorry to be understood as proposing that the Government should organise a transport service. All I suggest is, that the Government should ask for tenders for the delivery of goods at points on the railway, and should ask for tenders for the transportation of so many tons of goods to the different points where they were wanted, as two separate contracts, trusting to the freighters in the country for the contracts for the delivery of the various goods, groceries or other things, at the points on the railway. The hon. gentleman was to have given us, I think, some further information with reference to the cause or causes of these alarming representations from Washington and also from the Government of Manitoba, of the terribly disturbed state of the country there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not want to frighten the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. I believe it would be a great deal more satisfactory for both the freighters and the contractors if there could be some system arranged, such as suggested by the leader of the Opposition, whereby goods might be delivered at certain stations along the railway, and a separate contract given for freighting those goods. There are quite a number of freighters in the North-West who are simply under the control of the large contractors. They have to come to the terms of the contractor or they cannot get freight. Now, in regard to even the last tenders that have been asked for, some of the merchants in Ottawa here have come to me and asked if I knew how much it would cost to carry freight from Regina to Prince Albert, for instance. That was a point these merchants in Ottawa had no idea of. They said they could figure what the delivery of the goods at Regina or Qu'Appelle would cost, but they could not figure how much it would cost from those points into the interior. Now, there would be no trouble in dividing those contracts. It would be cheaper and more satisfactory. Of course, the present system may give the Government less trouble; but I think, as a rule, it costs more, and gives less satisfaction to the general public. It encourages large corporations to monopolise freights in the North-West. As a rule, only two firms get the supplying of the whole freight in the North-West, and I believe if there was wider competition that a better supply would be furnished, and at a cheaper rate. I feel satisfied, that as concerns the freighting, it would be more satisfactory to the people to contract direct with the Government than to be under the control of one large contractor, who had the supplying of all the goods, for unless they carried the goods at a certain rate they could not get the carrying of those goods. I believe there might be some system organised at the principal stations whereby goods might be delivered of a better quality and for the same money. As the First Minister said, at some points it would be difficult to get freight rates, and it might be necessary to make contracts with small firms, local firms, for the delivery of those goods; but at such points as Qu'Appelle, Medicine Hat and Calgary, where large quantities of goods are delivered, I believe it would be better and cheaper to divide the contract.

Bill reported.

HARBOR MASTER AT HALIFAX.

Bill (No. 148) to amend the Act respecting the appointment of a Harbor Master at Halifax, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE FORCE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of Bill (No. 140) respecting the North-West Mounted Police. He said: This is a Bill from the Senate, introduced in consequence of the late events in the North-West, when the Mounted Police, a civil force, and the militia, were acting together. There was no provision for their acting jointly, nor did the military laws operate upon the Mounted Police. The latter force were liable to be punished for any dereliction of duty only under the Mounted Police Act. It is necessary, beyond the provisions inserted by the Senate, to insert a clause providing for the relative ranks of the forces.

Bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12:10 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 23rd June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the Orders are called, I wish to make an explanation and a correction relative to an article which appeared in the Canada Presbyterian on the 27th of last month, and which was copied afterwards in the Meaford Monitor and other papers. The article is headed, "Dr. Sproule and the Clergy," and it reads as follows, the prelude being that of the Meaford Monitor :—

"The Canada Presbyterian of the 27th ult. takes one member severely, (and we think with good cause) to task for his utterances relative to the petitions against the Scott Act. The following is the article referred to: 'During the last two or three weeks a large number of petitions against the Franchise Bill have been presented to the House of Commons. Among others was a petition signed by Dr. Laing, and, we believe, several other clergymen from Dundas, and presented by Mr. Bain, M. P., for North Westworth. This petition was met, if the report is correct, and we have no contradiction, by the cry: "Christian politicians and other fanatics," Mr. Sproule, M. P. for one of the ridings of Grey, being the chief offender. Now, if these facts are correct, and we would be glad to know that they were not as bad as represented, such conduct is a disgrace to Parliament, a disgrace to the Dominion, and very especially disgraceful to the so-called representatives of the people, who were guilty of such contemptible and indecent conduct. If a gentleman of Dr. Laing's character and standing cannot lay a petition before the Parliament of his country without being wantonly, grossly insulted, Canada is not a fit country to live in, nor is it worth fighting for. Dr. Laing is not a "politician" in the ordinary sense of the word. If he is a Liberal at all he is a Liberal of a very Conservative type. He most certainly is not a "fanatic." Nobody doubts that he is a Christian. This part of the charge then holds good. He is a Christian citizen who dares, after thirty years of earnest work for the highest interests of his adopted country, to lay a respectfully-worded petition before the Parliament of Canada. The mention of his name is met with ribald shouts from men who are supposed to be the guardians of their country's honor and the protectors of the citizens of the realm. Things have come to a serious pass in Canada, surely, when the fact that a petitioner is a minister and a Christian subjects him to the sneers of the members of the House of Commons. The right of petition and the right to receive civil and decent treatment in Parliament is not a matter of party politics. No respectable Conservative feels himself under any obligation to defend such ruffianism as insulting Dr. Laing on the floor of the House of Commons. The man who would defend such conduct would be guilty of it. Probably nobody in Canada feels the insult more keenly or would resent it more quickly than the Conservatives in Dr. Laing's congregation. The Christian electors of East Grey had better give this matter their early attention. It is a Presbyterian this time, but it may be an Episcopalian or Methodist the next. The Christian people of East Grey can easily find a Conservative member in their ranks who won't call out "christian politicians and other fanatics," when the petition of an honored minister is laid before Parliament."

Mr. WATSON.

I wish to say that in the prelude of the Meaford Monitor, although composed of only a few lines, there is a mistake. It speaks of petitions presented against the Scott Act; the petitions had nothing to do with the Scott Act at all. The article itself, while partially true, is in the main incorrect. When the petitions were being presented a number of members were amusingly calling out various things, among others, "15 cents a hundred." When the petition in question was presented I said: "From a good Christian politician; surely that ought to count," in a jocular way. I deny having done it offensively. The latter part of the sentence I heard nothing of until it was made use of by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in a speech he made some time afterwards. I distinctly repudiated, at the time, having made use of the remark stated by the hon. member for North Norfolk. Believing that the denials would be in the Hansard, I paid no more attention to it; but seeing that it is not in the Hansard, and that it is going around the press, I thought, in justice to myself and the reverend gentlemen who signed the petition, that I should make this correction and explanation.

Mr. CHARLTON. As I have been referred to, I may be allowed a word. I think it unfortunate that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did not make the disclaimer at the time the words were uttered. The circumstances were, briefly, these: Petitions were being presented against the Franchise Bill. These petitions were received on the opposite side with derisive shouts and jeers and cries of "15 cents a hundred." When the petition signed by the Rev. Dr. Laing was presented, the hon. member for East Grey made use of the expression, "christian politicians and other fanatics."

Mr. SPROULE. I made use of no such expression as "other fanatics." I denied it at the time, and I deny it now.

Mr. CHARLTON. I called attention, at the time, to the fact that the right of petition was considered a sacred right to all British subjects, that the petitioner was uniformly treated with courtesy, that that courtesy had not been extended to the petitioners on that occasion, and I called your attention, when these cries were indulged in by hon. gentlemen opposite, to the language used with reference to the petition signed by the Rev. Mr. Laing. If that expression had not been used by the hon. member for East Grey, it is unfortunate he did not at once disclaim it.

Mr. SPROULE. I did. I said, at the time, I made use of no such expression.

DOMINION DAY.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. gentleman to state, for the convenience of the House, whether they propose to sit on Dominion Day, or to adjourn for any space of time. There was a series of papers presented at the adjournment last night, with reference to the North-West, extending from 1878 to 1885. Are these all the papers of date anterior to that of the commencement of the outbreak which are to be presented? It is impossible to satisfactorily deal with the question until the Government has concluded the intermittent operation of presenting papers on the subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that there are any further papers, except the various Indian reports which are now coming in. The intention of the Government is, if it is the will of the House, to sit on Dominion Day.

Mr. BLAKE. Not on St. John's Day?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is my day.

Mr. BLAKE. No; the hon. gentleman is not yet canonised. It requires a long space of time and the successful passing of the very serious ordeal of an inquisition with the advocatus diaboli as chief accuser.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Will my hon. friend not take that office.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will turn his attention to less pressing subjects than his canonisation, and let us know whether we are to understand we have now before us all the papers with reference to matters preceding the outbreak which he proposes to lay before us, and at the same time I would ask him to lay on the Table the report of the Mounted Police.

THE FISHERY CLAUSES.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Government a question in the same line as that which I put to them a few days since, a question which affects seriously the interests of the Maritime Provinces and to a considerable extent those of Quebec and Ontario. I speak now with reference to the position in which our fishermen and traders in fish will be on the 1st July. I have not seen the official notice myself, but am informed on good authority that the United States have announced the fact that on the 1st July the duties on fresh fish will be resumed. The other day we learned, for the first time, that negotiations were under way, with a view of securing a reciprocity treaty between the United States and the Dominion; also, that some steps had been taken with regard to an understanding as to what course should be pursued with relation to the fisheries of Canada after the expiration of the treaty on the 1st July. What I desire to ask of the right hon. Premier is this: Is it true, and I believe it to be, that the Americans have issued a notice—I believe the notice was one to the Treasury Department—informing them that on the 1st of July fresh fish and other articles exempted under the treaty about to expire would be again liable to duty? As there is a large interest in my county involved in this question, and as there are large interests involved in the Maritime Provinces, we ought not to leave to the last moment the giving of information to our people as to the condition in which our fisheries will be after the 1st July. At present, the fishing industry is one of the chief industries of the Maritime Provinces; every day dozens of cargoes of fish go from these Provinces, involving, in the aggregate, hundreds of thousands of dollars, during the course of the season. I am not sure that I understood perfectly the other day the explanations of the right hon. gentleman, but I understood the Government of Canada were prepared to suspend the exercise of any exclusive right we may have in relation to the fisheries until Congress meets in December next. I recollect last year it was suggested by myself, and the suggestion met the approval of the hon. gentlemen opposite, that in view of the almost certain repeal of the treaty and the possibility that no rearrangement would be made, it was necessary the Government should take a vote for the purpose of establishing some protection in regard to our fisheries. The Minister then did not accept the suggestion that was made, and I am not aware whether any steps have been taken to guard and protect our interests after the treaty expires. If it is true that arrangements have been made, with a view of accomplishing reciprocity, I am sure any arrangement which may be carried out on a fair basis will be hailed with satisfaction from one end of the Dominion to the other. If, as part of that, the Ministry have consented to suspend our exclusive rights over our own fisheries and to permit the Americans for the six months of the year, which have yet to elapse, to use these fisheries in the same way as Canadian fishermen, it is only right the American Government should suspend the application of their duties. I am aware they cannot do that without the action of Congress and the Senate of the United States. But at least they could do this: They could make an arrangement that, if the Canadians suspend the exclusive rights which they exercise and which they have a right to exercise over their own fisheries, the Americans should, if a treaty is subsequently made, refund to the fishermen of our country any duties they may pay between now and the time when that treaty, if it should be carried out, is carried out. I know it is only necessary to call the attention of the right hon. the Premier to the point. It is an important point; a point about which our people are enquiring constantly from me, and I think a public announcement should be made in relation to it. I think, also, that we should ascertain from the Government at as early a date as possible what arrangements have been made, whether any steps have been yet taken which can be made public, by which the public will receive an assurance that their interests are being protected and their rights are being looked after. They should, in the season of fishing, not be left to the last moment without knowing what steps are being taken. If $1,000 or $10,000 worth of fresh fish leaves the chief port in my county, as it does almost every week, sometimes every day, these men ought not to be left in an uncertainty as to what will be the result when their fish arrive at the American lines. This is a matter which affects the merchant, which affects the trader, which affects the fisherman. They cannot tell what price to give for fish. Everything is in an unsettled state.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman to confine himself to asking the question.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, then, I ask whether the hon. gentleman can give us any information on the subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not now in a position to give any further information than I did when the hon. gentleman, I think it was, brought it up last—I am not sure whether it was he or some one else. There is no re-imposition of duties by the United States. The Customs law of the United States puts a certain duty on foreign fish. That duty was suspended quoad the fisheries of British North America during the existence of the Washington Treaty. When the notice was given for the purpose of putting an end to the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty, it was done, as everybody knew, for the purpose of depriving Canadian fish of the free access to the American market. The fact of the termination of the treaty brings in the old law. Everyone knows that. There can be no surprise on the part of the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, or of anybody, on that point. They all know the notice was given for the purpose of depriving Canada of the access to the American market at the termination of the treaty. There can be no surprise about that. Everybody knows it—fishermen as well as others. Then, of course, we returned to our old relations. Canada has a duty imposed upon American fish; America's duties under the old Customs law respecting Canadian fish will be in force after the 1st day of July. I regret that I am not able to lay the papers at this moment before the House, as I mentioned when this subject was last before the House. The consent of Her Majesty's Government was asked to lay all the papers before Parliament. Had it not been for this late change, I have no doubt the answer would have arrived ere this. I am expecting every day, and am in communication with the Governor General on the point, that that permission will be given. The papers are all ready to be laid before Parliament the moment that assent is given. Some of the papers we can bring down, because they are not intimately or directly connected with Her Majesty's Government, but it would be highly unsatisfactory to everybody, to this House, to the Government, and, I think, to the hon. gentleman, to bring down any papers not showing the whole current of events and the negotiations which have been going on for what is now a very considerable time. I am in daily expectation, every mail, of that assent being given. The papers are all ready, the message is ready, everything is ready to bring down to the House at the moment that assent is given.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any probability that our fisheries will be protected by any extraordinary means?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is at all necessary or expedient that we should sever and discuss any limbs or branches of the one question. I think it would be a mistake, and would lead to false impressions, so I must decline to state, for the present, the position of the Government, until the House and the country are possessed of the whole of the negotiations on the subject.

Mr. VAIL. I am very sorry to hear the statement of the First Minister. If our people are bound to pay duties on their fish, and the Americans are at liberty to come in and fish within the three mile limit, we are at a great disadvantage. I think the Government should take the necessary steps to protect the fisheries, or should show they are determined to protect them, if the present negotiations are not satisfactory. I was in hopes, from what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said, that he was making arrangements, to fully protect the fisheries after the 1st of July. If we are going to allow Americans to come within our three mile limit and fish, while our people have to pay the duties on the other side, I think the Americans will be very chary, to say the least, about being in a hurry to make any arrangement. Of course, if a reciprocity treaty could be arranged, it would be the most satisfactory way of settling the matter, and I should be sorry to see anything thrown in the way of that, but we are bound to protect our fisheries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman had desired to destroy all hopes of successful negotiation, he could not have taken a better way than that which he has taken after the statement which I made; but, whether for some party purpose—

Mr. VAIL. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, then, for some purpose, and certainly not a common sense purpose, he has done his best to render impossible any successful negotiations.

Mr. VAIL. I do not see it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government, of course, desire—it is their duty, and it is their interest, and, even if the hon. gentleman has no confidence in the Government, he will, at all events, believe that they will act in what they believe is the best manner for the Government—to arrive at satisfactory arrangements with the United States. That is all I can say just now, and I think, after the intimation I have given, that it is not at all expedient or wise that the discussion should be further continued. As I have already stated, I hope in a few days—I had hoped, and I am satisfied that, if it had not been for the change which has taken place, I should have been able—to bring down these papers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. VAIL. Permit me to say that I had not the slightest idea of censuring the Government. I only wished to point out that the Government ought to protect our fisheries.

OMISSION FROM THE ORDER PAPER.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to call the attention of the Government to what I presume is an accidental omission. On the 11th June, I gave notice of the following question:—

“On Monday next—ENQUIRY OF MINISTRY—The total amount of temporary loans obtained by the Government from banks or other sources in Canada, Great Britain, the United States, or elsewhere, on the 31st May, 1885, and at that date unpaid; but not including savings bank deposits or Dominion notes in circulation; the date and amount of each loan, from what source obtained, and when payable?”

That notice was duly given, but it never has appeared on the Order Paper and has never been answered. I was away on the Tuesday that the notice should have been called, and consequently did not notice the omission. The notice had been given before, and in reply to the enquiry the Acting Minister of Finance declined to answer, stating it was not in the public interest. If that was the reason this has been passed over I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that substantially the same question was asked when the Minister of Finance was present, and an answer was given to it. The question was asked upon the 4th of March, and is as follows:—

“What is the total amount of temporary loans made by the Government from banks up to 25th February, the date and amount of each loan, and from what bank made, and the terms of each loan as to time—whether upon call or otherwise.”

In reply to that question the Minister of Finance gave a detailed statement of the temporary loans, that it is unnecessary to read, the aggregate being $12,500,000, and he gave the sum borrowed from each bank, and the time the loan ran. A subsequent question of the same character was put, which the Acting Finance Minister declined to answer on the ground that it was not proper. I stated then that the question had been previously answered, and that the only objection taken by the Finance Minister in reply to a subsequent question on these loans, was that he declined to give the rate of interest. Now I wish to enquire whether the failure to put this question upon the Notice Paper, given on the 16th of this month, was accidental or whether the Government did not desire to have it upon the Notice Paper and did not desire to answer it.

Mr. BOWELL. The Government had nothing to do, directly or indirectly, with the appearance or non-appearance of the notice upon the Paper. I had not heard that the notice had been left off the Paper, and hence had no knowledge of it beyond seeing the notice in the Votes and Proceedings. It is quite true as the hon. gentleman says, that when the Finance Minister was present he gave an answer to the questions put by the hon. gentleman. Before he left for England he gave me the answer which was to be given to the subsequent question put by my hon. friend. From correspondence he had with the banks in Canada, and from cablegrams from England, he did not deem it expedient nor in the interest of the country, or of the Government, that the answer should be repeated. That is the reason I gave the answer that was given the other day. I can only repeat that I know nothing about the question having been left off the Notice Paper.

MANITOBA CLAIMS SETTLEMENT.

Mr. BOWELL, in moving that the House resolve itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 2420) for the final settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion, said: It is not my intention to occupy much time in moving these resolutions. They have been upon the Notice Paper, for some time; they are very full, and, consequently, require very little explanation. I may, however, briefly refer to the financial state of the Province of Manitoba in relation to the subsidies and aid which it has received from the Dominion Parliament to help meet the expenses of the administration of the affairs of that Province. I find that in 1870, when Manitoba was erected into a Province, they were allowed the interest upon a debt of $472,090, at the rate of 5 per cent., payable half-yearly. For the expenses of the Government and legislation they were paid an additional sum of $30,000 per annum and 80 cents per head on a population of 17,000, making a total subsidy from these sources of $67,204.50. By 39 Vic., chap. 3, in 1876, an additional sum of $26,746.96 was added to the above subsidies, making, with the interest, and the balance to the credit of Manitoba, an annual payment of $90,000, from 1876 to 1881. In 1879 an additional sum of $15,653.04 was added to the $90,000 granted by 39 Victoria, chap. 3, until 1881. The Parliament of Canada again, in 1882, made an additional grant for the support of the Government and Legislature, of $50,000 for ten years, and 80 cents per head, based upon a population of 150,000 souls, making an amount of $120,000. In addition to that the sum of $15,000 was given in lieu of the public lands, making a total sum paid to that Province from these different sources in 1882, of $215,000 per annum. Since that time, owing to the rapid increase of the population and the large expenditure the Manitoba Legislature had to make in assisting settlements in the different municipalities, in building bridges, and for various other purposes, they found it necessary again to apply to the Dominion for further aid in order to enable them to assist the settlers in the various parts of that growing Province. People in the older Provinces who know the large expenditure which is made every year by the county and township municipal councils, will understand that in a new Province like Manitoba, which has been erected largely into municipalities, but with a very sparse population, it was impossible for the people to bear those local expenditures which are borne by direct taxation in the older Provinces, particularly in the Province of Ontario. As that Province has, to a very great extent, framed its system of municipal government on the Ontario system, the Dominion Government thought it not only advisable, but in the interests of the Province, and of the Dominion generally, to render it as much aid as possible. In order to accomplish that object, it was decided after a good deal of negotiation, to grant the people of Manitoba still further aid; and that aid is set forth very clearly in the resolutions now before the House. I might mention in regard to swamp lands, that an arrangement was made with the Manitoba Government in 1882, I think, but I am not quite sure of the date, to transfer to the Province certain portions of the swamp lands, conditional upon the Province draining them, it receiving a certain portion of the lands after they were drained, in consideration of the money so expended. After due and full consideration by the members of the Manitoba delegation, and a Committee of the Privy Council—the conclusion at which they arrived being afterwards confirmed by the Council—it was decided that the same policy should be pursued towards the Province of Manitoba, in respect of swamp lands, as is pursued by the United States Government towards the Western States; that was to transfer from the Federal Government to the State Governments all the swamp lands that lie in each particular

State. It was believed that the expenditure which would devolve upon the Dominion Government in draining those lands and making them fit for sale, would be very large; and it was thought that the Manitoba Government could take the drainage of those lands into their own hands, and make them a source of revenue, whereas the probabilities were, that the cost of draining by the Dominion Government would absorb to a very great extent the full value of the lands. For these reasons the Government decided to transfer to the Province all the swamp lands within its borders.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman state approximately what the Government expect the quantity to be?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position to state to the hon. gentleman the quantity, even approximately. A large portion of the Province has not yet been surveyed, and consequently we could not come to a correct conclusion as to the quantity. The second resolution provides for the setting apart of 150,000 acres of land for the establishment of a provincial university. These 150,000 acres are in addition to the school lands which have already been set apart by the Dominion Government for common school purposes. This university, as hon. gentlemen will understand, is to provide for higher education in that Province, and the grant is to be held in trust upon the basis of a scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Governor in Council. The third resolution provides for the granting of $100,000 per annum in lieu of the transfer of the land and instead of the $45,000 now paid them for that purpose. The fourth resolution provides for paying a per capita allowance of 80 cents per head upon an estimated population of 125,000 instead of a population of 150,000 as was agreed upon two years ago; subject to be increased until the population exceeds that number; and provision is also made, in order that the Province may receive the full benefit of the per capita tax, for a census every five years, instead of every ten years as in the older Provinces. And to still further aid the Province, the per capita tax will be paid until the population reaches 400,000 souls. The fifth resolution simply repeals all that is inconsistent with this readjustment of the debt and of the per capita tax and also of the granting of $100,000 in lieu of the $45,000. The sixth resolution provides for an advance to the Province of $150,000, chargeable to capital account, to enable the Province to construct and complete its lunatic asylum. These terms, as the House will observe by the sixth resolution, are conditional upon the Province of Manitoba accepting them in full for all claims up to the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Up to last Session.

Mr. BOWELL. I will leave hon. gentlemen opposite to decide that matter between them. What we propose to give the Province by these resolutions is to be in lieu of all claims up to the present time. Not only did the delegates accept these conditions, but the Manitoba Legislature has accepted the resolutions upon these conditions. The position of Manitoba will be simply this: The payment in lieu of lands is changed from $45,000 to $100,000, or an increase $55,000. The subsidy on a population of $150,000 under the old arrangement would have been $120,000. Under the present arrangement, by which the population is placed at 125,000, the subsidy will be $100,000, or a decrease of $20,000. These items make a net increase on the different subsidies of $35,000 per annum, and whatever may result from the sale of swamp lands, in addition to which a university for Manitoba will be endowed with 150,000 acres of land. The total income under the old arrangement was $215,000 per annum, while under the proposed resolutions it would be $250,000, in addition to whatever may be realised by the Province in the management and sale of the swamp lands of the Province. This is simply a statement of the proposed arrangement with that Province, and I can only add that I am quite sure that this Parliament will readily acquiesce in what is proposed to be done for the Province of Manitoba, when we consider the subsidies that have been given to the older Provinces. The rapidity with which that Province is growing, will soon make it strong numerically, and one which I have no doubt will become one of the most wealthy Provinces in the Dominion. If nothing interferes to prevent the rapid progress which is going on in every section of that country, we may look forward in a short time to finding it numerously settled by a people who, I hope, will be wealthy and contented.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman look at resolution 7, in which reference is made to an Act of the Local Legislature passed during "the present Session." That Session is over, and I would ask the hon. gentleman if the Act was passed?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, it was passed by the Local Legislature of the Province of Manitoba, and the assent was laid on the Table some time ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is what I said a few moments ago, and I understood the hon. gentleman to contradict me.

Mr. BOWELL. I apologise to the hon. gentleman; I misunderstood him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the present total income is $250,000?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No more?

Mr. BOWELL. No more.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the capital sum upon which the Province is entitled to receive payment of interest at the rate of 5 per cent.? You take the population at 125,000; what capital amount does that population represent? I should imagine it would be more than the sum the hon. gentleman stated.

Mr. BOWELL. The sum at 80 cents per head is upon 125,000 of a population.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of the capital sum.

Mr. BOWELL. The Province entered the Union with a debt of $472,090. That has been reduced, and the present sum to the credit of that Province is $353,885.96, upon which they draw 5 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not more than that?

Mr. BOWELL. No, that is the sum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is some special fixed sum allowed to them in addition—speaking from memory, of some $60,000, $70,000, or $80,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The debt allowed by the Union Act was $492,090; by 31 Victoria, Chapter 30, there was a further sum allowed of $79,351, and in the adjustment of the debts when the Dominion assumed the debt account between Ontario and Quebec, she was allowed $110,825.07 as being her proportion. But that is all added to this sum, leaving a balance to the debt account of that Province, on the 30th of June, 1884, amounting to $353,885.96, from which, of course, the $150,000 advanced for the purpose of a lunatic asylum will have to be deducted.

Mr. WATSON. This is a matter of very great importance to the Province of Manitoba, and to this Government; as however the settlement which was made in 1881 for ten years, was broken, I am in hopes that this will not be regarded as a final settlement with Manitoba, which is growing so rapidly that it is impossible to calculate its future needs. It would be an unfortunate thing for

Mr. BOWELL.

Manitoba and for the whole Dominion, if she should be crippled by not receiving the aid she has a right to expect. It is not necessary to state to the House that the Dominion has been deriving all the revenues accruing from public lands, from timber limits, and mining interests; and also that Manitoba has contributed largely to the general revenues of the Dominion. I might call attention to the instructions which were given to the delegates when they came to the capital seeking better terms for Manitoba. Apparently the policy of the Local Legislature was entirely changed from the instructions they were given as to what they should apply for. I will read the resolutions which were passed by the Local Legislature of Manitoba, as instructions to the delegates who proceeded to Ottawa. These instructions were given on the 21st of April, 1884:

"(1.) To urge the right of the Province to the control, management, and sale of the public lands within the limits for the public uses thereof, and of the mines, minerals, wood, and timber thereon or an equivalent therefor, and to receive from the Dominion Government payment for the lands already disposed of by them within the Province, less cost of surveys and management."

Now, according to the explanations of the Minister of Customs and according to those resolutions, this claim has not been granted, or only granted to a small degree.

"(2.) The management of the lands set apart for education in this Province with a view to capitalise the sums realised from sales and apply the interest accruing therefrom to supplement the annual grant of the Legislature in aid of education."

This is another demand which has not been granted.

"(3.) The adjustment of the capital account of the Province decennially according to population, the same to be computed now at 150,000 souls, and to be allowed until it corresponds with the amount allowed the Province of Ontario on that account."

Now, there has been a reduction with regard to this clause from 150,000 souls to 125,000.

"(4.) The right of the Province to charter lines of railway from any one point to another within the Province, except so far as the same has been limited by its Legislature in the Extension Act of 1881."

Now, I look upon this as one of the most important claims that Manitoba could ask of this Parliament. This right has not been granted, the reason given being that Manitoba assented to this arrangement when its boundaries were extended. When Manitoba received an extension of its boundaries, according to anything I can find in the statutes of the Province or the records of the House, there was nothing said on behalf of the Province to the effect that for an extension of its boundaries the Province would be willing to barter away its right to charter railways in the Province of Manitoba. We recognise that the territories acquired by that extension should be subject to the disallowance policy provided for in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract; but the people of the old Province of Manitoba never bartered away their right to build provincial railways, and it is a right they hold dear and do not feel disposed at present to part with for any consideration. Then there is the grant of 80 cents per head which is provided for. At present we receive 80 cents per head to be computed on 150,000 souls. According to this new arrangement it is to be computed on 125,000, which will be a great reduction on the amount we receive at present.

"(5.) The granting to the Province extended railway facilities, notably the energetic prosecution of the Manitoba South-Western, the S. Uris and Rocky Mountain, and Manitoba and North-Western Railway."

Two of these roads have been provided for by land grants; the third, which is now called the Manitoba Central, has not yet been aided. It is a road which, for its first 100 miles from its terminus on the Canadian Pacific Railway, will accommodate as many settlers as any other 100 miles of road in the Province, and I would take this opportunity of urging upon the Government to grant it aid, so that its construction may be proceeded with this season. The people in the neighborhood of Rapid City expected that the Canadian Pacific Railway would cross the Little Saskatchewan at that point.

It is one of the first settlements on that river; people have been cultivating their land in that district for years, and the Manitoba Central is expected to cross there. West of Rapid City there is also a large section of fine country, a large portion of which was disposed of by the Canadian Pacific Railway on conditions of cultivation. The result is that there are many settlers there who have been cultivating their lands for years and have been waiting anxiously for the Government to aid this Manitoba Central Railway by a free land grant this Session, as other roads. The delegates were also instructed:

"To call the attention of the Government to the prejudicial effect of the Tariff on the Province of Manitoba."

This is a point which has hardly been referred to in these resolutions, although the Legislature of Manitoba were unanimous in asking that this Government should remedy this evil. I believe the aid proposed to be granted by these resolutions is probably quite sufficient at present to carry on the Government of the Province; but we expect the Province will in the near future grow to such an extent that this aid will not be sufficient to sustain all its public institutions. At the last Session of the Local House it was stated that the amount the Government will receive this year will barely cover the expenses of the year. As the hon. Minister of Customs has truly said, the Dominion Government could not expect to realise a large amount from the sale of swamp lands, in that Province, as it would probably cost the Government more to drain them than they would realise from their sale; therefore it is impossible that the Province can realise anything from them. As this is the only portion of the public domain granted to the Province, I do not think this should be considered a final settlement. Political exigencies sometimes force people to do things they would not otherwise do. Being a strong supporter of provincial rights, I should not perhaps find fault with anything the Provincial Legislature does; but I believe that these resolutions were forced through the Local House, and I believe the majority of the people of Manitoba are opposed to these terms being accepted as final. On that occasion the Local House sat till 6 o'clock in the morning, with only eight men in the Opposition and a few more than that number on the Government side. I may call the attention of the House to the memorial of the Provincial Treasurer of Manitoba, presented to this Government in 1884, which will show the contrast between what he understood then to be the requirements of the Province and what he has seen fit to carry through the House of which he is the leader. One paragraph in his memorial reads as follows:—

"The provision allowed for our requirements being now so inadequate, the contemplation of our position, when a great influx of population will multiply the expense of Government, is a far from pleasant prospect, but a fact that must be faced. Indeed, a large addition to the population of the Province would be nothing short of an evil in disguise. The rapid settlement of the territory would prove anything but a blessing; to meet increasing requirements under present circumstances would be an impossibility, our revenue being out of all proportion to our necessary expenditure."

I think it would be very unfortunate if the Premier of Manitoba should ever be justified on any future occasion in making use of such language as this. He has expressed himself in the same way at public gatherings, and his language has gone through the public prints. We should be very careful to avoid giving the Premier of a young Province like Manitoba, to which we are trying to attract immigrants, any occasion to state to the world that a large influx of immigrants would only be an evil in disguise. He goes on to state:

"Upon the heels of settlement will follow the necessity for schools, roads, bridges, and public institutions, such as asylums, reformatories and gaols; for which purpose the increase of the revenue from the allowance of 80 cents per capita on every additional citizen in the Province, would not commence to be adequate."

Looking to the future requirements of the Province and the different municipalities being formed there, the Premier wished to guard against not being able to support or assist the municipalities in supporting public institutions. Referring to the settlement which the hon. Minister of Customs claims was made for 10 years, the Premier of Manitoba goes on to say:

"Referring to the observation made by the Finance Minister in his Budget Speech last year to the effect that the increase to the subsidy of the Province was intended to close any negotiation on that subject for the next 10 years, the undersigned would respectfully remark that, as the term of 10 years was not mentioned, either in the verbal or written negotiations on the subject, neither he nor his colleague, Mr. Larivière, accepted the increase then given on the understanding that the same would be binding for a term of 10 years."

On the contrary, very frequently in the course of conversation with the Hon. Mr. Pope, one of the committee appointed to confer with the Manitoba delegates, the suggestion was made that it would be unwise on the part of Manitoba to press for a definite settlement of her financial relations with the Dominion, as circumstances were changing so rapidly and it would be impossible to estimate with any degree of accuracy what would be the exact requirements of the Province. Acting on this suggestion the delegates did not press for a definite settlement. That was the hon. gentleman's advice to the delegates at the time and at the last meeting, for he was one of those appointed to have an interview with the delegates as to the settlement of those claims. I believe he was right in stating that it would be unwise for Manitoba to have a final settlement with the Dominion with regard to the amount she should receive each year, unless Manitoba was placed on the same footing as other Provinces by being given full control of her public lands. Manitoba is in a very unfortunate position, as she will have to rely entirely on direct taxation if her subsidy is not adequate to meet expenditure, and this would be very discouraging for a young Province trying to induce settlers and immigrants to settle in that Province. For those reasons, I hope this House will not ask Manitoba to accept the terms laid down in these resolutions as a final settlement, even supposing the Local Legislature has accepted them as such.

Mr. ROSS. When these resolutions were agreed upon between the two Governments, the people of Manitoba generally were satisfied with the terms of the arrangement, with the exception of the finality clause. There was some exception made to that, and I hope if circumstances should arise in the future, on account of which the money at present given to Manitoba will not be sufficient to meet the expenses of administering public affairs in that Province and the expenditure on public works necessary, owing to its rapid development, this Government will be prepared to deal liberally with Manitoba. There is one feature in connection with the finality clause which is of advantage, and that is, it will prevent one or more Ministers of Manitoba coming down here almost every year and begging for better terms. Such a course is undignified and in some cases not profitable. With regard to the swamp lands, I agree with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) that the Manitoba Government, in getting them, have not received a very profitable gift. It will take a great deal of money to drain them and put them in proper shape for selling; it will take years before they will be saleable, and after the cost of rendering them fit for cultivation is taken into account there will not be much left from receipts of sale. Judging from our experience in the past of swamp lands, they will not prove very profitable property. One respect in which the Government has dealt very liberally with Manitoba is the arrangement for having the census taken every five years on which to base the allowance. That is an arrangement not made with regard to any other Province, but it is due in our case on account of our rapid growth and development. The arrangement as to the approximate estimate of the population, to be made at equal intervals of time between each quinquennial and decennial census, save every two and a half years, is also a very liberal arrangement. Taking the arrangements all round, while I think this Government has driven a pretty hard bargain with regard to the finality clause, on the whole they are acceptable to the people of Manitoba. I quite agree with what the hon. member for Marquette has said with regard to the Manitoba Central. If the Government can do anything to aid that road, they should do it, as its construction will be of great advantage to a large number of our people.

Mr. BLAKE. The solution of this question of subsidy upon the lines upon which our constitution in this regard is based, is one of great difficulty, because those lines are not very scientific lines; they are not dictated by any particular principle, but by supposed adequacy to the interests and conditions of the four Provinces that formed the original Confederation. It was thought they would answer, and they were laid down; and there has been an effort, rather an unsuccessful effort, made to assume that they were based upon some principle, and to apply this principle, which was really inapplicable to other Provinces, for, as regards the other Provinces, we could not find the principle would answer at all. There is an excrescence here and another there, and something else incongruous elsewhere, until after all, if you read over the provisions with reference to all the Provinces, even the original ones, you will find in them nothing like symmetry, nothing that would lead you to believe the arrangement was founded on principle or even reason. I do not believe the arrangement will be lasting. I stated last year and the year before that I thought one of the questions we had to consider, and which ought to engage our most serious and earnest attention, was the question of the solution of the great difficulties which are involved in the grants to aid the Local Governments and the principles upon which these grants ought to be made. They are not now made on any principle. With reference to the proposal to take a quinquennial census of the Province of Manitoba, I wholly approve of it. In fact, when the last addition was made to the needs of the Province of Manitoba, I proposed that should be done. It was quite clear that, however measurably accurate the plan of a decennial census would be, as regards the older Provinces, which fill up more slowly than the Territories in the west, it was not applicable to the conditions of Manitoba, which began almost with nothing and swelled up to a very considerable population in a short time, and of which we had very bright hopes, which, still, in large part, remain as to its increase in the near future. It was quite clear that to put that Province in the same position relatively as to the other Provinces, a more rapid increase of subsidy than would be possible under a decennial census was necessary, and I am glad to see the suggestion I made in this respect acted upon. Another reason why exceptional conditions attach to the Province of Manitoba is to be found in the largeness of its area. It is not only the extent of the population of a Province, but also the extent of its geographical area over which settlement extends, however sparsely, that you must consider when taking into account the expenses of the Local Government. At the time that hon. gentlemen opposite were increasing Manitoba very largely, in fact, and as they believed, from the eastward down the neighborhood of Port Arthur, I pointed out that one of the objections to the course they were taking was that they were increasing the area of Manitoba largely without considering at the same time what the cost of that increase would be and what resources they should give to the Province in order to manage properly its enlarged area. It seemed to me you could not, even if our principle of provincial aid had been a sound one, even if our grants had been based upon a principle as applied to the other Provinces, apply the same principle in this case, for the conditions are different, the area is very large, the population is small and is increasing fast, and it is necessary to recognise these differences in estimating a reasonable subsidy to be granted. With reference to one of the questions which has agitated the Province of Manitoba, and as to which I do not know whether it is claimed by the Government that it is included in this final clause or not, I venture to say it is not a question which can be included in a clause of finality—I refer to the claim which has been made with reference to the right of that Province to have the same constitutional freedom in the matter of chartering railway lines within the limits of the old Province of Manitoba as the other Provinces have within their limits. That has been one of the great practical difficulties in the Province of Manitoba; it is one of the difficulties which still subsist. There are places in that Province of which it may be well said, as it has been said, that you may write over their remains the epitaph "Killed by disallowance;" and, apart from the question of disallowance, the strain and stress which were exercised by the Government of this country with reference to other railway enterprises, notably the Manitoba South-Western, in the direction of repression, was of itself of a character which has tended very largely to create the difficulties and the discontent which certainly have existed in that Province. It was but yesterday that it was my good fortune to have an interview with a gentleman from Manitoba who is not a politician, who is not one of a profession which mingles in politics, but who had a considerable acquaintance with the Province, and especially with the south-western part of it; and, grievous as I had believed was the condition of some of the settlers in that part of the Province, what he told me of their condition, attributable almost exclusively to this policy of repression and restraint as to railway extension, certainly surprised me. He referred to counties with which I am a little familiar, and of which the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) spoke the other day. He referred to the counties of Huron and Bruce, from which he himself had come in early days and with which I was familiar in the year 1868 and for some subsequent years, and he declared to me that, having himself seen the struggles, the poverty, the distress, and the condition of many of the settlers in the early days of settlement in Huron and Bruce, and having seen in the west as intelligent, as hard-working, as energetic, and self-relying people as those settlers were, instances of great and melancholy privation, they had been surpassed in south-western Manitoba. He had seen the grain in the stack for two and three years, much of it was rotten, because they could not take it to the market for want of railways. He had seen privation in the shape of rags, worn by those who ought to have been independent persons, and by their families, more marked than in the early days of settlement in Huron and Bruce, in south-western Manitoba. It was not merely a case of failure to get on to such an extent as people might have hoped to get on in a new country, but there was serious suffering in reference to food and clothing on the part of some of the people who were out there. I mean to say that these are serious things to consider, and that they tend to produce—they must have produced, they did produce—a state of feeling in that part of the country, which is in some respects its garden, which was a very unhappy state of feeling to have created in a country where contentment and happiness on the part of those who were in some sense the pioneers of settlement was an important thing to have developed. Last year, I say, hope was held out to these persons. Last year they were told by the Minister of Railways, when he was proposing the arrangements for the relief of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that this policy of disallowance should cease so soon as the road on the north shore of Lake Superior should be completed; that the company were prepared, and the Government were prepared, to concede that; and he assured us that the same measure of freedom which has existed since Confederation with reference to the other Provinces should, at all events as to the old Province of Manitoba, supervene from that period. We hear nothing of that kind now. I know not whether it would come too late or no. Certainly it is not too late to do some good, though I fear it is too late to do much of that good which might have been done had the happy hour been still at our command, had the fortunate period been yet available, the period when bright and happy hopes existed in that region of more rapid railway construction than we may hope for even to-day, with all the liberal, the beneficent, provisions which we are making for that purpose. But I maintain that we have to consider, as constitutionalists, we have to consider as freemen ourselves, we have to consider seriously the question whether this policy of exercising the power of disallowance in order to prevent these people building railways within the limits of their own Province in the same way and to the same extent that the people are permitted to build them in other Provinces, shall be continued longer; and I maintain that they would be unworthy of the position of British freemen if they were contented as long as those rights are withheld. As to the management of the lands, I cannot think that we have much to boast of either in regard to our general policy on the subject of the land in the North-West, or in regard to the execution by the Government of the trusts which in this regard they have asked Parliament to confide to them. The Province of Manitoba is unhappily an example in itself of a bad land policy badly administered. At the very start there were unfortunate circumstances, circumstances due to that misgovernment and that misguidance, which made us begin our actual connection with that country with a rebellion. It followed from these circumstances that it was necessary hastily to make arrangements for the creation of the then small Province of Manitoba, upon terms and under plans which were liberal in some respects, not truly liberal, but giving certain rights which in part were premature, and in part were ill-advised. They may have been necessary. I do not mean to say they were not necessary in the emergency in which the country was placed at the time the Manitoba Act was passed, but they were things that would not have been acceded to, in the interest of Manitoba itself, but for this prior cause of misgovernment which produced the results from which the Manitoba Act became a necessity. You have very large reserves, areas of unsettled lands in private hands, throughout that country, in the first place. Will anybody deny that these unsettled areas have not hindered the prosperity of Manitoba, have not hindered the prosperity of Winnipeg, have not hindered the prosperity generally of the whole North-West, that being the gateway of the country. You have again a subsequent policy with reference to certain constitutional liberties, given perhaps a little too early, in the sense that there was a very small population, but you have a withholding of others, you have a decision that you will give that Province the rights of a Province, of a sister Province of the other Provinces of the Dominion, but, while with the one hand you give with the other hand you withhold. You tell them for example that they are not to manage their own lands, that they are not to manage their own school lands. Now, I regard the school lands of Manitoba as in one sense a very sacred heritage. I rejoice that we separated a very large portion of that country for the purpose of giving a grand endowment for a free education to the masses of the people; but when you come to consider who shall manage the school lands, when you come to consider whether the school lands are best managed—I do not say diverted from their trust, but best administered—whether they can be best administered by hon. gentlemen sitting here at Ottawa, or by the Local Legislature and Government, I say, you must admit that the administration at Ottawa is a difficult business at the best, you must admit that it would be only with the best intentions and with a considerable amount of energy that it would be possible to avoid mistakes, and great mistakes have occurred with reference to the administration of the school lands, several of which have been the subject of discussion in this House from time to time as they went on. Well, then, what is the reason they are administered here? Because, you say, the people of Manitoba are not to be trusted themselves to decide when these school lands shall be sold, on what terms they shall be sold, and how the proceeds shall be invested. I maintain that that declaration, which is a declaration that you can do this thing at Ottawa better for them than they can do it for themselves, is a practical declaration that they are not fit for that measure of self-government which belongs to a Province of the Canadian Dominion; and if you tell me that it is likely that some mismanagement would have taken place that some jobbery would have taken place, that mistakes would have taken place, I ask whether even these sacred edifices which surround this hall are free from jobbery, are free from mistakes, are free from mismanagement. Now, the hon. gentleman, in supporting this resolution, goes farther. He proposes a thing that I delight in—a crowning of the edifice of education; he proposes that 150,000 acres of land shall be granted as an endowment for the Manitoba University—good. But I say the scheme and terms upon which that endowment should be managed ought to be settled between the Local Government and Legislature of Manitoba and the University of Manitoba. The question of education is a local question with which we have nothing to do. The disputes belonging to it are disputes which ought not to be brought into this House. The question is one belonging to the people of the Province; there it should be solved. Since we hold their lands it is fit that, as we reserve lands for schools, so we should reserve lands for a university. But my opinion is that the scheme, the terms upon which these lands should be held, they also being treated as a sacred trust, ought to be settled by the people of Manitoba themselves and not by this Administration. Well, then, in reference to the parliamentary arrangements, I have spoken of the original difficulties as to the lands, of the emergency in which the Government found itself plunged when they made the original settlement. But we have had land policies since that time, and those land policies, I do not think, have been very satisfactory for the Province of Manitoba. There has been a great deal of delay in the settlement of the land claims, even of the older claims recognised by the Manitoba Act, of which I believe some remain even to this day unsettled; there has been an immense amount of delay in the settlement of the more recent claims, and as we know from the answers which the hon. gentleman has given two or three times to enquiries made as to recent discoveries, there has been worse than delay in the management of the lands in Manitoba. Now there are several other questions to which I might advert but it is not, perhaps, necessary to do so upon this occasion. I wish to say with reference to the subsidy, having spoken in favor of the view of a quinquennial census and the intermediate adjustment, that the same considerations to which I adverted as distinguishing the Province, both in point of area and in rapid increase of population, as distinguishing its condition from that of the other Provinces, and necessitating special arrangements, apply also to the term, "it shall cease to be augmented at the population of 400,000." I say that whether you are able to justify—because I have never been able very well to justify the principle of that adjustment or that fixture—whether you are able to justify it or not with reference to the older Provinces, there can be no reason, having regard to the area, having regard to the population that is to fill that area, why you should expect that that subsidy will be more fixed when the population reaches 400,000. I do not think any of us can expect that some may wish it, perhaps, because we may feel that more and more, from year to year, this question of provincial subsidies becomes a more serious one for this Dominion, more and more pressing for a solution; we may wish to see an end, but as practical men, desiring that that great area of fertile land should be filled as rapidly as hon. gentlemen opposite say it is to be, we cannot expect that it will end with the 400,000, and I see no use in saying so; it certainly will not be so. Now as to the action of the Local Legislature upon these terms. In dealing with the question of British Columbia submitted to you last Session, I stated what I thought were the truer and general grounds upon which the Parliament of Canada should investigate a question of this kind in so far as we were obliged to look at it from a provincial point of view, namely, that we should recognise the representatives of the people in their parliamentary action in the Local Legislature as expressive of the views and wishes of the people, and I regard that as a very important factor in coming to a conclusion in this case; but I do not regard it as so decisive, as so conclusive as I did in the case of British Columbia, because it is almost impossible for anyone who looks at the Province of Manitoba, who looks at the present condition, geographically, of its population, who regards its electoral districts, to agree for an instant that there is at this moment any pretence of a fair representation of the people in their Local House. A rapid flow of population settling up one place and another at great distances apart has rendered it impossible to say to-day that they reach that result which we boasted we had attained, namely, something approaching to a fair representation of the sentiment of the people of that country. Now, Sir, last Session and the Session before, I alluded to the question of discontent which was rife on many grounds in the Province of Manitoba; and my hon. friend, the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) brought before this House a proposal that we should resolve ourselves into a committee to consider of this discontent, to consider of these complaints, to consider of these grievances, with a view of remedying them. The statement of hon. gentlemen opposite has always been that Manitoba was really contented, that the people were really satisfied, that there were but a few agitators who, for political purposes, were creating a sort of tempest in a teapot, but who were unable to create any real sentiment of discontent amongst the people of Manitoba, I say that was not an accurate statement of the condition of things in that Province, I say that it is not an accurate statement now. The people of that Province, so far, at any rate, as the recent immigration is concerned, are people who have gone very largely from the Province in which this Chamber is, and they are people accustomed to the municipal institutions, to the provincial institutions, to the Dominion institutions with which we are all familiar. They went there, many of them, having sold their farms at home, to better their condition; they went there with the expectation and hope, the great bulk of them, not that by some fortunate strike or speculation they would achieve wealth, but that they would achieve wealth in the exercise of their vocation as farmers, very much more rapidly, from the great fertility of that soil and the speed with which a large acreage could be brought into cultivation. Being such as they were, it is not reasonable to suppose that men of that description, who wanted to work hard, who had worked hard and who intended to work hard, who felt that wealth was to be obtained by hard work under reasonably favorable circumstances, would be stirred up by the discontent and excitement aroused without a cause by political agitators. It was not so. You could not do that any more with the men of that Province than with the men of the Province from which they came, and with whose general sentiment they were imbued. The Prime Minister, the members of the Government, and the Legislature of Manitoba, re-echoed the discontent. Still we heard statements from ministerialists repeated time and again that there was no real discontent in the Province, that everything was serene and happy. I do not pretend to say that all the grounds of discontent were justifiable grounds. It is the case in that country, in most countries, in fact in all countries I know of, that where an agitation sets in it is based on some well founded grievance, and that very circumstance forms the nucleus of grievances which are set up, perhaps not so well founded, and demands which are made perhaps exorbitant. That may have been the case in Manitoba; but I say that though some of these demands may perhaps have been couched in extravagant terms, yet they were real and substantial grievances. I trust the measure which is now before us may tend to a very considerable extent to allay that discontent, and that the Province of Manitoba may set out, after the very serious and severe experience which it has had of difficulty and depression and adversity, upon a fresh career of prosperity. But my impression is that if that is to be the case there must be an earlier, franker and more liberal recognition of the existing grounds of discontent than has taken place hitherto in the history of the relations of that Province to the Dominion, and there must be a more ardent effort to recognise the character of the problem which this Government has to solve in dealing more than a thousand miles off with questions of minor and local importance; there must be, I say, a more earnest effort to grasp the nature of the problem which is to be solved, and then there must be a more earnest endeavor to work it out.

Mr. Ross.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has made a speech of some length, and his speech is in some respects liable to the reproach he threw out the other day. He has ingeniously commingled the question of individual discontent with the question before the House. The question before the House has not the most remote connection with individual discontent—with parties who say they did not get their patents soon enough; that rights with respect to claims have not been recognised; with half-breed grievances which are said not to have received full consideration. Those things have nothing to do with the present question. The present question is simply this, a settlement of the terms on which the Government of Manitoba as a Government should deal with the Dominion Government and the Dominion Parliament as such. The two questions have no connection; but the hon. gentleman has brought them in by the ear, that is to say he has so far merely muddled up the question now before the House, which is whether these terms are reasonable, equitable and just, or whether they are lavish and too generous or too restrictive. No doubt we shall have to discuss fully before the blessing of prorogation comes to us the claims of every individual dissatisfied settler, every dissatisfied speculator, and every dissatisfied person who went to the North-West and who failed in getting all his expectations realised—no doubt we shall have that discussion at some future time. But it has nothing to do with the question before the House. The hon. gentleman ingeniously brought it in. He had to make a speech on the resolutions, so he took up individual discontent, and I must say he made the most of it. He said he saw a gentleman—no doubt he was a very intelligent and reliable gentleman—who came from Huron or North Bruce, perhaps he came from both, and that person told him that great as was the distress in Huron and Bruce it was insignificant compared with the distress suffered by the people of Southern Manitoba; that they were without food and without clothing,—

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—that they were ragged and unable to obtain food. Yet, in the next breath, the hon. gentleman told us that the people had stacks of wheat for four years which they could not bring to market. He said they had abundant crops which they were not able to send to market; and yet they were without food or clothing. There is an old saying that some people are so unreasonable that they want better bread than wheat bread. Those people had the best wheat in the world, the Manitoba hard wheat, and plenty of it; there was no market, says the hon. gentleman, and yet they allowed it to rot in the stack while they and their children starved, while all they had to do was to grind it and eat it. That is one specimen of the many exaggerations that come to us from that Province, and of which the hon. gentleman has made himself a very able and willing exponent. Then the hon. gentleman said that wheat was $1 a bushel; that the people could not get enough out of the crops to obtain clothing for themselves and their children. That statement bears its own reputation on the face of it; it is absurd and childish; and I am sorry the hon. gentleman should have put credence in the statement of a disappointed man, who felt disappointed because he did not happen to have a railway running through his barnyard. The hon. gentleman says there was great discontent about the disallowance of the railway charter. I believe if every charter had been allowed from the beginning not one of the railways so chartered would have been built. Why we have had the Canadian Pacific Railway with its enormous subsidies of land, according to the view of the hon. gentleman, unable to build branch railways. Yet the hon. gentleman believes that if the Legislature of Manitoba had been allowed to pass railway Acts ad libitum, the very fact of passing those Acts would have caused the lines to be constructed. Not one would have been constructed. Then the hon. gentleman said the Government had been treading on the rights of freemen, and if they had been freemen worthy of the name they would have resisted. How? A la Riel! Does the hon. gentleman propose that? For he says if they had been worthy of the name of freemen they would have resisted. If there had been one, or two, or three at the utmost of the local Acts disallowed, we have certainly been rather lavish in passing railway Acts here, not only in passing them here, but in granting the companies large land subsidies. Notwithstanding all that assistance, whether the companies are chartered under a Dominion or a provincial charter, there is no railway building worthy of the name. There is the Canadian Pacific Railway building in consequence of the enormous grants we have made. There is the North-Western struggling painfully, and it has at last built 80 miles. I am told that Mr. Pugsley and the Long Lake Company have graded a few miles, and that there are 50 miles of the South-Western Railway built; and that is the extent of the railway construction in the country. But that the exercise of the power of disallowance has in any way retarded railway construction, I do not believe, and the facts distinctly show that it has had no effect whatever.

Mr. MILLS. Why exercise it then?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says, why exercise it? In the first place, the Parliament of Canada passed an Act granting certain powers and privileges, with certain conditions, connected with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Government and Parliament are bound to carry out that arrangement. It was under the conditions specified in the Act establishing the Canadian Pacific Railway, that that railway was fixed, that that step was taken, that the road is now built; and it would be a breach of faith if that charter was broken without the consent of the shareholders, and without an Act of Parliament to repeal those privileges. The hon. gentleman says that Sir Charles Tupper in his place last Session said that the power of disallowance was not going to be exercised and that the company did not care for it any more. Well, I do not think that since that time, there has been a single disallowance. I really do not at this moment know whether there has been any Act of the Local Legislature granting new charters; but at all events, there has been no disallowance.

Mr. WATSON. There has been a refusal to grant charters by this Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman coming from that part of the country evidently thinks this is an absolute Government here. The Government have refused no charters; the Government have disallowed no charters; the railway committee of this House composed of the representatives of the people, have in their discretion allowed some Bills and thrown out others; and though I am nominally a member of that committee I was not present this Session, and I was present but once last year, at the meetings of that committee. The hon. gentleman must not confound the Acts of Parliament, the Acts of representatives of the people, with the Acts of the Government. The Government have not disallowed any Acts. I presume from the hon. gentleman's remark that the representatives of the people in the Railway Committee have refused to report favorably on some railway enterprises coming from the North-West. Well, I think—

Mr. WATSON. Only supporters of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I am not a supporter of the Government in that sense, and I opposed the measure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) says only supporters of the Government. Does the hon. gentleman, as a member of Parliament, deeply versed in parliamentary lore, knowing the rights of Parliament, desire or insist that railway Acts or other Acts shall be passed by the minority? I thought that in Parliament, under representative institutions, in a free country, the will of the majority was the will of the people, and if the will of the people returned a majority in favor of the Government, the hon. gentleman may be sorry that he is in the minority, but it cannot be helped; and the very statement that a majority of the House, a majority on the Railway Committee, threw out any Bill whatever, shows that according to the will of the representatives of the people, that Bill was a bad one and one which should not be passed. With regard to the question of disallowance, that power can only be exercised, so far as it is obligatory upon the Government, under the terms of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter. But long before that time, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, there were railway charters applied for to Parliament, which came before the Railway Committee of that day, and my friend from East York, then at the head of the Government, objected to several charters and very properly objected to them. The hon. gentleman, as exponent of that majority, leading that majority, in the Railway Committee, objected very properly to several projected Bills which would be adverse, which would be hostile, to the prospects of the Canadian Pacific Railway in which we were all interested, in which both parties were interested as representing the whole people of Canada. The hon. gentleman objected to those charters, and the Government of the present day, following the same sensible course, when the Canadian Pacific Railway was struggling faithfully with its great undertaking—the Government would not allow its credit to be affected, its prospects to be marred, and its trade to be led away to foreign channels, long before its road was constructed, and before it had a fair chance of competing for the great trade of the North-West. I say that the policy of the late Government and the present Government have been identical in principle in that regard, although in particular instances we might not exactly look with the same view upon a particular measure. My hon. friend from East York might say for instance—I do not say it is so—but he might say as to a particular enterprise: I do not believe that will hurt the Canadian Pacific Railway. I might have a different view; that might possibly be the case; I am not at all aware that it is the case, but I am supposing that probably such a contingency might arise. But at all events the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman when leading the majority of the Railway Committee of his day, was the same principle which has been laid down ever since, and has been supported by this Parliament. Now, to come to the points mentioned by the hon. gentleman as to these resolutions. By the way, the hon. gentleman stated that there were large reserves made by the Government in Manitoba which are greatly injuring Winnipeg or the rest of the Province. I really do not understand what he meant; I do not know of such reserves. The hon. gentleman referred to the school lands which are not included in these clauses; he brought it in incidentally as being connected with the appropriation for the endowment of a university for Manitoba. He says it was very improper; he thought it was contrary to first principles, that the school lands of Manitoba should not be handed over to the Local Legislature. Now, I believe it is the belief of the great mass of the people there, that the lands should not be handed over to the small population which now occupies a small portion of Manitoba. There has been a strong pressure, a strong statement, from almost every great interest in Manitoba, that those lands at present, are safer in the hands of the Dominion Government, which has no interest whatever, except to preserve them, to make a grand endowment for the benefit of the future people of that Province. It is known that Manitoba, as a young Province, has been impecunious; it is known that it has been in great pecuniary straits; the fact of its coming to this Parliament year after year to be relieved shows that it has been suffering under pecuniary straits, and the people felt that if these lands were put in the market the proceeds would be used to relieve the straits of the Province; and from the present Government of Manitoba there has been no pressure or remonstrance against these lands being treated, as they are now being treated, as a sacred trust for the future population of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman says that those school lands have been dealt with by the Dominion Government without the consent of or consultation with the Manitoba Government.

Mr. BLAKE. No, I did not. I said they had been unwisely managed in several respects.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the only instance of un wisdom I am aware of was when the Dominion Government consulted the Government of the Province of Manitoba. In every case we have desired to ask the consent and the advice of the Government of Manitoba with respect to the disposal of these lands. At the time the boom, which has so often been referred to, was at its height, and was shortly to fall and become a depression as deep as the elevation had been high, the Dominion Government thought it would be well to put considerable tracts of the school lands within the area where the boom existed into the market. They were advertised and were about to be sold, when the Manitoba Government protested. They desired that the sale should be delayed; they said the prices were not sufficient. The consequence was—as the Government here naturally thought they were the best judges—that the lands were withdrawn from sale. Down went the price of lands, and they have never been sold since. There would have been a large and profitable sale made. My hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, reminds me that the local school commissioners also asked that the sale should be postponed. From the general idea, the craze, that had got into people's minds that the land would not only be covered with gold, but with gold coins laid edge-ways, they protested against these lands being sold, and they have not been sold since. Now, the practice of the Department is this: Year after year, they consult the Local Government as to what lands they think ought to be put into the market, and what ought to be the minimum price. They desire, and have always desired, to take that Government's best opinion; but they have kept these lands from being played at pitch and toss in a small Legislature, representing only a small part of the Province of Manitoba, and more alive to the present interests of the Province than the future advantages of their children and their children's children for future generations. I need not say anything about the university grant, although the hon. gentleman objects that it should be left altogether to the Provincial Government and Legislature. The Provincial Government and the Provincial Legislature both approve of this arrangement; the university authorities approve of it, and are exceedingly anxious that matters should be as they are provided for in this resolution. That university, from my point of view, is happily situated, because there the question of religious differences does not arise at all; the Catholic and the Anglican bishops are both members of the common governing body of that university, and this endowment, a very fair and considerable one, well managed, will, I think, be a profitable endowment for that university. It is being dealt with under these resolutions by an arrangement between the Dominion and the Provincial Governments, with the sanction of the Provincial Legislature, and I believe with the sanction of the Dominion Legislature; and with all these sanctions, what can be said against this arrangement? It is a sensible one, it meets with the approbation of everybody concerned, and the hon. gentleman endeavors to raise an abstract point in connection with this question. I shall not say anything more with reference to the statement about the discontent as to the settlement of land claims. I believe there has been a more speedy settlement of these claims, a more speedy issue of patents, a larger amount of land surveyed, and more prompt action, than will be found to have been the case in the neighboring Republic, notwithstanding its extensive organisation and its experience of many years; and I believe we have the admission of the American authorities that, on the whole, our system is more prompt and equitable than theirs. Whether that be so or not, that has nothing to do with these resolutions. They speak for themselves, and as they have been satisfactory to the Legislature and the Government of Manitoba, so I am satisfied they will be readily sanctioned by this Parliament. My hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Ross) spoke of the last clause, which relates to this being the final settlement of all the questions between the Dominion and Manitoba. Well, that is not so; it does not read in that way. The settlement of last year was so; it was to be the final settlement of all questions. The hon. member for West Durham cannot object to that provision being put in, for if I remember aright, at the time of the better terms between the Dominion and Nova Scotia, he objected to the constitutionality of the better terms altogether, and when that view was overruled, fortunately for Nova Scotia, he insisted that a clause should be inserted, and it was inserted, declaring that they should be a final settlement of all matters between Nova Scotia and the Dominion. Well, I do not think, as I told Mr. Norquay, that the Province of Nova Scotia suffered much from that condition, and I said: I am quite sure, even with that condition, the Province of Manitoba will not suffer more than its sister Province of Nova Scotia did. But, as the question has been raised by a factious Opposition—and there are such things as Oppositions and factions in Manitoba—we do not provide that this shall be a final settlement of all questions between Manitoba and the Dominion. But there are certain questions under discussion—the swamp lands, for instance, and the university question—and these resolutions merely affirm that they shall be a final settlement of these questions. They were to settle those questions which were under discussion, but not other questions which the future of the country could only develop. The several clauses in these resolutions will be discussed fully in committee, and therefore I see no advantage in going into them ad seriatim now. The resolutions have been drawn with great care, and they are, I believe, very liberal. The terms in the original Manitoba Act were satisfactory to the then people of Manitoba. The arrangement of 45 Victoria was satisfactory to the Government of the day; but by the Opposition, which I must say was an unreasoning one, one of those conditions was objected to, not on the ground of insufficiency, but on the ground that they should be final settlement of all matters and that no further relief should be given. Had that clause not been one of the conditions imposed last year, when the settlement was made, the Legislature of Manitoba would have adopted the resolutions of that day. We have removed that bar, and have given, after full consideration of the matter, much more liberal terms than both the Ministerial party and the Opposition in the Manitoba Legislature were quite willing to accept at that day, if it had not been for this unfortunate clause of a final settlement of all matters which we adopted at the suggestion of hon. gentlemen, as in the case of Nova Scotia and the Dominion. When I say unfortunate, I am not sure it was unfortunate, because it has given us an opportunity of going over the matter again. We have given, perhaps, much more liberal terms than before, and I do not regret that those terms are more liberal. I think we can afford to be more liberal to that young and growing Province. I think this Parliament will adopt the resolutions, and I am satisfied, for our time, at all events, they will form a satisfactory basis of arrangement for very many years between Manitoba and the Dominion. Of course, there will be individual claims, individual grievances, individual charges of mismanagement, and those will have to be dealt with on their own merits, but they have nothing to do with these resolutions. I believe this House will adopt these resolutions, and will leave Manitoba happy and contented.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman who has evidently misunderstood what I said. I did not say that the school lands should be handed over to the Manitoba Legislature to be treated as they please, but I said the administration of the trust should be entrusted to the Legislature of Manitoba. I had no thought of suggesting that any of those lands should be diverted from the trust.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not so understand the hon. gentleman, and I do not wish to convey that impression to the House. Of course I understood he desired the lands to be handed over to the Province to be dealt with as school lands.

Mr. MULOCK. With regard to what has fallen from the First Minister with reference to the action of the Railway Committee in refusing to adopt the preamble of the Bill to incorporate the Portage la Prairie and Lake of the Woods Railway, I will inform the House as to my recollection of the occurrence in committee with regard to the Bill. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) supported that Bill, and in support of it read an extract from Hansard setting forth the assurances given to the House that as soon as the railway was completed on the north shore, the Government would not feel bound any longer to refuse to allow railways to be built running to the border. The acting Minister of Railways, who was present at the Railway Committee, opposed the grant of the charter to the Portage la Prairie Railway, and argued for some time on the merits of the Bill itself. There was for a while some difference of opinion in the committee as to whether the Government opposed the grant of a charter or not, and so long as that doubt existed it seemed to be an open question to be dealt with on its pure merits. The acting Minister of Railways, having spoken rather strongly—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not allowed to refer to what has taken place in the committee.

Mr. MULOCK. There was a question as to whether it was the policy of the Government or the individual opinion of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. SPEAKER. That cannot be referred to here.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The First Minister discussed what took place in committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. He said he was not present at it, and could not have discussed it.

Mr. MULOCK. Surely the Government cannot escape responsibility for the action of the Government in the Railway Committee. Supposing a member of the Government should appear before the Railway Committee and say it is the policy of the Government, as it is my policy, not to grant this particular charter. The Government could not escape the responsibility of the committee because the action of the committee resulted in the preamble not being adopted and the Bill being disallowed. It is another way by which the Government can accomplish from what perhaps they would shrink from doing in the House. It is quite clear to every hon. gentleman what occurred on that occasion. The country knows well that on that occasion the acting Minister of Railways stated what the policy was.

Mr. SPEAKER. If my ruling is wrong, it must be overruled by a vote of the House. I have ruled that what took place in committee cannot be referred to here, except on the report of the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The First Minister referred to my having made a statement in the Railway Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has referred to what took place this Session.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There was a report of the Railway Committee showing that the preamble of the Bill was not approved of, and that came before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. There was a report before the committee showing that the preamble was disallowed. If that question comes before the House, the House has the right to discuss whether it was proper to disallow it or not, but the hon. gentleman has not the right to refer to what took place in the committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He has the right to discuss the fact that in the Railway Committee the preamble was not approved.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The reason was given, and that reason was that the Bill was not conformable to the policy of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has referred to what was stated by the Acting Minister of Railways in committee. That is what I rule is not in order.

Mr. MULOCK. I submit to your ruling on that point. Then I would simply submit whether I am in order to say this, that it scarcely seems to me possible for the Government to escape responsibility for the action of the committee in disallowing or in refusing to adopt the preamble, when the country knows that the Government advised the committee to disallow the Bill, that is the point I make.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman has referred to what has taken place in committee, and I do not propose to follow him into that, but there was a report made by the committee of the reasons for the rejection of the preamble of that particular Bill, and the reasons bring up the whole question which has been discussed here to-day. The question which was involved in those reasons submitted to the House had nothing to do with the policy or impolicy of disallowing charters granted by Manitoba to railways within that Province. It was held, I think in the debate on the Pacific Railway charter, I know it has been held in discussion since, that there is nothing in the charter itself which legally binds the Government to disallow any charter passed by the Legislature of Manitoba. I think the question of disallowance is entirely one of public policy, and not of legal obligation; but the ground upon which that particular railway Bill was disallowed was because of the exact terms of the charter as applicable to Parliament and not to the Government. The clause is to this effect:

"For twenty years from the date hereof, no line of railway shall be authorised by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from any point at or near the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall run south-west, or to the westward of south-west; nor to within fifteen miles of latitude 49; and, in the establishment of any new Province in the North-West Territories provision shall be made for continuing such prohibition after such establishment, until the expiration of said period."

It was held, in the reasons given for the rejection of that Railway Bill, that it was in contravention of this particular treaty between the Parliament of Canada, not the Government particularly, but the Parliament, and the Pacific Railway Company, and it was upon that ground that the Bill was rejected and the preamble declared not to be proven, and that reason reported to this House. The question of the disallowance of charters passed by the Legislature of Manitoba was a matter of public policy altogether, and the remark made last year in Parliament by the Minister of Railways was to the effect that, so confident were the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of their ability to control the traffic of the North-West country after the line was built north of Lake Superior and after a fair and reasonable development of traffic in connection with the line, that they were prepared to yield and give up asking the Government any further to disallow the charters; but that had nothing to do with the solemn obligation, no statement made by the Minister on the floor of Parliament could affect the solemn obligation, entered into by Parliament. In fact, so solemn was that obligation that, when the boundary of Manitoba was enlarged and the Province was made to include a certain portion of territory over which it had no control at the time of the making of this contract, it was found necessary to secure from the Legislature of Manitoba an acquiescence that this particular clause of the charter should apply as a binding obligation upon that particular portion of the Province which was new territory, and which, at the time the charter was passed, was strictly and entirely within the competence of this Parliament, and only within the competence of this Parliament, to legislate for it in regard to railway charters. The distinction is so easily understood that I am surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite fail to understand it. As to the future, there is no doubt whatever that the construction of the railway north of Lake Superior, that is the completion and opening of the railway, not the mere laying down of the rails, but the opening for traffic, as stated by the Minister of Railways last year, as he was authorised to say to Parliament, would justify the company in not asking the Government to protect their line any further in accordance with the spirit of this contract—not with the letter of it, but with its spirit. The spirit of this contract is in accordance with the policy of Parliament and the policy of respective Governments since 1871. In 1872, as I pointed out the other evening here, when railway charters were granted in Parliament for entering that country from the boundary, there were special clauses inserted that those charters should only come into operation by a proclamation of the Governor in

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Council. That proclamation was never issued by hon. gentlemen opposite, these charters were never brought into effect, and when, in 1879, the first Session of Parliament after the Conservative party returned to office, when the late Minister of Railways announced his policy in Parliament, not as the result of a compact or a contract or a treaty with any company at all, but as a matter of public policy, to secure the trade of that country for Canada, for Canadian merchants and Canadian cities and Canadian shippers, when he announced the policy to be that he would not permit any railway to be chartered from the boundary line, the hon. member for East York announced in the committee, and that has been referred to in Parliament, and may be quoted from the official reports of Parliament, that he entirely concurred with that policy, that he believed it to be the wise policy, and the policy which, if he were controlling the public works and railway policy of the country, he would affirm and maintain. You will see the distinction between the two cases. The one is that of a Bill brought to this Parliament, and, until after twenty years from the date of this charter, I venture to say that no lawyer will contend that we can grant a charter in contravention of that; but we can, and the Government can, and I have no doubt they will, in accordance with the policy announced last year, and in accordance with the manifest interest of all parties—once the railway is built north of Lake Superior, and there is an object in getting the American trade as well as our own trade over that line—allow Manitoba to grant as many charters as it thinks proper, as, strictly speaking, it had the right to do before, so far as this contract was concerned, subject, of course, to the power of disallowance which the Government exercised on their own responsibility, and subject to their responsibility to Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. In some respects I concur in the view expressed by the hon. gentleman. There is a manifest distinction between a railway corporation receiving a charter from the Parliament of Canada and railway corporations receiving charters from the different Provinces. The First Minister, a little while ago, informed the House that the Government disallowed those Acts of incorporation because they were in contravention of the terms of the Pacific Railway charter. I do not so understand it. The hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House and the First Minister, when the Pacific Railway contract was under consideration, stated that the Administration had no power to check Manitoba, had no power to interfere with the Legislature of that Province, and all those railway charters which the hon. gentleman has advised the Crown to disallow were railway charters received, not from the Parliament of Canada, not proposed charters, that could not be got through a railway committee of this House, but charters which were derived from the Local Legislature, charters falling within their jurisdiction, and which would, if they had come into operation, have continued in operation if the hon. gentleman had not advised their disallowance. Now, my hon. friend before me spoke of the dissatisfaction which had arisen in the Province of Manitoba in consequence of this interference by the Government of Canada with the undoubted rights of the Government and Legislature of that Province. What may be done here is an entirely different question from whether the pledge given by the Minister in reference to the Manitoba railways last year was such a pledge as would compel the Government to forego its opposition and the railway company to abandon the rights which were secured to them by the provisions of their charter. I do not pretend to say how that may be, it is not necessary to consider that at this moment. All we have to consider is the statement made by my hon. friend, that the disallowance of those charters had given rise to a very serious dissatisfaction and discontent in the Province of Manitoba, and that their disallowance had seriously interfered with the settlement of the country and with the well-being of the population who are already there. The First Minister said this was not the case. He said, in the first place, that these charters had been disallowed because the Government were under obligations to the company to do so; and, in the second place, that it was carrying out the policy which, he said, had been adopted by the hon. member for East York when he was at the head of the Government. I deny that; I deny that there is any authority for such a statement, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to point to a single charter received from the Local Legislature of Manitoba which was disallowed by the hon. member for East York.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman did not say so; but the hon. gentleman was declaring that the policy the Government had pursued, of disallowing these charters, was a policy similar to that which had been pursued by the Government that preceded him in office, and that there had been no change in the policy of the Administration in that respect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say anything about disallowance; I said the principle had been supported by hon. gentlemen opposite, and that the same principle actuated the present Government. I said nothing about any disallowance by the hon. gentleman from East York.

Mr. MILLS. I wonder how the hon. gentleman could maintain successfully that the same principle actuated his Government and the Government that preceded him, in the disallowance of charters, when the Government that preceded him allowed all charters to remain in force. The hon. gentleman said that these charters had been inoperative, even though they had not been disallowed. Well, if that was the hon. gentleman's view, why did he not allow these charters to remain in force? No action would have been taken, and that discontent which grew out of his improper and unconstitutional interference with the right of the Local Legislature would not have existed. Now, the hon. gentleman has declared that the observations made by the hon. member for West Durham, in reference to the condition of things in Manitoba, were a matter of ancient history, that they did not relate to the subject immediately before us. Well, Sir, there is no doubt that what the hon. gentleman calls the ancient history of Manitoba is exceedingly disagreeable history. Why, Sir, we have only to look to the beginning of the history. The hon. gentleman erected Manitoba into a Province in 1869, and he proposed to impose upon it an arbitrary system of Government. A rebellion was produced and a million dollars was expended in order to restore law and order again in that county. Then the hon. gentleman, instead of doing what had been done in the adjoining Republic, establishing a territorial government with a certain representation in this House, created an expensive and costly system of government, which was a burden to the small population living there, because we all know that at the time Manitoba was erected into a Province, with two Houses and with all the paraphernalia of a wealthy and populous Province, it did not contain 10,000 inhabitants. Then the hon. gentleman at that time assured us that this Provincial Government was necessary, that it was important that Manitoba should have this cumbersome system of government provided for her, because, he said, that such a thing as a territorial government was wholly unknown to our English system of parliamentary government. Well, Sir, it may be true that we have nothing in the British Empire called a territorial government, but we have colonies with certain representative features, and we propose to do with this colony that we established in our territory what the American Government do with theirs—ultimately to erect it into a Province with representative institutions. It was easy for us to do what had been done there, and to provide a system of government suitable to the population, with representation here, simple in its machinery, and which would be superseded by full representative powers after it had received a certain population. Now, we do not wonder that the hon. gentleman pronounced the observations of my hon. friend ancient history. They pointed to the serious mistakes the Government have made, and those mistakes necessitated constant change in the terms and conditions upon which Manitoba entered the Union, from that day to this. The hon. gentleman has said that there is no difficulty connected with the land policy of Manitoba. Why, there were colonisation companies established, land speculators were allowed to buy to any extent, the settlement of the country was interfered with and delayed, and the hon. gentleman, by the disallowance of railway charters, had rendered it almost impossible for settlers to get into many portions of Manitoba; and there are districts in that Province to-day in which the population are so far away from any market that I am informed it would cost them more to take their products to market than those products would bring after they reached market. Now, it is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that in a fertile Province like Manitoba it is impossible that the people can suffer from hunger, or that they can be without adequate clothing, etc. The hon. gentleman has said that they can take their wheat to mill and grind it and eat it. But it was only by eating it that they ground it; milling facilities in many places were wholly wanting. The result was, and is yet, that in some portions of Manitoba the farmers have been unable to take their crops to market, they have large quantities of grain still on hand, in fact, I have been told by persons who have written to me since this House has been in session, that they have ceased to cultivate their land, they have ceased producing crops, because they have large quantities of wheat on hand that they are unable to take to the market, and the result is, that it is utterly useless to go on cultivating land and producing crops for which there is no market.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). How many miles of railway did you build when you were administering the Department of the Interior?

Mr. MILLS. There were no railways reaching the country at that time. My hon. friend from East York was engaged in building a railway. We introduced a measure to establish colonisation roads, and if we had remained in office I have no doubt there would be many more miles of railway in Manitoba than there are at the present time. I believe the country would have been much better settled; I believe the right hon. gentleman, by the policy of meddling interference which he has adopted, has not only retarded the construction of railways but has seriously retarded the settlement of that entire country. The sale of timber limits to the supporters of the right hon. gentleman, like the hon. gentleman sitting behind him, interfered with the rights of the population. The hon. gentleman is not engaged in that business. He is not a lumberman; he did not go into that business for the purpose of furnishing lumber to settlers of the North-West. He went into it to make money, and he could not make money in that transaction except at the expense of the public Treasury; for every dollar that goes into the hon. gentleman's pocket in connection with that business would be a dollar abstracted from the public Treasury, either immediately or prospectively. The First Minister spoke about the school lands of the North-West, and declared that he made a serious mistake in consulting the Government of Manitoba; that, in fact, the school commissioners had advised the Government not to sell those lands, and a desirable opportunity of disposing of them had been lost. But of what does the hon. gentleman complain? He complains that there were strangers who went to Manitoba and he had not an opportunity of taking them in. He wanted to sell the land at "boom" prices, which were beyond the actual value of the land. I do not think the people of Manitoba care to prosper to the detriment of new settlers, so long as they obtain fair value for their land. It was not desirable to put the school lands at a very early day on the market. No doubt they will be made valuable by the settlement of the surrounding country, and as it is to the interest of the population of Manitoba that the school fund should be as large as possible, the land should not be placed on the market until a fair price could be obtained for it. The way to secure the value of those lands is not by speculating colonisation companies, not by creating "booms," or by advertisements describing the country as an Eden, as is done in Martin Chuzzlewit. It was not by that sort of policy that Manitoba or the North-West could be benefited. But what will give a permanent value to property in the North-West is the settlement of the country, the granting of lands to those willing to occupy them, the cultivation of those lands by the occupiers, by putting no impediments in the way of settlement, and by preventing the land falling into the hands of speculators, who seek to bleed strangers who go thither to settle. It is by the permanent improvement and settlement of the country that the school lands will have value given them, and it is not desirable that the First Minister should take advantage of a "boom" in order to obtain for those or other public lands more money than they are actually worth from those who may purchase them. The hon. gentleman has referred to the question of provincial subsidies. I have no objection to the provisions of the resolution. I think the general well-being of the entire Dominion is promoted by the well-being of Manitoba. It has a large and fertile district ready for settlement, the settlement of which will prove advantageous not only to Manitoba but to the whole Dominion. The occupation of those lands will increase the direct revenue, the Customs duties, will lighten the burdens of the Government, and while it will benefit Manitoba directly it will indirectly benefit the whole of this country. That being the case, I have no objection to these resolutions, and I do not think them so extravagant in their terms as that they should meet with objection on this side of the House.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The hon. gentleman has again referred to the charge of my having a timber limit. I remember being a member of the Railway Committee when two parties applied from the Province of Manitoba for charters for railways to run to the United States. When they came before the committee the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), then First Minister, rose and said: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). It happened years ago, when the hon. gentleman was First Minister. He said that they would not allow the matter to go any further, because if we built the Pacific Railway we must keep the traffic for the Government road, and if they gave a charter the Government must have something to offer to those who took the risk of carrying out the work.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is out of order. You, Mr. Speaker, have already given a ruling to which we all submitted, and now it is being deliberately violated. I do not admit the allegation of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL. How far does your ruling, Mr. Speaker, extend? Does it extend to proceedings in committee eight or ten years back? I was under the impression that the rule was that a member was not permitted during a Session of Parliament to refer to the proceedings of a committee during that Session, for the reason that the questions might be discussed in the House, and it would be only reconsidering the same question. What I should like to understand is, whether the ruling you have already given refers to proceedings of committees several years ago, or simply to the proceedings of committees this Session.

Mr. MILLS,

Mr. SPEAKER. It seemed to me, when I gave the ruling, it was with respect to committees of the present Session, because the report of a committee may come up for discussion this Session, or it may be under discussion, and what took place there, the arguments and reasons given, may be stated in the House. But what took place in committee years ago has, to a certain extent, become a matter of history. It has been quoted in the House, and is reported in Hansard. There is, therefore, a distinction between the two in that respect. References to what took place in Committee of the Whole are not permitted, and I presume the same rule applies to committees; but the rule has reference to proceedings during the same Session, I think.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). At the time the hon. gentleman disallowed that Bill, he said: "I may just as well have it thoroughly understood, Mr. Chairman, that the policy of the Government of which I have the honor to be leader, is not to allow railways to be built to take away traffic from the Government road. He wanted to have something to offer to the parties who would build the Pacific road." There were no yeas and nays taken; the word of the First Minister was final, and the matter went no further. I ask whether that was not disallowing the Bills before the committee. And that was not done by votes of the committee, but by the word of the then First Minister. I hope that if I make a second statement with respect to the timber limit question, I shall be able to satisfy even the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). Mr. Rathbun, of Deseronto, a gentleman who employs from 1,200 to 1,500 hands, who carries on ship-building, who is the owner of several large mills, and Mr. D. Gilmour, each got on the Saskatchewan River a timber limit. They proposed that I should go and look at the limits and get a limit there for myself, and they would build at Edmonton a mill which would supply the people of that section, provided I would agree to look after and take charge of the business in that section of the country; and on that proposition I went up, and I spent time and money. Mr. Rathbun paid the Government $250, Mr. Gilmour paid $250, and I paid $250. And, Sir, as I said before, I went to the Department and I surrendered the timber limit, and I say that, so far as I am concerned, let the people of the North-West Territories do as they please with their timber; I am not going to spend my time and my money, or the money belonging to Mr. Gilmour or Mr. Rathbun. In that fine country they want men of energy, men who have time and capital, but I, for one, do not want to go. If I take care of what I have got in Ontario I think I have enough to keep me, with care and with caution, without going up there to fight or battle with any party. But even if I did get a timber limit, I got it according to the Acts laid down by Parliament. But what did the hon. gentleman do? After the people of this country, by a majority of seventy or eighty, denounced his Government and party, and drove them from power, two days before they left office they passed an Order in Council giving to Mr. Cook and Mr. Sutherland 200 square miles each on the North Saskatchewan, not on the 50 miles square, but in 20-mile sections, as they could find timber to suit them, and under that arrangement they might have taken all the timber on the North Saskatchewan.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think this question of timber limits is relevant to the matter before the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. I want to ask the hon. gentleman whether he gave up his timber limit in consequence of its being worthless, or if it was a valuable limit.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I would just say to the hon. gentleman, so far as the timber limit is concerned, that on the 1st of January, at 4 o'clock, I left Calgary, and drove with one Scotchman and a half-breed 40 miles during the night, and the next day 50. I was out nine or ten nights in the snow, and did not then get to where the timber was. I got just where I could see it, but the half-breed said he thought it was very good. That is all I can tell the hon. gentleman about it. There is this to be said to parties who are going for timber, that the nearer they go to the Rockies the better, because the Indians tear off the bark, which destroys the timber. So far as the present resolutions are concerned, I think they are very liberal to the people of Manitoba, and that the people of Manitoba should be pleased with them. I do not think any gentleman in this House can say that the Government does not desire to deal fairly and liberally with the people of Manitoba; and I believe those people will be more satisfied and better contented, and that the country will be more prosperous.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Cardwell declared that no alteration or modification could possibly take place in the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with regard to the twenty years' monopoly. Now, the late Minister of Railways made a statement in this House, in my hearing, that a modification would be made on the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, and that certain privileges would be handed over after the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in respect of construction of other lines of railways. That promise was made on an occasion when the late Minister of Railways was advocating a loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that his statement must certainly coincide with the views of his colleagues. That statement has been objected to by the present Minister of Railways. That plea was held out while the hon. gentleman was advocating the loan of $30,000,000, for some purpose or other—to modify the views of hon. gentleman with reference to this claim, and to procure their votes in favor of the loan he then was advocating.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I had hoped that the resolutions would have passed the House without any animadversions being made upon them by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I thought the last person to say a word against those resolutions, liberal and generous as they are, would be the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). There was no member for Manitoba that had a word to say against them except that hon. gentleman; and you would hardly think it possible after all, considering the position in which he stands, and the strong party views he holds, that he would rise in his place when the time came and follow out the well-laid plans of a certain party in Manitoba, who have their political arteries extending all through the Dominion, by objecting to the resolutions. We know that the Manitoba delegates have been here year after year asking for further subsidies. We know that the country has heard, year after year, of the demands by that Province for money to pay the current expenses of the Province; and, Sir, we know that the newspapers of the country, on both sides of politics, refrained from saying a great deal with regard to the justice of the demands which were made by that Province, or as to whether they were exorbitant or not. The Globe newspaper said nothing to assist these men in getting a larger annuity. But, Sir, when this Government, almost to the surprise of the delegates themselves, had yielded to them an annuity worth more to them than the annuities of any Province of the Dominion, putting them on a better footing to-day than any other Province of the Dominion; when they had given them, in addition to the $227,000 they had in 1879, a financial position which puts them above every other Province in this Dominion, per capita—I thought that after doing all this the members for Manitoba, to a man, would have been found endorsing these resolutions. I am happy to say that there is only one man in that Province who does not—the same man who gave his vote against granting aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which, if it had not been granted, would have left the Province which he represents here—or, at all events, he has a seat in this House for a constituency in that Province—would have left it a desolate wilderness, without any railway whatever. That same gentleman—at home a strong advocate for the building of that railway, at home a strong advocate for having communication by railway through the country—the moment that this Government offered the only solution which can be offered to assist that great railway enterprise, got on his feet, and, willingly or unwillingly.

Mr. WATSON. Willingly.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Then we have the evidence of private conversations, not with me but with others, in which he said it was an unwilling vote he gave against that loan.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I will not be turned from my argument by the hon. gentleman. If he does it willingly I believe he will live to regret that he gave such a vote or made such remarks in this House, on matters pertaining directly to the interests of his Province—to matters which would have helped his Province; but at the shrine of party, shall I say, because he had behind him another power egging him on to do that which his better judgment told him was wrong.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. WOODWORTH. These terms were offered to the delegates, and they went home and submitted them to their own Parliament, a Provincial Parliament; and after a long debate and full investigation on both sides, they were accepted by a majority of 19 to 7; and yet, after the Province had accepted these resolutions by a vote of two to one, we keeping our part of the compact, we find the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), a follower of the great stickler for Provincial rights, getting up and denying before the Federal Parliament the right of the Province of Manitoba to manage its own financial affairs. The Province of Manitoba as a Province had pronounced on these terms; its Legislature, with an unprecedented majority, had accepted them; and it does not lie in the mouth of any member from that Province, in the face of his own professions, to deny that it has the right to manage its own affairs within its own bounds, by agreeing to the passing of these resolutions. Mr. Norquay, in a speech in the House last Session, used these words:

"But with the present offer Manitoba would have $5.38½ per head, which was far in excess of what any other Province was receiving; yet they were told publicly that if this offer were accepted the country would go into rebellion, the Province of Manitoba would secede. Mr. Norquay here read from the Free Press an advertisement signed by the officers of the Farmers' Union, summoning a convention, to be held on the evening of the 31st inst. On this he observed that was the spirit in which it was proposed to intimidate or coerce the action of this House. He had never seen anything so subversive of free institutions. If such was the spirit of the people of this country it was time for honest men to see that they left it."

A large portion of the members of this Farmers' Union are probably very good men, in their way; but the motive power, as I had occasion once before to say in this House, is hostile to the existence of the Federal Government. This Union created all the dissension possible, and attempted to intimidate and coerce the Legislature of Manitoba from passing these very terms; and this newspaper, the Free Press, the proprietor of which was an unsuccessful candidate, recently, in an election in Winnipeg, protested against these terms, and attempted to browbeat the members of that House into ignoring and refusing to pass these terms. Now, I say the Government and the Legislature of that Province having accepted these terms as liberal and generous—unprecedentedly so—and as giving a better financial status to that Province, according to the Premier's own language, than that of any other Province in the Dominion, the hon. member for Marquette should have been the first man in this House to have got up and given his adhesion to them. They are a finality, says the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake)—I object to their being a finality, says Mr. Blake. Why, Sir, when Nova Scotia's terms came here to be passed upon, he took mighty good care that they should be a finality, and he had an amendment inserted in the resolutions to that effect. What is the matter with him to-day, that he does not want these terms to be a finality? In the long speech he made—and I watched him very carefully—he did not hold out to Manitoba any hope that he would give it better terms. He never said that these terms were ungenerous; he said they were a finality, and yet, a few moments afterwards, he said, notwithstanding your terms, they will be back here again. Last Session he denounced as unconstitutional and dishonest the giving of any subsidy to any Province by this Government. If he be true to his own professions, should he come into power he would not give Manitoba, or any other Province, a dollar from the Federal Treasury. But he says they will be back here, and that the Government and Parliament of Canada will give them more; therefore, he never expects to be returned to power. I believe Manitoba will not be back for better terms; I believe she deserves the liberal treatment that has been accorded to her, and I believe the other six Provinces forming this Dominion will be glad to give her this grant from the public Exchequer; but it is a poor, poor return, that a man with the great legal, forensic, literary and parliamentary abilities the hon. leader of the Opposition possesses, should stand on his feet for an hour trying to show that these terms should not be passed, and yet he dare not tell the public of the Dominion that they are too generous, because that would affect their little plan of political progress in Manitoba; and he had not the courage to tell them they were too little, because he knows he would not be able to make the speeches during the recess, if we ever get a recess, that he commonly makes through Ontario, and to tell the people we are giving too much to Manitoba. So he is between two fires; and yet I believe he is the only man in this Dominion who could for one hour talk on this question and say nothing about the main subject before the House. He told us about the university, the school lands, and political grievances; but the main question before the House he went by. He balanced the thing in the scale, and he said nothing whatever; he left it there, but he got his follower, the hon. member for Marquette, to be careful to denounce the terms. Why? Because the Free Press, the organ of the Reform party in the Province of Manitoba, had violently and personally assailed the members who passed these terms, and he would be wanting in his duty if he did not carry out the well-concocted plan and follow up, in this Parliament, all the attacks made on the Government by their friends in Manitoba. This is not a new question—it is sowing dissension; we have heard it ever since the hon. member for West Durham came to be the leader of the Opposition. The moment the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) ceased to be the leader of the Opposition there was a marked difference, as the waters of the Gulf of Mexico are different from those of the Atlantic. There has been one marked plan: show every Province it is discontented, and if you give them a subsidy, as you did last year, show them that that is an invasion of provincial rights; sow dissension in New Brunswick, in Nova Scotia, in Ontario—that is the baseball ground; that is where they are at home—sow dissension there; in Manitoba, be careful to have your Farmers' Union to sow dissension there; as to British Columbia, ask all the questions you can, and sow dissension there; and if the Government come to their relief and give them a grant from the Exchequer, be sure and tell them that if they give the other Provinces anything they are robbing Ontario. And if they do not, they will rise in rebellion. You will be all ruined if you will. You will be all ruined if you will not; you will be ruined any way. Take your choice; heads I win, tails you lose. Such a course of debate, such a course of conduct is apparent to the people of the country, and the reason hon. gentlemen opposite cannot win a single constituency from the Liberal Conservative party is because the people have higher, more intelligent, more patriotic and clearer political convictions than have hon. gentlemen opposite, the sole aim of whose political existence is not to help this Dominion, not to aid its progress and add to its prosperity, but to change seats and get into office. Had it not been for the five years they have spent in office they might have some chance; had it not been for those five years they might, with some degree of assurance, impose on the credulity of the people, by making these very long speeches. But the people cannot forget their record. I merely rise to give my adherence to these resolutions, believing it is in the interest of the whole Dominion that the Province of Manitoba, exceptionally situated as she is, with her vast internal resources and her promise of a great future, will well repay the Dominion, for this beneficent legislation. We must give her everything we can to start her on the highway of life and enable her to pay her way at the outset, confident that with the millions of people whom she will attract to her territory she will return to the public Exchequer not only dollar per dollar but dollars where we give her cents. I do not regret these generous terms, and I believe that the Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Norquay, by making the able speech he did, in accepting those terms which the Dominion Government have given, stands better to-day than he ever did. I, representing a small Province down by the sea, have a right to vote for those resolutions. It is my duty to vote for them, and I can defend my vote to my constituents. I can show them that I am helping the great arm of the Dominion, this great power in the west, which is going to give valuable aid in the near future in filling the coffers of the Dominion Treasury. In voting for these resolutions I believe I am giving my vote not only in the interests of Manitoba, but in the interests of the other Provinces as well. And as a lower Province man, I am not to be told, nor do I think it lies in the mouth of one of the representatives of the Province of Manitoba to tell us that this is a mere pittance, and should not be a finality. He, I may say, is the only man among hon. gentlemen opposite who came out flat-footed on this question, for though his leader went all round the question he did not dare to say what his follower said.

Mr. WOODWORTH.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman has put words into my mouth I never uttered. It is well known he is in the habit of doing such things.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I desire the hon. gentleman to point out where I put words in his mouth.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman said I said this was a mere pittance.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not go beyond a personal explanation.

Mr. WATSON. The arguments I used against these resolutions were taken out of the statements of the Premier of Manitoba. These were the only arguments I used, and the objection I have personally to those resolutions is the finality clause.

Mr. WOODWORTH. That is not an explanation. The hon. gentleman says I put words in his mouth which he did not utter. I defy him to prove that.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I do not rise to investigate the reason why the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) will not consult the member for King's, N.S., (Mr. Woodworth), as to the thoughts he shall think or the speeches he shall make, though we know his declining to do so has been a deep and constant cause of regret to the member for King's; nor do I rise to defend the hon. member for Marquette, for he is well able to defend himself, and my opinion is he will stand fairly and boldly before his constituents and meet their approval, when many others, like the gophers of the North-West, are hunting their holes. I rise to call attention to some remarks which fell from the First Minister. He did not understand how a man in the North-West could be in straitened circumstances when wheat is at $1 a bushel. Well, a few evenings ago I quoted an extract from a letter I received from a gentleman who has been six years in the North-West, and who states he has seen wheat offered at 25 cents a bushel without finding a purchaser. The First Minister said the only thing for these people to do was to thresh the grain and grind the wheat and eat, but he must remember that something more than flour is necessary to supply the wants of families of the North-West. Their wants are more numerous than those of people in the older Provinces. The condition of the farmer there is quite different from what it is in the older Provinces. The First Minister is, no doubt, familiar with the difficulties the pioneers of the older Provinces had to go through, but though of a different character, they were not more severe than those which have to be encountered by the settlers in the North-West. The settler in Ontario had first to clear the land, but this labor furnished him with many things of which the North-West settler is deprived. For instance, he procured timber with which to build his house, and he had no difficulty in obtaining fuel; so that while he was not able to produce to the extent the farmer on the prairie can, he had much less to purchase. Furthermore, in the majority of cases the pioneers of the older Provinces found employment during the winter months in lumbering operations. There was not the forced idleness in winter that must occur to a considerable extent in the North-West. If they can grow immense quantities of grain more speedily than the old Provinces can, it is at this very point that the necessity comes in for them to find the market for that grain and the facility for placing that grain upon the market. His resources are largely limited in that direction; he is much like the coal miner in that regard, who can have all the coal he wants. He will suffer nothing from want of fuel, but the coal will not supply him with other things unless he can get it to market. To a large extent this is the condition of the wheat grower in the North-West. Hence it is of the utmost importance that he should have an outlet for the wheat he produces. He has no other means. I referred to the settlers in Ontario in their early stages. From the other employment they were able to earn some money. From potash they realized some ready cash. Many of the best farms in Ontario to-day rest, in the first instance, upon the proceeds of potash. The First Minister has stated, too, that without any disallowance at all other railways would not have been built. On this point, from information which I believe is reliable, I entirely disagree with him. I believe other railways would have been built had it not been for this disallowance. If, however, they had not been built, it would, at all events, have relieved the Government from the responsibility. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has said that they have to wait until business is established along the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, to the men who went into the North-West five, or six, or seven years ago, five or six or seven years is rather long waiting; as I read the other day in a letter from a man possessing considerable means up there. "Our patience is exhausted; we must have relief or leave." Generally, on this question of the allowance of railways through the North-West, I can but reiterate the words of the ex-Finance Minister the other evening, that I believe that country can never reach the measure of prosperity it is entitled to until it has a free right to build its own railways.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the Minister of Customs will tell us what was the total demand the Manitoba Government made. I have seen it stated in the reports of their proceedings that they demanded about $450,000 a year.

Mr. BOWELL. Their demand is embodied in their applications, which have been laid before the House. I do not remember the exact sum, but they demanded the total surrender of the lands and the extension of the boundaries, running down to the Hudson's Bay and almost to the North Pole, and the surrender of the school lands, and the readjustment of the tariff as applicable to that Province alone. They did not ask to have it repealed or interfered with, so far as it affected any of the other Provinces. I am not prepared at this moment to state the total amount which they asked, but they consented, after a good deal of negotiation, to have the terms of payment changed to the sums which are placed in these resolutions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it reasonable to ask the Minister in charge if he can give me this information. I was quoting simply from the statement made in the Local Legislature, and that was that they had made a demand for about $450,000 a year. I wanted to understand this from the Minister, because it is important for us, in considering these resolutions, to know how far what we ultimately concede agrees with what they ask for in the first instance. I am not now expressing an opinion as to whether their demands were right or not, though I am bound to say that if it was not for the fact that we have absorbed all their lands we would be treating them very liberally indeed; but no one knows better than the Minister of Customs that a good deal of necessary work was defrayed in the old Provinces out of the sales of lands, and that, I presume, is the reason, and it is a very good reason, why we should deal more liberally with these people. If the hon. gentleman has not the exact figures, I should be glad if he would ascertain them before another stage. Who formed the sub-committee to arrange these terms?

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Minister of Railways and Canals. Finally, the greatest stress was laid upon the extension of the limits for the purpose of enabling the Province to assist the Hudson's Bay Railway, which they looked upon as a second outlet for the products of the Province, and they also laid great stress upon receiving all the lands within the territory. The reason why the committee and the Government did not concede these demands is fully set forth in the papers brought down. The large expenditure which has been made by the Dominion Government in aid of railways in that Province and the fact that they were pledged to the world that the homestead system should prevail in that country were considered of sufficient importance to justify the Dominion in retaining control of those lands. The hon. gentleman will readily understand that, when the quantity of lands given and promised to be given to aid railways are added to those which are given in the way of free homesteads, nearly all the lands will be absorbed, and anyone who considers the question for a moment will come to the conclusion that, with the large grants already made and the expense which attends the management of those lands, taking them over by the Province of Manitoba would be a source of expense to them rather than a profit. In the older Provinces these lands have not been given away in the manner in which they were or to the same extent in which they were in the North-West, particularly in aid of railways. It is true that the homestead principle is recognised in our own northern countries. The lands there were rough and they have not been settled as rapidly as they have been in the North-West. On this point I may be excused from making an observation on the want of railway facilities among farmers in that section of the country. Those who represent constituencies like my own, extending into the interior 120 or 150 miles from the frontier, and 100 miles from a railway, should not attempt to draw an invidious distinction between the settlers of the North-West and those living in localities like that. The northern part of my constituency consisted largely of free grant territories for a distance of 100 miles, and when I was visiting that section of the country, in 1878, I found farmers who had been there for ten or fifteen years, with 60 or 100 to 150 tons of hay stacked upon their farms, their barns full of wheat and other grain, and not one single bushel of which could they sell anywhere. I could easily give the reason for that fact. The lumbering industry at that time was stagnant, and the people in that section of the country were largely dependent upon that industry for their market. Now, those people had no railways and they have got no railways to-day; I am very sorry they have not, because I think if they had a railway running into the interior through those free grant territories, it would have the effect of settling up a great area of land now lying idle. There are a great many people there with their granaries full of the best grain that can be produced in the country, and their barnyards stacked with hay, which they could not dispose of, and yet I never heard anyone complaining particularly of that as a reason why these people should go into rebellion, or that there should exist a chronic state of grumbling because somebody did not go in there and build a railway. And when we consider that these people have been but a few years in Manitoba, and that they have far less cause of complaint than those who live in the new sections of the country in the older Provinces, I think we must admit that some of these complaints are unreasonable. The Government have shown a desire, not only to improve their condition, but, so far as they possibly can, to give an outlet to an enormous extent of country in that Province. That this might have been done before I am not prepared to say; but as the First Minister pointed out—and the House will excuse me for referring to a previous debate—we have been constantly enlarging our policy, and when one system would not accomplish the object in view, of constructing railways, we have increased the aid; and the desire of the Government, like that of every member in this House, I am sure, is to extend a net work of railways throughout that country as rapidly as possible, in order that it may soon be settled up, and I have not the slightest doubt that the Dominion will be amply repaid for any expenditure in that direction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend, in his last remarks, has raised, I fear, a tolerably broad question. My objection to the policy of the Government is two-fold. In the first place, I have the strongest objection to giving a monopoly to any private company. I have no faith whatever in any private railway company, or any other company having a monopoly. We know how it has been in the past, and the condition of south-western Manitoba is the best possible proof of the extreme inexpediency of that policy. Now, it is not solely in consideration of the interests of the people of south-western Manitoba that we have been arguing in favor of giving them help to build railways in former years, but because nothing could contribute more to the development of the North-West and to this whole Dominion than that they should be so assisted. However, I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that if we go into this subject very little indeed will be said about these resolutions. I want to get more information and some details about them. Now, I will call the attention of the Government and the House to this fact: When we had occasion to treat with the Manitoba delegates, in 1876, I think it was, we were obliged to overhaul their expenditure, which, I am bound to say, was extremely extravagant for so small a country, and we endeavored to induce them to adapt their outlay to their income. They did do that, to some extent; they reduced the expenses of Government, which were monstrous for the number of people whom that Government was intended to benefit; they abolished their Upper House and took further measures in the same direction, some at our own instance and some at their own suggestion, all for the purpose of bringing their expenditure within their income. Now, the Government is standing, it appears, to some extent, in loco parentis to Manitoba, and I would be glad to know if they went into any calculation with those delegates to see whether the income which they now receive is reasonably sufficient to enable them to discharge the duties which are cast on those Provincial Governments. In ordinary cases I do not know that we could fairly insist upon that, but in this particular instance it would have been an expedient thing to do, and I would be glad to know if anything of that kind occurred as between the representatives of the Dominion and the Manitoba Government. It would be important that there should have been; because, without at the moment entering into this question of finality, it is very clear that it is not desirable that we should have delegations from Manitoba coming down here year after year to ask us for more money and to show us that that Province is almost bankrupt, and that the great interests which are undoubtedly involved in settling up Manitoba will be sacrificed unless we make them further grants.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. McLELAN. I may say, in answer to the hon. gentleman, that in the month of April, 1884, I was present at an interview with several delegates from Manitoba, at which the Finance Minister was also present, and the Premier of the Province went very carefully over the expenditures of the Provincial Government and the requirements of the Province for local wants; and they agreed pretty well upon an amount that would be sufficient to meet all those purposes, and to develop all the interests that were considered necessary to be developed in behalf of the country, such as schools and the maintenance of education; this latter subject, I may say, the Premier represented as involving a very heavy expense, for the Local Government had been establishing schools, making liberal grants for that purpose in many districts. The Finance Minister, unfortunately, was called away before the negotiations were completed, but the basis of them was arranged before he left for England, in the month of May last. I know that the Premier of the Province was quite satisfied with the terms agreed upon, and I believed they would meet all the local wants of the Province.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did the hon. gentleman obtain any detailed scheme from these delegates of how they proposed to administer their funds? I ask that because we found it necessary a few years ago to insist on their submitting some sort of scheme. I know it had a very beneficial effect—at any rate, I was so assured by members of their Legislature and by gentlemen in Manitoba afterwards. My recollection is, that after discussing the matter we brought it down and laid it on the Table. I do not observe that there was anything of that kind in the papers submitted to us on the present occasion.

Mr. McLELAN. There was nothing of that kind done officially, but the expenditure of the Province for the last year or two was taken up by the Premier and the Finance Minister; item by item was discussed, and it was agreed what could be dispensed with and what was essential for this year, and what might be considered a permanent charge upon the cost of the country, divided into these several items, and the result was obtained in that way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, ordinarily, I would object to interfering with the expenditure; but when the Province is making applications, from time to time, we are lead to examine into the expenditure. I noticed in many of the statements, which I casually looked over, items of expenditure which struck me as being exceedingly large for so small and sparsely settled a Province.

Mr. BOWELL. The principal concession which hon. gentlemen obtained from the Government of that day was the abolition of the Upper House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was the most showy one, but there were many others, also.

Mr. BOWELL. If we were to endeavor to interfere with their appropriations there would be many things to which both parties would object; but this matter is one exclusively within their own control.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We must take care that this Province or any other Province does not get into the habit of spending too much money, and then seeking to obtain aid from the general taxes. If such a policy were allowed to be continued it would make government impossible. That is the reason why I call more attention to it than I otherwise would be disposed to do. If the hon. gentleman has not got a detailed statement, I do not see any use in pressing the matter any further.

On resolution 1,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Can hon. gentlemen opposite give us information as to the probable quantity of swamp land that will be covered by the resolution?

Mr. McLELAN. No estimate was made by the Manitoba Legislature, nor was any proposed. It was considered those were lands that required to be improved before they were valuable, and that the Local Government was in a better position to take charge of the necessary improvements than the Dominion Government. It was therefore proposed that whatever might be determined to be swamp lands should be handed over to Manitoba.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have seen myself, in the Province of Manitoba, very remarkable results obtained at a very moderate expenditure in the way of reclaiming swamp lands. When they are reclaimed they are very rich, although, fortunately, in that country, land in so many places is rich that this consideration is of less consequence than it would be in the older Provinces. I desire to direct attention to this point. The Government of Manitoba is very poor and has no capital at its command. The Dominion Government, in parting with this land, does it at the instance of the Manitoba Government, but also, no doubt, with a view of having the land reclaimed. It will be very difficult indeed for the Government of Manitoba to reclaim swamp land unless the Dominion Government loans them the money. This is precisely one of those cases in which a party or a Government having very considerable capital might afford to go to the expenditure, which will be amply repaid, but not for a term of years; and I fear very much, however excellent the intentions in granting this land may have been, of this swamp land will lie for a long time without being reclaimed, unless it be the intention of the Dominion Government to loan Manitoba the money to make the necessary improvements.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When the discussion first arose between the Manitoba Government and this Government in regard to swamp lands, there was a proposition made that the swamps, which are of very considerable magnitude, not very far distant from Winnipeg, should be drained; that is to say, that the Province of Manitoba undertook to drain those huge swamps, and was to receive half of the reclaimed lands for doing the work, the other half of the reclaimed lands going to the Dominion. That undertaking was not successful. The Manitoba Government spent a good deal of money without achieving much result. Thus the matter stood until the late negotiations were entered upon. Reference was then had to the practice in the United States, and it was found that in the western States, which were formed from territories, the United States Government held the whole of the land and sold it for the advantage of the whole country, and not of the particular territory. But the United States Government are in the habit of handing over lands that were deemed swamp lands, beyond a doubt, to the State, reserving such lands as did not need any expense for reclamation. We came at last to the conclusion that we would adopt the American system; that we would hand over to Manitoba the lands which were swamp lands, those which had been ascertained to be such by the Dominion Government. The Dominion Parliament cannot charge on the revenues of the country a sum of money in order to reclaim those lands in Manitoba. The Province was very glad to accept those swamp lands under the arrangement I have indicated, and they proposed, as I understand it, to do what has actually happened in the western States; that is, that the Province would make some arrangements with a body of capitalists by which the capitalists would reclaim a certain tract of land and receive a certain portion of the land as payment for their services. It is impossible to obtain an approximate estimate of the quantity of swamp lands in question. Manitoba now extends far north of the surveyed portion, and it is supposed that the further north you go the more rock and water you strike, and the more swamp. The Government might obtain an approximate idea of what the swamp land is in the surveyed portion of the Province. But I do not think that information would assist us very much. It is quite clear that the Dominion Parliament will not authorise the expenditure of money to drain those swamps, and if so, they will remain swamps or muskegs for all time, no matter whether they are large or small.

Committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to know if any member of the Government can tell us the probable amount of land which will be transferred by this provision. No doubt surveys were made and reports given by the surveyors, so that there should be in the Department of the Interior an estimate of the quantity of swamp lands which will be transferred. The quantity might depend on the season of the year, because, especially in the valleys of the Red River and the Assinaboine River, a large quantity of land is flooded in the spring which is perfectly dry later in the season.

Mr. BOWELL. This same question has been put by three different members of the Opposition, and answered as many times. It was first asked by the hon. member for South Huron, subsequently by the hon. member for Brant, and now by the hon. member for Bothwell. It was explained at the time the first explanation was given, again by the leader of the Government, and I will now endeavor to repeat—

Mr. MILLS. Yes ; it is your turn now.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes ; and if it is any gratification to members of the Opposition to reply to each one of them, separately, I will get the answers stereotyped. Hon. gentlemen were informed that we had no possible means of ascertaining the exact quantity of land transferred under this resolution, from the simple fact that a large portion of Manitoba is yet unsurveyed, and consequently the quantity could not be given, even approximately. The hon. gentleman properly says that there may be a record of all the swamp lands which have been surveyed, but even that would be very difficult to arrive at, if the statement of the hon. gentleman be correct, that if these surveys took place in the spring or after a flood a large portion of the surface of Manitoba might be treated as swamp land ; but that if it took place in the fall, it would be found dry, covered with luxuriant grass or growing splendid crops. The resolution itself is the best answer I can give the hon. gentleman. I may say, however, that I will make enquiry in the Department of the Interior, and ascertain, before concurrence, whether they are able to give an approximate estimate of the quantity. I know that in discussing this question with the delegation we came to this decision, that all lands which could be shown to be bonâ fide swamp lands should be transferred, and that would have to be decided by some means hereafter. I may say, further, that under the resolution every precaution will be taken to see that any lands which may be applied for as swamp lands come within the meaning of that designation. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman will not object to Manitoba having a very large quantity of land, and that the most liberal possible construction should be put on this resolution, in order to give that Province what many members of the Opposition are claiming they should have—the control over their own land to as great an extent as possible.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman says he will get his answer stereotyped, but one reason why the question is repeated is that we do not want a stereotyped answer. As this is to be a final settlement, according to the preamble, it seemed not unreasonable to suppose that there might be some estimate of the probable quantity of swamp land in Manitoba. But, looking at the matter from a patriotic standpoint, as I do, I would almost be inclined to doubt, from the speeches of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) and other hon. gentlemen on that side, whether there is such a thing in Manitoba at all as swamp land. I am not sure whether it is not unpatriotic, from the standpoint of hon. gentlemen, to intimate that there is any swamp land in Manitoba. One would think, however, that there would be an approximation to an estimate of what would be considered swamp land, under the meaning of this resolution, in the surveyed portion of the Province, at any rate, and that, I understand, is what the hon. member for Bothwell wanted to find out. Surely the Dominion Government must have some information in their hands upon that point. Would lands which are under water at certain seasons of the year constitute swamp lands, or only those lands of which no use can be made for any purpose until there has been an expenditure of money upon them ?

Mr. BOWELL. I should think that a very small quantity of land, with the exception of muskegs, would be considered utterly worthless at all seasons. In Ontario, we all understand distinctly what is meant by swamp land, where it is wooded, and consequently useless until it is cleared. Where swamp lands have been cleared of the wood, even without a drain being dug through the lower sections, they sometimes become very valuable meadow land, and in Manitoba they have overflowed lands as we have here. What I understand by swamp lands in that country is land which cannot be used, either for cutting hay or for agricultural purposes, until it has been reclaimed by drainage. As the First Minister stated, when this concession was made to Manitoba it was principally for the reason that the lands are generally given away in that Province by the Dominion, either for railroad purposes or homesteading. The amount that has been realised, from a monetary standpoint, is not very great, and it was considered that the lands could be drained by the Manitoba Government much more advantageously than by the Dominion Government ; they would take advantage of the organisation of companies, as is done in the adjoining States of the Union, capitalists taking a certain portion of the land in consideration of the amount they expended, the balance going to the Province. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to understand that I found fault at questions being asked, because when I was on that side of the House I did not hesitate to ask questions myself, and I have no right to find fault at the matter being closely scrutinised. What I did say, in a jocular way, was that the same question had been asked and replied to before. I will endeavor, if possible, to obtain the information asked for by the hon. gentleman, so far as they refer to the lands already surveyed.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. MILLS. I did not hear the hon. gentleman's first explanation, and I do not know how he interpreted this expression, "swamp lands." As I understand, he now says that lands capable of cultivation without drainage would not be considered swamp lands. Now, there may be many lots or sections in Manitoba part of which is swamp and part of which is fit for cultivation ; I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the whole lot passes. How does he interpret this portion of the resolution ?

Mr. BOWELL. That is a matter of detail. The very question which has suggested itself to the hon. gentleman's mind suggested itself to my own when I was in conversation with the delegates, and I asked them the question in almost the same words. Suppose there is a section containing 20 or 30 acres of swamp, it is not expected to pass. Swamp lands, as understood by this resolution, and as understood by those who negotiated these terms, mean a general swamp, covering any large area of country. If 1,000 acres or 500 acres, or a whole section, were swamp, and could be shown to be swamp, to the satisfaction of the Government, that would be transferred ; but a section with a portion dry and a portion swamp could be cultivated, and would not pass. It must be swamp land, and it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Government that it is such.

Mr. TROW. It will be very difficult for the Minister of the Interior to ascertain the quantity of swamp land in the Province of Manitoba ; it would depend very much on the season. There are thousands of acres of land on the southern boundary of Lake Manitoba which, in 1877, was good, arable land, fit for cultivation, but which is now a total swamp owing to the felling in of the outlet to the lake ; and in the Boyne settlement there are 15,000 or 20,000 acres of swamp lands. There is also a very large swamp between Portage la Prairie and Westbourne, which is very valuable to the inhabitants of Portage la Prairie and the country around as hay land. Whether that goes to the Province or not I am not prepared to say. When a portion of a section is swamp and the rest fit for cultivation I do not suppose the Government will interfere with it, because it is just as valuable to a settler, and probably more so, than if it were all fit for cultivation.

Mr. ROSS. I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow). There are large districts in Manitoba which, in 1872, showed no sign of being swamp land at all, and which, in 1877 and 1878, after a succession of very wet seasons, looked like total swamps. The swamp near Portage la Prairie I passed over in 1872, and could not get water for my horses; and in 1877 and 1878 it was impossible to cross it. When the Pembina branch was constructed, from Emerson to Winnipeg, the contractors found it very difficult to obtain water for their horses and men. Anyone passing over the same country some years after would think it was a complete swamp. There are two kinds of swamps; one is where the bottom is hard, where there is an overflow of water, and where the land in ordinary years is good meadow land; then there are swamps where the bottom is very soft, and drainage is required before you can render the land fit for a meadow. With regard to single sections, where there is a little swamp, I do not think the Government should take those into account. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) that it is fully as valuable, or more so, to have a portion in swamp, because it furnishes a meadow; in dry seasons it is the most valuable part of your section, if you are a dairy farmer. To select swamp lands you will have to take ordinary years and strike an average, as near as possible. From surveyors' reports you cannot make an estimate of the wet lands, because the character of the reports depends entirely on whether the season is a wet or a dry one.

Mr. WATSON. I can heartily concur in the remarks of the hon. members for Perth (Mr. Trow) and Lisgar (Mr. Ross). Lake Manitoba, as is well known to the Government, especially to the Minister of Public Works, rose, during some years ago,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  feet, but this year has receded, on account of the drier season; so that hundreds of thousands of acres around Lake Manitoba, which were actually worthless during 1879 and 1880, on account of their being covered with water, are now very fair land, and settlers are beginning to locate there.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). You would not call it swamp land.

Mr. WATSON. It is a question difficult to settle as to what is called swamp lands.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). There is a difference between swamp lands and lands covered with water.

Mr. WATSON. In 1876 I have seen as fine wheat land around Lake Manitoba, and apparently as good dry land as could be seen anywhere, and in 1880 I have gone over that land duck shooting, when it has been covered with 3 feet of water.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). The high water drove the settlers away.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; they had to leave the land. In some cases patents were given to settlers for homesteads that were probably as much as two miles away from where you could travel on foot without getting wet. It would be difficult to ascertain from any of the surveyors' reports of Manitoba as to what is dry land and what is swamp land. In 1873-74, when a great portion was surveyed, lands were put down as arable land, fit for cultivation, which, in 1880, were covered with water, some of them too wet to cut hay on. It would be interesting for the people of Manitoba to know in what year they should locate the swamp lands. I think the most liberal construction ought to be given, because a good many of the lands can only be kept right by constant watching and draining; and the Dominion Government would not see fit to see to the draining of some swamp or particular location, which the Local Government might cause to be drained, or it might be done partly by the municipalities. I hope, when it is finally settled what is swamp lands, the most liberal construction will be given, or else the lands would be but little or no benefit to Manitoba. It has been stated by the Minister of Customs the Government have not received very large monetary consideration out of the lands of Manitoba. That being the case, and the good lands being given away for nothing, the Local Government cannot expect to get a large price for those lands. I do not wish to enter into any controversy, but I may say, with reference to the remarks that fell from the hon. member for King's, N. S., as to the stand I have taken on different measures, that as regards any votes I have given or opinions I have expressed in this House, I am willing they should remain between me and my constituents. I am quite willing to answer to them, for they are the proper persons to whom I should answer, and, so far, I have no reason to regret any vote I have given or statement I have made in this House, and I hope I shall not have any cause for regret in the future. The hon. gentleman seemed to think that no member of this House had the right to criticise the resolutions. If they are not to be criticised, what is the House for? I understand that if any hon. gentleman wishes to advocate more liberal terms for this Province he has the right to do so, and if there is, unfortunately, any hon. gentleman here who thinks the Province is getting too much, he has the right to express that opinion. I only wish these terms had been more liberal. I have not found fault with the resolutions, so far as they go, but I do not think they go far enough, and I am led to understand, by the remarks of the First Minister and the Minister in charge of the resolutions, that they are not to be considered final for the future.

Mr. BOWELL. They do not say so.

Mr. WATSON. That is one point I would like to understand. They do not prevent the Legislature of Manitoba coming back next year and asking better terms?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly not.

Mr. WATSON. There was a great deal of dissatisfaction and alarm among the people of Manitoba when, in 1881, the Finance Minister made the statement that he had made a settlement with the Province of Manitoba for ten years, on certain conditions. That was contradicted by the Premier when the delegation was at Ottawa. I know there was considerable trouble in having that matter opened up, when the Premier of Manitoba visited Ottawa last year. I hope such misconstructions will not be put on anything done in this House, by means of which Manitoba would be deprived of the privilege of coming to Parliament any time the interests of the Province require and asking further aid, because I consider it of the greatest importance that the people of Manitoba should be dealt with liberally, not only in the interests of that Province but of the Dominion.

Mr. MILLS. I have been making enquiry of the Minister who has charge of these resolutions, for the purpose of eliciting information, that we may better understand the resolutions which are before us. The hon. gentleman has told us how he understands the term "swamp lands" is to be defined, and he has also informed us, if I understood him rightly, that the understanding on the part of the Local Government of Manitoba and the Government here was that where a section was partly swamp only the swampy portion would pass under these resolutions.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not even go so far as that. I said that there were a few acres, 10, 20, 30 or 40, on the section, which would not be considered as passing as swamp land.

Mr. MILLS. What I understood the hon. gentleman to say was that he had conversed with the members of the Manitoba delegation on this subject, and where a section was partly swamp land the whole section did not pass.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not even say any portion of the section would pass.

Mr. MILLS. If a section is partly swamp and partly dry land, do the Government propose to divide it? Supposing a swamp, embracing 2,000 or 3,000 acres: if each entire section containing any part of that is to be transferred, that may increase it by 500 acres. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that they would only transfer actual swamp land. I am anxious to see whether we have really in this a settlement or a foundation for controversy. If this resolution was understood exactly in the same sense by the delegates from Manitoba and the Government here, and we can ascertain exactly what that sense was, there is no room for dispute, but if that is not the case, we should hear more from the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. I explained very fully, a short time ago what the understanding was between the delegates and the Government. Now the hon. gentleman has carried it a little further, so as to suppose a swamp of 3,000 or 4,000 acres, with a dry spot of four or five acres in the centre, that was never under water. I do not suppose the Government would cavil about a matter of that kind. We know, in this Province, that in swamp lands we can find an acre here and half an acre there that they are never under water, and could not therefore be considered swamp land. I understand that what is generally considered swamp land in this country and across the border will, after full investigation, be dealt with as provided. Certainly the lands my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) has referred to could not be considered swamp lands. There is a great difference between swamp lands and lands under water for a time from the overflow of a river or lake. I have passed over railway when it was half under water from the overflow of the Red River, but the land could not be called swamp, because, at a later period of the season, it was able to grow almost any kind of grain. I think the language is very clear, unless the hon. gentleman is afraid to leave it to the two Governments to decide, after full investigation, as to what really are swamp lands, in the general acceptance of the term.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that, if we understand what the sense of the resolutions is. I was anxious to find out whether the Government, in dealing with the Province of Manitoba, intend to respect the boundaries as laid down by the surveys. Do the Government intend to deal, in reference to sections, half-sections and quarter-sections, or simply to look at the swamp and disregard the surveyed boundaries? Surely, there must have been some understanding on that subject.

Mr. BOWELL. The understanding is, that whatever the Manitoba Government can show to be swamp lands will be transferred to them, irrespective of the quantity they cover. As I have said, I do not think it is contemplated to take a few acres and cut them off from a section, any more than it would be to retain a few acres of dry land in the midst of a general swamp. The intention is to deal in the most liberal manner possible with the Manitoba Government in reference to these swamp lands, but it is not proposed to transfer to that Government any lands that are not, in the general acceptance of the term, swamp lands. When they apply to the Dominion Government to set apart a particular swamp, in order that they may drain it and make it fit for the market, I presume an officer of the Government will be sent to thoroughly investigate the whole question and report whether that is swamp land, and if it is, it will be transferred.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. MILLS. Is it proposed to transfer portions of land from time to time, as they may be applied for by the Manitoba Government, as swamp lands, or is there to be a general ascertainment by the two Governments and a general transfer of all the swamp lands in Manitoba? And is that transfer to be by grant from the Crown, or does the Government propose to ask Parliament to make a parliamentary transfer of these lands?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If these resolutions are adopted we will then have a parliamentary sanction for the granting of the lands. Of course, it would be absurd to come to Parliament for the transfer of every swamp. I do not suppose there will be any general transfer; I do not suppose that we are going to have a regular ordnance survey and make one general transfer. In answer to the other question put by the hon. gentleman, I think the legal construction would be, under the terms of this resolution, that if a portion of a section was swamp land, and another portion was not, they would not have any right to the dry land at all. My hon. friend asked, what will we do if there was an immense swamp and a ragged edge around it of small portions of dry land. Well, I take it that a swamp generally covers a large portion of ground. There may be islets in it, and if they are of considerable size they would not be conveyed.

Mr. MILLS. In the case of the Hudson Bay Company the transfer is by Act of Parliament. There are certain sections that are set out as Hudson Bay Company land, and the moment the survey is made those lands become, by Act of Parliament, the property of the company. But I wish to ascertain whether the Government proposed to transfer those swamp lands in the same way to the Government of Manitoba or whether they purposed to treat them as ordinary proprietors.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there ought to be a conveyance, directly from the Crown, of those swamp lands.

Mr. WATSON. I would suggest that lands which have not been located as homesteads, or pre-empted on account of being wet, should be considered swamp lands. The Minister of Customs has stated that the lands around Lake Manitoba should not be termed swamp lands, because they are wet only in certain seasons. Now, I think the Local Legislature would look upon these lands around Lake Manitoba as probably being the most valuable lands they would be able to acquire. Settlers cannot go upon those lands in their present condition; they have got, first, to be drained, and the outlet of Lake Manitoba has got to be opened up to let off the water in wet seasons. No man is going to take up a homestead and settle on the shores of Lake Manitoba, when he is liable, in a wet season, to be drowned out. If these lands are not to be termed swamp lands, I think it would be a mistake.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman knows they are not swamp lands.

Mr. WATSON. I know they will not be taken up by any settler unless they are drained, and some assurance given that the lake will not rise again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has nothing to do with it. They are not swamp lands.

Mr. WATSON. They are lands which the Local Government figured largely upon in making this arrangement with the Dominion Government, and unless this outlet from Lake Manitoba is opened up those lands will be swamps for most of the time. We have seasons of what are termed three or four dry years, and wet two or three years. In wet years the water rises 3 or 4 feet. There is only one outlet out of the lake, and that has been partly closed up by the ice carrying boulders into the mouth of the river. Consequently when three or four large streams are running into the lake in a wet season, those lands are submerged; and unless they are reclaimed they are going to be a loss, not only to the Dominion Government, but to the Local Government and the municipalities, and the only way to reclaim them is by removing the obstructions from the mouth of the outlet. I certainly think that lands of that description ought to be termed swamp lands, and be conveyed to the Local Government, and they will undertake to do the improvements to reclaim them.

Mr. TROW. Is there anything in the regulations as to when these lands shall be reclaimed? What about the nature of the cultivation? Is it merely optional with the Local Government to let them lay there as a bar to settlement for any length of time? We can easily understand that it is not the design of the Government to interfere with small portions of swamp here and there, but only with large limits. I think all these areas as could easily be ascertained from the field notes of the surveyors.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no intention of interfering with the Local Government in the respect to which my hon. friend has referred. It would be as much to their interest to have these lands reclaimed as it can be to ours. It is our interest to have them settled, in order to secure a consuming population, and it will be their interest to have them reclaimed and settled, so that parties living upon them will be taxable and furnish a revenue to the Local Government to carry on improvements. We take it for granted that in the interests of the Local Government they will reclaim them as soon as possible and get them settled.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the Minister to state that those lands, such as I have described on the shores of Lake Manitoba, will not be termed swamp lands, and will not be conveyed to the Local Government?

Mr. BOWELL. I said so most distinctly—that the lands that are subject to be overflowed by a river or by a lake for only certain seasons of the year, and that are dry lands the rest of the year, cannot be termed swamp lands. There are plenty of lands that are wet that are not swamp lands.

Mr. WATSON. Those lands have been swamp lands for five or six years at a stretch, and they may have been dry lands for five or six years. Now, are not those lands to be termed swamp lands?

Mr. BOWELL. No; they could not possibly be swamp lands, because some of them have been taken up and settled upon.

On resolution 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman fixed on any definite sum at which he proposes to dispose of these lands, and where does he propose to locate them? Are you going just to select those 150,000 acres and hold them for a certain time, or are you going to put them into the market at some fixed rate from the outset.

Mr. BOWELL. The resolution does not provide the mode in which it shall be done, because that is not yet decided. It was simply decided to set apart fair average land, that would bring a fair average price, the proceeds to be invested for the benefit of the university, which is to be managed upon some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government. We have not yet decided in what portion of the Province this land is to be selected. It was thought sufficient, for the present, to provide for the appropriation of 150,000 acres of Crown land, of a fair average quality.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it is going to be of much practical value, I suppose you will have to begin to sell that land in a moderate space of time. Has any communication passed, as yet, between the Government and the authorities? It seems to be all in nubibus, as yet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it is in Manitoba.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know whether it is proposed to hold the land for an indefinite period, or to put it on the market promptly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These terms were settled generally. When Parliament has approved of the proposed grant of 150,000 acres of land for university purposes, the university will propose a scheme or basis with respect to the land, and with respect to the selection of the land. Of course, the university should obtain good land, whether the Government would agree to set aside a block is very doubtful. I do not think we ought to do so. That is my opinion, speaking without prejudice. The university will be anxious to sell its land. There is no danger of its holding out for high prices, because an infant university will want money as soon as possible. The danger is, that the institution may sell the land at too low prices.

Mr. MILLS. The Canadian Pacific Railway have power to select land in Manitoba. Could the Government, before the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railway companies which have grants make their selection, set aside these 150,000 acres? If the university is to come in after all these railway companies, I am afraid it will fare very badly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is plenty of land for all.

Mr. MILLS. But what is the order of selection. Could the Government go forward and make a selection of land without prejudicing the claim of the Canadian Pacific Railway under the terms of the contract?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot break the contract. The railway company will, of course, have the odd-numbered sections in the railway belt. There is, however, in the Red River basin, a very large tract. There will be land enough to provide whatever difference may have to be supplied, and it is almost impossible that settlement or appropriation of land would so exhaust the supply as not to leave enough land to make up the deficiency.

Mr. MILLS. Within the railway belt of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between the Rocky Mountains and Winnipeg there are only between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 acres. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be entitled to about 15,000,000 acres outside of that belt. What if the company choose to take the greater part of those lands in Manitoba? Has the Government enquired from the company as to how much of those 15,000,000 acres they propose to select in Manitoba?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Expenses of Committees, Extra Sessional Clerks, etc.,
House of Commons ..... $13,000

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps some hon. gentleman will say how many extra sessional clerks are employed.

Mr. SPEAKER. There are 28, I think, altogether—including translators; last year there were 29, and the year before 30, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At what services are they employed?

Mr. SPEAKER. At different work about the House, at which they have always been employed—copying returns, in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and other work under the direction of the Clerk of the House.

Mr. MILLS. What returns?

Mr. SPEAKER. Different members ask for copies of returns, which may be brought down and are not printed.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is it the duty of these extra clerks to make copies of such returns?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; for example, the Canadian Pacific Railway returns brought down last night are all being copied. Sometimes there are thousands of pages copied in that way.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Are we entitled to have that copying done? If, so, I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. SPEAKER. They have been doing it all along.

Mr. BOWELL. Sometimes, in the case of returns which are of a local and not of a general character, the Printing Committee, instead of ordering them to be printed, order a copy to be made for a member who desires it.

Mr. TROW. As I understand, it is only done on the order of the Printing Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. If a member wants a copy of any paper of that kind, he applies to the Clerk of the House, and if he has any of these extra clerks that he can set at work at that duty, he does so. They are employed under the Clerk of the House, and members are continually applying for their services in that way.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As I understand it, all these papers go before the Printing Committee in the first place. Of course those which are printed are not ordered to be copied. But it is a common practice, when a return is of a local character, to have it copied for any member who may desire a copy.

Contingencies—House of Commons..... $24,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is this increase of $1,000 for?

Mr. SPEAKER. This arises out of the vote for postage and telegraphing. It is not on account of any increase in the cost of the telegraphing, because that is small—it is not $100 a year—and it is diminishing. The cost of postage used to be $5,000 some years ago, and it was cut down to $1,000, but that vote has been exceeded every year. This includes the cost of carrying the mail between here and the city post office, all the foreign postage we pay, and all the expenses connected with our post office. It is really no increase, as the vote has always been exceeded. I enquired into the matter and obtained details of the expenditures, and as the vote had been exceeded every year, I thought it right to ask the House to vote the full amount required. The real expenditure is some $1,600 to $1,800.

Library—Salaries, grant, purchase of works on America, contingencies, binding newspapers, etc..... 30,350

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask how much is applied towards keeping up the Law Library, or that portion which is in the Supreme Court. I understand that some hon. gentleman in this House went to that section of the Library for the purpose of consulting the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States, and found that they had not come down later than 1878. It seems to me that it is a very great oversight, because these reports are of the first importance, especially upon all questions of constitutional law.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will look under the head of "Administration of Justice," on page 20 of the Estimates, he will find that $1,500 has been already voted for the purchase of law reports and text books for the Supreme Court Library.

Mr. WELDON. Who has the control of these books?

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I agree with my hon. friend that it was a mistake to give up the purchase of these reports of the Supreme Court of the United States. They are of the first possible consequence to members; we have to refer to them frequently. Up to 1878 the series is complete, but since then we have ceased to purchase them, for some reason. I think the attention of the Minister of Justice ought to be drawn to the matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am rather surprised to hear that they have not been kept up. Certainly, I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell that they are of the utmost importance. They would assist us very much in dealing with questions of jurisdiction between the local and federal powers, and it is of the utmost importance that we should have the light which is thrown on such questions by the decisions of the Supreme Court. These reports ought to be kept up, as well as the reports of the Privy Council of England.

Mr. WELDON. I had occasion to refer to the United States Supreme Court reports on a subject before Parliament. The volume I wanted was 112, but it was not there; the latest was volume 99, which comes down to 1878. It seems to me that it is important that these books should be not only in the Law Library, but in the Parliamentary Library, accessible to members.

Mr. DAVIES. A collection of United States reports are almost a necessity in the Library. I fancy the difficulty must have been in the amount voted by the House. There has been constant complaint by persons who attend the Supreme Court that the Library had been divided and the text books sent to the Supreme Court. Great inconvenience arises from the reports being in one place and the text books in another. Parliament makes a grant, which is expended under the direction of the Minister of Justice, who, last year, tried to overcome the difficulty by devoting the money to the purchase of text books. Perhaps the hon. Minister might consult the Minister of Justice as to whether it would not be necessary to increase the grant, in order that the United States reports might be purchased.

Mr. BOWELL. I will act on the suggestion of hon. gentlemen, and ascertain if these reports cannot be supplied out of the appropriation; $10,000 are voted for the Parliamentary Library and $1,500 for the Law Library, and judging from what has fallen from the legal gentlemen who have spoken, it is quite as important that these reports should be obtained as the text books.

Mr. MILLS. It would be very useful if we had the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States—the Privy Council and Indian Appeals in the Parliamentary Library as well as in the Law Library. The cost would not be much, and they would be a great service to us on many questions which come up in the course of legislation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly there ought to be a copy here of the reports the hon. gentleman mentions; but whether there would be any use of duplicating them, I am not so sure. It would not do either the bar or the bench any harm to walk up here and look at them.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Library is also very defective in the revised statutes of the various States. The statutes of many of the States are not in the Library at all, and those we have of many of the northern States are obsolete. It would aid those who take an interest in American affairs if we had a complete set of the Government reports printed at the Government printing office at Washington. Many of those reports, which are of great interest, are not in our Library at all; for instance, the report of the Internal Commerce of the United States. I have no doubt an arrangement could be made with the Government Printer, at Washington, for an exchange of documents, we sending our Blue Books there, and receiving all the Reports published there. A request on the part of the proper authorities here would undoubtedly be very courteously received, and the whole set of the reports furnished to us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is for the Library Committee. They will attend to that, I have no doubt.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the sum for the officers of the Library is pretty large, although there is a reduction. I would like to know how many officials there are, and what salaries are paid to them?

Mr. SPEAKER. That was discussed last night. They are all enumerated in the Bill which has just passed through the House.

Mr. DAVIES. The officers of that Library have not that knowledge which they ought to possess, and which should be at the command of members when they seek information there. Some of the officers, of course, can tell you where the books can be had, but some of them are ignorant of the duties they ought to know and for which they are employed. Some effort ought to be made on the part of those in charge to see that they are trained in that respect. With the exception of the chief messenger, who is a remarkable man in that respect, none of the officials can give the information desired. Of course, we must make allowance for Mr. Todd, who is an excellent man in his way, but with one or two exceptions, the clerks in the Library do not possess one-half the knowledge of their duties they ought to possess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Does the hon. gentleman want them to read the books, so as to inform the members what they contain?

Mr. DAVIES. They ought to know where the books are, and where there is so large a number they ought to be detailed off into particular departments. I had, a day or two ago, to make a search at some length for works on the fishery question, and it was utterly impossible to find one who knew anything about it. I have spoken to many members, and they all agree with me that many of the clerks do not make themselves acquainted with the work they have to discharge.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I visit the Library as often as most members, and never have any difficulty. The Librarian can always point out where a book is, or where it ought to be.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). We have been accustomed to great things, in the years gone by, in the Library, when we had an exceptionally good man in Mr. Todd, who knew the Library off by heart. I agree with the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) that three of the officials are efficient, and perhaps the most efficient one is the chief messenger. In getting legal works, of course there is no difficulty in ascertaining where the books are; any person can find them, without assistance; but on general questions, such as those we had to discuss this Session, we have considerable difficulty in ascertaining where the books are. That is owing, to some extent, to the absence of Mr. Todd, who appears to have taken charge of the portion of the Library which contains works on constitutional subjects. Only one or two there know anything of that department. Another thing I have to complain of is the absence of books from the Library. That is not the fault of the Librarian, but it is the fault, in some cases, of Ministers of the Crown, who have had books out for months. Some books I desired to get in the early part of the Session I have not been able to get yet.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is unjust towards the employés. My friend has stated that none of the employés, except the first messenger, knew their business; that since the demise of Mr. Todd it is impossible to find any one who can give information about books on constitutional law.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did not say so. I said outside three officials, including the chief messenger, it was difficult to find one who knew where the books were.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman said that since Mr. Todd left it was hard to find books in the Library, especially on questions relating to constitutional law. There is one subject on which it was impossible for the officials to do justice to the demands of hon. members, and that was on the franchise question, and the reason of that was the carrying out of a little scheme by some hon. members, which was discovered afterwards. Half a dozen of the books treating on the Indian question had been hidden behind some medical works, so that the employés could not find where they were for a considerable time, and they were not to blame for this. As to what the hon. member for Queen's said, about each official being detailed to a special department, that is intended to be carried out. Each employé should be given a special department. With regard to the ability of the employés, there are more than one who thoroughly understand their business. I might mention Mr. Sylvain, for instance. Consult him in regard to any point in the history of Canada, and he will be found one of the most efficient men on that subject. Then there is Mr. Thayne, of whom I will not say, as was said of Mr. Todd, that he is a walking library, but he is one from whom you can obtain satisfaction upon every difficult question. I think it is a very good suggestion, and will be a step in the way of progress, to attribute to the different officers of the Library special departments, and to arrange that these officers shall be succeeded by others in the same department who have known and studied that particular department. Of course, it is impossible for a young man, who has been only a few years in the Library, to be au fait of all the text books on certain subjects. Of course, they are to be helped by the members asking what they want, or by the Librarian himself, when members do not know what they would have or what they would like to have. I think the suggestion of the Librarian is a very good one.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman hinted pretty strongly that some member in the House, I do not know whom, had collected a lot of the Library books on the Indian question and concealed them in the Library, where no one else could find them. If he refers to me, I deny it. I concealed no books on the Indian question, or any other question.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I knew the hon. gentleman knew everything about the Indian question.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). But when I tried to study up the Chinese question, I found that the hon. gentleman had got every book in the Library on that subject, so I was obliged, from pure necessity, to abandon my discussion of that interesting portion of the Franchise Bill which related to the Chinese. The hon. gentleman is the guilty person, who had the books and kept them out on the Chinese question.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I must plead guilty to that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am not sure that he is not the man who had the books on the Indian question.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The difference is, that the name of the secretary of the commission was entered for those books about the Chinese, so that the hon. gentleman could tell where they were. I did not accuse the hon. gentleman particularly, but I spoke of people taking books and not giving their names.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the presumption is very strong that it was some gentleman on the other side who hid those books. I am quite sure that no man on this side hid either a book or his light under a bushel on the Indian question. No one knows that better than the First Minister.

Mr. CHARLTON. I fear that in this discussion we may do some injustice to the employés in the Library. Not only have we lost the Librarian, but we have lost by death Mr. Campbell; Mr. Todd has left us for a time, and Mr. Fletcher was unable to attend to his duty during most of the winter, on account of illness. Thus, three or four of the most efficient men in the Library were removed, and the delay of the Government in filling the position of Librarian led to a certain amount of disorganisation in the affairs of the Library. We have a number of good men in that Library. The ability is not by any means confined to the Chief Messenger. There are Mr. Sylvain, Mr. Thayne, the chief messenger, and others. There are some others, who cannot be supposed to be as familiar with their duties as they will be in time; but we may blame the Government as much as any one else for their delay in filling the office of Chief Librarian. It is true that they have now endeavored to make up for it by giving us a double head; but I fear that that will not make up for the loss of time and the disorganisation due to their own want of promptness in the matter. I believe most of the staff in the Library are efficient men, some of them remarkably efficient men; and it is due rather to the loss of the three or four who have either died or gone than to lack of ability in those who remain if there has been any ground of complaint.

Mr. MILLS. I quite agree with the remarks of the Secretary of State as to the efficiency of Mr. Sylvain. He is a thoroughly competent officer in his own particular department. The same may be said of Mr. Thayne, Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Todd, and Mr. Casault is eminently efficient. But Mr. Fletcher has been away on account of illness, and Mr. Todd has been sent away on military duty, and we have, of course, suffered inconvenience in consequence.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would the Secretary of State please give the names of those works on Indians which were hidden. I am sure there is a very imperfect understanding of that question on that side of the House, and if we knew the names of the books we might be able to give them some further information on the third reading.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The books have been found.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Hon. gentlemen opposite must have hidden them, for they appear tired of the subject, and we are not at all.

Printing, printing paper and book-binding..... $80,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of the increase?

Mr. BOWELL. The explanation of the increase of $10,000 is given by Mr. Hartney, the Clerk of the Printing Committee, who says this increased estimate is required because the distribution list is continually being enlarged on demands made and authorised by the House, I suppose on recommendation of the Printing Committee on the suggestion of members of the House; secondly, from the very large edition of documents of public interest which are being printed, that is, the number of returns, which have been much larger of late than in former years; and thirdly, from the increased number of blue books issued by the Departments, many of them containing expensive maps, and the expenses connected with the preparation of the maps.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). This is all, I understand, within the contract?

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose this covers the printing of the reports distributed to us during the Session, does it not?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think the grant for the printing of these blue books and reports is judiciously distributed. We could get very large numbers of some of these books that are of very little use to us, but of those that are most useful I do not think we could get enough. I think the more we can get of those particular reports and books, most necessary to the public interest, the better it will be. For instance, the Public Accounts, the Auditor General's Report, the Trade and Navigation Returns, and documents of that kind, are so generally useful that I think the Government should distribute a considerable number of them amongst the people. They are the Government's statements of their dealings with the people's funds during the year, especially the Public Accounts. On the other hand, we have, for instance, an immense number of returns about mortuary statistics this year, and things of that kind, of which we can get an unlimited number, but of documents that are most useful we do not want to be told, when we enquire for them, that the supply is run out.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a peculiar principle laid down for the printing of all these documents and their distribution to each member. I think, if the hon. gentleman attempted to lay down a classification to meet his own particular views, he would find that there are others who take an especial interest in the very subjects which he thinks of the least use. It would hardly do to say that you should have a dozen copies each of the Public Accounts and only one of Mortuary Statistics. There are others who take a deep interest in mortuary statistics, and most every doctor in the country would like to have one of them.

Mr. CASEY. I am not speaking of my own taste in the matter, but I take it for granted that there is no public document which so many people would like to see as the Public Accounts. It is natural that more people should wish to see the statements of how the money has been expended during the past year than any other statement that can be laid before the House. I have never been able to get more than four or five of these copies in the course of a year. We only get two distributed to us, but I can generally get two or three extra copies at the distribution office. Supposing we got five copies every year. My constituency comprises over 5,000 voters—and some other gentlemen represent still larger constituencies—and what are five copies of the Public Accounts amongst so many voters?

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the Government whether the printing of the Geological Report is included in this expenditure?

Mr. BOWELL. I think it is not, because, as a rule, that is not done under the parliamentary contract.

Mr. MILLS. Formerly, the practice was to charge it in the Geological vote, and that was done because the Geological Branch was in Montreal, and from the highly scientific character of a great deal of the information there given, it was thought necessary to have it printed where the proof sheets could be read by some one connected with the Department. Now, that Department is transferred to Ottawa, and there is no longer any reason why the printing of that report should not be done by the contract printers. Can the hon. gentleman tell us where that report is printed?

Mr. BOWELL. It is printed in Montreal and bears Dawson's impress, but the work is done at the Gazette office in Montreal.

Mr. BLAKE. When this report was printed in Montreal the vote was defended in Parliament on the ground which my hon. friend behind me has stated, but the reason for printing the report in Montreal no longer exists, and now that the office has been moved to Ottawa the printing still goes on at Montreal. It seems extraordinary that the printing should still be sent away from Ottawa to be done at Montreal.

Mr. BOWELL. All I can say to the hon. gentleman is, that I question very much, without disparaging the Queen's printers, whether they are in a position to turn out a piece of work like that Geological Report. I am not combating the idea of the hon. gentleman that the printing should be done here, I think the suggestion is a very good one, but in doing that the printers should be told distinctly that they must prepare themselves for turning out work of that character. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the work done for Parliament, even to the printing of the statutes, is not anything like equal to that which is done in England or the United States. So inferior is the printing of the statutes that those who are judges feel almost ashamed to send their exchanges to the United States or to England. I hope that, in future, the contract will be such as to compel the printers to turn out work which will be creditable to the country, and I hope that in the future the Geological Report may be printed here instead of sending it away. But the hon. gentleman knows that this particular job, this particular piece of work, has always been done in the city of Montreal by Mr. Dawson, or supervised by him.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see any reason why the hon. gentleman should correct his phrase, and strike off the word "job," in regard to this work.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not mean to use the word "job" in the sense in which the hon. gentleman is constantly using it. The printers always speak of a piece of work like this as a job, and I use the printers' phrase. Any piece of work is designated by a printer as a job, but not a corrupt job, as the hon. gentleman insinuates.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not at all object to the hon. gentleman's phrase; I was objecting to his correcting his phrase. I have only to say that if we are to be told that our contractors cannot turn out as good work as the job office of a newspaper, let us learn it. I do not mean to say that our statutes or blue books are very nicely printed, for I never thought so; but it is not necessary that they should be printed in the same style and upon similar paper to the Geological Survey Reports. I presume there were special directions given with respect to such jobs, and special arrangements made. There must have been such, in order to produce the results. The difficulty is the one to which I have referred, namely, that we were told for years it was necessary the Geological Survey Report should be printed at the place where the office was situated. The office has been moved, and yet the printing continues to be done in the old locality.

Mr. MILLS. I remember discussing this question with Mr. Selwyn, the head of the Geological branch; and he gave as a reason for having the report printed in Montreal, that each member of the staff could have an opportunity of correcting his own productions and so reducing the number of mistakes. Although the Geological branch has been moved here, the departmental printing has been still done in Montreal. It ought to be done here.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). If members of the committee will turn to page 209 of the Auditor General's Report, they will discover that the work was done by the Montreal Gazette, and not by Dawson Brothers. From an examination of the account published in full, it appears that there is quite a job in connection with the printing of the Geological Report, for I find there were 3,500 copies printed at prices very much in excess of those which would have been paid to the contractor had the work been done here. Furthermore, I do not see why the contractors could not have produced as good work as that produced by the Montreal

Gazette. I do not see any difficulty about that matter. The printing is improved more by the use of a better quality of paper than by anything else. If the contractors here were furnished with a better quality of paper the work could be done as creditably as it was done by the Montreal Gazette at the Montreal rate. This matter has been discussed somewhat in the newspapers. The Montreal Gazette and Toronto Mail have contended that the work was done at a much lower rate than the blue books show was paid. The Mail has stated that 35 cents was the price paid for composition, and the Montreal Gazette has made the same statement. I was not astonished that organs of the Government, especially the Gazette, which was very much interested in the matter, should misrepresent the statement published in the Blue Books. Instead of 35 cents being the rate paid for composition, I will read the amount paid as stated in the Auditor General's Report: Composition, 181,000 ems, plain, at 50 cents; 434,000 ems, at 75 cents; 25,000 ems, tabular, at $1; the average amount paid on 640,000 ems being 69 cents. Yet the Toronto Mail and the Montreal Gazette said that the work was done for 35 cents per 1,000 ems, and it will be apparent to the committee that this matter was totally misrepresented, and that double the price was paid by the Government for the work. The same may be said with respect to the press-work. I call the attention of the committee to page 211 of the report. In referring to this matter the Auditor General thus writes to the Director of the Geological Survey:

"Please let me know why your report for 1880-1-2 and Prof. Macoun's catalogue were printed by the Montreal Gazette instead of by the contractors at Ottawa. I ask the question on account of the difference in rates—about $790.10."

That is about the amount which the Auditor General estimates as the difference between the cost of the work as it was done and what it would have cost here. If the facts are closely investigated by a practical man it will appear that a very much larger sum was paid for the work, in excess of what would have been paid under the contract, than this sum of $790.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order, This does not arise under the item at present being discussed.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I have just about concluded. In answer to the enquiry made by the Auditor General, the Director of the Geological Survey replied as follows:—

"The report was printed at the Gazette office by authority of the Minister. The rate is greater than contract rates, but not greater than what are known as 'Ontario rates' and 'special rates,' which are paid for 'first-class work.'"

I have had considerable difficulty in ascertaining what this Ontario rate means. It seems to be changed in order to suit the purposes of the Government. I suggest that expenditures of this kind for the purpose of subsidising a Government organ ought not to be tolerated any longer. If printing is to be done, it should be done by the contractor here, at contract rates. If the Montreal Gazette cannot live without getting jobs of this kind, the sooner it goes to the wall the better. I do not think it is in the public interest that a newspaper should be supported by jobs of this kind. This is not the only one, as the committee will find out before we get through the Estimates. The contractor here could do the work just as creditably and at a much lower rate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I differ entirely from the position taken by the member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville). He does not see why a Government organ should get any of the benefits derivable from public printing. I do not see that because the Gazette happens to endorse and represent, as it does very well, the views of the Government, it should be deprived of fair competition for any portion of the public service. I am somewhat interested myself as a newspaper publisher. I have not derived much benefit yet so far as Government jobs, as they are called, are concerned. But I am like a celebrated party we have heard of, "I hopes to be some time or other." I do not think it is likely I will get much from this Administration, because I am not a Government organ, nor is the paper with which I am connected a Government organ. Sometimes we strike at one side and sometimes at the other. With regard to the Gazette and its work, from what I have seen of it I believe it does it well, and from what the Auditor-General says with regard to the prices charged, that they are only equivalent to the prices charged by the Ontario Government, I do not think very much can be said against the Gazette getting a fair share of the patronage which the Government may have to give. I do not believe in putting everything into the hands of the one firm which gets so large a share of the printing in this country; and I do not think that the contractors are prepared to execute the work in the same shape that the Gazette has done the report of the Geological Survey. I have heard numerous opinions upon it, and I believe that the work has been creditably performed, and I do not think my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville), who is a good judge, will say that the prices are excessive. I differ from those who say that all this work should go into the hands of one individual. I should like to get a share myself; I am not one of those who say they would not like it, for I would; but I am afraid there is little chance of my getting it. I do not like, however, to hear the profession to which I have recently attached myself attacked, and I think, from the way the Gazette supports the Administration, it is well entitled to a share, if anything is going, provided they do it as cheaply as others in the same line, as I believe they do. That, at all events, is the opinion of the public, and though the Government does not often take my advice I will give them my advice on this occasion: it costs them nothing, and perhaps they will say it is worth nothing; but at any rate I say I would not give all the printing into the hands of one office, nor would I expect outside firms, such as the Gazette, to do the work even as cheaply as the firm which gets so enormous an amount of work, and does it on so large a scale, and can do it cheaper. I think it was a mistake of the Government to put all that patronage out of their hands in that way, and when I am Premier, as I expect to be, though hon. gentlemen do not seem to think so, I will try a change in that arrangement, and give a fair share all around.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The hon. gentleman seems to think that I was speaking disparagingly of the work; but I did not do so. I think it was a creditable job. But I think, also, that so far as the execution of that work is concerned, there are other offices which could do the work just as well; and I have no doubt that the office which is now controlled by my hon. friend, the member for Northumberland, can turn out just as nice a job as the Gazette.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Herald turns out good work, but I am afraid they have not much chance of getting the work.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Perhaps the competition which he speaks of will take place between the Gazette and the Herald next year; and if they get at loggerheads the country will profit by the competition; but we have competition with regard to this printing. It is all let by tender. The contract was awarded to certain contractors, and they have a right to demand that they should have this work. As we all know, they have sued the Government, in years gone by, on account of work which was included in the contract having gone to other parties, and for this job itself they have a right to demand recompense for its being taken from them and given to the Gazette. I do not believe, with my hon. friend, that this work should be divided up amongst the newspapers or printing offices that support the Government. I do not think it would be conducive to the public interest that such a system of corruption should be established, by any Government. It has been established, to a considerable extent, by this Government, as we all know, but the sooner it is put a stop to the better. The hon. gentleman said that the Auditor General had stated that this work was done at Ontario Government rates. The Auditor General said nothing of the kind, nor did I read that he did so. I said that the Director General of the survey had said, in reply to a letter inquiring of him why this work was given to the Gazette at exorbitant prices, instead of the contractors, that the Minister had instructed that this should be done. Furthermore, I call the attention of the committee to a Report of the Treasury Board, on page 10, which has some bearing on this and other work which may be done by outside printers:

Mr. MITCHELL.

"EXTRACT from the Minutes of a Meeting of the Treasury Board, held October 28, 1884, approved by the Governor in Council, November 2, 1884.

"The Board had under consideration a letter from the Auditor-General referring to the discussion in the Public Accounts Committee respecting public printing done otherwise than by the contractors, and requesting a ruling from the Treasury Board thereon.

"The Board, on careful consideration of the subject, recommended to Council that whenever printing is done by others than the contractors, the rates to be charged should be the current rates for work of the same magnitude at the place where the printing is performed."

That certainly will give very extensive latitude to the printers to charge what they please for any work which may be given them by the favoritism of the Government. Every man of them, after this, is to be entitled to his own prices, and this old cry about the Ontario rates is to be dropped. There will be no audit of the accounts in the future. There has been something like an audit heretofore, by the Queen's Printer, but in future every man is to fix his own price, as the Treasury Board has ordered, and is to get his own price; so I think the hon. member for Northumberland will have a "fat take," if the Montreal Herald, as it probably may, should get hold of some of this printing. If the hon. gentleman gets the rate which has been paid the last three or four years for this work, and if he gets a sufficient quantity of it, I can assure him he will soon become a rich man.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad the hon. gentleman thinks my prospects are so good. I differ from him, however, when he says that they can charge what they like. I take it, from the report he read, that the rates are to be the current rates of the place in which the work is done. Now, there is no place in the Dominion where there are so many newspapers and job offices as in the city of Montreal, where the competition is so great or where the printing is done so cheap. I only hope that his predictions about the Herald getting a share of this work will be realised. Knowing his experience in connection with that branch of business, I place a great deal of value on the statement he has made, and I consider myself in a better position than I was half an hour ago. The only drawback is, that I do not think I am likely to get much from this Government, because any man who takes the position of a free critic, as I do—hon. gentlemen may laugh, but it is so—any person taking an independent position as a free critic—of course I vote oftener with the Government than with the Opposition, but it is because their measures and principles are better, and not on account of any proclivities in their favor, any more than in favor of hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not think they give me much credit for it, or may pay much attention to what I say, but now that their attention has been called to it, I hope that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury Benches will bear this in mind, and that if there are any stray jobs to be given that the Herald Company, of which I am a shareholder, will get its share.

Mr. BLAKE. Nobody can object, after this, that if anything is given to the Herald Publishing Company it was not after public tender. What the hon. gentleman said when he compared the position of the Montreal Herald and that of the Montreal Gazette reminded me a little of the way they drive sledges in Russia. We will suppose that there is a great car, in which the Prime Minister is seated, drawn by a pair of horses; one is driving along with a good, steady, hack 'trot, like the Gazette; the other goes curvetting, and capering, and kicking up a row, but he pulls to the sledge all the same. They are both subject to the whip, and they are both entitled to the feed of oats.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a rare event to find a discussion taking place in this House in which so much amusement is created on a very small subject, and all I can say to my hon. friends on the other side of the House, with whom I sometimes sympathise and occasionally vote, is that if the remarks of their leader give them any satisfaction, I am glad they have got some. What troubles the hon. gentleman in his simile is, that the Herald, instead of using the whip on the horses, uses it on some of the guests; and if he occasionally applies the lash to the Herald, I am prepared to accept the joke that he has perpetrated at my expense with the same good nature that he has given it; and if the Herald should not, in the future, get any of these jobs, it will be because there is no public tender. I am no hypocrite in this matter; I do not beat about the bush; I am prepared to criticise in the public interest when there is a necessity for it, and I am prepared, as a printer, to do any work that is given me or that I can get honestly.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman saying that occasionally these newspapers apply the lash to the guests, for the simple reason that they are paid well by the Government to do so, and they would be acting a very poor part, after all the pap they get from the Government, if they did not apply the lash occasionally to those opposed to the Government; and I have no doubt the Montreal Herald will succeed in ingratiating itself into the good will of the Government and secure a proper share of the Government patronage, if this system is to be continued. However, the hon. gentleman has a great deal to learn yet in the printing line before he knows all about the business.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would be glad to get any hints you can give me.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I am going to give you some now. The hon. gentleman's interpretation of this clause in the report of the Treasury Board would not be workable, because if the work is given, say to the Montreal Herald, how is the Minister to ascertain the current rates at the place where the work is performed? Would he have to go around to all the numerous publication offices in the city of Montreal and take his report with him, after it was printed, and ask them how much they would have charged if they had been favored with the work. That would be a nice business transaction. The only way to get at the current rates where the work is done is to ask for tenders at that place. I think the committee will see the absurdity of the hon. gentleman's interpretation of this clause, and that the statement I make is perfectly correct, and the only solution of the paragraph, that the work is to be given out to the favorites of the Government—and they are to charge just what they please. There is generally a cordial feeling existing between printers in the same locality. In the city of Montreal, I have no doubt my hon. friend and the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) will be found to work in harmony with regard to the prices charged for work. And, if the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) should happen to get the Geological Report next year, and the Minister referred to the hon. member for Cardwell as to whether he was charged too much for it, I think the hon. member for Cardwell would certainly say: The Gazette got this job the year before, and it is nothing but fair that the hon. member for Northumberland should get it this year, and he did not charge too much. The Minister would at once, of course, conclude that he was acting in accordance with this clause in the report, and that the printing was done at the current rates at the place where the work was performed. It is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that the intention of this clause is that the work should be given out to favorites, and that the price should be the price fixed by the men who do the work, without reference to current rates at all.

Mr. BOWELL. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is judging others by himself, and is giving an illustration of the saying of the poet that "suspicion haunts the guilty mind." It is unfortunate that the hon. gentleman scarcely ever discusses a question relating to printing without indulging in very extravagant language. He put words in the Auditor General's mouth which are not to be found in the letter before us. He told us the Auditor General asked Mr. Selwyn why this work was done in Montreal at such "exorbitant" rates. The Auditor General said nothing of the kind. The only question asked by him was why the work was done in Montreal, costing so much more than it would have cost if it had been done by the parliamentary printer. Neither did the Auditor General call attention to the fact that the work was of a superior character to that done by the parliamentary printer at contract rates; nor did he ask whether any portion of that work was of a first-class character, or of a technical character; and my hon. friend knows very well that all these Geological Reports, and works of that class, cost a larger sum per 1,000 ems than the ordinary book work which is given to job offices. The hon. gentleman said he was unable to ascertain what was meant by the words "Ontario rate." I scarcely think that my hon. friend was honest or sincere in that; or, rather, I will not accuse him of being so ignorant as not to know what is meant by an "Ontario rate." The question has frequently been discussed before, and it was distinctly understood by everybody who knows anything of printing, to mean the rates the Ontario Government pays under its contract for printing, and I have every reason to know that the hon. gentleman knows that. The hon. gentleman says, also, that there is no audit. Now, there is no account paid for any work done which has not to be certified to by the Queen's Printer, whose duty it is to ascertain whether the prices charged by any printer in any part of the country who has been entrusted with the work were the current rates. We all know what current rates of printing mean. The hon. member for North Brant was a little facetious when he said it would be a nice thing for the Minister to go round from office to office, after the work was done, and ask at what price this or that man would do it. He knows, when the work is ordered to be done by a Minister or by the Department, it is the duty of his officer to see, first, that the work is done according to the order given; and secondly, that no more is paid, under the wording of the order of the Treasury Board, than the current rates. The reason the order was passed was this, that accounts were coming in from various places for work not included in the contract, at prices that were exorbitant, and it was deemed advisable to provide that classes of work which did not come within the meaning of the contract should not be paid more than would be charged for the same kind of work done for the ordinary publisher or private individual. That is what is meant by those terms. I can assure the hon. member for Brant that no job printer is permitted to charge what he pleases. If he thinks that is the meaning of the Order in Council he is greatly mistaken.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). That is what the Order in Council will lead to. Whoever audits the accounts will have to ascertain what the rates are in any particular place where this outside work is done, if he is to audit the accounts properly. With regard to my seeking to misrepresent what the Auditor General stated, the fact that I read the sentence contained in the Auditor General's letter, not once but twice, and also the reply of the Director-General of the Geological Survey, shows that I did not wish to misrepresent or put any words in the mouths of the Auditor General or the Director-General of the Survey. I say it was an exorbitant charge, and I am prepared to prove that by the report of the Auditor General. On page 209 of the Auditor General's Report you have the items of the account, amounting to $2,876.14. If you take off the amount which the Auditor General says was an over-charge, an amount greater than would have been charged had the work been done by the regular contractors—we find he deducted $790.10. On a job amounting to $2,786, an over-charge of $790 is monstrous.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite appreciate what is required of them in connection with this question. I am justified in saying that whenever it has been shown that printing has been given to anybody else than the contractors, at higher rates than the contract rates, the transaction is prima facie a job and the burden of proof rests with those who have diverted the printing to show that the transaction is justifiable. The only reason given for the diversion of the work to outside parties is that the Minister of Customs thinks that the work could not be done as well by the departmental printers. There is no proof of that assertion. Even the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), with his knowledge of printing and job offices, might be mistaken in giving an opinion to that effect, although the paper with which he is connected is larger than that with which the hon. Minister of Customs has been connected. It would be easy to determine whether the contractors were able or not to print this report of the Geological Survey properly, by asking them to furnish sample sheets, and if they could do the work as well as printing offices in Montreal, there would be no shadow of an excuse for taking it from them. If they can print the statutes, there is no reason why they could not do this work. It is far more important to have the statutes correctly printed than the reports of the Geological Survey, if it comes to a question of accuracy. We had the admission from the hon. member for the Montreal—I mean the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) that these matters given out to the newspaper offices would cost more than if given to the contractors. The Minister of Customs has said nothing on that. I think there is force in it. The case, then, stands thus, that this work admittedly cost twice as much as if it had been given to the Government contractors. It cost more, in some instances, but on the average, twice as much—69 cents as against 35 cents. My hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) reminds me that the contractors only get 10 cents for some of the work. At all events, it cost more than twice as much as it would if it had been given to the contractors. No reason has been given for this, and it is admitted the work if done by outsiders must necessarily be more costly. The reason urged for having it done in Montreal formerly now exists as a reason for having it done in Ottawa. We have heard the words of the horse who gallops outside the shafts in reference to this matter, but we have heard nothing from the shaft horse, to use the metaphor of the leader of the Opposition. The one who is supposed to jog along quietly inside of the shafts, and to do his full share of pulling the sledge, might, from his connection with this transaction, be able to throw some valuable light upon it, and might, perhaps, explain away these points, which are apparently established detrimentally to the character of this transaction.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have taken no part in this debate, because I look upon it as entirely out of order. The item before the committee is for parliamentary printing simply, and this matter of the printing of the Geological Report has really nothing whatever to do with it. I may, however, point out to hon. gentlemen that they are dealing with the question as if the printing of the Geological Report was included in the ordinary contract. If they will look at the contract and at the correspondence with the contractors, they will find that this particular work was expressly excluded from the contract. It was never done by the parliamentary contractors, and it forms no part whatever of the parliamentary contract. It has been always published by Dawson Brothers. It stands in a different position altogether from our ordinary Blue Books. It may be purchased at Dawson Brothers, who keep it on sale, I suppose by arrangement with the Government, or with the Director of the Geological Survey. It was originally printed, I believe, by Mr. John Lovell, of the city of Montreal. When the hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, it was transferred to the Herald office, the late Senator Penny and Mr. Wilson being at that time the proprietors of the Montreal Herald. It remained in that office until the change of Government, and then the managing director of the Montreal Gazette, finding that a job of this kind had been done at the Montreal Herald office, made application to have it done at the Gazette office, and it has since been done there; but the price now arranged to be given, and to be given for it next year, is very much lower than the price paid to the Herald office during the time they had it. It is not a matter, however, which comes under this item. I presume, from what the hon. gentleman says, that we are going to have this whole question of parliamentary printing discussed on some of the items, and that will be the proper time. I do not propose to be drawn into any discussion of it now; this is not within the parliamentary contract at all, but is specially excepted from the parliamentary contract by arrangement between the Department and the parliamentary contractors; and therefore, when they undertook to do our ordinary Blue Books at a particular price, they did not undertake to do any other kind of work for that price. We have, as a matter of fact, our Hansard, which, if the doctrine laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite is true, that all Government work ought to be done by the parliamentary contractors, under their contract, should be done by them at ordinary contract prices, and yet they are getting 60 cents a thousand ems, whereas their contract price is 25 or 30 cents. They are getting 60 cents, by a special arrangement, for the printing of the official reports of Parliament. It is Government work, but it forms no part of the parliamentary contract, just as the printing of the Geological Survey Reports forms no part of it.

Mr. MILLS. I do not admit the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statement that this is not pertinent to the item now before us. The whole question is whether this printing of the Geological Report shall be embraced in this item for the next year or the practice in times past shall continue; therefore it is strictly pertinent. I have mentioned why it was that this work was done in Montreal formerly and was not done under the contract. It was because the Geological branch was at Montreal, and it was necessary that the proof sheets should be read by those who prepared the report, and that the report should be strictly accurate. Now the branch is transferred to Ottawa. When it was transferred, I called the attention of the Government to it, and stated the reasons why the printing had been done in Montreal and the understanding then was that it should be done here; but, notwithstanding the assurance, not, perhaps, given in such definite terms as it should have been, but still leading Parliament to the conclusion that when the Geological Branch was transferred to Ottawa the printing of this report should be done here as a part of the general printing, the old practice continued. The reason for printing it elsewhere having ceased, the practice should have ceased at the same time, but it continued, and we now want to know whether that practice is to be continued or not. I think there is no reason for the continuance of the present practice. The Minister of Customs, in combatting the observations made by my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) said that, when printing of this sort was given out, if it was printing of the same sort as that done by the public printers, it was usually done at the same rates. He took exception to my crying "hear, hear." My reason for expressing dissent from the observations of the hon. gentlemen was that I remembered what took place in printing the report of the railway commission. Instead of that work being done by the public printers and at the ordinary rates it was given to Mr. Stephenson, who owned the Chatham Planet, and he gave the work to the public printers here; he made a bargain with them that the printing should be done at the same rate for which they did printing for the Government, and he was paid by the Government confidential rates, and received twice the amount of money that he paid over to the public contractors here for printing those volumes. Is it not obvious to every member of the committee that the public Treasury was mulcted to the extent that Mr. Stephenson was paid over and above what the public contractors received? Was it not as open to the Government to give that printing to Maclean, Roger & Co., the public printers, as it was to Mr. Stephenson to do so? I say that is a condition of things that, if this House discharges its duty as trustees of the public funds of this country, it would not for a moment tolerate. I complain of this system of jobbery—for it can be called nothing else—by which newspapers are subsidised to support the Administration. If the Government are not satisfied with the work done by the public printers let it be offered to public tender and let the price be so fixed. What have we an Independence of Parliament Act for? Is it not for the purpose of preventing the Government from exercising undue influence over the members of the House? We provide that in case a member becomes a contractor from the Government he shall forfeit his seat in the House. Yet, in the face of that statute, we have here a member of the House standing up in his place and publicly inviting the Government to give him a contract. The observations made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) reminded me of the meeting between the Black Knight and Friar Tuck; after a time they came perfectly to understand each other. The hon. gentleman says: The First Minister understands me; he knows I am independent of him; he knows that I freely criticise his Government, but still I am open here to receive a contract from the Administration. Now, I say that that is a condition of things that ought not to be tolerated any longer. The public printing ought to be handed over to the contractors to be done at the rates agreed upon.

Mr. BOWELL. Why didn't you carry it out?

Mr. MILLS. During the few years I had charge of the Department there was not a particle of printing given out from that Department by my order, with the single exception of this Geological Report, for the reasons which have been stated. It was my opinion that that exception, even, should come to an end as soon as possible, and the reason for its continuance ceased when the Department was transferred to Ottawa. I think that printing ought now to be done here and by the public printers, and I think the committee are entitled to know whether the Government propose to continue this system or whether they propose that this printing hereafter shall be done at Ottawa,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that the Geological Report was printed at Montreal by his directions, in consequence of the Director-General living there. It was given to the Montreal Herald in his time, and at a higher price than it has been done for since by the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know that. The hon. gentleman has not established that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Is it not so?

Mr. MILLS. No; I do not believe it is so. I ask for proof that it was so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Did the Montreal Herald tender for it? Will the hon. gentleman answer that?

Mr. MILLS. No; I did not say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I knew he would not say so. And the hon. gentleman gets up and reproves the hon. member for Northumberland for the joking way in which he said he was open to an offer. But the hon. gentleman did not object to this improper interference with a member of Parliament, this improper offer of a member of Parliament; he did not object to paying a higher price than was necessary to a member of the other branch of the Legislature, to Mr. Edward Goff Penny, the editor and the proprietor of the paper, a subservient organ and an able organ of the hon. gentleman, and a higher price than was paid to the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. MILLS. No, no.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) states so, and when he stated so he was not contradicted. Then again, he says that in his own Department that was the only instance in which he was an offender. I do not know how that may be, but the Government of which he was a member offended again, and again, and again, by giving away printing which came within the contract with the public printers, and in consequence of that improper action there was judgment given in the Court of Exchequer of $69,000 damages against this Government, which we had to pay, in consequence of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues having corruptly given away printing outside the contract made by themselves, and given it to their favorites in the press. The hon. gentleman, however, gets up and denounces this kind of thing. I wonder at his cheek in getting up and making such a statement.

Mr. DAVIES. It is amusing to see the simulated passion which the hon. gentleman puts on. He talks about the amount wasted by the late Government in giving out printing which should have been sent to the public printers. The Government erred, he said. Well, Sir, if they erred they had not an example before them such as he has. What were the facts proved in the Public Accounts Committee the other day? That, with the knowledge of that enormous sum of money which had been lost, in the face of the contract, in the face of the judgment in the Supreme Court, this Government is giving out, year after year, that very work—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it is not.

Mr. DAVIES. It is not open to denial, because, at the last meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, I took the contract which he has entered into himself, and I read the terms of that contract in the committee, and I challenged the denial of the committee there.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order. He has no right to refer to what took place in the committee.

Mr. DAVIES. So far as regards the reference made to the committee, that can be obliterated. It does not affect the statement I made in the slightest degree, the fact, which is part of the public records of the country, that to-day there is a contract with the public printers, and the hon. gentleman is deliberately violating that contract day by day, and making the country pay higher rates for printing. A lecture is read to the Opposition, but the hon. gentleman, after judgment given and judicial notice given, is following an unjustifiable, improper and illegal course. So far from having made out a case against the Opposition, he has made a whip for his own back, because the printing contract is being violated day by day with his full knowledge.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman has worked himself into a passion. He has, however, fallen into another error, in saying that this Government was liable to penalties such as the late Government were condemned to pay. I may tell him that the contract with the printers has been renewed without any advantage to them, not later than last year, after six years of that extravagance which the hon. gentleman mentions; and we have so little violated the contract that we are not liable for a single cent of damages in any way whatever. The hon. gentleman need not be alarmed that the country will have to bear any burden under this head. I know this to be a fact, and from this time the hon. gentleman will know it.

Mr. DAVIES. I am very willing to accept any statement of fact made by the hon. gentleman of his own knowledge. I have, however, read the contract and have knowledge of the facts. If the hon. gentleman gives this as his legal opinion, I shall have the temerity to express a legal opinion of my own. On the face of the contract, the Government are clearly liable. I said so in another place; I read the contract to members of the Government who were present, and I challenged them to say that my opinion was not the correct one, and it was not denied. It could not be denied, because we had the contract in black and white. A change was made during last year, as I understood the hon. gentleman to admit; but that does not relieve the Government. They have not even acted in ignorance, but they have deliberately violated the contract by giving the work to their own private friends and paying double prices for it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I repeat that under the contract, which was a very plain and simple one, the Government are not liable to a cent of damages; and they cannot be condemned to pay $69,000 for imprudence, if not something worse.

Mr. MILLS. The question is, did the Government give public printing to private parties when it should have been executed by the contractors here? I say they have done so. The First Minister has referred to the printing done during the term of the late Administration. I can turn up the accounts of the Interior Department and show that since the present Government came into office $15,000 has been spent for advertising in a single branch during one year, and $24,000 in another branch. In fact, that advertising formed a large percentage of the entire cost of the Administration. I can show a small sheet, called the North Star, printed two or three times at Rat Portage, in which the Government advertisements appeared.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order. We are not dealing with the question of advertising.

Mr. MILLS. We are dealing with the question of public printing, and I am answering statements made by the First Minister. The First Minister has referred to printing done at the Herald office. That case does not apply, for Mr. Penny was not a member of this House, but a member of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the hon. gentleman's statements amount to this: It is a great sin to bribe a member of the House of Commons but no sin to bribe a Senator.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Judging from the case of Senator Ogilvie, I should say that is the way.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The First Minister has referred to the verdict of $69,000 on account of printing done during the late Administration. He must, however, remember that one year of that time was during the period while the hon. gentleman himself was in power, and his Administration is therefore included in that verdict. With respect to the publication of the Pacific Railway report, I will give the facts. The copy was sent to Messrs. Stephenson, of Chatham, sons of the former representative of East Kent. That member of the House had conveniently retired to a fat berth in the North-West, and had transferred his business to his sons. The Government took them under their care and protection, and sent a copy of the report to be printed by them. Messrs. Stephenson found they were not capable of doing the work. They had not the necessary material or machinery in the office to do the work, and they made a trip to Ottawa, and conveniently got the Government contractors here to undertake the work. And, Mr. Chairman, although it may seem incredible, it is the fact, that those gentlemen actually never touched the work, they never set a type, they never printed a sheet, they never read a proof, they never had anything to do in connection with the publication of the book, and yet they pocketed $3,000 of the money of the people of the country for having been favored with an order for that work. Now, I contend that that $3,000 was given to the Messrs. Stephenson. The Government might as well have put their hands in the public Treasury and taken out $3,000 and handed it to them as a bonus for their support of the Government, and as a favor to them for the feeling they had for their father as a supporter of the Government in this House. I say, Sir, it was a gross outrage, and these are just samples of instances which are continually coming up in connection with the public printing, as administered by the present Government. I think it is high time that a new leaf should be turned by the Government, and that they should endeavor at least to act honestly in this matter, to try to economise, and try to treat the public funds in the way they should be treated. I say it is a disgrace that any Administration should act in the way they have done, and I think it will be found, before the House prorogues, that even greater jobs have been perpetrated in subsidising the newspaper men who support the Administration.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not wish to protract the debate, but there is one reference I would like to make. My hon. friend to my left argued, and I thought fairly, that the conduct of the Government in these matters of printing, and their administration of these matters, is to be judged by its own merits; and it is no answer, when you prove a thing to be wrong, to say: True, it is wrong, but some previous Government did the same thing. That is a foolish way of arguing.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. My hon. friend from Cardwell thinks that party exigencies justify it; prove it as wrong, or as corrupt, or as wicked as you like, party exigencies will justify it. But if you take that ground, where is it going to end? We will never get a pure system. I will take the remark the hon. First Minister made and apply it to the hon. member for Cardwell, and see how he likes it. He argued that the late Government was guilty of a corrupt act, guilty of attempting to bribe a member of the Legislature—

Mr. BOWELL. He need not have gone so far as that.

Mr. DAVIES. I prefer to take his own language; the application will be better. The late Mr. Penny was, he said, proprietor of the Herald, and at that time he was a member of the Senate, and, therefore, the giving of this printing to him was a corrupt act on the part of the Government—an act of bribery. The hon. gentleman still adheres to that statement; it would be a corrupt act. Very well, what are the facts? Mr. Penny was not the proprietor of the Herald in a legal sense.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He was, at that time.

Mr. DAVIES. No; the Herald company was a corporation.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No; not till after that.

Mr. DAVIES. In point of fact, Mr. Penny occupied exactly the same position that the hon. member for Cardwell now occupies; he is a member of the Gazette firm, and if it was an act of bribery to give printing contracts to the Herald Company, of which Mr. Penny was manager, a fortiori it is an act of bribery to give contracts to the Montreal Gazette Company, of which the hon. member for Cardwell is a member. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain that question to the hon. member for Cardwell.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is taking the role of the hon. member for Bothwell. He says: It is no matter how corrupt we were, that is no excuse for you; you are a Reform Government, in the best sense of the word—that is what he says to us. We are a Reform Government, and although it is natural that in our time, not being a Reform Government, and not being so sensitive as our successors, it is natural that we should help Mr. Penny and others in that way. But you have no right to do so. You should be governed by a different principle. But the reason for the tu quoque argument was this: The hon. member for Bothwell got into a high state of indignation; he denounced the present Government; he charged them with all kinds of corruption and impropriety for doing what he admits his Government did, when they were in. It will not do to get out of it in that way—it will not do to try and change the suit. The hon. gentleman said: Well, if I did commit a sin in the way of printing in my Department, you have been guilty of paying too much for advertising. Very well; when the advertising question comes up, perhaps we will look into that, Mr. Chairman; meantime, the hon. gentleman is trying to drag a herring across the dog's nose—he is trying to draw away the attention of the public from the admitted fact which was brought out, and he denounces with great indignation the present Government for this printing. He admits now that his Government is liable to the same charge; but you should not bring it up, he says; no matter what we did, you should not bring that up. What we say is, that it does not lie in the hon. gentleman's mouth, after his confession, to bring charges against us, and he has not answered the question why the Montreal Herald got more than the Gazette. I found out since; I did not know it at the time, but there were two or three of the hon. gentleman's colleagues, stockholders, partners in the establishment, members of the Administration and members of this House. Mr. Laflamme and Mr. Huntington were shareholders, and they were putting this additional sum into their pockets, and he knew, and his colleagues knew, that they were shareholders in that newspaper.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says that I did not explain how it was that the Montreal Herald received more than the Montreal Gazette does now. Well, I cannot explain what I have not admitted to be the fact. I do not admit it now. I say that if you look at the prices of the Geological Reports you will find no difference in former prices and the prices at present. The work of the same size is sold at the same price. I am quite ready to assume full responsibility of the arrangement made with the Montreal Herald, though it was made before I became a member of the Administration. In fact, I came here in November, and the arrangement had been made some months before. The price paid the Herald was the price which the hon. gentleman himself had paid to Lovell & Co. for printing which had been done at the Montreal Gazette office—

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No, no.

Mr. MILLS—by the present Queen's Printer. The hon. gentleman says "no," and if he speaks of his own personal knowledge, I accept his statement; but my recollection is, that Mr. Lovell had the work printed at the Gazette office, when the present Queen's Printer was in charge of the Gazette.

Mr. BOWELL. At that time Mr. Lovell had the largest book and job establishment in the Dominion of Canada, and he was not likely to go to any newspaper office to get this work done.

Mr. MILLS. The Dawsons have a large establishment at the present time, but everything for them is now done at the Gazette office.

Mr. BOWELL. They have no printing office; they are only publishers.

Mr. MILLS. Well, the hon. gentleman has said that I have not explained a certain statement. I have already stated that I do not admit or believe that that statement is correct. I believe that the cost of printing in Montreal has been much the same for years, and it is not to be supposed that a newspaper would do the work as cheaply as the public printers. What I complain of is, not that the work was printed at Montreal while the Department was in Montreal, at rates which the Government could reasonably agree upon, but after the Geological branch is established here it is wrong that the Government should keep up the business of printing in Montreal.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Whether the printing is done at the Gazette office, or at any other office, I have no hesitation in saying, as knowing something about these things, that I should be deeply sorry to see the Geological Report printed at Ottawa, until the establishment here is in a better position to do good work. No one can look at that work and compare it with our ordinary work, without seeing that there is a very material difference, not only in the paper, but in the character of the type, and everything else about it. Personally, I sincerely hope that the next contract made for the printing of Parliament will include all the work, both parliamentary and departmental, so that the best printers in the country can come here and tender for it. I do not wish to reflect on the contractors; their contract is nearly run out, and they would be foolish to renew their plant at such a time as this; but if the whole printing of Parliament and the Government, were in the hands of one contractor, as the result of one tender, as I hope will be the case under the new contract, with regard to which I expect to make a statement before the close of the Session, we might be able to get work of this kind done at Ottawa as well as it could be done by anybody in the country. The hon. member for North Brant referred to the Messrs. Stephenson; and without saying whether the arrangement to which he referred was right or wrong, I wish to remind him that the chief complaint made with regard to the late Administration had reference to work given to an hon. gentleman who occupied the Chair in this House, and who, having printing contracts, did not perform the work himself—he had no means of doing it—but farmed it out in the city of St. John, and that he did precisely what is said to have been done by the Messrs. Stephenson, except that he did not send the work to the public contractors, but to another printing office, and that he derived his profit from the difference between what he paid the printers and what he charged to the Government. Another thing I want to point out is this, that the Geological Report is not a part of the printing contract, but, is expressly excepted from the contract; and if to-morrow the contractors were asked to do that work, they would have the right to do precisely as they have done with regard to the Hansard, charge their own price for the work. But what these gentlemen did was this: They gave printing of the Departments of that profitable kind, the doing of which by the contractors enables them to do other work, in reference to which we have prices cited here, at that nominally low rate. They gave out the ordinary forms of the Departments, which are practically kept up in stereotype form. They gave envelopes to be printed—in fact, all those things which are the fat work of the printer. That was the kind of work they gave out, and for which judgment was obtained in consequence of enormous profits. But no one can say that $230,000 worth of printing—which I believe was the amount done outside during the term of hon. gentlemen opposite—of ordinary printing of solid work, would yield such a profit as nearly $70,000. The profit arose from the fact that it was part of the work given to outside printers for their benefit—a practice which has been entirely abandoned by the present Government; and I venture to say that hon. gentlemen cannot find a single case, unless it be an odd notice for a post office about a holiday, or something of that kind, of printing of that description given out by this Administration since they came into office.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The error on the part of this Administration is far more glaring than that of the former. There was some common sense in giving the work out for the Lower Provinces; it was only continuing the practice which had been followed by the former Government.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). You were a Reform Government—why did you not reform it?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). If they are to blame, that blame must fall on hon. gentlemen opposite. They established the bad rule, and the Reform Administration were foolish enough to fall into the trap set for them by their predecessors, and they continued the practice that had always been followed, of giving out the work for the Maritime Provinces. It was on that ground that the suit was entered and the damages were obtained. But this Administration gives out the work in a more glaring manner. They give it out in $10,000, $20,000 and $50,000 lots from the Department of Agriculture; we find that this year no less than $80,000 has been expended by that Department for publications, which have all been got at outside prices. There can be no excuse for the Government doing that, for the simple reason that they know it is wrong. It is high time that they should see they did wrong when they established this practice, prior to the Mackenzie Government's term of office, instead of re-establishing it when they came back to power and committing greater sins against the public good than they did when they gave the work out in the Maritime Provinces only.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I remember that after the Mackenzie Government was in power for three years the Speaker was unseated in connection with a printing contract, and the former Minister of Militia and the late Mr. Jones were also unseated.

Mr. VAIL. No.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Well, he resigned; he took the hint. What are the facts? This Government has been seven years in power, and no hon. gentleman in this House has been unseated. Why do hon. gentlemen not bring a charge?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. DAVIES. The same work is done under the guise of a corporation.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Is there any member of this Government connected with a printing establishment? It just shows how sincere these gentlemen are now, when they forget their former sins.

Mr. VAIL. I have refrained from saying anything about this matter; but as I have been referred to so pointedly by the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White), I may say a word or two. It did happen that I was very remotely connected with a paper in the Lower Provinces; but I had no more to do with it, in the way of receiving receipts, than my hon. friend; I never received a dollar from it in any way; I only gave my subscription to it. But as I was connected with it, I had a feeling that I did not care to sit in this House and have any man point his finger at me, and say that if this matter were investigated I would have to give up my seat, therefore, I honorably resigned my seat. It has been properly stated by the hon. member for North Brant that this system was handed down by the former Government, and after the change of Government took place the work was transferred to the Citizen, at the same prices that were paid to the Reporter before. I did not intend to say a word with regard to this. I do not want to charge any hon. gentleman opposite with these things, with which I think they are certainly chargeable, in consequence of the delicate position in which I find myself. I do not think any man can say I took a cent for printing, or anything else I was not entitled to.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. member for Hastings said that no Speaker, since this Government came into office, has been unseated. A contract was made for printing on behalf of the Post Office Department, by Mr. Anglin, when Speaker. He believed then he was not violating the Independence of Parliament Act. There was a case, that of Mr. Bell, of Russell, who had done printing for the Government when he was connected with a newspaper. His seat was contested; a committee was appointed, with Sir John Rose as chairman, to enquire into his case, and they reported he had not violated the Act. Then there was the case of Mr. Stephenson, who did printing for the Government to the amount of $1,200, and the Minister of Customs, as connected with the Belleville Intelligencer, who was paid over $600, and Mr. Boaty, of East Toronto, was paid for printing, $5,000; and all these hon. gentlemen continued to sit in Parliament. No one questioned their right to sit here. The rule in Bell's case was held applicable, and the question was not raised again, until the case of Mr. Anglin was brought before the committee, which laid down a different rule, and Mr. Anglin resigned his seat.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has repeated over and over again these statements with reference to myself. If he will look at the records he will find that I was charged with receiving $1,000, and if he will turn back to the speeches of the late leader of the Government he will find in a campaign speech of his, in which the same charge is repeated. But if the hon. gentleman has any recollection at all, he will find that the amount which was charged against my name, as connected with the Intelligencer, should have been charged to the Toronto Patriot or Leader, I don't know which; for when I called for the receipts, Mr. Irving, of Hamilton, who was the chairman, said it was all an error. All the hon. gentleman will be able to find that I received was the sum of 63½ cents. I know the hon. gentleman refers to the report made by the committee. I will not characterise that report by stating the opinion I hold of it, because I know that it is not necessary. The only sum paid the Intelligencer was for the ordinary advertising of discounts on American money. That is the head and front of my offending. I know I was served with a writ for damages, I challenged the opposite party to take it into court, and they did not dare do so, but allowed it to drop. When the whitewashing Bill of hon gentlemen opposite was introduced I voted against it. I had no fear that anything could be proved affecting my seat, as I had done nothing in violation of the Act. The hon. member for Digby was a little in error when he said the prices paid to the Halifax Citizen were the same as the regular prices paid.

Mr. VAIL. I did not say that. I said they were the same as those paid the Halifax Reporter for doing the same work under the former Government.

Mr. BOWELL. I know nothing about that, but if the hon. gentleman will refer to the speech of the Postmaster General in 1875 or 1876 he will find that he said the Government were paying 50 per cent. more for the work done in the Maritime Provinces than should have been paid. I call the attention of the committee to the error of the hon. member for Brant, quite unintentional, no doubt, in reference to the time covered by the suit entered by McLean & Roger, by which they obtained a verdict of over $69,000. He said it covered a year of printing done during this Administration, and to prove that satisfactorily he said the suit was not entered for a year or eighteen months after this Government came into power. The action was not entered until a year or eighteen months after this Government came into power, and it was only after the last Session of Parliament that it was finally adjusted, on the award made by the Exchequer Court. The hon. gentleman is in error in saying it covered any part of the printing done by the present Administration, I think I can establish that fact, for I have the dates and the items in my office, and will be happy to show the hon. gentleman that he is in error.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I was so informed by an authority I have no reason to doubt, but if the hon. gentleman will show me, as he says he will, a convincing statement, I will be convinced. I think my authority is very good, and until I see those statements I am not prepared to admit I am wrong.

Mr. BOWELL. From my experience of the hon. gentleman, I do not expect him to admit that he is wrong. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the confidence he places in me. He is not prepared to accept my statement when I tell him I have the proof, but says he has the statement from a gentleman who is a good authority. Under the circumstances I do not propose to attempt to convince the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I have not refused to take the hon. gentleman's word, but he himself said he would show me the proof; and since he has said so, I do not think it any imputation on his veracity that I should say I am willing to believe the hon. gentleman when he shows me the proof.

Mr. VAIL. I said that the prices paid the Citizen newspaper were exactly those paid the Halifax Reporter under the former Government, and printing had been going on from 1867 to 1874 before it was transferred. If the prices paid had been exorbitant there would have been a change made before that time. He did not say I was the only one out of 33 members who, strictly speaking, were just as much, in fact, more open to the charge, who resigned his seat and went to the country. I am not at all sure that the hon. the Minister of Customs should not have been one of them.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister of Customs says I have charged him with receiving over $1,000, when he received only 63 cents.

Mr. BOWELL. No; I did not. You said $600 or $700. I said the report charged me with receiving $1,000.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman may have received only 63 cents after the general election of 1874, but I did not pretend to speak of that, but of what he received after he became a member of Parliament. The hon. gentleman knows that 63 cents was not the account of the Belleville Intelligencer, but over $600. The hon. gentleman had forfeited his seat before the election of 1874, and it was a mere fraction that he received after that. I referred to Mr. Beaty, of Toronto, who was not a member of this House, except during the first Parliament, and yet he drew over $500 while he was a member, and Mr. Stephenson drew upwards of $1,100, and the hon. gentleman's account was over $600, but not after the general election of 1874.

Mr. BOWELL. Let the hon. gentleman be honest when he is talking of this matter. The accounts of the Belleville Intelligencer were for advertising the post office letters, which were advertised at that time by the post offices in the different cities and towns in the country. Every month the uncalled-for letters were published in the newspapers of the different towns and cities. As far as printing was concerned, while I was connected with that paper I have no recollection that I ever had the slightest job from any Government. There may have been advertising of mail contracts in the town and in the county in which I resided; there was the advertising of the uncalled-for letters, there was the printing, sometimes, of little slips, which came from the local postmaster and not from the Government; and I have no doubt that these items were charged to the contingent account of the post office and sent to the Government. But they were not printing sent by the Government to the office with which I was then connected, except the advertisements to which I have referred, that is, mail contracts, and articles of that kind. I am quite satisfied, and I have the very best opinions of the first lawyers of the country that, as far as that was concerned, and the advertising of the discount on American invoices, it did not come within the meaning of the Act. If it did, why did not the hon. gentleman's friends prosecute, as I challenged them to?

Mr. VAIL. That is the very printing the Citizen did all through.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error. I am not discussing the Citizen, and I made no charge against the hon. gentleman; but the printing which the Citizen had was of various kinds of blank forms for the post office in Halifax. I never had any work of that kind.

Mr. MILLS. What is the difference between advertising letters for the post office and printing blanks for the post office?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is a contract in the one case and not in the other.

Mr. CASEY. The subject of the transactions with the hon. Minister of Customs was introduced chiefly in order to point out that, when the transactions with Mr. Anglin, which were referred to by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), took place, it was not as clearly settled as it is now that payments of that sort were improper. Attention was drawn to Mr. Anglin's case; it was enquired into by the Committee of Privileges and Elections, in which there was a large majority of that gentleman's own friends, and they reported that he was technically justified by precedents, but the committee chose to lay down their own opinion of what the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act required, and decided that these payments were unconstitutional. Mr. Anglin loyally accepted that decision, went to the people, and came back with the endorsement of his constituents, and resumed the Chair of this House, with credit to himself and to the House. What are the lessons to be drawn from that case? Is it that those transactions are to justify similar ones now? Quite the reverse. The law is now settled by the Committee on Privileges and Elections adversely to that view, and if that was blameable at that time, how much more is it blameable now? What is the difference between Mr. Anglin's position and that of some gentlemen who have sat in the House since, who, perhaps, sit in it to-day? The plan of forming a corporation, a joint stock company, has been hit upon, in order to evade what has been declared the spirit of the Act. I do not know how long that will stand, and how long it will be held to be proper for a member of this House, as a member of a small corporation, perhaps a family compact, perhaps a ring of friends, to receive in that way what he could not receive if he owned the paper himself. I think it was certainly unwise on the part of a gentleman occupying a position in connection with a newspaper of that kind to attempt to cast blame on another gentleman who had been a member of this House, and I think it might have been inconvenient for that hon. gentleman, and for others who have been members of this House at different times, if the Committee on Privileges and Elections were now disposed to interpret the spirit of the Act as strictly as they were when the Liberal party was in power.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. member for West Elgin asserts that a plan has been hit upon by which members of Parliament can be shareholders in joint stock companies, and so being evade the law. I would ask the hon. gentleman who introduced that clause into the Independence of Parliament Act? I find, in chap. 5, 41 Vic., assented to on 10th May, 1878, that clause 7 is as follows:—

"This Act shall not extend to disqualify any person as a member of the House of Commons by reason of his being a shareholder in any incorporated company having a contract or agreement with the Government."

The hon. gentleman, in all fairness, must admit it was not this Government, but the one of which he was a very ardent supporter, and of which the member for Bothwell was a member, that introduced this provision to further secure the independence of Parliament. The hon. gentleman has referred to the member for Gloucester (Mr. Anglin) and has said that the errors, or indiscretions, or inadvertencies of a former Speaker of this House, occurred in consequence of attention not having been called to the matter before it came before the committee. I think the hon. gentleman was one of those who read Opposition newspapers of that time, and in 1874 I find two articles, very suggestive and brief, which speak very strongly against this action of the Government, in giving Mr. Anglin, then Speaker, large printing contracts. I find the following in the St. John correspondence of the Montreal Gazette, of 18th July, 1874:—

"There is a good deal of talk in the city about a job perpetrated by the Dominion Government on behalf of Mr. Anglin, the Speaker of the House of Commons. It is said that His Honor, not satisfied with the salary which he receives as Speaker; not satisfied with being permitted to turn the press out of the rooms which they have occupied since the Parliament buildings were erected, and which were expressly built for them, in order that he may have larger quarters for his family, has demanded and received the printing patronage of the Province, and that notwithstanding he has no job printing office of his own, he is farming out to other printers, making a comfortable commission for himself out of the transaction. There are two objections to this proceeding; it is a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, which forbids members of Parliament receiving gratuities from the Government. It is disgraceful that the Speaker, above all men, should become thus the recipient of favors from the Government, a fact that must entirely destroy all confidence in his impartiality and make him what he proved himself to be last Session, a mere partisan Speaker."

I find, further, in the Ottawa Daily Citizen of 9th July, 1874, the following:—

"When Mr. Gray, a member of the Dominion House of Commons, accepted work from the Government of Sir John Macdonald, the Grit press could find no language strong enough to condemn him for the 'corrupt act.' They were forced to admit that it was not in contravention of the letter of the Independence of Parliament Act, but they condemned it as a violation of its principle. Foremost among the assailants of Mr. Gray was Timothy Warren Anglin, M.P., editor and proprietor of the St. John Freeman, and his violent speeches and rabid articles upon the subject were copied approvingly by the Grit press. It now turns out that the same immaculate gentleman, while holding the position of Speaker of the House of Commons, has secured the post office printing, but having no job office in connection with the Freeman has farmed it out to other establishments. This is the charge made against Mr. Anglin, and admitted by him to be true, and his sole defence for the job is, that there is very little profit in it. We can remember well how frequently Mr. Anglin quoted the Independence of Parliament Act against Mr. Gray. Let us see how it suits the case of Mr. Anglin. The Act declares that 'no person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment, permanent or temporary, in the service of the Government of Canada, at the nomination of the Crown, to which an annual salary or any fee, allowance or emolument, or profit of any kind or amount whatever, from the Crown, is attached, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons, nor shall he sit or vote in the same during the time he holds such office, commission or employment.'"

Mr. CASEY.

Now, when the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) states that the only printing done in the Lower Provinces was given to the papers there, while the same rule did not apply to the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, if he had looked over the schedule of claims made by the Government contractors he would find there was an amount, I think, exceeding $216,320 paid for printing outside of the contract, then held by Maclean, Roger & Co. He must remember that during the past year and previously journalists have been stigmatised as being subsidised organs if they did Government printing. Why, if there were any subsidised organs at all in this country, they must have been the organs supporting hon. gentlemen composing the Government which fell in 1878. Hon. gentlemen must remember one case not far from this city, when in twenty-four hours the most rabid Tory organ was changed into the most subservient and loud mouthed Government organ and apologist. In looking over the record of the amount paid to that newspaper by the Reform administration, I find that not less than $45,000 or $50,000 were paid out for work belonging to the contractors, and it will be discovered, when the vouchers are brought down which were asked for, between 1874 and 1878, large amounts were paid for work given to various printers, and portions of that work were never performed. This, I think, I shall be able to establish. It is most unfair that journalists who, from 1874 to 1878, fought against the then Government, who gave them a fair field, but showed them no favor, It is most unfair that gentlemen, because they happen to receive, for the papers with which they are connected, either as editors, or publishers, or managers, a certain amount of printing from the Government, should be stigmatised as being merely subsidised organs. For my part, I have always been a publisher of a Conservative newspaper; I have always supported the Conservative party; I have always given a Conservative vote, and when my party fell in 1873, I stood loyally by it, and fought its battles; but neither this Government, nor any Government that ever existed, could buy my opinions as a journalist or my liberty as an independent elector or member of Parliament. Therefore, I hope that hon. gentlemen on both sides who are connected with the press will have some respect for the amenities of the profession. As journalists, we are bound to let the country know on which side we stand; we may at times say and do ungenerous things in the excess of partisan zeal, or the temporary excitement of political passion, but aside from this, I do not believe the press of either party is corrupt in this particular, and I trust that every hon. gentleman connected with the press will at all times endeavor to maintain a manly and honorable position. So far as I am concerned, I shall fight the Reform party when it is in power, and as things are now, shall fight it when in Opposition, and knowing my position, I think that the public will believe that no printing contract, given to a journal in which I may have an interest, will have anything to do with any expression of opinion which I may record, when I believe such expression is beneficial to the public.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). It is very convenient to enjoy the favor of the Government, with regard to public printing.

Mr. HESSON. That is the trouble with you.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I can tell the hon. gentleman from North Perth that I have been publishing a newspaper for over thirty years, and during the whole of that time I never got enough Government patronage to keep him in board for a month. It is very convenient for those hon. gentlemen who are proprietors of newspapers to be in the good graces of the Government, for we find in the Public Accounts occasionally that advances are made for work which is not done. It is very convenient, when a Government organ becomes hard up, to be able to come to the Department at Ottawa and draw $500 or $1,500 for work which is actually not done. That has been done during the past year by the proprietors of the Ottawa Citizen and of the Montreal Gazette; advances have been made to them, as can be shown by the Public Accounts. The proprietors of those papers have gone to the Government and have got advances upon work which was not done, and was not delivered. Now, I consider this is not the right way of conducting the public business. It is time enough to pay for work when it is completed and delivered; but I have strong doubts, in my own mind, as to whether a great deal of the work that has been paid for by this Government was ever done at all; at least, I believe a large part of it was never delivered. That is the case with this celebrated pamphlet, published by the Rev. Alfred J. Bray, of Montreal. It is difficult to trace where those 5,000 pamphlets went, for we paid for that number. There are many other instances of this kind. It is very convenient for those gentlemen, when they find themselves in financial straits, to make a visit to the Department of Agriculture and say to the Minister that they are a little hard up, and would like to get $500 or $1,000. Now, I say that does not add to the independence of Parliament; it does not add to the influence of the newspaper press of this country. The Conservative press of this country, by the way it has been treated by this Government, has been degraded and debased. It no longer represents the people, but is the mere mouthpiece of the Government. These men, who are continually receiving large amounts from the Government, cannot express their opinions independently; they are the wards of the Government in every sense of the term, and therefore incapable of expressing an independent opinion.

Mr. HESSON. I think the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is a little bit troubled because the Government do not distribute their favors to the press of the country, irrespective of politics. Now, he knows perfectly well that the Conservative party never professed to neglect their friends and to patronise those who are opposed to them. My hon. friend paid a poor compliment to the Globe, the London Advertiser and many other papers who are supporting the Ontario Administration to-day, and who receive the patronage of that Government. I do not say the Toronto Globe has sold itself to assist Mr. Mowat; I believe it is advocating the principles which it believes to be right and in the interests of its party. I am convinced that the press which supports the Mowat Government would not cease to write articles in favor of that Government, even if they did not receive patronage. I have been surprised that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) should have paid so bad a compliment to the newspaper profession, to which he belongs. When the hon. gentleman first spoke I did not understand that he found fault with the character of the work done, but that he said it had been well done. Indeed, I did not at first understand him to complain that the price was high, but his complaint was that the work should have been done by the regular contractors. The matter should then have been allowed to drop. The amount now asked for printing under this head is the same as was asked in 1877-78. Two or three hours have been spent on this item; the hon. member for Bothwell has been up ten or twelve times, and I do not think the committee have any more information than they formerly possessed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not think the time has been wasted. It has been shown that, according to the Auditor General, there has been an over payment of $790 on an amount of work costing $2,800. The hon. member for North Perth, surely, must not think it is waste time to consider such a question. If the facts are true, a remedy should be applied, and the amount overpaid be repaid.

Mr. MILLS. I asked the First Minister whether he intended to continue this work of printing the Geological Report to private parties. We have not yet had an answer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will ascertain all about it before the subject of printing comes up again.

Mr. MILLS. Then the hon. gentleman will inform us what is the intention of the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very likely.

Immigration.....$368,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This item requires considerable discussion. There is scarcely an item in the Estimates the propriety of which may be better questioned than this item of nearly $400,000 for immigration. I have paid some attention to the reports of the Minister and to the statistics therein contained, and I find the alleged statistics as to the immigrants into this country appear to be totally irreconcilable with other facts known to us. I do not know whether it be that the report made to the Department grossly exaggerates the number of immigrants who come to this country, or whether it is that the immigrants who come here only remain for an exceedingly short time and then depart, or whether, as a matter of fact, they displace a number of our own people, and drive them into other countries. I know that no sort of explanation of a satisfactory kind has ever been given by the Minister or any of his employés, as to the alleged number of immigrants who come into this country and who, so far as our census returns and municipal returns go, certainly do not remain here. My own impression of this matter is this: That the whole system of assisted passages is becoming a gigantic fraud on the people of Canada. I believe we get exceedingly little benefit from this expenditure. I doubt very much whether desirable immigrants, who come to this country and remain here, come in any proportion by reason of the information furnished by the Department of Agriculture, or by reason of the assistance given to them by that Department. I think it is well worth the consideration of the House and of the Government whether this whole system of immigration should not be reformed, from the bottom. The United States, for a long time, I think from the very commencement, have not found it worth while to go to the expense of maintaining a department of this sort, much less of paying for it out of the public funds. It may have, in past times, been worth our while to bring people here at the public cost; but I do not think it is worth while any longer. Those portions of our people who are, from various causes, most affected by this immigration, have remonstrated against it in no uncertain language. From the various great cities of Canada over and over again representations have been made to the Government and to the Department, all tending to show that this system is being greatly abused; that a great number of persons are being brought here for whom there is no employment. This means one of two things; either the people do not remain here, and the money is worse than thrown away, or, if they do remain here, drive out of employment other persons already resident in the country, who deserve our best consideration. I find in the four years, 1881-82-83 and '84, the Department alleges it has brought 397,000 people into this country. I cannot find that there is any tolerable evidence that those persons, or any great number of them, have remained in the country. One thing is clear; they do not appear to have settled in the Maritime Provinces or in the Province of Quebec. The Department gives certain figures, more or less reliable, or perhaps I should say more or less unreliable, as to settlers in the North-West, Manitoba and British Columbia, but it leaves wholly untouched the question of where the great remainder have gone. Now, we know from the census reports which we have had submitted to us at various times, that the Province which has always received the greatest number of those emigrants has been Ontario, and we also know, from the municipal statistics of Ontario, that it is physically impossible that more than a very small percentage of them should have remained in that Province. For those reasons, I believe it is high time for us to consider this whole question—high time, I believe, unless a much clearer account can be given, and much better evidence brought down than we have received, that those immigrants remained in this country—to consider whether the greater part of this sum which the Government demand may not be saved altogether. Now, I shall be glad indeed to hear from the Minister in charge where he supposes these 400,000 persons have gone, who are alleged, within the last four years, according to the returns of his Department, to have settled in this country. The evidence, so far as we have it, apart from this bald statement in these reports, all tends to show very strongly that precisely the same result is occurring in 1881-82-83-84 as occurred from 1860 to 1871, and from 1871 to 1881, and that result was this: That the vast proportion of the persons who are alleged to have come to Canada did not remain in Canada, but went elsewhere, presumably to the United States, though possibly a smaller proportion may have returned to England. Now, I believe the time has arrived in Canada when little is to be done by assisting persons to come here. The older Provinces are, as we find to our sorrow, not only well supplied with population, but are unable to retain the natural increase of their own population; and I doubt exceedingly if there is any great advantage to us in paying sums of money to bring persons to go to the North-West. There may be exceptional cases, but from all I have seen or heard of the North-West, I do not believe we are doing any good to that country in bringing these persons, without some moderate supply of capital. I think the only immigration likely to be of service to us in Manitoba and the North-West consists of persons possessing a sufficient amount to enable them to bring a reasonable quantity of land into cultivation; and I think nobody will contend that the persons whom we are obliged to assist out here will, unless in very exceptional cases, be likely to be useful settlers in the North-West. As for the older Provinces—for reasons I have stated, and particularly for the well-known reason that we are not able to keep our own people, as is only too clearly shown by the returns submitted to us, not from American but Canadian sources, and particularly in Quebec and Ontario—I say as to the older Provinces, we are not likely to do ourselves any good by bringing these people, as we have been doing.

Mr. POPE. I have heard the same remarks of my hon. friend before, and I have read them before. It is the old story which the hon. gentleman has been parading since last Session throughout the country, in about the same style as he has told it to night. I can say that the information I have received shows that these men do come here, that returns are made by the agents where they come, and returns of their distribution in this country are also made, and I believe he has no right to say—I do not know, in fact, that he did say—that they do not come to this country. But that men will go from this country as well as come to it there is no question. The hon. gentleman says that people are driven out by others coming, but does he think that the people are too thick here, and that there is not

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

