Mr. VAIL. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) seems to think I do not understand the geography of the country. I have travelled a little through Ontario. I do not know whether my hon. friend has had the opportunity of travelling through the Maritime Provinces or not; but if he takes a trip down that way, he will find that these little ponds and creeks in Ontario are insignificant in comparison with the broad Atlantic; he will see that we are a maritime people; that we want a trade with all the world; that a large proportion of our people are on the water all the year round, and that we require breakwaters and piers, such as are not required in the Upper Provinces. I have not the slightest objection to any grants being made that will increase the trade and commerce of the Upper Provinces; but I merely take advantage of this opportunity to point out to the Government that while we are spending these large sums for canal accommodation in the Upper Provinces our public works in the Lower Provinces are in a state of decay, and that unless something is done very soon I am sure our trade will suffer; and I am sure no expenditure could be made that our people would value more than an expenditure in connection with navigation securities. Reference has been made to the former Government. I may say that the average expenditure for the Province of Nova Scotia during the four years I had the honor of a seat in the Government was something like $240,000 a year, whereas I find in the Estimates brought down now a sum of $1,500 for the whole Province of Nova Scotia; and last year the amount was $40,000. I do not, of course, know what the Supplementary Estimates will show, but I hope it will be something large. I hope this matter will be taken into the consideration of the Government.

Mr. MULLOCK. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if any expenditure has been decided upon, or whether any plan has been considered for connecting the Trent waters with the upper waters ?

Mr. POPE. No plan has been decided upon. Surveys are going on, and when the reports are in we shall decide.

Mr. MULLOCK. Where are the surveys going on ?

Mr. POPE. In the upper waters. I think the hon. member for North York was a little severe on the hon. member for Digby. He has travelled a good deal; as he says, he has been often afloat, and as he is a man of years, surely the hon. member for North York should deal a little mildly with him.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we should not get into deep water among ourselves. Of course, I did not mean anything towards my friend from Digby. It is quite impossible for us, in this extensive Dominion, extending 3,000 or 4,000 miles between the oceans, to be familiar with the various localities of the country. I am very glad, however, that my hon. friend from Digby takes sufficient interest in Ontario to enquire into the expenditures there, and having found out the advantage of these works I am sure he will approve of them. However, I am thankful to the hon. Minister for attempting to reconcile friends here. Now, I want to ask what are the prospects of this canal being available, and the main object of this scheme being attained. It is some years since the Government undertook the work, and, if I remember rightly, they embarked in it with the assurance to the public that they would be able ultimately to connect the two waters.

Mr. BOWELL. As soon as the resources of the country would justify. When the Government—

Mr. MULOCK. When the Government recommended this expenditure to the House, they justified it on the ground that this was going to be a through system, not local or provincial, but one that would afford a highway between the east and the west.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton.) From Chicago to the ocean, if necessary.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes; it was to be a grand highway on the water, like a railway on the land. This expenditure has been going on for some years, and the question is, when is the object of this scheme likely to be attained? Can we have any information on that point?

Mr. POPE. I think not, because the surveyors are at work, and they have been making their plans and reports, so that we have not been able yet to make up our minds.

Mr. SHANLY. I think the hon. gentleman from North York need not be afraid of getting into too deep water, as the depth of water will be about 5½ feet. I think the plan we are pursuing is the wiser one. There is a long stretch of water, and by making short pieces of canal in the rock, here and there, you can utilise these waters for local purposes. Each lock built, though it may be some years before it can be used for traffic purposes, will be useful for internal purposes. The hon. member for North York referred to this as a grand route.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not say that.

Mr. SHANLY. It will never be a grand route, because it will be utterly impossible to utilise it, beyond the depth of 5½ feet, and where we have such great depths of waters on each side, the St. Lawrence and Ottawa waters, it will be impossible to make use of the Trent Canal in any other way than for internal purposes.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) came to the conclusion that this canal, in so far as constructed, was a work essentially provincial, within the jurisdiction and power of the Local Government. The observations of the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Shanly) have only served to show that the position taken by the former Government was the right one. I am not going to criticise the appropriation made for this purpose. It may be necessary, in order to extend the advantages of this work to a considerable section of the community; but the remarks of the hon. member for Grenville show that he does not consider it wise on the part of the Government to press forward a work so as to connect the waters of the Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario, at the present time. He thinks it should be pushed forward gradually, because, even though completed, it would not become a general route for trade. All these observations confirm the propriety of the course of the former Administration, and show the impropriety of the course of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I dare say that a large section of the country through which this system goes will be quite satisfied to pardon the constitutional breach the hon. gentleman is talking about, for the sake of having the canal. The system is a very old one. It has been reported on by many able engineers, and at last the Government adopted the idea of making it a permanent work by connecting the two great waterways. It may be, it cannot compete in all respects with other and deeper waters and with a railway system, but it will be substantially a Dominion work, connecting the two waters, and at the same time of great advantage to the fine district of country through which it passes. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) has fully described the policy of the Government when he said the ultimate object was to connect the two waterways, but to go on with the work by degrees, connecting these internal waters by artificial means in every spot where they could be locally useful, until the resources of the country would allow the completion of the work in the Dominion sense; that is the sense in which the appropriations are asked for.

Mr. PLATT. The Auditor General's accounts would lead us to suppose the progress of the work is quite satisfactory. No less than $2,236 were paid to A. F. Wood and Wilkinson for valuating land expropriated on that contract. That would constitute a large portion of the route of the canal; but those parties were paid $3,500 for valuating property on the Murray Canal worth $1,800.

Mr. VAIL. The hon. gentleman is now asking us to make an appropriation, and cannot give information regarding it. If he has not floated down the canal, I would like him to wade through it, so as to be in a position to tell us something about it, what it is being built for and what we have to expect when it is completed.

St. Peter's Canal.....$ 2,500

Mr. PAINT. The St. Peter's Canal was never finished, but I have not the same doleful account to give that the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) has given. The Government spent last year some $20,000 there, and improved it very much. The sides of the canal were left with jagged rocks to tear the vessels' sides and bulwarks out as they passed through. There was not a post or a ring bolt to fasten a line to, but that has been remedied in a great measure. It will require probably some $30,000 to complete, and make the work entirely serviceable.

Mr. VAIL. This work pays something. The receipts last year were $2,193.

Works necessary to increase the supply of water to the Rideau Canal and the Gananoque River... $ 20,000

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman state why so large a sum is being spent, because, as far as I know, the canal is hardly used at all?

Mr. VAIL. The total receipts last year were $7,000, and the expenditure was $36,000.

Mr. POPE. The dam at Devil's Lake was built 45 years ago and was rebuilt in 1872. Some claims for damages not having been recognised, some dissatisfied person tore up the dam in 1876, and it has not been reconstructed. The result was, that the mills at Gananoque and at other places on the route ceased running, as, in the dry season, they could not find sufficient water. They asked us either to furnish the water or to pay them for the damages they sustained.

Mr. MILLS. In what way did the Government come under obligation to these parties for damages?

Mr. POPE. Because they built the dam. I do not say we are liable to damages, but they claimed it. It is proposed to reconstruct the dam and to build three others on the canal.

Mr. WILSON. If the Government is going to assume the responsibility of the expenditure of $20,000 for the purpose of completing this dam, not really in the interests of the Rideau Canal but in the interest of these saw mills, it is not reasonable to call upon this House to make that vote. We like to have the industry go on, but it is not right that the Dominion of Canada should be taxed for the purpose of enabling these parties to carry on their milling operations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. This water is required for the canal.

Mr. WILSON. Then it has been required since 1877.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been required since 1876. The quantity of water supply in the Rideau Canal has been steadily decreasing, as the settlement of the country has advanced and the country has been drained, and the engineers have been embarrassed to get water enough for the ordinary supply of the canal. Then this water supply also benefits the town of Gananoque, where there are some of the finest industries in iron and woollen to be found in central Canada. It has the double advantage of supplying the canal and supplying these manufactures.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says that this water is required for the use of the canal, but he has not stated to what extent the canal is used. Since the increased railway facilities between Ottawa and the front, the canal business is much reduced. The hon. gentleman has referred to the mills and manufacturing establishments at Gananoque, but I never understood the Government had made any contract with those parties, or had sold them, in perpetuity, a supply of water.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS. Then it is precisely the same as any other part of their business; it is for them to supply themselves with water. The hon. gentleman knows that in many instances, when dams are built, parties apply for damages, on account of the water overflowing their lands. Now, to what extent is this vote for the purpose of paying damages like that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As long as the canal is kept open it must be supplied with water. It is quite true that it is not nearly so useful as it was when first built. I remember the time when all the trade between Lower and Upper Canada was carried through the Rideau Canal. But since the improvements on the St. Lawrence and the construction of railways, the canal has become less useful than it was. But still there it is. People are settled along its banks. Government cannot close it up, without great injury to that whole country, where the people have been in the habit of using it as their means of transport for two generations. The millers and manufacturers at Gananoque are not the lessees of the Government, but that is their river; the Gananoque River flows into Gananoque, and a considerable portion of the water of that river is drained away for the purpose of the canal, to the injury of the river. Government has no right to take away the water of the Gananoque River, which these people have been in the habit of enjoying. This, as I understand, will increase the quantity of water in the canal, and supply the people of Gananoque with an additional quantity of water.

Mr. MILLS. These mills were built before the Government diverted any portion of the waters of the Gananoque; but if they were built subsequently to the construction of the canal, and the Government had already been using the water, I do not see how the Government incur any obligations towards the mill owners. The hon. gentleman has not succeeded in showing that. Then, he must see that last year the expenditure was nearly $50,000, and the revenue was but several thousand. People living along the canal may continue to utilise it, but they utilise the railways to a far greater extent. The canal has ceased to be of much commercial value, and it is a question whether it is to the public advantage to continue the expenditure of these large sums every year, for the purpose of keeping the canal open for navigable purposes.

Mr. MULOCK. The First Minister says that this expenditure is necessary, in order to add to the supply of water that is needed for the efficient working of the canal. Will the Minister of Railways, if he has it, favor the committee with the opinion of experts as to the need of this route?

Mr. POPE. I will read from the report of the chief engineer:

"Pretty full explanatory details have been given of what is necessary to be done to secure a greatly increased supply of water for the Rideau Canal, as well as for extending the line of navigation northwards to the series of lakes. It is intended to serve as an attachment basin, raised, according to circumstances, and lowered at times, when necessary to meet the requirements of navigation."

He goes on to recommend that it should be done, and says that the estimated cost will be $20,000. Then he gives in detail the cost of each portion of the work.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the whole evidence that the hon. Minister has?

Mr. POPE. There is more evidence here.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the only expert evidence there is, showing that the supply of water for canal purposes is insufficient for the present exigencies of trade?

Mr. POPE. The experience is general, that the supply of water is insufficient. Mr. Wise, the superintendent, gives his experience, but I have not his report here.

Surveys and Inspections ..... $10,000

Mr. MILLS. Where are these surveys to be made?

Mr. POPE. At different places. Last year we did not spend the vote; but it is the usual vote.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Government to place any amount in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of constructing a canal between lakes Winnipeg and Winnipegosis, or will any of this money be so devoted?

Mr. POPE. I will explain that when we come to the Supplementary Estimates.

Indians, British Columbia ..... $45,280

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman promised to give some information with regard to the Indians of British Columbia, and the difficulties which have arisen there, and also with regard to this commission, which was appointed in 1875 or 1876, and whose labors it was supposed would be brought to an end before this time. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say how far the Indians have been provided with reservations, and how far the work of the commission remains still to be performed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That, I think, is contained in the report of the Indian Department.

Mr. MILLS. No; it gives some information as to what has been done, but not as to how far the Indians have been provided with reservations, I think.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are several tribes unprovided with reservations. Mr. O'Reilly now holds the position formerly held by Mr. Sproat. He was formerly one of the county judges, and he is a very efficient officer. He was employed some two or three years ago, and was obliged to give his services if called upon to do so. I am much mistaken if there is not in the reports a statement as to the number of reservations which are yet incomplete. It will be some time before all the bands in the interior are provided with reserves. There is no great hurry in laying out reserves, until there is a prospect of white men going in near them. There are two or three reserves which are expected to be completely surveyed this year. As the hon. gentleman knows, there has been a good deal of trouble in making the arrangements with the provincial authorities. They object generally that the reserves have been too large for the Indians. However, the Dominion Government, both when the hon. gentleman was in and the present Government, as guardians of the rights of the Indians, have insisted that these reserves should be—not extravagant, but ample for the Indians, and for their prospective growth, because some of those tribes do increase. There were several reserves which at last had been agreed upon between the Dominion and the Provincial Governments—that they shall be satisfactory in area and position. The next thing is to survey them. There is a small staff of surveyors under Mr. O'Reilly, but they are a good deal behind in their work—that is, there are reserves agreed upon by the two Governments which have not yet been surveyed. I cannot at this moment say what the number of bands are without reserves. Unfortunately, there are several small bands which have been very badly used. The land has been sold without their knowing anything about it. They have no reserves, and we applied to the Provincial Government to buy them reserves in the locality in which these Indians have a right to expect reserves—where their habitat was. The Provincial Government said that they might be given reserves elsewhere, but, as the hon. gentleman knows, particularly in British Columbia, the Indians are very much attached to their locality, and object to being hustled away to a strange country, or far away from the bones of their ancestors. In one case the land was absolutely sold, and they were cut off practically from the rights of fishing, as well as from places for their habitations; and the Government came to Parliament, and Parliament sanctioned the purchase of a small reserve. The funds for this purchase were taken out of the Dominion Treasury, though I think they should not have been, but Parliament voted it. We hope to get it from the Provincial Government, but they see it in another light.

Mr. MILLS. I moved for some papers and correspondence connected with Indian difficulties early in the Session, and though the papers were promised they were not brought down. The hon. gentleman refers to Mr. O'Reilly being a good officer. I do not know anything about him, but if the hon. gentleman will look back to the correspondence which took place prior to British Columbia becoming a member of the Confederation, he will see that Mr. O'Reilly was one of the officers employed by the Local Government to cut down the reserves of the British Columbia Indians. The report made to me this winter—and I have many communications from that Province—is that the decisions as to reserves made by the commission between 1876 and 1880 had not been observed by the Local Government, although the understanding between the two Governments was that the decisions of the commission should be confirmed. I understand that in some cases that has not been done. There are some Indians immediately west of the Blackfeet reservation, on the opposite side of the mountains, whose reserve has been disposed of, to a large extent, to white settlers. The Indians there have been in the habit of raising cattle and horses, and sending considerable numbers of them to the American market. The range of territory over which their stock has run has been divided up into lots and given up to the white settlers; fences have been put up, and a considerable number of Indian cattle and horses have starved to death, in the past winter, for want of their usual supply of food. I suppose the hon. gentleman has had correspondence with the Local Government on the subject; and it seems to me, looking at the Terms of the Union, whatever we might say with regard to the Indian title elsewhere, it was a matter of contract between the two Governments, that a reasonable extent of territory should be set apart for Indian reserves. If the two Governments could not agree, the matter was to be referred to the Colonial Secretary, but that arrangement was superseded by this commission, who were on the ground, and could deal directly with the matter. I do not know how far the Local Government have been disposed to carry out the understanding in good faith, but I should infer from their treatment of some of these Indians that not much respect has been shown for the occupation by the Indians of the land which they were holding. I think the least that could be done would be that a reasonable extent of territory, of which any band was in actual occupation, ought to be reserved for them, with the same strictness that an individual would be allowed to hold a reserve specially set apart by contract. I think the terms of the agreement between the two Governments are sufficient to enable the Indians to retain possession of the territory in which they were in actual occupation, although it may not have been officially set out as a reservation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The arrangement, at the time of the Union was, that the Indians of British Columbia should be treated as liberally as they had been up to that time.

Mr. MILLS. There was more than that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There may have been. I think the information given to the hon. gentleman is a little exaggerated. That is a fine country, both for grazing and agricultural purposes, and there may have been a few lots sold; but that there, in the centre of that large grazing country, cattle could have starved, I think can hardly be the case.

Mr. MILLS. I can assure the hon. gentleman that my information is strictly accurate, because I obtained it from a party on the ground.

Indians of Manitoba and the North-West Territories..... $680,831.45

Mr. MILLS. Would the hon. gentleman state how much of the annuity vote applies to each treaty?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The memorandum I have got is that the increase of $440 for annuities is to cover additional payments on the estimated natural increase of 1 per cent. of the Indian population. These are the annuities paid to the several bands of Manitoba. I have no memorandum of the annuities paid to each band. I do not think that would be very valuable information.

Mr. MILLS. No; except that the hon. gentleman, when on this side of the House, insisted on that information being given in detail, and formerly the Estimates were printed in that way. It makes this difference, that when the vote is taken in a lump the hon. gentleman can distribute it amongst the whole as he pleases. There is an advantage in having the distribution under each treaty. An Indian may be paid two or three times from appearing in different places, and having the children of, perhaps, some other Indian or belonging to some other band with him. In fact, it is easy to see by the reports that it is impossible that the payments have been strictly accurate; there seems to be some frauds, and I am asking for this information for the purpose of comparing one year with another, because we know that the rate of increase by birth must be very nearly the same in all the bands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Quite right. I will get that. With regard to agricultural implements, the increase of $18,564.46 is to be distributed over Manitoba and in each district of the North-West Territories. For the current year the estimate was exceptionally low. In Manitoba, less than $1,500 was estimated for the service, the Indian superintendent considering that the Indians would not utilise a greater number of implements than were estimated for. If they are supplied to excess, the implements are allowed to go to the bad altogether. The portion of the increased estimate for Manitoba is intended for purchase of implements still due under treaty, with the exception of three fanning mills, some ploughs and harrows, and a few smaller implements which the Indians need, and which are essential to their advancement, but which they are unable to procure for themselves. In the Birtle district the estimate for the current year has been increased by $1,165. The increase is due to exceptional efforts made to improve the Moose Mountain Indians, only two years settled on their reserve, and to supply them with ploughs and harrows. Fanning mills are required by some of the long-settled bands in this district, in order that they may be able to prepare their grain for seed and for the mill. The proportion of the increase intended for the Indian Head district is $1,221.59. For the current year the sum of $4,117.76 was estimated for; for 1885-86, $5,339.35 will, it is estimated, be required, mainly on account of the recent settlement of Chief Pie-a-pot, the Assiniboines at Indian Head, and a large number of Indians who have returned from Cypress Hills and joined their bands at Crooked Lakes, File Hills and Touchwood Hills. In the Battleford district the sum of $6,504.91, as against $1,487.22, is estimated for the current year. The Battleford district includes the sub-agencies at Carlton and Fort Pitt; and the implements now estimated for are intended to be distributed amongst the bands of Chiefs Big Bear, Little Pine, Lucky Man and Napahase, all of which bands are recent arrivals from Cypress Hills, and are as yet without sufficient means to engage to any extent in agricultural pursuits; $1,650, it was estimated, was a sum large enough to furnish the implements necessary for the Indians of the Edmonton district during the current year; but $5,800 will, it is believed, be required. There have been large additions from the Cypress Hills to the Indians of this district, not taking in the Peace Hills agency, and there is also to be considered the fact that the older settled bands have not yet received all the implements due to them under treaty, it being the custom of the Department to issue these only as fast as the Indians become capable of using and taking care of them. In the Macleod district $1,707.75 was considered sufficient to meet the requirement of the current year, but for 1885-86 $6,866.85 is not more than will be needed, to enable the Department to expend $3,600 for wire fencing for the proper protection of the crops in a locality destitute of timber for fencing, and also to supply the Indians—who are now beginning to turn their attention to farming—with the necessary implements.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Have tenders been invited for the various supplies for the Indians for 1885-86?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the form of the tenders the same as last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are substantially the same.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I want to bring under the notice of the First Minister what I consider is an unwise course to follow with reference to the form of the tenders. The Government, in the forms they adopt, have been emphatically pronouncing that Canadian manufacturers are unfitted to supply agricultural implements. For instance, in asking for tenders for ploughs, they specify that only the John Deer plough will be accepted. This is an official declaration on the part of the Government that Canadian manufacturers are not able to supply a plough equal to the American article. In each case the Government ask for supplies, they specify the manufacture, thus casting discredit upon the other manufacturers. For instance, in calling for tenders for waggons, they call for the Chatham waggon, passing over the manufacturers of other waggons equally as good, and in some cases better. Not only is that done, but I find in the return laid on the Table that the Chatham Waggon Company have succeeded in getting through the Department a description of their waggon, in which it is recommended above all other waggons in the country. Government influence should not be used in this way in favor of any one manufacturer, but free competition should be allowed. On the form of tender, a description is given of the Chatham waggon, which, under the circumstances, is really a certificate of the Government given in favor of that waggon. The following is the description:

“Tracks 4 feet 8 inches. Wheels made of best and thoroughly seasoned white oak. Boxing of hubs pressed in by a patent process, which effectually prevents boxes getting loose, as they are sure to do when wedged in. Tire 2½ inches; arms superior to any others made in Canada, in that they receive at the shoulder ¼ of an inch more wood than any other arm made in Canada, and being adapted to receive and will receive the climax truss rod applied by the Chatham Manufacturing Co., only to their waggons, rendering the otherwise strongest axle practically unbreakable; the axles are of the best and most thoroughly seasoned hickory and hard maple. Front hames one solid piece of bent white oak. Tongues of the best of white ash. Reaches of the best of rock elm. It is better ironed in all respects than almost any waggon made, constituting it not only the strongest, but easiest running waggon made. Lower box 10 feet and 13½ inches high; top edge iron bound. Bow bottom of box of best tongued and grooved ash. Upper box 18 inches high, one spring seat, the opening of which is the best Armstrong make. Trees and neck yoke well ironed. Second growth white ash. Each waggon is furnished with a pair eveners chains. Every waggon guaranteed for one year. Double trees of the best timber, also neck yoke, which must be 4 feet long. The whole to be of the best wood and iron throughout, good workmanship and finish, and to be complete and perfect in every particular part.”

In a return I moved for, I find this matter had been brought before the Department, and that there was some correspondence between the Department and a certain firm anxious to tender. I find, under date of 16th April, 1884, a letter addressed to the Department:

“We enclose for your perusal two pages of a letter just received from our Winnipeg house; please read and return. Last season we supplied the Indian Department, through the Hudson Bay Company, a very considerable quantity of agricultural implements, which, as far as we know, give the very best satisfaction. We last year called your attention to the fact that in your specification for goods you were not fair to Canadian manufacturers. We again call your attention to this fact. Ploughs—you call for the John Deer plough, which means the American made plough. You should ask for the John Deer pattern of plough, which is made in Ontario, and quite equal to the American article. You stipulate for the Toronto mower; you should stipulate for a mower equal to the Toronto mower. You stipulate for sulky horse rakes and reapers made by the Massey Company of Toronto; you should stipulate for these ‘equal’ to those made by the Massey Manufacturing Company of Toronto. You stipulate for a Chatham waggon; you should stipulate for a waggon ‘Equal;’ you stipulate for Collard flexible harrow; you should stipulate for harrows equal to Collard’s flexible harrows. The inconsistency of your specification will appear when you state that you have also made a Spaight waggon your standard, which is a very much superior waggon to the Chatham, and costs from $5 to $10 more to build. When you stipulate for the John Deer plough, that virtually shuts out every Canadian manufacturer from tendering; and when you stipulate for goods made by any one particular firm, that virtually shuts out every other maker from tendering. We are quite sure that the wording of your specification has been done without due consideration, and without knowing what the result would be.”

This letter was dated the 16th of April, and on the 24th of April the Department replied as follows:—

"I am in receipt of your letter of the 16th inst., also of an extract from a letter received from your Winnipeg house, which, in accordance with your request, I return, the same having reference to the implements called for by the schedules accompanying the forms of tender for this Department. I also enclose copy of my telegram addressed to you, at your request, informing you that the articles to be delivered must be strictly in accordance with the specifications contained in the schedules. I regret exceedingly that the Department cannot see its way to comply with the suggestion contained in your letter. I may say, in passing, however, that the only article of American manufacture called for by the tenders is the 'John Deer' plough, and the reason for this will be explained in this letter. From the experience gained by this Department in inviting tenders for agricultural implements, and from the manner in which the contracts have been fulfilled during the past five years, it has been found that the term 'equal to' is entirely too vague to describe accurately the implements required, and to insure the delivery of suitable articles.

"Such a description is also little or no guide whatever to the Indian agents who receive over the goods in the Territories, as these men are not experts in such matters, and it is impossible for them to say whether the implement is or is not 'equal to' the articles mentioned in the contract. You are aware that all manufacturers of machines consider their own manufactures the best, and without an actual trial it is difficult even for an expert to judge as to the relative qualities of such goods. Much more difficult is it, therefore, for persons as inexperienced in such matters as Indian agents usually are to do so. The result has been, that many of the articles left, although declared by the contractors to be equal to the sample mentioned in the schedules, when used were found to be quite inferior. It was then, however, too late to remedy matters, as the articles had been taken over by the officers of the Department. The Department has, therefore, in its own protection, been obliged to specify patterns, and the names of the makers of the implements required, to avoid these serious complications, and to leave the agents of the Department without excuse in taking over goods. There is also, in addition to the above, much inconvenience experienced when implements of so many different patterns are supplied, as it is difficult, when parts of an implement become worn out or defective, always readily to obtain the necessary parts to make it again complete, and many of the implements have therefore to be discarded. The Department has, out of the multifarious articles of which it has made trial under the old system, selected those which experience has shown to be best adapted to the country, and these patterns have been adhered to, as far as possible; and where, as has sometimes been the case, it has been found that in some particulars none of those formerly sent in gave entire satisfaction, after due enquiry from practical men, other makers' patterns have been chosen. With reference to the Spaight waggon, referred to in your letter, it was adopted by the Department in the first instance. It was found that, although branded Spaight waggon, they were not complete, according to the specification embodied in the schedules, and were in many respects an inferior waggon. For these reasons a change was this year made, and the Chatham waggon selected, as it was reported to be a serviceable vehicle by persons who had had experience of the use of them in the North-West. Not only were these waggons well made, but they have given every satisfaction to those who have had them. With regard to the mowers, the Toronto mower has given the best satisfaction to the Department, and therefore there can be no reason for changing it for another, it not being desirable to have different patterns of the same machine in use, for the reasons above stated, viz., that when renewal parts are required confusion is caused. The same remark applies to the reapers and horse-rakes called for by the Department. With regard to the harrows, Collard's flexible iron harrow was adopted three years ago by the Department. It has given great satisfaction, and there is, therefore, no reason to change the pattern. As regards ploughs, the John Deer plough has been found to be the most durable, and the best implement of the kind for use in the North-West. Wilkinson's plough was tried, and was proved to be a failure. One of them, for instance, was put to work on a small farm of about 10 acres, attached to the industrial school at Battleford. It worked well for a short time, but the mould-board and point both proved soft in temper. It was, therefore, considered better to adhere to the plough that had proved satisfactory, viz., the John Deer. Since the Department commenced farming operations among the Indians in 1878-79, it has endeavored to introduce at various times Canadian manufactured ploughs. They were received on the contracts of 1881 and 1881-82, but they proved entire failures, and had to be thrown aside as useless. I may state that, in 1882, Mr. Watson, of Ayr, Ontario, who is a large manufacturer of agricultural implements, in a communication to the Indian Commissioner for the North-West, stated that no Canadian make of plough had, up to that time, given satisfaction for prairie work, and that for his trade he intended furnishing American ploughs. Trusting that these explanations will prove satisfactory to you, etc."

That is the reply made by the Department, and to that again the firm replied, on 26th April, two days after the date of the letter which I have read:

"SIR,—We are in receipt of your communication of the 24th of April, which is by no means a satisfactory reply to our enquiries. From your letter it is evident that the heads of Departments at Ottawa know as little about the agricultural implement trade as the Indian agents in the North-West are represented to know. On examination of the schedules we find that the articles required by the Department are: 1 mower, 2 reapers, 2 horse-rakes, 8 waggons, 44 harrows, and 147 ploughs. Omitting the ploughs and harrows, the order is very small indeed, very much smaller than hundreds of orders which we have filled. You will, therefore, understand that the objections we make are not from any anxiety to procure the order, which, at best, amounts to very little; but we are writing you as much for the sake of showing that the Department is doing a very unfair thing, and are not carrying out the policy of the present Government. It would be very easy indeed to make a point against the Government on the floor of the House by a reference to the very matter about which we now write. We have evidence, however, that if your Department is made to understand the position fully, anything that is now wrong will be corrected. If the Indian Department require only 1 mower, 2 reapers and 2 horse-rakes, and these must positively be those made by the Massey Manufacturing Company of Toronto, why don't you give them the order, and not advertise for tenders, when it is a matter of impossibility for anybody else but the Massey Company to tender for the goods required? This same remark applies to waggons. If the Department want 8 Chatham waggons, why don't they order them from the Chatham Manufacturing Company, instead of asking tenders from parties whose waggons would not be accepted? This same remark refers to the harrows and ploughs. The order for the former should be given to the manufacturer in Gananoque, and the order for the latter to Messrs. Westbrook & Fairchild, of Winnipeg. It is entirely useless to go to the expense of advertising for tenders of these articles when they cannot be procured, except from one manufacturer in each line, and he can charge the Department any price he chooses. Apart altogether from this, for your Department to ask for tenders as they do, and stipulate for certain goods, only makes other manufacturers incensed to think that their goods should be excluded. The mowers, reapers and horse-rakes made by the Massey Manufacturing Company are good articles, and we have nothing to say against the Department for desiring to order them. At the same time, there are many other similar articles made in Canada quite as good, and which would give equal satisfaction to the Department. In regard to waggons, how the Department ever came to choose such a waggon is beyond our comprehension. It is evident that it has been done from reasons other than the merit of the waggon. The Chatham waggon has only been manufactured for two seasons, and it will be five years before it is known whether it is a good article or not. It has not stood the test of time, nor is it as good a waggon as either the Spaight, the Snowball, the Adams, the Lowrie, the Ramsay, or the Bain. Nearly all these waggons have been in the market longer, are better known and are better goods than the Chatham waggon. In regard to ploughs, in 1880, 1881 and 1882, American-made John Deer plough was the best plough in the North-West, and at that time Mr. John Watson, of Ayr, was bringing American ploughs, as we were also ourselves. Does the Indian Department think that Canadian manufacturers have been sitting on stools, doing nothing, during the last four or five years? For the information of the Department, we may say that immense progress has been made during the last few years in the manufacture of ploughs for the North-West, and to-day the ploughs made by Geo. Wilkinson & Company, of Aurora, or by the Cookswell Plough Company, of Brantford, or by the American Plough Company, of Ayr, of which John Weston is president, are just as good as the American-made John Deer plough, and are very much more largely sold in the North-West Territories. We give these facts for the information of the Department, and again say that it is a very unfair thing for the Department to call for tenders in the manner in which it has. We give herewith a memorandum of Canadian names, which are, in every respect, equal to the goods asked for in the schedule of the Indian Department, and in getting out the schedules in future, if tenders are desired, the option should be given of supplying the goods we mention."
Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

And then they specify the names of certain mowers and reapers and self-binders and waggons, and other manufactures, and go on in this way:

"All or any of these goods are equal to the goods asked for in the schedule of the Indian Department, and very many of them are much superior to the goods asked for. We know that the Department will absolve us from ulterior motives in writing as we do, because the goods that we could supply would be very limited indeed; but we do not like to see inconsistency in anybody, much less in any Department of the Government of our country."

I do think there should have been some attention paid to the representations made some two years ago by that correspondent. I have given all weight to the arguments which have been supplied by the Department in their replies, but it does seem to me that, when there are a mower and two reapers required, and you specify that they should be bought from certain manufacturers, the Government should buy from them, and should not send out forms of tenders, in a manner which is equivalent to giving the Government sanction and proclamation that in their experience these articles are exclusively made by those firms. In agricultural implements there has been great improvements, and many firms are bending their best energies to perfecting their products. The First Minister must see that the Government are throwing their influence in favor of one particular firm in each line, by the form of tender that is adopted. He can readily understand that the manufacturers are anxious that their goods should stand well in the market, but the Department is throwing a considerable weight in favor of the one article that is specified, to the injury and detriment of other manufacturers of the same article. It does seem to me, also, that it is limiting competition. With reference to ploughs in the North-West, there were none a few years ago, but I can assure the First Minister that in that article, as in others of Canadian manufacture, when they recognised the fact that the Americans, through long experience, had secured a better prairie plough than we had, I know, of my own knowledge, that the manufacturing firms of this country went to vast expense in order to get the American patents and to import workmen, in order to compete with the American products. I believe that what is stated there now is correct, in reference to ploughs, and that in the North-West our Canadian manufacturers have attained the point when they supply as good an article as can be imported. I would like to see that provision struck out, where it is made imperative that they shall have an American plough, so as to give our Canadian manufacturers a chance in that line.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place whether the statement that has just been read, about the merits of the Chatham waggon, is going to be an advertisement for that company, one thing is quite clear, and that is that the hon. gentleman's speech is going to be a most substantial advertisement of that particular waggon. I am glad to learn from the hon. gentleman that the Canadian manufacturers now can make as good, or better, goods in every kind of agricultural implements as they do in the United States. I remember, not very long ago, when, perhaps, the hon. gentleman himself proclaimed on the stump in Parliament the extraordinary injustice that was being inflicted upon the poor settlers in the North-West, because they could not get American implements; that it was an injustice that our tariff should keep out an article because we could not make it as good or so cheap, just for the sake of bolstering up the National Policy; that we were robbing the settlers in the North-West. I am glad, however, to learn from such clear evidence as is given by the hon. gentleman that that state of things has changed. Now, my hon. friend speaks of the form of advertisement. Well, that form of advertisement that he wishes to have would never do—such as a plough called the John Deer plough. Every manufacturer, as the hon. gentleman says, has his own plough, his own implement, which he thinks is not only equal, but superior. There must be a specification. If you are going to have tenders at all, you must call upon them to compete in the same article. Now, I take it that the John Deer plough means that Mr. John Deer has a certain kind of plough, in shape, in form and weight, and it is well understood what the John Deer plough is. I take it that any manufacturer in Canada, whether he has bought a patent from John Deer, or whether he steals the patent and makes the plough, if he makes a John Deer plough that man can compete—that is the name of the plough.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No; that is an American plough.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite clear you can have no competition unless the article is the same. I take it that there are a great many implement makers, each having their own form of plough, each having several excellencies. There can be no competition; they cannot fight; they cannot tender; there can be no means of judging who puts in the lowest tender, unless we know that it is for the same article. It would never do for any Department wanting a large supply of ploughs, or waggons, or any other implement, to allow a general scramble among all the manufacturers, by way of tender, and then afterwards the Department would have to select from all these different kinds of implements. I take it, the Department has learned from their officers, from those who are experts, what article best suits the North-West, best suits the Indians. If the Indians have been accustomed to one kind of agricultural implement, it is inadvisable to change that capriciously, because they will have to commence to learn the use of the implement over again. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that it is the desire of the Department to get the best article, the article fittest to be handled by the Indians. They must require a special specification, and they offer everything to tender. The Government makes it a principle—I think Parliament insists upon that principle being carried out—to get everything by tender, except in remote portions of the country. There was a time, formerly, when an article could only be got in one place, and from one party, or, from want of transport, could not be got in Canada at all, but that kind of thing has passed away; and now the Departments call for a particular article, giving it the name by which it is known in the trade.

Mr. MILLS. As the Chatham waggon.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Chatham waggon, I take it, is known. It is made in a particular way. The hon. gentleman comes from that vicinity, and I dare say he knows whether it is a good waggon or not. At all events, in advertising, it is necessary to specify the article, whether it is the Chatham waggon or the John Deer plough, or the Peter Wilkins plough, or the Peter Jones harrow; all these implements have a particular name, well understood in the market. That is the object of the Department; and if there is any mistake about it, I shall certainly see that there cannot be a doubt raised, as has been raised by the writer of the letter in question, as to whether he could compete or not. If he makes the article, whether it is known as the Chatham waggon or the John Deer plough, and it is equal to sample, he has a chance to get the contract.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The form of tender does not allow that. He cannot make a waggon and call it the Chatham waggon. The tender says it must be the Chatham waggon. The contractor is to supply the Chatham waggon, and is not at liberty to supply any waggon. The letter of the Department to that person was explicit. The party wished to tender, for some agricultural implements equal to any in the market, and wanted to know whether the tender would be received. The Department replied that they exceedingly regretted that they could not depart from the form of tender and accept other than the articles as described. If Massey mowers were called for, they must be made by the Massey Co. If the tender stated that the mowers were to be equal to the Massey mower, half a dozen firms would have competed. So with regard to sugar. The tender for the supply to destitute Indians provides that the sugar shall be Paris lump. Gentlemen in the grocery trade know that this is a kind manufactured by Redpaths alone, and that it costs 1 cent per pound more than the best granulated sugar. We need to give destitute Indians Paris lump, when every Canadian family uses granulated and pay for this lump 1 cent per lb. additional. This limits the tender to the article supplied by Redpaths. There is no chance for the Halifax, Moncton or St. John refineries, because they do not make Paris lump, only granulated sugars. But granulated is good enough for the First Minister's house and for the rest of us, but Paris lump, at 1 cent per pound additional, is needed for the destitute Indians. And so I might run down the list, and show that the form of tender is so framed that a monopoly is given to a particular manufacturer, to the exclusion of other manufacturers. The First Minister is wrong in his suggestion that there is latitude allowed. That is not so. The provisions are imperative; it is latitude that we want.

Mr. MILLS. According to the form of tender, the article specified must be supplied. There is, therefore, no object gained in calling for tenders at all, and it would be better to purchase direct from the manufacturers, than to provide that a particular article, the product of a particular manufacturer, must be purchased.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must know what he will charge for it.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly; but when you provide that the goods of a particular manufacturer must be obtained, then it is perfectly clear that that manufacturer is master of the situation, and is able to ask what he pleases. You cannot put any other article into competition with his articles. I suppose a score of companies manufacture as good an article as the Chatham waggon. It looks very much like a job being put up on the Department. I have some curiosity to know how such an advertisement got into the tender. Will the hon. gentleman tell us?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot; I do not know.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman think it a proper thing for the Department to do?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Did the Department publish it?

Mr. MILLS. Yes. There has been great carelessness somewhere, for the Department should never have allowed itself to be used in that way. The right hon. gentleman has not been looking as carefully after this part of his public duty as he should have done. That is really an insult to every waggon manufacturer in Canada, with the single exception of that one corporation. I could tell the hon. gentleman something about that company, but I will not make it a subject of discussion in this House. He will find that neither the interests of himself, nor the Indian Department, nor the industries of the country, will be promoted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Departments are trying to do what they can to get the best article for the animal—for the Indian. I do not know how that description of the Chatham waggon got into the advertisement of last year; it is not in this year's advertisement. I cannot agree with the arguments of the hon. gentlemen opposite, that when you describe an article by a particular name, it must be made by the party who originally gave it the name. We will take the case of animals. If we had advertised for Clydesdale horses, or Suffolk ponies, or Southdowns, must they have been brought from those particular parts of the country? The Department knows what articles they want, and they want the article to supply the requirements of the specifications.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. Take, for instance, the articles produced by the Massey Company. All these are patented articles, and they cannot be obtained anywhere else, until the patent has expired. If the hon. gentleman will make enquiries of manufacturers who are manufacturing the articles of another company, he will find that the particular article so manufactured will not be of the same size as the original article, unless they buy the original patterns.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). A few points with respect to the prices paid, and I should have felt it my duty to have gone more fully into this matter at an earlier part of this Session. I am not prepared to say that the advertisements are not broad enough, but the form of tender limits the scope. It is not to be wondered at that one or two large firms, such as Baker & Co., and the Hudson Bay Company, obtain the bulk of the contracts. Take the Chatham waggon. The First Minister has stated that that waggon could be bought at Winnipeg at from $50 to $60. I find the price paid at Indian Head, a station a few hundred miles west of Winnipeg, was $95. If it was only $50, it would be below the price of Chatham. They claim that was a benefit conferred on the North-West, but if it was a fact, as they stated, that they could be bought at Winnipeg at that price, certainly $95 was too much. The same waggon at Fort Macleod was $125. Then, at Indian Head, a station on the railway, they paid for white sugar 11½ cents per pound, when everyone knows, who is acquainted with the trade, that granulated sugar, at that time, was very low in price, and it certainly could not cost 3 or 4 cents a pound for freight from Montreal to Indian Head. English yellow soap was 14 cents per pound; rice 10½; salt 2½ cents per pound, and so on. I give these as samples, but it seems to me that the whole matter of these tenders for the North-West is one the First Minister should give his personal attention to, with a view of seeing whether an improvement could not be made.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, things were very dear in the North-West, but that is rapidly changing. We could not get people in the East to tender, and as we were obliged to get the goods, we had to accept the lowest tender. Now, however, the transport is easy, by the construction of the railway and the progress of the country generally, and they are now just beginning to tender from the Eastern Provinces. I know, with regard to Indian supplies and Mounted Police supplies, sometimes we can hardly get tenders at all, in consequence of the remoteness of the stations, and we have to look out and get them the best way we can. I am glad to say that that state of things is being rapidly cured, and that people in the East are beginning to tender. Prices will soon be very nearly down to the same rate as in Ontario, plus the cost of transport.

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. member from Brant, inadvertently, I know, stated that Paris lump sugar was only made at Redpath's. I wish to say that it is now made by the Halifax refiners, and I mention that fact so that no injustice may be done them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It was entirely an inadvertence on my part, for though I have handled a great many sugars, I was not aware that it was manufactured elsewhere.

Mr. WATSON. The First Minister states that it is difficult to get parties in the East to tender for these supplies. I pointed out, some time ago, that the reason for that was that the supplies were tendered for at a particular point. If the goods were tendered for to be delivered at certain points on the railway, I think that difficulty could be remedied, because the trouble is, at present, that these firms would not bother with these small contracts for remote places. The result has been that the contracts have been entirely in the hands of I. G. Baker & Co. and the Hudson Bay Company. The Government have had to pay more for the goods than they should have paid, and in many cases they have not been of as good quality as if small tenderers had tendered for them. With reference to the Chatham waggon, there are three or four different waggons which are taken in preference to it, in Manitoba. It has only been manufactured for the last two years, and it has not been tested. There is the Scobell and the Speight waggon, which take the lead in the North-West, and there are two or three others, which are taken in preference to the Chatham waggon. The Government should be very careful as to the quality of the goods they supply to the Indians. Some years ago a lot of waggons came from Listowel, and the tires fell off while they were standing on the streets of Winnipeg. As to the prices, the best waggons sold at $65 in Winnipeg last year, and I think that the prices in these tenders are too high, not only for waggons but for ploughs and other articles.

Mr. MILLS. I see that the hon. gentleman still asks for this vote for provisions for use at annuity payments. It was voted in the first instance because these Indians were not on the reservations, but had to assemble at certain points to be paid their annuities, and they had to be fed while receiving their payments. It was assumed that when they became settled on their reserves this practice would come to an end.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right; it is an abuse of long standing. They met at certain points, and some times kept it up for three weeks or more. The vote used to be enormous in those times, but it is being gradually reduced. As the Indians are placed on reserves, the agents go around to pay them. There are still, however, a number of places where they have to assemble, owing to the circumstances of particular localities, and I dare say there are some small presents of food, even on the reserves. With the Indians, you cannot break these customs off suddenly.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the hon. gentleman will, in future reports, give us some information about these cattle, pigs and seed grain supplies, because most of these Indians have, no doubt, already had, in cattle, implements, etc., over and over again the amount required under the treaty obligations, and of course they are getting this over and above treaty obligations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In some cases.

Mr. MILLS. I do not object to that; but it would be most convenient to the House and also to the Department if we had statements showing the amount paid each year. We should have some control over the expenditure for this purpose; we should see what bands are making progress, and what are not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will try and get that up for next year. I do not think we can do it for this year.

Mr. MILLS. Surely the Department know what they have done in the distribution of supplies.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The amount of $215,056.83 is a large sum for supplies for destitute Indians. In the reports for 1882 and 1883 there are very clear evidences of gross frauds perpetrated by the head men among the Indians on the Government. In several cases the agents report that a large number have been rationed in excess of the real number in the band. For instance, in 1883 the Blackfeet appear to have drawn rations for 800 or 900 more than there really were in the band; and one or two other bands are in precisely the same position. I would like to know whether there is any system by which the agent of the Government can tell the exact number. Mr. Denny, the Indian agent at Macleod, says:

"I found that a great deal of cheating had been going on in rations; 3,000 had been drawing rations, when there only ought to have been 2,200."

That appears to have been going on for some time. Further, he says of the Sarcees, of Calgary, that they have been drawing rations for a much larger number than there really were in the band. Another agent reports that some two or three families have been drawing rations who have been living in the United States for ten years. Another agent reports that the number in the band that he had charge of was much over-estimated; that is, that they had been drawing rations for a much larger number than there really were in the band. I would like to enquire whether the First Minister's attention has been drawn to this matter, or whether any steps have been taken to check these practices. There must be either gross negligence on the part of the agents or gross frauds on the part of the Indians. I would also draw the First Minister's attention to the fact that the agents have reported, over and over again, that the supplies are of very inferior quality. Mr. Wadsworth has several times pointed out that the supplies are of inferior quality, and that the sacks of flour weighed only 90 or 92 pounds, instead of 100 pounds, and that it is lumpy and bad. If the Indians are getting inferior supplies, a poorer quality of flour or bacon than the contract requires, that is a fraud on the Indians as well as on the Government; and the middle men who furnish the supplies must have been guilty of the very grossest misconduct during the last three or four years. I would like to know whether any steps have been taken to punish the parties furnishing these inferior supplies, or to check them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would simply say that originally, as the hon. gentleman knows, there were occasional frauds; that is, the Indians, when in large bodies, managed to get more supplies than they were entitled to. That evil is gradually correcting itself; the Indians are now on their reserves, in a great measure, and the system has been adopted of supplying each family with a ration ticket, which must be produced when they are paid, so that there is no danger of fraud in the future. The hon. gentleman says there is fraud on the Indians because the food is imperfect. It cannot be considered a fraud on the Indians, because they have no right to that food. They are simply living on the benevolence and the charity of the Canadian Parliament, and, as the old adage says, beggars should not be choosers. But the Government attempt to get the article they advertise for, and they are pretty successful, on the whole. Even in Ontario, the hon. gentleman has seen and heard of contractors sending in inferior articles, which were afterwards condemned. Up there, when they are sent to a distant post, they cannot be condemned; they have to be used. I do not think there has been any unwholesome food given, although it has not, perhaps, come up to the standard. Mr. Wadsworth is an active and zealous officer, I believe, and he reports that last year all the supplies were satisfactory.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It seems to me there must be something wrong somewhere, though I am not prepared to say where it is, or who is to blame for it. For instance, in the band of the Bloods, it is reported there are 2,200 Indians. According to the vouchers from the Department, we have supplied the Bloods for the last five months of 1883 with $48,744 worth of beef alone, and all this was obtained from I. G. Baker & Co. I do not know whether they are butchers or traders, or what they are, but all this was supplied by them. That appears to me a large sum for supplying 2,220 Indians, and I find by the reports there were not 2,220 every month. In some months there were 1,300, and in others 1,400, and the greatest number in any month was 2,200. Yet we have given them for five months $48,744 worth of beef alone.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will not starve.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). What I am afraid of is, that this will not all reach the Indians. What check has the hon. gentleman? When we turn to the vouchers, we find that the Department has no check, excepting the receipts of the farm instructors, and I say that the class of men sent there as farm instructors are not a class to be entrusted with granting receipts for these enormous amounts. Voucher 436, 1st of October, 1883, $10,000 worth of beef for that month; voucher 381, 30th of September, 1883, $10,434 paid to Mr. Baker; voucher 325, 31st of August, 1883, $9,014 paid Mr. Baker for beef; voucher 542, 31st December, 1883, 70,512 pounds beef, at 13½ cents, $9,518; voucher 494, 30th of November, 1883, 68,869 pounds of beef, equal to $9,300. The five months aggregate $48,744, to feed 2,220 Bloods.

Mr. FARROW. That is not very much.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am not talking about whether it is much or not; I am giving the figures. I say it is much, but that is not all. Not only did they get beef, but they got bacon and other supplies. I am not blaming the First Minister, but I say the system is not a good one. These vouchers are all certified to by the farm instructors. It is an unsafe thing to leave the furnishing of such an enormous quantity of supplies to the destitute Indians to be certified to by the farm instructors, and the farm instructors alone. There is no real check, except the check furnished by the honesty of these men. I find, at the same time, while on the 31st July we were supplying the Indians with beef, at 13½ cents a pound we bought for them 12,438 pounds of bacon, at 23 cents a pound. I may say to the hon. gentlemen that there is no voucher at all for one month of the last six months of 1883. The hon. gentleman knows that the Indians object very decidedly to the use of pork, and I cannot see what interest the Government can have in giving the Indians a thing they do not want, and paying double the price for it. The Indians say that by supplying them with this bacon or pork, they become diseased. Pie-a-Pot complained that a large number of his band, from being compelled to use this pork, bought at 23 cents a pound, became unhealthy, and many died from the effects.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That was a lie of Pie-a-Pot.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Can the hon. gentleman explain why we should give these Indians pork at 23 cents a pound, when we could supply them with beef at 13½ cents a pound. The same thing occurs with respect to the Blackfoot Indians. They are estimated to number something over 2,000. In some reports and for some months the bands are estimated at 2,000; for other months the number is down to 1,200 and 1,600. For the last six months of 1883, according to the vouchers in the Department, we supplied them with fresh beef to the extent of $56,168; and during the same time we purchased pork for them at 23 cents a pound. There is another thing to which I wish to direct the First Minister's attention. In voucher 837, 31st of January, 1884, with respect to the Blackfeet, they obtained, according to the voucher, on that day, 22,250 pounds of beef, at 14½ cents. The voucher contains an entry to the following effect: Destitute Indians, Blackfoot Crossing, average daily rations, 871; and upon the same date, 31st January, 1884, by voucher 836, that same band got 26,560 pounds of beef, at 14½ cents, $3,785; and the following entry is on the voucher: Destitute Indians at Blackfoot Crossing, average daily rations, 1,290,—the one voucher signed by J. E. Edward the other by J. E. Macdonald, farm instructors. Why should there be, on the same day, to the same Indians, two different accounts for fresh beef? In the month of February precisely the same thing happened. Voucher 840, 29th of February, 1883, these Blackfeet at the Crossing obtained 16,727 pounds of beef, at 14½ cents, $2,383.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps the hon. gentleman had better let this item pass, as it is close on Sunday.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think not. I am perfectly convinced, from the hon. gentleman's own reports, that the grossest possible frauds are perpetrated by the middlemen. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow this item to stand, as it is an item which requires some discussion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All right.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I want to call his attention to the statements in his own reports. I do not know that he has read all these reports, and it is of the first possible consequence that his attention should be drawn to them. I have two different vouchers upon the same day of the same month to the very same band of Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; they are divided into two bands.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I will refer the hon. gentleman to the month of February. I find one voucher, No. 840—that is the number on the outside of the voucher, in pencil mark—and I find that there is an account, dated the 29th February, 1883, for 16,727 pounds of beef to the Blackfeet at the Blackfoot Crossing; and on the same day there is another voucher for 26,956 pounds of beef to the same identical band of Indians at the Blackfoot Crossing. It may be, as the hon. gentleman says, that this band of Indians has been divided into two, and the supplies have been given to them by two different agents. If that is so, it only happens with regard to those two months, because, during the whole of 1883 the supplies are certified by one official, and generally by the farm instructor; but in January and February, 1883, there are two sets of vouchers, certified to by two different individuals. I do not know what the explanation is, but I think it is a matter that requires some explanation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is nearly twelve o'clock.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then let the item stand.

Mr. BOWELL. The First Minister said he would let it stand several times. He said so fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. CAMERON. He did not say so fifty times.

Mr. BOWELL. I said he said so fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If the First Minister said so, I did not hear him, or I would have stopped at once. I apologise to the First Minister for going on, but I did not hear him.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11:50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 13th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

TEMPERANCE ACT, 1878.

Mr McCRAVEY asked, Is it the intention of the Government to ask Parliament to legislate during the present Session so as to provide for the proper enforcement of the Temperance Act, 1878, by furnishing the necessary funds for the prosecution of persons violating the provisions of said Act?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would be impossible, I think, at this stage of the Session to legislate on this subject.

BONDED MACHINERY IN USE.

Mr. McMULLEN, asked, Whether there is any mill or manufacturing machinery that has been imported into Canada and put in mills or manufacturing establishments and still held in bond by the Government? If so, the names of the mill or mills in which the machinery is, the date of its importation and the several amounts due for duty, and how long due?

Mr. BOWELL. I am unable to answer that question fully, but there are two or three establishments in which the full amount of the duties has not been paid, but is now in course of collection. There is one at Brantford, one at Weston, and the Magog one, and there is still a balance due at St. Croix. These are the only ones I am aware of. The Commissioner has sent for the information. I am informed that all these matters are in course of final settlement.

THE FISHERIES.

Mr. VAIL (for Mr. FORBES) asked, Is it the intention of the Dominion Government, during the continuance of the free fishing arrangements allowed the American fishermen, to pay the fishermen of the Dominion, a bonus equivalent to the duties paid on fish shipped to the United States by Canadian shippers?

Mr. McLELAN. In view of the fact that the whole question of the fisheries will be considered at an early day, this particular branch of the subject has not been decided upon.

THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST— COMPENSATION FOR LOSSES.

Mr. ROSS (for Mr. ROYAL) asked, Whether commissioners have been appointed to investigate the individual losses made during the last outbreak in the North-West and caused by the Indians? If not, whether the Government intend to make some appointments for that object and when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No commissioners have been appointed as yet, but the whole of that question is under the consideration of the Government.

THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST— RELIEF OF DESTITUTE FAMILIES.

Mr. ROSS (for Mr. ROYAL) asked, Whether measures have been taken to come to the relief of families whom the last troubles in the North-West have left destitute and even without the first necessaries of life?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has taken steps, and has relieved some of the sufferers, and is taking steps to prevent starvation in regard to the people who have suffered during the late outbreak.

ONTARIO BOUNDARIES.

Mr. MILLS asked, whether the Government intends to invite Parliament to ask for Imperial legislation in the matter of the boundaries of Ontario, this Session? Whether it proposes to take any action, and if so what it is to be?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The matter has engaged, as might be supposed, the attention of the Government. With respect to the boundary between Ontario and Manitoba, there can be no difficulty. The Government are quite prepared that an Act should pass for that purpose. In respect to the northern boundary of Ontario, which boundary divided Ontario from Keewatin, that is yet unsettled, and the hon. gentleman will see that there is a question involved in that as to what is or ought to be the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec. There is no chance of there being any Imperial legislation until the next meeting of the Imperial Parliament. The Canadian Government, in the meantime, desire to open negotiations, or rather to have communication with the Province of Manitoba, the Province of Ontario, and the Province of Quebec, for the purpose of settling forever not only the boundary between Manitoba and Quebec, which is practically settled, but the northern boundary of Ontario and the northern boundary of Quebec; and, after communicating with these several Governments, to get from the Imperial Parliament, at its next Session, some legislation settling these three questions forever—what is the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario—that is to repeat by Imperial enactment what the decision of the Privy Council has been—to settle forever what is the northern boundary of Ontario, separating it from Keewatin, and what is the northern boundary of Quebec, dividing the Province of Quebec from the lands belonging to the Dominion of Canada lying to the north of that.

DISTURBANCES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether the Government received any and if so, how many communications and at what dates from Bishop Grandin relating to North-West affairs and not brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We only saw this morning this and the following questions of the hon. gentleman, put on Saturday, and will be ready to answer them tomorrow. It is the same with regard to the question of the hon. member for Chateaugay (Mr. Holton).

DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST—RECOGNITION OF THE SERVICES OF THE VOLUNTEERS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House will to-morrow resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to recognise the services of the members of the enrolled militia force actively engaged in suppressing the half-breed and Indian outbreak in the North-West by giving each, in addition to the pay and allowances to which he is entitled under the Militia Act, a grant of land upon certain conditions or of scrip, redeemable in land as the case may be, and that the grant should be made in such form as would be conducive to the actual settlement of the public lands of Canada.

2. Resolved, That in order to give effect to the foregoing resolutions the Governor General in Council be authorised to grant to each member of the enrolled militia force actively engaged and bearing arms in the suppression of the Indian and half-breed outbreak, and serving west of Port Arthur since the 25th day of March, last, including officers, non-commissioned officers and men. A free homestead of two adjoining quarter sections (comprising an area of 320 acres in all) of any even numbered section of unoccupied and unclaimed Dominion lands in Manitoba or the North-West Territories open for homestead and pre-emption entry, subject to the condition that the grantee or his duly constituted substitute, shall have selected and entered the two said quarter sections in the Dominion Land Office for the land district in which they may be situated on or before the first day of June, 1886.

Provided that the said grantee or his substitute, as the case may be, shall perfect the entry made as above provided by commencing actually to reside upon and cultivate the land within six months from and after the 1st day of June, 1886, and shall thereafter continue to reside upon and cultivate the said land for the period, and in accordance with the terms and conditions prescribed by the homestead provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, 1883. Provided further that no substitute to be selected by a grantee shall be a person who is not eligible under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act to obtain entry for a homestead. Provided further that in case a substitute be selected by a grantee as hereinbefore provided, the land shall be entered in the name of the substitute, and upon compliance with the conditions in that behalf prescribed by the homestead provisions of the Dominion Lands Act the patent for the two quarter sections shall be issued in the name of said substitute.

3. Resolved, That any person entitled, under the foregoing, to select and enter either by himself or by his substitute, 320 acres of land as a homestead in the manner and subject to the terms and condition hereinbefore prescribed may, in lieu thereof, if he so chooses, receive scrip for eighty dollars (80) which shall be accepted in payment of any Dominion lands open for sale, or in payment of pre-emptions or of rents of Dominion lands leased for grazing or hay cutting purposes, but any person choosing to take scrip, as hereinbefore provided, shall notify the Minister of the Interior of his choice on or before the 1st day of June, 1887.

4. Resolved, That all grants of land or scrip, as the case may be, issued in accordance with the foregoing provisions, shall be made by the Minister of the Interior upon a warrant in favor of the person entitled thereto issued by the Minister of Militia and Defence, which shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior under clause 21 of the Dominion Lands Act, 1883; and further, that all scrip which may be issued under the third resolution as above, shall be subject, in all respects, to the provisions of the said clause 21 and also of clause 22 of the Dominion Lands Act.

5. Resolved, That the entries to be made and the patent to be issued hereunder shall not be subject to the dues and charges exacted in the case of ordinary homestead entries.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will, unless the hon. gentleman objects, go on with the Bill granting subsidies to railways. It is simply the resolutions, with one slight change.

Mr. BLAKE. The Bill is not yet distributed, and I have not had an opportunity of looking at it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, if the hon. gentleman objects, I cannot go on with it.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of the report of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would explain what alteration this will make in his estimate of the revenue.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware it will make any material difference. I have not the figures with me, but I will give them to the House when we go into Committee on the Bill.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—THE WASHINGTON TREATY.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WELDON. The importance of the matter I propose to bring before the House is my apology for calling attention to it at this period of the Session. I wish to call the attention of the House to the manner in which the Government have dealt with the termination of the Washington Treaty, and to show by facts laid before the House, that the Government in their conduct with respect to the abrogation of the articles of the Washington Treaty, have been guilty of delay and neglect. Their conduct may be characterised as having been gross and inexcusable in the like manner as the Toronto Mail characterised the action regarding the North-West. The value of the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces is so well known to this House that I need not dwell upon it. Sufficient it is to state that by the award made by the Halifax Commission we were granted about $5,000,000 for ten years during which the treaty was in force. This subject, Mr. Speaker, is not only of importance to the Maritime Provinces, because it is not only in the waters that wash the Atlantic coast, where our fisheries are situated, but even in the Pacific there are countless millions of fish, so that to both the east and the west of this Dominion, this is a matter of great importance. Perhaps I cannot better characterise those fisheries than by using the words of the late Chief Magistrate of the United States, who spoke of the richly stocked fisheries and sealing grounds of British North America. You are aware that articles 18 to 25 of the Washington Treaty relate to the fisheries, and those articles provided, amongst other things, that the Americans should use our fishing grounds, that we should have the benefit of their fishing grounds, and that fish should be admitted into both countries respectively free of duty. By the 33rd article of that treaty, it was provided that two years' notice should be given by either country, in the event of a desire to terminate those articles. We are all aware that notice has been given of their termination, and I wish briefly to refer to the course pursued by the American Government, and the course pursued by this Government, with regard to it; and to show that despite repeated applications to the Canadian Government, despite the fact that their attention was repeatedly called to it, the matter was allowed to slumber until no advantage could be gained to Canada. On the 10th of January, 1883, Senator Fry, of Maine, introduced a resolution into the Senate of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. On the 16th of January, 1883, the Hon. Mr. West forwarded a copy of that resolution to this Government. On the 2nd of February, a resolution was passed by the Senate of the United States; it was then referred to the House of Representatives, and on the 27th of February, the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations was accepted by the House. As the question may arise as to what took place at that time, I will call the attention of the House to the language of Mr. Rice, of Massachusetts, who was, I believe, a member if not chairman, of the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"I think if the gentlemen from Minnesota will hear the explanation which I will briefly give, it may, perhaps satisfy him on all points, with reference to the propriety of the adoption of this measure. By the Treaty of Washington certain sections were devoted to rights given in British waters to American fishermen. The amount that the United States was to pay for the privilege was to be settled by the Halifax Commission. The sum that was to be awarded by that commission paid for that right for the term of 12 years and no longer. The sum awarded by the Halifax Commission was $5,500,000. We must now give notice, by the first of next July, of the abrogation of these clauses of that treaty, and provisions contained in the treaty for the abrogation of those clauses, and nothing else. So that the matter stands by itself or else we enter upon another term, for which England may demand ample payment from the United States, according to the enormous and unjust awards of the Halifax Commission for privileges which nobody in the United States, who has investigated the subject, consider worth keeping. The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, unanimously reported this resolution. It was adopted by the Senate without any objection; and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, having fully examined the matter, unanimously instructed me to move the adoption of the resolution by the House, which I now do under that instruction. With this explanation, I trust that no objection will be made to the consideration of the resolution, which I am very sure, I can satisfy everybody, ought to be adopted, to avoid liability to further payment of an extortionate sum to Great Britain, for that which is not considered worth anything to us by parties who are interested in the matter and who have examined into it."

This was also communicated to this Government. On the 27th of February, 1883, that resolution was adopted by the House of Representatives, and on the 3rd of March, it received the approval of the President. On the 19th of March, after the resolution was finally passed, Mr. West enclosed copies of these resolutions to the Government. On the 28th of March, the late Colonial Secretary, Lord Derby, wrote the following:

"MY LORD,—I have the honor to transmit to you, for communication to your Government, a copy of a letter from the Foreign Office, forwarding a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, reporting that a joint resolution for the termination of the fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington, has passed the Senate.

"I shall, no doubt, receive an expression of the views and wishes of the Dominion Government in regard to the matter.

"I have, etc.,
"DERBY."

Although the Colonial Secretary intimated his wish to obtain the views and wishes of the Canadian Government in regard to the matter, no response was made to the Imperial Government. On the 2nd of April the Government forwarded papers, which were sent to Earl Granville, which contained the extract from the Congressional Record which I have already read, and, on the 2nd of April, Lord Derby forwarded a copy of a further despatch from the Foreign Office. Now, the despatch written from Washington on the 27th of February, 1883, by Mr. Saurin, acting for the legation, is as follows:—

"WASHINGTON, 27th February, 1883.

"MY LORD,—With reference to my despatch of yesterday's date, I have the honor to report that the Senate joint resolution for the termination of articles 18 to 25 and 30 of the Treaty of Washington, was yesterday read a third time in the House, and passed.

"I enclose, at the same time, a report from the Congressional Record of a speech made by Mr. Rice, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, explaining the reasons why the United States Government is anxious to denounce the fishery clauses.

"They are briefly that, in their opinion, the fisheries are not worthy the sum awarded by the Halifax Commission, and that, as the term of years for which compensation was awarded expires next year, the United States would, were no steps taken to free themselves from this obligation, be liable to be again called upon to pay largely for privileges which they do not consider worth keeping.

I have, &c.,

"The Earl GRANVILLE, K.G.

DUDLEY E. SAURIN."

On the 3rd of May following, Lord Derby addressed a letter to the Marquis of Lorne, in these words:

"DOWNING STREET, 3rd May, 1883.

"MY LORD,—I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of a letter from the Foreign Office, enclosing a note from the United States Minister at this Court, informing Her Majesty's Government that a formal notice will be given, on the part of the United States Government, on the 2nd of July next, for the termination, after two years from that date, of articles 18 to 25, inclusive, and article 30 of the Treaty of Washington, of the 8th of May, 1873.

"Although the articles in question will remain in force for two years after the notice is given, your Government will, no doubt, agree with me in the opinion that it is desirable that no time should be lost in taking into consideration the course which it will be best to adopt in regard to the fisheries question, on the termination of the articles of the Treaty relating thereto.

"Her Majesty's Government will be glad if your Ministers will favor them with their views in the matter, as soon as they may be in a position to do so.

"I have, etc.,

"DERBY.

"Governor General, the Right Hon.

"The Marquis of LORNE, K.T., G.C.M.G."

In that was enclosed a letter from the Foreign Office to the Colonial Office, dated the 25th of April, 1883:

"FOREIGN OFFICE, 25th April, 1883.

"SIR,—I am directed by Earl Granville to transmit to you a copy of a note from the United States Minister at this Court, to the effect that he has been instructed by his Government to give notice, on the 2nd July (the 1st falling on a Sunday), of the termination of articles 18 to 25 inclusive, and article 30, of the Treaty of Washington, of the 8th May, 1871.

"I am to request that in laying this paper before the Earl of Derby you will state that although, after notice is given, two years must still elapse before these articles cease to have effect; it appears to Lord Granville expedient to take into consideration, without delay, what course it will be best to adopt, with a view, if possible, to avoid a recurrence of irritating disputes in connection with the fisheries question, and I am to suggest that in the first place it might be well to communicate a copy of Mr. Lowell's note to the Canadian Government, and to ascertain what views they entertain upon the subject.

"I am, &c.,

"PHILIP W. CURRIE."

"The Under Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

You will observe that not only Lord Derby, the Colonial Minister, but also Earl Granville, the Foreign Secretary, expressed the opinion in clear and emphatic language that no time should be lost in considering what measures should be taken, in view of the termination of these articles, and that the views of the Canadian Government on the subject should be obtained. Yet, notwithstanding the explicit terms in which the views of the Imperial Government were thus expressed, so far as we can ascertain from the papers which have been brought down, the Canadian Government were silent on the matter; no notice was taken of these papers; nothing appears to have been done on behalf of our Government. Parliament met here in the following January. In the debate on the address, my hon. friend the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) called the attention of the Government to the matter in the following words:

"There is an omission or two in the Speech to which I must refer. The Fishery Exhibition is mentioned, and the hon. gentlemen who have moved and seconded the reply have spoken with great and lively admiration of the success of that exhibition and of the triumphs which Canada there achieved. But we have some fishery interests which are to be promoted in other ways than by attending exhibitions; there are some fishing clauses in a treaty, which clauses have been denounced, and which are to come to an end at no remote period; and I think some reference to that circumstance and to an intention to take the House into the confidence of the Government as to the course proposed by them, and to indicate what the Government have done in view of the approaching termination of the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty, would have been at least of as much consequence as the paragraph which has been inserted in the Speech. It is very well known that within the last two or three years more particularly the chief market for our fish has been the United States, and it has become of very pressing importance that we should know what the results are to be of the termination of these fishery clauses. It is of importance that the treaty should not terminate without an earnest effort in advance to make proper arrangements, so that there shall be no gap, if it can be avoided; and I will add that it is of great consequence also, and the times appear to be more propitious now than in former days, that in those negotiations due attention shall be paid to arriving at some mode of restoring freer trade relations between us and our neighbors than have for some time subsisted."

On that occasion the only reply my hon. friend received from the right hon. Prime Minister was an attack on the members here for having opposed that treaty in 1871, and for having called him a Judas Iscariot for securing such a treaty. Shortly afterwards, when attention was called to the matter, we find that on the 30th of January, 1884, Lord Derby wrote again to the Marquis of Lansdowne:

"MY LORD,—With reference to my despatches of the 3rd of May and of the 28th December last, I have the honor to request that you will move your Government to take an early opportunity of placing me in possession of their views as to the course to be pursued in consequence of the approaching termination of the fishery articles of the Treaty of Washington.

"In connection with this subject, you will no doubt have observed the suggestion contained in an early part of the Message of the President of the United States, communicated to the two Houses of Congress on the 4th of December last."

Before stating whether any notice was taken of this despatch or not, I would refer to that portion of the President's message relating to the fisheries. President Arthur, in his message to Congress on the 5th of December, 1883, used the following language:—

"Notice of the termination of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington was duly given to the British Government and the reciprocal privileges and exemptions of the treaty will accordingly cease on July 1st, 1885. The fisheries industries pursued by a numerous class of our citizens on the northern coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, are worthy of the fostering care of Congress whenever brought into competition with the like industries of other countries, our fishermen, as well as our manufacturers of fishing appliances and preparers of fish products, have maintained a foremost place. I suggest that Congress create a commission to consider the general question of our rights in the fisheries and the means of opening to our citizens under just and enduring conditions, the richly stocked fishing waters and sealing grounds of British North America."

Showing that if the American Government had been approached to use their influence to obtain a renewal of the treaty, they would no doubt have been willing to use that influence. That was referred to in the despatch of the 30th of January, 1884, with the request that the views of this Government should be presented at as early a date as possible to the Imperial Government. That Government had in the previous year pointed out that it was important that no time should be lost in endeavoring to make some arrangements, but while perfectly ready and willing to enter into negotiations, they were desirous of consulting the Dominion Government and obtaining their views with regard to extending the treaty or making other arrangements which might be mutually satisfactory and beneficial to both countries. On the 28th of March following, my hon. friend the member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), who I regret is not here to aid me in putting this matter before the House, moved a resolution calling the attention of the House to the subject. My hon. friend, in his speech on that occasion, showed clearly the advantages that would accrue to this country, especially to the Maritime Provinces, by a continuation of this treaty, and urged that some effort should be made for the purpose of getting an arrangement if possible with the United States. At that time the despatches were referred to, but had not been laid on the Table. My hon. friend on that occasion moved:

"In view of the notice of the termination of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington, given by the United States to the British Government, and the consequent expiration, on the 1st July, 1885, of the reciprocal privileges and exemptions of that treaty, this House is of opinion that steps should be taken, at an early day, by the Government of Canada, with the object of bringing about negotiations for a new treaty, providing for the citizens of Canada and the United States, the reciprocal privileges of fishing and freedom from duties now enjoyed, together with additional reciprocal freedom in the trade relations of the two countries; and that in any such negotiations Canada should be directly represented by some one nominated by its Government."

That resolution was voted down on that occasion. The Government had not only done nothing but did not desire to open any negotiation at all with the United States, which appears to have been the condition of affairs. Congress had opened on the 4th December, 1883, and continued in session until 7th July, 1884, and during three months of this period our House was in session. No steps were taken, however, during the Session or afterward to open negotiations. Matters remained in this state until the 4th December last, when the following despatch was sent by the Colonial Secretary:

"In view of the fact that the fishery articles of the Treaty of Washington will expire on the 1st July next, I have the honor to inform you that Her Majesty's Government are desirous of obtaining at as early date as it may be possible, some definite expression of the views of the Government of the Dominion of Canada as to the course which they may wish to be pursued, in negotiation with the Government of the United States, with the object of arriving at some satisfactory arrangement with that Government in order to avoid the risks and complications which might arise from the fishery question being left in an unsettled and undecided state. You will, therefore, be so good as to lay this despatch before your Ministers and to request them to favor me at their earliest convenience, with such an expression of their views upon this important subject as they may be in a position to supply."

This was written the 4th December, 1884, and appears to have had no response until the 26th December, 1884. On that date, His Excellency the Governor General, after acknowledging receipt of the despatch, explained the delay in replying to it by the absence of the First Minister, and goes on to say:

"3. I have in the first place to point out that these articles have been abrogated by the Government of the United States in compliance with a vote of Congress, without, as far as we are aware, any intimation of a desire on the part of that Government to substitute for them any other arrangement, and without any specific disclosures of the reasons which have induced it to adopt such a course, beyond general and unofficial expressions of dissatisfaction with the result of the award under which the United States were required to pay a sum of five and a half millions of dollars for the privilege of fishing in the waters to which their fishermen were admitted under the Treaty of 1871.

"4. A course similar to that which has now been adopted was followed by the Government of Washington in regard to the Treaty of 1854, which was abrogated in like manner, to the detriment of the commercial relations which had been established between the two countries while it was in operation."

At that time the Government had the letter of Mr. Saurin, of the British Legation, the speech of Mr. Rice, of Massachusetts, and the President's Message, showing the reasons for inducing the Government of the United States to adopt the course they did. The great object of the American Government was to place themselves in such a position with regard to the Washington Treaty that they would not have to pay anything for the use of our fisheries, but not in such a position that other negotiations might not take place.

"5. In the face of these circumstances my Government does not consider that it would be consistent with the respect which it owes to itself to appear as a suitor for concessions at the hands of the Government of the United States. It is moreover certainly open to question whether its negotiations on this subject are to be approached at all, they will not be approached with a better prospect of success if they are commenced and conducted with the Government which will assume office next spring, rather than with that by which the articles have been denounced and which could not reasonably expect to terminate such negotiations before the end of its official existence."

This was written 26th December, 1884. Instead of applying to the then Government while Congress was in session, although they knew Congress would, by law, rise 4th March, 1885, and that it would not be in session later in the year, unless an extra Session were called by the new President, which was highly improbable, the Government took no action:—

Mr. WELDON.

"6. The expiration of the fishery articles, although no doubt it will produce some dislocation of this branch of the commerce of the Dominion, will only replace it in the position which it occupied between the expiration of the Treaty of 1854 and the commencement of the Treaty of 1871. Each party will be restricted to its own waters, and steps would be taken to protect from trespass those of the Dominion which are admitted to be of far greater value than those of the United States. It is probable that a considerable portion of the catch of the Canadian fishermen would find its way, as it did during the period referred to, to the same markets as now, but carried in American vessels, the owners of which would purchase the fish from the Canadian fishing vessels whilst afloat and enter them at their own ports free of duty as their own catch for resale in the West Indies and elsewhere.

"7. In another respect, however, the action of the United States Government is no doubt likely to leave inconvenient and perhaps embarrassing results, though not to Canadian fishermen. The fishery clauses will cease to operate on the 1st of July, 1885. At that time vessels belonging to the United States will be engaged in fishing in Canadian waters.

"These vessels will have been equipped and fitted out for the season's fishing, and will have made all their arrangements in the belief that they would be able to prosecute their business until its end."

Here the Government assumes that these vessels are equipped and ready to set out. But the Government of which these men are the constituents had given ample notice that the treaty would terminate on the 1st of July. Why should our Government undertake to assume that the American fishermen were ignorant of it and would trespass on our fisheries, being convinced that not the slightest attempt would be made to prevent them? Our Government had been notified that the treaty would cease, and it became their duty to give notice that every man who entered our fisheries would be a trespasser and to have taken steps to protect our fisheries against trespass.

"If these vessels were upon the day following that upon which the articles ceased to operate, either captured for trespass, or compelled on pain of seizures to desist from fishing in Canadian waters, considerable loss would be occasioned to the owners, and much ill-feeling created between the two countries. The Government of the Dominion has no desire to be instrumental in producing such a state of things, and I am able to inform your Lordship that should such a course be acceptable to the Government of the United States, we shall be prepared to agree to an extension of the operation of the clause in regard both to "free fishing" and "free fish" until the 1st of June, 1886."

Mark the words. A proposal was made, and they were willing to agree to an extension of the operations of the treaty both as regards free fishing and free fish up to 1st June, 1886; and at the time when they were making that proposal they were doubtless aware that Congress, which had alone the power to grant it, would not be in session, and that the executive had not the power.

"If this were to be done their expiration would take place between the fishing season of 1885 and that of 1886, instead of in the middle of that of 1885, and the result of avoiding those complications of which I have already spoken.

"8. The delay thus gained would, if the United States were to show any desire for the discussion of the commercial relation of the two countries, give time for such a discussion and the Government of the Dominion would have no object in restricting its scope to the subject of the fisheries. It is, indeed, a matter of notoriety that the Dominion has consistently expressed its readiness to become a party to an arrangement which might have the effect of affording increased facilities for international commerce between itself and the United States. It has given the best proof of its sincerity by taking under its existing Customs laws, powers of which Your Lordship is aware, to admit upon favorable terms by proclamation of the Governor General, those products of the United States which were included in the Treaty of 1854, whenever a similar course in regard to the natural products of the Dominion may be adopted by the Government of Washington. It regretted at the time the termination of the Treaty of 1854, which it believed to be advantageous to the interests of both countries, and it would be fully prepared on receiving from the Government of the United States an intimation that negotiations would be likely to produce useful results, to enter into such negotiations in an amicable spirit.

"I think it my duty, in conclusion, to make Your Lordship aware that in a letter to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, dated the 23rd inst., I asked him to be good enough to inform me whether such an ad interim arrangement as I have indicated in paragraph 7, was likely to be agreeable to the Government to which he is accredited."

No such letter is brought down and I am not aware that any answer was made. This proposition was made by the Colonial Office mentioning, and putting forward the fact, that no steps have yet been taken. The next communication is a despatch from Mr. West, dated 23rd April, 1885. This does not appear to have been the first communication between the two Governments, for we find that Mr. West on 12th March, 1885, addressed a confidential memorandum to Mr. Bayard.

"The fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington of 1871 will expire on 1st July next. It has been represented by the Canadian Government that much inconvenience is likely to arise in consequence, unless some agreement can be made for an extension of the period."

It was represented to the Canadian Government that much inconvenience would be likely to arise in consequence of the abolition of the fishery clauses. We have a letter addressed to Mr. West on the 23rd inst. We assume that Mr. West had a copy of the despatch of Lord Derby. There it was mentioned not that it would be inconvenient to Canadian fishermen but would cause inconvenience to American fishermen, the very men who were surrendering the privilege were to be called upon to submit to inconvenience. The point is put forward by Mr. West as follows:—

"When the time comes (1st July next) American ships will be actually engaged in fishing within the territorial waters of the Dominion. These vessels will have been fitted out for the season's fishing and have made all their usual arrangements for following it up until its termination in the autumn. If under these circumstances the provincial or municipal authorities in Canada were to insist upon their strict rights and to compel such vessels on pain of seizure to desist from fishing, considerable hardship would be occasioned to the owners, and a feeling of bitterness engendered on both sides which it is clearly the interest of both Governments to avert.

"It seems therefore desirable in order to avoid such possible complications, that both Governments should come to an agreement under which the clauses might be in effect extended until 1st January, 1886.

"If this was done the existing state of things would come to an end and a date between the fishery season of 1885 and that of 1886, and an abrupt transition at a moment when fishery operations were being carried on would be thus avoided."

It seems to me that there is a concession made on our part,—and I assume that the views put forward by Mr. West in his memorandum are expressed on behalf of the Canadian as well as the Imperial Government. I do not think it shows a want of respect of this Government to come to the conclusion that the very first thing done on the 12th March, within less than three months of the termination of the fishery clauses of the treaty, was an application by this Government to have the time extended not for the benefit of Canadian fishermen but in order to prevent American fishermen being inconvenienced. This point is referred to by Mr. Bayard in a memorandum which is also brought down among the papers. That memorandum after referring to the legislation points out:

"The legislation passed by the Congress of the United States' Act of March, 1873, for the execution of the fishery articles of the Treaty of Washington, has been repealed by the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, the repeal to take effect July 1, 1885. From that date the effects of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington absolutely determine, so far as their execution within the jurisdiction of the United States is concerned, and without new legislation by Congress modifying or postponing that repeal, the Executive is not constitutionally competent to extend the reciprocal fisheries provisions of the Treaty beyond the 1st July next, the date fixed by the action of Congress."

Mr. West's memorandum of 12th March, 1885, suggests the mutual practical convenience that would accrue from allowing the fishing ventures commenced prior to 1st July, 1885, to continue until the end of the season for fishing of that year, thus preventing their abrupt termination in the midst of fishing operations on the 1st of July. I am perfectly justified in saying that the First Minister and the Government must have been fully aware of the effect of the termination of that notice; also that on 1st July, under the constitution of the United States, Congress would not be sitting, it was highly improbable that after 4th March Congress would be in session, and if no action was taken by Congress the Executive, to use the language of Mr. Bayard, is not competent to extend the reciprocal provisions of the treaty. If those negotiations had been entered upon at an earlier period—for there is nothing to show that the late United States Government and President Arthur were not as favorable to Canada as are the present President and Congress—the matter might have been taken into consideration by Congress and the privileges extended, the loss of which must seriously affect the Maritime Provinces, and thus place the fishermen on the same footing as American fishermen, and that fish caught by Americans in Canadian waters should not be carried into the United States free without our fish being also carried in free. But the opportunity was lost; it was allowed to slip by and nothing was done. The matter was taken up after Congress had prorogued and separated. Mr. Bayard wrote to Mr. West as follows:—

"It has been, moreover, suggested on the part of the Province of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada that in view of the mutual benefit and convenience of the present local traffic, consisting of the purchase of ice, bait, wood, and general ship supplies by the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing from the inhabitants of the British American fishing coast, the usual operations of the fishing season of 1885 should be continued by the fishing vessels belonging to citizens of the United States until the end of the season of that year, and that the local authorities of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada, in a spirit of neighborhood should abstain from molesting such fishermen or impeding their progress or their local traffic with the inhabitants incidental to fishing during the remainder of the season of 1885, and all this with the understanding that the President of the United States would bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a commission in which the Government of the United States and of Great Britain should be respectively represented, which commission should be charged with the consideration and settlement upon a just, equitable and honorable basis of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coast of the United States and British North America.

"The President of the United States would be prepared to recommend the adoption of such action by Congress with the understanding that in view and in consideration of such promised recommendation there would be no enforcement of restrictive and penal laws and regulations by the authorities of the Dominion of Canada or of the Province of Newfoundland, against the fishermen of the United States resorting to British American waters between the 1st July next and the close of the present year's fishing season; the mutual object and intent being to avoid any annoyance to the individuals engaged in this business and traffic, and the irritation or ill-feeling that might be engendered by a harsh or vexatious enforcement of stringent local regulations on the fishing coast pending an effort to have a just and amicable arrangement of an important and somewhat delicate question between the two nations.

"Public knowledge of this understanding and arrangement can be given by an exchange of notes between Mr. West and myself, which can be given to the press."

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this memorandum no copy of Mr. West's memorandum appears to have been furnished; but on the 22nd of April Mr. West sent a despatch to the Government here enclosing a copy of this memorandum which I have just read. On the 22nd of April the Governor General acknowledged the receipt of this, and in referring to it said:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd inst., enclosing a copy of the memorandum submitted to you by the Secretary of State upon the subject of an understanding which the Government of the United States desires to establish with that of the Dominion, in view of the approaching expiration of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington.

"I have referred Mr. Bayard's memorandum to my Government, and I hope to be able to communicate further with you upon the subject in the course of a few days.

"I may, however, in the meanwhile express the hope that you will convey to the Secretary of State the assurance that his proposal will receive most careful consideration, and that the Government of the Dominion is sincerely desirous of placing its relations with the Government of the United States both in regard to the question of fisheries and in regard to all questions affecting the commerce of the two countries upon a footing advantageous and satisfactory to both, and likely to avoid, as far as circumstances will admit, all risk of misunderstanding and annoyance to the individuals concerned therein."

You will observe that the memorandum of Mr. Bayard simply accepts a proposal of Mr. West that the Americans should have the benefit of the Canadian fisheries without the alternative that the Canadians should be allowed to utilise the American fisheries; it does not at all refer to the matters referred to in the 30th article of the treaty. On the same day, the 28th of April, the following despatch is sent to the Colonial Office:—

"I have the honor to forward for your Lordship's consideration copies of a letter which I have received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and of a memorandum enclosed therein by the Secretary of State of the United States Government, upon the subject of the approaching expiration of the fisheries clauses of the Treaty of Washington. I also enclose copy of my reply to Mr. West.

"I have referred Mr. West's letter and the memo. to my Ministers, and I shall communicate further with your Lordship in a few days, as to the course which the Government of the Dominion may propose to adopt in the matter.

"I have already made your Lordship aware of the reasons which led me to believe that the abrupt termination of the fisheries clauses of the 1st of July might be followed by the seizure of American vessels found after that date within the territorial waters of the Dominion would be attended with the utmost inconvenience, and I expressed the hope that it might be found possible to effect an arrangement under which the operation of the clauses, both in regard to free fish and free fishing, might be extended to January 1st, 1886, and that before the commencement of another fishing season a permanent agreement might be arrived at between the two Governments."

Here you will observe the hope is expressed that arrangements may be made with regard to free fish and free fishing. This is immediately after the announcement put forward that Congress alone had power to make that arrangement, that the Executive would be powerless; and this is to be done after the 1st of July, when it was too late to make any arrangement:

"Your Lordship will observe that Mr. Bayard is of opinion that without new legislation by Congress the Executive is not constitutionally competent to extend the operation of the clauses in the manner proposed; and that he suggests that in order to avoid the inconvenience which was anticipated, the usual operations of the fishing vessels belonging to citizens of the United States should be allowed to continue without interference on the part of the local authorities, either of the Dominion or of Newfoundland, until the close of the season.

"This Mr. Bayard purposes should be done upon an understanding to which expression might, he thinks, be given by means of notes exchanged between Mr. West and himself, and published in the press to the effect that Congress should be moved at its next Session to agree to the appointment of an international commission of which the Government of the United States and Great Britain should be represented, and which should be charged with the duty of endeavoring to arrive at a final adjustment of the entire question of the fishery rights of both powers.

"While the desire of the United States Government to avoid, in view of a satisfactory adjustment of a question likely to occasion serious international complications, all possible sources of irritation in the meanwhile, will, I believe be fully appreciated in the country. It is impossible to exclude from consideration the fact that some hostile criticisms are likely to be provoked by any arrangement under which, while persons connected with the fishery interests of the Dominion would find their fish and fish products liable to the reimposed duties on entrance in the United States, the same access as heretofore to Canadian waters would be enjoyed by the fishermen of the United States. Mr. Bayard's proposal is, however, framed in terms which leave no doubt as to the desire of this Government for an amicable understanding with that of the Dominion, and I venture to recommend that Mr. West should be authorised to continue, subject to the approval of Her Majesty's Government, the negotiations which have been thus commenced, and also, if the opportunity presents itself, to extend their scope so as to include the consideration of commercial relations, other than those arising out of the fish trade between the Dominion and the United States."

Now, you will observe that when it is said that the American Government were desirous of coming to an amicable understanding with the Government of the Dominion—at that time not a single favor or concession was granted by the United States whatever, but the proposal conveyed in Mr. West's memorandum of the 12th March, was simply that American fishermen should be allowed the privilege of fishing in Canadian waters while no corresponding privilege was allowed to Canadian fishermen. There is no doubt that the Government were quite right in expressing the view in this despatch that a fairly hostile criticism might be made of this arrangement. The next despatch of any importance is dated the 17th May, 1885, and is addressed to Lord Derby:

"My Lord,—In reply to your Lordship's enquiry whether the Government of the Dominion was prepared to concur in the memorandum by Mr. Bayard, of which a copy was forwarded to me by the British Minister at Washington on the 23rd of April, I had the honor to inform your Lordship by telegram on the 17th instant, that upon the understanding that Congress would be recommended to agree to the issue of a commission for the object suggested by Mr. Bayard, no cruisers would be sent by my Government to protect the Canadian fisheries or to interfere with American fishermen, but that it might not be possible to prevent collisions between Canadian and American fishermen, or to control the action of individuals attempting to enforce provincial laws against foreign intruders. I added that my Government was prepared to do anything within its power to discourage such proceedings, and that I believed this could be done effectually, and I went on to say that I presumed that the American Government would act in the same manner in regard to Canadian fishermen resorting to the territorial waters of the United States.

"2. Such an arrangement would, as your Lordship suggests, be of a temporary nature, and would be agreed to upon the understanding that it should not prejudice the equivalents which might be hereafter demanded in negotiations for a more permanent settlement.

"3. With regard to the latter, I have already intimated to your Lordship that my Government would regard favorably a proposal by which the scope of the negotiations for the settlement of the fishery question might be enlarged so as to include the discussion of reciprocal concessions calculated to give increased facilities for trade between Canada and the United States.

"4. If it were to become known here that such proposals had been made and were entertained, it is probable that the suspicion with which, as I have already pointed out to your Lordship, the arrangement now under discussion will in some quarters be regarded, might be to some extent removed. The arrangement will unquestionably be looked upon, particularly by persons connected with the fishery interests of the Dominion, as being of a very one-sided character."

It is characterised by the Americans themselves, and everyone who reads the documents will see that, in view of the privileges we give to the Americans, the arrangement is of a one-sided character:—

"Mr. Bayard has explained that in consequence of the joint resolution of 30th March, 1883, the expiration of the fishery articles of the Treaty of Washington will absolutely determine upon 1st July of the present year, and that without due legislation by Congress modifying or postponing that repeal, the Executive is not constitutionally competent to extend the reciprocal provision of the Treaty of Washington beyond the date fixed by the action of Congress. It follows that the reimposition of the duty on Canadian fish products entering the United States after that date cannot now be prevented. If under these circumstances American fishing vessels are permitted to use the territorial waters of the Dominion without molestation after the 1st of July without any understanding more specific or binding than one to the effect that the President is to bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at the next Session in December, and to recommend the appointment of an international commission for the purpose of considering and if possible arriving at a settlement of the entire fishing rights of the two Governments, a recommendation which may not be more successful than a somewhat similar recommendation made to Congress by the last President."

You will perceive here, Mr. Speaker, that they say the duty must be imposed, and all they give is a promise by the President that he will bring before Congress the subject of the appointment of a commission, which proposal may not be more successful than was a somewhat similar proposal made to Congress by the previous President. It goes on to say:

"It should be clearly understood that the Government of the Dominion has become a party to such an arrangement from a desire to remove as far as in its power every obstacle in the way of arriving at a lasting and mutually advantageous settlement between the two nations, and to maintain those neighborly relations which at present exist between them, and not as would appear to be suggested by a passage in Mr. Bayard's memorandum. In view of any present benefits or inconveniences accruing to Canada from the non-continuance of the present local traffic connected with this particular industry."

Then the Government point out clearly that we are to get nothing except a promise that the President will recommend a commission which they themselves say may not be more successful than the like recommendation made by the previous President—but it must be clearly understood that Canada is a party to the arrangement. If the Americans are willing to issue a commission in 1885, why were they not willing to issue one in 1884, when the proposition was supported by the then President, as it is understood the recommendation to Congress will be made by President Cleveland? The Government were in 1883 and in 1884 in a position to apply to Congress on this subject, for I do not think the political complexion of Congress has been changed since that time. The Democrats then had a majority in the House of Representatives and Republicans controlled the Senate, and they are in the same position to-day. December will be the earliest period at which the Message of the President can be submitted. When we find that the President of the United States was willing in 1883 to recommend the appointment of a commission, which must necessarily be of a joint character, it is obvious that our Government have done nothing whatever, and have therefore failed to do justice to those Provinces which are dependent on the fishing industry. It was only at the last minute that negotiations were entered upon. Although the Americans may attempt to belittle our fisheries and say that the advantages they give us in return are large, yet the suggestions thrown out by the late President and the succeeding President show the value of our fisheries—and it is obvious that they place a much higher value on our fisheries and upon the fishing industry than is placed on them by our own Government.

"6. Your Lordship will have observed that although Mr. Bayard in his memorandum invites the Government of Canada to consent to an agreement under which there is to be no enforcement of restrictive laws or regulations by the authorities of the Dominion against fishermen of the United States resorting to the territorial waters of Canada between 1st July and the close of the present fishing season, he does not offer any assurance that a similar forbearance will be exercised by the authorities of the United States in regard to Canadian fishermen who may have occasion to resort to the territorial waters of the United States. It may be the case that this omission is owing to the fact that in the United States as in Canada the action of the local authorities is to some extent independent of that of the Federal Government, and that Mr. Bayard therefore does not feel justified in offering to give on the part of his Government the same engagement as that which he invites from the Government of the Dominion in this respect. The telegram which I have the honor of addressing to Your Lordship on 17th inst. stated clearly the extent to which the Government of the Dominion felt itself justified in guaranteeing to American fishermen the immunity from interference for which Mr. Bayard has asked."

I call attention to this clause. It will be seen by the Treaty of Washington and by these articles which are abrogated by the notification served in July, 1883, that the advantages were reciprocal, that American vessels had a right to enter Canadian waters and Canadian vessels had a right to use American waters to fish if they thought proper. At the threshold of these negotiations an offer was made to throw over our fisheries to the American Government without securing a right to send Canadian fish into American markets. The despatches show that if the Americans refused to grant this boon, the Government would still be willing to grant them the right to fish in Canadian waters:

"7. A report upon the Provincial Acts of Parliament by which the procedure of the Maritime Provinces in regard to such matters is regulated, is in course of preparation by the Minister of Justice.

"8. It would, I think, be desirable in view of what I have stated above that no time should be lost in carrying out the exchange of notes proposed by Mr. Bayard for the purpose of informing the public of the nature of the provisional agreement which may be arrived at, and I believe that much satisfaction would be given to persons interested in the commerce of the Dominion if it could be made to appear upon the face of these notes that the agreement expressed in them had been arrived at under circumstances which afforded a prospect of the renewal of negotiations, the reciprocal development and extension of trade between the two countries."

Then this Government for the first time became alive to the importance of the question, and although it had not answered despatches sent by the Imperial Government, and although it had allowed the matter to remain in abeyance year after year, it urged in March that immediate action be taken, and it attempted to secure a promise of improved commercial relations. We will see how the suggestion in regard to commercial relations was treated by Mr. Bayard. This was the subject of a communication made to the American Government. Mr. West endeavored to get the Government of the United States to consent to the arrangements including something with regard to reciprocal trade relations. On 20th June Mr. West wrote to Mr. Bayard as follows:—

"MY DEAR MR. BAYARD,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your confidential note of yesterday's date concerning the proposed temporary arrangement respecting the fisheries, which I am authorised by Her Majesty's Government to negotiate with you on behalf of the Government of the Dominion of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, to be effected by an exchange of notes founded on your memorandum of 21st April."

You will recollect that this is the memorandum of Mr. Bayard to which I referred:

"The two confidential memoranda I handed to you on the 13th instant, contain as you assume, the acceptance by the Dominion and the British American coast Provinces, of the general features of your above mentioned memo. with the understanding expressed on this side, that the agreement has been arrived at under circumstances, affording prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America; a contingent understanding, to which, as you state, you can have no objection, as you regard it as covered by the terms of your memorandum of 21st April."

I should have called attention earlier to the despatch of Mr. Bayard to Mr. West of the 19th of June in which he says:

"I assume that the two confidential memoranda you handed to me on the 13th instant embraces the acceptance by the Dominion and the British American coast Provinces of the general feature of my memorandum of 21st April, concerning a temporary arrangement respecting the fisheries, with the understanding expressed on their side that an agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America."

"To such a contingent understanding I can have no objection. Indeed I regard it as covered by the statement in my memorandum of 21st May that the arrangement therein contemplated would be reached with the understanding that the President of the United States will bring the whole question of fisheries before Congress at its next Session in December, and recommend the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain should be respectively represented, which commission should be charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America."

Mr. West's communication continues:

"In authorising me to negotiate this agreement, Earl Granville states, as I have already had occasion to intimate to you, that it is a temporary one, and that its conclusion must not be held to prejudice any claim which may be advanced to more satisfactory equivalents by Colonial Governments, in the course of the negotiations for a more permanent settlement. Earl Granville further wishes me to tell you that Her Majesty's Government and the Colonial Government have consented to the arrangement solely as a matter of good will to the Government and people of the United States, and to avoid difficulties which might be raised by the termination of the fishery articles in the midst of the fishing season, and also that the acceptance of such a modus vivendi does not by any implication affect the value or the inshore fisheries by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland.

"I had occasion to remark to you that while the Colonial Governments were asked to guarantee immunity from interference to American vessels resorting to Canadian waters no such immunity is offered in your memo. to Canadian vessels resorting to American waters, but that the Dominion Government presume that the agreement in this respect would be mutual, as you accepted this view, it would I think be as well that mention should be made to this effect in the notes under the reservation as above indicated, in which I believe you acquiesce.

"I am prepared to accept the understanding on behalf of British North America and to exchange notes in the above sense."

Mr. Bayard writes:

"Undoubtedly it is our clear and mutual understanding that the arrangement now made is only temporary, and that it proceeds from the good will of our respective Governments, and solely to avoid all difficulties which might otherwise arise from the termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season."

He then goes on to state that the same immunity should be extended to British subjects and British vessels engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States as were granted to American subjects fishing in Canadian waters. On the 22nd of June he writes:

"In compliance with your verbal request of this morning, that I should restate part of my note to you of the 19th, I repeat that the arrangement whereby a modus vivendi on the fishing question has been reached, rests on the memoranda and correspondence exchanged; that your memorandum of the 13th instant expressed the understanding on your side that the agreement has been arrived at under the circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America; that I not only had no objection to such an understanding, but, in fact, regarded it as amply embraced in our proposal to recommend a commission to deal with the whole subject in the interest of good neighborhood and intercourse, and that the recommendation of any measures which the commission might deem necessary to attain those ends, would seem to fall within its province, and such recommendations could not fail to have attentive consideration. Having thus not only admitted the proviso of your memorandum in your own language, but gone further and pointed out that no limits would be set, so far as I was concerned, to the proposals to be brought forward in the suggested commission on behalf of either party, I do not see how it is possible for me to give any stronger assurance that the understanding has been reached under circumstances affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British America."

You will observe that while that is to be the understanding, he is very careful to not introduce in the exchange of notes, the words so urgently pressed on him by Mr. West, making clear that the intention was to carry out the arrangements not only with regard to the fisheries, but not, or at least doubtful, with regard to reciprocal trade relations. From this correspondence we apparently made the offer in the first instance, that we would allow the American fishermen in our waters without asking the slightest concession on their part, on the reason put forward in the despatch of the 26th of December, that it would enable our fishermen to go under cover of American fishermen so as to sell to American vessels and have them carried in free of duty. The point seems to be that this was out of consideration to the poor American fishermen. They would be allowed to continue through the season, because they had the belief that they would be allowed to do so until December, although their own Government knew that the treaty ceased in July, and they were fishing without law or license and were liable to seizure. To prevent this impression from being removed from their mind, our Government graciously conceded that point to the American Government. I find that by the American Fishery Bureau return for June, that there were 50 mackerel schooners out of 216 that went out fishing in Nova Scotian waters alone; and 289 out of 460 cod-fishers, fishing upon the banks, adjacent to British territory, upon the inshore fisheries of which they would be dependent for bait. In discussing this matter, I want to discuss it as briefly as possible, but I feel it my duty to my constituents and my Province and the Maritime Provinces generally, to bring this matter fairly before you, and I could show you that this matter was regarded by the American press in itself, as a one-sided operation. I would call attention to the remarks of one paper, which has taken a great interest in Canadian affairs. I refer to an article which appeared in the Boston Herald on the 19th of last month, giving a fair historical account with regard to this treaty and the different contentions of the English and American Governments, written, I believe, by an American now residing in Montreal, and also to an article in that paper of the 27th June:

"This benefit is bestowed practically without an equivalent in one part. It is true that under the agreement Canadian fishermen are to have the same right to fish along the coast and bays of the United States, that is accorded to American fishermen on the shores of Canada and Newfoundland but it hardly needs to be pointed out that this concession on our part is one of theoretical rather than practical value."

"The other advantage which Canadians may obtain is the opportunity of selling us bait and other supplies to those of our fishermen who desire to obtain these commodities, but this they could do if no extension of the treaty had been made and it can hardly be counted as an offset to the benefits we receive."

Again referring to the course pursued and evidences of good will, adds:

"We are sorry to add, it is a grant which if it had been made to English fishermen by an American Government would have called forth angry protests from a great many people of this country."

I charge upon the Government that by their delay in endeavoring to get through these negotiations, instead of being in a position when that Government asked for fair concessions, instead of being in a position to ask fair concessions, our fishermen are handicapped by the duty imposed on them in a way of which an illustration may be seen any day in the harbor of the city I represent—two cargoes of lumber, one going to the United States free of duty, and the other paying duty, which tells severely against New Brunswick trade. That, however, cannot be helped, as it is a treaty arrangement, under which we gave the navigation of the River St. John to the Americans, so that American lumber cut by American citizens is sent free into the United States, while Canadian lumber has to pay duty. Now the position in which we are placed is not by virtue of a treaty, but by what is, according to the Government's own despatches, a one-sided arrangement, under which Canadian fishermen trading with American ports are handicapped by a duty, whereas American fishermen, taking fish from the same waters, are allowed to take them in duty free. On this subject, the St. John Telegraph of the 7th of July had an article which says:

"We recently referred to the one-sided arrangement by which the Ottawa Government concedes the season's fishing in our waters to Americans, while the latter impose duties upon our fish products entering their markets. The organ of the Government here then said it was doubtful if the duties imposed in the States would be injurious to our fishermen! To this feeble attempt in defence of the jug-handled arrangement, a correspondent at Deer Island, gives the following reply as to its actual working:—

"The Sun says it is doubtful if duties imposed on our fish by the American Government will affect our fishermen injuriously. On Wednesday, July 1st, a Canadian fisherman took to Eastport a few pickled fish, was offered 75c. per barrel of 200 lbs.—the usual price this season—but was notified that if he landed the fish he must pay duty at the rate of 3c. per lb. He was affected badly. Under present regulations our people are not allowed to carry into Eastport herring for sardines without paying a duty of 3c. per lb, or about $5 per hoghead; but American boats, manned by Americans, can come here and buy and take in free of duty. This throws numbers of our people out of employment, several of whom have already declared their intention of being naturalised, so as to hold the privileges formerly enjoyed by them. Such are the facts."

"Another correspondent writing from Campobello, which is opposite Eastport, says:

"During the forty-five years that I have been residing in this place, the outlook never was so bad and discouraging for the fishing business as at the present time in this place. The unusual scarcity of all kinds of fish at this season, and the unprecedented low price, of all kinds, are some of the causes, but not all. What has been gleaned from the Montreal Gazette, of June 19th, to which you referred in your last issue, has left the impression here that the Americans will have the full privilege of our fishing grounds, and we will be virtually shut out of their markets by the high duties imposed on fish. The fishermen could patiently labor, and hope for a recovery from the general depression in their business, but this outcome of Tory rule they think is most too much to bear. It is reported here that one large boat was seized at Eastport, and also that a man was caught landing about one dollar's worth of fish at the same place, and had to pay one dollar and fifty cents in duties, and thus, after being legally fleeced he returned home minus fifty cents. The air is filled with vengeance against Macdonaldism, and the American fishermen. It is a great pity that any Government should lead its subjects into sheer ruin."

With regard to this industry, for the last 20 years some 17 or 18 sardine factories established in Eastport afforded a large trade to the fishermen of Passamaquoddy and to those engaged in fishing in the bay of the county which my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) represents; and these parties are obliged to pay 1/2 c. per pound on these fish, which virtually deprives them of a market entirely. Such is the position in which we are placed. Without discussing the arrangement, what I say is, that if any arrangement was made, it was the duty of the Government to have made attempts to secure it two years ago; it was not to be left until the legislative powers of both countries had ceased to act—until the Congress of the United States had risen, and the time had arrived when our own Legislature, though still in session, was supposed to have risen. The Government should not have allowed this matter to drift along, saying we will not make any concessions. When the hon. member from Queen's (Mr. Davies) this Session urged that the Government should take steps to negotiate with the American Government, the reply was made that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), had refused in 1878 to negotiate with the United States Government. But they continued to do nothing to the last moment, and it was shown by their own despatches and by the confidential memorandum from Mr. West, that the proposition came from the Canadian Government, and was a voluntary offer made to the American Government, without the slightest offer of concessions from the latter; and whatever concessions are granted are admitted by the Americans themselves to be of no practical benefit to us. Now, I turn to another phase of this matter: that is, the negotiations with Newfoundland. We are well aware—if the report is correct, and I have no doubt it is—that this year Sir Ambrose Shea was sent by the Newfoundland Government to Washington. Whether previous negotiations had taken place with Washington or not, does not appear; but the first thing we discover by the papers was that Newfoundland had imposed retaliatory duties. On the 18th of May the Acting Deputy Minister of Finance telegraphed to the Provincial Secretary of Newfoundland to ascertain if the Government there had taken any action with regard to differential duties against Canada. On the 19th of May the reply was that if Canada imposed duties on the produce of their fisheries an extra duty was imposed on pork, flour, butter, tobacco, kerosene oil, and corn meal from Canada—otherwise, all would remain as before. A copy of the Act passed by the Government of Newfoundland was sent to our Government on the 22nd of May, and was received by the Government here on the 1st of June. Matters were allowed to drift until the 26th of June, when the Colonial Secretary of Newfoundland telegraphed as follows:—

“May we assume fish and fish products will be duty free in Dominion after 1st July?”

Evidently feeling sure that this Government would take some action. The reply of the Minister of Customs, on the 30th of June, was as follows:—

“Fish will be dutiable on and after 1st July. Question of interchange of commodities with Newfoundland will be considered after Parliament rises.”

Apparently that did not satisfy the Newfoundland Government, and Sir Wm. Whiteway, on the 2nd of July, telegraphed to the Premier:

“Our Revenue Act last Session sent Deputy Minister of Finance; please reply to it; under it our Government having no alternative but collect extra duties on certain Canadian products. If you collect duties on our fish products, this operation will disturb trade relation in the Dominion. I would therefore urge necessity immediate action, and not deferring as proposed by Deputy Minister to Colonial Secretary. Our Government very anxious our trade relations with the Dominion should not be disturbed. Your deferring action will cause transfer trade to United States. One steamer from Montreal just arrived; another expected; delay therefore serious. If you propose admitting our fish duty free, please answer promptly that we may have power to act.”

We know then that a deputation visited Ottawa from Montreal composed of parties connected with the present Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What do you mean by that?

Mr. WELDON. I beg pardon; supporters of the present Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; some of them were the other way.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), the hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault), as well as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), were willing to forego their usual Sunday trip in order to assist the deputation; and on the 4th of July the Government, through the Minister of Customs, telegraphed to the Colonial Secretary of Newfoundland:

“Duties on fish suspended to allow time for negotiations. Please send commissioners for the purpose.”

Now, what I say is this: The people from Montreal do not consider that they make us pay 60 cents duty on flour in the Lower Provinces for the sake of Montreal, but when Newfoundland retaliates, when the shoe pinches in Newfoundland, the Newfoundlanders can send us fish free, so that the Montrealers may send them flour free. We, in the Maritime Provinces, have Newfoundland fish coming in free to compete with our fish, and in the United States we are handicapped by duties on our fish. All through this business there has been nothing but blundering. The opportunity for obtaining a fair and reasonable arrangement with the United States was allowed to slip by. From the disposition evinced by the late President of the United States, I believe he would have assisted in this matter equally well with the present President, and then there would have been opportunity to negotiate with the United States Cabinet, and have passed through Congress and our Parliament, if not a permanent, a temporary arrangement. There is another point to which I propose to refer but briefly, because it is a matter more of interest to Ontario than the Maritime Provinces. Article 30 of the Washington Treaty provides as follows:—

“It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in article XXXIII of this treaty, subjects of Her Britannic Majesty may carry in British vessels, without payment of duty, goods, wares or merchandise from one port or place within the territory of the United States, upon the St. Lawrence, the great lakes, and the rivers connecting the same, to another port or place within the territory of the United States as aforesaid; provided that a portion of such transportation is made through the Dominion of Canada by land and carriage and in bond, under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the United States.”

Citizens of the United States may, for the like period, carry in United States vessels merchandise in the like manner. To that article, also, the notice has put an end. It seems difficult to comprehend what that means. The Customs regulations of 1884 have been cancelled, and it is very difficult to know what that is. No doubt great fears are entertained that it might interfere with the ordinary transit through the United States. No doubt the time the matter was discussed in Congress it was evidently intended that the article relating to in transitu goods should remain unrepealed, but the question arises under the Customs regulations; and we find in the papers that the collector at Chicago refuses to clear out Canadian vessels. We find in to-days Montreal Herald a letter from Mr. Fairchild to the collector of Customs of Oswego, dated the 11th July:

“SIR,—Referring to your letter of the 8th instant, in regard to the internal effect of the circular of this Department of the 2nd instant, of which instructions were given to the Customs officers, in the matter of transportation of merchandise through Canada by routes part rail and part water, your attention is invited to the following statement of facts under article 29 of the Treaty of Washington: ‘Transportation by all railroads from one point in the United States to another through the Dominion of Canada, and from one point in Canada to another through the United States, is authorised, under article 30 of said treaty. Transportation through the territory of both Governments by routes partly by rail and partly by vessels on the great lakes and connecting waters is authorised. [See synopsis 2171.] By an Act approved 3rd March, 1883, Congress directed the discontinuance of the 30th article referred to from and after 1st July, 1885, and notice to that effect was promptly given Her Majesty’s Government through our Department of State immediately after the approval of the said Act. The circular of this Department of the 2nd instant simply directed the Customs officers on the northern frontier to continue shipments of merchandise passing through Canada under transit manifests between American ports, by routes part rail and part water, and instructed them to hereafter treat goods arriving at their ports by such routes as importations from foreign contiguous territory, that is to say, that such goods upon arrival should be entered. Of course, if merchandise so arriving is of domestic production, it will be admitted to free entry on presentation of proofs and in the manner prescribed by law and regulations. Merchandise arriving by all-rail routes will be treated as heretofore, the 29th article of the treaty not having been terminated. That portion of your letter relating to the use of the Welland Canal and incidental ports for the transportation of cargoes by means of the Welland Railway will be further considered by the Department.’”

I merely refer to this; but there is one thing they have paid a little attention to is the article of fish, and that is the giving to Americans the benefit of fishing in our waters without our receiving any corresponding benefit from the Americans; and while they have been doing this, this article regarding the transportation through Canadian and American territory has never been referred to or notice taken of it. I think the Government have been guilty of great dilatoriness in neglecting to attend to this matter. They were warned by the British Government in 1883, their attention was called to it in 1884, on the floor of the House, but they left the matter to the last moment. If the Government had said they had made every effort by negotiation, and had brought down correspondence to show they had made attempts to get that treaty renewed, which is of such great importance to the Maritime Provinces, and if they had made vigorous efforts to protect our fisheries, we would have had nothing to say, and the American fishermen, if inconvenienced, could only lay the blame at the door of their own Government; but the Government allowed matters to drift on in this way without doing anything. We have already seen that the great harvest lands of the west have been laid open to waste and desolation through the supineness of the Government; we now see the great harvest of the ocean being surrendered to the Americans. Great dissatisfaction exists in the Maritime Provinces with the conduct of the Government; but, so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, they are loyal. No standard of rebellion will ever be raised there; they are descendants of loyalists, and true to their country, but there is no doubt great dissatisfaction exists, and this course of the Government will tend to make the seeds of dissatisfaction deepen into discontent, and a desire to sever from the Union, and cause many to leave the home and flag under which they live, to seek in a foreign country for those privileges denied them in their own.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have been charged with a great many things, but I thought we might, at all events, get some confidence from the Opposition on this subject. On this question, at all events, we have been guilty of no laxity; on this question we have succeeded, almost hoping against hope, in getting the American Government to agree, in the first place, to have a joint committee to settle the fisheries questions, and then to go into negotiations for a reciprocity treaty. The hon. gentleman seems to suppose that we can do as we like, that we can choose the right time, and that, whenever we like to make advances to the American Government, they must yield, and that we are guilty of laches because we did not, in 1883, two years ago, go to the American Government with cap in hand and on bended knee and ask them to withdraw their resolutions. Now, the United States is a great nation. There are two branches of the Legislature, and, with the sanction of their President they came to a solemn decision—and they had a right to come to that decision—to give two years' notice to put an end to the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty. They had a right to do that. True, they did not give their reasons for doing it, but they did it. True, as the hon. gentleman says, Mr. Rice, a member in the Senate or House of Representatives, I do not know which, made a speech. Well, the hon. gentleman made a speech, but that is not a matter between the two nations. All the two nations could know was that the United States gave a notice that the fishery clauses were to be put an end to on the expiration of the two years. We could not help that. We were sorry for it. We would have preferred that they should have been continued, that they should fish in our waters and we should fish in theirs, that we should have free fish and free fishing, and that, at some convenient time, there should be another arbitration, to decide what were the equivalents to be paid to us for the superiority of our fisheries over theirs. But they gave their notice, and when were we to remonstrate? The hon. gentleman says we were too tardy. Were we to go to them the day after, or the week after, or the month after they gave the notice? Great nations are not to be treated in that way. It would have been only courting a repulse; it would have been only courting a snub, to use a familiar but effective word, for us to say: True, as a matter of national policy the executive and legislative powers have united in putting an end to the fishery articles; but we beg of you not to do so; we beg that you will not do so. We might expect the answer. But the hon. gentleman says that a favorable disposition was shown by President Arthur, and we might have, perhaps, commenced negotiations then. Well, President Arthur put in a paragraph, as President Grant had on a previous occasion put a paragraph into his Message, recommending to the consideration of Congress the question of a reciprocity treaty; but we know what was the result on both of these occasions. President Grant sent down a memorandum, which was settled through the intervention of Mr. Brown, who was appointed by the late Government and who battled energetically and ably in favor of it, and produced some able papers on the subject, but they contumeliously turned their back upon him and took no notice of the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They did not exactly turn their back upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They did nothing.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There were only three days left to the close of the Session, and they put it off to the next Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And in the next Session they did not take it up.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Exactly. President Arthur put in a paragraph which the hon. gentleman has quoted, saying that, as the fishery articles have ended, perhaps there might be an opportunity of arriving at reciprocal relations. That was not three days before Congress rose; that was at the opening of the Session; but no notice whatever was taken of it; not a speech was made on it; not a motion was made about it, either by the influence of the President or his Cabinet, or by any of the friends of the Cabinet or of those who were in favor of reciprocity; not a motion was made in any way to encourage reciprocity. They passed it by with contumelious silence. We had to accept the situation. We knew that we could live without reciprocity; we knew that we could not help the termination of the fishery articles; we knew that we would have to return, if the Americans so pleased, to the condition of things which existed between 1854 and 1871; we knew that we had stood it from 1854 to 1871, and that we could stand it again. There was no single day or hour or month in which the Government, with any prospect of success, could go to the United States and ask them: Will you alter your whole policy and allow the fishery treaty to be renewed; will you allow another arbitration to be taken, as to the superior value of our fisheries, in order to allow us another chance of getting five millions and a-half out of you; will you change your policy at our request, and leave things as they were before? It is too childish; such a course would be puerile, would be unworthy of any Government, would be unworthy of any Executive which has any respect for itself, and could have no result but certain failure. The Government may be pardoned for going very far indeed for the purpose of gaining a material advantage, but when the fact of going and beseeching and praying for it was the very way to defeat your object, there was no use in causelessly, uselessly and purposelessly abandoning the dignified position of saying: We had a treaty; we liked that treaty and would have liked to continue it; you have chosen to end it; good-bye; we can do without it. But I say it is a very great pity that the hon. gentleman has chosen to bring the matter up now. I must do him the justice to say that his speech is not, in my opinion, whatever that may be worth, harmful to the discussion of this matter with the United States, but it is a great danger to bring on a discussion of this kind, because in the discussion things may be said which may thwart in the future prospects of negotiations with the United States; speeches of individual members may be quoted, as the speech of Mr. Rice has been quoted, and they cannot know the comparative value of speeches here any more than we can know the comparative value of speeches made in Congress; and so statements made by any hon. member may thwart the chances of any negotiation with that Government.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Rice occupies a very important position—chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; but I remember when Mr. Sumner, a much more important man, was the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and yet, we met him on the Washington Treaty, and he was opposed to it from end to end, because he said that, if it were not carried, Canada must fall into the arms of the United States. It may be remembered that several questions were asked by hon. gentlemen opposite, as to when we were to bring down the papers on this subject, and that I stated from time to time that I was applying for leave to bring down some of the papers. I have applied for leave, and all I could get permission to bring down have been brought down. When I speak of asking permission, I mean permission to bring down papers which were international papers. There has been secret, unofficial correspondence between the two Governments, and we have had to get the consent of the American Government to some of the papers being brought down. I am, therefore, to a considerable degree, hampered in my freedom of statement, and in vindication of the course of the Government, by not getting that consent; but I have a general permission to state the general course of the negotiations. Now, Sir, the American Government had given notice that the treaty was to be ended. It would certainly have been childish and undignified to ask them to change their policy, unless we had a good reason to give them. Then the other question was, that of reciprocal trade relations, which, though not the same subject, might still be a cognate subject, and it was of considerable importance to Canada to mingle the two subjects, and try, by using one as a lever, to introduce the other. Now as regards an application to the late Government on the fishery question, any man who knows anything about American politics must know how futile that would have been. True, President Arthur, as a mere flourish, put a sentence in his Message, which was not regarded, but we knew perfectly well that Mr. Blaine, who, as Secretary of State, at that time covered the Foreign Affairs of the United States, was strongly opposed to any concession about the fisheries.

Mr. MILLS. Blaine went out on Garfield's death.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not immediately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Blaine was a candidate for the Presidency; he was supported by the whole Republican party; Mr. Blaine was the nominee of the President, as far as the President can have a nominee, and Mr. Blaine was the head and front of the protectionist party in the United States, and he was hoping and trusting to get his election by keeping up protection in the United States, and by keeping out the products of all the world, Canada excluded, from the American market. Not only that, Sir, but when Mr. Frelinghuysen was Secretary of State—Mr. Frelinghuysen was a gentleman for whom I had a great respect when he was alive, and I have a great respect for his memory now, because I had the honor of considering him one of my best friends. But he was a protectionist to the utmost extent; he was resolved to keep the United States trade for the United States people; and, Sir, in the spring or summer of 1884 he had, in answer to a deputation from the Gloucester fishermen, solemnly declared that the Government of the United States would adhere to the termination of the treaty, and that under no circumstances would that treaty be renewed. That statement was known, and we knew that it was of no use to go to the United States Government, or to the United States Congress, and ask them either to withdraw the cancellation of the treaty, or to enter into negotiations for a reciprocal treaty; it was useless, it was folly, it was humiliation, without even the reward that humiliation sometimes has, of getting "the dirty shilling." We could not get the shilling, and we might have the humiliation. The question, therefore, stood in that way. But as it occurred to us last autumn that we might, perhaps, incidentally, insert a wedge, and during the administration of President Arthur and the administration of the Foreign Affairs by Mr. Frelinghuysen—I think I am at liberty to say this: Mr. Frelinghuysen is dead, and we cannot get his consent, of course, to the correspondence, but I am at liberty to state the general results. We knew perfectly well that if we stated that we wanted the fisheries treaty to be renewed, that we wanted a treaty of commercial reciprocity, that there was no use in trying; but it occurred to us that we might put the matter to that Government—not the present Government of the United States, but to that Government—we might say to them: Well, the treaty will end 1st July, 1885; that is, in the middle of the fishing season. Your men will be fitting out vessels, and we cannot expect that those rude fishermen may know everything, and may know when the treaty ends. They are fitting up their vessels, and if they are in our waters up to the 1st of July, it will cause them great irritation if their vessels are seized on the 2nd day of July. We took that as a means of opening the subject. We did it, I think, in a diplomatic way, so as not to ensure either a refusal on the part of the Americans or to cause any embarrassment on either side. Unofficial communications were conveyed through Mr. West, and he asked Mr. Frelinghuysen whether there was any use in our going into the subject, in our asking for a reconsideration of the fishery matters—whether there was any use in making an official proposition, or any use in talking about reciprocity arrangements. The general result was that Mr. Frelinghuysen stated that it was impossible, and that all he could do, or that the Government of the United States could do, was, just prior to the 1st of July, to issue a proclamation, warning the American fishermen to avoid coming into our waters. We accepted that answer, because we knew from the previous statements of Mr. Frelinghuysen that there was little or no use in entering into negotiations. I think the hon. gentleman quoted from the Governor General's statement in his despatch, that perhaps we would have a better chance under the incoming Government, who have four years before them, rather than the outgoing Government, in going into negotiations with them. The moment that we knew a new Government was formed, we set to work. The British Ambassador drew the attention to it of Mr. Bayard, the present Secretary of State, and, of course, the Minister who is in charge of the Foreign Relations of the American Government—we called his attention to the previous unofficial correspondence with Mr. Frelinghuysen, and from that it grew by degrees from a quite confidential and unofficial series of letters—all of which, of course, we saw here, and all of which we weighed—until it arrived at the unexpectedly happy result we now find in these letters, in which, so far as the present Government of the United States is concerned, we have now the expression of their desire, in the first place, to deal with the fishery question, and, in the second place, to enter upon the great subject of the extension and development of trade between the two countries. Sir, at the time that we commenced these negotiations I never thought we would have got so far; I never really thought we would have got the Americans to take a step towards what we all reasonably desired—although we did not pray for it; we will not pray for it; we will not say it is essential to our prosperity—but I say we got the Government of the United States to agree, as the papers show, to a commission being issued, under which the fishery question can be dealt with; and, with the question of our fisheries, the wider question of the development of international trade will be gone into. Now, Mr. Speaker, we were quite well aware of the difficulties of the question; they are candidly stated in these papers. We stated that we knew it would look like a one-sided bargain. We knew perfectly well that there are certain interests that will feel that it is so, and that they are to some extent prejudiced. But our first proposition was, as the papers disclosed, that inasmuch as the treaty ended on 1st July, when the fishing season had, for some time, commenced, and it was in active prosecution, we suggested—and remember, we did not suggest it to the present Government only, but it was a suggestion to the last Government as well—that, for mutual convenience and to mark our neighborly feelings, so far as we, in Canada, were concerned, we would agree that the term should be extended from 1st July. That was refused by the late Government, but the offer was repeated by us. The hon. gentleman has said, in his speech, that we put it on the ground that it would be a great convenience to the poor, honest, innocent American fishermen, instead of for the convenience of our own fishermen. It is quite true we put it on that ground. If we go to the United States for the purpose of trying to make an arrangement, we should scarcely hope them to agree to our proposition, if we pleaded that it was to suit the convenience of our fishermen. We put it on the ground that it would greatly meet the convenience of their fisherman if they were allowed to fish during the remainder of the season, from 1st July to 1st November or 1st December, as the case might be. That would be the course pursued by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), if he were a negotiator, instead of a member trying to make a point against the Administration, and forgetting the interest of his own Province and of the whole Dominion. We put it that the American fishermen had been fishing in our waters for twelve long years, that they had had the value of our fisheries from the beginning of the season, and would be fishing there on 30th June, and on 1st July all their vessels would be seized. It was a reasonable ground on which to approach the United States. Does the hon. gentleman want to have a treaty with the United States, or does he prefer to make a flourish before the fishermen of his Province, or to make, perhaps, a speech to the fishermen in the neighborhood of St. John, when he goes down there at the end of the season. Does he prefer the interests of his Province to the interests of the Dominion—those interests which are now trembling in the balance—all those great interests which may affect the whole Dominion. Why, I believe we were told a short time ago that the trade of St. John would be ruined unless certain things were done, thus killing our chances, so far as the people of St. John could kill them, with the United States. The hon. gentleman has not gone so far, but his remarks lead in the same direction. It is of very great importance that the Government of Canada should be sustained in their action by this House, by the representatives of the people, in their honest, straightforward and earnest attempt, which has gone further towards success in negotiations than any attempt since 1873, and gone further towards a return to reciprocity and reciprocal relations. This is a question which affects the whole Dominion. We have done a good deal, I must say, for the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, for some of them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have done a great deal for some of them—I think for all of them.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not for the fishermen of New Brunswick.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is New Brunswick mad, as he should be. He persistently fights the battle of New Brunswick, and no one, perhaps, fights it more energetically and earnestly and thoroughly than that hon. gentleman. What have we given up? We have simply stated that so far as the Canadian Government is concerned they would not send a fleet down to fight the American fishermen, that they would not have a recurrence of the trials and convictions and irritations that were caused before the Treaty of Washington, if they could avoid it. The Canadian fishermen, from all I can learn, will be quite willing to have a renewal of the treaty; they will be quite willing, if they had their fish admitted free into the United States market, to allow American vessels to fish in Canadian waters. It is not because the American vessels are really driving them off their grounds, or really depriving them of their catch of fish, or really diminishing the catch every year, that they offer opposition. They do not oppose it on that ground, or otherwise we would not attempt to renew the treaty by which the Americans would continue to go upon the Canadian fishing ground. They argue as reasonable men: Why should the Americans be allowed to come and fish in our waters when our fish are excluded from the American market? But they do not object, and would not object to the Americans coming within the three mile limit, if Canadian fish were admitted free into Boston, Portland and other American markets. This shows that their catch is not diminished in quantity, but that they have not access to the American markets. I admit the whole of the force of that argument. But our answer would be this: That it is of great consequence to you, the fishermen of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec to get your fish into the American market, duty free; that that market should be open, and in order to get that promise from the United States Government, in order to obtain an engagement that they would enter into negotiations, is it not worth while to allow the American vessels to come into our waters, as they have done for 12 years, and fish from 1st July to 30th November, or whatever may be the close of the season? That is the whole sacrifice made. The American vessels will come into our waters as they do now. There will be no more sacrifice of Canadian interests by American vessels after 1st July than there was before that date; they will be in the same position in our waters as they have been for the last 12 years. We acknowledge that it is pretty hard upon you, the Canadian fishermen; but if you want the benefit of the American market, is it not worth while to give the Americans the use of our waters for three months longer, and then sit down with their representatives and endeavor to settle the whole fishery question, and afterwards have a treaty, or endeavor to negotiate a treaty, to open the markets of the two countries to the products of each? That is the way we put the matter to the Canadian fishermen. It is natural they should grumble; but is it not better that something of this kind should be done, rather than that Canadian fish should be kept for all time to come out of the American market? They will have to pay duties for all time on their catch, and is it not worth while to do that much, with the good chances and prospects we have of having some kind of satisfactory negotiation with the United States, not only on the fishing question, or questions which affect fishermen, but on all the products of the country. We cannot expect, as the hon. member for North Norfolk said, and we do not expect, that in any reciprocity treaty there will be an exact return to the lines of the treaty of 1854, but I believe there will be, and that there may be, unless it is thwarted by our own ambitions, or by violent faction, an arrangement by which there will be reciprocal trade in very many articles, the growth of the Provinces on the one hand, and of the United States on the other. I have no hesitation in admitting that it is on the paper, as the hon. gentleman stated, a one-sided arrangement, because the illustrious individual at the head of this Government has put it plainly in his despatch, that we know and feel it is a one-sided arrangement. But it was worth while making this concession for the great purpose I have mentioned, and I am sure any man in this House, who will rise above party, above mere party feeling, and who desires to have extended negotiations with the United States, desires to have free fish, free fishing and a free interchange of products, so far as the two nations can agree—every man will feel that the Government have been acting prudently, wisely and in the interests of the country—that they have taken the proper time, at the proper moment, and just when there was a chance of succeeding. There was no chance of succeeding before, under the late Government, as I have explained. We have now some chance of succeeding, and is it not worth while to make this paltry concession, by which nobody suffers, because I have no hesitation in saying that the fishermen do not suffer, for if they did they would have complained for the last twelve years that the Americans fished in our waters. If we put our fleet on there, we might keep the Americans out, and I have no hesitation in saying that we will defend our fishing rights on our coasts if these negotiations fail. But it is worth while to suspend those strict rights when we have such a great prospect of succeeding. The hon. gentleman alludes to the 30th clause. The American Government have simply decided not to continue that privilege, and it will, of course, affect one or two places in Ontario. It was granted in a spirit of kindness more than anything else, in the Washington Treaty, and they have come to the conclusion that it shall come to an end. We cannot help that, and it would be unworthy to cry about it. They will not yield upon that point. The Americans think that there ought not to have been, originally, such a concession made by the Washington Treaty. They think it hurts their trade, and it certainly does affect their coasting laws which are very rigid and stringent, and I think very unjust. If we could coax them to give up their coasting laws, we would do so, but they have refused. This provision was inserted in the treaty to oblige certain interests, and, I may say, inserted on the strong personal pressure of myself, though the Americans saw that there was no gain by it. They have chosen to close that arrangement, and no remonstrances of ours will help it, although it interrupts the trade of some one or two lines on our upper waters, and it is unfortunate in that respect. Then, as to Newfoundland, I believe it is not necessary to enter into a long discussion of that subject. In Newfoundland they have behaved as you see—we have no right to speak so as to stir up any feeling—but they have behaved, I will say, in an eccentric manner. We have told them, as the House knows, that the House has already put duties on fish coming into our market, and Newfoundland fish among the rest. They have duties on our articles, but they say we should not put duties on theirs, because, although they put duties on ours, the trade from Canada to Newfoundland is very large, while the shipments from Newfoundland to Canada are very small. They say they cannot afford to give up their Customs revenue, and therefore they hope you will not reciprocate with regard to those duties. The hon. gentleman has discoursed about the deputation that came from Montreal. Well, I met that deputation and spoke to them, and the spokesman of that deputation was one of the strongest opponents the Government happen to have in that illustrious city. But there are certain shipments made to St. John's, Newfoundland, from Montreal. Vessels had arrived there with large cargoes, and all would have had to come back at considerable loss. And our statement to Newfoundland was just this: if we suspend it for a moment, it will have the effect of preventing these people from losing a great sum of money; but if we do that, you will have to send a commissioner to deal with that subject, and if they do not deal with it satisfactorily, we will impose the duties strictly and sternly. We were merely giving a sprat to catch a mackerel; those two or three cargoes can go through without loss to our Canadian people, but you must send a commissioner, in order to come to such arrangements, or we will enforce the law. That is simply the case of the Government, and I appeal to the common sense and patriotism of both sides if, under my explanation—hampered, as it is, by my inability to bring down the whole correspondence—I say I shall be disappointed if both sides of the House do not say that whatever may have been the shortcomings of the Government elsewhere, they have acted, not only with earnestness and speed, but with considerable diplomatic skill, in bringing the matter into the position in which it now stands.

Mr. MILLS. Before the resolution is put, I wish to make a few observations on the question before the House. The First Minister says that he expected the confidence of the Opposition, as upon this question he prided himself on his great skill and success in conducting the negotiations and the correspondence which has taken place with regard to the matter. Well, it does not seem to me that the correspondence indicates any great skill or industry, or any remarkable judgment on the part of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, in dealing with this question. We find from the correspondence that the intention of the American Government was brought immediately under the attention of the Administration. We find that Mr. Fry introduced, in the Senate of the United States, a resolution, with a view of repealing certain articles in the Washington Treaty, as early as the 10th January, 1883; and that immediately after, on the 16th January, the English Ambassador at Washington enclosed a copy of that resolution to the administrator of the Canadian Government. After the resolution was adopted a copy was sent to the Governor General of Canada, and the Governor General communicated with the Secretary of the Colonies, informing him of the despatch and its enclosure, which he had received from the English Ambassador at Washington. Lord Derby called the attention of the Canadian Government to the subject, and asked for an early communication; and it will be observed that the American Minister in England noticed the fact that the Earl of Granville had made no suggestion with reference to the subject of the fisheries and the abrogation of those articles of the Treaty of Washington; and the reason the Earl of Granville took no steps towards a renewal of the negotiations is clear from his communication to the Governor General of Canada. He was anxious to be fully informed of the intentions and views of the Canadian Government on this subject, before any negotiations were opened with the American Government. The reason the American Government proposed the abrogation of those particular articles was sufficiently indicated by Mr. Rice's speech. Mr. Rice is the chairman of the committee on foreign relations; as such he, to some extent, occupies the position of Minister of Foreign Affairs; the views which he expressed are to be taken as the views of the committee, and he there indicated his opinion that the fisheries of Canada were not worth to the United States the amount they were called upon to pay under the settlement of the Halifax commission, and notice was given for the termination of those treaty provisions, with the view of getting rid of the settlement effected by the Halifax commission, and opening the whole subject again. Now, the hon. Minister says that the views expressed by Mr. Rice are of no consequence. I think they are of very great consequence; they show us the motive which impelled the committee on foreign relations to bring this matter before Congress, and the motive which actuated Congress in deciding for an abrogation of these particular provisions of the treaty. There can be no doubt, then, that the Canadian Government were early informed of the views and intentions of the American Government, and that they were informed, too, by the Colonial Secretary, that it was desirable that they should communicate at an early period to him their views on this subject. If the Colonial Secretary had entertained the views suggested by the Prime Minister, that it was beneath the dignity of Canada to open negotiations with the view of securing a renewal of those fishery regulations, or the establishment of others which would be satisfactory to the two countries, he would not have made the communication he did; but when he informed the Canadian Government that they should avail themselves of the two years that would elapse after the notice was given, for the purpose of renewing the negotiations and re-establishing treaty regulations between the two Governments, it is clear he saw nothing beneath the dignity of the Canadian, or the English Government either, for that matter, in taking initiatory steps for the purpose of renewing those negotiations. And, after all the hon. gentleman said, it is plain to everyone who has read this correspondence and to everyone who has listened to the hon. gentleman that he, in effect, did take the initiative in renewing the negotiations and in abandoning the rights of the Canadian fisheries to the Americans for the time being, for the sake of a promise that at some future period the Government of the United States would be prepared to agree to the appointment of a commission. Now, I would like the hon. gentleman to tell us in what respect we are in a better position now than we were, or would have been if the hon. gentleman had taken action upon the suggestion contained in the Message of President Arthur. That Message did not, as the hon. gentleman said, suggest a treaty of reciprocity, or negotiations for a treaty of reciprocity; it suggested the appointment of a commission:

"I suggest that Congress create a commission to consider the general question of our rights in the fisheries, and the means of opening to our citizens, under just and enduring conditions, the richly stocked fishing waters and sealing grounds of British North America."

That was what was suggested by President Arthur, and I would like to know whether President Cleveland or Mr. Bayard has done anything more. Is the hon. gentleman in any better position at this moment, after the negotiations he has had, than he would have been if he had accepted the invitation which is indirectly given by President Arthur in his Message to Congress? The hon. gentleman says: It is true President Arthur made a suggestion, but what guarantee had we that Congress would act on that suggestion? What guarantee has the hon. gentleman, at the present moment? Not any. Then he is in no better position. The hon. gentleman says that the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) refused to renew certain negotiations, with reference to the Treaty of Washington, in connection with the reciprocity treaty negotiated by Mr. Brown.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said nothing of that.

Mr. MILLS. I certainly understood the hon. gentleman to say so. At all events, when the subject was under discussion, a few days ago, he gave as a reason, if not to-day, that there was the same Congress, that there was no change. But the Congress under President Arthur was not the one that was in office when Mr. Brown negotiated his reciprocity treaty. On the contrary, we might fairly believe that that Congress might take a more favorable view of the matter; at all events, when the President made the suggestion, there was no impropriety or want of dignity in assuming that it was at least practicable to enter into negotiations to secure a fair understanding, which the hon. gentleman says he is going to do at this moment. I want to know if the chances are any more favorable. There is a Democratic Administration, which is, perhaps, ready to make freer trade relations with this country; but there is a Senate which is in less accord with the President than it was with President Arthur; and the hon. gentleman, according to his own statement, does not stand in a whit better position to-day than he did two years ago; he has no better chances of succeeding to-day than he had then; and if it was undignified to have made the offer two years ago, it is equally undignified at the present moment. But the question whether the hon. gentleman could or could not succeed is not the question which is to govern the consideration of this matter. The hon. gentleman might fairly assume that trade relations between the two countries, which are mutually advantageous to each, are likely to be established. The statement of President Arthur shows that the American Government do, after all, attach more importance to the fisheries of Canada than the hon. gentleman says the fishermen of Canada do. He says it is possible something may be said here that may interfere with our chances of success. What could more tend to damage the chances of successful negotiation in this matter than the declaration made by the hon. gentleman himself? He has told us that our fishermen would be quite satisfied to allow the Americans the free use of our fisheries, on condition that they were allowed free access to the American market.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that, but I said they would be willing for the next six months.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman did not qualify his statement when he made it. As I understood him, and I will repeat it; and if he says I am incorrect, I will accept his correction. I understood him to say, and my hon. friends around me understood him to say, that our fishermen would be quite ready to acquiesce in an arrangement with the United States that would admit the Americans to the use of Canadian fisheries, on condition that Canadians were admitted to the American market with their fish. I ask, what is the effect of that statement upon these negotiations? What chance has he to receive any indemnity for the use of our fisheries after a declaration of that sort? He, himself, it is clear from his statement, does not expect to succeed in obtaining compensation, or he never would have made a declaration of that kind. There is damage done to our case, if our fisheries are represented of so little value in the estimation of the people of both countries, as they are represented to be in the declaration of the hon. gentleman. There has been no declaration made on this side that is calculated so seriously to interfere with our claim for compensation as the statement of the First Minister to-day. The hon. gentleman admits the arrangement is a one-sided arrangement. Why, the declaration of Mr. Bayard makes that point clear. He says it is not competent for the Executive of the United States to alter the Customs laws, by admitting Canadian fish into the American market. The hon. gentleman ought to have known that. I venture to say the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) knew it, and many other members know enough about the American system of government to know that that is the case. Why did not the hon. gentleman press negotiations upon this question before Congress rose, while it was still in the power of Congress to deal with the question? He knows it was open to Congress to propose that this treaty should terminate in December instead of July. It was the business of Congress to look after the interest of the fishermen of the United States, and say whether they would repeal or put an end to the treaty during the fishing season. If any inconvenience resulted to the American fishermen from this action, they could only hold the American Government responsible. Why did the hon. gentleman show this special interest for the fishermen of the United States and not show corresponding interest in behalf of our fishermen, by seeing that our fishermen were admitted to the American market? The interests of the American fishermen were the special concern of the American Government. What specially concerned the Government of Canada was the protection of the fishermen of Canada, to see that no privileges were granted to the fishermen of the United States to which they were not entitled by law, without corresponding privileges being conceded to the Canadians. How do the accounts stand? According to the decision of the Commission at Halifax, the admission of Canadian fish free to the American market is not an advantage sufficient to compensate Canada for permitting American fishermen to fish in our waters, and for that reason the Canadians obtained compensation. If the hon. gentleman had secured free admission of our fish into the American market for the remainder of the season, he would be accepting less, according to the decision of the Halifax commission, than the Americans were receiving. But the hon. gentleman obtained nothing and conceded everything. He made the concession, and made it at a time when it was out of the power of the American Government to concede anything in return. He made a statement not borne out by the facts; he intimated that the Government knew, from correspondence with the United States and from the action of the American Secretary of State, that there was no chance of success in making this arrangement. If that were so, why did he send the despatch of the 23rd December last, asking the British Minister at Washington what chance there was of succeeding. The reply to that despatch is not brought down; the information contained in it is not given us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot get it.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says he cannot get it, but the despatch is there, and it is inconsistent with the hon. gentleman's statement—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot help that.

Mr. MILLS. There it is. The despatch shows that the Government of Canada, at that time, did not know—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was in the country or not at that time. The despatch asks the British Minister at Washington what chance there was for successful negotiation being carried out. If he knew there was no chance, it was not necessary to send that despatch.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The 23rd September the new Government had come in.

Mr. MILLS. It came in in March.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But the elections were just over.

Mr. MILLS. It was not of the new Government the hon. gentleman was enquiring. He was enquiring with reference to the chances with the old Government and not with the new, and the answer is not brought down. We do not know what that answer is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; we do know.

Mr. MILLS. I say that the hon. gentleman was negligent of his duty; that he did not do what, in the public interest, he should have done; that in this matter he delayed, from day to day, just as he did in regard to the correction of abuses and grievances in the North-West Territories, and that when it was too late he was ready to come to an understanding. It was due to public interests that an attempt should have been made earlier, and if he failed in this attempt the wrong would lie at the door of the President of the United States, and his advisers and Congress, and not at the door of the Canadian Administration. This matter has been considered of sufficient consequence to lead to treaty stipulations twice between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States, and there would have been nothing undignified on the part of the Government of Canada in enquiring whether the Government of the United States were prepared to negotiate another treaty; and especially after the declaration of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, we should have asked the American Government what it was they desired. There was a declaration of the President of the United States that that was the proper way of settling the question. That is clearly set out in President Arthur's Message. Why, then, did not the hon. gentleman seize the opportunity for opening negotiation, with a view of coming to an understanding? He knows that he is not in a better position to-day than he was in then; he knows that if the Senate of the United States was Republican it is Republican to-day. If, because it was Republican, he could not succeed then, what chances has he to succeed now? And he has made this concession for the purpose of putting himself exactly in the position he would have been in if he had undertaken these negotiations two years ago. What have we in prospect now more than we would have had two years ago? What has the hon. gentleman got by all these skilful negotiations, upon which he prides himself so much? What has he secured? A promise that, as far as the President is concerned, he is ready to appoint a commission. The hon. gentleman was told, two years ago, by President Arthur, that he was ready to do the same thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I was not.

Mr. MILLS. He said so in his Message.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He did not tell us so.

Mr. MILLS. He told all the world, and the hon. gentleman, being a man of the world, received the information, as well as the rest of the world, and the English Government communicated the information officially to the hon. gentleman, and urged prompt action and yet he took no action, he made no reply, as far as I can see, to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. My hon. friend says he did it no more than if the Colonial Secretary had been a half-breed. So it would seem. It seems to be his practice to pass over in silence the communications he receives on the most important public business. The hon. gentleman owed it to the people of this country and to the fishermen of this country that he should seek to come to an understanding with the Government of the United States upon a question seriously affecting the interests of the fishermen of the two countries. It was not less his duty than it was the duty of the Government of the United States. Surely the hon. gentleman will admit, at all events, that the Halifax fishery commission awarded fair compensation from the United States. He knows that the United States believed that the Canadian Government received more than the fisheries were worth. He knows that they terminated the fisheries clauses on that account. The hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Frelinghuysen, in his communication to the English Ambassador, suggested that the United States Government expected a communication from the English Government as to their views upon these articles of the treaty which were about to be terminated, and the Secretary of the Treasury asked the hon. gentleman for his views, in order that the English Government might take the initiative, and yet the hon. gentleman did not communicate with him; and it was not until he was again and again pressed that any action was taken in the matter. Then the hon. gentleman says, in regard to the 30th article, that the American Government had made up their mind to repeal that article; upon that subject they would not yield, and that it was useless to press the subject upon their consideration. I do not think so. I think the interests of our trade, the interests of our shipping, which will be seriously affected by the abrogation, made it the duty of the hon. gentleman to do what was in his power to secure the renewal of the provisions in the treaty, and of those regulations of the United States Executive which were even broader than the treaty itself. We know that the hon. gentleman has paid so little attention to the 30th article that, when he communicated the effect of it to us the other day, he gave us information which was altogether misleading. The statement made by the hon. gentleman is not in accordance with the action of the American Government. That affects, not merely the short line of railway between one extremity of the Welland Canal and the other, but it affects the transit trade across the Province of Ontario. The vessels that are loaded with wheat at Duluth and carried it to Sarnia, or that were loaded at Chicago or Milwaukee and carried it to Sarnia, or Maitland, or Collingwood, for the purpose of having it re-shipped at some lake ports to the eastward, are now excluded from that trade, and when we look at the treaty in this particular, we find it is not as broad as the commercial regulations of the United States, because the treaty only provides for the carrying of American products from one American port to another, in vessels, with an intermediate transit over some Canadian railway or through Canada; whereas the regulations made by the Executive of the United States not only provided for that case, but for a case of this sort, that flour and grain, and so on, shipped in the west, landed at some Canadian port, carried by Canadian railways to Ogdensburg or to the Eastern States, was also admitted to be carried in part, so far as carried at all, in Canadian vessels. Under the Treaty of Washington only those cases were dealt with where the article was carried at each extremity in a vessel, which was practically an interference with the coasting trade, but the regulations made by the Executive also permitted goods that were intended for the various ports in the United States, and that were taken on board some Canadian railway, to be carried for the remainder of the way through Canada, and through a portion of the United States, by railway. Now, the repeal of those trade regulations not only repeals the 30th article of the Washington Treaty, but also those other regulations which provided for these cases. That is a very serious matter. Take, for instance, the Beatty line of steamers. They have four large steamships engaged in this trade during the summer season. They are all thrown out of employment. So with regard to our shipping on the lakes; so with regard to those ships which carry grain and flour to Maitland or Collingwood, to be carried to Toronto, and put on vessels for the port of Oswego. The trade on the lakes is most seriously affected by the repeal of this article, but it is still further affected by the repeal of these Executive regulations relating to the trade; and yet the hon. gentleman, after two years' notice of the intention of the American Government to terminate these provisions, has not taken, in all that time, the first step for the purpose of establishing new and satisfactory trade relations with the people of the United States. I think the hon. gentleman has not succeeded, as he declared he had, in adopting a course that was or is likely to be to the general advantage of this country.

Mr. McLELAN. I judge that the hon. gentleman does not so much disapprove of the present position of affairs as complain that action was not taken earlier. We were in this position: We had been the last to send a representative for the purpose of negotiating a reciprocity treaty in 1875; we had also declared publicly by our Statute Book that we were ready to negotiate with the United States for reciprocal trade whenever that country saw fit to negotiate with us; but we were in a different position. In 1883, when notice of the termination of this treaty was given, we did not send a delegate, we did not officially go to the United States Government, we did not beg for a renewal of that treaty, but informally, and through the Governor General of that day, Lord Lorne, we suggested to the American Government that a commission should be appointed, consisting of representatives of both Governments, to visit the whole coast of British America and of the United States, and to consider the question of the fisheries, and obtain such information as we thought would be necessary, with a view to adopting a new treaty. That suggestion was made to the American Government in 1883 through Lord Lorne—informally, not officially. To that suggestion we had no response. No information, either official or informal, was given to us, that they would respond to that suggestion, or that they would join us in a commission to obtain such information as was desirable to have in negotiations for the renewal of a treaty. Having met us in that way, having made no response, I think we would have been too much in a position of suppliants and beggars if we had again moved without any intimation from them. When we approached the termination of the treaty a suggestion was made which has resulted in the correspondence which has been submitted to the House. I do not understand that the hon. gentleman complains of the action taken, but only that we did not take it early enough. Both the hon. gentlemen who have spoken made that their ground of complaint; and if they will consider that in 1883 we did all that we properly could do in order to open negotiations on the question, preliminary to making a treaty, I think then they will agree that we have done all we honorably could to bring about negotiations in respect to the fisheries and reciprocal trade between the two countries.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not feel like continuing the discussion upon this subject, for the reason that, as it is now before the American Government, I think it is unwise to go into it at any great length, and for that reason, also, I rather deprecate the action of my hon. friend from the county of St. John (Mr. Weldon), in raising the question at this time. But I have no doubt that hon. gentleman was inspired by a sense of the duty that he owed to his constituents, and in a matter of so much importance to the people of the Maritime Provinces that is certainly, to my mind, an excuse for ventilating it at this time, although I think the continuance of this discussion, and even the discussion, so far as it is gone, cannot be otherwise than detrimental to the future settlement of the fisheries. Sir, there have been two very grave statements made, one by the right hon. Premier and the other by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), which I think ought not to have been made in this discussion, looking at what is ahead of us. My hon. friend from Bothwell stated, if I understood him distinctly, that the Halifax award of $5,500,000 was far beyond the value of the Canadian fisheries.

Mr. MILLS. No; I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. MITCHELL. What did you say about it?

Mr. MILLS. I said the American Government assumed that the amount was beyond the value of the fisheries, and that was the reason why they terminated the treaty. I expressed no opinion as to their value.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad I misunderstood my hon. friend, because it would be of the last importance to us that, either with regard to the value of our own fisheries or with regard to the facilities which we may get, in respect to trade, that matter should not be discussed until it is taken up by the two Governments. Our worthy friend the Premier made a statement which I regretted, if I understood him correctly. I understood him to say something to this effect: That, inasmuch as the Americans were admitted to fish in our waters before the treaty expired, and as we took the fish of our fishermen into American markets free, it was no hardship to us to allow the Americans to continue to fish in our waters, and that it would be sufficient compensation to our fishermen in the future to get their fish free into the United States markets.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; that was not my argument. My argument was what the fishermen would think about it. Of course, the Dominion of Canada considers that the fisheries are much more valuable, but the fishermen on the coast do not care so much about that, about having a share in the five millions and a-half, or the one million, or whatever they may get. What they think of chiefly is to get their fish free into the American markets.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad I misunderstood my hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the hon. gentleman went so far as to state that they would be perfectly satisfied.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I did not. You did not understand the meaning of my argument.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It would be better to clothe the argument in such language as that it may not be misunderstood.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I tried to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I drew attention to these two points for the purpose of having clear explanations, so that no misapprehension shall go abroad as to what the opinions are in this Parliament; because I think it would be a matter of deep regret if a misapprehension went abroad from the statement made by the Premier, such as I understood him to mean. I am glad to find that he does not think the admission of our fish into the United States is a fair compensation for the free use of our fisheries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Sir, in considering the imposition of a duty upon the importation of our fish into the American markets, it is becoming a great question who pays the duty. True it is, that, in the first instance, the question affects the fishermen and the merchants who forward the fish, but it is a question for the consideration of this House, as well as for the Americans themselves, what class of people these duties will ultimately affect the most. I am free to admit there are cases where the imposition of duties comes off the manufacturer, and comes off the producer, but there are cases also where it comes off the consumer; and, in my opinion, the scarcity of fish in the United States, and the fact that they require to go abroad, into the more fruitful waters of British North America, leads me to believe that the shortness of supply for the fifty-five millions of people on the other side of the border will eventually operate to place the duties upon the consumer instead of the producer, and that is the opinion I have always held in relation to the importation of fish into the American market. But, Sir, I am free to admit that what the Premier stated is quite true, and that, perhaps, in the opinion of the people who catch the fish, the duty imposed is the great bugbear, when they formerly got their fish in free, as they do not look to the ultimate effect, as to whether the increased price in the markets where these duties are imposed will not more than compensate for the duty itself. Sir, I look forward to a treaty being accomplished in the future between the two countries. I am not one of those who blame too severely the Government for delay in opening up negotiations; and I am not one of those, as the Premier knows, who advocate that we should go at once, hat in hand, to the American Government. I am quite of the opinion that, at the time they approached the Government in respect to the repeal of the treaty, it would have been unwise, it would have been injudicious in us, to go to them, hat in hand, and ask them to make new arrangements. We have not forgotten what occurred in 1867, when the British Government asked us to allow the Americans to come in and fish in our waters free. The position taken by the Government of that day was very different from that taken now. We said: No; we cannot allow that to be done; we cannot allow a temporary right of use to grow up in the future, to be, perhaps, claimed as a right, when it was granted only as a favor, and we imposed a tonnage due upon the vessels of Americans, and allowed them to come in within the three-mile limit. Sir, at that time we took no precaution for the protection of our fisheries for the first three years, any more than we have done this year; and the fact of our not taking any precaution, or putting any police force on our waters, for the purpose of keeping the American without the boundary, was that they came to disregard the imposition of tonnage dues, and, finally, refused or neglected to pay them, and the result was, that if it had not been for the energetic action taken in 1869, the probability is that our fisheries would have drifted along, until the Americans would, by this time, have claimed as a right what now they own they are accepting as a favor. I believe the same course and policy pursued in 1869 should have been followed last year, and it is within the knowledge of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries that there was a strong opinion expressed in this House, and notably expressed by myself, on the occasion of considering the Bill for the division of his Department, that the Minister should have asked for $50,000 or $100,000 to place a marine police force on our coast, and thus have shown the Americans that we meant business. What is our position to-day? I hope the Government will not allow the matter to drift along and find, on 31st December, that nothing has been done, and allow the Americans to continue to fish in Canadian waters free, as they practically did up to 1869. What I think the Government ought to do now is this: Make provision to place upon our waters vessels for the protection of our fisheries. The cost will be trifling, in comparison with the importance of the duty, and the moral effect that will follow from the knowledge of the measures we have taken, when we come to negotiate. I do not say this for the purpose of condemning the Government, but to call the attention of the First Minister to the moral effect such a course would have upon any negotiation that may be carried on, if the time came when negotiations were instituted. I desire to state another point, and it is well to do it now, because I hope before the House next meets there will be something of a definite character known in regard, at all events, to the feelings of the United States with respect to the fishery question. My point is this: The hon. gentleman said that no damage was being done to our fisheries by the Americans fishing within the three-mile limit. The hon. gentleman is not well informed on that point. Within the last three, four or five years, a system of fishing has been established by the Americans, which has been most destructive to our fisheries, and will ultimately ruin them, as the Americans have ruined their own fisheries. The Americans come in with schooners and with nets, and with three, four or five miles of nets, sweep a whole bay, taking all kinds of fish, and for every one marketable mackerel, two or three unmerchantable young mackerel are thrown overboard. Complaints have been made by the fishermen of my own county of this practice, and they have asked whether any protection can be obtained. What I desire to impress on the First Minister, looking to the future, is this: Whatever arrangements may be made—if any shall be arrived at—we ought to provide for a recognition on the part of the American Government that the municipal laws of each country should apply to the fishermen, whether Americans or Canadians, whether on the American coast or on our own coast.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear. A good point.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have stated this opinion, because I think it covers a point of vital importance. I do not desire to continue this discussion. If I were to do so, I could say a good deal that would be interesting to the House; but it would be unwise; and I hope hon. gentlemen will not raise controversial points, in view of the fact that the Government, whether guilty of neglect or otherwise, which is a matter of secondary importance just now, we do not desire to see them placed in a position of disadvantage when they approach the consideration of this question with representatives of the people across our southern boundary. I have every desire to see the most friendly relations existing between the United States and British colonies on this continent. I desire to maintain that friendly feeling which will best promote our prosperity; and I repeat what I have said on a former occasion, that I do not desire to see a money compensation for our fisheries; that I do not desire to see the question to be viewed from a purely financial standpoint, but that it should be looked upon as a matter of trade; and whatever the value of our fisheries, and they are infinitely greater than those of the United States, whose fisheries are worthless to us, while our fisheries are of immense value to them, I think the question should be dealt with in regard to trade relations between the two countries. I understood the hon. gentleman from Bothwell to say that we got too much for our fishery rights from the Halifax Commission. I was glad to find that I misunderstood his remarks. The Government of which he was a member, and which conducted the negotiations so satisfactorily, claimed for Canada $15,000,000, and so far from that being too much, it was not equal to the compensation which should have been obtained. I mention these facts with a view to strengthen the hands of the Government and to try and prevent a discussion which would do no good, and which, if followed up, might lead to recriminations and statements which would weaken the hands of any Administration which had to conduct negotiations with the United States Government.

Mr. VAIL. After the statement by the First Minister, this discussion is narrowed down very much, and if I were to discuss it now, with the papers that are before us, it would be almost impossible to do so intelligently or in such a way as to convince the House and the country that we are justified in making serious charges against the Government, while we would be justified, if the correspondence brought down contained all that has passed between the Government of the United States and that of the Dominion of Canada, in holding those assertions to be true. I would be sorry to say anything that might be construed as in any way tending to embarrass the Government in any future negotiations with the United States Government; but coming from a Province that is more deeply interested in this question than is any other Province, I can hardly allow the debate to close without saying a few words in reply to the remarks made by the First Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The First Minister seems to think the Government had done all that could be expected of them. I am not one of those who think for a moment that this Government should go down on its knees to the United States Government in a matter of this kind. Had the Government of the Dominion, when it was announced that the American Government intended to abrogate the treaty, made a fair open statement to the American Government, and said: Our fisheries are very valuable; you know they are valuable, and that your fishermen place a very high valuation upon them; they have been a source of trouble heretofore, and it is very important that this question should be settled for another ten years, if not forever. We are perfectly willing to appoint a joint commission to consider the whole question, as well as commercial reciprocity. When you are prepared to take up this question, we shall be quite prepared to consider it, with a view to arriving at a conclusion that will be satisfactory to both countries. Had the Dominion Government done this and nothing more, and done it a year ago, that is one year after the notice was given that the fishery clauses would be abrogated, I would not have been disposed to find fault with the Government. They would have gone as far as it was incumbent on them to go, and if the United States Government did not take the matter up it would be no fault of our Government; but the Government have allowed this matter to drift on, until, so far as we know from the papers before the House, December of last year arrived, and it was not until the 24th of that month that the first despatch was written by the Governor General to Earl Derby on this subject. The first part of that despatch is very statesmanlike, as it set forth clearly that it would be rather derogatory on the part of the Dominion Government to make proposals, after what had taken place in the United States, and considering that the American Government had shown no disposition to open negotiations. But unfortunately for the Government, and, I think, for the country, before closing the despatch, they made this offer to the Government of the United States, and pointed out that they made it because of the great inconvenience which would result to the American fishermen if the treaty should expire in the middle of the season. I hardly think it was the duty of our Government to look after the interests of the American people in that way. In reality, although the First Minister says that the fishermen of the United States know little of what is going on, I can assure him they know all about it. The fishermen of the United States, like those of the Maritime Provinces, are not at all ignorant in regard to matters connected with treaties in which they are interested; they understand their rights a great deal better, perhaps, than hon. gentlemen in this House, who are far from the locality interested. Now, if the American Government had given notice to this Government that the fishery clauses of the treaty would expire on the 1st July, 1885, then we were in duty bound to look out that our rights were not infringed upon after that time; and had we done so, I am satisfied the Government would have been in a much better position next year, after Congress meets, in December next, to have met the American Government, and would have found them in a much better mood to discuss the matter than now. I am afraid the course the Government have taken will lead the American Government and people to suppose that we do not put a very high valuation on our own fisheries, if we are disposed to give them up for what is practically the whole fishing season, because the season in which the Americans derive much advantage from these fisheries does not commence before the last of May, and the really valuable part of the season to the Americans is just beginning now, that is, the mackerel fishery, which they value far above other fisheries. I say, in this regard the people of Nova Scotia have just cause for complaint. I notice that the mackerel fisheries on the American grounds have been largely a failure, and the consequence will be that the price will be high this year; and the Americans will be allowed to come in and enjoy the same privileges as our own fishermen, take their catch to the same market with our fishermen, who have to pay a duty on their catch of $2 per barrel. When I point out that the value of the fish caught in Nova Scotia last year, by the returns made by the Marine and Fisheries Department, was $8,760,000, it will be seen that this is a very important industry, so far as that Province is concerned, and that we naturally look with considerable interest on any arrangements which are made with the object of allowing Americans, or any other people, to come in upon our fishing grounds, unless we get something in the way of compensation. The hon. member for Bothwell has stated, and I agree with him, that at present the matter stands in this way: That our fisheries were considered by the commission which sat at Halifax to be worth over and above the value of the free admission of our fish to the United States, $5,500,000 for the 10 or 12 years which were covered by that award. The whole thing has been given up for nothing; we get no admission to the American markets, no money, but only the right of fishing in American waters, which our fishermen do not value. Everybody knows that our vessels do not go into American waters, so that that concession amounts to nothing. I am pretty safe in saying that had the Dominion Government last year approached the American Government, and made the offer of free fishing for free fish, they would have granted this and given them the privilege of fishing in their waters in addition; and I think they would have been quite satisfied to allow the treaty to continue for the next six months. I notice that, in the correspondence, our Government do not appear to have a very direct promise from the American Government that they will approach this question of commercial reciprocity. Mr. Bayard merely says, at the end of the correspondence, that he has no objection to submit that question to the commission, or any other question that the two Governments may desire. Well, it is very easy to make that offer, but he does not state that the Government of the United States will suggest to Congress that such an arrangement shall be made, or that the question shall be considered. It is stated emphatically, over and over again, in these letters of Mr. West's, that they shall have power to arrange all matters in connection with the extension of the fishery clauses, but he does not refer to commercial reciprocity till the very end. I hope that something good will grow out of these negotiations, and that we shall be rewarded for the great sacrifices we are making at the present time to the Americans. I know that the Americans do set a high value on our fisheries. I know that everything that took place in connection with the settlement of the treaty in 1871, at Halifax, shows that notwithstanding that the First Minister has stated that the Gloucester fishermen have represented that they did not want the treaty continued, such is not the desire of the great majority of the people of the United States. I know this because I happened to be in Boston in December last, for some time, and I found a strong desire on the part of the Boston people, and I am sure that desire extends to the whole Western States, that the fish of the Maritime Provinces should be admitted into the American markets free of duty, no doubt their fishermen would like to have the advantage of getting their fish into the United States on better terms than the Canadian fishermen, but I am at the same time quite satisfied that the large majority of the people of the United States, who consume fish and are interested in the Canadian trade, would be very glad to see some arrangement made, whereby this treaty should be extended, so as to allow American fishermen to fish in our waters, in return for a market in the United States, and either commercial reciprocity or such a money compensation as would be fair in the interest of all concerned.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

The committee rose, and, it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Indians of Manitoba and the North-West Territories .....$ 680,831 45

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I was pointing out, on Saturday night, before the committee rose, that very large sums were expended in supplies for the destitute Indians. I do not complain so much of the amount as of the fact that there are evidently irregularities, to use a very mild word, in connection with these supplies. I drew the attention of the First Minister to the accounts rendered to the Government for the supplies of fresh beef and bacon to the Bloods and Blackfoot Indians, and stated that there appeared to me to be very little attention paid by the Government to the mode in which the supplies were given to the Indians or the vouchers certified to by the farm instructors. I find that the Sarcee Indians, a band of about 440, were supplied with fresh beef during the last six months of 1883 to the amount of $10,150; and the Piegans, during the same time, were supplied with the same article to the amount of $19,423. During the same time this beef was purchased, I suppose, by contract, at 13½ cents a pound, the Indians were supplied with 10,799 pounds of bacon, at 23 cents a pound, so that you will observe that we were paying for bacon nearly 10 cents a pound more than for fresh beef. It is a well known fact, as the reports show, that the Indians do not care for pork; they complain that it injures their health; one of the Indians complained that a large portion of his band suffered very severely, I think in the winter of 1883, from the pork given to them. I saw, in a western paper, the statement—I do not know whether it was true or not—that this pork was purchased from an individual closely connected with officials of the North-West, and that it turned out to be rusty and inferior. I believe the hon. Minister will find in the reports references to the quality of the pork, and complaints from the Indians that it was injurious to them, they not being accustomed to it. I understood from the discussion on Saturday evening that nearly all the supplies to the Indians are given under contract to the lowest tenderer, after tenders have been advertised for. I find an account from I. G. Baker & Co. for waggons and ploughs. I have not been able to find that they had any contract for the supply of waggons and ploughs in 1883. I find, by one account, that on the 20th June, 1883, Baker & Co. supplied one of the officials of the Department for the Indians with 12 ploughs, at $28 each; 10 sets of harrows, at $20 each; 5 waggons, at $120 each. I do not know on what authority these articles were got from I. G. Baker & Co. I am told, however, that the price of the waggons is nearly $10 in excess of what waggons of the class supplied by Baker & Co. could be obtained for by the Government in the markets there. I believe there is no wagon that goes into the North-West which could not be bought at a much less figure. I find in the voucher an entry in red ink, that these articles were got without any authority, by some official; that the attention of the Department had been drawn to the fact, and that the Department had ratified the purchase of the official. It is a loose way of doing business, that the officials should have the right to purchase supplies, relying on the good nature of the Department to recognise the purchases. In July the same thing happened. Mr. Galt, one of the officials of the Department, appears to have, without authority, purchased articles of the class referred to from I. G. Baker & Co.; and in the voucher there is a long memorandum indicating that the articles were purchased without any authority; that subsequently the matter was referred to the Department, and the Department sanctioned the purchase. It is quite impossible for the Head of the Department to know anything personally of what is done, but must trust largely to the officials in charge at the North-West. What I desire to impress upon the Government is the fact that these enormous supplies should be obtained under the authority of some responsible officer, and that officials, generally, should not be allowed to make purchases. In this last account I find that there were 8 ploughs, at $35 each, $7 more than the price charged the month previous; I find that the harrows were purchased at $31.50, $11.50 over the price of a month before from the same firm. Upon these several purchases in July, of the same class as those purchased in June, there appears to be an excess paid in July of $159.50.

There are 6 sets of harness, at $62, $372, and there does not appear to have been, so far as I can gather from the documents, any authority for this purchase. Why they were purchased I do not know. Another thing to which I drew the attention of the First Minister on Saturday night is this: There are a number of complaints in the reports, notably in 1882-83, and, I think, in the earlier part of 1884, of great irregularities on the part of the officials. It appears one or two have been dismissed, but there does not appear to have been any investigation as to the extent or nature of the irregularities, so far as I can judge from the report. Has the Minister's attention been drawn to these irregularities, and has there been any investigation into them? One can easily see that if the agents in the North-West see fit to engage in irregularities—and I do not say they do, except as far as one can judge from the reports—if they engage in the business of stealing, and are simply dismissed, that is practically no punishment. If there have been irregularities on the part of any agent, the attention of the other agents ought to be drawn to his misconduct by an investigation being held and punishment inflicted. In 1883 Mr. Wadsworth, whom I met in the North-West, and believe to be an efficient officer, as far as I can judge—he appears to be an active, vigorous, intelligent man—reports that he could not get any account whatever of the supplies sent in by the contractor or the Government. In this report, speaking of the Sekoskoots reserve, he says he could get no account of the supplies sent in by contractors or the Government. That is an extraordinary condition of affairs. That no account should be kept of these supplies, that there should be no way by which irregularities or misconduct can be traced, is an extraordinary condition of affairs. Mr. Wadsworth, in his report of 1883, draws the Minister's attention to the fact. Has an enquiry or investigation been held under that report? Mr. Wadsworth further says, in the same report, that the flour delivered at that reserve was of an inferior quality, and of light weight. It may be said the right hon. gentleman did say that the Indians were getting this as a donation and should not be particular; but all the same, the country is paying for it; the country has contracted with that contractor to supply us with a fair quality of flour, for the purpose of giving it to the Indians, and they should be compelled to supply the proper article and the full weight. Some of the sacks, Mr. Wadsworth reports, only averaged 93 pounds, and contained inferior flour. With respect to Poundmaker's band, Mr. Wadsworth says the flour was inferior and of light weight. So I could go on, and point out where the same reports are made to the Department, that the supplies given to the Indians are inferior in quality and light in weight. I drew the First Minister's attention the other night to the fact that in several of the bands—in four or five of them—the grossest frauds had been perpetrated, either by the Indians or through the negligence of agents, in paying for rations to numbers far in excess of what the bands contained. The hon. gentleman, I understood him to say, had drawn the attention of the officials to that, and that condition of things did not now exist. That is quite satisfactory, because it is quite enough for the country to pay for the rations of the real number of Indians without paying for 800 men more than there are in one band. Mr. Wadsworth, with respect to Farm No. 11, at Battleford, says: That the books of the farm did not agree with the books from the Indian office, the entries in the one class of books as to quantities received not agreeing with the entries in the other as to quantities delivered. It does not appear where the discrepancy existed, and to what extent the Government were defrauded. In the Sekoskoots reserve, Mr. Wadsworth says that, at Farm No. 14, the farm storehouse is used as a depot for supplies, but that neither at Battleford nor Fort Pitt could he get any account of the supplies sent in by the contractors or the Department.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

If things had been kept regularly, there should have been no discrepancy, and Mr. Wadsworth, making his annual inspection, should have had no difficulty whatever in discovering where the discrepancy lay. It appears that he was utterly unable to do so, and he draws the attention of the Department to these grave irregularities. He says:

"At Farm 15, Frog Lake, in the books there were discrepancies between the amount of goods received from Farm 14 and the amount charged in the books of Farm 14. 38 sacks of flour only averaged 93 pounds per sack."

If the First Minister's attention has not been drawn to these irregularities, and no doubt it has been, an investigation should have been had. Then, in 1884, Mr. Wadsworth said, in regard to Poundmaker's band:

"I took an inventory of flour and other supplies. The flour was of inferior quality, and weighed only 98 pounds to the sack."

All these things go to indicate that there is something wrong in the management of the Department in the North-West. I am not at present prepared to say whose fault it is, but when the attention of the Department has been so pointedly called to these grave irregularities, it was the imperative duty of the Government to have a full investigation, and to have the parties who committed the wrong punished. I also wish to draw the attention of the Minister to this: Mr. Dewdney, I believe, is the Lieutenant Governor and Indian Commissioner; and I find, in some accounts, that Mr. Dewdney—whether as Lieutenant Governor or Indian Commissioner, I do not know—charges the Government with table cloths and table napkins, and with washing blankets, and with 152 yards of cotton and 109 yards of cotton, and with painting, varnishing and cleaning the Government House carriage, and with some cooking utensils. Is it our duty to pay for these things? It seems to me they are the private affairs of the officials in charge. There are many other items that I would like to discuss, but it is useless at this late stage of the Session. They cannot possibly receive that attention they ought to receive, and the First Minister cannot give them that attention which they eminently deserve; consequently, I shall not pursue the investigation of these points any further.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to call the attention of the officers of the Department, and of the chief of the Department, to the manner of receiving the tenders for Indian supplies. I can quite understand that, before the Canadian Pacific Railway passed through that country, it was almost a necessity that the furnishing of these supplies should pass into the hands of foreigners, who had their establishments located in that far western country, and that they alone, perhaps, could furnish those supplies with accuracy and promptitude; but things have changed very much in two years, and my attention has been called to this matter by many of our merchants, and manufacturers, and others, in the chief commercial cities, who have stated that the manner of letting the supplies, to be delivered at the reserves, was not, perhaps, the most judicious way of letting them, and was not calculated to secure the greatest amount of competition, or one that would lead to the business falling into the hands of our own people—a thing which, I believe, is to be very much desired. I think that in tendering for the supplies to be delivered at the different reserves it would be much more desirable if the tenders were made for the delivery at Winnipeg, Moose Jaw, Calgary, or other given points in proximity to these reserves, and the question of transport were made an entirely different tender. By that means the necessity of a middleman would be done away with, and our merchants in Toronto, Quebec, Montreal, or elsewhere, could put in their tenders. They could get the tariff rates of the railway and could deliver their goods at those points, and our own forwarders, our own farmers in that section, who had their teams, their horses or their oxen, could deliver these goods to the different reserves, and the business would thus be kept within our own people, and we should dispense with the necessity of a foreign middleman. I do not bring this forward as blaming the Department at all, because I understand the necessity there was for adopting the practice before the railway existed; but now that we have the railway and the means for giving facility to people to tender in smaller lots, to deliver at points on the railway, where they can calculate the cost, it would possibly have the result of getting a better class of goods at a cheaper rate, while keeping the business within our own country and giving to the farmers and settlers and pioneers of that country a chance to do the transport. I call the attention of the Minister to this, not in a fault-finding spirit, but to see whether he does not think it better to adopt this plan than to tender in large lots for delivery on the reserves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has been a matter of consideration, and the opinion of the officers of the Department is, that it is premature to commence that system. It is quite true that along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway goods can be sent, but the great mass of the Indians are not along the line of that railway, but some 200, 300, or 400 miles away from it. In the case of supplies to the Indians along the Saskatchewan, for instance, sending them along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is sending them to the wrong place. They are sent to Winnipeg, and then by water, by the boats of the Hudson's Bay Company; and so with regard to other points. It is impossible to adopt the plan proposed, unless you organise a whole system of transport. I am satisfied that the transport to the numerous points would be an enormously expensive thing, and instead of saving, you would lose a large sum of money by altering the present system. Now, the local merchants at Winnipeg and at the other points are beginning to tender, and they can manage it infinitely better themselves, because they know the ways of the country. You must call for tenders for transport if the Government desire to have a transport system. You cannot have a tender for every point along the railway. There must be a general system of transport, and that would be a very cumbersome and expensive thing; but a Winnipeg merchant tenders for goods to go, say, to the Black-foot, from Calgary, and he has to deliver them at the Black-foot Crossing, or other points, and he can make his contracts easily; he can hire the local people and get teams very much cheaper than the Government could do. By-and-bye the system may be changed, but at present I am satisfied that it would increase the cost. The hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Cameron) has quoted Mr. Wadsworth's report. Mr. Wadsworth is a very good officer, and it is his duty to inspect the different reserves and report upon them. These reports show that there is a good system of inspection. They are all followed up, as a matter of course, like the reports of an inspector of any institution. The inspector reports irregularities, and these reports are made for the purpose of calling the attention of the officers of the Department to them, and they are looked into carefully. If there happens to be a deficiency in some of the flour sacks, if they are two or three pounds under weight, that is charged, of course, against the contractor; he will have to make it up. If he sends articles which are inferior, it is the duty of the Indian agent to reject them. Sometimes the article is a good and wholesome article, but it is under the standard. Obviously, they cannot throw it away, and they make a deduction in the charge. If it is unwholesome or improper to be received, it is rejected. I must say that the contractors have been very fair, so far as I can learn. If there are cases where they do not give the proper standard, why, they have got to account for it, that is all. But as the hon. gentleman admits, it is obviously impossible to discuss it at this time, to go over the articles item by item, and answer every possible charge of apparent irregularity that may be supposed to be found out in the accounts. All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that, so far as I can learn, the inspection is very rigid; and the action of the Department is also very rigid, to see that any irregularities that are proved to exist are accounted for. With respect to the farm instructors, the Indian agent is in charge of each reserve. Some Indian agents have two or three reserves, but they are small. There is a farm instructor, and he has an assistant, and sometimes the farm instructor receives the supplies. The Indian agent cannot be everywhere, but these farm instructors are intelligent men, and sometimes they see to the rations. There is no doubt, until lately, there was a great deal of duplication of the rations. The Indians are very cunning in that regard, and they sometimes disguise themselves and come twice. But that is being cured. When we no longer meet with large bands, and when the agent and the instructor know every man, woman and child on the reserve, that kind of irregularity will shortly disappear. Of course, it is inevitable, in a new country, where large bands of Indians come and go, but that they will try to defraud, and sometimes successfully. It is hardly possible to avoid sometimes giving one man more than he ought to have.

Mr. MITCHELL. In reply to the hon. Premier, I think for once he is not quite as logical as usual. Now, there is no reason in the world why the monopoly of this thing should be given to the foreign merchants at Benton, or to the merchants at Winnipeg. There are merchants and manufacturers in the eastern part of the country that are contributing towards the expense of opening up that country, and making railways there, that feel, and very naturally and properly feel, that if there are supplies to be contracted for and delivered, the contracts for these should be given in such a way as that they may have an opportunity of participating, which they cannot now do. If there is an arrangement by which these supplies go up to the more distant reserves north of the Saskatchewan River, why not tender for their delivery at Winnipeg, and let the transport to the Saskatchewan be a separate contract altogether? Then, as regards the reserves in the vicinity of Calgary, there might be four or five leading points along the line of railway, where the supplies might be delivered by contract, and then the merchants could deliver them there. I do not see why, if it can be done in two or three years, it cannot be done at once. In connection with the charges in the Public Accounts, if my right hon. friend had heard the comment I have heard, and of which I am just now the exponent, he would probably think it might be as well to commence the reform at once. I can assure him it is not a pleasant thing for our merchants and manufacturers, who are contributing to the construction of this railway, to find half a million or three-quarters of a million of dollars going to a foreign company, who are monopolising the business of that country, when our own people are excluded. For my part, I am not satisfied with the explanation of the Premier at all. If the thing could be done in two years hence it can be done now, and I think it would be well for him to consider the propriety of having the matter looked into, with a view of carrying out that system, which I am sure the whole country will approve of, at as early a day as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot hold out any hope that it will be done in two years. It would be impossible; it would take as much to pay for the transport, if the Government were to adopt that policy, as it would for the food. The truth of the matter is, the manufacturers all over the country would have no objections to sending the goods to the places that are convenient for them, and then throw the whole trouble and expense upon the Government. It would be quite impossible. The hon. gentleman speaks about the Saskatchewan and Calgary. I quoted these merely as examples. But there are upwards of 200 reserves, and that we should, by changing the system of transport, adapt a system of transport to every one of these 200 reserves, is impossible. It is easy for the manufacturers now to find out, when tenders are called for, for goods to be delivered at several points, to make their arrangements. Now I fancy that the teams for transportation will be plentiful, because that is the only means really for supporting the half-breeds. There is no buffalo. Those who will not settle down on their farms must use their teams. Any contractor can get the teams, and they can do it much more satisfactorily than the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. Surely, if the contractor can get over the difficulty of delivery, there can be no practical difficulty in the way of tendering for the transport. I can see no reason why it cannot be done. I admit there is less trouble in the present way for the Department, but I think it would be much more satisfactory for the public if the other system were adopted.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. This is a kind of business I have had something to do with heretofore, and I have always found that the cheapest and safest way was to contract with the first man to put the goods where you want them. If you pass them through half a dozen hands, half a dozen men are responsible, and the goods never arrive so safely. When you say to a man: I want you to put this flour at a certain place, you have one man responsible for it. You can do it cheaper and better, and much safer, than if you contract with several parties.

Mr. MITCHELL. With all due deference to the Minister of Railways and the right hon. Premier, I cannot see, if there is a million dollars' worth of supplies to go into that country, why the tenders should be placed in such a way that two persons can get the whole of that money. If the Premier and the Minister of Railways say that it is better to have the transport and supply in one hand for the delivery at one point, I admit it is less trouble for the Department. But what is the difficulty of dividing the delivery at these several points into a dozen different tenders? There will be more competitors; there will be as many competitors for each one of these tenders as there would be for the whole, and the consequence is, that the Government will get the advantage of the competition. They have to pay large profits to middlemen now, which they would not do in the other case.

Mr. POPE. I do not think the hon. gentleman knows enough about the question. But what I desire to point out to the House is, that it would be the greatest possible mistake to have half a dozen men responsible for the same work, when the responsibility can all be placed in the hands of one man. If we are going to have half a dozen men to deal with it, we have half a dozen men to look after. There is no reason to believe it would be a cheaper system. Men tender all over the country, and unless they can place the supplies there, they cannot tender as cheaply as others. The hon. gentleman wants to add to the difficulties and responsibilities of the Department.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am surprised at the speech of the Acting Minister of Railways and his statement that I want to add to the difficulties of the Department. It is an amazing statement. I appeal to this House whether, in any course I have taken, I have sought to add to the difficulties of any Department; on the contrary, I have endeavored to raise my voice in an opposite direction. I have refrained from saying things that would add to the difficulties. Others would not have shown the forbearance I have shown. The Minister of Railways, who seems to embody all the wisdom and experience of the House and of the country, says I know nothing about the matter. A large book might be written of what he does not know, although I admit that, generally speaking, he is pretty well informed. He says that if a man could deliver a part, there seems to be no reason why he should not deliver the whole of the goods required? Take a manufacturer who weaves cloths. He does not want a tender for cloth and 1,000 barrels of flour, 50 sides of leather and other articles. He cannot do it. The goods have to be sold to middlemen. But if there were 1,000 yards of cloth to be delivered at Calgary, or Winnipeg, or Moose Jaw, or any point within reasonable distance of the main line of travel, surely the cloth could be placed there at a less price than it could under a tender for an enormous number of articles, which can only be put in by Baker & Co., and the Hudson Bay Company. Our merchants are ready to do some of this work. I am surprised at the Minister of Railways pitching into me. I admit that he knows something more of the public business than I have done recently; but I also know something of the business of the country.

Mr. POPE. I am not at all surprised at the hon. gentleman pitching into me, because that is his practice. But I do say that the man who makes cloths should not tender unless he could place the goods at the point required, otherwise his tender would be good for nothing. I admit that the manufacturers would not tender; men who purchased cloths from them would tender.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman wants a middleman in the transaction. That is what the hon. gentleman is after—he wants a third profit. I want to save that profit to the country and the business for Canadians. I am sure the First Minister will have to adopt the plan I have mentioned, for public opinion will demand it.

Mr. MILLS. There would be difficulty in the Government organising a transportation service to carry the different supplies to Indians in the North-West Territory. But I do not feel certain that a transportation service organised by the Government would be necessary. When Baker & Co. were employed by the preceding Government, they not only furnished supplies but they were the Government bankers. There was no Canadian settlement within 800 miles of some of the points. There were only two companies with which arrangements could be made for furnishing the necessary supplies to Indians in the western portion of the territory. The condition of things has very greatly changed within the last few years. Beef could now be supplied from some of the ranches, and tenders might be obtained from some of those parties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So it is.

Mr. MILLS. Then, as to flour. Wheat is grown in almost every part of the Territories. On the North Saskatchewan there is sufficient produced not only to supply the population there, but also the Government with all they need for the Indians in that district. I see no reason why it should not be purchased from the residents, and the cost of transportation saved. I suppose the Government intend to give them an opportunity to furnish such supplies. It is of great consequence that the Minister should submit to Parliament a statement showing the distribution of the money. The Government have employed a large number of farm instructors. Some are doing well, and are succeeding in making some bands of Indians self-supporting. Whether the Indians do well depends largely on two conditions: the character of the reservation, and the character of the instructor placed over them. If there is a good instructor, and progress is not made, it is probably owing to the location being a bad one, and the Indians should be induced to settle on another reserve, while there is yet abundance of land in the North-West. With respect to the item for clothing, I suppose it is to supply Indian chiefs and head men with clothing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Are any other parties to receive clothing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is correct in supposing that this item does not include the clothing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some explanation about these Indian schools. I should like to know how many schools have been started, and whether or not they are in the hands of the various Christian denominations?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say that it has been found very difficult to get these Indian children to attend, and the teachers are obliged to hold out, as an incentive, the giving them a little food, such as biscuits or bread. They go for the bread and nothing else, and then the teachers endeavor to do something in the way of education. The increased vote is for salaries and aid in the erection of school houses, $11,600; the average salary of teachers is $300. Thirty-one new schools are proposed to be established, and the salaries for these will cost $9,300, and the remaining $2,300 will, it is estimated, be required for aid in the erection of new school houses.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have heard statements made by one of the agents, to the effect that this system was a comparative failure, for the reason stated by the hon. gentleman, that it was difficult to get the children to attend.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt the children will not attend at school all day, unless, as I have said before, some inducement is held out to them. I may say that the schools are not generally conducted by the different denominations, but in some cases they are. The Catholics have schools, and they are assisted wherever they have a considerable number of children attending, and so are the Methodists. These, I believe, are the two denominations which are really pushing education among the Indians, in connection with and with a view to religious instruction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My own impression is, that they are the very best possible instructors, and will do the work more cheaply and more assiduously than teachers employed in the ordinary way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Wherever a religious body establishes a school, they are, of course, allowed to do so; we are very glad to get their aid. The body send certificates of competence with the teachers. They will not establish schools unless they know they are going to get scholars. The Department grants $300 to the teachers, when the number of pupils is less than 42, and $400 when the number is over 42; the religious body may contribute as much more to the teachers as they like. The schools of the Department are not under the control of any religious body.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are the teachers required to know the Indian tongue, or only English? I have heard from parties in the North-West that a good many cases have occurred, in which pupil and teacher found themselves confronted, and neither understood one syllable of what the other said.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Wherever teachers who are linguists can be found, of course they are eagerly sought for, and are preferred; but we find it impossible always to get competent teachers who can speak the Indian language. They must commence, first, at trying to teach their pupils English, as best they can. I do not know that there is any other way of doing it. For $300 you cannot get a man who can speak English and Indian as well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You cannot get them here, but as my hon. friend has just remarked, in the North-West many of the half-breeds, as the First Minister knows, are men of considerable education. I have been rather surprised at the number of half-breeds whom I have met there who are quite fairly educated men, and from whom I suppose it would be quite easy to supply a reasonable corps of instructors for the number of schools we are to establish with such a grant as this. There is another point requiring explanation. If I understood the First Minister, he stated that he was locating a number of these schools at one place—as many as four, I think, at such places as Edmonton and Battleford. It occurs to me that that might lead to considerable inconvenience. I understand that the policy of Government is not to encourage Indian reserves to form in the vicinity of large or even small towns, where the Indians are much more disposed to fall into idle and dissipated habits than elsewhere, and unless there is some reason for it, the policy seems to me dubious, to place several Indian schools at a point already occupied by whites. But perhaps the hon. gentleman means that they are in the agency.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I meant in the district. For instance, in the whole Province of Manitoba there are to be eleven schools, and in the Birtle district four.

Mr. MILLS. With regard to these Indian schools, I do not know what the hon. gentleman has done; but I know that the understanding the former Government had with the various religious bodies was, that it would not pledge itself to continue to support denominational teachers for an indefinite period of time, but always reserve to itself the right to establish schools of its own whenever it deemed it expedient to do so. I do not know whether that continues to be the rule of the Department or not. But it seems to me that it is of not a little consequence to establish at an early day an Indian instructor of superior education, competent to give instruction in a normal school, either in Manitoba or in the North-West Territories, and paid by the Government out of the Indian appropriation. In that way the Indians or half-breeds to be employed as teachers in these schools could be trained. It would cost the Government but a very small sum, and in a very short time it would have a staff of competent teachers to properly instruct the Indians. My own impression is, that a large number of these schools are of very little consequence, and that the Indians are making little or no progress in education. There have been instances, such as those mentioned by my hon. friend from South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), where the teachers only understood English or French, and Indians new nothing but Cree, the consequence being, that nothing said by the teacher was intelligible to the pupil, and nothing said by the pupil was intelligible to the teacher. I think, if the plan I suggest were adopted, a sufficient number of competent teachers could be obtained, at comparatively little cost, and the schools could be greatly improved; and there might be denominational co-operation in the matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the suggestion is a very good one.

Mr. MILLS. I think we ought to have some explanation of the increase of $14,316 in the vote for farm instructors' wages. Are the farm instructors now residing on the reservations, have the Indian farms, apart from reservations, been wholly abandoned, and to what extent have the farm instructors been successful in making the Indians self-supporting?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The sum estimated for 1885-86 required to pay the force is $37,010. The reason such a large additional force is required is to be found in the fact that after the object of the old farms had been accomplished, it became evident that instruction in farming must be given on the reserve, and now, in nearly every case, the instructor is on the reserve. Formerly, the object was to make a model farm, quite free from the reserve, so that the instructor could not be supposed to be under the control of the Indian band at all. It was found that that did not quite succeed, as the Indians would not come to the farm. So the system has been altered, and the instructors have been put upon the reserves. Then, about maintenance, which is the next item, the increase is $12,262. The maintenance for each man for twelve months is, as nearly as possible, $135, and the maintenance for the current year contemplates the employment of forty-nine persons. This will make $56,015.

Dominion Lands—Amount required for surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, etc..... $70,000

Mr. MILLS. Why continue charging to capital account this sum?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is charged to capital, and the sales credited to capital.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If that be done, there is no objection. But that is not the course the Finance Minister declared he intended following. The First Minister is correct. That was the arrangement said to be made, and no doubt ought to have been adhered to; but what shall I call it?—official exigencies or party exigencies have caused the Finance Minister to alter that excellent regulation, and he charges this to capital account and credits the other to revenue account.

Mr. McLELAN. The expenditure is made for the benefit of the future. It is necessary to survey largely in advance of settlement, and the practice has been adopted of charging this to capital account.

Mr. MILLS. We have heard for some time reports of very large areas having been surveyed since 1878, by the Government, although any one who will look at the map will see that the area is not so great as is represented; and if the amount of surveying has been done that is represented to have been done, a good deal must have been done two or three times over. I have never been able to see myself the utility of surveys in tracts of country not likely to be settled for years to come. It is one of the duties of the Government to watch the direction in which settlement tends, and to adjust the surveys, for the time being, to the wants of colonisation and settlement. This has not been done, and the result is, that lines which have been established have been obliterated, and surveys once made require to be made again. It would be interesting to know, seeing that the Government have such an immense area surveyed, far beyond the requirement of settlement—an area so extensive that, according to their own statements, it would require more than 2,000,000 people to occupy the whole territory, with the ordinary allotment allowed under the present area regulations—where the Government proposed to make surveys, and how it is, if the system of surveys has been carried on in such a way, there is still necessity for further surveys being made. If these surveys had been along the lines of the rivers and in sections of the country accessible to the population, it is clear that a very much smaller area surveyed than that which has been marked out by the surveyor would have been adequate to the requirements of settlement. But the hon. gentleman, notwithstanding the very extensive area that has been surveyed, still finds it necessary to continue surveying further. It would be important if the hon. gentleman would inform the committee where the Government propose to carry on surveys during the present season.

Mr. McLELAN. There are four parties surveying in British Columbia, fixing the latitude and longitude on the lands in the railway belt, and projecting the outlines upon which the sub-division work can be completed; and there are several points in the North-West where it is proposed to have surveys, and several trails are to be surveyed. The hon. gentleman thinks it is unwise to survey so much in advance of settlement. If you were sure that no settlers would go in advance of you it might be well to hold your hand, but settlers spread all over the North-West, and it saves expense to have the school lands and the odd sections marked out in advance of settlement; but if they are not, and the surveyor has to estimate the value of the improvements made by a squatter, it adds to the expense of the survey.

Mr. MILLS. Of course, before the surveys of an isolated settlement can be made, there must be an astronomical survey made, with the utmost exactness. I was, however, calling attention to the very large area which the present Government has surveyed, and to the fact that that area of the surveys for several years appear to be in excess of the actual work done, according to the various maps brought down. It is only necessary to look at the longitude and latitude of these places to see the length of a degree; and a good deal of that must have been surveyed two or three times over, before the amount of surveying could have been done which has been reported to the Department. The hon. gentleman says it is necessary that surveys should be made in advance of settlement, but there is no difficulty in telling the direction in which settlement is tending. When the people of the North-West supposed the railway was going in the direction of Battleford the settlement went in that direction, by the Little Saskatchewan out to Rapid city, and even to Prince Albert; and when it is found that the railway is going in another direction, the settlement will go in the same way. There must be some reason for settlers establishing themselves in isolated localities. I do not object to the Government surveying such localities, and surveying them as early as possible, but I do object to the large amount of money which has been expended upon districts which are not fit for settlement and are not likely to be settled for years to come. Take, for instance, the Beaver Hills, which were surveyed some years ago. There are no settlers there, and there are none likely to be there for years to come. The district is not fitted for present settlement, and yet the same minute survey has been made of that as of other districts. If more care and judgment had been shown by the Department in marking out the work for the season, there would be fewer cases of surveys of that sort.

Mr. McLELAN. Whenever we find the direction in which settlement is tending, we endeavor to follow it, and the maps which I produce now show the amount of work which we have done during the past five years.

Dominion Lands—Land Board at Winnipeg..... $31,220

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a new officer, the superintendent of mines. Who is appointed to that office?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Pearce.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The former inspector?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an office which requires special qualification. I believe that Mr. Pearce is an able officer and showed considerable zeal—in fact, almost too much zeal, sometimes—in prosecuting his duties as land inspector; but what are his special qualifications as superintendent of mines? Has he been educated as a mining engineer, or has he had any special knowledge which would enable him to act intelligently in this capacity? I believe he has not received a very high education as a geologist, but he has some special requirements that fit him for the position, and he has been found to be an active and energetic officer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that in appointing an officer as superintendent of mines, at a salary of $3,200, we ought to get an officer who possesses practical scientific knowledge. I do not know that there are in the North-West as great mineral developments as in some other parts of the Dominion, but it is a huge territory, and it is to be hoped that very valuable mineral deposits will be found there. Now, if we have not got a person of the requisite qualifications in our own country, it would be desirable to import one. It is very difficult for anybody who has not a special education in that direction to render good service in a post such as this.

Mr. McLELAN. Very much of this gentleman's duties will be, for a long time, in the regulation of the boundaries and the settlement of disputes. Perhaps, in course of time, when large mines are developed, it may be desirable to have a man of scientific knowledge, with respect, principally, to the mining business. Mr. Pearce is a practical surveyor of great experience in the North-West, and is eminently qualified for this position.

Mr. MILLS. I have no doubt that Mr. Pearce is a very good officer as a Dominion land surveyor, and is a thoroughly trustworthy man; but I do not know whether he is a good mining engineer or not, or whether he is acquainted with mineralogy. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he has not the qualifications necessary in a superintendent of mines, and I should have thought the hon. gentleman would have gone to the Geological Department for an officer to fulfil the duties of that position. The hon. gentleman's own statement just now is, that he has simply to survey the boundaries and the mining locations.

Mr. McLELAN. This has no connection with the important Department of the Geological Branch, to which a mining geologist is now being added. Mr. Pearce will be specially required for a number of years to settle disputes between miners, and to lay out locations; and having considerable knowledge of mines and minerals as well, he will do for that position. If anything more is required, we can go to the Department of the Geological Branch.

Mr. MILLS. I do not see any necessity for having an officer to survey mineral locations. Certainly, there is no reason why a man should be appointed specially to mark out the boundaries of mineral locations; and as to mines, and everything relating to them, it clearly belongs to the Geological Branch, and should be referred to that branch.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Pearce has a direct and general knowledge of mines; he is a surveyor, and a very intelligent man, and must have had a good deal of experience in that regard. As my hon. friend has stated, his duties are not merely to survey mineral locations; he has got to lay them out. Under regulations, the mines of coal, gold and silver, are of different areas. These have got to be surveyed, and the royalties have got to be collected, especially in the gold washings. He has got to lay out lots and to settle disputes between miners, who are rather a rowdy set. It is understood, from all that is known, that there is a great deal of mineral wealth in the Rocky Mountains, which we are just now making accessible, and he will have to lay out those auriferous regions according to the regulations, and see to the leasing of them, and, I presume, to collect the rents.

Mr. MILLS. A Government bailiff.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps that would be the more proper name.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the First Minister tell us what the policy is going to be with respect to such deposits of valuable minerals as may be within our own territory?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say now. I will send for the regulations; they are all printed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have always thought that a good deal more might be made in new countries out of these deposits than in older countries. I have always thought that in the department of mines the next generation, at any rate, might, under a proper system, reap a considerable amount, as is done in other countries; and that we have been inconsiderate in our policy with regard to rental and royalty from many of the most valuable mineral deposits in the country. As the First Minister knows very well, those, in a great number of cases, do not go to enrich our own citizens, but they fall into the hands of foreign parties. There is very good reason why we should, with the example of other countries before us, retain some reasonable royalty on these deposits. Concerning the land board at Winnipeg, I am at a loss to understand why the Government should ask for salaries for secretary, short-hand writer and accountant. The probability is, that the traffic in Dominion lands will be rather less than more for some time to come.

Mr. McLELAN. The work in the office is increasing from year to year, although the sale of land may not increase. The correspondence connected with all the claims that have been taken up for several years has been accumulating from year to year. The expenditure of the Winnipeg board has so much increased that a short-hand writer is necessary, and one has been appointed. It is proposed to check the accounts sent to the Winnipeg office at that office, instead of sending them to the Department here, and it is therefore proposed to place an accountant there.

Mr. MILLS. Who is inspector of agencies now, in place of Mr. Pearce?

Mr. McLELAN. The position is not filled yet.

Mr. MILLS. Has Mr. Pearce been appointed superintendent of mines?

Mr. McLELAN. He was appointed in July, 1884.

Mr. MILLS. With respect to the item of $3,000 for salary of inspector of colonisation companies, I should like to know what the inspector has to do. The report of the Department shows that very few settlers have gone upon colonisation companies' lands, especially during the last year or two. It appears that more settlers would have gone into the country if no colonisation companies had been organised.

Mr. McLELAN. The colonisation companies have expended large sums in endeavoring to get settlers on their reserves, and they have expended large sums abroad in advertising the North-West; and I know a very considerable number of settlers has gone upon their reserves. The inspector visits those reserves, and makes enquiries as to the number of settlers upon them. The companies are very often in error as to the number of settlers, and we have to rely upon the reports of the inspector.

Mr. MILLS. I believe the larger proportion of the expenditure made by the companies has been in paying officers. The companies have found that settlers are not willing to take up their land, and the promoters of the companies have been disappointed in the result of their investment. It is a gross waste of public money to maintain an office, for the holder of which there is no employment. It would be very much better if the Government would find some other position for the inspector of colonisation companies, and abolish the office altogether.

Mr. WATSON. Settlers fight shy of colonisation companies. Colonisation companies in the North-West are simply bodies of men banded together to bleed intending settlers. I know one colonisation company in connection with which a person by the name of Dobbin claims to have a right to settle two or three townships in south-western Manitoba. He took $30 each from several persons for securing land patents, and it afterwards appeared that he had no right to the land, and that incorrect descriptions were given. Those companies have been a curse to the country, and it is an injustice on the part of the Government to encourage them. We do not consider that they have advertised the country or assisted it. They try to pick up immigrants at Winnipeg or other points, and to induce them to settle on their lands. And such persons would, at all events, have homesteaded Government land. Then they receive a certain portion of the odd-numbered sections. These settlers have to pay for them, and they pay more to the colonisation companies than they would have to pay to the Government, and I do not think that it aids in the settlement of the country, but rather retards it. The money paid to the inspector of colonisation companies appears to be money thrown away.

Mr. McLELAN. The gentleman to whom the hon. member refers is not connected with the colonisation companies.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; that is the point, that this Mr. Dobbin had no right to act in that way, and there are others there who have no right to be there. Then there are colonisation companies which have failed, and their agreements with the settlers have not been carried out, and they are looked upon as a means of bleeding the settlers, who, of course, believe the statements of men who set themselves up as agents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this new item, "special services, $6,000?"

Mr. McLELAN. That is for furnishing the offices with safes and other furniture; and the expenses of removing offices, and other things of that kind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What offices?

Mr. McLELAN. The offices of the different agencies.

Mr. WATSON. Where are these land guides to be employed?

Mr. McLELAN. Wherever it may be found necessary.

Inside Service ..... $30,000

Mr. MILLS. I would like to know why this $30,000 for inside service is specially charged to Dominion lands instead of to the ordinary expenses of the Department.

Mr. McLELAN. There are certain considerable expenses for extra clerks at head office, at Ottawa, publishing maps, advertising, and other similar expenses connected with the outside service. It has been required for several years, and voted in this particular way.

Mr. MILLS. There is no reason why it should be so charged, as this work is just as much a part of the functions of the office as that of the Surveyor General or other officers. There is no reason why it should not be charged in the regular way.

Mr. McLELAN. I suppose the hon. gentleman would not advise that these men should be put on the permanent list, as it is hoped when the surveys are further advanced that we will require a less number of these extra and temporary men, and therefore they are charged in this way.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly I do not understand that any person is to be permanently on the staff, when his occupation is gone, and this is simply to conceal increased expense. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a great deal of correspondence with regard to patents, and it would be just as reasonable to charge all the expense in connection with patents as a special charge to Dominion lands in this way, as it is to make this a special charge.

Mr. WATSON.

Dominion Lands Agencies..... $41,278

Mr. WATSON. Will the hon. gentleman inform me who is the Dominion lands agent at Prince Albert, or who has been agent for the past year?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. McTaggart is the agent.

Mr. WATSON. For the past year?

Mr. McLELAN. I think nearly a year.

Mr. WATSON. Has one Louis Smith been employed in that branch?

Mr. McLELAN. He was, at one time.

Mr. WATSON. How long ago?

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know the length of time. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MULLOCK. Perhaps the hon. Minister would not only ascertain when Louis Smith's services were discontinued, but when he was engaged and what his duties were?

Mr. McLELAN. I will endeavor to get the information.

Geological Survey..... $60,000

Mr. HALL. There were some explanations to be given in reference to changes in the Department.

Mr. McLELAN. The force at present employed is as follows: Dr. Dawson, employed on the west coast of British Columbia; Mr. Bowman, in the interior of British Columbia; Mr. McConnell, in the Rocky Mountains; Mr. Tyrrell, in the North-West Territories; Mr. Ingall, on Lake Superior; Mr. Lawson, on the Lake of the Woods and Rainy Lake; Mr. Coste, in Ontario, in the Madoc and Marmora regions—he has lately been appointed as a specialist in mining; Dr. Bell, in the Hudson Bay, where he went on the expedition to explore the coast, and whence he is expected to return overland; Mr. Low, on Lake Mistassini and Rupert River; Mr. Ellis, in the Eastern Townships—he has lately been appointed as a mining geologist; Professor Bailey, in New Brunswick; Robert Chalmers, in the counties of Restigouche and Gloucester, New Brunswick; Mr. Fletcher, in the counties of Pictou, Antigonish and Guysboro', Nova Scotia; Mr. Willmott, in Ontario and Quebec, in collecting mineral statistics and specimens for the London exhibition; Mr. Weston, in the Eastern Townships, collecting fossils; and Mr. Adams, in Lake St. John.

Mr. HOLTON. Notwithstanding the statement just presented to the committee by the hon. Minister, I think it is very much to be regretted that the report submitted to Parliament last Session by the Geological Survey Committee was not long since acted upon by the Government, and the exceedingly important and valuable suggestions embodied in it adopted. Those suggestions, it is known to everybody, were in the direction of much-needed and called-for improvements and reforms; and it is a surprise to me, as I know it will be to the public, that attention has not been given to them before this by the Government. When this matter was before the House last year, no personal references were made by those taking part in the discussion, for the very good reason, I presume, that up to that time no charges had been made against any member of the staff of the Survey, and the report had not yet been submitted to Parliament. To-day, however, things are in a very different position. That report has been before Parliament and the public for more than a year, and the matter has been the subject of very considerable discussion in many newspapers for months. I feel, therefore, that it is now my right, as well as my duty, to invite a full consideration of the condition and management of the Survey, even if in that consideration are involved unpleasant reflections upon its chief officer. The committee alluded to investigated the matters which had been referred to it by this House in a thorough and impartial manner, all of its members being, in my belief, actuated by no other desire than to secure such changes and improvements as would ensure its becoming, as it ought to be, one of the most useful Departments in our public service. As the result of that investigation, it is generally well known that the Geological Survey is in a deplorable inefficient condition, and that the value of what it is accomplishing for the country, from a useful and practical point of view, is by no means commensurate with its cost—that it is, in fact, almost nil; and basing my assertion on the evidence adduced before that committee, and upon facts since brought to light through the press, I do not hesitate to say that this unfortunate condition of affairs is chiefly attributable to the director. To the scientific attainments of that gentleman I do not propose now making any reference; for there I would probably be incompetent to judge; but I do say, on the same evidence I have referred to, that his peculiarities of temper and disposition, his contempt for all authority superior to his own, as well as for many of those who, unfortunately, have to acknowledge his authority, his apparent want of knowledge of the needs of this country, his very peculiar notions of the real objects of the Survey and of the duties of its director, and generally his utter lack of administrative ability and qualifications, render him peculiarly unfit for the important position he occupies. As the immediate result of his incompetency the generous sum annually voted by this House for the purposes of the Survey amounting to nearly $100,000 is well nigh wasted, and in addition to this we have to consider the enormous loss constantly accruing to the country through the inability, indisposition or neglect of this official to do what should be done by him for the development of our vast mineral resources, and for the direction of public attention to them both at home and abroad. Whenever, in past years, reference has been made in this House to the management or defects of the Survey, Government have apologised for the director, by saying that he had come to Canada with a wonderful record of success, achieved in a similar survey in Australia, and that his appointment had been strongly urged at the time, and, at all times subsequently, warmly approved by the late Sir William Logan. With regard to Dr. Selwyn's connection with the Australian Survey, a careful examination of the public records of the Victoria Assembly has revealed to me the fact that his career in that country was, in every respect, as utter a failure as it has proved in this, and that it resulted there, as it certainly will result here, and from very similar causes, in the absolute demoralisation of the service. I find that the Victoria Assembly took hold of the matter in 1867, discussed it very fully, and finally voted the supplies for the Survey, conditionally upon their recommendations being carried out by the director. I find, also, that in 1869 the Survey there was abolished, but that it was almost immediately afterwards reorganised under a new management, and that the services of Dr. Selwyn were then transferred to Canada. As for Sir William Logan's subsequent confidence in the head of the Canadian Survey, I can throw some light upon that, by reading from a letter addressed to me by a prominent and respected citizen of Montreal, a gentleman who was the intimate and confidential friend of the late Sir William Logan, and with his permission I read the letter. He says:

"With reference to conversations had from time to time with the late Sir William E. Logan, I have a distinct recollection of his having referred to Mr. Selwyn, his successor, in very flattering terms. Then he, Sir William, showed me some beautiful specimens of geological maps traced, he said, by Mr. Selwyn. Sir William expressed himself as fortunate in having such a successor. But I regret to add that some weeks after Mr. Selwyn's arrival here, Sir William spoke to me of him, Mr. Selwyn, with doubt and fear, and once at his own house, on Logan's farm, he said to me, in speaking of his successor, 'I made a great mistake.' Indeed, I was grieved to perceive the annoyance the appointment caused Sir William."

I again say I regret the inaction of the Government in this most important matter, and would express it as my conviction, as I know it is the belief of the majority of those who take an interest in the work of the Survey and are desirous that its efficiency should be restored, and its labors directed to more useful and practical ends, that no reform and no improvement can be looked for until the control of the service is placed in other and more competent hands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister in charge surely owes it to himself and the House and the Survey to take some notice of the remarks of my hon. friend. It has been a matter of common complaint, from one end of this country to the other, that very small results indeed have accrued to the public of Canada from the many hundreds of thousands of dollars that have been expended for the last ten or twelve years on the Geological Survey. I am not prepared to say who is in fault or who is not, because I have not had time to examine into the matter, but I believe a committee was recommended to look into the question, composed of gentlemen on both sides, and that that committee reported, after full examination, very adversely to the management of the Survey. In asking for this vote, it becomes the Government to say whether they have examined into the matters brought to light by that committee, and what conclusions they have come to. No doubt, rightly or wrongly, the public opinion is that we have had very little value indeed from the expenditure on the Geological Survey, and that it is high time steps should be taken to make this vote more valuable to the people of Canada, who have to pay for it.

Mr. McLELAN. The recommendation of the committee was that some practical turn should be given to this Survey, and the Government have enforced that view on the officers. The Government have, besides, appointed two mining engineers to the staff, to devote their attention solely to practical matters.

Mr. HOLTON. I do not wish to repeat what I have already said, but I assure the Minister the slight improvements he promises, on the recommendation of the committee, will satisfy nobody. I would recommend the Minister to read the report over carefully, and he will find ground for a great many other improvements than those he has mentioned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a good deal, as my hon. friend says, in that report, which the hon. Minister has not yet had his attention called to. A very curious state of things—I speak from memory—was revealed as to the relations between the head of that Department and a number of his subordinates, and statements were made which show that Department to be in state approaching utter disorganisation. There was not only no confidence but violent recrimination and great distrust among various important members of the staff. That kind of thing cannot go on in a Department of that sort, where the officers ought to work in full harmony with each other, without detriment to the public service.

Mr. HOLTON. It is quite true, the committee of last Session, of which I was a member, did make a recommendation which the Minister now says the Government proposes to act upon. But the committee referred to the deplorably inefficient condition of the service, a condition which I believe has not, in any one particular, been since amended. The committee basing its report in that respect on the evidence given before them by Dr. Selwyn, reported that the sum before then voted, the same as that now asked, $60,000, was amply sufficient for the purposes of the Survey, and indeed sufficient to enable it to carry out some of the improvements suggested. Now, I understand that on the 26th March last fourteen of the officers of the Survey were notified that their services would be dispensed with on the 30th April, on account of the exhaustion of the funds. I think that is a point which the Minister should explain.

Mr. McLELAN. I am informed that there were some six or seven whose services were dispensed with, being temporary clerks and other employés of that sort.

Mr. HOLTON. But why is it that the funds were exhausted, and that their dismissal was necessary for that reason?

Mr. McLELAN. I think there are some bills unpaid yet, of last year, and that the expenses will be reduced this year. It is expected that the $60,000 will pay the outstanding bills and meet the expenses of the coming year.

Mr. HOLTON. What were these outstanding bills, and why were they not included in the Estimates of last year?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. HOLTON. My information is, that fourteen were dismissed. I have the list of them here.

Mr. McLELAN. I know there was a proposition, in the expectation that we would adjourn before the end of the year 1884-85, to make this vote $50,000, and to ask for $10,000 in the Supplementary Estimates, but the adjournment did not take place, and this has been left standing.

Mr. HOLTON. There is another matter to which I wish to call attention. In speaking, last year, on behalf of the Government, the First Minister gave us a promise, after excusing the expenditure for Indian curiosities in the past year, in regard to which there were some complaints, that no more money would be expended this year in that way, but that the whole of the money would be expended on the Geological Survey. I find, on reference to the Public Accounts, that notwithstanding this promise the large sum of $2,500 was paid to Herschfelder & Co., of Toronto, for Indian gim-cracks, which, I am informed by those more competent to pronounce upon them than I am, are not worth the money expended on them.

Mr. McLELAN. I think, probably, that expenditure was incurred previous to the attention of the First Minister being called to it by the committee.

Mr. HOLTON. I find a large amount was incurred for the publication of what may be a useful, but what I consider a useless book, the vocabulary of certain Indian dialects in British Columbia.

Mr. BOWELL. It is important, from a historical point of view.

Mr. HOLTON. I have no doubt it is to the Minister of Customs, but I doubt if it is to anyone else. I observe, also, and to this the Auditor General refers complainingly, in his correspondence with Mr. Selwyn, that a sum of $1,250 was paid to one of the employés, Professor Macoun for a collection of plants, which, according to the Auditor General's statement, was largely made up by Professor Macoun, when he was in the service of the Survey. These sums taken together would have gone a very long way to pay the salaries of those unfortunate young fellows who were summarily dismissed a few months ago. Then there is a very important point on which I think the Minister ought to give information, even if the item has to be postponed. I refer to the expedition last year to Lake Mistassini. My information is, and it has been stated in the press and elsewhere, that this expedition proved a failure and resulted in the loss of $7,000 or $8,000. That, I think, the Minister should explain. I would also like him to explain why it is that Mr. Bignell, who had charge of that survey until within a few weeks, has been dismissed, and has been replaced by Mr. Lowe. That has been a matter of comment in the Quebec papers chiefly, and I should like to have the information I ask for.

Mr. HOLTON,

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the full information on this point. I understood from the hon. gentleman that we would have a discussion on this on concurrence, but my general understanding of the matter was that Dr. Selwyn recalled Mr. Bignell because he believed he was not energetically performing the survey, and gave the work to another, Mr. Lowe, being a permanent officer.

Mr. HOLTON. I do not wish to detain the House further by asking for a discussion on concurrence, but I should like to have the Minister's promise to give us the full information at that time.

Mr. McLELAN. I will give all the information I can.

Mr. BOWELL. In reference to the purchase from professor Macoun, I know, from my personal knowledge and long acquaintance with that gentleman, that the plants which were purchased were, in great part, what he had been collecting for years and years, long before he was connected with the Government, when he was at the head of the Grammar School in the town of Belleville and when he was professor in Albert University. Whether or not any portion of that collection was acquired when he was on the Government survey, before he was employed permanently, I am not prepared to say. Professor Selwyn does not deny that a portion of them were obtained during that survey, but he says:

"I fail to see on what ground you assume——"

Because it was an assumption on the part of the Auditor-General; he does not give any evidence of the fact, but merely asks the question, and says what part was obtained on Government journeys should not have entered into the calculation of value; and Dr. Selwyn says:

"I fail to see on what ground you assume that anything obtained on Government journeys did enter into the calculation of value."

From which I should infer that, if any portion of the collection was made during Mr. Macoun's trip, in 1869 or 1870, that did not enter into the calculation. I can say this for Professor Macoun, and I am sure the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Holton), if he had as intimate an acquaintance with him as I have, would know that he would not put the slightest plant, obtained while he was in the Government employ, into a collection which he would sell to the Survey Department. I can also say, personally, for Professor Macoun, that he has had an opportunity of selling these specimens to the American Institute at Washington, and that he declined to do so, preferring that they should remain in this country; and I have good reason to know that he would have obtained a larger amount of money than that which he received from this Government. Those who know Professor Macoun say that he is one of the most upright and honorable men in the country.

Mr. HOLTON. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs, of course, understands that I have no desire to reflect upon Professor Macoun. I simply wish to have an explanation of this vote.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This is a very large and important item. Great and practical results may arise from an intelligent application of the geological surveys; and with that view I would like to ask the Minister if it is his intention to direct the Geological Survey to make an investigation into the origin, source, and extent of the Tufa deposits near Montreal.

Mr. McLELAN. I have examined the points at which they are working this year, but I could not answer the hon. gentleman's question. I will call the attention of the Minister to it on his return.

Mr. MULLOCK. I happened to be a member of the committee that made the report referred to, and I endorse what has been said as to the work of the committee and the time they devoted to the investigation. While joining in the report, of course, I do not bring to bear upon the subject any personal technical knowledge in regard to the matter. But looking at the report of the director for this year, I would call the attention of the Minister to the form in which it is presented. The committee last year pointed out that but very few copies of the report were printed for distribution—I think only a few hundred altogether, and they were placed in the hands of a favored few. Now, it was recommended by the committee last year that the annual report of the Geological Survey, embracing, as it does, an account of the work of the Survey between the Atlantic and the Pacific, should be made up for popular distribution, into subdivisions. It can easily be seen that whilst this volume itself may be of immense value as a record for Canadians of scientific mind, the people themselves also desire to derive some advantages from this expenditure, and in order that they may do so they should be able to obtain copies of the reports applicable to the sections of country in which they are interested. Acting upon that principle, the committee last year recommended that there should be a very considerable sub-division of the volume. It might, for example, be made up somewhat as follows: There might be in each volume a chapter devoted to the economic minerals generally of the Dominion, and that chapter might be attached to each volume; and then, instead of having, as we have to-day, a volume of perhaps 800 pages, it would be divided into several parts, or at least into two, one part dealing with Manitoba and the North-West and the other dealing with the older Provinces. Great interest is being taken in the development of the mineral wealth of the north shore of our inland lakes, and in the region of the Rocky Mountains, and persons interested in that part of the country may not be interested in the development of the easterly portions of it. It was, therefore, a recommendation of a practical character, which I think might have been taken advantage of. I would call the attention of the Minister, also, to the extent of the researches of the Survey during the past year, researches extending beyond the objects of the Act establishing the Survey. I do so, not that they may hereafter limit their researches in the direction to which I intend to refer, but rather that the Act itself should be amended. In the Act of 1877 the objects of the Geological Survey are put forth. Section 2 of that Act is as follows:—

"The objects and purposes of the Survey and Museum shall be, to elucidate the geology and mineralogy of the Dominion, and to make a full and scientific examination of the various strata, soils, ores, coal, oils and mineral waters, and of its recent fauna and flora, so as to afford to the mining, metallurgical and other interests of the country, correct and full information as to its character and resources."

Section 3 also states the objects to the same effect. Now, there is nothing in the Act authorising the Survey to devote any part of the public money towards making a topographical examination of the country, for the mere purpose of a geography. At the same time, it must be apparent that it is a legitimate expenditure of the public money that these parties should make such an examination, in order that it may be utilised in making up a geography of the country. Although last year they devoted a considerable part of their time to the preparation of topographical sketches, which will afterwards be of great use in the preparation of maps, still this is an application of money not at present authorised by the statute. If the Government, on further consideration, think that this is a proper way of expending the public funds, then the Act should be amended in that respect. I would also ask the Minister a question in reference to the great carboniferous deposits in the North-West. As he well knows, lignites and coals are found at the foot of the Rocky Mountains—on the third plateau—in the Laramie formation, I am told there are evidences showing that the coal bearing Laramie formation extends beyond the present localities in which coal is found. For example, it is stated by scientists that there is evidence that this formation exists in the vicinity of the Lake of the Woods, Lake Winnipegosis, and various other parts of Manitoba. But I am not aware that the Geological Survey has made any investigation there. If it has, the results do not appear in the reports of last year. I would ask the Minister if the Survey has directed its investigations in the direction of researches in districts in Manitoba, with a view to ascertaining whether there is any scientific evidence showing the existence there of the coal bearing Laramie formation.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not aware. I will make enquiries.

Mr. MULLOCK. In the report of the director for 1884, he sets forth the expenditure of public money, and he mentions items embracing partly expenditures on capital account and partly expenditures on current account. It would be well that there should be a sub-division. On page 24 of this volume there are items including pay for salaries and wages—which is a proper item—and also an item being expenditures for survey, including travelling charges, purchase of horses and equipment. The purchase of horses and equipment is a very considerable item. A glance at the Public Accounts shows that the cost of equipment for each party amounts to a very considerable sum. The gross amount for that year, including travelling expenses and equipment, reach $13,941.61. That ought to be sub-divided, one part showing that portion of the expenditure which would represent the annual outlay, and the other payments on capital account. The investments on capital account are of a permanent character, and we should have credit for the purchases; and if horses, for example, are re-sold, the receipts should be taken into account. What became of the horses bought during last year? Were they kept over to the following year, or were they sold? If they were sold, what became of the money? It is true we are not embarrassed with that question in regard to all the horses, for it appears in this scientific volume that four horses were stolen, and the director has not yet found them. I do not think, however, it is necessary, in a scientific volume of this kind, to enter into details of this kind, and it would suffice to make such a statement to the head of the Department. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Holton), I have had a little opportunity of meeting the director during the current year, and I had much pleasure, under his guidance, in inspecting his Department. As to whether he is able, scientifically, to discharge those onerous and high duties which devolve upon him, I do not express an opinion; but I have much pleasure in saying that no one is more attentive or more desirous of pleasing those who seek for information than he appeared to be during my visit. I call the attention of the Minister to an omission in this book. It ought to set forth a faithful record of the doings of the Survey, and the statute requires that it should do so, not only for the general education of the public, but in order to call attention to practical results. It, therefore, should bear on the face of it evidence of wide researches, and where, beyond all question, there exists large and valuable deposits of minerals in our own territory, references should be made to the fact. I have it on the authority of an hon. member of this House who, not only outside of this House, but from his seat this House, stated that very valuable deposits of gold and precious stones are to be found in the rivers in the North-West, which are open for inspection, and where gold and precious stones can be collected by any person at any time, if he is not too lazy and indifferent to help himself. The hon. gentleman was asked, on the floor of this House, upon one occasion, whether he was not indulging in a little metaphorical language when he referred to that mineral wealth. The hon. gentleman said no; he was speaking of the literal state of affairs; and it was literally true that in the North-West to-day the rivers were glittering with gold, silver and other precious metals, and that all one had to do was to help himself. There is no account of that in this record. I will give an exact quotation from the hon. gentleman's remarks, and perhaps the director will add it to his book, in order that it may produce practical benefit. I hope also the Minister will get the member for West Toronto—if it is not a secret—to inform the director where these deposits are, in order that the information may be published in the next volume, and we may all be able to help ourselves. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) spoke as follows, about the rivers in the North-West:

"There are mines of gold, of silver, of copper and of precious stones. All you have to do is to go and pick them up. The gold lies here in the beds of the rivers, shining in the gladness of the noonday sun, and all you have to do is to pick it up and put it in your pocket."

If hon. members will refer to Hansard, at page 1946, they will see that the hon. gentleman said that this statement was literally correct. It is a most extraordinary circumstance, that a volunteer member of this House should be able to discover and give to the public, free, important information which has not been furnished by the Survey which, we are maintaining at considerable expense.

Department of the Secretary of State—To pay certain Clerks amounts granted under provisions respecting optional subjects..... $270 83

Mr. MILLS. What is the explanation of this item?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These officers pass examinations for these optional subjects, $50 being allowed for each one passed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what scale?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not more than $600. If an officer is a third-class clerk at $400, and passes four optional subjects, he receives $200 more; two subjects, $100 more, and so on.

Dominion Police..... $4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the number been augmented?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; they were augmented last year; $3,000 of this sum is required to complete the service for the year, and $1,000 for special service.

Mr. BOWELL. The amount per diem has also been increased.

Gratuity to widow of late C. McManus, guard at Kingston Penitentiary..... $670 30

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the circumstances under which this is granted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand, the guard was entitled to this amount, and a cheque was made out, but not delivered to him, when he died.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How was he entitled to it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The retiring allowance under the law is one month for every year's service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My recollection is, that in the case of guards in the penitentiaries we have hitherto allowed them one year's salary. I will not contradict the hon. gentleman, if he speaks of his own knowledge; but my recollection is rather strong, that one year has been the outside, heretofore.

Mr. MULOCK.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The rule in the Civil Service has been that a civil servant is allowed a month for every year, up to ten years, and then he comes under the Superannuation Act; but I cannot speak, of my own knowledge, that that rule obtains in the penitentiaries. I can say, however, that there is no person more economical in his way than the present Minister of Justice, and when he allowed this, he must have made up his mind that it was right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to the allowance, if it is in accordance with the allowances which have been made in former cases.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will ascertain the facts.

To pay G. F. Baillairgé for services in connection with the investigation at St. Vincent de Paul, held in 1884..... $550

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the nature of this, and who is this gentleman?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He is the Deputy of the Department of Public Works. He was selected by the Minister of Justice to make an investigation at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, into complaints which had been made; he was there for some time; he made a report to the Department of Justice, and this amount is compensation for those services.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This gentleman, as a matter of course, was drawing his usual salary from the hon. gentleman's Department all the time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The services may have been, and, I dare say, were, of considerable value, but we have had a number of instances, within the last year or two, of gentlemen employed in various Departments being detached on work that did not specially belong to them, and receiving pay for it, and other persons being paid to do their work; and it appears to me that the practice of paying an officer in full service special allowances is both liable to abuse and objectionable in itself. How long was this gentleman employed in the investigation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Several months, going and coming, and besides he had a great deal of work at night, in compiling the evidence and making his report. It was a very elaborate and a very confidential work; and the Minister of Justice asked me specially to allow Mr. Baillairgé to do it. He had to come back frequently to attend to his work in the Department, and then go back; and he had often to work at night, also, when he was at headquarters; so that the amount of money which is asked for these services is not a large amount, compared with the very great quantity of work he did at that time. Of course, as the hon. gentleman says, the officer is paid besides for his ordinary work; but, as the hon. gentleman is aware, when an officer is employed on a special service, the custom has always been to give him an additional amount to compensate him for the extra labor he has to perform.

To pay Dr. Sutherland, surgeon of the Manitoba penitentiary, for services rendered to lunatics confined in said penitentiary..... $ 290

Mr. WILSON. I would like some explanation of this. I see that the surgeon there is paid $600 a year for attending to the inmates of the Manitoba penitentiary, and this amount is to be paid to him in addition. It seems to me this sort of double pay is hardly fair. If you are not paying him enough, you ought to increase his pay; if you are paying him what is right and proper, he should attend all the inmates of this institution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right, but he is not quite aware of the circumstances. The lunatic asylum of Manitoba is kept up at the expense of the Provincial Government, and Dr. Sutherland, as surgeon, is paid by the Province; we have nothing to do with that; but outside of the Province, in the North-West Territories, we have a good many lunatics, I am sorry to say, and the Dominion Government has not yet built a lunatic asylum outside of the Province, and we have made an arrangement with the Province to maintain those lunatics in the provincial asylum, we paying so much a head; and this is an allowance to the doctor of the Manitoba lunatic asylum for his services in looking after those patients.

H. J. Morgan, 400 copies of the Dominion Annual Register..... $ 1,200

Mr. CASEY. I have not received a copy, and many of my friends say they have not received copies. I do not see why we should spend such a sum for this book. Certainly it is not worth $3. It is a small affair, a mere compilation, and not compiled by Mr. Morgan. I do not see why we should pay $1,200 to a man who is already in the employ of the Government, for work he is supposed to do in his spare hours, but which is really done by other people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not suppose it is a matter of consequence who prepares or writes the book. The question is, will we subscribe for it? It may be it is not well to encourage this book, but I think the editor should get notice, and not be put to the trouble of making it up. The hon. gentleman says $3 is a large sum. So it would be, if the book were one that could be largely circulated; but there are only a comparatively few people anxious to get copies of it, and if we are to have it, we must keep it up by a subscription of this kind. I think, on the whole, the compilation is fair. The yearly annual of political events in Canada is perfectly colorless; it shows no indication of party spirit in any way.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman sees it through the same colored spectacles as the author. It does not seem colorless to the rest of us. It seems to us we are paying public money for a book which is, to a great extent, a political publication, a book nominally but not really composed by Mr. Morgan, and in some cases those he has engaged to compile it have not, I am told, received their share of what he has been paid for the work. As to the necessity of annuals of the sort, if it is deemed to be necessary to have a publication of the kind it would be cheaper to keep a clerk for that special purpose, and pay him for compiling, and departmental printers for printing a perfectly colorless account. Although the hon. gentleman's contention may be quite correct, that he should be paid for this year, as he has gone on with the understanding that the book would be bought, it should be intimated to him that this sort of speculation should be given up.

Ontario Law Reports..... $251.32

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is an amount here of $251 for law reports. I suppose we are getting them annually, and I should like to know what this item is for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt it is to complete a set somewhere, either here or in the Supreme Court, or perhaps in the Department of Justice.

Deputy Speaker's salary..... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why should we be asked to pay $2,000 for a Deputy Speaker? I think we ought to have a full explanation. I do not know whether the Speaker himself ought not to be called upon to explain this item of $2,000. I am bound to admit that, this particular year the Deputy Speaker has done more to earn his salary, perhaps, than even Mr. Speaker himself, but I look upon the whole thing as decidedly objectionable, and as introducing a very vicious system. I do not think that, in this House, under ordinary circumstances, there is the slightest use for having a Deputy Speaker. Our previous rules gave us ample opportunity for relieving the Speaker of his duties in the Chair and elsewhere, and I think the whole business is uncalled for.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has spoken too late. The House has affirmed the necessity of having a Deputy Speaker; it has affirmed the necessity of relieving Mr. Speaker from the continuous labor and risk to his health caused by his sitting continuously in the Chair. The hon. gentlemen opposite ought not to say one word against the salary of a Deputy Speaker, this Session, at any rate. They tried him to the utmost; in fact, it was cruelty to animals; and they drove him into a fit of the gout, by sitting in committee for two months.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. gentleman is responsible for getting him the fit of the gout, because he had it immediately after he got the position.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are two kinds of gout. There is the rich man's gout and the poor man's gout.

Mr. WILSON. He had the poor man's gout before he got the salary, and now he has the rich man's gout.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is not only responsible for getting him the gout, by making him a rich man, but by insisting on sitting day in and day out on the Franchise Bill. I think the Deputy Speaker has good cause for asking compensation from the right hon. gentleman, personally, for his arbitrary conduct, but he has no right to ask it from the House and the country. I objected to the appointment of a paid Deputy Speaker, and I wish to record my objection again. His position is very different from that of the Speaker. The Speaker never has occasion to vote, except when the House is in committee, or to express his views, and is so utterly apart from the political contests of the House that it is very seldom that any suspicion of political leanings can rest upon his position in the Chair; and it goes without saying that any such suspicion is out of question in the present instance. The Deputy Speaker, however, except when he is in the Chair, takes part in all the bickerings of the House, and he is in receipt of a salary of $2,000, conferred upon him by favor of the Government. We all have an idea why the necessity arose for the appointment of a Deputy Speaker this Session. The hon. Premier could not have foreseen that the Session would be so long. It could scarcely have been on account of the amount of work to be transacted that the appointment was made. But we know that there was disappointment felt among Nova Scotian members because some one from that Province was not taken into the Government in place of Sir Charles Tupper, promoted to a higher sphere. And it was supposed that this was done to afford gratification to those members without the risk of opening a constituency. Public business did not require the appointment. It might have been necessary to have one or two members always on hand to take the Chair, when it was necessary, even during the laborious debate of the Franchise Bill, and that would not have been objected to. Members would have been willing to take that position, in view of the greater prominence it would have given to them. The Chair is ably filled on the present occasion by another hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is a foster brother.

Mr. CASEY. Others might have been found to do the same thing. I may say that the Department has clothed a gentleman of no long experience in parliamentary practice with permanent authority as chairman of committee, which I think might have been better distributed amongst several of the more experienced members of the House. His decisions are clothed with something of the authority that attaches to the decisions of the Speaker in the Chair; for we have to regard the decisions of the Deputy Speaker with more respect than those of gentlemen who may casually fill the Chair. The decisions of the Deputy Speaker have not always been consonant with the decisions that we have been in the habit of obtaining from the Speaker in the Chair, and this variety does not conduce to the soundness of parliamentary practice. For all these reasons, I object to the passage of this item.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would it follow as a matter of course that in the case of the elevation of the present Speaker to a higher position, the Deputy Speaker would become the Speaker of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. PATERSON. That gentleman is not present in the House, and I did want to take this opportunity of saying a few words, but it is not so pleasant to say them when the person is not present.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). It depends upon what the words are.

Mr. PATERSON. I wished, without reviewing the conduct of the Deputy Speaker, particularly to point out one thing where it seems to me that in exercising the duties of Deputy Speaker and permanent chairman of committees, it is very desirable to have a gentleman with a good deal of parliamentary experience. These positions have been filled in years gone by by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), and the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), and other gentlemen of large parliamentary experience. Sometimes questions arise in which it is necessary that a person of a very cool mind and temper, while possessed of the requisite knowledge, should be presiding, in order that proper effect might be given to parliamentary proceedings. I remember one case in which I considered I was placed at a disadvantage, and which there was a course of procedure that did not tend to bring credit upon the House—in fact, prevented the proper expression of the House from being had. It is perhaps in the remembrance of some members that when an appeal was taken from the Deputy Speaker to the House, upon one occasion, he reported to Mr. Speaker what I thought was not exactly the point of difference between the committee and the Deputy; and when the Speaker took the Chair I attempted to point out to the House what I thought was the difference, when, as I found by studying the practice, the Speaker very properly ruled that I should not do so; I found, by looking up the practice, that I should have argued that point with the chairman before the Speaker was called in, and that the committee should have agreed upon the point that was to be submitted to the House. Well, upon another occasion a circumstance of the same kind arose, and I rose to follow the constitutional practice, to have it understood and have it argued before informing the Speaker what the point of appeal was that was to be submitted. When I was, properly, as I thought, within my right, and speaking within my right, hon. gentlemen opposite misapprehending the purpose for which I had risen, thinking, perhaps, that I was desirous of speaking despite the chairman's ruling, made such a noise that it was impossible, perhaps, for the Deputy to catch exactly the point I was at. But it did seem to me that it was only proper that sufficient order should have been maintained, and that I might have been able to state what I wanted to say, and which I am fully convinced, from a study of parliamentary procedure, that I was perfectly right in saying; but instead of quelling the noise, the Deputy Speaker, while I was upon my feet, rose from the Chair, paying no attention to what I said. The

Speaker took the Chair, and I asked him then if I might be permitted to point out the question, and as he ruled that it was too late, I was left without remedy. Now, I considered that the Deputy Speaker at that time stated to Mr. Speaker the appeal to Mr. Speaker different from what I believed the appeal was. He put it in such a form that I did not consider the appeal was in that direction, nor did I consider the appeal was taken on that point, and the result was, that members on this side, who had appealed from the decision, were put upon record as voting for a proposition that they did not want to vote for. As put before the Speaker, it might fairly have been contended that it was proper that the Deputy Speaker's ruling should be upheld; but I contend that it was not put fairly, and in doing that those who had taken the appeal were put in a wrong position. I take this opportunity of saying that. I know that, perhaps, through the heat of discussion which we passed in committee, and when, from long hours, and a nervous system strained and taxed to the utmost, probably I said, and other members said, things that would have been better unsaid. But, after all, I do think—and I would say it if the Deputy Speaker were here, I would say it in all kindness—that at certain times the decisions were such as he could hardly maintain from the authorities. And on one occasion I did consider that he deliberately insulted me; I felt that I was deliberately insulted when I was making a speech in committee, when I was speaking pertinently to the point, when I gave a few figures that I had given in a speech on the second reading of a Bill, between two and three o'clock in the morning, when there were not more than 20 members in the House, and when I was giving those figures again in committee, as I had a perfect right to do, the Deputy, of his own motion, read a decision from English parliamentary procedure, where a member addressing the House was ruled out of order because he was repeating himself, and when I asked upon what occasion it was, Mr. Deputy Speaker did not give me fully to understand; but in looking at it I saw that this was a person who had spoken two or three times on a personal explanation; it had not the slightest application to the position in which I was. There was no rule, there was no parliamentary procedure that justified him in rising of his own motion to rule me out of order. When the decision was given, I felt so aggrieved at it that I did not feel like proceeding under the circumstances. I have only said this much because I think a proper sense of dignity impelled me to say it. I have no doubt, as the First Minister has said, the patience of the Deputy Speaker was taxed. It was a rather trying time for us all. The Deputy Speaker should show the fullest desire to maintain dignity and exercise caution in giving his decisions, for it is well understood that the Chair has much influence when the duties are discharged in that manner. I am speaking without any heat at the present time. I did feel, on certain occasions, aggrieved, and I felt that if the Deputy Speaker had possessed a little more parliamentary experience he would not have prevented my making some remarks which I desired to make on that occasion, and on other occasions, and he would not have told certain members speaking on this side, even an ex-Minister, to sit down—take your seat—in that peremptory, commanding tone, which tends to irritate. If the Deputy Speaker was laboring under bodily infirmity, I desire to make every allowance for that; but, nevertheless, I felt I would like to make these few observations, and I would have felt more at liberty to speak if the Deputy Speaker had been in his place. There is a wide distinction between the position of the Deputy Speaker and that of Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker is removed from party conflicts that take place on the floor of this House, and in the discharge of the duties of that office we have an officer that it is a pleasure and an honor to conduct our deliberations under. But the Deputy Speaker is in a different position. He is at liberty to take part in debate; he votes on every question that comes up; the tendency is to keep alive strong party zeal, that is common to us all engaged in our duties on the floor of Parliament. I trust I have made every statement in a proper spirit, and that the hon. gentleman, if he would agree with me that at the time he was a little hasty in giving his judgment, would remember that the position he occupies is one of very great power, and if anyone has a right to look to the presiding officer for protection, fair play and justice, it is a member of the minority in this House, while, at the same time, I do not desire to do anything that would be unjust to the majority.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot permit this item to pass without entering my solemn protest against the increased expenditure proposed in granting payment to the Deputy Speaker. In looking over the different items in connection with the officers of the House, we find that there is a very large annual expenditure and it is desirable that the representatives of the people should carefully consider the question, not only as to endorsing the appointment, but as to passing this item of $2,000 as salary to the Deputy Speaker. I wish to draw attention to the amounts paid to the four officers connected with the House. We have a clerk, at a salary of $3,400, and a superannuated clerk, who is walking around the streets of Ottawa, at a salary of $2,379.60, which makes in all for the office of clerk $5,779.60. We have an assistant clerk, at $2,400, and an assistant clerk, who is superannuated, and who is striding the streets of the city, at $1,543.93, which makes $3,943.92. These items make a total of $9,723.53 for two clerks and two superannuated clerks. The Speaker of the House receives a salary of $4,000, and the Deputy Speaker $2,000, which, with their sessional allowances, makes a total of $8,000; or a total for the four officers of $17,723.88. I think that is a very large sum. It is high time we should consider the items in connection with those expenditures, in order to see if they cannot be reduced. I have not a word to say in criticism of the conduct of the Speaker of the House; I can fully endorse the remarks of the hon. member for North Brant, with reference to the course he has taken in regard to any remarks I may have offered in taking a humble part in this House. There were occasions when the Deputy Speaker showed a little too much one-sidedness and venom in discharging his duties. He would have got through his duties with considerable more grace under other circumstances, and the Deputy Speaker would have more efficiently filled the position if he had possessed the characteristics of Mr. Speaker to a larger extent. However, possibly, after the Deputy Speaker has had practical experience for a number of years, he will discharge the duties better; but from the very large following possessed by the First Minister, some member might have been picked out who was a little more level-headed than the Deputy Speaker. I could not allow this item to pass without entering my solemn protest against the increased expenditure. The position was unnecessary. There are many hon. members who efficiently discharged the duties of chairman, and feel proud of the honor; but there was a desire on the part of the Government to make some position for this hon. gentleman, and so they made the position of Deputy Speaker. It was a very convenient mode, because it did not render it necessary for the hon. gentleman to appeal to his constituents. Thus it became necessary to create this office in order that the hon. gentleman might pocket the respectable sum of $2,000 without running the risk of losing his seat. I presume that was the reason why he was appointed. It is establishing a very bad precedent. Every Government will now want to have a Deputy Speaker. If ever my friends obtain office, I trust they will wipe out this statute, as a matter of justice to themselves and never consent to appoint a Deputy Speaker until there is more evidence of its necessity. I admit that the Session has been somewhat long, and that, perhaps, under very protracted sittings one member would have been tired of occupying the Chair during the entire discussion. Still, we notice that when Mr. Speaker was not in the Chair, several of the hon. members occupied it very efficiently quite as efficiently as the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. EDGAR. I am not going to discuss the propriety of the appointment of an officer to hold this position. Of course, during this Session, and if all Sessions were going to be like this Session, it might be necessary. But I am much afraid that the House did not make the best selection from amongst its members for that position. I have no personal grounds of complaint, because I did not often trouble the House, and when I did I was not ruled out of order; but I could not help feeling exceedingly pained at the manner in which the Deputy Speaker conducted himself, especially to those who are his seniors in practical experience. I particularly remember the occasion when the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), who was addressing the House in his usually pleasant, agreeable and orderly manner, was called upon by the Deputy Speaker in a way and manner in which a man might speak to his dog, but which he would not use to another hon. gentleman "to sit down, Sir! sit down, Sir." If he is to be continued in his position, I hope for the credit of the House and for the comfort of all its members, he will take a leaf out of the book of the hon. gentleman who usually fills the Chair, and try to imitate, not only his courtesy of manner, but his uniform fairness of decision.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not suppose it is necessary for me to vindicate the conduct of the Deputy Speaker. The House selected him, and I think they made a good selection. Strange it is, that while these hon. gentlemen are complaining of his impatience, and going so far as to challenge his impartiality, I believe the opinion of the majority of this House is that he extended unusual forbearance to the gentlemen of the Opposition. I believe there never was a case in which the rules of Parliament were so considerably broken, so purposely and ostentatiously broken, as during the debate referred to; and when the hon. member who last spoke says that the Deputy Speaker used strong language towards the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., he must remember that that hon. gentleman refused to obey; he was acting in a most unparliamentary manner, by refusing to sit down when told. There is no rule so fixed as that when the Speaker or Chairman in Committee of the Whole House rises, the member who is speaking must sit down, whoever he may be. There was a good deal of excitement in those days, and I am rather sorry that there should have been a revival of this discussion, but I merely repeat that I believe the opinion of the majority of this House is that the patience of the Deputy Speaker was exemplary, I might almost say, heroic.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman's words to pass unchallenged, as regards the conduct of the Opposition. The Opposition were in discharge of their clear duty and parliamentary right in resisting one of the most outrageous pieces of tyranny that ever was attempted to be put on the Statute Book, and they were most abundantly justified in every thing they did. I was not present on the occasion of the unhappy altercation to which the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar) alluded; but if any man in your place, or any man in the Chair, addressed another member in the terms which my hon. friend from Ontario has just repeated, he was using a very unfortunate form of language to be used by one hon. gentleman to another, and I trust it will never be repeated. If it be repeated, the consequences will be exceedingly unpleasant to the person using it.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this $2,000, which is asked by this vote, based on the services rendered during the present Session, or is this to be the figure which the House is to be asked to vote in future Sessions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. This is a permanent figure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. That being the case, we cannot measure the payment simply by the length of the present Session. If we take the Session of 1884, which, I presume, is a better precedent to go by than this exceptional Session of 1885, I find that during that Session the House sat in all 65 days, and was in session during those 65 days 366 hours and 30 minutes. I find that in that time the House was only in Committee on Ways and Means and Supply, in all, 14 days, and during a portion of the time in those 14 days the Speaker was in the Chair, while the House was not in committee. A fair estimate, as I am told by some hon. gentlemen who were present, would be to allow one-fifth of those 14 days as the time occupied by this body in the House with the Speaker in the Chair, and not in committee. Now, I may say that the House sat in those 14 days 112 hours, and if you take from those 112 hours one-fifth of the time, being the time in those 14 days that the House was not in committee, and during which hours you would not have required a Deputy Speaker, it leaves the remainder 90 hours and 10 minutes as the gross time this House was in Committee of Ways and Means and Supply during the Session of 1884. Now, I think it is fair to assume that the length of the Session and of committee work of the kind I have referred to is a fair indication of what will be the length of like kinds of work for some Sessions to come. That being the case, it is now proposed to attach to the office of Deputy Speaker the sum of $2,000, for discharging the duties of sitting in the Chair and taking no part as a member of the House, except in the capacity of chairman; and for sitting in the Chair for those 90 hours and 10 minutes he is to be paid $2,000, or at the rate of $22.22 per hour. I believe that is a high rate to pay, for many persons in this country. Now, it is to be borne in mind that the Deputy Speaker, as a member of this House, is sent here to discharge certain parliamentary duties; and for those duties, which he is supposed to discharge, he receives the ordinary sessional indemnity. To a certain extent, those whom he represents are necessarily disappointed, because he cannot give that attention to debate and to committee work which he would be able to give if free from the duties of Deputy Speaker. An Act has been passed creating this office, and that Act does not state what the salary is to be. This year we are told it is to be $2,000, and it is to be $2,000 in future years, until the House otherwise decides; but that will depend upon an annually recurring vote, and the amount is open to discussion on each occasion. The case is not like that of the Speaker, whose salary is fixed by statute, I believe. It seems to me we are making a mistake in placing this large sum at the disposal of the Deputy Speaker, considering that in addition to that amount he receives a sessional indemnity; and whilst he is serving the country as Deputy Speaker he is not serving the country as member, except in so far as the office of Deputy Speaker must be filled by a member. For these reasons, I think the expenditure is unnecessarily large, even if the office is necessary. I would not venture to offer my opinion on that point; but certainly the testimony of many members of experience is that the Deputy Speakership is an unnecessary appendage to this House; its many disadvantages were pointed out when the Bill was under discussion. I do not wish to recall any of the painful occurrences which have been referred to. I had a grievance myself, but I believe in forgetting such things, as much as possible; in fact, I will not let the sun go down on my wrath. But I have a feeling of sympathy for my companions. I can forget wrongs to myself, but perhaps I cannot so well forget when I see my friends suffer. However, I hope the discussion to-night will have a beneficial effect; and as we are soon to part, I do not wish to add anything to the acrimony of the debate. It only remains for me to endorse the tributes which have been paid to the presiding officer of this House, and to express my entire satisfaction with its choice of a Speaker.

Mr. CASEY. In my first remarks I studied to avoid any particular reference to the conduct of the Deputy Speaker, because he was absent, but the point has been raised since, and the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government has seen fit to say that he does not propose to vindicate the conduct of that gentleman before this House. I should like to know why he refuses to vindicate that conduct?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was not necessary, I said.

Mr. CASEY. On that point there is room for a very large difference of opinion. It is totally lacking in respect to this House to say that the conduct of a gentleman whose conduct has been attacked by members on this side of the House does not need to be vindicated. If this House is not to consider his conduct when it is voting his pay, I should like to know when his conduct is to be considered? With regard to that conduct, I am still restrained by the fact that the hon. gentleman is absent. Perhaps we should discuss the matter just as fully in his absence as in his presence; but one's natural feeling prevents one from doing so. I will merely say, then, that he has, I will not say consistently, but usually, when any warm debate has sprung up, conducted himself in the Chair in such a manner as to create the most strained relations between himself and the whole Opposition in this House. Whether he decided rightly or wrongly I am not discussing, but the manner of his decisions, and his disrespectful address to his senior members—and most of us are his seniors—were such as to create very strained relations. The right hon. gentleman says he approves of his conduct; he considers that his patience was heroic. If he approves of his conduct, he approves of disrespect to the whole Opposition in this House. I am not speaking now with personal animus, because, like my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) I did not come into personal collision with him. But as others have said, I have felt disrespect—what, outside of this House, would be called insult—to fellow members, even more keenly than if it had been addressed to myself. The right hon. gentleman would lead us to believe that it was inevitable—that our conduct was such that nothing else could happen.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. Some hon. gentlemen on the back benches call "hear, hear," in a sneering tone. Will they explain to me why there has not been any friction between the Speaker and the Opposition, or why there has not been any friction between any gentleman who has been casually called to the Chair and the Opposition? Will they explain why this gentleman who has been called to the Chair, not by the free choice of the House, but by the will of the right hon. leader of the Government, alone has created these strained relations. If they explain these questions, they will explain away the puzzle; otherwise, it can only be explained by the supposition that the hon. gentleman was overcome by his position, that he felt the enthusiasm of his position, and his duty to the right hon. gentleman who appointed him, so strongly, that he fell into this state of constant antagonism to the Opposition members of the House. Sir, we have endured from him language and manners which we have never had to endure from any Speaker or Chairman, in this House at any time during the fourteen Sessions that I have sat here, and which we are not going to endure in silence. I only hope these errors and faults are not inherent in the hon. gentleman—not necessary parts of his constitution as a Deputy Speaker, but that a little more experience and a little more appreciation of how parliamentary business should be conducted, of how it is conducted when he is not in the Chair, will lead to a change, and that, perhaps, next Session or the Session after—I do not see why not next Session—the relations between the Deputy Speaker and the Opposition may become as pleasant and smooth as those between the Speaker and the Opposition, and that he will learn from this absolutely necessary though painful discussion of his conduct in the Chair, how his conduct is regarded, and how he can make it as acceptable as that of his superior officer is. I say this without any reference to the hon. gentleman personally, because I admit there is the most marked contrast between the conduct we have to complain of in the Chair and his thoroughly courteous and pleasant manner out of the Chair. I only hope he will assimilate his conduct in the Chair to his conduct out of the Chair; and if he does, there will not be the slightest ground for dissatisfaction with it on this side of the House.

Mr. HESSON. I think my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) overlooks the fact that the Deputy Speaker was equally severe to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. I think the good nature of every gentleman in this House was drawn on very severely on that occasion, and my hon. friend must not forget that he had the privilege at any moment to leave this House when unpleasant things were being said. The hon. gentleman was not compelled to remain in the unpleasant position of listening to debates which he could withdraw from. If there has ever been a Session of this House since I have been a member that required the best of patience, good nature and gentle conduct, it was this Session, and I think the experience of my hon. friend the Deputy Speaker has been such as no gentleman on the other side would probably wish to undergo, during the eight or ten weeks when we had that unpleasant discussion on the franchise. Hon. gentlemen on that side could go to sleep, could withdraw to their rooms or play draughts, or do anything to amuse themselves or relieve their minds, while my hon. friend had to listen to the most unpleasant discussion before Parliament. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but they know it is a positive fact. Now, they complain that the Deputy Speaker found it necessary on some occasions to keep them within the reasonable limits of debate. He had occasion to draw the attention of the House to the fact that members on both sides were departing from the decorous course of debate, and if he had occasion to call hon. gentlemen on that side to order more frequently and to reprimand them more frequently than on this side, it was because they occupied very much more time. If hon. gentlemen opposite had said as little as we did, they would not have been called to order so often. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but some of them taxed ours and their own strength very severely in making 71 speeches; and it was certainly a much more severe tax on my hon. friend, who was compelled to sit there during all that weary discussion.

Mr. COSTIGAN. When the objection was taken to this item at first, I did not think the discussion would last as long as it has. I did not then know that the object was to make a personal attack upon one of the kindest and most courteous members of the House. I did not think that the attack that was made when that hon. gentleman's name was mentioned for the position he now holds would have been repeated; I thought that hon. gentlemen opposite, having once said what I then thought was a little too much, and that having said many severe things about that hon. gentleman during the Session, the propriety of voting his salary might be discussed on its merits, and that at least those personal allusions to the hon. gentleman might very well have been left aside. I was pleased to know that the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) did feel, in the absence of that hon. gentleman, under certain restraints, and would not say what he would if the Deputy Speaker were present. What he would have said had that hon. gentleman been so unfortunate as to be present I cannot imagine; he would certainly have wounded his feelings very deeply, and therefore I feel glad the hon. gentleman was not present. Now, there is no cause for the attack made on the Deputy Speaker at all. Every fair-minded member of this House, every one who witnessed the scenes that took place, every one who knows the duties that the Deputy Speaker has to perform, will see that he had a very difficult task indeed to discharge, and hon. gentlemen on that side must know that they made it most difficult for him to discharge those duties. It will not be difficult to recall to their minds this fact, that they resisted his authority.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I say yes. I think I am quite correct in saying that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No; you were not here.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Several hon. gentlemen on that side of the House refused to be called to order and allow the question to be put.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I say yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. When?

Mr. COSTIGAN. On several occasions. During the several weeks the House was in committee on the Franchise Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name one.

Mr. COSTIGAN. From the time the hon. gentleman was appointed, there was a prejudice on that side against the appointment, and hon. gentlemen opposite showed it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; and I know it, and I feel it just as much as the hon. gentleman does. Allusion has been made to the difference between the Deputy's conduct in the Chair and the Speaker's. Well, the Speaker's patience was not tried as the Deputy's was. The Speaker had no occasion to come in contact with the hon. gentlemen who carried on that series of long speeches against time, with the laudable object, it has been stated, of preventing the passage of a measure objectionable to them. The hon. the Speaker was not called upon to listen to that. A great portion of the discussion took place while the House was in committee, and the Deputy Speaker presided. He was the one who had to sit there and listen to the long speeches; he was the one who had to endeavor to keep hon. gentleman opposite within the rules, and during the excitement which some times ran high. Hon. gentlemen were disposed to ignore his authority. Some of those who have spoken have very wisely and kindly refrained from making personal remarks—I think it would have been better if they had all done the same, and confined themselves to the discussion of the item. The Deputy Speaker displayed the greatest amount of patience, of perfect control of temper, and I think any one would be unreasonable who would, taking everything into consideration, try to find fault with him and prejudice the public against the manner in which he discharges his duties.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). When the Deputy Speaker was appointed there was no prejudice against him on account of his nationality. The Minister of Inland Revenue is entirely mistaken when he states that, at his appointment, there was a prejudice on this side against him. The hon. gentleman says he feels it. I do not know whether he feels it or not. It is of no consequence; all I can say is, that so far as we are concerned, we had no prejudice against him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He was a popular man at the time.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I had always found him a courteous, genial person, and I believed, if we were to have a Deputy Speaker at all, that the hon. member for Halifax would make a good Deputy Speaker. We were opposed to the creation of the office, and we protested against that; but, in our own minds, I believed if we were to be saddled with a Deputy Speaker, he would make as good a Deputy Speaker as could be found on the other side. But it is quite a different matter as to how the Deputy Speaker acted when in the Chair. I quite admit the patience of any man would be tested to a considerable extent in a long discussion, existing over two months. We did not complain of that, but on the gruff and uncourteous manner in which gentlemen on this side were treated during the discussion. A man's patience may be severely tried, but that is no reason why his conduct should be ungentlemanly in the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It was not.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There was no necessity for his being rough in his treatment of hon. gentlemen on this side, as he was occasionally during that long discussion. I know we had reason to complain, and we complained more than once with energy, that he would give a ruling on a point one way one day, and the next day on the same point give exactly the opposite ruling; and when, occasionally, there would be a ruling against hon. gentlemen on this side, there would be, on precisely the same point, a ruling in favor of hon. gentlemen on the other side. We complained that the Deputy Speaker did not treat us with that consideration and courtesy with which he ought to have treated us. We complain, with reason, that gentlemen of experience and knowledge, gentlemen who have been in this House almost before he was born—who had been here, at all events, 25 years—were treated with the greatest possible disrespect. We complain there was an exhibition of temper the Deputy should not have exhibited. I have not a ground for complaint against the Deputy Speaker myself, because I take impertinence from no man. If I am allowed to defend myself, I do defend myself; personally, I had no complaint against Mr. Daly's ruling in my case. But I say it is an extraordinary thing that, in this instance, so many of our friends on this side have complained, and I think with reason; and that, since Confederation, we have never had any ground of complaint against the Speaker. Since the present Speaker has occupied the Chair no man on this side has complained, or has had any reason to complain, and if he was not a modest man and a lawyer, and was not present to-night, I might say what I shall not say in regard to him. But we are justified in expressing our opinion as to the Deputy Speaker. The majority of Parliament have seen fit to pass the Bill and to make the appointment, and that has passed beyond the region of discussion; but we have a right to express what we feel, and what we could not help feeling, as to the manner in which we were very frequently treated by the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. CURRAN. I cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing my heartfelt sympathy for the Speaker of this House. I cannot conceive what he has done to draw upon himself the enconiums of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He has done what is right.

Mr. CURRAN. And, no doubt, in his heart of hearts, he exclaims to-night, Timeo danaos et dona ferrentes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is that? Explain.

Mr. CURRAN. A gentleman on the other side says: What is that? I know thoroughly that he is totally ignorant of its meaning.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Translate.

Mr. CURRAN. However, as I am not here to give him a course of instruction, I do not intend to translate it. I simply rise to make a few remarks in addition to the admirable speech which has been made by the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue. I am glad to know that Mr. Daly is acknowledged, in this House and out of this House, as an Irish gentleman, and that he has acted as Deputy Speaker in a manner becoming the nationality to which he belongs and this House of which he is so distinguished a member. Although the last speaker has said that there is no prejudice in this matter and has been none against the Deputy Speaker, the speech delivered, on the occasion of his appointment, by the leader of the Opposition, when he spoke of him as a gentleman who had never occupied a prominent position in this House and had never rendered himself worthy of being elevated to his present office, shows that then there was a prejudice against him, and I think it existed from the fact that he belonged to our race as much as from anything else. That is what I have felt, and I thought then it was unworthy of the hon. gentleman who made the attack upon him, and who, more than once, had spoken of himself as one who belonged to our people. I say that, during the course of the long debate, which must have been trying to the patience of any man, the Deputy Speaker of this House displayed exemplary good nature and a spirit of justice—more than a spirit of justice—towards those who were wasting the time of this House and wearing out the patience of their fellow members. It was one of those things which we witnessed this Session for the first time in this country, and which I hope we have witnessed for the last time, when we found men getting up, and, hour after hour, wasting the time of the representatives of the people. On this side of the House I was one who spoke, and the Deputy Speaker called me to order. I did not complain of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No doubt you were out of order.

Mr. CURRAN. Perhaps I was. I bowed to the decision of the Chair. But I should be unworthy of the position I occupy if I did not defend a gentleman who has been publicly abused and spat upon, not only in this House, but throughout the Opposition press of this country, simply because they have organised a dead set upon a man who is entirely above their attacks, who is an Irish gentleman, and has always conducted himself as such.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the hon. gentleman thinks that is a speech to his credit, but if he does, he is much mistaken. It would not do him credit on any hustings, to say nothing as to its being made in the Canadian Parliament. It does not merit any reply at all—to bring in such statements, and so utterly without foundation.

Mr. CURRAN. So utterly without foundation?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). So utterly without foundation.

Mr. CURRAN. The attack was made so utterly without—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). So utterly without foundation. So utterly impossible is it for the hon. gentleman to prove what he said, of a prejudice existing against Mr. Daly because of his nationality, that I defy him to do it, and yet he has not hesitated to state that; and yet I tell him he cannot prove it.

Mr. CURRAN. I will prove it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would not like to be in the position in Parliament that I was not able to offer some proof for my statement, at any rate. As far as I am concerned, I have no prejudice against the Deputy Speaker, nor did I speak against him from that spirit. I re-echo what has been said by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), as to the opinion I formed of Mr. Daly in social intercourse outside; and what has taken place here has not marred that social intercourse, nor has it marred it, as far as I can see, on his part. I am speaking without prejudice of a person whose qualities, I think, were kind and courteous, and I am speaking in the hope that this may not be without fruit in future years. There is no one who will desire more than the members of the Opposition to see all proper respect paid to the Chair, and while I want to make every allowance for patience being taxed, I want to repeat, that if a chairman is unfortunate enough—it is a great misfortune, no doubt—to be unable to control his temper in a sufficient degree to speak to members who may be transgressing in a way that no gentleman should speak, if he must say, in peremptory tones: Sit down, Sir; sit down, Sir; I will not hear you; I have ruled; I think that will tend to bring discredit upon our proceedings and to arouse unpleasant feelings.

Mr. BOWELL. What should the Speaker do when a gentleman will not sit down when he rises?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Speaker should say, as our Speaker does: Will the hon. gentleman please take his seat. Then it would be done at once. As to the patience of the Deputy Speaker being taxed, hon. gentlemen speak of Mr. Daly as a member of the Conservative party in the House, and not as an impartial Deputy Speaker. What difference is it to the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker what length of time the discussion occupies?

Mr. LANDERKIN. The pay is going on.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No presiding officer will attempt to dictate as to the length of a speech or to manifest displeasure as to the length of a discussion. The presiding officer is not in the position of other hon. members, and when hon. gentlemen opposite speak about his patience being exhausted, they must remember that it is the duty of the Deputy Speaker to allow the fullest, fairest and longest discussion—only to see that proper order is maintained. I can remember more than one occasion when the First Minister was himself terribly out of order, and yet the attention of the Deputy Speaker had to be called to it before he took any notice of it. If I were to refer to the record, I could show you where we had a ruling of the Deputy Speaker in one direction on one occasion, and within a short time after a diametrically opposite ruling on this point. Now, I say these things without feeling the slightest prejudice against the hon. gentleman. I have no prejudice against him, and as to meeting him socially outside, there is no change in my feelings towards him. All I want is that he should act in a judicial manner, and give to the minority the same privileges and the same rights that are accorded to others. I have felt, Sir, that it was not on all occasions given to us; and I want hon. gentlemen opposite to remember that they must not talk about his patience being taxed; they are speaking of Mr. Daly, a member of the Conservative party in this House, but we are speaking of Mr. Daly, removed from political partisanship in the House, and occupying the impartial position of Deputy Speaker.

Mr. CASEY. I should not have said anything more on this subject if my hon. and Irish friend from Centre Montreal (Mr. Curran) had not raised the national question; but when one Irishman rushes into a fray there is almost always another Irishman to follow him. If that hon. gentleman had been here when an Irish gentleman—yes, a more representative Irish gentleman than even the hon. member for Halifax—occupied the Speaker's Chair in this House, when that Irish gentleman was attacked in the most abusive manner by hon. gentlemen opposite; when the Minister of Customs moved that his seat be vacated, when the First Minister said that he was bought up, and was no more independent than one of the pages in the House, when that Irish gentleman was thus attacked, I say that if my hon. friend had been here then he would have felt what it was to have a representative Irish gentleman attacked on account of his conduct in the Chair. I say that I felt it as an Irishman, and I resented it, and resent it still. I do not complain of the fact that Mr. Anglin was attacked in connection with the printing contract, which was a fair subject of criticism, but I complain of the manner of the attack, and I think it was most unfortunate for my hon. friend from Montreal to have spoken about attacking an Irish gentleman, and to have raised the race question; for if he raises it, I think the Hon. Timothy Warren Anglin can have as many Irishmen at his back—

Mr. CURRAN. Not as many as Burns.

Mr. CASEY—as any other Irishman in the Dominion of Canada. We did not put him in the Chair at the Table; we put him in the Chair of the House, and that is more than the Conservative party ever did for a representative Irishman. Sir, we all recognise the claim that the hon. Deputy Speaker has, of being an Irish gentleman, and nobody has ever denied it; we only complain that on some occasions he has, perhaps, allowed his Irish temper to run away with him. There is no intention to insult the hon. gentleman or to hurt his feelings, as was stated by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, in his very generous defence of a friend and colleague; but I think, if he has as much ability as we suppose him to have, instead of allowing his mind to rest upon any injury to his feelings, he will apply himself to learn the lessons of this debate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman says he regrets that my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) was not here on a former occasion, when a distinguished Irishman occupied the seat of Speaker of this House, having been put there by the hon. gentleman's party; and he referred to an occasion when the party to which I belong made an attack upon that gentleman, and alluded to the Minister of Customs as having led that attack. The hon. gentleman should have gone a little further and he should have explained that the present Minister of Customs was the mover of a resolution of censure upon the Government for having given the contract to the then Speaker of the House. There was no personal attack at all upon the Speaker. The vote was a vote of censure against the Government for having entered into a contract, contrary to law, with the Speaker of the House; and so strong was the case that the Government of the day, who had given Mr. Anglin this contract and made their supporters vote that motion down, sustain themselves with the pledge that as soon as it was done they would send Mr. Anglin to a committee, and would execute him for the crime for which they had acquitted themselves; and they did it, and turned him out.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), in his remarks to the committee, has cast a slight upon the action of this House. He found fault with the action of the Deputy Speaker, and said it was uncourteous and ungentlemanly. The hon. gentleman should not have made those remarks, and should retract them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not think I used the word "ungentlemanly."

Mr. HESSON. Mr. Speaker was called to the Chair; a statement of the question was put to the House, and the ruling of the Deputy Speaker was sustained by the House. The hon. member for Brant is therefore showing not only disrespect to the Deputy Speaker in his action, but also to the House, which supported the Deputy Speaker in his position. I think the hon. gentleman ought not to put this House in that position, and he ought to retract what he said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HESSON. That is exactly what I say. No hon. gentleman's "Oh, oh," or laugh, can make me take back anything that I say. I say this House has a right to some respect from members who address it, and when it supports the ruling of the Deputy Speaker, that ruling has no right to be attacked. I put that case strongly, because I feel that on that rests the whole foundation of this charge, whether the Deputy Speaker acted rightly or wrongly in the judgment of the House. My opinion is this—and I might also speak as an Irishman—that I have known the hon. gentleman seven or eight years, and have found him not only a gentleman, but an Irish gentleman. When I say that, I say a good deal, because we know that an Irish gentleman is always courteous to friend and foe alike. What respect did the hon. member for South Brant show to the feelings of the hon. gentleman? That hon. gentleman said that the Deputy Speaker was there as Deputy Speaker, and not as Mr. Daly. Would the hon. gentleman expect the Deputy Speaker to sit there like a stick, without feeling? The hon. member for Brant knows perfectly well that he himself, on one occasion, when an hon. gentleman rose to say something, called out to him to sit down, in a most brutal manner—"Sit down," he said, "sit down." If the hon. gentleman has forgotten it, hon. members on this side have not. Was that courtesy?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I felt a little sorry for that, and stepped over and spoke to the hon. gentleman immediately; and we are the best of friends. I was not in the Chair.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman must remember that other members want respect paid to their feelings as well as the hon. member for Brant. I trust the hon. gentleman will remember that in future debates. I rose more particularly to show that the hon. member for Brant was throwing discredit on the action of this House when he said the Deputy Speaker acted unfairly, and yet his ruling was sustained by the House.

Mr. CASEY. A few words in regard to the Anglin case. The hon. gentleman has stated correctly the nature of the motion—that it was, motion of censure on the Government. That was technically the motion; but the whole of the speeches made on that occasion were directed against the Speaker personally, those hon. members pointing with the finger and making most distinct and personal references. The hon. gentleman said that the Government induced the House to vote down the resolution of censure, by a promise to send the case to the Committee of Privileges and Elections, and there have him executed. The hon. gentleman states that most incorrectly. It was stated on behalf of the Government during that debate that they considered the matter one for investigation by a committee. It was not said, it would have been absurd to say, that the hon. gentleman was to be executed when his case was investigated before a committee. The Government did not know what the precedents in the case were, and not until after the committee had sat for several days did they come to a decision. I moved the resolution for reference to the committee. I was opposed in that view by the present Minister of Customs, who held that censure should be passed upon the Government without further enquiry, and spoke against an investigation. I opposed that view in a speech before I made the motion, and said this was not a case for immediate censure but for investigation. I was in favor of investigation first, and afterwards of censure, if it was shown to be necessary. My view of the case carried in the House at that time—I do not think it would now—and an investigation was held. It was found that the hon. gentleman was technically in the wrong. He went back to his constituents, was reinstated in his seat, and this party showed its appreciation and respect for him by reinstating him as Speaker of the House, where he held the respect of the whole House during the time he occupied that position. That is the history of the Anglin case, and it does not show, as the Minister of Inland Revenue thought to make it appear, any disrespect on the part of the Liberal party towards Hon. Mr. Anglin.

Mr. BOWELL. I only wish to say that part of what the hon. gentleman has said is quite correct; but the record does not show that I made any personal attack on the Speaker of the House. I did attack the Government, not only by resolution but by speech, setting forth the facts as they appear in the public records, my motion being a condemnation of the Government for what they had done in making a bargain with the member for Gloucester. I said nothing personally against Mr. Speaker, and I do not think the record will show that I did so.

Quarantine—Payments for immigrant patients,
Winnipeg and St. Boniface hospitals..... $15,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of this?

Mr. POPE. We made arrangements with the Winnipeg hospital for the admission of these patients at 45 cents a day, I think.

To take measures for extirpating the disease of sheep scab in part of Province of Quebec..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has the hon. gentleman been doing about this?

Mr. POPE. We found that sheep scab was prevailing very much in some of the counties of Quebec. We have been quarantining some, and we had to slaughter a good many. We were threatened that if any more sheep arrived in London they would be liable to be scheduled, so we have taken very active measures, and shall continue to do so, in the way of careful inspection and otherwise, to prevent this.

Mr. FISHER. Has there been any of this disease outside of the prairie district?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. In what counties?

Mr. POPE. In Terrebonne, in Laprairie, in Chambly, Napierville, and another county.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1886.

Mr. BOWELL presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the services of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1886; and in accordance with the provisions of the "British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 11th July, 1885.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the Message, with the Supplementary Estimates, be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:10 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 14th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

THE OFFICIAL DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in moving the third report of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the report of the official Debates, said: I may say that this report has now almost become ancient history, as it was presented on the 22nd of May, so that if hon. gentlemen will look at the Votes and Proceedings of the 22nd of May, they will find the report, the adoption of which I move. The report first recommends that the $130 which has hitherto been paid to Mr. Matthewson to keep in repair the caligraph writing machines, shall no longer be paid, as the amanuenses are sufficiently familiar with the machines themselves to keep them in order; so that I suppose there will be no objection to that clause, at any rate. The next proposal is that hereafter the members of the House shall receive but two copies of the bound volumes of Hansard instead of five, as they got last year. The most important proposal, however, is that the form of the Hansard volume shall be changed, and instead of having it in royal quarto, as it is now, the proposal is to make it an octavo volume, printed in brevier type instead of long primer, that is a smaller type, making it a very much more convenient volume to handle. Another proposal in the report is, that the official reporters, who are now employed by the year at an annual salary, and who are regular officers of the House, shall be employed, if the Government shall so determine, during recess, without extra remuneration excepting their travelling expenses, if they shall be sent anywhere during recess for such reporting as the Government may have to do of a special kind. Looking at what has been paid during the last three years for outside reporting, the average has been about $4,000 a year, and the suggestion is that that amount be saved by the employment of the reporters in that way. The general result of the change, if it is made, is that we expect to save, without reference to the employment of the reporters, about $4,000 a year, and if the reporters are employed, assuming that the same amount of outside reporting is to be done in the future, the saving will be about $8,000 a year. But I think it right to say that at this moment we are paying a very high price indeed for the printing of Hansard. When the Hansard was determined upon, the printing of it not being included in the contract for the printing of Parliament, special tenders had to be asked for. There was only one establishment in the city, that is the parliamentary printers, who were able to do the work, and they tendered for the printing at 60 cents per 1000 ems; I believe the contract price which they get for ordinary work is—I am speaking from memory—28 cts, so you will see that the price paid is more than double what we are paying for our ordinary parliamentary printing. Of course, there is this to be said, that under any circumstances the printing of the Hansard is worth more than ordinary printing, because the work is altogether night work. The copy goes from the reporters' office to the printing office, and the first sheets have to be distributed in the House early next day, so that practically all the work is night work, and is necessarily somewhat more expensive than ordinary day work would be. My own estimate is, however, that in the new tenders which are about to be asked for, for the parliamentary printing, at least 50 per cent. will be saved on the printing itself, that is, the composition and press work; the paper would be about the same price, assuming we pay the same price by contract that we are paying now; but a material saving will be effected in that way. These are the changes that are proposed. The daily edition will be exactly as it is now, circulated in the same way, and the Hansard will be in every respect, precisely as it is now, excepting that the form will be changed, and the number of copies each member will receive will be two instead of five, with the suggestion that the reporters shall be employed during recess, as they are now paid an annual salary instead of being paid solely for the Session.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings.) I am very sorry that I cannot agree with my hon. friend who has moved this motion. I believe that the Hansard has got to be a very expensive piece of furniture, if I may call it so. It has cost this House and the country a good deal more than appears on the face of it. I ask any hon. member who was in this House years ago, before the Hansard was established, how many speeches we had that lasted six hours? How many books were read from the Library? How many newspapers were quoted? Let hon. members who were members of the House before Hansard was established go back in their minds and think this over. We are doing a great injury to hon. gentlemen. Some of their heads, hearts and kidneys are getting affected by the long speeches. We have not the time and we have not the inclination to sit here and listen to five or six hour speeches from any man, I care not who. I say we have a right to be charitable and stop them. Some hon. members have read books and have uttered words that ought not to be uttered in this House, against the personal character of members, in order to get them into Hansard, and from there into their county papers. It is time this was stopped. If we are to have Hansard, let us allow the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition, and the Finance Minister, and the hon. member who answers him take their own time; but after that, the Hansard reporters should not be allowed to report any speeches extending more than one hour. There is not an hon. member who can stand up one hour and speak without books, papers, documents or written speeches. How many in this House can do it? I am unable to point to one who can stand up here and speak for one hour without documents. Few men can speak more than 15 minutes without taking up documents and quoting from them, or getting up speeches in their bedrooms. I am satisfied that the majority of the members will put a stop to it. I am convinced we have strength to wipe Hansard out. Why should we not do so? It is not alone a matter of $50,000. The hon. member for Cardwell put it very nicely. He is a printer. He says we will save so much on the printing and so much on the reporting. Travelling expenses are to be allowed to the reporters, and we know that it often costs as much to send an officer of a Department to do a piece of work as it is to get the work done in the locality. Not much is going to be saved in that direction. All matters of expense are very nice when they come before Parliament. It is not only the amount the people have to pay for Hansard but the length of time that has to be spent here by hon. members. This House is not blessed with rich men, with few exceptions, and members cannot afford to spend five months here. Their business and families require them at home. Unless the Government and the Opposition will agree to some arrangement as regards the length of the debates, I am satisfied Hansard will be voted down. If not, we can carry a motion in the direction of shortening speeches. Let us be charitable to those men with their long, insulting, unpalatable speeches, speeches that are not fit to be read. Now, as to the reports of the speeches. I go to the speeches of the Provincial Parliament of Ontario, and I say unhesitatingly the reports of the Mail and Globe are ten times better than the reports of this House. I say they are better, for they circulate among the people, and I contend the people of Ontario are better informed about matters before the Provincial Parliament than they are informed about the business of the Dominion Parliament. Before Hansard was established, those two papers gave the people reports and they were read throughout the length and breadth of that great Province—I cannot speak of the other Provinces. They did not, I will admit, report all the different speeches read by hon. gentlemen. Not a bit of it. They did not report when members read from books got from the library. They gave the gist and the truthfulness of the speeches made by hon. gentlemen. I hope that something is going to be done. We cannot afford to live here five or six months in the year. Had it not been for Hansard and the little unfortunate trouble we had in the North-West, and the fact that the Finance Minister had to go away, we would not have been here five or six months, but we would have been at home and been able to pay our honest debts and the interest on money we owe, and other obligations for which we are responsible. I repeat that we will take this matter into our own hands whether the Government like it or the leader of the Opposition likes it, and we will manage it. We are going to do it, and we have men to do it. If you want to wipe it out vote against the motion of the hon. member for Cardwell, and then you will settle the matter and we will not be here for five months next Session, and you will not have to listen to speeches and written documents. The Globe, the Mail, the Citizen and the Free Press, and the Montreal papers will not be able to get the books and they will not report them, and they will not pay for telegraphing them, and if they do not appear next morning they will not appear three or four days afterwards. The leader of the Opposition furnishes the Globe with three or four speeches of six hours long which occupies it during the Session. I have pity for the leader of the Opposition in making these speeches—his health cannot stand it. I move to wipe out that which I believe to be the cause of the long speeches.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) By voting against this motion the hon. member will not abolish Hansard. He will simply continue it at the increased cost. The proposal contained in the report is to diminish the expense. If the hon. gentleman desires to abolish Hansard he should move that it is inexpedient to continue the official report of the Debates.

Mr. CASEY. I did not catch the amount of saving that is expected to be made.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) I stated that the saving by the change of form will be about $4,000, and by the employment of the reporters during the recess about $4,000 more.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the hon. gentleman to state that when the present contract was out, Hansard could be printed much more cheaply than now. Has he made any estimate of what the saving will be?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell.) My impression is that the saving in printing afterwards ought to be between $5,000 and $6,000.

Mr. CASEY. A very considerable saving. I think, under the circumstances, Hansard, even if it is not reduced in bulk, will probably, in the near future, become a less expensive institution than it is at the present time. As for the proposition to make the reporters permanent officials, and to use them for official reporting outside of Parliament, I am inclined to think favorably of it, because we have seen in the Public Accounts, the enormous cost of reporting the proceedings of commissions, etc., by outside reporters. There was the case of the arbitration with regard to Section B, where many of the sittings were held here in this city, so that in the event of employing the Hansard reporters there would have been no travelling expenses at all, and speaking from memory, I think the cost of the reporting in that case was something like $8,000. Other cases of that kind must arise, and I think the probabilities are—in fact there will be almost a certainty—that there will be a very large and important saving, taking the year round, in reporting the proceedings of arbitrations, etc. If the Hansard officers were made permanent officers for the whole year at a salary, and if we could direct them to do this work without extra cost to the country, I believe their travelling expenses in cases where the reporting would be done outside of Ottawa would be a trifling item compared with the present cost of engaging outside reporters. With regard to the question of the continuance of the Hansard, which has been raised by the hon. member for Hastings, I wish to say a few words. That gentleman has taken a very decided stand against the Hansard, and he certainly cannot be blamed for adding much to the length of Hansard during this Session, and cannot be expected to feel any great personal interest in having the speeches delivered in this House, correctly reported. For the converse of that reason, as one who has occupied a considerable space in Hansard this Session, perhaps it would be well for me—

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Let us understand the matter; if you have any insinuations, out with them. Say whatever you have to say against me.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman must have a very bad conscience, indeed, if he fancies he sees insinuations against him in every allusion that is made to him in the House.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Speak out fully; none of your insinuations.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman must keep order and cease his rude remarks across the House in the first place; and in the second place, I may tell him that I made no insinuations, and that he must have a very bad conscience, a bad digestion, or a bad liver, if he thinks I alluded to him in any such sense as he thinks. What I said was that he contributed so little to the Hansard that he probably took no great amount of interest in the subject personally, and that as I spoke a good deal I might be regarded as unduly favorable to the Hansard, for that reason. However, I must take that risk, and say that however much some of us may have erred in the length of our remarks; however wrong we may have been in that respect, I believe Hansard is an institution which we cannot afford to dispense with. It may be regulated, and the length of our speeches may be regulated if you chose, but, apart from that, Hansard is a necessary institution. The hon. gentleman says it leads to lengthy speeches and to reading speeches. I think it was a most unfortunate thing for his friends that he should call attention to the growing habit of reading speeches, because that habit is almost entirely confined to his own side. I do not remember any hon. gentleman on this side who has read a speech this Session, but we have heard read, verbatim, a speech of three or four hours by a Minister of the Crown, taken volume by volume out of the hon. gentleman's hat, and sent out to the Hansard room. It went on in that way until we were all lost in amazement, and to parody the language of Goldsmith:

"—Still the wonder grew,
That one small hat could carry all he knew,"

on that subject. This growing practice, which has not yet become general, I am sorry to see introduced, and I think it well to rebuke it. I was glad when the hon. gentleman referred to it, and I hope the rebuke will be accepted. As to the great length of the Hansard on account of the debates on the Franchise Bill, I think that is more imaginary than real. The greater part of the extracts which were read were quoted in the night sessions or during the early hours of morning, when the speeches were necessarily rather rambling, and I would point out that, at such times the Hansard was not burdened with the extracts read, because scarcely any of them were put in Hansard. I know that on one occasion, a three hours' speech was made in that debate which, by striking out the extracts and giving only a reference to the books, made only  $1\frac{1}{2}$  columns of Hansard. I think this was the proper course under the circumstances, when the extracts were too voluminous, not to record them in Hansard, and thus prevent any great extension of that debate in its columns. The cause of our having a voluminous Hansard this year was the tremendous amount of business which we have had to do, and the fact that it was discussed more fully than usual. As every hon. gentleman knows, we have been in the habit of allowing business to go through here without sufficient discussion. That has been a fault on both sides. This year we desired to discuss matters more thoroughly, and the lesson to be learned from the unusual length of the Session, is that the Government should not give us too much business in one Session, and should give us as much of it as possible in the early part of the Session, when it can be thoroughly discussed. Experience does not point to the abolition of the Hansard at all, but to a revolution in the manner of conducting the business of the House, by the Government endeavoring to bring down the business early, so as to have it discussed at a time when we generally have nothing to do, and in that case we need not have more than a three months' Session in future, and yet the business of the country would be fully discussed. I say that the newspaper reports cannot be relied upon to give a full and fair report of what is said in this House. The newspapers of neither party report even their own friends with any degree of fullness, except in the case of some great speech which is specially reported verbatim. I say that the newspapers would not adequately report the debates of Parliament, and no man in the House could afford to trust his reputation as a politician to the reports which appear in the party newspapers. I say the papers do not report the members of their own party at all fully and they report their opponents unfairly, and an authoritative record of what is said in this House is quite as important as a record of what is done. This is a consideration which applies to every member in the House, and if it applies to private members, it applies with still greater force to members of the Government, and party leaders generally, of whose statements there ought to be an authoritative report so that their position may be known, and so that they may be held to account for what they say. For all these reasons, I must adhere, as I have always done, to the idea that we should have a Hansard. The question of having it economically managed is quite another thing; that is a question for the Printing Committee, and they have certainly this year shown some desire to secure economy. But I must object to the cutting off of the number of copies hitherto given to members. I do not think five copies are at all too many for any member. I believe every member of this House feels that he can very well apply the five copies—that there are at least four persons in every constituency in Canada occupying sufficiently important positions, and sufficiently posted in political matters to be entitled to receive a full report of what is done in the House. If we only get two copies, we can only give one to a friend and that is certainly a stingy allowance. I regret also that the proposal to give bound copies to the newspapers has been dropped. I think economy could easily be effected in another direction to allow this to be done; and it would be a great convenience to the newspapers to have them. For all these reasons, while I agree with one of the proposals of the Printing Committee, I have to differ from those to which I have referred, and I differ in toto from the proposal that the Hansard should be abolished.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The result of the present Session has convinced me, that Hansard is at all events a very expensive gratification to many of the hon. members of this House. I am one of those who believe that almost any subject can be fairly ventilated in an hour or an hour and a half; yet we have witnessed during the present Session the spectacle of hon. members of this House occupying its time all the way from two hours up to seven and eight hours in the discussion of subjects which to any fair and reasonable mind could be discussed and decided in much less time. It is not alone that we have to place in the Estimates a large sum of money for the mere publication of the Hansard, but the length of time that this Session has dragged out in consequence of the existence of Hansard and in consequence of hon. members wishing their lengthy speeches and the long extracts they read placed in Hansard, makes it something more than a mere expense to the country—makes it a very serious inconvenience to hon. members of this House who have anything to do at home. I am quite willing to concede that in the future, it may be, Hansard would be a very valuable document to refer to, containing a report of the legislation of this country and very many useful things for future generations; but, Sir, we have to legislate for the present as well as for the future, and I have every confidence that in the press of this country the speeches of hon. members of this House that are worth reporting will be reported fairly and well. Without saying anything further, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Cochrane:

That all the words after "That" be omitted, and the following inserted instead thereof: the publication of Hansard be hereafter discontinued.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was rising when my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) rose to make his motion, in order to suggest to my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. White) not to oppose this motion now, for this reason: We do not know what the House of Commons may decide, and, if Hansard is to be maintained, it is better to adopt this report, because its object is to reduce the expense; then on the second Order of the Day—the further consideration of resolution 37 reported from Committee of Supply, which is the vote for Hansard for next year—the motion of my hon. friend from Brockville can properly be made. Speaking for myself individually, after what I have seen of the increasing volumes of Hansard year after year, and especially the immense edition we shall have this year, I must say I am not favorable to the maintenance of Hansard. I think it is an expense that the country can dispense with to advantage. If we continue as we are doing every Session, we shall after a while have a new library. This year I do not know how many volumes we shall have, and the expense is very large. I will not say a word of the speeches that have been uttered in this House; we must suppose that the speeches of hon. members of this House are worth reporting, but I am sure the country will believe that if we had not a Hansard the Sessions would not be so long, and there would not be so many speeches. Therefore I would recommend my hon. friend from Brockville to postpone his motion until we come to the vote for next year, because even if we reject this report the vote of money would remain.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hastings). Would the hon. member for Cardwell give the House an approximate idea of the expense of the Hansard, including salaries, during the present Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened to the suggestions the hon. Minister of Public Works has made to the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) and I must say I do not approve of them for two reasons. The hon. gentleman says that if this motion is withdrawn and the original motion to adopt the report of the committee is carried, that will reduce the expense; but does he not see that if the motion of the hon. member for Brockville is carried there will be no necessity for the motion of the chairman of the committee? It will wipe it away. Does he not see that he places the supporters of the hon. gentleman behind him in a false position? If the amendment is withdrawn and the motion of the hon. member for Cardwell is carried, the House will be in the position of practically endorsing the continuance of Hansard. They do another thing: If the suggestions of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the hon. member for Brockville that he should move to abolish Hansard as an amendment to the vote in Committee of Supply, what position is he putting his friends behind him in? They will have to vote against going into Committee of Supply, which would practically defeat the Administration. At all events, that is not a fair and square way of dealing with this matter. I like the motion of the hon. member for Brockville. I express no opinion as to the course I will take upon it; but it is the fair and square way of dealing with this thing. Now, I will say a word for the Hansard people. I must pay them the tribute of saying, so far as the reports of my speeches are concerned, that never, from the first time they have started to the last, with one slight exception, have I had occasion to call attention to any inaccuracy; I think the work is well done, and if we are to have a Hansard, I doubt if we could find a more efficient set of men than the gentlemen we employ to-day; but we know that the volumes have swollen to an enormous size in consequence of the time taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite, and with a few exceptions on this side as well. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but I think they will admit that three-fourths of the time of the Session has been taken up by their long speeches. I know it is not palatable to the hon. gentlemen on that side, and perhaps not to some on this side. I am looking for the six-hour men. I see one of them is out now. I will say this, that I believe Hansard has prolonged this Session two months at least, and if we are to have a recurrence of these lengthy Sessions, what between the Government being unprepared to bring down their measures and the Opposition being determined to obstruct them, when they do bring them down, we have lengthened this Session until it is nearly six months long. I presume it will be that length before we get through with it. Hon. members talk of adjourning Saturday. My impression is, the way business goes on, we will not get away Saturday week. How many gentlemen listening to me will be content to come back here as representatives in Parliament, if the precedent set this year is to be followed in future years? If we cannot get men to come, under such circumstances, and if we know where the fault lies—and one fault is the fact that hon. gentlemen are so fond of seeing themselves in

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Hansard, that they take hour after hour getting their speeches ready and delivering them; in place of presenting their views to the Chair succinctly and clearly, they give us essays and extensive extracts which go into the Hansard, and the speeches are then published in pamphlet shape and sent through the country as campaign documents.

Mr. SPROULE. It helps the newspapers.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon. gentleman ran a daily paper, he would find the prolongation of the Session affected his pocket to the tune perhaps of thousands of dollars, and I feel it in my pocket. If we see an evil in this thing, we ought to remedy it. There has been a crying evil this Session that we ought to remedy. Means should be taken to cause hon. members to make fewer speeches, but good speeches, to make their points in a business like way, and not speak for hours in order to fill up page after page of the official Hansard so that they may send their speeches to their constituents.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the hon. gentleman have the goodness to state who it was who read the essays in the House. Only one essay was read in the House this Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. There were two essays read this Session.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I heard but one.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was one on each side of the House. There were speeches, useless, long speeches, with extracts from books and papers, and prepared speeches made with no other object than to delay business. This evil exists on both sides, and we ought to remedy it. I regret to say that I will vote to abolish Hansard, but I see nothing else to be done, and I hope the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) will adhere to his resolution, and test the feeling of the House on this point.

Mr. MILLS. I do not concur in the views expressed in the resolution of the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), nor do I admit the correctness of the views expressed by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). The official reports of the Debates of this House we have had for some eight or ten years, and the same motive that has operated on the minds of hon. gentlemen this Session operated on the minds of hon. gentlemen before, and if the Debates have caused the Session to be lengthened this year, it operated quite as strongly in former Sessions as in this. That does not account for the length of the Session; it had nothing whatever to do with it. I utterly deny that any considerable number of hon. members, I doubt whether a single member of the House has made a longer speech than he would otherwise have made, in consequence of the debates having been published in the Debates. If the Debates have lengthened this Session by two months, how is it that it had not that effect in previous Sessions? We have had a Session of ten weeks. How is it we have had a Session nearly three times that length now? It is not because we have the Debates, because we had it before; it is because of the character of the measures introduced by the Government and the time they were brought forward. We were here nearly ten weeks before the measures of the Government were submitted. The time when Parliament should have risen was the time Government measures first began to be laid on the Table. I say it is the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches who are responsible for the length of the Session, and not the official publication of the debates. The only measure introduced this Session on which there was a long discussion was the Franchise Bill. I believe ten weeks elapsed between the time when the committee rose until we went into Committee of Supply again. The House sat from day to day considering the measure. Why was the discussion so long? It was because the Government sought to force the measure through, before there was an opportunity of informing the country of the character of the measure. We pointed out at the time the objectionable character of the measure, that the opinion of the country had not been taken upon it, that the course taken by the Government on that measure was an unconstitutional and arbitrary course, one that struck at the very foundation of government in this country, and yet they persisted in that measure. We had no opportunity, we were denied the opportunity of informing our constituents of meeting them face to face on this measure. We had no way of imparting information to the country, except in that indirect way by discussing the measure from day to day in the House. The time taken by the Government in the consideration of the measure was sufficient to enable them to carry through the entire business of the Session, if they had chosen, but they were not ready. They were anxious for the protraction of the debate, and when the debate was over we saw the House adjourn again, time and again, because the Government had not made such arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway, with whom they are proposing to deal, or whom they are seeking to conciliate, or some other company whose support they are seeking outside the House. That caused the length of the Session. Hon. gentlemen undertake to shift the responsibility from their own shoulders to the shoulders of members of the House, and say it is because hon. members want their speeches to appear in the Debates. I do not believe that is true; it is a calumny upon the members of this House; but I do say it is important there should be an official report of the debates.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS. Hon. gentlemen say no, but I will call attention to the manner in which the debates are reported by the press of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I find the Toronto Mail has attributed to me, upon the subject of Excise duties, remarks I never used. The Toronto Mail makes me say:

"Hon. David Mills said there was no sufficient reason for placing of additional burdens upon people by increasing duties upon whiskeys. It was evident to him that as the distillers took an unusual quantity of liquors out of bond, they must have been informed in advance of the intention of the Government to increase the duty."

I never said anything like that. Yet I find that repeated in the Mail two or three times over and quoted in several Tory journals; and I find the following article in the Montreal Witness based upon that report which put words in my mouth I never used:—

"The Hon. David Mills, if truly reported, will have to be added to the list of persons unfit to represent a Canadian constituency. Although he voted on the Scott Act question against permitting the sale of beer and wine, he must have done that, as Mr. Goldwin Smith would put it, under pressure from the fanatics of his constituency, or else, differing from Mr. Smith, he thinks whiskey a more wholesome beverage than these, and one that ought to be encouraged. He actually complained of the increased burden the spirit tax would lay upon the people. Poor people! stunted of their whiskey. We have heard incessantly of late of the intemperance of temperance reformers. According to Mr. Mills, even Sir John Macdonald is an intemperate reformer, going altogether too far when he adds to the taxation of the poor people's whiskey. We welcome Sir John into the ranks of the fanatics."

Here you have a speech manufactured, words put in my mouth I never used, the report repeated two or three times in the Mail, copied in several Tory journals, and then an article founded upon the report in another paper, assuming it to be true. I have not the least doubt that it would be insisted upon, notwithstanding my denial that I had used those words, if we had not an official report which shows that no such language was employed at all. We understand why hon. gentlemen opposite are so anxious to get rid of the Debates. The hon. gentleman made an attack upon the hon. member for West Durham because he occupied six hours in discussing the grievances of the half-breed population in the North-West. The hon. gentleman forgets that Mr. Burke occupied eleven days in discussing the grievances of the people of India. Was that an improper proceeding? Why did he take up so much time? Because of the number of documents to be cited in proof of the charges he had brought against Warren Hastings. My hon. friend felt it necessary, from the fragmentary information the Government has placed at the disposal of the House, to quote a number of documents for the purpose of establishing the charges he made against the Administration. There was not a word or a syllable in the motion which my hon. friend submitted to the House that was not sustained by the evidence he produced. How did the hon. gentlemen meet that charge? First, by talking beside the issue, by speaking against an Administration whose conduct they did not impeach at the time when they were in power, and now by talking against my hon. friend on account of his having made a long speech. We all know why the hon. gentlemen have done this. There is no other evidence that they have, and the country will have no difficulty in understanding why it is that this motion has been made, and that my hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) has been attacked by hon. gentlemen opposite on account of the speech he made on the North-West question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Really, Mr. Speaker, there must be some order kept, and you were evidently not listening when the hon. gentleman who just sat down was clearly out of order. He quoted a previous debate, and tried to impute motives to hon. members which arose out of that previous debate. The hon. gentleman has no right to make this a party question. He does not know what course I am going to take on this subject, for instance. It has nothing to do with that debate to which the hon. gentleman refers, but it is simply a question whether we should have a Hansard or not, it has nothing to do with the political discussions which have arisen in this House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to say a very few words pertinent to the question before the House. I notice that there is considerable feeling in the House in favor of the motion which has been offered by the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood). I think that feeling is rather apparent, and I regret it somewhat, because I am one of those who, from the first day that official reporting was adopted, in the House, have been in favor of it; and we have felt our way along, and worked along through difficulties which are incident to the inauguration of a new system, in almost any matter, and we have now arrived at a stage I think, of almost perfection in reporting the debates of this House.

Mr. FARROW. Look at the size.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Looking at the size does not say anything against what I am stating, that we have arrived at a state of almost absolute perfection in reporting the Debates and giving them to us when they are serviceable and at the time agreed upon. We have passed through the stages of having the Debates published and in our hands two or three weeks after the time when they were delivered, when they were practically useless. The Hansard Committee seemed to me to have been bending their energies in the direction of making the official reports complete, and they have succeeded in doing so, and have succeeded in enlisting in our service a staff of men who are so capable to discharge the duties they have to fulfil that it is highly questionable if their equals can be found. If we adopt the motion of the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood), we should be doing a very great injustice towards a very able staff of men who were constituted, and who are, as I understand, permanent officers of this House, and they may be ruthlessly scattered in this way, they may be suddenly dismissed without a word of warning, eight or nine permanent officers of the House may be treated in that way without any warning, but I feel persuaded that, if the motion of the hon. member for Brockville prevails, if these gentlemen are scattered, not more than one Session will elapse before it will be decided, I believe almost unanimously, that we shall again have a system of official reporting of the debates, with all the difficulties to be encountered again, with the men to be got together again, and I feel that in adopting this motion we would make a very serious and a very great mistake. When a young member of the House, when the debates were first commenced, I supported the proposition at that time, particularly from this view, that I noticed that the press had not sufficient reporters to report the whole of the proceedings in Parliament, I noticed—what no one could fail to notice—that the press gave prominence to the speeches of members of the Government and of the leaders of the Opposition, as could only be supposed, but the great mass of gentlemen who sat behind either the members of the Government or the leaders of the Opposition, were not reported at all, or, if they were reported, the report was necessarily much condensed, and that a party was, in consequence of this condensation, very often made to say the very opposite of what he intended to say. One can quite understand that, when there is such a great condensation, it is impossible to give the sense and meaning of a speech. I did think at that time that, however humble might be the position occupied by members who had been elected, if they saw fit to speak on some subject, it might be that they were as thoroughly conversant with those subjects as even the leaders of the two parties. It might be a local matter on which they spoke, and their utterances were worthy of being placed on record in such a position that they could be referred to. While thinking that in reference to the newer members, I did think also that the speeches of the leading statesmen of Canada, the men who are entrusted with the duty of managing the affairs of this great and growing country, and the speeches of those opposed to them, who watch and criticise their pretensions, should be put on record in order that posterity might be able to read what was said in Parliament, and that the history of Canada should be compiled in that way. I have not changed my views up to the present time. I recognise that there is a feeling almost of bitterness in the breasts of some because we have been retained so long this Session. It would only produce acrimony if I were to say anything as to what I consider the cause of that. The First Minister has stated that it is no cause of this discussion, that this is not a party question, but that we are discussing it on its own merits. But this I will venture to say, without arousing any feeling or leading the mind away from the question, that my own firm opinion is—and I hesitate not to express it—that the existence of Hansard had nothing more to do with the prolongation of this Session than anything that hon. gentlemen might choose to mention. With reference to Hansard conducing to long speeches by members, my opinion is the very reverse of that. If I may speak from my own sentiments and my own feelings—and one in doing that will not entirely misjudge the sentiments and feelings of others—my opinion is that, if there be one thing more than another that would tend to make a public man careful in the utterances that he makes in Parliament, it is the fact that his utterances are being taken and reported by gentlemen whose duty it is to do so, and who discharge that duty impartially. Sir, my own opinion is the very opposite of those who have spoken in the sense of the Hansard prolonging the speeches, and that instead it is my own firm conviction that the tendency is in exactly the opposite direction.

Mr. TASSÉ. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I must say that I entirely agree—which is a rather unusual fact—with Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

the views expressed by the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Paterson, Brant). I am of opinion that if the House, in its wisdom, decided to abolish the Hansard that a single Session would not pass by before it would be again re-established. Indeed, this has already taken place since the principle of the Hansard has been adopted; we have seen the Hansard abolished and all its staff scattered, and at the next Session Parliament re-established it. I do not hesitate to say that if Parliament decides upon abolition to-day, during the next Session or during the Session next following there will be a majority in favor of the re-establishment of the Hansard. Hence, I agree with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I must, consequently, have heard with regret the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Public Works, who pronounced in favor of the abolition of the Hansard. Still, I agree with him on more than one point, and especially on the fact that the cost of that publication has considerably increased since 1875, in which year we commenced to publish it, as the following figures will show:

1876.....	11,280
1877.....	15,456
1878.....	19,007
1879.....	19,130
1880.....	16,286
1881.....	24,099
1882.....	26,126
1883.....	28,494
1884.....	38,114

I do not know what the figures will be for the current year, but I presume that the expenditure will be much larger than it was last year. And on this point I perfectly agree with the hon. Minister of Public Works; the expenditure in the past has been too high and even excessive. But because the expenses are too high it does not follow that we should destroy an institution which is in itself useful to the country and Parliament. I believe that instead of destroying it we should, on the contrary, try and amend, improve and perfect the system followed until now. The report made by the Debates Committee is an important step in the direction of a sound and good economy. According to the figures given by the hon. chairman of that committee, if that report is adopted there will be a probable reduction, first in the printing of the Debates, and again by the employment of the reporters, whose services will be utilised as stenographers before the courts, and again, through the reduction in the number of copies given to each member; there will be, I say, a reduction in the expenses of $13,000 per year according to the hon. chairman of the committee. Well, Mr. Speaker, that reduction is quite large, and I believe that the House, instead of adopting the motion of the hon. member for Brockville (Mr. Wood) should unanimously adopt the report of the Debates Committee, which is conducive to progress and sound and substantial economy. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we might make further economy besides that which is suggested by the committee, and that economy is embraced in the proposition which I am about to make to the House, and which I hope will be adopted. I believe that instead of reporting verbatim the discussion which takes place when the House sits as a Committee of the Whole on the Bills, they should be summarised and boiled down. By this means the Hansard for this year would have been considerably diminished. It is true that a great portion of the eloquent effusions which we have heard from the hon. gentlemen opposite during the famous debate on the Franchise Bill would have been lost to us; but I believe that the House would willingly sacrifice that pleasure; I even think that the hon. members opposite, after they reached their homes, when they had an opportunity to read their speeches, would also be willing to make that sacrifice, because I must say that the Opposition has made a real abuse of eloquence, from the beginning of the Session, and the most guilty of them all is the hon. leader of the Opposition. I find that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has all alone covered 253 pages of the Hansard.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Is there a word too many ?

Mr. TASSÉ. (Translation.) The next great offender is the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who occupies 134 pages ; the third is the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), with 119 pages ; the fourth is the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), with 98 pages. Well, Mr. Speaker, by the proposition which I am about to make to this House, if it is carried, if it had previously been adopted, a great portion of the speeches which have been delivered by the hon. gentlemen opposite would have been laid aside ; and, consequently, a great portion of the expenditure involved in the publishing of the Hansard would have been avoided. In the third place, I believe it is unfair to have every year a debate on the question whether we should abolish that publication or not. I believe it is unfair towards the officers, the reporters, the translators and their assistants, who, until now, have proved that they would perform their duties in the most efficient and useful manner. Well, every year these officials have the sword of Damocles suspended above their heads, every year they are threatened with dismissal, although they have been for several years in the employ of this House. Mr. Speaker, the principle of publishing the Debates has been adopted since 1875, and having been ratified by the present Parliament, it seems to me, in my humble opinion, that that principle ought to be maintained, and that instead of destroying the Hansard we should amend it, make it more perfect and improve it in the direction indicated by the Hansard Committee. To give effect to the proposition to which I have referred, I beg to move the following in amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Brockville :

That all the words after "That" be struck out, and the following be substituted to the main motion : It is the opinion of this House that the verbatim reporting of the debates taking place in Committee of the Whole on Bills should be altogether dispensed with, and that only a brief analytical report be made instead.

Mr. SPROULE. While I agree with a good deal that has been said by hon. members who contend that Hansard has done much towards lengthening the Session and towards compelling us to listen to long and tedious speeches, still I must say that I do not agree with the opinion of those who desire to see the Hansard abolished. Some seven years ago when the system was discussed in this House, I was in favor of it, and I was in favor of it for some of the reasons that have been expressed here to-day, and especially those mentioned by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I found that in the press of the country there was a habit of reporting at length important members of this House, while the great majority of the ordinary members of the House were cut off with a few lines that did not convey any intelligent idea of their opinions on the public questions of the day. If evils have grown out of this system I think we should direct our attention towards remedying them. I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the member for Brant, when they say that the staff which we now have in the House has been improved from year to year until at present it is, perhaps, as near perfection as we could expect to have it. I must say that the reporting that has been done during this long and tedious Session is a credit to that staff. I must say also that I believe it is important that we should have some official record of the debates and proceedings of this House. It would be useful to future Parliaments and to future legislators in this country to refer to. It would also be useful for the reason that it correctly conveys the opinions expressed by hon. members in this House, and they cannot be contradicted in the country. It will be useful also as showing the opinions of members on certain measures that are passed through this House, and it is afterwards almost compulsory to refer to them, in order to find the interpretation of the clauses of various Acts and various measures that have been passed. Now, for these reasons I am still in favor of the Hansard. I believe if the proposals made by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) were adopted, that is to reduce the number of bound volumes that are given to members of this House, and to cut down the expense in various other ways, we would go a long way towards remedying many of the evils that have been complained of, and of diminishing the expense of the Hansard. Then, again, if those reporters are employed during the recess of Parliament in reporting for the courts, for which we have to pay large sums at the present time, a very large item of expense will be saved to the country, and in the other ways suggested by the report, substantial saving can be effected. For these reasons, I must say that I am still in favor of continuing the Hansard, only adopting such amendments as may reduce the expense, but still continuing an official report that we can always depend upon. I believe a good deal might be said about the long speeches and the lengthy Sessions, but there is no reason why we should not adopt some plan that would compel shorter speeches being made in the House, and when that is done I think the length of the Session will be reduced, and that the success of the present system will be secured.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé), and also to the amendment that was first proposed by my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood). I feel that it is of the greatest importance that we should preserve an official record of the debates and transactions here. These discussions contain a very large amount of valuable matter, useful both to ourselves and to the country. Many of the speeches are the result of days and weeks, and some even of months, of study, thought and preparation. In many of the speeches we have a great amount of valuable statistics, gathered from a great variety of sources ; in other speeches we have collected the opinions of eminent and distinguished men, and the result of scientific investigation and research. Many of the speeches to which we have had the privilege of listening here contain a connected presentation of important facts and events which are transpiring in our own time, or which have transpired in the past. These addresses are full of interest, and possess considerable historic value. Then, Sir, in another class of speeches to which we listen here, we have the results of past legislation considered and reviewed. The policies adopted at different times by different Governments and in different countries, their influence upon society, upon public morals, upon trade, commerce and manufactures, and upon the general prosperity of the different countries affected, are all carefully analysed and compared. All this vast amount of information is furnished us in the speeches which are delivered in this House, and it is so arranged as to be in the most convenient form, both for the present use and future reference I feel that this vast amount of labor should not be lost, that it should be most carefully preserved. Then it must be remembered that many of our debates have additional importance from the high standing and character of those who take part in them. We are glad to know that we have in this House men possessing the strongest minds, the best brain and the most cultured intellects to be found in this country. A large portion of the speeches delivered here, at least in ordinary Sessions, are delivered by men who are the leaders of public opinion in this country, whose views shape the policy which will influence its future destiny. These are the men who are making Canadian history. In a few years, when we are gone, the historian of the future will review what they have said and done. I feel it is due both to those who hereafter will write and who hereafter will read the history of this country that we should leave them, not only the results of our deliberations here, which will be found embodied in our Statute Book, but that we should also furnish them with the causes which lead to those results, that they might know the reasons which influenced us and the motives which influenced us and the objects we had in view in our legislation here. And that important object can be gained. We can give them that information only by leaving them a true and authentic record of the debates which take place in this House. Reference has been made to the cost of the Hansard. I admit the amount of cost appears large, but I consider this a matter of secondary importance. I am willing that the cost of Hansard should be reduced so far as it is possible to do so, consistent with preserving a true and faithful record. I am willing, if it is found necessary in the interest of economy, that the daily issue shall be discontinued. I am willing to endorse the report submitted by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), that the number of bound volumes which we receive shall be reduced to two. But I feel this: We have already expended a very large amount of money to establish a parliamentary library. I am not aware that the wisdom of that appropriation has ever been called in question. We are each year voting very considerable sums to maintain that library and to complete and perfect its contents as far as possible. I consider that Hansard is about the most valuable and useful work which the library contains, and I do not believe any public library in Canada, much less any parliamentary library, can be considered complete without it. Then it is suggested that the more important speeches delivered, those which are really valuable, will be printed by the newspapers and in pamphlet form, and be by that means preserved. No doubt they would, but they would be useless in that form to the members of this House. They would be without arrangement, classification or index for reference. The records would not be authentic, and disputes would constantly arise as to their accuracy. Then hon. members would have to rely upon their individual efforts for a record, and it is absurd to suppose that any member of this House could follow the debates upon the great variety of subjects which come up for consideration here, and preserve even a summary of the arguments presented which would be of practical value for future reference. Then, one-half or nearly one-half of the present Parliament are new members. After another general election it is impossible to say what further changes may take place. If we attach any importance whatever to the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite some of us who are now here must disappear from the scene of action. But, however, that may be, no doubt many changes will occur. The official record of the debates delivered in this House is the only one available for the use of members newly elected to this House. To them this record is invaluable, for however the representation may change, many of the political issues which they will be called upon to consider, will remain the same. I maintain that no one who may afterwards occupy a position in this House will be able to offer an intelligent opinion and intelligently perform his duties without having a record of the past discussions to refer to. Then I feel that it is due to the Opposition in this House, those whose views do not generally prevail, that the Hansard should be retained. It is true that the policy of the Government of the day, the views and opinions of the majority of this House may be regarded as being represented to a great extent in the measures we adopt and which are to be found on our Statute Book. But those measures do not at all represent the views of hon. gentlemen opposite. Very often those

hon. gentlemen are entirely opposed to the principles of the measures which we adopt, and I for one feel that it is only just and fair that the views which the Opposition entertain, that the grounds upon which they base their opposition, that the principles for which they often very ably, though unsuccessfully, contend in this House should be recorded and preserved. The principal object which those hon. gentlemen have in view in supporting the amendment is to shorten the discussions in this House. I am in the fullest sympathy with the object which those hon. gentlemen seek to accomplish; but I do not believe that the means which they propose will secure that object. Let us consider for one moment what will be the possible or probable effect of the abolition of Hansard upon the class of speeches to which we listen here. In the first place, what will be the effect as regards the class of speeches to which I have already referred, the class which are really valuable, the class which are prepared and delivered with a view of influencing the opinions of hon. members? This class cannot and will not be curtailed. It is not desirable in the interest of this House and the country that they should be curtailed. Take a second class of speeches, those which are not delivered on account of exerting any influence on hon. members in this House, but which are delivered for the purpose of exerting influence in the constituency which the speaker represents. Is it possible that the abolition of Hansard will prevent the delivery of those speeches? Every hon. member must know that Hansard is not a medium for circulating our speeches among our constituents. It is true that any hon. member may arrange with the publishers of Hansard to obtain additional copies of any speech delivered and send them to his constituents. The abolition of Hansard would not prevent this being done through the medium of the press. Any hon. member could go to the office of the daily Citizen or the Free Press. They could have their speeches reported at length, they could obtain hundreds and thousands of extra copies in this way, and distribute them amongst their constituents as easily, as economically, and as conveniently as they could possibly arrange with the publishers of Hansard. I cannot see any reasonable hope that the abolition of Hansard would have the effect of diminishing the number, or of shortening the length of speeches of this character. Then, Sir, consider its effect upon the third class of speeches—the most objectionable to which we are obliged to listen—those speeches which are expected or intended to serve no useful purpose, which are merely delivered for the purpose of occupying our time or wearying our patience. How can it be expected that the abolishment of Hansard would prevent the delivery of those speeches? I believe if there is any hon. gentleman in this House who delivers a speech for the purpose of obstructing public business, possibly with the hope of gaining some political advantage, he would continue to do so, whether we have a Hansard or not. I believe, Sir, that that is an abuse of the privileges of this House. I regret that we have witnessed it during the present Session, and that it has been carried to a greater extent than before in the history of this country. I desire as much as any gentleman in this House, to see this practice discontinued. I am willing, if it becomes necessary, to support stringent measures to prevent it in the future. But Sir, I think in order to remedy this evil at the present time, we may rely upon a few simple, but I hope effectual remedies. In the first place, I would rely on the good sense of the members of this House. I would rely on their regard for their own health, or as the hon. member for Hastings has said, on their regard for their lungs, their hearts, and their kidneys. Then, Sir, I believe every hon. gentleman in this House must have some consideration for the feelings and some respect for the opinions of those with whom he is associated; and, Sir, I do believe that those who have taken a leading part in the obstruction which we have witnessed during the present Session, will find that they have raised themselves in the estimation of this House, or in public opinion throughout this Dominion. I doubt very much that if after the excitement of the Session is over, when they return to the quiet of their own homes, whether they will be able to reflect on the course they have pursued, with very great pleasure or satisfaction. But I rely not only on this, I rely mainly on the good sense and the sound judgment of the people of this country. I believe that when those who by their votes have sent us here, those who bear the burdens of taxation in this country, those who must pay the cost, the largely increased cost which has been incurred through the unnecessary prolongation of this Session, pronounce their judgment upon this practice, they will condemn it in a manner so severe and emphatic as to prevent its recurrence in the future. I regard this, Sir, as I said before, as a gross abuse of the privileges of this House. I feel that it is very desirable to prevent it in future. I do not believe, sir, that this is the proper place or the proper time to speak to our constituents, or to the country. We have the public platforms in this country where we can discuss political questions at any length. We have the public press through which we can convey our views and opinions on public matters to our constituents. I believe these are the proper and legitimate means by which to accomplish this object. I cannot oppose freedom of speech. I desire freedom of speech to be maintained; but, Sir, I believe that discussions should take place at the proper time, in the proper manner, and in the proper place. I believe, Sir, in the freest and fullest discussion of every question which affects the welfare of this country, and the happiness and future prosperity of our people; but I believe that it is entirely compatible with that perfect freedom both of thought and speech that is our pride and boast in this country, that Parliamentary debate should be confined to its legitimate objects, that it should be continued only so long as it is possible to impart information, useful to this House, and only so long as there is a reasonable hope of assisting the members of this House in reaching wise and intelligent conclusions. Sir, I shall no longer detain the House. I feel not only bound to vote against these amendments, but to oppose them with all the possible influence I possess. I feel, Sir, fully in sympathy with the objects which hon. gentlemen seek to attain, but I have no faith whatever that the abolishment of Hansard would have the practical effect of shortening discussions in this House as hon gentlemen expect it will. I most sincerely hope this House will reject these amendments, for I feel that that is a duty we owe to the leaders of the great parties in this House, to the prominent men who take a part in our discussions here; it is a duty we owe to ourselves and our constituents; it is a duty that we owe to every member who occupies a seat in this House at the present time, and to those who will take our places hereafter; it is a duty, Sir, we owe to the public, to the people of this country who have entrusted its highest interests to our care; it is a duty we owe to posterity, who must reap the fruits of our legislation, will enjoy its advantages if we are right, and who must suffer the consequences of our errors if we are wrong—that we should preserve the Hansard.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I shall detain the House for only a few moments in reply to some observations which have been made with reference to the Hansard. I may say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I have perhaps less interest in the continuance of Hansard than any other gentleman here, because in so far as anything I say in Parliament is concerned, I can always secure the reporting of my remarks if I desire to do so. I think some members of the House are laboring under one error which the abolition of the Hansard will bring painfully to their knowledge, and that is that the press of the country can efficiently report the debates of Parliament. My hon. friend from Hastings refers to the debates of the Local Legislature, as reported in Toronto, and paid a very just and proper tribute to the manner in which both the Globe and Mail report those debates. But my hon. friend should remember that we are not sitting in Toronto, that we are sitting in Ottawa, and that, in addition to the cost of reporting and the difficulty of reporting, there is the difficulty of transmission by telegraph of all that may be reported for the newspapers. I venture to say, and I speak with some knowledge on a subject of this kind, that the House of Commons will find that, so far from the newspapers furnishing anything like reasonably sufficient reports, nothing of the kind will be done. The press, like everything else, has changed very much within recent years. To-day the mass of the people require what they get in very much shorter pieces than they used to be willing to have it. The newspapers which would undertake to report, from day to day, anything like a reasonably full report of the more important speeches of Parliament—and none but the more important would be attempted to be reported at all—that paper would become unpopular, instead of popular, with its readers. What the public outside want, after all, is not so much what is said in Parliament, as what is done in Parliament, and we find in the United States, even in the large city of New York, that the reports of Congress and of the State Legislature are embraced in a comparatively few lines, simply stating what has been done, or that some particularly prominent member has spoken for a short time upon some particular subject; but anything like a report will not be had; and if it is desirable at all that there should be a report of what is said in Parliament, for the information and guidance of Parliament in the future, it is absolutely necessary that we should have it in the form of an official report. Why, Sir, every important Legislature in the world has its official report. In the Australian colonies, even in the comparatively small colony of New Zealand, there has been since 1867 an official report; and I have here a letter from the public printer there, stating the manner in which the work is done in that colony. It is not long, and I will simply read it as showing that they have adopted practically the same plan there that we have here:—

“The system of publishing the debates officially was commenced in 1867, so has now been in existence 17 years. During that time 48 volumes have been issued, averaging about 750 pages in each, printed in briefer type. The ordinary duration of the Sessions of our Parliament is three months, and I find they generally talk about one volume a month, giving an average of nearly three volumes per Session. The debates are reported verbatim and proofs are sent to members for corrections the next day, after which they are made up in book form and published twice a week (Tuesdays and Fridays), a certain number of the sheets being retained for binding in volumes at the close of the Session. Many of the members are inclined to abuse the privilege of correcting their speeches, and take the opportunity of excising, altering and adding to them considerably; but as a rule the corrections made cannot be reasonably objected to. There has been an improvement in this respect of late years—very probably owing to increased efficiency on the part of the reporters. The reporting staff consists of 8—one chief reporter at £500 per annum; 6 at £300 and one at £250. They are, as a rule not employed more than three months in the year, and when the House is not in session they follow other occupations or get engagements as reporters on some of the newspaper staffs. The cost of reporting amounts to £2,550 and printing, binding, etc., £2,700 per annum. It is printed at the Government printing office, the compositors setting it up on the piece work system, at 1s. 3d. per 1,000 ems.”

We pay here 60 cents per 1,000 ems. so that the difference in the cost between our Hansard and the Hansard in New Zealand can be made up by the saving in the printing. In the other Australian colonies, in Congress, in several of the States of the American Union, in fact everywhere, it is found necessary to have a system of official reporting. The hon. member for the city of Ottawa (Mr. Tassé) referred to the increasing cost of Hansard. Well, Sir, I may point out that in the first instance the work of reporting was done by contract. Mr. Richardson, who, I think, was the first contractor, employed his own reporters. Well, those who recollect that time will recollect that that proved a very unsatisfactory method; the reports were not so good as they ought to be, and members had great difficulty in making a reasonably fair revision of what was said. In fact, the revising of a speech was a much more serious matter than its preparation and delivery. In that way a considerable saving in the cost was made, because, inasmuch as the printing was not done for several days after the speech was delivered, it was done in the day time instead of at night, as it is at present, and consequently at a much lower cost. One of the evils which would result from the abolition of Hansard is this. I believe thoroughly that the experience of one single Session without a Hansard will cause the House to reconsider its decision.

Mr. COCHRANE. Let us try it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). My hon. friend from East Northumberland says: Let us try it. If the hon. member had the experience I have, he would know that reporters fit for the work of reporting at these tables cannot be picked up every day. We have had great difficulty in getting the staff we have at the present moment. There is a popular idea, which is a fallacious idea, that every stenographer is a reporter—that every man who learns shorthand can be put at a table and can report speeches. I venture to say that if we had a haphazard staff, such as we should be compelled to get under the circumstances I have mentioned, hon. members would find, from the character of the reports, reason to regret that, when they had a really efficient staff, such as we have to-day, they permitted it to be dispersed. As to the length of the Session being a result of Hansard, I do not conceal from myself that there could be no more unfortunate time to discuss the question of Hansard than the present moment; but hon. gentlemen should remember that we have had long Sessions before. I believe this Session is only a few days longer than the famous Session of 1858 in the old Parliament of Canada, if it is quite so long. But up to this Session we have had Sessions of reasonable length; no one has complained that hitherto the length of the Sessions has been due to Hansard at all; and when I state to you,—what perhaps I ought not to say, but what I will venture to say—that on one occasion, during that long debate, the reports of Hansard were somewhat condensed, I had complaints from hon. members on this side that the reports of the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite were not published in full, and I had the entire acquiescence of hon. gentlemen opposite in the condensation of the reports, I think you will agree with me that where talking against time—if it were talking against time—perhaps, I have no reason to say that in this debate—prevails, those who talk against time are not those who desire an official report of their speeches, but those whose patience is worn out by that process. I quite concur in the opinion expressed by one hon. gentleman that Hansard, instead of being the means of lengthening the Session, really shortens it by impressing upon hon. gentlemen the sense of responsibility which the verbatim publication of whatever they might say ought to impress upon every man who has a proper sense of his responsibility. I think it right simply to utter these few words in defence of the official reporting of the debates.

Mr. DAWSON. I would be very sorry, indeed, to see the Hansard abolished; but, I think, without reflecting particularly on any speeches that have been made in this House, without criticising any of them in particular, some of them might have been to great advantage abridged. In the neighboring country a limit of time is fixed, beyond which a speaker cannot occupy the time of the House, and I think it would be advisable to adopt some rule to limit the time here. I think if the leaders of both sides were allowed to make their speeches, without curtailment, the speeches of other members should be kept within a certain limit. That would be of great advantage. An hon. gentleman has said that posterity will learn the history of our times from the reports of our speeches; but I think we would confer a great boon on posterity if we would make them shorter. If hon. members were compelled to condense their speeches, I am sure, in a literary point of view, they would show a great deal of improvement. I concur in everything that has been said with regard to the efficiency of the present staff; they certainly do their duty very well, and I doubt if we could get a better staff. It is only through long practice and experience that they have gained their present efficiency. In sending reports to the press, I think, however, that the corrected reports should be sent, and not the first issue.

Mr. COCHRANE. In seconding the motion, I was impelled to do so from the fact that I have been satisfied for several months that this Session has been unnecessarily prolonged because speeches of hon. gentlemen are recorded in Hansard. We have often had it announced by hon. members that they were speaking to the country; but I consider it was waste of time on their part, because they were not speaking to the country in a strain that reasonable people would endorse or intelligent men fail to discover as being mere high-flown sentiment, and not practical, wise or judicious opinions. We heard the hon. member for Cardwell state that a newspaper which would attempt to give a decent report of the speeches would not be read. If, then, the speeches published in newspapers will not find readers, how are they going to find readers when published in Hansard? Life is too short for anyone to wade through these long reports. I may not have practical experience in this matter, but I have common sense, and I must say that in many of the speeches we do not find much of that element. We have heard about the benefit to posterity accruing from the Hansard reports, but my opinion is that the Hansard reports will give to the generation yet unborn a good deal of nonsense, and certainly not impress them with the profundity of their progenitors. If I were convinced before, I am still more convinced now, that it is absurd to have a Hansard. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has told us that 10 weeks elapsed before the Government brought down any business. If so, the Government was wrong; but what was the fact after the business was brought down? Hon. gentlemen talked against time for 10 weeks and prevented this House from doing business, making the Session last 10 weeks longer, for mere partisan reasons as nonsensical as they were ill-timed and uncalled for. I am satisfied, therefore, that, had it not been for Hansard, we would not have had that 10 weeks of speech-making in the House. We have had an illustration of the waste of time in the debate on Hansard itself, for we have had an essay delivered by an hon. gentleman in this House which was written very carefully outside; we have had illustrations without number during the Session of the loss of time caused by Hansard. We have seen hon. gentlemen rise here and deliver elaborate historical essays on political economy, Indian affairs, and other things, and I contend this is a practical House; I do not want to be kept here listening to lengthy disquisitions which have nothing business-like to commend them to practical men. I do not want, as a farmer, to be kept here until the haying is over and the harvest past. I have heard the changes rung in my ears, ever since I recollect listening to anything like politics, about the extravagance of the Government, as shown in the public service. But what is the argument of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), when we want to retrench and save $50,000 a year, which would put up a good public building? His only argument is, he fears there would be two or three officials taken out of the service, and he utters a wail over that fact. What do we hear, day after day, in the House? I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite, in my riding, declare that this whole building was crammed with officials; that the Government were putting up other buildings for their accommodation; yet, now, when we have an opportunity to save $50,000 a year, hon. gentlemen oppose the idea. I think it is time the debates were brought to a close. I only intended to second the motion; but when I have a chance to support it with my voice as well, and if it is carried it will save the country $50,000, I am bound to do it, even though the result may be to turn out several deserving officials.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I rise to say that hon. gentlemen opposing the publication of Hansard have not one unkind word to say of the official reporters. We all believe they are men who discharge their duty efficiently. With regard to the cost of Hansard, I may say that in 1873 we had a Hansard of 1,300 pages which cost $14,000; then it cost $30,000 to $40,000, and now it costs $60,000. I would just ask hon. gentlemen who are advocating Hansard whether, previous to the Hansard being introduced into this House, Confederation was not carried. Were not the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions carried, were not British Columbia brought into the Union and Prince Edward Island, and other matters of great importance, just as well as during this important Session? Are we only saving $50,000? I contend this Session will cost an extra $250,000, and by abolishing Hansard we will save that. I believe, if we abolish Hansard, we will get some system that will be a more beneficial system. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) says that no paper would publish the reports of the House. I contend that the business done in the Provincial Parliament of Ontario is as important to that Province as the business done here, and the country is well informed on that business. I am satisfied the country would be as well informed on the business of the House if we abolished Hansard.

Foster,

Amendment negatived.

Mr. HICKEY. I think that, in order to correct the evil that seems in all our minds to exist in this matter, the motion I am about to read will go far in that direction. I move that the following be added to the motion:—

And that no speaker shall be reported longer than one hour, excepting two members of the Government and two members of the Opposition; and that in committee on Bills no speaker shall be reported longer than ten minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know what may be the idea of the mover of that resolution. My own opinion is, that a gentleman ought to be able to say all that he has to say to this House within a short time, and I am sure that if the long speeches which have taken five or six hours had been delivered in one hour, they would have been much more extensively read, and would certainly have been more extensively appreciated by the public. I am in favor of not making long speeches, I am not given to making long speeches myself lately, because I have seen the evil of it, and I have endeavored to curtail my remarks and to state my views as clearly and as succinctly as possible. But I do not like this manner of picking out two parties in this House. I think it is unfair to what everybody knows exists in this House, a large independent element, which pervades both parties in the House and exists among the followers of the right hon. the Premier as well as of the leader of the Opposition. There exists an independent element, who are not satisfied with the despotism of party, and do not follow party from their own hearts, but from necessity, because they must belong to a party. I think it is unfair to that growing Independent party, and to the growing independent feeling in Canada, that a motion should be adopted which would foreclose the leader of an Independent party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad that my remarks meet with so much approval. I was sure they would, and I think the acclamation which follows those remarks should show the House that the statements I have made as to the existence of a large Independent party and the feeling of independence amongst the followers of both sides of the House should prevent such an amendment from being adopted by the House. I have no particular objection to the amendment, provided they do one thing. They may confine it to two of the leaders of each of the different parties that exist in this House; and, as I stated before, I should judge that, were such a proposition put, from the acclamation with which my remarks have been met, it would be carried. I trust the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment will see the injustice of it. He has often professed to be a follower of the Independent party, though his independence, like that of some others, is probably only in talk; for, when it comes to a vote, I observe that he votes with his party. There is also my hon. friend from the county of Ottawa, who is sitting opposite me. He, every now and then, makes an independent speech, but I am sorry to say he does not often give independent votes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I always vote with my hon. friend from the left centre.

Mr. MITCHELL. Some hon. gentlemen make the same objection to myself, but I think without just cause. If the amendment is limited to two members of each party, I think the Independent party should be included.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I look upon this amendment as a very objectionable one. I voted with the minority on the last motion; but I look upon this amendment as very objectionable. In the first place, I think it will have this bad effect, that when you have speeches in the House simply for the purpose of taking up time or obstructing, members will devote the first hour, perhaps, to making a speech which they will look upon as worthy of being reported, and then will proceed to take up time. I think, also, that to have speeches reported for ten minutes in Committee of the Whole is equally objectionable, on the same ground. You will see that those who have moved against the continuation of the Hansard have done so on the ground of the expense connected with it. It will decrease the expense very little if this is adopted. We shall require the same staff, and I presume we shall pay them in the same way as we do now, and it would be very idle to see these gentlemen constantly looking up at the clock in order to see if the ten minutes had elapsed, when perhaps an hon. member had only entered into the important part of his speech. If we are to have a Hansard at all, we should have it with all the advantages which are to be derived from it, and not so curtailed as the amendment now proposed would cause it to be. I shall therefore feel constrained to vote against the amendment, however much I might desire to see the expenses lessened. I think the Hansard would be a valuable institution, and I agree with everything that has been said as to the efficiency with which the gentlemen who are engaged do their work, but I have taken the ground I have, simply because I look with some alarm at the increase of the expenditure, not only in that Department, but in almost every other Department connected with legislation, which has been increasing ever since Confederation down to this point. I shall consider it my duty to record my vote in favor of any resolution tending to decrease the expenditure, not only in connection with the Hansard, but in connection with every Department of legislation.

Amendment negatived.

Main motion agreed to, on a division.

THEFT OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. BLAKE. There are certain statements which have been made in the public journals to which I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Government. I see a statement in the Montreal Witness of the 13th inst., that there has been a disappearance of certain Government bonds from the Government vaults, and that during a recent investigation into the management of the Finance Department a defalcation of $12,000 was discovered in the accounts of a certain official:

"And that bonds to the value of over a million dollars, all signed ready for issue, are said to have lain in the vault, to which every officer of the Department had access, without any check upon him."

As a result, the Government have now to make good $25,000 to the Bank of Montreal, which had made the advance to the dishonest officials. I think the hon. gentleman will see that these are rather disturbing statements, and it would be well to have some authentic statement on the subject communicated to the House and to the country.

Mr. BOWELL. The Department of Finance has no information of any robbery of any kind having been committed, or of any defalcation, that I have been able to discover. I heard this rumor last night, and one of the members of the press gallery sent me a note to ask if there was anything in it, and I at once sent to Mr. Toller to ascertain if there was anything in it, and he informed me he knew nothing about it.

SPIRITS TAKEN OUT OF BOND.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call attention to a statement to the effect that certain distillers were in Ottawa urging that spirits taken out of bond by them previous to the 9th July should only pay the old rates of duty:

"They allege that, through some bungling on the part of the Minister of Customs, the new Excise duties came into force three days before the increased Customs duties began to be imposed, and that between the 6th and the 9th of the present month large quantities of imported liquors were taken out of bond at the old rates of duty."

I ask the Minister of Customs whether that statement is correct?

Mr. BOWELL. I believe that statement is substantially correct, as regards taking the liquor out of the bonded warehouse from the Customs bonds. The difference between the two orders that was given was simply this: The Deputy Head of the Customs gave instructions not to accept any entries. The Commissioner of Customs did what he always has done in the past—instructed the telegraph officers not to transmit any message affecting the tariff; and the result, I suppose, was, that two or three days after the motion was made to go into committee some merchants who, like business men, thought that some change would be made, made their entries. I suppose, as the House has affirmed the principle that the duties should take effect from the 6th of the month, the date that the motion was made to go into Committee of Ways and Means, the parties making the entries will be asked to amend the entries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Minister of Customs mean that the importers who have taken goods out of bond will be required to amend?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I called attention at the time that these resolutions were going through, to the statements which had been made as to the quantity of spirits which were alleged to have been taken out of bond in the Province of Quebec, and I asked the hon. gentleman to obtain the information as to the amount which had been taken out immediately prior to the 6th.

Mr. BOWELL. I informed the House that I would, as far as possible, ascertain what had been taken from bond during those days. On the 6th, 7th and 8th, the duties paid amounted to $54,000, and, in the city of Montreal, $139,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that refer to Customs goods, or to Excise?

Mr. BOWELL. To Customs goods exclusively; there were no Excise entries made, for the simple reason that the Department refused to accept them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the point which was taken had reference to two distinct matters—one, the point which the hon. gentleman has just given information about; and the other, as to the quantities of exciseable spirits which had been taken out between the 1st of July and the 6th, in the Province of Quebec. Of course, I am aware that this matter does not belong especially to the Minister of Customs, but more particularly to the Minister of Inland Revenue. But I called attention to the statement that between the 1st and the 6th of July a large quantity of spirits, in addition to the Customs goods, had been reported to be taken out in the Province of Quebec, and I asked to be informed what quantity of spirits had been taken out of the warehouses in that Province between those dates. It is very desirable that we should have that information to-night or to-morrow.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will get it to-night.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. gentleman opposite whether it is the intention to introduce a measure with reference to grants of land or money to railways?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it was promised that we should have a measure with reference to colonisation companies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think I stated there was going to be a measure.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RETURNS.

Mr. BLAKE. I would just call the attention of the Government and the House to a return which has been brought down to-day, being one of the returns moved for very early, with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the answer to which was made by the secretary of that company on the 30th May, 1885, and it is only brought down to-day, after all the measures with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway had been brought down to the House, and although it was lying in the office of the Minister during the whole period when these measures were under discussion.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

Publishing Debates..... $47,500

Mr. BAKER. I desire to ask the Chairman of the Debates Committee if it is the intention of the committee to recommend that an additional sum be paid to Mr. Boyce, who revises the reports. I find that his salary is only $800, and we have had a six months session. From my own knowledge, I am aware that he has been at his office from early in the morning till early the next morning. The amount of work he has performed is sufficient to entitle him to some recognition in a substantial way, for the extra service he has performed during this Session.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The matter has not come before the Debates Committee in any way.

Mr. BLAKE. It ought to receive the attention of the committee. Of course, all the officers of Hansard have had much more than the usual work; but, as regards the chief officers, we get their services for the whole year, and the compensation is based on that theory, and they must take the rough and the smooth together; but when the reviser's salary is fixed at $800 for such labor as he has had to discharge, in view of the length of the Session, the question of granting an additional amount should receive consideration.

Mr. MILLS. I quite concur in that view. This Session is equally as long as two ordinary Sessions, and no doubt the amount of work has been very large. I consider the remuneration paid is quite inadequate.

Mr. HAGGART. I observe that this item is increased by $10,950, as compared with last year, for the publication of the Hansard. I move that the amount be reduced to that of last year, $36,144.

Mr. SPEAKER. The supplementary estimate for this year is for the same amount as last year.

Mr. BOWELL. The expenditure last year was about $34,700. The supplementary estimate provided for another $10,000, in order to pay the difference of the expense in connection with the reports of the Debates for last year.

Mr. BLAKE. In view of the report of the committee, if the statement of the hon. member for Cardwell is correct, it will not be necessary to expend so much money. The committee did not themselves make a recommendation with respect to a large and important portion of the report—probably as they did not deem it to be within their province. I entirely approve of the suggestion which is embodied in the report, with respect to utilising the services of the staff of reporters for executive and administrative work during the year. My own opinion is, that a very much larger economy may be obtained than that which the committee has suggested; and for this reason: I believe there are a very considerable number of departmental investigations, not unimportant, which are proceeded with in a very imperfect manner at the present time for the want of short-hand reporters. We know, also, that there are investigations in regard to the Customs, and in regard to Excise matters. These are of high consequence. Very important private rights are involved and questions of character are also involved. From motives of economy, short-hand reporters are not employed—I am not saying that they should be employed at the regular rates which have to be paid to them; but by saving the time of the higher officers, who are or ought to be engaged in those enquiries, involving, as I have said they do, questions of character and of important private rights, those investigations would be enormously facilitated by the use which might be made of our admirable staff of short-hand reporters. I believe the public service would be very greatly served by them. No one who has not been conversant with the very imperfect manner in which justice was administered before short-hand reporters were appointed to the courts of Ontario, as compared with the manner in which it is now administered, would be able to form any conception of the superiority of this method of making enquiries, and particularly when it happens, as it does happens very often, that in the last resort the decision is with the Minister, who has not heard the evidence taken, and that he should have an accurate verbatim transcript of what was said by those on both sides in the investigation is, I will not say important, but I say it is essential to the formation of an accurate judgment on the matter submitted to him. I maintain this because it involves rather an extension of the duties which will be cast upon the reporters. Of course, I understand that under this plan the charges to the public are not to be increased at all, with the exception of whatever travelling expenses may be necessary, in order to bring the reporter to where his work will be. I think it right, also, to observe that I do not understand it to be intended that the reporters shall be debarred from making the usual charges for such copies as may be desired for private individuals, at the expense of those private individuals. That arrangement is one which holds in other cases, and it will give them some measure of remuneration, however moderate, and it will prove an advantage to the public service that they should have that, because people work a little better under the stimulus of material considerations of that kind than under the thought of nothing but an amount of extra work.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The public pay for everything.

Mr. BLAKE. The public will pay nothing more. The public pays $2,000 a year to each of those officers; that is all. If they go to some point under the orders of a Department and take evidence, the actual travelling expenses will be allowed. That is all that is proposed to be charged. I believe we have an opportunity of effecting very considerable improvement in the conduct of an important branch of the public service by utilising the services of the reporters by these means, which will not involve any further public charge, but which may fairly be taken out of the charges for Hansard. It will be necessary, in order to carry that out that an account be kept of what the various charges will be for the services of reporters when employed one way or the other during the recess, and that service will have to be charged against the Department and credited to the amount charged against the Official Debates. It will be a public convenience arising from the system of the Official Debates, and therefore will have to be deducted from the public charges on that account. It will not be an increase of charge, but a utilisation of the officers we find it necessary to have for the Official Debates on other important public services, and therefore properly to be charged to those services which receive the benefit of their work.

Mr. HAGGART. In accordance with the notice I gave, I move, seconded by Mr. Mitchell, that the sum in the Estimates, of $47,100 for 1885-86, be reduced to $36,144, the amount voted for the Hansard of 1884-85. I find that the sum voted for Hansard for 1884-85 was $36,144 and that in the Supplementary Estimates of this year, for the purpose, I suppose, of paying the expenses of Hansard on account of the length of the Session, there is a vote of $10,936. Now, if it is the intention to have a reduction in the expenditure on Hansard, the amount should be reduced to the normal expenditure during the year. It was said last year, when the motion was made for the purpose of dispensing with Hansard altogether, that the parties were engaged, that we could not discharge them on that account, and that the amount, it was hoped, would be sufficient for all the expenditure required. I find now there has been an increase of expenditure of over $10,000, and notwithstanding the observations made by the hon. gentleman who introduced the report of the committee, I think the expenditure should be reduced, instead of providing for an increase of nearly $11,000.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The actual amount which Hansard cost last year was $38,114.84, but the official reporters were not paid the larger salaries which Parliament, by resolution, decided should be paid to them, and which began to be paid them for the first time this year. The cost of Hansard for last year, if the salaries which Parliament has agreed now to pay the staff had been paid last year, would have been about $45,000; and the saving which we expected to effect in the direction I have stated will be about $4,000. I think if the hon. gentleman would make it $40,000 instead of $36,144, we might get through another year at that price.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the hon. member for Lanark correctly apprehends the reasons for the extra vote. I do not understand that the extra vote, beyond the main vote, has anything whatever to do with the length of this Session. Whatever of Hansard may be abnormal, owing to the length of the Session, will have to be voted separately. I understood that the extra vote was due to the resolution of last Session, increasing the cost of the staff.

Mr. BOWELL. Partially so.

Mr. HAGGART. The item says it is to recoup amount expended since 1st July, 1884, in closing Debates account of Session of 1884, $10,036, with a lapsed balance of $1,262.43 on the 30th of June, 1884.

Mr. BLAKE. That is last year. Now, I am not prepared—I never have been prepared—although I voted last year, and voted to-day against the continuance of the Debates, for reasons with which I need not trouble the House—I have never been prepared to oppose any expenditure required in order to have the Debates efficient. I think that when a majority of the House say that there is to be an official report of the Debates, it is necessary to have an adequate official report. While I believe this vote is excessive, and while I fully expected that the hon. gentlemen who have been responsible for the expenditure of the country would have proposed, after the report of the committee was adopted by the House, that it should be reduced, I think the hon. member for Lanark has erred too much on one side, while I believe the hon. member for Cardwell errs in suggesting too small a reduction. I think if we utilise the services of the official reporters in the manner suggested, at least $6,000 might properly be due to that circumstance. We cannot, of course, in one sense, regard that as a saving in the Hansard, but we may in another. It is really, and it ought to be, a transfer of the vote, so that instead of its being $6,000 for the Hansard it ought to be $6,000 for the use of the official reporters in work which it is suggested they might perform, or $4,000, as the hon. member for Cardwell says, for work now done at the public expense by other reporters. I say, then, we may save $4,000 in that way, and we may save another $4,000 on the specific vote, by the reduction of the cost of printing and the number of copies as stated by the hon. member for Cardwell.

Mr. TASSÉ. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I desire to take the opportunity offered by the motion now before the House to call the attention of the Debates Committee on the expediency of granting a bonus to the gentlemen employed as translators. Everybody admits that the members of that staff are very efficient and that they do their work with great alacrity. This year, if I am well informed, the Debates will reach such enormous proportions that they will cover no less than 3,400 to 3,500 pages; which is more than double last year's edition, which only contained 1,400 pages. These gentlemen only receive $1,000 per year, and when they accepted that salary they had to calculate on a Session of three months or four months at the most. As the Session will last about six months this year, I believe that under the circumstances the committee ought not to hesitate to recommend the granting of a liberal bonus to the translators.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) I believe that the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé) apply perfectly well to the present circumstances. The French translators are only appointed for the Session, which does not generally exceed three or four months. The present Session has lasted nearly six months, and most assuredly it was not what they had in view when they accepted the position which they occupy as sessional clerks—because, they are sessional clerks—they are not on the same footing as the reporters, who are employed the year round. I believe that for this reason, this should also apply to the proof-readers.

Mr. HAGGART. At the suggestion of the hon. member for Cardwell, and with the permission of the House, I would amend the motion by inserting "$40,000" instead of "$36,411."

Resolution, as amended, concurred in.

Indians of Manitoba and the North-West Territories ..... $680,831 45

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to enquire of the First Minister what amount he expects to be obliged to expend on Indian affairs during the year 1886. These estimates were prepared, as everybody knows, prior to the unfortunate disturbances in the North-West. In 1884 an expenditure of about $1,100,000—I speak from memory—was incurred for this service, and in the year which closed on the 1st July last, so far as I can judge, the expenditure must have very largely exceeded the amount asked for. It is doubtful whether the hon. gentleman will be able to confine the expenditure within the sum here named; and as we are now in the year 1885-86, I would like to know distinctly, as far as he can form an opinion, what he expects the expenditure will really be.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is almost impossible for me to give any specific answer to that question. I do not anticipate, however, that the expenditure will be larger than the estimate. I do not think there will be any greater destitution in the coming year than there has been in the past. On the contrary, I think there will be a very considerable increase in the quantity of food raised on the different reserves. After all, we must consider that the disturbances on the Indian reserves have not extended very largely through the country. Of course, there must have been an interruption, to a lamentable extent, in the industries of the Indians of the North Saskatchewan; but that does not apply to the main mass of the Indian population. There has been also a great deal of disquietude. The Indians, like other masses of population, have been roused by the reports they have heard, and the false messages continually sent to them, as to the extent of the outbreak and the success of the half-breeds, which rendered them disturbed and discontented, and prevented them working steady on their reserves. But, on the whole, the reports are favorable; the Indians fairly apply themselves to the cultivation of the ground and to the raising of crops, principally of roots, but to no considerable extent of cereals. Therefore, I do not think there will be any greater destitution next year than there is now, while I am happy to believe, from the reports received, that the supplies raised by the Indians themselves will be considerably in excess of those raised last year. I believe, if it had not been for these local disturbances, the quantity would very largely exceed that of last year. I am getting reports now almost every day, and before the House rises I hope to be able to give a general statement regarding the different reserves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would not have made the remark, but for the fact that in the Supplementary Estimates for the year just passed the hon. gentleman demands $324,850 in addition to the sum here asked for, making, in all, $1,100,000 odd; and although I do not suppose the expenditure will exceed the sum expended in 1884-85, yet he would certainly require more than $1,000,000.

Mr. MILLS. I would again call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the importance of having detailed statements showing the amount of produce raised on each reservation, and the amount the Indians receive at the various places, by way of gratuity, in order to prevent famine and starvation. It is only in that way that you can fix public attention on the work done by each individual farm instructor. It seems to me of great consequence that every farm instructor should feel that the eyes of the country are upon him, watching the result of his individual efforts. Of course, we should notice those who succeed and those who fail. When a farm instructor does not succeed, the first thing to consider is, whether the Indians have a reservation suited to agriculture, and if they have, whether they would do better by having the inspector changed. When the farm instructor feels that public attention is fixed upon him, his success will be much greater than if he is allowed to consider that he is merely a public official, and that the result will be the same, whether he succeeds or fails; and if he fails to induce the Indians to engage in agricultural pursuits, where the circumstances are favorable, he ought to be replaced by another man. Of course, the greater the success the less is the charge upon the public Treasury. It would also be of greater advantage to the Department, and would add to the comfort of the hon. gentleman himself, if he had individual reports made and laid before Parliament, so that, when the Estimates are voted, we may see what each man is costing the country, and who is in charge of each particular Indian band.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I told the hon. gentleman the other night, I think, when discussing the same question, that I quite agreed with him, and I gave instructions at once to have the reports prepared, so far as they are to be found in the Department, respecting the work of each individual band, and I propose to lay them before the House during the present Session. I do not know if that can be done very perfectly, but it will be done as well as the information at headquarters will allow. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it should appear in the Annual Report of the Indian Department, so that the conduct and the results of the labor of the different officers would be laid before Parliament. That will be a great additional check and an incentive to improvement. I also agree with the hon. gentleman that the office was not made for the farm instructors, but for the Indians, and wherever a farm instructor is not found to succeed, he is dismissed. Though he may have every desire to do his work, he may not be capable of impressing his individuality and his power of teaching on the Indians. Even in the case of ordinary school teachers, a school master may be really a good scholar and yet not have the power of conveying instruction to the pupils. We have, without any remorse, removed men who, either from temper or want of ability, were unsuccessful in getting on with the Indians. They are not made civil servants; there is no permanence in their appointment. We can always get rid of a man who has not been successful; he will pay the full penalty of want of success, by being removed; but if he is a respectable man, and has done his best, a small gratuity will be given him. It is important to get men to hold this appointment who are accustomed to the Indian character, and have been in the country some time. At first, those could not be got, but now we can get men sufficiently acquainted with the Indians to have influence with them and be able to impart knowledge to them. If they can learn the language, so much the better, but I do not think the process of learning the Indian language has gone on so rapidly as we would wish. There is a difficulty in moving the Indians from the reserves. Their reserves were originally given under treaty, and it is with great difficulty we can get them to give up reserves. Originally, these reserves were chosen to meet the views of the Indians. They had to be coaxed into a treaty, and selected their own locality, the lands where the bones of their ancestors lie being their favorite reserves. We have, with success, induced them to change, and to surrender that immense area running along the South Saskatchewan, one mile on each side, which they were to have for ten years. That was found an almost insupportable barrier to the settlement of the country, and the Indians have been induced to surrender that very large section and to take up separate reserves. These Indians are Blackfeet and Bloods, but though belonging to the one great nation, they do not get on very well together, and we have to put them on separate reserves. With respect to the discussion raised by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), about the tender for agricultural implements, I have a note stating that the Department calls for these articles, John Deer ploughs, the Chatham waggon, and the Paris lump sugar, delivered at different points in Manitoba and the North-West, and therefore there is competition between those who have better means of transport than the manufacturers. The hon. gentleman called the attention of the committee to an advertisement of the Chatham waggon that crept into the forms of tender, but it did not appear in the advertisement in any way, so that the puff, if it were a puff, did not go to the public. It only went to those who were competing for these waggons.

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman state what kind of surveys are to be made in British Columbia, in what part of the railway belt they are to be made, and what the Government intend to accomplish by those surveys?

Mr. McLELAN. They are arranging for a general survey of the belt.

Mr. MILLS. Surely the hon. gentleman does not intend to survey the whole of the belt in British Columbia within this year?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. MILLS. Where are the surveys to be?

Mr. McLELAN. We intend to take observations and to run lines which will be the base of the whole system of surveys.

Mr. BLAKE. Where are these base lines to be run?

Mr. McLELAN. They are taking observations so as to fix the points of latitude and longitude. Having established astronomical points, they will be able to survey the whole belt, and I think the principal surveys this year will be from Port Moody eastward.

Mr. MILLS. Is the hon. gentleman doing anything more this year than making an astronomical survey to fix the latitude and longitude, or is he going to do a good deal more of the survey? Does this astronomical survey connect with the survey east of the Rocky Mountains, or is it an independent survey?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared to say. I shall be able to give that information more fully when the Supplementary Estimates are before us.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman agrees that the discussion shall take place on the Supplementary Estimates, I will postpone some remarks which I had to make, especially as a return on the subject has just been laid before us, which I have not been able to read.

Mr. WATSON. The Acting Minister proposed at this stage to answer my question in reference to the appointment of Louis Schmidt.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the information here.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

To pay gratuity to the widow of the late C. McMannus, guard at Kingston penitentiary ..... $670 30

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The First Minister was to ascertain what the rule was with regard to that particular item.

Mr. BOWELL. When this officer resigned, in April, 1883, it was proposed to give him a gratuity of one month's salary for each year's service. He went into the service in 1853. Before the gratuity had been voted he died. Then the usual gratuity of two months' salary was given to the widow, and the Minister of Justice recommended to Council that the balance of the full amount of the gratuity of one month's salary for each year of service should be paid to the widow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister ascertained that the rule was for two or three years, as the case might be; that it did not stop at one year?

Mr. BOWELL. No. The rule has been, that where an officer retired from ill-health, and was not of sufficient age to be superannuated, he is given a month's salary for each year he has been in the service. Sometimes they are not given the full amount, while in other cases they are simply given one year's salary as gratuity—sometimes only six months. This was the ground of the recommendation in the present case by the Minister of Justice.

ORDERS DISCHARGED.

The following Orders were discharged :—

House in committee on Bill (No. 4) to provide for the distribution of Assets of Insolvent Debtors.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

House in committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting the remuneration of revising officers, and of their clerks and bailiffs, who may be appointed under the Bill (No. 103) respecting the Electoral Franchise.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Mr. CARLING moved the discharge of Order for second reading of Bill (No. 151) respecting the Ocean Mail Service.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to say that I trust the intimation of the First Minister, which he made the other day, that this course would be taken, is not to be understood as meaning that there is any understanding with Mr. Allan that he is to make arrangements for the construction of fast steamers, upon the theory that this contract proposed to be ratified by this Bill is thereafter to be ratified, or upon any arrangement for some other and different contract. I have already stated, and I do not desire to enter into the discussion now, that it is of great consequence that efforts should be made, if a fixed subsidy is to be given, to secure the services, at a comparatively low price, of other lines, and that it is of perhaps still greater consequence to make arrangements by which fast steamers of the various lines would be utilised. While agreeing entirely in the view that we should not proceed to ratify the proposed contract this Session, I hope that the time which will elapse between this and next Session will be utilised so as to frame a satisfactory proposition, based on the suggestions which have been thrown out, rather than that the House should be asked to ratify next Session this proposed contract, with some minor improvements, which may be made in consequence of the disfavor in which the proposed contract is generally viewed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All I can say is this, that this matter, when Parliament meets again, will stand just as it stands now.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

SUPERIOR COURT, QUEBEC.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions :—

1. That it is expedient to provide that there shall be paid to the senior puisné judge of the Superior Court for the Province of Quebec, residing at Quebec, if the Chief Justice resides at Montreal, or to the senior puisné judge residing at Montreal, if the Chief Justice resides at Quebec, an annual salary of $1,000, in addition to his other salary.

2. That such salary shall be paid out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

He said: The object of this Bill is to place the senior puisné judge of the Superior Court in the same position with regard to salary as the Chief Justice. It is known, Sir, that practically there are two systems of jurisprudence and judiciary in the Province of Quebec, the centre of one being in Montreal and the centre of the other in Quebec. They have a different judiciary in Quebec and a different bar. It so happens that there is only one Chief Justice of the Superior Court, but from the peculiar constitution of the courts in the Province of Quebec, if the Chief Justice of the Superior Court belongs to one bar and presides over one bench, the senior justice in the other district holds the position and performs the duties of a chief justice; in fact, the senior puisné judge is in every regard, excepting as to title, the Chief Justice of the Superior Court for the particular district in which he may be. It is proposed, therefore, that he shall have the salary of a chief justice. It is proposed that if the senior judge of the Superior Court presides in Montreal, he shall have the salary while the Chief Justice is in Quebec, and vice versa. It is so reasonable a proposition that I think it is only necessary to state it to get the assent of the House. There are only two Chief Justices in the Province of Quebec, while we have four in the Province of Ontario. I need not speak of the merits or demerits of the senior judge of the Superior Court of Montreal. I simply move the resolutions on the general question that there are, in fact, two Chief Justices, one presiding in Montreal and the other in Quebec, and that, as they perform the same duties and are under the same responsibilities, he should have the same salary.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain what special duties, additional to those performed by the other puisné judges of this court, the senior puisné justice performs?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The senior judge of Montreal at this moment, performs all the duties that a chief justice performs elsewhere. He presides in the court, he takes the initiative, and acts otherwise as a chief justice of a court would act—the hon. gentleman quite understands the duties and position of a chief justice, as contra-distinguished from those of a puisné judge. He guides and controls, so far as a chief justice guides and controls, the general practice in a court. My hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, reminds me that in the Province of Quebec he has to regulate the work of the judges of the Superior Court throughout the Province. If a judge is ill or is away, and it is necessary to make arrangements for the performance of the duties throughout his district or section of the Province, he selects the judges, and there is thrown upon him the responsibility for the performance of those duties.

Mr. BLAKE. I had supposed, and I think it has been stated on former occasions, that those duties, which are not unimportant, the duties of arranging who shall perform the work among the puisné judges, are duties which are performed by the Chief Justice of that court, and not by the senior puisné justice in Montreal. I thought that the Chief Justice, wherever he presided, performed those duties. I think the senior puisné justice has no statutory title to perform any of those duties, and I had not heard that he performed any extra duties beyond those performed by the junior puisné judges of the court. In fact, the hon. gentleman, in explaining his position, seemed to be in exactly the same predicament as a certain great clerical dignitary, who, on being asked what were the functions of an archdeacon, said his functions were archidiaconal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought of that story.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; I thought when I saw the hon. gentleman's smile, that his explanation must have reminded him of it.

Mr. BAKER (Missisquoi). It is true that before the Session of 1884 of the Quebec Legislature, the functions of the Chief Justice in the district of Montreal were performed there by the senior judge by courtesy and gratuitously, and had been so performed for many years, but in 1884 the Quebec Legislature passed an Act declaring, in express terms, that whenever the Chief Justice resided in the district of Quebec the functions of a chief justice should be performed by the senior puisné judge at Montreal, and vice versa; so that we have direct legislative authority for the arrangement which at present exists in the district of Montreal, and those functions have been discharged since the month of June 1884, by the senior puisné judge.

Mr. BLAKE. Are they archidiaconal functions?

Mr. BAKER (Missisquoi). Well, his functions are, perhaps, not very onerous, but they are very responsible. He has the duty of presiding in the Court of Review, and generally in the Superior Court in the district of Montreal. Beyond that, he has entire control of the judicial force in the district of Montreal. It is not, since the passage of that Act of the Quebec Legislature, confined to the Chief Justice; the senior judge in Montreal has his specific duties to perform, and it is only right that Parliament should provide for the payment for those duties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to raise any question as to the propriety of this addition to the salary of the judge in question; I do not know anything about the matter which would warrant me in objecting to this step; but I would call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that he, if I am not mistaken, has again and again held out hopes to a deserving class of judges in the Province of Ontario that he would raise their salaries, and I think the whole question of the salaries of the judges ought to be considered at the same time. I think those gentlemen who are acquainted with the duties performed by the county judges in Ontario are of opinion that those gentlemen are very greatly underpaid. We are going to increase their duties by the legislation of this Session, and I think that when steps are being taken to raise the salaries of the judges in other Provinces, the case of those gentlemen ought to be considered.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the position of the county court judges ought to be considered. In days past I have been considered by the county judges their special friend, because I have raised their status and their salaries to their present position; but I do not think that that matter is at all connected with this subject, which relates to the salary of a man who is performing the duties of Chief Justice of a Superior Court, and is recognised by law as such. The other question is a separate question. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that at the proper time, which is not this time, in my opinion, the case of the county court judges in Ontario—the common Province of the hon. gentleman and of myself—should be considered. Meanwhile, many of them will be revising officers, and in that position will receive a considerable addition to their salaries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As the case was up, I thought that the case of men whose claims were denied because you could not consider their case without considering that of others, might fairly be considered on this occasion.

Resolutions considered in Committee and reported.

THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST— RECOGNITION OF VOLUNTEERS' SERVICES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 3321) to authorise the granting of land, or scrip redeemable in land, to the members of the enrolled militia force actively engaged in suppressing the half-breed and Indian outbreak in the North-West. He said: I think the House, on both sides, will be in accord with the general spirit of these resolutions. We all agree that the services of our citizen soldiery, who have left their homes and their hearths in order to fight the battles of the country in the North-West, and to restore peace, order and law, where disorder and insurrection existed, should be duly acknowledged. These resolutions are offered with that purpose; and they are offered with the secondary purpose of opening up that country to the young men of that soldiery who have seen the North-West, who know its advantages, and who may, perhaps, take a liking to the country and desire to settle there. It is of great importance, too, I think, to that country and to the whole Dominion, that a considerable portion of that body should take up their habitation in the North-West, to which they have gone as loyal soldiers and as supporters of the supremacy of the law and of the Government of Canada, as it is constituted. Still, it is more than probable that a very considerable portion of the militia force now on duty in the North-West may not desire to settle there, and may return to their homes; and yet we must make some acknowledgment, in my opinion and in the opinion of the Government, of their invaluable services. Every one of them who happens to settle there has the same rights as any other settler to have a quarter section of 160 acres free, except by paying the entry fee of $10. We think that besides those 160 acres, which any one of them could get of right as a settler, together with a pre-emption right to a quarter section contiguous to the homestead, they should have that as a second homestead; so that their homestead should be 320 acres instead of 160, and for those 320 acres they should receive their patent, free of all fees or charges. The resolutions provide that they are to have a certain period to make up their minds whether they shall become settlers or not. Those who do not choose to become settlers, but who return to their homes in the older Provinces, instead of getting 320 acres, shall get scrip for 80 acres, simply as an acknowledgment by the country of their services, and the scrip will be received in payment for Crown lands, or as dues for timber or grazing lands. The resolutions provide that in case, after due consideration, the soldier chooses to settle, he can do that in person or by substitute. The present system does not allow of a substitute. A man who goes to settle must himself choose his own homestead, enter his own name, work it for three years, and at the end of three years he gets his patent. It is thought that some of the militiamen coming home may at first make up their minds to settle in the North-West, and then find they cannot conveniently do so. It will give them an opportunity, which is not given to other settlers, of choosing a substitute. They may make what arrangement with a substitute they please. The militiaman has the right to get his 320 acres, free of everything, or transfer it to some substitute; but if he sends a substitute, he is not to keep the land in his own name and have a tenant there, because that is a system liable to lead to an evasion of the present system, which is, that the land should be actually settled by the owner. If he chooses to reside in Ontario or Quebec, or Nova Scotia, he may do so, and he can dispose of the 320 acres to a substitute, who goes out there and becomes an actual settler, the land being entered in his own name, and being himself personally responsible to carry out all the conditions of a homesteader. That is the purview, the intention of the resolutions, the spirit of them, and I am quite sure they will be accepted by the whole House. The resolutions have a two-fold object. First, that there should be a substantial recognition, beyond the mere daily pay of the militiamen who went to the North-West to fight our battle, of their services, by making them grants of land, or scrip, if they do not want to have the land, and at the same time making a distinction between the men who will not settle there and the men who will. The man who does not, but who returns home, gets scrip equivalent to 80 acres; the man who goes there and settles there gets 320 acres. That is the system which, after full consideration, the Government have resolved to press on the approval of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not rise to say a word on the details of the proposal which, I think, will be more fitly discussed in committee, and I should be sorry to conjoin one of the observations I shall have to make in the committee with the words I have to say on this occasion, which, as the House will understand from the question I put some time ago, is simply to express my approval of the hon. gentleman's proposition, that a substantial reward be offered to the volunteers. I think that our citizen soldiery, to use the hon. gentleman's phrase, occupy a position wholly different from that which the permanent soldiery of other Governments occupy. We cannot ignore the character of their engagement, the circumstances under which they enlist, the material sacrifices they make, when they are obliged to go out on active service, and all of these call on us to join in the endeavor to frame a plan by which there will be a material and substantial recognition of the services they have rendered us in the North-West.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. WATSON. I heartily concur in the proposition of the Government to recognise the services of the volunteers in this substantial manner. I would suggest, however, to the First Minister, that there should be some provision made to the volunteers who have gone to the front from Manitoba, and who already occupy land, and would prefer other arrangements, rather than have to take up more land, inasmuch as a great many of them own 160 acres homesteads, and have pre-emptions of 160 acres. Those pre-emptions, of course, are not paid for yet, and I know that a change made, by which those volunteers would be allowed to get a free patent of the half section they occupy, would be much more appreciated than the privilege of taking up other land. These volunteers would only receive $80 each, if they did not wish to take up other lands. This scrip is worth about 75 cents on the dollar.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It ought to be worth a dollar.

Mr. WATSON. I may inform the hon. Minister that half-breed scrip is selling in the west at 76 cents on the dollar, and the scrip given to the volunteers would not be worth more. In the case of Capt. Brown, who was shot at Batoche—he was one of Bolton's scouts—that gentleman had fulfilled the conditions of the Homestead Act, but had not received the patent for his homestead and pre-emption, for the simple reason that he had not paid for his pre-emption. In such a case as that, I should suggest that the patent should issue free, as I suggest it should issue in the case of a homesteader who has already received his land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These resolutions contain a general proposition affecting all the militia. It would be quite impossible to amend them so as to meet every possible case. The case of those who have fallen in battle or in disease consequent on the hardships of the campaign; the case of men who have, through any circumstances whatever, during the course of the campaign, special claim and special reason for desiring variation of these general propositions, will be duly considered. But you can quite see that it would be impossible for us to frame a series of resolutions, and amend them in order to meet every possible case, or even every individual case which may occur within the cognisance of any hon. member. The general principle being laid down, it will, of course, take some little time before this can be carried out. I think it will take this summer. We will have to get the rules from each board duly certified by the commanding officer of the regiment, according to whatever system may be adopted by the Militia Department, and after their claims are substantiated, there will be the warrant to be issued, as a matter of course, under the Dominion Lands Act, the militia bounty warrant; then the individual has to choose his lot or to declare that he does intend to be a settler. All that will take some little time. That will take this summer and autumn; and, when we get the general principle of granting these lands or scrip in lieu of lands to the main body of the volunteers or militiamen on service, then we can take up the special cases that will be represented to the Department, and you may depend upon it that the House on both sides will have sufficient confidence in the Government to say that they will look carefully at every individual case with the utmost liberality and with due regard to the great services of the men, to the losses in case of death or permanent injury, and to the state of the families of those who have been cut off. I think we had better carry the resolutions generally, leaving special cases to be dealt with specially.

Mr. WATSON. I only mentioned this as a case which might come up, and I am pleased to hear that the Government will give their favorable consideration to such cases. I did not expect that the resolutions would be formed to meet any special cases of that kind, but there should be no objection to make the resolutions meet the case of the volunteers in Manitoba who have homesteads. That would cover a large number of men. There must be 1,500 men enrolled in the active service there, and I suppose half of them are farmers and homesteaders, and probably one-fourth of them hold pre-emptions which are not paid for. That being the case, I think the First Minister could put in a provision for these homesteaders. It is rather general than particular, and I think, if they wish to avail themselves of this provision, they should be allowed to do so. I think these volunteers in Manitoba should receive special consideration when they own homesteads and pre-emptions, and for this reason; they have gone to the front, and this year they will not have any crops in, and they will suffer more than the volunteers who went from the east, many of whom were young men, who, of course, lost their salaries, but not the whole year's profits; but these farmers, who are unable to put in their crops, will lose one year of their farming operations, and I think it would be a fair condition, in return for their services, to provide that those homesteaders who have pre-emptions which are not paid for, and that should be paid for, should receive a patent for the 320 acres.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not understand my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) to propose that these resolutions should meet exceptional cases, but I understood him to make a very reasonable suggestion as to the general ground upon which the resolutions should be based. The First Minister has said that we have to deal with the general principle, and that he will be liberal in dealing with particular cases; but he cannot deal more liberally than the law allows him, and we should see that the law will allow him to deal with these cases. The proposition we are now on contains a terminal statement, to which I do not object, that this grant shall be made in such a shape that it shall be conducive to the settlement of the public lands, and that is the motion on which you propose to give some larger inducements, if only it suits the position of the volunteer himself to settle, or will enable him to give large inducements to somebody else whom he may love or with whom he may make a bargain. But you are dealing with two classes of volunteers. There is a very important class of these volunteers, in point of numbers, who have settled upon land and are homesteaders in the North-West. You cannot say that they are to settle the public lands, because they are already there, doing the very thing you want them to do, and therefore you cannot apply to them the stimulus to make a new settlement that you can to a man from the east, who had gone up there, and is willing, either himself or by means of a friend, to become a settler in the North-West. The question then is, in reference to that large class, which may comprise in all 1,400, or 1,500 men, of whom a considerable proportion—of course, a large number were from Winnipeg and other centres of population—are homesteaders; and I suppose there are several hundreds of homesteaders among them, whether you will apply to those who are homesteaders and actual settlers the measure of relief by which they could take advantage of your benevolence, would it not be the nearest analogy to the case of the others if you were to say that they might have their pre-emption free, and that that should be their reward? Of course, it is no inducement to tell them they may have another pre-emption. Indeed, they will have only a Hobson's choice; they must take the $80 of scrip, and that is all you give them. The second observation I have to make is, that the reward in money or money's worth which you propose to give them in scrip is of very doubtful advantage. When my hon. friend informed the First Minister that scrip was now selling at 76 cents, the hon. gentleman said it ought to be worth $1. It is no use discussing what it ought to be worth; the question is, what it is worth, and the value will be less when you throw some hundreds of thousands of dollars more upon the market. The law of supply and demand must affect the price, and the result of giving this scrip, in addition to the amount of scrip to be issued in satisfaction of the half-breed claims, will be, that the volunteer will not get the $80, probably not more than $60 out of the $80; the public will lose the $80; and the speculators will get the difference between $60 and $80. The speculators in land scrip will make the whole profit. This scrip is $80 of loss to the State, but it is not $80 of profit to the volunteer. If, therefore, you are going to give a commodity, which, at the present moment, is worth only about $60, which, by the very fact of your arranging for a very large additional issue will be probably worth less than $60 to the volunteer, which will just give a margin of profit to the speculators, and which will give the volunteer something between $50 and $60, I think it would be better to give him the alternative of taking a smaller sum in cash; let him take scrip if he chooses, but let him have, if he prefers, that smaller sum in cash, which will be to him more than he will get by means of the scrip.

Mr. MILLS. I think there is no difficulty in carrying out the suggestion made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), with reference to those who have already taken up lands in the North-West Territory. The hon. gentleman knows the plan that was adopted before, when military warrants were issued to the volunteers in 1871. Now, those who did not wish to go into the country were allowed by the Government so much cash in lieu of lands. If the hon. gentleman were to make a similar arrangement, so that the man who is already in possession of a homestead, and who has pre-empted 160 acres, could deposit with the Government his warrant for the 160 acres, and it would be accepted as payment for the lands of which he is already in possession, that would be just as well for the Government and very much better for the individual; because he does not want more land, and it is not in the public interest that he should take more land, when he is already a new settler upon lands that belong to the Crown. It is therefore of consequence to the Government that we should not compel a party to take an additional 160 acres when he is already in possession of as much as he can well deal with. If, then, he does not wish to take an additional 160 acres, it would be better for the public and it would be better for the individual that he should have an opportunity of tendering his bounty warrant for his 160 acres of land to the land agent, and that it should be accepted in payment of the pre-emption of which he is already in possession.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, I am not at all prepared to recommend that instead of scrip there should be money given to the soldiers. They will come and receive their $50, or $70 or $80, and it will be a serious charge on the Treasury; many of these volunteers are young men, and it will be an inducement to them to take the money at once, rather than become settlers. I do not think that we ought to offer an inducement to them against remaining in the country. Young men are young men, and when you tell them: You will get so much money at once if you do not choose to settle, a good many of them will be very apt to take it. But I have already said it is the object of the Government, in proposing these resolutions, first, to make a substantial recognition of the services of the volunteers; and, in the second place, to encourage them to become settlers. They will be most valuable settlers; they are men trained to be soldiers, who have come up there and shown their loyalty, and who will be most valuable stand-bys, every one of them a centre of law and order in the North-West. It will be a great thing to get them to settle there; they will be most invaluable, not only for their services as settlers and agriculturists, but as men who have served the country, and who will be ready to serve it again. Therefore, we ought not, by offering them a small payment in money, to hold out an inducement to them not to return. And there is this substantial objection, that it will be a most serious inroad upon the public revenues to provide for four, or five, or six thousand men—whatever the number may be—who take their money instead of settling upon the lands. The other question which has been raised is a more substantial one, that is to say, that the scrip shall be allowed to be used in payment of all kinds of land. The two regiments that went into the field in the North-West, besides the artillery corps, should stand precisely in the same position as the volunteers from the east. If they want additional land they can have it; if they do not, if they have land enough already, they ought to stand exactly in the same position as the volunteers from Ontario. If they do not want the land they will take the scrip; if they do want the land they can get it, and they cannot only get it, but they have special advantages: the volunteers who went from Winnipeg will have special advantages over their comrades from the east, because they are at Winnipeg; they see settlers coming in, and they can get hold of a substitute for the whole 320 acres. With the eastern volunteers the chance of doing so is not so certain. The militiaman, for instance, going from Quebec, as the 9th Regiment of Quebec, may not find a substitute at all, and he may be obliged to take the scrip for $80. But the soldiers of the two regiments and the corps of artillery at Winnipeg can always get a substitute, can always make an arrangement, and they have a great "pull," to use a common expression, on their comrades in the east. I do not think we can make a distinction between those soldiers who start from Winnipeg, make a distinction in their favor, as against the volunteers of Quebec, or even Toronto. Then with regard to the issue of scrip: if the hon. gentleman will look at the third resolution, it provides this:

"That any person entitled under the foregoing to select and enter, either by himself or by his substitute, 320 acres of land as a homestead, in the manner and subject to the terms and conditions hereinbefore prescribed, may, in lieu thereof, if he so chooses, receive scrip for $80, which shall be accepted in payment of any Dominion lands open for sale, or in payment of pre-emptions or of rents of Dominion lands leased for grazing or hay-cutting purposes."

So that if it does not suit the volunteer living in Winnipeg to go and get his 320 acres more, he gets his $80 of scrip, and that he can pay in upon lands he has bought upon pre-emption. I believe it will not do to draw any distinction; they must be put exactly on the same footing, whether they come from Winnipeg, or Quebec or Halifax.

Mr. WATSON. I do not for a moment suggest that a distinction should be drawn between the volunteers from Winnipeg and the volunteers from the east; far from it. I believe the volunteers from the east should receive fully as valuable consideration as those from the west. But young farmers, who are living on the land, who have all the land they can occupy, and who are not in a position to hire a substitute to hold their land for them, if they do not receive that, they only receive $80. A great number of these young men are not in the best of circumstances; they may have to pay for their homesteads inside of six months; some of them are past due, and it will be a great relief to these young volunteers who have sacrificed one year's farming operations in going to the front. It is on behalf of those young men I am advocating that they should receive a free deed of the lands they occupy, instead of having to pay for them, as the Dominion Lands Act requires. It should be provided in the Bill that a volunteer who is in occupation of a homestead or pre-emption should have a right to receive a patent for his pre-emption in lieu of those other considerations for volunteers who have not homesteads or pre-emptions. My remarks are not made with reference to individuals in Winnipeg, but simply with regard to young farmers who have gone to the front.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Just consider how that would work out. One of the volunteers has got a homestead, and has agreed to pay $2 an acre for the pre-emption, and it is proposed to make him a present of the pre-emption. He will get the $2 an acre, and the man in the east will get $80. It would never work out.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman is speaking of a man who is to receive $80 in scrip, and I am talking of a man who has a homestead in the country. I do not see that a pre-emption already located should be worth anything more than one that is to be located. There should not be any difference. This seems to be rather like taking advantage of a man who happens to be so placed as not to be able to take up a second homestead or pre-emption, for in such a case he would only receive $80 in scrip when another volunteer would have the right to receive 160 acres.

On resolution 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am inclined to think it would be better to extend the time a little. I would not care to extend it indefinitely, but 1st June is not a very convenient time. Almost all those persons now bearing arms in the North-West reside in Old Canada, and are likely to return immediately for various reasons. If they should go up to the North-West to select land, it would probably be in the spring of next year, and there would be considerable difficulty in their making a selection by 1st June if the season happened to be wet or the winter happened to be late. The Minister knows well that it will not be convenient for most of those who would like to avail themselves of this opportunity to remain in the Province at the present time, and probably they would not care to go up till next spring.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I gather from the remarks of the First Minister that his real object is to get the settlers. Looking at it from that point of view, I believe that the limited time would tend very much to prevent that object being gained. Most of the volunteers are now on their way home. They made arrangements at home before leaving, and it will not be convenient for them to immediately return to the North-West, and the 1st June will come very quickly in the North-West. I can see no disadvantage likely to arise from extending the time, and I believe the result of doing so would be largely to induce settlement rather than taking scrip. The time being limited, it offers peculiar inducements to accepting $80 scrip instead of making settlement. The volunteers, being on their way home, can hardly return this season. Furthermore, I suppose they could go in advance of the warrants, but perhaps it would suit them better to have documents in their possession, showing they are entitled to make the location. If that be the case, a considerable time must necessarily elapse before they can be put in possession of the warrants. Returns must be made by the commanders, and there must be identification and other matters gone through. This will throw it too late in the season. They should start again in early spring, so as to have ample time to look over that very extensive country and make locations. I therefore think it would be far better if the time were extended, so as to give the entire season.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The first decision of the Government was to fix 1st January, 1886, as the time within which these persons should make up their minds whether they would take scrip or become settlers; but after due consideration, we thought, using the argument of the hon. gentleman, that the time had better be extended to 1st June, 1886. It is of very great importance that these matters should not be hanging indefinitely, but that we should get the people up there. While we had thought that 1st January was suitable, yet we finally decided that the time should be extended to 1st June. Surely, in regard to those men who have been in the North-West, to give them a whole year in which to make up their minds whether they would take scrip or become settlers, is not an insufficient time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point is not as to their becoming settlers, but as to their selecting particular portions of land.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I see no objection, with the consent of the House, of changing the date from 1st June to 1st August, which would give them the whole season. We cannot hang this question up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is reasonable enough.

Resolution amended, by inserting 1st August in place of 1st June.

On resolution 3,

Mr. WATSON. I would suggest that at the end of this resolution, the following be inserted:

Any member of the said enrolled militia who has located a homestead and pre-emption shall, in lieu of the grant hereinbefore mentioned, be entitled to get his pre-emption free.

He said: I think it is nothing but fair that such a provision should be made, as it is simply giving them the privilege of keeping land which they have got already, instead of taking other land, which he may have to locate. He could move off and take up the land through another, as he has the right to do, by having a substitute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This provision is impossible. It would be a cause of discontent among all the volunteers, except a few corps in Manitoba. The hon. gentleman says it is only 160 acres, but it is more than that, because the pre-emptions are $2 an acre, and the Manitoba volunteers would get $320 instead of $80, as the others get.

Mr. WATSON. I do not propose that at all. There are no pre-emptions now at less than $2 per acre, and the hon. gentleman proposes to give 320 acres as a homestead. They get 160 acres free, and why should those who are able to take up a second homestead be entitled to receive $320, while the man who cannot do that, but has a pre-emption only, receives $80 in scrip.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the same with an eastern volunteer; if he cannot get the land, he gets scrip.

Mr. WATSON. These men, when able, can come back and prosecute their ordinary callings, but there are many of these other men have lost their whole year's work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Have not the men from the east lost their work?

Mr. WATSON. There are very few of the volunteers from the east who are farmers. I do not think there are half-a-dozen who have neglected putting in their spring crop.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You don't know anything about it.

Resolutions reported as amended.

On motion for concurrence in the resolutions,

Mr. WATSON. I now move that the resolutions be not now concurred in, but be referred back, to make the amendment which I read in committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that is out of order. There can be no increase of this kind without the Crown's consent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is rather a strained construction of the rule. It is a substitute, and not an additional grant.

Mr. MILLS. I submit that this is doing no more than the hon. gentleman has recommended to the House by the resolutions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After receiving the assent of the Crown.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman proposes to give 160 acres of the public domain away, and he has, I suppose, obtained the consent of the Crown to that proposition. Now, these other parties have already homesteads, and they say, instead of compelling them to take up an additional homestead, when they receive this gift of a pre-emption of land the pre-emption lands given shall be those attached to the homestead already taken up. There is no additional charge or burden. It is another 160 acres, but still it is no more.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, it is a little provoking to hear arguments of that kind, when it is so plain. The hon. gentleman wants that every Manitoba volunteer who happens to have a homestead, and if he has got a pre-emption or the promise to pay $320, for which he is a debtor to the Crown, that he shall get a present of that $320 instead of $80.

Mr. WATSON. It is simply to replace the homestead which the hon. gentleman proposes to give by the pre-emption which I propose they should get.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would be a direct injustice to the volunteers of Ontario, Quebec and other Provinces.

Mr. MITCHELL. I take it that the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is simply that it gives to the volunteers in Winnipeg and Manitoba, who happen to have homesteads already, an advantage over the volunteers in all other parts of the Dominion. That should not be.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, however, does not affect the point of order; that is another affair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question of order is not a very easy one to decide. The land which is now offered to the volunteers is 160 acres of any lands in the North-West Territories open for homestead and pre-emption entry, and it is now stated in the amendment that it shall be 160 acres which he has himself pre-empted.

An hon. MEMBER. That is not open.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. SPEAKER. No. The question is, can the alteration be made without the special consent of the Crown. I think that the land has been pre-empted as a sort of debt to the Crown, and this would be giving $160 or 160 acres of land, and therefore I think it is such a material change as should be recommended.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is wiping out a debt.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; it is wiping out a debt of 320 acres by giving $160.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not in all cases, because some of these pre-emptions are $1 an acre—for instance, in Belt 1.

Mr. SPEAKER. That just shows that there are different cases in which there have been pre-emptions, and therefore it is an addition.

Mr. WATSON. I am sorry that the hon. First Minister cannot see fit to adopt this proposal, and even if it is declared out of order, to get a Message to allow it. It seems to me nothing but fair, and it is taking no undue advantage of the volunteers in the east. They have a right to take up lands in the west, and the volunteers in the west have a right to take up their land. I am very sorry the First Minister puts the construction he does upon this matter. I do not wish to take any undue advantage of the volunteers in the east.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) respecting a grant of lands to the militia on service in Manitoba and the North-West.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAYS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved second reading of Bill (No. 158) to authorise the granting of further Subsidies to and making further provision for the construction and efficient operation of the railways therein described.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said there was some change.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the third clause we insert the same provision that was put in the Subsidies Bill of last year, that this company cannot become amalgamated with the other.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have just remembered that I told the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) that it was not at all likely that this Bill would come on to-night, and I do not see him in the House. I do not think it would be fair to go on in his absence, and therefore I move that the committee rise, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BLAKE. I see by the papers that the hon. member for Halifax likes the Bill very much.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I dare say.

SUPPLY—NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WATSON. I beg leave to call the attention of the House for a very short time to a matter of some considerable importance, which I expected would be dealt with before this date, but which, for some reason or other, has not been dealt with. I refer to a land grant for the North-West Central Railway, running to Rapid city, from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, at Melbourne. I was much pleased, at the commencement of this Session, to see it announced in the Speech from the Throne that branch lines in the North-West should be aided by land grants, and I was also well pleased to see 6,400 acres a mile granted to the Manitoba and South-Western Railway and to the Manitoba and North-Western Railway, but I regretted that at the same time the North-West Central Railway was not included. The original charter for this railway was granted in 1880, it being then known as the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway. It was to start at a point in township 11, range 13, and was to run in a north-westerly direction to Battleford. The line was approved of in 1881 as far as Fort Ellice. In 1880 a land grant of 3,840 acres per mile, at $1 per acre, was offered to this road; but, unfortunately, for some reason, the company, like other companies, was unable to proceed, and last Session the name of the railway was changed to the North-West Central Railway, and certain amendments to its charter were obtained by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), who is the president of the road, and who, I believe, has got the road into very good shape, to be proceeded with, if it is given a land grant the same as other railways. One strong reason why the Government should consider this road as one of the important branch lines of the North-West is that it runs over a section of country through which the original line of the Canadian Pacific Railway was located in 1879. In that year the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway was surveyed to cross the Little Saskatchewan at Rapid city, and in consequence of that the country in that neighborhood settled up very rapidly and a town sprang up at the spot. Unfortunately, they want railway communication. They had hopes of having a railway, but now, when their expectations seemed to be on the eve of fulfilment, it seems that the Government will not make the free grant to this company, as they have to other companies. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs 22 miles north of Brandon and 18 miles south of Minnedosa, and there is ample room between those two for another railway. Very strong petitions have been presented to the Government, showing why aid should be granted, and as I happen to have a petition here similar to the one presented the other day, with 490 names attached, I will take the liberty of reading it to the House:

"The petition of the undersigned homesteaders along the proposed line of the North-West Central humbly sheweth:

"That whereas the majority of homesteaders located in this district, in consequence of assurance from the Government that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway would be built on the 4th base line, between townships 12 and 13, and the publication of Government maps showing this to be its location;

"And whereas the settlers along the line, from Melbourne to Rapid city, assisted largely in the construction of the present grade between these points, by work done on the same, and the furnishing of supplies;

"And whereas, if the work is not proceeded with, these people will receive no compensation, although, in many instances, their claim against the old company amounts to more than $1,000, which amounts farmers can ill-afford to lose;

"And whereas the injury done to the farms by having the grading made through them can never be repaired;

"And whereas many of the settlers have left, and others will be obliged to leave, if railway accommodation is not soon obtained;

"Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your honorable body may see fit to give such aid, by way of free land grants, as will lead to the immediate construction of the said North-West Central Railway;

"And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray."

I believe the work between Melbourne and Rapid city cost in the neighborhood of $100,000, $42,000 is owing for labor and supplies on the road, about $12,000 is due the merchants of Rapid city for supplies, and also $30,000 due to the farmers along the line, between Melbourne and Rapid city. The line was graded two years ago with a good grade to lay a track on; and unless the Government come to the relief of the company, those people to whom I have referred will be compelled to suffer a heavy loss. When the charter was granted a year ago, changing the name from the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway to the North-West Central, there was a provision put in the Bill which reads as follows:—

"The said Act incorporating the said Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company, and the Acts amending the same, are hereby continued in full force and effect, so far as the same are not inconsistent with anything in this Act contained and as amended hereby; and the said company, under the name hereby assigned to it, shall have a further period of one year and one-half from the passing of this Act for the completion or putting into running order of at least fifty miles of the said railway, commencing on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at Melbourne, or at such other point as the directors determine, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council.

I believe that one of the objections against giving a land grant to the North-West Central Company is that its line approached too closely to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Manitoba North-West Railway, and that there is not enough room between the two to warrant the Government giving the land grant. That is an unfair construction to put on this matter, for the Government granted a charter and approved of the location of the road some years ago, and in June, 1884, the Government passed an Order in Council increasing the land grant to this road as well as to others. The Government were aware of the location of the road, and approved of Melbourne as a starting point, and since that time have approved of Sydney, still further east, as a starting point, by Order in Council. Melbourne is accepted as the starting point by Order in Council, and you will see that any other point the directors may choose may be taken, provided it has received sanction of Order in Council. As far as Melbourne is concerned, however, the company have the power to start without an Order in Council. I might also state that the following clause is in the charter of the company: "The existing liabilities of the company for work done for the said company shall be a first charge on the undertaking." Under this Bill, the first charge on the new company is the liabilities of the old. It is nothing but fair the Government should come to the relief of this road, as it has done to others. No railway in the North-West stands in a better position, provided the same terms are given to it as to other railways. I know the president has a contract signed by a leading firm of contractors, who are willing to take the land grant and build the road. I believe the reason the president has been able to make such favorable terms is that the road runs through a settled country, that will pay for the operation of a local line, and I believe the settlers will be willing to bonus this company, in order to obtain its speedy construction. From the petition I have read from the settlers, it is evident they are in a desperate strait. They declare unless they get railway communication they will have to leave. It has been suggested the company might receive the land grant if they started further west; but if they did, it would be a great injustice to the people along the line, who have done the work and are anxiously waiting to see the line pushed forward. I might quote from the Rapid city Standard with reference to this matter, as showing the views of the settlers in that section of country. That paper says:

"The people along the proposed line of the North-West Central Railway have been deluded, year by year, with false hopes of railway communication; and now that they could be realised, if the Government gave a free grant, are they to be crushed forever?"

Those people feel that the Government have the power to aid them by giving them this free grant; and if the Government do not see their way to do that, those people will feel that they have been broken faith with. There was a petition presented, with a circular attached, on which there were 500 names, and the circular gave the names of 125 homesteaders who had left their homesteads because they had not railway facilities. I maintain it is just as important to keep settlers in the country as to induce them to come into the country. It has been rumored through the press that there was some reason for the Government withholding this land grant; that one of the directors of the North-West Central Railway Company, the hon. member for King's, N. S. (Mr. Woodworth), because he could not get matters as he wished, was opposing any aid being granted to this company. I hope the Government will not favor any such petition, but will look at the true interest of the settlers, and the pledges these people have received from the Government—even pledges by Order in Council, and repeated by other Orders in Council, which have been passed for years, referring to Rapid city as an objective point of that road, and Melbourne as the starting point. That being the case, the Government having made pledges and promises to these people, leading them to believe that the railway will be constructed along the 4th base line, within two miles of Rapid city, those people believed that the line would be so built. They are still in hopes that they may have railway communication if this land grant is given. This company have only about three months from the present date to commence the work, and have 50 miles in operation to Rapid city. I believe that could be done if they got the land grant, and can be done even at this late stage of the season. I hope the Government will see fit to give the same aid to the company that they have given to others. It might be stated that this section of country is near the North-Western Railway, but there is a range of sand hills, which it is impossible to make a road through, to get to the North-Western Railway. I think it is of the greatest importance that this matter should be attended to this Session. If not, I am afraid that the people will become disheartened. Some have already left and others threaten to leave. From Rapid city to Fort Ellice is one of the finest tracts of country in the North-West, all well settled, with a good class of farmers, some of whom have broken up 200 or 300 acres, and in some cases there are no less than 1,200 acres broken up. If they were receiving $1 a bushel for their grain, they could take it to the railway, but when they are getting from 45 cents to 55 cents a bushel, it does not pay them to raise grain, when they have to take it so far to the market. The line has been graded for some distance now, and the work will be thrown away, unless it is speedily completed. I hope the Minister will see it to be his duty to bring down, at a very early day this Session, a proposition in aid of this railway.

Mr. McLELAN. I am glad to find that the hon. gentleman has formally approved of this road. I had reason to fear that he would have taken a somewhat different course. When the proposition was made to give free grants of land to other colonisation roads in the North-West, conditions were sought to be imposed by the leader of the Opposition, which the Government believed would have rendered them inoperative. The hon. gentleman was not here at that time to aid the Government in carrying those resolutions through, and I was afraid he would not have given his hearty support to a grant for this road. The hon. gentleman is in error in supposing that any hon. member of this House has given any opposition to this grant. It is the policy adopted by the Government and sustained by the House that free grants shall be given to roads which tend to open any district for settlement, or to accommodate the settlers in any former settlement. This road is not wholly in a position of opening up a section of country that has not railway accommodation within a reasonable distance. The difficulties in aiding this road by a free grant of land are, first, that it runs between and almost parallel with the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the North-Western, already built for a considerable distance west, and so close to both that it is almost in the position of a competing line with both. It is not for a considerable distance in the position of opening up a new country that is without railway facilities, and therefore it does not come under the provision upon which the Government and the House agreed to grant lands in aid of railways. Then there is another difficulty, namely, that it is so close to both, for a considerable distance westward, that the Government has not low land available for a free grant. It is either within the railway belt, where the Canadian Pacific Railway lands lie, or in the belt of the North-Western Railway, where the lands have been set apart for that road, or the lands have been taken up by settlers, or by persons who have acquired their patents by purchase or homestead. So that for a very considerable distance westward there is a want of lands, not only in proximity to two roads, but a want of lands to subsidise it westward. I have stated to the president of that company that if the road were started further west, or if it were continued upon the site which has been projected without grants of land, when it reached a position farther west, where the company already holds lands that could be appropriated to it, and when it reached a point far enough away that there would be a sufficient distance from the two roads already constructed, then it would be in a position to receive favorable consideration; and I believed my colleagues would be ready to follow the principle that has been adopted by the Government and the House, in reference to that part westward to Battleford. It is in this position: The president of the company took this matter into consideration, and asked me to stay a decision upon the matter, until he could consult with the shareholders, or some persons with whom he was in communication. I have but lately received his reply upon the matter; and having got his reply, the whole question is now under the consideration of the Government, and will be immediately decided.

Mr. HESSON. I have been honored with a good deal of correspondence from friends in the North-West, who settled along that road, as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) said, many years ago, when there was a prospect of building the road on the original survey of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The tone of the telegrams I have received is much of the character that the hon. member for Marquette has stated to the House. But I must say that I regret that the hon. member should have brought this question up here. These matters are seldom brought to a satisfactory issue by the efforts of one single gentleman in the House, no matter how eloquent or able he may be, or how much he may be in the confidence of the Government. Had the matter been entrusted to myself, I should not have taken that course. However, as it has been brought before the House, I feel it my duty to say that I must endorse what he has stated, with reference to the feeling of the people in that section of the country. They feel that they have peculiar claims upon this Government, because the road was diverted from the original line, where they supposed it would run when they settled there. It is one of the most settled parts of Manitoba; without any doubt it is the garden of that country. I had almost said. I have here a printed list of something like 100 homesteaders who have vacated their lands after having been settled upon them for two or three years, and others will follow. It is said that at least twenty names have been omitted from this printed list, and that along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for a distance of 100 miles, there are many other settlers who have abandoned that part of the country because they cannot make farming pay. I am sorry to hear the Acting Minister of the Interior say that they consider now that that road is located too close to the Manitoba and North-Western. I have reason to believe, Sir, that a country capable of producing so largely as that country does, of grain and stock, can be made profitable for another line of railway. A distance of 22 miles from Brandon to Rapid city is certainly far enough for any farmer to take his grain, and it is 18 miles on the other side to Minnedosa, where it strikes the North-Western. Now, the Government having granted a charter for that road, having promised a grant of land of so many thousand acres per mile, I think it now remains for the Government to carry out in good faith their pledges to the people. Had not land grants been made free, both as regards the South-Western branch and the Manitoba and North-Western branch, I do not suppose the managers or directors of the North-West and Central would have complained. But they have just reason to complain, and it is a fact that large expenditures have been made upon that road, some 50 miles of it being already graded, and it will be, to some extent, valueless, and the people of that part of the country are now lying out of the money that they have earned in performing that work. I understand that the contractors and managers of that road have pledged themselves to wipe out that liability. Now, let any member of this House consider for a moment what it means, that people settled in that part of the country, having accomplished a great deal of work on that road, should not only be disappointed in having the road built, but should also be lying out of their honest earnings for work they have accomplished while it was in progress. I trust that the Government will take the matter into their consideration, and that they will see that their obligation to settlers there are fulfilled. If by any chance the company which has undertaken the construction of the road should fail to carry out the undertaking it would be much better that the fault should rest with them than with the Government, for having refused in this case to grant what has been granted in all other cases. It would be wise that the Government should not be responsible for the delay in this work, or for driving away, as it appears it will do, a large number of settlers from that part of the country, who might otherwise be prospering and doing well. I say this because numerous letters and telegrams bearing out the statement made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) have been sent to me; and knowing, as I do, the facts, having been over that portion of the road two years ago, when it was being graded, and knowing the settlers, I feel justified in expressing the hope that the Government will not make an exception in this case, but will carry out the rule of making the land a free grant to them. The Acting Minister of Interior has declared that there are no lands to give. It is sufficient discouragement to gentlemen undertaking this enterprise that they should have to go far away to obtain their land; and the least the Government can do is to grant them lands at as early a day as possible, when they will have a better opportunity of getting them in a reasonable position.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Canadian Pacific Railway ..... $699,384

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For what purpose is this sum required?

Mr. POPE. To pay Canadian Pacific Railway balance of arrangement respecting section "B" $54,000; balance of award, Manning & Co., $500,000. There is also an amount to pay balance due contractors on section "B."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has section "B" cost, from first to last, including the contract, the award and this sum, and whatever was paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on taking it over.

Mr. POPE. As near as I can get at it, the sum will be about $3,900,000.

Mr. MILLS. This is a fair opportunity to refer to a matter of very considerable importance. The hon. gentleman has just given us information more accurate than he is usually able to give us in regard to the Department of Railways and Canals. We know that that is not the Department for which the hon. gentleman holds a patent. He has a patent from the Crown as Minister of Agriculture and Immigration. The hon. gentleman is sworn to discharge the duties of that Department, of which he is Minister. The hon. gentleman is Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, although there is no Minister in charge of that Department, and we have, all through this Session, been obliged to content ourselves with the most scanty information, because there is no Minister responsible to discharge the administrative duties of the Department. It is true, under our system, it has become the practice sometime for one Minister to act in room of another, but there is always some Minister on whose behalf he acts. By a law passed by hon. gentlemen opposite, it is provided that there shall be a Minister of Railways and Canals, and hon. gentlemen have deliberately set aside the Statute providing for that office, by leaving it vacant for more than two years. The result has been, that we have been unable to obtain the information we require in connection with railways and canals, that information to which the House is entitled before it votes public money. Hon. gentlemen opposite either apparently acted wrongly in dividing the office of Public Works and taking away from the Minister of Public Works these duties. They advised His Excellency to sanction a certain law, and he has done so. They have told His Excellency that the law was necessary, that this office of Railways and Canals was necessary, that it was required in the public interest, and still they appointed as High Commissioner their colleague, the Minister of Railways and Canals, and they left the office vacant from that date to this. It is true he was back here last Session, and took part in the proceedings of the House fourteen or fifteen months ago, but he was here attending his parliamentary rather than his administrative duties. He resigned his office, and from that time to this the office has been absolutely vacant, as before that it was practically vacant. This is a matter which requires the careful attention of the House and the Government. Here we have a Minister of Railways who has, from time to time, told us—what? "I do not know; I know nothing about the matter." The hon. gentleman may be better informed about his own Department, for which he is responsible, but here is a most important Department, for which he has no special responsibility, which involves the expenditure of millions of dollars every year, through which large liabilities are being incurred, and when the House asks for information, it is totally unable to obtain that information. I trust, Sir, that before the House rises the hon. gentleman will not be Acting Minister of Railways, but that there will be a real Minister of Railways, either the hon. gentleman himself, or some other hon. gentleman, who will be able to give the House the information it requires, and that we will not see the Government setting a law at defiance which they themselves placed on the Statute Book.

Intercolonial Railway ..... $455,432 38

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice here an item for increased accommodation at St. John, $48,000. Regularly as the year comes round, there is a large sum for increased accommodation at St. John, and it would seem that they ought to have had enough increased accommodation at St. John by this time.

Mr. POPE. This is for equipping the new station, $10,000; erection of car shed, $6,000, land for division of street, $10,000; gates at Mill street, $2,000; bridge at Dorchester street, $20,000.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to this crossing at Mill street, that is a very important matter, as that is the main crossing between St. John and Portland, as owing to the cutting down of the grade of the railway, they have cut off access by Dorchester street, which is now utterly useless for that purpose. By the railway, which was opened on Saturday last, the traffic from the western railways will go into the Intercolonial Railway station, and by the bridge. In January last the municipal bodies of both cities made a joint memorial to the Government, calling their attention to this matter of the heavy traffic between the two cities, and how it will be affected by the railway. I think it will be important that something should be done with regard to that thoroughfare, not merely on account of damages to land, but by the danger which will be incurred if matters are allowed to remain as they are. The result is, that there is only one street through which all the traffic between the two cities can pass, if it does not go by the river, and the hon. gentleman knows that vessels and steamers are obliged to stop at Indiantown, above the falls, and cannot get down to the harbor of St. John. I trust the hon. gentleman will see some way of overcoming this difficulty.

Mr. POPE. I am quite aware of the difficulty the hon. gentleman speaks of, but the Government do not feel that they can go to the expense, just now, of a bridge, which would cost a very large sum of money. Consequently, we have decided to use the gates; but I hope that at some time we may find ourselves in a better position to meet the hon. gentleman's wishes.

Mr. WELDON. I hope the hon. Minister will give the matter consideration, because there is real danger of loss of life there, as a line of vehicles is constantly passing from one city to the other. I think self-acting gates, which rise and fall, such as are used on American railways, would be better than the gates which are swung by cranks.

Mr. POPE. We will do everything we can to meet the difficulty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to know how much the St. Charles branch has cost, and how much more will require to be expended upon it? It also appears very frequently in these accounts.

Mr. POPE. I am sorry that we have to admit that it has cost a good deal of money. Up to the present time it has cost $976,565.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Including this vote of $117,432?

Mr. POPE. That includes this vote; but I might as well tell the hon. gentleman that he will find a further sum in the Supplementary Estimates, yet to come down, which will increase the cost $145,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long is that line?

Mr. POPE. Fifteen miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, one can understand that considerable extra expense is incurred on a line that runs into a town. But for 15 miles a total expenditure of about $1,100,000 is an immense sum. How comes it to be so expensive?

Mr. POPE. The right of way has been exceedingly expensive. In fact, the expense has far exceeded our anticipations, although we have tried to reduce it as much as possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman tell what the total cost of the right of way will be?

Mr. POPE. There has been already expended on land and damages $342,957, and the balance is expected to cost $115,000. A very large number of the claims have been settled by the board of arbitrators, and many have been appealed to the Exchequer Court, not on our account, but by the parties.

Mr. WELDON. I have had letters from parties, complaining that although through rates of freight are given for shipment of goods from England to Montreal, or Quebec, or St. John, by way of Halifax, in winter, they cannot get through rates for goods shipped the other way.

Mr. POPE. Up to this time we have not been able to quote, but we have been trying, and we hope to succeed.

Eastern Extension Railway—To pay Nova Scotia Government for repairs on steamer Norwegian. $33,380

Mr. POPE. This steamer belongs to the Nova Scotia Government, and the arrangement was, that we were to pay the expenses of repairs.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). She connects the eastern terminus of the Eastern Extension Railway with ports in Cape Breton, on the other side of the Strait of Canso; during the summer season she plys from Port Mulgrave to Ports Hastings and Hawkesbury. The company that built the Eastern Extension Railway contracted to maintain a steam ferry on the Strait of Canso, and contracted as well to build a wharf on the Cape Breton side as a part of the Eastern Extension. Before the contract was completed, unfortunately for the Island of Cape Breton, the Eastern Extension Railway was transferred by the railway company to the Local Government of Nova Scotia, and from the Local Government of Nova Scotia to this Government. If the railway had not been transferred before the completion of the contract we would have had, ere now, a wharf on the Cape Breton side, in connection with the railway, as contemplated by the contract. In the summer season there is no difficulty in obtaining a wharf at which the steamer may get freight and passengers from the Cape Breton side, but unfortunately it is impossible in the winter season to ship from any port on the Island, on the Strait of Canso, except Port Hastings. A public wharf was built at Port Hastings by the Local Government of Nova Scotia before Confederation, as many other wharves were built before that time, but unfortunately, like all the other wharves built on the north-west coast of the island of Cape Breton by the Nova Scotia Government before Confederation, this is now in a dilapidated condition and requires repairs. Unless that wharf be repaired soon, I am satisfied that the Eastern Extension Railway and the Intercolonial Railway will lose as much traffic each winter season as the repairs will cost. Not only should that wharf be repaired and maintained by the railway authorities in connection with the Eastern Extension, as has been done in connection with other wharves necessary for railway purposes, but the wharves at Long Point, Broad Cove Marsh and Cheticamp, on the north-west coast of the island, should be maintained as well, because they are necessary, in order to enable goods and chattels to be shipped from those ports, as from the others, to the Eastern Extension and the Intercolonial Railway. Application has been made to the Railway Department to repair the wharf at Port Hastings, for the purpose of transmitting freight across the Strait of Canso during the winter season. The estimated cost of the repairs was $700, and I observe that $12,400 are asked for the purpose of purchasing from the Prince Edward Island Government a wharf at Cape Traverse, in connection with the Cape Traverse Branch Railway. I would suggest that this Government would not only repair the wharf at Port Hastings, which is absolutely necessary as a winter terminus, but also purchase the wharf from the Local Government, on the same principle as this has been purchased from the Prince Edward Island Government. I assure the hon. Minister of Railways that this would be in the interest of the railway itself, and be a great advantage, not only to the county I have the honor to represent, but to the whole island.

Mr. POPE. I cannot know exactly the position this may be in, or the particular spot where this may be required, until the railway is located. It does not make much difference whether the railway is built or not, so far as the wharf is concerned. If the railway authorities desire to secure the trade of Victoria and of Inverness, it will be necessary for them to maintain the Port Hastings wharf during the winter season.

Fort Frances Canal.—Amount due to Mr. Hugh Sutherland..... $2,695 69

Mr. FARROW. Is this the same as the Fort Frances locks?

Mr. POPE. It is a balance found by the Railway Committee to be due to Mr. Sutherland.

Mr. FARROW. How much has the whole thing cost the country, and what is it worth?

Mr. POPE. Really, I could not say.

Mr. FARROW. Is it $250,000?

Mr. POPE. Yes; I should think so.

Mr. FARROW. What is its use?

Mr. POPE. It was intended to be used as a part of the water communication.

Mr. McDUGALL. Does the Minister intend to provide for the enlargement of the St. Peter's Canal?

Mr. POPE. I will bring the matter before my colleagues.

Newcastle, N.B., Post Office..... $3,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the whole cost of that building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $33,000, I suppose.

Quebec—Montreal Armouries..... $13,000

Mr. HOLTON. I would like to ask the Minister if this sum is intended to cover the cost of the completion of the present drill hall in Montreal and for the erection of the armouries, or is it to pay for extras upon the construction of the hall as it already exists?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is besides the drill hall. The armouries are to be built separate, and this was the amount required for the foundation of the armouries. It is not extra work.

Mr. HOLTON. This sum, then, I understand, will not cover the completion of the armouries, but is simply for the foundation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will see that there is a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for 1885 of $45,000 for the armouries. This is only for the foundations.

Mr. FISHER. Is that expected to provide efficient armouries—the two sums together?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I am not sure of that. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press me to specify the sum, because contractors base their tenders upon the sum that may be announced. The chief architect makes an estimate of the work for the Minister, and when the tenders are called in I can thus see whether they are reasonable or not, but we never allow the tenderers to know the estimated cost before they are in, and therefore I would ask the hon. gentlemen not to insist upon this estimate.

Mr. FISHER. I meant to enquire whether it was the intention of the Government to complete those armouries.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Examining warehouse at Toronto..... $8,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought that was already finished.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Far from it. There was a main building, but the business has increased to such an extent that representations were made by the Customs Department that a large additional building was required. We did not think that we could afford to undertake the whole building in one year, and therefore we divided it into three portions. Last year there was a sum of $25,000 voted for that purpose. The sum we ask for this year, $12,000, as I explained the other day, is to erect a small building in continuation of the present one, for an engine-house and other purposes. The third portion of the building will have to be provided for later on.

Mr. MULOCK. Last year the House voted $50,000 for the purpose of erecting a warehouse in the city of Toronto, in which the merchants might store their goods while in bond. We were told last year that the receipts from these merchants would be equal to a good interest upon the investment. I would like to know from the Minister how far those expectations have been realised?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must see that we cannot realise a revenue from that building before it is built. The $12,000 asked this year must be used before we receive any benefit from that building.

Mr. MULOCK. Have no goods been stored in it yet?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That I cannot say.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the Minister whether the amount of $13,600, in the original Estimates, will be sufficient to complete the Post Office and Customs and Inland Revenue offices at St. Thomas. I see that there is nothing further than $13,600. Will that sum complete the buildings and put them in proper shape, with furniture, etc.?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That sum of $13,500 was in addition to the $15,000 of the year previous, and I am informed by my chief architect that that sum is required to complete the building.

Mr. WILSON. Am I then to understand that this sum will furnish the Custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So I am told.

Mr. WILSON. Will it also enable the Minister to put a sidewalk around the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention to lay a sidewalk this year.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that the architect there made representations to the Government that the sidewalk was in a very bad condition. If there were an accident, owing to a defective sidewalk, the Government would be held responsible. If the building is going to be completed and be occupied at once—and it is long since it was commenced—there is no reason why, during the present year, a good sidewalk should not be put down. A strong representation was made by officers in the Customs Department of the building that it was not being furnished in a suitable manner. I regret I was not present when the original Estimates came up, because the Minister of Public Works promised to explain how the clerk of works drew, in one year, $1,980. Whether he is drawing pay still or not I am unable to say. A man was appointed to the position who was not competent, who was not adapted to the position, and who attended to his duties simply as a matter of form.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must be satisfied that he has once more attacked the clerk of works, as he did last year. He repeated to day what he said last year. If the hon. member had been in his place when the item was under discussion, he would have heard the explanations I gave; and I was ready to give him all explanations possible. When the works were completed the clerk of the works was discharged. Therefore, the charges made are only retrospective. I am pushing the work forward as rapidly as possible. As regards the sidewalk, it will be put in a condition to be used, but we have no money to expend on new sidewalks, as we have cut down every item possible in the Estimates.

Mr. WILSON. In other parts of Ontario considerable sums are being appropriated for repairs to buildings. The Minister of Public Works has mentioned that he has curtailed the expenditure on public buildings. I am not complaining of that; but I desire to point out that if Cornwall can have matters attended to connected with the Public Works Department, there is no reason why some of the cities should not have their works attended to.

Public Buildings—British Columbia..... $17,358

Mr. BAKER. Does that amount include the temporary furnishing of the quarantine building at Victoria, even for the accommodation of the caretaker, if nothing more? Does that include an amount for the furnishing of a part of this building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it is mainly to pay balance due on contract, and for such additional work as may be found necessary, in order to fit it for occupation.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I think it is very necessary now, or will be in the near future, to put some furniture in that building, to make it habitable.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As soon as that is required by the Department of agriculture, of course we will furnish the building.

Harbors and Rivers—Ontario..... $53,000

Mr. ALLEN. I rise, not to object to the grant to Southampton harbor, but when we look at the harbors of these waters and their importance, I am glad to see that the Government are spending these amounts, and I am only sorry that they are not larger, both for Owen Sound, Collingwood and Southampton. I think, however, that Owen Sound has peculiar claims on this Government. Our works there were commenced under the most patriotic circumstances. At the time the British gunboats were in the upper lakes we had no dry dock in any harbor in Ontario. One of the gunboats came into the harbor of Owen Sound for repairs, and the commander complained bitterly of the want of patriotism in the people of Ontario for not having provided any means for repairing those gunboats on the upper lakes, and for having to send gunboats to the United States to be repaired in case of accident. Under these circumstances, a public meeting was called in Owen Sound, and the town agreed to give a bonus of $15,000 to any company which would construct a dry dock in the harbor. A company was formed, and in order to get a proper position for the dry dock, it had to be placed up the river, some 3,700 feet from deep water. Then, we had to give $15,000 to assist in dredging the river from deep water up to the dry dock, so as to enable vessels to reach it, and the Government of 1870 granted an equivalent of $10,000 or $12,000. The Government of that day saw the necessity for the dry dock, and how necessary it was and the convenience of navigation and for repairing ships. The town of Owen Sound has given altogether $62,246 for dredging that river, and $15,000 of bonus for the construction of the dry dock. The Mackenzie Government saw the necessity of completing these works, and sent their dredge up there in one season, and gave us $10,000 in another season, in order to complete them. In 1882 we made a bargain with the present Government, to give $13,500, on condition that they would complete the work and give sufficient water to accommodate any ship coming from Lake Superior through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal to our harbor. We expect that that work would be complete; but at present it is 2,200 feet from 16 feet of water, and a waterlogged ship, drawing 16 feet of water, cannot reach the dry dock, but has to be lightened before it can be taken to it. It would require at least $10,000 to deepen this channel of 2,200 feet long to 16 feet; and I believe the Government, seeing the position we are in, and knowing how liberally we have acted and what we have done for the harbor, should make this grant. Our town is now the third largest shipping port in Ontario. In the last season 1,064 steamers and vessels left our harbor, having a tonnage of 463,366 tons, employing 15,891 men, carrying 26,780 passengers, and vessels valued at nearly $2,000,000. The town of Owen Sound has paid $17,669 of Customs duties during the past year. Our town is growing in importance, but our harbor is not capable of accommodating the vessels that run there. The Canadian Pacific Railway steamers run from Port Arthur to Owen Sound, and now pass up the river, above the place where it is dredged, to the wharves; the screws sometimes touch the bottom, and I have been told that last week one of them was broken. Now, having the confidence in the Government that we have, and remembering the promise they have made, I believe they will take the matter in hand, and give us the money required to dredge out the remaining 2,200 feet, so that we can accommodate the ships that come there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, I do not wish to appear as if not answering the hon. gentleman, but he knows that I did not hold out any hope to the deputation that came here some time ago, that the Government were in a position to expend more money there this year, and I have only to say the same thing to-day. I think we have done very well towards Owen Sound, and the people there seem to be satisfied that we have done a great deal for them. I must say that they themselves have also done their share, and I have very little doubt that if, at a future time, we shall require to come to the relief of Owen Sound again and deepen the harbor, we shall find that the people there will put their hands in their pockets and also contribute their share to the improvements. But I think the works are sufficient for the present, and that we can delay doing any more work there for some time.

Mr. ALLEN. The position is such that there is not sufficient water in those 2,200 feet to accommodate the vessels, and if $10,000 cannot be appropriated, perhaps $5,000 would be sufficient for the present. The dredges have been lying there all summer waiting for instructions, and I know the people would be very much indebted to the Government if they could see it in their power to grant $5,000.

Sub-marine cable route between British Columbia and Washington Territory, via Victoria, Clover Point and Dungeness (revote of lapsed amount)..... $3,500

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Is that payment in full for the laying of that cable?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; this is the balance. It is to cover an appropriation of a similar sum made by Governor General's warrant to provide for making a sub-marine cable to connect British Columbia and Washington Territory directly across the St. Juan de Fuca Straits.

House and Furniture for High Commissioner of Canada, London, England—Balance of furniture, etc..... $703 17

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Minister of Public Works say what is included under this item?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The etc. covers the alteration of the drainage system. Then there is some painting, some furniture in bedrooms and kitchen, and $160 connected with the gasfittings.

Fisheries—Additional amount required for fishing bounty..... $20,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it the intention of the hon. Minister to extend this bounty to boats under 14 feet? People engaged in the Bras D'Or fisheries do not require large boats, but use small boats. I hope the Minister will take this into consideration, and extend the bounties to the smaller boats.

Mr. McLELAN. I may state that the minimum length of keel was 14 feet, for we thought that was as small a boat as was desirable; but the hon. gentleman and one or two other hon. members have brought to my notice special circumstances under which larger boats could not be used. I will make special enquiries into the matter. The Act appropriates a given sum of $150,000 to be divided amongst the vessels and boats of the fishermen. It was necessary to wait until all claims were in before division could be made. That involved delay, and complaints were made by the fishermen. This year it was decided to adopt a uniform price for the bounty.

Mr. WELDON. I hope the hon. Minister will include the Bay of Fundy boats as well as the Bras D'Or boats.

To pay accounts in connection with the erection and completion of barracks for the use of the North-West Mounted Police at Fort Macleod, Maple Creek and Medicine Hat..... $25,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost at Fort Macleod is $16,000, and at Medicine Hat $9,000, but some of these barracks are in bad order, and have to be repaired. The hon. gentleman must see that the force being increased the accommodation must be increased also. It is impossible, just now, to say whether it will be more at one place than at the other. This matter was under the Department of the Interior. The inspector, Mr. Perry, reports that the workmanship is of the best description for the class of buildings, and the material used of good quality, and that no other person has resources for carrying it on. When we took these buildings, they were mere huts, of the roughest character, and now that the police are to be located permanently in certain places, we have to put the buildings in proper order. I have seen those at Calgary and Regina, and they were kept in the best possible order, but those at Calgary for example, require to be repaired, and I think there is an additional amount for that in the Estimates for 1885-86.

To refund bank imposts collected irregularly.....$41,048 92

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the circumstance connected with this refund, and to what bank is it made?

Mr. BOWELL. I will read the memorandum which I have:

"By the Act 31 Vic., cap. 11, sec. 2, a duty of 1 per cent. was imposed on the circulation of the banks incorporated by the Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This Act was continued by Act 33 Vic., cap. 12, sec. 9, until the end of the Session of Parliament next after the 1st day of January, 1872. The Bank Act of 1871 (34 Vic., cap. 51) by section 15 repealed the duty as to banks to which it applied, but continued it as to other banks. The Bank Act also, by section 76 continued the Act 33 Vic., cap. 11, in force, till the time above mentioned, as to banks not coming under the Bank Act. As the Act 33 Vic., cap. 11, was not continued beyond that time, it consequently lapsed at the end of the Session next after 1st January, 1872, or on the 14th June, 1872, and the duty ceased to be payable at that date.

"The banks above named, which are not under the Bank Act, continued to pay the duty, the first two until the 31st October, 1883, and the Commercial Bank of Windsor until the 30th April, 1875, and this amount so paid has, under advice from the Department of Justice, and by Order in Council founded on the report of the Treasury Board, been repaid the banks."

For 500 copies of the Parliamentary Companion.....$1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a convenient little publication enough, but it used to be only $1.50 when it was just as well got up as it is at present. I do not see why we should pay 50 cents more, when the circulation must be more numerous.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is the price at which it is sold now, and, I think, last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It used to be $1.50.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When it began, I think it was less than that. I must say that the book now is very complete.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know the book well enough, but it strikes me that the party has marked it up, without rhyme or reason, some 50 cents.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think the price paid for this book and for the Parliamentary Register is outrageous. You will get just as much information in the Canadian Almanac, which you can buy for 12½ cents, whereas you pay $2 for this book and $3 for the Register. I have examined these books, and the Canadian Almanac, and there is more information in the Canadian Almanac than in both of them put together. It looks like a perfect swindle.

Mr. FARROW. I am a little inclined to think the same as the hon. gentleman. I cannot see how this work should have increased in price so much. We used to get it for $1.50, and then it was dear enough, and now it is raised to $2. If we intend to run things economically, we must begin at the small leaks. It is perhaps a small matter compared, to a great many other items which we have been passing, but I think it is a charge that ought not to be countenanced. I think $1.50 is quite sufficient, and I think a good deal of profit might be made if the price was $1. I think it is of very little use to the House, and that it might be published once every two years or once every new Parliament. It is of very little use, especially now that we have an Annual Register. One or the other ought to be dropped, and I think it should be this one.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Register is $3 and this is only $2.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is practically a stereotyped thing. Of course, when there is a new Parliament, there is a great deal of work, and it is reasonable enough, but in the second, third, fourth and fifth years of the Parliament, there is very little alteration from year to year.

To meet expenses in connection with the Chinese Commission ..... $11,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that the total vote; and how is it incurred?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must have a little forbearance in this case, because it is in the Department of my hon. friend the Secretary of State, who was obliged to leave the other day on account of ill-health. This is not the only item. I think the next item of $4,300, for printing, belongs to this matter. I think another $3,000 was expended for the printing and cost of translation. If the hon. gentleman wishes to have the total expenditure, I will take note of it, and give it on concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And also how it was distributed, how much went in salaries and how much for other purposes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will have a statement.

To meet expenses of Elections held under the Canada Temperance Act..... $25,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a pretty expensive business to keep people sober.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much does it cost for county?

Mr. BOWELL. Just the same as for a parliamentary election. In a county like Hastings, for instance, where there are three ridings, you have to add the three together.

To meet payments to extra clerks for services rendered in preparation of returns ordered by Parliament..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think before we grant that we ought to see those returns. Many of them have not yet been brought down, and in particular one for which the Minister of Public Works is responsible, because he amended my hon. friend's return for the details of sums paid to certain newspapers, and as good as promised that we should have it. That has never been brought down in full.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, that has been brought down. We had the returns before us at the last meeting of committee.

To settle the claims of the estate of the late S. R. Thompson, and those of Mr. Justice Weatherbee, of Halifax, and Mr. L. H. Davies, M.P., of Charlottetown, for increased remuneration as counsel before the Halifax Fishery Commission, $8,000 each..... $24,000

Mr. FARROW. This is a very extraordinary amount. I would very much like to have seen the hon. gentleman, whom I respect very highly, in his place, but he has thought proper to leave us. I have nothing to say against that individual, personally. I think he is a very fine gentleman, a man of considerable ability, and I respect him highly. Now, I understand that he has been paid a certain amount, which, if I am correctly informed, has reached the sum of $15,000, for the same service; and this is an additional amount of $8,000, which will make the nice round sum of $23,000. Now, we were talking last night about hour's work, how much it was an hour, and I will venture to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that if you add up the hours that he put into that work, he would get $100 an hour. It was complained of here the other night that a certain hon. gentleman got at the rate of $20 an hour, measured by a certain Session—not this one. Now, here is a man, and he is not a Tory, who had received $15,000, and this is supplemented by $8,000 more.

Mr. WELDON. How do you make out that he got $15,000? He only got $7,000 before.

Mr. FARROW. I am glad the hon. gentleman put me right, for I do not want to make a wrong statement. That will be $15,000. It is very strange that he did not make a right charge at first. Generally speaking, lawyers make the heaviest charge at first, and then come down. But he has reversed the order; he first got $7,000, and now he thinks he ought to get $8,000 more. He did not get half of his pay at first. Well, this is not all. This man was born under a lucky planet. He has received a great many favors from this Government. This gentleman whom we are giving $8,000 to is the gentleman who rose in the House, a few weeks ago, his breast filled with righteous indignation, because the public money was expended wastefully. He has been a member of this House for over three years, and he cannot stay till the end of the third Session; yet he has drawn from this Government $15,000, and $20,000 for being the law agent of this Dominion Government; that makes $35,000.

Mr. WELDON. He never got $20,000.

Mr. FARROW. If I am correctly informed, he got $4,000 a year for five years.

Mr. WELDON. Show that in the Public Accounts, if you can.

SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. FARROW. For the five years in which he was law agent of the Dominion he took out of the coffers of this country $20,000, which, if it is true—

Mr. WELDON. It is not true, that is the trouble.

Mr. FARROW—makes $35,000 in all. It is not a Tory who is doing this kind of thing. And this is one of your model Reformers. How much did he receive previously, and how long was he engaged? How much were the whole law expenses in connection with the matter?

Mr. WELDON. We have not heard much from the member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) since he discovered that hens laid larger eggs since the National Policy. He has, however, taken advantage of the absence of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), to attack him. He would not have dared to say what he has said if that hon. gentleman had been here; he took advantage to make statements behind his back. He spoke of the hon. member for Queen's leaving his place in this House. That hon. gentleman came here on the first day of the Session, and stayed till 30th June, when he was obliged to go back to attend to the interests of his clients. Hon. members from Ontario have visited their homes several times, but the hon. member for Queen's never left, from 29th January to 30th June. I doubt very much if any other hon. members have done so.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I have.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I have.

Mr. WELDON. I admit those hon. gentlemen are exceptions. The hon. member for North Huron has stated that the hon. member for Queen's obtained $20,000 from the Government. I have had some little experience about such matters, and I say the hon. gentleman obtained no such sum; but no doubt that hon. member gave full value for every dollar he received while acting as agent of the Minister of Justice. The charge that the hon. member received $20,000 out of the Dominion Government before he came to this House is utterly without foundation. In regard to this matter, the hon. member for Queen's was employed as counsel in the fishery case with my friend, the late S. R. Thompson, one of the most eloquent and able men who ever lived in the Dominion of Canada. Any one who will read his speech at the close of the deliberations of the Halifax Commission will be satisfied on that point; and I say the award was largely due to the eloquence of my friend, with whom I was associated for many years. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) gave great attention to the case. Those gentlemen sacrificed their business in order to attend to the case, and visited Ottawa and Halifax in regard to it. They performed their duty well. When Mr. Doutré made this claim, it was resisted by the Government. Mr. Davies and Mr. Thompson made no claim on the Government; they took the money offered, although they felt that, under the circumstances, they should have been paid more. Mr. Doutré went further, and commenced proceedings in the courts. The Supreme Court, by a majority, decided that Mr. Doutré was entitled to receive an additional $8,000. The Government were not content with the decision, but carried the case to the Privy Council, where it was decided in favor of Mr. Doutré. And if Mr. Doutré was entitled to be paid that sum, so was my hon. friend from Charlottetown, and so was my friend, Mr. Thomson, who has gone to his long home. I say the Government have done an act of justice and right in this matter, when not only the highest court of the Dominion of Canada, but the highest court of Great Britain, so far as we are concerned, decided that they were entitled to this amount from the Dominion Government. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island did not ask for this amount, but the Government said that when the highest courts in the land, after full discussion, decided in favor of Mr. Doutré, it was only an act of justice to the other gentlemen to say that they should be meted out the same measure of justice. I think the Government have done that which is just and fair. I will not discuss the question of whether the decision of the Supreme Court or the Privy Council was right, but those decisions are the law of the land, and the Government did right to bow to them. The hon. member for North Huron may think it a very large amount, and so it may be; but as the law of the land has decided that they were entitled to it, the Government were simply doing an act of justice in paying the same amount to my hon. friend as they paid to Mr. Doure. The hon. member for North Huron attacks my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island in his absence, and he makes an unfair charge against him, because it was not on the application of my hon. friend that this amount was paid, for the Government simply decided that according to the law of the land he was entitled to this amount, with the others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As this matter arose under the late Government, it may be as well, both in justice to my absent friend and also for the information of the committee, that I should state generally what the circumstances were. I may remind the House, in the first place, that it was not money badly invested, inasmuch as the Canadian Government obtained a verdict of over 4½ millions of money from the American Government—the first case on record, I believe, in which an English colony has succeeded in extracting substantial damages from the United States, and a very marked contrast to the way in which such negotiations, conducted by English negotiators, have heretofore terminated, in any disputes which have arisen between the two countries. It is a great mistake to suppose that these legal gentlemen engaged on behalf of the Dominion Government were only occupied during the time the commission sat at Halifax. I know myself that I have often heard from the late Sir Albert Smith, who, as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, presided over the matter, that for a period of two or three years they were obliged to devote a very considerable portion of their time in mastering the evidence and the details which had to be investigated before the commission. As to the sum total which has been paid these gentlemen, I believe it was more than the late Government thought was a fair compensation for their services, but no blame can be attached to the present Government, when, after the protracted litigation in which they were engaged with Mr. Doure, they recognised the claims of these gentlemen. It is quite clear that if Mr. Doure was awarded, first in the Exchequer Court, then in the Supreme Court, and then by the Privy Council, this additional sum of $8,000, in all reason and justice the other three legal gentlemen engaged in the matter, were entitled to an equal sum. There is no doubt that they severally and individually discharged as important functions in that work as Mr. Doure, and it would be perfectly absurd for the Government of Canada to have paid further costs and further interest, as they undoubtedly would have had to pay, I think. I see that nearly $4,000 for costs and interest have to be paid Mr. Doure in addition to the $8,000. It would be an absurd way of saving the public money, to have brought three separate additional suits by three separate parties, as I presume would undoubtedly have been the case after the decision in Mr. Doure's suit.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Government made a loose bargain with those gentlemen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I do not think it was a case in which it was possible to make any bargain. I know that in cases in which I have been a litigant myself, I have had to pay sums quite equal, in proportion to the work done, to the sums charged by these gentlemen. In fact, I have known cases in which, where a vastly smaller sum was at issue, in cases carried to other courts, heavier sums than this had to be paid.

An hon. MEMBER. In proportion?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; I mean absolutely, for the work done. These gentlemen were engaged six or seven months continuously at Halifax. I have known cases where very large sums had to be paid for two or three days' work, and if the work had continued for anything like the time they were engaged, the amount would have been much larger than it is. No doubt the sum total is a large sum; it amounts to about $15,000 apiece, and heavy as the expenses of the suit were, I think myself that it was rather an excessive sum. I have no doubt that Mr. Doure might have been compromised with at a considerably smaller sum, but the Government—and I cannot blame them—thought that Mr. Doure was asking too much; they referred the matter to the courts, and it has been decided against them. No blame can be attached to the Government, nor do I think any blame can be attached to them for claiming what they consider a fair payment for their work.

Mr. BOWELL. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman on one point. The First Minister who refused positively to recognise that claim, was the late Sir Albert Smith.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman said we had refused it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; the hon. gentleman is mistaken; I did not.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member for St. John said so.

Mr. WELDON. No; I said the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is always a difficult matter to settle what lawyers' bills amount to. I have often thought myself—although a humble member of that profession, having been a student only—that the public at large were grossly abused by the immense amount of fees they were obliged to pay, especially in connection with election expenses, and I have often thought that there should be some tariff fixed with regard to these matters. I do not like to reflect on absent members, but I think that no professional man, with equal practice, has been as regular in his attendance in the House as my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island. Very eminent legal gentlemen, having seats in this House, are extremely frequently absent—on both sides, no doubt, but especially on the other side. I see opposite me vacant seats, which are usually filled by very distinguished Ontario lawyers, which have been vacant, to my knowledge, for about two-thirds of the Session, whereas my hon. friend, for five whole months, was a most persistent and consistent attendant, as the records of the Hansard will show, and as you, Mr. Chairman, can testify.

Mr. FARROW. I wish to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for St. John. One charge is, that I would be afraid to say what I have said if the hon. gentleman were in his seat. I would not be afraid to say it, but would have pleasure in saying more. At the outset, I did say that I respected that hon. gentleman as much as I respect any man sitting on the other side of the House; and I have reason to respect him. The hon. member for St. John, no doubt, is an eminent lawyer, but instead of answering my remarks by an argument, he threw an insult across the House. I happen to be a farmer; I probably know as much about farming as he knows about law, and he said we have not heard the hon. member's voice this Session, scarcely ever since I said the hens laid bigger eggs. Now, I wish to correct the hon. gentleman. I never said they laid bigger eggs. The question was brought up by my hon. friend from Brant that Session, and, as a farmer, I said that, on account of better care, we got more eggs, on the same principle that we get more milk from cows on account of better care. The hon. member for St. John knows nothing about farming; but he is a very good lawyer, if we can measure him by the fees he charges. If you examine the Public Accounts you will find that he has drawn to the tune of $4,000 or $5,000. Now, I rose to say that I should be very sorry to charge the hon. gentleman, who is absent, unduly. My information was derived from the Charlottetown Herald. I do not know whether it is a Conservative paper or a Reform paper or an Independent paper; but if it will descend so low as to print plain lies about the hon. gentleman, the sooner we know it the better. Now, here is the statement:

"The Charlottetown Herald has been counting up how much L. H. Davies, M. P., has cost the country in his twelve years of political life. The following table gives a portion of the rewards received by him for public services: As Attorney General and Solicitor General, $4,214; as member of the House of Assembly, $1,311; as solicitor, Land Purchase Act, $5,718; as counsel for the Crown, $363; as counsel for the Halifax Commission, $15,000; as Dominion law agent for five years, $20,000; as member of the Commons for three years, $4,000."

But he has not been here three years. Now, has he not lost more time since he went a way than two-thirds of the members sitting in this House? He has got altogether, according to this statement, $50,680. Show me a Tory who has done better in three years.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman says he does not know whether the Charlottetown Herald is a Reform or a Conservative paper; but I think I may say, from that statement, that it is a Conservative paper of a very rabid type.

Mr. FARROW. Is it true?

Mr. WELDON. I will venture to say it is not true. I think the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) has cost the country $8,000 or $9,000 since he has been here; I suppose he has drawn his indemnity every year, and anything else he could get; and does he say that he is of no value to the public at large as a member of this House. What would he think if some Liberal paper charged him with drawing his indemnity and doing nothing for it? He has spoken of my name appearing in the Public Accounts. If he looks at that account, he will see that it was money to be paid to other people, and although it was in my name, I received very little of it.

Mr. FARROW. How much?

Mr. WELDON. The amount was $5,000, and $4,000 of it went over to England, I receiving, I suppose, about $500 or $600. The Government agreed to pay the expense of contesting the Scott Act on the other side of the water, and if I had chosen to go across a larger amount would, perhaps, have gone into my pocket; but I did not go; I said it was not necessary, and although the money was charged in my name, all but a very small portion of it went to parties across the Atlantic. But I reiterate that it is very unfair, in the absence of the hon. member for Queen's, who has been here from the 29th January to the 30th June, day in and day out, for the hon. gentleman to make statements which he would not have ventured to make in the presence of that hon. gentleman.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not imagine that the hon. gentleman will succeed in arousing any great sympathy with the hon. member for Queen's for his long attendance in this House, when we know what part he took in prolonging discussion. It is to be regretted that the gentleman who had the management of this matter, in 1877, had not the understanding with the legal gentlemen employed more clearly defined. I think the hon. gentleman himself had a pretty strong impression that he had paid them fully more than he had expected to give them when he first employed them. I have no doubt the success that attended that commission, whether it was attributed to the legal gentlemen employed or not, perhaps raised their ideas as to the value of their services. Mr. Smith had paid them the amount he felt he was responsible for, and the full amount he felt he was entitled to pay on the understanding he had with them, but they asked that that amount should be rather more than doubled. Mr. Doutre claims he spent six months in the work at Halifax, and a month travelling between Halifax and Ottawa, examining papers. This was about the time occupied by Messrs. Doutre, Thompson, Wetherbee and Davies. They all occupied about the same time, from six to eight months, and when this vote passes and the money is paid, we will have paid over $60,000 for the services of those gentlemen. I think that is pretty good pay. It is not every lawyer, even in the Province of Ontario, who will receive $15,000 for six months' service. All these gentlemen pressed their claims. Mr. Doutre brought an action, which the Government contested. It was decided in his favor here; the decision was appealed from, and finally the case was brought before the Privy Council, and the judgment confirmed, with costs, amounting to $12,000. I consulted with the Department of Justice to know whether there was any difference between Mr. Doutre's case and that of the other claimants, and I was told there was none. I made a proposition to the others to settle for $8,000, the amount awarded to Mr. Doutre, with costs, and they have agreed to accept that.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not rise to call into account the amounts paid to the different legal gentlemen. In fact, I think these charges are exceedingly small, as compared with my experience of law, in not having absorbed half the whole award. But that is not the point to which I call attention. It often happens, in cases of the kind, that the quiet people who do the real work are lost sight of, and those distinguished gentlemen who are prominent in the eyes of the world get the pay. There was a gentleman connected with that investigation whose services were of the greatest value to the people in obtaining this award. I allude to the then Commissioner of Fisheries, Mr. Whitcher. Now he is out of office—probably he was not always very prudent, but in that case he worked hard indeed; and now, when these large sums are being paid for services in connection with this matter, I think we ought to see that Mr. Whitcher, whose services were of great value, should get something.

Mr. SPOULE. I think the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) displayed a great deal of unnecessary warmth in the defence of his political and professional brother. He threw strong aspersions against the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow), because he dared to protest against the impropriety of paying out what he believed to be an exorbitant sum for services rendered. If we accept the statements of the hon. member for St. John, as to the time these gentlemen were engaged in that service, we must admit they were paid high figures. Seven months for $15,000 is over $2,000 a month. What value did they put on their time, compared with that of other men in this country? The hon. gentleman went on to say that Mr. K. H. Thompson was one of the most able men in Canada. I believe he was an able man, and the hon. gentleman repeated, that had it not been for Mr. Thompson we would not have had that favorable verdict. I believe, if the men were paid according to their merits, Mr. Davies and Mr. Doutre would be well paid at $1,000, while Mr. Thompson's services would be cheap at $10,000. The hon. gentleman said that the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) would not dare to take the stand he did if the hon. member for Charlottetown (Mr. Davies) were here. I do not think that any hon. member here is afraid of the hon. member for Charlottetown (Mr. Davies), or any other hon. member. I do not think it becomes hon. gentlemen to display so much feeling against any hon. member, because he dares to question the propriety of what he believes to be an exorbitant charge.

Mr. FISHER. I am not open to the charge of being a professional man, a professional brother to the hon. gentleman under discussion, but I think I have common sense enough to take exception to the statement of the newspaper, in which Mr. Davies has been accused of receiving so large sums from the Government of Canada. I find, among the items charged against him, that of Attorney and Solicitor General. But he was Attorney and Solicitor General of the Local Government of Prince Edward Island, with which this Government had nothing to do.

Mr. FARROW. So we read it.

Mr. FISHER. At the same time, the hon. gentleman summed up a unit of $20,000 which the Dominion of Canada had paid to him.

Mr. FARROW. The public money of this Dominion.

Mr. FISHER. However, I presume the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), when he did the work of Attorney and Solicitor General of the Province of Prince Edward Island, gave good value for the money he received. At all events, he did so in the eyes of the people of the Province to which he belonged. He was also a member of the Assembly, under which he received a certain amount.

Mr. FARROW. He was solicitor of the Land Purchase Company.

Mr. FISHER. That was a question of local politics, with which the Local Government and not this Government had to do. When the hon. gentleman received, as counsel for the Crown, a certain small sum, it was on account of the Local Government, and not the Dominion Government. The hon. member for Queen's has been also a member of this Commons for three years, but as member of the House of Commons, instead of receiving $4,000, he would have received $3,000.

Mr. FARROW. What about the mileage?

Mr. FISHER. He receives his mileage, the same as any other member. His mileage would not amount to anything like $1,000; and any days he is absent will be deducted. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., was one of several gentlemen who served their country in that case. The Government was forced by one of those gentlemen to pay a certain amount as fees. The hon. member for Queen's did not attempt to force the Government to make that payment to him. The Minister of Marine says he made his demand upon the Government. In conversation with the hon. member, I understood that he never made any demand.

Mr. McLELAN. The claims were made by all the gentlemen on the Department of Justice, and they were referred to my Department. I remember that Mr. Justice Wetherbee, one of the claimants, wanted to bring a suit. I consulted the Department of Justice, and they reported that the whole of the claims stood upon the same footing, and that Mr. Doutré's case being decided, the other cases followed it.

Mr. FISHER. I understand, then, that Mr. Davies did not make a formal application?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I find that there is a report of the 24th January, 1885, with reference to the claims of the late Mr. Thompson, of Mr. Wetherbee, of Halifax, and of Mr. Davies, of Charlottetown, and then there is a petition of right obtained on behalf of Mr. Wetherbee. There is no difficulty about the matter; the hon. gentleman has a right to the money.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly. I do not see that there can be any slur cast upon him for having got this money. As to his earning the money, his capabilities as a lawyer and professional man are such as to place him above reproach.

Mr. WELDON. Referring to the remark of the hon. member for Grey, I did not blame the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) for asking for information in regard to this matter, but I blamed him for attacking the hon. member for Queen's in his absence. I do not blame the Government for resisting this claim. On the contrary, my opinion is, that they were quite right in resisting it, and also, in view of the difference of opinion in the Supreme Court here, they were quite right in carrying it to the Privy Council.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I am glad to see that hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to criticise such accounts as these, and I would call their attention to some other accounts, which should receive similar criticism. I find, for instance, an item in the Public Accounts, under the head of railways and canals, where a member of this House appears as the recipient—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex)—of $18,960.

Mr. BOWELL. Who is that?

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The hon. member for North or South Victoria, I forget which.

Mr. McCALLUM. The hon. gentleman is entirely out of order. I think the hon. member for Queen's might say: Lord, save me from my friends; because we are willing to vote the money. I call the hon. gentleman to order, because he must discuss that matter, and not any other.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). This discussion was introduced by the member for North Huron, who read from the Charlottetown Herald matters which were much less relevant than this. I am as desirous as any one to keep to the question, but I think attention ought to be drawn to the vast amounts which are being paid for legal expenses. It is only fair to say, in regard to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), that the amounts were obtained by him in a case against the Government. He secured them as the solicitor for the section "B" contractors, in their case against the Government. I think, where a man secured $4,500,000 for the Dominion, he ought to be treated as well as one who secured a verdict for $395,000 against the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. In justice to the hon. member for North Victoria, the hon. gentleman should have gone further, and made the same explanation which was made by my hon. friend from St. John, in reference to the sum which he drew. On the contrary, being the lawyer who brought the case against the Government, the whole amount was paid to cover all the expenses so charged to him, and he disbursed them. The hon. gentleman asked a question as to the cost of this case. It cost about $65,000 for lawyers' fees altogether, and costs, including this law suit. Now, there is one peculiarity about the legal profession that I certainly admire, and I regret very much that the same esprit de corps does not exist in the profession to which I belong. Whenever an unfortunate printer gets a few dollars, every other printer pitches into him, as if he was purchased, and was the biggest rascal that ever lived; but you touch a lawyer, and it makes not the slightest difference whether he is a political friend or opponent, they all stick together like wax. The hon. member for St. John county (Mr. Weldon) touched upon the question of the money that the hon. gentleman obtained as counsel. I heard the whole question in the committee, when it was up before, and I know the hon. gentleman was not liable to any charge, because he was not acting for the Government directly, although the Government paid the money.

To pay the amount awarded to Mr. Joseph Doutre, for services in connection with the Halifax Fishery Commission.....	$8,000 00
Interest on same, at 6 per cent. per annum, from 29th August, 1879, 10th October, 1881.....	2,456 55
Costs in Exchequer Court.....	709 75
Costs of Supreme Court appeal.....	402 65
Costs of Privy Council appeal, £170 11s. 6d.....	830 12

Mr. MACMASTER. I have only one remark to make on this item. This was as important a case as the country ever was engaged in, and it was only proper that leading counsel should be employed and paid fees commensurate with their services. These legal gentlemen were engaged by the late Sir Albert Smith, who made an arrangement with them that turned out to be very indefinite, and by reason thereof the counsel who were engaged pressed their claims for further fees, and the case of Mr. Doutre was taken as a test case. I happen to be familiar with the proceedings—in fact, they are fully reported in the law reports. Mr. Doutre, in that suit, recovered the additional indemnity, in the form of fees, of $8,000; and the only question that could rise as regards the Government, was this: should the other counsel be paid a similar sum? Now, in my view, and I think it is the view every hon. gentleman must take, it would be difficult to discriminate between the several counsel. There can be no doubt whatever that the late Mr. Thompson was the leading counsel; there can be no doubt that he was a man of the greatest eminence in his profession, and that he left a name as an honorable man that the leaders of his profession might envy. There can be no doubt that he brought all the professional skill and great ingenuity that he possessed to bear upon the prosecution of that trial, and I think that as regards him, at least, it is entirely beyond question that he was entitled to the additional sum. Then would arise the question: Mr. Doutre having obtained judgment for the additional sum of $8,000, can we reasonably object that the other counsel should have the same sum? I think that, owing to the importance of the case, owing to the length of time occupied, owing to the fact that the decision of the highest court was obtained, this additional sum should be allowed, and should not be questioned in this House. However, a full discussion having taken place, it is not my intention to enter into the details, but merely to pay my humble tribute to the memory and great ability of the late Mr. Thompson.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). If the hon. gentleman, who is a distinguished member of the bar, will explain how a client can make anything else than a loose bargain in a law case, he will give us some valuable information.

Mr. McLELAN. The principal objection I have to this vote is that it establishes a precedent. The case was decided on appeal by the fact that large fees had been paid on certain occasions. I am afraid that these four counsel having received $15,000 each for six months' services, will form a precedent, and that many unfortunate suitors will be made to pay large fees because the Government have paid this large fee.

Printing Commission..... $864

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Cui bono?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Blackburn, of London, Ontario, and Mr. Chamberlain, proceeded to different cities in the United States, in order to report on the question of establishing a printing bureau. This vote is to pay the expenses of the commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it the intention of the Government to establish a printing bureau?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government have not come to any decision in the matter.

Mr. BOWELL.

Payments of salaries, etc., of members of North-West Council for 1881 and 1883..... $4,000

Mr. MULLOCK. Will the Minister in charge explain how the amounts come to be paid for past years?

Mr. McLELAN. Previous to 1881 they had not been paid. Considerable correspondence took place, and the Government of the North-West Territories eventually agreed that the elected members should be paid $400 and the nominated members $200. It was paid out of the general funds of the North-West Territory, and this is to recoup the fund.

Mr. MULLOCK. What about 1882? Were any sums paid for that year?

Mr. McLELAN. I will make enquiries.

North-West Mounted Police—To complete service for the year..... $300,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that part of the expenses connected with putting down the revolt?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is impossible to prepare an accurate estimate of the expenses of the Mounted Police in connection with the North-West troubles. Accounts from Edmonton and the Prince Albert districts have not yet reached Ottawa; but it is known that the Hudson Bay Company have paid out, on the certificates of its officers, over $100,000. The accounts are being audited, and they will show the expenditure, distinct from the ordinary charges for maintenance of the force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is in the nature of a vote of credit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The expenditure cannot be approximated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The supposition is, that for everything entered in the Estimates information can be given and a detailed accounts presented. When an account cannot be given, a vote of credit should be had recourse to. This item, strictly speaking, should be treated in that way. I am aware the expenditure on that account must have been heavy.

Department of Indian Affairs—Assistance to institutions..... $4,850

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this item of $250, in connection with the establishment of ten scholarships in the Mohawk institute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will explain, in a moment.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Mohawk institute is one maintained by the New England Company, and that company on the Six Nations reserve maintains six or seven schools and an industrial institute. I do not remember any money being previously granted by the Dominion Government. I presume this is a new departure, and I trust it will prove to be one productive of good.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was decided by the New England Society, under whose auspices the Mohawk institute is conducted, to establish, in the interest of Indian youths, ten scholarships, five for boys and five for girls, and to give to those pupils attaining the highest number of marks at the public examination for entrance into the high school the opportunity of attending the Brantford Collegiate Institute, and to qualify as third-class teachers. Then, the next amount, $4,000, is to assist in rebuilding the industrial schools Wikwemikong, Manitoulin Island, which was destroyed by fire.

Mr. DAWSON. There were two of these schools burned down, and I hope the Government will see its way, if not this year, then next year, to give a further grant towards the rebuilding of the other schools.

North-West Territories—To complete service for the year ..... $320,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The failure of the crops in the Saskatchewan district and Assiniboia, rendered it necessary that much greater assistance should be given in supplies. A Governor General's warrant for $250,000 was obtained, but that amount was insufficient, and $70,000 additional is now asked, though it is impossible, because the accounts are not in, to state the exact sum.

Collection of Revenue—Customs ..... $2,242

Mr. FISHER. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs when he expects to be able to appoint a collector at Sutton. Mr. Dunn has been there for some time; I believe he has ably performed the service, and I have no doubt that the sum now asked is not too high a remuneration for his services. In fact, I have been wondering why he was not appointed permanently before this.

Mr. BOWELL. The appointment, perhaps, ought to have been made some time ago, and it has been more negligence on my part than anything else, because Mr. Dunn has been acting since the superannuation of the previous officer. The matter will be attended to in a short time. I think this is one of the cases in which a difficulty has arisen under the Civil Service Act. That Act will allow you to appoint a collector, if he has never been in the service before; but if he has been in the service, it is regarded as a promotion, and the law makes no provision for promoting a man to a higher place until he has passed the qualifying examination. I think Mr. Dunn, who is a very good officer, is in that position.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope, before this time next year, the Government will take into consideration the advisability of amending a law which compels a man to remain in a subordinate position, and who is otherwise eligible for promotion, simply because he has not passed some wretched examination, while a new man may be appointed, without passing an examination at all.

Mr. FISHER. This is certainly rather an adverse commentary on the Civil Service law. I may say that I know Mr. Dunn; I know that he is doing the work efficiently and well, and I had not understood that he was not able to pass the examination if he had the opportunity.

Allowance for assistant postmaster of Ottawa for performing the duties of postmaster, as provided for in section 11, Canada Civil Service Act, 1882, from 1st April, 1883, to 1st February, 1884, being difference of salary between that of the postmaster and the assistant postmaster ..... $1,502 09

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a large sum for twelve months' extra work. How does it come to be paid?

Mr. CARLING. This was paid to the deputy postmaster of the Ottawa post office, during the absence of Mr. Currier, the postmaster, through illness. Mr. Currier's salary was $3,000, and this is the difference between the salary of the assistant and the postmaster.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the salary of the assistant postmaster?

Mr. CARLING. I think it is $1,600

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me this is a very unnecessary and not a very well considered position. The assistant postmaster has not been appointed postmaster.

Mr. CARLING. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I do not see the necessity of doubling his salary, which appears to have been done here. It is stated here that that is done under a certain section of the Civil Service Act, but I take it that that is a discretionary power with the Department, and not a matter of statutory right to the man. It appears to me this is a provision for needlessly increasing the expenditure. No one would object to a reasonable amount being paid to the assistant postmaster while he is doing the duty of postmaster, but so large a sum as this appears to be unreasonable.

Mr. CARLING. The large amount of Government business makes the business of the Ottawa post office very large indeed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should say such a thing as this would have the effect of rendering the gentleman dissatisfied with the salary he is getting.

Mr. CARLING. He is quite satisfied.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think it is a correct principle.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is a good principle, but it has always been the practice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the law ought to be amended, and it ought to be left in the discretion of the department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 15th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GIROUARD. I wish to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the report in the Globe of the few remarks I made last Friday. The report is as follows:—

"Mr. Girouard objected to the proposal to subsidise the North Shore road because $6,000 a mile of the subsidy to the Province of Quebec last year had been withheld. He contended that the whole bonus of $12,000 a year should be given to the Province before any other question was dealt with. He had voted for the short line subsidy last year, mainly because the Maritime Provinces believed it would be to their interest. But he did not believe the trade could be secured for the Maritime Provinces, and was not prepared to vote $5,000,000 for that purpose. He did not see any use in the surveys, and would vote against the amendment, as well as against the resolutions. The company was to be given two years to begin the work, and four years to finish it, so there need be no desperate hurry in settling the matter."

I complain of the balance of the report, which is rather extensive:

"He referred to the fact that the Minister of Railways was personally interested in this vote, being the virtual owner of the part of the road to be bonused. The Canadian Pacific had just come to Parliament to assist them to carry out the first contract, yet they proposed now to go into this work, for they were to build the short line, and the same Minister who proposed that they should get assistance was the one virtually who proposed they should be given this new work. He thought the transaction, in this light, was a disgraceful one."

I never said anything, even very remotely, which could warrant such a report. I never made any allusion to the interests of any party whatever, and it seems to me this report has been purely and simply an invention of the correspondent of the Globe.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the adoption of the tenth report on the printing of Parliament. He said: This report deals with some papers to be printed in the ordinary way. It also recommends that an employé in the distribution office, who has been there for some time, Mr. John Wiltshire, should be made a permanent officer instead of a sessional officer. He has been paid $250 a year as a sessional messenger or officer in connection with the Department. It is proposed to make him a permanent officer, at $500 a year. Last year Mr. Hartney was compelled to employ special assistance to do the work, which cost $129. This proposal involves, therefore, an additional charge of about $120. Mr. Wiltshire is a practical binder, well acquainted with the work he has to do, and exceedingly useful in the Department. Formerly, in connection with the distribution office, the post office clerks were in the habit of putting up the blue books during the recess, but for the last two Sessions they have not consented to do this work. The result has been that the work of the distribution office has been largely increased in consequence of that fact. Mr. Wiltshire is a particularly suitable man for the work, being, as I have said, a practical binder, and the committee makes the recommendation I have mentioned. The report further recommends a change in the form of the index to the Sessional Papers. I have caused a copy of the proposed index to be placed on the desks of hon. members. Hitherto, the practice has been to make an ordinary index, simply giving the different numbers and abbreviated titles of the Sessional Papers, and then the papers themselves were distributed through the book, giving simply the titles, when they were not ordered to be printed. The result was, that in the Sessional Papers last year 200 pages were occupied simply with titles, and in some cases, leaving only a title on a whole page, it became a matter of considerable profit to the printers. It is proposed to make the index in the form of the sample laid on hon. members' desks. First, the general subject, and then the several papers brought down relating to the subject, are briefly indicated. Then there is the full title of the paper, and whether it was ordered to be printed for distribution or not, and the name of the member moving for it. In this way we have in this index a thoroughly complete statement of the Sessional Papers, and we save the printing of the titles in the way I have indicated. Then, Sir, this report deals with the question of the printing for the future. As hon. gentlemen are aware, the contract for printing expired last year, but in view of the suggestion that possibly a Government bureau of printing might be established, it was deemed wise to obtain with the contractors an arrangement, by which they consented to go on under the contract for one or for two years additional, at the option of Parliament. They have gone on for one year, and we have arranged that they shall go on for the second year; but as the proposal to establish a Government bureau does not appear likely to be carried out in the meantime, it was thought better to advertise for tenders. The printing, as done now, is not at all satisfactory—I do not say that as reflecting on the printers in any way—but the contract is near at an end, the type is worn out, and no prudent business man would think of renewing his plant on the expiry of a contract, and with the uncertainty of having it again or not, and therefore it was desirable that the contract should be renewed. In connection with this matter, the committee recommend the House to ask for tenders for five and ten years, so as to determine which will be the more profitable. It will be open for the committee and the House to accept a tender for one period or for the other, the object being, if possible, to induce people to tender bonâ fide for this work, and many might be induced to tender for a ten years' contract who probably would not care to go to the expense of putting up or obtaining buildings and erecting plant in Ottawa for a five years' contract. Then another recommendation in the report is, that the paper to be used shall be somewhat heavier than the paper now being used. I am satisfied that is not going to involve additional cost.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

The price of paper has largely decreased since the last contract was made, and the paper we are getting now, and which is now going into our present work, I believe we are paying for at the rate of about 2 cents a pound more than we could purchase in the ordinary open market, without tender at all, at this time. There is no doubt that we will be able to get a much better article of paper—and the character of printing depends, to a very considerable extent, on the character of the paper—at actually a less cost than we are getting it at now. It is proposed, further, that we do not ask for tenders for the paper for the full period. The getting of paper does not involve in any way the erection of buildings, or anything of that kind, in Ottawa, and it is therefore proposed that the paper shall be obtained each year for the work of the Session or the Sessional Papers. The opinion is—and I concur in that opinion very strongly—that in that way there will be a greater inducement to the several paper manufacturers to furnish a really good article, because, by doing so, a manufacturer who filled the contract thoroughly well one year would have a very strong claim to have it continued for another year. Then, Sir, a suggestion which I venture to make, is this: The committee, of course, have no power to make any recommendation on that subject, but they have had the matter under consideration, and I think they were unanimous in believing that, if it were possible to have tenders for the whole printing of the Government and Parliament embodied in one tender, we should induce a much larger and better competition, and probably secure the work to be better done. One of the difficulties under the present system is this: The Government advertise for tenders; that is a distinct contract. The committee of Parliament advertise for tenders, and that is a separate contract. A contractor may tender for one or the other; one person may be the lowest in one case, and may not be the lowest in the other, and at once he is compelled to make arrangements with the lower tenderer in the other case, so as to secure the contract for the whole. At this moment the public contractor has the whole work, but especially if they were embodied in one tender, they would undoubtedly be sufficiently large to induce persons to come here and tender, with a view of putting up establishments in Ottawa, thus securing in that way that kind of competition which I fear neither one nor the other, standing alone, would be likely to secure for us. These are the recommendations of the committee—except, of course, the last, which is merely a suggestion—and I have the honor to move the adoption of the report.

Mr. TROW. I beg to corroborate the statements of the hon. member for Cardwell, with reference, particularly, to Mr. Romaine, and the alphabetical index of Sessional Papers which he has prepared. Members will find it a source of great convenience in having their papers arranged in this form. I have found Mr. Romaine, in any business I have had to do with him, one of the most practical men in the service, and he has been the means of saving thousands of dollars to the Government by his arrangement of the stationery, and the various appliances he had been instrumental in bringing forward to facilitate the work of the House. As for Mr. Wiltshire, Mr. Botterel tells me that he is a practical man, and the additional sum paid to his annual allowance will be but trifling indeed. I hope that portion of the report will be adopted. I am sorry that the hon. member for Cardwell did not embody in his report the propriety, or the absolute necessity, of printing an additional number—a few thousands, at least—of the Franchise Bill, for general circulation. I am anxious that that should be done by the printing committee. It is a measure which has been under discussion for some time; it should be generally understood by the people, and I hope yet that the chairman of the committee will see the propriety of printing an extra edition for general circulation.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As to the last suggestion of the hon. gentleman, I may say that the matter was discussed, and it was thought better to leave the question of the additional number of the Franchise Bill to be printed until the Bill was finally passed. It is now passed, and of course it is one of those measures of which I have no doubt a very large edition must necessarily be printed. As to the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made with regard to Mr. Romaine, I should have stated that the work of preparing this index has involved a great deal of trouble, and that it is entirely his own work. There are reasons why, perhaps, I should not say much on the subject, but I think every hon. gentleman will admit that if there is one officer in the public service who not only earns his salary, but who has saved to the country three or four or half a dozen times his salary, the gentleman in charge of the Stationery Department of this House may be said to be that officer.

Motion agreed to.

ENQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways—and I regret that he is not here, but this is the only opportunity I will have of bringing it up to-day—to a return which was sent down on the 5th of May last, in answer to an Order of this House of the 24th of February last, for “copies of the returns, as required to be made under the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, and the Acts in amendment thereof, of 1881 and 1884, by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, for the fiscal year 1883-84, in each year separately; the number of miles of main line; actual total cost of construction and equipment,” and so on. A number of items of information were ordered by the House. I find that the secretary of the Department says:

“I herewith transmit return, in answer to an Order of the House of Commons, dated 24th February, 1885, relating to detailed returns, as required by Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and amendments, by Grand Trunk Railway Company, for fiscal year 1883-84, and I am to inform you that a supplementary return will be forwarded as soon as the company furnishes the further information asked for.”

What I would like to ask the Government is, whether they have called upon the Grand Trunk Company for that additional information, whether the Grand Trunk has furnished that information, and if the Government have got it, when they will bring it down, in accordance with the Order of this House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Acting Minister of Railways not being here, I cannot give an answer, but I will mention the matter to him when he comes.

Mr. MITCHELL. The fact is, there is no information in this return that is worth anything. The material information is not given. It is like all the information given by the Grand Trunk.

SPIRITS TAKEN OUT OF BOND.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I desire to give the information asked for by the hon. member for South Huron, with regard to the quantity of spirits taken out of bond in Ontario and Quebec, from the 1st July to the 6th of July, inclusive. According to the returns, there were taken out in Ontario 18,104 gallons, and in Quebec 28,269; but this does not show the actual facts of the case, because some of the liquor taken out in Ontario, for instance, at Prescott, was taken out for consumption in Quebec, so that the real quantity taken for consumption in Quebec would be 34,269 gallons, and in Ontario 12,104. I may state, also, that the largest quantity was taken out by one man, a merchant who telegraphed to Prescott on Saturday, ordering one or two car loads of whiskey, and again on Monday, doubling the order. I saw the telegram, because it was used as an argument why Mr. Wisner should be allowed to take out an additional quantity. The telegram stated:

“Cannot say anything as to the duties, but will write and give my own impressions.”

That entry was made, but the subsequent entries were refused; but I may state that the total quantity was 46,373 gallons, which does not exceed the ordinary quantity taken out in the same period of other months. But the fact remains, that a larger quantity was taken out at Quebec than anywhere else.

MANITOBA JUDICIARY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to provide, for the salary of an additional county court judge in the Province of Manitoba, the sum of $2,000.
2. That the said salary shall be paid out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC JUDICIARY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the resolutions reported from Committee of the Whole, respecting the salary of the senior puisné judge of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec, be now read the second time, and concurred in.

Motion agreed to, and resolutions concurred in.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 161) respecting the salaries of certain Provincial Judges.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Intercolonial Railway, chargeable to capital... $455,432 38

Mr. MITCHELL. I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that when the Intercolonial Railway items were going through last Session, a discussion arose about some claims on the Intercolonial Railway. Sir Richard Cartwright referred to the claims of McGroevy, McDonald, McGaw, and some others. Sir Charles Tupper said:

“The principal one was Murray & Co., about $100,000. The others were comparatively small sums. I suppose $10,000 would cover them all.”

Mr. DAVIES. Will this close up all claims in regard to the Intercolonial.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the report of the commission.

Mr. DAVIES. Are there any outstanding claims?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; none that have not been considered by the commission.

Mr. DAVIES. Then this pays everything.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This report deals with all the claims against the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you propose to reopen them?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly, I do not propose to reopen them.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are two or three trifling claims that I have brought under the Minister's notice, and which I received from my constituents. I hope these claims will not not be shut out from consideration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Nothing can be foreclosed. That is a matter for Parliament entirely.

Mr. DAVIES. I understand then it is quite possible that Parliament may be called on to devote further sums in liquidation of other claims than those before us now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. When the hon. member for Northumberland refers to small matters, respecting which he has sent a communication to me, they will have to be examined; and it is impossible to say that we will close the door against all such claims. I say that all claims against the Intercolonial have been dealt with by the commission. They have reported on all of them.”

I called the attention of the then Minister of Railways to the fact that these claims have not been dealt with by the arbitrators. I was not in Parliament during the time they enquired into the Intercolonial Railway claims; and after 1882 these claims were forwarded to me by the representatives of the estate of Mr. John Bannon, and by some half dozen others in Northumberland, amounting to $4,000 or $5,000 altogether; they were claims that stood exactly on the same footing as others which have been recognised and paid. I called the Minister's attention to this when the subject was under discussion; I called the attention of the Department and the House to the fact that these claims were not enquired into or settled, and the Minister practically stated they would be dealt with and considered by the Government arbitrators with other Intercolonial Railway claims. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that these claims have not yet been dealt with. My constituents insist on an examination and enquiry being held into them by the Government arbitrators. That is all I ask, and I trust the Minister will give me the assurance that those few trifling claims will not be made an exception, more especially when the Minister of Railways, in committee, last year, recognised the right to have an enquiry made into them. I hope the Minister will refer the matter now to the Dominion arbitrators to have the claims investigated, and if just, paid, and if unjust, rejected. At present, my ground of complaint is that these claims have remained unenquired into. Of course blame attaches to me, if I do not press them; and in the interests of my clients and the performance of my duty as a representative, I must ask that they be referred to the Dominion arbitrators.

Mr. POPE. I think the hon. gentleman's constituents must be very unreasonable, indeed, if they complain that he does not press any claim they have sufficiently for them in this House, but as to referring them to the official arbitrators I do not think my predecessor promised to do that. The first thing the hon. gentleman must expect me to do is to have an enquiry as to how the matter stands, and after that determine what course to take.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not say that the predecessor of the hon. gentleman said we would refer them to the Dominion arbitrators. What I say is this, that that is the course which has been pursued in all these other claims and I have the right to ask that the same consideration be given to those. I also say that during the past year no enquiry or progress has been made towards settlement.

Mr. VAIL. I think the hon. Minister had better accede to the request of the hon. member for Northumberland. I have a very vivid recollection of another claim the hon. gentleman had which he persistently pressed until he accomplished his object.

Dominion Steamers ..... $30,000

Mr. VAIL. I should like to ask if the report I see in the papers is correct, that the Deputy Minister has purchased boilers and engines for the steamer Druid, now lying in the docks at Quebec.

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. VAIL. Is it the intention to purchase them?

Mr. McLELAN. I have had plans and specifications made, and I propose to call for tenders.

To refund the amount of bank imposts collected irregularly from banks..... $41,048 92

Mr. BOWELL. I promised the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) to give him the information for which he asked last night. The amounts are: To the St. Stephen's Bank, $16,879.96; to the People's
Mr. MITCHELL.

Bank of Nova Scotia, $20,999.91; to the Commercial Bank of Windsor, $3,169.10—being a total of $41,048.97.

Chinese Commission ..... $11,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for South Huron asked for some information as to the salaries and so on, and the other expenses separated. The information I have is as follows:—Services—that means the salaries—$5,241.60; travelling expenses, $3,695.85; sundries, $2,225.20; all this making a total of $11,162.65.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is the salary distributed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is between Judge Gray, Mr. Davin, the assistant secretary; then the translation, then copying, then the assistant to Mr. Davin, then the reporter—these are the principal items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much to each?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Judge Gray received $2,040; Mr. Davin, $2,047; the assistant, Mr. Macdougall, $174; the translator, $415; copying, $93; Mr. Boyce, assistant to Mr. Davin, $397.50; and the reporter at Victoria, $75. Then, besides that there are accounts not yet settled for printing and so on, amounting to $5,738.50. Thus the whole amount is $16,901.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Without including, of course, the printing account.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A portion of that is in these accounts. There is the printing of the English version, and the printing of the French edition, and the translation, that is included in the $5,738.50.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I understand that the $16,000 will cover all?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will run up to nearly $17,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will cover all?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, according to the information I have.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does that cover the translating of the printing into French?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

To settle the claims of the estate of the late S. R. Thompson, and those of Mr. Justice Weatherbee, of Halifax, and Mr. L. H. Davies, M.P., of Charlottetown, for increased remuneration as counsel before the Halifax Fishery Commission, $8,000 each ..... $24,000 00

Mr. VAIL. Does this cover the whole amount claimed by the parties?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. The $24,000 covers the whole claim of these three gentlemen. They agreed to accept $8,000 each, and not to claim any interest.

To provide for the payment of the salaries of the members of the North-West Council for 1881; and to recoup the general revenue fund of the North-West Territories for the amount paid out by the Lieutenant Governor on account of members of the Council for 1883..... $4,000 00

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to enquire whether provision has been made, or is to be made, in the Estimates for further funds for schools in the North-West Territories. I have observed a correspondence which has recently taken place in the Territories, with reference to the application of the Act which we are engaged in amending—as to its application only to places in which municipal institutions have been established. I observe a statement made by the acting clerk of the Council that the funds at the disposal of the territorial Government are not adequate to supply, I think it is, something like one-tenth the demands that are made upon it for schools in the Territories. I was anxious to know whether that subject is attracting the attention of the Government, because it is obvious that nothing could be more lamentable for the future of that country, than that young people should be growing up in ignorance there.

Mr. McLELAN. That matter is being considered, and there is an additional sum for schools.

Allowance for Assistant Postmaster of Ottawa for performing the duties of Postmaster, as provided for in Section 11, Canada Civil Service Act, 1882, from 1st April, 1883, to 1st February, 1884, being difference of salary between that of the Postmaster and the Assistant Postmaster..... $1,502.09

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Last night I called the attention to the abuse, as I conceived it was, which was growing up in this direction. Looking at the phrase used here that such and such allowance is made for performing the duties of postmaster as provided in section 11 of the Canada Civil Service Act, I supposed, and I dare say a good many other members in the House supposed, that that Civil Service Act required that the payment should be made. Now on looking to the Civil Service Act, 1882, section 11, I find that it says this :

"In the absence of any deputy head, a chief clerk to be named by the head of the Department shall perform the duties of such deputy head, unless the performance of such duties is otherwise provided for by Order in Council."

Well, that may be said to have a bearing in principle on the fact that the assistant postmaster is to perform the duties of postmaster when the postmaster is away; that, I suppose, is what he is appointed for. But there is in that, at any rate, no ground why the Government should pay $1,502 for the services of this gentleman for ten months, in addition to his ordinary salary of $1,500 or $1,600. It appeared to be thought by the Postmaster General and by some of his colleagues, that there was some compulsion in the matter. Apparently, there is no direction, even, in the matter; the thing is left wholly and entirely in the hands of the Government. Now, I know perfectly well that this particular item of $1,500, in itself, is not very large, but it establishes a principle which will be mischievous. The authority certainly, is not in section 11 of the Civil Service Act, 1882; but if there be elsewhere any such provision I think it is well that the attention of Parliament should be called to it, and that the thing should be amended, because I can conceive no ground for an officer's salary being doubled for taking the duties of his chief, who may be dead or absent. I do not object to a reasonable allowance being made, but this thing disorganises the service. I see that Mr. Bolduc, who was assistant postmaster of Quebec, discharged the duties of postmaster for one-half the time, and he gets $250. The other officer, who performed the duties of postmaster for 10 months, receives $1,500. That kind of thing is mischievous, and it needs to be looked into. It would be quite right if extra work and responsibility were thrown on officers, that some consideration should be shown them; but it does not follow that an officer in receipt of $1,500 or $1,600 a year should get his salary doubled, as is proposed to be done here. The First Minister concurred in the view—although he seemed to suppose it was imperative that such amounts should be paid—that this and the other proposed increases should be amended and brought into proper proportions; and if there were a doubt as to the law, it should be amended, so as at least to leave it optional with the Government to decide what would be a fair and proper remuneration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In this case, as the First Minister stated last night, there may be room for improvement. Here are two officers in the same position, acting respectively for the postmaster during his absence or illness, one of whom receives, for ten months, $1,500, and the other, for five months, $250. That is accounted for in this way: The officer who receives only $250 for the five months has a much larger salary than the other officer, and therefore the difference between his salary and that of the postmaster was much smaller than in the case of the officer at the Ottawa post office who was filling the position of postmaster while the chief officer was sick. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman has said. It looks rather strange that an officer should thus double his salary. No doubt, this matter will receive the attention of the Government, and next Session the law may be modified in order to meet the difficulty. In the Act of 1882, section 49, sub-section 2, it is provided that when the duties of a superior officer or clerk are performed by an inferior officer during a period of three months and upwards, that clerk or officer may, on the recommendation of the deputy head, concurred in by the head of the Department, and provided there are funds available from the parliamentary vote, receive in addition to his salary the difference between such salary and the salary of the postmaster whose duties he has performed. The clause is not imperative, but the deputy head having reported the same, and the report being concurred in by the head of the Department, the salary may be so increased. I know both of these officers, and I know that they are efficient officers and properly performed the responsible duties entrusted to them, and they are entitled to have the benefit of this clause in the Act. The only question would be, if this principle is to be maintained, whether the clause should not be amended so that the whole difference of the two salaries may not be granted but only a portion of it.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand this clause it gives that power only when money has been appropriated by Parliament. But what the hon. gentleman is now doing is to bring down a number of grants and to ask parliamentary sanction to them. That is an injurious precedent. I had supposed when the law was passed that it was intended to deal with this matter so as to allow a discretionary power in the hands of the Government, and I can well conceive many cases in which the duties of the office would be light and some cases in which the duties would be very onerous, and a discretion should be left with the Executive with respect to payment to be made. It is proposed to lay down the proposition that, even if there is not a parliamentary appropriation, there should be extra amounts given to officers. That will be surrounded with very considerable difficulties. The efficiency of the service very often requires, no doubt, that a good and faithful officer should be permitted to be absent for a time; I do not object to that, but on the other hand, that is an arrangement which should be very cautiously made. The officers of the service have their regular occasions of absence from their duties, and under the supposition that the staff when it is complete is not more than adequate to the service, it is a positive evil that there should be long absences when there is practically no head to the Department. It is one thing that a man should be able to discharge duties of the head of his office in a pinch, but is he able to discharge the duties of the head of his office, and his own too? If he is, it is because the Department has too large a staff, and if he is not, then the service must suffer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under the 49th section of the law, I think, it is provided that in case the superior officer is away for more than 3 months, it is only in that case that the additional salary will be paid. As a rule we give the officers, according to the statute, 3 weeks of a recess during the year, always taking care that too many may not be absent at the same time, and that the public service may not suffer. If a longer absence is desired, of course there must always be an Order in Council which states the reason why it is granted, and it may be worth while to consider whether an officer, who has leave of absence on urgent business of his own, should not be called upon to provide for the addition to the salary whilst he was away. I think, however, in the case of an old and valuable officer in the service, whose health is breaking down, and whose medical man says that he requires three or four or five months to recuperate, the rule under section forty-nine might be followed, though it may put the Government and the country to a little more expense for that purpose. I may say that this question of remuneration has been noted, and will be considered during the recess with a view of seeing whether we can next Session make such an amendment as to provide a sort of scale for the remuneration of officers performing such duties as we have referred to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Had Mr. Winstanley another salary besides what is there provided for?

Mr. CARLING. Yes, $960 and travelling allowances. He was appointed to the position of chief railway mail clerk, Toronto division, the remuneration of which is fixed by statute.

Liquor License Act..... $60,000

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I should like to enquire what is the exact amount paid to enforce or carry out the License Act of last year, also whether or not any remuneration has been fixed by the Government for commissioners and inspectors, and what becomes of the moneys received from license holders. I observe by a return brought down that the sum of over $77,000 was obtained from the liquor dealers of the Dominion as license fees. Has that money been paid over to the Government, or retained by the commissioners as part of their salaries or fees?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot give the exact amount of the cost of administering this service. I suppose it will be about $150,000 for last year which includes the amount received from the license dealers. With regard to the amount paid in salaries, of course the salaries vary according to the population or extent of the license district to which the officers are appointed.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Who fixes the amount?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Governor in Council. I cannot state the amount of the remuneration paid to the commissioners more definitely than by saying that they each get $5 a day for attendance and a mileage of 10 cts. per mile to the place of meeting. The moneys received by the different boards as fees have never been paid to the Government; they never were required to be paid. The moneys paid are usually subject to the control of the board, and are used to pay the running expenses of the board. The amount they have received will be taken into account, and where there is a deficiency, this vote will go to cover the salaries and expenses. In some of the larger cities there has been a surplus, but under the provision of the Act they do not get the benefit of that surplus. It goes to the local authorities.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says it has cost about $150,000; would he tell us what good it has done?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In round numbers, it has cost $150,000. As to the good it has done, that is another matter.

Mr. FISHER. What is the salary of the inspectors?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is no fixed salary for the inspectors. The salary is regulated according to the extent of the district, the population, and the number of licenses applied for.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the general range of them?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suppose from $100, and I think one or two are as high as $2,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. BLAKE. That is a large salary; it is the salary of a county court judge.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That was fixed by the commissioners in those large places where the revenue and the quantity of work was very large. The sum of $2,000 is for the whole inspection, and in some places it includes two or three persons.

Mr. FISHER. Do the commissioners fix the salaries of the inspectors or does the Governor in Council?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The commissioners have the right to fix the salaries of the inspectors, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; but there is no uniformity in the salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask a question which arises out of letters which I have received from counties in which the Canada Temperance Act is in force. I suppose that in counties in which the License Act is in force, the duties of the commissioners and inspectors would be largely nominal; but in counties where the Scott Act is in force, their duties will be other than nominal, provided they are performed. A gentleman writes from a Scott Act county, saying with reference to the commissioners:

"They are good men, and sincerely desirous of having the law enforced. They have, however, done nothing since the first of May towards enforcing the Act. We gave them cases, but they refused to proceed, because most of our cases will be imprisonment, owing to this being the offenders' third offence, and they have no funds to meet the costs of the cases."

Other letters from Scott Act counties state that cases have been brought to the notice of the inspector, and he refuses to prosecute. If you are going to pay inspectors in Scott Act counties fair salaries, it is certainly right that they should do something to earn their money; and it would be foolish to spend money in these counties if the commissioners or inspectors refuse to prosecute the cases. These salaries will have to be paid from the 1st of May last till the 1st of next May; it is now the middle of July, and they have not undertaken a prosecution in that particular county yet, the reason given being that they have no funds. As I understand the law, it is that whatever fines and penalties come from convictions go into a fund which is used for paying the expenses of the prosecution, and I think that in all Scott Act counties some definite direction should be sent to the inspectors that they shall do the work the law requires, and that it shall not be entirely optional with them, just at their own will or whim, to take cases and prosecute. Of course until they prosecute and obtain convictions, they will get no funds or fees; but I apprehend that the law as administered will be something like this. In a Scott Act county where convictions are had, a few fines and fees are brought in, and a certain fund is created thereby. Out of that fund the inspector pays the expenses of the prosecution, and at the end of the year makes a return; and what remains of the fund goes to pay the salary of the inspector, and the appropriation we are now making goes to make up any deficiency there may be in the salary. Is that the Minister's understanding of the law?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the view the hon. gentleman takes of the Act is quite correct. It provides that the fee of $10 which accompanies the application, the fee of $5 which is afterwards paid, and all fines and penalties that may be imposed and collected, shall form a general fund, out of which the expenses are to be paid; and if that sum be not sufficient to cover the salaries and expenses the deficiency is to be made up by a vote of Parliament. With regard to duties of inspectors in Scott Act counties, my own impression is that the only duty they have to perform, and the only reason for their existence as a staff, is the enforcement of the Scott Act. I think it is their duty to enforce the Scott Act in Scott Act counties, just as any other officer discharges the duties assigned to him; there can be no doubt about that. The only duty they have to perform at present, I think, is to see that the Act is carried out fairly.

Mr. FOSTER. Just one more question, which I suppose the Minister is prepared to answer. We know that when the test case was appealed and brought before our Supreme Court, for a time nothing was done. Several of the commissioners have since written to me asking whether any instructions were to be given to them to go on and carry out the law. Will the Minister say whether any instructions will be issued to the commissioners and the inspectors in the line of performing their duties as they have done?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Instructions will be issued. I wish it understood that the remuneration paid commissioners and inspectors for last year, will necessarily be the same for the present year. The remuneration for the present year will be paid subject to the consideration of the reduced duties they will have to perform.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 158) to authorise the granting of further subsidies to and making provision for the construction and efficient operation of the railways therein described.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. After the first paragraph, I would move to add this clause which is the same as that in the Act of last year for the incorporation of a company:

And for the purpose of incorporating the persons undertaking the construction of the said railway and those who shall be associated with them in the undertaking, the Governor in Council may grant to them, under such corporate name as he shall deem expedient, a charter conferring upon them the franchises, privileges and powers requisite for the said purpose, which shall be similar to such of the franchises, privileges and powers granted to railway companies during the present Session as the Government shall deem most useful or appropriate to the said undertaking, and such charter being published in the Canada Gazette, any Order or Orders in Council relating to it shall have force and effect, as if it were the Act of the Parliament of Canada.

There are two companies. Of course we cannot subsidise two companies, and we want to have power to incorporate one company, so that the two companies may come to some understanding, if possible; otherwise the two would be fighting against each other for the subsidy.

Mr. LAURIER. The difficulty will not be so much to choose between the companies as between the routes. One company is incorporated to build a railway from Rivière du Loup by the Rivière du Loup valley; the other, from a point somewhere in the county of Kamouraska by the way of Rivière Ouëlle. How is the Government to determine between these two routes? We have no surveys of them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, we have surveys. This clause would give the Government a right to incorporate a company to go from the one point to the other, the Government having information about the length of the two proposed routes and the facilities or difficulties of each, so as to decide which of the two is the best. This does not prevent any other company, which may have a charter, from building any railway if they choose; but as this is a special grant, we must be in a position to know where the railway is to go.

Mr. LAURIER. If the Government has all the information, why not make a selection now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government wish to reserve the right to examine again and select the best route.

Mr. BLAKE. This makes it essential the Government should charter a company in order that the subsidy be paid. There are now two companies, and it is proposed to make an arrangement by having recourse to the incorporation of a third. Although I do not know that there will be any great rush of companies to construct this enterprise, and I think the hon. gentleman will find he will have enough to do dealing with those two without creating a third. He may find it easier to grant a charter than to build the lines. It seems to me that the provision now made in conjunction with the subsidy is a provision for a company to be chartered by the Governor in Council, so that it may be difficult, if not impossible, to give the subsidy to either of the two existing companies. The hon. gentleman said that, of course, the existing companies would build a line under their charter. Of course, they have the power to do that, but they will not have the sinews of war; and we know that it is probable that there will be one line, and not two.

On sub-section 2 of section 1,

Mr. WELDON. When the resolutions were before the committee, I understood that this would be a railway commencing on the south bank of the St. Lawrence, connecting with Montreal. It was clearly understood that the building of a bridge was not to be included, and I would suggest that the words should be inserted:

"For a line of railway on the south bank of the river St. Lawrence connecting Montreal."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not see the object of that. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to throw any obstacle in the way of this line. There is now one bridge; there may be two bridges. There are two companies chartered, and I think it would be better for the hon. gentleman to leave it as it is.

Mr. WELDON. As it stands now, it would include the building of a bridge, and it was understood that that was to be an independent business altogether; but this would permit the money to be applied to the building of a bridge across the St. Lawrence, which I am sure is not intended.

Mr. BLAKE. It would not only permit the application of the money in that way, but it is imperative. The whole subsidy is to be applied proportionately, and, as it is for a line between Montreal and Salisbury, you must provide for the cost of a bridge over the St. Lawrence out of the subsidy.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We might add the words:

A line of railway on the south bank of the St. Lawrence opposite Montreal.

Mr. BLAKE, I should like to understand what is the understanding of the Government as to the mode in which this particular subsidy is to be paid.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The object of the Government in asking Parliament for this subsidy is stated in the Bill:

"For a line of railway on the south bank of the St. Lawrence, opposite or near to Montreal, to the harbors of St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, via Sherbrooke, Moosehead Lake, Mettawamkeag, Harvey, Fredericton and Salisbury, a subsidy not exceeding eighty thousand dollars per annum for twenty years, forming in the whole, together with the subsidy authorised by the Act forty-seventh Victoria, chapter eight, for a line of railway connecting Montreal with the said harbors of St. John and Halifax by the shortest and best practicable route, which the line above described is found to be, a subsidy not exceeding two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum, the whole of which shall be paid in aid of the construction of such line of railway for a period of twenty years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company undertaking the work: The said subsidy to be so granted upon the terms and conditions of and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund in the manner specified in the said last mentioned Act in respect of the subsidy thereby authorised in aid of the said line of railway."

This is for that railway. The Government will have to make an arrangement with the company undertaking this work, and will take such means as will secure the completion of the line and its working from end to end. I said the other day that we would take special care in the arrangements with the company that the portion of the line to Salisbury would be completed as well as the other portion. It covers the whole ground.

Mr. BLAKE. I failed to make myself intelligible. I was anxious to show how it was proposed to pay this subsidy. This subsidy, you will observe, is different from ordinary subsidies granted in aid of railways, which are so much per mile, and which are to be paid upon a calculation of the proportionate cost of, I think, 10-mile sections, each section getting its share of the whole. Now, is it intended to apply the same principle to this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the first thing to be done will be to ascertain, of course, what the proportionate cost will be of the different sections of 10 miles long, and you will apply so much of the grant. But then you say the grant is a grant of a special character; it is an agreement to pay $250,000 a year for 20 years. Now, supposing that form is adopted—because the two forms are open to the Government and the company—one to take a guarantee of interest and the other just to take $250,000 a year for 20 years. Let us take the first form. Suppose the company says: We want the $250,000 a year for 20 years. Is any instrument to be executed by the Government, any document which shall be a document of title or of credit, when a 10-mile section is completed, indicating the right of the company to so much of its subsidy? Then on the other hand, supposing they adopt—as they are likely to adopt—the alternative provision: is it intended that the Government shall guarantee as many bonds as are earned for a 10-mile section when a 10-mile section is completed; and then when another 10-mile section is completed to guarantee another lot of bonds, proportionate to the amount? Or how is it to be worked?

Mr. GIGAULT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I highly approve of the route chosen by engineer Davy for the Montreal and Sherbrooke section. This route, passing through the counties of Chambly, Rouville and Shefford, will afford the most advantageous line, and will tend greatly to the development of the resources of the localities through which it will pass. These municipalities are in great want of these new railway facilities, as stated in engineer Davy's report. Here is what he says on the subject:

"The country between Montreal and Sherbrooke, through which the proposed line passes, is greatly in need of railway facilities, a portion being practically undeveloped from want of means of communication."

I regret that the question of substituting to this route that which is offered by the existing railways from St. John to Waterloo has been raised. The effect of this change would be to give a much longer and much less advantageous line than that which was suggested and explored by Mr. Davy, and I see no reason why we should adopt this change, unless it is intended to neglect public interest in order to favor the proprietors of the railways built between St. John and Waterloo. By virtue of the legislation enacted last year we are bound to subsidise the shortest line after causing surveys to be made; the engineers have found that that line is that which goes through the counties of Chambly, Rouville and Shefford. It would be preposterous on our part not to adopt that line. In building that short line we must choose the most advantageous route, and we must also seek to favor the localities which are in the greatest want of this means of communication to develop their resources. This double result will be attained if we act according to the report of engineer Davy. I hope the Government, in disposing of the subsidy which we are about to vote, will choose the shortest line, the most advantageous line, and the line which will be most likely to develop the resources of the country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In reply to the hon. leader of the Opposition, I may say that one proposal is $250,000 a year during so many years, and the other is a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company undertaking the work. As I understand the project it will be this: That bonds may be sold and the proceeds of the bonds placed in the hands of the Government, and as the work proceeds and each 10-mile section is completed, the amount of money in the hands of the Government would be paid in the same proportion. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows that there will be some sections where the work will be heavier than in other sections, and that will have to be well weighed and determined on beforehand, so that there will be no misunderstanding about the amount to be paid. When the work is going on the company may, for example—as the hon. gentleman knows that these things sometimes occur—go on and build an easy portion of the road and ask for an equal amount for that portion which they would have had for a heavy portion; but we could not allow this. We take care that if the easiest portions of the line are built first they will be paid only in proportion to the work performed, or to the heaviness of those sections, always taking into consideration that if the heaviest portions of the line are left to be built last more money will be paid for them than for the first ones.

Mr. BLAKE. The proposal the hon. gentleman makes is not one that is in the Bill as it now stands. Under this Bill the Government is not free to guarantee the interest on the whole mass of bonds which are to be issued for the purpose, that is to the extent of $250,000 a year for 20 years. The proposal is not in the Bill, and is not authorised by the Bill, and cannot be carried out legally under the Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It comes to the same thing.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg your pardon. If you grant a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company it is the same thing. If you adopt the other mode the result is absolutely the same, and the Government would take care, if they granted a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds, that the bonds should be in the hands of the Government, and the amount should not be used except in the way I have indicated.

Mr. BLAKE. I maintain, and the hon. gentleman will find I am correctly maintaining, that the Government has no power under this legislation to adopt the course the hon. gentleman has informed us the Government intend to adopt. It is one thing to ask Parliament to give power to allow the Government from time to time as 10-mile sections are completed to give a subsidy, on whatever terms it is to be given, whether as one gross sum, or as an annuity for 20 years, or as a guarantee of interest on bonds; and it is quite another thing to say that the Government intend, before one mile of the road has been completed, to give the company a guarantee or bonds on $250,000 a year for 20 years. The Government thus enter into an obligation to guarantee the interest on the interest, and they do guarantee the interest to the extent, without even 10 miles of the road being built. You may say that we get the product of the obligation. But the bonds may be sold at such prices that it may not be a very good account out of which to pay principal and interest. Whether it is a good obligation or not is, however, beside the question. The question is whether any such arrangement is covered by this Bill? I say no. If hon. members would look at the clause they will see it stated that the subsidy is to be payable on the terms and conditions set forth in the Act. The Act says that the subsidies shall be payable on the completion of sections of 10 miles in proportion to the value of the work done. If the Government give a guarantee, instead of paying the money, they must guarantee payment on the completion of each 10-mile section; but hon. gentlemen opposite propose to guarantee the whole amount before one mile of the road is built. That is an entirely different financial operation, and one not authorised by the Bill. It is premature to consider whether it is desirable or not, because it is not authorised.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman may be sure of this, that the law will be observed. If my scheme goes beyond the law, we will not go beyond the law. I think that if you may pay $250,000 a year for 20 years you can guarantee a like sum for a like period on the bonds of the company undertaking the work. We may perfectly well guarantee the bonds and retain them in our hands, instead of paying out the money, and this would come to the same thing. Perhaps my scheme goes a little further than what the hon. gentleman thought; but it amounts to the same thing, for instead of having the money in our hands we would have the bonds, and on these bonds being sold the company would have the money to redeem them.

Mr. BLAKE. A moment's consideration will show a clear sighted man like the Minister of Public Works that there is a very great difference between guaranteeing bonds which we keep in our hands, and guaranteeing bonds to the company and allowing them to go to the public and sell the bonds at a discount.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The bonds will not go out of our own hands.

On section 2,

Mr. LAURIER. I ask the Minister why he has made this subsidy $500,000. I understood from him the other day that it was to be about $1,000,000, that is $500,000 to recoup and about $460,000 to improve the line. Am I correct in that statement?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I stated that the determination and decision of the Government were to purchase the North Shore Railway from the Grand Trunk Railway Company at a certain figure, which the hon. gentleman has stated, and that railway would pass into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which would assume the debt remaining on the road, that is to say, the debt to the Quebec Government of $3,500,000 and the amount of the bonds on the road, I believe $1,725,000. We have asked this sum for the same purposes as last year, which was that failing any negotiations of this kind, or supposing the matter should fall through, the Government may not be without the necessary power.

Mr. LAURIER. I think it proper to have a very clear understanding on that point. I understand the policy of the Government is that there should be a purchase by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the North Shore Railway. Does the hon. gentleman mean to pay off the debt to the Quebec Government; or is the debt to be placed upon the Canadian Pacific Railway or on the North Shore?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Upon the North Shore.

Mr. BLAKE. Am I to understand, then, that the statement referred to by my hon. friend and corroborated by the hon. gentleman, as to the terms of the understanding which has been made, is correct; or that circumstances have occurred to alter the position, because when the hon. gentleman announced the understanding previously, it was definite and absolute. Arrangements have been made, and there was no longer that element of uncertainty which had existed up to a comparatively recent period. It is possible that, supposing this arrangement for buying the North Shore and transferring it to the Canadian Pacific Railway is carried out, this large sum, which is larger than the sum required by more than half, may be expended to accomplish that particular object. Is it that there is still a doubt as to whether it can be done for the money spoken of? And that there is a question whether we may not require to pay more than half a million dollars more in order to acquire that road; or is it that those negotiations to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which I understood were completed, should by some accident fail, then it is the other plan that is to be adopted?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, that is the case.

Bill reported with amendments.

On motion for concurrence in the amendments,

Mr. KIRK. I move the following amendment:—

That the report be not now considered, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the Bill by providing that the work on the sections of the line between Harvey, Fred-erickton and Salisbury shall be begun and prosecuted simultaneously with the portion of the whole line west of the boundary between New Brunswick and Maine.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think that this is an amendment which should be made, as if it were carried instead of helping the enterprise, it would throw obstacles in its way. Other hon. gentlemen may come forward and ask that work on other portions of the line shall be prosecuted simultaneously. That is not done anywhere; we see no such provision in any charter; no road is undertaken in that way. After the explanations I gave just now, that the contract which the Government will have to make, will be made in such a way as to secure the completion of the line, taking care that the heaviest portions of the line may not be left to be built, and paid with an amount only equal to the easiest portions of the line, but that the different portions may be paid for according to the character of the work to be performed—under these circumstances I hope the hon. gentleman will not persist in his motion. If he does, of course I must ask hon. gentlemen supporting this Bill to vote against the amendment.

Mr. KIRK. I dare say if I had as much confidence in the hon. gentlemen and his declarations as some hon. gentlemen, I would probably be willing to withdraw the motion; but the hon. gentleman knows that I have not got full confidence in the promises of this Government, because I know that many promises and pledges hitherto made with reference to work to be performed in Nova Scotia have not been fulfilled. I know that many grants have been made in this House at the suggestion of the Government, which should have been expended years ago; that lines of railway have been projected and subsidised which should have been in operation to-day, but not a dollar has been expended on them, and the railways have not been built. I think, Sir, with regard to this road that the chances are that the same thing will occur again, and that the grants provided for in this Bill, are just about as likely to be expended as those which have been made in previous years to other lines. For that reason, I have to ask the House not only to sustain the promise of the Government with regard to this measure, but to provide by a vote if they choose to do so—if they choose to vote against it I cannot help it—for the securing for the Province of Nova Scotia that which it is its right to have. We have had promises from this Government, time and time again, that they would make Halifax the winter port; and when I speak in the interest of Halifax, I speak in the interest of the whole of Nova Scotia. I am not here as the representative of the city or the county of Halifax; I am here as the representative of one of the most distant counties of Nova Scotia; but I know that anything that is done in the interest of Halifax benefits my county, and I know that if Halifax were made the winter port, my county would be benefited. For that reason I am anxious that the pledges made by the Government that they would make Halifax a winter port shall be carried out. There are no gentlemen in this House who know the value of those promises better than the members for Halifax; they have had the benefit of them in more elections than one. We know also that large sums of money have been expended to prepare that harbor for the extension of the railway to the deep water terminus. A large amount of money has been expended in building a wharf and an elevator for the purpose of facilitating the shipment of grain which is to be shipped over the Intercolonial Railway from the great wheat-producing sections of this country; but although these works have cost a large amount of money, and although the elevator has been built for the last three or four years, not one single cargo of wheat has been shipped through that elevator. It is true, a few portions of cargoes have been shipped, but not one full cargo; and I venture to say that if this road is built on the line projected—and the House has declared that it will be—and if the section of the line I refer to is not built, I do not think one of us here will live long enough to see the time when grain will be shipped through that elevator. Therefore the money which has been expended upon it is absolutely thrown away. Besides all this, Nova Scotia is paying her full proportion of the cost of building the Canadian Pacific Railway. This Parliament has voted $100,000,000, outside altogether of the land grant and the money realised from lands, for the purpose of building a railway from Port Moody to Montreal. Nova Scotia is paying her full proportion of that money; she is paying to-day $250,000 per annum of interest on the cost of that railway; and what benefit does she receive for it? We pay in interest on that work alone almost all we receive as subsidy from this Government, and we were promised that Halifax would be made the winter port of the country, in order to receive the vast amount of traffic that would come over that great road; and to-day we are asked to vote a sum of money to build a road—in the interest of Halifax? Certainly not. This road, if built, as I suppose it will be, on the line proposed by this Bill, will be of no advantage whatever to Halifax; it will be in the interest of the United States ports, and not of Halifax. When these resolutions were first introduced into this House, there was no mention made of the section of road to which my motion refers; there was no reference made to the line to Harvey, Fredericton and Salisbury; evidently it was an afterthought that it should be included at all. The road, when built to Mettawamkeag, will have a connection with Salisbury; and we have no pledge from the Government that this section of the line will be built. The Minister of Public Works, in his speech the other day, pledged the Government to secure the building of the road from Mettawamkeag to Salisbury. When the road is built to Mettawamkeag we have connection, but the Short Line is not complete unless it is built to Harvey, Fredericton and Salisbury. Unless this section is built, the road will be of no earthly benefit to the Province of Nova Scotia or to the city of Halifax. It may be built; but what we want is that, since the Government and Parliament have declared that it shall be built by this company, we want to take care that it shall be built as soon as possible. Therefore, I cannot, at the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, withdraw my motion, and I shall have to ask the House to divide on it.

Mr. DALY. I cannot allow the observations the hon. member for Guysboro (Mr. Kirk) has just made, to pass without saying a few words as a representative of the city of Halifax. I fully believe that the hon. gentleman is actuated by a sincere desire to further the interests of the Province from which he comes; but at the same time, I believe he is mistaken in the mode he is now adopting to show that desire. I believe that the interests of Halifax are very largely wrapped up in the completion of the undertaking to which the Bill now before the House relates. The scheme is one which the people of Nova Scotia at large, as well as the people of Halifax, have been looking forward to with interest and with expectations of great profit for many years past, and it is one which we now rejoice is approaching its accomplishment. This Bill, we believe, and the measures the Government will take under it, will tend to accomplish an object the people of Nova Scotia have had at heart for a very long time, that is, that while Canada has been taxing itself, and Nova Scotia as part of Canada has been bearing its proportion of the taxation, for the development of the great west, we in the east wish to participate in the benefits which that great development is likely to produce. We believe a direct connection of the Canadian Pacific Railway system with the city of Halifax will be of great advantage to the whole Province and to that port particularly, and we believe that object can be accomplished by the measure now proposed. To hamper that measure with embarrassing details would, we think, prevent our accomplishing that object. The company will be obliged to seek in the markets of the world the necessary assistance to extend this railway from Montreal to Halifax; and to impose upon that company the necessity of commencing the work on each particular section of the line simultaneously, would, we think, involve the company in embarrassments which this Legislature should not impose upon them. To enact these conditions would render it difficult for any company to obtain the necessary capital for the undertaking. I, for my part, have sufficient confidence in the declarations of the Minister to the effect that the intention of the Government will be fully carried out in any agreement or contract that is made with the company. For that reason, I think, it is unnecessary to hamper this legislation with conditions which may defeat the very object we have in view, instead of promoting it. The hon. gentleman referred to the interests of Halifax. I am very glad he takes an interest in the welfare of the city I have the honor to represent. He stated that many of the promises of the Government have not been fulfilled in regard to this very project which is now before us. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the promises of the Government to the people of Halifax have been amply redeemed with regard to the terminal facilities which have been afforded for the Intercolonial at that port. I know I am understating the figures when I say that over a million dollars have, by the generosity of this Parliament, been granted to the development of the eastern terminus of the Intercolonial Railway, in the building of a deep water terminus with facilities for the shipment of grain which are not surpassed in any Atlantic port of the Dominion. An elevator has been built at enormous expense, and I will inform the hon. gentleman, as he does not seem to be aware of the fact, for he has said that no grain whatever has passed through the elevator that—

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. KIRK. I did not say that.

Mr. DALY—upwards of 400,000 bushels of grain have passed through it this year, and parts of two cargoes of grain passed through last year. This is but the beginning of a trade which, when communication exists between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Halifax by this short line, will still further develop itself. It is not correct to say that no grain has been shipped through the port of Halifax.

Mr. KIRK. I did not say that none had been shipped.

Mr. DALY. I maintain that Halifax is our winter port, and enjoys advantages which no other port in the Dominion possesses for the trade. The extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway system, with the great traffic which it must necessarily control, to our eastern seaboard, is a part of the policy of this Government, and every friend of Nova Scotia should support a measure which will give an opportunity to the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend its system to the Maritime Provinces. I, therefore, do not wish to see any amendment introduced which will hamper the scheme or tend to prevent in any way the accomplishment of what we all desire. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the law passed last year, which this measure puts into operation, they will find that the work is to be completed within three years. With that provision on the Statute Book, no further necessity exists for pledging the company to complete the undertaking within a shorter period. I believe when the law comes into force, and we have heard from the president of the company, the Canadian Pacific Railway are willing to negotiate with the Government to undertake the scheme which they look upon as a necessity and a supplement to their system. Halifax will be in a position to rejoice in the fact that this Parliament had the liberality, and this Government the statesmanlike ability to formulate these provisions, and ask Parliament to ratify this large outlay for the benefit very largely of the Maritime Provinces. Instead of captious fault-finding, these resolutions meet with the cordial approval and congratulation of every hon. gentleman from the Maritime Provinces who loves his country.

Mr. PAINT. The hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) has made a statement in which he has intimated that he had no confidence in the Government. I would place more reliance on his attack had not the hon. gentleman intimated to me, on more than one occasion, that he intended, on every opportunity, to drive as many nails as he could into the Conservative coffin. I am glad to see that provision is made for extending the railway to Nova Scotia, with the prospect of carrying it through the Island of Cape Breton to an Atlantic port there. I designate the hon. gentleman's speech as an uncertain sound from a Reform trumpet.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Daly) has pointed out to us what was our duty as patriots. Well, some of us have to perform these duties as patriots in some circumstances and others in other circumstances, from different points of view, and inspired by different notions as to what the duties of patriots are. If it was patriotic, statesmanlike and wise, if this proposed Act is such an Act as should receive the plaudits of every unbiased and independent, unpurchased and unpurchasable patriot, what shall be said of the Government that guaranteed us twelve months ago that they would do the same work for little more than half the money. Where was the patriotism, the statesmanship, the wisdom then? And ever since we have been asking on what calculation the Government now say they will do the work any more than last Session. We have asked what the cost of the line is estimated to be, and cannot find out; we have asked what line is to be built by the subsidy, and cannot find out. We were told by Sir Charles Tupper last Session that this thing was to be done at a capital charge of $1,890,000. The hon. member for Halifax finds that the Government wholly failed in performing it and telling us in fact, though they will not say so in words, that this was a jump in the dark, a mere guess, because they now come down this Session and say they will require $3,400,000 to do it. Having proved by that the imperfection of their calculation of twelve months ago, they will not give us bases for giving confidence to their present calculation by telling us on what it is founded; and notwithstanding that the hon. member for Halifax has hardly words strong enough to express the wisdom and farsighted statesmanship of the Government.

Mr. BURPEE. If the motion before the House embarrassed the Government or the company building the road, I would not vote for it, but any person, knowing the circumstances, knowing the situation and locality of the road, must know that it cannot have that effect. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Daly) appears to be exceedingly grateful that this road should be extended down to the Maritime Provinces. I feel grateful for small favors very often, but I contend that it was the duty of the Government 18 years ago to have built a commercial road to the Maritime Provinces. The Government are only now attempting to do what they have left undone for the last 18 years.

Mr. MITCHELL. No such thing.

Mr. BURPEE. I will except the portion of the country that the hon. member for Northumberland represents, because in order to reach his constituency—and I am proud to see he has such influence with the Government—they left the rest of the Maritime Provinces out in the cold. The hon. member from Montreal stated that the road was not required by the Maritimes Provinces. He is perfectly satisfied to get the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal and let it stop there, and after that they can distribute the produce that comes over the road to the United States or anywhere else. But the hon. gentleman is very careful to urge upon the Government that the canals shall be improved, so as to facilitate trade to Montreal, and desire the abolition of the tolls on these canals in order to benefit Montreal. We have not only a fair claim to a road being built to the Maritime ports, but, if Montreal has a fair claim to the abolition of the tolls, and the canals being made free, we have an equal claim that the railway should be made free, to a certain extent at all events. However, members of this House generally have not objected to the road being built to the Maritime Provinces. With the exception of the hon. member from Montreal, they have not raised any objections to that road. Unless we get a good road, however, it will be of very little service. We want the best and shortest road, with the best curves and grades. The road which has been selected across Moosehead Lake via Sherbrooke, in order to accommodate St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, is about the best that could be selected. I do not say it is the only road, but it is one of the best. I tried to get information as to whether it was practicable to cross Moosehead Lake, but I did not get the information I should like to have had. If it should prove to be impracticable, and they should propose to take the south side of Moosehead Lake, that would not be the best road. According to the reports, it would be 13 miles longer, but I think it will make a difference of 30 or 40 miles. If you cannot go across Moosehead Lake, you would get a better road north of the lake. I hope the road described in the Bill will be carried out. I cannot see any difficulty in regard to this particular portion of the road from Harvey to Salisbury, being built simultaneously with the other portions, and I thought there would be a clause in the Bill which would guarantee that the whole road should be placed under the same contract. It is not there, however, and I shall therefore have to vote for the motion of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk).

Main motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. BURPEE.

SUPPLY—REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORY.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Before this motion is put I desire very briefly to call the attention of the Government to a matter that I consider of vital importance to the Dominion at large, and especially to the North-West Territory. It will be remembered that in the Session of the Imperial Parliament, 1871, an Act entitled: "An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada," was passed. The second section of that Imperial Statute reads as follows:—

"The Parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any Province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of any such Province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such Province, and for its representation in the said Parliament."

Now the provisions of this statute are clear. They give to the Parliament of Canada the power of establishing new Provinces in Territories forming part of the Dominion of Canada, and the power of giving such Provinces their due representation in the Parliament of Canada. Under that statute only one Province has so far been established, the Province of Manitoba. Now it will be recollected that in the Session of 1884 of this Parliament, I introduced a Bill with a view of giving representation to the Territories in the Parliament of Canada, and upon that occasion I pointed out to the Government what, in my judgment, appeared to be an absolute necessity for the representation of those Territories in this Parliament. On the introduction of that Bill I discussed the matter at some length. No answer was made by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. During the present Session of Parliament I again introduced that Bill, a Bill that was demanded, as hon. gentlemen well know, by, I think, the almost unanimous voice of the people of the North-West Territory. On the second reading of the Bill I gave the reasons why, in my humble judgment, the people of the Territories ought to be represented in the Parliament of Canada. The Minister of Public Works moved the adjournment of that debate, and it has not been reached again this Session. Now, I may say that since the introduction of that Bill I have more carefully than I formerly did, looked into the power of the Parliament of Canada to grant representation to the Territories, and I have come to the conclusion, whether rightly or wrongly, from a careful examination of the statutes dealing with this subject, the Union Act and the Act amending the Union Act, the second clause of which I have just read, that it is extremely doubtful whether this Parliament has power by Bill to grant representation to the Territories of the Dominion of Canada. Now, upon a question of such importance, a question that this Parliament will be required to deal with, action ought to be taken, and that action ought to be taken by the Government itself. Government has failed to take any action in the matter for the last two or three years; although, as the Minister of Public Works well knows, it was pressed upon the attention of the Government. The Government have taken no steps to grant the representation to the people of the North-West Territories. Now, I say that the power to grant such representation is now not vested in the Parliament of Canada, and steps ought to be taken immediately by the Government to obtain that power. I do not propose to discuss this question at any length, but I desire to say, what must be known to almost every member of the House, that it appears to me of the greatest consequence to the peace, growth and prosperity of the North-West Territories that they should have representation in the Parliament of Canada. I think no man who knows anything whatever of the affairs of the North-West Territories, who knows anything of the views of the people there of all shades of political thought, but must come to the conclusion that, sooner or later, these Territories must be represented in this Parliament, and the sooner it is done the better it will be for the people in those Territories. Sir, I hoped that the Government of this country would deal with this question during the present Session; and I hoped, in view of the persistent demands that have been made by the people of the North-West Territories for the last three or four years, and in view of the recent occurrences, that the Government would direct the attention of Parliament to this important question, and take the necessary steps to give the people of those Territories representation in this Parliament. Having that in view, I delayed drawing the attention of the House to this question until the closing hours of the Session, but I have waited in vain for the action of the Government. I now wish to point out to the Minister of Public Works that, according to my view of the law, it is doubtful if we have the power to grant such representation; I think there must be an Address to Her Majesty the Queen, praying Her to cause legislation to be passed through the Imperial Parliament vesting that power in the Parliament of Canada. It was stated, I think, by the Minister of Agriculture, during this Session, when submitting the proposition to take a census of the North-West Territories, that such census was taken with a view to representation; but unless action is taken in the matter during the present Session it is very doubtful if the people of the North-West Territories will be represented in the next Session of Parliament. Without trespassing further on the time of the House, I beg leave to move the following amendment:—

To leave out all the words after "that" and insert the following instead thereof: It is expedient, that at the earliest moment, provision should be made for the representation of the North-West Territories in the Parliament of Canada, in such manner as shall to that Parliament seem expedient.

That it is doubtful whether the Parliament of Canada has power to provide for such representation, so long as the said Territories are not formed into Provinces, or otherwise than in the hitherto accustomed method.

That unless Imperial legislation is obtained, additional delays may take place in the granting of such representation.

That it is expedient to address Her Majesty the Queen, praying that she may be pleased to move the Parliament of the United Kingdom to pass such legislation as may remove the doubts as to the power of the Parliament of Canada to provide for such representation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman reading the Act of 1871 says he believes there are doubts as to whether the Parliament of Canada could give representation in this House to the Territories. There may be doubts, it may be a matter of certainty, for all I know. The question, for the present, is not that question. This subject has not been brought forward in this form, except by the hon. gentleman, when, some months ago, he had a motion on the Notice Paper and made a speech upon it, after which I asked the House to postpone its consideration, which was agreed to. At this period of the Session the hon. gentleman comes forward with a motion that we shall ask the Imperial Parliament, through Her Majesty the Queen, to give us power under this head. The motion is premature; at all events, Parliament has not pronounced in that direction yet. But it has been decided this Session that there shall be a census of the population of the Territories taken in order that we may ascertain what their population is, where it is placed and whether it is sufficient to form a Province and have representation in this House, if representation were considered by Parliament to be proper under the circumstances. We have just passed the Census Bill, and the Government has been authorised to expend a certain sum for that purpose; but it has not yet passed the other House and has not yet become law. We have not had one minute to ourselves to see what is to be done in order to put into effect the order of Parliament to make a census of the population in the North-West Territories. We intend taking advantage of the power that Parliament is giving us, and we hope within a short time to take such census. When that is done, we shall be in a position to consider the next step. No one more than the members of the Government desires that the Territories shall be governed with all due consideration and that the people have all the powers, liberties and privileges that subjects of Her Majesty in Canada enjoy. But, on the other hand, we must look to matters as they are. The Territories are not organised into Provinces yet. If sufficient population be found there, and if the people wish to have a Province created, we would be in a position to come down to Parliament and create a Province, as was done in the case of Manitoba. When I visited the Territories last autumn, and matters connected with the Territories were discussed with the leading men of the Territories, at all events where the railways gave me access to them, and in all the towns and villages for some distance from the railway, the question was asked: Do you wish a certain part of the Territories created into a Province? The unanimous answer was: No; we have not the means of maintaining a Province now, and we do not wish a Province to be established, because while we would have the advantages of a Province, we would have also the responsibility, onus and expense of a Province. The wish was expressed that there should be some kind of representation for the Territories. The idea had not taken such a form with the settlers that they could submit it to the Government; but they thought we might devise some means of giving representation, no matter how small it might be, to the Territories. I know that wish was expressed. But I told them: How can Parliament give you representation before the Government know how many people are in the Territories? We want to know whether you are sufficiently numerous to have representation. I therefore told them that I was not in a position to make any promises, but that the first step to be taken would be to have a census of the population taken in order to ascertain the number of people. The estimates as to the population were very different. Some thought the Territories had already a population of over 150,000, others thought 100,000, others again believed that the population was not over 60,000. I have no idea of the population of the Territories; but from the power Parliament has given us to have a census taken, this question will be set at rest in a short time. Then we will be in a position to consider the matter, and to come down to Parliament with a scheme, if the population is sufficiently large to have representation, or if some portion of the Territories has a dense population. The question of representation in this House will require a good deal of consideration, because if the Territories have no provincial rights, if we are to continue to govern them as Territories, the position of representatives would not be exactly that of the present members of this House. That might be a difficulty for the moment, but it is exactly such difficulties that Parliament is called to surmount, and no doubt if the population of the Territories be found to be large enough to have representation, the Government and Parliament will find some means of giving them representation. The population may be found so dense in a certain section that it may be deemed desirable to erect that district into a Province and give it representation accordingly. Holding these views, I think the hon. gentleman is premature in submitting this motion. If the census gives the result I was speaking of, we will be in a position next Session to communicate the matter to Parliament, and see what measures we intend submitting for their consideration; and if the power is required, if we find that we have not power enough under Imperial statutes or under our constitution, then will be the time to ask those powers from the Parliament of England. That Parliament sits about the same time, and generally to a much later period than we do, and we would have plenty of time to ask the Imperial Parliament, or to ask this House, to pass an Address, seeking the necessary powers, and we would have an answer in good time to give representation in those Territories if needed, just in time for the general elections of 1887. Under these circumstances, I object to the motion of the hon. gentleman, and I hope this House will not consent to adopt it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has given us his views with reference to the formation of the Territories into Provinces, with a view to representation here. That is not the question raised by the motion. It is just precisely because my hon. friend is of opinion that Parliament will probably be disposed to give some of the Territories representation before they are formed into Provinces that he is bringing forward this motion. I entirely agree that the creation of Provinces out of Territories is a question which has to be disposed of only after mature consideration, and when you find that the circumstances in all respects as to population, as to the ultimate centres of population and as to the possibility of supporting the position of Provinces, are favorable, that is a question that we could dispose of before long, one way or the other, in some portions of the Territories. The question my hon. friend presents, is—and I agree with him—that we are at this moment, in all probability, disabled from giving any representation to the Territories unless we get this authority; and what the hon. gentleman desires is, that we should be clothed with the authority to enable us to legislate in such a manner as we may deem to be in the public interest, at the time when we approach the subject of such legislation. The hon. gentleman says it is premature, because we are going to have a census. Well, I remember that when we were discussing the Census Bill we learned that the Minister of Agriculture does not expect the census to be completed by next Session, and he has taken until, I think, the 1st of July or the 1st of August next, on the declaration that it was impossible to complete it earlier, and therefore we are not going to have the census in time to act upon it, if the census is to be a necessary preliminary to this particular step of obtaining authority. Now, this step commits us to nothing more than that it may be in our view in the interest of the country that we should give representation to the Territories, and it is expedient that we should get power, in order to enable us to give that representation. Let us get power to legislate in this way, if in this way we think it good for the country to legislate, next Session, or at a subsequent Session. The hon. gentleman says, and says truly, that Territories represented here would occupy a somewhat different position from the Provinces. We know the particular form of representation which has been fixed by the wisdom of the Republic to the south of us for those populations which are still in the rudimentary condition of Territories, that is, that they are entitled to send a representative, who is more a delegate, perhaps, than a member of Parliament, who has the right to speak, and to all the other privileges of the House of Representatives, but not the right to vote. Other methods of representation might be adopted; I am not saying that would be a satisfactory method, but it is one method which would be open to our consideration. These are questions fit to be thoroughly discussed and debated, when we come to consider how we shall give representation to the Territories, but they are not relevant to the present discussion. The question now is, have we power now to give representation to the Territories. If we have not, or even if it be doubtful if we have it, is it not well to show the Territories that we are not going to lose time in getting the power to secure that representation. For my own part, I see no inconvenience, but a great advantage, in our stepping forward, under the circumstances, and during this Session taking this step towards clothing us with the legislative power to do that which I think is essential to the contentment, peace and good government of those Territories.

Mr. ROYAL. I believe the Government and this House have shown the Territories what we intend to do towards the representation of those Territories. I believe the Census Bill which has passed the House is a sufficient indication of the spirit in which we are approaching this important question. That measure is sufficient to show the Territories that this House is prepared to give them representation if there is any necessity for it. But I believe this motion of the hon. member for Huron is premature, for the very reasons he has himself given. The hon. gentleman has never been able to show that there was any necessity for the representation of the North-West Territories in this House—he has not been able to show it by any writing or documentary evidence. I must give credit to the Mackenzie Government for the admirable territorial constitution they gave to the North-West Territories in 1874, and if the population of the Territories is large enough, or is as large as stated by hon. gentlemen opposite, it lies within their powers, it is in their own hands, to organise themselves into Provinces, and thus take advantage of those institutions, when the proper time arrives for them to do so. It is a matter of wonder to me that the hon. member for Huron, at this stage of the Session, after preparing a Bill to give representation to the Territories, should now tell us that there was no legal basis upon which to frame such a Bill. What would have been the result if his Bill had passed? The result would have been that, to a certain extent, we would have stultified ourselves, if we had no constitutional right to pass such a measure. I believe the Government has acted more wisely by ordering the census to be taken of the various parts of the Territories. After the census is taken, we will be able to see whether the present constitution will be made available and taken advantage of by the population of the Territories or not; whether, in fact, there is any necessity to give representation to the population of those Territories, outside of those portions of them which are created into Provinces. I think the hon. gentleman, before drafting Bills or bringing on discussions, which, I believe, are premature, should have commenced with the speech he has just now made, expressing his doubts as to whether we have any right to give representation to those Territories or not. As the Minister of Public Works has stated, there is little doubt about the matter; I believe there is certainty. My hon. friend, the member for Jacques Cartier, who has given study to the subject has expressed the view that we have no right, under the constitution we have, to give representation to any portions of Canada which are not Provinces. Therefore, I believe the hon. member for West Huron, instead of bringing up a premature motion, should have begun, at the commencement of the Session, by expressing his doubts about the constitutionality of his course.

Mr. MILLS. I do not agree with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that those people are not entitled to representation, because they are not sufficiently numerous to be constituted into a Province. The hon. gentleman assumes that the territorial system in the United States, in giving representation in advance of the formation of a State, is not a desirable system to introduce into this country. I entirely dissent from that view. I hold that it is not to the advantage of the country that the people of the Territories should be pressed to assume all the responsibilities of a Province while the population is very small. There are many difficulties that do not occur so long as the territorial system continues. There is the question of subsidy; there is nothing to prevent this Parliament from making appropriations for schools, and for various other local purposes in the Territory; and there is nothing to prevent this Parliament, when the people become sufficiently numerous to assume the responsibility of an ordinary Province, considering the expenditure made for local purposes on their behalf. In the United States the system of territorial representation has worked most satisfactorily. There is a uniform rule; everybody knows what it is; it is not tinkered with from time to time; and the policy of the country is not changed with every change of Administration. I think that would be a highly desirable state of things to establish here. Our territorial system of government is only adapted to the most initiatory stage of territorial settlement. When the people become sufficiently numerous in a Territory to entitle them, if they were a portion of a Province, to send a representative to Parliament, I see no reason why they should not have a representative in Parliament, without being compelled to assume all the burdens and responsibilities of an ordinary Provincial Government. I think, on the contrary, there would be great advantage in permitting them to do so. What would have been the condition of things in our Territories during the past twelve months if the people residing in that country had a representative on the floor of this House? Whether he would have had the privilege of voting or not is not now an important consideration. If the people had spokesmen here, who would have an opportunity of making Parliament acquainted with the condition of things in the Territory, with the grievances of the people, with the wrongs that were unredressed, with the administrative acts which the Government have neglected to perform, it is impossible to suppose that this Parliament would have allowed that condition of things to continue, without pressing the Administration to redress those wrongs, and avoiding all the expense, the heart-burnings and conflicts which have resulted in that country from the negligence of the Administration, and the ignorance of Parliament with regard to the actual condition of the population. Now, my hon. friend makes a proposition based upon the assumption, which I believe is well founded, that the British North America Act does not authorise this Parliament to give to the people of a Territory representation on the floor of the House of Commons. Now, we ask that the Imperial Parliament shall be moved to give us that power. That does not compel us to immediate action; it gives us the power to act, and then it leaves us to decide whether representation in this House shall be given, and at what time it shall be given. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) has said that while the territorial condition continues, those people ought not to be represented, but that when they are organised into a Province it will be time enough to give them representation; and he says the Government have taken measures to take the census in that country, with the view of deciding whether the people are sufficiently numerous to justify establishing a Province in that Territory or not. I have no doubt in my own mind that they are not sufficiently numerous. It is not desirable to imitate, in this case, the policy that we pursued in dealing with Manitoba. I believe Manitoba would have been better satisfied—her condition would have been more satisfactory, and she would have had a larger population to-day, if the initiatory stage of territorial Government had been adopted in the first instance, until she had a larger and wealthier population to assume the responsibilities of a Province. Holding that view, I support the motion of the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron). I think it is a rational proposition, and we are not taking the step a moment too soon; the Imperial Government would not legislate in the direction we ask earlier than would be necessary in order to carry into effect the results of the census which we propose to take. And we shall satisfy the population of the Territory; we shall show them that we are not indifferent to their interests, and we show to the many other people who may be disposed to go into that country that if they go there they will not cease to possess the rights of British freemen, but will have power to elect representatives to promote their interests, to speak on their behalf, and to move Parliament to remedy any grievances of which they may complain.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. GIROUARD. It is consoling to me to find that, after all, my long speech of six hours has produced some good, even where I did not expect to find any. Until that speech was delivered, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) was ignorant that this Parliament had no jurisdiction in the matter of giving representation to the North-West Territories. He was so much convinced that it had, that he introduced a Bill last Session to give representation to the North-West Territories, and, after nine months of study, during recess, he came back again, at the beginning of this Session, with the same Bill, and he was not convinced he was wrong until that long speech was made. Now, however, at a very late hour, he comes with a motion, admitting that this Parliament has not jurisdiction in the matter of giving representation to the North-West Territories, and that application must be made to the Imperial Parliament. During the North-West debates, I believe I was the only one who mentioned that we had no jurisdiction in the matter, and that there were two difficulties to be overcome in meeting the wishes of the North-West population. I believe there is only one opinion in the House, and that is, that sooner or later, and the sooner the better, the population of the North-West must be represented in this Parliament; but, at the same time, I pointed out two difficulties: First, the want of a census, the want of that knowledge of the population which cannot be determined but by a census, but which, notwithstanding the express desire of the Opposition to give representation to that population, was opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. The second difficulty was the want of jurisdiction or power on the part of this Parliament to give the representation. I suggested, at the same time, that, as our officers were proceeding with the census, this Government would take the initiatory steps to secure the amendment to our constitution from the Imperial Parliament. In 1870, when we amended our constitution, in order to create another Province out of that Territory, it did not require an Address from this Parliament. The amendment was asked by the Government, and that was held to be sufficient; and the same course may be followed between now and the next sitting of Parliament; but I am greatly disappointed to see that the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), and especially the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), should urge that we should take the proceeding suggested by the hon. Member for Huron. That hon. gentleman says: Let us go and ask the Imperial Parliament to give us power to give representation to the North-West, without showing what kind of representation, whether with a right to vote or without it, as in the United States, or without showing how many members should be returned; without determining the districts that shall be represented; in fact, without giving any details whatever. I am surprised at this, because it is the very reverse of the doctrine and policy laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1870. At that time, on the discussion of the constitution of Manitoba and the North-West, as it was then proposed, Mr. Dorion moved, in amendment to the proposition of the Government, that all the words after "that," to the end thereof, be left out and the following substituted:—

"The Hon. Mr. Dorion moved, in amendment to the said proposed amendment, seconded by Mr. Mills, that all words after 'that,' to the end thereof, be left out, and the words 'irrespective of the merits of the measure proposed by the Government of Canada, to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament, for the purpose of confirming certain Canadian legislation, depriving the Parliament of Canada of certain existing powers, and altering the British North America Act, 1867, this House would be wanting in its duty if it did not express its decided opinion that no such Imperial legislation should be asked for by the Government of Canada, except after the details of such proposed legislation shall have been submitted to both Houses of the Parliament of Canada, for their judgment, and Addresses of such Houses to the Queen, praying for such legislation, shall have been passed,' inserted instead thereof."

I hope this will convince the hon. gentleman that his motion is, at least, premature.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman will look at the reason for that motion, if he will look at the papers, he will see that the proposition of the Government was to ask for Imperial legislation without the consent of Parliament. Our proposition was, that Parliament should ask for that Imperial legislation, and that was ultimately agreed to.

Mr. GIROUARD. You asked a little more than that; you asked that no Imperial legislation should be asked for without first having the details submitted to Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. So they were.

Mr. GIROUARD. You ask for no details in this Bill.

Mr. DAWSON. I have just a word to say about this matter. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has said that this Bill was intended to give the people of all classes and all shades free institutions in the North-West, by means of territorial government. I approve of a great deal of what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has said about territorial government. I think you might have territorial government there that might work very well; but with regard to the Bill of the hon. member for West Huron, I consider it the most unfair measure brought before Parliament. I consider that, instead of giving the people free institutions, it is so worded as to have the very opposite effect. It is well known that a large portion of the people there are Indians or half Indians. This Bill is so drawn as to exclude Indians; it will give to one-third or one-half the population the power of governing the whole. I consider the half-breeds all come under the designation of Indians, and the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) would exclude half the community from participating in the privileges proposed to be conferred on the people of the North-West Territories. I believe that if this Bill were carried into operation in the North-West it would prove to be a fire brand of discord, by excluding one part of the people from its operation, and permitting the other part to govern. It would be a return to what was common in the dark ages, by allowing one half of the community to govern, and making slaves of the other half. The hon. member for Bothwell, with his beautiful way of dealing with the Indians, would never allow them to have votes. He would send every Indian back to his reserve, to serve an apprenticeship for three years, before he could be enfranchised. That was his view, as expressed in the debate on the Franchise Bill. I think, therefore, this Bill is entirely premature, and can well lie over until another Session.

(In the Committee.)

Department of the Interior—Two mining geologists, as 2nd class clerks in the Geological Survey Branch..... $2,400

Mr. BOWELL. We propose to reduce that by $200. They are to be appointed at the minimum of the class, $1,100 each, which will make $2,200.

Mr. HOLTON. What are the duties to be performed by these officers?

Mr. McLELAN. They are to attend to the exploration of mines. I think one is now engaged in the east and one in the Lake Superior district. Their attention is to be devoted especially to mining.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the gentlemen to be appointed?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Coste and Mr. Ingall.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the Acting Minister state whether these gentlemen have received any special technical instruction fitting them for this position?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Coste has attended the mining schools in Europe.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is what I wanted to know, because both in Germany and elsewhere there are mining schools of a high character, and if we are going to recognise the importance of having these parties, it is proper that the men appointed should have received a scientific education. Probably, on concurrence, the Minister can inform us as to the special qualifications of the second gentleman appointed.

Mr. HOLTON. I should like to ask the Minister why a special vote is necessary for this service, when it was shown by the special committee last Session, on the evidence of Dr. Selwyn, that this service could be undertaken without additional cost.

Mr. McLELAN. These gentlemen have been for some time, I believe, on the staff, and have been paid from contingencies. I explained the other night that it was proposed to reduce the vote this year by $10,000, and to vote that $10,000 separately, in order to finish up last year's work; but from the length of the Session, it was allowed to stand at $60,000. This year it will be decreased to $50,000.

Mr. HOLTON. But the vote was not decreased.

Mr. McLELAN. It would have been decreased if Parliament had been prorogued at the usual time, and it would have been only $50,000 this year, instead of $60,000, and $10,000 would have been taken in the Supplementary Estimates to pay up the balance of last year.

Mr. DAWSON. I was not here the other night when there was a little discussion on the subject of the Geological Survey, and I desire to make a few remarks on that subject. There can be no one more ready than I am to give credit to the Geological Survey for all it has accomplished. Its explorations have extended far and wide, and many of the reports of its officers are very valuable. Without wishing to make invidious distinctions, I may say that the explorations of Dr. Bell, in the regions of Hudson's Bay, and the reports he has made thereon, are of national importance. My namesake, Dr. Dawson, has distinguished himself by his researches in the central parts of the continent and in British Columbia, and his very able reports are of value in a practical as well as a scientific view. He has been criticised somewhat adversely for the attention he has bestowed on the customs, language and history of the Indian tribes among whom he travelled, but I think he has done well to notice and record the characteristics of a race fast passing away, or, at all events, changing its habits, and soon to be absorbed or destroyed by the advance of civilisation. His researches in this regard will, I have no doubt, be of value to such scientists as seek to trace the origin and early history of the races who occupied this continent before the advent of the white man; and as the matter came in his way, and could not have interfered with the main object of his surveys, I think he has acted wisely and well in giving us all the information he could obtain about a subject which is, in itself, of very great interest. Professor Macoun, too, has done much, and his reports are replete with valuable information as to the climatic conditions and natural productions of the wide regions he has traversed. He has shown us that extensive sections of the country, formerly believed to be barren and inhospitable, are in every way adapted to the growth of such plants as are needed for human subsistence, and has convinced us that our great inheritance in the north and west is much more valuable than it was at first believed to be, and that the area, either cultivable or adapted to the growth of valuable forests, is of continental dimensions. But, giving the officers of the Survey full credit for what they have done and the earnestness and zeal displayed by many of them, still, I must point to a direction in which some of them allow their zeal to outrun their discretion, and that is in regard to a habit they seem to have acquired of decrying mineral discoveries made otherwise than through the Survey. In this direction, the worthy director is not himself altogether blameless. It is said of a certain animal that he becomes furious at the sight of a red rag, levels his horns and rushes bellowing to toss it in the air or trample it in the dust. Something like this is the effect that a mineral discovery seems to produce on some of the members of our Geological Survey. Whether such discovery be in the copper-yielding formations of the Quebec group, in the silver-lined rocks of Lake Superior, or among the gold-containing schists of the Lake of the Woods, it receives but scant encouragement at the hands of the Survey. On the contrary, it is pretty sure to be decried. As an instance of this, I need but mention to the House a case which occurred not very long ago, at the Lake of the Woods. Dr. Bell had reported favorably on the prospects of gold mining in that section, and as a consequence there occurred a considerable investment of capital, in part by people from the United States and partly by the settlers of Rat Portage. Their method of mining was, no doubt, in some cases primitive in its character, because their circumstances admitted of nothing better. In 1883 their operations attracted the attention of the Geological Survey, and a Mr. Coste was sent to examine and report. If the intention of the Survey had been to ruin and kill out the enterprise, no fitter person than Mr. Coste could have been selected for the duty. He visited all, or nearly all, the openings made, but could see nothing to approve of. He found the miners struggling with the difficulties incidental to a new country, and spoke of their efforts in the most contemptuous strain. He could not but admit the existence of gold, but it was in lodes so twisted, so narrow or contorted, that its working would not pay. With the leave of the House, I shall read a few extracts from his report, letter K, page 14, of the last volume issued by the Survey. Speaking of the Pine Portage mine, which he seems to have considered one of the best at the Lake of the Woods, he goes on to say:

"The great blunder had been made of erecting the stamp mill on the side of a small creek, full of water in the spring, but absolutely dry in summer. Clearly, the proper place for the mill was the shore of the Lake of the Woods; a self-inclined plane would have given an easy connection between the mine and the head of Pine Portage Bay. Besides, the fitting up of the crushing-house was entirely premature; the mine should have been first developed, and the crushing-mill erected only when the preliminary work was done and the mine in a regular working condition. But how could a lumber merchant and a gentleman farmer undertake to develop a mine without the assistance of a single competent person? Yet this is what has been attempted at Pine Portage mine, and the parties should not be surprised at their own failure. The shaft sunk in the vein was only 43 feet in depth, at the time of my first visit; and yet a crushing-house, with five stamps and two fine Frue vanners for concentration, had been erected two months before, on the bank of a creek without water, as though the proprietors had been seized by a mania for spending money on seeing a little gold in the quartz. At the time of my second visit, four weeks later, the shaft had reached a depth of 60 feet; four miners were carrying on the sinking, under a contract. They worked as they liked, and blindly, not being controlled by any competent person. Such was the method of working adopted on this vein, which is, nevertheless, the most promising of all those I saw on the Lake of the Woods."

I might quote a good deal of a character even more vicious than the paragraph I have read; but I shall not, on the present occasion, detain the House. In reference to the extract I have just read, it will be observed that he says: "They committed the great blunder of sinking a shaft in the wrong place;" and not content with this, he must indulge in a sneer at "a lumberman and a gentleman farmer attempting to develop a mine." Now, it appears that subsequent to his visit the lumberman and gentleman farmer were wonderfully successful in developing the mine; that, in 1884, they got good returns from it; and that the creek, which he said was dry in summer, had always abundance of water. Professor Bell, writing on the same matter in the Canadian Mining Review, remarks as follows:—

"Assays have been made by Mr. Hoffman, the painstaking chemist of the Geological Survey, of a considerable number of samples of ore from different localities on the lake, which show that the richest veins are those around Bigstone Bay, on the north-east side of its northern portion. The veins at the Pine Portage, Sultana, Winnipeg Consolidated and Keewatin mines proved to contain rich ore. Three of the assays of that of the Pine Portage mine yielded, respectively, 12.77 ounces gold, 20.41 silver, 9.68 gold, 8.92 silver and 9.91 gold, 15.37 silver, to the ton of 2,000 pounds. This mine was worked steadily by a small force of men during the whole summer of 1884, and the ore produced, together with what had been previously mined, was sufficient to give pretty steady employment to the five-stamp mill at the mine, and no scarcity of water for its supply was experienced. In the autumn, a second battery of five stamps was placed on the same cam-shaft as the first, the engine being originally intended to drive ten stamps. As a good deal of secrecy was observed last summer about all the discoveries and the mining operations at the Lake of the Woods, it was impossible to ascertain the amount of gold produced at the Pine Portage mine, but it is believed to have been between 150 and 200 ounces, or some $3,500 worth. In addition to the free gold thus obtained, the sulphides were concentrated by two Frue vanners, and will be either exported or treated in time on the ground."

"The Keewatin mine was the only other which was worked during 1884. Operations were kept up all summer, with a few men, and the ore was taken in barges to the crushing-mill at the Argyle mine, on Clearwater Bay. The result was said to be satisfactory, but from the general observance of secrecy no particulars could be obtained."

"Although the quantity of gold which has actually been produced at the Lake of the Woods is small, still the progress which has been made towards its establishment as a mining district has been considerable and important. We have witnessed all the usual stages. First, the original discovery of the precious metal; next a good deal of promiscuous hunting and exploring, accompanied by many reported assays of very rich ore; then the commencement of mining and milling, partly judicious and partly injudicious. Finally, the district is surveyed geologically, and reliable assays and mill returns are obtained, and actual facts enough become known to justify the commencement of systematic mining and milling. The geological position and relations of the gold-bearing veins being pretty well established, the search for new mines may now be confined to narrow limits, that is, to the dark green diorites near the contact of the granite. The principal unexplored region would thus lie along this line of junction, which, as shown on Dr. Bell's map of 1881, trends south-eastward, from the head of Big Stone Bay towards the arm to which Dr. Bell has given the name of Long Bay, and new discoveries may, therefore, be looked for behind Yellow Girl point, and in that vicinity."

From this it will be seen that Professor Bell differs in opinion from Mr. Coste, and he (Professor Bell) has, in other reports, spoken very favorably of the Lake of the Woods as a mining region. But it appears that jealousies exist in the Geological Department, and it has been said that the director is somewhat given to disparaging what Dr. Bell approves. If he was led by any feeling of this kind to send Mr. Coste to the Lake of the Woods, it shows how the public interests may be made to suffer and, indeed, how important enterprises may be ruined, in a strife between contending scientists, placed in a position where their actions must have a widespread influence for good or evil. I may say, further, in regard to Mr. Coste, that the sneering manner in which he speaks of the miners and the scorn he bestows on their operations are quite out of place. He should bear in mind that his own report is not altogether a work of such classical elegance as to be beyond criticism, and it might be wise, on his part, to remember that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. Were I disposed to be critical, I might say, and with justice, that his report, notwithstanding the director's (probable) finishing touch, was but an ill-considered muddle from first to last; that, of itself, it amounted to little more than a very silly and very unjust attack on a new and important industry; that it could have had no influence in crushing out that industry but for his connection with the Geological Survey, and that the frightful rush of scientific terms in which he has indulged is nothing more than a specimen of the dust usually raised by the charlatan in a vain endeavor to conceal his own incompetency and lack of knowledge. The director himself is not entirely blameless; for he, too, has, in some cases, decried the operations of miners, although in a way not quite so unbecoming as that which his subordinate has adopted; and I might point to a very promising enterprise in copper mining at Michipicoten Island and Mamainse, the stoppage of which, I am told, was in some measure due to his severe criticism of the manner in which they carried on their operations. It is, no doubt, within the sphere of the Geological Department to deal with the mineral character of the country, and I should say that it was within the range of its duties to discover and indicate the localities where mining could be advantageously carried on; but without a staff of practical miners, it is certainly a piece of impertinent assumption on the part of its officers to criticise and condemn systems of carrying on operations of a character of which they could have had no experience, and in regard to which they can only be, at best, the merest amateurs. Let them find, if they can, new mines and new mining regions; but as to actual working, they should leave that to those who make it their profession and understand it. The operations to which I have so far referred were confined to the district which I have the honor to represent, but the influence of the Survey extends far and wide. I could, I think, show where a system so costly might be improved upon; and I certainly believe that some new arrangement, by which we should, at least, have a harmonious staff, is necessary. The director, no doubt, means well; but whether, from having an unruly family of officials, or from some defect in his own temper, matters do not seem to work well. We saw last

Mr. DAWSON.

Session, when the committee was making its investigations, that we have scientists in the country of whom any nation might be proud. Dr. Hunt, a gentleman long attached to the Survey, enjoys a world-wide reputation as a geologist and mineralogist, and then we have Professor Chapman, of the Toronto University, a gentleman scarcely less distinguished than Dr. Hunt. There is really no lack of material out of which to form an admirable geological staff, seeing that we have already on it such efficient men as Dr. Dawson, Dr. Bell and Professor Macoun. The worst I have to say of the Survey is that it seems to have a hereditary and constitutional tendency to throw cold water on every mining enterprise. Recently, many important discoveries have been made a little inland from Lake Superior, and not very far from the United States boundary line. The mineral lodes on our side have their counterpart in Minnesota, and the people of that State have already expended six millions of dollars in building railroads and opening up their new mineral region. They may, perhaps, be going ahead a little too fast, for they have a geologist who says to them: Go ahead; open up and develop the mines; they contain boundless wealth; but mind you, there will be many blanks as well as prizes to those who invest their capital, but those who lose will still have the satisfaction to know that they have contributed to develop and people a new region, that they have been the means of placing happy settlers with their waving grain fields where the gloomy forest now overshadows the land; go ahead, by all means. Now, as a contrast to this, I may tell the House that our great geologist gives never a word of encouragement, and it has occurred to me that we might enter into negotiations with the State of Minnesota for an exchange of geologists. I should, of course, be exceedingly grieved to part with our distinguished director, but private feelings must yield to public expediency, and it is just possible that, after a time, we might get him back again. The people of Minnesota would soon find a salutary check imposed on their ardour, lots of cold water thrown on their mining enterprises and general stagnation prevailing, and when all this had occurred, we might, perhaps, without any very great opposition on the part of the Minnesotians, be allowed to take our unrivalled scientist to our hearts once more.

Department of Indian Affairs—Increases of salaries, arrears of salaries, etc..... $752 05

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason of these increases? Primo facie they seem to be objectionable, and a departure from the ordinary rules of promotion in the Civil Service.

Mr. BOWELL. It often occurs, in making appointments under the Civil Service Act, that it is necessary to pay more than the minimum salary of $400; for two reasons. If the candidates pass optional subjects they are entitled, under law, to $50 for each additional subject. Then, if they have special qualifications of a technical character, you can appoint them at any rate you please, between $400 and a maximum sum of $1,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have these parties only $400?

Mr. BOWELL. Some of them. Mr. Bray is assistant surveyor, and his duties are of a technical character. He is an excellent officer, and his present salary is only $800. It is proposed to give him an additional $150 on account of the technical knowledge which he possesses, and which particularly appertains to the work he is performing. Mr. Orr, a third-class clerk, is a barrister, receiving only $450, which is considered quite inadequate to the services performed by him in the land branch, and consequently it is recommended that he be paid an additional $150. Mr. Kemp is a third-class clerk, at $450 per annum, a very careful, industrious man, and an increase of $150 is recommended to him, on account of the responsible work he is performing in the land branch. Miss Yielding is a third-class clerk, whose duties are of an onerous character, and are constantly increasing. She is in the Indian Department, and an increase of $50 is recommended to be paid to her.

To provide for payment to certain clerks in Departments of Secretary of State, Finance, Marine, Post Office and Indian Department, of $50 for each subject passed by them..... $1,300

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are these subjects? Take, for instance, Mr. Labelle, of the Secretary of State's Department, who has passed four subjects.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think there are, altogether, four or five optional subjects. For example, there is precis writing, shorthand, translation into the candidate's own language, type-writing, and I think there is another, but I forget it at the moment.

Administration of Justice..... $20,150

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see one item here for miscellaneous justice, including North-West Territories, $20,000. I suppose that is connected with trials of prisoners in the North-West?

Mr. BOWELL. I enquired of the Minister of Justice, just before dinner, what this vote was for, and he said it was to defray the expenses in connection with the trials that are the result out of the late difficulties. He thought it would require fully this amount, from the fact that very large expenditures would have to be incurred in connection with witnesses, and other matters incident to the trials.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any details on which this large sum of $20,000 is based?

Mr. BOWELL. I have no details, nor do I think the Minister of Justice could give the details at present. I made the enquiry of him not two hours ago, and that is the answer he gave me.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman say what the distance is from the general locality at which these prisoners live and the place at which they are to be tried?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I cannot, nor can I tell the hon. gentleman the distance that many of the witnesses will have to be brought.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not now criticising the place of trial, for I have not sufficient information to do so; but it seems to me that it is a very considerable distance from the locality of the outbreak, the residence of the parties, and probably the residence of most of the witnesses. The general principle of our criminal law has been, and is in England, for very good and obvious reasons, that the trial should take place as nearly as possible in the locality where the offence occurs. I do not say that the place for this trial is not the proper place; I dare say it may be; but so very wide a departure from the ordinary rule will, of course, involve a great deal of extra expense to both the Crown and the prisoners, in the way of summoning witnesses, and therefore I should have supposed there would be some consideration extended by the Department of Justice to that circumstance, and that they would have furnished the hon. gentleman who is responsible for carrying the estimate through, with some more details than they seem to have supplied him with.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that the distance from Batoche to Regina is between 280 and 290 miles, and I am also informed that there are no gaols or places in which the prisoners could have been properly protected in the locality of the troubles, not even at Prince Albert. They were brought to Regina, which was considered the safest and best place, and where the least excitement prevailed, and it has been thought that a better and fairer trial could be held there than in the locality of the troubles.

Removal of prisoners from Dorchester penitentiary to Kingston penitentiary..... $750

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What class of prisoners are these?

Mr. BOWELL. It is proposed, I believe, to remove all the female prisoners from Dorchester to Kingston penitentiary.

To meet expenses in connection with sheep scab... $8,000

Mr. SCRIVER. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if this amount is to be used in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. POPE. There is no sheep scab anywhere else, that I know of. I do not know how much we shall use.

Mr. SCRIVER. The information I have received is that the disease has been practically extirpated in those counties where it existed. Has the Minister received information of a contrary character recently?

Mr. POPE. I have information that there is still some work to be done in that line, but that the large bulk of the sheep that had the disease have been destroyed.

Mr. BLAKE. This is for a future work. If the great bulk of the work has been done, and the hon. gentleman wants $8,000 for the small remainder, will he tell us what he has spent to do the great bulk of the work?

Mr. POPE. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. BLAKE. Then he thinks it is only a little more than half done.

Mr. POPE. I hope it is.

For one company of mounted infantry, 75 men, at Winnipeg..... $80,000

Mr. CARON. There is a mistake in the number of men; it ought to be 100 instead of 75.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even so, I presume that the hon. gentleman has carefully ascertained the cost of each mounted man. Apparently, this vote is much larger in proportion than the vote asked for in the case of the Mounted Police. For 500 men only $250,000 was asked; whereas, for 100 men, the hon. gentleman asks $80,000, and there are items for salary, equipment and clothing, besides. I do not say the amount is too large. I am aware that the maintenance of a mounted man in the North-West is an expensive item; but it appears to me, if that be a fair proportion for 100 men, the estimate of $250,000 for 500 men will be apt to fall decidedly short.

Mr. CARON. The estimate was based upon the best information we could get. The hon. gentleman will remember that out of the whole 100 men we intend having 50 mounted men. The saddlery and equipment for this mounted company extends over 100 men. Next year the estimate will be smaller than this year; but as far as we have been able to ascertain, I think the $80,000 will cover the expense we will be called upon to incur for the purpose of organising and keeping up that company.

Mr. BLAKE. Give us some of the details.

Mr. CARON. One lieutenant colonel, at $5.25 a day; two captains, one adjutant, six lieutenants; two captains, at $3 a day would be $2,190 per annum; one adjutant, at $3, $1,095; four lieutenants, at $2, $4,500; one surgeon, $1,095; one veterinary surgeon, at $2.50 a day, $912.50; two sergeant instructors, $730; six sergeants, $72; eight corporals, $2,044; 100 privates, $17,345; rations, $27,400; forage for horses, $27,400; fuel and light, $140; clothing, $5,000; contingencies, $9,000. The hon. gentleman will remember that this, besides being one of the permanent corps, is also a school of instruction, and that we have to provide for the men and officers who come up to follow the course. Hon. gentlemen will understand that a mounted corps is very much more expensive than any branch that could be organised, and I thought that, for the purpose of the school, it was sufficient to mount half the corps, so that one half could go through mounted drill one day and the other half next. If the Government required it at any time, a certain number of horses could be purchased to equip the whole force. By providing horses for only one half the company, we will reduce the expenditure by a very large amount.

For barracks at London.....$25,000.

Mr. CARON. I have not provided for any pay for the London school this year, because I consider that until the barracks were prepared to receive the school it was not necessary to provide for the equipment and pay of officers and men. The total estimated cost amounts to about $50,000 or $55,000; but I consider it would be sufficient to build a small portion of the barracks at present. When completed, the whole of the barracks will cost from $55,000 to $60,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Where is it to be?

Mr. CARON. There is a proposition now before the Department, from the municipal council of London, proposing an exchange of property. The Government have a property in London which was handed to them by the Imperial Government, and the council propose to exchange for it another property, which is far superior to it for the purpose of this vote, namely, the property now occupied as an exhibition ground. There we have more room for the barracks, and also have space enough for rifle ranges. However, that point is not yet settled.

Mr. VAIL. I believe the Government property occupies a central situation, and is very valuable. There is a very good building erected on it, a good drill room and armory; and I cannot see any property in London which could be given in exchange for it, without our making a loss. It is certainly a valuable property, and I hope the Minister of Militia will be very careful to see that he gets full value for that property.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will understand that the property we now hold is 7 acres, and we are going to get 17 acres, besides which we get the rifle ranges, which are indispensable to a school of infantry, such as we wish to organise in London. The exchange is not completed, and everything in regard to it will be brought before the House. I am satisfied that, if the exchange does take place, it will be to the advantage of the Department; otherwise, we have no interest in exchanging the property we now hold for one which would not be as advantageous for us.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the proposition of the corporation of London for this exchange with the view of using the public property for a park, or for public purposes, or is it to have the property cut up into building lots?

Mr. CARON. No. The drill shed is to remain, and to be used for the purpose of drilling the local corps, and I understand that the property is to be utilised for a public park.

Mr. BLAKE. I have heard a rumor that the city intends to make a good speculation out of it, and to sell a part of it in city lots. If that is the case, I think it would be as well for the Government to sell the lots as for the city to do so. Of course, it is quite different if the property is to be used for public purposes, and is to be so retained in the deed. The hon. gentleman says it will be to the advantage of the

Mr. CARON.

Department. I am sorry he is going to drive so hard a bargain with the city of London, and I must appeal to his hon. colleague (Mr. Carling), to see that the city is not imposed upon by the Minister of Militia.

Mr. CARLING. I am quite sure, from what I know of the city, that the arrangement is a fair one on both sides.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the land to be disposed of in any way, or is it to be reserved for public purposes?

Mr. CARLING. I understand that this is a fair exchange, and that the city will do what is fair in the matter. I know pretty well the value of the property owned by the Government. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail) appears to have an impression that this property is the ordnance lands which were there when he was Minister of Militia, but the chief part of those lands has been set apart for public schools. I am sure that the Government is getting full value in the exchange.

Mr. VAIL. What we gave for the public schools was only a small portion of the land on one corner. It must be a loss to the Militia Department to remove, on account of the value of the buildings there.

Mr. CARON. The leader of the Opposition, with his usual courtesy, has expressed his hope that my colleague will see that there is no imposition upon the city of London in this matter. I know perfectly well that the hope he has expressed will carry its weight, and that my hon. friend and colleague will see that I do not take advantage of the municipal council of London. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) knows that we keep the drill shed upon the property now belonging to the Department of Militia for the purposes of the militia force, outside of the new organisation which we are getting up, and that it is very important that we should have a drill shed for the local force. The question of exchange has been referred to and reported upon by the military advisers of the Department; and, taking into consideration the new organisation, I think the exchange, if it does take place, will be found satisfactory. We get a much larger ground than we now possess, which was too small for the purposes of our school; and it was a question whether we should exchange, or should buy land somewhere else. When the papers are brought down, I think hon. members will see that there is no attempt to impose upon the corporation of London, while, at the same time, it will serve the purposes of the Department of Militia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the Minister proposes to appoint some ten officers to this school. Can he state, now, whether it is the intention of the Government to select these officers from among officers who have been actively engaged at the front? It appears to me that that is a sort of recognition that should be given to men who have done such good service to the country in the recent emergency.

Mr. CARON. The commandant of the school has been already appointed by Order in Council. Col. Taylor has been appointed. He has great experience, and he is one of the very best officers we have on our staff. Outside of this appointment, my intention is to appoint every officer either from those who have been in the force now at the front or from the cadets.

Barrack huts, British Columbia ..... $10,000

Mr. CARON. We intend organising, as we have provided for the last two Sessions, C Battery in British Columbia. It is expected, from the nature of the climate in that country, that the huts which will be required for the purpose of our school of gunnery, C Battery, will be covered by the $10,000 which are now placed in the Estimates.

In aid of the Short Line Railway in Nova Scotia, for settling the unpaid claims of sub-contractors and others for labor and materials constructing said railway, between Oxford and New Glasgow, and for acquiring their rights in the railway and in the said claims, the expenditure to be under Order in Council, and to be a first charge on the subsidy for such railway, under chap. 14 of the Dominion Act of 1882..... $125,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know whether this is sufficient to make everything pleasant for the member from Pictou—which, I take it to be, the primary and practical object of this vote.

Mr. POPE. I should think that this ought to do a good deal in this direction. A considerable amount of work has been done upon this road, and the people have been suffering very much for a long time because they could not get their pay. The object of this vote is to pay them, and to charge it against the subsidies. The work has been done to a larger extent than this sum would represent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What sort of work?

Mr. POPE. Grading, masonry, and that kind of thing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it not almost all work which, from exposure to the weather, has pretty well crumbled away, and will be required to be done over again?

Mr. POPE. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was informed by residents of that county that the work was of such a character that from exposure to the elements it had become of very small practical value.

Mr. McDUGALD (Pictou). The hon. member for Pictou is not quite so much interested in this matter as the hon. gentleman opposite has been led to believe, and a very small portion of the work has been done in the county of Pictou. In 1882 a subsidy of $3,200 a mile was granted to this railway, from Oxford to New Glasgow, and a contract was made, in the summer of that year, for the construction of the work, which was to be finished the 1st July, 1884. The subsidy was to be paid for each 10-mile section; that part of the work which was done in 1883 was regularly paid for. I am informed that the work done by the contractors is of a very substantial nature. The bridges are built of stone, and the earth work is so substantial that very little deterioration has taken place. However, the work that was done after the year 1883 was prosecuted vigorously for about two months, but no payment has ever been made for that, up to this time. The value of the work done is more than double the amount of this appropriation, and I am satisfied, from the enquiries I have made, that it will approximate to $300,000. Of course, the action of the company is entirely indefensible, and I think it is only right and just that this appropriation should pass at the present time. No loss can accrue from the payment of the money, as the road cannot be built without a subsidy, and this amount can be deducted from any sums that may be paid to parties undertaking the work.

Mr. VAIL. Have any recent arrangements been made to complete the road?

Mr. POPE. Not as yet.

Mr. BLAKE. It was stated in the papers, some time ago, that fresh proposals had been made by the company, in which Dr. Norman Green and Mr. Wiman are interested, which proposals had been made to the Government, for an arrangement by which a financial institution in France, I think, was to advance money to cash the Government bonds. Is any negotiation of that kind proceeding now?

Mr. POPE. Some French capitalist—I do not like to mention the name—has made a proposal. I think he made a proposal in writing to me, that he could raise the money, and I think he is trying to raise it now. The last I heard from him, he thought he would be ready by the 1st of August.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the amount of subsidy granted to the company?

Mr. POPE. $3,200 a mile, for 90 miles.

Mr. BLAKE. It is now proposed to pay on account of that $125,000?

Mr. POPE. I forgot to say that after next year there is a further subsidy, which will make the whole about $14,000 a year, and we divide it into two parts.

Mr. BLAKE. You mean as to the first half—not on the whole lot?

Mr. POPE. On the whole lot. It would be divided between this part of the line and the other part of the line.

Mr. BLAKE. It is proposed, then, to divide that subsidy into two sections, one for each part?

Mr. POPE. It was given for the whole portion. It is not proposed to divide it at all, but a portion of that would be applied. The proportion would be as 14 is to 60.

Mr. BLAKE. We know it is not the mileage that is important in this thing. Some miles cost more than others, and some miles are worth less than other miles after they are built. I see by the Mail newspaper of yesterday that:

“Advices were received to-day from Paris of the successful negotiations with the Banque Descompte, and another large financial institution, whereby all the capital necessary for the completion of the Short Line Railway in Nova Scotia has been secured. The line is said to be already partially constructed, from Oxford Station, on the Intercolonial Railway, to New Glasgow, where it joins the Eastern Extension, already completed to Canso, thence across Cape Breton to Louisburg. New construction is necessary, for the completion of which, and other uncompleted portions, fresh capital is immediately available. Negotiations have been carried forward by Comte D'Hauterive and Mons. Camper, on behalf of Marvin Green, Erastus Wiman and others.”

Has the hon. gentleman received any communication as to the issue of these negotiations?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. VAIL. While I am glad to see this vote in the Estimates, I am sorry that the Government are not in a position to state that they have made arrangements for the completion of that road. I think these people to whom money is owing have been hardly dealt with. It is another evidence that before we grant subsidies to railway companies we should be satisfied of their ability to complete the work; that railways shall not be commenced and allowed to go to destruction, and that the Government shall be called on afterwards to complete the work. Two years ago I intimated to the then Minister of Railways that I had doubts as to the ability of this company to carry out the contracts proposed to be made for the subsidies then asked for, and the Minister of Railways then stated that he had made every enquiry, and was satisfied of the ability of this company to complete the work. He spoke of Mr. Green as being a man of immense wealth, and he was quite satisfied that any contract in which that gentleman was interested would be completed without any doubt. The result of the contract was that the work remained in an unfinished state for nearly two years, and the poor men who worked on the road and provided supplies for building it were not paid; and at last the Government have come to their relief, without, however, there being any fair prospect of the road ever being completed, or completed within a reasonable time. I am sorry to hear that the arrangement is not more complete, as I had hoped, from statements I saw in the newspapers, that the Government would have been able to inform the House that they had made arrangements necessary to ensure the completion of the work.

Mr. WELDON. Does this include amounts due to engineers on the road, who, I think, have as strong a claim as sub-contractors?

Mr. POPE. I do not know.

Mr. BLAKE. I think there was some legislation passed by the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia, authorising this company to dispose of its interest in the work. Is it proposed to take any cession of the claim of the company?

Mr. POPE. I am not aware that it is intended to make any arrangement with that view. Our object was to come to the relief of the men who had done the work and never been paid. I should have thought that a man in the position of Dr. Green would have been able to raise the money. I have always held that payment to the men who have done the work should be made before anything else.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree that the people employed on the work should be paid, and that they have a sort of equitable claim on the Dominion Government, in view of the representations made on the floor of Parliament, in regard to the solvency of the company and their ability to go on with the work. I view of the statements made by the hon. gentleman's predecessor, and the certificate of character which the Minister of Railways gave those gentlemen in the face of the world, I am not surprised that the people of his own Province should take the company on the faith of the hon. gentleman's certificate, and that his successor should feel himself bound to honor the certificate given by a colleague then occupying the hon. gentleman's present position. The country has got to make good the ex-Minister's statement. The hon. gentleman feels bound to endeavor to make the losses good. There is, however, another source from which they might be made good. The company made a contract with a mysterious corporation, known as the North American Construction Company, which was not content with offering to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, but also carried on operations in the eastern part of the Dominion and made a contract for constructing the Short Line. It is primarily responsible for the failure—I think there was a Col. Snow connected with the enterprise, and the contracting company, the centre of whose operations is at Watertown, N. J., is authorised to carry on operations all over the United States and Canada. The Company did a good deal towards building the Canadian Pacific Railway, and succeeded in obtaining from that corporation the sum of $600,000 in cash, which sum, according to a statement laid on the Table yesterday by the hon. gentleman, has been reduced by something under $150,000, leaving about $450,000. Has the hon. gentleman found anything out about that mysterious corporation, and has he made any enquiries as to its solvency and capacity to carry out its obligations and to go on with the work?

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will admit that at the time the Minister of Railways spoke of the company, its promoters were men of sufficient standing to induce the Minister to believe that the contract would be carried out in good faith. Circumstances beyond the control of any one changed the position of affairs. I believe some of the leading men in the company invested large sums from their private fortunes in the undertaking. I think Dr. Marvin Green invested $100,000 or $150,000 of his own money; I know it was over $100,000 in cash. He had every reason to believe that he and those with him would be able to float the undertaking in the New York money market, and raise sufficient funds to carry it through. As to the local legislation which has taken place, the company assigned to trustees, for the benefit of the sub-contractors, all their rights in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. VAIL.

Mr. VAIL. When will the road fall into the hands of the Government, in the event of its not being completed?

Mr. McLELAN. I think they have two years yet.

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). With respect to what has been said about the names of these two companies, I believe that although they are similar, they are entirely different parties. The company in the other case was the North American Contracting Company; in this case it is the North American Construction Company. I do not know who the shareholders are, but I believe Mr. Sidney Green is the president, and the shareholders are the same parties as the Short Line Company—four or five capitalists in New York. The contract of the company was to be completed on the 31st of December, 1883, but the charter does not expire for three years.

Mr. WELDON. Is this intended only to pay the laborers or are others included?

Mr. POPE. The object is to pay the laborers, the actual navvies who did the work.

Mr. BLAKE. On the face of the vote, it is to settle the unpaid claims of sub-contractors and others for labor and material, etc.; so it is far more than paying the laborers, for you pay the sub-contractors the sums which they may have paid for labor and materials.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The word "material" has been struck out, and "board" is inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think that such a change should be made, without a motion in the committee.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. It was struck out at the Minister's request.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The hon. member for Digby thinks it strange that this company is allowed to contract with the Government, and that it did not complete the contract. One would think the hon. gentleman had never heard of companies failing in their contracts with the Government. The hon. gentleman knows that when he was responsible for the legislation of the Nova Scotia Legislature, a company in Nova Scotia came to the western counties and got $8,000 per mile, besides the ground, for 80 miles. They allowed the road-bed, the embankments, and so on, to go to destruction; they never completed the road, and they left it in the most deplorable state that ever a railway was left in in this country. Everybody knows that when the company now under consideration failed to pay the men, when railway stocks in the United States had depreciated, so that it was almost impossible to get a dollar, this gentleman applied his own private fortune to the work, which had also been reduced by dealing in railway stocks; else the road would never have gone on. So this must be feigned indignation on the part of the hon. member for Digby, or else his recollection has entirely deserted him.

Mr. VAIL. I think my memory is a little better than the hon. gentleman's is. In the first place, I did not pass the legislation, nor enter into the contract to give more than $6,000 per mile to that company; in the next place, I left the Local Government and came here, before the company had been three months engaged at the work. I knew nothing of it afterwards, and had nothing to do with the subsequent arrangements, and therefore I was not responsible for them. If I had remained in the Government they would not have received a dollar beyond what they were entitled to receive under the law, and the road would have been completed.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It is merely a case of the mantle of Elijah falling on Elisha.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What we are concerned about is the payment of this large sum of money to certain persons in Nova Scotia. The precedent looks to be an excessively bad one, and the whole thing looks like an arrangement to make things pleasant for some supporters of the Government

Mr. WOODWORTH. Why should they not be made pleasant?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not at the expense of this large sum of money. I may say that the matter is in strict harmony with all the other proceedings connected with railways which have been conducted in this way for the last three or four years.

Mr. WOODWORTH. You have been here six months, and still you are not pleasant.

Mr. BLAKE. We would like to know what the language of the vote is to be.

Mr. POPE. I move that the word "materials" be struck out and "board" inserted, and the words, "in the construction," inserted instead of "constructing."

Mr. PAINT. It is a question whether the word "materials" should be struck out, because some of these materials were obtained from many of the men along the line.

Mr. VAIL. I agree with the hon. member for Richmond; I think the materials should be paid for as well as other supplies.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us why "materials" was first inserted, and "board" left out, and why "board" is now put in and "materials" struck out.

Mr. POPE. It was an oversight, and it stands now as I intended it to be. I intended to act in this case as we do in all such contracts, the object being to relieve the men who did the work.

Mr. McCALLUM. I do not see why a difference should be made in that respect; certainly, that labor ought to be paid for. In building a railway you use stones, timber and ties; labor is required to prepare these things, and that labor ought to be paid for, just as well as the labor that is employed in other ways.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear. The chief value is the labor.

Mr. WELDON. I understand that the vote as it stands is not only to pay the men who do the labor on the railway, but the sub-contractors. They take their contracts merely as a speculation. I do not see why the class I have alluded to should be left out. Some of my hon. friends from the Lower Provinces have mentioned to me some six or seven young men who commenced their profession as engineers on this road, and who could much less afford to be deprived of their pay than some of the laborers. At all events, their claim ought to be considered before that of the sub-contractors.

Mr. VAIL. If you are going to pay the railway contractors, these sub-contractors owe a number of people in the county, who have furnished them with supplies, and I think the Government is bound to see that this money goes into the hands of the people who are entitled to it. They should ascertain who furnished the supplies, and everything else, and pay the parties.

To purchase the Carleton Branch Railway, with harbor frontage, wharf and town lots, and all other property of the company ..... $85,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this?

Mr. POPE. This is a railway track about three miles long. It is a valuable property, which the Government think ought not to be allowed to fall into the hands of one company, but should be controlled by the Government, for the benefit of all the railways that may find their way there. The wharf itself, I think, pays some $1,500 a year, and we think that the Government ought to own this property, as we own properties in other cities. In the city of Montreal that has been found very important, and I think my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, will remember the difficulties that have taken place in the city of Toronto, and how much better it would have been if the Government had owned the Esplanade, and allowed all railways to have the right to pass over it.

Mr. VAIL. Will the hon. Minister tell us what line of railway this piece of road connects with?

Mr. POPE. It connects with the Intercolonial Railway across the bridge, and with other railways that run there, and we think this is the time we should purchase it.

Mr. VAIL. Is there any road between the end of the Intercolonial Railway and this road?

Mr. POPE. I believe there is a piece at St. John.

Mr. VAIL. Why should the Government undertake the purchase of a piece of road that does not begin at the Intercolonial Railway or any other railway, and ends at the water? I think it ought to be shown that this road is to connect with some Government work, that makes it necessary for the Government to own that particular branch.

Mr. POPE. We have found it of the utmost importance, in other places, where we did not own a single particle of road, that we should own the property on which the railroads had to run. I am certain there is not a man in this House who knows the property at Toronto but would say that if the Government owned that property, and allowed all railways to pass over it, it would have been of the utmost importance to Toronto. Now, we believe that this is going to be a large place, and that that is a valuable property; and although about half a mile of the road between Carleton and the bridge is another railway, we think it important that we should own this property, so as to be able to control the landing and the wharves.

Mr. VAIL. This line runs from the Maine and St. John Railway for four or five miles to the wharf at Carleton, independent altogether of any other road; and unless it is purchased for some special reason, I cannot see what the object is.

Mr. BLAKE. Is not the truth just this: That the Government subsidised the bridge across the St. John River, and thus enabled that bridge to be constructed? that the construction of that bridge took away the traffic from this branch? that upon that state of things arising a claim was made by those who built the branch? that as the Government destroyed their traffic they should buy their road? and that the Government a long time resisted that claim, and that they now believe this to be a proper time to meet it?

Mr. FOSTER. That is not quite all.

Mr. BLAKE. I was asking the Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. The road formerly entered at Fairville, and there was no passage between that and the Intercolonial Railway, across the St. John River, except by a carriage road. This extension was built from Fairville down to the wharf, on the Carleton side, and after that the traffic went across to St. John by the ferry. It may be that a double consideration enters into this claim, and the hon. gentleman will see the justice of it. The city of Carleton took a very large amount of stock in the building of that extension; it became the main line of traffic; after a time, in the progress of the country and the requirements of trade, it was found that it was too great an obstruction; that trade should be made to go to the city of St. John by a ferry and by a roundabout way, so that a bridge has been built across the St. John River, and the Intercolonial Railway has been extended to that bridge. When you get across the St. John River by that bridge you are really at Carleton. The short line will be of very little use, as regards the outlet for traffic, unless it has good permanent facilities, and in no other way can these be got, except by means of that branch to the deep water terminus. If any single line controlled that it would be able to bluff the Short Line, or in some way interfere with the traffic. Besides, the property is a valuable one in itself, comprised not only of 4 miles of main line and bridges, but a valuable water frontage of over 1,600 feet, and a wharf which cost $1,200, and is a paying property, one of the few wharves in St. John at which the largest vessels that go to the ocean float safely.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know that these are the explanations on which the Government justifies the vote or not. I ask the Minister as to the circumstances under which the vote was brought forward, and would be obliged to have an answer from him. The hon. gentleman's statement is that of an independent member of the House, but not that of the Administration.

Mr. POPE. I have said to the hon. gentleman that I thought this was an important property for the Government to have, and that there is in it good value for the money. I think it is a real necessity, as we are going to have a pretty large traffic, that the Government should own it, so that there will be no danger of one company obtaining control over it to the detriment of others.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this railway the property of a private company?

Mr. POPE. I believe it is.

Mr. BLAKE. Has a bargain been made with the company?

Mr. POPE. No; there has not.

Mr. BLAKE. How does the hon. gentleman know he will get it for the sum mentioned? Was there any bargain?

Mr. BOWELL. The property originally cost $150,000. The company offered to sell it to the Government for the sum mentioned.

Mr. BLAKE. Have negotiations been going on for some time for the sale and purchase of this property? No papers have been laid on the Table.

Mr. POPE. There have been no negotiations, but I understand that the property could be acquired for this amount.

Mr. BLAKE. Was the application made by the company to the Government, or by the Government to the company?

Mr. POPE. I do not know of any.

Mr. BLAKE. Unless I am greatly misinformed, the proprietors of the concern deem that the property has been depreciated in value by the bridge across the St. John, and claim that as the property was depreciated in value through the use of public money, their property should be purchased by the Government.

Mr. POPE. That has not come to my knowledge.

Mr. BLAKE. Did the advance with reference to the acquisition of the property begin with the Government or the concern?

Mr. GILLMOR. I cannot see how this branch can be utilised, unless the contemplated Short Line, instead of running to St. John, would run over the St. John and Maine Line, down to this point, within 3 miles of Carleton. That property might then be valuable. Another railway terminating in Carleton, the Grand Southern, at first ran over two or three miles of this Carleton branch, but the Carleton

Mr. FOSTER.

Branch Company were unreasonable, and compelled the Grand Southern to build a separate line. The two lines terminate at this wharf. How this branch of three miles can be of any service or income to the Government, at least by the Short Line, I cannot conceive. The wharf may be a source of income from vessels loading at deep water there, but as for this branch line being used by any line, the only line that could use it was the Grand Southern, and they, not being able to come to arrangements, built a separate branch to this terminus.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has given two sufficient reasons to justify this vote. He stated the Grand Southern ran in there and wanted an outlet, but the company that controlled this road and the Grand Southern could not come to terms, so the latter built an independent line. He also stated, on a previous occasion, that the Short Line would be built. Taking these two things into consideration they furnish good reasons why this property should be in the hands of the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. If this is to be used simply by the Short Line Railway, it ought to be part of the Short Line Railway. We have given terminal facilities to the Canadian Pacific Railway at Quebec and at Montreal, and at various other places, and if this is to be part of the Short Line, the Short Line Railway Company ought to buy it out of its subsidy. There is no reason why the public should buy it and present it to the Short Line Railway. The fact that the hon. gentleman will not state whether he was the first to approach the property owners, or the property owners were the first to approach the Government, leads me to the conclusion that it was the property owners who approached the Government.

Mr. GILLMOR. The result of this will be that the Grand Southern and the Carleton Branch will be useless, and that no other line can be utilised except the Short Line, because the Grand Southern is not going to stop at Carleton, but is ready, as well as the St. John and Maine, to utilise the bridge, and to terminate in the city of St. John, where the Short Line is also to terminate, I suppose.

Mr. FOSTER. The Short Line road is supposed to bring down a vast amount of traffic from the west, and to make St. John and Halifax shipping ports for grain to the old country. In order to have that done, it is necessary that the line should not end in the city, but should go down directly to deep water, where large vessels can lie and shipments can be made. Of course, the Grand Southern wants to get into the city, because it does not do an ocean business.

Mr. GILLMOR. Are we to suppose that elevators are to be built at Carleton and at the deep water wharf? I do not suppose the business is going to be so enormous as to require all that. There is no use disguising the fact that these branches are to be made useless, as they will be if this is adopted. Of course, if this great western traffic comes down, all these elevators and deep water wharves may be kept in employment.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed to follow this up by a vote for the erection of elevators for the use of the railways at Carleton?

Mr. POPE. No, it is not.

Mr. VAIL. Would not the railway be left there, for the use of any company, the Short Line or any other company? I do not see that it changes the matter if the Government should purchase the road. It is there already, and the people of Carleton have the benefit of it.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend does not see the point, that this very desirable property will be snapped up by others if we do not buy it now. Here is an opportunity which may never recur. Here is an advantage which is seized by this far-seeing Government, who observe that this is the special opportunity to purchase at a low rate property of great value, for which capitalists all over the world are eagerly looking.

Mr. PAINT. I think the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) could throw a great deal of light upon this matter, but it appears that he is afraid to express his opinion fearing to implicate himself.

Mr. BLAKE. I may say that the hon. gentleman consulted me as to whether he should speak on this subject or not. He happens to be a shareholder of this railway, and I said that, if I were placed in the same circumstances as he was, I would not take any part in the discussion.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Are there any timber limits or colonisation companies there?

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there are any timber limits or colonisation companies there. No bargain was made with the Government. It was not by the Government that the Carleton Railway was acquired, and there was no blind shares in it, either.

Mr. White (Hastings). There are no blind shares in any matter that I am connected with. Anything I have done is just as pure and honest as anything you had to do with; but you like to cover up things which affect your own friends.

Pembina Branch, Canadian Pacific Railway— Award and expenses in connection with the claims of Messrs. Murphy, Kavanagh and Upper, and Joseph Upper & Co. ....	$100,000
--	-----------

Mr. POPE. Most of this work was done when hon. gentlemen opposite were connected with the Government. We never could arrive at a settlement, and it was referred to arbitrators, and this is the finding of the arbitrators.

Mr. BLAKE. Who were the arbitrators?

Mr. SHANLY. Judge Clarke, of Cobourg, John Bell, of Belleville, and myself.

Mr. BLAKE. That is satisfactory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was this for work actually done, or was it for damages for the road being taken out of these gentlemen's hands?

Mr. SHANLY. It was for work done. There was an unsettled account. They were anxious to have the road finished a year sooner than the contract required. The arrangement was made under the Government of the hon. member for East York, and in that arrangement they set aside the contract and paid item by item. The matter never was settled until this year, when it was referred to arbitration.

Salaries and expenses of inspecting engineers and other officers.....	$50,000
--	----------

Mr. POPE. This is for the whole of the staff of engineers employed on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and all other railways. Hitherto, the larger share of this expenditure has been paid out of an appropriation. There is no appropriation now, and they must be provided for in this way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But under this heading it appears to be for the Canadian Pacific Railway engineers alone. Now, we surely do not propose to spend $50,000 in 1886 on merely inspecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. POPE. There is a great deal of work to do besides inspecting the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have to keep a regular staff for some little time yet, both in the office and outside.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister stated to me the other day, in answer to a question, that the whole work would be done by October.

Mr. POPE. I said I thought the track would be laid, so that engines could go over in October.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been stated to us throughout that such progress would be made in this work that the Government would have paid off the loan and the subsidy by the month of September. I suppose that the Government sections in British Columbia will also have been completed by that time, or by October. Then, after the company has so far completed this work that the Government has paid its last dollar of loan and subsidy, and the Government has so far completed its work that it has delivered over this section, what are the inspecting engineers to do?

Mr. POPE. They will not have got all their money as soon as the contract is through, because certain other things will have to be done, and a certain oversight will have to be kept on this work.

Mr. BLAKE. How much is remaining unpaid of loans and subsidies?

Mr. POPE. I think about $5,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will observe that according to a construction with which I rather quarrel, a view has been taken that this road is completed for the purposes of the contract as soon as a car can go over the rails, and you find a definition something like these words in Mr. Schreiber's statement of that serpentine exhibition that he gave us of the state of the contract, about two months ago; and you find complete payments made with reference to a good portion of the road north of Lake Superior, portions that are paid off altogether, although there remains a great deal to be done. Well, now, when does the hon. gentleman expect to have paid off the Government loan and subsidies?

Mr. POPE. We have to keep close watch of it, and that is what these engineers will do. North of Lake Superior, and on other sections of the road, there are some temporary trestles to be filled yet, which have not been paid for, so you will find there are other things to be done that are not paid for. Probably, during the last part of next year, we shall have as much work to do for our engineers as we have had during the last year. If we do not, I will be all the better pleased.

Intercolonial Railway—Sleeping Cars.....	$150,000
--	-----------

Mr. POPE. We had an arrangement with the Pullman Car Company, by which they put on their cars and took care of them, and that contract expired, I think, last year. They had exactly the same contract, I believe, with the Grand Trunk Railway. We thought it advisable to extend it for a little time, until we saw what the Grand Trunk was going to do, but with the understanding that we should give them six months' notice. Under that contract we were pledged to take these cars off their hands at a valuation. I think the notice expires the first of next month, when we intend to run these sleeping cars ourselves, and to have as good cars as any other road. The Pullman Company have ten cars that we are to purchase, and the price of each will be from $13,000 to $15,000.

Mr. BLAKE. These are pretty old Pullmans, I understand.

Mr. POPE. Yes; they can be bought at a valuation. These cars are not in the condition that they ought to be. We have already got some of them made over, and the intention is to make them as good as new, and suitable for any road. A good deal of our business are excursionists travelling through the country, and they must have good accommodation. At this time of the year a great number of people are travelling, and we must provide for them. We must put these cars into such a condition as will be satisfactory to the travelling public.

Mr. VAIL. Was it part of the arrangement made by the Mackenzie Government that the cars were to be ultimately purchased, or is this an arrangement made recently? I was not aware that the Government were bound, at the expiration of a certain time, to purchase those cars. I do not understand that this arrangement was made by the late Government.

Mr. POPE. No; it was not.

Mr. VAIL. It is a very little over a year since the contract terminated. This arrangement may turn out to be a good one, but it must be remembered that these are old-style cars, and that a large amount of money will be required to repair them, so as to be equal to the present standard.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the reason this arrangement was made?

Mr. POPE. We knew we must have cars, and we thought this was a proper thing to do.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under the original contract there was no agreement by the Government to purchase the cars. That has been made by hon. gentlemen opposite. It seems a very unbusiness-like transaction to arrange to purchase old stock, in view of the fact that new cars can be obtained at from $13,000 to $15,000.

Mr. BLAKE. It is more than merely purchasing old stock. It is purchasing old-fashioned stock. The new sleeping cars are very much better than the sleepers on the Intercolonial, which do not compare with the sleeping cars on the Ontario and Quebec division of the Canadian Pacific Railway by any manner of means. It is a great advantage, on the Ontario and Quebec road, to have an extra width in the sleeping car, and a sufficient height to sit up without knocking your head. I maintain that it is a mistake for a road like the Intercolonial, which is dependent on pleasure travel for its summer passenger business, to make an arrangement to purchase old-fashioned sleeping cars. I observe a letter in a newspaper from a correspondent who has just travelled over the road. He points out the most extraordinary irregularity in regard to stopping at stations. He said that the train ran at high speed from Quebec to Rivière du Loup. After that point it lost time at every one of the stations, and at last, at Campbellton, where the train was to stop 15 or 20 minutes, it remained 45 minutes; and then several of the passengers went up to the conductor and asked him if he was going to stay all night, as, if that was the case, they would take lodgings; whereupon the train moved off. That is not the way to create a good impression of the service on the Intercolonial.

Surveys for Cape Breton and other Railways..... $12,000

Mr. BLAKE. What are the other railways?

Mr. POPE. Most of this money will be expended on surveys in Cape Breton. If there is anything over it will go to surveys for other railways.

Mr. BLAKE. But we would like to know some further particulars about the other railways. There are a great many anxious hearts beating to know what the other railways are. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us what the other roads are?

Mr. POPE. I could not. It is intended for the Cape Breton Railway. There might be a little left over for other lines.

Land and damages, Grand River, and filling a pond near St. Catharines..... $21,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this, on the Grand River, a special work?

Mr. POPE. This $16,000 is for claims in the townships of Dunnville, North Cayuga, Dunn, and the town of Cayuga.

Mr. BLAKE. How old are these claims?

Mr. VAIL.

Mr. POPE. Since about 1874.

Mr. McCALLUM. In 1874 a dam was raised at Dunnville to supply water to the canal, and by that means there was a large overflow on the land, and some of the banks were washed away along the river. The matter was pressed for some time, and the late Government settled some of the cases where the land was overflowed, but they did not make allowance for those cases in which the wind drove the water upon the banks, washing away the land, in some cases houses, orchards, and even portions of cemeteries.

Mr. POPE. I may say that this matter has been before us for some time, and these claims have been in course of settlement, but we deferred them, to bring them all in together.

Mr. BLAKE. What is this other item—filling a pond near St. Catharines, $5,000?

Mr. POPE. That is a piece of land which has been flooded from the canal near St. Catharines. It has caused a great deal of complaint in the city, and it is perfectly useless; so now we propose filling the pond, which will give us  $3\frac{1}{2}$  or 4 acres of land, and remove a nuisance.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says "towards filling the pond." Will any more be required?

Mr. POPE. The engineer says that an expenditure of $5,000 properly applied would enable this quantity of land to be raised 1 foot above the water level.

Mr. McCALLUM. I think this is money well expended; and I am sure the land will rent for a sum sufficient to pay the interest. At present this pond is a great eye-sore to the city.

Grenville Canal—J. Simard, services..... $75

Mr. POPE. This is a special case, in which this gentleman was a sole arbitrator in settling a matter, and for his services he charged $15 a day.

Rideau Canal—To pay land damages in the township of Pittsburgh..... $550

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How has this occurred?

Mr. POPE. There have been very great changes in the country; the timber has died out, and the wind has carried the water over a great deal of the land and destroyed it. These claims have been sent either to the arbitrators or the valuers, and this is to pay one of them.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it likely that we shall have a recurrence of these claims? The Rideau Canal is one of the oldest public works in the country, and it is rather alarming that we are now to be called upon to pay land damages in connection with it.

Mr. POPE. I believe there are a few claims that will arise from the very cause I speak of.

Repairs to Road Dyke along Lake St. Francis..... $4,000

Mr. KIRK. When the main Estimates were before the House, in answer to an enquiry of mine, with reference to a vote I expected to be put in the Estimates for a small canal which the fishermen of Guysboro' county had petitioned for during the early part of the Session, the hon. Minister of Public Works advised me to wait until I would see what was in the Supplementary Estimates. They are down, and I do not see any vote for this work. Perhaps he intends to bring down Further Supplementary Estimates, and to provide for it there; if he does, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. POPE. What is the work?

Mr. KIRK. It is to enlarge a canal which runs through a small neck of land and connects the harbor of White Haven with Torbay. It was built by the Government of Nova Scotia before Confederation, but it was not made quite deep or broad enough. Consequently, it can only be used by the fishermen when the tide is high. The Local Government, a few years ago, voted a small amount of money to put it in repair, but not enough. This Government, last summer, sent an engineer to examine the canal, and he reported that it is a very necessary work, and that it will require $6,000 to put it in a position to serve all the requirements of the people. It is only about three-quarters of a mile long, and if put in proper shape it would be useful to fishermen, a large number of whom use it every year.

Mr. POPE. My impression is, that the engineer must have been sent from the Public Works Department, for I have no recollection of hearing of this canal before.

Mr. PAINT. Is it because I am more submissive than the hon member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk), that I should be debarred from bringing the St. Peter's Canal claims before this House? The men who performed the hard labor of that canal and lost their pay, to the amount of $20,000, when the Opposition were in power, would like very much to have those claims adjusted, and whatever is fair and proper in the matter done.

Mr. SCRIVER. Referring to the vote before the committee, I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the fact that representations were made to his predecessor in office last year in favor of an extension of this dyke upon lake St. Francis. An officer of the Department was sent there to make examinations, and he made a report to the effect that by the extension of that dyke a certain distance, great relief would be afforded to the inhabitants, who are now suffering by the overflow of the lake. I would ask the hon. Minister if he has given his attention particularly to the matter, and if he can hold out any hope that action will be taken upon the report of that engineer.

Mr. POPE. There was something done there last year, was there not?

Mr. SCRIVER. There may have been some repairs, but I think there was nothing done in the way of extending the dyke.

Mr. POPE. I am informed by the chief engineer that there was a certain sum of money expended there last year, and that the further sum the hon. gentleman sees in the Estimates will be expended this year.

Mr. SCRIVER. I am afraid this sum is only for repairs on the dyke, and not for extending it.

Montreal Armories..... $45,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We had another vote for this the other evening.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The other vote was for last year, for the foundations of the buildings, as I explained. This is for the superstructure. I am not sure that this will be enough, but it will be enough until Parliament assembles again.

Mr. BLAKE. About what is expected to be the whole cost of the armories?

Harbors and Rivers—Nova Scotia..... $12,550

Mr. KIRK. I do not see any item for breakwaters in Guysboro', for which the hon. Minister of Public Works advised me to wait until these Estimates came down. The total amount to be expended on harbors and rivers in Nova Scotia this year is $14,000. I can remember very well, when the Mackenzie Government was in power, how fond the Conservatives were of telling that Mr. Mackenzie gave such small grants to public works in Nova Scotia, and spent everything in Ontario, and how they predicted the Conservatives would be more liberal. Yet this year only $14,000 are granted the whole of Nova Scotia for rivers and harbors, while the lowest sum ever voted during Mr. Mackenzie's régime was $56,500. The Government which was to be so much more favorable to Nova Scotia, can only afford to give $14,000, while Mr. Mackenzie, year after year, granted over $200,000.

Mr. PAINT. He never had to suppress a rebellion.

Mr. KIRK. That is quite true, but he might also say that he never raised a rebellion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman says he does not see those works he spoke about provided for. I do not see them either. They are not there, because the Privy Council did not think we could afford to ask money this year. Works to the extent of millions of dollars are not put in the Estimates, because we do not want to increase the expenditure of the country to such an extent as to have to increase taxation. We expect our revenue generally will be better next year, so that we will be able to do more for public works. The hon. gentleman only looked for the column for 1885-86 for the harbor of Nova Scotia when he said there was only $14,000 in the Estimates; if he had looked at the previous column he would have seen that last year we expended $46,450 for that purpose.

Mr. KIRK. It is getting smaller every year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Then the hon. gentleman might have looked at public buildings for Nova Scotia, and he would have found that we put an amount of $96,550 in the Estimates last year, and have put $91,525 in the main Estimates this year. It may happen that, for harbors and rivers, we have not been able to do as much for all the Provinces as we would desire. For dredging, the hon gentleman sees that we have given to his Province $30,000, while in the previous year we gave $42,000; but the amount for Quebec is reduced from $20,000 to $15,000; for Ontario, from $20,000 to $15,000; for British Columbia, from $17,000 to $15,000, so that the reductions are not limited to Nova Scotia, but they are made in all the Provinces.

Mr. KIRK. I confined my remarks to those items which immediately interested the fishermen; because, when you talk about looking after the interests of the fishermen, we find hon. gentlemen opposite saying: We have given them a bonus of $150,000 for fish, but that is voted for the fishermen of the whole Dominion, and while Nova Scotia may probably get half of that sum, the Government are robbing them, on the other hand, and depriving them of the moneys they formerly received from the Government. Their necessaries of life are taxed by duties on articles which they require in order to prosecute their callings, such as cordage and cans. These items alone amount to a good deal more than the money you give them as a bounty for their fish.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. We cannot have a tariff discussion.

Mr. KIRK. While the fishermen have received $150,000 as a bounty, it is taken out of them by the duties they have to pay, and they are not receiving the advantage they formerly received, by grants of money for breakwaters to protect their boats and for dredging their harbors, and at the same time hon. gentlemen boast of being so liberal to the fishermen.

Improvement of the River Yamaska ..... $10,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $6,000 of this sum is to pay the contractors the balance of their contract, and is required to complete the locks. All the work done amounted to about $50,000, and the object is to remove obstacles and render the river navigable. It is a very important river, and this work has been going on since 1882. We expended, then, $7,000; the next year, $11,000; the next year, $11,000; and the next year, $20,000; and this is for the balance of the contract. These obstructions in the river extend for a distance of 20 miles, near the villages the St. Hugues. This is in a very large and important district of the Province of Quebec. There is a line of steamboats on the river.

For the improvement of the North Saskatchewan River..... $10,000

Mr. TROW. On what portion of the North Saskatchewan will this money be expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to say. A discussion took place in this House in respect to the Saskatchewan River, in which several members, including the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) took part, and it was represented that it was very important there should be an examination or survey of the river. That hon. gentleman spoke about $20,000 or $25,000 being granted for that purpose. We did not think we could ask Parliament for $25,000, but we inserted $10,000 in the Estimates. With that sum we expect to make a survey or examination, and to expend part of the money in making improvements on the river.

Mr. TROW. I have been under the impression that the river has been surveyed repeatedly—twice to my knowledge—and that we have reports describing the rapids and interruptions to navigation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There were, no doubt, some partial surveys; but there has not been a thorough examination of the river. It will be of great advantage to know what points should be dredged or improved.

Mr. WATSON. I think the larger amount of money should be expended in making improvements rather than in conducting surveys. The captains of steamboats which navigate the river will be able to furnish information as to the points where money can be spent to the best advantage.

Roads and Bridges ..... $16,100

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The sum of $3,000 to aid the municipality of New Edinburgh to erect an iron bridge across Rideau River is, I suppose, owing to the fact that Government House is situated on the other side. The item looks like voting an amount for a purely local enterprise.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, it is local; but the interest we have in it as a Government is such as should lead us to do it. The grounds of Rideau Hall are extensive, and form more than half the area of the municipality, which could not, therefore, afford to rebuild the bridge without some aid.

Telegraphs ..... $28,650

Mr. MULOCK. Why is it necessary that the Government should build a telegraph line between Amherst Island and the mainland at Bath?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have considered a request made to them with respect to having telegraph communication there. The people of Amherst Island contribute to the revenue of the country, and cannot have the benefit of any improvement, except such as that which is proposed. The people have undertaken to build the land lines on the island. I believe the interests of shipping will also be served by having a telegraph line there.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister has not answered my point. Why is it necessary for the Government to undertake the work? Will not private enterprise do it? Have enquiries been made, to see if the ordinary telegraph service will not make a connection with Amherst Island.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We understand from the inhabitants that they cannot obtain telegraph communication except by this means. The Government will not work the line, and of course they will work on the island without the interference of the Government. The Government will give the cable; that is all.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think this is a very proper thing to do, because those islands are so situated that in most cases they derive no advantage from the public works on the mainland, though they contribute as much to the revenue, in proportion to the population, as any other part of the Dominion.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It will not do to carry that point too far. There are many counties in Ontario which are among the largest revenue-contributing counties in the Dominion, but they get nothing at all from the Dominion Government, except, possibly, $10,000 or $15,000 for public buildings. A vote of this kind must be justified in the public interest, and not on that ground.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the Government making this grant simply to accommodate those people, or because they cannot be otherwise accommodated? The hon. gentleman says that the people there have made some representations, but that does not necessarily justify the grant.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). When the deputation came down here, I asked them the same question the hon. gentleman has asked, and they said they had tried each of the companies, but they could not get them to expend a dollar, because the lines would not be profitable, but that afterwards the company might probably operate them. They thought they should have some little benefit, especially as there were some seasons of the year when they do not get to the island.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How many are there on the island?

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). There are about two townships.

Mr. BOWELL. There is another reason for the construction of this telegraph. The most dangerous portions of Lake Ontario, in regard to navigation, are about the head of that island, and near the Brothers' Islands below it. Wrecks often take place there, and it is important that there should be rapid means of communicating between the island and the mainland. Although the island is well settled, and although it is a good farming locality, there is not enough business on the island to make the telegraph a paying investment for the company. For these reasons, this amount, or even $2,000 or $3,000, would be money well spent for this purpose.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). It should also be stated that the parties themselves are doing a great deal towards constructing the line on the island.

For the preparation of Dr. Rand's Micmac Indian dictionary..... $1,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How many Micmacs are there in the Dominion?

Mr. PAINT. There are about 2,500.

Mr. WELDON. Including New Brunswick?

Mr. PAINT. I think not. I may say that the Rev. Silas T. Rand has given 35 of the best years of his life as a missionary among these Indians, and he has collected some 30,000 words in this dictionary, and he asks for this assistance to publish the work.

Mr. BOWELL. I may say that this gentleman, as the hon. member for Richmond has stated, has devoted a great deal of attention to the compilation of this dictionary for the benefit of that tribe. The book will be used in their schools, and by the educated Micmacs generally. We all know that the sale of a work of that kind will not compensate any author for publishing it; hence, the Government deemed it highly proper that he should be aided to this extent in the publication of his work.

Mr. GILLMOR. I should like to ask the hon. member for Richmond if Micmac is taught in the Indian schools. If so, they must have school books in Micmac, as well as the dictionary.

Mr. McLELAN. This dictionary is used for instruction in the Micmac language in every way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. According to such information as we have of these missionary tongues, the missionary, in most cases, has to construct a language out of his own head. I know that in some cases, when the work has been done, the Indians themselves have not recognised their own language.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The question arises as to the wisdom of the Dominion Parliament maintaining an Indian school in which the lessons are not taught in English.

Some hon. MEMBERS. They are.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I know that the company who maintain several schools in my county, are making it imperative that the studies shall all be in English, and if the Government are attempting to bring the Indians into full citizenship, it seems to me the public money should be used to teach them English and to assimilate them to the rest of the people.

Mr. PAINT. The Rev. Silas T. Rand brought the highest credentials from the University of Dalhousie, in Nova Scotia, from the University of Acadia College, from the College of Sackville, N.B., and from Sir William Dawson, all recommending this work and soliciting the Dominion Government to aid its publication.

To pay for the compilation, printing and publishing of correspondence, petitions, reports and Orders in Council respecting provincial legislation..... $500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has this reference to a justification of the numerous disallowances that have taken place?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman any other information than is here, but I will try and obtain it for him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this is intended to produce a full report of all the correspondence that has taken place with respect to all the Acts of disallowance since Confederation, I doubt very much whether $500 would do it, and if it is not, it is of very little value.

Expenses for translating and printing Chinese immigration report ..... $4,500

Mr. BAKER. May I ask what this particular sum is for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the printing of the Chinese commissioners' report.

Mr. BAKER. I would move the word "commissioners" be substituted for the word "immigration."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This may be altered, but the report was about the Chinese immigration. There is only one report, and I do not think there is any ambiguity in the title.

Mr. BAKER. I know the impression it will convey to the people in British Columbia.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will make the alteration.

Mr. HOLTON. Where was this work done, and by whom?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was printed in Montreal, by the Minerve Publishing Company.

North-West Mounted Police—Equipment, pay and maintenance of additional men. .... $250,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Judging by the expenditure for the remainder of the force, that amount will be inadequate. It does not compare with the vote already taken for the mounted infantry at Winnipeg. However, it can be repaired, as we meet again without great delay.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman's opinion is borne out by the memorandum placed in my hand. The memorandum reads as follows: Equipment, pay and maintenance of an additional 500 men. This amount, I am afraid, will not be sufficient for the service mentioned, but that will depend largely on the number of men mounted, a subject which is at present receiving the consideration of the Government. If the whole are mounted, it certainly will not cover the expenditure; if, however, they determine not to mount the whole 500, the expenses connected with the equipment will not be so much. It may be all required before Parliament meets again.

Liquor License Act—To pay commissioners and inspectors appointed to administer the Liquor License Act, 1883, and generally to meet expenditure made under the Act for the license year ending 15th April, 1888 ..... $50,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. What amount was expended last year in enforcing this Act? and what was the amount contributed by the hotel keepers and by shop licensees?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I stated that the amount in round numbers was $140,000 or $150,000, including the amount provided by votes here to-day, and the fees paid in at additional places.

Mr. LANDERKIN. According to the Estimates in the year 1884-85, $5,000 was contributed by the country for the Liquor License Act. In 1885-86, $20,000 was voted; in the Supplementary Estimates for 1884-85 we find $60,000; and we have now estimates of $50,000. That makes the amount expended by the country in the enforcement of the Act $135,000. There is a return brought down as to the amount that was contributed by the hotel keepers and the shop keepers throughout the country. I had not time to find out the exact amount, but I think the tax imposed on the hotels and shops of the Dominion amounted to at least $100,000. I will give you an idea of what it cost in different places. In Brant $670 was paid to the commissioners and the inspectors and sub-inspectors; in Bruce $540 was paid to the commissioners, or, at least, I should say, was contributed by the hotel keepers and shop keepers there. In Elgin $855 was levied on the hotel keepers and shop keepers, and in Essex $385. In Grey, one of the most intelligent, largest and best counties in the Dominion, there was levied on these good men and true $980. In the city of Hamilton I find that a tax was imposed on the hotel keepers of $1,845; in the county of Hasting, so ably represented by the Minister of Customs and the member for East Hastings (Mr. White), and the other distinguished gentleman, they have had to contribute $1,300 for the purposes of this Act; in Kingston, $755; in Lambton, $1,140; Lanark, $535; Leeds and Grenville, $895; Lennox and Addington, $590; in the city of London, represented by the Postmaster General, $920; in the county of Northumberland, $410; Ontario, $645; the city of Ottawa, $1,210; Oxford, $515; Peel, $565; Perth, $1,205; Peterboro', $760; Renfrew, $655; Simcoe, $630; Wellington, $1,030; York, $1,445; Waterloo, $1,135; Welland, $855; and Toronto, $4,480. I would like to know what was the use of levying this tax upon the hotel keepers and the shop keepers of this country to this alarming amount, when, during the last Session of this House, an amendment of the Liquor License Act was passed, suspending its operation in regard to certain matters and compelling hotel keepers to take out Local Licenses. During this Session a Bill was introduced, and I believe passed, to suspend the Act, and yet we find that $50,000 is asked when the Act is suspended. The people will no doubt be surprised to find we have spent $135,000 on account of this Act, which does not protect them or protect any interest whatever.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I think the hon. gentleman is out of order in speaking of the money contributed by the hotel and saloon keepers of the country. What has this to do with this vote? I should like you to rule on that point.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAINT). I am disposed to allow the hon. gentleman to make his remarks, very short.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was aware, from your well-known fairness, that you would allow me to proceed. After the Act has been suspended, what do we want the money for? Why should we throw $50,000 away in paying officers who should have been dismissed as soon as the Act was suspended? I think the people have reason to complain of the introduction of the measure at all, of the enormous amount expended, and that the hotel keepers have reason to complain of the heavy tax levied upon them, which has given no protection to the people against the use of intoxicating liquor, or to the hotel keepers themselves. The law has been a dead letter from the beginning, and yet the Government ask for a vote of $50,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman has not put the case fairly; he has overlooked the very important fact that the Act has been suspended only in regard to those matters which are inconsistent with the decision of the Supreme Court, and that, only, until we get the decision of the Privy Council. There is no doubt as to our right to grant wholesale licenses and licenses to druggists, and, in Scott Act counties our inspectors are the officers who are bound to enforce the law, and the machinery must remain organised as it was. I know myself that from the Lower Provinces I have complete testimony from parties, independent of politics, who state that they regret there was any constitutional difficulty; that they never knew an Act better calculated to promote order and regulate and restrain the sale of liquor, and they would be only too glad if the constitutional question was settled in favor of that Act.

Mr. VAIL. Is it from your own inspectors?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was from the people of both sides of politics. We are not discussing the law itself, but the propriety of this vote of $50,000, to make up any deficiency that will occur this year. As I have said, the board of commissioners must be retained until this question is finally settled, and the inspectors must be retained, even were there no licenses granted, except the druggists licenses, in every Scott Act county of the Dominion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am desirous of knowing what salary is paid to the commissioners, to the inspectors, and the sub-inspectors. I asked this question before, and the Minister told me he did not know. I am very anxious to know, because it appears to me that this tax that is levied upon hotel keepers and shop keepers is for no other purpose than to pay these officers, when they do no good, do not administer the law and are of no benefit at all.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have already answered that it was proposed to allow the commissioners a per diem allowance of $5 for every day they actually sit at the board, and a travelling fee of 10 cents per mile going to and returning from these meetings. With regard to the salaries of inspectors, there is no fixed rate, because we had to consider the questions of divisions, the population, the number of licenses issued, so as to form some idea of the work and to settle the salary on a regular scale.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will you tell me what is the salary paid to the sub-inspector in the county of Grey?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot remember, for the 200 counties.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would it amount to $400 or $500?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It will amount to $600 or $700, from the receipts that he gave awhile ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understand this year he issued two licenses, and consequently the people have had to pay him $300 for each license.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I was speaking from the figures he read. If there were only two licenses issued in that county, I think the salary would be much smaller.

Mr. HESSON. If the hon. member for Grey had heard the discussion in the House this afternoon, he would not have spoken in this way. He seems to forget that the hotel keepers who applied for Dominion licenses did so on their own option. There was a doubt as to which Government had a right to issue licenses, and the hotel keepers had their option to apply to the Dominion Government and pay their $10 and $5, which was $15 for the security which that option presented if they took advantage of it. The security would not be prosecuted by either Government, who might have a right to take action if they found they had authority. A great many came forward and made that deposit as a security that they would be protected by both Governments from prosecution, and I have not heard any fault found by the licensed victuallers of Ontario in that regard. At present the question has been decided that wholesale licenses, at all events, are under the jurisdiction of this Government, but there is still a doubt as to whether this Government have control over retail licenses, and that question has still to be settled by the Privy Council. Now, certain sums have been paid in—in the county of Perth, something over $1,200—but I have not heard any complaints from the licensed victuallers in that county, and there is still something like $600 lying to the credit of the Government in that fund.

Mr. KIRK. Does the chairman of the commissioners, who, in Nova Scotia, is the county judge, receive the same fee as the other commissioners?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think there is a little difference in favor of the chairman.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is it the intention of the Government to repay this $15 to the hotel keepers of this country?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will take a little time to answer that question.

Mr. FISHER. Since the Minister seems to fix the salaries of inspectors according to the number of licenses which are issued in their respective counties, how is he going to arrange their salaries in Scott Act counties, where there are no licenses issued? I trust the Minister will fix the salaries in Scott Act counties sufficiently high to cause the men to do the work efficiently.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not state that their salaries were fixed exclusively according to the number of licenses issued. I said that in order to arrive at some settlement of the matter various points had to be taken into consideration, such as the extent of the district, the number of licenses issued, and so on. In Scott Act counties it will, of course, be different.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Does the Minister think that the amount of the present vote, $50,000, will be likely to meet the requirements of the board? Last year the expenses were $150,000. Of that amount there was contributed from other sources $73,000. I suppose the Minister proposes to reduce the salaries, as the amount of contributions will be considerably reduced. We must remember that much of the revenue which was contributed from other sources will not be available for the present year, as I do not understand that the Government intend to issue tavern licenses in future. Does the Minister hope to get through with $50,000?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Does the hon. gentleman intend to reduce the amount paid to the license inspectors?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The work will be merely nominal. They are holding their positions, lest we should have to arrange a new staff. Their duties will not involve the same labor as their duties did last year, for which they were paid a larger amount.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I congratulate the license victuallers on having such an able and ardent advocate as the hon. gentleman opposite. I am sure the hotel keepers and saloon keepers will be only too happy to have an opportunity to pay that amount over again. I am speaking the sentiments of the licensed victuallers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not think the hon. gentleman is speaking the sentiments either of the licensed victuallers or the temperance people.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I believe he is.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Are all moneys collected under the Act paid in as part of the Consolidated Revenue of Canada, and, if that be so, are the commissioners justified in reserving for themselves so much on account?

Mr. COSTIGAN. They have power to retain money to pay their running expenses. Then the Dominion must make up the deficiency.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). If it should appear that we had no right to pass the Act, the people should be given their money back. I am satisfied that the hotel keepers throughout Ontario would be willing to pay $15 each for the peace they have had during the past year. The inspectors and commissioners could not say to them: You must get a license. The Ontario Act is a machine to make men vote against their consciences.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the Minister of Inland Revenue lay on the Table the Orders in Council sanctioning the various payments?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think I could at once, although I have no desire to place obstructions in the way.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps it will be a more simple matter, if, instead of furnishing Orders in Council, the Minister would lay on the Table a schedule showing the salary that has been assigned to those various officers. That would simplify the matter, and it would not be necessary to copy out the former parts of the Orders in Council in that way. I think it is important that we should know how this sum is to be apportioned, for although the duties of the officers continue to some extent in those counties that have passed the Scott Act, that does not apply to the remaining counties, although they have some small duties remaining. On the whole, the duties of these officers, as they deal only with wholesale druggists and vessel licenses, are almost nil, and therefore it is important that we should know on what basis their salaries are now to be paid.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will not be able to give the Orders in Council the hon. gentleman refers to. This $50,000 is to pay the salaries of the same officers for which $60,000 was asked last year. I may say that it is to be understood these officers must not expect the same salaries as before, as the work is very largely reduced.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Have the officers been notified to that effect?

Mr. COSTIGAN. They will be.
Resolution to be reported.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. BOWELL presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting Further Supplementary Estimates for the year ending 30th June, 1886.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons additional Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the Service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1886; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 15th July, 1885.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the Message, and the Estimates transmitted therewith, be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:15 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 16th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TROUBLES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether the Government received any, and if so, how many communications, and at what dates, from Bishop Grandin, relating to North-West affairs, and not brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no correspondence of record in the Department of the Interior from Bishop Grandin since that which he addressed to Mr. Laird, in 1876, already laid on the Table of the House, except a communication dated the 19th March, 1882, in which he asks for assistance in the construction of a hospital, a subsidy for the hospital, and help for the orphanages, and one (not dated) received on the 30th September, 1882, asking that Michael Deane be instructed to survey their settlement. These letters had no reference whatever to the half-breed question, nor were they called for by any Order of the House. The Order called for correspondence relating to land claims at Prince Albert and the neighboring districts. Albert is not in the neighborhood of Prince Albert, but in the neighborhood of Edmonton—over 400 miles west of Prince Albert. Michael Deane was instructed to survey the settlement at St. Albert in the spring of 1883. I may as well say that there are a great many letters, I dare say, addressed to individual members of the Government, which are not considered official, but they will be collated as fast as they can be, and laid on the Table of the House at the beginning of next Session.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether the Government addressed any, and if so, how many communications, and at what date, to Bishop Grandin, relating to North-West affairs, and not brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government did not, since 1876, address any communication to Bishop Grandin on North-West affairs generally, but in reply to his letter of 1882 he was informed that instructions had been given for the survey of the lands in the settlement.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether the Government received any, and if so, how many communications from inhabitants of St. Albert, Edmonton or Fort Saskatchewan, through Father Leduc and Mr. Maloney, in the winter of 1883, not brought down—whether the Government received any, and if so, how many communications from Father Leduc and Mr. Maloney, or either of them, on the same subjects, not brought down?

Mr. McLELAN. On the 7th April, 1883, a communication was received from Father Leduc and Mr. Maloney, representing the people of Edmonton and Fort Saskatchewan, asking for a river lot survey, patents, a land office, recognition of claims to lands by settlement in advance of survey, without reference to the question of whether the sections settled upon were even or odd, and making other representations in regard to local land questions. The only references of a general character in this communication was one on the subject of representation in Parliament, and a short paragraph asking consideration for the requests of the half-breeds. There were two short letters subsequently, having reference to the first. They were answered on the 12th April, 1883, promising them the survey asked for, the establishment of a land office, the issue of patents upon proof of title, and the recognition of the claims of actual settlers, in accordance with the provisions of the law in that behalf. There was no Order of the House calling for papers having reference to land claims in the Edmonton district.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether the Government addressed any, and if so, how many communications to Father Leduc and Mr. Maloney on North-West affairs, not brought down?

Mr. McLELAN. There were two letters sent from the Department of the Interior to Messrs. Leduc and Maloney—one dated the 12th April, 1883, replying in full to their representations, and one dated the 3rd September, 1883, acknowledging and replying to the later letters received in the Department on the 27th August, 1883.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether, in the year 1882, instructions were sent to the surveyor engaged in the special river lot survey at St. Albert to desist; and whether this instruction was acted on for the time? Whether, in 1883, instructions were sent to have a river lot survey at St. Albert, Edmonton or Fort Saskatchewan, and whether such survey was made?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Michael Deane, without instructions from the Department, and while carrying instructions to do other work, commenced a river survey at St. Albert, in 1882. When the Surveyor-General discovered from Mr. Deane's progress returns what he was doing, he insisted, very properly, upon obedience, and ordered Mr. Deane to proceed with the work which he had instructions to do. In the spring of 1883 Mr. Deane got a new contract, including the river survey at St. Albert and Fort Saskatchewan, which he duly performed. The survey of the Edmonton settlement on the river-lot system was included in his contract for the previous year.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether any answers were given, not brought down, to any, and if so, to which of the letters or memorials on the subject of North-West grievances, which have been brought down? and at what date were such answers given?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD

Mr. McLELAN. The answer to that question has not been prepared. Many of these questions involve a search in the whole Department for letters and papers, and they involve a great deal of time.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether it is true, as stated by Mr. Pearce, in his report of 12th March, 1884, that from correspondence on the departmental files it appears that it was the intention of the Government, as late as the spring of 1883, to re-survey into river lots the portion of land settled on by the half-breeds at St. Laurent? and what are the dates of such correspondence not brought down?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Pearce was mistaken. There is no such correspondence on record in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether any answer was given to the letter of Father Vegreville, of the 19th January, 1881, to Mr. Deville? If so, when and by whom?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Deville replied, saying the letter had been submitted to the Minister, with a recommendation that Mr. Pearce be instructed to comply with the wishes of the settlers, as far as practicable. The letter of Mr. Deville is dated 15th February, 1881.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether any answer was given to the petition of 19th November, 1883, from thirty-one persons of St. Louis de Langevin? and if so, when, and by whom?

Mr. McLELAN. The petition having been received at the Department through the local agent, there is nothing to show whether that official did or did not acknowledge it, but he doubtless did, and the communication was immediately referred to the Surveyor General and to Mr. Pearce, for action, which action was taken by granting the petitioners their river frontages in legal sub-divisions, as shown by the correspondence brought down.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether any answer was given, after the return of the Deputy Minister, to the letter of Louis Schmidt, of 26th April, 1884? and, if so, when and by whom?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; an answer was sent by Mr. Burgess himself, on the 6th May, 1885, within a short time after his return to the Department.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether any answer was given to Mr. Pearce's letter of 19th March, 1884, as to the settlement of the river lot claims? and, if so, when and by whom?

Mr. McLELAN. No reply was necessary. The correspondence brought down shows that the agent at Prince Albert was instructed to proceed with the settlement of the claims mentioned by Mr. Pearce, and that a large number of them have been settled.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether any instructions were given after Mr. Pearce's letter of 19th of March, 1884, as to the mode of settlement of the river lot claims? And, if so, when, and by whom?

Mr. McLELAN. Not subsequent to Mr. Pearce's letter, but prior to it, as the correspondence brought down shows.

Mr. BLAKE asked, When were the plans and surveys of St. Laurent and the neighborhood sent to Mr. Duck?

Mr. McLELAN. The plan of St. Laurent settlement was sent to the agent at Prince Albert on the 15th February, 1884, and the plans of the neighborhood at various times, commencing with the spring of the year 1880.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Are there any orders, or instructions, or letters as to the mode of survey on rivers, particularly on the Saskatchewan, not brought down? If so, what are the dates?

Mr. McLELAN. There are separate instructions given to each surveyor, directing him as to the mode in which he is to carry out the particular work entrusted to him. The Dominion Lands Act authorises the mode of surveys to be adopted, and particularly authorises the sub-division of lands fronting on rivers or lakes into lots with narrow frontages, if thought expedient.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did the Government receive communication of the resolution of the North-West Council of 1884 as to the half-breed claims, and when? Did they answer that communication? If so, when?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; on the 19th August, 1884; and since then, the subjects referred to in the memorial of the council have been dealt with at various times by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did the Government receive the report mentioned by Col. Houghton of his mission to the North-West in 1884; and if so, when?

Mr. CARON. All reports received from Col. Houghton, which are not of a specially confidential character, have been brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. That is not answering the question. I ask whether the Government received the report mentioned by Col. Houghton, and if so, when.

Mr. CARON. All the reports which were received which could be brought down have been brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not ask whether any reports have been brought down. I ask whether the Government received any particular document.—No answer. Did the Government call on Governor Dewdney for any information as to the state of things, with reference to the half-breeds in the Saskatchewan region, in 1884, or in January, February or early March, 1885, and if so, when? Did the Government receive any communications from Governor Dewdney on the subject; and if so, when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that there have been any special calls on Governor Dewdney on behalf of the Government for information. It is Governor Dewdney's duty to give full information on everything affecting affairs in his jurisdiction, and he has been in continual communication with the Government or individual members of the Government on this subject.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did the Government call on any of the officials in the North-West and if so on which, and when, during 1884 or 1885, for information as to the state of things with reference to the half-breeds in the Saskatchewan region? Did the Government receive any communications from any of the officials in the North-West during 1884 or 1885 as to the state of things with reference to the half-breeds in the Saskatchewan region; and if so from whom and when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government and several of the Departments have been in active correspondence with the various officials in the North-West, as to the state of affairs in reference to the half-breeds in the Saskatchewan region, and other matters affecting the North-West. Some of these communications are in the Department, and some are not. They will be brought down.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did the Government receive any communication of Archbishop Taché's views on the subject of the half-breed question not brought down; and is so, when?

Mr. McLELAN. There is no record in the Department of the Interior of any communication on the half-breed question from Archbishop Taché, which has not been brought down.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Was any answer sent to the letter of Father André's to Sir John Macdonald, of 16th January, 1883, and if so, when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not quite prepared to answer that question, neither as to the receipt of the letter nor as to the answer.

Mr. BLAKE. The letter has been brought down; I do not ask as to that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is all right, then.

Mr. ROYAL (Translation) asked, Whether the Government have any information concerning certain facts said to have been committed after the taking of Batoche, on the 14th May last, by Canadian volunteers, namely: a rope was placed around the neck of one Damase Carrière, a half-breed, who was afterwards dragged for a distance; an old man named Donald Ross, while lying wounded, was stripped of his clothes and indignities were committed upon him; another half-breed, Vandal, was seized and was cut and wounded all over the body; also, whether they have any information concerning the wanton destruction of property in the settlement of Batoche, after the fight, by Canadian volunteers? And if so, whether they have ordered an investigation of said facts?

Mr. CARON. (Translation.) In answer to my hon. friend, I must say that the Government have received no information as to the facts mentioned in the question he has just put. I have communicated this question to General Middleton, in order to obtain the required information, but as the General is now en route to Selkirk, he is not likely to receive my letter before his arrival at Selkirk or at Winnipeg.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether Michel Dumas, one of the delegates to Riel, was offered an appointment as assistant farm instructor, or in some other capacity? If so, when? Did he accept the appointment? How long did he continue in office?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the answer here to-day, but Mr. Michel Dumas was offered an appointment and accepted it; the particular dates I will get for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Whether James Isbister, one of the delegates to Riel, was offered an appointment as assistant farm instructor, or in some other capacity? If so, when?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. James Isbister was also offered an appointment? The dates I will obtain to-morrow.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Was a ferry license granted to Gabriel Dumont, one of the delegates to Riel, and if so, when?

Mr. COSTIGAN. All ferries under the control of the Federal Government are under the management of the Inland Revenue Department. Gabriel Dumont has received no ferry license from that Department?

Mr. BLAKE asked, What was the date of Superintendent Crozier's report (not brought down but mentioned in that of 27th July, 1884) in which he pointed out the sympathy of the Indians with the half-breeds, and suggested that precautionary measures should be taken?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the date, but I will obtain it.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Has the Government received reports from officers of the Mounted Police with regard to the fight at Duck Lake, the evacuation of Carlton, the affair at Fort Pitt, the affair at Frog Lake, the affairs of Prince Albert, the affairs of Battleford, or any of them, and of what dates?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reports of the affairs at these points have been received and will be brought down at once.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Had the Government received any communication from Sheriff Chapleau before the outbreak in the North-West, relating to half-breed affairs? If so, when?

Mr. McLELAN. No communication from Sheriff Chapeau relating to the outbreak in the North-West or to half-breed affairs, has been received or is on record in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Had the Government received, before the outbreak, any communication as to half-breed matters containing the views of Mr. Forget, Mr. Hayter Reed, Judge Rouleau, Father André, Mr. L. Clarke, Mr. Macdowell, Bishop McLean, or any other prominent citizen of the North-West Territories?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very probably communications have been received from some, if not all, of those gentlemen. Those received will be brought down.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did Sir Hector Langevin receive one or more communications, in 1884-85, from Mr. Jackson, M. C. North-West Territories, on the subject of the half-breed claims? If so, at what dates?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt I have received one or more. I do not know the dates.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did Sir Hector Langevin report to the Government his interview with certain half-breeds at Qu'Appelle in September, 1884; and if so, when?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt I have so stated to my colleagues, but I do not know the date.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Are the telegram of 2nd January, 1885, and the report of 31st December, 1884, brought down, the only communications received by the Government on the subject of L. Riel's proposal to take money and go? If not, from whom and at what dates were other communications sent?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. From my general recollection, there have been several communications from persons present at meetings at which Riel made speeches and from officials and settlers, giving all kinds of contradictory reports about Riel's proposal to take money and go.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Were there any petitions, resolutions or letters on the subject of half-breed and settler's claims in the disturbed districts received by the Government and not brought down? If so, from whom, and when were they sent.

Mr. McLELAN. We have not, in the Department of the Interior, discovered any so far.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Is there any correspondence as to the settlement of the claims of the unenumerated half-breeds of Manitoba, not brought down?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Did Mr. Walsh investigate into or report on the affair of the Qu'Appelle half-breeds referred to him on the 6th July, 1882? If so, at what date?

Mr. McLELAN. There is no report in the Department of the Interior of it.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Is there any correspondence on the subject of the affairs of the Qu'Appelle half-breeds, referred to Mr. Walsh, not brought down? If so, from whom, and at what dates?

Mr. McLELAN. There is a report in the House of Commons in respect of the settlers, not distinguishing whether half-breeds or not. I have not the date.

Mr. BLAKE. Are there reports from Mr. Russell and Mr. Aldous on the Prince Albert or the St. Laurent settlement, in the years 1877 and 1878?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; there is the report of Mr. Russell contained in the report of the Department for the year

Mr. BLAKE.

1877; and there is the report of Mr. Aldous contained in the report of the Department of the Interior for 1878.

Mr. BLAKE. Are the whole reports published?

Mr. McLELAN. The answer given me is, that the whole report is published.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman will find that hardly accurate.—Does the report of the surveyor, or the report of the inspector give any particulars on the subject of the improvements made by settlers or squatters on the Prince Albert Colonisation Company's tract?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; the report of the surveyor gives the fullest details as to the settlers found upon the Prince Albert Colonisation Company's tract, as is the practice in the case of every squatter or settler found upon any surveyed lands. Section 36, 2nd Nov., 1883; Joseph Dufresne, house (log) partly built, about 4 acres broken. Section 2, John Toogood, house (log) partly finished, about 5 acres broken. Section 14, George Alexander McLeod, house (log) 15½ x 16, 32 acres broken and cropped, 120 acres fenced, logs out for stable 30 x 40. St. George claims land adjoining Joseph Dufresne, on which he has erected a log house and broken 4 acres; had been on the place 2 months, but was absent at the time of my visit, 12th August, 1884; had made no entry. Township 45 A, range 28, west of the second meridian, section 24, Maxime Lapine, Norbert Turcotte; these two lay claim to this section, but have neither made entry nor improvements; at present they reside in township 45, range 28, where they have made improvements. Norman Mackenzie, no residence; 20 acres cropped. André Letendre, no residence, house; 30 acres broken. Michel Dumas, no residence, 5 acres broken; logs out for house. Alexander McDougall, no residence, 5 acres broken; logs out for house. Chas. Boucher, lives with his father, 3 acres in crop. Solomon Boucher, lives with his father, 10 acres in crop. Baptiste Boucher, house, etc., 3 years residence, 35 acres in crop. I need not go through the whole list. These are the particulars, as given by the surveyor, which the inspector confirmed. These are not placed on record until confirmed by the inspector.

PROPERTY OCCUPIED BY JOHN HENEY.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Does John Heney, of Ottawa, hold the property occupied by him, south of the Sappers' Bridge and West of the Rideau Canal in Ottawa, under lease from the Government? If so, what is the term of the lease and the amount of the annual rent? If not under lease, by what right does he occupy the property?

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Heney was permitted, about 1867, on representations made by the Department of Public Works, to pile cordwood (which he had contracted to supply to the Government for the heating of the public buildings) on the portion of ordnance lands mentioned. The permission has been renewed under the successive contracts made by Mr. Heney with the Department of Public Works for the same purpose. He has no lease of the ground, and pays no rent.

STOCKHOLDERS OF GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, Does the Government intend to take any steps to enforce the Order of the House of last Session, of the 28th March, 1884, calling for a statement showing the names of all stockholders in the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, with the amount of stock held by each of said stockholders at the close of the first year after the charter was granted or operations commenced; also the names of all stockholders in said company and the amounts of stock held by each on the first day of the current year?

Does the Government intend to take any steps to enforce the Order of the House of the 24th February last, for a list of the names in detail, with the residence or business address, of each of the several stockholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, on the first day of January last?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government intend to take steps in the matter.

MR. MATTHEW ROACH.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Has the Pilotage Commission of the locality been remodelled with a view to remove Mr. Matthew Roach, of Lingan, Cape Breton, or is it intended to do so? On what ground is Mr. Roach deprived of office?

Mr. McLELAN. The Pilotage Commission has been remodelled, but not to remove Mr. Matthew Roach. He is a member of one of the boards.

Mr. BLAKE. Of which board is he a member?

Mr. McLELAN. There was a Board of Pilot Commissioners embracing the ports of North Sydney and the outports of Lingan and Cow Bay. Mr. Roach lived in one of the outer districts. I appointed two Boards of Pilot Commissioners, one board for North Sydney and an outer board, on which Mr. Roach is one of the commissioners.

DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST—THANKS TO THE TROOPS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I give notice generally for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to this resolution. My intention is to move a specific resolution. If I am not strong enough to do justice to the subject, I will ask my hon. friend the Minister of Militia to do so for me. I shall ask now that the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) will second the resolution.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. POPE. I have given notice of certain resolutions in the Committee of the Whole. I would ask if the House will allow me to move those resolutions after six o'clock.

Mr. BLAKE. I was about to enquire what the views of the Government were as to the business now before the House, or as to any further business which they propose to bring before the House, and as to what they think in regard to the date of prorogation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the present intention of the Government to bring down any further measures or to call the attention of the House to any subjects other than to those which are now on the Orders of the Day. I hope, if the state of public business will allow it, that we shall prorogue on Saturday, or at the latest on Monday. Of course, that depends altogether upon the length of the discussions upon the matters now before the House.

THE WRIT FOR ST. JOHN.

Mr. WELDON. I understand that the Speaker's warrant for the issue of a writ for the city and county of St. John was placed in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on Friday last, and, on enquiry, I find that no writ has been issued up to the present moment. I think that, under the statute, the writ must be issued immediately on the receipt of the Speaker's warrant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will enquire about it.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

On the Order for resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Caron, that Bill (No. 141) respecting the administration of justice and other matters in the North-West Territories, be now read a third time, and the motion of Mr. Mills in amendment thereto,

Mr. CARON. The consideration of the present Bill—

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has already spoken to the amendment.

Mr. CARON. I am under the impression that I spoke on another motion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. No; you spoke on this amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think I have spoken on this matter, and I would say at once that I am strongly opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I am of the opinion that it is necessary for the peace and good government of that country, and for the restoration of confidence among the white people and settlers of that country, that this Bill should be carried out, and that the clauses should be adopted as they have already been adopted in Committee of the Whole. The object of the measure is simply to prevent arms of precision and of fixed ammunition from being in the hands of persons whom it is not deemed safe to entrust with such arms. In order to carry out the provisions of the Bill effectually, I think it is necessary that these clauses should be adopted, and the authorities in the North-West think it is of primary importance that these provisions should be carried out. The Bill provides that every person in the North-West Territories:

"Without the permission in writing (the proof of which shall be on him) of the Lieutenant-Governor, or of a commissioner appointed by him to give such permission, has in his possession or sells, exchanges, trades, barter or gives to, or with any person, any improved arm or ammunition shall be liable to a penalty."

Now I do not think, when it is known that it is for the purpose of preventing arms being in the hands of persons who ought not to have them, that a single loyal man in the North-West will object. I think if the whole of this House of Commons were now settlers in the North-West they would be quite ready to give an account of their rifles or revolvers, and to say that they had these arms. There can be no trouble whatever with respect to this matter. There will be commissioners appointed in every settlement, respectable gentlemen, who will simply enter in a register the name of every white settler who chooses to give his name and to say: I have a Winchester rifle, or I have such an arm. Now, Sir, the outbreak in the North-West did not originate with the Indians proper, but with the half-breeds, and with the white rebels, disloyal men. We can easily manage the Indians, but we cannot so easily manage the "white Indians," as an hon. gentleman calls them. It is of great importance that we should be able to trace the arms. This Bill is not to take any effect whatever, except in those portions of the North-West where the Government believe, from information, that danger might arise from the use or the possession of arms, and until that district is declared to be within the terms of the Act, there will be no objection on the part of loyal men; the disloyal men who wish to conceal their arms, may, perhaps, object. Then, Sir, if we confine this to the Indians and half-breeds, and leave out the white men, it will have a very bad effect. As I have said, the leaders in the outbreak have been half-breeds, who, through their superior education, have used their influence on the Indians, for the purpose of exciting them. Well, I cannot fancy a greater source of irritation to the loyal half-breeds than that they should be singled out, that their houses are searched, and that they are to give up their arms, or to give an account of their arms, while the whites are allowed to go free. There are loyal half-breeds, I am very glad to say, as well as disloyal half-breeds, and they will feel it as a great insult if they are proscribed especially in the Act, while every white man, whether loyal or disloyal, should have the right to keep arms, while the half-breed, because he is a half-breed, should not have the same privilege. But we put in the Act that all persons, loyal or disloyal—if in a proclaimed district, mind you, in a district where there is information that there is danger in this direction, and after the proclamation is issued—that all persons, white, red, or between the two, should give an account of their arms. Unless this is done there is no means of tracing the arms. The moment that any person, white, red or half-breed, seeks to have an arm registered he can always be called on to give an account of what he does with it. If you had not such a check the Bill is comparatively useless. Now, in the temporary Act that was passed in consequence of the violence of certain parties in Canada in 1878, it is provided that:

“From and after the day named in, and during the continuance in force of such first named proclamation, it shall not be lawful for any person, not being a justice of the peace, or an officer, soldier, sailor or volunteer, in Her Majesty's service, while on duty, or a constable or other peace officer, or a person licensed under this Act, to carry or have within the proclaimed district, elsewhere than in his own dwelling-house, shop, warehouse or counting-house, any arm; and any person carrying or having any arm contrary to this provision, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.”

That Act was passed by the late Administration in consequence of riots in Quebec, and a very proper Act it was. It was for the purpose of preventing arms being used by any persons. True, that case and the present are different. In that case, unfortunately, there were riots, and people appeared on the streets, on the wharves, or wherever the fight was, with arms in their hands, and it was necessary to provide that no person should appear with arms, during the existence of this Act, in the street. They might keep the arms which belonged to them in their own house. Now the reason of that Act was very properly to prevent riots, whether trade riots, or riots between workmen, or whatever they were, and that Act, I dare say, had its good effect. The same principle is attempted to be carried out here, that in any district where there is reasonable suspicion of discontent, such as may lead to insurrection or outbreak, every person in the district shall be called upon by the enabling magistrate, or the commissioner appointed for the locality, to say: I have got such an arm, and no person will have any reason to object. We have just got through one outbreak, and I hope there will not be another. But both the Indian authorities and other authorities in the North-West are cautioning us to take care against giving any chance for a recurrence of the unhappy event of the last few months. I, therefore, ask the House to reject the motion of the hon. gentleman opposite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am very sorry the Government after consideration have not seen fit to accept the hon. member's amendment. I really think that had the hon. gentleman possessed personal and particular acquaintance with the state of affairs in the North-West he would have come to the same conclusion that many of his own followers who have that particular acquaintance with the country have arrived at, and that conclusion as stated by them on the floor of the House was this: That owing to the enormous distance over which the settlers are scattered, owing to the habits and feelings of the settlers, one of two results will follow: Either this measure will become practically a dead letter and utterly inoperative, which I suspect will be the result if it is placed on the Statute book; or else it will work a considerable amount of positive mischief. Any one who knows anything of the feelings of the inhabitants is aware that they regard the right to have arms, and arms of the best pattern, as an indefeasible right, as a thing which every settler going into that country, and particularly under existing circumstances, feels he has a moral as well as a legal right to possess. There is no doubt whatever that if this act is attempted to be put into force, very considerable heartburning and dissatisfaction will be caused. That I think everybody who knows anything of the habits of our people and particularly of pioneer settlers, whether in this country or in the United States, will admit to be a matter of fact. It may be said this is a sentimental consideration. I say a sentimental consideration is a consideration of weight in these cases. Our people will not like to be subject to the reproach that they are not to be trusted with arms by the Government—that they are to be deprived of a right which has never been attempted to be taken away from settlers on the other side of the border. I do not believe there is much weight in the statement that has been made that any of the white settlers are at all likely to instigate an outbreak. It may be there were some of those men who were desirous of seeing their grievances attended to; but I do not think, and the response to arms made throughout the North-West proves it, those settlers are in the slightest degree disposed to countenance anything like armed revolt against the Government, no matter what their grievances might be. None were readier and none suffered more than the white settlers of Prince Albert, among whom, as I understand from the statements of some members of the Government, any dissatisfaction which existed among the whites had its centre. Then there are some other considerations we must bear in mind. The hon. gentleman lays the onus on the white settlers of obtaining a permit. If the hon. gentleman does not know, those who are acquainted with the North-West know, that the settlers are scattered on a very wide extent of country, and unless officials are sent to the various settlements for the purpose of conferring with the settlers there will be very great inconvenience, as the settlers living in some remote place will have to travel a great distance in order to see an official who could give this permit. It is the outlying settler who most wants and has most right to have the best arms of which he can possess himself. We must recollect, as the hon. gentleman said, that the Indian mind will be for a considerable period of time unsettled. There is no one thing which will give more confidence to the white population who are scattered among those Indian tribes than the possession of a good and superior quality of firearm, and the First Minister must know that now-a-days no man feels himself safe with a muzzle loader. Every man who is in the habit of using firearms has become habituated to the use of the improved weapons, and they will bitterly resent this proposition to deprive them of those arms. And we must also see that in attempting to enforce this Act, very great partiality may be used. It may be made the instrument of very serious oppression on the part of Government officials, who may exercise personal or party spite, who may refuse to loyal men arms, or may cause them to be fined under the provisions of this Act. As to the third point made by the hon. gentleman, that you could not discriminate between the whites and the half-breeds, I say that is not necessary. There is no reason whatever why we should not grant a liberal measure of power to carry arms to the loyal half-breeds, who, I am willing to believe, are by far the most numerous portion of the half-breeds, in spite of all that has occurred. They can be granted this permission. I do not think we have a right to say, after what has occurred, that the Government might not exercise some supervision over the issue of arms to the half-breeds. It must be remembered that some of that body have broken out into armed revolt, as well as the Indians, and it is judicious, perhaps, to give the Government the right to enforce severe provisions in regard to carrying arms by those people. I must protest, however, against applying the same regulations to the white population—and I would protest very much more strongly if I was not pretty well convinced that when the hon. gentleman comes to put the measure into force it will become, as I have said, practically a dead letter, and it will resemble the hon. gentleman's famous proposition to exchange the Snider rifles of the police for the Winchester rifles of the Indians. He did not succeed in carrying out that project, and he will not succeed in giving effect to this legislation. Even the hon. gentleman's own supporters regard this measure with disgust. I do not think it is desirable to disarm the white population of the North-West. It is a totally distinct thing from applying an Act such as the hon. gentleman has quoted, where there is a dense population and where, as in the greater part of the old settled country, the use of arms is a luxury and arms are not required to be carried for the protection of personal property. But take the case of unfortunate isolated settlers. Perhaps such settlers are 20 or 30 miles from the nearest white family. To say that either they must not carry arms or be subject to a fine if they do, appears to be a most pedantic piece of legislation, and I regret exceedingly that the Government have not seen their way to accept the amendment of my hon. friend or some modification of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I desire, if I may be allowed, to read a portion of a letter written by a white man to a white man. For obvious reasons I do not give the names now, but they are well known in the North-West. The hon. gentleman says he thinks there is no danger from the action of the white people. Now, the writer of this letter is well known in the North-West and the person to whom it is written is well known in the North West. That gentleman says that he thinks there has not been since the commencement of the agitation, a better time to strike than at present; that everything seems ripe for it, he is certain that seven-eighths of the people of Winnipeg are in their favor, and he is certain 400 or 500 good men would accomplish their object without any difficulty whatever; that there is nothing to resist; that the military there would not prove a serious obstacle; that they would have easy access to the arms; they had a small meeting that night; that they determined to strike at once; that the parties there thought if they delayed they would be losing ground, and that the thing would never be accomplished. He says that he would like to know the probable number of men who could be got to assist in the scheme, and he expresses his perfect sympathy with it, and his readiness to take an active part in it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the date?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was written in 1884, and that is from one white man well known in that country to another white man who is also well known.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the date?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The date is 1884.

Mr. BURPEE. I received a letter from a party in the North-West, and I can vouch that not only he is loyal, but he is not a Grit even, but a very staunch Conservative. I was very well acquainted with him in New Brunswick, where he did a good deal of business, and he now does a good deal of business in the North-West. He says:

"The classing of the white man on a par with the Indian in the use of the rifle I am more than astonished. I fear they—that is the Government—have lost their cunning. I do not belong to a cowardly stock, and never till to-day have I owned a gun; but since I read this morning the statement that it was only at the Government's sufferance that the whites would be allowed the use of a rifle, I bought one, and I do not intend to ask any man to be allowed to keep it or use it when I require to do so. If it is not too much trouble, you can tell Sir John 'them's my sentiments,' and the whole North-West will endorse them. I am a Conservative, but not a slave or serf."

The gentleman is well known to hon. gentlemen in this House.

Mr. ORTON. I still regret that the Government find it absolutely necessary to introduce this measure. I am certain it will create a good deal—

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman has spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman has spoken on the amendment, and will have to wait until it is disposed of.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman spoke on the 2nd of July.

Mr. CASEY. This is the first time we have ever had to discuss in this House a question of this nature, and I hope it will be the last time, except on the occasion when this Bill comes to be repealed, and I do not think there will be much discussion on it then, for I think one or two years experience will convince this Government that they have lost their cunning, not to say their statesmanship, when they introduced this Bill, and that it will prove intensely unpopular, and will arouse such a feeling of deep indignation throughout the whole of Canada, that they will be only too glad to repeal it. It is a question which it is hard to discuss with ordinary coolness and calmness. The proposition is one to disarm full citizens of this Dominion; men who are living amongst excited savages, men who must have improved rifles for the safety of their lives and the lives of their families, men who in many cases must have improved rifles in order to obtain sustenance for themselves and their families by the chase. It is a proposal to disarm them, under what circumstances? Whenever the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories chooses to fancy that they are disloyal. The leader of the House said it would only apply to proclaimed districts, and to rebellious people. He read a telegram saying it was necessary to apply it in the case of the Indians and half-breeds. We are not discussing that question, but we are discussing an amendment by the hon. member for Bothwell, which asks that the provisions of the Bill should be relaxed so far only as concerns the white settlers, and the question now is: Are the white settlers to be subject to this disarmament? He said they would only be disarmed when they were rebellious whites, and he told us the Government considered it absolutely necessary to have the power to take these arms out of the hands of the people whom they consider to be rebellious in the North-West. They consider the frontier settler of the north-west to be rebellious and disloyal. Wait till the frontier settler hears about that, and until they hear the information upon which the Government have accused them in this wanton way of disloyalty! They have never shown a sign of disloyalty; they have given no excuse for the insult that is heaped upon them by telling them that they are disloyal. They have agitated for their rights in a constitutional way; they have stood up for their rights; and that is the gravamen of the charge against them. They have shown the badness of the hon. gentleman's policy, and while that policy had to be changed in many cases, in accordance with the desires of those settlers, in consequence of representations and claims made by those settlers, the hon. gentleman takes his revenge by calling them rebellious, and by asking from this House power to take away from them the arms on which their life and their means of livelihood may, and often do, depend.

Mr. FARROW. The hon. gentleman is working up a second rebellion by this talk.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for North Huron says: Work up a rebellion. Well, if there was anything better calculated to work up a rebellion than this Bill proposed by the right hon. gentleman, I have no doubt hon. gentlemen would have found it.

Mr. FARROW. The hon. gentleman has no right—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman can explain after the hon. member for Elgin is through.

Mr. FARKOW. I have a right to explain now, when he is putting words in my mouth.

Mr. CASEY. You have no right to interrupt.

Mr. FARROW. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BAKER (Missisquoi). The hon. member for Elgin says that the hon. member for Huron interrupted him by saying: Work up a rebellion. The hon. member for Huron rises to say that he said no such thing, but that he said: You are working up a second rebellion by such talk.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is not in order in interrupting a member when he is speaking, unless that member sits down and agrees to the interruption being made. The contradiction of the hon. gentleman can come at the end of the hon. member's speech.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Huron was distinctly out of order, on the showing of the hon. member for Missisquoi, for it is no point of order to contradict a statement. I do not object, however, to hearing what the hon. gentleman did say. He said I was working up a second rebellion—that this sort of talk was working up a rebellion. I say if there is anything calculated to arouse just that sort of feeling and hatred, which may be inflamed by designing parties into a rebellion, it is an insulting Bill of this kind, for the disarmament of men whom some local jack-in-office—some Dewdney—may choose to call disloyal. If anybody is to be accused of working up a second rebellion—I do not say anybody is to be so accused—it should be the contriver of this Bill. I have no doubt, judging from the past criminal blundering of this Government in dealing with the white settlers of the North-West, as well as the Indians and half-breeds, that if there had been anything more likely than this Bill to excite the minds of the settlers in that country, to prevent new settlers coming in, and to turn their feelings against Canada as against a stepmother, the genius of blundering which this Government display would have led them to propose it. What is the present proposal? To create a new Ireland in the North-West. The right hon. leader of the House said this is like the Act passed in 1878 to prevent people carrying arms in the streets with the view of avoiding a riot. Like that, indeed! There is not the ghost of a comparison between the prohibition to carry arms immediately after a riot in a town, and to prevent people carrying arms when they live in an unsettled country, to protect themselves against wild beasts and Indians. There is no comparison between those two cases; but there is a case exactly parallel to this which English rule has created in Ireland, whether rightly or wrongly I am not discussing. The right hon. leader of the Government proposes to treat the people of the whole North-West as if they were not loyal, and leave it to whomsoever happens to be his representative there under the influence of any petty jealousy or petty offence or petty spleen, to take away arms from the white people of the North-West. The hon. gentleman said he read a letter from one white man to another white man, prominent people of the city of Winnipeg, proposing rebellion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. CASEY. We do not know who his whites are, or whether they are possessed of the importance he fancies or not; we do not know what the real drift of the letter he read is. If we had the whole letter, and knew the circumstances under which it was written, we could judge; but supposing it did propose to rebel, it only amounts to this: that he has found one white man in the Province of Manitoba who proposed a rebellion; but from the fact that it did not take place and that nothing was heard about it, we must conclude that that man did not find any seconder for his proposal, and that the proposal in this Bill is one that gains no support from that letter. The letter is no evidence of any rebellion; according to the hon. gentleman's own construction of it, it only suggested that a rebellion or a riot or something of that kind would be a good move. Is the hon. gentleman going to propose to disarm all the people of Winnipeg or all the people of the neighborhood in which that man lives? Is he going to justify himself by doing that, or is he going to stultify himself by reading that letter and then taking no action in the neighborhood of the writer? But if that letter meant rebellion, if it meant what he wishes us to believe it meant—disaffection among the white settlers in the North-West—and if it was written in 1884, it is only another instance of the warnings the Government have received from time to time of rebellion in the North-West—warnings which they have disregarded, with the consequence that we have been subjected to a great expenditure of money and loss of life this year. We have here to note what the hon. gentleman and his friends have considered to be a loyal man in the North-West. Constantly before this rebellion broke out, and since we have had, in their newspapers, in this House, and from the hon. gentleman himself, the accusation that the white settlers who were guilty, as they call it, of agitating against the Government, guilty of organising to make their claims against the Government and to obtain their rights under the constitution were rebels. What shall we conclude? We shall conclude that every man who joins in an agitation against the Canadian Pacific Railway or against this Government and every man who considers himself aggrieved, is to be regarded as a rebel and is to be disarmed. The letter read by the hon. member for Sunbury (Mr. Burpee) states what even Conservatives in the North-West think of this measure, and what Conservatives all over the Dominion think of it; and I warn the hon. gentleman that this is a matter which will rouse excitement not in the North-West alone. The people in the North-West are our brothers and our relatives in more than a mere sentimental sense. Everyone of them has relatives and friends throughout old Canada, and every indignity and insult which is put upon these loyal white settlers—and I believe you can call them to a man loyal to Canada—will be felt by tens of thousands of people throughout the rest of the Dominion; and the hon. gentleman will find that the indignation he has aroused will not be confined to the localities in which he has stripped the people of their weapons. This Act has taken us back to a period long past when attempts were made to prevent disaffection amongst the citizens of a country by depriving them of their arms. It is going back to Tory precedents, which I thought even the hon. gentleman would have hesitated to resort to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Taking us back to the Gladstone Government. He is not a Tory.

Mr. CASEY. Who is responsible for the policy the Gladstone Government carried out? Who is responsible for the policy of repression in Ireland, which has had to be carried out subsequently by the Gladstone Government? The hon. gentleman knows it was not Mr. Gladstone who introduced the prohibition to carry arms in Ireland; he knows that it was introduced long before Mr. Gladstone's time. But we are not discussing the misdeeds of Mr. Gladstone; we are discussing the misdeeds of the right hon. gentleman, and I say he is taking a very futile weapon out of the old Tory armory with which to coerce the people in the North-West. And we will find that the weapon will be ineffectual, and that its recoil will be more serious than its discharge. He will find that by trying to make these people, as my hon. friend says, serfs and slaves, and to deprive them of their constitutional rights as freemen, he is taking a course which will redound neither to his own honor nor profit, nor to the peacefulness and quiet of the country. It is quite possible that its peacefulness and quiet may be disturbed without there being any riot or tumult. When these people feel that they are being insulted and put down, and placed in actual peril of their lives by this Government, the peace of that country is broken, although they may be kept perfectly quiet and may make no public uproar. But they will be in a ferment until the time will come when they get money enough to leave the country that has so treated them, to go to a country where men are free, where the pioneers and the settlers are free, where they have arms to defend themselves against beasts and savages, and to kill animals for their food. That is a sort of feeling which would arise in the minds of those men. It will certainly retard the settlement of the country like so many of the blundering acts of this Government for years.

Mr. CURRAN. I desire to say a few words on this subject, more particularly after the speech of the last gentleman, which will be known to future generations, no doubt, as "Casey's warning." We have had had introduced into this subject not only the hardships and the heart-burnings that are to be endured by the people of the North-West, but we have had also introduced here by the last speaker the real or supposed misdeeds of Tory rule in Ireland, and we were told that the right hon. the leader of the Government was endeavoring to revive the old time persecutions that were being inaugurated by that party. It appears to me that if we are to look for any good authority on this point as to who really were the culprits in that particular, I cannot call to my assistance a better witness than the late lamented Daniel O'Connell, who said that it was the "base, brutal and bloody Whigs" who had inflicted the most grievous wrongs on that country. But without going to ancient history or travelling much over the past, I think we have, in the present instance, before the eyes of the world, the fact that the Tory Government recently formed in England has undertaken to rule Ireland without any coercion, which Mr. Gladstone said he could not do. However let that rest. I imagine it will take something more than the remarks of the hon. gentleman to excite the sympathy he would like to create, to arouse the feelings he desires to awaken in the hearts of a certain section of the people of this country. What we have to consider is, what is the duty of the Government in the present instance. We have been told that the policy now about to be inaugurated by the Government is a policy that will be unpopular in a certain section of the country. That is not the question. The Government of the day may be obliged to do what is very unpopular in the interests of the country at large. It is not a question whether certain people's sentiments will be ruffled or not, but whether the interests of the country demand this legislation, and we are told, from information in the possession of the Government, this policy is absolutely necessary, and further that the very best means of making this legislation as far from being oppressive as possible is about being adopted. We have it in this Bill that no district is to be brought under the operation of the law without having been first proclaimed. Is it likely the Government, from mere wantonness, mere desire of oppression, with the most ample means of information at their disposal, would undertake to render themselves unpopular by proclaiming a district without being amply justified in doing so by the information in their possession. It is not at all likely. A district will have to be proclaimed just as the districts are proclaimed under what is commonly known as "the Blake Act." Reference has been made to that particular Act, which is a very good law. I have had a good deal to do, myself, in connection with the administration of that piece of legislation, and the reference made to it was merely to show that as, under the Act against the carrying of firearms in certain districts, these districts have to be proclaimed, so, under the present Act, the district to be brought under its operation will also have to be proclaimed. We are told no comparison can be drawn; I do not think any comparison is sought to be drawn as between the two, but I will say that from my own knowledge it is difficult to conceive a law under which greater hardship may arise than the Blake Act. Under the rulings of the courts on the manner in which the Blake Act is drawn a man can, not only be tried and convicted for having firearms in his possession, but if he has only a bullet in his pocket, a cap, any particular piece of the fire arm, whether it be the handle, the trigger, or any other portion, he is liable to be convicted. This is not a case drawn from imagination; more than one case of this kind has come under my particular notice in the courts of law, and I contend that, just as certain people, under peculiar circumstances, may find fault with the legislation in that case, so in this instance we have to look, not to the popularity or unpopularity of the law, but to the question as to whether it is in the interests of the community at large that it should be carried out. Under all these circumstances, I feel that it is right to support the Government in the present instance, more particularly as no advantage will be taken and due warning will be given to a district in which this law is put into operation. It will be proclaimed before the law affects any particular district, and if it is in the interests of the law abiding population.

Mr. HICKEY. Everybody must be well satisfied that the loyal men in the Dominion will be willing to submit to the laws of Parliament, and for gentlemen to talk lightly of rebellion because of laws passed in this Parliament unsuitable to their minds, is casting a reflection on the country which is undeserved. Whatever observations hon. gentlemen might have to make on a Bill of this kind, it comes with bad grace at this time to talk of rebellion. What I rose to my feet for was to propose the adjournment of the debate, in order that a couple of gentlemen, who otherwise would be debarred from giving their views on this matter, and who are well acquainted with the North-West, may have an opportunity of doing so. I, therefore, move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. ROYAL. I rise to state that I was under rather a misapprehension the other day when the debate took place on the motion in amendment. I was under the misapprehension that the provisions of the Bill would have immediate effect throughout all the North-West Territories. I should have thought at that time of the true latin maxim timeo Danaos et dona ferentes, and I should have thought there was something very wrong or captious in the motion of the hon. gentleman. However, I then expressed myself, as I thought just and fair, being under the misapprehension that the provisions of the Act would apply to the whole of the North-West Territories and the white population. On reading attentively the Bill, and having heard the explanations made by the right hon. the leader of the Government, and also the remarks made by hon. gentleman opposite, I believe this measure is a very wise one. No doubt if it had had existence before the outbreak, its wise and judicious application then would certainly have prevented the unfortunate occurrences which we all lament. The provisions of this Bill only apply to those portions of the North-West Territories which are proclaimed by the Lieutenant Governor in respect to the provision as to the carrying of arms. I do not see that any evil can arise from such an application of the law. On the other hand, the law applies equally to all races, whether white or red or half-breed. It is well known that the law shall not discriminate against one race more than another. It is also very well known that the white settlers of Prince Albert and other places had a great deal to do—perhaps the utmost to do—with the late outbreak, and therefore I do not see that anyone can say that the Government is discriminating in the application of the law under this Bill against one race or another. I would, however, call the attention of the Government to the fact that, very often, the application of wise laws has been made detrimental by the character of the officers who have been entrusted with the application of the Act. There is a great deal in the manner in which the officer applies the law, the manner in which an officer goes amongst the natives, the white population or the Indians, and impresses upon them the necessity of the law and the wisdom of its enactments. If this law is carried out by wise and judicious persons, I believe a great deal of good may result from it. If, on the other hand, it is carried out by officers who consider themselves, the moment they set foot in the North-West Territories, as Persian shahs, or monarch, or czars, many bad results will arise from it; and I cannot too much impress upon the Government the amount of wisdom which should be exercised in the appointment of the officers who will be entrusted with the application of this law.

Mr. ORTON. After the explanations I have heard from the Premier in regard to the mode in which this Bill is to be enforced, the chief objection which I felt against it is removed. It seemed to leave in the hands of the one man power of the North-West the privilege of stating who should carry arms and who should not, and I felt that such a power would be a very wrong one to entrust to one man, and that it would be resented by the people of the North-West Territories. It is already felt that there is too much power, in matters up there, devolving upon one individual, and that the discrimination may not be altogether very wise sometimes. I believe, if that were so in reference to this Bill, it would be very much resented by the people; but, after the explanations which have been given, it appears that parties are to be appointed only in the proclaimed districts in sufficient numbers to prevent it being a hardship to the white settlers to obtain a license to carry arms. Therefore, I can see no particular objection to the Bill, especially when, from the evidence the Premier has given, it appears that the people up there in an excited condition. It is known, at any rate, that the Indians are not in a quiet condition at the present time. It may be that even some half-breeds and some whites are in an unsatisfactory condition. Therefore, I shall have great pleasure in voting for the adoption of the Bill, but at the same time I wish to express the hope that the Government will not find it necessary to enforce such a measure for any length of time, and I think that every encouragement should be given to the loyal white settlers in the North-West Territory, to have firearms in their possession, so that they may be able to defend themselves against the Indians. The white settlers all have firearms in their houses, and I do not think the disloyalty of the white population is very extensive. It is true that a number of them, during the farmers' union outcry, spoke in a way anything but loyal to Confederation or to Canada, and that was calculated to do a great deal of harm; and I regret that members were found in this House who endorsed the action taken by the farmers' union at that time. I think that any hon. member who attended any of those meetings, and heard the wild and injudicious statements made by leading members of the farmers' union must have felt that they were calculated to excite trouble.

Mr. WATSON. Unlike the other two gentlemen who spoke against the Bill the other day, I do not rise to excuse myself for voting for the amendment. Those gentlemen apparently cannot vote against the leader of the Government, and they have attempted to give reasons why they should not. The reasons they have given are no just reasons at all. They simply amount to this, that they would not vote against the leader of the Government. I look upon this Bill as one of the most unjust measures which have ever been introduced against a loyal set of white settlers, men who have proved themselves loyal to their Queen and country during the late troubles. There are a great many settlers there who are not loyal to this Government, and they cannot be blamed for that. They have grievances, as has been shown, and they have sent deputations down here and have represented those grievances to this Government, but those grievances have not been redressed. Unfortunately, a few of the half-breeds rose in rebellion, but, to pass an Act to deprive the loyal white settlers of having a rifle or a shotgun without a license from an officer of this Government is a proposition which should not pass this House; and I feel satisfied that, if anything could be done by the Government or by this House to make the people of the North-West disloyal, it is to deprive them of the right of other citizens in the Dominion to keep arms. It is accusing every white settler in the North-West of being a rebel. I hope the House will see fit to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), which I think is in the best interests of the people of the whole Dominion of Canada, and is only doing justice to the settlers in the North-West Territories. The member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) has stated that he believes the settlers in the North-West Territories should have the right to carry arms, but he states that, after the explanations of the First Minister, he thinks the Bill is all right. The member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) also stated that a few days ago he was not aware that the Bill provided that the affected districts only would be under the operation of the law. The Bill has not changed since he then spoke. He spoke what he honestly felt then, I believe, and what the majority of his constituents feel, and I do not think the majority of his constituents will endorse his action in depriving the settlers of having rifles and shot-guns in their possession. It is all very well for the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) to talk about farmers' unions and wander away from the question. It has been proved that the Government did a most unjust thing to the settlers in that section of the country when they disarmed them two or three years ago, because they virtually told them that they had no right to have arms in their possession, that they were not worthy to possess arms for the protection of the settlements in that section of the country. By virtue of that action on the part of the Government the rifle companies were disbanded, and I believe that if they had not been disbanded we would not have had this unfortunate rebellion in the North-West.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) I fear that the law proposed by the Government, whose aim appears to be to prevent a recurrence of the rebellion in the North-West, by prohibiting the sale of arms by white men to half-breeds or others, might prove a preventive which would be worse than the evil itself. For, Mr. Speaker, when people will come into the house of a white settler, of a free man, and propose to take away his arms from him—as I do not see, in the proposed law, any clause authorising the Government officials to indemnify the settler for the arms which will be taken away from him—and without giving him any explanation on the bearing of that law, I believe that that man will be exceedingly dissatisfied with the policy of the Government, and will be rather inclined to side with those who, in the future, may take up arms against the constituted authority. I consider, Mr. Speaker, that to leave the application of such a law to officers appointed by the Government would be an act of imprudence on our part. We have experience as to the ability of a certain number of Government officials. We have had experience as to their conduct towards the half-breeds of the North-West. The last rebellion is certainly due to vexations of which Government officials are the cause and the authors. Although not holding the Government themselves responsible for the conduct of their officials in the late rebellion, I say that the Government officials, by their conduct towards the population of the North-West, have certainly been connected with the late rebellion, and that they are responsible to a great extent for it, as are also a certain number of the mounted policemen. Now, for my part, I do not desire to assume the responsibility of voting a law which would authorise the appointment of new Government officials—because this law authorises the appointment of new officials—and which also authorises these officials to annoy the population, and especially the white men of the North-West.

Amendment of Mr. Hickey, to adjourn debate, negatived.

CHARGES AGAINST THE VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. CARON. I desire to read a telegram that I have just received, which answers the question that was put to me by my hon. friend the member for Provencher (Mr. Royal). It is signed by the General :

"In answer to yours of the 10th, I have to say that Donald Ross after shooting Captain French, as was supposed, was shot dead. A few minutes after I saw his daughter sitting beside it, and I heard since that the priests afterwards buried it. As regards Jamase Carriere and Vandal, I never heard their names. I was riding all over the field until late, backwards and forwards, and had any such disgraceful acts occurred I must have seen them. I found one wounded man myself and sent for a stretcher, which was brought on by some of the men. The man was taken to our own hospital. The whole statement is a foul calumny. I repeat again that the conduct of the men has been wonderfully good. We had five wounded men of the enemy brought into our hospital—all carried in by the soldiers themselves."

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

To provide for the salaries of two mining geologists as 2nd class clerks in the Geological Survey branch, at $1,200 per annum, and one 2nd class clerk at $1,100 $3,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before this resolution was concurred in the Minister in charge promised to give further information as regards one of the parties appointed to the office.

Mr. McLELAN. I have been furnished this statement :

"Mr. Eugene Ooste has been temporarily employed in the Geological Survey Branch, since the 1st July, 1883, as a mining geologist. He is a graduate of the School of Mines, Paris, France. He has been appointed a second class clerk in that branch, at $1,100 per annum, to take effect from the 1st instant. Mr. Elfric D. Ingall has been temporarily employed also as a mining geologist, in the Geological Survey Branch, since 1st July, 1884. He is an Associate of the Royal School of Mines, London, England. He has been appointed a second class clerk in that branch at a salary of $1,00 per annum, to take effect from the 1st July instant. The work of both gentlemen is purely technical and professional, their duties being to report upon the mining industries of the Dominion, to collect mineral statistics, and otherwise work out the economic geology of our mining districts."

Administration of Justice — North-West Territories ..... $20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this vote some additional information was promised as to the mode in which it was to be expended, and the purpose for which it was required.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position to give any more information than I gave to the committee last night. I enquired of the Minister of Justice to-day to ascertain the purposes for which this money was to be expended. He said the sum was only an approximate one, and that it was impossible to say what expenses would be incurred in the conduct of the trials which will take place at Regina; it is to pay the legal expenses, expenses of witnesses and other contingencies that will have to be met in the trial of, perhaps, 20 or 30 individuals who have been engaged in the late troubles in the North-West. He said it was utterly impossible for him to give a detailed statement for me to lay before the House. The only information he could give was that which I have just stated.

Welland Canal—Land and damages, &c..... $21,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take this opportunity of enquiring from the Government whether the canal tolls on all articles have been reduced to 2 cents, or whether the reduction applies to only particular articles.

Mr. McLELAN. To cereals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the Government estimate the probable loss of revenue.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not more than $20,000.

Harbors and Rivers—Ontario ..... $54,750

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I called attention some time ago to the condition of Bayfield harbor, and I now desire to ask whether the Minister can give information with respect to the works undertaken to open the harbor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry the hon. gentleman was not present the other evening when I brought down a statement and made full explanation, which will be found in Hansard. And I did more than that, for I obtained two photographs of the work. The work was proceeded with; I will not give the exact figures now, but the hon. gentleman I am sure will be satisfied with this. A dredge was sent there and we found that the bar at the mouth of the harbor had increased, and it was necessary to cut it to a certain extent, in order to allow fishing boats to go in and out. But the great work to be executed was to remedy the breach which had been made in one of the piers, and which gave another outlet to the water, so that we went to work and made pile work and brush work to fill up that breach. It was late in the fall of last year when that work was done, and the opening of the bar was left to be executed this spring. I understand that it is not done, or that the dredge is there at the mouth of the harbor doing that work. I may say that the other hon. gentleman, who stated that we had squandered the $4,000 which had been given by Parliament to open the harbor, was misinformed, for we just expended $200 to cut the bar, as I have just stated, and that money went for the legitimate and important work which has been performed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Minister know whether it is not open?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would enquire and let me know to-morrow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say further that we were waiting, in order that the material to be removed from the bar should be used in filling the cribs behind the pile work, so as to make the work more permanent.

Compilation, printing, and publishing correspondence, etc., respecting Provincial legislation... $500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me, though I do not object to this vote, that it must be very inadequate, or that it will cover but a small portion of the matter here referred to. The Minister of Customs, I think it was, undertook to make some enquiry about the matter.

Mr. BOWELL. I enquired with reference to this item from the Minister of Justice, and he said it was for the purpose of collating all correspondence with reference to the legislation of the different Provinces, affecting more particularly the question of disallowance, and that he thought it would be much better to have it published in one small book, as a work of reference on that particular question. But he said that he thought it was $1,500 he had asked, instead of $500.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this amount for printing or collating?

Mr. BOWELL. It is for both.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman know how much is for collating and how much for printing?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I cannot say. I supposed when the item was put in, that it was to cover the expenses, but when I was informed by the Minister of Justice that his recollection was that it should be $1,500, I took it for granted that this sum will not cover it.

Mr. BLAKE. In proposing a vote of this kind, we should know what the work is going to cost, because that may have a good deal to do with whether we ought to vote it or not. At a moderate expense, I think such a volume would be a great convenience. I may say that a vast mass of this correspondence was brought together by myself when I was Minister of Justice in 1876. I found that the returns theretofore made had been imperfect, and I brought down as far as I could, from the researches made in the Department, a complete set of every thing which took place from the beginning up to that date. Since that time motions have been made, and latterly returns have been delayed very long. One which was brought down this Session I have not been able to look at. What made that return which I brought down almost useless was this: It was brought down in chronological form, so that you could know from year to year what the course of opinion by Ministers of Justice and Governments had been upon this question; but the printing department printed it higgledy-piggledy, up and down, here and there, so that, as printed in the Sessional Papers, you do not know where to look for anything. I refer once more to another point on the vote which is before us, because it is due to this method of bringing down, or, when brought down rightly, to this method of public printing, that this vote is now on the Table. The system in the Department, in the accumulation of papers on a particular subject, is that a file is commenced. Of course this commences with the earliest documents in date. To that is added, from time to time, the accumulation of papers, so that everything is put on file in reverse order. Then, when a return is moved for in this House, instead of the officer in charge of the Department using his intelligence, or the officers in the Secretary of State's Department using their intelligence, and supplying the documents to Parliament in chronological order, they are brought down, if there is any order at all, in this reverse form, and you have to go back and search from the beginning. It is not merely that, but each document is of course at an unknown point in the series, and to get the document you want, you have to search back and forward. Now, I have had something to do with the handling of these documents in every Session, because a great many of them have come down from hon. gentlemen too late for any hope of being printed, and I fancy I read as many of these manuscripts as most hon. gentlemen. But this mode of bringing them down is evidently calculated to prevent the acquisition of the information they are supposed to embody. I hope that instructions will be given to have these returns brought down in a way which will give a little more convenience, and a little less trouble, in getting at their contents. If that were done, a great deal of this expense would be unnecessary, because of course the larger the bulk of these documents, the more difficult it is to use them. When it is in the chronological form, it is, as I have said, a work of an hour or perhaps more to find out the particular law as to which you want to find the action of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. I find that even in departmental work, when I send for papers on any given subject, they are in the reverse order as the hon. gentleman says, and sometimes they are in no order. I think we must amend our ways in this respect, which have been the same ever since we have had returns. The papers should be carefully arranged by the responsible officer in the Secretary of State's Department whose business it is to go over the returns no matter from what Department, and arrange them in some order, not only as to the dates, but also as to the subjects.

Mr. BOWELL. I think the remarks the hon. gentleman has made apply to the manner in which the returns have been printed in some instances after they have come to this House. If I understood aright the leader of the Opposition, he stated that some had come down arranged in chronological order, but when printed were all mixed up. That is a matter to which the attention of the Clerk of the Printing Committee should be called.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say for that officer, whose abilities I think are well known, that those returns, though brought down in chronological form, were not fastened together, and they may have been sent to the printing office in that condition and been upset by the printer.

DUTIES OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 157) to amend the several Acts relating to duties of Customs and Excise.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House resolve itself into committee on the Bill, and that it be an instruction of the committee that they have power to amend the Bill in conformity with the resolution which on the 13th day of this instant July, was reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, and then agreed to by the House. He said: I have adopted the exact wording of a similar motion made in the Imperial Parliament.

Motion agreed to, and Bill considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT, 1883.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that this House concur in the amendments made in the Senate to Bill (No. 146) to amend the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act of 1883. The first amendment is on page 4913, in the proviso for distilleries, inserting the word "hereafter." The other amendments are verbal, not affecting the principle of the Bill at all.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I do not think it is in the public interest that one-third of the newly made whiskey should be put on the market, and that an advantage should be given to men who come fresh into the business against the distillers who have been engaged in it for years. I do not think that clause has received the consideration it should have from the Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That question was raised before by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I stated then that, while it is desirable that this whiskey should be purified by being aged, it was not because I did not believe in that principle, but it was to meet the objection against placing the control of the liquor trade in the hands of the present distillers, and that, while we could not expect to make the whole system perfect at once, they would be brought under the operation of the Act by slow degrees.

Mr. BLAKE. This is one of the great disadvantages when we have any legislation of this description at all. I think it is a great misfortune that the hon. gentleman should attempt to prevent the sale in this way. I think the inducements given for the sale of this maturing commodity are all that has been done in any country with a view to sanitary considerations, and he confirmed that when he was asked if that was embodied in any other legislation, and he said no. I think this a vicious description of legislation. We know that the whiskey trade is practically in the hands of a monopoly. There are only five or six distillers in Canada, the two principal ones being in Toronto and Walkerville. My hon friend (Mr. Patterson) is of course acquainted with the excellence of the one in the county of Essex, and I find that this proposal, if it did not come from, has not been very much condemned by, the larger distillers. As it stood, this measure practically confirms their monopoly, a monopoly which is created in a large measure by the operation of the law, because the difference which exists, and which we have exaggerated this Session, between the Customs and Excise duty, gives an enormous protection to the small number of persons engaged in the trade. With only five or six firms engaged in this trade in the whole Dominion of Canada, facilities are given for combination which are of course availed of to the uttermost, so that the price is kept up practically at the duty point. It was pointed out that this was practically continuing the monopoly, and after consideration, the hon. gentleman proposed to the House this which is a compromise measure, and which possesses all the inconveniences of a compromise measure. I think the result of the whole proposal will be to rather help than hinder the monopoly. I believe it is rather calculated as it stands, even though there is a power in the case of a new distillery to permit the sale of a certain proportion of new whiskey, to give an advantage to those engaged in the old trade. There is a sense in which there is an advantage given to those who are now engaged in the trade, but they are reaping that now, and, in view of the enormous capital necessarily engaged in that trade, it would be practical prohibition if something of this kind did not come in. We are dealing in this case in this particular upon other considerations than those which we usually apply to the manufacture and consumption of liquor; this is not a prohibitory or restrictive measure, but is said by the Minister to be a sanitary measure, and is one of a very extreme kind. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman when he thinks that the manufacture of whiskey will become perfect under these provisions. I think he is in a sort of utopia with regard to that; but no doubt that is the effect he is attempting by this legislation to make. But one of the elements of improvement is competition, and, if you do not give some chance of competition, you will have something very different from improvement, unless the manufacture of this commodity, instead of being supposed to be the most useful to the world of all manufactures, is really one of such a character that people will not be influenced by the motives which ordinarily influence them in other matters. I would prefer to see these provisions stricken out which restrained the sale earlier, and consequently the provision of which the hon. member for Essex has spoken. I would prefer to see the inducement left of the drawback to sell the matured article, and to leave the freedom of trade otherwise unrestricted. But if it is to be restricted, I am afraid the result of the hon. gentleman's suggestion would be that it would be a practical monopoly in favor of the sellers of this commodity who may live by the grace and favor of the principal vendors who reside in the locality to which I refer.

Amendments concurred in.

ADDITIONAL COUNTY COURT JUDGE IN THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 3395) respecting the salary of an additional County Court Judge in the Province of Manitoba.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Legislature of the Province of Manitoba has made provision for an additional County Judge, and the Department of Justice states that it can be clearly established that the judge is wanted. But this first resolution needs to be amended by inserting after the words "Province of Manitoba" the words:

"Being for the central sub-division of the eastern judicial district of the said Province."

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be more satisfactory if we had some statement from the right hon. gentleman of the circumstances under which we are asked to do our part in the creation of this additional officer. Of course, I am quite well aware that the condition of the Province of Manitoba is such that, if not now, at any rate very soon—and now, for aught I know—some additional judicial strength will be requisite. It is very important that we should know—and I may say that the experience of both Governments with reference to British Columbia will point to that importance—that a reasonable system of sub-division of the work of county court judges is being adopted. We had a great deal of trouble and a long controversy with British Columbia with reference to the function and sphere of the duties of the county court judges, and subsequently considerable difficulty with reference to the Superior Court judges. Now, I have no idea, myself, how many judicial districts there are in the Province of Manitoba. But if there is to be an eastern sub-division and a central sub-division of the eastern judicial district, that would, I think, indicate that the eastern district must have three divisions, and therefore, I suppose, there will be three county court judges for that district. Does the hon. gentleman happen to remember how many there are altogether?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there are four county court judges.

Mr. BLAKE. The distribution of population has changed so much that it is necessary to see that proper accommodation is really afforded. At an early period, of course, we had to consider the question of distance as well as the question of population; but it might happen that there would be such a remodelling, having regard to the present centres of population, as would enable us to afford the proper accommodation. Now, I have always said that I attach considerable weight to the decision of the Province, although the hon. gentleman knows that I have declined to be bound by it; on the other hand, it seems to me that in our own judgment, acting as one of the two Houses of Parliament, if we are to exercise a judgment, it is hardly satisfactory to be told that the Department of Justice is satisfied, and to take that upon trust. My opinion is that the hon. gentleman ought to have obtained from the Department of Justice those reasons which satisfied that Department of the propriety of this change, and to have placed those reasons before us. The hon. gentleman takes the statement of his colleague upon trust, and communicates to us that statement and asks us to accept it on trust.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is something in that, but I think the hon. gentleman knows how very cautious the present Minister of Justice is in increasing the divisions. If I remember aright the Legislature of Manitoba passed a Bill for the appointment of two additional judges of the Superior Court, besides these county judges, and after full consideration the Minister of Justice thought that he would not be warranted in asking Parliament to provide a salary for more than one Superior Court judge, and after full discussion with the Provincial Government, one additional judge was added to the staff of the Superior Court.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced Bill (No. 162) to provide a salary for an additional county court judge in the Province of Manitoba.

Bill read the first time.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The following Bill was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 161) to amend the Act 46 Victoria, Chapter 9, intituled: "An Act to provide for the salaries and superannuation and travelling allowances of certain Judges of certain Provincial Courts."

NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE NEAR QUEBEC.

On the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 159) for facilitating the navigation of the River St. Lawrence in and near the harbor of Quebec,

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill has not been printed in French.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. It is not marked as printed in French in the Order Paper. This Bill affects the private rights of parties in the city of Quebec, and it should not be proceeded with. It is to amend the charter of the city, which has been in existence 20 years. The city authorities have not been notified to attend and be heard upon it. Under such circumstances I submit it would not be fair to proceed with the Bill.

Mr. McLELAN. It has been considered by the Board of Trade of Quebec and by the Harbour Commissioners, and by the Board of Trade of Montreal, and they have all concurred in its provisions.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not dispute that. I know that on these occasions the board of trade takes one view and the corporation another view. The hon. Minister of Marine may not be aware of that fact, but the Minister of Public Works knows it. A similar Bill was attempted to be passed in the Session of 1884 but was not carried, and for a similar reason to that now offered. When it is proposed to amend the charter of the city—and this is attempted to be done in the Bill the very last hours of the Session—the city has a right to be heard before her charter is amended. For these reasons I take the objection I have mentioned.

Mr. CURRAN. With respect to this Bill it will be acknowledged that the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec are better judges of what is necessary for the navigation of the river than are the city authorities. The hon. gentleman mentions that this is an amendment to the city charter. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the statute, which enacted this legislation we are now about to amend, he will find this special clause slipped in at the bottom of an Act in regard to the Quebec water works. I am satisfied that the mercantile community of Quebec, with the Harbor commissioners of both cities, as well as the Board of Trade of Montreal, all approve of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BLAKE. It is only proper that the head of the Department should bring down such a Bill as this at a reasonable period of the Session.

Order allowed to stand.

SUPPLY—DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS, ONTARIO BOUNDARY, THE NORTH-WEST TRIALS, etc.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MILLS. There are one or two matters which I wish to bring specially to the attention of the House before going into Committee of Supply. The first is with reference to the Department of Railways and Canals. The House is aware that in 1879 the Government declared it was necessary, in order to the efficient administration of public affairs, that the office of public works should be divided, and that there should be two chiefs of Departments instead of one. The Act provides for the distribution of the offices of the Department under two respective officers. One the Minister of Railways and Canals, and the other retaining the old appellation of Minister of Public Works. Now, as I understand, under our law at the present time, whatever may be the prerogative or the rights of the Crown, where there is no legislation, the administration of public affairs in this country is provided for by certain statutory provisions, and there is no prerogative right of the Government to administer the affairs of State in any other way than that which is provided for in these various Acts of Parliament. Now, under the provisions of the law it is enacted that the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be appointed by commission from the Crown, under the Great Seal of Canada; and I think it is important to know whether such a Minister has been appointed, and whether the Minister has been regularly appointed under the law. It is pretty clear, I think, that there can be no Acting Minister of Railways, unless there is a Minister of Railways appointed in the regular way. In fact, I think whether there can be an Acting Minister of Railways or not legally appointed, is open to question. Of course, in so far as the Deputy Heads of Departments are concerned, there is provision made in various statutes, that they shall, in their absence, have power to appoint others to act on their behalf. I do not find in our law any such power for a Minister to appoint his colleague to discharge the duties of his office in his absence. But that is the practice. The law in that particular may be defective, and I do not raise that question, but I do call the attention of the House to the fact that, as I understand, our law at the present time does not empower any Minister of the Crown to undertake the administration of a Department except under the authority of a patent from the Crown for that special purpose. It is true, in England a Minister has held more than one administrative office, but in those cases the Crown has issued its patent to the Minister, for the purpose of discharging the duties of those various offices, as in the case of the Duke of Wellington, when he undertook to discharge the duties of the head of several Departments. But there is no provision made which authorises the Prime Minister, or any other Minister, to employ or appoint one of his colleagues to discharge the duties of an office to which the Crown has made no appointment, which is practically vacant, and has continued vacant for a number of years. I think it is a matter of very serious consequence that the Government should come down to Parliament in 1879 and ask Parliament to legislate with a view of dividing the Department for the more efficient administration of the affairs of the country, and that that Department has been for more than two years without the proper head. We know, Sir, that the Crown cannot act except through some responsible Minister, and then only by the authority of the Sign Manual of the Sovereign. It is also necessary that the Seal of State shall be attached to the document by which the party is appointed, and it shall bear the signature of at least one responsible Minister. Now, so far as the House has been informed, I do not understand that the so-called Minister of Railways has been regularly appointed to the discharge of those duties in the manner contemplated in the statute. If he is, it is impossible to see why he should be called "Acting Minister of Railways," a position which the law does not formally recognise. Having said this much in regard to this particular matter, I wish to refer to another, because I suppose this will be the last opportunity of doing so, and I do so by way of complaint of the action of the Government. As early as February last I asked the Government:

"Whether it is the intention of the Government to propose any legislation, or to invite Parliament to ask for Imperial legislation to define the boundary of the Province of Ontario upon the north and west?"

The Prime Minister answered:

"It is not the intention of the Government to propose any legislation. The question as to whether it is necessary to ask for Imperial legislation is now receiving earnest consideration."

At a later period in the Session, the Prime Minister informed the House, in reply to a further inquiry, that it was the intention of the Government to proceed with this matter during the Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To deal with the subject.

Mr. MILLS. At all events, to deal with the subject. Now relying on the accuracy of that statement, I took no action upon this question. It was my intention to submit a proposition for the consideration of the House, and I was prevented from doing so by the answers of the Prime Minister on this question, from time to time, during the Session, until a day or two ago, when it became too late to invite the action of Parliament upon the question. Now, the hon. gentleman made, a day or two ago, a statement which I suppose it would be irregular on my part to refer to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it would not.

Mr. MILLS. I think the answer the hon. gentleman gave me on that occasion is a just ground of complaint. The Minister said it was proposed next Session to deal with the subject of the western boundary of Ontario, in accordance with the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and that the question as to the northern boundary of Ontario would be dealt with along with the question of the northern boundary of Quebec, a question upon which there was no division of opinion, I believe—no contest between the Province of Quebec and the Dominion of Canada, as there has been in the case of the Province of Ontario; but I wish for a moment to call the attention of the House to the report of the Judicial Committee on this question, and also to the conclusions to which that report points. The hon. gentleman expressed an opinion which seems to indicate that he is disposed to accept the conclusions of the Judicial Committee, so far as the western boundary is concerned; but so far as the northern boundary is concerned, he repudiates the action altogether. Now, I wish briefly to call the attention of the House to what the Judicial Committee did, and what they have reported. There was the question as to where the western boundary of Ontario was, and whether the territory extending from a line drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, westerly to a line drawn due north from the north-west angle of Lake of the Woods, was part of the Province of Ontario or part of the Province of Manitoba. Whether this belonged to the one or the other depended on the decision of the Committee, upon the facts which were submitted to them. Now, the Dominion Government were represented there by counsel. They agreed to refer the whole question of the northern boundary to the Judicial Committee, and it was only after the Committee was invited to take action in the matter that the Dominion Government failed to carry out its agreement with the Province of Ontario. But it was contended by the Dominion counsel, and this agreed with the contention of Manitoba, that the Province of Manitoba extended eastward to the meridian drawn due north from the confluence of the Ohio and the Mississippi. Now, in order that the observations of the Committee may be perfectly clear, let me state that if the contention of the Province of Manitoba were correct it would embrace not only all the territory eastward to that line south of the Albany River, but also a considerable extent of the territory north of the river. In the argument and the evidence submitted to the Committee, the claim of the Dominion to the territory north of the Albany River, as against the Province of Manitoba, was never put forward for one moment. The contention was, that Manitoba extended eastward to that meridian line. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council said it did not go south of the Albany River. They said that the Province of Ontario extended westward to a line drawn due north from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, and that it extended northward as far as the Albany River and the English River, which runs westward into the Winnipeg River. To whom the territories north of that line belong was a question which might have been at issue between the Dominion and Manitoba; but it was not raised. The Dominion put in no claim to the territory to the north of the Albany River as against the Province of Manitoba, and it was not possible, therefore, it seems to me, for the Committee to come to any other conclusion than they did on the evidence before them—that while they conceded the contention of the Province of Manitoba to extend eastward to this meridian line north of the Albany River, they held that it could not extend eastward of the meridian of the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, to any territory south of the English or Albany River, because they held that that territory was the property of the Province of Ontario. I suppose the Minister has read the argument and the observations made by the members of the Committee from time to time during the argument. With regard to another question in this case, which is a question of immense consequence, the Committee said that the northern boundary of Ontario, and, in this respect, also the boundary of the old Province of Quebec, under the Act of 1774, was not the 49th parallel; they also said it was not the height of land. They have expressed a clear opinion incidentally—in dealing with the question of the northern boundary—of what was the boundary of the Province of Quebec under the Act of 1774. It was neither of those two boundaries—either one or the other was contended to be the boundary of Quebec by the counsel of the Dominion or by the counsel of Manitoba. The evidence went to show that there was a line proposed by the English and one by the French at the negotiation of the Treaty of Utrecht; wherever that line was, it was the boundary of the Hudson Bay Territory on the south. I think the evidence went to show that it was somewhere near the 51st parallel, and that the Province of Quebec extended northward to that boundary. I wish to call the attention of the Government and the House to this fact, which made a very great impression upon the members of the Committee; because, although they were inclined to hold, at first, that the northern boundary of what had been the Province of Quebec was also the northern boundary of the Province of Ontario, they expressly maintained a different opinion before the conclusion of the argument, basing that opinion upon two papers which were submitted to the House of Commons in 1791, when the King intimated his intention to exercise his prerogative to divide the old Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. I submit the papers, to show where the dividing line was to be drawn. One paper defined the separating line between the two Provinces, and the other defined the eastern boundary of the Province of Upper Canada. The Lord Chancellor directed the attention of the other members of the Committee to the fact that if the intention of the Crown had been simply to divide the Province of Quebec into two Provinces, there was no necessity of providing one paper to define the eastern boundary of Upper Canada and another paper to define the separating line; the one paper would have served both purposes. But in order that the House may see the exact effect of these two papers, I will read them. One paper is entitled, "Description of the intended boundary between Upper and Lower Canada." It reads as follows:—

"To commence at a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the cove west of the Pointe au Beaudet, in the limit between the township of Lancaster and the seigneurie of New Longueuil, running along the said limit in the direction of north 34 degrees west to the westernmost angle of the said seigneurie of New Longueuil, thence along the north-western boundary of the seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north 25 degrees east, until it strikes the Ottawa River, to ascend the said river into the Lake Temiscaming, and from the head of the said lake thence through the middle of the said lake to the most northerly extremity thereof; and thence running due north to the boundary of the territory granted to the Merchant Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

That is the definition of the separating line; it was to extend as far as the old Province of Quebec extended, and then to the southern boundary of the Hudson Bay territory. The paper to define the eastern boundary of Upper Canada, which was sent by Sir Henry Dundas to the Lords of the Council, after a recital similar to a portion of the other paper, goes on to say:

"By a line drawn due north until it strikes the boundary line of Hudson's Bay"—

A different phrase altogether, and as the Judicial Committee observed, if it had not been intended to define a different line, it would not have been necessary to submit this paper—

"including all the territory to the westward and southward of the said line, to the utmost extent of the country commonly called or known by the name of Canada."

Now, it is perfectly clear, from the observations made by the members of the Judicial Committee, that they held that the Provinces of Upper Canada extended beyond the old limit of what was the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec to the shores of Hudson Bay, and to the Albany River. The hon. gentleman has all along expressed his anxiety to have a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. That decision was given formally upon the question referred to them, and incidentally upon the whole question. It seems to me, that being the case, the hon. gentleman ought to have acted in accordance with the despatch forwarded him by the Secretary of the Colonies. The northern boundary of Quebec has nothing to do with the matter. Undoubtedly, it lies near the shore of Hudson Bay, where the old southern boundary of the territories of the Hudson Bay Company was situated, and if the hon. gentleman proposes to extend that further north, and give to Quebec a more convenient and natural boundary, nobody will object. But I call attention to the fact that the two are wholly distinct; that they were held to be distinct by the Judicial Committee, and that the two papers submitted to Parliament, at the time the Act was carried for the purpose of dividing the old Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, show that they are wholly distinct. The Judicial Committee recommended their award to be carried into effect by Imperial legislation. The Colonial Secretary addressed a letter to the Government on that subject; but that letter was never answered. A motion was made here for all the papers; the hon. gentleman brought down certain papers, in obedience to that motion, but the papers he brought down do not contain even an acknowledgement from the Government of the letter received from the Colonial Secretary. I find a communication from the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, urging the hon. gentleman to give effect to the recommendation of the Judicial Committee, asking for co-operation, and proposing the draft of a Bill for this purpose, and that has never been answered. I have what I consider good authority for saying that since that several communications passed, which have not been brought down. This is the manner—and I have this to complain of—in which the Orders of the House are observed by the Government. We are furnished papers which give but imperfect answers, conveying the impression that the Orders of the House are obeyed, and we are still left in ignorance as to what correspondence has taken place. I believe I am correct in saying that even that communication of the Lieutenant Governor has never been acknowledged by the Government, nor has any other been acknowledged which has been submitted to the Government by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario on this subject. Further, I am informed, on very good authority, that Parliament is, at this time, prepared to legislate on this question; that it is not too late; that there is no room for dispute; that we know the views of the Privy Council; that they are precisely the same as those of the arbitrators who made the award in 1878, as to the boundaries of Ontario, and I say the House is misled. The hon. gentleman has pretended to do what he has not done, and has prevented other members bringing forward a question which ought to have been disposed of long ago. It was fairly dealt with long ago, and it has been dealt with a second time by the Privy Council, yet the hon. gentleman proposes to defer final settlement of this question until another year. It ought to be dealt with at once, as there is no longer any room for controversy.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), just before recess, suggested it was highly desirable that legislation should be had in order to confirm and establish the boundaries between Ontario and Manitoba and between the Dominion and Ontario. Now, I think legislation in this matter, in the shape in which it stands at present, would be attended with no small difficulty. The decision of the Privy Council is somewhat contradictory in itself, and the boundaries between Ontario and the Dominion have not been at all touched upon in that decision, further than that by inference it seems to confirm the boundary of the award which was made by the arbitrators on a former occasion. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) suggested that the boundary of Ontario extended further to the north than the boundary of Quebec. That is a mistake. The same documents which extend the boundary of Ontario to the north extend the boundary of Quebec also to the north. They stand equally far north. Wherever the northern boundary of Ontario is the boundary of Quebec is in the same latitude. The 10th article of the Treaty of Utrecht says :

"But it is agreed on both sides, to determine within a year, by commissaries to be forthwith named by each party, the limits which are to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French, which limits both the British and the French subjects shall be wholly forbid to pass over, or thereby to go to each other by sea or by land."

That clearly indicates that there was some point inland from Hudson's Bay which formed the boundary line between the English and the French. That is very clearly stated in the Treaty of Utrecht; but a little later than that, in the commissions issued to Governors, a long series of commissions, there is a line spoken of as the boundary line of Hudson's Bay to which the hon. gentleman, on a former occasion, referred, as the shore of Hudson's Bay. The boundary line of Hudson's Bay and the shore of Hudson's Bay were two very different things. Here is a description which held for very a long time, from 1791 to 1838 :

"Running along the said limit, in the direction of north 34 degrees west, to the westernmost angle of the said seigneurie of New Longueuil; thence along the north-western boundary of the seigneurie of Vaudreuil, running north 25 degrees east, until it strikes the Ottawa River, to ascend the said river into the Lake Temiscaming; and which said Province of Lower Canada is also bounded by a line drawn due north from the head of the said lake, until it strikes the shore of Hudson's Bay."

It is clear, by the Treaty of Utrecht, that the boundary line of Hudson's Bay, as there referred to, was not the shore of Hudson's Bay. It is equally clear that the subsequent commission of the 1st March, 1838, to the Earl of Durham, carried the boundary line to the shore of Hudson's Bay. But it carried the boundary line of Quebec to the shore of Hudson's Bay as well as the boundary line of the then Province of Upper Canada. With regard to the recent decision of the Privy Council, I think it can be construed in more ways than one. I will read a portion of it. It goes on to describe the boundary line as running :

"Along the middle line of the river, by which the waters of Lake St. Joseph discharge themselves, until it reaches a line drawn due north from the confluence of the Rivers Ohio and Mississippi, which forms the boundary eastward of the Province of Manitoba."

Now, this decision says that the western boundary of the Province of Ontario is the boundary line between Canada and the United States up to the Lake of the Woods, and from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, a line drawn due north until it strikes the Winnipeg River or the English River, as the case may be, then following up the English River and making it the boundary between Ontario on the south and Manitoba on the north. Now there are two Acts of this House, the one describing the boundaries of Keewatin and the other describing the boundaries, of the enlarged Province of Manitoba. Both are essentially the same. The one describes the eastern boundary of Keewatin as the western boundary of Ontario, and the other describes the eastern boundary of the enlarged Province of Manitoba as the western boundary of Ontario. Consequently, it is quite evident that in case of two Provinces separated by a line running due north, the one Province cannot lie north or south of the other. This decision of the Privy Council describes the Province of Manitoba as lying north of the Province of Ontario. In this it simply overrides two Acts of this Parliament, which have remained for a long time on the Statute Book. As I have said, it gives the disputed territory in the first place to Ontario, and winds up by giving it in just so many words back to Manitoba. It says :

"A line drawn due north from the confluence of the Rivers Mississippi and Ohio, which forms the boundary eastward of the Province of Manitoba."

The Government of Ontario ignores the decision of the Privy Council, and calls on us to pass an Act which shall set aside a part of it. That is certainly not following the decision of the Privy Council. Now, Sir, I think that under all the circumstances, if I may express an opinion on the subject, it is highly desirable that these boundaries should be settled forever, and settled in such a way as that they cannot be cavilled at. The question is now in a worse muddle than it has ever been in before, and considering that it has got into such a mess, I think the whole question should be taken up at our next Session, and referred back to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. When it was before the Privy Council only one side of the question was practically heard. The Government of Ontario was represented ably and well; it had most elaborate maps, elaborate reports, and counsel who represented their case very ably, and pointed out every circumstance which could bear out their view of the case. The Dominion Government had for counsel those who were but very slightly acquainted with the subject, and had but a short time to become acquainted with it. No doubt they did their best, but they were over-matched. The Government of Ontario had volumes written, explaining their view of the matter, while the Government of the Dominion had literally nothing. The decision of the Privy Council has evidently been made in haste. It gives the disputed territory, in so many words, to both parties, and overrides two Acts of this Parliament. Under these circumstances, I think this House would be justified in referring the whole question back to the Imperial Government, with a request that it should be re-opened and gone into fully from first to last, so that a decision may be obtained which cannot be attacked. Then there is the Indian title to the lands, which appertains to the boundary question. Did time permit, I could show that as long ago as 200 years the title of the Indians was acknowledged by the Imperial Government—not a sort of quasi title, that only gave them a sort of right, but a title that gave them an actual right in the soil; that deeds were taken from them covering large areas of country, and worded in the same way as a deed would be now which conveyed land from one person to another in fee simple. There is a deed, in 1684, in which the rights of the Indians were acknowledged by the then Sovereign, and it was confirmed in 1726; and there is a regular sequence of confirmation of Indian titles up to 1763, when an Imperial Act was passed, and when the proclamation of 1763 was issued, fully confirming the rights of the Indians to the soil. It would be interesting to show how that proclamation is still in force; it would be a matter of great interest to show how it was looked upon by the Imperial Government, and how the Imperial Government construed the Act which it had passed. That could all be made out. As late as 1792 there were treaties made with the Indians on the Canadian side, where deeds were taken from them of large tracts of territory, which they conveyed in fee simple to the Imperial Government. I am quite aware a decision has recently been given; I do not know what it is; we have not yet seen it; but I suspect it may very likely be like some other decisions—given without full information on the subject. I think it can be clearly proved that the right of the soil was in the Indians, and that it has been acknowledged to be so both by the Imperial Government, by the Government of the United States and by Canada.

Mr. TROW. I am somewhat familiar with that speech. It is an old stand-by that we have heard repeatedly. I think it is quite out of place for the hon. gentleman to advocate the propriety of appointing a commission on a matter that has been set at rest by the Privy Council. After arrangements have been agreed to by the contending parties, I do not see why it should be revived just now.

Mr. DAWSON. It was the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) himself who revived it.

Mr. LAURIER. There is one other matter to which I think it my duty to call the attention of the Government. It is a matter affecting the uprising in the North-West Territories. There are to-day, as we know, in confinement at Regina, a very large number of prisoners. I understand there are between 40 and 60 half-breed prisoners, and of Indians I do not know how many. Now, I cannot conceive how it can be the intention of the Government to put everyone of these prisoners on trial, nor can I conceive that it would be in the public interest that such a course should be followed. Of course, I apprehend that the Government are anxious to vindicate the law, but what I want to submit to the judgment of the Government and of this House is, whether the law would not be sufficiently vindicated if the leaders only of the rebellion were put on trial. Let the leaders, of whatever race they may be—either white, red or mixed—be placed on trial and allowed to make their defence, and let the country decide on the issue raised between the Crown and them. Let those also, of whatever rank and station, who have been guilty of offences against the common law, be put on trial. But this should not apply to those who have not been leaders, but have been led, if they have committed no offences against the common law. I am not going again to discuss the cause of the rebellion. I do not think it opportune or necessary, nor is it necessary, even for the purposes of the question I now raise, but whatever may be the causes of the rebellion, I submit that those who have not been leaders, but have been led, those who have simply taken up arms on the impulse of the moment, soldiers who have fought in battle and have been taken prisoners in battle, should not be put on their defence; and, if the cause be what has been stated by the Government in the discussion of a few days ago, if it is not any grievances from which the half-breeds have been suffering, but if they have been led astray by Louis Riel or other designing men, this statement would carry with it the argument, and not only the argument, but the conclusion, that those who have been led astray should not be put on their trial. The United States have given us, on this matter, an example which is worthy of imitation. They have been assailed by the most formidable rebellion the world has ever seen, and it was only after four years of war, after innumerable disasters, after hundreds of millions of dollars had been expended, after hundreds of thousands of lives had been lost, that the national cause triumphed. The rebellion opened in April, 1861, and it was not until April, 1865, that the armies of the South had to surrender. The surrender of General Lee's army took place on the 9th April, and less than two months afterwards, on the 29th May, the President of the United States issued a proclamation, which was almost universal in its effect. I may quote it with some appositeness in the present instance, but I will only quote a few words of it. After having recited the causes of the war, the President speaks as follows:—

"To the end, therefore, that the authority of the Government of the United States may be restored, and that peace, order and freedom may be established, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do proclaim and declare that I hereby grant to all persons who have, directly or indirectly, participated in the existing rebellion, except as hereinafter excepted, amnesty and pardon, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves, and except in cases where legal proceedings, under the laws of the United States providing for the confiscation of property of persons engaged in rebellion, have been instituted; but upon the condition, nevertheless, that every such person shall take and subscribe the following oath (or affirmation), and thenceforward keep and maintain such oath inviolate; and which oath shall be registered for permanent preservation, and shall be of the tenor and effect following, to wit:—"

Then follows the oath. The exceptions follow. There are fourteen of these. It is useless to recite them, but they all apply to persons who took a leading part in the rebellion, as military and civil officers, and so on, but full amnesty and pardon was given to the mass of those who took part in the rebellion, only excepting the leaders. We must admit that this was a most humane and wise act. It was a humane act in itself. It was a wise act, because it restored to citizenship the whole population of the South; it enabled them at once to apply themselves to restore their position as citizens of the United States, and no doubt it contributed also largely to restore in the hearts of these men a love of the national Government, which four years of war had alienated. This is an example which I think might be followed under the present circumstances. Moreover, if, for reasons of their own, which I will not discuss at present, the Government do not think it expedient to at once grant an amnesty to these people who are now in confinement, who have not taken a leading part in the rebellion, I submit that at all events they should be released from custody and sent back to their homes—not discharged, not pardoned, still amenable to law, but discharged from custody, remaining subject to law, and their future conduct answering for any future amnesty. This conduct, I believe, would be politic and wise. We know that, apart from any other consideration, it is folly to believe that so many men can be put upon their trial for life and death. It would be appalling that there should be, in this country, any such bloody assizes, and we know that the district is in great destitution, and that the families are sadly in want of the help of their bread-winners. I do not wish to discuss this matter, but I make the statement, which I hope will be taken into the favorable consideration of the Government. It would be a policy both humane and wise if these men were sent back to their homes and families, and I believe this would restore, in the hearts of these men, the love of our country, and faithfulness to the institutions of our country.

Mr. BERGERON. I share, to a great extent, in the opinion expressed by my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), and I would go a little further, and would ask the Government, as a matter of justice, whether they could answer, in this House, a question which has been put in the other House by the Hon. Mr. Trudel, which I find in the Order Paper:

"Whether the Government has taken into consideration the question, whether it would not be better, in the interests of justice, to modify the law in such a manner as to afford to persons implicated in the rebellion in the North-West a trial before a jury of twelve of their fellow-subjects, such as the common law of the British Empire affords to every subject of Her Majesty?"

I am told that Riel and all his fellow companions in the rebellion are going to be tried before six jurymen, and I see by the newspapers that they will be English-speaking jurymen. I do not want to say whether Riel is guilty or not; that is a matter which will be discussed in court; but it will be a great act of justice, so far as the Province of Quebec is concerned, and it will be a great satisfaction to every one, whether Riel is guilty or not, to know that he was tried before a mixed jury of twelve men, as was the practice in Quebec, men who knew him and were qualified to give judgment on the case brought before the court. I do not know what answer was given to Mr. Trudel in the Senate; but I would be very glad if the Government could see their way to change the law in the manner I have suggested. I find in a newspaper published in Montreal, La Presse, a statement with respect to the trial of Riel, that the Government have issued a proclamation by which, in the Act of 1880, concerning the North-West Territory, the Government is given the right to apply to the Territories laws which have been previously adopted by the Parliament of Canada; and a simple proclamation is sufficient to obtain this result and give a retroactive effect to the cases. I do not know whether this is correct or not, and I will be very glad if the Government will give an answer to these two questions. As regards the sentiment of the people, they are very indifferent as to what the verdict may be. It is a question of law, and as a matter of justice it would be a great satisfaction if these men were tried according to the laws of Ontario and Quebec, and it would be a great consolation to people interested in these men.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Quebec East says that we should interfere with the trial of those men, Riel and the others, in the North-West Territory.

Mr. LAURIER. I did not say Riel.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman spoke of the leaders, and I think Riel is one of the leaders.

Mr. LAURIER. I said those who were not leaders should not be put upon trial.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understood the hon. gentleman's remarks. The hon. gentleman wishes the Government to interfere in these trials. He makes a distinction between the leaders and those who have committed acts against the common law, as he calls it, and soldiers, who, in the heat of the moment, took up arms and were led astray by Riel—he thinks they should not be put upon trial. The question is, how to distinguish those men—who is a leader, who is not a leader, who has committed an act against the peace of the country, who has committed murder, or any other offence, and who are those who have not committed such offences. Of the men who were battling against the troops of Her Majesty in the North-West, they are not all under arrest at Regina ready to stand their trial. A large number of them were placed at liberty at once, and are at their homes. Others, of course, fell on the field; others were wounded; and a number of these who were wounded were found on the battle fields, were picked up by our own troops and placed in the hospitals, and they are being cared for the same as our own soldiers. That is a positive fact. I am glad it is so, because it shows that after the battle is over humanity has its course, as before. But the question of deciding who is the leader in these troubles, who has committed a grievous offence, the offence of murder, for example, and the question whether a man is guilty or not—these are questions which it is not for us to try. It is for the tribunals of the country to decide the question. That is the reason why you did not see the men tried by martial law. The men are to be tried by the civil authorities, and under the laws of the country. I do not think it is in the interest of those men who are to be placed on their trial, or in the interest of the peace of the country, or in the interest of any one, that we should interfere in a matter of this kind. The only interference we should make is this: to see that the men have a fair and impartial trial. That is their right, and it is what the Government intend to secure for them, and what they have intended from the beginning—to see that these men, beginning with Riel, down to the last man in custody, have a fair and impartial trial. Now, as to the question whether the men should be sent home and pardoned, that question comes afterwards. The pardoning power is there, and can be exercised at any time, until the sentence has been carried out; and, therefore, the question of pardoning will come afterwards. The court will first decide whether the men are guilty or not. If they are found guilty of a heinous crime the sentence of the law will be passed upon them.

The pardoning power will always be there, and it is to be exercised with that humanity which has always guided the Government of this country, no matter whether they belong to one side of the House or the other. Under these circumstances, I do not think it is for the interests of the poor people that such a course should be pursued as is suggested. I say poor people, for those people, whether guilty or not, are always pitied when they are called upon to stand their trial. I need not consult my colleagues to say that this Government, neither more nor less than any Government, have not shown they were disposed to be cruel towards any part of the population of this country. We feel our position. We felt it the other day, when we were obliged to call upon the volunteers of the different Provinces to rally round the flag of this country and go and defend the North-West against the depredations of those men who had taken up arms and assumed the authority of the Queen. We were sorry we were put in a position to be called upon to vindicate the law; but it was our position, and it was one of the obligations which our position cast upon us, and we were supported by this House by a large majority, and by both sides of the House, because both sides felt that the first thing to be done was to establish peace. With respect to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), it would be hardly the thing just now to change the law of the country for the purpose of trying those men, or any other men. The law of the country is on the Statute Book. If there was a change, it might be for better or for worse. Why should there be a change made in the law? The law will be exercised with justice, and although there are only six jurors, those jurors are to be selected in the same way as we select them in other parts of the country. There is to be the right of challenge on the part of the prisoner as well as on the part of the Crown. Therefore, we need not be uneasy or afraid that there will be a packed jury. There will be nothing of the kind; there will be justice and a fair trial, and I hope, when the affair is over, hon. gentlemen will be able to say that though we have to see that the law is executed, whenever we have been in a position to recommend mercy, mercy has been granted.

Mr. BLAKE. I should be sorry to say a word which would add to the embarrassments and responsibilities of the Government on the present occasion, but I cannot avoid this observation with reference to the remarks of the Minister of Public Works, that he has not met the position of my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Laurier). In point of fact, he has acknowledged the accuracy of my hon. friend, in the statement which he has just made. My hon. friend pointed out the large number of persons who were, so far as is evident from the proceedings before us, to be submitted to trial, and he stated his views on that subject. The hon. Minister of Public Works answers him by saying that he must not suppose that all who were in arms have been taken up and submitted to trial. Therefore, there has been a discretion exercised as to the persons who shall be submitted to trial. Who has exercised that discretion? The hon. gentleman says the Government can exercise no discretion, but the Executive, or whoever is charged with the responsibility of administering justice, must have exercised some discretion as to those who should be taken up and those who have been taken up. Now, I thought it my duty, I thought it a public duty—though I was aware that political considerations of a minor kind might have prevented me from doing so—I thought it to be my duty to say, with reference to the course which General Middleton pursued, as to the number of prisoners he took, as to the rank and file, that I thought he had acted wisely in releasing those prisoners. It is utterly impossible for me, at any rate, with such information as I have been able to collect, to form any idea as to the case of any particular individual of those who are in gaol at Regina—I mean, of the common number. There may be good reasons—I do not say there are not—for the arrest and trial of each one of those individuals. The only difficulty which occurs to me as rendering that improbable, is the largeness of the number; because it is difficult to conceive—I hope it is not the case—that so many men have been responsible in that major degree to which my hon. friend from Quebec referred—the degree of being leaders in crime, but the committers of acts of gross violence against the law. But what I desire to point out is, that the Minister of Public Works has said in effect that a discretion has been exercised, in that large numbers of those who were engaged in the field have not been arrested, and therefore he has acknowledged that a discretion must be exercised. Then the question which my hon. friend from Quebec submitted is, on what principle should that discretion be exercised, upon which he expressed views in the general spirit of which I think we must all coincide, namely, that what we have to deal with are those who are consciously guilty and practical culprits and leaders, whether Indians, half-breed or white—whoever they may be—to deal with them rather than with their unhappy and misguided followers. That is all I desire to say upon this subject, which is, of course, a delicate and difficult subject, and upon which I feel the Government has a grave responsibility resting upon them, upon which there are very mixed feelings in different sections of the country; but I did not think it would be a manly thing to leave this House without having said a word in the general sense, in which I have spoken. I now wish to say a word or two upon some other topics, as I will not have the opportunity of speaking again on this particular occasion. I wish, in the first place, to say that I think the proposal that you should leave the Chair this evening, upon these fresh Estimates, of the magnitude of which they are, is one which shows, in a very marked manner, a neglect of duty on the part of the Administration of the day. I maintain that we are running into a system of conducting the finances of this country, so far as there is parliamentary supervision over them, in a manner which renders it utterly impossible, even for Parliament itself, and still less for the country, to apprehend what the nature and character of our annual engagements are. To that end it is essential that at one time and upon one occasion you should have, in the large and general sense, to deal with our accounts—our engagements on the one hand, and our receipts on the other. No less a master of finance than Mr. Gladstone has not unfrequently stated that proposition, that it is utterly impossible for a House of Parliament, and still less for the community at large, to have a reasonable apprehension of what their duty is as to financial propositions which affect the whole country, or to tell what the state of the country is, unless in the large sense of the term we have one Budget instead of three or four. Well, we have fallen into the habit of having Supplementary Estimates, and, circumstanced as we are, some Supplementary Estimates may probably be necessary. But our Supplementary Estimates are growing in amount, and they are coming down later and later, and now you have had already, I think, three Supplementary Estimates this year. We have had a second Supplementary Estimate, which came down only a little while ago, and shortly afterwards it was considered in committee. Then at one o'clock this morning, Further Supplementary Estimates for more than $3,000,000 were brought down, and at half past 5 the same evening we were asked to go into committee on them, and are asked to dispose of them on what is practically the day after the last working day of the House. Now, as to this Estimate, there was no reason why it should not have been before us a long time ago; and when you observe that these various Estimates contain appropriations, sometimes, for matters which have a bearing one upon the other, and should be considered together, but instead of that you are asked to vote upon one, and when you have disposed of it, another Estimate comes, and you are asked to deal with the other branch of a topic which should have been considered at one and the same time. When you consider, at the same time, the magnitude of those Estimates, the sum amounting last night to about $4,500,000—that is the Estimate brought down by the Minister of Railways, as well as that which we are about to deal with at this moment—I say financial proposals of that description, brought down just as we are about to prorogue, when there is no opportunity of considering them, are objectionable on that ground. I maintain that we should mend our ways in this regard; that there should be a very strenuous effort to deal with more of the financial proposals in the Main Estimates, and to reduce to a minimum those Supplementary Estimates which are unforeseen, at the time the Main Estimates are made up, instead of being simply put away to the end of the Session, until a time when it is easy to run through things, and when the opportunity for scrutiny and investigation are not so great as at an earlier period of the Session. I maintain that those two propositions are of the last importance, that you should have as few Supplementary Estimates as possible, instead of the number being large, and that you should have your Estimates at an earlier period of the Session. As to this particular Estimate, I stated, and the statement was not contradicted from the other side, that I understood that this Estimate was in a state of preparation, in fact, in print, for a considerable number of days, while hon. gentlemen did not choose to lay it on the Table. That is an addition to the offence. I believe it ought to have been so, if it was not so; I believe it was so; but if it was not prepared and in print before now, why was it not? I maintain that that proper parliamentary control which ought to exist over public expenditure is rendered almost nugatory by the course which has been latterly, and notably this Session, adopted. Then, the hon. Minister of Railways proposes that we should go to-night into the railway resolutions. I am not, of course, about to discuss the railway resolutions in any detail, or to refer to any particular line of railway; but I take the opportunity of adverting to them as a portion of the very large financial engagements which we are called upon to endorse at this period of the Session. At a very early period of the Session, as early, I think, as the 6th of February, I obtained an Order of this House for copies of all the papers connected with the applications of aid for railways. I was satisfied that they were numerous, and that they ought to receive the attentive consideration of this Parliament. That return was brought down the day before yesterday, in the evening, five months after I had obtained the order, and it is succeeded the following day by proposals with respect to a large number of railways—I forget the number—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Seventeen.

Mr. BLAKE. Some seventeen railways in the proposals of the Minister of Railways, and a railway or two in the Supplementary Estimates, which are now before us—some eighteen or nineteen railway grants. Now, the mass of the papers which were brought down the day before yesterday, by far the larger proportion of which bear date in the year 1884, and the bulk of the remainder bear date in January, February and March, 1885—comprise 850 foolscap pages. I presume no one in this House has looked at them except myself, and I confess that I have not been able to analyse them in such a way as would enable me intelligently to state the conclusions which should be drawn from an examination of them. Under these circumstances, I need not say that it is absolutely impossible to intelligently discuss these financial proposals, just because the Administration have determined to postpone the period at which they would give the information to the House, until a day or two before the close of the Session, and within a few hours of the vote which the hon. gentleman proposes to take. These proposals, therefore, will not receive any intelligent discussion on this occasion, because intelligent discussion is impossible. There may be, of course, a member who is pretty familiar with the railway in which he is interested, or which passes through his locality; but the mass of us are not familiar with these railways, and it is impossible, without study of the papers, and time to ascertain, after that study, what facts are omitted from them, that we can exercise an intelligent judgment as to the propriety of these different grants. I have to say, once again, with reference to these proposals, as I have said with reference to the Supplementary Estimates, that parliamentary control over the public expenditure becomes almost nugatory when this practice is resorted to. I observe that many of these railways are political railways. A proposal, in many cases, is made to increase grants which were announced to us as ample and adequate when Parliament was asked to make them. I observe that they are largely promoted by members of Parliament, who may be interested in them. A return was moved for, some time ago, but has not been brought down, of the names of the members of Parliament who are interested as directors and shareholders in the different railways; it would be an interesting document, but that information is not vouchsafed to us. Under these circumstances, it is a matter of very great indifference when the hon. gentleman proposes to take, I cannot say the discussion, but the decision of this House on these proposals. I do not intend to interfere in the slightest degree with his taking it at an early or a late hour, because, be the hour early or late, at this stage of the Session, under the circumstances to which I have referred, it would be equally impossible to have an intelligent discussion. But I have thought it right to use this last opportunity I would have of dealing with this subject, to point out how far wrong we have gone this Session, with the expression of the hope that things have come to the worst, and having come to the worst, will mend next Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As to the trials in the North-West, I think the hon. Minister of Public Works stated correctly what is the proper duty of the Government under the circumstances, and the Government are resolved to carry that duty out in the spirit of justice, and British justice, which is always tempered with mercy. With regard to the criminality of the people who were concerned in the late outbreak, there is a difference in responsibility between the men of education, the leaders—men who ought to know better—men who use their influence, from their superior intelligence and education, to overcome the mass of the people—a great difference between them and their deluded followers; and this House may depend upon it, and it goes without saying, that a marked line of difference will be drawn between the leaders of the outbreak and those who were drawn into it. Then, there are great differences in the criminality of different men, whether they are leaders or belong to the rank and file. The leaders are responsible as leaders, and there are some, I fear, who cannot be reckoned in that category, who are specially responsible for some atrocious murders of men and women. Those cases have to stand on their merits or their demerits. The hon. gentleman says, truly, that discretion has already been exercised somewhere. We can understand what the discretion is. The General who has successfully commanded the force which was employed to put down this outbreak, from the information he could get on the spot—and he had very good means, I take it, of ascertaining the different degrees of criminality—discharged at once, on his own responsility, the great mass of those who were taken, whose offence was rising in arms, and who were not leaders, or supposed to seduce others into the rising, or to have been guilty of special acts of atrocity. We have exercised that discretion very largely. Of course, the Government very readily entrusted that discretion to a man who is equally remarkable for his personal courage, great caution and great humanity. Those men who were selected for reasons which have not all reached us—which have not as much as reached us, except, perhaps, the Department of Justice—will be tried there, subject, however, to the discretion of the legal representatives of the Crown. I think the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) will admit that the Minister of Justice, in selecting as his representatives such men as Mr. Christopher Robinson, Mr. B. B. Osler and Mr. Scott, has selected gentlemen who may well be entrusted with the exercise of the functions of the Attorney General. Only those persons in whom there is found decided criminality, on the prima facie evidence laid before the Crown prosecutors, will be put on trial. The Attorney General has given his representative the full power of issuing a nolle prosequi in particular cases. Then, afterwards, will come the pardon power, which, I believe, has always been exercised in Canada, as in England, in late days, with every discretion, on the principle that justice should be tempered with mercy. With respect to quite a different subject, that of railways, it is quite true the grants have come down late, and there are a good many reasons for it. In the first place, the Government has to consider all the applications as they come in. Unfortunately, our friends, those who promote railways in all parts of the country, cannot get it out of their minds that the proper time to make application is when Parliament is sitting. They defer their applications, and the production of their plans and locations, and the merits of their several schemes, until the last moment. We cannot help that; that is done continually, though we would prefer those matters were laid before the Government at an earlier day. Another consideration the Government have to consider is the probable demands that will be made on the public revenue from the previous votes; they have got to consider what is the liability to these railways which have got subsidies voted to them on certain conditions, and whether they will perform those conditions. Then we have to consider what may be the state of the revenue, and the ability of the Government to come forward and assist in the development of the railways. For all these reasons, whether it is this or any other Government, these matters will be brought up rather late, unless there is a distinct change in our system; and I cannot hope for that. The hon. gentleman complained there is no real check. While there is not so effective a check as if the Estimates had been laid on the Table the first day of the Session, and had been a matter of discussion until the end of the Session, it has not been the practice to bring them down at the beginning of the Session. Bad examples are catching, and if my memory serves me right, in the Province of Ontario, when the hon. gentleman was in the Government, railway grants were brought down at the very last moment, a few days before prorogation, and when there was no second Chamber to supervise the acts of the Government and of Parliament. So the hon. gentleman must take a little of the blame—not too much; we will assume our share—of bringing down votes at the very last moment. As regards these railway grants, the hon. gentleman says they are political votes. Well, they are political votes in the sense that the Opposition of the day chose to say the Government of the day are actuated by political motives in their schemes. Every Government, whether Liberal or Conservative, must put up with that, and leave it to the judgment of the country whether the statement be right or wrong. We submit these different applications; if wrong, the House will say so; if right, the mere statement that we are actuated by political motives is really of no consequence. I am strongly in favor of the Dominion Parliament assisting railway enterprises in the Dominion of Canada, so far as it is prudent to do so. Railway development is really one of the material necessities of this country, with its immense stretches depending altogether for development, or depending chiefly, except in those portions favored by water communications, on railways. Our experience is, that the revenues of the different Provinces are not sufficient to manage provincial affairs properly, and at the same time assist largely in railway development; so that the Government of the Dominion has to do one thing of two, railway development being an absolute necessity. They have to submit to each Province giving large grants to local railways and then coming here for better terms, saying: We have ruined ourselves; we have become insolvent, and you must pay our debts. That is one of the dilemmas, one of the positions. We must either do that, from time to time, according as the Provincial Legislatures, for political or other reasons, having a legitimate desire to develop their railway systems, run largely into debt. What will be the consequence? It will be ex necessitate that the different Provinces will run into debt, and then join together and bring pressure on the Dominion to assist them, greatly to the injury of the credit of the central Dominion Government. The other alternative is that the Dominion Parliament, which has representatives from every Province, shall know what they have to expend, to what extent they can charge the public revenue; and, on their own responsibility, assist the different sections of the country, assist the different Provinces, assume the responsibility of raising taxes upon the people, which will be required for the purpose of assisting this railway system. It is quite clear to me, at all events, and it has been the policy of the Government of which I am a member, that of the two alternatives it was infinitely better to assume the responsibility of raising the money and putting on taxes, if taxes are required, and that the responsibility of the distribution of this money for railway purposes should rest here. The two things must go together. If we are to raise the money, if we are to take the responsibility, the unpopularity of putting additional taxes on the people for railway enterprises, that expenditure must be accompanied with the power of pointing out where and how and when it shall be made. I am speaking not now particularly as advocating the policy of the Government, but am pointing out to this House what I think ought and must of necessity be held to be the policy of the Central Parliament; that, as we really have the control of the great revenues of the country, as we have the only means of raising a large revenue for the development of the country, we have to assume that responsibility in the future, and that we should assume the co-ordinate disposal of this money wisely and well among the Provinces, opening up all the avenues of accommodation, improving the development of the different Provinces. And we avoid the great point on which I believe Confederation is in danger: that is to say, that Provinces may become largely in debt by running beyond their resources, and throw themselves, by conjoint action, on the Dominion Parliament, upon the Treasury of the Central Parliament, and that Parliament, in order to save the credit of the various Provinces and to save their good names, may come forward. This has been the policy of our Government, and I think that, so far, it has not worked ill. Those railways that have real merit get assistance, and with the very moderate assistance given them the lines are built, and they assist in developing the country. Some of them have not succeeded. Perhaps, in a little while, when railway credit is better than it is now, when the railway depression has disappeared—and it is rapidly disappearing, I am happy to say—those grants not yet called for may be utilised by-and-bye. The railway should be commenced in two years and finished in four, if they obtain these grants; and if the company cannot raise the necessary money to proceed with the work, Parliament can close the door, and transfer the votes to some other railway and make improvements in other parts of the country. That is the policy of the Government, and I say it is a substantial policy, and one which will meet the approbation, not only of this House, but of the country.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has very much misconceived the purport of my remarks if he imagined that I either attacked or denounced the policy of the Government. I did not say a word upon that subject. What I did say was this: We are called upon to take the responsibility, as the hon. gentleman has admitted, to pass this railway aid grant, and in order that we, as members of Parliament, may efficiently discharge that responsibility, hon. gentlemen opposite should adopt a different policy, and afford us the necessary information at an earlier period of the Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not propose to follow the First Minister in the discussion as to the course to be adopted with regard to Riel and his associates. Nor do I think the present is the best time to discuss the very large question as to the future policy of this Dominion with respect to railways, which he has more suo dragged as a herring across the trail. There is another way of dealing with the important question which has been raised. All I will say at present is this: I have no doubt whatever that the consequences involved in the measures introduced are very much more far-reaching and more important than he has intimated to-day, and I think within the space of a very few years we will find ourselves confronted with results which hon. gentlemen pressing forward those grants may not anticipate. But what I want to call attention to is this: It is in the last degree to be regretted that we had not these Estimates, coupled with the proposals of the Government as to railways, at an earlier day. I have looked carefully over them, and there is positively nothing in them of the least importance which could not have been laid on the Table probably four or five weeks earlier. The most important facts which they disclose were, in effect, stated by the Acting Minister of Finance, in reply to some remarks made by me. As to the course pursued with respect to railway subsidies, whatever the policy of the Government may be, whether well-considered or likely to be mischievous I am not going to discuss now, but the delay is utterly and entirely indefensible. Here we are asked, in eight and forty hours, or, at the outside, three or four days from the close of the Session to pass subsidies to twenty different railways in different portions of the country. There is no single member who, in the time at his disposal can form anything like an intelligent idea as to the great majority of these matters on which we are called upon to vote. The sum required is large. It makes a very considerable addition to our public debt, and the time for asking these additional grants is most inopportune. In addition to the large sum that has been borrowed, another large sum must be borrowed, in order to place our finances in at all a tolerable condition. I say nothing at the present time about the reasons which have induced the Government to bring these proposals down at this time. Until we have obtained the information that my hon. friend has asked for, until we know clearly and distinctly who are interested in those various 20 railways and who are not, I do not think we are in a position to form any accurate idea as to why the Government have brought these different proposals down. They do savor suspiciously of an attempt to implicate or interest many of the Government supporters in carrying the measures of the Government through, as to prevent their forming any clear or correct estimate of the other measures which the Government have, in some fashion or other, induced this House to sanction. But it is specially unreasonable that we should be asked to consider these propositions now, in the face of the fact that we are obliged to add, according to the Estimates of the Minister, about $2,000,000 to the taxation of the country; and even with that added, if I may judge from the Estimates which are now proposed to be discussed, there is no reasonable ground for hoping that we will avoid a very considerable deficit on the transactions of the year for which we have now entered. For all these reasons, I think no more inopportune time was ever taken to make such a proposal than that submitted by the Minister of Railways, and I repeat that it is absurd to suppose that we can discuss twenty-one different railways in twenty-one different districts—for that is what the Government proposes to do—in the space of something like twenty-four hours.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). It is too late in the day for the hon. gentleman to complain of Orders in Council and proposals to aid railways being brought down at a late stage of the Session. It is within the memory, no doubt, of a great many hon. members, that when the present leader of the Opposition was leader of the Ontario Government, in 1872, he, within twenty-four hours of prorogation, brought down resolutions and Orders in Council granting aid to railways, which might be described as political railways. On 28th February the hon. gentleman brought down an Order in Council relating to the railway aid fund. On 28th February, on the motion of the hon. gentleman, Mr. Blake, seconded by Mr. Mackenzie, it was resolved that the House should ratify the Orders in Council granting aid to the different railways to which aid was granted or proposed. Among the railways to which grants were given were the Toronto and Nipissing, Wellington, Grey and Bruce, Kingston and Pembroke, and I think some others. These Orders in Council were ratified by the House, which was controlled by the hon. gentleman who is now leader of the Opposition.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When were they brought down?

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). They were brought down on the 28th, and were forced through the House on the 29th February. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I think I am right, unless the journals of the House are wrong; because I am now reading from the journals of the Ontario Legislature. On the 29th they were forced through the House, and on the 1st day of March the Lieutenant Governor gave his consent to the Bill. I therefore think it is hardly within the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say now that this proposition is altogether too late.

Mr. TROW. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad my hon. friend moved the adjournment of the debate, because I do not think, after the statements made by the First Minister and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), that it would be right for myself, for you or for the House, that I should permit these statements to go without a few words of reply. It is not necessary to those who bear a candid recollection of the facts, as they have been stated to this House more than once, that I should reply, but a good many members may not have heard them before. I shall be as brief as I can in giving a statement of the facts to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. The late Sandfield Macdonald, during his tenure of office in the Legislature of Ontario, had obtained power to distribute amongst the railways of Ontario the sum of a million and a-half of dollars, without any further action of the Legislature whatever, without any further control by the Legislature whatever, without any description or denomination of the particular railways to which it was to be given. To that policy the Liberal party, of which I had the honor to be leader at the time, was opposed, believing that the Legislature ought to have a voice in the decision as to which railways should receive the public money. A general election took place, in which that question was one of the questions at issue, but in the meantime, and pending that election, many negotiations had taken place, many proposals had been made, and some progress had been made towards the ascertainment, in a sense, of the railways which were to be aided. Many expectations had been excited, many companies had been incorporated, and the whole question of railway enterprise in the Province was waiting a solution of the particular railways which were to be aided. The result of the general election, as evidenced by the vote of the House on the debate on the Address, was that the Government of the day had lost the confidence of the people. They resigned office, and I acceded to office in the course of that Session. Immediately upon my obtaining office, in fact, before I came back from the re-election to which I then submitted myself, I took occasion to commence obtaining the information necessary to a decision by the Government of the day, of the railways which we proposed to the House to aid. You will observe, Sir, that I was in this position: that I was in the middle of a Session, and had to obtain information which had not been, up to that time, obtained in any proper form. During the course of the Session, as rapidly as the papers could be obtained from the different companies, all of whom were communicated with, as rapidly, I say, as these papers could be obtained, they were laid upon the Table of the Legislative Assembly, in order that the Assembly might become acquainted, at the earliest possible moment, with the materials which had been submitted to the Government, and so familiarise itself with those materials, in order to exercise its judgment upon the proposal of the Government. So soon as the materials which we had thus been enabled to collect, and which it had taken a considerable time to collect—though all diligence was used in its collection—so soon as this material had been obtained, we were called upon to decide whether the proposal which had been ratified by the Legislative Assembly, of a million and a-half, would be adequate to the demands of the public and to the fulfilment of the promises, more or less expressed, of the late Ministry. We reached the conclusion that the fund then proposed would not be adequate, and that it would be necessary, if we were to make a grant of such an amount per mile as had been formulated as the policy, that a larger sum should be devoted by the Legislature to this particular object. With that view we introduced a measure into the Legislature for the creation of a railway aid subsidy fund, and an additional million was to be granted, by annual instalments of $100,000 a year for twenty years. Unless and until the Legislature should determine whether that fund was to be granted or not, it was impossible for us to announce a decision to the House as to what our judgment should be upon the amounts to be granted to particular railways; because the coat must be cut according to the cloth, and we were obliged, therefore, to ascertain whether the Legislature would grant this further sum, before we could decide upon the proper policy—not that we expected to be in a position to ask for votes for the whole amount during that Session, but we perceived from the papers before us that although all the applications might not be ripe for action that Session, yet a sum of that magnitude would be necessary to answer the exigency, according to our judgment. The moment that measure, which was pressed with all diligence through the Legislature, received the final assent of the Legislative Assembly, we laid upon the Table the Order in Council which had been prepared, even in advance of that measure upon the hypothesis that it would pass, in order that there might be no delay in laying them upon the Table after our chief financial policy had been approved of. We could not lay them on the Table earlier, because, unless the larger sum were decided by the Legislature to be devoted to this purpose, it would have been impossible for us to propose grants of that magnitude to these particular railways. We could not otherwise have met the demands, the fair demands, of the various portions of the Province which had been stipulated by the said policy. I mark, therefore, in the first place, that the hon. gentleman cannot prove but that the utmost diligence was used by the new Government, which came in in the middle of the Session, to obtain the information which was essential to the formation of a judgment, and that the moment the information had been obtained as to any particular railway, it was laid upon the Table, so that the House might know what we knew. I mark, secondly, that so soon as my Administration had decided that the larger sum would be essential, it presented the necessary legislation, and prosecuted that legislation with all diligence. I mark, thirdly, that the moment the Legislature had agreed to that legislation we laid it upon the Table, and, therefore, at the earliest possible moment that it could have been done, we laid upon the Table our railway proposals. I mark, in addition to that, that there was no announcement as to the period of prorogation; on the contrary the leader of the Opposition, the present Chief Justice Cameron, having invited me to say when I proposed to prorogue, I declined giving any intimation whatever, saying that full time must be given for the discussion of this question. I mark, beyond that, that no request was made to adjourn the consideration of this question at all, and that after one division upon the first of them, no more divisions were attempted. I say that, under the exceptional circumstances in which the Liberal Administration was placed, we did all that men could do, all that it was possible to do, to inform the Assembly and the public, in the first place, of every fact we had obtained, at the earliest possible moment necessary for the formation of a judgment, and, in the second place, to lay these proposals on the Table of the House at the earliest moment we could have laid them on the Table. And then there was no pressure whatever to reaching a decision; on the contrary, any application for delay would have been cheerfully granted. And I mark, lastly, Sir—and at this stage of the Session this is the only observation I shall make—that notwithstanding that state of the facts which I have given to you, notwithstanding the fact that the men whom I was opposing, the Conservative party, were the men who declared that that Legislature did not have any voice whatever in deciding what railway should be aided and what aid they should receive, and that it was a subversion of the principle of responsible government, they denounced me most vehemently for not having given sufficient time to decide this question, and my denouncers, on that occasion, are the denouncers, on the present occasion, of the very opposite policy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that the present denouncers are those who were his denouncers in Toronto. I think they denounced him very properly, because the hon. gentleman opposed, and his whole party opposed the propositions made by Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, that a sum of money should be appropriated to aid railways. He objected to it, and therefore, when the hon. gentleman was untrue, in a political sense, to his original proposition, it is right that he should be censured for it.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Sandfield Macdonald proposed that $1,500,000 be given. That was not enough. The hon. gentleman opposite must go a little further; and having the policy of the Legislature, that a certain sum should be appropriated, before him, he considered himself clear and free. That is quite true. But that is our policy, and the hon. gentleman opposes it now. That, I say, is our policy, it has been enunciated by us for three years—that we would come to Parliament and ask every year for a certain sum of money to assist railway development. One would think the hon. gentleman would not have opposed it. Suppose, for instance, immediately after the annual speech was delivered, it was declared that $3,000,000 would be voted during the Session for railway purposes, would not the hon. gentleman now have come down and have objected, because there was no statement as to what particular railways were going to be advantaged?

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly I would.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows the policy of the Government—he knew from the beginning of the Session that that was our policy. He has asked again and again that we should announce the grant, just as it was the hon. gentleman's policy when he was head of the Government. But it does not prevent him now making complaint. What did the hon. gentleman do? He brought down the aid grants at the end of the Session. There are petitions setting forth the advantages and claims of all these railways that are now asking for subsidies. The hon. gentleman did no more. The applications and petitions were sent to the Government and were laid on the Table, and at the very last moment, the 28th February, they were brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought the hon. gentleman said applications.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The applications were laid on the Table. Petitions and statements setting out the merits of the different roads and the claims have been received. The hon. gentleman, I say, did no more, but on the 28th he brought down his Bill, and it is said that some of the railways were rather political railways than otherwise.

Mr. BLAKE. They are all built.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will not object to their being political railways, if the railways run in proper directions and are in proper places. But it does not rest with the hon. gentleman to come here and deliver a jeremiad over our delinquencies and charge us with bringing down these grants too late, when, on the 28th, the hon. gentleman made proposals before the Local Legislature, on the 28th he forced them through, and the next day the guns were fired and the Lieutenant Governor came down and prorogued the House.

Mr. McCALLUM. As I had the honor of a seat in the Local Legislature at that time, I desire to say a few words. When the hon. member for West Durham was leader of the Opposition in the Local Legislature of Ontario, he opposed the railway aid proposed by Mr. Sandfield Macdonald. That Government proposed to grant $1,500,000 to aid railways. That was spoken of at the elections of that time; but it was not the principal question at the election—that question was the murder of Scott. I do not intend, however, to refer to the murder of Scott to-night, but I want to show how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) went back on his pledges so soon as he got into power. The hon. gentleman has said that he supplemented that $1,500,000 by $1,000,000; that is not correct. By his Bill he added $400,000, which made the amount to aid railways $1,900,000, and he mortgaged the resources of the Province of Ontario for twenty years, to the extent of $100,000 a year, making $2,000,000 additional. The Government of Ontario to-day have annuities to pay railway subsidies granted. Why did the hon. gentleman do this? Any one can see the reason. Because he endeavored to turn out the Sandfield Macdonald Government, and succeeded in doing so by a majority of one, and he turned that majority into a majority of twenty-five in less than two weeks. How? I do not wish to be unparliamentary, or I would say the hon. gentleman bought them.

Mr. BLAKE. Were they all Tories ?

Mr. McCALLUM. There was one Tory you could not buy. The hon. gentleman bought a Minister of the Crown by "speak now." But I come to the point of the discussion. When the hon. gentleman finds fault with this Government for not bringing down these railway resolutions at an earlier period of the Session, he is going back on his record. In Opposition he has one policy; when in Government he has another policy. Any one who looks at the journals of the day will see that the resolutions which we were called upon by the hon. gentleman to consider would make a book larger than the Bible. The hon. gentleman gave us about twelve hours to consider them. Yet he had them all in his desk. The poor Tories were not to be trusted. Reference to the journals will show that the leader of the then Opposition, now Judge Cameron, moved a resolution, setting forth that any resolutions giving aid to railways should be allowed to lie on the Table at least five days before they were taken into consideration. Does the hon. gentleman deny that that resolution was moved ?

Mr. BLAKE. It was after these resolutions were disposed of.

Mr. McCALLUM. That is not any excuse. The hon. gentleman did not even promise to do better in future. I do not desire to do the hon. gentleman an injustice, and I would rather understate the case than overstate it, but I say that the hon. gentleman boasted in the House that he had bought members, but they were Tories.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not make such a boast.

Mr. McCALLUM. He said they were Tories that were bought. I hurl that statement back in the hon. gentleman's teeth. But I must say that there is no doubt that by the expenditure of a large sum of money in the Province of Ontario he mortgaged the resources of that Province for twenty years, and demoralised the people of Ontario, and was the means of enabling the Grits to govern that Province.

Mr. McMULLEN. And by your policy you are going to demoralise the people of the Dominion in the same way.

Mr. McCALLUM. I have accused the hon. gentleman of striking a blow at responsible government by his system of railway subsidies in Ontario; and whether I am right or wrong, I will stake my reputation on what I am going to say, and it is this: that if we have responsible government, the Government of the day are the trustees of the people and of Parliament. They must see that the money is expended and that they get full value for it, and if there is not a proper expenditure, if the Government do not carry out their wishes, they can withdraw their confidence at the very next Session. They can put the matter right immediately; but what the hon. gentleman did on that occasion was to take the expenditure of the money by a vote of Parliament, without giving the House time to consider whether the railways were entitled to be considered or not; and when they came back the next Session, when the money was squandered, do you mean to tell me that it could be expected that Parliament would vote non-confidence in itself ?

Mr. BLAKE. What are you doing now ?

Mr. McCALLUM. We are doing what we all profess to do. The hon. gentleman professed, in the first place, to be opposed to the granting of aid to railways.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. McCALLUM. Then you gave aid to everybody. And now the hon. gentleman tells us that he bought them. I have accused the hon. gentleman before, but this is the first time that he has admitted it. If it were parliamentary, I would say the hon. gentleman paid for them, but to-night the hon. gentleman says that he bought the Tories with that money.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is wholly mistaken. I never said that I bought the Tories, and it would be untrue for me to say that I had done so. What I said to the hon. gentleman was, that when he charged me with having bought members of the House, I said these are Tories whom you are charging me with having bought. I never spoke to any man on this subject, and I desire to say that the more particularly, because it is my political opponents that the hon. gentleman says I bought.

Mr. McCALLUM. It cannot be that it was the hon. gentleman's opponents, because he first boasted that he turned out the Sandfield Macdonald Government, but by a majority of one.

Mr. BLAKE. Nineteen.

Mr. McCALLUM. A majority of one, after you promised them to aid the railway.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. member for Monck has just been pointing out events which took place in the Legislature of Ontario, and he alludes to the member for West Durham, who was then leading that House, as having demoralised a whole Province by the legislation he introduced at that time; that he brought down certain propositions to aid certain railways, at a late day of the Session, and that the effect of these grants was, that he bought members of that House; that he made a majority of 25 in favor of himself from a majority of one, and he says that the effect was to demoralise the whole Province. He has condemned that course in the strongest language, and hon. gentlemen have cheered him to the echo as he spoke, the First Minister himself joining in the applause. We have heard the defence or the explanation of the hon. member for Durham, that he gave all the information possible, that he brought down the measures and put them through at the earliest practical moment. But leaving that question aside, and taking it from the standpoint of the hon. member for Monck, and the hon. gentlemen who cheered him, if that was the result in that case, if it had the effect of demoralising a Province, and that Province has not yet recovered from that demoralisation, how will hon. gentlemen opposite justify the Government coming down within the last days of the Session and asking Parliament to sanction the grants of millions of money to roads of which many hon. gentlemen could not give the geography, the destination or the financial standing? Out of their own mouths they have been condemned. If those be the views of the hon. member for Monck and those who cheered him, as to what took place in the Provincial Legislature, it must eventually compel hon. gentlemen opposite to say to the Government that the results of the course they are proposing to follow, have been demonstrated by one of their own staunchest supporters to be demoralising, as tending to subvert the independence, not of one Province, but of the whole community comprised within the Dominion of Canada. That is the position that hon. gentlemen have come to, and I say it plainly and boldly. I say that if the evil results followed, as the hon. member for Monck has said, from what took place in the Local Legislature, and after what my hon. friend from Durham has said as to the reasons he was not able to do it sooner, I ask, has the First Minister given any reason why, at the end of a six months' Session, almost, we should have these propositions brought down, to spend millions of money in various parts of the country of which many hon. gentlemen do not know the locality or their requirements. The hon. member for Hamilton seems to sanction these proposals, and I ask him if he knows the particulars of the road from Stellarton to Pictou; in what county it is; whether there are railways there at the present time, and whether this road is required? The Minister says the information is on the Table, but where is it? We have not seen it, and I venture to say that when the explanations are given as to these roads, they will be given in rather a halting manner, as many such explanations have been given this Session, and, but halting as they are, I suppose those propositions will go through, notwithstanding what a staunch supporter of the Government has said as to the demoralising effect of the legislation which took place in the Province of Ontario.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Public Works Department—To pay A. Gobeil the difference between the amount paid him from 23rd January to 30th June, 1885, and the salary of a chief clerk, at $1,800. .... $206 54

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When was this gentleman made chief clerk?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. On the 23rd of January, 1885, at the death of the late secretary of the Department, Mr. Ennis. He continued to fill the office of Secretary of the Department until the 1st of July, and this is the difference between his salary as first-class clerk and as chief clerk.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He has received no promotion, then?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, he had $1,400 a year, and we give him the difference.

To pay the salary of a fourth stipendiary magistrate in the North-West Territories. .... $3,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is it proposed to quarter this officer? Is he to have a particular district assigned to him, or is he to act in conjunction with the others?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The stipendiary magistrates have their ordinary districts assigned to them, but they all have jurisdiction over the North-West; they work together, and not infrequently they do work for each other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the other two?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Col. McLeod, — Rouleau and Hugh Richardson.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any objection to state whom he is going to appoint?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot state, because I do not know.

To meet certain expenses of the Senate. .... $4,459 25.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this extra expense for the 16 or 17 days?

Mr. BOWELL. This is extra expense incident to the length of the Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would properly belong to 1885, I suppose?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It culminates after the 1st of July. There is no use of dividing it into two sums.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Such an amount as $3,000 for the Debates and short-hand writers seems pretty large. They may have talked more than usual, but they would hardly talk that amount in the 16 days, especially as 14 of them were holidays.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any proposal for the Commons analogous to this? It is extremely inconvenient that the expenditure of the Session, which applies to the year 1884-85, should be, in part, attributed, as it will be in the Public Accounts, to the year 1885-86, and if that is not proposed to be done, and I think wisely, with reference to the Commons, it is apparently proposed to be done with reference to the Senate. If, on the other hand, this is for 1885-86, the only question to be asked is, why was it not in the Main Estimates for 1885-86?

Mr. BOWELL. The reason is, that no one anticipated that Parliament was going to sit into the year 1885-86, that is, for six months instead of the ordinary time of three months and a-half. This vote, I understand, was given to the Finance Department as the sum required to cover the extra expenses of the Senate on account of the length of the Session. Whether the $3,000 is to cover the extra reporting for that time exclusively, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. BLAKE. If this proposal is due to the extra length of the Session, it is quite clear that it is not due to that portion which has elapsed since the 30th of June. Part of it is for that only, but the bulk is for the earlier part of the year; and yet you are proposing to vote it for the service of the year 1885-86. It is really almost altogether for the service of the year 1884-85.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How are the short-hand writers in the Senate paid? Are the officers of the House paid by the Session?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand that in the past they have been paid by the Session, but owing to the length of the Session the Senate have granted them an additional sum, to compensate them for the extra work, which was not contemplated when they were given the job, if I may so express it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it not a fact that the extra length of the Session has made no extra work in the Senate? They have adjourned from day to day, without doing anything. If you are to give an additional amount to the reporters in the Senate, whose work has not been increased one particle, if you give $3,000 to them, on no principle of justice or fair play can you refuse to increase the pay to the reporters of this House, who, everyone will admit, have had a very severe Session.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). To give it to one and not to the other will have a very strange appearance.

Mr. BLAKE. I have here the records of the Session carried to a late period. I see the contract is about $8,000, including printing. Of course, we cannot tell how much these reports can be compressed in binding, but I do not think they will exhibit a large volume. If $8,000 covers the printing and the reporting, to add $3,000 under the pretence that the extra length of the Session has greatly increased the work, seems an extravagant addition. The hon. gentleman said it is included in the job. This seems to be very much of a job.

Mr. BOWELL. I will be careful how I use the word "job" in the future. I qualified it when I did use it. Any one who will look at the reports will see there is a great deal more work in them, and the volume will be much larger than that which was printed in the past. Supposing it to be the case, that there was no more work caused by the length of the Session than the reporting, suppose that there was not more debating, still you cannot overlook this fact, that these reporters, who made the agreement to do a certain amount of work, based upon a certain portion of time, have been continuously in attendance two or three months longer than was anticipated. I think there is a good deal of force in the remarks made by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), in reference to the reporters of this House, who have attended so zealously to their duties this Session. There has never been, in any Session, so much labor performed by the reporters as has been done this Session by those who sit at our Table. They have been here night after night, and day after day, and the only marvel is, that one-half of them are not sick and unable to do work at all. It is a question the House may fairly consider, as to whether they should not receive some extra remuneration.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. In order to meet the views of the Opposition, I would suggest to add after the words, "to meet the expenses of the Senate," the words, "in the Session 1884-85."

House of Commons—Sums required to meet increased expenditure, under reports of Internal Economy Commissioners.....	$1,020
--	---------

Mr. BERGERON. Before this item is passed, I wish to point to what I consider was an oversight on the part of the Internal Economy Commissioners. I did not hear anything mentioned about the first assistant clerk; and I think that every hon. gentleman in this House has recognised the services of that gentleman. When Mr. Rouleau was appointed, I think the salary it was intended to give him was $2,800 a year, and he only received $2,400. When I came to Parliament, in 1879, we had two clerks, one first assistant, and the other second assistant, and they received the salary each of $2,200 a year, which made $4,400, and the first clerk received $3,200. To-day we have only one clerk, who does the work of the two, and for that work he only receives $2,400. In the Senate, the first assistant clerk receives $2,800 a year, and the second, $2,200, and every hon. gentleman knows we have ten times more work to do here than they have to do in the Senate. By the ruling of the Internal Economy Commission, it is provided that certain employes of this House will receive a maximum of $2,800 a year, that is gentlemen in the rank of employes next to the first assistant clerk. Well, they will have $400 a year more than Mr. Rouleau when they reach the maximum, and I think, therefore, it is an oversight on the part of the Commission not to have given Mr. Rouleau, the only assistant clerk we have, a fixed salary of $2,800. This will still be an economy on previous years of $1,600 a year. I am sure the mere fact of reminding the Government of such an oversight will be sufficient to induce them to fix Mr. Rouleau's salary at $2,800 a year. The question is not a political one, but only a question of justice, and I have no doubt every hon. gentleman will be ready to admit the justice of this claim.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I agree with my hon. friend in the compliments he has paid to the assistant clerk of this House. No doubt, a more efficient, a more zealous, a more painstaking officer, we could not have. The question of comparing the salaries paid to the officers of this House with the salaries paid to officers of the other House is hardly the thing to do. We have no control over the salaries of the Senate. They control their own salaries. They determine what salaries they shall give, and of course they are the best judges as to what the services of their officers are worth. We may have our own opinion, but we have no control over them. In so far as our officers are concerned, I must say that the Commission examined the different salaries, and though they might have been disposed to recommend the increase of some salaries, they did not think that, under the circumstances, they could go further than they have done. However, this matter is always in the hands of Parliament, and if Parliament, another Session, thinks that a salary or two may be increased, we know how this matter may be brought before the House.

Mr. GIROUARD. I believe, considering our assistant performs the duties of two officials, his salary ought to be increased to that of the assistant in the Senate.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call the attention of the committee to two other questions which arise on this report, with reference to two other officers, Mr. McGillivray and Mr. Ross. Neither of these gentlemen has directly or indirectly made any application to me, but I have learned from other sources what I am about to say. The scheme of the Commission appears to have been to give the annual increment for a certain time; but, with reference to the existing officers, no matter how long they may have served, they do not get up to the maximum, which is in some cases a very modest maximum, at once. Both of these officers have, I believe, been about thirty years in the service, and they most certainly have attained the maximum of their efficiency, and have probably come very nearly to the end of their period of service, when you consider how much of the ordinary period of life thirty years are. I am informed that, as long as twenty years ago, there were two persons who discharged the duties which Mr. McGillivray now discharges alone. I think, with regard to public servants who have discharged the duties which they discharge to-day for twenty-five or thirty years, whatever may be the sum we fix as the maximum proper sum for the office they might very fairly have it conferred upon them at once.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is worthy of future consideration.

Mr. SCRIVER. In reference to what the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) said, in regard to the assistant clerk, I did not observe that the Minister of Public Works made any reply as to the limit in his case being less than the limit of other officers of this House, who, I suppose, are not, at all events, of superior rank or station. The limit for the accountant is placed at $2,800.

Mr. SPEAKER. The limit for the accountant is placed at $1,800, and none of the other officials go above $2,400, except the clerk. As to the two officials referred to by the leader of the Opposition, they are both most efficient officers; they are very valuable, and deserve every consideration. The Internal Economy Commissioners, however, wanted to cut their coat according to their cloth, and to deal with this question from an economical standpoint. I have no doubt, however, that the commissioners will take the views expressed by the hon. gentleman into consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, my suggestion is based upon the principles of the report itself. I am not suggesting an increase of salary, but if the House solemnly decide that a certain sum is the proper maximum sum for a particular officer performing a certain service, I say that, if you have an efficient officer in your service for thirty years, he ought at once to have the maximum salary.

Mr. BERGERON. I see, in the proceedings of the 12th June, the following:—

"Resolved, That the Miscellaneous Branch shall comprise the office of the Accountant, the Stationery Office, the Engrossing Office, and the Post Office, and shall consist of: 1 first-class clerk, 3 second-class clerks, 6 third-class clerks; that in consideration of long service, the present accountant do continue to receive the same salary as heretofore."

That is, $2,800. My hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) has just struck the nail. If we have an assistant clerk, who is the second rank of all the officers of the House of Commons, how is it that the accountant is to receive more salary. I have no objection to the accountant receiving $2,800 or $3,000, if he deserves it, but it seems to me unreasonable that the man ranking after the first assistant clerk should receive more salary than he does.

Mr. TASSE. (Translation.) As we are discussing the report of the Internal Commission, I would like to call the attention of the House to the salary received by the first assistant to the chief of the French translators. The salary of that officer is, at present, of $1,450. The position, which is very important and responsible, is held by Mr. Genand, who is an officer of this hon. House since many years. I believe the commission, instead of fixing his salary at $1,450, amount he received since many years, should have given to him the salary of his predecessor, that is, $1,700 or $1,800; for, in the translator's office the first assistant is practically the chief translator; the chief translator who is, at the same time, assistant law clerk, being, consequently, obliged to devote the most of his time to the legal branch; so that the assistant is practically the chief translator. Considering the importance of his position, considering his services and his responsibility, I think the Internal Commission must put his salary at $1,700 or $1,800, amount paid to his predecessor.

Gratuity to the father of the late W. Haché ..... $200

Mr. SPEAKER. That is the young man who was drowned, and this is practically paying his salary to the end of the Session.

Increased sessional allowance of members of the Senate and House of Commons, subject to the present position of the law affecting the absence and attendance of members.... $144,699 60

Mr. BOWELL. I propose to insert after the words "attendance of members," the following:—

"The members on service in the North-West not to be subject to any deduction."

Mr. McMULLEN. I have only to say, in reference to this matter, that I stated to my constituents, in my address, that I should oppose any increase of the indemnity to members of the House of Commons or of the Senate. On these grounds, I oppose this increase, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. BLAKE. This proposal is intended to apply as well to those members who have been in the North-West and have returned, as to those who have not returned?

Mr. BOWELL. It is intended to apply to those who have been away in the North-West, in order that when they make their declaration they may not be called upon to state the length of time they have been absent.

Mr. BLAKE. By a resolution which we passed awhile ago, I think they were to get their sessional indemnity in advance before they left.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, the thousand dollars.

Mr. BLAKE. And those who have not since returned?

Mr. BOWELL. Those who have not since returned will be entitled to the balance voted to members here.

Mr. MILLS. That is rather an extraordinary regulation. I cannot understand why, entering into service in the North-West, they should be allowed the ordinary sessional indemnity; but when members sit here for six months instead of the three of an ordinary Session, I do not see, myself, why an exception should be made in favor of others.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it would be rather an invidious distinction. We came to the conclusion when they got their indemnity in advance that the service in the field was equivalent to service in the House, and that they should get for service in the field as much as we get for service in the House. They are now in the field. If they had returned, as the hon. member for Wellington says, then there might be a different calculation, but as they are all up there, except only two, who have been able to get away in advance, I think it would look very small in us to make any objection to give them the $1,500, which they have earned, I think, as well as we have here. The hon. gentleman from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) objects to the increase. He can remedy it, to a certain extent, by not taking the money himself. That will be so much saved. But I fancy that the hon. gentleman, in making his speech, wanted to say that he would do the work cheaper than other hon. members.

Mr. McMULLEN. I shall not cheat my constituents out of the money. If I take the money I shall give it to them for the benefit of agricultural work. I say I am opposed to the idea. I am opposed to it on all grounds. I believe the sessional allowance granted to us is quite sufficient, and I think any man who takes it should do as I intend to do with mine.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are two members of the House, who, I think, should be exempted this Session from the members' declaration, which is required by the accountant. I refer to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), and the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thomson). Both those gentlemen became sick in the service of the country, and have been obliged to be away a great portion of the Session. No representations have been made to me by them, nor do I know their wishes, but I think, as a matter of justice, they should be exempted from making the declaration of the time they have been absent during the present Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If that is the general opinion of the House—and I gather it to be so—although we cannot at this period of the Session alter the Estimates, I dare say means will be found to recoup these gentlemen.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will the motion of the Minister of Customs cover the case, for instance, of Col. Williams? I see, also, there is a special item for paying the balance to the representatives of the late Mr. Benson.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the case of Col. Williams, who has fallen, you may say, on the field of battle, and as the leader says he has really done—will stand on a higher ground, and will be dealt with fully by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Have we a right to conjecture that the hon. gentleman promised this vote at a particular stage of the debate on the Franchise Bill in order to obtain the necessary support to carry that measure, and had to give certain assurances that such arrangements would be made? Now, I do not myself think that it would be at all unreasonable, perhaps, if the hon. gentleman had proposed a special provision for that gallant minority which has been fighting against this oppressive legislation which has been the cause of the enormous length of this Session—because I maintain that within a week, at any rate, of the expiration of the three months of our normal Sessions, five-sixths of the fighting on the disputable work which has occupied our time this Session, was yet to be done. But that the hon. gentleman should propose that the majority that he has misled into this mode of conducting public business should be compensated for the consequences of that misleading, seems to me an extraordinary proposition. If he had proposed a vote for those who are not responsible, it would have been another thing, but to propose it for those who are responsible seems extraordinary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can only say that I would like that subject to be left to the vote of the House, as to who are responsible for the delay. The hon. gentleman is not responsible for the delay in any sense. He was not present, and he did not make, 6, 8 or 10 hours speeches on the Franchise Bill, and I think if he had been in his place he would have kept hon. gentlemen behind him from wasting the time of the House and spending the money of the country. But we will leave it with the House. Shall we say that we shall have a vote, and that only those who, in the opinion of the majority of this House, have a right to the addition of $500, shall have the money? If the hon. gentleman will accept that proposition, we will carry it at once.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman knows that he has it in his power to make a proposition that the majority only shall have it, or that the minority shall have it, or that nobody shall have it. He will make his own proposition, no doubt, and his followers will support him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The minority agrees that we are right in this matter, with one exception.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not propose to offer any opposition to this vote at the present stage, but I desire to say that I hope it will not be taken as a precedent in future Sessions, and that if the indemnity is to be increased at all it should be increased by a Bill submitted to Parliament. If it is to be taken as a precedent in future Sessions, we might have the same prolongation of the Session, not by members on this side, but by members on the other side of the House. Although I am opposed to an increase of the sessional indemnity, I shall not oppose this vote at the present stage, but simply say that I hope it will not be taken as a precedent for future Sessions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope this Session will not be taken as a precedent for future Sessions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To that end, I think the hon. gentleman might give a pledge now that Government business will be brought down at a decent time, in order that we may have full opportunity of discussing it. If he will pledge himself to do that, I, for one, will pledge myself that the Opposition will not factiously oppose his measures. And I may add this, had the Franchise Bill been brought down at a proper time, this Session would have been terminated three months ago.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes; I have no doubt about that. If it had been brought down on the second day of the Session we would not have had a single speech against the Indians having a vote, not a single speech against the revising barristers, not a single speech about the alleged encroachment on provincial rights. The hon. gentleman says that if the Government had brought down their measures in good time there would have been no such delay. This is a House of Commons where there are representatives of the people, and we find that the Government gave a decent opportunity for members of the House, who are not members of the Government, to bring in their measures. All those notices of motion cover important subjects, and hon. gentlemen had an opportunity to bring them up during six weeks. They played themselves, and did not do it, and if they had gone on with those measures, every hour of the time would have been profitably occupied.

Mr. MILLS. The First Minister seems to forget that he has taken absolute control of every day of the Session, for a period of nearly four months.

Mr. BLAKE. I have only this to say. I regret the tone which the First Minister last assumed, because I warn him that if the course he seems to indicate is to be repeated next Session, he will not find it possible to get through the business in the time at which we are all anxious to dispose of it; and unless he reforms his ways and the action of the Government, by bringing in the Government business at an early period, he will not succeed in pressing the business through the House at the end of next Session, any more than he succeeded in doing so at the latter part of this Session. In order to get through the public business in three months, and I am as anxious to do so as is any hon. member, it is necessary that a different course should be taken.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman carries out his threat and continues obstruction, we shall have to take the same steps in Canada as Mr. Gladstone took in England.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let the hon. gentleman do it. He will not gain much by it. The hon. gentleman has had some experience, and not from magnanimity, but from simply knowing that no cloture he could introduce would help him, none was proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the proceedings of the English House of Commons, he will find that the method in which they deal with Supply and bring under the consideration of Parliament the discussion of important measures mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, he will find that it is a very unfortunate precedent to which he has alluded.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are 17 measures of Mr. Gladstone's Administration hanging over now.

Mr. MILLS. That may be quite true; but it is equally true that they were introduced at an early period of the Session. I called attention to this fact early in the present Session. I took every important measure introduced into the English House of Commons for half a century, and I showed each was introduced during the first few weeks of each Session. During the last seventeen years the hon. gentleman has sought to take legislation out of the hands of Parliament and control legislation by the Administration of the day. The hon. gentleman, in fact, has made the House of Commons a mere farce, and a mere register of the acts of the Administration. And the hon. gentleman is pursuing that course in the measure now under consideration. What opportunity has this House to look into the merits of any one of the railway enterprises which the hon. gentleman proposes to aid. We have had no opportunity of seeing whether they are meritorious or not meritorious. He has denied the House that opportunity, and there is not the least doubt that a majority will acquiesce in the position which the hon. gentleman has taken; but I am satisfied a majority of the country will take a different view, and that the people are prepared for a new departure, and that the hon. gentleman will find that he must adopt a different course, or not succeed.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). There were more documents read in this House this Session than were read in the House of Commons of England for the last five years.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I have one remark to make in regard to the Franchise Bill, which occupied some time during the present Session. The Franchise Bill was introduced into the English House of Commons on 26th February, and the third reading was taken on the 28th June. The principles of the Bill were discussed within the first month after the House met.

Mr. BOWELL. There were over 600 members to discuss it, while there are only 200 here.

Election Expenses..... $1,200

Mr. BLAKE. What is this item?

Mr. BOWELL. This is a sum which the Auditor General and the Government refused to pay, considering that the charges made were too large. It was carried into court, and the Government were defeated. This is to pay the judgment.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the second vote.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The amount voted has never been paid, because the explanation given of the vote did not cover exactly the claim. So it was a dead letter, and it is to meet the exigencies of the case that this new vote is proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. Am I to understand that this is not really a second vote, but the same vote?

Mr. DESJARDINS. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There seems to be some difficulty about the payment of returning officers. A returning officer in whom I have every confidence, and who would not make an unfair charge, has stated that it is a difficult matter to get a settlement of just claims. There must be something complicated in the arrangements.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are frequent complaints made. The accounts for the different constituencies vary. In the case of a hotly contested election in an urban constituency there may be occasion to have an additional constabulary force. It is impossible to make general regulations, and the whole matter is pretty much left in the hands of the Auditor General. He is worthy of confidence and will not allow undue expenses. Sometimes he is too economical—at least, in the opinion of the returning officers.

Indian and Colonial Exhibition..... $20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this money for? We have already passed a considerable sum under this head.

Mr. POPE. We have already asked $40,000, but we anticipate that a considerable additional sum will be required.

Balance of pay, etc., to militia called out in aid of the civil power at Lingan mines, C.B., pending recovery of the same from the municipality, under Act 46 Vic., cap. 11, sec. 27..... $1,472

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There were some riots there some years ago, and the troops were called out in aid of the civil power, as the law provides. The municipality resisted payment of the accounts, and the matter is now in the hands of the Department of Justice, for the purpose of enforcing the claim on the part of the militiamen, who have been complaining for some time that they have not been paid. We think it better to pay them their due, and to collect it from the municipality.

Mr. BLAKE. This Session the hon. gentleman representing that constituency made enquiry about this matter, and one of the Ministers told him clearly that the Government had nothing to do with it, and could not pay it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They could not pay it without a vote.

Mr. BLAKE. What right has the Government to sue for it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand, under the law, instead of the militiamen suing individually, the Government sues for them.

Mr. BLAKE. When did the riot take place?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I forget exactly, but it was some years ago.

Mr. BLAKE. Have any proceedings been taken for the recovery of the money?

Mr. BOWELL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so, but I am not sure.

North-West Territories—Prince Albert Court House and Gaol..... $20,000

Mr. BLAKE. Will this finish the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Plans have been prepared, and we were about beginning the work when the troubles broke out in the North-West, and we had to postpone it. The intention is to erect a substantial building, which will likely cost more than this, but this we think will be sufficient until Parliament meets again.

Mr. BLAKE. About how much will it cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $10,000 or $15,000 more.

To pay Messrs. Purcell & Ryan for expenses incurred by them in July, 1881, for transportation of and supplies furnished to His Excellency the Marquis of Lorne and party ..... $1,612

Mr. BLAKE. What is this?

Mr. BOWELL. These are expenses incurred by this firm at the time when the Marquis of Lorne visited the North-West by way of Port Arthur. After leaving the portion of the railway which is called Section 15, I think, they were conducted through at the expense of these gentlemen from Rat Portage to Winnipeg. They have been constantly applying for this, I am informed, and until they could show that the expenditures actually took place, the Government have not deemed it proper to ask the House to indemnify them. I have a memorandum which shows that a large portion of this account is for supplies furnished to the Indians when His Excellency met a number of the bands, when he was passing through, for labor of the portages, for the use of cars, and for the employment of fifteen Indians during the trip.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the total expense of that progress of Lord Lorne?

Mr. BOWELL. I am unable to say. The expense of the whole trip through the North-West Territories is given in the Public Accounts.

Mr. BLAKE. Was the expense of that trip, generally, paid by the public?

Mr. BOWELL. I think it was.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says there have been constant applications for this amount, and the Government refused to pay it until Messrs. Purcell & Ryan showed that they were entitled to it. What was the difficulty in their showing that?

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister of Railways says they were constantly applying for it, and the principal reason why it was not paid was, the final settlement of their contract had not taken place.

Mr. POPE. Since then they have pressed it very strongly.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me an extraordinary thing that Messrs. Purcell & Ryan had a claim before the country in 1881, and did not press it until a comparatively late period. Of course, the longer they were in furnishing the items of their account the more difficulty there would be in ascertaining whether it was a substantial one or not. It is when they are fresh that an efficient investigation of these matters can take place, and I must say I cannot see why there has been so much delay.

Mr. POPE. One reason for it was, that they pressed the account upon the Railway Department, and I always maintained that the Railway Department had nothing to do with it. The reason they did so was that Col. DeWinton came to Mr. Schreiber and asked him to arrange with those people to assist in the trip, and Mr. Schreiber did so. Finally, I said this belonged to the Finance Department, and that is the reason their account went there.

Mr. BLAKE. I admit that it having gone to the hon. gentleman's Department is a reasonable excuse for the delay.

Mr. TROW. Can the hon. Minister tell me what portion of the road His Excellency went over, and how much was by rail and how much by water? At that time there were 100 miles constructed from Selkirk east, and probably 60 miles westward from Port Arthur. If he went by the railway track, he would probably go part of the way by teams furnished by the contractors; but he would have seen no Indians. He must have diverged from the railway to Rainy River and Fort Frances locks to meet the Indians.

Mr. BOWELL. His Excellency met some Indians between Port Arthur and Eagle River, and he met all the tribes around Rat Portage. He went nearly to Eagle River, I believe, by rail; then he diverged to the south, I believe, and went to Vermillion Lake, thence to Eagle Lake, and so on, making two or three portages. When I went over the road shortly before that time, I went further north, and I had no less than 19 portages. His Excellency also met Indian tribes at the Lake of the Woods, and the hon. gentleman knows that when a Governor or other high personage meets with the Indians he has to dispense a large amount of supplies to them.

For the establishment of a Model Farm..... $20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a new departure entirely, and may involve a very considerable future expenditure. I am not prepared to say that the money may not be well and properly spent; but if I recollect anything of the extent of the grants which have been found necessary in other countries for these model farms, and the number of places that will probably apply for them, the hon. gentleman may find that this departure may involve a much larger annual grant ultimately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman may remember that on the motion of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault), a committee was struck, and it recommended the establishment of a Dominion model farm, not a series of model farms. That report was laid before the House. I am not a good judge myself, but I have seen mention of that report made in one of the English agricultural papers as being a most valuable report. I do not think there was a formal concurrence by the House in the report, but the question was put by the hon. gentleman, as chairman of the committee, whether the Government would take any action upon it; and with the general consent of the House the Government said they would carry out the general recommendation of that report, which was that a model farm should be established somewhere in the Dominion of Canada, as a model farm in every way. A portion of this sum will be used to acquire the property wherever the farm may be established.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would be glad to have some idea of what is proposed to be done. If a model farm is bought, I suppose something more or less akin to an agricultural college will be ultimately established on it, and I doubt whether one model farm will be found to suit the various wants of the various Provinces. I am not prepared to say that the money will not be well expended in an agricultural country like ours. No doubt, we waste a vast deal of money, in my opinion, on objects not one-tenth as valuable, but still it is a new departure, and will involve pretty considerable ultimate expense; and I think we ought to have, from the Minister of Agriculture, some general statement of what his plan is. You will require a very considerable quantity of land for this. This $20,000, I suppose, will only be a mere preparatory vote to the sum we will ultimately have to vote in this direction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So far as any plan has been formed by the Government, it is this: We think there should be a site obtained, situated somewhere in Canada, where the climate will represent our average climate of the settled portions of Canada. It will not do to have it down in Gaspé or in Niagara. We do not want to get the best farm in the world, or the richest, or an arid farm, but a farm where the pupil students can really be employed profitably, where they will have some difficulties to overcome, and which will require some skill on their part to bring into proper cultivation. I think the money cannot be better spent than having a first rate model farm, and in order to carry the project out, I must agree the proportions will have to be liberal. There must be a careful choice of superintendent and those who manage the farm, men able to teach and to understand the whole subject.

Mr. TROW. In establishing a model farm, if it must be established, a great deal of jealousy will be created as to where it shall be situated. If too far to the east, the climate will be very severe, and if too far to the west, it will be too mild. If the Government are to undertake to purchase Berkshire Pigs and Shropshires and Downs, it seems to me it will be travelling out of the record.

Mr. BLAKE. We ought to know what the scheme of the Government really is. It is important we should know, both with reference to the financial and utilitarian aspects of the whole business. We must get a farm in which the climate is not too severe and also not too mild, in which the soil is not too good and not too bad; it must not be a desert, nor must it be very fertile; it must be a farm which has capability, but it must be one which will also contain difficulties to be contended against, in order that the scholars may have something to learn. Besides being a model farm and an exemplar to the farmers, provided by a paternal Government, it is also to be a college of a more or less ample character, a school in which to teach the young the art of farming. If that is part of the work of the model farm, and it is not necessarily a part of a model farm at all, we are going into a scheme of an agricultural college. We ought to know what we are going into; we ought to know the system under which young men are to be taught the art of farming by Government instructors. What is the extent of the farm proposed? What is the number of instructors to be appointed? How many young men are to be admitted? We are asked to vote $20,000, and are not informed, in the slightest degree, as to how it is to be spent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We intend to have a model farm; we will obtain teachers, and the farm is intended to be worked by the pupils. Those pupils will be self-sustaining. The hon. gentleman knows there are a great number of young men who are anxious to be educated as farmers, and who pay considerable fees to private teachers at this moment, in various portions of the country. There are gentlemen agriculturists who give handsome fees to be taught farming. No doubt, a Government farm, conducted on scientific principles, with competent teachers and a sufficient area to employ students, will be well attended, and the pupils will pay a reasonable amount for their education. There is a very successful model farm conducted by Major Strickland, in Peterboro' district; he has a large number of pupils, and receives very handsome fees.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I would draw attention to a fact which has come under the notice of the Government already. I think an application has been made for help to establish a botanical school or garden in Montreal, on the slope of the mountain. The corporation has given 75 acres of fine land, and the Province of Quebec has voted $1,000 to the object. It is expected that the Central Government will do something to aid it, as it is for the benefit of the whole Dominion.

Towards defraying expenses and losses arising out of the troubles in the North-West Territories..... $2,300,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This, in addition to the $1,700,000, makes the sum of $4,000,000, which the hon. the Minister of Customs estimated was the minimum that these unhappy disturbances were likely to cost the country. Now, at this stage, I suppose the hon. gentleman has some fuller information on the subject, and that he can tell us approximately what will be the cost of the military service, and what the other items covered by this vote will likely cost, and also give us some idea of the claims which have been preferred by various parties, the Hudson's Bay Company and others.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand it, no claims for loss have reached here as yet. No doubt there will be claims; no doubt claims will be made to the local agents, but they have not arrived here yet. The staff who have been up there—storekeepers, and so on—will be down here in a very few days, and the accounts will be soon made up and adjusted. I do not think we have made any great progress, if any, as to what the actual expense will be. That cannot be adjusted without a little delay.

Mr. BLAKE. I think this vote ought to be altered and made similar in its character to the vote of $1,700,000, so as to be a vote of credit, for which detailed accounts should be given within fifteen days of the commencement of the next Session. Precisely the same principles should be applied to this as to the $1,700,000, unless the hon. gentleman is now prepared to explain it more in detail. You will remember the language used in the vote of credit, and subsequently inserted in the Bill. I may ask one thing more, however, because I think it is natural that, at this stage, we should expect a little more definite information from the Minister than he could give us at the earlier period, when $4,000,000 was the rough estimate of the Government. I see there is a vote of $25,000 asked for the relief of distress in the North-West, so I suppose that this vote of $4,000,000 is not to be applied to that purpose, but I presume it is still intended to apply a certain amount to the indemnification for losses in the Territories, as the hon. gentleman stated earlier. I should have supposed that, at this time of day, the Minister of Militia could give us some further information as to the military expenditure. It is now a very considerable time since we have received any statement on that subject, that is to say, when the Bill for the $1,700,000 passed its second reading. At that time the hon. gentleman had received a large number of accounts, and he must have received a number since. I do not say that he should produce the accounts or should give us detailed information, but he promised to give some information after a short interval. Now the opportunity has arisen, and I have no doubt that we shall hear something as to the division of this approximate sum of $4,000,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will try to do that.

Mr. BOWELL. The $25,000 does not form any part of the $4,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that.

Mr. BOWELL. It is to cover expenses which the Government were compelled to incur in supplying food to the Indian tribes, as well as to the white people, to protect them from starvation.

Mr. BLAKE. I am aware of that, but I should like to ask when we are to receive the information as to the approximate division of the four millions.

Mr. BOWELL. I am under the impression that it will be impossible to give the information during the present Session, for this reason, that while the Minister of Militia is constantly receiving the accounts and having them investigated, the distance from the scene of operations to the seat of government here is so considerable and the length of time occupied in travelling over that country until you reach the railway is so great, that he is necessarily prevented from coming to anything like a correct conclusion as to the expenditure incurred or the amounts to be paid. I know, from conversations I have had with the Minister, that large accounts have been presented, which will require investigation before he will consent to their payment. He has been obliged to make large advances in order to secure the comforts and even the necessities of the troops in the field; and, as the hon. gentleman well knows, it costs, in some cases, two or three times the value of the article itself in transport alone. For these reasons, I do not think I can hold out any hope that the information will be given during this present Session, unless we sit much longer than we expect. I will call the attention of the Minister to the subject to-morrow, and all the information possible will be given on concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, I recognise that the questions of transport and subsistence are uncertain elements, but the pay of the forces and the cost of their transport to the North-West, and of their transport back, is all either known, or is easily capable of being known, because they are on their way back now. If we have that information, we can learn what is the extent of the uncertain amounts. I entirely admit that, with reference to the large portion of the subsistence and the item of transport, we cannot hope for information just now, after what the Minister has said; but there is included, in this estimate of $1,000,000, a sum for indemnity for losses. I do not ask, because I do not think it would be right for me to ask, at this moment, how much is to be paid in this way, but the Minister must make his own general calculations, and while I do not think it would be fair to ask him to make any statement, it would be quite fair to ask him to state what is the general principle upon which the Government is going to act on the claims for losses which are made by reason of the absolute destruction of houses and personal property, or the raiding of property. There are claims made, I believe, by reason of the loss of the crop, people being driven from their homes and unable to seed the ground during the season, and so forth. I think we ought to know the general principle of action which the Government propose to adopt, and the machinery by which they propose to ascertain what should be paid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think there will be any prospective damages. In the first place, actual loss by destruction of property will be considered, the actual cost of replacing the property; but then, I take it, the party must contribute, to a certain extent. That has always been the rule in settling war losses. It was so in regard to the war of 1812, and of 1837-38. There were no prospective damages. There were no damages, except for the loss of property, and business and time, and so on. The Government think that, perhaps, it would not be well to state, at this moment, the exact mode by which they will ascertain the loss and damage which may have been sustained. The investigation will, perhaps, be made by a commission, as there was one which sat in 1871, when Judge Johnson went up and settled the claims for loss, and acted with great acceptance to the people up there. The accounts were not considered excessive, and that was found to be a very good mode to settle the claims. We have not heard of any complaints since.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, there is a great deal of loss which will inevitably fall on the people, and they must bear this. There is also the danger of exaggerating claims, and I recognise that the task is a difficult one; but I must say a word as to the position the hon. gentleman has assumed in reference to the settlers, who, at the critical time in the North-West, found that seeding was prevented by the outbreak. That is not a speculative question. There are farmers there who have only a few days within which they can seed, and if it were clearly established that they were absolutely prevented, in the disturbed portion of the country, from seeding, it means starvation for the year, I am afraid, because they cannot earn their bread otherwise. There must be a great many individuals who are really deprived of the opportunity of seeding their ground, and, in consequence, of reaping a crop. Some sort of allowance in respect to them would appear to be reasonable.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman lays down a good principle. I am glad to know that the area is very small, and therefore, perhaps, we can afford to be more generous.

For relief of distress in the North-West Territories. $25,000

Mr. GASGRAIN. I predicted, some time ago, that those people would be in want, and I think these particular supplies ought to be there at the present moment. This amount ought to be employed immediately, because two or three months hence it might be useless.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman can rest assured that this sum will not be kept for three or four months. Government have already acted upon telegrams they have received, and in order to meet the cases of want in that country, so far as they could, they have utilised the supplies of the mounted police; and, also through General Middleton, some of the supplies which were there for the use of the volunteers have been devoted to the purpose of preventing these people from suffering. The resources of the mounted police have been drawn upon to their fullest extent. The Government have lost no time in taking every step in order to prevent the suffering that has occurred by these unfortunate people.

Mr. BLAKE. I observed in a paper the other day that some twenty families of those people who were in prison had come to Regina. I suppose they will be attended to, as well as those who are on the spot?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes. I called particularly the attention of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West to these poor people. I telegraphed him to take care of the people at Batoche, where the buildings were destroyed, and whatever may be the criminality of the owners of property, their families are not allowed to starve. I got a telegram to-day from Mr. Dewdney, who says that we need have no anxiety about Batoche at present, and that the pressing needs of destitute families are supplied.

To make good to those persons of Prince Edward Island who were British subjects the amount of duties paid by them to the United States Customs on fish and fish oil, in the years 1871 and 1872 (Re-vote, $5,965.47).....$20,820 49

Mr. BOWELL. There was $30,000 taken to cover the amounts paid for 1871, but when an investigation took place it was found that large sums were paid in 1872 also. The amount paid to British subjects by the commissioner, Mr. Fitzgerald, was about $24,000. This is to cover the amounts which were paid principally by the fishermen in 1872. It was deemed advisable and equitable in meeting the claims of those who have paid the duty in 1871, that the same principle should be extended to those who paid the duty in 1872. I am inclined to think, however, that this sum is a little larger than is absolutely required. I think it might have been made a few thousands less. However, if it is not required it will not be used.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no use asking for more than you want.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not positive as to the amount that will be required. However, I think we might take off a couple of thousand.

Mr. BLAKE. A long while ago there was a motion made for the report of this commissioner, and it was ordered; but so far as I can remember, it has not been brought down. It is very important to be seen, so that one might observe the principles upon which the enquiry had gone on. Now, we had a rather animated discussion as to the mode in which this vote should be applied, and I think these words are not the words of the vote of last Session. It was corrected, with the view to taking care that the fishermen themselves received the benefit of it, because it was alleged that occasions had arisen in which the fishermen had given their fish to the wholesale merchants, upon the understanding that they should get back the duties if they were returned, and that they received, therefore, a smaller price for the fish.

Mr. BOWELL. The resolution passed last year, as near as I can recollect, was to pay back to those who had lost by the duties, both to the fishermen and the merchants. Sometimes the merchant purchased from the fishermen and deducted the amount of duty which he would have to pay in sending it to the United States. In that case it belonged to the fishermen. In other cases, where the merchants gave the full duty, then the principle laid down has been to pay the merchant. I am informed that a large portion of the duties for 1872 belongs to the fishermen, and that in almost every case in which they sold to the merchants, whether upon the island or to the American merchants, the amount of duty was deducted from the barrel.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman give us a statement of the application of the last vote—the large sums that were paid to the merchants? We have had the names of the claimants and the amounts, and we should like to have the names of those whose claims have been allowed.

Mr. BOWELL. There can be no objection to have the papers brought down. The Minister of Marine and myself went through them, in order to ascertain the claimants who should be paid; and we adopted the principle of recommending to Council payment of all sums recommended by the commissioner to persons who were British subjects at the time, in 1871, and who made the claim, excluding American merchants and fishermen who resided on the island at the time. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the names of the parties who received money. I have no objection to bring down the papers.

Mr. BLAKE. The motion was made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). The truth is, we have less information this year than we had last year, before the commissioner reported.

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume, as this precedent is established, we shall have claims made by our own fishermen for duties paid between now and the end of the year. I hope the Minister will take steps to procure money to provide for the claims.

Towards aiding in the publication of "Histoire Généalogique des Familles Françaises"..... $1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the author?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Abbé Tanguay. That gentleman has been working for probably 15 or 20 years on this work, which is considered a most valuable one. It gives the genealogy of all the French families of the country, since its settlement. It is really a most valuable work, but the author has not the means to publish a book of this kind, and therefore he has asked the Government to give some aid. The book will be published in three volumes. It is a work which a great many people cannot purchase, but it is one which will do honor to the country, and it is proposed to give $1,000 to assist in its publication.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a Canadian "Burke's Peerage," in short.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; unless you consider all French families in Quebec to belong to the Peerage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose we must take the hon. gentleman's word that this work is going to be of some historical value to the country. We have not many of these works in Canada. I must say, however, we are introducing a good many very curious precedents.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is reference made in this work to old Acadian families?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. GIROUARD. This is a very important work, upon which Abbé Tanguay has labored about 30 years. One volume was published eight or ten years ago, and the Abbé got an indemnity or subsidy from the late Government, in order to assist in its publication. The printing expenses of the volume reached about $4,000. There is now material prepared for about three volumes more. This is not a provincial but a Dominion work, and Abbé Tanguay has been collecting for from 25 to 30 years, not only in Quebec, but in Acadia, Ontario, and even France. The author is 65 years of age, and his death would prove a misfortune to the whole country. Very recently, in an important case at Quebec, where the genealogy of a family was required to be proved, the only proof was in the possession of Abbé Tanguay, and it enabled the rights of the parties to be adjusted.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a serious matter, for we do not know how many volumes there are to publish, and we are asked to grant $1,000 to publish one volume. Every other nationality might make a similar claim.

Mr. GIROUARD. There would be no objection whatever.

Mr. BLAKE. We have not got any ancestors.

To purchase copies of Lynch's treatise on butter-making..... $2,000

Mr. TROW. I would like to enquire of the Minister the number of copies which it is intended to purchase from Mr. Lynch, and whether the work is to be brought into some portable shape, different from the volume which was prepared for the Government of Ontario. That volume was composed of extracts from lectures, etc., by Professor Arnold, and others.

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister of Agriculture is not present at the moment, but I understand that this item is placed in the Estimates on the strong recommendation of the Committee on Immigration and Agriculture, and by a large number of members of this House. I should judge that, by the calculation made by the Minister, the book would be only a pamphlet, and he expected to get about 30,000 copies, 10,000 of which would be in the French language, which would bring the price to about 7 cents per copy.

Mr. TROW. It was not the wish of the committee, at all events, whatever may be the wish of the House, to have any copies of the old treatise.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is quite right. I believe that was the understanding.

Mr. TROW. It was to be a new work, containing all the improvements since the issue of the first edition.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think it would be desirable, in the issuance of this work, and its publication under the authority of the Department of Agriculture, that the Minister should be thoroughly satisfied that the system of butter-making advocated in this treatise should be the one which is considered to be the best. Improvements in the manufacture of butter are matters of great interest, and whilst I think it would be desirable to furnish and disseminate information about improved methods of butter-making, it is also desirable that the Minister should see that the treatise is one which could convey the latest and best information with reference to that question. I express no opinion, with reference to Mr. Lynch's treatise, on this subject, because I have not sufficient technical knowledge to enable me to state whether the publication that is to be issued is one which would convey the best information on the subject or not.

Mr. TROW. I think it should be better understood how many copies we are to receive for this sum of money. I understand that it is 30,000 copies, which would bring them about 7 cents each. For myself, I question much the propriety of giving 7 cents a copy, because I know that the printing of the book, in its present shape, would not cost 3 cents a copy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is not only the printing of the work, but there is the preparation.

Mr. TROW. It is all prepared already for the Province of Ontario, where he issued the same work.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that this work is different from the one Mr. Lynch got out for the Province of Ontario. He has revised it to the present time, and embodied all the latest instructions and improvements in butter-making, and besides that, he would require to pay for the change in the edition, the translation into French, and so on.

Mr. TROW. There are too many slipshod pamphlets circulated in this country, but we want something containing valuable information, bringing in all the recent improvements with reference to butter-making.

Mr. BLAKE. Is Mr. Lynch to get a specific sum for revising the book, and is it to be printed by the public; or is he to print it himself, and present it at a fixed price? Does he cause it to be printed, 20,000 English and 10,000 copies French, for $2,000, or is the printing to be undertaken by the public printers, or those other independent printers who are sometimes employed to do such work?

Mr. POPE. I do not know whether 7 cents a copy is a proper price or not. All such books with which I have anything to do are sent to the Queen's Printer, who fixes the price. I suppose this book will be delivered to the Department, and then that it will be distributed in every county.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course the Queen's Printer fixes the price for the printing, if the price is for printing, but when the price involves the author's compensation for his work, the Queen's Printer cannot fix that.

Mr. POPE. I do not know whether 7 cents per copy covers the whole or not, but that is all the money will be expended upon it. I suppose that Mr. Lynch believes that by circulating 30,000 copies this book will be patronised, and his book will find a larger sale afterwards.

Towards paying the expenses incident to the visit of the American Institute of Mining Engineers to Nova Scotia..... $2,000

Mr. McDOUGALD (Pictou). This American Institute of Mining Engineers is an influential body, which holds its meetings in different parts of the United States. Their proceedings are always reported and widely distributed all over the country. This year, I think through the influence of some of the Canadian members of the Institute, they have been induced to hold the annual meeting at Halifax, Nova Scotia, and it is thought that their visit to this country will attract the attention of capitalists to our large mineral resources. Last year there was a large sum appropriated towards the visit of the British Association, and I think that the visit of a body of this kind should be met by such an appropriation.

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate my hon. friend on his election to an important office, and I hope that, in his case, coming events cast their shadow before. It strikes me, however, that as it is expected that the visit of this body will attract the attention of capitalists to the mining interests of Nova Scotia, perhaps Nova Scotia might arrange for the visit. It is true we did pass a small vote last year for an object which was deemed to be a Dominion object—the visit of the British Association, which was arranged to go to various points in Canada. But, of course, if that is to be taken as a precedent for the Dominion contributing towards the expenses of the visits of scientific bodies, first in one Province and then in another, I do not know whereunto this may lead. I do not object much to this; after the votes of this Session, it is but a drop in the bucket; on the contrary, I rather rejoice in the vote, since it has given an opportunity to my hon. friend of explaining it so fluently, and filling so admirably, in advance, the position which I hope he is to fill next Session. That is really worth the money voted. Still, we should guard against these votes, because I fancy we shall have a repetition of the demand from different localities which would like the visit of a distinguished scientific body of that character.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I intended to make a long explanatory speech on this matter, but since my hon. friend behind me has convinced the hon. gentleman, I will not say a word.

To provide for the transport of Indian families (90) still remaining at Oka to the Indian reserve in the township of Gibson, and their settlement thereon, the seminary of St. Sulpice paying a like sum.....$5,000

Mr. SCRIVER. I would like to ask whether the consent of these Indians has been obtained to this removal, and whether they are to be removed to the reserve already occupied by a portion of them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope this vote will be the last that will be required with respect to the Oka Indians, who, as the hon. gentleman knows, have given a great deal of trouble and caused some excitement for some years. The seminary has behaved with great liberality to them; a tract of land has been bought in the township of Gibson, in Parry Sound, which has proved to be good land; a number of Indian families have gone up there; and those who have gone are happy and contented. They are close to the lake; they have good fishing; and they are altogether quite satisfied with their situation. The remaining families, who, at first, would not leave, have consented to go. As a final settlement, when the superior was here the other day, we came to an agreement, subject to the consent of Parliament, that we would pay half and the seminary the other half of the cost of removing the other ninety families, who are quite willing to go, and that will close the whole dispute, which has lasted so long.

Mr. SCRIVER. I am glad to learn that the Indians who have settled in the township of Gibson are doing well and are in comfortable circumstances, because the accounts as to that have been somewhat contradictory. I have not seen anything recently, but last year I saw a statement of a correspondent, in a Montreal paper, to the contrary effect. I hope the information of the hon. Minister is reliable, and that these poor creatures are doing well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The best proof of that is that the Indians now at Oka sent some of their friends to Parry Sound, to see for themselves, and the result of their report of the way they saw their brothers getting on was, that the rest have agreed to go.

To provide for an additional subsidy of $500 a voyage, for five voyages, of steamers from a port in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to Great Britain and continental ports..... $2,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is Miramichi, in New Brunswick, a port referred to?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. This line calls at Charlottetown, and the round trip is between Canada and Germany—at Antwerp and Hamburg.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I was in hopes, when I saw this vote, that in it might be included a sum of $500, in response to an application which was made to the Government in the early part of the Session, for a subsidy for steam communication between Prince Edward Island and Richibucto. I think it was represented, from observation, for the last twenty-five or thirty years, that a steamer could ply there the whole year round. A steamer could be found for $500 to make the experiment next winter, and I was in hopes this vote would cover that amount. If it does not, I wish to draw the attention of the Government to the matter again, in the hope that it may be thought of during the recess, and that next Session a grant may be made for this object.

Mr. BOWELL. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matter will be considered by the Government. Everything is being done that can be done to secure constant communication between that island and the mainland.

To increase the salary of Daniel Kinnee, assistant inspector of Weights and Measures..... $100

Mr. BLAKE. Why?

Mr. COSTIGAN. This officer is one of the very few officers first appointed to that service who has remained without an increase. I find, by the inspector's report, that he is one of the most efficient officers in the service, and I think I would not be doing him justice if I did not recommend an increase.

Resolutions to be reported.

VOTE TO GENERAL MIDDLETON.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would mention to the House that it is the intention of the Government to ask a vote to Major General Middleton of $20,000.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. POPE moved, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to-morrow, to consider the following Resolutions:—

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to and for the parties, railways and railway companies hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

To the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company, for a line of railway from Ottawa to Waddington, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $166,440.

To the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway Company, for a line of railway from Sackville to the Straits of Northumberland, at or near Cape Tormentine, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $118,400.

To the Montreal and Sorel Railway Company, for a line of railway from St. Lambert to Sorel, a subsidy not exceeding $1,600 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $72,000.

To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, for a line of railway from Brockville to Westport, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $128,000.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for a line of railway from its junction on the North Shore Railway to St. Raymond, upon condition of the company extending their road to a point 50 miles north of St. Raymond, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

To the Northern and Western Railway Company, for a line of railway from the northern end of the 49 miles subsidised between Fredericton and the Miramichi River by 47 Vic., chap. 8, to Boystown, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $19,200.

To the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway Company, for a line of railway from Brossaens to Dundee, a subsidy not exceeding $500 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $30,000.

To the Thunder Bay Colonisation Railway Company, for a line of railway from the Murillo station of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the east end of Whitefish Lake, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $92,000.

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for a line of railway from Ose Hill or Rathburn, to Bancroft, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Belleville and North Hastings Railway Company, for a line of railway from the Village of Madoc to the junction with the Central Ontario Railway at Eldorado, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $10,500.

For a line of railway from Long Sault to the foot of Lake Temiscamingue, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $25,600.

For a line of railway from a point on the Canada Southern Railway, near Essex Centre, to Kingsville Harbor, on Lake Erie, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $44,800.

To the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, for a line of railway from Tamworth towards Bogart and Bridgewater, 16 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 47 Vic., chap. 8, a subsidy of $70,000.

To the Gatineau Railway Company, for a line of railway from Hull station towards Le Desert, a distance of 62 mile, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 46 Vic., chap. 25, and 47 Vic., chap. 8, a subsidy of $320,000.

For a line of railway from the Grand Piles, on River St. Maurice, to its junction with the Lake St. John Railway, a distance of about 50 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 47 Vic., chap. 8, for a line of railway from the Grand Piles, on the River St. Maurice, to Lake Edward, a subsidy of $217,600.

To the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, for a line of railway from Valleyfield to a point one and a-half miles west of Johnson's, a subsidy not exceeding $1,600 per mile, and from one and a-half miles west of Johnson's to Lacolle; also from the present terminus at Ottawa to the Chaudière Falls, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

For a line of railway from Indiantown via the Miramichi Valley to its junction with the Northern and Western Railway, at or near Boystown, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $140,800.

The subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall be granted to such companies, respectively. The other subsidies shall be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways, respectively. All the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted shall be commenced within two years from the 1st day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, and which the Government shall be empowered to make; the location, also, of every such line of railway, shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all the said subsidies, respectively, shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the said report of the said Minister.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12:20 a. m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 17th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 165) to continue for a limited time the Act therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill the first and second times, considered in Committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

Mr. POPE.

THE OFFICIAL DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved that the fourth report of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the debates of this House during the present Session be adopted. He said: The report contains three recommendations. One is in relation to Mr. Boyce, who was mentioned in the House the other day very favorably on both sides, who revises the Debates, reads the English proofs and prepares an index. He has been receiving $800 a year. The proposal is, in view of the length of the Session, that he should get an addition of 50 per cent., which I believe has been the standard rule of the Session with regard to increases. Another proposal is that the translators, whose translations last year amounted to about 1,600 pages, against about 3,600 pages this year, and who receive at present a salary of $1,000, shall receive an addition of $500. The other proposal is that Mr. Quéry, who reads the French proofs, and who receives $400, should receive $200 extra. He is also on the staff of regular officials, and it is on that ground that he does not get so much as Mr. Boyce, who receives no other pay in the service except what he receives for his work in connection with the Debates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for this Session only?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is distinctly for this Session only.

Mr. TROW. While this matter is under discussion I think the hon. member for Cardwell should have extended the motion to embrace the Hansard staff. I think if any gentlemen are entitled to remuneration for extra services, the reporters, who have been kept here reporting all hours of the night, and many times the whole night, and who are not receiving sufficient remuneration for their services, should receive it. I think it would be doing a liberal act to extend that motion to the Hansard staff. While I am on my feet, I may say that there is another class of officials belonging to the Commons who have onerous duties to perform. The Session has extended to about double the usual length of our Session. There are gentlemen on our staff of permanent officials, such as translators, the gentlemen who prepare the indexes, and make up the Sessional Papers and Journals during the recess, who, to my knowledge, have been employed, during the Session, an average of 18 hours per day. They certainly are entitled to the consideration of this House. The permanent officers in the other departments have certain stated hours of labor, probably six hours a day, and in many cases less. To my knowledge they do not work more than 6 or 7 hours per day in the Departments while the permanent officers of this House have been laboring 18 hours per day, and I think their cases should be brought under the consideration of the Government, who I hope will give such some recognition of the services by allowing them a month's pay, which I think would be ample.

Mr. TASSÉ. (Translation.) I see, with pleasure, that my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) understands that he and his friends—not him particularly, because I think he occupies but very little place in the Debates in proportion to his friends—have protracted the Session to such an extent that it would be desirable to give a bonus to the reporters of the Debates. I fully agree with him, and I shall second a motion to grant a bonus, not only to the translators, but also to the reporters of the Debates.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). With regard to what has been said by the hon. member for South Perth, I would say that this is a matter that we would not have been troubled with but for the long sittings, the reading of books and extracts, and speeches which were printed in Hansard and circulated by the thousand, and I think it is very proper that the member for Perth, who did something in the way of reading from books, should bring up this matter, and say the reporters should get something, and I think they deserve it. I believe that Hansard is to blame for the length of this Session, which will cost the country a quarter of a million of dollars, and it comes very well from the hon. gentleman, who read books for hours, as I said, and had his extracts published all over the country by the thousands, to make this request. Now, I believe that is a matter that hon. members of this House should put a stop to. If the Government do not put a stop to it, or the leader of the Opposition does not, the members will. Life is too short for that kind of thing, Mr. Speaker. I may say that when I was in Winnipeg your predecessor, Judge Walbridge, told me that he had contracted a disease by his long sittings in the Chair of this House, from which he was not cured until he was cured by the pure breezes of the North-West. What will be the state of your health, Mr. Speaker, if this goes on, and I say the responsibility for it rests on the shoulders of those who read these books and extracts, because they have not brains enough to make speeches of their own.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman should not have passed such a reflection on the Ministry, for it was a Minister of the Crown that read the longest speech in the House. It must be consolatory, Sir, to you to reflect that 22 years have elapsed since your predecessor, Mr. Walbridge contracted the disease as the hon. member by sitting in the House for such a lengthened period, and that gentleman is still alive and well. I may add that there was no Hansard in the time of Mr. Speaker Walbridge, so that Hansard can hardly be held responsible for the long sittings at that time.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). What I said, was, that it was the pure breezes of the North-West which had kept him alive so long. If the Minister to whom the hon. gentleman referred, read his speech, it was his own speech prepared by himself.

Mr. TROW. One word of explanation with reference to the reading of extracts and speeches of which the hon. member for Hastings says I was guilty. It is true that for one evening I did for a short time read a few extracts, but there was not a single sentence of those extracts in Hansard. We were in committee, and these extracts were not in Hansard no matter who read them, I am sure that no one but the hon. member for Hastings will complain of the time which I occupied.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). With reference to the observations of the hon. member for Perth, I may say that the committee would have been glad indeed to have made a recommendation with regard to the stenographers if they had felt that it would be reasonable for them to do so, but they had made a report last year for increasing the salaries of the stenographers to $2,000, on the ground that they were to be officers of the House, and employed the whole year round. The suggestion was then made that sometimes there might be two Sessions, and that it would cost no more in that way for the two Sessions than for one, in so far as the salaries of the shorthand writers were concerned. Therefore, they confined themselves entirely to those whose work was of a sessional character, based on the particular amount of work as illustrated by the experience of the past year. Personally I should rejoice very much, if it is the sense of the House, that the stenographers should get an increase this year, and also that the amanuenses should get an increase this Session. I may say that the reason why no recommendation was made in their case was that they are receiving $12 a week during the Session, and therefore the length of the Session does not affect that indemnity. In one sense, the longer the Session the better for the amanuenses—that is to say, they receive a larger amount in the aggregate, according to the time they are employed. I may say, at the same time, that the amount they receive, $12 a week, is certainly not a very high rate of remuneration, as compared with the sessional clerks, who do not perform anything like the work they do. I think, in that view, the rate of remuneration is very low indeed, but it was fixed by Parliament, and the committee did not feel that they could go any further in that direction. As to the other point raised by the hon. member for Perth, that, of course, does not come within the purview of the Debates Committee, but I am sure the House will agree that the permanent officers—and there are not a great many of them—would be entitled to some consideration for the length of this Session and the long hours they have had to work; but, of course, we could make no recommendation on that subject.

Motion agreed to.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until half-past one o'clock p.m., on Saturday, and that Government business have precedence on that day after Routine Proceedings.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that for the remainder of the Session there shall be on each day including this day, two distinct sittings, the first from half-past one o'clock p.m., until 6 o'clock p.m., and the other from half-past seven o'clock p.m., until the time of adjournment; and that Government business shall have the precedence at each such sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE DISTURBANCES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. CARON. A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, I think on the 5th of July, I received a telegram from the Major General. In that telegram he stated that Big Bear had been captured, that his band was surrendering, and he wound up the telegram in the following words:

"I may safely say that the whole object of the campaign has been achieved, that the troubles in the North-West are ended and I am ordering the troops home."

The announcement of the end of the troubles in the North-West calls, I think, for an expression of opinion on the part of the Parliament of Canada here assembled, as to the manner in which these troubles were ended, through the gallantry, through the energy of our volunteers. It must be remembered that our volunteers undertook to put an end to these troubles, the first we have had for so many years in Canada, at the most inclement season of the year. Leaving the question of fighting alone, the hardships incident to such an expedition must have been very much more considerable than at any other time. I think that I can safely say that we have been adding one more page to the history of Canada. We have been, as a nation, for years and years past, increasing our prosperity, but, as a nation, we had to go through the ordeal which other nations have passed through; we had to have disturbances and troubles within our own country. I regret exceedingly that the right hon. the leader of the Government, from the great strain consequent upon the heavy work of this long and protracted Session, has felt that, instead of his following English precedents on this occasion and moving this vote, seconded by the leader of the Opposition, he should hand over to me a duty which he could have performed so much better than I can attempt to do it. I regret it for more than one reason. I regret it because I know how much more agreeable it would have been to the whole force of Canada that this vote should have been proposed by the leader of the Government, who, I must say, during the whole of these troubles has given me the invaluable advantage of his advice and his great experience in the matters connected with the administration of my Department. Before reading the resolutions which have been placed in my hands, I mean, as briefly as it is possible, to refer to the Department over which I preside, to give a few details, first, on the breaking out of the rebellion; second, on the movement of the troops; third, on the forces we sent out; fourth, on the engagements fought; fifth, on the ambulances established, and on our commissariat. I mean also to call your attention to those outside of the service and inside of the service who have helped us so successfully and so energetically in carrying out the campaign and making it a success. Lastly, and certainly not least, I mean to speak of the Major General in command of the forces, who has played his part so successfully and has carried out the plan which he himself had framed so well, in quelling and putting an end to the disturbances in the North-West. The first intimation we had of troubles in the North-West was from a telegram which was received by the right hon. the leader of the Government on the 22nd March, 1885. After studying the various details of that campaign, after taking into consideration the difficulties which we had to contend against, I think I am safe in saying that the most important features of the plan of campaign to be adopted was to quell as rapidly as possible the disturbance which took place in the Saskatchewan Valley, and which was announced to us by that telegram of the 22nd March. It was of the utmost importance, from a military standpoint, as far as we can judge, that this disturbance should be quelled as rapidly as possible, and, if it had not been for the wonderful energy displayed by the volunteers in marching as rapidly as they have done, it certainly might have resulted in very much more serious consequences than those we have had to meet in the North-West troubles. If the Major General, when he engaged the insurgents at Batoche, through marches so rapid, forced marches in fact, which have shown the endurance of our militia force, had met, united with the insurgents, the bands of Poundmaker, Big Bear and the other bands of Indians, there is no question at all in my mind that the engagement would have been ever so much more serious, and the loss of valuable lives to Canada ever so much greater and the campaign must have lasted very much longer than it has. This I consider as one of the great reasons of the success which accompanied the efforts of our volunteers in the campaign they have so successfully terminated just now. It was on the 23rd March that the Major General left Ottawa, on the 27th he reached Winnipeg. Hon. gentlemen will easily understand that it became necessary for the Major General, as soon as he reached Winnipeg, to remain a few days, so as to be able to establish his base of supplies and to take the necessary measures to allow a column such as the one under his command to traverse the great distances they had to traverse and to be ready for the field. He was delayed a very few days. After the measures I have just spoken of had been taken, he left Fort Qu'Appelle on the 6th April with his first flying column; on the 11th, he was at Salt Plains; on the 14th, at Humboldt; on the 17th, at Clark's Crossing, on the 24th, at Fish Creek; on the 8th May, at Gabriel's Crossing; on the 9th, at Batoche; on the 19th, at Guardepuy; on the 21st, at Carlton; on the 26th, at Battleford, and on the 2nd June, at Fort Pitt. Now, when one considers that almost all—I can say everyone—of the troops so engaged were engaged for the first time, when we come to consider that everyone of the volunteers who formed that first flying column, except a few officers who formerly belonged to the Imperial service, had never seen active service, it is certainly wonderful that they could have, without any previous training, so to speak, covered a distance of nearly 500 miles in 60 days, after having three engagements, the first at Fish Creek, and the two others at

Mr. CARON.

Batoche, where the rebels sustained a loss which culminated in the breaking down of the rebellion. Sir, during the whole of this time—and as Canadians, I think we cannot be too proud of it—every officer, from the Major General down to the men who had seen active service in the imperial army, have written to the press, to their friends, to the Department, to England, that no troops could have behaved better than the Canadian troops. I feel proud of it, as I know every Canadian must feel proud, to know that the honor of the country was sustained in the North-West, that law and order were vindicated by men who showed all the qualities which constitute a good citizen and a good soldier. The average number of days taken by the troops in going from their headquarters to Winnipeg was about eight days. I have caused the following table to be prepared showing the time taken by the different corps:—

A and B Batteries.....	8 days.
Infantry School Corps.....	8 do
2nd Battalion Queen's Own.....	8 do
10th Battalion.....	8 do
Midland Battalion.....	8 do
York and Simcoe Battalion.....	8 do
Sharpshooters.....	8 do
7th Battalion.....	8 do
65th Battalion.....	8 do
Governor General's Body Guards.....	9 do
Cavalry Corps (Quebec).....	9 do
9th Battalion.....	10 do
Montreal Garrison Artillery.....	10 do
Halifax Battalion.....	11 do

It is of interest to the country to know that over this new line of railway which binds the Provinces of the Dominion together, while it was yet unfinished, the troops were sent all the way over Canadian territory and succeeded in reaching Winnipeg in eight days, from their headquarters. Sir, this brings me to say a few words in reference to the line of railway which was selected for the purpose of conveying troops to the North-West. Many thought that we were, perhaps, running a risk, but we felt that we should make the experiment, we felt that having a road of our own we ought to put forward every effort to show that we could carry our own troops through our own territory without having to appeal to a foreign though friendly nation for liberty to pass through their territory. And, Sir, I think it my duty to state here that the thanks of the Department are due to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the manner in which they assisted us in every possible way, from the President down to the officials; everything they could do they did, in order to expedite the transport of our troops. Sir, I can say that, had it not been for the energy displayed by that company, the sufferings and hardships which are inevitable in military service, and which were incurred by the troops, might have been very much greater than they were. We had provided four days rations in case of accident, and we asked the company and the contractors under that company in order to save time and prevent delays, to provide all the subsistence necessary for the troops which were conveyed over that line; and I can say that in no instance were the troops called upon to fall back upon the four days rations which had been provided in case of an unexpected delay. Sir, I feel that in speaking to the resolutions which have been placed in my hands, I would not do my duty were I to fail, publicly and from my seat in Parliament, to express my thanks to those who, under the control of the company, helped us so successfully in carrying our troops north of Lake Superior. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is worthy of note, it is worthy of some remark, that the very first troops sent to the North West, A and B Batteries, reached Nepigon on the 4th of April, after having crossed about 90 miles of gaps in the railway, and that the Montreal Garrison Artillery, under Lieutenant Colonel Oswald, reached Nepigon by rail without transfer, on the 19th May. Between the 4th April and the 19th May the bridges had all been completed, the gaps had been closed, and we had an all rail route which would allow us, if the necessity occurred, to pour in any number of troops that might be required to suppress the insurrection. Sir, we had also the great advantage, as a means of transport, of having, as soon as the rivers were opened, the use of the boats belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, and the Coal Navigation and Transportation Company. These means of conveyance reduced enormously the expense which we had to incur for transport facilities, and in fact the troops themselves felt the benefit of not having to go through these long, heavy marches, and in being able to take a boat through the waterways to their place of destination. Sir, we had to send to the North-West to quell the disturbance, 4,760 men, 473 horses, and 8 guns. These troops, Mr. Speaker, were distributed by the Major General into three flying columns, composed as follows: the first, from Qu'Appelle to Prince Albert; the second, from Swift Current to Battleford; and the third, from Calgary to Edmonton. The remainder of the force were distributed all along the line of railway, and were stationed at Winnipeg, Troy, Qu'Appelle, Medicine Hat, Gleichen, Calgary, Fort Macleod, Old Wife's Lake, Cypress Hills, and Swift Current. Subsequently detachments were left at Touchwood, Humboldt, Clark's Crossing, Yorktown, Birtle and Prince Albert. The first column took 44 days to go from Qu'Appelle to Prince Albert; the second column took 15 days from Swift Current to Battleford, and the third column took exactly 14 days from Calgary to Edmonton. I now wish to say a few words in reference to the engagements which resulted from this disposition of the troops sent up to the North-West. As we all sadly remember, the first blow struck at peace and order in that territory, the first engagement that took place, was at Duck Lake. I need not, Mr. Speaker, go over the details of that engagement, as they have been set forth fully in the press of the country. This engagement took place between the Mounted Police and the Prince Albert volunteers on the one side, and the half-breeds and a few Indians on the other. The battle of Fish Creek took place on the 25th April. This was the first engagement between the first flying column under the command of Major General Middleton and the rebels. The scouts belonging to his column were fired upon by the Indians and the half-breeds for several hours, and the result was that we had 10 volunteers killed and 48 wounded. Proceeding chronologically we now come to the engagement known as the Cut Knife Hills engagement, which took place, as the House will remember, on 3rd May. It was between a column, composed of about 300 men, commanded by Colonel Otter and a large body of Indians. Our troops marched out from Battleford to a distance of 35 miles, fought Poundmaker and returned. Colonel Otter, with his column, certainly achieved a march which is almost unparalleled. His force during 30 hours marched 75 miles, and fought several hours with the Indians. The next and most important engagement is that of 9th May at Batoche, and the one which followed on the 11th. The engagement has already been so thoroughly described—and I had the pleasure yesterday of laying upon the Table of the House a plan of the whole engagement drawn by an officer belonging to the engineers of the Imperial army—that I will not occupy the time of the House by entering at length into its details. Suffice it for me to say that this was an engagement between the first flying column under the Major General and the half-breeds and Indians led by Gabriel Dumont—the most serious engagement since the beginning of the outbreak and the one which really terminated the troubles, proving to the rebels that it was impossible for them to stand against the troops which had been sent against them. On the 9th we had 1 killed and 7 wounded; on the 11th, 9 killed and 30 wounded. We have altogether to deplore the loss of 37 killed and 107 wounded. I have endeavored to refer very briefly to the engagements that have taken place; but now that those engagements are over and it is necessary to count our losses, it seems right and proper for me to express what I believe to be the feeling of the whole of Canada. Every one of us deeply felt the loss sustained by the families of those brave heroes who fell on the field of battle. We deeply felt the great loss of those men who showed that they possessed great qualities; we deeply felt the loss which the death of such men would cause in the family circle and among their friends. We could not help feeling, as we were rejoicing over the success of our arms, that our loss was great, that many lives precious to Canada and giving rich promise for the future had been lost—men who left their homes for the purpose of vindicating law and good order, and who were left staining the field of battle with their blood, but giving to their companions in arms and to every Canadian a noble example of devotion to their country and to their flag. In mourning the loss of those to whom I have referred, I am led to say a word about the ambulance corps and hospital organisation, which was established in order to prevent needless suffering. Here, again, and it is with great pleasure I say so, I had the invaluable advice of a gentleman, an hon. member who has occupied a seat in this House for many years—I refer to Surgeon General Bergin. I had, I was going to say, daily intercourse with him, but during the first few days of the outbreak every ten minutes almost he had to refer to me. When you consider, Mr. Speaker, with your experience of military life, of camping and marching as we see it in our camps of exercise—when I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we had nothing in our stores, except a few medical panniers, nothing with which to arrange for a hospital service, and when I tell you that the whole of the service was organised in four days, it might seem somewhat improper on my part to express an opinion on a matter which hon. gentlemen may fairly say I know very little about. But I do not rely on my judgment in a matter of this kind, and I desire to give the House and the country the highest testimony that can be given on the subject by a high authority sent out to Canada by that gracious lady whom Canada will never forget, Her Royal Highness Princess Louise. I refer to Dr. Boyd. I must be permitted to say a few words in regard to that distinguished gentleman. Dr. Boyd who was sent out by Her Royal Highness, was specially selected by Sir Wm. McCormack, on account of his ability and special qualifications, and from the fact that he had already rendered eminent services in three or four campaigns. During the Turco-Russian war Dr. Boyd was in a hospital at Plevna, where there was 2,000 or 3,000 wounded; he has also been in Africa and served in several other campaigns. Perhaps the House will permit me to read a letter addressed by Dr. Boyd to the Surgeon General, as follows:—

“FIELD HOSPITAL,
“SASKATOON, 22nd June, 1885.

“DEAR DR. BERGIN.—Since I left Ottawa I have done a great deal of travelling and seen some splendid scenery almost equal to any I have ever seen before, the wildness of it being very noticeable. When I arrived at Winnipeg Dr. Roddick met me there and accompanied me over the town and through the hospital where there were a few sick and wounded soldiers. The hospital appeared to be excellently managed and comfortable and the building very appropriately situated and great care has been taken with regard to the ventilation as shown to me by Dr. Kerr; the patients appeared all to be doing well and very happy. We journeyed next day to Moose Jaw, where I gave your letter of introduction to Hon. Dr. Sullivan; I visited the field hospital there with Dr. Roddick and was immensely pleased with it, in fact, for a field hospital it equals any I have ever seen for cleanliness and management in my experience of campaigns, the introduction of nurses into field hospitals is a great boon and one I always advocated as the attention, nursing and care bestowed on the wounded by the female sex cannot be nearly as well carried out by men. I gave a small donation both to the Winnipeg and Moose Jaw hospitals to get any trifles that might be of any service to the wounded. We journeyed next back to Qu'Appelle where I met Dr. Edwards, an old St. Thomas Hospital man and colleague of mine, and I stayed with him in his hospital for a couple of days during which time I visited the Bell Farm of 54,000 acres, which was very interesting on account not only of its extent but the way in which it is worked. Dr. Roddick and myself then began our ride across the prairie which we accomplished in 48 hours from Fort Qu'Appelle here. The scenery in parts was very lovely and the extent of uninhabited country astonished me and shows what a field there is for immigrants into this land, the distance I believe is about 275 miles. Here I again found a field hospital that would do credit to any nation as a model when it is taken into consideration the distance to be travelled by road from the railway. The patients appear to have everything conceivable that they may want and are cared for better than they would be in their own homes. A good many of the wounded are of a serious nature, and there are other very interesting cases amongst them and some that ought to be in my opinion recorded. All the cases seem to be on a good road to recovery, which speaks highly for the medical staff and nurses up here. The hospital is situated in a very healthy situation.

"The mosquitoes have had a 'great time' of it with me, but they have not been so troublesome for the last two days.

"I cannot conclude without saying that the greatest credit ought to be due to Dr. Roddick for the way he has managed the whole affair under such trying circumstances, and his kindness and attention to me has been much greater than I could expect, he has made my trip most pleasant and he has mapped out a route so that I may see everything. I am doing all in my power to carry out Her Royal Highness's wishes and expending the fund in the way I think she would most approve of. For instance, to-day, I find that many of these poor fellows in the hospital here have lost all their clothes, and I have telegraphed to Col. Whitehead to send twenty suits together with warm shirts and drawers to Moose Jaw, and there to be distributed to the men who may want them.

"I must now thank you for all your kindness in having me so well looked after, and I shall make it my duty to inform the Princess on the first possible occasion how kindly I have been treated on her behalf.

"With kindest regards,

"I remain yours faithfully,

"(Signed) ROBERT J. BOYD.

"Dr. BERGIN."

He has already recommended several times the introduction of female nurses in the hospitals. He says that the care given to the wounded soldiers, as we all know, can never be as well given by men as by the female nurses who are sent out. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other branch of the service, and one of such enormous importance that I cannot express to you the great anxiety which the Department felt, in so far as that branch of our work was concerned. I speak now of the commissariat. Of course, to those who have read the history of campaigns in Europe, the very great difficulties which the most perfect military nations have had to contend against when it became necessary to organise a commissariat are well known. Here in Canada we had no commissariat organised; every moment was of importance; every delay if not fatal might have resulted in increasing considerably the dangers and the length of time during which those troubles would last. But, Sir, we had to provide for a force of close on 5,000 men; we had to provide them with horses, with heavy ordnance, to send into that country. We believed, Sir, that this was a feat which could not be accomplished unless we took advantage of the only complete organisation which existed in that country, an organisation which had been in existence almost for a century, and we found that through that organisation of the Hudson Bay Company, it became almost an easy work to get our supplies into that country. But, Sir, it was really as I said for a time, a source of considerable anxiety to the Department whether we could provide a commissariat such as we required for our force. And let me here again give my testimony to the energy and the activity and the zeal displayed by Mr. Wrigley the commissioner of the Hudson Bay Company at Winnipeg. From what I have been able to ascertain every hour of his time and his office were given over to the Department of Militia. His office, his organisation, his stores—everything which could be of any possible use to the Department were placed at our disposal and willingly. He was always ready to undertake anything that we asked him to do, to forward the troops, and to help in reducing as much as possible the troubles which had to be encountered by the men going forward. When I tell you that we had 1,400,000 rounds of ammunition, 6,000 Snider rifles, 1,500 sets of new accoutrements, 2,000 rounds of artillery ammunition, and a reserve supply of clothing, boots, socks, undershirts, drawers, flannels, grey flannels, blankets, towels sufficient for 4,000 men, besides the supplies furnished to some corps at headquarters before leaving, you will form some idea of the importance of this branch of the service. Every man was given two blankets before he left, and one of those India rubber sheets which are used in camping. Now, Sir, we never could have succeeded in accomplishing what we have accomplished, had it not been for the energy displayed by Mr. Wrigley, and the help we received from the Hudson Bay Company; and I trust, although I do not wish to refer to the matter at present—I trust when the House is made acquainted with the conditions upon which they rendered us these invaluable services, it will be found that those conditions were very fair and reasonable when we consider that had it not been for the organisation possessed by this company, which they placed at our disposal, it would have become necessary for the Government at an enormous cost to them to get up an organisation similar in almost every respect to the one which had been the result of many years of organisation. Well, Sir, I feel now that having given those few details as to the principal events of these troubles, it is now my duty, as indicated by the resolution which I know will be received unanimously by the House, to call your attention to those which have helped us in carrying out the campaign. I consider, Sir, it is my duty here to thank the Deputy of my Department Col. Planet. I think it my duty also to call your attention to, and to return my thanks to the Adjutant General Col. Powell. During the first days of the outbreak, when telegrams were pouring in—and one day we received 162—when it became necessary to give orders almost as soon as the telegrams reached us, so as to prevent any possible delay, when work had to be carried out without a moment's delay, I can say that the Deputy Minister of Militia and Adjutant General both proved that they were the right men in the right place. They did their duty by their country and by their Department. Mr. Speaker, I must also call your attention to the Director of Stores, Lieutenant Colonel Macpherson. He had to supervise the despatch of all the stores which were necessary for our troops. It was he, Sir, that had to provide in the city here, the rations which were necessary for every battalion passing through Ottawa to follow up on the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior, and I can tell you that his work was incessant, that he did it willingly, and that he strove constantly to make the task of the men under him as light as possible. We have another officer in the North-West who has rendered valuable services; I refer to the Purveyor General, the Hon. Dr. Sullivan, who was the means of communication with Dr. Bergin, whose services I have already referred to, and I can say that Dr. Sullivan in the important position he occupied, in looking after the comfort and the safety of the troops, has rendered services which entitle him to the appreciation and thanks of the Department of Militia. In speaking of the men who have rendered services to the Department, I could not possibly ignore my two secretaries. I can say that Mr. Benoit and Mr. Aldrich, during two months, had only a very few hours sleep every night. They were kept busy deciphering telegrams, which arrived every half hour; they were kept writing despatches, long and important, and many of them in cipher, which had to be absolutely accurate, and which if not absolutely accurate might have led to mistakes the results of which would have been disastrous; and during the whole of that time these two gentlemen, Sunday and Monday, night and day, were working away performing their part of the business in such a satisfactory manner that I for one cannot forget the services which they have rendered. I must also say that in Mr. Dwight, the superintendent or manager of the telegraph company, I found a man always ready to facilitate in every possible way the despatch of the telegrams which were going over his line. He was always ready to give precedence to any of my telegrams, and he acceded to almost anything I asked him to do in the way of sending repairers and others over the line to maintain uninterrupted the communication between the various columns of the force and headquarters. Sir, I could not, and I know that the volunteer force of Canada would certainly blame me very much, were I in returning thanks as I have done, to forget the ladies of Canada. The volunteer force of Canada would not forgive me were I not to bring under your notice the kindness of the ladies of Canada in sending them clothing and other supplies. I do not wish to name any particular city for fear that I should forget one; but I may say that the devotion of the ladies of Canada was almost universal during that crisis; and Sir, in the despatches we have received from our own officers, it was stated to me officially that the supplies which had been furnished by the ladies of Canada, had contributed more than anything else to the comfort of our wounded in the hospitals. And, Sir, in mentioning the ladies of Canada, I cannot help mentioning a lady to whom I have already referred, a lady whom Canada will never forget, and who never forgets Canada. Whenever anything occurs in Canada, we know that we have in London a friend of Canada in the person of Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise. At the very beginning of the outbreak, Mr. Speaker, as you know from the despatches published, she took the deepest interest in what was going on in our North-West. She cabled out to know the condition of the wounded; she cabled out to provide them with pipes and tobacco during their hours of suffering, while they were lying in the hospitals; she telegraphed, also, to send out medical supplies, because England could not believe—and I am not surprised at it—that we could in such a short period of time have organised a system which Dr. Boyd himself says can compare favorably with the most perfect system in Europe; and it is a proud boast for Canada that, in the troubles we had to meet, we found all the means which were necessary to make our wounded comfortable, to secure for them all the appliances which science could provide, and to give them the benefit of the most skilled surgeons that Canada could provide; and I say that Canada can provide as good as any other country in the world. It is a proud boast for us that our system of ambulances and hospitals was considered by so high an authority as Dr. Boyd to be so perfect. Now, Sir, before I sit down I wish to return my thanks not only to the ladies of Canada, but to the nurses—the Grey Nuns and the other ladies—who went to the front to nurse our wounded in the field hospitals and elsewhere. The history of Canada is filled with examples of the devotion of Canadian women in great times of trouble and disturbance like the present, and it would be wrong for us to forget them on this occasion. To them again I return my sincere thanks, and I know that I am merely echoing the feelings of the poor wounded whom they tenderly nursed and watched during their hours of pain and suffering. Now, Mr. Speaker, my programme is about covered. I have only one word to add, and that is to carry out the intention of these resolutions by speaking of the Major General to whose military knowledge and skill we are indebted for the success which we have achieved. We know that he had good material in his soldiers; but, Sir, the soldiers of Canada were untaught and untrained; they had not, fortunately for Canada, had cause to acquire that experience of warfare that European soldiers possess; still, they had all the bravery of old troops; they had all the devotion to their colors and to their general that any other army in the world could boast of; they were as brave as any others; but they required a good general, and in the person of General Middleton they had the right man in the right place. He has proved himself to be, Sir, an able general; no one can dispute that; but he has proved himself, what I appreciate more, to be a kind general; he has been anxious by every possible means within his power, to take care of his troops and to save as many lives as possible under the circumstances. Sir, I am told that his humanity, his attention to the wants of the troops under him, has made him dear to every Canadian volunteer. Every Canadian volunteer, from letters which I have received, written by some who fought under him, says that Major General Middleton could get the volunteer force of Canada to follow him almost anywhere; and let me say that, during that battle of Batoche to which I have referred, he has shown that to save the lives of his soldiers he did not hesitate to risk his own. Under the circumstances, I believe that I can safely appeal to the House and the country to pass the resolutions which have been placed in my hands. I beg to move:

1. Resolved,—That the thanks of this House be given to Major General Frederick D. Middleton, C. B., for the distinguished skill and ability, with which he conducted the military operations in the North-West Territories, which resulted in the suppression of the rebellion against the authority of Her Majesty.

2. Resolved,—That this House doth acknowledge and highly approve the gallantry, discipline, and good conduct displayed by the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the militia force of Canada, and of the North-West Mounted Police, in the suppression of the said rebellion.

3. Resolved,—That this House doth acknowledge with admiration the distinguished valor and conduct of those who perished during the operations in the North-West, in the service of their country, and desires to express its deep sympathy with their relations and friends.

4. Resolved,—That Mr. Speaker do communicate said resolutions to Major General Frederick Middleton, and that he be requested by Mr. Speaker to signify the same to the several officers and men surviving.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The duty which devolves upon me to-day is one of a very much more pleasant kind than that which is wont to fall to hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches. I very much regret that the physical prostration of my hon. friend, the member for West Durham, (Mr. Blake), has compelled him to be absent from the House and the city on the present occasion. Everybody who knows how severe the labors of this Session have been, will feel that, with him and with, indeed, the leader of the Government, it is no wonder, however much it may be a source of regret, that their physical strength should have proved unequal to the strain put upon them. It may be too soon for us to dwell on the history of the past few months; and it is possible that, when we come to review those events, there may be matters on which we may be compelled to differ, as to the causes of the outbreak or even as to some of the measures taken to suppress it; but there is one point on which every man in this House, and I believe every man in Canada, will feel, as we do, that the thanks of the whole Dominion are due to the gallant officers and men whose bravery and good conduct have contributed to restore peace and order throughout this Dominion. The hon. gentleman who preceded me spoke, and spoke truly, not merely in high praise of the bravery which our fellow countrymen have displayed, and which we all knew that they would display, but he spoke of other qualities, equally valuable and equally important, and he spoke, I believe with perfect truth, in terms of the highest praise of the endurance, of the discipline, of the good conduct, and of the humanity, in the largest sense, which these men have displayed from the commencement of the operations until now. Sir, it must be remembered that these persons who, without any previous experience, without any previous training, came forward at the call of duty to uphold the laws of their country, have made almost to a man sacrifices more or less serious. We expect from trained soldiers that they shall hold their lives in their hands, and be ready at an hour's notice to go where ever their commanding officer directs; but it is asking a great deal; it is asking more than could have been expected from our citizen soldiers, to ask these men, literally at an hour's notice, to throw up valuable employments, many of them to leave their families to the charity of their neighbors, many of them to quit businesses which would probably sustain loss that could hardly be repaired for some considerable time, to risk permanent and valuable employments—all at a moment's notice; and I believe I am correct in stating that almost universally, when the order came from headquarters to the various corps to hold themselves in readiness, these men, neglecting their business, forsaking even the care of their families, were found, one and all, ready to respond to the call that was made upon them. This is highly creditable to them, and it is highly creditable to the Dominion, and it gives good hope that the national spirit upon which we must rely for the future prosperity of this country, has already attained greater growth than some of us would have anticipated in the short time during which our Confederation has been a nation. I trust, now that these volunteers are returning, that all of them who have sacrificed for the time their employments, will find that the various companies or persons from whose employment they went have appreciated the sacrifices they have made and the risks they have run, and taken care that none of these men shall suffer for the gallantry they have displayed in responding, as they have responded, to the call of duty. It is only right that that should be done, and I hope public opinion which can, if it pleases, will enforce that duty on all who have anything to do with our volunteers, because I say this: I say that a great danger has been averted from this country; I say that the promptitude which has been displayed in putting down this revolt, has averted what would have been a very serious cause of peril. Had there been delay in responding to the invitation of the Government, had there been delay in prosecuting that campaign, all who know anything of the conditions of life in that country, know that we might, as our neighbors on the other side of the border have been again and again, have found ourselves confronted with an Indian war which might have lasted for years, which might have cost thousands of lives and tens of millions of treasure, and it is to the volunteers of Canada, to their prompt response to the call of duty on this occasion, that Canada owes it that our losses are measured by units when they might be measured by tens or by hundreds. Moreover, Sir, I agree, and I am glad to be able to agree on this occasion, with the Minister of Militia, that the position of Canada has been decidedly raised in the eyes of the world by the conduct of our gallant friends. Sir, people respect those whom they find to be able to fight for their own land, and to defend their own country. Our conduct has been watched and scrutinised on both sides of the Atlantic, and there is no doubt whatever in my own mind—I say it frankly—that we stand before the nations of the world in a better position to-day than we did three or four months ago, on that single score. Not only have our citizen soldiers shown their value, their prowess and their endurance, but the people of Canada, I think, have learned the consciousness of their own power; the self-respect of the nation has been raised, and it was no slight thing, after all, for a country like this, which had no previous training and no organisation, as I may say, other than that which could be acquired in the very few days usually at the disposal of our volunteers, to place a fairly well equipped force of 5,000 or 6,000 men in the field at a distance of 2,000 miles from the base of our operations within the space of three weeks, or to crush out a revolt of formidable proportions in very little more than six weeks; because, if you remember that the first notice of this disturbance was received on the 22nd March, and that the revolt was, to all intents and purposes, practically crushed at Batoche on the 12th May, you will see that within six weeks we have sent our troops 2,000 miles from their base, have marched them over 300 or 400 miles of rather difficult country, have fought several engagements, and have completely pacified the whole of that extensive country in that short period. Sir, in all this,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

I see but one thing to regret, and that is that these gallant men were compelled to contend with our own countrymen. That is the only thing to be regretted, and I am sorry that their prowess could not be shown, if it must be shown, on a foreign foe, instead of being shown on the brave though misguided men whom they were obliged, in the common interest, to reduce to peace. And let me say that, among all the things to be regretted in these occurrences, there is at least one thing on which I can congratulate the people of Canada, that it would appear that the patience and the justice which, on the whole, Canada has shown for a great number of years in dealing with her Indian subjects or allies, has not been entirely thrown away. There has unfortunately been bloodshed, there have been murders committed, but those atrocities which, in other countries, have marked Indian outbreaks have been creditably absent. There has been murder and bloodshed, but I believe that there is no reasonably well authenticated instance of the Indians having tortured or outraged their prisoners; and, in that respect, I say there is good hope for the future of the North-West, there is good hope that the course we have pursued has borne some reasonable fruit. Sir, it is true that the cost both in blood and in treasure has been serious. I am not disposed to underestimate it, although, as I said, I believe that prompt action has prevented it from swelling to very greatly increased proportions; but I believe also that that cost and that loss are likely, to a great extent, to be compensated to the people of this country. I say that there has been gain in national spirit, and I say more too. I say that, in all countries which have made any mark in history, it has been found that considerable sacrifices are a necessary ingredient in true patriotism. The more men sacrifice for a good and honest cause, the more, as a general rule, are they likely to sacrifice in the future, and therefore it is that, although I regret the loss of life, although I regret the loss of money, still I feel that that is not a regret entirely without compensation; and when I compare the losses we have sustained in other respects with the losses which have been borne time and again by other nations no larger and no older than our own, I am compelled to admit that these sacrifices, taken collectively, have been comparatively light. Sir, I am very far, indeed, from underestimating the sacrifices which have been made by the men who went to the front. They endured much; and it may interest hon. gentlemen to know that, of the troops actually engaged, as large a proportion appear to have been killed and wounded, in proportion to their numbers, as are usually found to have been injured in conflicts between much larger bodies. Moreover, when it is remembered that these men were almost entirely without organisation, that not one of them, or scarcely one of them, had ever seen a shot fired in anger in his life, we can hardly speak in too high terms of the general discipline and the bravery which they have displayed. It was not a case in which a general well known to his troops was conducting tried soldiers to battle. It was a case where a general who had had no time to make the acquaintance of his forces, and whose men were necessarily without any knowledge of him, was compelled to contend, under circumstances of no ordinary character, with a foe of no contemptible sort, because his opponents, besides being brave men, were very well versed in all the wiles of the Indians, and of the Indian mode of fighting; they were men who were accustomed to defend themselves, against savage foes within a comparatively short number of years. When we recollect, as we very well may, how trained regular troops have failed under similar circumstances in other parts of the Empire and in conflict with similar enemies in other parts of the Empire, we may well be proud of the record, on the whole, of our Canadian volunteers. I do not, on the present occasion, after the very full manner in which these affairs have been dealt with by my hon. friend opposite, and at this stage of the Session, propose to detain the House much further. I may say that I believe that these young lives, so freely spent for Canada, will not be spent in vain, and although it may well be that we can do very little to compensate those who have lost husband or son or father, we will still remember, as was said by an English poet in days of old,

" Though their country weeps the slain,
Yet the burthen of our pain
Is nothing to the blaze of their renown."

Mr. TASSÉ. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I fully approve of the noble sentiments which have just been expressed. General Middleton has well deserved the gratitude of the country. As an old and devoted commander, he has reconciled the rough duties of war with sentiments of benevolence towards mankind. Sparing of the blood of his soldiers, he also managed to spare the blood of the half-breeds, for he knew that that blood, which, but yesterday, was the blood of the rebellion, might, to-morrow, become the blood of national defence. Our soldiers, Mr. Speaker, have also well deserved the gratitude of the country. As the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) truly said, most of them were impromptu soldiers, citizen soldiers, as the First Minister most properly termed them. These men, who had never seen battle, except from behind their desks, behind their counters, or behind their ploughs; these soldiers have faced everything—cold, hunger; they have endured innumerable fatigues—sleeping out in the open air when required; they have marched hundreds of miles, and I am sure their manly endurance must have surprised everybody; they have achieved marches which have never been excelled, if they have ever been equalled. And for several hours they have stood the fire of the enemy in positions in which they were much exposed, and which put them at a disadvantage. And that enemy, Mr. Speaker, was commanded by a brave man, whatever may be his faults—I refer to Gabriel Dumont. That enemy who had no Gatling, no guns, and a great number of whom were only armed with old flint muskets; that enemy, whose ammunition gave out, have proved, by their astonishing organisation, under the circumstances, that they were no mean enemy; that they were not to be despised, and that they did not deserve the obnoxious epithet which was thrown into their face, some years ago, by a General, who was then more successful than he is to-day; and I regret to say that this epithet was repeated by a man who was, for several years, one of the leaders of the Liberal party, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, at the head of these soldiers, of whom we are so justly proud, we, members of the House of Commons, have the honor to claim some of our own colleagues. Some of them have already come back to resume their seats in the House. I refer to the hon. members for Middlesex (Mr. MacMillan), and for Wellington (Mr. Orton). Others are still at the post of duty, which, fortunately, is no more the post of danger. But there is one who is not here to answer to his name, and that one was at least one of the bravest and the most respected among the braves, who took part in that campaign of the North-West, one whom history will call the Hero of Batoche—I refer to the late lamented Col. Williams. Death, which he had vainly dared, which he had vainly defied on the battlefield, has suddenly overtaken him, away out in the far distant Saskatchewan, on board the steamer which was conveying him back with his troops. The unanimous declamations of his fellow-citizens awaited him in his country; but, alas, to-day, all we can do is to shed tears on his grave and to give funeral honors to his memory. Well we may say with the poet, that we are only shadows who are following shadows. For some time we have feared, Mr. Speaker, that the honor of our arms would be tarnished by atrocities committed by our soldiers in the intoxication of victory; but I heard yesterday, with great pleasure—and I am sure this sentiment will be adhered to by the whole House—the telegram from General Middleton, which is calculated to dispel these fears, and I hope that nothing will hereafter contradict this good piece of news. Indeed, we would all be happy to repeat what Sir Robert Napier said of his soldiers after the glorious campaign of Abyssinia:

" A single complaint has been made against a soldier of having injured or wilfully molested either person or property."

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for South Huron has just said very truly, that for us French Canadians the circumstances were exceedingly painful. We had to fight against brothers, men who have French blood in their veins, if that blood is not as pure as our own; men who are bearing the names of some of the best families of France; men who were among the first to extend the limits of civilisation. Well, Mr. Speaker, the voice of blood, strong and mighty as it is, has not prevented us from doing our duty. The voice of blood, I say, has not prevented us from going to fight for our flag—for the maintenance of our political and national existence. Hence, the indignation with which we have seen certain newspapers questioning our loyalty, our devotion to our country. With what indignation have we not seen them attempting to tarnish the reputation of a whole French Canadian regiment—the 65th, from Montreal—which I am glad to proclaim it in this House, has been one of the last, if not the last, in the field, driving back the enemy in inaccessible retreats, from which they came out only to surrender their arms. With what indignation have we not seen these newspapers proclaiming that the time had come when the French Canadians must go; that they must be swept away from the country. With what increasing indignation have we not seen these same papers, have we not heard certain hustings resounding with the charge that our bishops and priests were at the bottom of the North-West rebellion, when everybody knows, or ought to know, that without the intervention of Monseigneur Grandin, the venerated pastor of the Saskatchewan; without the intervention of Father Lacombe, the apostle of the Blackfeet, a man who, all alone, is worth a whole regiment, as the celebrated Abbé Piquet, formerly said; without the intervention of Father Cochin, the apostle of the Crees, who brought about the speedy submission of Poundmaker; without the intervention of Father André, and all these apostles of Christian civilisation in the North-West, the prairies throughout the whole of that great country would only be to-day a vast ocean of flames, and I fear also, a vast ocean of blood. Mr. Speaker, the terrible death, the frightful death of these glorious and sublime martyrs, Fathers Fafard and Marchand, who gave up their lives to protect unfortunate captives against the barbarous atrocities of the savages, has not even been found sufficient to disarm slander. And it was the next day, after that double martyrdom, that Bishop Grandin said, in a letter, that his eyes were tired with weeping, and that while on one side it was stated that the bishops and clergy were sold to the Government, on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, they were accused of taking part in the rebellion; and the language used by Monseigneur Grandin has been used by every bishop in Canada. The House will allow me to repeat the manly and noble words which His Lordship the Archbishop of St. Boniface, addressed to the 9th Battalion from Quebec, another battalion composed of French Canadians, and commanded by the gallant Col. Amyot, in St. Mary's Church, at Winnipeg, when the battalion passed through that city.

Here is what was said by that great prelate, that great patriot, who is also a master in eloquence. I have named the Bishop of St. Boniface :

"I hope and pray that you may not have to wage a bloody contest, but if that duty, the most painful of all, is devolved upon you, I know that you will not fail to discharge it well. The flag which you are defending is carried by braves, you will be as brave as they are, and I have a guarantee of that by the very blood which runs in your veins ; you belong to the noble race of the Franks.

"Our forefathers," he adds, "were heroes. Well, soldiers, you must prove that you are the grandsons of heroes, and this country expects no less, and cannot expect any less from you.

"In this campaign, gentlemen, you will find regions where French Canadian heroism has preceded you ; this heroism, inaugurated on the banks of the St. Lawrence, and of its rich tributaries, has also asserted itself on the banks of the Saskatchewan, of the Athabaska, and of the Mackenzie. You will only add to this glorious chain of devotedness and abnegation with which our ancestors and their descendants have encircled this vast continent."

Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I pointed out abuse and insults which have been addressed to the 65th Battalion of Montreal. Well, I am happy to state to-day that the truth has dawned upon us. The English press, a small portion of which had insulted these men, takes pleasure to-day in offering homage to them. I am glad to be able to state that the General commanding the troops in that part of the North-West where that battalion was on duty, has been obliged to commend the bravery, the heroism, and the efficiency which these men displayed, and I may be allowed to quote General Strange's own words with regard to them :

"How splendidly they have behaved all through the march. They never flinched at anything, or complained, and they fully bore out the opinion always had of such soldiers. Their songs and cheerful good humor surmounted all the discomforts of the long tedious six hundred miles march, and I never saw better or steadier troops."

The Montreal Star published a few days ago, a correspondence from Fort Pitt, which bears a no less conclusive testimony to the bravery of the 65th. Allow me to record it :

"The 65th Battalion came in on the steamer North-West from the Midland Landing near Frog Lake. The officers and men of this gallant regiment looked exceedingly well after their arduous and tiresome tramp over an unbroken muskeg country, teeming with marshes and swamps. As the steamer bore in sight at Fort Pitt, their English compatriots lined the banks, and gave their comrades cheer after cheer. The officers are all loud in their praise of the gallant conduct of the 65th, both while on the march and while under the enemy's fire."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may be allowed to add as a last testimony, an extract from the correspondence of the Ottawa Free Press, which correspondence is dated Fort Pitt, 1st July, and relates to a grand review held by General Middleton himself, and which reads as follows :—

"The many reports circulated as to the looseness of discipline, &c., of the 65th Mount Royal Rifles, is indignantly denied by the officers and men of other corps stationed here. It is a shame that these reports of misconduct should have appeared at all, as the 65th have proved themselves to be as good as any other corps in the field. The pluck and endurance on the march and field of battle is admired by their English-speaking compatriots."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the Government have not deemed it sufficient to compliment our volunteers, but that at the same time they have thought fit to give them a more tangible proof of public gratitude, by granting to each of them a piece of land in that vast territory, which a great many of them have sprinkled with their blood ; but I do not hesitate to say that all our volunteers would have been disappointed had not the Government carried out the noble idea which inspired the hon. the First Minister last night, when he declared that it was the intention of the Government to give General Middleton a more tangible testimonial, by voting him a sum of $20,000. To honor General Middleton is to honor a General whose modesty equals his valor. To honor General Middleton is to honor the 5,000 militiamen, or rather the 5,000 braves who fought for their country. England has always liberally rewarded her generals, whether they were called Wellington, Napier or Wolseley ; she has never been sparing of her gold and of her titles to those who distinguished themselves at her service on the battlefield ; what will not she do for those who have carried her flag to the remotest parts of the North-West ? These titles General Middleton will carry nobly, as he carries his sword, as a true soldier, as a true officer. Glory then to General Middleton, glory also to his officers and soldiers. But I take this opportunity to ask the Government, to ask the authorities in this country to have mercy on the vanquished. For, if justice has rights to vindicate, if examples must be made, if rigor must be exercised, have pity on the least guilty ; mercy on those who have been led through false representations to revolt against their country ; mercy on those who have not learned that liberty has cost too dear to us French Canadians, to leave any doubts in our minds on the fact that we should desire it for all, and that the Government of Canada will never permit that one inch of land should be suddenly taken away from its owner, whether he is white, redskin, or bois bruté. I shall also add : mercy on the families of the half-breeds who are to-day in tears, in distress, and a great number of whom have lost their chief support. That mercy, I am happy to find, the Government have been the first to exercise it, by aiding the families in Batoche and the surrounding parishes. I am sure that the unanimous voice of the country will acknowledge the great act of charity which has animated the Government under that circumstance. Let us tear asunder the death pall which hangs over the plains of the Saskatchewan, and let us rather cause a gleam of hope to dawn over that country. I do not hesitate to say, Mr. Speaker, that fair, that noble dealings only, can reconcile these people to us, by showing them how unfairly they had judged us. If faults have been committed, and those faults were inevitable in the administration of so large a territory, I do not hesitate to state here that it is our duty to acknowledge them, and to atone for them. We have already had enough, and even too much, with one civil war. Let us render its recurrence impossible in the future. While causing authority to be respected, while applying the strong hand of justice, let us show at the same time that we are just, merciful, and I will even say, magnanimous, as far as possible. Everybody will admit that peace is indispensable to the development of that vast North-West region, which is the hope of the country ; peace is indispensable to the good working of our free institutions ; peace is indispensable to the prosperity of the Dominion at large, and that peace is only possible if it is based on justice, on generosity, for the present time and for the future.

Mr. WRIGHT. After the eloquent speeches that we have just heard, it appears a work of supererogation to say anything, but I cannot refrain from expressing my opinion on this occasion. In all this unhappy business there is one thing of which we have special reason to be proud, and that is the conduct of the militia force in this emergency. At a moment's notice, without any premonition of so perilous a service, the conduct of the active militia force has been eminently gallant and patriotic ; and I venture to say that if the Minister of Militia was at liberty to make a statement he could assure the House that the services of the entire active militia force of the Dominion of Canada had been placed at his disposal. When the startling news came that rebellion was rife in the land, that the laws had been violated, and the institutions of the country threatened, the conduct of the Minister of Militia was marked by singular ability, and his appeal to the active militia force, from Vancouver to Halifax, was received with the stern response of "Ready, aye ready." To me there was much in this generous answer which had a deeper meaning and a broader significance than appeared on the surface. It proved to me that at last we had a country, and that the men and the sons of the men who had made for themselves fair homes in the wilderness, could always hold the land as bravely as they had won it. It was very pleasant to turn from the pettinesses and puerilities of Canadian political life, from the fierce struggles between the men who have and the men who want, to the splendid spectacle of the genuine patriotism and enthusiasm of our brave young Canadian soldiers, to see the sons of those who are fighting their political battles so fiercely on the floors of this House, engaging in a more patriotic and a more generous warfare, only emulous as to who would best maintain the honor of the country and carry the glorious old banner the furthest into the ranks of the foe. It makes us feel proud of our country, when we remember that in the hour of danger, and difficulty, and trial, all distinctions of class, of caste, of creed, of nationality, were forgotten, and that our militia force only remembered that they had a common country to defend and common institutions to protect, and that above and beyond all they were Canadians. It is very pleasant to notice that the gallant boys of Toronto, of Quebec, of Montreal, of Winnipeg, of Ottawa, of Halifax, of Kingston, and of the Dominion generally, offered their services so freely to their country, and went as cheerfully to face danger and death as ever a bridegroom went to meet his bride. That country has a future before it whose young men are animated by such generous and patriotic sentiments. And the members of our own House were not behind hand in this patriotic service. We gave many of our bravest and best to the service of our country. The names of the lamented Williams, whose death has cast a gloom over the whole country, of Orton, of O'Brien, of Tyrwhitt, of Amyot, of Ouimet, of Bergin, of Macmillan, and of Scott, will always be held in reverence and honor. Those gallant gentlemen and trusty comrades of ours, illustrated the great body to which they belonged. In the hour of trial and danger and difficulty they were weighed in the balance and were not found wanting. Sir, in speaking of Col. Williams I am reminded of a discussion which took place in this House last Session with regard to militia matters. That discussion never interfered with our pleasant personal relations, and there were no members of this House who wished the gallant Col. Williams "God speed" more heartily, and who rejoiced more sincerely at his gallant conduct and success, or who mourned his death more sincerely, than did the members who took part in that discussion. In that discussion I said that the hon. member was the Bayard of the Canadian militia force, and I made that statement honestly and sincerely. His conduct in the North-West proves that that statement was correct. The leader of the storm at Batoche, the man who, after victory, was so kind to the wounded and to the women and children, proved that he was well named after the great French soldier; and to-day, regretted by the entire House and country, we feel that this trusty comrade, this true gentleman and gallant soldier will go to his rest in the robes of glory, under the sod and the dew waiting the judgment day. I must not forget, also, that some of the officers of our House behaved in the most creditable manner, notably, our Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, Major Smith, and Captain Todd, of the Library; many gentlemen of the Civil Service also behaved in a very creditable manner; and it must be remembered that our people are not fond of playing at soldiering. The struggle for existence is too fierce to allow us to engage in the pomp and pride and circumstances of glorious war. It was thought by many that the militia service, as at present constituted, was more ornamental than useful, that in the time of danger the defence of the country must devolve upon the men of the forest and the farm, on the toilers of the sea and the toilers on the land. But we must admit that we were all wrong, and that the Minister of Militia, his General, his staff, his Department, his soldiers, have behaved in a most creditable and honorable manner, and that, to borrow a time-honored formula, they deserve well of their country. In all of this unhappy business there is much of compensation. The marvellous mobilisation of our troops, their transport over our own railway and through our own country, the readiness with which our young soldiers adapted themselves to military service, the military skill, the courage, the coolness and bravery, the humanity and moderation of the General, and, above all, the dauntless bravery of our soldiers—all these are matters on which we may congratulate ourselves. And they had no ignoble foe to contend with. The wild hunters of the plains, in a nobler cause and fighting for instead of against their country, would have ranked as heroes. The splendid courage which would throw down the gauntlet to the British Empire, was only exceeded by that of the Canadian soldiers who took it up. I venture to say that if the victors could be consulted, while they would insist upon the savage leaders being punished, yet they would give the verdict in favor of tempering justice with mercy. So far as the deluded rebels were concerned, I think that this whole matter is most creditable to the militia service. It must be remembered that in this country we have no privileged class to fall upon, no military caste. It is literally the survival of the fittest. In the older civilisations there was a privileged class who took possession of all the emoluments and honors of war; in this country it is only valor and capacity who attain to the foremost place. That matter was decided at the French revolution when it was conceded that every French soldier carried the baton of a marshal of France in his knapsack. In that terrible charge which swept away the Russian cavalry at Eylau, it was Murat, the inn keeper's son, who "rode three lengths ahead of the best blood in France." The first grenadier was not more splendidly reckless. It was stated of the battle of Inkerman that it was a people's battle, and this campaign may be said to be the campaign of the people of Canada, a battle fought in defence of their institutions and their rights. We must all say that everybody concerned in it deserves well of his country. But while we welcome back with acclamations our brave citizen soldiery who have fought so gallantly and well, we cannot but think of those who will not be in the ranks when the troops come marching back again with glad and gallant tread. It is the price which we pay for victory. It is an awful price, but it is a price which freemen will always be willing to pay, and those who have fallen will always be remembered with reverence and honor by the inhabitants of the land they have died to save.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I wish to detain the House with only a few remarks. This is the first time I have had an opportunity of saying a word on this subject, and I cannot allow the resolution to pass without giving my humble meed of praise to the volunteers who have defended this country against their savage foes. And, Sir, particularly am I proud of the Province from which I come, a Province which, though it entered this Union with some trepidation, afraid of we knew not what, when it found the Confederation was threatened on its western point, our citizen soldiery rushed with celerity to the front, and in 17 days, on our own soil, and over our own railways, they travelled 4,000 miles. Now, Sir, I do not believe that the history of the world presents another instance of a distance so great being travelled in the same time, and with the same speed and despatch. In 1861, when the great civil war in the United States broke out, to which the hon. member from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) alluded last night, General Butler, of Massachusetts, was ordered to send his troops at once to guard Washington, and the Massachusetts troops, although within 600 miles of that city, took 9 days to reach that point. But our own volunteers travelled over 4,000 miles, upon our own soil, in 17 days, and I do not think the history of the world furnishes an example like that. It is true that the volunteers from my Province had not their baptism of fire; but, Sir, I know many of them personally, and I know that British blood flows in their veins, and had they met the foe side by side with the gallant Midland Battalion, and side by side with the Winnipeg boys, and the boys from Ontario and Quebec, they would have done their duty just as nobly, and if they had fallen it would have been with their face to the foe. While I rejoice that the most of them will come home with their ranks undecimated, yet I myself feel proud to know that if any of them had been left behind they could not have fallen in a nobler cause; for, as Macaulay says:

"How can a man die better than in facing fearful odds,
For the ashes of his fathers, and the temples of his gods?"

This baptism of fire we have had, this civil war through which we have passed, this rebellion which has been put down, has been referred to by the hon. member for West Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) in an eloquent and patriotic speech, which was cheered by hon. members on both sides of this House and will be cheered again and again outside of this House, a speech which will do a great deal of good. I say those lives which have been lost are hostages to fortune. I say that the lives lost, although we have mourned for them, could not have been lost in a better cause. Their sacrifice will elevate Canada and show the world that we possess a national spirit, that we are self-reliant, and that this Confederation is not, as some writers have said, a rope of sand, but a great Dominion, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, bound together by one unanimous sentiment and that is, that we will maintain Canada for liberty-loving people at all hazards. It is true we have lost our comrade who sat over there. I thought the other morning, as I looked at that chair and remembered his death, that it should be known forever as Williams' seat. No coward would sit there; no man who has not a brave heart would sit there. Let it for all time be known as Williams' seat. As in France, in 1800, the name of La Tour d'Auvergne, the first grenadier of France, was called every morning on the parade ground, and an officer and standard bearer stepped to the front and said: "La Tour d'Auvergne, mort champs d'honneur,"—so let that be called Williams' seat and known as such, for he died, to all intents and purposes, on the field of honor. In the words of another poet I may say:

"On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead."

In our hearts we will keep their memories green and will tell our children's children of the brave heroic deeds of our volunteers who defended our Canada against the savage foe.

Mr. MACMILLAN. Forty-eight hours prior to the engagement at Duck Lake, I believe there was not a resident of this country who had the least idea that a drop of blood would be shed in consequence of the events happening at that time. I say that, for the simple reason that I believe the disaffected people of the North-West thought the Government of Canada would make concessions that would render armed resistance unnecessary. And I think, further, that the mounted police and volunteers upon that occasion believed that all they had to do was to go and demand a surrender, to ask those persons who were acting disloyally upon that occasion to surrender, and they would immediately do so. We all made a mistake in coming to that conclusion, and it was an unfortunate one for us. There fell on that occasion some of the noblest young fellows of this country. I may particularly mention Elliott, Napier and others. I may also say that young men took part in that engagement whose names have not been spoken of here. Among them is a young gentleman, the son of a Minister of the Crown, who stood side by side with a poor fellow who was shot. He, among others, fought valiantly, boldly and bravely. I refer to a son of the Minister of the Interior, Sir David Macpherson. That engagement having taken place, the Minister of Militia found it necessary to call for troops and he called for volunteers, and as I believe, received replies from all parts of the country, showing that it was only necessary to state the number of men required to obtain them. He naturally called the regulars out first; immediately afterwards the Queen's Own, Grenadiers, and one regiment and another, until he had obtained a sufficient number of men. Those troops which went from the east travelled over a very difficult road. Although they had a very hard time in passing over it, the C.P.R. proved most useful, and I think the thanks of this country are largely due to the management of that road for the active exertions they made in order to carry through the troops as rapidly as possible. Those troops arrived at Winnipeg through that instrumentality, and their own exertions. Upon their arrival at that point they found that General Middleton had gone ahead; that he had taken with him a regiment from Winnipeg, the 90th, and proceeded to Troy. There the troops had to leave the railway, and from that point to the scene of the first engagement the regiments marched every bit of the way, a distance of about 260 miles. They were the first to take part in the engagement, and they took a most active part in suppressing the rebellion. And here let me say that the regiment to which the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) is attached as surgeon suffered most in the campaign. It went out about 300 strong, and when I saw it last it had lost 21 by death and was about 100 men short, a large number being shot and others wounded and suffering on account of the hardships they had undergone. I will pause here while I speak of the gallant officer who led the troops—General Middleton. During the engagements he thought it necessary to be in front of the fighting, in order that he should show an example to his men, and prove to them that he was determined to carry the attack to a successful result. When I speak of the General I can say that he was brave, and, not only so, but that his bravery almost amounted to recklessness, because he placed himself in positions where he and those associated with him were fired upon, two of his officers, Wise and Doucet, being dangerously wounded, and he himself having had a narrow escape. He showed the volunteers he was equal to the occasion, and was prepared to lead them wherever it might be necessary for them to follow. These troops were supported by others, and shortly afterwards the engagement at Batoche took place. It was evident to me that two great calamities may befall any army: One, that the General has not confidence in the men, and the other, that the men have not confidence in the General; and I look upon one as being equally dangerous with the other. On that occasion General Middleton did not know his men. He wished to be as careful of them as possible; he was generous and kind in that particular, probably to a fault; and I am inclined to think that he himself has come to the conclusion that if he had not been so generous to them on that occasion we might have been successful at least two days before we won. At all events, on that occasion our men were opposed by a strong contending force. They went out to their rifle pits from day to day, and it was more particularly upon coming in at night that disasters befall them, as they thus became more conspicuous marks for the enemy. They were becoming impatient and anxious that a charge should be made, but General Middleton, in his kindness, and in his fear that disasters might result, delayed the charge from day to day. At last it was understood that upon the fourth day a charge should be made, if there was any chance for it. On that particular afternoon Col. Williams saw it was a fitting time, and sent word to Colonel Straubenzie that now was the time, that he was going to charge, and he wanted support. It was upon the occasion of that charge which was led by Colonel Williams—one of the most splendid of officers, one of the kindest of men, and one of the best friends that any member of this House ever had—it was then that he shouted "Come on, boys," and almost simultaneously with it the command was given to the Grenadiers, the 90th, and then to the scouts. The engagement took place, and in a short time the field was ours, and I am inclined to think that if the charge had taken place some time previously we would not have lost so many men. On that occasion we have to regret the loss of many noble fellows, and none more to be regretted than Capt. French, who was one of the last shot in the engagement, but not the last, because he had hardly been killed when his murderer, Donald Ross, fell in his tracks, killed by a ball from one of our own men. That charge practically ended the battle, and General Middleton, with a considerable number of troops, went on towards Prince Albert. I may say that I went over the whole ground on more than one occasion after they left, and I do not think that this House is properly informed with reference to the looting or destruction which is said to have taken place there. I saw no evidences of anything of the kind. I saw many of the women after the engagement was over; the men had taken to the woods, and remained away for a period of five, or ten, or twelve days, and many of them had not returned; in speaking to these women we heard nothing of the ransacking and destruction which has been referred to. It is true that, so far as Batoche's house is concerned, that was riddled, and no wonder, for it was the council chamber of the rebels, and the house in which our poor friend French was shot. The stores in the place were also considerably riddled, Batoche's store among others, it being kept as a prison by the rebels. The troops went on from that to Prince Albert, Battleford, and Fort Pitt. Of the engagement at Cut Knife Hill I will say very little, as I fancy some further enquiry will be made with reference to the course pursued by the officers and men, and how far they were justified in that engagement. Nor will I comment further on the conduct of Col. Irvine, than to say that there is no doubt that, situated as he was, it would have been a most dangerous thing to have left Prince Albert unprotected, where there were a large number of women and children, and, more especially, Sir, when there were a number of the rebels residing in that locality, although it was difficult to discover who they actually were. I will say this, that whatever the fate of Riel may be, there are some few white men who deserve quite as bad a fate, if not a worse one. I could name them, but it is unnecessary on this occasion; and I am sorry to say that even now, after the troubles are over, they come out boldly and express their regret that Riel was not more successful. I sincerely hope that at the coming trial these men will be brought to justice, because they are well known, and that the punishment will be meted out to them which they deserve. The Indian has a reputation for cunning, but there are some white men who, I think, equally deserve it, and deserve it even a great deal more than the others, because they incited the half-breeds and Indians to rebellion, while they did not themselves come out boldly with arms in their hands, in which case the evidence would be positive against them. One of these men was the chairman of Riel's meetings, whenever he was required, and I regret to say that he is a man who emigrated from Ontario to that place. I proceeded to Fort Pitt, and I may say that when I came in view of the 90th, the Grenadiers, and the Midland Battalion, it was a matter of difficulty for me to decide whether or not the troops had just escaped from some prison, because they were clad in a most peculiar and motly style, the ground work of their clothing being the original black or red, while their clothes were patched in every conceivable way with pieces of white bags and other material of that kind. I am blaming nobody for this state of things, because, under the circumstances, it was an impossibility that matters should be otherwise. A more dilapidated looking lot of men, so far as clothing is concerned, I never saw; but they wore cheerful countenances, countenances which showed they were prepared to obey any orders which might be given, so long as it came from an authoritative source, and I have no doubt that those men who followed Big Bear underwent as great hardships as any body of men ever did. I know that some of those who went down the river on barges were men who had been on the Nile expedition, and they stated that it was much easier labor going up the Nile than it was going down the Saskatchewan. I have just stated these things for this reason, that having gone over this ground pretty well, I had a chance of becoming acquainted with the history of the troubles and with the localities, and I must join my meed of thanks to those which this House offers to the volunteers. I can do it all the more cheerfully from the simple fact that I am one of the recipients, although I am not one who can boast of having done any great or arduous duty. My position, I may almost say, was that of a featherbed soldier; but the men of my regiment, the 7th Fusiliers, were hewers of wood and drawers of water during the whole campaign. I will venture to say that no body of navvies in Canada ever worked so laboriously as they, and not only they, but other regiments as well. But we were in the same position as all the other volunteers; we did what we were instructed to do, what the General, who knew what was best, asked us to do; and in doing that we did our duty, and did it well. There is one matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister. He returns thanks, on behalf of this House, to the Hudson Bay Company and deservedly so, because I suppose no other company in Canada would have performed what was done as well as that company. But allow me to say that that affair is surrounded with some things which should be looked into very closely. Like all armies, the expedition was followed by a lot of speculating suckers, who were determined to make all they could out of the affair; in fact, they have been exceedingly anxious that the rebellion should continue, not only during this summer, but during the whole year, in order that they might realise something out of it. I am sorry to say, and I think the evidence will show, that when some of the officers of the Hudson Bay Company were applied to by teamsters for employment they positively refused to accept them, and they were told that they must make application to other persons; and I regret to say that "the other persons" were persons who formed this ring, who were prominent in swindling the Government of this country. I would not have regretted it one whit if this money had been spent among the settlers of the country, who required it; but I think it very unfortunate that one farthing went into the hands of this ring, which, on enquiry, may be found to be composed of harpies, whose names I have very little care of mentioning at present; and I sincerely hope that before the Government pay these amounts—

Mr. SPEAKER. This is not the question of paying; it is simply a vote of thanks.

Mr. MACMILLAN. It is true, I have probably taken the wrong occasion on which to express my views on that subject; but I was doing it now to save me the trouble of doing it on another occasion. At all events, I am just about done. I am very thankful, amongst the other volunteers, for the vote proposed on this occasion, and also for the gratuity which has been granted to the forces, and I am sure it will be most thankfully received by very many of the men who went out on that occasion. I may say, with reference to my own regiment, that although it was under 300 strong, I believe about 50 of them volunteered to remain on service, and I have no doubt a great many will take advantage of the gratuity offered by this Government, and go out to that country, to make it their permanent home. I am also thankful to see that this gratuity is not hampered by any conditions which might prevent any of the men accepting it.

Motion agreed to.

GRANT TO GENERAL MIDDLETON.

Mr. BOWELL presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General submits to the House of Commons the expediency of recognising the eminent services rendered by Major General Middleton, C.B., in the suppression of the recent rebellion in the North-West Territories, and to present Major General Middleton, in consideration of his eminent services in the suppression of the rebellion in the North-West Territories, with $20,000.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 15th July, 1885.

Resolution to grant $20,000 to General Middleton considered in Committee of Supply, reported and concurred in.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House considered and concurred in the remaining resolutions reported from the Committee of Supply.

House of Commons—Sums required to meet increased expenditure under reports of Internal Economy Commissioners..... $1,020

Mr. TROW. In the matter of permanent officers of the House, something should be added to this. They have been working 18 hours a day, on an average, during the whole Session, and I hope the Government will do something for them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot bring it down, except by Message. Of course, that can be done later.

To make good to those persons of Prince Edward Island, who were British subjects, the amount of duties paid by them to the United States Customs on fish and fish oil in the years 1871 and 1872..... $20,820 49

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to move that that amount be reduced, as I find, on enquiry, that the proper sum is not that inserted in the Estimates, to $16,542.49.

Amendment agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BOWELL moved:

1. Resolved,—That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1885, the sum of $3,546,465.99 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.
2. Resolved,—That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1885, the sum of $26,694,313.40 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

Resolutions read a second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 163) for granting to Her Majesty certain moneys required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending, respectively, the 30th June, 1885, and the 30th June, 1886, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many stages do you want to take now?

Mr. BOWELL. Only three.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not to be taken as a precedent.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, no.

Bill read the second and third times, and passed.

ST. LAWRENCE NAVIGATION AT QUEBEC.

Mr. McLELAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 159) for facilitating the navigation of the River St. Lawrence, in and near the harbor of Quebec.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This Bill affects the charter of the harbor commissioners at Quebec, and I move:

That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:

Bill (No. 160) respecting a grant of land to the Militia on service in Manitoba and the North-West.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 162) to provide a salary for an additional County Court Judge in the Province of Manitoba.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. POPE moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions to authorise the granting the subsidies therein mentioned to and for the parties, railways and railway companies mentioned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be perfectly idle to oppose the intention of the Government to put these resolutions through; but at the same time, although I am not going to oppose them, I wish to say, as a matter of course, not only must they be passed wholly and entirely on the responsibility of the Government, but I desire to renew a protest I made last night against the introduction of measures of this kind at the present stage of the Session. These various grants which are proposed may be good or may be bad. They may open up very valuable districts; they may give important commercial facilities to important classes of the community; or they may be of precisely an opposite character. They may be roads which are of no real value to any one but a few interested parties; they may be roads which run through districts, which will not repay the expenditure; they may involve this country in heavily-increased expenditure. We cannot tell; we do not know; we possess no information. I do not profess to know anything about the great majority of these proposals which the Government makes. I am sure the House, in the aggregate, does not know, and I have the strongest suspicion that members of the Government do not know, with the exception of one or two members, who may be specially concerned with those localities, more about it than I do or the House does. Moreover, I have observed that in a great many of these proposals which have been brought down from time to time, no proper precautions seem to have been taken to ascertain whether they would go on or not. The Government do not seem to have assured themselves that these grants, when made, will be taken advantage of by solvent companies, or by individuals of sufficient means to construct these roads. We have had no information; we are not likely to get any information of any consequence, as to the chances of trade being developed by them. There are not more than one-third of the members of the House present, and yet we have propositions brought down, involving grants of aid to nineteen railways, seventeen in the list before us and two provided for by the Supplementary Estimates. These roads are scattered over a very wide extent of country. They do not seem to have been proposed on any particular system or scheme, that I can see. As I have said, it is quite impossible to judge, unless we devote many days to the task, of the merits of each of these particular schemes. I venture to say that if I were permitted to put the First Minister in the box, whatever the Minister of Railways may know, it would appear that the First Minister is not one whit better informed than I am myself, as to the bearings or aspects of most of these propositions. As to what their political value may be, I dare say he could pass a good examination on that point, but as to the nature of the country through which they will pass, the extent of trade they will develop, the hon. gentleman is entirely ignorant, and I think, entirely indifferent. Moreover, there is another fact to be borne in mind. I will not undertake to say, from my own knowledge, but it has been stated again and again, and the surrounding circumstances have lent color to it, that in a good many cases the charters of these roads, to which the Government have given grants, have got into the hands of private individuals or corporations, which have trafficked in them and made a profit out of them, the original parties having no honest intention of building the railways; but these parties got the Government grants and charters as a means of making profit out of them for their personal advantage. I say that for all this the Government must be held responsible. The only mitigating circumstance I can think of is, that in a great many of these cases, in a very considerable number of them, the roads will not be prosecuted at all, and if any profit is made it will be made merely in the way I have said. I repeat again that I think it very unfortunate and mischievous that the discussion of questions involving directly a couple of millions of dollars, and involving indirectly many millions more, should be put off until a few moments before the close of the Session.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not rise to oppose the resolutions, because, from my knowledge of certain of the roads, I believe they are deserving of the aid that the Government is giving them; and having more confidence in the Administration than the hon. gentleman who has just spoken I believe the other roads, of which I have no personal knowledge, are also deserving of the consideration extended to them by these resolutions. I regret to say there are certain other roads that have made application to the Government for aid which have not received that support which I believe they should have received. I speak now with respect to the application made by the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company, for the extension of their line from Renfrew to Eganville. That application was supported by petitions from the several municipalities in South Renfrew, and also from one municipality in the riding which I represent. The country which that road would open out is one possessing mineral and agricultural resources of a valuable character, and it seems to me, if this road were pushed through the section in question, a valuable tract of country would be opened up, and especially mineral resources developed. It is therefore a matter of regret to me that while the Government have dealt liberally with the grants to other enterprises, they have not seen fit to grant the application made by the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, supported by the municipalities to which I have referred. I venture to express the hope that the Minister of Railways will, at the next Session of Parliament, propose to grant aid to this enterprise.

Mr. POPE. It is quite true what the hon. gentleman has said, that that road would open up a valuable section of country. It is quite true, also, that the policy of the Government is to aid railways, and local railways, to a certain extent. But it must be remembered that this is not the only road to which we have had to refuse a grant; and I hope that at some future time we may be able to carry out the hon. gentleman's desire. The policy of the Government has been well explained by the First Minister. From the time the First Minister took office until now, the Government have pushed with vigor and energy all the railway enterprises of the country. We have done that as strictly as we could, but in 1882 we felt there was something remaining to be done, and we took into consideration local roads of importance; and, as was stated yesterday, when the Provinces were unable to do that work, although they were interested in local roads, we felt that it was the duty of the House to aid them. We felt that while it was the duty of the Provinces to open up ordinary roads, for the purpose of developing the newer sections of the country, it was better for this Government to take in hand, as far as possible, the general railway interests of this country—those great interests which must contribute largely to the Dominion Government. In 1882 we granted $1,508,000 for the opening of local roads throughout the country. In 1883 we granted $2,138,400, which has done a great deal of good. In 1884 there was granted $2,891,600 for these purposes. The hon. gentleman has included roads in his estimate for which $1 has not been granted over and above the amount granted to them last year. The total number of roads to which there are new grants this year is fourteen, and the total amount of money is less than it was in 1882, and less than it was in 1883 and 1884. I am sorry that I have been obliged to curtail so much in regard to these grants, because I believe that it would be in the interests of the country to do much more than we are doing. The hon. gentleman says that he fears this money will not do that good we anticipated; that a good deal of it will be wasted. The hon. gentleman need have no fear on that point. This money is, after all, but a small proportion of the cost of these railways; it is really about enough to furnish the rails, and if we were able to give even a little more aid to these roads, we would be doing a good thing for the business of this country. I say we can never come to the position we should occupy until this country is opened up by railways, and that cannot be done simply by private enterprise.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Renfrew). I may say that a deputation came down here the other day, and saw the hon. Minister of Railways, with reference to the continuation of the Kingston and Pembroke Railway to Eganville. He told the deputation then, that probably something would be done, but when I saw him later, he told me that nothing could be done this year, but that he would try to have something done next year. The road is a level road, easy of construction; it will not cost a great deal, and the municipalities are prepared to grant a small bonus towards it, and if we can get a subsidy from the Government, along with what money the company will put in, I think we would be able to give the road a start.

Mr. ORTON. I am not inclined to criticise unfavorably the course which has been taken by the Government in reference to these railways. I believe that some of the roads which have applied for and have not received grants, such as the Ontario Western Pacific road, deserve some assistance from the Government. But it is not so much with reference to that that I rise, but I wish to draw the attention of the House to the importance of giving such aid to railways in Manitoba and the North-West as will secure their construction. Now, although grants of land have been made to the South-Western Railway, the North-Western and other roads, it is a well known fact that there is great difficulty in obtaining money by selling bonds or otherwise for the construction of those roads. I regret that the Government have not also taken power, in the case of the failure of these roads in obtaining money, that they should get aid in some other shape, either by guaranteeing the bonds or otherwise. The importance of those roads to this country cannot be over-estimated. In southern Manitoba, and in that part of the North-West south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there is one of the most magnificent portions of the whole Dominion of Canada for agricultural purposes, and a large number of enterprising and well-to-do settlers. So far, however, those investments have been profitless, and the settlers there are, as it were, driven almost to desperation. This very year, I know, a large area of ground has been sown in that district, in the hope that they would secure railway accommodation to carry out the grain of this season. Sir, if the grant of land is not sufficient to fill that object, the Government of Canada will be censured, and perhaps with some reason, for not having insured railway accommodation to the people of that country during the present season.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We have heard from the Minister of Railways that it has been the settled policy of the Government, since 1882, to aid in the development of the country, as far as possible, by aiding local roads in the public interest, and the hon. gentleman says he is sorry that he cannot do more this year. Why has the Minister found it necessary to curtail in this direction? The Government have given no indication that they are impoverished or unable to aid in public enterprises of this kind. I would also ask what amount of good has been accomplished by the grants which have been given since 1882? How many miles of railway have been built, as the result of these grants, and in what Provinces and counties have these roads been constructed?

Mr. POPE. We felt it necessary to curtail, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, there has been an extraordinary expenditure this year. He also knows that the condition of all those grants was that the roads should be begun within two years. Hardly more than two years have elapsed since the grants were made, and a good many of those roads have got fairly under way; but I am sorry to say I cannot give the exact number of miles.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

To the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway and Bridge Company, for a line of railway from Ottawa to Waddington, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $166,400

Mr. POPE. This road is a very important road, running from Ottawa to the St. Lawrence River, with an extension for several miles up the Gatineau River, and when built it will be the shortest road to New York. It runs through a splendid country, which is well settled, and it will accommodate a great many people.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Renfrew).

To the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway Company, for a line of railway from Sackville to the Straits of Northumberland, at or near Cape Tormentine, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $118,400

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this a new project altogether?

Mr. POPE. This road has been subsidised by the Government of Nova Scotia, and is an absolute necessity to provide the people of Prince Edward Island with connection with the Intercolonial Railway. It is a new project, so far as we are concerned.

To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, for a line of railway from Brockville to Westport, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole....$128,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Was any of this road built?

Mr. POPE. No; it is a new project. The line runs into a mining country, where there are many settlers, and also through a fine lumber region. At the terminus there is a village of about 1,200 inhabitants, and several villages along the line, which have no outlet.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is not parallel, of course, with the Canada Central. In what direction from Brockville does it run? How wide apart are the two roads, say from Westport?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I may say that the road is not parallel with the Canadian Pacific at all. The Canada Central runs almost north from Brockville, and this road will run in a north-westerly direction. At Westport, I suppose, they would be 30 or 40 miles apart.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for a line of railway from its junction on the North Shore Railway to St. Raymond, upon condition of the company extending their road to a point 50 miles north of St. Raymond, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per miles, nor exceeding in the whole..... $96,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This road is partly built, is it not?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is not this an addition to another subsidy already granted?

Mr. POPE. This is for a portion of the line that was not subsidised.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there a probability of its being completed the whole distance, to Lake St. John?

Mr. POPE. There is a probability that this subsidy will enable the company to complete it. This is through the hardest part of the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How much more will have to be built after the point mentioned here is reached?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think about 70 miles more.

To the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway Company, for a line of railway from Brosseau's to Dundee, a subsidy not exceeding $500 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $30,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does not this look like a local enterprise—$500 a mile?

Mr. POPE. This road is very well advanced, and the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) can tell all about it.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is in operation, and has been for some time.

Mr. POPE. Well, we will strike it out.

Mr. SCRIVER. It would not hurt me very much if it were struck out. I was not a party to asking for the grant. I do not know the principle on which $500 is granted to the Champlain Junction Railway and three times that amount to the Canada Atlantic. They both traverse the same country, one running north and south, and the other east and west. I find no fault, but I do not understand the principle on which the discrimination was made.

To the Thunder Bay Colonisation Railway Company, for a line of railway from the Murillo station of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the east end of Whitefish Lake, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole. $92,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What length of road will this be?

Mr. POPE. Twenty-nine miles.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Anything done?

Mr. POPE. No. It runs through a mining country.

To the Central Ontario Railway Company, for a line of railway from Coe Hill or Rathburn, to Bancroft, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole .....$64,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is a road which has received no aid hitherto.

Mr. POPE. Not at all. It is to extend it.

To the Belleville and North Hastings Railway Company, for a line of railway from the village of Madoc to the junction with the Central Ontario Railway at Eldorado, a subsidy not exceeding $1,500 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....$10,500

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That will bring Belleville in connection with the Central Ontario.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With reference to the subsidy to a railway from Long Sault to the foot of Lake Temiscamingue, is that a continuation of the road?

Mr. POPE. No; this is to overcome a rapid of the river.

Mr. SCRIVER. What proportion does this increased subsidy to the Napanee and Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company bear to the former one?

Mr. POPE. There is no increase of subsidy, but the distance is a little shorter.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose changing the subsidies will give the companies two years from now to build the roads, instead of their forfeiting their charters, as they would have done under previous grants.

Mr. POPE. So far as these increases are concerned, all the roads will be completed within the two years, except one, and the time of that will be extended. That is the Gatineau Railway.

Resolutions reported, and read the second time and concurred on.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill No. (164) to authorise the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned in aid of the construction of certain railways.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE LATE COLONEL WILLIAMS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure the House will be pleased to know that you, Mr. Speaker, as representing our feelings, have ordered a floral wreath to be sent to lie on the coffin of our dear friend Colonel Williams, and I have no doubt that your action will meet with the universal consent and approval of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—PROROGATION.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentleman is now in a position to state when we may expect prorogation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think we shall meet again until to-morrow afternoon, and we shall meet to-morrow simply to receive Messages from the Senate. No proceedings will be taken up in this House of any kind, except the transmission of Messages from one House to the other, and it is proposed, if the state of public business will allow it, that the House should be prorogued on Monday, at 2 o'clock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it not possible to-morrow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have consulted the leader of the Senate, and he tells me it will not be possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At any rate, our work is now closed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that I have received the following letter:—

“OTTAWA, 17th July, 1885.

“SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament on Monday, the 20th instant, at 2 o'clock p.m.

“I have the honor to be, Sir,

“CHARLES J. JONES,

“for the Governor General's Secretary.

“The Honorable

“The Speaker of The House of Commons.”

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that when the House adjourns, it stand adjourned until to-morrow, at half-past one o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 5:55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

OTTAWA, 18th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MEMBERS' INDEMNITY.

Mr. TROW. I desire to ask the First Minister if anything has been done towards the payment of certain members who have been unavoidably absent for some time this Session on account of sickness, I mean the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) and the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson). Both these gentlemen have been unwell for some time, though they endeavored to remain, and did remain, in attendance, when they were quite unfit, for some weeks, attending to their parliamentary duties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is, perhaps, a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says. The subject was alluded to yesterday, I think, in regard to these members. The hon. gentleman has only mentioned two, but there was also Mr. Gaudet, who broke his leg. Under present circumstances, it is impossible that there should be a vote of Parliament on the subject, but I have no doubt that Parliament will vote the money next Session, and possibly there may be a means found, between now and the next Session, for the Government to anticipate the certain vote of Parliament in its favor, and to act accordingly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand that the state of public business is such that there will be really no necessity for our meeting again to-day. For fear of accidents, as the House will be prorogued at two o'clock on Monday, we had better meet here on that day at twelve, because I have the recollection that on one occasion, by our thinking the business was all disposed of, the Governor General of the day had to wait three hours in the room of the Speaker of the Senate, while the two Houses were settling a matter. I, therefore, move, that when the House adjourns to-day, it stand adjourned until Monday at twelve o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). There is one matter which I think has not been fairly dealt with. That is, the typewriters. The typewriters get $2 a day. The Hansard reporters get large salaries. I bring the matter before the attention of the Government. I think it is a shame that these men should get the small sum of $2 a day. I think they are equally hard worked with the reporters. I bring the matter before the notice of the Government and the House.

Motion of Sir John A. Macdonald agreed to, and House adjourned at 2:15. p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 20th July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 12 o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OMISSION FROM THE DEBATES.

Mr. PAINT. I wish to make a reference to an omission in the Hansard. Am I in order in doing so now?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. PAINT. In the Hansard of the 16th inst. some remarks that were made in the debate on the vote of $300,000 for the railway from Metapediae towards Paspébiac are omitted. There were some remarks made by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side and also from this side; these are omitted. Also, in connection with the $250,000 for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Pictou harbor from Stellarton, some remarks were made that are also omitted, and, I judge, a good deal more.

Mr. TROW. I may say that if there was anything omitted from the Hansard it must have been because the remarks were inaudible, because, as a rule, the reporters have done their work admirably. I do not suppose that in the whole Dominion, or even on the continent of America, there are men who can do better work than the staff of the Hansard.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. PAINT. I am not making any charge against the Hansard reporters. None are so deaf as those who will not hear.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint), about some omission in the Hansard, I may state that I have just been enquiring in the Hansard room, and it appears that some members of the Hansard staff have left, but it has been arranged that their note books will be sent for at once, and the omission supplied, if possible, in the bound volume.

REMARKS.

Mr. TROW. I do not desire to intrude upon the House, but if there is a quiet member of this House, I think it is myself. I have no doubt that you, Mr. Speaker, feel quite relieved at our approaching departure. Your duties have been very arduous, and so have been those of your assistant. I must say that our Speaker, after being in close communication with the members of the Opposition, probably in closer communication with them than even the leader of the Opposition himself, knowing the wishes and wills of every member of the Opposition almost daily, can depend upon a universal feeling of good will amongst the members of the Opposition. I know that they say that he is the right man in the right place, no matter what party is in power. I was pleased on Saturday to see the healthy complexion and elasticity and activity possessed by the First Minister, at the close of the Session, the long and tedious Session that we have had. The First Minister seemed to be better in health than he was at the commencement of the Session, and I hope he will continue to be possessed of that vigor and determination which he now has. I have seen it stated somewhere in the press that there is an anxiety on the part of the Opposition that he should leave—not this world of tears; we never anticipate anything of that kind; we hope it will be a long time before he will be called away from us; but we hope most sincerely that, before long, he will change positions with the leader of the Opposition. That is all the evil we wish him. I was very much pleased at the conduct of Sir Richard Cartwright this Session, for the reason that, notwithstanding the ability of the hon. gentleman in his own Department—and I think our friends will give him credit for understanding his business in that Department and performing it satisfactorily—I know there were several occasions on which Sir Richard Cartwright could have brought him to task on financial matters; but he refrained from doing so, and I think he is entitled to some credit for the toleration he gave to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs. Our next friend, the Minister of Public Works, rather pleases me, at all events, in the way he has everything prepared. Every question that he is asked, he is at all times ready to answer; or, if he has not the answer in his head or on the point of his tongue, he has his little volume beside him, and that is opened instantaneously, and very little time is taken in answering any question by the Minister of Public Works. In that he shows a good example to other hon. gentlemen, and I might mention, without being invidious, the Minister of Agriculture. He is a good natured gentleman, but I think he might learn a lesson from the Minister of Public Works on that subject, and I am sure the result would be more satisfactory to the House.

Mr. GEOFFRION. Though he is a Pope, he is not infallible.

Mr. TROW. The Minister of Militia rather astonished me, and, I have no doubt, astonished the country, by the manner in which he has dealt with this bloody war, the manner in which he brought his troops into the field and provided for them. Considering the distance they had to travel, the route not being thoroughly prepared for them, and the expedition with which he forwarded them to the North-West and made provision for them, we must all agree that his duties must have taxed his energies to the utmost; and he has shown a great deal of executive ability in performing the services he has performed. I do not think it is necessary to go all round the Ministers. The Postmaster General is an old friend of mine. We live near each other, and I think he is improving. At all events, I do not think he has an enemy in the House. As for our friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, if he would express himself with a little more vim and determination it would be better for the House, but we have all come to the conclusion that he is sincere and honest in his intentions. The Session has been unusually long, and some allege that it is owing to the unnecessary amount of discussion on the part of the Opposition on the Franchise Bill. I do not know that it is altogether due to that. The measure was one that was very objectionable, one that the First Minister has had on his mind for sixteen or eighteen years, and some features of the Bill were extremely objectionable. The measure has been, to a great extent, remodelled, and is better now than it was at the outset. Of course, now, the revising officers are to be judges, and they have their reputation to sustain, and it will be a different thing from appointing an outsider, even if he is a barrister of five years' standing. The Indian clauses were also very objectionable. The plea of the members of the Ministry and their supporters was that the franchise was to be uniform, but that has been abolished, and it is not a uniform franchise, because the Government have yielded to their friends from British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. I think the Session, on the whole, has been rather satisfactory. No doubt, like all previous Sessions, we have added to the indebtedness of the country, but probably that is unavoidable. Our indebtedness now amounts to nearly $300,000,000, and I think we have some very doubtful assets, and a great number of these should be struck off the list as uncollectable or unremunerative. I have no doubt the hon. gentlemen are glad to see the Session brought to a close, but if the measures of the last week had been brought down earlier in the Session, and some time had been given for their thorough investigation, it would have been more satisfactory. The Government have seen now that it is the determination of the Opposition, no matter at what stage of the Session important measures are brought down, to discuss them thoroughly; and no doubt that will prolong the Session if those measures are not brought down at an early date. For many weeks this Session we were doing very little. I think the Government will acknowledge, I think the First Minister has already acknowledged, the assistance received, in all measures brought down, from the leader of the Opposition. That hon. gentleman is indefatigable in his determination, no matter how crude a measure is, to get that measure perfected, though he is not always responsible for its perfection or imperfection. If he can do any good he is always ready to do it. His labors this Session have been very severe, and, at its close, he felt very ill, or possibly he would have been here to-day.

PAUPER TURKISH IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. TROW. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question in regard to a vessel which is said to have arrived with pauper immigrants—I think they are Turks. They landed at Rivière du Loup, I think, on Friday. It is reported in one of the Montreal papers that there were some fifty immigrants, and that they are in destitute circumstances, and a subscription is being raised to support them immediately on their arrival. Has the Minister any knowledge of their arrival?

Mr. POPE. No; I have not seen anything of the kind. I have asked every one of my friends about the matter to which the hon. gentleman alluded, and if there had been fifty destitute Turks I think I should have heard of it. Did the hon. gentleman say they landed at Rivière du Loup?

Mr. TROW. Yes.

Mr. POPE. He must be mistaken, because no immigrants are landed at Rivière du Loup.

Mr. TROW. I showed the hon. gentleman the paper.

PROROGATION.

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General, by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

MR. SPEAKER.—His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of your hon. House in the Chamber of the hon. the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to the Senate.

IN THE SENATE CHAMBER.

An Act to provide a salary for an additional County Court Judge in the Province of Manitoba.

An Act to authorise the granting of the Subsidies therein mentioned in aid of the construction of certain Railways.

An Act to authorise grants of land to members of the Militia Force lately on active service in the North-West.

Then the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bills:—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty the sum of $1,700,000, required for defraying certain expenses now being incurred in connection with the troubles in the North-West Territories.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1885, and the 30th June, 1886, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which Bills I humbly request Your Excellency's assent

To these Bills the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to these Bills.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the third Session of the fifth Parliament of the Dominion with the following speech:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I desire to convey to you my best thanks for the diligence with which you have performed your duties during this long protracted Session.

It has been in many respects an eventful Session—in none more so than because since its commencement the peaceful progress of the Dominion, unbroken for so many years, has been interrupted by a serious insurrectionary outbreak in the North-West Territories.

I congratulate you upon the prompt and complete suppression of these disorders and on the restoration of public confidence throughout the regions in which they occurred.

The insurrection has been encountered by the military force of the Dominion under Major General Middleton in a manner deserving of the highest commendation.

The courage which our citizen soldiers have shown in the face of a formidable and determined enemy, their cheerful endurance of privation and fatigue, and the readiness with which they have submitted to sacrifices, inevitable whenever a force composed of citizens of all classes is called upon to relinquish the employments of civil life, reflects the highest credit upon them.

I am gratified that both Houses of Parliament have considered the conduct of Major General Middleton and the officers and men under his command deserving of their formal thanks. It has been my agreeable duty to bring under the notice of Her Majesty's Government the value of the services which have been thus rendered to the Empire.

I cannot leave this subject without expressing my sorrow that the success of our arms should have been purchased at the cost of many lives which Canada could ill afford to spare. The memory of those who have fallen, either on the field or from sickness contracted during their service, will be gratefully cherished throughout the Dominion.

It affords me much pleasure to acknowledge the prompt action of the Government of the United States in taking the precautions necessary in order to prevent any co-operation with the insurgents from their frontiers.

The measure for the adjustment of the representation of the people in Parliament will extend the franchise to numbers who have not hitherto enjoyed the right of voting for the election of members of the House of Commons, and render such representation free from frequent changes by the unconcerted action of the Provincial Legislatures.

The settlement of all matters in discussion between the Federal Government and that of Manitoba will, I trust, satisfy the expectations of the people of that Province.

The Bill regulating the influx of the Chinese people into Canada will, I doubt not, allay the feeling of discontent in relation to that subject which has for some time prevailed in British Columbia.

The aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will secure the advantages which are justly expected from the completion of that great enterprise, whilst the grants in land and money to other railways in various portions of Canada may be expected to accelerate the progress of settlement, and augment the commerce of the Dominion.

The ready conversion of our five per cent. bonds, which have recently matured, into four per cent. securities, and the success of the loan for four millions of pounds sterling, lately offered in the London market, shew the satisfactory state of the credit of Canada.

I congratulate you on the other useful measures, both of a public and private nature, which you have passed.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In Her Majesty's name, I thank you for the Supplies you have granted for the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The readjustment of the tariff will tend to increase the revenue and enable the Government to meet the various engagements of the country.

I now, with reiterated thanks, relieve you, for the present, from your important duties.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate and Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the twenty-ninth day of August next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Saturday, the twenty-ninth day of August next.
