room for those who are here as well as for those who come. I remember when he told a different story; when he wanted all the immigration he could get. Now his tune is changed, and he finds that some of the cities complain of being crowded. But is it to the cities alone that we must look? Does he find that the agricultural communities have got all the laborers they want? The fact is, that this year we are not supplying all the demands for agriculturists, and he knows very well, for I told him early in the Session, that I do not assist any but agricultural laborers to come to his county. Still, I have not been able to supply the demand, with all the efforts I can make, partly for the reason that all kinds of stories have gone to the old country, and partly because there are people living in the cities who denounce immigration and keep the people from coming here. But he will find that Mr. Donaldson, the agent in Toronto, cannot begin to supply the demand in Ontario. I know that that is the case in Quebec and other parts of the country, and I say the little assistance we give to those men is doubly repaid by their coming to the country. He says, also, that he does not believe that those people should be assisted to go to the North-West. Well, the hon. gentleman just shows that he does not know anything about what is done with regard to those people going to the North-West. No man is assisted from Quebec to go to the North-West. We have always laid that down as a principle, and I agree with him in that. I believe that he has told a truth that cannot be denied, when he says that the right kind of men to go to the North-West are men of some means, who can go there and take care of themselves. I think it would be the height of folly to send poor men there, who are not able to take care of themselves. But what is happening every day in this country? Our people from Ontario, well-to-do immigrants from Europe, do go to the North-West. They are continually going there, more or less, while poorer men, agricultural laborers, who are so much wanted in this country, stop here and work for the farmers in the older Provinces until they get enough to go to the North-West. He says we are depopulating the country; that we have not got the number of people that we ought to have, according to the immigration statistics. I do not pretend to say that some of our people do not go the United States, but I believe we get as many from that country as go there, and perhaps more. I do not think we have anything to complain of in that respect. A short time ago, when the hon. gentleman sat on this side of the House, he believed it was important to assist immigrants. I shall be told, probably, that my figures have run out—that I have paid a large sum. Well, I have paid a considerable sum, more than was paid in his time—more than was paid in my own time, in 1872. At that time the present leader of the Opposition, who was leading the Government in Ontario, sent his commissioner of immigration to me, who said that he wanted to make a bargain, so that people should come up through Ontario free, that he did not want them to have to pay a dollar. Well, I said to Mr. McKellar that I would meet him as far as I could. I said that at this moment we only paid a portion—I think it was about one-third—and that if they paid two-thirds they would go through free. That was an arrangement made with the Local Government when my hon. friend was there, and he sent his commissioner here. Now, what has happened? This Government has paid the whole cost during the last few years. This year I am not paying out any more than I can possibly help. The immigration coming this year, although small, is considerable. Of course, I cannot yet estimate the result of this year's operations; but I warned Sir Charles Tupper that the railway was about completed, and that navvies and mechanics should not be induced to come to this country. The result is, that we have very few of that class; most of the people who have come have been agriculturists or agricultural laborers, and my hon. friend will find a good many of this class of people scattered throughout the country, taking the places of our people, not because they are driven out, but because they have gone to the North-West to settle up that great region. Last year we had an immigration to the North-West of 30,265 out of a total immigration to Canada of 103,824. No assistance is given to immigrants from Quebec to Manitoba, because I do not think a man without means should go there; I think such man does better in the older Provinces, working for farmers, until he earns enough money to settle in the North-West. A gentleman who was here the other day said to me: "I want you to assist 5,000 of my people to go to the North-West." "No," I said, "I don't think that is the place for them; but if you will send me 1,000 or 5,000 agriculturists, I will find places for them in the older Provinces, and in a year or two, when they earn money enough, they can go there." If I understood the hon. gentleman, when he spoke the other day, the ground on which he based his statement that the population was decreasing in Canada was the municipal returns and the census of children going to school. I find that in several parts of the United States, where the population had largely increased, the school attendance had decreased, and I do not think anything can be concluded from that circumstance at all. A good many of our people have gone to the North-West, and I do not always rely on the municipal or school statistics in this respect. So that I very much doubt if the hon. gentleman has based his calculations on a proper ground; because, when we look about the country, we see that a great increase in agricultural and mechanical business, and in everything else, has taken place; so I think our population must have increased. A great many have, no doubt, gone to the North-West, but no matter whether they are here or there, they are in Canada.

Mr. CURRAN. I am very glad to hear from the hon. Minister that there will be no assisted passages to any but agricultural laborers. I think that will be good news to the mechanical class in our large cities. I merely wish to draw the Minister's attention to a statement that was made in a document which was sent to me a few days ago, and which I transmitted to him, regarding a certain class of immigrants who are said to be coming to this country at present, and who, I think, are not very desirable. We all know that there is plenty of room for female servants in all the cities; that it is as difficult to-day, as it has been at any time, to procure servants, and that any good girls coming from the old country, who wish to enter into the service of families, will find plenty of work without displacing anybody. But I was informed in the document which I transmitted to the Minister that a certain number of persons from poor-houses were being brought here. I can hardly credit that myself; but the statement having been made, I deemed it my duty to bring the matter thus prominently to the attention of the Minister, and I trust he will have it investigated, so that persons of that class, who are generally helpless, to a certain extent demoralised, and who certainly cannot, in any way, be considered a desirable acquisition to our population, may not be brought into the country. The hon. Minister asks whether they are children or not. I have not been informed of that; it was rather grown up persons who were mentioned as being likely to be thrown on the charities of our public institutions. I trust there is no foundation for the report. The statement was that some 100 odd persons of that class had disembarked from the steamship Parisian on her last trip to Montreal, and it is for that reason that I bring the matter to the hon. Minister's attention.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to what the hon. Minister has said, I beg to call the attention of the committee to this, that it does not in the slightest degree answer the question as to where the great proportion of these immigrants have gone to. In the hon. gentleman's report, in 1881, 47,991 are reported; in 1882, 112,458; in 1883, 113,624; and in 1884, 103,824; in all, in four years, 397,897 immigrants are stated to have come to this country. Now, if we turn to his other reports, we find that in British Columbia he alleges a total of 36,000 to have settled, a very large percentage of whom are a class of immigrants we are not likely to get more of, inasmuch as there is a measure on the Table just now to impose some $50 a head on them. In the North-West, during those four years, the total was 62,000 taking his own reports, and if you deduct that 98,000, you get 300,000 to be accounted for. The Minister has not pretended that any considerable amount of these have gone to the Maritime Provinces or to Quebec. It would be utterly impossible any considerable percentage of these persons could have gone to these other Provinces without making themselves at once felt and perceived amidst the population, particularly in the Province of Quebec, where, by reason of difference of language, any large percentage of immigrants, unless, indeed, in Montreal and one or two points like that, would be at once identified. Nobody has pretended that this balance of 300,000 has gone anywhere except to Ontario. Now, we have this evidence before us. We know well that in Ontario, as well as in the other Provinces, there is a very considerable natural increase of the population, an increase which, in the four years, ought to have amounted to at least a couple of hundred thousand, or something very near that. We find from the municipal statistics, which, although not perfect, are the only ones we have to act upon, and which, going back a series of years, show a reasonable proportion of increase—we find in those four years the total population of Ontario does not appear to have increased by more than 60,000 or 70,000 at the outside. I am in hopes that the great immigration from Ontario which has been going on for a very considerable period is coming to a stop, but it is perfectly clear that those 300,000 cannot be accounted for, unless we suppose that those statistics which, as I say, are the only ones we have to go upon in Ontario, have suddenly, within those four years back, become entirely unreliable. My position is that they are reliable, relatively speaking. Great pains have been taken with them of late years, and are being taken with them now, and I have no doubt they substantially represent the increase which has been going on in Ontario for those four years. If that be so, these 300,000 people who have to be accounted for have not settled in Ontario or they have displaced a very considerable number of the existing population, because it is clear to demonstration that even allowing the total number who are alleged to have settled in Manitoba from Canada generally to have all belonged to Ontario, and we know they do not all belong to Ontario, though, no doubt, a great portion of them do—it is quite clear, from our municipal statistics that the total increase and the number settled in Manitoba and the North-West put together do not equal the natural increase of both taken together, so that these 300,000 remain wholly unaccounted for, except on one of these two suppositions. I do not say the immigrants have not come in, but that they have either gone away within a very short period after they have arrived in this country or else they have displaced our own people. There is no getting away from that position, unless the hon. gentleman declares that the municipal statistics of Ontario have been deliberately and with set purpose cooked. I do not suppose he will allege there has been any such attempt; it would be absurd to suppose so. If you look over them for the last fifteen years, you will see they show a general and reasonable increase for ten years, but of late years not so much of an increase. But they prove conclusively that point. Over and above that, the information I have got from the hon. gentleman's own Province is to the same effect, that in the Province of Quebec the municipal statistics show an increase to the population very much less than the natural increase which ought to have taken place. These are questions of great importance, which go, no doubt, to the very bottom of the question, whether we are wise in spending our money for immigration service, and no doubt they prove a good many other things, which I do not propose here to allude to. The hon. gentleman ought to give us some information in detail as to the location of these 300,000 people. His own report shows an immigration to this country of 400,000; that of British Columbia and the North-West, all told, from his own report, will only account for one-fourth of that number. I submit the only probable place they have gone to—that is the vast majority of 300,000—is Ontario, and there we do not find them. The population of Ontario, though not quite to so great an extent as some of the other Provinces, is becoming stationary. The agricultural districts are not increasing in population. If there be any increase, it is in a small number, I am sorry to say, a very small number of towns and of cities, but in rural districts there is almost necessarily no increase.

An. hon. MEMBER. What about Algoma?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a moderate increase in Algoma, Muskoka and one or two other districts, but nothing like the number that would be required to account for the mere natural increase of population, without taking into account, in the least, this apparent enormous immigration. The hon. gentleman will not dispute my position, that the Maritime Provinces and Quebec do not receive any appreciable part of this. That has been stated over and over again, and has never been contradicted; I do not think the hon. gentleman himself would contradict it. To Ontario, evidently, they have come, but unless there is an extraordinary error in our municipal statistics—I put aside, for the moment, the question of school statistics—these immigrants have not stayed in Ontario, or else they have displaced a considerable number of our own population. I am inclined to think what has happened in former years has happened these four last years. We have only to turn to the census records to see that, although enormous immigration took place to Canada between 1861 and 1871, and between 1871 and 1881, yet when we came to take the census of our people we discovered that the vast proportion of immigrants we had brought to this country, many of them at our own expense, have not stayed here. As far as the census can be relied upon, it makes a strong presumptive case that the process which has been going on for the last twenty years has been going on for the four years, without adding to the strength of Canada, by devoting $400,000 public money to bring immigrants here.

Mr. SPROULE. My experience is entirely different from that of the hon. member for Huron. For several years, up to 1878, there was no demand for immigrants in my part of the country. In 1879 there was a little demand, in 1880 there was more, and in 1881 and 1882 the demand increased. I applied to Mr. Donaldson, of Toronto, on behalf of several farmers, two or three years in succession, for farm laborers, and I was unable, in any one year, to get more than one-fourth of the number applied for. During the last few years, to my own knowledge, a large number of immigrants, principally farm laborers and men with capital, have come to that part of the country, and they have remained there and can be found there to-day. I know that some people are paying $5, and even as much as $8 per head, to persons who will bring laborers to the farms. When this is the case, we must admit that the money is wisely spent. Many of the men who come here are men of means and buy out the farmers of our own country, many of whom go to the cities where their sons have gone, or follow them to Manitoba and the North-West, where they have gone to better their condition, because those who have been used to the pioneer's life in Ontario are better fitted to make money in the North-West than men from the old country. Of those who have come to my neighborhood, some have bought farms for themselves and others are working, but my experience is that not one out of three has gone away, instead of three out of four as the hon. gentleman stated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The statements I gave are derived from the census. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to examine the census returns he will see quite distinctly from them that, for the only two periods for which we have accurate information, from 1861 to 1871, and from 1871 to 1881, from whatever cause, precisely what I have stated has occurred. We have brought some 300,000 or 400,000 immigrants here in ten years, and the census returns show us that, making a very liberal allowance for the death rate among the immigrants who were here before, not one in four has remained in the country. The census may be inaccurate, but I suppose we are bound to accept it as the most accurate statement we can get. That is the evidence up to 1881, and although I do not say it is conclusive, it is strong presumptive evidence that the current which was going on in all those years is still continuing to go on. It may be quite true, and does not in the least affect the argument I was advancing, that in his particular part of the country more immigrants may have stayed than elsewhere. The hon. gentleman apparently has not noticed the fact that our municipal statistics in Ontario showed that, during those four years, we have only had an increase of 60,000 or 70,000 souls. If that be so, it is very far indeed from accounting for the natural increase of the people, even throwing in the number who are alleged to have gone to Manitoba.

Mr. SPROULE. As far as my knowledge goes, the municipal statistics are entirely unreliable, as you may see by comparing them with the report of the Board of Agriculture in Ontario. I gave my illustration in answer to the hon. gentleman's argument, that we need not expend that money for immigration, because there was not a demand for the emigrants.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Did I understand that no more assisted passages are to be given to artisans and mechanics?

Mr. POPE. That is the instruction.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Then, I think it would be well that you should withdraw from circulation one of the pamphlets put into circulation, a very expensive one, which, it was stated before a committee of this House, had been placed on the tables of all the hotels in Great Britain and Europe, in order to induce immigrants to come to this country. I refer to the Rev. A. J. Bray's pamphlet, and at page 25 I find the following statement:—

"Knowing well the wants of this agricultural and industrial country, Mr. Pope has made great and patient efforts to induce laborers of all kinds to emigrate to the Dominion. The rapid development of agricultural resources keeps up a constant demand for farm laborers; railway building makes a demand for navvies, and mechanics and artisans are needed to carry on the common trades. To help the work of supply, Mr. Pope has devised a system of assisted passages. Female domestic servants and families of agricultural laborers are helped to more than the ordinary and advertised passage money; other laborers and mechanics get a considerable reduction in the fare."

I think it will be necessary for the Minister to withdraw that celebrated publication from the tables of the hotels in Great Britain and Europe, if he does not wish to deceive the mechanics and artisans of the old country, by inducing them to come here, by advertising that there is plenty of work for them. I know, in the town where I do business, during the past year and before, a large number of mechanics and artisans have been thrown out of employment altogether. Some of the factories have been closed up, and a large decrease has taken place in the staff in a number of the manufacturing establishments there. Mechanics have been compelled to go to the United States for employment, many of them, and the artisans in the cotton factory were out of employment altogether for three or four months last summer. I think it is a great injustice to the artisans and mechanics for the Government to give assisted passages to bring out others to work against them.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman has discovered a mare's nest altogether. He does not say that I assist these men, and he does not read any statement that I would assist them. He read a statement that agriculturists and female domestic servants could get assistance, and that the others got a lower rate but no assistance. The pamphlet, as he calls it, was written eighteen months or two years ago, and at that time we wanted, and did all we could to bring, navvies and mechanics to work on our public works; we could not supply the demand; but, as I told him, I had found this season that we would not have work for these men, and I gave my instructions accordingly, that they should not be encouraged to come to this country. The hon. gentleman has not shown that a word has been published since that time to induce them to come here. We did no more than necessary to assist the navvies whom we encouraged to come because we wanted them.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I think the statement I made is correct. The report says that mechanics get a considerable reduction in fare, but I fail to discover where the difference is between a considerable reduction in the fare and an assisted passage. It must be that the Government have paid the steamship companies to bring them out here.

Mr. POPE. Not at all.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How, then, do they secure a reduction in the fare?

Mr. POPE. Because we make a general arrangement with them, and we assist these other classes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. As to the statement that there was a great dearth of mechanics or artisans during the past two years, so far as the section of country I live in is concerned—and it is a manufacturing section—no such dearth existed. The depression has continued for that length of time, and there was no necessity for introducing mechanics and artisans when those who are already here were out of employment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister has not disputed the accuracy of the increases alleged to have taken place in the municipal census.

Mr. POPE. I do not believe in the municipal census at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has no other source of information whatever, and he has not shown himself anxious to obtain information in Quebec where he could obtain it. There he could obtain accurate information from the Catholic clergy, who keep registers of the movements of the Catholic population. Now, I would call the attention of the House to what the municipal returns of Ontario say. They show that between 1873 and 1879 the population of Ontario was increased 220,000, and from 1879 to the middle of 1884, which is the last detailed statement we have got, it had increased barely 80,000. From 1881 to 1884, both inclusive, it had increased barely 58,000. The rural population has been perfectly stationary—in fact, has slightly decreased; towns and villages have increased slightly; cities have increased considerably, but the great bulk of the increase was in Toronto alone. Now there is internal evidence to show that these figures are relatively accurate. They show a considerable increase over a number of years, and that increase corresponds with the other facts we have got. They show conclusively that for the last four years the total increase in Ontario has been vastly below the natural increase, and that allowing for all he claims to have gone to the North-West, that increase does not equal the natural increase. Now, what has become of these 300,000 people? I call upon the hon. gentleman to disprove these facts if he can. These facts are corroborated by the three censuses of 1861, 1871 and 1881, and I cannot conceive how it can be disputed that even if we have brought these people here we have not succeeded in keeping them here, or if we have succeeded in keeping them here, it must have been by displacing our own people. Now, he has not gainsaid a single statement I have made, either as to the estimates of British Columbia, or as to his own estimates of the population in the North-West. He has not gainsaid my other statement, that no considerable portion of these emigrants has gone to the Maritime Provinces or to Quebec. Now, it is quite impossible that so huge a number of persons as 300,000 should remain uncounted, for every person acquainted with Ontario knows that the conditions of life there are such that 300,000 people cannot be absorbed among a population of little less than 2,000,000 without every person being aware of the fact; it would amount to very nearly one person in six. The hon. gentleman must see for himself that these facts require more explanation than his Department or himself have yet vouchsafed to give us.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Minister has not attempted to dispute the accuracy of the statistics that have been presented. There is another fact which would corroborate the statement that we are losing population much faster than is for the benefit of the country, and that is the revelation made by the census returns of the United States.

Mr. BERGIN. That is all your authority.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes; for that is where all our emigrants are going, as appears from the United States census returns. The census for 1870 shows that there were 493,000 people living in that country who were born in British America; while in 1880 there were 717,000 persons born in British America who were living in the United States. By careful calculations it is shown that the immigration statistics of the United States, professing to show the number of emigrants going from Canada to the United States, are substantially correct, because the increase in the Canadian population from 493,000 to 717,000, making the usual allowance for loss by death, is the same, within a few thousand, as the result shown by the statistics of the emigration of Canadians; and if that is correct, and the census of 1880 is correct, then the immigration statistics from the United States since 1880 show that there are living to-day in the United States 1,000,000 people born in British America. That is why our country does not prosper. In addition to those 1,000,000 native-born British Americans living in the United States, there are no statistics to show how large a proportion of the foreign-born immigrants brought to this country, largely by assisted passages, remain a short time here and then go to the United States. But from all the statistics and evidence we can arrive at, there is every reason to believe that at least two-thirds of the immigrants brought to this country from the old world after remaining here a short time leave us and go to the United States. Hon. gentlemen may throw out the taunt that this is American authority. It is a very serious thought that our population is drifting away. The 1,000,000 of Canadians in the United States is the very cream of the population of the Dominion. The loss of that population is not only a serious matter, but is a great disaster to this country; and if we are wise, we shall strive to ascertain what are the remedies for preventing this great depietion of our population, and if any remedy is practicable, I think a loyal Tory as well as a loyal Liberal ought to be anxious to apply it. With respect to the effect of the whole policy of maintaining an immigration department, I will be guilty of the great crime of drawing some more information from the great country to the south of us. That country, which has 1,000,000 Canadians resident within its borders, has been successful in inducing immigration. In 1880 the total number of immigrants was 417,000; 1881, 669,000; 1882, 783,000; 1883, 599,000. How do the United States promote immigration? Do they keep up an extensive staff and immigration officers in Europe? Do they spend $3 or $4 per head in promoting immigration? No; they do not expend one cent. They make no provision for inducing immigration or granting assisted passages, or anything of that kind. But, on the contrary, they tax every immigrant landing on their shores 50 cents per head; and their immigration law, approved on 3rd August, 1882, provides that no more money shall be spent on immigration in the United States, on immigration agents, or providing lodgings or sending immigrants to their destination, than is derived from the head tax of 50 cents per immigrant. The disbursements last year were $235,000, the receipts $224,000; and the report of the Secretary Treasurer explains that the additional amount required was provided by a balance in the Treasury of $104,000. The whole consular service of the United States cost $486,000 a year. It is probable that the consuls may furnish information that may assist immigration, although the consuls are not appointed for that purpose, and it is only an incidental part of their duty. Consuls are appointed in the chief commercial cities and towns of Europe, and they naturally, though incidentally, disseminate information that leads to emigration to the United States. But the great power leading to immigration is the fact that immigrants have gone to the United States, that they have left friends behind with whom they communicate, and that there is a demand for labor in the United States. These combinations form a potent agency. The United States does nothing to assist immigration; it spends no money, but it imposes a head tax on every immigrant. The Bill providing a duty of 50 cents per head sets forth that this amount is to be levied on every passenger not a citizen of the United States coming from any foreign port; that it shall be collectable at the port of landing; that it shall be paid into the Treasury and known as the immigrant fund, and that this duty shall be a lien on the vessel bringing immigrants. It provides that a general sum shall be expended, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be charged with executing the provisions of the Act, and that he shall make contracts with the State boards for carrying out its provisions. The only defect found and amendment suggested from experience in the working of the Act is the adoption of more efficient provisions for returning undesirable immigrants, such as convicts, lunatics, and so forth. As I have said, under the provisions of this law a great stream of immigration has poured into the United States. I do not believe our system of spending a large sum, and keeping up an expensive system of this character in Europe and in England, has proved to be such a success as to be of interest to the country, or to have greatly promoted immigration. I believe the desirable class of immigrants are those who have ascertained the advantages which this country has to offer, and come here voluntarily and make it their home, and those who are assisted here are not, as a rule, that class, and are not so likely to stay as are those who voluntarily come here. For that reason I believe the whole system requires to be changed, and that we should adopt the system calculated to promote the prosperity and advantage of the country.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There can be no doubt that what the non. gentleman has said as to the policy of the United States Government, that is, the Central Government, is correct; they do not expend a large sum of money in maintaining agents abroad, or with a view of bringing immigrants to that country. Nor do they give any assisted passages. But I do not think the hon. gentleman was quite fair in assuming that we can afford to be placed on the same basis as they have adopted. It is quite true that there are 750,000 or 1,000,000 of British Americans in the United States. We have suffered from the policy of migration which has obtained in the United States as well as in Canada. We must recognise the fact that with respect to the State of New York, which has a population about equal to that of the Dominion, there are to be found in other parts of the United States 1,400,000 persons who were born in the State of New York. No less than five States of the American Union, at this moment, have citizens or native-born persons in other parts of the Union to a larger number than we have Canadians in the United States. Up to comparatively a few years ago, Canada, as a field for immigration, comprised only the old Provinces, which placed us in a similar position to the eastern States, and an examination will show that the population of Canada, during the recent decennial periods, has actually increased to a greater extent than has the population in New York and the eastern States. Although the American Government, that is, the Central Government, have not granted assisted passages, although they have not adopted, to the same extent, the policy we have adopted with a view of attracting immigrants, they have practically had in the United Kingdom and on the continent of Europe immigration agents, in the form of shipping agents of the large steamship companies. I remember when I had the honor of being on the other side for a short time for the Ontario Government, making some enquiries with respect to immigration matters, I discovered this to be the difficulty: those immigration agents, acting as agents for the various steamship companies, received a commission on the tickets they sold, and also on any tickets sold to go into the interior. It became, therefore, their interest, from the amount of commission which they receive, to send immigrants to the furthest point in the interior, they could send them to. If they send an immigrant to Chicago they get a larger commission than if they sent him to New York; if they send him still further west they get a further and a larger commission; and, as a consequence, by the mere operation of that system of payment by commission on the tickets they sell, resulting from the connection between the inland transportation companies and the ocean transportation companies, they were practically active agents for immigration to the furthest points on the American continent. The result of that was, that every one of, say the 1,200 agents of the Messrs. Allan—although they did a great deal for Canada, although they were willing to distribute our pamphlets, and do everything in that way that they possibly could, yet, when the question came of selling tickets, if they could sell that ticket to a point that was in the interior of the continent they got so much more commission, that they were practically the agents of the United States for the purpose of immigration. Now, we are just getting into the same condition as our friends on the other side. At this moment there is every indication that not only from Europe, not only from the old Provinces of Canada—as there was from New England to the western States—are people going into our own great west, but that from the United States those people are going. Just as they went formerly from New England to the western States, so now they are going to our western territories. We are precisely at that period of our national existence when we have to encourage that kind of thing, when having that large territory to fill up, we have to adopt means of bringing people into that territory, and when, as we bring them in, year after year more coming in, we produce that kind of agency which is, of all agencies, the most effective for immigration, that is, the successful settlers in the country, who send home money to bring out the'r friends from the old world. I saw a statement some time ago as to the amount of money sent to Ireland alone from the Irish people in the United States in that way. I shall not venture from memory to state the amount, because it was some years ago that I saw it, but it was a fabulous amount, an inconceivably large amount which was sent home from the earnings of the Irish people of the United States to Ireland, to bring out their friends to the west, to settle in those western States and territories. So with the Germans, so with other nationalities coming from the other side and settling in the country. With a wide field for settlement for them, they become the best possible kind of immigration agents to induce their friends to follow them. We are simply establishing for ourselves at this moment that condition of things, and if hon. gentlemen will allow me to say so, I do not think they are acting wisely in the interests of the country—I do not use the term "patriotism," but speak simply of a business proposition for the settlement of that county—I do not think they are acting wisely when we are in that condition of our existence when we have to adopt means to put ourselves in the position in which our American friends already are, when there are hon. gentlemen perpetually, every year, drawing attention to the fact that our population is becoming depleted, as the hon. gentleman says, in spite of the fact that our census returns show that our population in the old Provinces has held its own with the populations of similarly situated States on the other side of the border. We have no Province in Canada where the population has actually decreased within the decennial period, as is the case in the United States. There are at least two or three of the American States where the population has not increased anything like so rapidly as the least progressive of the Provinces of Canada in point of population; and in view of that fact, I do think that if hon. gentlemen could only for a moment cease to dwell upon conditions which are almost inevitable, having regard to the tendency of immigration to a new country, the disposition to seek for new fields, the disposition of people in the older Provinces to go into those new fields, and having in view the fact that we are just getting into our new fields for settlement by means of the railway communication and the facilities which are affording opportunities for successful settlement—I say that they ought not to press, year after year, debate after debate, the point that we are losing our population. As a matter of fact, we are not losing our population, taking everything into account, taking into account our condition, and the fact that we are now only opening up the North-West, only affording the people an opportunity of securing homes in our North-West, when formerly they were compelled to go into the western States of the American Union—I say that I believe the population of Canada has progressed fairly rapidly, and that we are on the eve of a progressive development in the matter of population, which will bear a fair comparison with the wonderful development of our neighbors on the other side. But if you send across the water for every immigration agent who is interested against us—and although the United States Government do not send immigration agents, the land companies send immigration agents, the railway companies send immigration agents; you find them in every part of Great Britain and the continent, working hard, not subject to enquiries as to what they are doing, but influenced simply by the business consideration of how many immigrants they can bring over by any means—I say, if, in addition to the large inducements they have in the shape of a large per capita commission, you put in their hands the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite, that this country is unfit to come to, because our population is all leaving us, that our population is becoming depleted—I say that in doing so hon.

gentlemen, unconsciously, it may be, but none the less effectively, are playing the very game of our opponents, and aiding in preventing that development of our population which they urge that everything should be done to promote. I am satisfied, myself, that in the meantime we must adopt such a policy as has been pursued for the last few years; and I have no doubt whatever that that progressive development of Manitoba and the western territories will go on; that as people go in there, and as the same conditions of immigration agency, arising out of prosperous settlement, and the people sending back money to bring out their friends, come to be realised, as they will be, we shall then be able to adopt the same plan as our friends on the other side have adopted, and discontinue the system of assisting immigration altogether.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In other words, it would be infinitely convenient, when it is perfectly clear that the statements made in our immigration reports for the last four years cannot be justified—

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They are justified.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are neither justified nor proved.

Mr. POPE. Who denies them?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I deny them; I say the municipal statistics of our Provinces deny them; I say that the returns of immigration to the United States deny them; I say that every statement of every trades council and labor league in the country denies them. I say that the Minister is utterly unable to explain, and has not attempted to explain, where the 300,000 of the 400,000 alleged to have come to this country within the last four years are. I say that the whole business is becoming a gigantic swindle, and that the object of this $100,000 vote is to provide $100,000 to distribute amongst their subsidised press. If the hon. gentleman wants to know where it goes, I have no doubt that by reference to the Auditor General's reports I can inform him of the destination of a great deal of that money. I find that the Toronto Mail got $3,900, the Montreal Gazette, $9,700; the Quebec Chronicle, $3,900; the London Free Press, over $6,000; the Prescott Messenger $6,000; the Courier de St. Hyacinthe $7,000, and so on and so on. That is the reason, and not any honest desire to bring immigrants into this country; that is the reason, perhaps, of a great deal of the advocacy we have of unlimited expenditure for immigration purposes. Now, we have the greatest possible desire to see this country peopled by Canadians. What I complain of is, that it is the quintessence of folly, until you can keep your own people in Canada, to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to bring foreign immigrants here, who are not as good, any one of them, as our own people. I do not value half-a-dozen of them as much as I do the retaining of one of our own people. I do not say that in any narrow spirit of prejudice, but because our own people understand the country, are infinitely better suited to it, and more valuable to us in developing the country, than immigrants from Norway, or Russia, or Poland, or Switzerland, or anywhere else, not forgetting the Chinese, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture can induce to come here. Not only on this occasion, but on every other occasion when this question has been up, hon. gentlemen have entirely shirked the question where these immigrants are. The hon. gentleman, by his report, has accounted nominally for about 98,000 of them. I doubt myself whether those alleged to have settled in British Columbia and the North-West during the last four years are there now. In fact, I am certain a very large proportion are not; but the hon. gentleman has not accounted for the balance of 300,000, and I think we are wantonly wasting the public money when we are spending, in defiance of the remonstrances of our own artisans and mechanics, $400,000 a year for bringing people to this country who must, to a very considerable extent, displace our own artisans. As I see the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) opposite me, I will take leave to call his attention to a memorial from the wage-earners of Hamilton to the members of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada in session assembled, in which they resolve:

"That the workmen of Hamilton condemn the policy of the Government in allowing the importation to our shores of pauper immigrants, and call upon them to take measures to return such foreign paupers as are now in our land, and to legislate against the arrival of others; that we demand the recall of the emigrant agents and lecturers employed by the Government, and the application of the money appropriated for their remuneration to some public work, upon which some unemployed Canadians can earn their bread; that we especially protest against introduction of Chinese labor in any part of the Dominion, and call upon the Government to send back all Chinese now in Canada or enforce such a poll tax as will drive them hence; that we demand that the workmen of Hamilton refrain from giving support to either of the political parties in the future, until such time as they secure by legislation, not promises, their rights."

Now, if the Minister is able to give us any reasonable ground for believing that the 400,000 persons he has brought to this country are still here, I would desire him to give it. I agree with the hon. member for Cardwell in this, that I think it desirable on all occasions to do our best to keep our people in this country. It is true, we are laboring under much the same conditions which exist in many of the eastern States, with this difference, that a great part of Canada is entirely a new country, whereas many of those States have been settled for 200 or 250 years, and the comparison he makes is open to considerable criticism in that respect. Now, there never was a vote asked for on which it was more in the line of our duty to require explanations that this particular vote, and I may go further and say I never heard a gentleman ask for such a vote under the circumstances, and offer fewer explanations than the hon. gentleman has done.

Mr. POPE. I have said to the hon. gentleman that, in the first place, I have no confidence in his municipal statistics for Ontario or Quebec, or anywhere else; they have never been proved to be good for anything. I have told the hon. gentleman that man for man they come into the country. The hon. gentleman asserts that they have gone out of the country. Well, we have tried the point where he said the most of them had gone out; we have taken every possible means to find out the truth at that point, and this year there were more came in there than went out. I thought I would try to find out what was really the case with regard to persons leaving Manitoba. My own figures were that 6,000 went out and 30,000 came in. Then I wrote to Washington, to see what they would say about it there, and the reply I received was, that in 1881 1,863 went out of Manitoba; in 1882, 1,390; in 1883, 1,143, and in 1884, 924 against my 6,000. That is signed by Mr. Whitney, chief clerk of the Bureau of Statistics.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the 300,000 people not accounted for are settled in the older Provinces?

Mr. POPE. A very large number of people have gone to Manitoba, and the hon. gentleman knows, as well as I do, that their places have been very largely filled by immigrants from the old country. Of those 300,000 people, some of them have gone to the United States, but a larger proportion have gone to Manitoba and the North-West. Does the hon. gentleman suppose he is giving anything like the true state of affairs? Does he tell us, as he has said all over the country, that from 1875 to 1878 the people did not leave this country, but that it is only from 1880 to 1884 that they have been going out? We know that the reverse is the case; when we know that during the former time the people did leave the country, when they were oppressed and could not get anything to do.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Would it not be ridiculous, when men can get fair wages in Canada, as they have been getting during the last four years, to suppose they would leave Canada for the United States. No; nothing of the kind; they know how to look after their own interests. I know of hundreds and thousands of men last year and the year before who came into this country from the United States to get work. But the hon. gentleman will accept no proof; he takes the municipal statistics and he goes howling and screaming through Ontario that the people are leaving the country. I do not believe he really intends to deceive or mislead the people, but he has worked himself up to such a fever that he believes it himself. With respect to the counties the hon. gentleman speaks of, no doubt there are not as many immigrants to the lower Provinces as I hoped there would. I would like to see a good deal more. There are a good many in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. LANGELIER. Where do they go?

Mr. POPE. I will tell the hon. gentleman where they go. He can live in the city of Quebec and he will never know where they go. They have gone into Richmond and Wolfe, Arthabasca and Drummond, which is almost doubled, and Sherbrooke and the county of Compton. What do you find in Ontario? If I had the census, I could show the hon. gentleman where a large number of the people have gone. In several of the counties of Ontario the population has almost doubled. A greater number have gone to the North-West. I defy the hon. gentleman to give a single proof to show these people have gone to the United States during the last four or five years, in large numbers.

Mr. DAWSON. The population of the district I represent has increased very largely within the last few years. Port Arthur, where the population was less than 2,000 at the last census, has now a population of over 6,000. With regard to the Kainy River district and Rat Portage, where there were but a few people when the last census was taken, we have now a population there of 3,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And all those are fully accounted for in the municipal statistics of Ontario.

Mr. DAWSON. Still, that shows where the population is going. A very much larger increase of population has taken place in the eastern part of Manitoba, the Manitoulin Islands and the Island of St. John. Last year we made an estimate of the population, and while there were 20,000 in Algoma proper and 8,000 all over the disputed territory when the last census was taken, we have now 55,000, taking the whole district.

Mr. LANGELIER. I am very much surprised at the course taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. Their policy seems to have been entirely changed since 1878. Perhaps it would be interesting to them to be reminded of what they said then about the policy of immigration. The Minister of Agriculture then said:

"He objected to the item, and in doing so knew that he would be met with the statement that it stood in the same position as in 1873-74. This was not so, however, for the Government of that day appointed these agents for short periods, not longer than 8 months, and it was never intended to make them permanent officers. He would suggest, too, that this item no longer stand a lump sum, without a single explanation. If these agents were made permanent officers, the House should receive reports from them as to the way work was being done."

Then I find another hon. gentleman of the party opposite said:

"Mr. White (East Hastings) said it was not necessary to retain the staff as at present. One gentleman at Quebec had $1,500 per year, and another, an assistant, had $1,000; one gentleman would be sufficient."

The Minister of Agriculture made a few more remarks on this subject:

"Mr. Pope (Compton) called attention to the largeness of the expenditure under this head, compared with the smallness of the immigration, reaching only 15,323. He declared that the immigration was not due to the action of the agents, but to natural consequences. The agents of steamship companies possess great influence as emigration agents."

There is the policy propounded by the hon. members in 1878, the statement that there was no use for us to spend money to bring immigrants into this country when the population was leaving it to go to the United States.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is the time they did go.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; it is not the time they did go.

Mr. COCHRANE. They did go then.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not one man left in our time for three who have left in yours.

Mr. LANGELIER. The Minister of Agriculture stated that it had been ascertained that some people were coming back from the United States to this country. A few did so, but they have gone back again to the United States; and there is a very plain explanation of the fact he has mentioned, namely, that at that time there was a great commercial crisis in the United States, and they were working on half time, or the factories were closed.

Mr. POPE. That is correct.

Mr. LANGELIER. A few French Canadians came at that time, but they have all gone back again. Look at the figures from the municipal returns. The Minister does not think much of those returns, probably because they do not come from his Department. I know the way in which both the census and the municipal returns are made, and I say the municipal returns are worthy of three times more credence than the census. I know how the census was made. In many places it was made by people who knew nothing of the inhabitants and took information which might be all wrong, while it is impossible to have statistics founded on a system calculated to give more correct returns than the municipal system of returns in the Province of Quebec. The municipal assessors, when making the assessment rolls, are obliged to go from house to house to ascertain the value of property, and they are bound, under the municipal code of Quebec, to take a census of the population. It is perfectly impossible that they should be mistaken. They know the people in each house before they go to it, but to ascertain the exact number they must go from house to house. The result is every year revised by the municipal council; every one knows his neighbor in the township or the parish, and knows the number of children born during the year. I will give the Minister of Agriculture some proof of the care with which the municipal statistics have been made. Last year and two years ago it was ascertained that the municipal returns did not agree with the official census. The authorities at Quebec took the precaution, because those municipal returns are sent to the Provincial Secretary and graded and published, to inquire into the discrepancy. Take the parish of St. Colomb de Sillery, near Quebec, and I have a personal knowledge that the statement made is perfectly correct. There was a great difference between the population given by the census and the municipal returns. The officer of the Government at Quebec wrote to the Secretary Treasurer of St. Colomb to call his attention to the glaring discrepancy. Here is his answer:

"As to the diminution of population mentioned, I may say that what is called the floating population of the municipality, that is the laborers who form a very large portion of that population, varies considerably some years. When work is plentiful and wages high they crowd into the parish in large numbers, with their families, and remain while they can procure employment; when the reverse is the case they leave.

"M. H. O'RYAN."

There has been a great decrease of population from 3,700 in 1882 to 3,500 in 1883. In St. Romuald, there was a diminution of about 2,000 in two years, and this cannot be denied. The member for the county of Lévis (Mr. Guay) lives in that place, and I was mentioning these figures to him, and he says they are perfectly correct. But the official census would not show that, because, when people had left, with any remote hope of coming back to the country, they were marked as being still in the country. That is not an isolated case, because I have several letters of explanation. Here is a letter from the Secretary-Treasurer of St. Gregoire, in the county of Iberville:

"The population of this municipality in 1882 was 1,773, including present as well as absent from the country, that is to say, those who had left with the intention of coming back, but they have not come back yet.

"J. C. PION."

Here is another letter from the Secretary-Treasurer of Mille Isles:

"Sir,—In answer to your's of the 21st February, calling on me to correct the mistake with regard to the number of souls in this municipality, my answer is that 500 is the number given to me by the valuers in the month of July, 1881, and is the number on the assessment roll of this municipality. In 1881 I took the census of this municipality, and according to our instructions a great many young men and women in the United States, and in other Provinces, were taken as if they were living with their parents in the district, who, up to date, have not committed the sin of Lot's wife, to look back, and every year is taking more away. Your obedient servant,

WM. STUART."

Here is another letter from the Secretary-Treasurer of St. Anne de la Pérade, in the county of Champlain:

"In answer to your letter of the 19th inst., I have the honor to inform you that the decrease of the population of this parish which exists in my return of 1883, compared with that of 1882, is due to this cause, that the return of 1882 was based upon the general census which had been made during the preceding year, in which the families of those who were absent from the Province were included, whereas the one of this year has been made by the curé of the parish in visiting his parish, and of course he has not included those who were absent from the parish. That is the occasion of the difference.

"A. D. TRUDEL."

Here is a letter from another parish of the Province of Quebec, from the county of Pontiac:

"LESLE, 26th February, 1884.

"In answer to your letter dated the 19th September, referring to the decrease of population, it is due to emigration to the United States. In the summer of 1882, in a single day, on the 2nd of July, five families, numbering thirty persons, left for the United States for Stillwater, in the State of Minnesota; afterwards, almost every week some other families have left from time to time. There are forty-four families that have left during the last two or three years for several places in the United States, and a good many of them have left lands which would have made fine farms but which are now abandoned. Some speculators who had purchased them with the expectation of re-selling them afterwards at a higher price have been badly sold themselves. As emigration is always going on they have no chance of selling again.

"F. R. S. PELLETIER, Secretary-Treasurer."

Here is a letter from a different portion of the Province, from Cape St. Ignace, dated 1st September, 1884:

"I have received your letter, in which you ask me to explain my return of last winter. The population does not appear on the valuation roll. I have consulted the curé on this subject, and we agree in saying that there is as much decrease of population as last year. It is due to emigration to the United States, caused by the fact that our lumbering operations are stopped.

"(Signed), JOS. BOISSINOTTE, Sec.-Treas."

Here is another from the county of Nicolet:

"STE. BRIGGITE DES SAULTS, 5th September, 1884.

"Here is, to the best of my knowledge, the information you ask. The decrease which you see in the population of this parish is due to emigration to the United States. A great number of Irish farmers have left this place to live in the United States, and a few have gone to the Eastern Townships."

Here is still another:

"ST. ARMAND, WEST, 5th August, 1884.

"Yours of the 22nd ult. to hand. In reply, will say I have no means of ascertaining what the population of this municipality is. I have enquired of the person who took the last census but could get no information from him, as he says that he was not allowed to keep any figures regarding the same.

"F. H. THROOP, Sec.-Treas."

I have a great many other letters to the same effect, explaining the apparent discrepancies between the census and the municipal returns, and all in the same way—emigration to the United States. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to go to the municipal or Government census to ascertain that there is a great deal of emigration going on. Any one who travels over our lines of railway going to the States must have been struck with the number of people going to that country. Last summer, when I was carrying on my election, I had to travel over the Grand Trunk Railway at least once a week, and sometimes several times a week, and I saw on every train three, four and five cars loaded with farmers from the lower portion of the Province of Quebec, all going to the United States. It was on the first days of the week that I saw the greatest number, as they do not like to leave on Saturday. Now, it is preposterous to say that there is no emigration to the United States from the Province of Quebec. It is denying the most evident facts which are patent to any one who knows anything of that Province. We know that hon. gentlemen opposite, when the previous Government were in power, criticised the vote for emigration, which was only $120,000 a year for emigration and quarantine together, whereas this year it is nearly $600,000. We know there was some emigration in 1878, which was due to the great commercial and financial depression which then existed, but those reasons do not exist now, and the emigration is very much greater now than it was then. I have conversed with a great many gentlemen of the clergy on this subject, and they all say that emigration is depopulating their parishes. And it is the best portion of the people that are leaving, chiefly able-bodied young men, who go to work in the manufactories of the United States. I am not going to enter into the causes of this exodus, but I think it is important we should know what the facts are, that we should no longer remain in a kind of fool's paradise, always repeating that we are in a great state of prosperity, that immigrants are flocking to this country and that our own people are not leaving, when the reverse is the case.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I think that the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) has brought forward very poor testimony when he quotes the census taken by the municipalities in Ontario in proof of the extent of emigration to the United States from that Province. It is quite clear that there is no care whatever taken in the enumeration of the people by the municipal officers. I can speak from experience, so far as the city of Hamilton is concerned, in so much as when the census was taken there this last year it was discovered that one of the wards of the city, which it was well known had increased in population, was reported to contain several hundreds less of a population than it contained the year previous. It gave rise to a good deal of enquiry, and a new enumeration was ordered for that particular ward, and it was found that the assessors had made a mistake of several hundreds, that the ward really contained several hundreds more than the municipal officers had credited it with. In many cases, in municipalities, the assessors never visit the people at all, but take the assessment roll of the previous year, for the purpose of getting at the value of the property, and then they guess at the number of people in each house. I have been a resident of the city of Hamilton for over eight years, and I have never been asked how many people were living in my house, how many servants I had, or what was the number of my family. But, Sir, our own senses tell us every day that there are strangers constantly coming in. Every man who lives in any city must know that he cannot walk the streets without observing strangers. It cannot be said that Toronto, London or Hamilton are not increasing in population. Why, seven or eight years ago Hamilton was only a city of 32,000, whereas now it is a city of 40,000. All other things go to show that there must be a very considerable immigration to this country. With regard to the memorial which the hon. gentleman read from the workingmen of Hamilton, that, I think, goes rather against the hon. gentleman's argument, because it complains that too many people are coming in; that a certain class are being sent out to this country who are competing injuriously with our own people. We know perfectly well that during the last two or three years there has been great depression in the United States, and mechanics have been flocking into Canada from that country, who could not get work in their own country. That has given rise to great dissatisfaction among the workingmen in different cities. I do not think we can rely with a very great deal of satisfaction upon the representations made by the labor union people, because they are looking after their own individual interests; they are not looking after the interests of the country particularly, but they have a single eye to what would benefit themselves, and they would exclude any man who would interfere with their getting a day's work. That is not very disinterested evidence in support of complaints against the Government in regard to their immigration policy. I hold in my hand my assessment notice for the present year. The assessors are instructed, as I believe, to take an enumeration of the people, but it is well known that they do not do it very efficiently. There is just one name in the notice of my assessment and that is my own. Yet I have three servants and four members of my family, making seven in all, and yet only one name is entered here. That is the kind of evidence the hon. gentleman brings forward to substantiate his attack on the Government. As regards the hon. member for Quebec, I could not exactly understand what he was trying to make out, unless it was that a great many people had left his Province and he is anxious to bring them back. I suppose he was speaking of former times, when his friends were in power, when there was such a state of depression existing all over the country; but now, that there is prosperity, they are anxious to come back, and he is desirous of having the Government pay the expenses of bringing them back.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope an adjournment will be now taken, as it is quite impossible to get through the discussion to-night.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Some hours can fairly be taken up in the discussion which has just been entered upon.

Mr. BERGIN. If you are going to take some time you had better go on.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If I have to go on to-night, it will not be in this connection.

Mr. BOWELL. It is quite evident, from our experience, that there is no object in asking the members of the Opposition to go on. We know that they can prevent the business of the country being done; that in committee, under our system, they can talk as long as they like; and I understood the remark of the hon. gentleman to be a threat of obstruction. A threat has been thrown out by the hon. member for Brant, and we know he can frustrate any progress if he thinks proper. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that some portion of the Estimates will have to be got through before 1st of July. If not, some other means will have to be adopted to obtain the means to carry on the affairs of the country. We do not desire to cut short discussion on this question. I thought the discussion was on the general vote, and was applicable to the whole item. There may be other points which hon. gentlemen opposite may desire to discuss, and there may be individual items to which they have special objection, but they can be fully discussed either on concurrence or when in committee again.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister alludes to a threat. I threw out no threat.

Mr. BOWELL. Then I do not understand the English language.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Surgeon-General said that if we were going to take some time, it was better to go on. I replied that if we go on to-night it will be on another subject. I addressed my remarks to a private member, not to a Minister. That is just the direction in which we would go on, so far as I am concerned. I have no hesitation in saying so. When we have sat here until 2 o'clock in the morning, I have not the slightest fear that I will not be supported by my constituents. I shall not pretend to press any further in that direction. I have not talked on this matter yet. I think, perhaps to-morrow, I shall have occasion to say something; but if it were necessary for me to go on now, and if I have to do it, at half-past 2 in the morning, I will not talk on it. But I will talk on something I understand better, and feel more keenly, and that is, that at this hour of the morning we are too fatigued to discuss this question, and that we should adjourn.

Mr. BERGIN. The observation I made was made in reply to the threat of the hon. gentleman, that if we did not adjourn now we would have to stay here till to-morrow night.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, after what the hon. member for Brant has stated, we understand fully what is to be discussed if we proceed after this hour. The intention is to waste time, if we were to remain here for the purpose of going on with the business of the country—which the hon. gentleman does not intend to do. He intends to speak against time. He intends to use the time of the committee only on the question that we should adjourn.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I distinctly deny that the Minister has any right to say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is not in order.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I rise to make a statement.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. No; the hon. Minister of Public Works has got the floor, and it is out of order to interrupt him.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I am just repeating what the hon. gentleman stated, that if we were to continue sitting this evening he would not speak to the question, but he would discuss just what he stated, that we could not get along any further; that he would speak to the adjournment and to the question that the committee must rise. The hon. gentleman opposite (from Huron) proposed to adjourn, and I tried to induce him and his friends to go on and finish this item. I thought, as we had discussed it so long, we might carry it, and afterwards I suggested that it might be as well to finish the item. The hon. gentleman did not seem disposed to do that; but he did not suggest that he would spend the time of the committee afterwards in speaking against time. But the hon. gentleman who had just spoken has stated that he did not say, "I will speak against time," but that he would show that we must adjourn, that we were fatigued. The House and the country will understand that the hon. gentleman does not wish to go on with the business of the country, but that he wants to keep us here. I thought that after the time we had spent during the last five months we might have tried to get on, but of course, if the hon. gentleman will not go on, if he does not want to discuss this matter, I will not ask the House to proceed. I know that my hon. friends will not ask hon. gentlemen to stay here only for the purpose of destroying our aim of going on with the business of the country, and under these circumstances I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister of Public Works has done himself the credit of putting words in my mouth to which I gave an emphatic contradiction; and I have had the satisfaction of seeing that he took those words back before he sat down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He himself attempted to use words I did not use.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes; he did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No; he did not.

An hon. MEMBER. It was a fair interpretation!

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He gave an interpretation to my words, and I want no hon. gentleman to interpret my words. He went on to say that I had deliberately said so-and-so, and I say that I did not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He did do so.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He did not.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He did, and it is proved by the fact that he himself stated the remarks I did make. There is where the hon. member for Cardwell is. The hon. member for Cardwell says that which the hon. Minister takes back. I made an emphatic contradiction to the statement which the Minister put forth, and with all due deference to the Chair, I think I had a perfect right to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It has always been the practice that when a person makes a statement which is not correct, and puts words in an hon. member's mouth which he did not use—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I do not think the hon. gentleman will say himself that he has a right to do anything that is contrary to the ruling of the Chair. He is directly out of order, and has no right to act against the ruling of the Chair, unless he appeals from it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not know that I do appeal, but I am satisfied that the practice of Parliament has been, that a person has a perfect right, when a statement is being made by a member, putting words in the mouth of another member which he did not use, he should rise and contradict it at the time. I appeal to you, Sir, if that is not the case.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Not without the consent of the member.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes; without the consent of the member.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Adjourn, adjourn.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes; we will adjourn when I am through. I have no objection to stand by what I have said, but I will not have words put in my mouth, and I did not say that I would stand here for the purpose of wasting time. I said that the time of this committee had been fully taken up to-day; that I had fully discharged my duty as a member of the House and the committee, not in the way of taking up time in debating, but in listening to the debate and keeping watch of the progress of affairs. We did this from 2 in the afternoon until a quarter after 2 in the morning, and I said I had something more to say, and other hon. members said that they had more to say. Others said: Better go on now. I said no; I will discuss something else than the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do hon. gentlemen think that I want to draw back from that? I said: I shall discuss something else; I shall discuss a question in which I will take more interest and feel more keenly, and that is the question of the necessity of an adjournment. That is what I said. But the Minister of Public Works rose and said that I said that I would speak here for the purpose of killing time. Why, the time for adjournment has passed; the time for the discussion of the question by mutual understanding, by a recognised understanding—the time for the discussion of the question has been past by a quarter of an hour. If hon. gentlemen think I want to recede from the position I took they are mistaken, but the words that the Minister of Public Works used are different from mine, and if hon. gentlemen say that I recede, will they take exception to that statement?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not desire to prolong this, but I am very glad to know the hon. gentleman begins to realise his position. I did not say he would stand up and talk against time; I do not think any one said he would.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not going to bandy the lie across the House with the hon. gentleman, because that is what he is doing. I do not think it is dignified either in him or in any one to use such language. When the suggestion was made, in a very proper spirit I am bound to say, and with a good deal of reason, by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), that at this hour of the morning this question ought to be postponed, as there were other gentlemen on the Opposition benches who would desire to discuss it, and the hon. Minister of Public Works asked if that could not be done on concurrence, the hon. gentleman demurred, and said it was better to discuss the question in committee. About the time it had been arranged to adjourn, the member for Brant rose and said if he had to stay here he would not talk on this question, but on some other. Everyone knows what that means. If the hon. gentleman's health is sufficiently good to enable him to stand here and talk for half an hour or an hour on the question of adjournment, he could occupy that time just as well in talking to the question. I am quite satisfied this little difficulty would not have occurred if the question had been left with the hon. gentleman leading the Opposition at the present time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The remarks of the Minister call for a few more from me. Hon. gentlemen were anxious to sit, and yet they moved immediately to do the very thing I suggested. I have no objection to the hon. Minister of Public Works repeating what I said, but the objection I took was to his putting words in my mouth which I did not utter. What I said was, that if I were compelled to speak I would speak to the question of adjournment, which I know more about. The hon. member for South Huron was arranging the matter very nicely, and I recognise him as my leader in the House when my leader is away. But I was anxious that my leader should not misunderstand what I said on this question, because the other night I thought he consented to have a discussion closed a little too soon. Now, I think it would be as well for the committee to rise and report progress, and I can finish my remarks to-morrow.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

AUGMENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of Bill (No. 144) to authorise the augmentation of the North-West Mounted Police.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not intend at any length to pretract the discussion on the third reading, because I have given my views at an earlier stage, to which views I still adhere. I have given my opinion that it is impossible for the House to adequately deal with this question in an isolated manner, but that it should be considered as embraced in the whole question of protection of the North-West, in reference to the changed conditions of things which prevail in consequence of recent events, and in reference to the proposals on the subject of citizen soldiery in the North-West. The hon. gentleman, having declared that this measure was framed entirely irrespective of the recent outbreak, has eliminated that question from consideration, unduly and improperly. He based this proposal for an increase of the police upon statements with reference to horse-stealing, and I have been inviting him earnestly to bring down the report of the Mounted Police for the year, and last night that was laid on the Table, too late to make effective use of it. I observe that report, very meagre as it is with reference to some important events in the North-West during the year, does contain reference to questions to which I think the hon. gentleman ought reasonably to have referred in dealing with the measure. For example, when the commissioner is dealing with the question of the duties of the force and giving his views as to the necessity of its increase, he adverts to a matter which did not seem to be thought worthy the attention of the First Minister, namely, the fact that the area of jurisdiction of the Mounted Police has been increased by a distance of 150 miles west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains, in what is commonly understood to be British Columbia. I think it would have been well that the hon. gentleman should have stated the circumstances under which, and the arrangements upon which, and the authority—of course I am aware there is a limited statute authority which, if it be exercised, I presume the papers will be brought down to indicate—upon which these arrangements have been made. He should also have informed us whether it was intended the force in British Columbia should be permanent, and if so what force should be stationed and upon what arrangements it should be stationed in British Columbia. I cannot too much impress on the House the fact that this North-West force has been established and maintained in virtue of our peculiar duties and responsibilities in reference to the North-West Territories, though there may arise circumstances which would make it expedient for us to utilise this force in other parts of the Dominion. Still, if the Government are making a proposal to utilise them permanently in respect to an established Province we ought to know it, and it ought to be brought before us as an important question of policy, both in a constitutional point of view and the point of view of expense. The commissioner adverts to the difficulties of horse stealing; but, so far as we can judge, it is one officer and seven men who were detached in that connection. It may be that a great many more will be required in the future, but he adverts to the fact that, at any rate, up to July last, in the report which is given by the officer in charge, there were, I think it was, nine horses stolen from our side and taken to the American side. This does not seem to be a number so great as the hon. gentleman's original statement would have led one to suppose it would be, nor do I find in this report any statement at all with reference to difficulties occurring in Manitoba, to which, in his second statement on this subject, the First Minister specially alluded. If it be intended that Manitoba on the east as well as British Columbia on the west, is to be blessed with the services of the North-West Mounted Police, a statement similar to what I suggested with reference to the circumstances under which, the time for which, the authority upon which, and the arrangements under which the police force is to be utilised for service would have been also a proper preliminary to this House being invited to consider this subject, and, still more essential to the House, being invited to take the final stage upon it. I said I would refer to that part of the report in which the commissioner adverts to the prevalence of horse-stealing:

"The prevalence of horse-stealing by white men, half-breeds, and Indians indiscriminately throughout the Territories is a marked feature of this year's annals of crime, and in connection therewith, I would take leave to say a few words which are not uncalled for by past experience. The extension of the boundaries of police jurisdiction from Manitoba on the one side to a point 150 miles west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains on the other, has, of course, considerably diminished the effective strength of the force available for duty in the Territories. And that, taken in conjunction with the fact that in the month of June last no less than thirty-six non-commissioned officers and men took their discharge on completion of their term of service, cannot but have detracted from our ability to afford these assistance in many cases. It is necessary to record that police posts, as now constituted, containing valuable Government stores, cannot be absolutely denuded of their occupants under any circumstances; further, that even police horses have their limits of endurance."

Then he proceeds to discuss the facility with which the settlers call upon the police to put down horse-stealing. He proposes, at a subsequent point, to recruit 300 additional men, though whether that is in addition to the then strength which was diminished by at least 36 men, or 300 men in addition to the full complement, is not stated. Now, the commissioner himself alleges that the effect of strengthening the force has been greatly diminished by its performance of duties to the westward, and on that point we have not had as full a statement as we were entitled to from the hon. gentleman when he proposed this important measure. There is another point, the condition of the carriages and limbers of the seven-pound guns of the Mounted Police. Upon that subject, three years beforehand, reports are made in the annual report, but there is no reference to it at all upon this occasion, and I would invite the hon. gentleman to say whether there is any special report on that subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With reference to the extension of the force in British Columbia that is merely a temporary measure. The action of the Mounted Police all along the line of railway, during its construction, was most satisfactory. We are informed that in the United States while some of the great lines were being built, and where there was an unlimited supply of liquor, the assassinations and murders by the navvies amounted to one a day—perhaps that may be exaggerated, but that is the statement made to me. The Mounted Police in our North-West has been employed praiseworthy in the direct line of their duty in excluding ardent spirits from the works of construction at different points on the railway, and the consequence has been that there was not, I believe, a single life lost in riot or outbreak. Many of the navvies thus employed worked on the railway during the whole of its construction on the prairies. The moment that the road got into the mountains and within the jurisdiction of British Columbia, that kind of thing ceased. It appears that in British Columbia there has been great disturbance, and I am not sure at this moment whether there was not loss of life, but at all events there was great dread of loss of life, and the Public Works Act was brought into force there on the application of the railway company, under which a commissioner or stipendiary magistrate was appointed, and although I think their jurisdiction is properly confined to the North-West itself. It is thought of great importance that the stipendiary magistrate appointed to prevent outrages on these public works should have a force at his disposal. The consequence was that a detachment was sent there under, I think, Superintendent Steele, a most admirable officer, I believe, who put down with a strong hand any attempt to introduce spirits along the line of railway during its construction within the limits of British Columbia. I am sorry to say that the local authorities did not well support the stipendiary magistrate, and at this moment there are a number of persons who are holding provincial licenses, and who are attempting continually to thwart the praiseworthy efforts of the stipendiary magistrate to exclude ardent spirits from the area of the railway in British Columbia. However, that was put down, and then the stress of circumstances in consequence of the outbreak caused the recall of Superintendent Steele with his force. This House knows how well that officer has behaved in command of the force, leading it all the way from Calgary to Edmonton. There are some few police who are left there. There has been, I fear, from the imperfect information we have got, and in consequence of the diminution of the force and the withdrawal of the commissioned officer, there has been to some extent, a degree of license used in forcing liquor from across the line into our country. However, the roads will soon be finished, and then the duties of stipendiary magistrate will cease, and of course he will be withdrawn. It was merely a temporary exigency that caused these men to be sent there. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that British Columbia must, like the other Provinces, keep the peace within its own boundaries, but this the hon. gentleman will see was an exceptional case. There is no British Columbia population in that part of the country. The population will flow from the east across the slopes of the Rocky Mountains and across the Selkirks. There is no people coming from the west. I have no doubt there has been many applications for licenses, though I cannot speak with any certainty—but an attempt was made to force the introduction of ardent spirits among the men there, and I fancy that there has been a very considerable number of applications for licenses from the Local Government and those have been granted for revenue purposes without much regard to the general welfare of the Province and the cause of good order in that part of the country. The report, I may state, is not very full. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it ought to be fuller, and I hope that will be amended ere long. I believe that the Province of Manitoba is sincerely desirous of performing its duties in keeping the peace, and in performing its general obligations as a Province. But they are not a rich Government, on the contrary they are very impecunious, and the only means of preserving the frontier from outrages one way or the other, is by a mounted police. They were unable, though I dare say they would be very willing if they had been able, to generate a permanent Mounted Police to watch their property, and as these forays across the line might cause international complication, the Government thought that they might well employ the force in patrolling and watching the frontier to keep the peace along the line. I may state, also, that we have had the most cordial co-operation of the officials of the American Government. That question, however, must be dealt with, and will be dealt with in British Columbia and Manitoba, so that we may arrive at some permanent conclusion as to what we ought to do as a Government, and what they are called upon to do by law, and what they are able and willing to do. The hon. gentleman, once or twice, asked questions as to the character of the guns. I am not aware that there is any special report about them, but they were sent up there originally, more with the notion, which proved to be a correct one, that the Indians have a superstitious veneration and dread in regard to cannon. The guns were 7-pounders, I think.

Mr. BLAKE. The 7-pounders are the mountain guns.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are two mountain guns there. I think the mountain guns are less than 7-pounders.

Mr. BLAKE. There are mountain guns of a less calibre.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But these mountain guns are, I think, from 3 to 5-pounders. I am not able to say whether any special report was made about the calibre of these guns. It is a matter of very small importance, as they were considered to be something like those guns we have strewed through our cities to show that we have such things as guns. With respect to this force, the experience of the late unhappy events shows that we must have mounted men in order to effectually prosecute anything like warfare. Our militia who have distinguished themselves, were, perhaps, placed in a very disadvantageous position on several occasions for the want of mounted men, and I think my hon. friend the Minister of Militia will say that it is the opinion of the General that mounted men are required, and that, with a reasonable number of mounted men—say this 1,000 men—and the organisation of the militia, and the military school which it is proposed to establish at Winnipeg, similar to those which are now established at Toronto, Fredericton and St. John's, near Montreal, that force will be quite sufficient, when peace is restored, when the Indian outbreak is crushed, and when the last embers have been extinguished. I believe that these 1,000 men, always ready to proceed on the first suspicion of riot or outbreak, with the organised militia of the country and the military school at Winnipeg, will be amply sufficient to prevent a recurrence of these unhappy events. In respect to British Columbia, I believe that I am not trespassing, and if I am, my hon. friend the Minister of Militia will pardon me, in stating that the only military provision it is thought necessary to make for that Province is the battery at Vancouver. There is no idea that there should be any other military force provided for by the Dominion.

Bill read the third time, on a division, and passed.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of Bill (No. 140) respecting the North-West Mounted Police.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. The only suggestion I have to make to the hon. gentleman opposite is upon the amendments he introduced into this Bill the other day. I have not had an opportunity of reading them, and I am not certain whether they are entirely adequate to that which is essential to the protection of the men as well as the officers when they are acting as a military body. If I rightly understood the objects of the amendments, they gave certain ranks and placed the commissioned officers in certain positions corresponding to those ranks, but there might be a position in which the non-commissioned officers might have to take command and give the order to fire. Suppose the commissioned officers were all hors de combat. I do not think the amendments make any provision for the non-commissioned officers who might have to take command in such a case. We know that the protection of a force of this kind depends upon the law, and it seems to me important that the rank and file and the non-commissioned officers, as well as the commissioned officers, should be placed entirely within the protection as well as the restraints of military law, when acting as part of a military force.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right. Under these Acts they are a civil force, they are a constabulary. Under the penalties mentioned in the Mounted Police Acts, they are liable. They have no protection in those Acts more than is given by the Police Acts in England, and it may well be that, in order to efficiently keep the peace, they must be substantially a civil force, yet they should have the same protection and the same means of resistance, or even of aggression that troops would have, in case they came into collision with Indians, or with other persons, breaking the law. I do not propose, however, at present to go into that subject. Until these late events, no occasion has arisen in which the police have been obliged to fire, except as a distinct Act of self-defence. The Act was introduced in the Senate in consequence of the late events, and, if the state of war had continued, would have been pressed through both Houses very rapidly, as it was necessary to provide for the very natural omission of any provision for the joint action of the police force in the North-West and the military force. We did not know how long the state of things would continue in the North-West, and we introduced this Bill, because the commissioner was ordered to put himself, with the whole force, under the command and control of the General in command of the military forces. In order to prevent any complication, the Bill was introduced in the Senate, providing that, whenever, by order of the Governor-in-Council, the Mounted Police were directed to act with the military force, they should be subject to all the military laws which govern the militiamen and the militia forces generally. The necessity for hurrying this Bill through has, I am happy to say passed, but we may as well have it, because it amounts simply to a general provision that, where, by Orders of the Governor in Council, the police are ordered to serve with the military, they should be subject to military law, and in fact should be soldiers. I am not soldier enough to say whether this will involve any subsequent provisions. General Middleton, who I hope will soon return here covered with just credit for his conduct of matters in the North-West, has been asked by myself, through the Minister of Militia, to examine and report upon the organisation of this force; and when he arrives here the whole subject of that force will be fully considered, in order to make it as efficient as possible. After discussion with him, I hope to be able, if I come here next Session, to introduce a complete system, for the consideration of the House, with respect to the Mounted Police and their relative duties as a military as well as a civil force.

Mr. BLAKE. The question to which the hon. gentleman has referred is one on which I would not venture a suggestion without having given it much more consideration than I have given it, because I am sufficiently jealous of the liberty of the subject and of according military privileges to a civil body. My proposition is simply this: You are providing that under certain circumstances the Mounted Police shall be a military force, and in that the Government is acting rightly. The force must be subject to military restraint and discipline, and must, under those circumstances be entitled to the immunity which the law gives to soldiers acting under orders. My enquiry was whether this measure gives that immunity to the rank and file and to non-commissioned officers as well as to those officers mentioned in the amendment. Occasions may arise when a non-commissioned officer may be obliged to take command of a small detachment. The commissioned officers may be all wounded or killed or absent. The non-commissioned officer in command who gives the order to fire should be as fully protected, as well as restrained, as the commissioned officers who are subject as well to restraints as they are covered by the immunities of military law. My enquiry was whether the hon. gentleman's measure was complete in that respect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the Bill covers that question. The non-commissioned officers of the Mounted Police would stand in the same position as non-commissioned officers in the militia. I am not aware just now, and cannot speak positively that a sergeant commanding a party has any specific protection given by the present laws for the regulation of the army. However, that will be a matter worthy of every consideration.

Mr. MILLS. In the discussion on the Irish constabulary, in the Imperial Parliament, it was stated that a change could not be made without re-enlisting the whole force.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They keep their obligations in every way as a constabulary; but, I take it that as we are all militiamen in Canada, we could pass a law compelling the hon. gentleman to go as chaplain or as combatant; and we could do the same with respect to the Mounted Police. The Minister of Militia has called my attention to the fact that, in the Bill, the words are "any officer or member." I take it that that may cover the case of non-commissioned officers to which reference has been made; but that is a matter that may be considered hereafter.

Bill read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA CLAIMS SETTLEMENT.

House again resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 2420) for the final settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.

On resolution 4,

Mr. BOWELL. This resolution, which was drawn by the Law Clerk, is not strictly correct. In reading the Order in Council he confounded the per capita allowance with the proposed increase to the capital account. The Order in Council reads as follows:—

"Having been delegated by the Legislature of Manitoba to urge upon the Privy Council a reconsideration of its offer of the 20th May last, on settlement of the claims of the Province, we would respectfully suggest the following modifications as a basis of settlement:—

"That the Dominion pay the Province annually the sum of $100,000 in lieu of lands. That the debt capital—"

Not the per capita debt, the committee will observe—

"In consideration of the above, be allowed on a population of 125,000 instead of 150,000, etc."

In the arrangement which was entered into but not accepted by the Manitoba Legislature at a previous Session, the proposition was to base the debt capital of the Province upon an assumed population of 150,000. Instead of that, a change was made to base that debt upon an assumed population of 125,000, but the per capita allowance is continued upon the population of 150,000, and not reduced. The committee will see very clearly where the error was made, the officers of the Department, therefore, in making their calculations, made them on the basis of the resolutions as they had been prepared and laid before them. Last evening, during the consideration of this subject, my attention was called by my hon. friend to my left (Mr. McLellan) to the Order in Council, and in reading it carefully, it was then seen how the blunder had arisen. Of course, the committee will see that this makes the terms much more liberal to Manitoba than they would have been, under the supposed basis upon which we were proceeding last night. It will be necessary, therefore, to strike out in the paragraph now before the committee, after the word "shall," in the third line of the fourth resolution, the words "from said first day of July next be allowed only on an estimated population of 125,000 souls," and it will read:

"That the yearly per capita allowance to the Province of 80 cents per head, made under the Act 33 Vic., chap. 3, on an estimated population of 17,000 (increased by 45 Vic., chap. 5, to 150,000), shall be subject to be increased as hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, &c."

And then change the words in the 4th line from the bottom of the same clause, 125,000 to 150,000. That will leave the per capita allowance upon the basis of 150,000 and not upon the basis of 125,000 population. Then it is proposed to add the following words after the words "subsequent Act" in the 3rd line of the 6th paragraph:

"Shall, from and after the 1st day of July, 1885, be calculated upon a population of 125,000 and at the same rate per capita as was allowed on the estimated population as provided in the Act, 33 Vic., chap. 3."

That is to say, when the Province came into the Dominion, that population was estimated at 17,000. The financial condition of the Province under the present arrangement, as compared with what they received before, is this: the total amount paid to them last year was $232,694.30. If you add to it the increase which is proposed to be made in lieu of lands, of $100,000 instead of $45,000—in other words, if you add $55,000, you have a total of $287,694.30 paid to the Province, and the additional 5 per cent. on whatever the debt may amount to. I may further explain that the debt based on the 125,000 population at the same rate as was allowed in 1870, will be calculated at the rate of $27.77, and interest will be paid to them less whatever may have been expended by the Dominion Government in that Province upon what are termed in the other Provinces, local improvements. That will have to be deducted from the total debt; the balance has not been ascertained and will be matter of investigation hereafter. Calculated, however, upon those bases, the debt will be considerably increased, amounting to about $4,000,000, or perhaps a little over that sum. The committee will recollect that a very large amount of money has been spent since 1870, when that Province first became part of the Union, for what are legitimately local improvements, and the advance of which would have been charged in the other Provinces to capital account. I am unable to inform the committee what that amount will be until there has been a full investigation as to what has been expended, and what the amount left to the credit of the Province will be. I may say also, for the information of the committee, and the gentleman who asked me once or twice last night, as to the probable amount of swamp lands—though that question is not now under consideration—that the Department of the Interior has set one of its clerks at work to ascertain approximately the quantity of such land in that portion of the Province which has been surveyed, and I have no doubt will have the information to lay before the House before the Bill passes.

On the first amendment,

Mr. BLAKE. This seems to me to increase the public charge materially. Is not that so?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, it does increase it.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose it is possible for the hon. gentleman to propose in the committee an amendment increasing the public charge. His duty is to bring down a proper resolution and to move it in the regular way.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is correct, according to strict parliamentary rules; but as these papers have been before the House a very long time, and as I supposed everybody had become acquainted with them, I took the liberty of proceeding in this way. If the hon. gentleman objects, it must stand over.

Mr. BLAKE. I was very wrong, but I really supposed the hon. gentleman meant what he said in this resolution. It is my fault.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the hon. gentleman's fault; but as this is an age of improvement, and as the hon. gentleman is a member of a reform party, I thought he would not object to this reform.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all, but I like the ancient parliamentary rules to be observed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is merely an error of the draughtsman, the respected Law Clerk, in confounding the per capita annual allowance with the capital payment. But this clause does not increase the public charges in any way.

Mr. BLAKE. It is the hon. Minister of Customs the hon. gentleman is contradicting, and not I.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman knows that the annual grant of 80 cents per head is based on a population of 150,000 by the present law. This resolution proposes to reduce it to 125,000. This is merely to keep the law as it is.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is quite correct that literally it is a contradiction of my statement. When the hon. gentleman asked me the question, I supposed he had referred to the full effect of all the resolutions; hence I said it did increase the public charge. I must be more careful in future when I answer the hon. gentleman, because I know he is hypercritical.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the observation of the hon. Minister is quite justified. He proposed without any notice a very considerable amendment of the clause; I enquired of him whether that amendment was an increase of the public charge or not; he said, yes. Under these circumstances, I stated that the parliamentary rule should be followed. Now, when the First Minister says the hon. gentleman was wrong, the hon. gentleman says I am hypercritical.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that can possibly be said of the question put by my hon. friend in this instance at any rate, because the hon. Minister of Customs will recollect that I put the question to him yesterday, and he then informed us that he computed that about $250,000 would be allowed to the Province of Manitoba. But the allowance we propose to make would amount to $420,000 less 5 per cent., or whatever sum may have been advanced on capital account.

Mr. BOWELL. In none of these calculations was the interest on the amount remaining to our credit calculated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, the amount, I think, would cover some $325,000, which he thought was the remaining capital they were entitled to. He will remember that I asked him whether the demand made in the Manitoba Legislature was not for $450,000 a year. The sum now arranged will come tolerably close to these figures, although I do not know, and he does not know, exactly how much is to be deducted from their capital account. From what I recollect of the state of their account, it is a good deal made up of over-drafts; and his estimate of yesterday, I think, is approximately correct that about $1,000,000 has been advanced. But it is probable $150,000 or not much less than $200,000 will be added to the income of the Province of Manitoba by these resolutions.

On resolution 6,

Mr. BLAKE. This is a large increase to the public charge. It ought to be recommended by a message and be preceded by a motion to go in committee, and not on the same day as the resolution is proposed. The hon. gentleman proposes to amend the resolutions without taking any of these precautions upon which the wisdom of Parliament has insisted and the absence of which would make the proceeding void at any stage.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The assent of the Crown will be given to it. If the hon. gentleman insists upon it it will be held over, but this merely carries out the arrangement made with Manitoba. It was an accidental transposition of language, the draughtsman mingling the two accounts, the one the capital sum and the other the annual payment. This is really what was intended to be proposed, and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not object to it in the ordinary course. If he does not greatly object, I would ask that this be adopted now, the assent of the Crown being obtained.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not believe it can be done. The British North America Act itself has provided that no motion having a tendency to increase the charge on the people should be preceded otherwise than by the protection I have referred to. So careful was the hon. gentleman that this ancient and wholesome rule should be maintained that he put it in a cast iron provision in the Act, thinking perhaps that some bad Government at some future day might propose to modify it if it was in their power to do so. Having so wisely guarded this right 18 years ago, he is debarred from interfering with it now.

Resolution allowed to stand.

BETTER PRESERVATION OF THE PEACE.

Mr. CARON, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend an Act for the better preservation of peace in the vicinity of public works and the Act in amendment thereto, said: There is to be no change whatever in the principle of the Act, it is simply a consolidation of the various amendments.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CARON. These clauses have been redrafted. The object was to consolidate the amendments which have taken place from the time the first Act was introduced. In the redrafting the expressions have been changed slightly, but there is no material change, except the substitution of the word "and" for the word "or."

Mr. WELDON. The 12th section makes a person liable to imprisonment when his clerk has been guilty of the offence without his knowledge.

Mr. CARON. That is the old law.

Mr. WELDON. I think it is very severe that a man should be liable to be imprisoned for six months for an offence committed by his servant, perhaps against his orders.

Mr. MILLS. It is a wide departure from the ordinary rule of criminal law or police regulation. If a servant does an injury, the principal may be liable to damages, but it is a wide departure from the recognised rules of our law to apply that to the criminal law.

Mr. CARON. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, but this Act is for the special purpose of preserving peace in the neighborhood of public works, and from the beginning the evident intention has been to make it as strict as possible.

Mr. WELDON. No doubt that is true, but, while I can understand that the penalty should be enforced where the clerk offends against the law with the sanction of the principal, it is very severe to make the principal liable to imprisonment when the Act is done against his consent.

Mr. CARON. This is an exact copy of the old Act, chap. 24, 32-33 Viet., the Public Works' Act. The principle upon which, no doubt, this clause is based, is that the proprietor of any place of that kind is supposed to have control over his servants, and the consequences of allowing intoxicants to be sold on public works may be so grave that the strictest possible interpretation is placed upon the Act. But except in special circumstances like these, I agree with my hon. friend who has just taken his seat that it is going, perhaps, too far to make a man responsible for any act except of a person under his control. Of course if a man who commits an act of this kind is not shown to be an agent of the proprietor, the latter cannot be held responsible.

Mr. WELDON. The Liquor License Act provides that if any contravention of the Act took place it should be endorsed on the man's license and three convictions not only forfeited his license, but rendered him incapable for three years. I am acquainted with a fact where a clerk violated the Act contrary to the proprietor's express order. In that case surely the principal should not be held guilty.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is no doubt that in general it is a very objectionable principle to make a man liable criminally for something done by another person, perhaps, without his knowledge and against his express will. I believe the Liquor License Act does provide that a violation of the statute committed by the servant or agent shall make the principal responsible; but the hon. gentleman in this clause not only provides that the man shall be responsible for the guilty servant, but for what anybody else does who is not his servant or agent. I think that is monstrous. I think the hon. gentleman ought to strike out the words "or other person;" the proprietor ought not to be responsible for what somebody else does.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It does not say that he shall be responsible for an act done by every other person, but "every man who, by himself, his clerk, servant or agent, or other person, violates." He must do it by the agency of his clerk, servant, agent or any other person. I presume the words "or other person," which I see are inserted elsewhere, are for the purpose of reaching a person who may be the agent but who still acts under the authority of the principal.

Mr. BLAKE. Everything depends upon whether the construction of the First Minister is correct. If that is correct, there does not seem to be any harm in leaving it as it is, because in that case it is impossible to convict a man unless he has done the act by another.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we must hold to the clause.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The interpretation given by the First Minister is not the correct one, and is not the interpretation given by the courts on a similar law, couched in similar language. If this law passes, if liquor is sold by an employé without the knowledge and against the express wish and direction of the principal, the principal is nevertheless liable. He should not be made responsible for anything except through his servants and by his knowledge.

Mr. CARON. I think the clause can be fairly interpreted as the leader of the Government has stated. I take it that everyone who commits an act in contravention of the law, either by himself or his employé, shall be liable to punishment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The law maxim is qui facit per alium facit per se. It is provided that either a principal by himself or by his servant, agent or other person shall be liable. These words were inserted evidently for the purpose of pointing out how general the clause was intended to be in its operation. It was prepared for the purpose of acting with a strong hand and putting down this crying evil. And if there is not the mens rei, if a person violently breaks in and sells the spirits, that would be a criminal act, but in the other case it would not.

Mr. MILLS. It is made so by this section.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If it is by himself. If another person under him does it, it is done by that person as a distinct individuality—a distinct entity.

Mr. WELDON. A totally different construction has been put on the Liquor License Act, in which the principle is precisely the same as this Bill. It has been held that although the person does it in express contradiction of the orders of the master, still he is liable to the penalty, and I think it is proper it should be so, because it makes the man responsible to the public for the good conduct of his servants. But when you apply this principle to the substantive imprisonment, in addition to the imprisonment for non-payment of the money penalty, I think you are going too far.

Mr. MILLS. This 12th section is based upon a principle of public policy. We hold persons engaged in the sale of intoxicants strictly responsible for the acts of their servants. They have a special franchise conferred on them by license, and we hold them responsible for the men that they employ. The courts have construed the law in that way, and I think that construction should be adhered to. If it is pleaded by the principal that the act was done without his authority, the answer would be that he should have taken care what sort of men he employed, and should exercise the strictest care in that respect; but when you make the principal responsible for what the servant has done, under the criminal law, you are going much further, and you are applying to an ordinary police regulation, the principles of criminal law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, there is no imprisonment as a punishment at all. It is simply a means of collecting the other penalty.

Mr. MILLS. It is a punishment in the other part of the clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; in the second, penalty. Suppose some loafer breaks into the bar and hands out liquor to a friend; the owner of the house would not be liable under this clause. There must be the mens rei—there must be some relation between the principal and the person who violates the law, an inn-keeper gives a wink to a loafer of that kind, who is not an agent or a clerk, and he deals out the liquor. He may be a person who is good for nothing, and cares little if he is sent to gaol; in that case the law is evaded. There is no chance of oppression under this law, and I do not think we should weaken it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman is still proceeding on the assumption that there must be a mens rei on the part of the proprietor, in order to constitute an offence. There is no such necessity according to the law, as it has been interpreted in the courts of Ontario. If the offence is committed by a servant, clerk or agent, contrary to the expressed directions of the principal, the principal has been held liable all the same; and the courts will so interpret the hon. gentleman's Bill. Either the courts are incorrect, or the hon. gentleman is incorrect in his interpretation; but we must take the interpretation of the courts. Therefore, we ought not to pass this clause, without knowing exactly what its meaning is. If you leave out the words "or other person," according to the interpretation put on the law by the courts, the proprietor would be liable, even though the offence were not committed by his servants or agents, but by some other person. The hon. gentleman has no precedent for such a provision. The person must be in some position of trust for the principal before the principal can be made liable or ought to be made liable. Therefore, the hon. gentleman ought to have acted on his own interpretation of the law, and not on the interpretation put upon it by the First Minister, because the First Minister assumes that the offence cannot be committed except with the knowledge of the proprietor. I say the offence can be committed without the proprietor knowing the first thing about it. He ought to be liable if his clerk or servant commits the offence, but not if it is committed by a person who does not occupy the position of clerk or servant or agent. The hon. gentleman will do a great wrong, perhaps to innocent people, if he allows the clause to pass as it is.

Mr. WELDON. It has been held, under the Liquor License Act of 1883, that a proprietor who was brought up for selling liquor on Sunday was responsible, although it was sold without his knowledge by his clerk. The court not only held that he was liable to the penalty, but it was endorsed on his license as an offence against the Act. The wording of this section is a little different from that of the old section. In the old section the penalty was $20 fine for the first offence, $40 for the second, and imprisonment for the third; while this section makes the penalty $40 and costs for the first offence, and the same penalty with imprisonment for six months for the second offence. It seems to me that the imprisonment for six months ought to be confined to the case where the offence is committed with the knowledge or consent of the principal, expressed or implied.

Mr. CARON. The Bill as sent down was handed to me by the Department of Justice. I must say I have a great deal of confidence in the experience of the two hon. gentlemen, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), and I would move that the clause be now adopted; but before the third reading I shall look into the matter, and I have no doubt we shall arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

On section 4,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Section 14 provides:

"If any person makes oath or affirmation before any commissioner or justice of the peace that he has reason to believe and does believe that any intoxicating liquor with respect to which a violation of the provisions of the 11th section of this Act has been committed or intended to be committed, he can get a search warrant and put that in the hands of the proper official to be executed."

The hon. gentleman has changed the law altogether in that respect. Under the provision of the old statute, no such warrant can be issued except upon the oath or affirmation of three credible witnesses that they believed the offence was committed or intended to be committed. This was the guarantee that the process of the court would not be abused.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Perhaps, requiring the testimony of three credible witnesses before a search warrant could be obtained, was running to the extreme; but under this provision you provide that if any person makes an affidavit that an offence has been or is intended to be committed, you can get out a search warrant. I am not aware of any English law which requires the evidence of three credible witnesses before a search warrant can be obtained. If an offence against the law has been committed, such as larceny, and the goods are still in possession of the offender, any person can obtain a search warrant on the affidavit of any one person, setting out that the offence has been committed, and that he believes the goods are still in possession of the guilty person. Under the provision of your statute, you provide that if any person makes an affidavit that an offence has been or is intended to be committed, you can get out a search warrant. That is a principle wholly unknown to the criminal law, and it will leave the way clear for harshness and misconduct, setting the machinery of the law in motion without justifiable excuse. Under what circumstances can a man be justified in swearing that an offence is intended to be committed? I can understand the provision of the law entitling you to set the machinery of the law in motion on the affidavit of a credible witness that an offence has been committed, but the hon. gentleman has taken the power upon the affidavit that an offence is intended to be committed, to set the machinery of the law in motion. This will give opportunity to people who have grudges against others, to harass and perhaps ruin them. While I do not go so far as to insist on the necessity of having three credible witnesses, I think the hon. gentleman's Bill should be confined to cases in which the offence has been committed.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman's first objection was that the old law, as it stood, requiring three credible witnesses to make the affidavit, was an improvement of the present Act as sought to be amended.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). On the contrary I said there was no necessity for three witnesses.

Mr. CARON. I misunderstood the hon. gentleman as to the second objection, I think the law would be insufficient, if the hon. gentleman's idea were to prevail. In these districts where great public works are carried on, one can well understand how a person may be able to make affidavit that it is the intention of a certain person to act in contravention of the law. Persons may have been present when the tavern keeper or store keeper purchased liquor, and may have heard him state that he was purchasing it to sell in his tavern near the public works. That is an instance which may occur, and it was right and proper, in furtherance of the object of the Act, the protection of these public works, to make the Act as wide as possible. This legislation, I take it, is much stricter than the criminal law, but we should go as far as possible, of course with due respect to the liberty of the subject, in our efforts to protect these public works against the evil effects resulting from the sale of intoxicants to the men who work upon them. We know what evil effects the sale of intoxicants has had in the case of public works in the United States; we have heard the leader of the Government state that the murders committed on them averaged one per day, and it is for the object of preventing such frightful results here that this legislation is submitted. I think the clause as it stands is perfectly good.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is of the first possible consequence to make the law as strict as possible to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in the neighborhood of public works, but at the same time we must carefully guard the rights of the subject. I think the hon. gentleman has gone too far. If a person goes to a magistrate and says: I believe I have reason to believe and do believe that an offence against the statute is to be committed, he is entitled to a warrant and can go anywhere and search the wine cellar of a private individual and take possession of the stuff he finds there and carry it away. I think the informant should assign the reasons, so that the magistrate may be seised of the facts upon which the deponent comes to the conclusion that an offence is about to be committed. At present a malicious person can make the statement and invoke the machinery of the law from the worst possible motives. The hon. gentleman is invading the old rule that a man's house is his castle, and that even an officer of the law has no right to enter a man's house unless an offence has been committed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A person may take out a warrant maliciously to search the hon. gentleman's house by making an affidavit that he has lost his watch and believes it is in the hon. gentleman's house, and he will be liable for any malicious conduct of that kind. The hon. gentleman talks as if we ought not to have any preventive justice at all. If there is a steamboat on a river in British Columbia or anywhere else where this Act is in force, that is about to start, and it has got a lot of spirits on board, some one makes an affidavit and a search warrant is issued. That does no great harm. The officer searches the vessel, and if he finds any liquor on board contrary to the terms of the law, he throws it overboard. The hon. gentleman says there must be a crime committed first, but the steamer or the raft may be about to start, and according to the hon. gentleman, after the liquor has been drunk, and riot and outrage has been committed along the line, you must issue a search warrant to find the liquor in the stomachs of the fellows who drunk it. I suppose the man who gives the information will be a teetotaler and therefore a respectable person, and the object of the clause is to get at the liquor before it is used. There is no object in issuing a search warrant after the offence is committed. Under the old law three witnesses were required to make the affidavit that they had reason to believe and did believe that intoxicating liquors were intended to be sold or bartered in contravention of the law, and the only difference between this and the old clause is that one informant is sufficient under this clause. In all other search warrants to look for property believed to be stolen, the affirmation of the owner, of one person, is sufficient. The result of the hon. gentleman's argument—although he does not intend it—is that there is no means of preventive justice seizing this liquor before it is actually drunk and consumed.

Mr. CAMERON (West Huron). The hon. gentleman does not meet my argument. I say it is not fair to leave it in the hands of the deponent—of any person (not a temperance man) who desires to set the machinery of the law in motion for private purposes, but any blackguard, any person can do it. It is not confined to temperance men, or respectable men, but any person—it does not signify whether he is a gaol bird, a loafer or a blackguard—has a right to go before a magistrate, and, by swearing that he has reason to believe that an offence is to be committed, he can set the machinery of the law in motion. Now, I say that you ought not, upon the affidavit of any person, no matter how disreputable he may be, set the machinery of the criminal law in motion. I would have no objection to leave it in the discretion of the justice of the peace. But he has no discretion; he is bound to issue a search warrant when an affidavit is made, although the deponent may be a perfect stranger to the magistrate. Now, I say the deponent ought to state to the magistrate the circumstances and the facts upon which the process is to issue, so that the magistrate may know whether they are sufficient to justify him in issuing the search warrant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The affidavit for a search warrant will be made the same way in this as in any other case. The party says: I have reason to believe, I do believe upon oath, that there are spirits in that vessel. He gives a reason, that is all he can state, and the consequence is that the search warrant shall issue to any constable or bailiff—

"Who shall forthwith proceed to search the steamboat, vessel, boat, canoe, raft, other craft, building, premises, carriage, vehicle, conveyance, or place described in such search warrant."

And if any intoxicating liquor is found thereon, the person executing such search warrant shall seize the intoxicating liquor and the vessel in which it is contained, and shall keep it and them secure until final action is had. If the officer makes a search of the vessel and there is no liquor thereon, there is an end of it, and no inconvenience to anyone. But if liquor is found there, he takes possession until the matter is tried before a magistrate. But the right of the dwelling house is protected under the 2nd section. I would call the attention of the committee to this section:

"But no dwelling house in which, or in part of which, or in the premises thereof, a shop or bar is not kept, shall be searched."

No private house can be searched, no house, unless there be in it a shop or bar.

"Unless the said informant also makes oath or affirmation that some offence in violation of the provisions of the 11th section of this Act has been committed therein."

And it must be within one month before the information is laid. So that no private house can be searched at all unless the party makes oath that an offence has actually been committed in it, and committed within one month. But if it is a tavern or place where there is a liquor shop, or if it is a corner grocery or anything of that kind, or if it is a vessel which can carry the intoxicating fluid, then upon his affidavit a search-warrant is issued. What harm does it do the vessel-owner or the inn-keeper, upon an affidavit being made, that his place will be searched? He has got a remedy against the blackguard the hon. gentleman supposes may maliciously make the affidavit. But we are not to provide for cases of that kind. We know that in the vast majority of cases when information is laid before a magistrate, and the party is getting the penalty, that it is not with malicious intent, that a case of malicious intent does not occur once in a thousand times, and it is unreasonable to prevent the chances of preventive justice being done altogether on the mere chance of some blackguard making an affidavit with malicious intent.

Bill reported.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES

Mr. CARON, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 128) to make better provision respecting summary proceedings before justices and other magistrates, said: The object of the Bill is to prevent the failure of justice because of irregularities or informalities in the proceedings before justices of the peace. If hon. gentlemen will look at the Procedure Act, 32-33 Victoria, they will see that it was intended to prevent miscarriage of justice in case of irregularities or informalities in proceedings before Superior Courts exercising criminal jurisdiction, and it seems to me that there is greater reason why similar provisions should apply to proceedings before justices of the peace who, as we know, have not the legal training of judges of the higher courts. These observations refer more particularly to sections 1, 2, 3 and 4. Section 5 provides that if an application is made to quash a conviction or order made by a justice of the peace, the court or judge may, as a condition of quashing the same, provide that no action shall be brought against the justice of the peace who made the conviction or against any officer acting under any warrant. This is, I believe, a proper provision, knowing as we do that some of the justices of the peace, who endeavor to the best of their knowledge to exercise their judicial functions, are not men of learning and of legal training. It is thus intended to protect the justices against vexatious actions. Section 7 provides that no writ of certiorari shall be allowed if the defendant has appealed from the conviction or order to any court to which an appeal from such conviction or order is authorised by law. In Ontario under the Summary Convictions Act there is an appeal from the conviction or order made by a justice of the peace to the Court of General Sessions. In Quebec the appeal lies to the Court of Queen's Bench, Crown side. In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba it is to the County Court. In Prince Edward Island the Supreme Court, and in British Columbia to the County or District Courts. This section provides that any person availing himself of the right to appeal from the conviction or order to one of those courts, may not, after having appealed, endeavor to remove the proceedings to a different court. Section 8—In many cases Acts are brought into force by a proclamation, and it has been held in some courts that the proclamation to bring it into force must be proved. In the Province of Quebec this has led to legal proceedings with little practical result. It is intended by clause 8 to provide, that in cases where the objection is taken that evidence of the proclamation was not given, the court or judge before whom the application to quash the conviction comes, shall allow evidence of the issue of such proclamation. I think possibly it would have been well to have amended the law of evidence so as to provide that in no case should it be necessary to prove such a proclamation, but this gets over the difficulty in another way by providing that whenever a proclamation is not proved on the hearing, the court or judge before whom the application to quash the conviction comes, may then allow evidence of the issue of the proclamation. Section 9 is a procedure section intended to simplify proceedings when the rule to quash a conviction or order is refused or discharged. Section 10 is consequent upon section 6. Sections 11, 12 and 13—By the Summary Convictions Act it is provided that if the conviction or order is made more than twelve days before the sittings of the court to which the appeal is given, such appeal shall be made to the then next sittings of such court, but if the conviction is made within twelve days of such sittings of such court, then to the second sittings after such conviction or order. It is also provided that the person aggrieved shall give the prosecutor or complainant, or to the convicting justice for him, a motion in writing of such appeal within four days after such conviction or order. This time has been found short, especially in the unorganised districts in Ontario, and after correspondence with the Attorney General of Ontario, the Minister of Justice agreed to recommend the amendments provided by these three sections, viz.: by striking out the word "twelve" in the first and fourth lines of the sub-section numbered one, and by substituting therefor in each case the word "fourteen," also by striking out the word "four" in the third line of sub-section 2, and by substituting therefor the word "ten." In consequence of the understanding between the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Ontario, the local law of Ontario has already been altered to correspond with these three sections.

Mr. WELDON. I have no objection to the general principle of this Bill, but I think there are some of the details which might properly be amended in committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There are one or two provisions of this Bill which, I think, are unobjectionable, but there are others which are wholly unnecessary and which, instead of simplifying the law, rather tend to complicate it. The second clause provides that no conviction shall be declared invalid by reason of irregularity, informality, or insufficiency therein—that is, purely technical objections. Now, if the hon. gentleman will refer to section 67 of the

Summary Jurisdiction Act, he will find that it goes still further, and makes full, clear and ample provision for the very point with which the hon. gentleman proposes to deal. By that section it is provided that no conviction or order of a justice of the peace shall be declared invalid by reason of either a technical or a substantial objection. The present law, therefore, is infinitely better in the interests both of the litigant and the magistrate, than the proposed law, and I ask what is the necessity, under those circumstances, of introducing this clause when the present law goes so far as I have indicated. The 68th section is still stronger. According to it, in case of an appeal from the adjudication of the convicting justice, to the Court of Appeal, or in our Province to the Quarter Session, that court is bound to hear the case upon its merits, notwithstanding any defects in substance or in form; so that the hon. gentleman does not improve the law, but makes it worse. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman has not drafted this Bill; if he had, he would not have interfered with the law as it now stands. This Bill has come from another branch of the Legislature, who have nothing else to do, and who are not able to do the little they undertake effectively and well. The law, as it now stands, after years of experience in the various Provinces, especially in the Province of Ontario, is so perfect in this respect that it is almost impossible to improve it. It affords ample protection to litigants and to justices of the peace. This clause is open to another very grave and serious objection. The law as it now stands contemplates an appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions, where the evidence has to be taken and the case heard de novo. The hon. gentleman proposes in this Bill to invest the chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions with the power, upon perusal of the depositions taken before the justice of the peace or upon affidavit, to sustain or quash the conviction. It is an unheard-of proposition that the Courts of Appeal should, upon a mere affidavit, have power to declare whether a conviction is valid or invalid. No such power ought to be vested in any court, especially in any Court of Quarter Sessions; it ought to be seized with the case, as it is now, with full power to deal with the matter as if it had never been investigated by the justices of the peace at all. The provisions of the law are ample and clear, and to tamper with the law, as this Bill proposes to do, is not certainly in the interest of litigants. Section 5 is, to my mind, an exceedingly objectionable section. No matter how a justice of the peace may conduct himself; no matter whether his convictions are warranted by the law or not; no matter whether he has been actuated by malicious motives or not, the hon. gentleman proposes that the person injured or aggrieved shall have no redress against the justice of the peace, unless by permission of the court. Under this provision a magistrate may convict a man, impose a fine, and award imprisonment, wholly unjustified by the law or the facts; an application is made to the courts to set aside that conviction, and the judge may say to the party: You are aggrieved, you are wronged, the conviction is wholly unwarranted, but I will not interfere unless you consent to bring no action against the magistrate who has wronged you. I say no such provision ought to be in the law. Section 7 ought not to prevail; it involves a bad principle. The principle that has prevailed hitherto in our law is that any person who is concerned in proceedings before a justice of the peace, and who is not satisfied with his adjudication, shall have his remedy; he can go before the Court of Quarter Sessions by way of appeal, or to a higher court by a writ of certiorari; and this writ of certiorari, which has existed for generations, is to be abolished by this section. No man's hands ought to be tied in this way; a man who has suffered an injury, or has been aggrieved, ought to be able to get redress in the courts. He may not have sufficient confidence in the Court of Quarter Sessions, and he should have the right to go to a higher court. This Bill, in many of its provisions, is wholly objectionable. I do not understand the necessity of three-fourths of the Bill, and the remaining fourth is wholly objectionable. I am satisfied that if the Minister of Militia had drawn this Bill there would have been no such provisions in it.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman has said the Bill has come down from a branch of the Legislature which has very much less to do than we have. The fact that the hon. gentleman has been very busy, as we all have been this Session, may be the reason he has not had the time that hon. gentlemen in another Chamber have had, to find out the reasons for the changes sought to be made by this Bill. The hon. gentleman wishes to know why clause 2 is introduced. As I stated in moving the second reading, the object was to prevent failures of justice because of the irregularity or informalities in proceedings before justices of the peace. The principles upon which the amendments are based are taken from the clauses of the Procedure Act, to which I have referred, the provisions of which are considered to work well in other courts and are now applied to justices of the peace. The reason for this is that justices of the peace being men who have not the legal training of our ordinary judges should be protected to the utmost limit. The necessity for these changes is to be found in some cases which have come before the courts of Ontario, which have been quashed in consequence of several complications or informalities that were looked upon as really technical and really of no great importance. We are endeavoring to frame the laws in such a way that they will be carried out as effectively as possible, consistent with giving every possible protection to the liberty of the subject. These amendments were suggested to the mind of the hon. gentleman who prepared the Bill and sent it down to the Commons in consequence of his experience of cases in which technical informalities resulted in the quashing of convictions. The hon. gentleman says that clause No. 5 is very objectionable. This clause, to my mind, is one of the best clauses contained in the Bill. The hon. gentleman says that if the justice of the peace has been actuated by malicious motives, the complainant in the court below would have no recourse against him. I consider that the fact that the judge of a Superior Court before whom the case is brought, having within his discretion the power to enforce that clause or not, is quite sufficient protection for the appellant. If a justice of the peace has been actuated by malicious motives, the court above will allow the law to take its course, and the appellant will have a perfect right to take out an action against the offending magistrate. Unless it is proved that the magistrate below has been actuated by bad or malicious motives, it is quite proper he should be protected from any of these actions.

Mr. DAVIES. This Summary Convictions' Act, which we have been carrying on for a good many years in Canada, is practically the Jervis' Act, I take it. It is highly important that we should have the same amendments in our law which are made in the English Act, in order to get the benefit of the English decisions, and I would ask the hon. gentleman whether any of the amendments in the present Bill are taken from the English Bill or are amendments suggested by Canadian lawyers.

Mr. CARON. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman's question now, but, before the third reading, I will look it up and give all the information he asks for.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. WELDON. I think a portion of this clause is very objectionable. It is quite right that the court before which the question is raised may be satisfied upon perusal of the depositions, but the clause says "or by affidavit", and that I think would be opening the door to a very serious matter, because it would be practically trying a man behind his back. I think that ought to be struck out.

Mr. CARON. I understand that to mean, if the irregularity could be cured by an affidavit.

Mr. WELDON. If the matter is to be decided by an affidavit there is no opportunity of cross-examining, and the only way would be to bring counter affidavits. I also think with my hon. friend from Queen's, Prince Edward Island, (Mr. Davies) that we had better follow the English Act.

Mr. CARON. The view I have taken of it is that it must mean that the depositions would be completed by cross-examination, but that, where there was an irregularity which could be disposed of by affidavit, this clause would permit it to be done, otherwise, I do not see how it could come in, because the fact of mentioning depositions before affidavit shows that the court could exercise its discretion, and it must have before it a complete record. The mention of depositions presupposes a completed case where the defendant has had an opportunity of cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses. As I take it, it means that the question can only be decided upon a completed record, and the affidavit would simply come in where an informality in the description of the offence in the conviction could be cured by it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why should a Bill of this kind be left open to any doubt? The hon. gentleman thinks that is the correct interpretation, but he is not certain, and I have not the shadow of a doubt as to the meaning of these words, that the judge who tries the case may try the point as to whether or not the conviction is within the jurisdiction of the magistrate, by deposition or by affidavit. It would be an outrageous thing to say that a judge, behind the back of the litigants, should have the power to decide whether the conviction was bad or not. If this clause is allowed to stand as it is, then the Court of Appeal may give a decision upon an affidavit of one of the parties, the other party probably knowing nothing about it. My idea is that the Minister of Militia should strike out of this clause the words "upon perusal of the depositions or by affidavits," and instead of the words stricken out I would insert "upon hearing the parties."

Mr. CARON. That is tantamount to a new trial.

Mr. DAVIES. It strikes me the draughtsman had in view that the Superior Court may quash the conviction either upon perusal of the depositions when the question comes up by way of appeal or by way of affidavit on a certiorari; but I am inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman that they ought not to be allowed to quash a conviction upon a mere affidavit.

Mr. CARON. Of course the depositions must be before the court. The court before which the appeal is brought should have the complete record. We know that several of these convictions before justices of the peace are made up in such a deficient manner, the crime is so badly described, that it is almost impossible to make out what it may mean, and in that case the affidavit comes in to cure the informality or irregularity. The object of appeal is to prevent a complication of proceedings by curing the irregularities which exist. When an application comes before the court this offence is so badly defined that it becomes next to impossible for the court to ascertain exactly what is meant, and in such case the affidavit comes in to cure that irregularity, and if it be so I see no great objection to it. I would be sorry indeed to see an appeal decided by a court upon ex parte evidence; I would be sorry to see a court changing the decision of the court below by allowing an affidavit to come in; but the depositions are not at all open to that objection simply because the parties have had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses and coming before the courts. Therefore, I think it is perfectly right to allow the court before which this appeal is brought, to decide as to the irregularities upon the depositions produced before that court.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). After consideration I confess that I do not see that there is any great objection to the word "affidavit." The question is raised upon the perusal of the depositions, and the object of the affidavit is to decide if an offence of the nature described in the conviction or the warrant, has been committed. Now, one object of reading the depositions or the affidavit is to give the court jurisdiction, as it were. A conviction may be presented to the court and on the face of that conviction it may be informal, and might be quashed, and in that case it is not necessary that evidence should be gone into at all, it would not be necessary for the jury to be sworn, the conviction would be quashed because of its informality. But before the case is proceeded with it must be ascertained whether a crime has been committed, and in order to give the application force an affidavit can be produced to show that the crime was committed, and the case, on its merits, then goes for appeal.

Mr. DAVIES. The clause should be simply confined to cases brought before the court by certiorari. The court must be satisfied on two points: First, that there has been an irregular conviction; and second, that the case came within the jurisdiction of the justices. How can these facts be ascertained? Only by the depositions taken before the justices, when the parties were examined and cross-examined. It should not be left to be done by affidavit.

Mr. CARON. Perhaps there cannot be an appeal because there is nothing to appeal from. If the conviction is irregular and it can be cured by an affidavit according to the theory which I believe is the true one, namely, that if there is an irregularity in the description of the offence in the conviction, the court before which the appeal will come can by affidavit ascertain what the offence in the conviction is. If that be so, I cannot see what harm can result from retaining the words, and in fact I think they are required. Unless you put before the courts such an offence as is described, there is nothing to appeal from.

Mr. WELDON. The court has to be satisfied upon two points: First, that an offence of the nature described has been committed; and second, that it comes within the jurisdiction of the justice. If you take the depositions there is no difficulty. Suppose action is taken by affidavit as is suggested, there is the fundamental objection that action is being taken behind the back of a party. It will be an invasion of the general law. Great powers are already entrusted to justices of the peace, who are afforded even every protection and who may do many things with impunity, but we should be careful not to materially alter the law, which at present follows that of England.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). No doubt they deserve great consideration, but hon. gentlemen have forgotten one thing with reference to this clause. It is not intended to try cases by affidavit or in appeal, but simply to give the court power to see whether a crime has been committed of the nature described in the conviction, and so far as that goes, whether it is true or false, because if the court is satisfied that such a crime has been committed, the case goes on.

Mr. DAVIES. Only by appeal—not by certiorari.
Mr. CARON.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). As I understand, this is with reference altogether to cases appealed to the Sessions.

Mr. WELDON. That is provided for now.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I certainly would not support it at all as applied to cases coming up by certiorari, and it would be well to make that point clear. If the hon. gentleman's view is right, that this only applies to cases of appeal, we are legislating without any necessity as we have full and ample provision in the present Act for such cases. According to the clauses of the Act at present, if the crime is not properly charged, you could not go on.

Mr. DAVIES. The crime might not be charged in the exact phraseology of the indictment, but that would not make a difference. I will not discuss the matter further, because if the Minister intends to limit it to cases of appeal, the Bill is utterly useless.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is perfectly manifest that this section at present applies only to cases of appeal, but I would like the Minister of Militia to say whether or not it is intended to cover all cases.

Mr. CARON. Except by certiorari.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is my judgment that this Bill was intended to be limited to the remedy given by means of a writ of certiorari, but there is no doubt the law at present gives as full and ample a remedy, and indeed more so, than this Bill. If, however, the hon. gentleman will limit the operation of the second clause to cases of application by certiorari, it would be consistent with the present law.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). If the hon. gentleman's interpretation is right, I would certainly agree with him, but from conversation I had with the promoter of the Bill in the other House, I do not think that was his view. I understood from him that the first clause was intended to apply to cases where there was an appeal.

Mr. DAVIES. What word can the hon. gentleman point out which limits its application to cases of appeal only?

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I am not sure hon. gentlemen are not right, and if there is any question about it, I certainly would be in favor of striking out the words "by affidavit," because I think it would be very unfortunate if a case of that kind were disposed of in that way. But I think the second clause is a very good one, if it applies in the manner in which I understand it.

Mr. CARON. If the hon. gentleman will read clause 7 in conjunction with this clause, I think it explains what the intention of the framer of the Bill was. Section 7 provides that if a party has selected the appeal, then he is refused the benefit of the certiorari; and if he selects the appeal, as I understand, section 2 applies.

Mr. DAVIES. Suppose he elects the certiorari.

Mr. CARON. Then he does not proceed by appeal; and if he does not, the right of certiorari is not taken away from him by the Act. I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress, and it being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Immigration..... $380,025

Mr. MILLS. Are we having many Norwegian immigrants this year?

Mr. POPE. We are having a few. We have a few every year.

Mr. FISHER. I see by the Auditor General's report of last year that only $200 were paid to the messenger at Quebec, although $365 were voted. What is the reason for the difference?

Mr. POPE. We paid him for what time we had him, at the rate of $1 per day.

Mr. LANGELIER. I think the Norwegian interpreter might very well do the duties of messenger. He is a very good officer—I know him personally. I think he is more useful in bringing Norwegian immigrants than many agents we might send to Norway, because he is constantly writing to Norway to induce his fellow-countrymen to come to this country. But I know his duties are very small, and he might very well do the duties of messenger.

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman give us some idea of the immigration this year? Representations have been made to me that the emigration from Canada to England exceeds the emigration from England to Canada. The hon. gentleman will perhaps be able to tell us precisely what the prospects for immigration this year are.

Mr. POPE. The prospects are not so good as usual. Up to this time the immigration has been about a third less than last year. I do not know anything about emigration, but my impression is that a good many discharged navvies have returned. I have no idea of the number.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the Department not receive a return of the passengers outward-bound by the St. Lawrence lines?

Mr. POPE. I believe not.

Mr. MILLS. Are those navvies who are returning, people who obtained assisted passages to this country a short time ago?

Mr. POPE. Not that I know of. They came out to work on the railway, and received the benefit of cheap passages, but were not assisted.

Mr. BLAKE. The custom has been heretofore to publish shortly after the close of each month, a statement of the immigration by the St. Lawrence and other routes. Has that been adhered to this year?

Mr. POPE. It was not the custom till last year that I know of. Up to the 31st last May I think it was about 27,000,—that is of those who remained in Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. What about the St. Lawrence route?

Mr. POPE. I have heard that the immigration by the St. Lawrence route has for the past few weeks been very small indeed.

Mr. FISHER. I understood the hon. Minister to say the other night that a year or two ago the Department had assisted in bringing in navvies to Canada, because at the time there was considerable railway work to be done.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman did not understand me correctly. I said they had all the advantages of the cheapest rate we could make for them, but they were not assisted as were other classes; and early this year we instructed our agents on the other side not to encourage mechanics and navvies to come to the country. We assisted agricultural people, laborers and their families and domestic servants and that class of people, but not the navvies.

Mr. FISHER. Were there no Finlanders assisted?

Mr. POPE. I think there were not. A large number of them came by New York, and I sent a man there to direct them to come on this way, but their passages were not paid.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman could obtain the information showing the number who left the country it would be interesting, because it was understood the majority of these people would settle in the country.

Mr. POPE. I will try and get it.

Mr. FISHER. In what way are the other employés at the agencies, besides the agents, provided for? In the Auditor General's report are to be found the salaries of assistants, interpreters, etc., at the various agencies, but in the Estimates they do not appear. Are those other salaries provided for in the contingencies of the Department?

Mr. POPE. It is taken out of the general vote for immigration; out of the contingencies.

Mr. LANGELIER. What is the reason for the salary not being voted for the subordinate officers here as it is in Quebec? The only salary that we are called upon to vote in this case is that of the agent. The others are to be taken out of the contingencies. If these officers are permanent, why should they be paid in that way? If they are not permanent, I can understand it.

Mr. CURRAN. I think that is a great injustice to the city of Montreal, that our deputies and our messengers and others are not made permanent at once, as well as those in Quebec.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Curran) has asked me a great many times why we did not put these officers on the regular list, but Quebec is the port where the immigrants come, and these men are kept on all the season there, and are made permanent. The others I found in the position in which I have kept them.

Mr. LANGELIER. The salary of the caretaker in Montreal is $428, and in Quebec it is only $365. These are the amounts paid last year which I take from the Public Accounts. In Toronto, the salary paid to the messenger was $566.

Mr. POPE. $366.

Mr. LANGELIER. No, the amount paid last year was $566.

Mr. POPE. It must have been for extra work or something of that kind.

Mr. BOWELL. It is only set down as $366 in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. FISHER. I find, by the report of the Auditor General that there is not one of these officers who gets less than $1 a day and some of them get a great deal more, while the messenger at Quebec, who is a permanent official, receives only $1 a day. Either they are overpaid, or you would save by making them permanent officers. As it is now, they are paid at the discretion of the Department, without the House knowing how much they are paid until the Public Accounts are brought down the following year. I do not see that the Minister's argument is a valid excuse for the change.

Mr. POPE. There is no change.

Mr. TROW. Does the agent at Toronto work in conjunction with the Province of Ontario in regard to immigration?

Mr. POPE. Of course he does, in regard to the disposition of immigrants and so on.

Mr. TROW. What is the name of the agent?

Mr. POPE. It is Mr. Donaldson.

Mr. TROW. Is there any refund from the Province of Ontario?

Mr. POPE. No. There used to be two-thirds of the passages refunded, but for the last two or three years there has been none refunded, and this year they refused to pay anything.

Mr. BLAKE. A statement was made to me some time ago to which I call the attention of the Minister. It was stated, with reference to one or more of the agents in the Province from which I come, that they were in the habit of acting as the paid agents of those who wish to sell farms to immigrants with means, receiving a commission for their services. I do not know whether the Minister is aware of or sanctions any such relation of any agent, but it seems to me to be rather an objectionable position. If an agent engages in anything of that kind, it should be as a part of his public duty, and not in a way which would be liable to misconception on the part of those coming fresh to the country.

Mr. POPE. I have often known people to ask me to allow the agents to act for them in this way, promising that they would be paid for their services, but the instructions are that they should give any assistance in that way that was possible, and should take no pay for it. Of course, if they did, and anything took place that was not right, the Department would be responsible, and I have always refused to allow them to do it.

Mr. TROW. The idea is current in the Province of Ontario. There is a paper there called the Medium which is published monthly by an agent, and it is said that he receives a very large number of farms for disposal, and receives a certain percentage in connection with his office, and that he is doing a large business.

Mr. POPE. I do not know to whom you refer.

Mr. TROW. I refer to Mr. Donaldson, your agent.

Mr. POPE. I will, of course, make enquiry into the matter. Nothing of that kind can be allowed. No agent can be allowed to take a commission for selling farms.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know that the statement is correct. I happened to be an executor of a certain estate, and advertised the property. Mr. Donaldson cut out the advertisement and sent it to me, and asked me to place the property at his disposal, and stated that he would charge $100 as commission and $15 for expenses. I did not even answer his communication, but that happened within the last year.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman was perfectly right in refusing the offer. If there is anything of that kind going on, I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for bringing it to my notice; but I know that Mr. Donaldson has been a very useful agent indeed, and I have never before heard of any complaints against him.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that last year his salary and travelling expenses amounted to $4,478.29. I think that is a rather large item.

Mr. POPE. I do not think it large for last year. He has a great deal of work to do. A great deal of the distribution of immigrants falls upon him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The agent at St. John, who is put down for $1,000, mentions in his report to the Department that some 60,000 pamphlets had been issued exclusively relating to New Brunswick. Does the Minister know what portion of the cost was borne by the Dominion Government? And has he joined with any of the Local Governments in issuing pamphlets exclusively relating to one Province?

Mr. POPE. If any Local Government asks me to assist in circulating pamphlets for their Province, I have often done so. I never failed to give them all the encouragement I can to induce immigration into their Provinces. The Ontario Government generally provide for their own pamphlets, but I have assisted New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba, in that way.

Mr. PATERSON. I notice that the St. John agent does more than our other agents in collecting information from his Province. Do the duty of the agents at St. John and Halifax, for instance, relate to the location of immigrants within the bounds of their own Provinces?

Mr. POPE. Their duties are the same as those of other agents.

Mr. PATERSON. This agent, I see, takes a great deal of interest in his own Province. He has written letters to different parties and it is gratifying to me to read some of the answers. He gives such a description of that Province that really it ought to attract immigrants to it. There is one gentleman to whom he writes with reference to one of the exhibits at one of their agricultural shows. He reports that:

"About the usual quantity of grain was shown, and the roots were far above the expectation of every one, taking into consideration the past season."

"But when the visitor turned to the ladies' department, an exclamation of gratified surprise involuntarily escaped his lips. For one item was twenty samples of butter, among which there was none inferior, and the quality of which would satisfy the most fastidious gourmand. One side of the room lined with mats, upon which a Turkish prince would not disdain to place his feet; and another side with quilts, under which any one of them might well sigh to recline; another space devoted to fancy work, the work of the younger ladies, defied description, it was simply immense."

Now, that is very encouraging, and a report like that ought to be very gratifying to our New Brunswick friends. I was pleased with another description from another of these agents with reference to New Brunswick. It is written in a very nice style, and I read it for the sake of one sentence in it which shows to us the importance, if possible, of retaining our young men in our midst. We cannot avoid a feeling of depression sometimes as we have had unwilling admissions that our young men do not stay with us, as we could desire. This correspondent, at the request of Mr. Gardner, the St. John agent, dwells upon that point, and I will read an extract from his letter:

"Here, for the first time, have I been able to realise the full force of the Psalmist's statement, that:

"Children are God's heritage.
The sons of youth as arrows are, for strong men's hands prepared.
O happy is the man that hath his quiver filled with those;
They unashamed in the gate shall speak unto their foes."

A man's progress here, to a large extent, depends on the number of strong, healthy boys he may have."

There can be no doubt about that, and it is a great pity, indeed, that more of them could not be induced to remain with us. One of the gratifying things with reference to the report that Mr. Gardner makes is that they seem to be remaining with us more than they have, and some of them are coming back. The same writer gives also a description of the beauties of the climate of New Brunswick. He seems to be an enthusiastic Scotchman:

"I suppose I need not tell you that although we have more snow and frost during the winter than they have in Scotland, we have, during the same season, much more sunshine and brightness, having longer days and brighter nights. The night sky presents a panorama of brilliancy never seen in the old country. There are no dark winter nights here, and often there are nights so calm and still the very stillness seems oppressive. On such nights the young folks often turn out for an evening drive in their sleighs. Here the stillness is broken in upon by the silvery jingle of the sleigh bells and the joyful laughter of the young people. The horses fly over the smooth snow without striking sound from its white surface, and the sleighs glide after them with a motion which gives a sensation to the occupants much like sailing in a swiftly rowed boat on a calm lake. The surrounding snow throws back, with sparkling brilliancy, the splendor of the evening sky, while the trees—the feathery boughs being tipped with ice—seem laden with silver fruit; the whole forming a scene more like a chapter of the Arabian Nights or some fairy tales than reality."

Now I do think our New Brunswick friends have much to boast of. It has been some time charged upon them that they had not got as hospitable shores as some of the old Provinces which are recognised as more purely agricultural. But I think we may look in vain through the Minister's report to find a description that would tend to draw more young people to it than the description I have read. I would just say that I do not know that it is to be the idea that we should seek to get information with reference to a Province in this way. Of course the Department of Agriculture, as the Minister has told us, and the immigration work pertaining to that, is not strictly advertising, or seeking to promote immigration to the older Provinces; that is supposed to be a work that they will attend to for themselves, the idea being rather to secure immigrants for our own lands which pertain to the Dominion. It is not at all objectionable that such a description as this should be given of one of the Provinces of the Dominion, for if one Province prospers it must tend in a measure to the prosperity of the whole. Our friends in the east have often thought that too much attention was being paid to the North-West as a field for immigrants, and this is a step in the other direction. I have read this to show them that this year at all events they have nothing to complain of in the way of pleasing descriptions being given of their Province.

Mr. IVES. I would suggest that hereafter during this Session, if hon. gentlemen should find it necessary to read from books, as they did on a former occasion night after night, they should take up this report of the agent in New Brunswick, which would be much more acceptable to the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman's taste. I never saw so much trash put into a Blue Book and printed.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). A report comes from Rochester that seven families left there for Canada in one week.

Mr. KING. I can endorse all the statements given in the report respecting New Brunswick; but I am surprised the hon. member for North Brant did not call attention to the contrast made between New Brunswick and Ontario. It has reference to my own county, and is perfectly correct. It is as follows:—

"Comparing this Province with the garden of Canada (Ontario) my firm conviction is that the soil here is equal to it, and that the climate is better. Since I came into this Province my health has been as good as ever it was. While in Ontario I was subject to headache. I was told that it was the want of salt in the air which caused headache, and that it is common for people from England to be so troubled for years. Whatever the cause, the effect was disagreeable. I like New Brunswick more than any place else, and should like to see a goodly number of a good class of immigrants come here from the old country.

"My opinion of New Brunswick as a home for immigrants is so high that I regret my inability to talk to, and to tell my fellow countrymen in Britain what I think of it. To contrast this beautiful Province with Britain is out of the question. While the one contains millions of acres of good land which can be had free, every yard of the other is held at exorbitant prices, even to rent. I like the climate here; the frost is more severe than in Scotland. Before I came here I read that it was so, but that people do not feel the cold more here than they do there. This I did not believe. I reasoned that the action of frost must be in accordance with its severity, and must be felt while people are capable of feeling I was wrong."

There is much more of the same sort. The hon. member for Brant did not do justice to New Brunswick and to my own country by quoting that part of the report. In view of the large appropriations made for immigration purposes, New Brunswick has not had justice done to it. I do not complain in regard to the agent at St. John—he perhaps does his duty; and I agree that it is to be regretted that we have not more immigrants. The principle underlying the immigrant expenditure is a wrong one. This country goes on spending year after year $500,000 or $600,000, but some of the Provinces, such as New Brunswick, do not get their share. The expenditure should be made in proportion to the Provinces, and until that is done New Brunswick will never obtain its proper share.

Mr. WELDON. The report shows that 5,000 people more came into New Brunswick than left it. That is an entire mistake. Where did the hon. gentleman get his information? I observe that the number of passengers by the International steamers are not stated. I understand the company refuse to give returns.

Mr. POPE. We have the information in the report of the agent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). By whom was the New Brunswick pamphlet written?

Mr. POPE. I do not know. It was written by a person in New Brunswick, and was published by the Dominion. British Columbia, Nova Scotia and, I think, Manitoba had also pamphlets printed.

Mr. TROW. With respect to the agents at Winnipeg and Emerson: Was there not an agent at Emerson last year?

Mr. POPE. Yes, there was.

Mr. TROW. Who is the agent at Winnipeg?

Mr. POPE. Mr. Graham.

Mr. TROW. Was Mr. Hespeler dismissed?

Mr. POPE. No, he retired.

Mr. LANGELIER. Are all these officers under the agent at Emerson, permanent officers?

Mr. POPE. One of them is a permanent officer, and the other is not. The latter is not only caretaker, but he attends to the distribution of the immigrants.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Is there an interpreter attached to the Brandon office?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). What is the reason one is required?

Mr. POPE. These officers are needed especially to interpret for the German immigrants. They do not understand our language, and it is absolutely necessary to have some person able to direct them in their own tongue, as they know nothing about the country.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Is there an interpreter at Winnipeg?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. I see there is an interpreter at Qu'Appelle. Why is he needed?

Mr. POPE. He is a French Canadian. I had several parties of French gentlemen who went out there intending to form a settlement, and the first question they asked was if there was anyone there that could speak their language. It is necessary to have some person there who could speak their own language and would be able to give them directions.

Mr. WILSON. I see that in 1884, there were only 13 from Quebec and 20 from France, or 33 together. It seems to me that this is a pretty large expenditure for the results we are obtaining, and that we should have some information as to how many the hon. gentleman expects next year, and the reasons why this man is put there.

Mr. POPE. I gave the hon. gentleman the reason, and I may say he is to be moved further on.

Mr. FISHER. I think that the assistant messenger here might be employed as interpreter for French Canadians of whom there are many in the country, instead of paying a man and giving him the rank of an interpreter and the salary of an interpreter. He would be perfectly well able to interpret, and to give directions to those of that nationality coming into the country.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We could not for the salary of an ordinary messenger get a man of the class required as interpreter.

Mr. LANGELIER. I believe this gentleman is not only an interpreter, but a poet, who writes effusions for the newspapers, singing the praises of the Government, and perhaps that is the reason why he gets the larger salary.

Mr. BLAKE. He is to be moved on, the Minister said.

Mr. POPE. Yes, I may say, whether he is a poet or not, he is an excellent man, who has a great deal of influence in inducing people to go to that country. He is well known in the older Provinces, and is well worth the money he gets.

Mr. BLAKE. Where is he to be moved?

Mr. POPE. To Medicine Hat.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). This may be a nice thing for the poet and the interpreter, but considering that all this expense is incurred to bring 96 men to the country, it is rather hard on the people who pay the money.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he moved to Medicine Hat because Canadian immigration there is expected to be greater there than at Qu'Appelle?

Mr. POPE. We do not know of course how many will go in, but he will have a larger field there. For instance, I have been pressed this Session by some gentlemen here to establish an agency at Regina.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he to be a poet too?

Mr. POPE. I should be glad to get another such poet.

Mr. WILSON. Will this man merely act as interpreter, or as agent and interpreter?

Mr. POPE. As agent and interpreter.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman yielded to the solicitations which he says were made to him?

Mr. POPE. No, I have not.

Mr. BLAKE. And he intends to be stern?

Mr. POPE. I do.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman intend to appoint an agent at Medicine Hat?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. TROW. Would it not be better to remove the agent from Qu'Appelle to Regina, and to appoint an agent still further west than Medicine Hat? There is very little settlement at Medicine Hat. There is every necessity for an agent at Brandon, but I do not see any necessity for one at Qu'Appelle.

Mr. BLAKE. Where is the agent of the North-West Territories to be situated?

Mr. POPE. At Calgary.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is he a new man? The vote is $200 less than that of last year.

Mr. POPE. He will be a new man. There was none there last year.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman have any agencies between Moose Jaw and Calgary besides Medicine Hat?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. I am surprised the hon. gentleman does not make preparations for immigration into that fertile district.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to have an agent appointed in the North-West Territories this year, or has he been appointed?

Mr. POPE. No, he has not been appointed. It has been represented to me very strongly that there is a great necessity for one; if I find that necessity I will appoint him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the Minister intend to keep the agent at Prince Arthur's Landing, now that the railway is completed?

Mr. POPE. Yes, he must be continued.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he does not consider the salary of $1,000 for the agent at Victoria, British Columbia, totally inadequate to the service performed. For over nine years there was no agent at all in British Columbia. This is the only agent in that Province, and as everybody in this House knows, the salary of $1,000 is about equal to $750 in the eastern Provinces. With the rapidly approaching completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we expect a very large immigration into that Province, and the services performed by this officer are worth a good deal more than he is at present receiving. I should like to ask the hon. Minister if he could not find some soft spot in his heart, and give that gentleman a little more salary.

Mr. POPE. Is he a poet?

Mr. BAKER. He may be a poet, but he does not know it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the salaries of agents in Canada amount to $27,329; last year they amounted to $29,245. I really think this question of agencies in Canada should be gone over. I cannot see that there is any necessity for keeping up this large staff of agents at the different points. I admit that they may be required at Quebec and possibly at Montreal; but the idea of keeping an immigration agent continuously at London, seems to me absurd. I cannot see what duties there are for him to perform. I do not think that our people are prepared to continue to pay so large an amount for immigration agencies in this country. I think the entire expenses in connection with immigration should be very much reduced. In London alone $7,008.99 are paid for agents, and the salaries in Europe amount to $10,413.88. Our whole immigration policy has been a matter of great expense with very little accomplished. The salaries for agencies are: At Quebec $4,530; at Montreal $2,533.50; at Winnipeg $2,932; at Qu'Appelle, $2,200. I do not see why we should not be able to obtain efficient agents for very much less than we are now paying; it appears to me to be quite extravagant to retain a number of men at these large salaries when very little is accomplished. I think we should reconsider the whole question. In connection with printing there has been an enormous amount paid last year, and also in connection with the supplying of meals to the immigrants $22,368.65 were spent last year. This amount has been mainly divided among two or three parties. I notice also that we paid Burland & Co., lithographers, $29,917.30 for work done by them; the Montreal Gazette $9,211.15, the London Free Press, $6,075.60; the Toronto Mail, $9,803.92; the Hamilton Spectator, $6,593.26; H. W. Bennett & Co., $6,941.65; or a total of $81,667.06 for printing in Canada, besides $32,437.49 for printing in England. For paper furnished for printing, we paid in addition $27,661.79; or in all, $109,327.85 for printing expenses in connection with immigration in Canada and in England. I cannot understand why we should continue such an enormous expenditure when it produces such small results. Five travelling agents cost us $8,532.13, and for the special services of persons from Halifax to Emerson, $6,927.57. We paid also for locating immigrants last year, notwithstanding the fact that we had so many agents and interpreters, $4,554.85; travelling and incidental expenses cost $6,055.46, and contingencies in Canada $28,719.23. The Auditor General, in his report, says that of this sum, $26,062 is not properly accounted for, no vouchers having been given him. The travelling expenses of 11 agents in Europe cost $23,829.63 or $2,168.33 each. That appears to be a very large sum to pay for travelling expenses. These 11 agents must have been travelling all the time to spend this amount. I would like to know what particular duties they perform which warranted this large expenditure. Assisting immigrants cost $101,178.14, and commissions upon 733 children brought into the country at $2 a head, $1,466. Bonuses for settling immigrants in British Columbia cost $370. I notice in connection with Mr. Stafford's office, Quebec, the salary paid to him last year was $1,650 and contingencies $4,284.64. The incidentals for three months of his office were cab hire, $114.16; meals $95.50; ferry boat hire $16.30; cash to poor immigrants $17.50; scrubbing his office three months $12.60. He must have his office scrubbed very often. I think some of these items require to be looked into. Mr. Donaldson's office cost in incidentals $2,578, travelling expenses $300, and the total expenses are $4,478.29. I think this whole service should be overhauled before voting these large amounts.

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. Minister refer to the Auditor General's report, pages 102 and 103, and state whether the vouchers and statements there asked for with regard to almost every one of the agents, have yet been obtained by the Department?

Mr. POPE. Yes, all of them.

Mr. FISHER. That statement is very satisfactory, as far as it goes, but I think it is very unsatisfactory to find the Auditor General reporting that not one of the agencies has furnished statements and vouchers.

Mr. POPE. They generally furnish them.

Mr. FISHER. I hope they do. But I only have to turn to the report to find that they did not last year. This is a very unsatisfactory state of things. Such a showing proves that these agents, though they may be proper immigration agents, may not be good business men. Some means should be taken to see that this does not occur again. The agents ought to be reprimanded for their neglect, and it is to be regretted that the Government knowing this to be the case continue asking the House to vote salaries for them. I find under the name of J. Smith, from whom sufficient vouchers were not obtained, that he had not only his salary of $1,200, but also payments for which the vouchers were not correct. On page 101 of the Auditor General's report, Mr. John Smith is charged with $100 on account of special expense. It does not say what it is, but he obtained this money apparently without giving vouchers for the expense. There was also special expense to counteract Dakota exhibit—whatever that means—$62. There is also J. McGovern, who did not give sufficient vouchers, who was charged with a salary of $1,000 at Port Arthur, and on page 100 of the Auditor General's report I find him charged with $1,327.27, travelling and incidental expenses, for which apparently he did not furnish the vouchers. This was money which I presume Mr. McGovern paid out, Government money which passed through his hands, and I do not think it ought to have been advanced to him until he had shown that it was paid. I find also the name of Mr. W. C. B. Grahame, of Winnipeg, who did not supply sufficient vouchers. On page 101 of the Auditor General's report, I find him allowed $101.95 for Icelandic transport, etc., and on page 100, I find him charged with $512.67 travelling and incidental expenses.

I think the Minister should explain what those extra payments were which were made without the vouchers.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman should have read the explanation of the secretary in the same part of the book. On page 103 he says, under date of 20th October, 1884:

"In the case of the employment of any person whatever as a simple agent of the Department, the details of all expenses are always required to be furnished, and always given."

They may not be given at the very time, and in many cases I suppose they could not have reached the Department in time, but there is the rule of the Department. Moreover, there is a distinction to be drawn between those represented as agents and those represented in any way as travelling agents. The secretary says:

"Sir,—Referring to a conversation with you on the subject of certain payments in a lump sum for the consideration of combined services and travelling expenses, having for object the promotion of immigration to Canada, I have to inform you that payments of this kind are never made, except to persons who have a delegate capacity, or to correspondents of European newspapers who visit Canada for the purpose of reporting on its resources: and then such payments have always relation to the length of time in travelling and the extent of country visited."

"In the case of the employment of any person whatever as a simple agent of the Department, the details of all expenses are always required to be furnished, and always given."

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member has read a letter confirmatory of what I said, showing that such payments are never made except to persons who have a delegate capacity or to correspondents of European newspapers who visit Canada for the purpose of reporting on its resources. Does the hon. gentlemen mean to say that the paid agents of the Government are in any capacity of that kind? They are the people from whom detailed statements ought to be required and are required by the rule of the Department, but the Auditor General states that they have not been supplied to him. The secretary of the Department may say they are always given; he may have had them, but the Auditor General had them not, and he is the person to whom they should be given in order to compare them with the details of the expenditure in the Department. The secretary of the Department states:

"The distinction is between an employment, which constitutes agency, and paying for it as such; and the consideration of making a certain allowance on account of travelling expenses, in special circumstances, to particular persons, of the character above referred to, who happen to be in a position to render valuable services to the cause of immigration—services, moreover, which could not be otherwise obtained."

Does the hon. member mean to say that the services of these paid agents of the Government could not be otherwise obtained?

Mr. DAVIES. The member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) evidently did not understand the nature of the complaint made by my hon. friend. He will see that the letter of Mr. Lowe does not refer to the complaint of the Auditor General at all, but to a conversation upon another matter. The case is almost worse than has been stated, because, although vouchers were given for these advances, in no cases were the vouchers correct. It is not that they withheld the vouchers, but that they did not account for the moneys they got, and in not a single case did the vouchers correspond with the moneys they had from the Department.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman is not correct. The letter of the Auditor General does not say the vouchers are not correct; he says they have not received them.

Mr. DAVIES. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HESSON. I will read the letter:

"Sir,—Will you be good enough to provide me, as soon as possible, with detailed statements of the accounts and vouchers rendered by each of the undermentioned agents, in support of the moneys advanced them during the year 1883-84?"

"The vouchers already received by me in no case equal the amount of advances."

"The detailed statements would enable me to point out the vouchers required to balance the various accounts."

He does not say the vouchers were incorrect.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. HESSON. In reply to that, the secretary of the Department says:

"In the case of the employment of any person whatever as a simple agent of the Department."

These were simple agents—

"The details of all expenses are always required to be furnished, and always given."

Is not that a reply to the letter?

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. HESSON. Then what does it refer to?

Mr. BLAKE. Why, the Auditor General was asking for the vouchers.

Mr. HESSON. No one pretends to say that he might not have asked for the vouchers in connection with the accounts which he received almost the next day. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that they presented accounts for which the vouchers were incorrect? They may not have presented the vouchers at that time, but they were afterwards given in. Can an agent put down the expenditure for every meal that he gives an immigrant? I presume that at some time of the year he might be called upon to make a return of the expenditures in connection with the advances made to him. In reply to that the secretary of the Department shows clearly that they demanded, as a matter of course, from their agents what advances are made to the agent, and the agent keeps a detailed list of the items of expenditure for the year, and he is called upon at the end of the year to make a return showing how that lump sum has been expended. He makes that return, and if the Auditor General is making up his accounts for a part of the year, and the agent may not have sent in his vouchers for that portion of the year, it is just possible he might have called for vouchers at separate times.

Mr. BLAKE. The accounts are up to the 30th June, and the year closes at that time. The Auditor's letter is written in October or November following. Certain vouchers, I suppose, had been sent in, and he points out that the vouchers do not balance the accounts. The hon. gentleman says a statement in reply is made to that request for the vouchers, which request is made for the three months after the expiration of the financial year. A satisfactory reply is made to these demands of the Auditor because the secretary of the Department says that vouchers are always required and always given. What the Auditor wanted was a statement from the Department that vouchers were always required and given; what he wanted was the vouchers, and what he did not get was the vouchers.

Mr. POPE. It has been a practice for many years that the vouchers are not sent until we have the bills, and then they are audited. There might have been some vouchers in the Department at that time—I cannot say; but I do say that as a rule, and I do not know that there is any exception, bills are furnished, and if they are right they are paid, and vouchers are given; if they are wrong, they are sent back and corrected.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). How can the Minister reconcile that statement with the fact that it appears in the Auditor General's report and the Public Accounts that advances have been made for work to newspapers, that work not having been delivered at the time? In the case of the Ottawa Citizen, during the last year, the Auditor's Account shows that a sum of $1,500 was paid for work which was not delivered, and which was not finished, and the same is the case with the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. HESSON.

Mr. POPE. In a very few cases—and I found my predecessors had been doing the same thing—some advances have been made upon work of this kind. But it has been entirely stopped within the last year. Not one dollar has been paid out for which there were not vouchers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the Minister's attention to this letter:

"AUDIT OFFICE, OTTAWA, 15th March, 1884."

"SIR,—I have examined L. Stafford's statement of expenditure for the quarter ending 30th September last, and beg to draw your attention to the contingent expenses, which are as follows:—

Here follows half a dozen items amounting to $256.06.

"This expenditure is not supported by a single voucher. It strikes me that no great difficulty should be found in procuring vouchers for most of the above expenditure. When they cannot practically be had, detailed statements with date should be supplied."

Now it strikes me that that letter hardly consorts with the statement of the Minister just now as to the practice of this Department.

Mr. POPE. Now, it is the Auditor's Department. It is barely possible that at that time, when there was not much going on at Quebec, the vouchers had not been handed into the auditor.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has admirable and wholesome general rules, but his practice is entirely different from them. He sets up the rule to us and we find the practice in the Blue Book. He says it might be possible that in a case like Quebec, where there was so much doing, there might be a little delay about the vouchers. Now, Sir, the vouchers were for the quarter ending the 30th September, and they were asked for in March following. The navigation of the St. Lawrence closed some months before the month of March. The city of Quebec is not a place to which many emigrants arrive for some months before March.

Mr. POPE. The agent at Quebec has a good deal to do with immigrants in the winter that come from Halifax.

Mr. BLAKE. I am aware of that, but the winter is not his busy time, it is his slack time. He is busy when the St. Lawrence is open and immigrants are arriving from Quebec. His slack time commences just as navigation closes, and continues till navigation opens; therefore there can be no excuse made for him that he was too busy to furnish the accounts.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) has suggested, there seems to be regular employees of the Government who are paid for more than one service. Here are regular agents of the Government, J. Smith and A. G. Smith, whose services are supposed to belong to the Government, and there appears to have been something special for which they drew respectively $100 and $275. Mr. Lowe, the secretary of the Department, as I understand, takes the ground that for these special expenditures they are not bound to produce vouchers. I think the committee are entitled to some explanation as to why special amounts are given to regularly paid employees of the Government. I find, for instance, this item: J. Smith, special expenditure to counteract the Dakota exhibit, $62. We should be glad to receive some information on this point, and as to why vouchers are not furnished.

Mr. POPE. They have been produced.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I can understand why Mr. Smith of Hamilton was not able to send vouchers in time. He was busily engaged for a considerable time when he should have been attending to his duties in getting up National Policy statistics for the Government in his section of the country.

Mr. FISHER. Was this special expenditure of $100 paid to him for getting up National Policy statistics.

Mr. POPE. I often send John Smith to New York and elsewhere in the States. I remember a case when an attempt was made to induce our people to go to Dakota. I heard of it, and saw advertisements all over the country. I told Mr. Smith I wanted him to go and represent our side of the case, and see if he could not counteract the efforts which were being made to have our people go to Dakota. A Dakota exhibit was being made at Welland, I think; and I thought it my duty to take such action. In such cases I paid Mr. Smith's expenses. During the winter season, when the agents are not much employed, I have sent the agents at Montreal and Port Arthur; John Smith and others to different parts of the United States, where they have distributed pamphlets, talked with the people and endeavored to induce them to come to our country and to the North-West particularly. In consequence of those efforts we have received a good many immigrants and settlers.

Mr. FISHER. If that is the Minister's explanation with respect to the extra expenditure paid to these agents, it is quite clear that detailed statements as to how the money was expended should be furnished. If we are to allow our agents to travel all over the United States and then send in a demand for a lump sum without furnishing detailed statements, a great loop-hole for extravagance is created. The Minister has contradicted himself in his statement. The member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) has alluded to the letter written by the secretary of the Department of Agriculture on 29th October, 1884, as being a complete answer to the Auditor General's report. The Minister did not give that as a justification, because he knew it had no reference to the letter of the Auditor General, but had reference to a conversation which occurred between the secretary and the Auditor General. The difficulty of sending in vouchers could not be pleaded with respect to agents at Ottawa or Toronto.

Mr. HESSON. Does the hon. gentleman intend to say that the portion of the letter marked with asterisks does not refer distinctly to the letter?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think so.

Mr. HESSON. I think it clearly does refer to it. I only mentioned distance as a possible reason for delay in sending vouchers. I simply pointed out the fact that the Department requires its agents to furnish vouchers, and they are furnished.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister tell us whether this refers to it or not?

Mr. POPE. I have not seen the Auditor General's report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It might be as well to look at it as regards the hon. gentleman's own Department.

Mr. POPE. I explained several times that, for all papers we have vouchers, whatever may be the case with regard to this correspondence, which I have not seen. The vouchers are always sent in, and if the bills are incorrect, they are returned for correction.

Mr. LANGELIER. It is an extraordinary thing that the Department should have the vouchers, and that they should not be sent into the Auditor General. The secretary of the Department says it is a rule for the vouchers to be sent in, and the Minister now says the same thing; but what we want to know is, has the rule been followed? This item amounts to $28,719, and those gentlemen who have sent insufficient vouchers cover nearly the whole of that sum. What has become of those vouchers? The date of the Auditor General's letter is the 13th of October, so that there was plenty of time to have them sent in. With regard to the Quebec agent, I know that he is perfectly honest, but still it is a very loose practice to pay him so large an amount as $2,864 with insufficient vouchers. The Minister says that he is very busy in summer time, and I admit he is, but by this date he should have sent them in, and when they are not sent in up to the 1st of July, it might lead to the conclusion that there was something wrong.

Mr. FISHER. The Minister of Agriculture said that these vouchers were returned, and I would now ask him when they are returned.

Mr. POPE. When the money is paid—that is the rule of the Department.

Mr. FISHER. I imagined in my innocence, when the Minister replied to me before, that the vouchers had been received since the report, and that the matter had been really looked after. From his last statement, I suppose that the Minister does not know anything about it, as he merely says it is the rule of the Department. The hon. gentleman has not shown that this matter is dealt with on business principles.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Under what head is the position of our agent, the Manitoba colonisation agent, to be found? He has been an official of the Dominion Government for seven or eight years. His headquarters are in Worcester, Mass., but I do not see his name on the regular list, whereas there is internal evidence in our reports that he has been our agent for the period I have mentioned.

Mr. POPE. I am not sure under what head, but I think probably the last item.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I see his salary, according to the report of the Auditor General, is $1,200, and as he appears to be one of our regularly paid agents, he ought to have been placed on the regular list. I would also ask where the repatriation expenditure comes in, how is the money expended, and who are the officers through whom it is expended?

Mr. POPE. This is a certain sum to assist French Canadians to return to Manitoba, and it is paid to them when they get there. You will find the sum of $1,600 or $1,700 is put in for that purpose.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It was $2,377 a year ago. Is that expended on French Canadians who remove to Manitoba?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Is there any other agency except that of Mr. Lalime that takes charge of these repatriated immigrants?

Mr. POPE. He generally takes parties out there and travels with them; but sometimes, when there is a small number, they go without him.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). In his report of last year he says:

"The total number of immigrants for 1884 is some 839. Of this number almost 55 per cent. were French Canadians; the others, English Scotch and Canadians, including also Irish and a few German and Jewish families. I am pleased to say that the great majority of these immigrants are of the best class, and were formerly agriculturists in Canada, having emigrated here only a few years ago, and who decided to emigrate to Manitoba on account of their increasing families."

Then, I presume, this expenditure of $2,300 would really go to this 55 per cent of the 839 who went to Manitoba.

Mr. POPE. The expense is in reducing their passage and in the repatriation money.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to place in my hands a synopsis of the statement he intends to place before the House of the immigration to Manitoba for the calendar year 1884, from which it appears that the total number of immigrants who entered Manitoba was 30,265, and the number who left 6,625, making a net settlement of 23,640, of whom there were reported at Emerson 10,488, at Gretna 8,301, at Port Arthur 10,476, and I suppose the estimate of those who entered along the frontier between Emerson and Benton is 1,000. As the hon. gentleman is making his arrangements for the immigration for the season, I think this would be a convenient time for him to state what the results of the immigration for the present season have been, so far, and particularly in the North West and Manitoba. Of course the immigration season for Manitoba and the North-West has, to a large extent, passed, by this time.

Mr. POPE. I will try and get the hon. gentleman the information. My impression is, that it is less than it was last year.

Mr. BLAKE. When we are engaged on a service of this kind, in respect of which the hon. gentleman says some changes are to be made, it is of some consequence that we should know what the current of immigration is, with the view of judging of the propriety of the vote. But of that the hon. gentleman is not able to give us any practical information just now. Inasmuch as it is long since the hon. gentleman ought to have taken this vote, I do not see why, at this late period of the year, he is not able to give us that information.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman knows that this is an exceptional year for immigration and everything else in the North-West. But because troubles have arisen there this year we cannot expect that they are going to continue, and I do not think it would be wise for us to break up our system.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not suggesting a break up; I am considering the vote for the year.

Mr. POPE. I think there is some falling off up to this time, and I think it is accounted for very largely by the difficulties that have arisen. A good many people have been induced to go to the United States who had passages for Manitoba. I know this, because it has been brought under my notice.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I would like to ask the Minister what position our agent at Rochester occupies.

Mr. POPE. He is not a regular agent, but is only employed from year to year to distribute pamphlets and give information in that part of the country, which he has done very well.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the nationality of the interpreter at Winnipeg?

Mr. POPE. German.

Mr. FISHER. Is the $800 for an interpreter at Qu'Appelle an addition to Mr. Miquelon's salary as assistant?

Mr. POPE. No; that is the same man and the same salary.

Mr. LANGELIER. I find in the Auditor General's report that the same Mr. Miquelon received $100 in addition to his salary, and there is nothing to show the nature of that expenditure.

Mr. POPE. I had him to go through the older settlements of Quebec and explain to the people the country out there, and if they were going to leave to try and induce them to go to that country.

Mr. LANGELIER. To what portion of the Province of Quebec did he go?

Mr. POPE. Several portions.

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not think it is of much interest to the Province of Quebec to know that Mr. Miquelon is allowed to take inhabitants from that Province to the North-West. If he were sent to bring them from the United States, I could understand the usefulness of his duty. It is like a man who would take money from one of your pockets and put it in the other, and obtain a commission for the work.

Mr. POPE. If people are going to leave Quebec, it is better they should be induced to go to the North-West than to the States. The hon. gentleman last night said they were going away in droves.

Mr. LANGELIER. The hon. gentleman said most distinctly yesterday that none were leaving for the United States at all.

Mr. POPE. I said nothing of the kind. I said it was quite true that people would go from our country to the United States, as people would come from the United States here, but I did not say our people went in droves as the hon. gentleman did. I am glad to say that in the last few years, more people are coming in from the United States than there are going out to the United States; and I believe that we will find the United States as good a field for us to work in as Europe, not only in bringing back French Canadians, but other Canadians and other people as well. I have sent our agents, when they have had leisure time, to the United States, and this accounts for some of the travelling expenses incurred. From many parts of the United States people are leaving for the North-West; we had quite a German immigration from the Western States.

Mr. LANGELIER. I take some interest in the work done by Mr. Miquelon, because I know he did me the honor of coming into my county during the election. He might try to deter some people from voting for me, but I am sure he did not deter any people from going to the United States.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to give us some information as to the Customs returns. I am aware there are certain classes of entries made by parties as settlers' goods, for the purpose of evading payment of the Customs duties. I observed these entries have increased very rapidly during the last few years. In 1881 the total number of parties entered with settlers' goods in the Customs returns was a little over 18,000; in 1883 it rose to 34,000; in 1884 to 35,000. Is this owing to the labors of our agents in the New England States?

Mr. POPE. Our agents, no doubt, have had a great deal of influence in inducing those people to come from the United States. With respect to these people, every person coming in with settlers' effects is entered at the Custom house, and return made to me. There can be no question about that.

Mr. BAIN. The total number of returns for the Province of Quebec in 1881 was little over 7; in 1882 it was 14,000; in 1883, 18,000; and last year 20,000. When I turn to the details I find they are a little peculiar. Take, for instance, the German element, for they are entered under the headings of the different nationalities. In 1881 there were 79 Germans returned to the Province of Quebec; in 1882, 185; in 1883, 9,318; and in 1884 the number shrank to 63. I confess I did think our men had been taking a leaf out of the American agent's book at Sarnia, when I saw these figures. The Canadians, for instance, show a very large increase, from 5,000 in 1881, to 14,000 in 1882; and the year we had the big return of Germans the Canadians fell to 600, while last year they rose to 18,500. I would suggest whether it would not be well for the Customs officers to look after these parties. A good many parties cross the boundary line from east to west for the purpose of finding employment during a portion of the summer, and then return at the end of the season to their friends in Quebec.

I should be glad to learn that 18,000 Canadians left the United States last year to take up their permanent homes in Quebec, satisfied it was a better place to live in than the eastern States. The difficulty is, these parties may be securing the free entry of goods under the name of settlers' effects to defraud the revenue.

Mr. BOWELL. Every immigrant coming into the country has to make a solemn affidavit that he has had all these goods in his possession a certain length of time, and that they have been in actual use. While the hon. gentleman is quite correct in his suspicion that on many occasions attempts are made to bring in new goods as settlers' effects, the parties are always pretty well watched, and unless the goods give evidence of having been in use for the time required by law, and the owners make the required affidavit, the goods are seized or the parties are compelled to pay the duty. From the number of cases constantly coming before the Department, the number of persons coming into the country, particularly Canadians returning, is much greater than formerly. As scarcely one of those families who returned fail to bring with them sewing machines and sometimes organs, we are constantly having application for free admission of those articles. The law provides they must have been in actual use by the families for a certain length of time; and as the inspection is very rigid, few of those people who are not bona fide settlers get off scot free.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I am pleased to hear that these parties are so improving their condition as to be able to return with sewing machines and organs, and I am satisfied they are not adopting the process my hon. friend referred to, of being active free traders from sundown to daylight, and protectionists for the rest of the 24 hours. I was inquiring why, if the Minister had the information that the Canadians were so largely increasing in numbers, there was so much reason for making an exertion to bring them in.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is well known in the Province of Quebec that a number of French Canadians from the eastern States have been coming lately in very large numbers back to Canada, and I hope the influx will continue. We are working to ensure its continuance, not only by Government means but by other means, which are very useful also by the action of our national societies. It is true that a certain portion from the Province of Quebec go, during the hay season to work in the United States, and come back afterwards, but those are certainly not the persons my hon. friend refers to as coming back and entering their goods. They go with a carpet bag for a certain number of weeks, and they come back with the same.

Mr. FISHER. There is no doubt that the hon. gentleman is correct in saying that many French Canadians are returning from the United States. But he is in error in saying that all those who are going away now are going for haying purposes.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I did not say so. I regret that there are still too many going to the United States.

Mr. FISHER. I live on one of the main lines of railway, between one of the French parts of the Province of Quebec and one of the New England States, and I am sorry to say that even this spring, at a time when nobody thinks of going to hay, a large number of men with their families have been going to the States, at the same time that many have been returning; and I have no doubt that the one offsets the other very much. But those who come and go are very often visiting their relations on different sides of the line, and it is very difficult to judge of the numbers of those who come back and are repatriated in Canada as well as of those who go to settle in the States.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have means of ascertaining it, and I spoke knowingly when I said that the proportion is very large of those who are coming back to remain. Our colonisation societies lately have been working very well, and it is known, especially by the entries in the Custom house, that a large number are returning with their families and goods.

Mr. FISHER. When the hon. gentleman says "we," does he mean the Government?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; I mean we French Canadians.

Mr. FISHER. I suppose he means the colonisation societies?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. And the St. Jean Baptiste societies.

Mr. FISHER. Does the Government know who the agents are and what they are doing?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. colleague has stated that Mr. Lalime and Mr. Gagnon and Mr. Belanger, and two or three others, were employed specially to do the good work of trying to persuade those whose condition of living in the States is far from being as advantageous as it would be in their own country to return here. I know those gentlemen, and I hope they will do their work well for the Government and for the national benefit of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. FISHER. I understand that these men are to bring these people back to the Province of Quebec?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The work of our societies is in the direction of inducing them to come.

Mr. FISHER. Some of them, however, as I understand, are endeavoring to take these Canadians to the Province of Manitoba. Mr. Lalime, I think, is so engaged.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Those who desire to go to the Province of Quebec go there, and those who prefer to go to Manitoba are sent to Manitoba. I have some friends who are working very assiduously in this direction, and I know that the instructions were, that if these people wished to return to the Province of Quebec they should be brought there first, but if they did not desire to remain there, we should do our utmost to induce them at least to become Canadian citizens and to go to the North-West. Of course, I do not speak now of the Government agents, whose duty is to bring emigrants to Manitoba or the North-West, although I believe that by bringing back Canadians from the United States to our old Provinces is good emigration work, deserving the encouragement of the Government.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I would draw the attention—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. This has gone beyond the point at which the committee arrived.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In these discussions, it has never been attempted to restrain members in the discussion of an item which includes these various matters. If the Government would do as I have contended they ought, and divide these things into separate and distinct items, there would be force in the objection; but the Minister of Agriculture has chosen to group these all under one head, which, I think, is an inconvenient and an improper practice, but he has given a perfect right to everyone to range from one to the other.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). If this Government was furnishing the funds to these agents who were inducing the repatriation movement to the Province of Quebec, I would call attention to the fact that Mr. Lalime makes no reference to that in his report at all, but refers to the immigration to the Province of Manitoba and the North-West. I think he is right in inducing these people, whether they be French Canadians or others, to go to the North-West.

Mr. FISHER. While we are discussing this question of the interpreter—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. This is not the time for that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the attention of the committee to the extreme impropriety and inconvenience of the practice of discussing these Estimates item by item. It was not the practice in former years, and it ought never to be adopted, in bringing down Estimates, to mass fifty or sixty distinct items, not necessarily having reference to each other. I never ventured to do that, and if I had the hon. gentleman would have taken me to task. Such items, for instance, as these, might be fairly put together: salaries in London ought to be a separate item; contingencies ought to be a separate item; travelling expenses and that last vote of $300,000 ought to be a separate item. There is no doubt you are quite right in pointing out that it is an inconvenient practice, and it is highly desirable that the next Estimates should be amended.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I am only trying to accommodate the committee in conducting the business as regularly as possible, and I have not the slightest desire to interfere with the fullest and freest discussion of any resolution; but when you take each item, it is impossible to preserve order and to confine the remarks to that item. Yesterday we had a full discussion on the whole vote. At the request of hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side, item by item of this resolution is called, and I think that is the regular practice, and ought to be adhered to by hon. gentlemen, and not to go into a full discussion of the whole resolution again.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You are quite right; and it was before the hon. member for South Huron came in that I made the suggestion myself, as I thought it would help us to get on with the work. It was suggested that we should speak to any particular item, and when we had finished the agents, then remarks on the agency would be in order. It was an attempt on my part to provide that we would not be running into every subject, and branching off from one to another.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to ask the Minister in regard to this interpreter at Winnipeg, Mr. H. J. Mâsse. I see that he is receiving payment for two services.

Mr. POPE. Mr. Mâsse is travelling most all the time among the Germans in the western States, in the winter season, distributing pamphlets and giving information. In the summer season he is engaged in locating people in Manitoba, and the expense is considerable.

Mr. GILLMOR. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture if there are any agents visiting the States in order to induce some of our people who have gone there to come back to the Lower Provinces. I think it is quite as important that some of our people should be assisted to return, if they want to, as that the people who have gone from Quebec should be assisted to return. I am satisfied that from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, more men have gone away than from any other part of the Dominion of Canada. They do not go into the North-West to any extent, but they go to the western States. If public money is to be expended in sending agents to induce those who may have left Quebec to return, and to pay their passages, I think it is only fair to the Maritime Provinces that the same rights should be extended to them, and the same assistance given to people who have gone from the Maritime Provinces to return there if they want to. I know that cannot be done for each Province, but when you take the population of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick combined, it forms a considerable part of the population of the Dominion, and a great many men have gone from those Provinces during many years, and they are continuing to go, I regret to say. I know that this whole question of how many goes and how many returns is vague and indefinite; anybody can say just what he likes about it. I am satisfied that very few know anything at all definitely about the matter. Now, I put it to the Minister of Agriculture, as a practical man, who knows what it costs to earn money and how it ought to be taken care of, if he really thinks that this enormous sum of money spent on immigration is being properly and profitably expended. Now, we are talking about agents going over to the United States and trying to induce people to come back to us. The Secretary of State says that he knows something that somebody else does not know: that they are coming back in great numbers; but he had to admit that many thousands have gone away. I am convinced that a great deal of this money ought not to be expended on immigration at all. When we look at the amount of money which is being expended for printing only, and when I hear hon. gentlemen say in Parliament that one member has received so much for printing in his paper, and another has received so much, it shows how much of the people's money is being wasted, and what confusion the whole thing has got into. When we find that $90,000 or $100,000 is paid out in the Dominion of Canada for printing information, such as I see before me, I am satisfied it is a waste of money, that it is doing no good, that we can dispense with this printing, and I am led to the conclusion that this whole thing has been a failure. I hear nothing about the great agency that was to be established by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Hon. gentlemen do not now even allude to it. But we are told we are on the eve of some wonderful discovery; we are just ready to do something. The member for Cardwell, last night, cautioned us to be careful in our statements, because we are ready to have an enormous influx of immigrants; we are going to have a grand success, and there is nothing to stop us now. We were ready five or six years ago. The blessing is always to come; it is never here. The immigrants have not come, but the expense goes on all the same. I am satisfied that the whole immigration policy, or at least the greater part of it, is a failure. This idea of sending people into different countries to look after immigrants is absurd—to have them going over into the United States to see if they can get some people to come back is absurd and ridiculous, and a wilful waste of money. Large sums of money have been expended to bring immigrants into the country—whether they go to Quebec, Ontario, or Manitoba, no one knows, and no one knows where they are. Out of 400,000 people who are said to have come in here during the last two or three years the hon. member for East Grey knows where there are twelve. No other member in this Parliament, with its 212 members, seems to know whether there are more than twelve of those immigrants. I appeal to the Minister that he, as a practical man, should use the public money as he would his own. This system is the means of subsidising newspapers and agents, and no Parliament in the world would be satisfied with the explanations given with respect to the expenditure of this large sum of money. Those are my convictions. A word with respect to the information given in these pamphlets. I have looked over some of the pamphlets, and I find there is no information given with respect to New Brunswick that is suitable for intending immigrants. Here is a pamphlet by H. D. Small, which deals with the Canadian forests. I have looked over a little of it about New Brunswick. I do not want to say anything against any man; but I must say that the information was taken from records years ago, and the information is entirely incorrect. I believe 10,000 of those pamphlets, translated into German, were scattered over Germany. Everything the Germans would like to know is not in the book, while statements that are untrue are there.

I was in Montreal a few weeks ago, and saw a young man 25 years of age, who had been two or three years in Minnesota, who had returned to Norway and was bringing out about 30 as fine immigrants as I ever saw. I did not think to enquire why he went to Minnesota; but having found that country a good country, he seemed to have induced his friends to come out, in order to go there. A word more about New Brunswick. The information that ought to be communicated to agricultural immigrants is not contained in the pamphlet respecting that Province. I do not see a word there about any district where the land is fit for settlement. There is a great deal of public land in New Brunswick that is unfit for settlement, and many settlements have been located on poor land, and, as a consequence the people have become dissatisfied, and if they have remained they have made a poor living from poor land. There is, however, in New Brunswick, rich land, which will compare very favorably with land in the Eastern Townships or Ontario. I made my first visit to the Eastern Townships a short time ago, and I consider those townships possess good soil and agricultural advantages. We have hundreds of thousands of acres of Crown lands supposed to be equal in fertility with those lands, or with the rich lands of Ontario. Not only is this the case, but we have large districts as desirable for settlement as are the lands in Manitoba. I believe myself, from all I have heard, that although much of the soil in the North-West is fertile, there are drawbacks; otherwise there would be more settlers there. While I do not want to be local or sectional in my views, I must say we are constantly looking to the west, and we only look to the east when we want money. The population of New Brunswick is stationary, and the hon. member for Cardwell thinks we should be very well satisfied because it is stationary, and in that respect equals the census record of some of the New England States. I do not hold that opinion.

Mr. FISHER. Will the Minister state the reason for the increase of salaries in the London office?

Mr. POPE. There is a decrease on certain items of $700. Two messengers have been appointed, and Mr. Colmer and Mr. Doré have received an increase of $100 per annum respectively.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to ask the Minister how it is that these two messengers are needed in the London office. I may say that I have conversed with people who have been in the London office, and they say that there are complaints—

Mr. POPE. It would be a curious thing if you did not hear complaints.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry to hear from the Minister that with regard to such an office it is natural that we should hear complaints. The complaints I have heard are not only from Canadians, but from English people, who have gone to the office to obtain information about Canada, with the intention of writing about Canada in England, and they found that they could not get the information.

Mr. POPE. That may not be the fault of the officers.

Mr. FISHER. I have always understood that the object of this office was to supply information to English people desiring to have information, and if they were not able to get such information I should think it a just cause of complaint against the office.

Mr. POPE. Perhaps it was information which could not be given.

Mr. FISHER. It was statistics with regard to Canada, with a view to writing articles in the English newspapers and magazines. I may say more, moreover, that I have heard complaints of inefficiency in the working of the office and the state of the office, and that being the case, I cannot understand why it was desirable to increase the number of officers and the salaries of those officers. I would like to ask the Minister, who is in charge of the office?

Mr. POPE. Sir Charles Tupper, of course.

Mr. FISHER. He is High Commissioner, but I suppose there is somebody under him who is in charge of the office.

Mr. POPE. No; he is in charge himself.

Mr. FISHER. But does the hon. gentleman mean to tell me that Sir Charles Tupper has charge of the details of the office?

Mr. POPE. Certainly.

Mr. FISHER. And that there is no official specially charged with that work, or who is obliged to deal with people coming to the office and to answer their questions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman ought to think for a moment. Sir Charles Tupper is there as High Commissioner to do all the duties required of him by the Government in their relations with the Imperial Government, and to attend to any matters which are specially entrusted to him by the Government here. He is, however, the head of the Immigration Department there, just as if he were an emigrant agent in London for Canada, and he attends to that duty with great assiduity; and when the hon. gentleman says that he has heard complaints, I must say that I believe that those complaints are utterly groundless since Sir Charles has been there, for a more active and energetic officer cannot be found. I know, for I was there for five weeks in November and December, and I was at his office every day. I know that he was attending to his work from morning to night, even attending to every detail, seeing every person who came. He has an exceedingly able man as assistant, Mr. Colmer. He is exceedingly well informed, and he is secretary to the High Commissioner. I can vouch for his attention to work and his assiduity in the office. Mr. Doré, another officer, is a good linguist, and Mr. Chipman, whom Sir Charles Tupper took home with him, was formerly an officer here. He is well known, and is a good and intelligent officer. I think if any charges were brought of inattention or incivility, those charges are unfounded, or the parties are very unreasonable in their expectations. I know Sir Charles Tupper takes great pains to get supplies of information from Canada, in the first place, from the Immigration Department. Everything which is published there he receives, and I know he takes great pains to press them for supplies of Blue Books and all other kinds of information published in the Dominion of Canada. They are supplied from here in as large quantities as the issue will allow, and I know that the Department of Interior supplies him with maps, plans, and all the information that Department can afford. Formerly, I believe, before that office was thoroughly organised, some complaints were made, which, perhaps, were in some degree justified, but I am quite satisfied that they are not at all justified now. Englishmen desiring to come to Canada have now two means of information, and they are fully supplied. They have not only the Government establishment in Victoria Chambers in the West End, but there is the Canadian Pacific Railway office in the city. That office is in charge of Mr. Harry Moody, a Nova Scotian, whom everybody knows, a man of very great ability, who is an enthusiast in his business, and the Canadian Pacific Railway spares no pains in distributing and disseminating information of every kind. I am satisfied that any person desiring to come to Canada would, between those two offices, have every possible information to enable him to make up his mind as to whether Canada was a desirable place for settlement or not.

* Mr. FISHER. Of course, I had no means of judging with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway offices in London, and no right to discuss its arrangements, as the Government is not responsible for them. With regard to what I said about the London office, if it is possible, before concurrence, I will endeavor to get detailed statements from some of those persons and place them before the House. Some of them may not be in this country now, but I will write to them within the next day or two, and find out who the people were in the office of whom complaints were made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would be very satisfactory to have that information. I do not say it is possible, because some of them were travelling through the country, but I will obtain the information, if possible.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The statements the hon. gentleman has made will be a surprise to every one who has had anything to do in travelling or getting information on England or on the continent. I have had occasion twice to be on the continent when I have heard about Mr. Colmer and Mr. Doré—who has since left the office for some other work. I have heard, in Paris, strangers who had been in London, and who did not even speak the English language, speaking with the greatest praise of the courtesy and efficiency of these officers and of the trouble taken by them to give and to spread information everywhere. Englishmen, Frenchmen and Germans would find every accommodation there, in the way of information, as Mr. Doré was well versed in these languages, and every attention was given to those seeking information. As the Premier has stated, the different Departments have supplied that office with a large quantity of books and documents giving the fullest information with regard to Canada. In my own Department there is not a week that passes that we do not send supplies of books and other information about Canada. I have taken the trouble, even, to send a complete set of books concerning the country, which have been prepared with great care by the Education Department of Quebec. I think it will be a surprise to everyone, not only in Canada, but in England and the continent, to hear that the agency in London is not one which has discharged its duties, and that does honor to the Government which has established this office in London.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was informed by a friend, a short time ago that in the first report of the Fisheries Exhibition Canada was not mentioned at all. If our agents in London are so efficient, I would like to know the reason for that.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. I wish to state that a gentleman, a retired officer of the British army, now living in this country, who went to London last winter and returned this summer, informed me that while in London he met some friends who spoke very highly of the Province of Quebec, and in order to corroborate some information he was giving them he went to the office in London to get more precise information. He found that the office was supplied with a great deal of information in regard to the North-West Territories, but he found almost nothing about the Province of Quebec. That was what this gentleman told me in conversation. He said it, not in a tone of complaint against the Government. I am ready to give his name to the Minister of Agriculture privately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is easily understood. In Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, all the lands belong to the Provinces, and they have their own publications and their own regulations for the sale of lands, and regarding their mines, and all their material interests of the Provinces. That information is not at the disposal of the Central Government in the same way as information about the material resources of the North-West. That country being directly under the Government here, information is obtained from our own officers; but the office in London is anxious to receive, and asks for and does receive from each one of the Provincial Governments all their publications, which are distributed as well as the general information which is collected by the Dominion officers.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. I do not mention this as a matter of complaint; I only call the attention of the Government to it; and I think it would be very easy to procure any number of pamphlets or documents published by the Government of Quebec to supply to the London office.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I know that there are hundreds of pamphlets regarding the Province of Quebec in the London office, which have been sent there since at least three years.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Minister of Agriculture stated that the increase of expenditure for the London office is caused by an increase in clerks or messengers. We have had no report before us to show that the staff is not sufficient to accomplish all the work they have to perform, and it strikes me we ought to have a little more information from the Government before we vote on this increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. For two messengers.

Mr. WILSON. It matters not whether it be for two messengers alone or not. Hon. gentlemen claim that there has been no neglect of duty in the office; the First Minister says the High Commissioner is constantly at his post attending to his duties, and that those under him are doing the same. If that is the case, why is it necessary to have these two extra messengers? I think the feeling of the House and the country is that the expenditure for immigration should be reduced, and if we desire to do away with the system of assisted passages, I think it is hardly reasonable that we should, at present, increase the expense of the office in England. I should certainly like to have a little more information as to why these two messengers are required.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The messengers are to carry messages; that is their duty.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think that is a satisfactory answer. Is that the kind of information the House is to get when we ask for explanations as to the expenditure of money? True, it is about the same kind of information we generally get—very unsatisfactory and frequently very unreliable. Will hon. gentlemen explain why they did not need these messengers last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because there were not so many messages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Really, that is very preposterous. When there is going to be a smaller immigration this year, it does seem to me rather unnecessary to add 10 per cent. or thereabouts to the expenses of that particular office, because that is what it amounts to. If there was reason to expect increased work there might be need for more messengers; but so far from that being the case, the probability is there will be considerably less work to be done. In connection with that office I would take occasion to say this: I had hopes that the great distress prevailing in England would have tended to bring a considerable number of English farmers out to this country, but so far as my own observation and experience go, very few indeed of these people have made their way out here, or to have settled in those parts of Ontario I am best acquainted with. Some attempts were made a couple of years ago to bring out this particular class of persons, but as yet, I am sorry to say, these attempts have produced very little result. Has the hon. gentleman any definite information to give us on that subject?

Mr. POPE. Yes; the advantage of settlement here are constantly kept before those people, but you will never get much information from that class. A good many of them have settled in Ontario. If the hon. gentleman knows anything about Toronto, he must know that men of large means of the class he has referred to have settled in that part of the country. Everything has been done that could be done, but we need never expect a large immigration of that class. We have, however, got a fair sprinkling of them. A good many have settled in the Eastern Townships and around Toronto and Hamilton and London, but of course they do not come out, as other immigrants do, in large numbers. I am sorry to say I do not know whether the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) has seen any in his county, but I can say that if he, who is a practical man, would come out and aid us, and give some information about New Brunswick, we would be very glad to have his assistance.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I have heard the hon. member for Hamilton say that quite a number of these immigrants have settled in his neighborhood. As I live in the same neighborhood, and am as well acquainted with those who settle there and take up farms as anybody else, I must say my experience does not carry out the hon. gentleman's statement. I would like him to give the name of any such person who has taken up a farm and has settled there.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). That is very like the hon. gentleman; it is very like the tactics he displays on the stump. I am not prepared to give the name of any individual; I do not carry the names in my pocketbook. If he has not heard of any of those people coming in, I am not responsible for that, but I have in my mind's eye some three or four comparatively wealthy gentlemen, who were tenant farmers in the old country, who came out and settled in Houghton and other parts near Hamilton. I do not know their names, but I know that is the case, although the hon. gentleman, because I do not give the names, will, no doubt, discredit my statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not expect you would have a very large number of immigrants of the particular class to which I referred, but the House will recollect there was a very considerable delegation of tenant farmers, men specially selected, sent here, who were put into communication with the Department of Agriculture and conveyed over different portions of this country at the public expense. That took place two or three years ago, and what I desire to know more particularly was whether any, and if so, what results had accrued to us from these persons' visits. I think it likely enough some of them settled in such places as Toronto, but I made enquiries in a good many of the rich western counties, where I should say these persons could be best located, and I have not heard of any having gone to these counties. Has the hon. gentleman, through his agents in London, put himself in communication with the Scotch or English tenant farmers, who are now looking very anxiously for some places where they can settle? Everybody who knows anything of the state of agriculture in England knows that at this moment there are literally thousands of farms being thrown back on the owners' hands, in sections which were formerly known to be the richest and best cultivated portions of that country, and a similar state of affairs exists all over Scotland. The persons who surrender those farms are, most of them, possessed of some means, which will enable them to settle comfortably here. I think particular pains should be taken to reach this class of immigrants.

Mr. GILLMOR. I do not think there is a better field in the Dominion for such a class than certain portions of New Brunswick, for the reason that in different portions of New Brunswick the industry is wholly lumbering and the farms have been neglected in consequence. The lumber industry being now somewhat exhausted, and the young men on those farms not having been accustomed to farming, have left for different parts of the United States, so that a great many farms in different localities could be purchased to-day at one-half what they were valued at twenty-five years ago. That class of immigrants would be of great advantage to the country; being skilled in agriculture, they would set an example to those who have not made a study of that, and I do not believe a more suitable location could be found for them than in many portions of New Brunswick. In the county I represent, a considerable number of that class could find opportunities to invest, near the seaboard, near the American markets, near railroads. Of course, in that locality, there is not room for a very great number, but forty or fifty who wanted farms ready cleared, or partially cleared, would have a great advantage for a very small sum. The families of those who occupied them have gone to the United States, and the old people have followed them, and the farms are practically useless, and could be obtained very cheaply, for $400 or $500 for 100 acres of land. I believe the same thing is the case in other parts of New Brunswick.

Mr. ROSS. I am in a position to say something about the tenant farmers who came out here in 1869. A number of them came to the North-West, and I went round with the greater portion of them, and spent two or three weeks in travelling through the country with them. After they went back, a number of them sent letters of introduction with farmers who came from the north of England and the south of Scotland, to me, in Winnipeg, and some of them settled in the southern part of Manitoba and in the North-West. What number has come in as the result of that I do not know, but many have settled in the west, and, no doubt, more have come than I have heard of. A considerable number have come, and some of them are relatives, nephews and brothers-in-law of the tenant farmers who came out that year.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). When the tenant farmer movement was originated some years ago, I had hoped that we would have been able to direct, to the older parts of the Dominion, that medium class of farmers, with a moderate amount of means, that would have been able to take hold of the older farms that were improved, and take advantage of the social facility that old settlements give to all these parties, as compared with new districts; but I have never been able to see any number of that class find their way into the section that I am acquainted with. I have heard statements made about them, but there is an indefiniteness about them, and I have not heard any one lay his hand upon these parties and say they are here. I had hoped that we would have seen some good results, because we have a good field in the older Provinces, as well as in the North-West, for that class; but in the face of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture to-night, I am at a loss to know why we should be asked to pay $600 more for the working of the London office. We are perfectly willing to pay officials, if they give some return for the expenditure, but in face of the decreased immigration of last year, and the internal difficulties which every one admits will reduce the flow of immigration to the North-West, at least for the present season, and that we have not been able to secure the class of tenant farmers for the older Provinces, it seems unjustifiable to ask for this increase for the London office, for less work than has been accomplished in the last two years. Our own agents admit that the field for immigration is being reduced, from local circumstances, in England, and for the first time this Session, the Minister has abandoned the system of assisted passages, and proposes to encourage only those parties who have enough independence and self-reliance to come without aid and earn their livelihood in a strange country. That will reduce still further the work of our offices in England. As to the reduced field for immigration, I would call attention to the report of one of our oldest agents, one who knows the field better than even the High Commissioner. I refer to Mr. John Dyke, of Liverpool. He says:

"Of course, the efforts of your agent to secure British emigrants will not be relaxed; but there is no doubt of the fact that both tenant farmers and agricultural laborers are decreasing in number in Great Britain. They are migrating into the large towns rather than emigrating. This is consequent on the destruction of dwellings and the depopulation taking place on so many large estates, and the introduction of labor-saving machinery, and, more recently, through the serious depression in all branches of agriculture."

Then he quotes from a letter he has received from Joseph Arch, in which he refers to the fact that, in his opinion, the agricultural laborers have, in the last ten years, decreased one-half. He points out that the class of agricultural laborers—the only class the Minister continues to assist to come to Canada—are reduced very largely, and are rapidly leaving the country districts and finding their way to the cities and towns. Under all these circumstances, it seems unreasonable to vote an increase of $600 to enable these men to do less work, according to the Minister's own statement, than they have been doing for two or three years.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As to the vote of $7,000 for salaries of agents in Europe, I see, in the report of the Auditor General, that the expense was some $10,000 last year, and I should like to ask the Minister how he expects to save the $3,000. Now, I see here the names, as agents, of Mr. O'Dell, Mr. Otto Hahn, Mr. W. Lukes, the Rev. R. Wilson and Thomas Olsen, who receive various salaries—Mr. Odell, $973; Mr. Hahn, $1,666; Mr. Lukes, $600; Rev. Mr. Wilson, $543; Thomas Olsen, $400. I have been unable to find from the Minister's report, and I have looked it carefully through, any report from any of the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned. I thought, perhaps, they had reported to the High Commissioner in London, but I cannot find them there either. Does the Minister think he can save the $3,000 which appears from these Estimates? And have the gentlemen I have named reported to him, and what services have they rendered? Are they in the employ of the Department now?

Mr. POPE. One of them, only. Mr. Olsen was an agent to Norway for four or five months. The Rev. Mr. Wilson went from New Brunswick for six months or so. He is not now our agent. His work was lecturing and distributing literature in England and Scotland. Dr. Hahn is working in Germany. Mr. W. Lukes is from Ontario, and he lectured there for some little time amongst the farmers, and distributed literature. These were all special agents, and I have had reports from them.

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot find any reports, and when we are paying salaries to these men it actually looks a little suspicious that we cannot find any reports from them.

Mr. POPE. I am sure there are reports.

Mr. PATERSON. The Auditor General's Report shows that the salaries alone of the agents in Europe were $10,413. Does it include the salaries of these special agents?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON. I suppose the Minister intends to have no special agents this year, and he will keep within the limit?

Mr. POPE. You see there is an increase of $200, $100 each to Mr. Dyke and Mr. Grahame.

Mr. FARROW. The matter relating to the tenant farmers in the old country is a very important one. I rise, not to make any complaints against the Minister or against the Department. I suppose they know their business; if they do not, they ought to. But I would like to make a suggestion in reference to emigration. It is in the recollection of this House that we gleaned certain information from the different Provinces, two years ago, as to the farms that were available for the tenant farmers who might wish to come from the old country into Canada. We had reports from nearly every county in Ontario, stating that there were good farms to be sold, such as my hon. friend from Wentworth has described, upon which these tenant farmers could settle—well cultivated farms, with beautiful brick houses, and with all the social advantages, such as churches, schools, railways, and so forth. These farms usually could be bought for $4,000 or $5,000. Well, Sir, so far as my own neighborhood is concerned, none of these tenant farmers have come over. I have cast my eyes over the whole of Huron county, and I know it perfectly well, and I do not find that we have got any of that class which we want to get. Now, here is the point I want to make: We have got a number of emigration agents in England, Ireland and Scotland—what are they doing?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Drawing their salaries.

Mr. FARROW. I got hold of a paper the other day, published in Lincolnshire, England, and what did I find in it? I found that an Australian lecturer was through my old county in England, the county of Lincolnshire, one of the finest counties in England for agriculture, and wherever you find a Lincolnshire farmer you will find a most prosperous farmer, because he is brought up to hard work and understands it well. Well, this lecturer did not confine himself to going to Boston, in Lincolnshire, or the county town of Lincoln. At a little village called Hogsthorpe, with which I am well acquainted, he said: "I am going through this county, and into every hamlet; I am going to let my voice be heard throughout the length and breadth of this county, as to the advantages of Australia." I am inclined to think that our agents only go to the principal towns, where a railway carries them. I have only heard of one lecturer going to Boston, and that was some years ago; and if that is the case, our agents may be sitting down at ease and doing nothing for their salaries. I want this question to be thoroughly understood and probed by the Minister. If these men are only going once in every four or five years to a particular place in the country, instead of going to the villages—I can name ten of them, now, where they ought to have gone—I say they are not doing this country much good. I believe, if these lecturers had visited the small villages of 200 or 300 inhabitants, and went among the tenant farmers in the county of Lincolnshire, they would have induced many of them to come to Canada. Why should we not get them into Canada? We can offer them greater advantages, even, than Australia, and it only takes seven or eight days to come from England to Canada. I know that I have brought several persons out from Lincolnshire by writing letters, and I think, if I were an agent, though I do not want to be one, I could make such a noise, and I could show them so clearly the advantages of coming to Canada, that I think there would be some results. I have no desire to take an agency, though I would like to revisit my old county, which I left thirty-five years ago, when I was a boy.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I would like to get some information from the Minister with regard to this Rev. Mr. Wilson from New Brunswick, who has been in the pay of the Government as agent in England. It appears he has made no report of the work he performed there, and from information that I have obtained with regard to him, I am curious to know how he came to be appointed. I have been informed that this Rev. Mr. Wilson was a very particular friend of the Finance Minister, that he was not in very good health, and it was thought necessary that he should take a pleasure trip to the old country for the benefit of his health, and with that view he secured an appointment from the Minister of Agriculture to lecture in Great Britain on the advantages of emigration to Canada; that he went there and delivered no lectures but enjoyed his trip, and came back no doubt well satisfied with the pleasure he had enjoyed at the expense of the country, and without rendering any service for the money that was paid him.

Mr. POPE. Mr. Wilson was recommended to me by the Finance Minister, and I have every confidence in his recommendation of an agent to go to England, or of anything else. I do not think he is any the worse man for being recommended by the Finance Minister. He remained there six months, and delivered a great many lectures. He made his report and settled up his accounts with the High Commissioner. I think we must have his report in the office, if it is not here.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have failed to discover the report in the report of the Minister. My information is, that he merely went there on a pleasure trip for the benefit of his health.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I know, with regard to that gentleman, that he is a man of great ability, of great information, and is a very good speaker. He is somewhat celebrated as an eloquent lecturer, and from his character, I do not think he would undertake any public duty without discharging it to the best of his ability.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman has forgotten to mention that the Rev. Mr. Wilson is an intensely strong political partisan, and well known to be such. It is rumored, of course there can be no truth in the rumor, that he was appointed merely for political reasons. He received $1,245, and there is nothing in the public records to show that he did any work for that money. If he did, then in justice to the reverend gentleman the Minister should be prepared to tell the House what he did, where he lectured, and where his report is to be found. If he did the work of an immigration agent, no one can be to blame. He has a right to be paid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. The First Minister says "hear, hear;" but the records do not show that the reverend gentleman did any work. All the country knows is, that he is a violent political partisan, who was in poor health and went to England, and that he received $1,245 for going there, and did not do anything for his money.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I do not think it can be shown that the Rev. Mr. Wilson was a violent political partisan.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When we find sums like this paid for special objects and no report of the work done, we would be lacking in our duty if we did not call the attention of the Minister to it. As regards the appointment of political partisans: if hon. gentlemen opposite are to follow their own sweet will, and appoint any one they see fit, hon. gentlemen opposite can just as easily appoint ten as one. The same justification will apply. If Sir Leonard Tilley is able to recommend a clergyman, who may be an eloquent man, and send him over to lecture in England, where we have a paid staff and a High Commissioner, and can have paid him $700 for travelling expenses and $500 salary, without there being any report as to the work he has done, this thing may be repeated. There should have been, at all events, a statement given of the places where he had lectured and the work he had done for the money paid him. There is also Mr. Odell, with a salary of $973, and travelling expenses $223, and Dr. Hahn, who, I understood the Minister to say, is an agent, and Mr. Lukes, who was paid $600, and travelling expenses $787. I do not know that Mr. Lukes possesses any particular qualities that fit him as an immigration agent. He was at one time a Liberal, but he lost confidence in their policy and he gave his confidence to hon. gentlemen opposite, as he had a perfect right to do. But I do not see why that should particularly fit him for special immigration services in the old country, without even making a report. There are thousands of dollars, also, paid for travelling expenses of these gentlemen, none of whom are our recognised agents, and there are no reports from them, so far as I can discover. But if there are any reports in the hon. gentleman's Department, I think he could bring them down before concurrence.

Mr. POPE. If I can find them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And if you cannot, I suppose you will not take concurrence.

Mr. POPE. I will consider that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). It is hardly fair to the Minister of Agriculture to say that no results flowed from the visits of this reverend gentleman to Great Britain. My information is, that he enjoyed his trip very much, that he came back improved in health, and weighing some 25 pounds more than when he left.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Where did Mr. Loucks deliver his lectures?

Mr. POPE. In different places in England.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). The practical result is that we have paid those two gentlemen between $2,500 and $3,000. I have no doubt they both had a pleasant time; but we added them to our regular staff, with the result that we managed to bring 3,000 less immigrants to this country last year than the year before.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is Mr. Begg a salaried officer?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He just gives a report at the solicitation of the Minister.

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is also a report from Mr. O'Leary, and a payment of $170. What is his position?

Mr. POPE. He took that trip to get information himself, and to disseminate it throughout the country. He is a very active man and a very careful writer.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I believe he is so, but is he doing that as an agent of some immigration company in the old country, or as a writer?

Mr. POPE. As a writer. I do not think he was sent by any English company.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, as to these men engaged in special work in Great Britain and the continent, such as Mr. Brydges, and others?

Mr. POPE. Mr. Brydges has brought out a great many immigrants. These men are not employed. Mr. Brydges has devoted himself largely to immigration matters, and is a very good man. When he went out Sir Charles Tupper paid him something for his expenses but not otherwise.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With regard to the travelling expenses of agents in Europe, I see that according to the Auditor-General's Report, Mr. Dyke is paid $9,231 for travelling expenses, or about $30 a day for one man. There must be some explanation of that. The total is $23,829 for travelling expenses of the different agents.

Mr. POPE. There is a mistake in the Auditor-General's Report. The expenses do not exceed $4 per day for the actual travelling expenses of the five agents—Dyke, Foy, O'Connor, Grahame, and a German agent. In the Auditor-

General's Report the item is made to appear at $23,829, instead of $5,683, as in the Public Accounts. The Auditor-General has included all the expenses of the British agents, besides travelling expenses, but those consist of printing, advertising, rent of halls for lectures, etc.

Mr. DAVIES. If we are misled by the Auditor General's Report, we ought to have some information as to what the travelling expenses of the different agents amount to.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that in the Public Accounts this sum is divided into two items: the travelling expenses are stated at $5,683, but we ought to know what this special expenditure of the remaining $17,000 is for. Over $6,000 of it is charged to Mr. Dyke.

Mr. POPE. Printing, advertising and rent of hall for lectures.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It seems to me printing and details over there are a pretty heavy business.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the vote of $1,000 of aid to the Montreal Women's Protection Immigration Society?

Mr. POPE. Some ladies in Montreal have established this society for the protection of females who come to this country, and this sum is voted to assist them in their work.

Mr. DAVIES. What is the character of their work?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Single, unprotected women, coming to this country, congregate in large numbers in Montreal during the season, and these benevolent ladies have an asylum for them. They protect them from any contamination, and send them westward, if they want to go, to a similar institution in Toronto.

Mr. DAVIES. I desire to say a word in confirmation of the remark made by my hon. friend for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), with reference to the results which flow from the appropriation of the sums of money we devote to immigration. That hon. gentleman stated, and I think correctly, that while the thoughts of the people of the country, and the attention of the Government, are largely and naturally directed to the North-West, it appears from the official reports we have from year to year, and from the statements of the Minister in this House, that an important part of the Dominion is entirely neglected and overlooked. An hon. gentleman opposite made some very pertinent remarks on this subject, with reference to the Province of Ontario. In the Maritime Provinces—and I speak particularly for the Province from which I come—there has been for years a startling emigration westward; farmers sell their farms and go westward, some to the North-West, and many, I am sorry to say, leave the country and go to the United States. In Prince Edward Island—and I believe the same is true of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—large numbers of farms are vacant, and a large number of others can be had at very low prices. It is acknowledged by everybody that there is no better field to which an immigrant could turn his steps to make a home for himself than those Provinces. I do not find that any attention is being paid by the Department to the dissemination of information as to the resources of those Provinces at all. Its attention seems to be almost entirely devoted to the North-West. Hundreds of tenant farmers with small capital can find homes ready to their hands in the Maritime Provinces. That class of men are not calculated to go into the wilderness or on the prairie and make homes for themselves. They want to go to a country where they will enjoy the social advantages described by my hon. friend opposite—where they can find churches and settlements, means of education for their children, railroads, and the other appliances and conveniences of civilised life. All these things can be obtained for them in the Maritime Provinces. The people of their own class who have settled there have become thriving and prosperous. It seems to me the people of those Provinces have a right to complain when they see half a million dollars spent every year for immigration, and no part of it is spent in disseminating information among that class of people whom we all desire to bring to the country. It will continue to be the case for years, that people will be leaving those Provinces and going westward. Their farms are becoming vacant, and we should place these facts before the tenant farmers. Very little expenditure of money would enable the Department to ascertain in each Province and each county just how many farms and the character of the farms to be had. Men who have $2,000 or $3,000 capital, immigrating to Canada, can go to no part where they can become more prosperous, if they are farmers, than to the Maritime Provinces. They can buy farms there at half their intrinsic value. There never was a time when farms could be had so cheaply in the Maritime Provinces as to-day. The circumstances of the Maritime Provinces are such that they require the special attention of the Minister, and the same remark applies to Ontario and Quebec, in some measure. While the money of the people in those Provinces is being expended and a large portion of it squandered in immigration, these Provinces do not receive any attention, all the attention being given to the North-West. I do not think it is desirable to ask the large class of immigrants who have not means to go to the older Provinces. They would do much better in the North-West; but, no doubt, in the older Provinces, there is a large field for tenant farmers, and if the facts were brought home to them a large number would settle in these Provinces. These facts will not be brought home to them by sending invalided Ministers, even if they are members of the Cabinet, to England, to lecture in the towns. There is no use going among the artisans in the towns; what has to be done is to go amongst the tenant farmers themselves. No one doubts that a large portion of our expenditure on immigration has been squandered, and that large numbers of those who come out here are mere birds of passage. It is of no use spending money in the endeavor to bring back men who have left this country and gone to the United States. If they want to come back they can do so, but means should be taken to secure a portion of the immigration of tenant farmers. Agents from Australia and New Zealand set forth the advantages of those countries to men having moderate means and possessing knowledge of agriculture, and we should emulate that example. We expend a large amount of money on agents who are not thoroughly qualified for the position, and in printing, and the question comes up, what class of literature are we disseminating. Are we spending money for the printing of the practical kind of information which will induce tenant farmers to come here? I say the literature you are paying enormously for is of a class not calculated to draw tenant farmers to the country at all. Let me show you this national policy book, which was published originally as a mere commercial enterprise, for the advertisement of a number of industries, but those who started the scheme, finding it was not going to pay, fell back on the public Treasury, and were subsidised to the tune of $5,000 for this commercial undertaking, which should have stood or fallen on its own basis. It was hard to discover what they were paid. I find in the Auditor General's Report $2,500 charged to immigration and $2,500 more to Dominion lands for this work. What has the Dominion lands to do with it? This book comprises 176 pages, and has printed in large letters on the cover, "The National Policy of Canada." This is evidently one of the special industries which the National Policy supports. Of the 176 pages, which this book comprises, 50 pages are extracts taken from the Blue Books, and the rest consist of advertisements of private corporations, advertisements of private firms. The work has been illustrated. Among the illustrations is a large wood cut of the First Minister on the first page; then we turn over and find a group representing the entire Cabinet. Here is Sir Charles Tupper, and here is Sir Leonard, and here is Sir David Macpherson—some of them are very good photographs and some are very bad—here is the Postmaster General smiling genially at the top of the page, flanked by the Secretary of State, though I should not have known it was the Secretary of State if his name had not been placed under it.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Let us have something else.

Mr. DAVIES. You shall have something else. You have taken $5,000 out of the Treasury for this, and if you do not want to know how it was spent, you can go home.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. We do not want photographs; we want something sensible.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). They are the photographs of sensible men, you must know.

Mr. DAVIES. We have the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue, and the gentleman without a portfolio, the Hon. Frank Smith, but while we have their photographs, a great number had to be satisfied with their photographs and nothing more. The First Minister himself is described, and the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works are honored with short extracts from their Blue Books—but nothing is said about the Secretary of State—the intending immigrant would not know that he had a Department at all—he had to be satisfied with his photograph. There is nothing about the Minister of Inland Revenue either, nor about the Minister of Customs—not a word said about his Department, although that had something to do with the National Policy. There is not a word about the Customs duties, and so with the Post Office and the Indian Department, and the Department of Justice. What does the author say? He commences here with a short epitome of the history of Canada, from the year 1876, which covers one page, with a little sneering at the policy of the previous Government, proving that they were incompetents—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, asserting that they were incompetents; and he goes on to show that a new era had dawned upon Canada. He says:

"Many ventured to doubt the practical universality of the doctrine of free trade in those days; they saw that the geographical position of Canada differed so vastly from that of Great Britain that it was well worth considering whether the British fiscal policy was properly administrative in Canada."

I must confess that I have not been able to gauge the exact meaning of that phrase. Then he goes on to say:

"Not only in manufactures has this increased prosperity been promoted by the working of the National Policy, but agriculture has received an impetus as unexpected as grateful."

All from the National Policy. I have heard many silly statements made in this House in regard to the National Policy, but I have heard none so silly as this, contained in a book for which you paid $5,000, a pamphlet containing a few extracts from the Blue Books, and the only part which has any reference to the resources of Canada is a laudation of the National Policy, and a laudation of the protective policy which these English farmers have been educated from their youth to abhor; and you sent this book home to them, and asked them to come to our country, because we have abandoned free trade and adopted protection. You could not have adopted a better policy to keep them at home, seeing that they had been taught all their lives that free trade is the policy under which a country must prosper, and you tell them, that if they come to Canada they must come to a highly protected country. You are doing your best in this way to prevent immigration instead of assisting

it. He states the amount that has been deposited in the savings banks, and adds: "Almost every dollar of this amount having been banked by the farming classes." That is not a true statement. We have had the opposite statements made. We have heard that the working classes have deposited most of these sums. Now we are told, by this $5,000 book which you have paid for, that it is all deposited by the farmers. Then he goes on to make some laudatory remarks, too laudatory remarks, in reference to the hon. gentleman himself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. I have no doubt he would cheer these remarks if I were to read them. He says he is the author of Canada's prosperity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. He does not tell them that this is a fine country in itself, that you have got valuable lands, that you have got valuable mines and minerals, that it is a grand country for the farmer to live in; he does not tell them what grain or root crops you grow or can grow, or that any farmer has got wealth by following the trade of agriculture, but he says that, if this country has any prosperity, it is not due to anything inherent in the country itself, but to the right hon. gentleman; and what the right hon. gentleman would himself denominate as trash is circulated in England to induce people to come to this country. Then he has a few remarks in reference to the Department of the Interior, and the right hon. gentleman is credited with a wonderful prescience as to the North-West:

"With a careful prudence Sir John set about the work of shaping a policy for the settlement of the North-West, but before it could possibly be carried into effect sickness overtook the Premier—"

I did not know the hon. gentleman was sick—

"and the administration of the Interior was placed in the hands of the Speaker of the Senate, the Hon. D. L. Macpherson, already a member of the Cabinet, but without portfolio, who has continued to act. Certainly into no more competent hands could the work of the Department have been placed. A cool head, a large and practical acquaintance with business, an extensive knowledge of men, both from the older Provinces of the Dominion and from Europe, a clear insight into the working of measures and a keen perception of the requirements of the times were needed, and these were possessed—"

By the hon. gentleman who was appointed Minister of the Interior. The best commentary I can make upon that is to call attention to the facts as they exist, to the results which have flowed from his management of that Department, and to ask if hon. gentlemen think it is right and proper to publish a book at an expense of $5,000, taken from the tax-payers of the country, to tell the people of England that the Department of the Interior has been so marvellously well managed, in the face of the rebellion there which we are to-day trying to suppress. Then he deals with the Department of Agriculture. He must, of course, say something about the hon. gentleman at the head of that Department, or he would not have got the $5,000:

"With a keen appreciation of the resources of the Dominion, a patriotic desire to help the work of development, and the steady exercise of extraordinary ability, Mr. Pope has carried on his work to the satisfaction of all who, under any circumstances, could or would be satisfied."

The hon. gentleman may possess extraordinary ability, but, if so, he has an extraordinary ability for hiding it when he comes to give any information to this House, for the attempt to extract any information from him as to his Department, or any other Department, results in failure. Whenever he is asked a question, he keeps his mouth shut as close as an oyster, and we do not know whether his Department is well managed or not. So it goes on. The book does not say much about the Department of Finance. A good deal is said about the gentleman who is now High Commissioner. We are told:

"Long before Confederation Sir Charles (then Mr. Tupper) was well known in his Province of New Brunswick—"

Mark you, from New Brunswick. I did not know that before. His information must be very reliable.

"as a politician and orator. . . . Since then, time has audited his figures and found them correct, and confirmed his statement."

He goes on to describe the prophecies he made about the Canadian Pacific Railway, which, we are told, have since been confirmed by facts. This is in the face of the fact that only last year that gentleman was imported into this country to endeavor to convince the country that it was necessary to advance $30,000,000 additional from the people's money to do that work.

Mr. WOODWORTH. That is not true.

Mr. DAVIES. It is out of order for you to make that statement, in the first place. I am not speaking to you at all.

Mr. WOODWORTH. You are out of order now.

Mr. DAVIES. I say it is out of order for you to interrupt any one in that way.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I rise to a question of order, and I ask the hon. member to take his seat. When an hon. member addresses a member of this House in the second person instead of speaking to the Chair, he is clearly out of order.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). That is for the Chairman to say.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I ventured to interpolate the remark that the statement the hon. member was making, namely, that Sir Charles Tupper was imported into this country to give another $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, was untrue. That was perfectly in order for me to say, and the hon. member was clearly out of order when he spoke to me in the second person.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman, I hope, has stopped. The hon. gentleman was clearly out of order, and he must have known it; and it does not lie with him or with any other hon. member of this House to tell an hon. member who is speaking that his statement is not true. It is clearly irregular and disorderly, and the hon. gentleman ought to have withdrawn his statement and apologised. I was referring to the fact that the statements in this book are incorrect; and I will repeat what I said, that Sir Charles Tupper was brought out to this country to induce this Parliament to give $30,000,000 additional to build that road. The statements made in this book, in reference to the Railway Department, are about as true as many of the other statements. Then the author goes to the Department of Public Works. He does not speak so much of the ability of Sir Hector Langevin as he does of his aristocratic descent. He tells us—and I am very glad to hear it; I have no doubt it is quite true—that the hon. gentleman:

"Is descended from one of the old aristocratic French families in the Province of Quebec."

Then there are two or three pages of pictures, showing the Parliament buildings of Canada, but none of the other public buildings of the Dominion at all, except a few around the city of Ottawa. Is that the kind of a pamphlet to print as an emigration document? Then he refers to the Minister of Finance, and he does not do him justice at all. He does not refer to his ability, or enterprise, or any of his qualifications for the position he holds. Then we come to the Department of Militia, and he refers to the Minister of Militia in this manner:

"Mr. Caron is comparatively young for so important a position, but having been born and reared in the political arena, of an ancient and powerful family, plunging, while yet young, into the turmoil of political life, grasping popularity by that suaviter in modo and fortiter in re which always must command, he could but find an early prominence."

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman thinks this is the kind of literature which will induce people to come to this country—a volume containing photographs of Ministers, of the Parliament buildings, and such like productions. I ask whether the payment of this $5,000 can fairly be justified. The book is trash of the worst kind, and will do more to prevent people coming to this country than induce them to come. I hope this is the only pamphlet of the kind which the hon. gentleman has paid for, and that it is not a fair sample of the rest. I do not think I can do better than read another extract.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Yes; by reading the book through.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman must preserve order.

Mr. DAVIES. Am I to be restrained, and has the hon. gentleman who directly speaks to me to go free?

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman has no right to interrogate me in that way.

Mr. DAVIES. I have a right to ask—

Mr. CHAIRMAN. You have no right to ask such a question.

Mr. DAVIES. I am perfectly in order. I have a right to ask what the ruling of the Chair is—whether it is reasonable that I, alone, should be called to order, and not another gentleman, who spoke across the floor to me.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. It is a rule which you will observe as long as I am in the Chair—and which I will carry out with strict impartiality.

Mr. DAVIES. I will give another extract.

"As the result of this, and the friendly attitude of the Government towards the native Indian tribes, the North-West is absolutely free from turmoil and bloodshed, which so generally mar the frontier life in the western parts of the United States."

The facts of the last few months are the best commentary upon the statements contained in the extract. He winds up by telling the people that at a future time he is going to publish another edition of the work. Whether it will be at the expense of the Dominion he does not say. I hope no more of the public money will be expended in publishing works similar to this, and I call the attention of the House and the country specially to it to-night, in the hope that we will have no more money wasted, as this money has been wasted. I suppose no copies were circulated in Canada?

Mr. POPE. They were not made for here.

Mr. DAVIES. Where did the hon. gentleman circulate the 5,000.

Mr. POPE. Two thousand five hundred were sent to England. I did not suppose they were distributed among intending immigrants, but they were laid on the tables of hotels in different parts of England and Europe. I made this arrangement with a political friend of his own, and he afterwards made an arrangement with Mr. Bray. The pamphlets which I have circulated cost only about 3 cents each, this included among the rest. I think the hon. gentlemen will not find any great fault with the pamphlets, generally, I have distributed.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not know the political friend of mine to whom the hon. gentleman refers. I find in the Public Accounts that for 2,500 copies of a pamphlet on the National Policy Rev. Mr. Bray was paid $2,500.

Mr. POPE. I made an arrangement with Mr. James Stewart, of Montreal.

Mr. DAVIES. The amount was paid to Rev. Mr. Bray and the Minister got a receipt before he ever delivered a copy of the book to the hon. gentleman. Has the hon. gentleman ever received 5,000 copies?

Mr. POPE. I have received every one I contracted for, 2,500.

Mr. DAVIES. I hope they were circulated all outside of England. If they were sent to Germany and France, being published in a language the people do not generally understand, little harm can be done.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is highly desirable we should endeavor to get a better class of immigrants. A large number of those who now come here are worthless. If they landed in the United States they would be sent back again, as was done with some immigrants this year. We have plenty of room in Ontario for a large number of tenant farmers. The best settlers for the North-West are Canadians, but before we can secure their transfer we have to find tenant farmers who will come and purchase their farms. In our section the price of land has fallen greatly, largely because we do not have farmers come in with capital to buy land. All possible information should be given, so as to secure a desirable class of immigrants. Much money has been spent in securing immigrants who have just passed through the country and gone to the United States. When untruthful statements are published in pamphlets, a feeling of distrust is aroused and harm is done. Tenant farmers should receive more attention than other classes of immigrants. It would be much better to make an effort to bring out this class than the poorer class which have come to our shores during the last few years. I was instructed to secure some harvest hands in Toronto last year. When I brought them and set them to work they were almost useless. They knew little about the work; some had been brought up in workshops and others were sickly. In regard to some of them, we had to pay their passage back to Toronto, and they went to the hospital. Such a class of immigrants is useless. If the poorer class will come we want the hardy, stout, strong young men, prepared to work and possessing physical strength to do so. A large amount of money has been spent on printing for immigration purposes. Much of this has been thrown away, for the purpose of assisting political partisans. In some of the pamphlets there is useful information, but in much of them there is mere trash. I do not think it is wise that these books should be published, unless they are really calculated to do good work, and I dare say that there are thousands of them which are not circulated, simply because they are old, and they may be used to light the fires, or something else. I think it is absurd to send out a book with a photograph of the Ministers as an immigration pamphlet, with the expectation that it will either induce immigrants to come or prevent them from coming. The writer shows an amount of silliness and fulsome adulation which is really deplorable. I know nothing about Mr. A. J. Bray. But the name is familiar. We have heard of the Vicar of Bray and we have heard of a quadruped that brays, but whether he belongs to the one class or the other I do not know, but I think he has exhibited more of the qualities of the animal that brays than anything else. I hope such expenditures as this will be put a stop to. Perhaps the First Minister has too many things to attend to to look into these matters, but somebody should examine these books before they are sent out. I notice that there is a reduction in the vote this year, and I am glad to see it. For instance, I think it is outrageous that we should spend $30,000 on a lot of men in Canada, for the purpose of receiving immigrants, giving them directions and sending them forward. It may be necessary to have an agent with a fair staff where the steamer arrives, to give information, but to keep permanent agents at London, Ottawa and other places like those, is something I think ought to be considered, with a view of doing away with that system altogether. I hope that next year the Minister will have another reduction of $150,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I notice that $85,000 were paid for the transport of emigrants over the different railways, and $101,000 by way of assisted passages to the different steamship companies. That is a large amount of money, and the question is, whether we have received value for it, and whether we are likely to receive value for the amounts which we are to spend for the same purpose in future. The hon. gentleman proposes a reduction of $150,000 for assisting immigrants. Are we to understand from that that we may expect a less immigration than we have been getting hitherto? If so, we are maintaining the staff at as great an expense as ever, for there is no reduction in salaries or contingencies, except in this one item. I think there ought to be a reduction all round. I know that both Governments have followed, in a measure, the course we are now following, and though such an expenditure may perhaps have been fully justified in past years, it does seem to me that the condition and circumstances of the country are such that at present it is a question whether there should not be an entire reduction of the whole matter. I think that perhaps we might take the ground that we might entirely stop all the expenditure we are incurring—at all events, with the exception of those with reference to agricultural laborers and servant girls, for which there may be some justification. We find that those who are competent to speak in this matter, those who are interfered with by the importation of mechanics and laboring classes, have pointed out the evil results which flowed from it. This very week, if I mistake not, according to the published reports of the Trade and Labor Council of the city of Montreal, something like 116 pauper immigrants have come off the steamship Parisian. Is that a desirable class of immigrants to receive in our midst? Is it desirable that we should aid in defraying the expense of bringing any of these to our shores? We should be glad to welcome any who come here; but those who are landed in our large cities utterly penniless, especially at certain seasons of the year, are only here to suffer great hardships themselves, and to do us harm, in corresponding with their friends in the old country about their hardships. I find that Sir Charles Tupper himself pointed out this year what is a rather remarkable fact, that the emigration from Ireland has decreased at a wonderful rate—from 12,319 in 1853 to 4,513 in 1884; it had fallen one-third, while the emigration from England was 27,925 in 1833, against 23,434 in 1884, and the emigration from Scotland was 3,871 in 1883, against 3,166 in 1881. As Sir Charles Tupper puts it, the falling off is only 19 per cent., taking the English and Scotch emigration together. Not many years ago it was pointed out in very glowing terms here that we had great schemes on foot for, and great results were expected from, a greatly increased immigration from Ireland to our shores. But all that has apparently failed. I turned to see if I could find any explanation of that from the reports of our agents in Ireland—to see if they were less assiduous than our agents in other countries. Our agent in Dublin, Mr. Foy, lays stress on the number who have come out, and finds his justification for the less appreciable results of his work, in the fact that he made it a point to discourage any except those who were likely to do well and those who were in good circumstances. He says:

"Mechanics I did not use any exertion to send, as I feared that they might not improve their position sufficiently to send home encouraging letters."

He did a sensible thing in doing so, because these men must either displace our own mechanics, or become a burden on the country. He says, further:

"As respectable, industrious emigrants, by their letters, do incalculable benefit, equally powerful for evil are the reports of the lazy, drunken ne'er-do-wells, who expect to be fed without working."

There is no doubt that is perfectly correct. No better information can be sent abroad about the country than a letter sent home, and letters going home from those who are not doing well, in which they denounce the country and point out the hardship they endure, will do, as Mr. Foy points out, incalculable evil. He says :

"I did not act as if my business was to be done in one year or two, and gather up all sorts from lanes and alleys in cities. I went to the country, and where I knew, through information from my relatives and many personal friends, that there were some families, or even one family, of really industrious, honest, respectable character, thinking of emigrating, I remained in that neighborhood until I succeeded in sending them to Canada. I knew when I sent them that their letters would be powerful in causing others to follow them. * * * I have gone into this part of my report more fully than I intended, but I consider it mere justice to myself and my confères to explain that the unsuitable emigrants are not sent by us; that, as conscientious public servants, having the permanent good of the country that employs us as our paramount consideration, we do not burden her with emigrants to be a tax on the several national charitable societies."

These are sensible words, and Mr. Foy uses them as a vindication of himself for not having accomplished so much in the way of numbers. I agree with him; but by a parity of reasoning it is an adverse commentary on the work done by our other agents in the country who have been more successful than he in sending emigrants to Canada. We have had these pauper immigrants in our midst, mechanics brought out by the expenditure of the money of Canadian mechanics, to compete with them and drive them from their employment. That should be put an entire stop to. The hon. the Minister said he intended to do it, but I am afraid the work is going on still. I would ask him, by whose agency these people who have just landed by the Parisian have come? If they are in the position reported, they will have to be transported to all portions of the country. If farm laborers, they will find work to do; but I fear they are not of that class, and that they will go to swell the unemployed in our cities. The expenditure of $300,000 this year, and $450,000 last year, towards assisting immigration, and having no more to show than we have for it, is a serious question, and it is high time we should see if we cannot make an entire change. We were led to believe, I believe, we have a country so good in itself that we might fairly leave it to those who desire to better their condition to come out here on representations, fairly and honestly made to them, rather than bring out large classes whose conditions and circumstances are such that they cannot hope to enter on the race of life with fair prospects of success, and who, having to endure privations and hardships, will send letters home that will have serious effects in discrediting this country as a field for immigration. With reference to the North-West, we were led to believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway would relieve us of the expenditure, as far as peopling the plains was concerned, but so far we have no evidence of any work having been done by them in this respect. I moved, last year, for a report of the money expended by them on immigration, but found there was no report of their having expended a single dollar on the work. I believe it is very desirable that we should induce tenant farmers to come out and settle here. We should call their attention to the fact that in the older Provinces they could take up farms and have all the comfort and enjoyments of the old country, if they do not care to engage in the pioneer work of the west. But these people do not need assistance; they have means of their own; they can buy farms of their in the older Provinces. On the other hand, the money which is now devoted to assisting immigration is being expended in assisting immigrants to come to our shores, who find themselves handicapped when they reach here, and who consequently have at the outset to encounter considerable difficulty and hardship. The reports of these men more than counterbalance any advantage gained by the efforts of our agents under the present system; whereas, if the proper class of people were brought out their reports home, which could not fail to be satisfactory, would encourage a large and valuable class of immigration to Canada. I would like the hon. the Minister to answer the question as to whether he anticipates that a reduction of the amount by $150,000 for the assistance of immigration will result in our having a less number of immigrants this year, and if so, what justification there is for maintaining a full staff, at full cost, to establish less work?

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad the item has been reduced by $150,000, because I believe in the past a great deal of money had been wasted in this way. No doubt, some of the expenditure has done good; no doubt, all the pamphlets and information distributed by the Department are not of the class alluded to by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I have seen some pamphlets which are valuable, and which contain information intending settlers would be glad to have; but I am sorry to say many of those pamphlets do not reach the hands of the people for whom they are intended. Reports have been frequently circulated, not by people concerned in the politics of the country, but by people interested in the matter, that very large amounts of this pamphlet literature are really lying in the various agencies, and have never been distributed at all.

Mr. POPE. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. FISHER. Perhaps I do not, as the hon. gentleman chooses to tell me; but I have the information from gentlemen who are ardent supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. I had the information from one gentleman in particular, who has himself seen these books in the agencies in England. The question arises, what amount of good has been accomplished by means of this literature? Last year the Department of Agriculture spent as much upon this item as the year before, and I believe they profess to have distributed just as much of the literature as in the previous year, and yet the immigration fell off to an alarming extent, and having heard the Minister of Agriculture state that this literature has been working satisfactorily and accomplishing what it was intended to accomplish, I do not see why there should be this falling off. The hon. gentleman is chary of giving information. Perhaps he thinks it is not worth while at this period of the Session and at this late hour, to discuss the matter at all. I see in the report of the Montreal immigration agent some statements as to the points to which 805 persons have been distributed in the year 1884. He does not state who these people are exactly, but I presume, from other portions of his report, that they are the 805 indigent immigrants who came to that agency. I find that 58 of these are reported to have gone to my own county. It is not pretended that these are all the immigrants who went to that county, but I have compared that statement with some of my friends', who know that county well, and I have come to the conclusion that, while I do not deny that that number may have gone to that county, a very large number have, unfortunately, not stayed there. A large number of these men were men who pretended to be farm hands, and went for the purpose of working on farms; but after they had been there a few days, it was found that they were totally unacquainted with farm work, and had probably done nothing in their lives but handle pick and shovel, and, in other words, were navvies. Consequently, they went back to Montreal and tried to find other work. The Minister has stated that for a long time he has not assisted any but agricultural laborers. Of course the officers of the Department may have been deceived; but the information upon which these men have been assisted must have been very inadequate. The Minister of Agriculture acknowledged that a good many people were going back to England, and he gave, as a reason, that they were navvies who have been at work on our railroads, but many of these people had been assisted to come here and I have heard him say frequently that one of the great advantages of our railway construction in this country was the establishment here of a number of men who would work on the railway construction and afterwards would settle in the country. A little while ago the Minister answered a question put by me as to the Finlanders, and I find by the Ottawa immigration agency report, that of 2,487 souls temporarily relieved, no less than 420 were Fins. The Minister intimated that these Fins were able to get along without any help, but I find that 420 of them were assisted, and were sent to Renfrew and to the district of Algoma, and other places along the Canadian Pacific Railway construction, and I have information that they were brought free to Ottawa and sent on by the Government, so that the contractors upon the Canadian Pacific Railway might be supplied with their labor. The Ottawa agent says:

"I have great pleasure in referring to the satisfactory foreign element that has passed through my hands this year, especially Finlanders and Scandinavians. These men are always in demand by contractors, and are preferred by them above all others. The number of this class has this year increased from 265—the pioneers of their countrymen—to 664."

The agent does not say that these men have been placed upon farms, or have proved satisfactory as farm laborers, but that they have proved satisfactory as contract laborers upon the railways. I think we may infer from that that these men are really navvies, and not farm laborers; but they were assisted by this Government. There always was and still is in this country a great lack of farm laborers, and I am willing to support anything that can be done to induce them to come to this country; but I do not believe it is the legitimate work of the Department to bring navvies here instead of those farm laborers. I alluded last Session to the Forestry Exhibition as a means of attracting immigrants, and I urged upon the Government that Canada should be properly represented at that exhibition. I find, in the report of Mr. Gray, agent in Scotland, these words:

"On several occasions I attended the Forestry Exhibition in Edinburgh, and found that the New Brunswick exhibit attracted a great deal of attention. Mr. Jack, who had charge of it, took great pains in imparting information to all those taking an interest in matters pertaining to forestry, as well as to those who wished to become acquainted with the leading features of the Maritime Provinces generally. I think a great opportunity was lost here in not having all the various Provinces of the Dominion properly represented. There can be no doubt that a great deal of good was done to Canada through the New Brunswick exhibit, and I took occasion, at this exhibition, as on all similar occasions, to have a large quantity of our printed matter distributed."

Here is a direct corroboration of the position I took last Session on this subject. The hon. Minister has said that he intends to reduce the expenditure this year by $150,000. Would he tell us in what particulars he proposes to make that reduction?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I find we paid a commission on children coming to Canada of $2 a piece, or $1,516. What arrangement has the Department made in bringing out children, and how far is it the intention of the Department to encourage that? I find that the matter has been taken up by the Trade and Labor Council of Toronto, who have pronounced against it. They give their opinion that there are more orphan children now in Canada than are properly cared for. I see Sir Charles Tupper has stated, at a public meeting in London, that there is room for 100,000 of such children.

Mr. POPE. These children are brought out to this country by charitable people, and it is a good class of immigration. I do assist them to the extent of $2 a head, and I intend to do it in the future. With regard to the question of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), I may say that the amount of money that was paid this last year, $59,448, for passages, was for passages of the year before. I think I can save that very well. For printing there was $15,000 paid this last year of the year before, because we were short of money. We shall save, also, for inland passages, something like $50,000 this year. That is the position in which we stand now. I do not expect quite as much immigration this year, on account of what has happened in the North-West. The hon. gentleman wants to know what I propose to do, and how I propose to keep up this staff. I propose to treat it as any business man would treat anything. We have taken hold of this work; we have got our agents on the other side, and I have no doubt that after this year we shall find as large an immigration as we have had hitherto, and I intend to work these men. Our publications will be as numerous and our work will be just as heavy. I propose to keep our organisations, and to bring out immigrants, as we have been doing hitherto. I may say to every hon. member that I will bring out farm laborers. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said that we do not want farm laborers. There never was a time when we supplied the demand for farm laborers, and we are not doing it to-day. I intend to bring them to this country. But hon. gentlemen opposite say that we should only bring out men of large means, men who were born with silver spoons in their mouths, men who will come with capital to buy farms. Almost two-thirds of the men of Ontario came to this country without means and worked out their living. I expect hereafter that we shall find that the leading men were those who came here without a shilling. They knew how to work, and they worked out their living. There are many such men in this House to-day, and they are those who have brought this country up to its present position. Hon. gentlemen opposite may sneer at the men who have come to this country and talk about labor unions. Are we going to adopt a policy because the labor unions, whose views I am always glad to consider, say so? No; ours will be a better and a broader policy, one which I believe the country requires. Although there may be in Toronto and Montreal some labor unions, I am satisfied to appeal to the common sense of the farmers who want laborers, who will not believe in the nonsense of pandering to a set of men in the towns. I appeal to the farmers who want laborers and to those who came to this country without a farthing, and I ask them whether they do not want agriculturists to settle here. The interests of industrial labor and agriculture are one—and I respect each in its proper sphere—but hon. gentlemen opposite know very well, when they talk about the men who have built up the country and hewed down the woods and settled the land, that they were such men as we have brought here. They say our immigration policy has failed, and that we did not get as many last year. How many did we get last year? We got 103,000. If only one-half of those were good for anything, or if there were only 50,000 worth anything—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Where are they?

Mr. POPE. Do you suppose that I can tell you where every one is and call him by name. It is frivolous nonsense to talk thus. I say those men came here, 103,000 of them; and if only one half were good settlers they were worth $25,000,000 to this country. They were worth at least $500 each, while on the other side of the line each immigrant is valued at $1,000. So I say the money was not entirely lost. Suppose only one-fourth of them proved good settlers, and we threw out the other three-quarters, then they cost no more than the immigrants brought out by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in office. You may talk all kinds of theory, but let us see what has been the result of the operations. I find in 1875 our immigrants to cost us $10.85 per head; 1876, $11.12; 1877, $6.78; 1878, $6.23; 1879, $4.35; 1880, $4.71; 1881, 4.30; 1883, $3.08; 1884, $4.15. So in our time, in the very last year, although a considerable portion of that sum was paid for work done the year before, even if three-quarters of the immigrants proved worthless, yet the one-quarter of the number left did not cost us more than the immigrants brought out by the late Government. So it has been a success, and I do not propose to reduce our agencies. I propose that every man shall do his work and do it well; and I believe if there is any one thing that is important to the country, that is going to build up and make a country for us, it is bringing people here and settling up our waste land. As far as I can, I will bring tenant farmers and men with means, but I do not propose to confine myself to those men. I intend to bring out agricultural laborers, and while the people in cities and towns may be led to imagine that they will compete for work and be afraid that they are going to take away their employment, the farmers and the common sense of the country must tell us that what I am doing is the right thing for the whole country, and I am perfectly certain they will support the course we are pursuing.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the farmers will not feel very particularly pleased if the hon. gentleman brings out a certain number of mechanics. That is the class to which I was devoting my remarks. I did not say we should not bring out farm laborers. The hon. gentleman has brought out mechanics, and he says he intends to do so. He says he will pursue the same policy in the future.

Mr. POPE. I have told the hon. gentleman several times that last autumn I had put a stop, so far as I could, to that immigration, and I had advertised that no mechanics or navvies should be brought into the country by assistance or advice from my Department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he would not be put aside by any trade or labor union, but that he would pursue the same policy in the future as he had in the past.

Mr. POPE. In bringing to this country that class of immigrants which the country required, that is agricultural laborers, and that I had stopped, so far as I could, bringing those not required, that is mechanics and artisans.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Hansard will prove that the hon. gentleman in effect said he did not care what the trades and labor council represents, he would go on and bring them in. With respect to the item of $124,000, the Minister has told us that it is a reduced estimate, because last year he asked for more because they wanted to close up the previous year's operations, on which there was a deficiency. When the hon. gentleman makes his per capita calculation on the cost of immigration to this country, he makes it on a basis of $24,000 less than was paid.

Mr. POPE. That was last year. If it had been larger it would have been so much less than this year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But how much in that year?

Mr. POPE. About $4.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I will not enter into a discussion of this question, but he knows that we deny that on this side, and that these figures cannot be demonstrated. His own census shows that we have only 16 per cent. increase in Canada, while the natural increase alone should be 20 per cent.

Mr. HICKEY. Hon. gentlemen have said a great deal about mechanics, but I say that they make the best settlers we can have, for they not only work at their trades, but they make good farmers, and they are splendid laborers. Many of them are good farmers throughout the country, when they are not working at their trades. I do not think they ought to be despised or disparaged.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No one despises them, but we say that the money of Canada should not be expended to pay their assisted passages here.

Mr. POPE.

Mr. HICKEY. Why are you against them more than anybody else?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Because there is no employment for them.

Mr. HICKEY. There is.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There may be at odd times, but the reports from every city show that there is not in the winter months.

Mr. CURRAN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is discussing a question which has been disposed of by the Minister, who says there are no assisted passages to-day.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister will not venture to say that no laborers have come to this country on assisted passages, other than farm laborers, since the orders have been given. They may have come in spite of his orders, but if they are a desirable class, why discriminate?

Mr. HICKEY. I say we should not discriminate.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then the Minister is pursuing a wrong policy, according to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIES. After the Minister's explanation, there still remains $25,000 of the vote which he has not attempted to account for, and he repeats the statement that he expects as large an immigration as before.

Mr. POPE. No; I did not say so.

Mr. BOWELL. Quite the contrary.

Mr. DAVIES. Then I misunderstood him. Does he account for the other $25,000 by estimating for increased immigration. Am I right?

Mr. POPE. I did not say anything about it.

Mr. DAVIES. The Minister of Customs contradicted me, and told me I was wrong.

Mr. BOWELL. What the Minister of Agriculture said, and if he said it once he said it twenty times, was, that he did not expect as large an immigration this year as last year or the year before, and yet the hon. gentleman has repeated two or three times that the Minister of Agriculture expected as large an immigration.

Mr. DAVIES. I say he bases his estimates on as large an immigration. The hon. Minister will not state why he makes the vote this much less—he cannot, or he will not. If it is not on the ground of a lesser immigration, I suppose we may expect to discuss it at some length on concurrence.

Mr. POPE. If I do not use it, it will not be used; but I intend to take the same vote.

Mr. DAVIES. It is not the same vote; it is $150,000 less. The hon. gentleman knows that he can explain it in a few minutes, and if he does not, I suppose there will be a long controversy on concurrence, and time wasted, in connection with the information which he is now trying to withhold from the House. We have a right to some information from the Department, and we have got very little to-night. The hon. gentleman threw a sneer across the House about some remarks I made in support of the hon. member for South Huron. Those remarks were not offered in a party sense, but I wished the Minister to recognise that there are other portions of this Dominion than the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. He ought to know that the classes of immigrants whose expenses he is defraying to this country are not the classes suited to the Maritime Provinces, and that there is room there for a large class of tenant farmers that he sneers at, as men who are born with silver spoons in their mouths. Such language is uncalled for and indefensible. I call attention to the fact that there was a demand for a large class of small farmers. He says he does not intend to try to encourage that class of immigration. He sneered at it; he spoke of men coming to this country without a cent in their pocket and becoming millionaires. These men we all admire. But the time they came was suitable for them; but the country is not so suitable for them now.

Mr. POPE. Never so good.

Mr. DAVIES. He will not get any one from the Maritime Provinces to tell him that that class is desirable. But I think he should try to point out the advantages the older Provinces offer to tenant farmers with small capital. I suppose he does not care for them.

Mr. HICKEY. Write a pamphlet.

Mr. DAVIES. We are making statements which are just as good as pamphlets. I want no better pamphlet than the speech of the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Farrow), who spoke as I do.

Mr. McNEILL. The Minister said he wished to get them. The Hansard will show that he did.

Mr. DAVIES. He did not want that class at all. His great desire was to get those who had not anything; but there are many parts of the Dominion which are not suitable for them, and when he is spending so much money we had better have some information to put before the tenant farmers to induce them to come here, instead of going to Australia.

Mr. HESSON. One would suppose, from what the hon. gentleman has said, that it would be possible to prevent the desirable class the hon. gentleman refers to from coming here. What course does he want the Minister to pursue? Those agriculturists have the same information regarding this country as other classes. The hon. gentleman said the Minister was going to prevent men born with silver spoons in their mouths from coming to this country. The way is open to them also. It is true the Minister does not assist that class; but surely they are as able to pay their way as others who seek new homes for themselves in this country. I think my hon. friend asks a very unreasonable thing from the Minister when he asks him to point out absolutely every dollar of the expenditure which he will make out of this vote of $300,000. It is impossible for the Minister to give the exact number of immigrants, within 100, 1,000 or 5,000, who will take advantage of the assisted passages. It is as well to vote a large enough amount, and if it is not used to assist that large and desirable class, we shall still have the money.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman has not conceived the question aright at all. The Minister is not asking for a greater vote, and there is no exception taken to the vote. He is asking a less vote, and what he has asked was, whether he expected a less result, and if so, whether a smaller staff would be maintained. In this amount of $330,000 there are some $81,000 for printing. The hon. gentleman knows that that is a subject that ought to be dealt with thoroughly to-night. It may be right for an office in Prescott to get $6,000.

Mr. BOWELL. It was fully investigated. Every item of the expenditure for printing was explained in another place, and vouchers and pamphlets were piled on the Table.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was not a member of that other place.

Mr. BOWELL. You read the newspaper.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Apart from that, I want to ask the Minister if he proposes that part of the reduction shall be made in the cost of printing?

Mr. POPE. No; I do not propose that there should be any reduction in giving information. I desire to give all the information I can, and as cheaply as I can; but I do not profess to know anything at all about printing. What I do is this: A pamphlet is to be printed, and the Queen's Printer fixes the prices that should be paid for it, under the present tariff of the Ontario Government. I do not think my hon. friend would ask me, while I am trying to enlarge the field from which we shall draw immigrants, to abridge at all the information I am giving.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this all pamphlet work?

Mr. POPE. Yes. With regard to Prescott, it was the only place we had to get German printing done at; I do not know the man who did the work.

Quarantine..... $60,966

Mr. LANGEЛИER. I see an item, $16,000 for medical inspection. Last year a certain number of immigrants attacked with measles and small pox were landed at Lévis, crossed over in the ordinary ferry boats to Quebec, and were brought in ordinary vehicles to the marine hospital. Owing to this want of the most ordinary precautions, the city ran great risk of being attacked by this contagious disease, and, as it was, one of the children of the hospital physicians died from the contagion. No real quarantine took place, as the immigrants came in steamers, which do not stop in quarantine. I would like to know what steps the hon. gentleman has taken to prevent a similar occurrence next year.

Mr. POPE. The steamers this year will all have to stop at quarantine, and if they have any sick on board they will have to remain at Grosse Isle. I made this arrangement, as I thought too much risk was run in allowing the steamers to come through to Quebec without being examined at Grosse Isle. There is an increase of $10,000 in the item of public health. This is taken as a precautionary measure, in case we should be visited by cholera or other infectious disease. I hope I will not have to use it all, though probably I will have to use some of it, as there will have to be more expenditure in every port, whether it be a quarantine station or not, in the event of the advent of cholera. If not a quarantine station, the Custom house officer is a quarantine officer, and all vessels will have to be inspected.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2:40 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 25th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CARON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) to amend the Consolidated Militia Act, 1883. He said: The Bill is to take authority to increase the permanent corps. Under the Consolidated Militia Act of 1883, the limit fixed to the permanent corps, so far as numbers are concerned, was 750. This Act takes authority to increase the force from 750 to 1,000 men. It is for the purpose of providing one school of infantry at London, and one school at Winnipeg—one-half mounted infantry and the other half the ordinary infantry corps. It has been considered necessary, in consequence of the recent events which have taken place, to supplement the organisation of the permanent corps by increasing the number of men from 750 to 1,000.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVICE STATISTICS.

Mr. ROYAL (for Mr. TASSÉ) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to reorganise the system of statistics and to publish each year a volume containing a statistical summary in relation to the working of the several branches of the public service?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand that this matter is receiving the special attention of the Department of Agriculture and Statistics, in order to see whether the suggestion made in this question should not be carried into effect.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH JAMAICA.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Whether the Government have had any communication from the delegates of the Island of Jamaica now visiting the Dominion, and if so, whether they can state the nature of the same? Whether there is any prospect of any basis for a commercial treaty between the two colonies being agreed upon before the departure of said delegates from this country?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government has received a communication from the delegates from the Island of Jamaica now visiting the Dominion. The correspondence is now going on, and we cannot just now state the nature of the same, nor what may be the result of those communications.

DISTURBANCES IN THE NORTH-WEST—ASSISTANCE TO SETTLERS.

Mr. ROYAL (for Mr. Ross) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to furnish assistance to those settlers in the North-West whose houses have been destroyed, or who have been unable to put in crops during the present year in consequence of the rebellion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That subject is engaging the earnest attention of the Government.

EQUIPMENT OF THE 90TH BATTALION.

Mr. ROYAL (for Mr. Ross) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to compensate the members of the 90th Battalion for the expenditure incurred by them for clothing and equipment necessary to enable them to proceed to the front and which owing to the emergency of the service could not be obtained from militia stores in the usual way?

Mr. CARON. It is the intention of the Government to compensate the 90th for any legitimate and necessary expense incurred for clothing and equipment of the battalion, as was done in the case of every other battalion.

DOMINION LANDS SALES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What sum has been received up to date on account of sales of Dominion lands, for fiscal year 1884-85? What sum has been expended up to date and charged to capital account for surveys of lands in the North-West, during the present fiscal year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That statement is not quite ready but it will be brought down soon.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I might explain that what I want is such information as you have in the Government books. The hon. the Minister will understand, of course, that there may be payments not yet received or notified at Ottawa. I only want what the books show.

Question allowed to stand.

DISPUTED BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO.

Mr. MILLS asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to invite Parliament this Session to ask for Imperial legislation to give effect to the report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, of the 22nd of July last, in reference to the disputed boundaries of Ontario?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government will be able to answer that question next month, or rather, next week.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to make an explanation which is due to the officers of the House and which it affords me great pleasure to make. A day or two ago, I called the attention of the House to the fact, as I supposed, that a question which I had put on the Votes and Proceedings had not been put on the Order Paper. I was misled. In looking at the Debates of Tuesday, I saw that a question was asked by Mr. Trow in reference to savings banks deposits and was answered, which I had before put on the paper and had withdrawn. As I had only one question to put upon the Order Paper I supposed this was the one, and the question I referred to was answered on the following day by the Acting Minister of Finance. I beg to retract all I said or any insinuation I may have made at that time with respect to a dereliction of duty on the part of the officials of the House. The Government was not only kind enough to answer the question once but to put on for me again a question that was previously answered. All the notices I have given have been regularly placed upon the Order Paper and answered.

ENQUIRY FOR A RETURN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to enquire from the Minister of Customs what about those savings banks returns. Generally the Minister of Customs is punctual, I am bound to admit, in redeeming his promises, but I have received promises from him which are considerably overdue about these savings banks returns.

Mr. BOWELL. I am very sorry I am not able to fulfil the promise I made the other day. I remember distinctly saying that if I could not get them complete I would give them to him in part. I may frankly state that I wrote a note to the Finance Department to have them prepared, and since that time I have forgotten all about it. I will see to it again.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 131) further to amend "An Act for the better preservation of the peace in the vicinity of public works" and the Acts in amendment thereof.—(Mr. Caron.)

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 147) to authorise the grant of certain subsidies in land for the construction of the railways therein mentioned, said: At a previous stage of this Bill the leader of the Opposition reminded me that I had promised to add an amendment in order to state that these grants were to be made by the Government in accordance with the Orders in Council that had been passed relating to each of them. In Committee of the Whole I intend to move in amendment to add the following words to the 5th clause:—

And each of them, may be so made in aid of the construction of the said railways respectively, in the proportions and upon the conditions fixed by the Orders in Council made in respect thereof, each of the said enterprises being respectively subject to any modifications thereof which may hereafter be made by the Governor in Council; and except as to such conditions, the said grants.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 5.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the amendment above cited.

Mr. BLAKE. The proposal of the hon. gentleman is objectionable in this respect, that it proposes to neutralise all the other additions of the Order in Council at the will of the Government. I understood from the Government that they would ask Parliament to sanction the grants of these lands to these companies under conditions which had been finally settled.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amendment is necessary to give that power, because the object of Parliament in sanctioning these grants of land subsidies to these companies is that these railways may be built. We wish to avoid any obstacle being put in the way of these companies building these railways, therefore if, under the conditions of these Orders in Council any modification was required in order to facilitate the building of a railway, without, of course, going against an Act of Parliament, I think the Governor in Council should have the power to make that modification. The fact is some modification may be required at the last moment when they might be just on the eve of obtaining money to build the railway under this subsidy; and I think it would be regrettable if we were then to delay the company and say to them, when they came to us: No, the Act is positive, you must build exactly according to the Orders in Council, and not go beyond them, and we cannot modify them in any way—though it might be in the same sense as Parliament would wish it to be done. We must always keep in view that Parliament wishes these railways to be built and has set aside this quantity of land for that purpose. In that view I think the Governor in Council should have authority to modify these Orders.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not intend to debate the question, but at the proper stage I shall offer an amendment to the hon. gentleman's proposal.

Bill reported with amendments.

Amendment read the first and second time.

THE NORTH-WEST TROUBLES.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 129) for granting to Her Majesty the sum of $1,700,000 required for defraying certain expenses now being incurred in connection with the troubles in the North-West Territories.

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give the House further information as to how the money has been expended.

Mr. CARON. When the matter was brought before the House by my hon. friend and colleague the Acting Minister of Finance, I was not in the House; but afterwards, from my seat, I stated I would give to the House all the information it was possible to obtain in view of the difficulties which every hon. member will understand to exist, in procuring vouchers from distant districts, and it was impossible for me at that time to give the information which I now propose to submit to the House:

“Expenditure on account of North-West militia service, up to the 23rd June, 1885:

Pay and subsistence.....	$249,491 54
Clothing, stores and necessaries.....	61,244 34
Arms and ammunition.....	50,433 40
Telegraph construction.....	23,094 44
Sums paid to the Hudson Bay Company.....	98,000 00

Total expenditure.....$1,644,263 43

“Pay and subsistence include pay of officers and men. Supplies and subsistence of men—forage for horses and other incidental expenses, including field equipment.

“Clothing and necessaries include payments for blankets, water-proof sheets, woollen under-clothing, shirts, socks, boots, mitts, winter caps, mufflers, etc., etc.

“Arms and ammunition include payments for Gatling guns, revolvers and ammunition.

“Telegraph construction, payments for building telegraph lines.

“Payments to Hudson Bay Company, etc for supplies and transport service between Qu'Appelle and Clark's Crossing, Swift Current and Battleford, Moose Jaw and the Elbow of the Saskatchewan, Calgary and Edmonton, and other points in the Territories.”

The vouchers have been carefully examined by the principal supply officer of the militia, Lieutenant-Colonel Jackson, who is in charge at Winnipeg, and after examining them he reported they were perfectly satisfactory. Since the vouchers have been handed over to the Department here they have been audited by Mr. O'Meara, chief accountant of the Department, and they are reported to be perfectly accurate with the vouchers received. There is a second statement which I have been enabled to have prepared for the information of the House quite lately. It is as follows:—

“MILITIA ON ACTIVE SERVICE, NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

“Statement relative to the Hudson's Bay Company account with the Department of Militia and Defence.

The amount paid to the Hudson's Bay Company by the Department of Militia and Defence for supplies and transport furnished the militia field forces in the North-West Territories up to 8th May, 1885 was.....	$460,000 00
The accounts rendered by the Hudson's Bay Company show an expenditure up to 9th May, 1885, as follows:—
Expenditure as per statement with vouchers.....	297,531 48
Expenditure as per statement, vouchers not yet rendered.....	193,592 55
	$491,124 03

“The whole of this expenditure is for the general supplies required for an army in the field, viz: For bread, meat, flour, bacon, forage, blankets, tents, horses, saddlery, arms, ammunition, transport, &c.”

Mr. BLAKE. While I think my hon. friend was right in asking the Minister of Militia to make some statement, a request which the Minister has complied with, I think it is too early a period to enter into an examination of the accounts or to criticise or to scrutinise them. Therefore, subject to a question or two on concurrence, upon which I think the Minister can furnish some information, I do not for my part propose to enter into any analysis of the statement he has made.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. BLAKE. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the arrangement made in the fall of 1883, and continued afterwards, arranged that as part of the security for an advance, agreed that the money received for postal and transport service should be paid into the hands of the Receiver-General. I suppose this has been done; and I have reason to believe that the money for postal and transport services was paid into the hands of the Receiver-General until a comparatively recent period; but I desire to know whether any change has been made in that arrangement, and whether any arrangement is now in force by which sums which ought to have been placed in the hands of the Receiver-General have been transferred to the credit of the railway company and are included, so far as they apply to this service, in any recent financial arrangement made with the company.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand it, the arrangement is strictly carried out; that the amount earned from the carriage of mails and other transport from the Government by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is to be applied to the credit of the company according to the arrangement under their charter. A large sum of money has been expended by that company in furnishing transport, carriages, teams, and other means of transport across the unconnected portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and large supplies have been furnished, food, etc., for the subsistence of the troops going west. Of course, that is an unexpected war expense, which the company were in no way obliged to undertake. They collected teams, they took them from their own work, and they furnished to the troops food and supplies of every kind, in order to push them rapidly westward. An explanation has been made with respect to that exceptional service. With respect to that exceptional service the Government have paid and are prepared to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the expenses which have been incurred in those particulars. For the regular transport contemplated by the contract, the transport of the mails, is originally paid to them and carried to the credit of the company.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the exceptional arrangements in connection with the war service, or is it limited to the expenses incurred by the company in supplying teams and subsistence to get the men across the gaps, or to the expenses of the railway in carrying the men over the track?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it does not at all apply to that.

Mr. BLAKE. As these expenses were incurred at a comparatively early period, perhaps the hon. gentleman would give us an idea of the amount.

Mr. CARON. We have not been able to get a complete statement yet, because several of the sub-contractors had to use their teams, and so on, and had not been able to hand in their accounts to the company. A great deal of delay has occurred in consequence of the fact that these sub-contractors had to get most of their rations and supplies from a great distance from Toronto and Montreal. Accounts were thus delayed for thirty days or perhaps more for these exceptional expenditures, and as they are just coming in, the company cannot render a complete account to us. I can tell the hon. gentleman, however, that I believe that the amount of $500,000 is much short of what that service will be. The whole expenditure for commissariat service, I may say, was furnished by the company, and from the excellent management of the different gentlemen who had sub-contracts on the line, we were able to expedite the forwarding of the troops without any possible delay, while if we had had to send our own supplies there would have been considerable delay.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will understand that I am neither condemning nor approving, but only asking for such information as he can render, without criticising the lack of information. I think that would be premature, but I thought that the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, having regard to the arrangement which had been made, demanded just that much enquiry. I think it would be premature even to criticise the statement of the First Minister on that subject. I suppose we will have the facts before us next Session, and I am quite prepared to delay dealing with them till then. There is another matter to which the hon. gentleman referred; he mentioned $50,000 for arms and ammunition, and he said that included gatling guns, etc. I would ask him if it deals with a very large order of Martini-Henrys which was mentioned in the newspapers. I know nothing of it except from the newspapers, but I think they said that there were 10,000 stands. Were these embraced in that amount?

Mr. CARON. No. I may say that 10,000 stands were ordered, as I was authorised by Order in Council to order that quantity of arms. The bill was only returned to us by the last mail. In framing the Bill, asking for the credit which we did ask for, we could not provide for that expense, because we did not know exactly what the amount would be, as the prices vary from time to time, and the account was not rendered to us. This amount merely provides for the two gatling guns which were ordered, the ammunition and the harness required to make them complete so far as equipment goes, and also some revolvers and ammunition for them.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman state the amount of the account for the Martini-Henrys?

Mr. CARON. I can give the hon. gentleman the information to-morrow, but I would not like to name the figure from memory.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is not unreasonable to ask on this occasion, as we are making provision for this amount, whether the hon. gentleman is able to give a further statement confirmatory or otherwise of the necessarily conjectural approximate estimate which the Minister of Customs gave when asking for this amount. That estimate was about $4,000,000, including a very definite sum for indemnities of various kinds. I do not ask him for an estimate of the indemnities, I think it would be an unreasonable thing to ask, and perhaps prejudicial to the public interest, particularly upon that subject. Nor do I enquire with reference to the proposed grants which may be brought down as to any special indemnities for volunteers. I put all those to one side as they will form the subject of policy which no doubt we will hear of later on, and they may therefore be eliminated from my question. Omitting those questions, what is the hon. gentleman's present estimate of the cost of the war?

Mr. CARON. I have already pointed out to the hon. gentleman that, until we get the accounts, it is really impossible to form an estimate. I will mention one circumstance which will illustrate the difficulties that the Department has to contend with in framing anything approaching a definite amount to cover expenses in connection with troubles in the North-West. General Strange had, so to speak, an independent command in command of one column, and for weeks and weeks was without communication with the other portions of the forces in so far as regards sending in vouchers or accounts for expenses, which he is every day incurring; and up to the present time he has not yet been able to give the Department an idea of what his expenses are, from the simple fact that after incurring some portions of the expense he went off following Big Bear, and is now in the wilderness, I do not know how far from Fort Pitt. He has not been able to sign any of those vouchers which would authorise the Department to pay anything. Though I am very anxious personally, having the responsibility of the management of the expenses, to get relieved of that responsibility as soon as possible, I am not really in a position to give definite information, and any information I could give would be perfectly useless because it would be unreliable, because I have not myself the accounts which would enable me to give the information.

Mr. BLAKE. We see occasional statements in the newspapers as to the intention to reduce the force in the North-West and send a number home. We would be enabled to form some idea of the basis on which these expenditures are to continue, so far as the number of men is concerned, if the hon. gentleman would make some general statement on that subject.

Mr. CARON. I have much pleasure in stating that the intention of the Major General commanding, from the dispatches we have received from him, is to reduce the force to the lowest possible minimum. He wishes to do so as far as possible, so far as I can make out, but that will depend on the news received from the column now pursuing Big Bear. But as far as I can make out, the intention of the Major-General is to leave only the permanent corps which we have sent up, from the School of Infantry at Toronto, and from "A" and "B" Batteries from Kingston and Queb. c. He considers that that force, amounting to about 450 men, along with the Mounted Police, which he is very anxious to see increased to 1,000, will be quite sufficient to provide for any emergency in the country. The balance of the forces will be returned to their homes as rapidly as possible, and the Major-General is using every possible means to expedite their return. He has broken up the depots at the various places, he is dismissing the whole transport service, and he intends to carry on the transport by steamers. Of course the expenditure which has been incurred cannot be affected by any reduction of that kind, but I hope within a very short time that we shall be able to effect a great immediate reduction of the large expenditure which has had to be carried on so far.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be of great consequence to the country that the temporary emergencies which now exist should not be suffered to interfere with a thorough examination and a proper selection of men for the Mounted Police force. The reports which are in our hands show that in times past there have been some mistakes made in recruiting a great many who have been too young in years. More than one of the majors of the force have pointed out that the work was very severe, and that a young fellow of 18 or 20 became invalidated very soon, which not only weakened the force but necessitated an hospital service as well. Of course, we have a specially favorable opportunity of recruiting that force, from the circumstance that there are a large number of men of somewhat military inclinations in the North-West at this moment; but I would like to see a portion of our other forces kept a little longer, in order that that force may be primed and picked. The Mounted Police force ought to be, in point of intelligence, training and coolness, more of the character of the men of the Irish constabulary than like the ordinary militia. I have one observation to make in regard to the Bill which I think the hon. gentleman will see the force of. He has stated that the expense of the war, direct and indirect is estimated to be $4,000,000. The bulk of that expense has already occurred. We have now the statement that the vouchers up to the 1st of June show an expenditure of $1,644,000. A very large number of the vouchers for the expenditure already incurred have not been brought in, under the circumstances the hon. gentleman so clearly explained. It is therefore palpable that the expenditure connected with the war up to the 30th of June will be very far beyond the $1,700,000 provided for in the Bill; in fact, the hon. gentleman explains that there is a very large additional expenditure in addition to that, for which he has received vouchers. We have suspended all the rules on two occasions on account of the pressing emergency to get the cash to meet the expense. I think I should not be at all wrong if I said that $1,300,000 in addition to the $1,644,000, or $3,000,000 in all, would be nearer the figure which will cover the expenses of the financial year about expiring than $1,700,000. Under these circumstances I have been struck with great surprise to see the proposal in this Bill:

"The said sum or any part thereof may be so paid and applied in either of the financial years ending respectively on the 30th day of June, 1885, and the 30th day of June, 1886."

This money was asked for on the ground that it was wanted immediately, and we afforded the hon. gentleman every facility on that account, but it will only complicate matters to suggest that any portion of the vote is to be expended in the financial year that is to come. We have vouchers already for all but $60,000, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will be honored with those in the course of the next week. But, even if he is not, our law provides that if they come in within three months after the 30th of June they may be still paid and charged to the account of the financial year which ends at that date, with the view that we should get the expenditure of the year paid out of and charged to the account of the year itself. It was perhaps a questionable measure to allow the payment to be made after the close of the financial year; but in making that provision Parliament felt that the possible abuse to which that provision was liable was more than counterbalanced by the importance, in a country like ours, where there is considerable difficulty, owing to the distances, in getting in the vouchers for the expenditure of the year, before the end of the year. None of these difficulties apply to the vote of $1,700,000, but if they did they are solved by the Act. I therefore invite the hon. gentleman to omit that portion of the clause to which I have referred.

Mr. CARON. I think that might be fairly done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister said he had paid $960,000 to the Hudson Bay Company for supplies.

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Had the hon. gentleman any other contractors to deal with besides the Hudson Bay Company, or did they take charge generally of the whole expedition in all its branches?

Mr. CARON. Yes, almost to the whole extent; but outside of the ordinary contracts which were looked after and entered into on behalf of the Government by the Hudson Bay Company, there were other contracts just as I have stated. The transport service expenditures incurred by General Strange, and in some other distant parts where columns had to be moved at a moment's notice, had to be provided for. There are other contracts for transport and subsistence for some of those columns which could not be reached from the supply office at Winnipeg, at the head of which is Colonel Jackson, who is providing for that expenditure in connection with the Hudson Bay Company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Were those by the Hudson Bay Company, too?

Mr. CARON. Some were and some were not. General Strange telegraphed that he had to provide for some transport himself, and had to rely on the teams he found in the immediate neighborhood.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another point to which attention was call by a question put in the name of Mr. Ross, and to which I would like to call the attention of the Minister and the Government generally. The question was asked whether it was intended to compensate the members of the Winnipeg battalion for extra expenses, and the Minister replied it was intended to make them allowances similar to those which have been made to the other battalions. I know perfectly well that the officers are expected to make provision for themselves for an enormous number of articles in our service which it is not the practice in the regular service to compel officers to provide, and I know also, as a matter of fact, that a great many officers who joined these battalions incurred very considerable expense at their own cost to get themselves equipped for the field. Now, this being a special service, not the sort of service for which these men engaged in the volunteer force joined, they expected to be employed within their own or contiguous Provinces, it seems to me it would be rather unreasonable to expect them to meet, at their own cost, the special charges to which they have been put. The First Minister will no doubt understand, as well as the other members of the Government, that men called to go into the field at short notice were obliged to supply themselves with a considerable number of articles, and I think it would be in the interest of the public service that we should not apply the traditions of the English service, adapted to a totally different state of things, to the service, and a reasonable and fair compensation should be made to the officers and men who have incurred these expenses with the object of fitting themselves for taking the field.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman was quite right in saying that some of the officers have been put to great expense in equipping themselves for the field, but he must remember that over and above their pay according to rank, which I think is very reasonable, they are getting a field allowance, which is supposed to be given for the purpose of indemnifying the officers for such expenditure. However, that is a question which I do not like to take up until the Major General returns, when the advice of a man, experienced as he is, will be of great advantage in settling these matters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is quite true, but the hon. gentleman knows that the position of a great number of our officers differs very material from that of ordinary English officers, and the rules applied to the regular officers it would not be fair to apply to a great number of our people. There are cases enough in which the Minister knows our men can very well afford to make a moderate sacrifice for the sake of doing their duty, but there are a great many other cases in which a severe fine practically has been inflicted on a number of young officers which they are not well able to afford, for the sake of responding to the invitation of the Government to defend their country at distance; thousands of miles from their homes. These cases must be looked at from a common sense standpoint and not the standpoint of officers of the regular service.

Bill reported.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. POPE moved that report of Committee of the Whole on certain resolutions respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway be now received.

Mr. BLAKE. There was some information to be given on some points which we discussed in committee.

Mr. POPE. I stated the other night that none of the money for elevators at Port Arthur and at Fort William had been expended. I find on enquiry since that $120,000 has been expended. Last autumn, when the winter was setting in, it was found important that the people of Manitoba should have an opportunity of bringing their grain out, and there was no means of getting it out unless elevators were erected at these places. They made a proposition that they would build all the other buildings except those that had been built on certain conditions, and I think hon. gentlemen will find that it was in the interest of the country that we made the arrangement we did.

Mr. BLAKE. There are some explanations to be given in reference to some of the leased lines, especially the St. Lawrence and Ottawa. There were some others, stated in the accounts of Mr. Stephen and Mr. Miall, the expenditures upon which it was thought proper on both sides of the House that further information should be furnished at this stage.

Mr. POPE. There was evidently a misunderstanding or a misprint if you please, with respect to the items which I endeavored to explain to the House. There is an item put down of $2,500,000 as not included, but it is intended that it is included.

Mr. BLAKE. If it be a fact—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has caused Mr. Stephen's original letter to be examined—that that is the fact, it alters the whole basis of the resolutions, perhaps more than the hon. gentleman has considered. I shall not criticise it further now, because there is another stage, but I hope he will see Mr. Stephen's letter, and see if really a misprint of that kind has existed since the 18th March. I admit it is not included and ought not to be included, but, if the letter means something so very different from what it appears to mean, we should like to know the fact.

Mr. CAMERON. (Huron). I do not propose to enter upon a discussion of the merits of the question before the House, which have been so largely and so exhaustively discussed, at all events in regard to the question whether the agreement covered the leased lines. There was a difference of opinion upon that question. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) declared that, according to his interpretation, the leased lines were covered by this proposed security. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Mc Carthy) declared that the security proposed to be taken by the Government did not include the leased lines, and the First Minister was not sure about it. The hon. gentleman said :

"The hon. member for West Durham is not correct in saying that I expressed my opinion that the leased lines were not included in this clause. I simply stated that whether the hon. gentleman was right or whether the hon. member for North Simcoe was right, it was a matter of discussion. I discussed it afterwards without reference to the legal construction of the clause, but I expressed no opinion myself as to whether the clause included the leased lines."

That question ought not to be left in doubt. It ought to be put beyond all reasonable doubt. We ought to know whether or not the proposed security covers the leased lines. While I think the security ought to cover the leased lines, I have no desire that the company should be hampered in extending or improving the leased lines, and therefore the security the Government should obtain should be subject to the right of the company to extend and improve the leased lines. I do not desire to prolong this discussion more than is absolutely necessary to bring to the attention of the House the following amendment, which I move :

That all after the word "that" be left out and the following inserted :—That the said resolution be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with power to amend the same so as to clear away doubts by making express provision that the interests of the company in leased lines shall stand charged with the advances, due provision being made for the creation, if approved by the proper authority, of a prior charge on the company's interest in any leased line for the purpose of extending or improving the same.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Will the hon. gentleman explain his amendment ?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I explained it very fully. I said that while we desire that the country shall have secu-riety upon the leased lines, we have no desire to interfere with the power of the company to extend or improve their lines; any sum obtained for that purpose should have priority over the Government lien; the Government's lien shall cover the leased lines, and that lien shall be subject to any sum the company may require for the purpose of improving and extending the leased lines.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we take the leased lines and allow the company to expend on them any money they like for their extension or improvement, it is giving them a prior mortgage for the purpose of that extension.

Mr. CAMERON. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I think it is better as it is.

Mr. BLAKE. The proposal is one which is calculated to give us control of these leased lines, subject to approval of the competent authority, the Government of the day, without which no additional charge could be created. I stated the very case with reference to the Manitoba South-Western Colonisation Company; I said it was quite possible that the company, in order to keep the extension of that line, might issue bonds on the 52 miles as well as upon the land grant, and I did not want to interfere with that line being further constructed, or the procuring of means for its further construction, but if so procured they shall enter into the line and shall represent value—as the hon. gentleman is always stating that what money they spend on the line will represent value. The hon. gentleman seems to suppose that an obligation is incurred by the company to redeem prior mortgages. No such obligation is at all incurred. What we want is to hold what are alleged to be by the railway company the vital parts of the national system; the Government and the railway company concur in the statement that without these parts the national system cannot prevail. The proposal of the Government is one which it is probable, after what has been said, will result in these alleged vital parts of the national system being severed from the national system altogether, if these resolutions pass in their present form. That being so it is proposed that it should be made clear that they are to be subject to the charge, and in order to allow such extensions and improvements upon them as the Government think proper, the means to be provided on the credit of the lines. My hon. friend proposes just what the hon. gentleman proposed as to the Algoma branch line, that a mortgage may be created on the branch line to complete it to the Sault; so with reference to these leased lines, securities may be created with the assent of the Government for their extension and improvement; then they will become the first charge and we will have the second. If a bad security is created it would be on the responsibility of the Government, but the Government assents to the creation of a first charge, and if the money is spent on the improved line, one may reasonably calculate that the value of the whole line would be improved, and that would be an improvement of the value of the first charge. The Government would have the right to redeem or not, to take the lines if they are worth the money or to leave them if they think they are not worth the money. That gives us a freedom to act, and does not leave us helpless and hopeless with reference to a mortgage on what are said to be important adjuncts to the national system.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before the House met I had an opportunity of seeing the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway on this subject. I think the amendment of the hon. gentleman must be changed to a considerable extent. I move in amendment:

That the resolutions be not concurred in, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with power to consider the expediency of amending the first resolution by adding, after the words "rate and profit," the following words:—Including the interest of the company in any railway lines now leased by it, and saving the right of the company to exercise any power granted to the leased lines by their charters which are at present sanctioned by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the meaning of those words.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This amendment will settle a doubt which was raised the other day. There will be a lien on the leased lines as part of the personal property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; but no doubt in the charters of those leased lines power is given to issue bonds and so forth for the purpose of operating the road. It gives the right to the company to exercise any of the powers under the several charters, as they may be sanctioned by the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. That is to say the special exercise of those powers is to be sanctioned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The amendment should indicate that there should be a special sanction for each exercise of such power.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well. I propose the amendment in the following terms:—

That the resolutions be not now concurred in, but be referred back to Committee of the Whole to consider the expediency of amending the first resolution by adding after the words "real and personal" the following:—Including the interest of the company in any lines now leased by it, excepting the Algoma branch, and saving the right of the company to exercise from time to time any power granted to the leased lines by their charters, and vested in the company, which may be specifically sanctioned by the company.

I hope the hon. gentleman will accept this amendment as it is in the direction generally of the amendment he has moved.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am glad the hon. gentleman has conceded the principle of my amendment, but I think if he had accepted the words also they would have been better and clearer. However, as he has conceded the principle, I will ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not wish in any way to deprive my hon. friend of his resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand from the First Minister that this means that no issue of bonds can take place on any of those leased lines without the express consent of the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It stands thus: That whatever interest the Canadian Pacific Railway have in these lines we have a lien on their leases according to their several terms. I do not know what the terms of those leases may be, but whatever interest they have or whatever powers, we have the power to exercise this right over them.

Mr. BLAKE. And the powers are to be exercised in each case with the sanction of the Government, so that the Government is responsible to the public as to each particular act the company performs.

Amendment (Mr. Cameron) withdrawn.

Motion (Sir John A. Macdonald) agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Some hon. MEMBERS. Mitchell, Mitchell.

Mr. MITCHELL. Several hon. gentlemen are calling my name. May I ask them what they want?

Mr. BLAKE. We want the other property of the company included.

Mr. MITCHELL. All I can tell the hon. gentleman is, that if he calls me property he is very much mistaken. I am not in the pay of the Canadian Pacific Company. Can the hon. gentleman say as much for the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, I can.

Mr. MITCHELL. Public statements and public admissions of mine cannot be brought against me as those of the hon. gentleman can be brought against him of being in the pay of the Grand Trunk. I am not ashamed of my advocacy of a great public enterprise like the Canadian Pacific, and I throw back the taunts and sneers the hon. gentleman has cast against me. Let the hon. gentleman get up and say that he is able to show as clean a record in connection with public companies as I am.

Mr. BLAKE. But always something to the prior mortgage of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not the slave of prejudice and party. I do not condemn the Government on all occasions. I have independence and honesty enough to support the Government when they are right. I do what the hon. gentleman dare not do in that, and I do more, I criticise them when they are in the wrong; and I challenge public opinion inside and outside of this House, whether there is any man who to-day occupies as independent a position as Peter Mitchell does, both as a representative of the people and as an educator of public opinion by his connection with his paper.

Mr. CASEY. It might be perhaps as well to consult the Minister in charge of this Bill in regard to this amendment. It does not seem to be worded exactly in consonance with the views he expressed on this subject the other day, and it would perhaps be as well to consult him as the hon. gentleman told us he had consulted the railway authorities beforehand. We have seen inspired persons apparently assisting in putting this amendment into shape, but the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill has not said a word about it. Perhaps the Acting Minister of Railways would kindly give us the benefit of his advice on the subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved to insert after the words "branch lines of railway," in the 8th line of the first resolution, the words:

And including the interest of the company in any railway lines now leased by it, except the Algoma branch.

And to add at the end of the resolution, the following:—

Provided the rights of the company to exercise from time to time any powers granted to the leased lines by their charters and vested in the company are hereby saved and excepted when specifically sanctioned by the Governor in Council.

Mr. CASEY. I understood that the idea was to include all the lines the company might in future lease as well as those they now hold. The company are looking to form new connections, which are also vital to the success of the road. It would be quite possible for the company to form, by means of future connections, a totally independent road from the Atlantic at least as far west as Chicago, and I think the intention of the resolution as it was first worded, as the right hon. First Minister has stated, was that it should include all of those as well as the lines now leased to the company. I think it would be better to leave the word "now" out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We shall "omit" the word now.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Committee rose and reported, and resolutions as amended read the first time.

Mr. POPE moved that resolutions be read the second time.

Mr. CHARLTON. The necessity for information as to the affairs of the Company is one that cannot be questioned on the part of any member of this House, and in dealing with this company, in voting to it the enormous sums that have been voted to it, this House has been acting hitherto without that amount of information that was necessary in order to arrive at a just and intelligent conclusion as to the necessity for making these grants. The right of Parliament for this full information has been denied by the Government heretofore. A motion was made last Session, when it was proposed to grant aid to the company by a loan of $22,500,000, by my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron), asking that its affairs should be subjected to the investigation of a special committee. That motion was denied. Now, our information with regard to the affairs of this company is only such as the company chooses to give us. I do not charge the company with making false statements, but the company naturally refrains from making many statements with regard to its affairs that the members of this House might desire to have; and if we were in a position, if a committee were struck to look into the affairs of this company and an investigation held, no doubt much valuable information would be elicited. It is in the interest of the people that we should know more about this company's operation in stocks and in stock dividends. We know the nominal stock of the company is $65,000,000; we know the cost of that stock is very much less than the nominal capital; we know that only the first $5,000,000 stock were sold at par, that the next $20,000,000 were sold at 25 cents on the dollar, and that at one time $10,000,000 of the stock were pledged to a Canadian bank for $4,950,000, and that afterwards this stock was sold at a price below that. There are many other matters in connection with the stock operations of this company upon which this House ought to have full information. With regard to its deposit with the Government, said to have been $14,288,000 on the 1st of January last, was that deposit cash? or what was the nature of it? That is something which, in dealing with this company, we are interested in knowing, and which at present we do not know. With regard to dividends, also, we know that large sums in dividends have been paid. According to Mr. Stephen's letter of 18th March, 1885, $5,378,000 was paid in dividends, and according to his letter of 15th January, 1884, $2,128,000 was paid as interest on capital stock. There were suspicions and reports a year ago about construction accounts, about manipulations on the part of the company in the construction of the road, operations similar to the Credit Mobilier operations of the Union Pacific. We were led to suppose that arrangement had been made whereby $45,000,000 of unissued stock of that company would be taken by construction companies, consisting of members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, at a nominal cost, possibly not more than 6, 8 or 10 cents on the dollar. As to the outside equipment, we have no means of knowing what portion of the equipment of that line is chargeable to leased lines and extension lines. With regard to the leased lines, we have very little information. We do not know whether they are a burden on the company, or a source of revenue. All these are matters on which this House ought to have full information before we are in a position intelligently to vote or refrain from voting aid to this company. With regard to the real cost of the work we have no reliable information. It has been supposed that the cost of the work through the prairie section, the real cost, is not as great as the nominal cost, or the cost given to us. I find in the report of the company issued on the 13th January:—

"In considering the financial condition of the company, it may be well to remind the shareholders, that at the beginning of the present year there remained in the hands of the Government an unexpended cash balance of $8,633,082, available for the work under contract with the Government. This sum, as has already been officially stated, is sufficient to complete the work remaining to be done, according to the terms of the contract."

If there was in the hands of the Government a sum sufficient to complete the work, according to the terms of the contract, this year, it would be interesting to know why the company is now calling for further aid to complete the work. Then there is a good deal of information that we ought to have with regard to the character of the line. We hear reports as to the character of the line north of Lake Superior for which the company has drawn subsidy, reports of an unfavorable nature. We do not know whether the line is completed or not, or in what condition it is, or whether to attach credence to the report that there is a probability of the company building its line to the Sault Ste. Marie and making connection with the American lines, and making a practical abandonment of the line north of Lake Superior. Then as to the work done in the Rocky Mountains, we know very little about that. We are told the line will be finished in September, but it is a significant fact, if it is to be finished in September, and if the company is to draw its subsidy from the Government for the completed line, yet the line is not to be open for business till next year. It is quite possible the company will merely lay down a pair of rails, and that a great deal of work will have to be done, after all the subsidy to complete the line has been paid over. I do not accuse the company with withholding information, for the company has not been required to give information, and it is not in its interest to make bare to the public all its affairs; but when a capitalist loans money to a company, he has the right to know in what condition the affairs of the company are. If the people of this Dominion are to loan money to the company, it is the business of members of this House, who are the representatives of the people, who are their agents sent here to look after their interests, to learn about the affairs of the company, to possess more information with regard to its affairs than they do now. I have no desire or intention to detain the House in discussing this matter, but, having stated these few points as briefly as I could, I beg to move:

That all that the words after "that" to the end of the question be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—Before this House shall be called on to grant further aids, and impair existing securities, for aids to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a select committee be appointed to make a full and searching enquiry into the condition and affairs of the company, and particularly as to its accounts, its operations in stocks, stock dividends, construction contracts and outside engagements; the real cost of the work done, the character of the land and the character and proper estimate of the works remaining to be done.

House divided on amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. VAIL. I move the following amendment, which I think will follow from the amendment of the First Minister:

To strike out all after "now" and insert the following:—recommended to a Committee of the whole House with power to provide that, in case the proper authority permits the creation of a mortgage or charge on the Algoma branch, with or without its extension to Sault Ste. Marie, for the purpose of such extension, the whole branch line shall remain charged with the public advances, subject to such mortgage or charge.

Mr. BLAKE. I thought the hon. gentleman would accede to that proposition. As he knows, it is based upon the view that the Algoma Mills branch may become the means of the creation of an important line to Sault Ste. Marie, and there is a hope and expectation that a large traffic with the North-Western States will be developed by the creation of that line. I have already stated that I was heartily in sympathy with the proposal to assist in the construction of that line by means of the credit which might be obtained on the branch, but that I felt indisposed to consent to the branch, immediately it became valuable, being lopped off the trunk line and made an independent line. The company's capital has been engaged to the extent of $2,400,000 in the building of that branch. I am willing that that should be used as a basis of credit to construct the extension, and that the extension itself should be used in the same way, which is the point the hon. gentleman himself desires to attain, but I am anxious that we should retain the power, in case the default is made on the mortgage and the line becomes public property, to take hold of that line as well as the other property referred to. You will thus get no further charge, because it is optional with you whether you pay the first charge or not, but you will have the opportunity of preserving the national line complete just as we have taken power to preserve it complete by including the leased lines in the company's charter. After the statement made by the hon. gentleman in committee, I expected that we would have acquiesced in this amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the amendment may be accepted.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved :

Resolved, that if at any time a line connecting with the United States system of railways shall be in course of construction to a point on the river St. Marie and there be a probability of the early completion thereof, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall desire to continue the Algoma branch to a junction with such line, the Governor in Council may on their decision, and upon such conditions as they shall determine postpone the lien and charge thereon created by the said Act; and continued by these resolutions so that the claim of the Government shall rank on the said branch next after the mortgage hereinafter mentioned; and in case the Governor in Council should permit the creation of such mortgage for the purpose of continuing the said branch as aforesaid the whole branch line so extended shall be charged to the same extent as the present Algoma branch now is charged, but subject to such mortgage; but the Governor in Council may by such order authorize the company to exercise in respect of the said branch the power of mortgaging the same in manner and form as provided by its charter with respect to mortgaging the main line thereof, to such extent per mile as shall be fixed by such order, the proceeds of such mortgage to be applied exclusively to the construction of the extension of the said branch to such junction.

Amendment agreed to.

Committee rose and reported.

On motion for the second reading of the resolutions,

Mr. CASEY. I think there is one point on which we shall all agree, but which has not, however, been provided for in the resolutions. The power given to the company to limit the rates of toll on the Canadian Pacific Railway as soon as the tolls shall have paid 10 per cent on the capital cost of building the road. It has been frequently alluded as a safeguard of some sort to the public who have to use that road. I am not going to discuss the intrinsic value of that safeguard, but to point out that whatever value it might have if the accounts of the company were properly arranged it has no value whatever so long as the receipts of the company from branch lines, leased lines, and extensions, are mixed up with those from the main line, and so long as the expenses on the main line are mixed up with those of the branches, the leased lines, and the extensions. I think that proposition is so self-evident that it does not require to be reasoned. We had a discussion the other day as to what the amount was upon which this 10 per cent, should apply. It was agreed that it should only apply to the amount actually spent by the company in the construction of the main line. It was never intended that it should apply to the capital account which they had incurred on account of branch lines and extensions, outside the scope of the original contract, and of course it was still less expected that it would apply to any expenditure they might incur in connection with leased lines. The necessary conclusion from all that, is that the Executive of the country and Parliament should be put in a position to ascertain with certainty when the limitation power could properly be exercised, when it comes into force and to ascertain how much of the total expenditures of the company have been incurred on the main line; how much on account of branches, leased lines, and extensions; and the same particulars with reference to the receipts. I move

That all the words after "now" be left out, and the following be inserted:—recommitted to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to provide that, as a condition of the proposed aids, and in order to enable Parliament and the Executive to exercise their statutory powers as to tolls, a separate account shall be kept and transmitted to the Government, of the capital expenditure on, and the gross earnings and the working expenses of, the main contract of the line, and the several branches, and extensions, and leased lines.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All this information can be got without the necessity for such a provision.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman made that statement. The other day when we were in committee he seemed to think that such a proposition was reasonable, and I regret also that the statement should have been made until we are more fully informed as to the mode in which the company keeps its accounts. For years we have been endeavoring to obtain statements with reference to the different portions of this enterprise, with a view of providing the basis which was all important as to the calculation of the tolls; first of all, that we should ascertain the amount of capital supplied by the company on the main line; and next, what were the earnings and working expenses of the main line. Several motions which were made were acceded to by the House, and an address was passed for the information. This time the address was moved and agreed to, and in answer we have a letter from the secretary of the company, dated the 30th of May, in which he writes as follows:—

"As requested by your letter of the 12th February, I beg to enclose for the information of the House of Commons, statements showing the gross earnings, expenses, and net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway for each month of the years 1883 and 1884, respectively, on the lines east and west of Lake Superior. Your letter asks that these returns may distinguish between the main line and the lines now worked under the leases from the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company. As the earnings and expenses of the lines operated by this company, east of Lake Superior, are, to a large extent, common to the different sub-sections of this portion of the railway system, the company has not in its account attempted an accurate apportionment of the earnings and expenses between all of the sub-sections and branches, as such accurate apportionment would involve a very large expenditure without any corresponding advantage to the company."

There is the statement. Now, I told the hon. gentleman what I now repeat to the House, that one of the great difficulties which is at this moment being experienced by the United States Government in its attempt to deal with its subsidised lines, with the Union and Central Pacific Railways, is due to the confusion of the accounts. But they have not done there what this company has done—assumed to treat all the lines as one line. They have kept an account of the branch lines, but the difficulty there has been the throwing of a considerable amount of traffic and special arrangements as to the shares of the profits, on the branch lines and off the main line, which alone is charged with the Government money. If that sort of thing is to go on, with a system of joint or unified accounts, it disables you from knowing what the operations of each part of the system are. It is quite certain that originally it was never contemplated by the company but that the accounts should be kept in such shape as to enable you to ascertain, first how much money supplied by the company has gone into the main line, and secondly what are the earnings, and what are the expenses of the main line. Of course, with reference to its own extensions, branches, and leased lines, just as with reference to any lines which may be connected, which cover a haul over more than the main line, arrangements are made as to the proportions of the haul. But, if the accounts are to be one, it is quite clear that as to the original expenditures, and still less, as to the earnings and expenses from which you arrive at a determination of what the profit of the main line is, and what you ought to do with the toll, there will not be that information which will enable Parliament and the Executive to discharge its duties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I take it, that under the powers given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, every branch line they build, becomes a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway line, and the accounts of its extensions and branch lines will be the accounts of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper. If there are any leased lines, accounts will be kept of them in consequence of the arrangements between the leasing company and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should think they would be kept, as a matter of course.

Mr. BLAKE. No, they are not kept. That is the very thing we ask for, but they do not keep it!

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events I should not like at present to assent to this amendment.

Mr. DAVIES. I desire to call attention to the security which is taken for the $10,000,000 advanced to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. By the wording of the resolution the security the country has for the payment of the interest on that money is the lands alone, and if the lands alone do not furnish sufficient money to pay the interest, we are not allowed to come upon the ordinary earnings of the company for the payment of the interest. The resolution expressly declares that the ordinary earnings of the company shall not be appropriated to the payment of the interest at all until after the whole of the lands are sold. We pointed out that many circumstances might arise to induce the Government to postpone a forced sale of the lands, and in the meantime we have no security for the payment of our interest. We pointed out also that no argument could be urged for appropriating the revenues of the company for the payment of dividends in preference to the payment of the interest on the money they borrowed on the road. I contend that the interest on the money the country advances should be paid out of the revenues of the road should the sale of the lands fail, before those revenues are applied to the payment of the dividends of the shareholders. I would therefore move :—

That all the words after "now" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, to provide that the charge on the railways and its revenues for the sum of $9,880,912 expressly charged on the land grant, shall become operative forthwith, in case the lands do not yield enough to meet after payment of prior charges, the principal and interest on the said sum as the instalments fall due, and shall not be deferred indefinitely as proposed by the resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This matter was fully discussed in committee, and I do not think it is necessary to occupy the time of the House upon it. I am opposed to the resolution.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose hon. gentlemen cheer at the prospect of again voting on a question on which they gave a very bad vote last year. It was proposed at that time that the accounts of the company should be audited by the Auditor General. The majority did not see fit to assent to that proposition. It seems to me that the events which have taken place since last year, and which have brought the company back for further assistance, justify this course being followed. I, therefore, beg to move :

To leave out all the words after "now" to the end of the question, and insert the following instead thereof:—recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, to provide as a condition of the proposed aids, that the accounts of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be subject to the audit of the Auditor General of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. gentleman will accept this amendment. I agree with my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) that events which have occurred since last Session should have caused hon. gentleman to perceive the expediency of something of this kind. We have had within the last few weeks a discussion with reference to the affairs of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have had various statements made, but no satisfactory detailed information, as to the condition of the company's accounts, or as to the causes which have induced them to come for further aid. We have had some light thrown on these things, but certainly not that light which should have been thrown had these accounts been subjected to a proper audit. Even today, the Acting Minister of Railways was obliged to admit that a sum of not less than $120,000 had been practically misapplied between him and the company. We voted $962,000 to be expended by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under a contract with us. The company claimed that certain specified works were to be done by the Government on the line between Winnipeg and Port Arthur in order to make it tolerable to them, and they offered to do these works, and the Government contracted with the company to do them for that sum. These works did not include an elevator and some other items in this account which I need not now refer to. Of the amount of $962,000 which was voted by Parliament for the construction of these particular works, $872,173 had been paid, and they have placed a sum of no less than $120,550 to build other works altogether than those which the Government were liable to build, which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had contracted to build, and which were essential. The other works were essential, no doubt, and proper for the carrying on of the line, else the Government would not have been bound to supply them and the company could not have exacted them. The Government were bound to supply them and the company were entitled to exact them. The company contracted to build them, and the money which they were to be paid for the building of them was, to the extent of $120,550, applied to the building of this elevator, which was entirely outside of those works. The company, in its application to Parliament, told us that among the extra things it had to build was this very elevator, the money for which they have received from the Government under the arrangement made by the Acting Minister of Railways. They told us this was one of the financial difficulties they had been plunged in—this very obligation to construct this railway which has been built under this arrangement out of our money. Then they gave us a general statement of $2,500,000 extra expenditure between Sudbury and Nepigon. The president told us in his letter that this is not included in the other items of the account. We discussed the whole question on this basis; we enquired what it was; the Minister gave us some vague information about it, and a week after he tells us he thinks there is a misprint, that in the president's letter the word "not" ought to be left out, and that this sum is included in other items. The Acting Minister of Railways stated this without having duly weighed all the consequence of his statement, because he finds he has got from bad to worse, and I fully expect a retraction from him of that statement. I expect he will tell us the letter is correctly printed. This only shows the importance of further enquiry. The hon. the Acting Minister does not know what has become of this large item of $2,500,000; we do not know, at this moment, whether it is included or not in the financial arrangement to which I have referred. Besides the demand being reasonable, it is not without precedent. The neighboring republic, which granted assistance in money to two lines, and in lands to many railways, have found the necessity of creating an auditor of the accounts of subsidised roads. An Act of Congress was passed, entitled an Act to create an auditor of railway accounts and for other purposes, and it was approved June 19, 1878. I will read a few of the sections, to show what in the neighboring Republic, after a considerable experience of the operations of subsidised companies, they thought was necessary, in the public interest:—

"Sec. 3. That the duties of the said auditor, under and subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be, to prescribe a system of reports to be rendered to him by the railroad companies whose roads are in whole or in part west, north or south of the Missouri River, and to which the United States have granted any loan of credit or subsidy in bonds or lands.

"Sec. 4. That each and every railroad company aforesaid which has received from the United States any bonds of the said United States, issued by way of loan to aid in constructing or furnishing its road, or which has received from the United States any lands granted to it for a similar purpose, shall make to the said auditor any and all such reports as he may require from time to time, and shall submit its books and records to the inspection of the said auditor, or any person acting in his place and stead, at any time that the said auditor may request, in the office where said books and records are usually kept; and the said auditor, or his authorised representative, shall make such transcripts from the said books and records as he may desire.

"Sec. 5. That if any railroad company aforesaid shall neglect or refuse to make such reports as may be called for, or refuse to submit its books and records to inspection, as provided in section 4 of this Act, such neglect or refusal shall operate as a forfeiture, in each case of such neglect or refusal, of a sum of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, to be recovered by the Attorney General of the United States, in the name and for the use and benefit of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, in all such cases of neglect or refusal as aforesaid, to inform the Attorney General of the facts, to the end that such forfeitures may be judicially enforced."

I shall not quote extracts from the reports of the auditor of railway accounts, but will content myself with saying that I have reports here which show what valuable information was afforded to the people of that country by this means—information of which we are to be deprived.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly, the Auditor General had only the right to audit the accounts of such railways as those in which the Government were entitled to receive a percentage of the earnings.

Mr. BLAKE. Not at all. I have read the Act. It applies to all railways to which subsidies have been given.

Mr. MILLS moved:

To leave out all the words after "now," and to insert the following words instead thereof:—recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, to provide as a condition of the proposed aids, that any contracts to be let for the construction of any part of the works of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, whether on the main line, branches, extensions or leased lines, shall be left only after each published notice, and on such conditions as the Governor in Council shall approve; and that no director of the Company shall be directly or indirectly interested either as member of a construction company, or otherwise in any such contract.

He said: I need say nothing in support of this amendment. The principle is one that is well recognised. Every one acquainted with the construction of the Union Pacific, knows the frauds that were committed, and the improper manner in which the apparent expenditure of the company was increased by the construction company being composed in large part of those who were members of the Railway company itself.

Amendment negatived on the same division as the last.

Mr. WELDON. I beg to move:

That all the words after "now" to the end of the question be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof:—Recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, to provide as a condition of the proposed aids that so long as any part of the advances dealt with by the said Resolutions or interest thereon remains unpaid, none of the resources of the company shall be expended in acquiring interests in railways or railway securities in the United States with a view to an Atlantic Ocean Terminus in the United States Territory.

After Recess.

Mr. WATSON. I wish to move an amendment similar to that which I moved last year, inasmuch, as the Government, I believe, have it in their power to make terms with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and as it has been claimed of late that, under the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway, they have the right to a monopoly of railways in Manitoba. I look on this question as one of great importance to the Province of Manitoba. I feel quite satisfied that the disallowance policy of this Government in reference to Manitoba has prevented a great many miles of railway from being built in that Province, particularly in Southern Manitoba. The charter for the Manitoba South-Western Railway was granted some years ago, and that line was prevented from being built in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We have that direct from the First Minister himself. The other night he stated that, not only were the Government alarmed at the idea of American capitalists investing in this road in South-Western Manitoba, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company became alarmed also. I think the Government and the people of this country ought to encourage American capitalists to invest in Canadian railways if they are going to open up the country, and I am satisfied that, if the Government had aided and encouraged the Manitoba South-Western, it would have been built years ago, and the remarks that fell from the leader of the Opposition would not have been called for when he stated that he believed farmers there had immense quantities of wheat in their granaries and still were hard up. I am sorry to say that is the case. It does not follow that a man is well off because he has 1,000 bushels of wheat in his granary, when he has no means of getting to market. The Government are aware of this, because they have had petitions from Southern Manitoba asking for liberal grants to the Manitoba South-Western, and last winter the delegates were here asking for aid from the Government and urging the necessity of having the road built, and they laid before the Government the facts as to there being thousands of bushels of grain in Southern Manitoba that could not be got to market. These people expected a road some years ago, and have not got it yet. From the statement made by the manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company there is even yet some doubt as to whether they will have railway communication this year, even although the South-Western have a land grant given them. I believe they would have been satisfied if the Government had encouraged the South-Western company and had not shut off American capitalists as they did and as it was admitted in the House that they did. It is strange that when American capitalists desire to build a road in the Province of Manitoba for the purpose of opening up that country, they should not be allowed to do so. We find that there is now a proposition before this House to give the money of this Dominion for the purpose of constructing a railway through the State of Maine. Now if the Government of Canada feel that it is in the interest of this country to give aid for the construction of a railway through the State of Maine to make a short connection with the seaboard, I do not see why they should interfere with Americans building railways altogether in our own territory. I will read the remarks of the First Minister with reference to this South-Western Railway Company:

"It was known that a great many American speculators took an interest in the line. It was believed, in the old country especially, and believed generally, that the efforts to build a line on condition of getting certain grants of land were made in concert with certain railway influences, railway enterprises in the United States, which were hostile to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That conviction was strengthened by various circumstances which have sprung up from time to time, and there was a strong opinion, in which I myself for a time shared, that this was going to be used for the purpose of strangling the Canadian enterprise."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a direct statement that any Americans who wish to engage in railway enterprises in our own territory shall be prevented. For what purpose? For the purpose of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am sure that is a mistake, so far as the Province of Manitoba is concerned, and I believe it is a mistake in the interest of the whole Dominion. We have a statement by the First Minister that the Canadian Pacific Railway can carry freight at a cheaper rate than any other railway, because they have the whole road themselves under one management. It has been stated in this House that grain had to be shipped to Manitoba for the purpose of getting cheap rates over the Canadian Pacific Railway to the seaboard. If that is the case, we would surely expect that the Government, when they have it in their power, as at present, would change the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, in so far as disallowance is concerned. If that is to be the policy of the Government, let us know it, but do not let the country be bound down for 20 years under that contract and prevent any other road from being built to the south. If the Canadian Pacific Railway can carry freight cheaper than any other road to the south, they will get the freight of those roads; and the branches, instead of diverting freight from the Canadian Pacific Railway, will be used to convey freight to it. We have other reasons for urging that this amendment should be adopted, in the statements of the Minister of Railways last year in this House, and also in statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite during the debate on the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. I will read what Sir Charles Tupper said in 1883, when he was opposed to doing away with the monopoly clause:

"I say the interests of this country demand that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be made a success, and the man who does any act by which that success is imperilled takes a course which is hostile to the interests of Canada. But somebody may ask what about the interests of Manitoba? Are the interests of Manitoba and the North-West to be sacrificed to the policy of Canada? I say, if it is necessary, yes."

Now, that is the language of the Minister of Railways in 1883. In 1884 he made use of different language altogether, and apparently he was ready at that time, or in the near future, to revise the policy of the Government, and not only the policy of the present Government, but that of the late Government. In delivering his railway speech he made use of the following language with regard to the policy of disallowance:--

"I said that the present Government, when we came into power, adopted that policy; that we felt, as our predecessors did, that grappling with so gigantic a work as the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we were bound to adopt every possible means of protecting our own line against having its traffic drawn to lines to the south; and, mark you, this was at a time when we did not contemplate at an early day carrying the Canadian Pacific Railway farther than Port Arthur. I said, further, that when we made it obligatory upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to extend the line at once north of Lake Superior, giving us an all-rail route from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean, we felt obliged to give that company, upon which we imposed such onerous obligations, all the security that we had considered necessary, and that our predecessors in the Government had considered necessary for the protection of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But I am glad to be able to state to the House that, although true to that policy, the Government refused to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American railways to the south. Such is the evidence presented by the operation of the line, so far as it has gone; such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself, in regard to the ability of a through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and by the inherent power of its own advantages to maintain its position, notwithstanding any competition to which it may be subjected. We are now in a position to review and to reconsider the policy of the late Government, and the policy of the present Government, as to the continued necessity for any long period of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition within the Province of Manitoba, and I am glad to be able to state to the House that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior the Government feel that it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba connecting it with American railways to the south. I can give no better evidence to the House and the country of the advanced position which we consider this great enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has attained, than when I say that I feel it is consistent with what we owe to the people of this country and to that great national work that the Government should not feel it incumbent on themselves to pursue the restrictive policy within the Province of Manitoba which we have hitherto been obliged to maintain."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that statement was made by the late Minister of Railways when he was advocating the loan of last year. I look upon that statement as possessing considerable authority. At that time the whole Dominion believed the statement he made, that in the near future, when the road was constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government would no longer disallow charters to build railways in the Province of Manitoba, but that these roads should be allowed to be built. I am sorry such has not been the case, and that the policy of the Government foreshadowed by Sir Charles Tupper is apparently not to be carried out. I may say that the Emerson and North-Western Railway charter was disallowed by the Minister of Justice because it came within the spirit of the contract. That was the reason given for the disallowance, not that the contract demanded that it should be disallowed. In the debate in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in 1880, the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) stated that after this contract was ratified Manitoba would have the right to build railways to the international boundary line, and at that time there was actually a charter granted for the construction of a road in connection with an American line, and we were told that the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would not interfere with it. We also have the statement of the First Minister during the debate on the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, to the effect that railway construction in Manitoba could not be interfered with; that Manitoba had the right to grant charters for railways in that Province; in fact, to use his own words, they could not check Manitoba. Railway charters have, however, been disallowed. The Emerson and North-Western Railway charter was disallowed because it was against the spirit of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and, later on, during this Session, coming with the authority of the Government, through the Minister of Railways, a decision was given in the Railway Committee that a railway charter could not be granted to railways to connect at the international boundary line with other lines. This was given on the application for a charter made by myself to build a railway from Portage la Prairie to the Lake of the Woods. The reason why the charter could not be granted during this Session was stated in these words:

"With reference to the Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Portage la Prairie and Lake of the Woods Railway and Navigation Company, referred back to the committee for further consideration, they have agreed again to report that the preamble thereof is 'not proven' to their satisfaction, because the said Bill is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act 44 Victoria, chapter 1, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, and with the contract thereby ratified and made."

It has apparently become the belief of the Government, and they are not afraid to express it through their officers, that it is not only the policy of the Government to disallow charters for railways in the Province of Manitoba, but to recognise the fact that they are bound by solemn contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company not to allow railways to be built south east in Manitoba. Now is the time for the Government to call upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to make certain concessions, for the company are now asking further aid. We may not have an opportunity—I hope we shall not—of seeing the Canadian Pacific Railway asking for further aid; and this, therefore, is a favorable opportunity for having that objectionable clause struck out of the contract. We have had it stated by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, at different times, that there were strong reasons for believing that the monopoly clause would be struck out. The hon. member for Provencher stated that the reason why branch lines could not be built in Manitoba by companies independent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was because that the company had full control of local companies, and branch lines would have to make terms with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We had also the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), during the discussion on the railway from Medicine Hat to the Galt coal mines, using the following language:—

"Then, when you get to Medicine Hat, you must remember it has to be carried on the Canadian Pacific Railway, thence to the point of consumption, Winnipeg, or Portage la Prairie, or any other point. The Canadian Pacific Railway has the power, by its control of the rates, to put on a position of equality all the coal dealers or producers in all that country."

It is wrong that any corporation should have power to control rates. I was surprised to hear that hon. gentleman make the statement to which I have referred, because hon. gentlemen opposite have claimed that the Government have a right to regulate the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway; but I believe that on account of the watering of the stock of the company, and for other reasons, that right is unavailing, and the Government have no control of rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. member for North Victoria has apparently come to the same conclusion—that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have full control of the rates over the road, and that it can regulate the prices at which coal can be transported over it. I am not giving my opinion as to the necessity of competition on account of through rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The rates charged on wheat to Montreal last fall were reasonable, but still we might have better rates if we had competition and more railways, local and independent roads in the Province. I desire to read a resolution passed by the Winnipeg city council, on 2nd June, which shows to some extent the manner in which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is serving the people of Winnipeg, especially with respect to the southern travel. Even supposing the Canadian Pacific Railway is completed north of Lake Superior, and there is a steamship line running from Port Arthur east, still the people of Manitoba may wish to travel south, and visit St. Paul or Chicago. The resolution passed by the city council is as follows:—

“That this city, having bonused the Canadian Pacific Railway to a very large extent, feels that its citizens are entitled to some consideration at the hands of that corporation, and would therefore request that the said Canadian Pacific Railway do alter the running of their trains to the south, as will be more convenient for our citizens, in giving them closer connections with the trains at Emerson and Gretna, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to General Superintendent Egan.”

The resolution was moved by Alderman Pearson and seconded by Alderman Spencer, both of whom are Conservatives. Passengers could not make connection with trains going south at Gretna and St. Vincent, because of the change of time made by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Passengers for St. Paul had to lie over eight hours at those points, in consequence of the train of the Canadian Pacific Railway arriving four hours too late to make connection with the trains south. It is not right that the people should be subjected to such annoyances by this company. When this change of time was made another change was brought into effect, namely, that the company would not carry immigrants from Gretna to Winnipeg except at first-class rates. That is to be regretted, for we have the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that a great many people from the United States are going into Manitoba. But we find the Canadian Pacific Railway offering no inducements to immigrants coming from the south into Manitoba. For the reasons given, I move the following amendment.—

That all the words after “that,” in the said resolution, be left out and the following inserted instead thereof:—That, as a condition of granting the proposed aids to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company it shall be stipulated that the company shall no longer claim that no line of railway shall be permitted to be constructed within Manitoba south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, except south of such lines as shall run south-west, or to the westward of south-west, and that no lines of railway shall be permitted to be constructed within Manitoba within 15 miles of latitude 49.

Mr. ROYAL. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has stated that the Premier of the Government has broken his promise; that the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway, of stopping the issue of charters for lines going in certain directions, shall be discontinued after the building of the line north of Lake Superior. Well, I do not see that the hon. gentleman's word has been broken. We all know that the line has not been built yet; that the line, no doubt, will be operated some time in the latter part of this summer, and therefore I do not believe that it becomes the hon. gentleman to say that the Government promise has not been fulfilled with regard to the branch lines south of the Canadian Pacific Railway and in Manitoba. One, certainly, would have thought that the hon. member would have rejoiced in this fact, and would have thought it his duty to inform the House that the Canadian Pacific Railway have lately announced that they would construct the line of the South-Western Manitoba. Lately the Premier of the Province, Mr. Norquay, wrote to Mr. Egan, the superintendent of the eastern section of the road, to know whether the company were ready to construct that branch line, and the answer came, which has been published in the papers of Manitoba, that such was the intention of the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Those who know the politics of our Province are aware that much has been said about the poor, down-trodden and long-suffering farmers of south-western Manitoba; but Sir, they say nothing of the news that the farmers will be relieved to that extent; that the South-Western will be built to Whitewater Lake, that is, north of Turtle Mountain. But consistency seems not to be one of the jewels which are treasured by hon. gentlemen opposite and their party. Here is a new departure with regard to the building of branch lines in Manitoba, which have been so long and so persistently advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite, and out of which they have tried to make so much political capital. We find that the Hamilton Times, which, I believe, is one of the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, in one of its latest issues, has the following:—

“When Governments pay for railways with land grants, the railways are constructed away in advance of settlement. These four railways—”

That is, those which are to be subsidised by land grants under these resolutions.

“These four railways now projected will run some hundreds of miles into the heart of the North-West Territories. There is no present need of such a thing. There is plenty of untilled land in Manitoba proper, within 100 miles of Red River. Had the Government furnished the cash to build a few short lines of railway from Red River, and allowed the land to be taken up by none but actual settlers, who should get it without any price down, but with the understanding that the land should always be subject to a direct tax for public purposes, Manitoba would be pretty well settled. Produce would not have to be hauled to market hundred of miles through uninhabited regions. There are not 200,000 people in the whole of Manitoba and the North-West. That population could be comfortably located on a tract 200 miles long by 100 miles wide, and 500 or 600 miles of railway would be ample to serve such a district.”

For these reasons the Hamilton Times opposed free grants of lands to the Manitoba South-Western, the Manitoba and North-Western, the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake, and other roads to which the Government decided to give material assistance in the shape of land subsidies. That is a new departure in the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. After clamoring against the Government for not compelling the Canadian Pacific Railway to give us branch lines before the trunk line was constructed, now that we are assured of these branch lines, they say we do not want them, or if we need them, we need them only in certain directions. In other words, the population should be located along a certain line and we should compel the settlers to leave their farms and settle within a reasonable distance of the line already built. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has spoken of the resolution passed by the city council of Winnipeg. I really do not see that that resolution has anything to do with this question. We all know it is the interest, not only of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but also of the country at large, to prevent our immigrants coming through the United States. We all know very well what efforts have been made by the railway authorities on the American border to prevent our immigrants coming to the North-West. They have had recourse to all sorts of placards and denunciations, magnifying the troubles in that country for that purpose. Now that the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities are trying to prevent immigrants passing through that territory, we see hon. gentlemen opposite seeking to make some little capital out of the resolution passed by the city council for, no doubt, a personal object. The object of the change in the time table of the Canadian Pacific Railway is evident to everybody. If by this change of time immigrants were subjected to a longer route, a greater loss of time, and greater cost for travelling, there might be something in the resolution passed by the city council, and my hon. friend opposite might have something to complain of. But, on the contrary, the only object of the change in the time table is to compel the immigrants who come from Europe to Canada to take our own roads, instead of being captured by the American railway authorities. As I have stated, the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities are giving the trip from our seaboard to Winnipeg or to any part of the North-West Territories for a mere nominal sum; and I challenge the hon. gentleman to say whether the American railway authorities are prepared to do the same thing. Even if they were prepared to do it, it is not only important to the Canadian Pacific Railway that its traffic should be increased, but it is highly beneficial and patriotic to Canada. Now, the hon. gentleman has tried to make out that the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway for transporting produce are extravagantly high. In fact, he said we wanted competition in order to reduce those rates. I suppose the hon. gentleman—and I do not blame him for it—wants to have his produce carried to the seaboard for nothing. I do not think that is the right policy. I think a healthy condition of the company requires that it should impose such rates as will yield a profit. We have the admission of the hon. gentleman himself that last fall, when the movement of farm produce was commencing, the rates were tolerably low. In fact, he said he had nothing to find fault with. Then, I do not see what is the object of the hon. gentleman's amendment. If it were carried, it would no doubt have the effect of destroying the resolution, which provides for a free grant of land and for the construction of branch lines of railway in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, which he himself and his party, in fact everybody, has been clamoring for during the past three or four years. I suppose I need not say that I am going to vote against the amendment, because I think it would destroy the very thing we most need in Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Watson.

Amendment negatived; and resolutions read the second time on the same division reversed, and concurred in.

Mr. POPE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 153) further to amend the Acts respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to provide for the completion and successful operation thereof.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that motion is put, I desire to say a few words on the subject to which I gave notice a few nights ago I would call the attention of the House. It is, I think, very much to be regretted that, among the other consequences of this unusually protracted Session, the question to which I am about to refer should not have been considered at an earlier period. It must be obvious to every hon. gentleman in this House, and to every person out of it, who has paid any attention to the subject, that the whole financial situation has changed very materially since the period at which the Minister of Finance made his usual exposition of the state of the country. It is quite clear, not only that we are likely to be subjected to many additional charges, which could not be foreseen at that time, and for which, from that cause, no provision was made, but also that a very considerable number of items of revenue on which the Minister relied can no longer be depended upon. Therefore, the whole position has changed in both respects, and changed materially for the worse. Now, Sir, in the first place, we have come so near the end of the year that it is comparatively easy for us to see what our actual expenditure and our actual receipts are likely to be. On the 1st June of this year I find that our total revenue amounted to \$29,633,000, and our total expenditure was given at the sum of \$28,204,000. Those hon. gentlemen who will take the pains to refer to the same return for the year 1884 will observe that on the corresponding date, the 31st May, the expenditure amounted to \$25,792,000; in other words, that our expenditure was \$2,400,000 more on the 1st June last past than the year before, while our receipts, taking into account the fact that we borrowed, by an expedient which was alluded to at some length the other evening, about a million dollars from the revenues of 1886—our receipts, making allowance for that addition, were almost identical with those of June, 1884, which were \$28,527,000, as against a revenue of \$29,633,000 on the 1st June last, including, as I have said, that particular million for which either the Government at large or the Minister of Inland Revenue is to be thanked, and which was effected by the judicious expedient of giving six or seven weeks' notice to the parties affected of the intention of the Government to impose additional taxation on spirits. Now, the result of that is, that if we suppose that the expenditure up to the 1st July next be the same as the expenditure to the corresponding period last year, and there is no reason to suppose that it will be less—on the contrary, there is only too much reason to suppose it will be largely increased—our total expenditure, exclusive, apparently, of all the sums that are to be expended in the North-West, would amount, on the 1st July next, to the sum of about \$33,515,000. I am not in possession of such data as would enable me to make any accurate estimate of the portion of that expenditure which is charged on account of the North-West rebellion; but taking into consideration the fact that the Ministers did not deem it necessary to ask for more than \$700,000 prior to the 1st June, I suppose I would be doing ample justice if I allowed that \$700,000 as part of the expenditure up to the 1st June. Now, we know from the statement made by the Minister of Customs, that he expects that a sum of about \$4,000,000, at least, will be expended in connection with the North-West troubles; and if, as seems not unreasonable, we divide that sum of \$4,000,000 between the years 1885 and 1886, it is clear that, allowing for the \$700,000 of which I spoke, and adding the difference between that and the \$2,000,000 which I presume will be charged to 1885, our total expenditure up to the 1st July, 1885, cannot well be less than \$34,819,000. Now, in the same way, if our receipts during the balance of the year 1885 correspond to those that we received in the balance of the year 1884, it is equally clear that our total income, even including the amount so dexterously added to the revenue of the present year, cannot exceed \$33,000,000, and that there will be, as I intimated some time ago, a probable deficit of about \$1,819,000 on the transactions of the current year. Of course, in making those statements I am bound to call the attention of the House to the fact that I am making them on the authority and on the data supplied by the Ministers especially in charge of these Departments; but from what we know and from the experience of past years, it is tolerably evident those figures to which I have alluded are likely to be very nearly attained. If you chose to look back to 1882 you will find that on the 1st of June of that year our total revenue amounted to \$29,554,000, and our total expenditure as recorded in the Gazette \$22,553,000. Similarly, on the 1st of June 1883, our total revenue was \$33,330,000 and our total expenditure \$24,109,000; and, as I have already remarked, on the 1st of June last year our total revenue amounted to \$28,527,000 and our total expenditure to \$25,792,000; so that the House will see (if they take the pains to compare those figures with the total receipts and the total expenditure for the three years 1882, 1883 and 1884) that the estimate I make is a very moderate estimate indeed. It is to be remembered that this estimate includes the whole capital amount received during 1885 from Dominion lands, whatever that may be, and that it does not include the sum charged to capital account, amounting, apparently, to \$330,000 during the year 1885; so that, giving the Government the benefit of that very extraordinary proceeding, which has been initiated for the first time this year, of charging all the expenditures to capital account and of crediting all the receipts for Dominion lands to ordinary revenue, still even so, on the data presented to us by those hon. gentlemen, our total expenditure would amount to \$34,819,000, as against a probable revenue, apparently, of \$33,000,000 in round numbers, assuming, as I said, that precisely as much will be received in 1885 as was received in 1884, after the 1st of June; and I may add that in making that allowance I am dealing very liberally with the hon. gentlemen, because it is tolerably self evident that, after the enormous sum paid in on account of Excise in the month of May, the odds are very great that the Excise in the month of June will show a very serious shrinkage. I may add that in addition to the expedient of borrowing \$1,000,000 from the revenue of next year, and in addition to the expedient of adding to capital account on the one side and crediting to revenue on the other, in the case of Dominion lands, these gentlemen have also added to capital account a very considerable number of items for rolling stock and other similar expenditures on account of the Intercolonial Railway, all of which, in a proper system of book-keeping, would, I have always contended, be charged, as they ought to be, to the ordinary expenditure of the year; so that, if you were to take into account the sum thus borrowed from the succeeding year, the sum improperly charged or improperly credited to revenue from Dominion lands, and also to make allowance for the sum improperly charged to capital account on the score of the Intercolonial Railway, the House will see that the large deficit which is apparently impending would be very seriously aggravated, and would amount nearly, if not quite, to the sum of \$3,000,000. Now, I am less concerned with that, because I am quite willing to admit that a very considerable proportion of that deficit is due to the extraordinary and unforeseen occurrences which have recently taken place in the North-West. I am not, therefore, censuring the Government on the score of that expenditure, although it is my duty to point out to the House that, if even one-half of that amount be charged to the ordinary expenditure of 1885, it will produce the results which I have spoken of, and even if we were to put that aside, unless the hon. gentlemen avail themselves of the expedient of borrowing this \$1,000,000 from next year's revenue, their account will show a very serious deficit for the present year. But it is more important to us to see how our accounts are likely to turn out for the year 1886. I take the statement of the Minister of Finance himself, and I see from that statement that, making allowances for certain additional sums which he expected to bring down in the shape of Supplementary Estimates, although these have not yet reached us, the hon. gentleman only expected to have a surplus of about \$700,000, and that surplus was entirely made up of the \$700,000 which he stated he expected to receive from Dominion lands. If that item, which I contend is quite improperly credited to revenue, be deducted, the hon. gentleman, on the 3rd March, 1885, barely expected to make both ends meet. Since that period, as everybody knows, there have been additional charges of very serious magnitude incurred in connection with the North-West and elsewhere. There have been very serious losses of revenue on which the hon. gentleman depended, which must be deducted from his prospective receipts. I will give in brief the details of the additional expenditures, as far as I have been able to estimate them from the statements made to us by Ministers, and I will then proceed to point out to the House the several items in which I think the hon. gentleman is likely to fall short of his expected receipts, and we will then consider what position we are likely to be placed in in dealing with our financial position for the ensuing year. It is well known to the House that the expenditure for the Mounted Police has amounted to very nearly \$500,000 a year; and if you double that force, taking into account the fact that they are likely to be compelled to move about to a very considerable extent, and that they must be maintained in a high state of efficiency, it is not too much to say that the additional 500 men, whom it is proposed to add to the force, will require a like sum, and that the total will amount, for several years to come, to very little, if at all, less than \$1,000,000 a year for the service of the Mounted Police. That will make an addition of \$500,000 a year to our permanent charges for next year. It is equally clear that the hopes the Ministers held out to themselves and us of a large reduction in the expenditure for Indians are not at all likely to be realised. I believe that, so far from being able to save, as they expected, a matter of \$300,000 or \$400,000 in the charge for Indians, we must expect that the charge in future will at least equal, and probably considerably exceed, the sum we have heretofore paid. It will be necessary, I apprehend, to confine the Indians more closely to their reserves, and it will be also necessary and prudent not to drive these people to despair. I fear we must go on in the system we have commenced, of feeding them, and this will cost us at least \$500,000 more than (not the sum we have been in the habit of spending) but the sum the Minister expected to expend in the Estimates he laid before us for 1886. Then there is the question of the other forces, to which the Minister of Militia alluded this very afternoon. We have not the details, but I think I am not far astray in estimating the additional expenditure at \$150,000 or \$200,000. It may be more, but I take the smaller sum, and call it \$150,000. So far as I could understand, from the explanations given by the Minister of Customs, in passing the Manitoba resolutions, the additional subsidy to be granted to Manitoba will involve a future perpetual grant of \$150,000, or thereabouts. It is also quite clear that a very considerable addition must be made to the interest for which the Minister expected to provide when he made his statement to us in March last. He did not, apparently, expect at that time to be called upon to provide \$5,000,000 more for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In fact, as far as I understood him, he reckoned upon being able to receive a large sum from that company within a few years, and upon making it a basis for his financial operations. Now, in addition to that \$5,000,000 we will, according to the statement of the Government themselves, be obliged to provide for not less than \$4,000,000 more, to defray the expenditure we have incurred in the North-West. We have on the Table propositions to add \$80,000 a year to our permanent charge for a considerable number of years, in connection with our expenditure, for a single railway enterprises, and we have many other expenditures which will also involve a considerable addition to our permanent charge; but as these have not been passed by the House, I will, for the present, rather under-estimate than over-estimate the amount, and so I put down, as the approximate charge for interest that we will be called upon to incur, over and above the amount which the Minister estimated, \$140,000, being the interest upon the two sums of \$4,000,000 and \$5,000,000, and the \$80,000 additional which is to be given to one of the various lines we propose to subsidise. Then we have another little item, the expenditure which will be incurred in putting into effect the Franchise Bill, if that measure should become law, and we have divers minor increases, some in connection with your own office, Mr. Speaker, some in connection with a variety of other offices, such as the appointment of two Librarians, and matters of that kind, all of which, I think, are not likely to be much, if at all, below the sum of \$200,000. Therefore, it appears that there is a very strong probability, to say the least, that we will increase our fixed charges by the sum \$1,940,000, over and above amounts which the Minister computed as likely to be incurred when he made his financial statement. Then, on the other hand, I do not think the Government themselves will contend that they are likely, in the ensuing year, to receive the \$700,000 as land revenue on which they counted. I am afraid that the certain results of the troubles in the North-West will be greatly to reduce the expected revenue from that source, and if we receive \$300,000 or \$400,000 it will be more than I myself should expect; and, waiving for the moment the question whether that sum should be credited at all to ordinary receipts, it is quite clear, I think, that we must deduct at least \$300,000 from the revenue expected from that source. Then comes another item of great interest and of great importance—the \$1,500,000 which the Minister expected to receive from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as interest upon the loan to them at 5 per cent. I think we would do wisely, as prudent men, to strike that out of our calculation altogether. I do not myself believe in lending our debtors the money to pay us interest, and unless that is done by the Government, I have not the slightest expectation that, during the ensuing year, at any rate, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be in any position to pay us this large sum of money. So, Sir, the practical result is this: while our permanent charges are likely to be increased by \$1,940,000, it is only too probable that the revenue on which the hon. gentleman depended will be diminished by a sum total of not less than \$1,800,000 (\$1,500,000 on account of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who—by the way, were in default the other day on their interest—\$300,000 on account of lands) making altogether a sum total of \$3,740,000 of expenditure on the one hand and receipts on the other, in which, to all appearance, we will fall short. Now, Sir, you have got in addition to that to remember, that dividing, as I propose, the \$4,000,000 that our trouble in the North-West is likely to cost us between the two years 1885 and 1886, you have to add some \$2,000,000 further to the expenditure for 1886; and you will recollect that \$1,000,000 which properly belongs to 1886 has been already borrowed by the Government and applied to the service of the year 1885. Such is the statement on the face of it, and according to information that has been furnished by the Government themselves. But there are serious contingencies which have got to be taken into account before we can feel quite sure as to our future position. Sir, we know from experience that it may become necessary for us to sustain the Canadian Pacific Railway Company again. We are told that this is going to be a complete and final settlement; we were told so in 1881, when we first made our contract with that company; we were told so last year, when we came to their aid to the extent of 30 millions; now we are told so again. Sir, I shall be very glad indeed if it does prove to be a final and complete settlement; but looking at the whole position, looking particularly at the condition of things in the North-West, it appears to me that we run—and we cannot avoid taking it into our calculation—the risk of having further demands made upon us in the interest of that corporation, and that the Government may feel compelled to assist them still further. Then, it is also quite clear that the cost of working and operating the Intercolonial Railway is likely to become a source of considerable embarrassment to us. According to the statement made by the Minister, there is now a deficit of \$200,000 to \$300,000 between the expenditure and income of the Intercolonial Railway. There are certain measures which we are about to discuss which, if carried into effect, will contribute largely to render the Intercolonial Railway a still more unproductive piece of property than it is at present. However, as these are not likely to affect that road during the current or ensuing year, I merely call attention to the fact as being one which we ought to bear in mind in considering the probable future expense of conducting our Government. There is a third reason, which requires considerable attention at our hands. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government themselves have been spending, on the great works which have been under their charge, very large sums of money during the past three or four years. Now, Sir, that is coming to an abrupt termination. Very little more money, I presume, will be expended, either by Government or by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—certainly no such sums as have been expended in the past few years; and I need not tell business men, in or out of the House, that the cessation of so great an expenditure must make itself considerably felt on the imports and, consequently, on the public revenue which we will receive during 1886. Then, in addition to that, we have got to remember that we have been obliged to make enormous additions—the largest additions, I believe, that have ever been made in one single year—to our public debt within the last twelve months. Wholly irrespective of the conversion of our 5 per cent. securities, it appears from the statement made by the Minister of Customs that we required to make \$65,000,000 of new loans within the last twelve months; \$25,000,000 were borrowed in July or June last by the Minister, and \$20,000,000 more are in process of being borrowed; and from the statement made, as I have said, at least \$20,000,000 more will require to be borrowed in order to put us in a position to meet the actual pressing engagements which the Minister, in reply to my question, enumerated the other night. Then, Sir, over and above that, there were certain ascertained liabilities given us by the Minister of Customs, amounting to about 10 millions additional, which, although not all due at once, are clearly ascertained liabilities which we owe and for which we must provide. Now, we know that on the 1st of June our total indebtedness amounted to \$258,711,000; 16 millions of that was floating debt, which is to be provided for by some of these new borrowings; but as we are to borrow 40 millions more, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman, it is clear that, putting on one side the question of liabilities not yet incurred, our gross debt should be put down to-day, taking into account what we will have to provide in 1886, at \$282,711,000. And if, as you fairly might do in such a calculation, you take into account the liabilities which we have incurred, and for which provision must speedily be made, you could hardly place our total indebtedness at less than \$-92,000,000. Now, I abstain from considering what deduction should be made on account of net assets, and for this very plain reason: it would be utterly impossible for me to make any calculation which hon. gentlemen opposite would be likely to accept on this subject; part of them we might agree on, but the value of such assets as our advances to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under existing circumstances, we could not possibly agree on; therefore I enter into no calculation as to the actual net indebtedness. I am content with pointing out, according to the statements of the Government themselves, that our present indebtedness amounts to 282 millions, and our actual indebtedness, that is to say, our present debt, with the liabilities which we have incurred, cannot be computed at less than 292 millions. But even that, Mr. Speaker, makes no provision whatever for strengthening our reserves, which I believe to be quite inadequate in view of very serious liabilities we have incurred in borrowing through the savings banks from our own people, and in borrowing by the issue of Dominion notes to the amount which we have done. Those liabilities, as I have pointed out, amount to 47 or 48 millions, for which we have the altogether inadequate provision of a couple of millions and a-half in gold, and, I think, a couple of millions of English guaranteed bonds. Now, Sir, hon. gentlemen may suppose that no serious harm has resulted from this, but I think, if they will consider the whole facts of the case, they will see that I am perfectly correct in stating that we have suffered very severely indeed in consequence of the improvidence which has compelled us to borrow these large sums of money, and also to provide for debts falling due at this particular juncture. It is quite true that a concurrence of favorable circumstances has prevented us from suffering any thing like the loss or anything like the inconvenience which we might possibly have been exposed to; but it is also true that the results of this carelessness in allowing all these great liabilities to mature together has been, that we are now compelled, and will be compelled for twenty-five, or it may be, fifty years to come, to pay some 20 per cent. more for the money that we borrow than we otherwise need have done. Sir, there can be no doubt whatever that with reasonable prudence and care on the part of those to whom is confided the administration of the country, the people of Canada to-day could, with ease, have been borrowing money in London at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. interest. The interest of money has fallen very largely within the last eight or nine years. I am within the mark in saying that the interest of money, taking the world over, and especially in the great money centres, has fallen not less than 30 per cent. Now, Sir, nine years have elapsed since I myself negotiated a loan of Canadian 4 per cent's at 91. I see that Canadian 4 per cent's were sold by the Minister the other day at 99; our credit, therefore, is just 8 per cent. better than it was nine years ago; but, on the other hand, the average interest of money has fallen some 30 per cent., and we have failed entirely in obtaining the benefit which we ought to have obtained, which we might have obtained, and which, with common prudence, we would have obtained, in making these large transactions. Now, these transactions are of such magnitude that that fact becomes a very important one, and I shall proceed to show the House how very serious a loss has been inflicted upon us in consequence of that carelessness. In the first place, on the 25 millions which were borrowed in June or July last, it is quite clear that we have lost  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on the loan itself, and also that we have lost  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., practically, by consenting to issue a sinking fund on that. On the 25 millions which we renewed the other day at 99 we have sustained about an equal loss. On the 40 millions which we will have to borrow, if, as I am glad to hear, it is not found necessary or expedient to issue any sinking fund in connection with that, the loss will probably be only  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. But the sum total is this: that on these three transactions, on the 25 millions we borrowed before, and which are practically costing us, the sinking fund included,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; on the 25 millions which we renewed the other day and which are costing us a little more than  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.—something like £4 11s., I think, or 11s. 6d. per annum—and on the \$40,000,000 which we are now intending to borrow at 99, our total loss, supposing my calculation is correct, as I think it is—for we could easily have borrowed, and we ought to have borrowed, at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.—would amount to no less than \$700,000 a year for a period of 25 or 50 years, according to the length of time that these bonds may have to run. Now, Sir, it is true that a small portion of the sinking fund will be ultimately recovered, but you must remember that (although we seem to have forgotten it altogether in a good deal of our legislation) for every penny we pay out of the Treasury the people of Canada are taxed considerably more. One of the main reasons which I have always advanced against the unnecessary sinking fund we have maintained has been that in raising that money, even under the most economical system of taxation, you are obliged to take a great deal more money out of the pockets of the people than you put into the Treasury, and at present, and under existing circumstances, that evil is very seriously aggravated. Then there is another thing which I regret still more. After having put our  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent's on the market, it is very much to be regretted that circumstances have compelled the Government to recede from the position which they had taken. I can only look upon the position of the Government, in now being obliged to issue 4 per cent's, after attempting to introduce  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent's, as a distinctly retrograde step. I do not at the present moment feel disposed to criticise the thing itself. It may have been, possibly, the best course for them to adopt, but it is equally clear that it is only in consequence of their improvidence, of the injudicious advances they were compelled, or thought themselves compelled, to make to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that we have been obliged to pay a great deal more for our money than we ought to have paid, and obliged to abandon for a time the attempt to introduce the  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent's on the London market. As everybody knows, it is very difficult to retrace a step of this kind. If, after attempting to float a loan at the lower rate, you have to return to the larger rate which formerly prevailed, everybody can see that it would be very difficult for any person hereafter entrusted with the task of floating a loan to effect it successfully at the lower rate. But what I desire more particularly to call attention to is this. Here we have quite clearly and incontestably staring us in the face the fact that a considerable portion of the revenue on which Government depended is likely to fall off, that very large expenditures are going to be incurred, for which they have made no provision, and yet we find those hon. gentlemen not apparently intending to take any steps to restore the equilibrium between expenditures and receipts, which they admitted has been so seriously disturbed. Now, Sir, having dealt with the position, as stated by the Government themselves, I will take the opportunity—although the thing has been done before—of calling attention to the position in which we find ourselves to-day, after the lapse of some 17 or 18 years. Sir, it is well known to every hon. gentleman in this House that when Confederation was first formed, our total expenditure amounted to barely thirteen and a-half millions. It is equally known that within the space of about 7 years that expenditure had been raised to about \$23,313,000. It is equally well known that for four years the expenditure was kept practically constant, and that in 1878 it had only reached to 23½ million dollars. Since that time our expenditure has risen step by step, until last year it amounted to \$31,107,000, and until this year there is much reason to fear, as I have said, that it will reach at least \$34,800,000, and possibly, and very probably, to a still larger amount in 1886. Now, it is quite out of the question that those enormous increases, occurring, as they did, in two separate periods of seven years, should have occurred without very serious mismanagement on the part of the Government under which they were incurred. Over and over again the attention of the Government and the House has been called to the fact that we were increasing our expenditures and our debt without in the slightest paying any regard to the real advance in the resources and the population of the country. Sir, it has been contended, and very likely will be contended again, that there were special causes operating, between 1867 and 1874, and between 1878 and 1885, which rendered these increases justifiable, or, at least, excusable. In answer to that assertion, I merely point out that during the whole period from 1874 to 1878, in which no increases, on the whole, took place, in which, in 1878, we found that the total augmentation of the public expenditure amounted to barely \$186,000 over the expenditures incurred in 1874, there were charges of very great magnitude, additional and new charges constantly being incurred. There were very heavy public works, involving very large charges for interest; there were heavy charges on account of Mounted Police, which had been organised early in 1874; there were constantly increasing charges for Indians; charges for sinking fund, for post office; charges for operating a new portion of the Intercolonial Railway; charges for the Supreme Court, a new institution; and a great variety of other charges of a similar kind. Yet, Sir, notwithstanding all those charges—and be it remembered they were all exactly the class of new charges which were incurred by the present Government since 1878—notwithstanding all that, Sir, we find that during those four years to which I have alluded we succeeded ultimately in reducing the expenditure to precisely the same figure at which we found it when we entered office. Neither will it do to say that it is not fair to take the expenditure alone, because we find that the increase of taxation was in a precisely similar ratio. We find that in 1868 our total taxation amounted to \$11,700,000. Well, Sir, we find now that our total taxation amounts to about \$25,000,000, and that if provision were made for additional permanent charges, at least \$27,000,000 ought to be received during the current year. So that the percentage of increase in taxation has been just as great, relatively, as the increase in expenditure during that period. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must say, looking at the enormous rapidity with which the debt has increased, looking at the enormous rapidity at which the expenditure and the taxation have increased, it appears to me that we have got into a position which requires the very serious consideration of every man who has the slightest regard for the credit of his country. The Government, apparently, are not disposed to make any provision for it, and that is all the more reason that we, on this side, should call attention to the state in which we find ourselves. I, myself, believe that it is the natural result of the policy they have pursued. They have chosen to disregard every rule and every lesson of their own experience, of the universal experience, I might say, of all communities similarly circumstanced to ourselves. It has almost become a rule that in countries like ours, after a period of considerable expansion, you are likely to be confronted with a period of great contraction; and if you allow the expenditure to run up, if you allow yourselves to use every accidental surplus as a justification for incurring enormous expenditures, you will be apt, after a little time, to find yourselves in just the position we are in to-day. I pointed out the loss of revenue. Nobody can pretend that we are likely to receive from public lands or from the Canadian Pacific Railway anything like the amount which the Minister of Finance expected to receive. Our increased expenditure is certain. Nobody can pretend that I have exaggerated or misrepresented the various items of expenditure I have enumerated, all of which are likely to be permanent additions, at any rate, for a considerable number of years, to our annual charges. It is equally clear to those who have studied the money markets that a very considerable additional loss has been inflicted upon us by reason of the unfavorable terms on which our recent loans have had to be contracted—unfavorable in this sense, that we have been unable to take advantage, to any material extent, of the great fall in the value of money which has taken place the last 6 or 7 years. It is equally certain, as any ordinary banker will tell us, that our present gold reserves are entirely inadequate to the enormous amount of debt we may be called upon to redeem at very short notice. It is equally clear that the Government are apparently not disposed, and perhaps are not able, at the present moment, to make any fair, adequate provision for meeting those difficulties with which we are confronted. I say to the Government that the possibilities are very grave. I say that the situation is strained to the uttermost. And there is another matter of considerable importance to which I desire to call the attention of this House; it is, not merely that our expenditure has increased enormously, but that the proportion of fixed charges has become enormous. When I come to examine in detail the amount of fixed charges, I find this has assumed proportions far greater than I should have supposed, and very much greater, I think, than hon. gentlemen opposite are aware. Taking the charges as I find them in the Estimates—which, be it remembered, are considerably below the real fixed charges, as I shall presently show—I find, for debt and sinking fund, and charges of management, our expenditure for 1886 is computed at no less than \$10,878,000, including the sinking fund on the recent exchange of 5 per cent. The charge for subsidies amounts to \$3,962,000. The charges for what are called collection of revenue, in which are included, of course, expenses for the working of the Intercolonial Railway, will amount to \$7,507,000. The expenditure for Indians, mostly under treaties, will amount to \$1,100,000 or more, or a total for these items of \$23,448,000, without taking into account the appropriation of \$440,000 for additional interest, and the Manitoba subsidy, amounting to \$150,000 more. So that, practically, we find ourselves in this position: that our fixed charges for 1886 will amount to about \$24,060,000. That is considerably greater than the total expenditure for all purposes in 1878. The absolute fixed charges now inflicted on the people of this country are very nearly half a million more than were the total charges for all purposes in 1878. That is a circumstance which I think the Government would do well to lay to heart. It is a very grave circumstance. It is a circumstance which involves very serious consequences, because it shows quite clearly that we are working on a margin, and a very small reduction in our total receipts would involve very considerable results to the efficiency of our service, which, as I have said, is required to be conducted entirely on the small margin between the fixed charge of \$24,000,000 odd and the amount we expect to receive from all sources, and which, apparently, cannot exceed \$33,000,000. That is an immense proportion. I do not know—I would be glad if Ministers are better informed than myself, if they will point out any case—of any instance of a country of equal size and population with our own in which the fixed charges have swollen to anything like such a proportion of the revenue. If hon. gentlemen object to this, if they say, as they may possibly say, that amounts should be credited on both sides, that we have receipts from railways as well as expenditure, receipts from the post office as well as expenditure, all I can point out is this: whereas the Finance Minister computed the revenue from taxes at about \$24,000,000 or a little more, and whereas I believe myself that \$27,000,000 will be required to be raised from taxes, if we are to make both ends meet next year, if you choose to deduct those items which appear on both sides, you will find the total fixed expenditure which is borne and covered by absolute taxation would amount to something like \$18,000,000 out of the \$24,000,000 we expect to get, or \$27,000,000, which I think we ought to raise by means of taxation. I say that is entirely a disproportionate charge. It is one of the most unfortunate circumstances connected with our position that these fixed charges should have so enormously increased as they have increased by the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Let us make a comparison. Hon. gentlemen object to a comparison with the United States; so on this occasion I will vary the comparison. I will compare our position with that of England. Their income is about fourteen times ours. Everybody knows that the available wealth of England is very much more than fourteen times as great as ours, our potential wealth we are not in a position to estimate. Our position, comparatively, is this: Were the English Chancellor of the Exchequer to come down to the House of Commons and inform that body that during a single year it had become necessary to borrow £200,000,000 sterling, £150,000,000 of which was for entirely new loans, forming a permanent charge in addition to the public debt, if he were further to inform the House that there was an apparent deficit of £5,000,000 and another deficit of £10,000,000 was impending; that owing to the disturbed condition of India or Ireland, as the case might be, it would be necessary to add largely to the military force of the country, we would have a situation almost exactly identical with that in which the people of Canada find themselves to-day. But what would be thought in England, if, under such a state of things, the First Minister were further to add that, holding it expedient to avoid discussion on this matter, he thought it desirable to introduce a measure to disfranchise his opponents throughout England, and invited them during the balance of the Session to give their earnest consideration to the details of this measure. I admit that it is difficult for us to comprehend what this enormous increase of our debt really means. Here we find that, taking into account the liabilities ascertained and known, we have increased, in eighteen years, the gross debt of Canada by \$200,000,000. In 1868 or 1867 our gross debt was some \$93,000,000 or \$94,000,000. In 1885 our debt, with the addition of these ascertained liabilities, will be \$292,710,000, being, as nearly as possible, an addition to our gross debt of 2,000 millions during those 18 years, very nearly at the rate of \$12,000,000 a year during all the time Confederation has existed. An equivalent to that would be an addition of \$2,000,000,000 to the debt of England, or looking at the relative population of the two countries, to an addition of \$2,600,000,000 to the debt of the United States during the same period. During the same interval we have added to the taxation nearly \$1,000,000 a year, an amount equivalent to \$170,000,000 added to the taxation of England, or \$220,000,000 added to the taxation of the United States in the same period. And for all that what have we got to show? What have we got to show to the people of Canada for an increase of \$200,000,000 to our debt, and for very nearly trebling our annual taxation. Practically, we have got this: we have got two railways, one of which might be valuable and which therefore we have graciously given away; we have paid for it, or are going to pay for it; at any rate, we have pledged our credit for it to the tune of something like \$100,000,000. It is a road, I believe, with very considerable future possibilities before it, and therefore, Sir, this road, which might be valuable, we have given away. But we have got another road, the Intercolonial Railway, which nobody, I believe, wants to take off our hands at present; and as it shows very clearly how exceedingly judiciously and wisely a large part of this debt has been incurred, I would like, for a moment or two, to call the attention of the House to the history of the Intercolonial Railway, as recorded in our Public Accounts. Hon. gentlemen have boasted that the Intercolonial Railway has been so successfully managed under their wise administration, that whereas my friend the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) had serious deficits in connection with the working of that railway, these gentlemen are able to show a surplus of no less than \$10,000 on the last year's working of the railway. Sir, I want to show the House a little of the value of these balances, a little of the actual results which have been attained in the working of the Intercolonial Railway. First of all, I find that when my hon. friend, the member for East York, went out of office, the total capital account of the Intercolonial Railway stood at the sum of \$36,091,000; and if you take into account the sums contained in the Estimates for 1885 and in the Supplementary Estimates which have been brought down for the same year, you will find that our capital account for the Intercolonial Railway amounts to \$45,177,000. This railway, which has been managed so well as to produce a surplus of \$10,000 a year, has in that interval of seven years had \$9,000,000 and more added to its capital account, the annual additional interest, taking into account the rate at which it was borrowed, on which is considerably in excess of \$100,000. So, Sir, we have, as the practical result of the successful management of the Intercolonial Railway, the capital account increased by \$9,100,000 in seven years, a deficit on the working, as stated by the Minister the other day, of a quarter of a million, and there are proposals now before the House to add for 20 years a quarter of a million and more to the annual charge of this country, for the purpose of cutting the throat of the Intercolonial Railway, and making it a very much less productive work than it is at present or than it otherwise would be. Now, if hon. gentlemen choose to sum up the total results of the management of the Intercolonial Railway, they will find, when they make allowance for the charge for interest on this \$45,177,000, for the probable deficit, and for the subsidy for the rival lines, that, adding all these matters together, the annual charge to this country, over and above all we are likely to receive, would be very little, if at all, short of \$3,000,000 a year, which is very near the interest on \$100,000,000.

I give that as being not only in itself an exceedingly fine specimen of the brilliant results of the wise policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, but one of the best illustrations I can possibly present to the House of the way these $200,000,000 have been, to a very great extent, fooled away; for there is no other term that would accurately describe the way in which the Intercolonial Railway has been managed, from the day of its inception to the present moment. Sir, I said just now that I would give roughly a comparison between our present position and the position in England. I will also, even though hon. gentlemen dislike the comparison very much, give a very brief comparison with the position in the United States. In 1867 the population of the United States was computed at $3,000,000, its effective debt at $2,508,000,000, and its necessary expenditure at $360,000,000. In 1885 the population of the United States had risen to 56,000,000, its debt had been reduced to $1,408,000,000, and its necessary expenditure to $244,000,000. In Canada our computed population in 1867, less Indians, was 3,400,000, our net debt $75,000,000, and our necessary expenditure was $13,500,000. In 1885 our population, less Indians, as far as I can ascertain, is about 4,400,000, our net debt, making a very liberal allowance for our present assets, amounts to about $240,000,000, and our necessary expenditure was given by the Finance Minister at $32,850,000. So that you have got these results: that, taking into account the necessary taxation in each country—and by necessary taxation I include the necessary sum required for discharging the business of Government—and allowing, in the case of both countries, for cross-enteries which neutralise each other, we find that the position stands thus: The United States, in 1867, required to raise by necessary taxation, $324,000,000, so that their necessary taxation per head amounted to $9. In 1885 their necessary taxation amounts to $220,000,000; their actual taxation is more, because they are applying about $100,000,000 a year to the reduction of their debt; but their necessary taxation merely involves a charge per head of $3.93, as against $9 per head eighteen years ago. In Canada our necessary taxes in 1867 amounted to $11,700,000, being an average of $3.44 per head. If hon. gentlemen choose to impose such taxes as will apparently be required to make both ends meet, our necessary taxation would amount to $27,000,000, being a charge of $6.14 per head of population, as I estimate it, Indians deducted. In the matter of debt, the computation would be as follows: The interest per capita in the United States amounted, in 1867, to $3.84; in 1885, according to the report of the Secretary Treasurer, it amounted to 82 cents per head. The average amount per man in the United States, in 1867, was $69.76; the average amount in 1885 has sunk to $25. In Canada, without taking into account this recent increase, our interest amounted to $1.32 in 1867; in 1885 it amounts to $2.15. The average amount per head, in 1867, was $22.00 on the net debt, which I have been obliged to take for the purpose of comparison in all these cases; whereas, to-day, in 1885, it will apparently amount to not less than $55 per head. This is taking into account the loans which are now in process of contraction, as stated by the Minister opposite me; $240,000,000 is the amount of our net debt, as far as I can ascertain; our gross debt, as I have said, appears to be $282,000,000, now incurred, and $10,000,000 liabilities known and incurred. Now, the hon. gentleman will remember this, that whether the assertion be correct or not—and I am not going to enter into that discussion here—that the people of the United States have not to provide for a considerable number of items of expenditure which we have undertaken, on one point there can be no doubt: that this comparison, as between ourselves and them, is perfect, as between our position eighteen years ago and our position to-day. We have not incurred new liabilities since then; our position relatively to the United States and relatively to their expenditure stands just the same to-day as it did eighteen years ago. It would be utter folly for us to disregard this. I propose to examine briefly the pleas which have been advanced by the apologists of the Government for this enormous increase. First, they advanced the plea of necessity. They say: for the purpose of keeping our Confederation together we have been obliged to incur this expenditure, which we admit to be enormous; for this purpose we have been obliged to add to our debt and to increase our taxation and ordinary expenditure. In part, I admit that may be true, but I maintain, as I have always maintained, that the more of this expenditure they show to be necessary the more clearly they prove they were compelled to spend a portion of money, the stronger the case they establish against themselves in this respect: that, knowing as they say they knew, our position was such that we would necessarily be obliged to add largely to our debt and taxation, they were trebly bound to take care that no unnecessary expenditure be incurred and no debt increased that could possibly be avoided. But as to the plea also brought forward, that this expenditure has produced adequate results, I take issue with them altogether. Not merely has it not produced adequate results, but that excuse is in exact opposition to the fact. To say we have had adequate results is to state a thing which is the exact reverse of the truth. I contend, and it can, I think, be very clearly shown, that the result of this reckless extravagance, this enormous expenditure, this huge increase in debt and taxation, has been, to a very great extent, to counteract all the advantages which we might fairly have looked to deriving from our Confederation. I contend that its effect has been greatly to hamper and imperil our future progress, and to put obstacles in our way, which it may be impossible for us to remove for generations to come. The practical result of it is this: The Government, both in their present term of office and their previous term, have incurred the greater portion of this expenditure simply and solely by the necessity they were under of constantly buying support. The very great outlay which the Government have made, and more especially of late, has been made a pretext and a plea on the part of sections of their supporters, for the purpose of extracting further large donations from the public purse. And if it be the case that our debt has increased $200,000,000, and our taxation 150 per cent.; if it be the case that in every possible way our expenditure has been swollen, it has been because the Government and their supporters are equally to blame in this matter; that whenever the Government brought down a measure which was a little unpalatable to this or that section of their followers, the Government, sooner or later, have found it necessary to gild the pill, by making large grants to gratify this or that particular section. The result followed which always follows this way of carrying on Government, that they have created very serious jealousies among the different Provinces, among the different sections of their supporters, and that ultimately every dollar so granted has involved further outlay to satisfy the jealousies which their weak compliance, in the first instance, created and caused. Let me recapitulate the position in which we find ourselves. Here we have a most enormous increase, both in the public debt and the taxes. What is our position? Our population in these years has increased 1,000,000 or thereabouts; our debt has increased, speaking of the gross debt, by about $200,000,000. Our population has increased 1,000,000; our annual expenditure has increased at least $20,000,000, if not more; our population has increased 1,000,000; our nominal taxation has increased $16,000,000, if we make fair provision for the wants of the future year we are now invited to discuss, and we must remember that our real taxation is vastly in excess of our nominal taxation. Our population has increased 30 per cent., our debt 200 per cent.; our population has increased 30 per cent., our expenditure 150 per cent and our taxation 150 per cent. These are very serious considerations, and none the less serious because it is apparent that if our accounts are honestly and properly kept for the current year and the next year it is scarcely possible but that heavy deficits should be incurred. For a portion of this, I am quite ready to admit that the Government may plead that they could not have foreseen the recent outbreak, though I do not know they can plead that that outbreak was not very largely due to errors of management and serious misgovernment on their part. That I will leave to be discussed on a future occasion. I call attention to this: that the Government are apparently having recourse to expedients, which I cannot consider creditable, to conceal the present state of affairs. It is not creditable to us that we should find in the current year $330,000 of expenditure charged to capital account on the score of Dominion lands, and apparently $500,000 of receipts intended to be placed to credit of revenue from the same source, for the purpose of forcing a balance. It is not creditable to us that we find attempts to borrow large sums from the revenue of the future year for the service of the present year. It is not creditable to us to find perishable articles, such as rolling stock, which ought, in all conscience, to be charged to ordinary expenditure, credited, again and again, to capital account, for the purpose, apparently, of creating an unfair comparison in favor of the present Government as against the management of their predecessors. It is not by any means wise for us to shut our eyes to the fact that there are large contingent liabilities created by the policy of the Government. I call attention to this plain fact: So long as the Government make it manifest to their supporters, whenever they have a disagreeable measure to put through, that if their supporters will only show a certain amount of hostility to the proposition of the Government they may obtain for particular sections or regions large grants. There is a two-fold danger in that. Not merely does that policy entail much large and unnecessary additional expense, but it opens the door to a whole host of fresh demands, which will most assuredly be made on the Government, from time to time, many of which it will be almost impossible for them, in view of the jealousies they have aroused, to avoid satisfying. Then the huge fixed charge, whether you look to the proportion it bears to annual taxation, or to our total expenditure, is larger than the hon. gentleman can show to exist in any other civilised country. Then we have the failure, consequent on the policy of the Government, to get the benefit of the great reduction which has recently taken place in the rate of interest, whereby a very large and unnecessary additional charge is going to be imposed on the people of the country for the next twenty-five or fifty years. Besides that, they are fast bringing the people of this country, at any rate in the older Provinces, into a stationary, it may be into a retrograde, position; and, as I said, the last and worst thing with which I charge them is this: that by this system which they have introduced they are tending more and more to make an honest, straightforward mode of carrying on the government of this country a practical impossibility. I will give the House a practical illustration of the cost of this system of government. It may well be wondered at how it is, in a country like this, that we could possibly have contrived to add $200,000,000 to our gross indebtedness in a period of seventeen or eighteen years, but if we take the case which has occurred, not only in the last years, but within the last few days, it will become tolerably patent to the House how these huge charges may be incurred. As I have said, every advance which hon. gentlemen have made to the Canadian Pacific Railway has practically cost us treble. We have, first, to make the original advance; we have next to propitiate certain sections and obtain their leave to make that advance at great further cost; and, last of all, we have to bear a very considerable additional loss on the loans which we contract, and which could have been contracted on very much more favorable terms if we had not embarrassed ourselves by the necessity of making these advances at a very unfortunate time. Within twelve months we have advanced, or are to advance, two sums, one of $30,000,000, the other of $5,000,000, to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Take the additional subsidies which we were compelled to grant and the additional favors which we were compelled to give to certain parties in this House and elsewhere, to obtain their leave to advance this $35,000,000, and I believe that, if fairly computed and set down, you would find that we had to pay $30,000,000 or incur liabilities to that amount, for leave to lend that $35,000,000. You will find that we have incurred in all an additional charge of something like $700,000 a year—a sum which would pay the interest on $20,000,000—because we chose to make that advance at a time when it was quite clear that the doing so would most materially hamper our financial transactions abroad. That is another illustration of the ways in which, as I have said, the money of the people has been fooled away. A great many of these sums are sums which I know quite well experienced business men, as some of the members of the Government are, would never have dreamed of giving, unless they had been compelled to do it for the purpose of getting those particular measures through; and that, I say again, is one of the results of a thoroughly bad system of government, of what is little better than six years of government by bribery: that is the result of extravagance and incompetence and corruption. Now, it is an utter fallacy to say that we can go on doing this without very seriously injuring the whole future of this country. I hear these gentlemen talk as if the addition of $200,000,000 to our gross debt, trebling our taxes and trebling our expenditure, were a matter of mere insignificance to a great and growing country like Canada. I will apply a practical test, to which I call the attention of the House. The nominal taxation which we exact from the people of Canada to-day, which ought to amount to $27,000,000, according to the average rate of wages given by the Ontario Bureau of Statistics, would maintain one family in eight of our whole population; it would keep the largest part of the population of the Maritime Provinces without doing a hand's turn of work from one end of the year to the other. If we take into consideration the real taxation which our people suffer the proportion would be very much greater, and it is clear that we are producing by this excessive expenditure something like a stationary state over a great portion of the country. It is not so apparent to us who reside in the large and prosperous cities of the Dominion, but it is very apparent to those who go into the rural districts and consider the state of the case all over the older Provinces. I turn to the census; I take the census returns of Canada, which have recently been furnished to us, for 1881, and what do I find? I find that, in the Province of Prince Edward Island, out of six constituencies not one single constituency, during the ten years that that census records, has been able to maintain its natural increase. I turn to Nova Scotia, and I find that, out of its twenty-one constituencies, barely two have been able to maintain their natural increase. I turn to New Brunswick, and I find that, out of its sixteen constituencies, scarcely three have maintained their natural increase. In the Province of Quebec, out of sixty-five constituencies, in those ten years hardly eleven have maintained their natural increase, and in a great many of them there is an absolute and positive decrease of the population recorded. I turn to Ontario, and I find, out of her eighty-eight constituencies—the number she had at the time this census was compiled—only twenty-eight have been able to maintain their natural increase, and there, as in other places, there are, unfortunately, a considerable number of constituencies where the population has absolutely decreased. Now, it is impossible for us to shut our eyes to the significance of these facts; it is quite impossible for us not to see that in a country which cannot be said to be rapidly advancing, in a country in which, at any rate, the population is rather losing than gaining ground, relatively speaking, in that we are not able to keep our own people here, when we find that, with the aid of immigration, we are not able to show an increase equal to the natural increase of the population, it is scarcely possible to excuse the conduct of the Government, which has contrived to treble the public burthens within the space of 18 years, or, to be more correct, within two periods of seven years each, one beginning in 1867 and terminating in 1874, and the other beginning in 1878 and terminating in 1885. I say the action of the Government has gone very far to imperil the foundation of our Confederation. I say that, as regards a very considerable portion of the people of this country, it is unfortunately only too true that all that Confederation has done for them has been to bring them far heavier burthens without any sort of adequate return; I say, what is worse, that the whole tenor of the existing policy of Government is to prevent the several Provinces from exercising any wholesome self-reliance. We are constantly training these Provinces to believe that all they have to do is to send a delegation here to support the Government of the day, and that, if they do that, sufficiently determinedly, then, let that Province be as extravagant or as corruptly managed as it pleases, whatever that Province wants will be given to it, that it will be relieved from its embarrassments and will be free from the disagreeable necessity of attempting to raise revenue by means of direct taxation, and that everything will be made straight for it out of the public Treasury. I say you cannot carry on Confederation on any such basis, and I warn, again and again, the representatives of the people here and the people themselves, that so surely as we proceed on this vicious system, so surely the end of Confederation will not be far distant. It is really too bad. Here we are in a new country. We have no navy, we have no army, to be called an army, although we have a gallant citizen soldiery, who have responded very nobly to our call when there was real occasion for them to show the metal they were made of; but, in comparison with older countries, our necessary burthens were very small, and yet we have at this moment a taxation which, in its incidence on the people, is quite as great as the incidence of the taxes paid, at any rate, by the great bulk of the people in England, and that in spite of the fact that, over and above that taxation, there is, in a great portion of Canada, a great burden of municipal taxation, which exacts a further amount of the earnings of the people. Sir, the question is being put in many places, and rightly put: is it possible for us to struggle through under such circumstances? Although I, myself, have not lost faith in the future of Confederation, although I believe that in spite of what has come and gone we may be able to struggle through, still I cannot help seeing that the whole tendency of our present legislation is to take away from the people of Canada a great deal of the most valuable elements which go to constitute a nation. I say that if this thing goes on it will be day by day growing more doubtful whether we will, after all, be able to maintain ourselves. One thing is not doubtful, and that is, that there has been a serious moral and political degradation going on all over Canada for a number of years back. One thing is not doubtful, and that is, that we have thrown away most superb opportunities, which are not very likely to recur to us. We started out in the race of national life with great advantages. We were not merely lightly taxed, but we had great advantages at that time over our chief and most formidable competitor, who, from circumstances well known to us, was very much hampered in the struggle. The one thing we needed we obtained almost on the very threshold of our national existence—we obtained control of a great and fertile territory, which supplied to our surplus population the opportunity of making homes on Canadian soil. All that we required was a little prudence, a little patience, a little honesty and a little common sense, to have made proper use of those great opportunities. We might and ought to have used them to very much greater advantage. I say that nothing has been done by us which ought to have prevented us from being to-day a very lightly taxed country; and with common prudence, instead of having to-day about $200,000,000 of additional indebtedness, $100,000,000 would have sufficed. I say that it is the fault of our Government that we have not at this moment a populous and prosperous west of our own; and what is perhaps equally important, that our older Provinces have not been educated to a right conception of the relation in which they stand to the federal power. Our people have not been kept in our own country; the advantage with which we started over the United States might easily have been maintained, and the basis of a great nation might have been infinitely more firmly established than it is to-day. Sir, looking at the whole circumstances, bearing in mind the facts I have stated, bearing in mind the circumstances which everybody knows have occurred in this country, who can wonder that to-day we find that one million native-born Canadians have sought homes in the United States? Who can wonder that within the last few years, out of 500,000 immigrants whom we have brought to our shores, our own municipal statistics appear to show that we have not succeeded in keeping 100,000 of them here? Who can wonder, when we look at this state of things, that we have had two rebellions within a dozen years in the Province which ought to have been a source of strength and prosperity to us, instead of being, as it is at this moment, a source of serious expense and trouble? Who can wonder that under these circumstances heavy deficits should have occurred? And what is worse, who can wonder that while this policy is in vogue the Parliament of Canada should appear to have made up its mind to abdicate entirely its proper function of controlling the expenditure of this country, and to be fast sinking into something very little better than a convention for the division of the spoils among certain powerful sections. Sir, I say again that I defy hon. gentlemen to show any country of equal size with our own, any country which has not been subjected to some very severe ordeal of war or some similar calamity, in which they can point out to such a state of things as that which I have pointed out to-night; and in order that our views on this subject may be put on record, I beg to move:

"That all the words after the word "that" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:— the total annual expenditure of the Dominion was $13,486,092 in the year 1868.

That the said expenditure had increased to $23,316,316 in 1874, being an increase of $9,830,224 in the 7 years from 1st July, 1867, to 1st July, 1874.

That the expenditure was $23,503,158 in 1878, being an increase of $186,842 in the 4 years from 1st July, 1874, to 1st July 1878."

That the expenditure for the year ending 1st July, 1884, was $31,107,706.

That it was estimated by the Minister of Finance that the expenditure for the year ending 1st July, 1885, would amount to $32,850,000, being an increase of $9,346,842 in the 7 years from 1st July, 1878, to 1st July, 1885 (irrespective of any expenditure incurred in suppressing the recent revolt in the North-West).

That the taxation of the people has increased as follows:—

to 20,120,185 do 1874
to 17,841,938 do 1878
to 25,483,199 do 1884

That the gross debt of Canada has increased as follows :—

From	93,046,051 dollars in 1867
to	141,163,165 do	1874
to	258,711,088 do	upon the 31st May, 1885,	independently of many liabilities for which provision must be made shortly.

That the increase in the debt, taxation and expenditure above mentioned have been in excess of the requirements and resources of the country and have interfered with its progress and development, and that stringent measures should be taken to reduce the expenditure and to lighten, as far as possible, the burthen of the people."

Mr. McLELAN. I suppose the hon. gentleman would think it scarcely courteous to a member of his position if some few remarks were not offered to the lengthy speech he has addressed to the House. I do not propose to detain the House at any very great length, but briefly to refer to some of the points he has presented. And I cannot, at the outset, refrain from expressing surprise at the tone and manner in which the hon. gentleman has delivered his speech, so different from that of speeches upon similar questions which he has previously delivered in this House. I remember having heard the hon. gentleman deliver his Budget Speech on several occasions. To-night he was depicting the position of the country and prophesying that in 1885 and 1886, and for many years, we would have a deficit,—that we were in an almost hopeless state of embarrassment; and yet the hon. gentleman did not manifest that exuberance of spirits which, in old times, when he was the midst of deficits, he manifested when making his Budget Speech. He never seemed happier than when he was delivering a speech at a time when he had deficits behind and deficits before him. I have here a short extract from a speech he delivered in 1877, when he had left a deficit of $1,389,000 in 1876, and when there was a deficit before him of $1,000,000 odd. Upon that occasion the hon. gentleman said :

"I think the country may be congratulated that so dangerous a crisis in our affairs has passed without our sustaining any very serious loss. I hold that equilibrium is now being restored. Our credit has been sustained, and more than sustained, and despite our deficit and the difficulties with which we have been loaded, our securities have obtained a better price than ever before, and unless another such misfortune as the last overtakes us in the present summer, we will be able, without very much difficulty, to weather the storm. If we are disappointed, the Government knows its duty and it is prepared to do it. Canada has yet ample resources untouched to enable it to meet its engagements."

The hon. gentleman at that time was hopeful, and he was jolly, although surrounded by deficits; because he had some faith at that time in his country, and declared that Canada had resources which were yet untouched. The hon. gentleman to-night did not seem to be in that peculiarly happy and jolly mood which he was in in 1877, when he was in the midst of deficits; and I was at a loss to know why the change in his tone and manner, why the speech he delivered, was in that solemn tone and that quiet manner so unusual to him. It would be uncourteous for me, perhaps unparliamentary, to say or think that he was delivering a speech which he knew could not have its effect upon the other side of the water, and prejudice the loan which the Finance Minister is about to negotiate next Monday. It would be unparliamentary for me to say that if the hon. gentleman had been permitted to deliver that speech in time for such an effect he would have manifested more satisfaction in painting in the blackest possible colors our position, and presenting the brazen side of the shield to the money lenders of England. How different was his manner to-night from the manner which he exhibited when he attempted to deliver that same speech on a former occasion, just when our Finance Minister had left our shores, and as soon as it became public that he was to negotiate a loan and make an exchange, on that occasion it required all the rules of the House to restrain him and to keep him within bounds. He was as impatient as a hound in the leash, struggling to seize the escaping game. The hon. gentleman has referred to the expenditure of the present year and the expected expenditure in the incoming year. He has given us an estimate from which he fancies that there will be, in the present year, a very considerable deficit. Now, the figures which the hon. gentleman should have given to us for the present year, so far, I may state to the House are that we have received, up to the present time, according to the last returns, $31,242,000. We have paid out, including the North-West expenditure of nearly $1,000,000, $29,802,978, or, deducting the North-West expenditure, which I do not think should be fairly chargeable to this year, or to any particular year—for it is customary in all countries that extraordinary expenditures such as that occasioned by these unfortunate circumstances in the North-West, should be distributed over a series of years—but deducting that amount, there is a balance to our credit of $2,304,503, which may, when all the bills come in, to the 30th June, be considerably reduced. But the hon. gentleman insists that there will be a deficit in 1885, and he goes on piling up all the possible accumulations of 1886 and 1887. He tells us that the Canadian Pacific Railway will not pay its interests, and that Dominion lands will not yield as much as is expected, and he says that on the whole we must face a deficit of $3,740,000. Then he asks us what we are going to do, under the circumstances. Why, we have only to go back to his tariff of 1874 and 1875, which we found in existence in 1878, and to his estimates, in order to provide for the whole of that sum which he has accumulated, without putting burdens on the country which would be very seriously felt. The hon. gentleman left office in 1878 with a duty on tea.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; that is true. When the hon. gentleman went into office he found no duty on tea, but he placed a duty on that article, and the hon. gentleman, who always talks about the large increase in taxation that has been placed on the country by the present Government, ought to remember that from 1868 down to 1873 there were continual reductions of taxation under the management of the leader of the present Government; and when the hon. gentlemen took office the taxation of the country had been reduced from 13·62 per cent. on the total value of goods entered for consumption, dutiable and free, down to 10·20 per cent. When he came into office the first thing he did was to increase the taxation to the extent of $3,000,000, and he went out of office, after increasing the taxation from 10·20 per cent. to 14·03 per cent. Yet, notwithstanding that increase of taxation, there were deficits year by year, from which it took two or three years of the administration of the present Finance Minister to recover. The hon. gentleman, when he talks about the large increase in the debt of the Dominion, from 1868 to the present time, ought not to forget that some six or seven millions of that amount, at least, stands for no valuable work, but to meet the ordinary expenses of the country occasioned by the maladministration of the hon. gentleman. He should not forget that in that increase of indebtedness there are not only his deficits, not only the loss that he incurred by the sale of his 4 per cent. loan in 1874, amounting to $1,500,000, but there is about $30,000,000 of the indebtedness of the older Provinces which had been assumed by the Dominion since 1878. But the hon. gentleman asks: How are you to provide for that $3,700,000 which is staring you in the face? We can go back to the tariff the hon. gentleman left us in 1878, and if we take the imports of tea in 1884, and put the same duty upon that article that the hon. gentleman left upon it, it would give us $980,394. If we put the same Excise duty on tobacco that the hon. gentleman had upon it the consumption of 1884 would give us $800,000 more. Then, go back to the stamps on newspapers, and you will get $200,000. We have had a large expenditure on public works. We found that there were many necessary expenditures to be made in the country for public works. The hon. gentleman says that the Government has only existed for corruption and bribery; that every public work that has been undertaken and carried to completion in this country has been for the purpose of corrupting some member of this House. Why, Sir, there have been public works undertaken by the Minister of Railways and others which have received the vote and the sanction of hon. gentlemen opposite; but that did not corrupt them or destroy their party allegiance, and it is an insult to this House and to this country to say that any member of this House is corrupted and bought, and only held to his party by an expenditure for a public service in his constituency. All this expenditure for public works has been in the interest of the country and for its development, and was sanctioned and approved by the people in 1882; and when the question is again submitted to the people in 1887, the Government will not be condemned because they have undertaken various public works throughout the Dominion. But if we reduce our expenditure on public works to the same amount hon. gentlemen opposite expended in 1878, we could save $1,910,000 from the amount in 1884. In 1884 the amount expended on public works charged to consolidated revenue was $2,908,851; and the amount expended in 1878 was $998,554; so that, if we are compelled by circumstances to reduce our expenditure on public works, we can effect a saving of nearly $2,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. McLELAN. Well, I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman, and it will be just as well to wait till I get through. Then the hon. gentleman expended on immigration, in 1878, $180,000, and in 1884 we expended $575,000. The opinion has been expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite that that large expenditure on immigration could be avoided and ought to be avoided. Well, there may be something in this, that with the great development the country has undergone since 1878 that of itself should be a sufficient immigration agent, and that we might very largely reduce that expenditure; but, Sir, is it not necessary, I ask the House that when we have members of Parliament high in position, and whose names are known abroad, making such statements to the world as have been made to-night, is it not necessary that we should have some system of working throughout the different countries of the world to counteract the influence of such speeches? Therefore, until hon. gentlemen opposite abstain from presenting the brazen side of the shield, until they abstain from painting this country in all the blackest colors possible, and depicting it as a God-forsaken country, it will be necessary to incur a very large expenditure on immigration, in order that the truth may be disseminated—in order that the antidote may be administered when the poison goes abroad; and the hon. gentleman himself is chargeable in a great measure for the necessity of this very large expenditure for immigration purposes. Now, Sir, if we reduced that expenditure down to what it was in 1878, and if we took the other figures I have given, we should have $4,385,306 to set against a possible $3,700,000, which is the total amount the hon. gentleman, with all his ingenuity, has been able to figure up. I might go over our expenditure and show many other cases. The expenditure on militia and defence in 1884 was $371,000 more than it was in 1878. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman will consent to reduce the expenditure on the militia service. Hon. gentlemen opposite feel a great and sudden interest in the volunteers, and there has been a great deal of discussion, inside and outside the House, about the volunteers having been neglected, and about their trousers not having been of the proper pattern or the proper material.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. Perhaps the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) might suggest some economies in the clothing of the militia. I remember taking up an account for the equipment of a couple of companies in the North-West by the hon. member for Bothwell, and it was done on a very economical scale in one sense and on a very extravagant scale in another sense; and if the hon. gentleman would propose to equip our volunteers in that way, perhaps we might save a very large amount. The hon. gentleman, in 1878, I find, uniformed 102 Indians, whose equipment was not exactly like that of the Mexican cavalry, a shirt collar and a pair of spurs, but there were no trousers. The account ran something like this: 102 pairs of boots, $4 apiece; 102 flannel shirts, $2 apiece; and 102 silk pocket handkerchiefs, $2 apiece; and that was the whole of the uniform of these 102 Indians whom the hon. gentleman organised. However, I do not suppose the hon. gentleman will be so economical in the clothing of our volunteers, especially when his leader thinks there is so much valor in the trousers, although other people think it is in the sword. But should we go back to the tariff the hon. gentleman left us in 1878, on those few items which I have given we have sufficient and more than sufficient to meet all the obligations he was able to conjure up as likely to fall upon us in the future. But the hon. gentleman should also bear in mind, notwithstanding all his lamentations and all his municipal statistics, that this country is growing and improving, and that our population is increasing year by year; and from that source we shall derive an additional strength. He has talked about the population of this country being depleted; but we know that there is nothing of the kind, as an actual fact. The same old story is being re-enacted all over this Dominion; love is being made in the frosts of winter and in the sunlight of summer; the orange blossoms are being worn, and marriage bells sounded, and new homes are being formed from one end of this land to the other. We do not take up a newspaper but we find that a new home has been founded, and by-and-by, in obedience to the great command to be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, there will be a new cradle put in the new home, to be added to the 200,000 cradles in this Dominion which are now rocking young Canadians who will grow to Canadian men and women and give their strength and their energies to the development of this country, to enable us to meet the deficit which the hon. gentleman has conjured up to-night. In addition to this, notwithstanding all the hon. gentleman has said about the exodus, our population is increasing from immigration. Why, Sir, all around me I see the fruits of immigration to the Dominion of Canada. I go down to my own county, where, a few generations ago, a handful of immigrants came in and settled, and the descendants of those men have multiplied and increased until there are 30,000 people in the county of Colchester, whom I have the honor to represent in this Parliament; and that county, which stands among the foremost counties in the Dominion, was started by a few immigrants. From England, Ireland, Scotland and the continent of Europe, there are immigrants coming into the country, who are just repeating what has occurred in my county and in all the counties of this Dominion, and who will help to strengthen and increase the resources of the country, and will help to meet the bugbears which the hon. gentleman has conjured up to-night. The hon. gentleman has said that all this increase of expenditure is due to maladministration, and he gives, as an illustration, the Intercolonial Railway, which, he says, has increased its capital account, since 1878, some $7,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Nine million dollars.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman says the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway has gone on increasing from the time of its construction until the cost of the Intercolonial Railway to the Dominion is $45,000,000, seeking to convey the impression that this Dominion, since Confederation, has expended on that road $45,000,000. But that includes the expenditure made by the Province of Nova Scotia and the Province of New Brunswick for the length of line that was built by them previous to Confederation, and which was brought in and now forms part of the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman says that since his Government went out, in 1878, the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway has been increased $9,000,000, and he would convey to the House the impression that this has all been caused simply in the working of the road as he left it. He omitted to tell the House that the road from Rivière du Loup to Lévis had been purchased since then; that the St. Charles branch has been built since; that the Eastern Extension of 80 miles has been purchased since, that various other branches have been built, and that important and necessary works at the various termini have been built, in order to make the road a complete line and meet the requirements of the country. But he sought to create the impression that in order to show a balance of $10,000 this year we have been adding the necessary expenses of the road to capital account, and that by this means we ran the capital account up to $45,000,000. The hon. gentleman should have been moderate; he should have been honest in the statements he made to the House and to the country. He says we have run up an enormous debt since 1878, the increase being, something like $200,000,000. I have already stated that the hon. gentleman has gone beyond the figures which were submitted by the Acting Minister of Finance the other day, a very considerable sum; but I have not now time to detain the House with particulars. The hon. gentleman does not mind a million or two; judging by the way he piles up figures, a matter of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 is nothing to him. Supposing that our debt has been increased by $200,000,000; supposing all the obligations we have incurred were realised and placed upon the country, as I have stated, about $30,000,000 of that was caused by the assumption of local debts since 1878. What have we got for it since 1868? Why, there is $30,000,000, and there is $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 that the hon. gentleman knows that we have nothing for during his administration of the Government from 1873 to 1878. He says we have got two bits of railways, the Intercolonial and the Pacific. Why, we have got British Columbia, that came with an indebtedness which has been assumed and forms part of this; we have got Manitoba; we have got the North-West Territories; we have got Prince Edward Island, and we have got, in addition to the two bits of railways he speaks of, the several portions of railways which I have enumerated; we have got, also, very large expenditures upon the canals of the country; we have got public works here and there, spread from British Columbia to the easternmost point of Nova Scotia, all necessary for the development of the country—all called for by the wants of the people; and all these expenditures have been approved and sanctioned by the people at large. Let me say a word or two about the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman says we have got that. We have almost got it, and we have got it by assuming a large indebtedness at a period very much earlier than we expected. We have got that railway for this indebtedness six years in advance of the time that we contracted to have it completed, and the question comes to this:

Were we justified in assuming that indebtedness, in making that expenditure and increasing the indebtedness so largely before 1891? We undertook the construction of that work to be completed in 1891, believing that the natural growth of the country, and its increase, particularly under the policy which was adopted by the people in 1878, and sustained by the people in 1882, would warrant an expenditure so large as was to be incurred upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, year by year, up to 1891, that the growth and ability of the country, year by year, would be sufficient to meet the added expenditure upon that railway, and that we would reach 1891 with a completed railway and without any burden upon this country that the people were not willing and able to bear. The proposition came to us to have that railway completed six years in advance of the contract time, and it became a question for us to consider: Shall we gain sufficient by taking the liability and loaning the company \$30,000,000 and paying the subsidy six years in advance of the time named in the contract? Our expenditure on the portions of the road that were to be completed by the Government itself would be about \$40,000,000 in the surveys and the construction of the portion in British Columbia, and that portion from Lake Superior to Selkirk. That was money well expended for the development of this country, and we expected that it would return to us, when the whole system was completed, more than 4 per cent. of interest. Until the completion of the entire line, we do not get any advantage, or at least we get only a partial advantage, from the expenditure of that \$40,000,000. That was one of the elements which entered into the calculation. We have \$40,000,000 of expenditure which will be comparatively idle and useless until the whole line is completed, and we will lose the interest on that amount at 4 per cent., which, in six years, amounts to \$9,600,000. Then, so long as we had not all-rail communications with Manitoba and the North-West, the people of the North-West were compelled to deal largely with the people of the United States, and for six months of the year all their intercourse was with them. During those six years we believed that there would be commercial relations formed by the people of Manitoba and the North-West that would continue and last through a generation; and that the older Provinces would be deprived of the full benefit of trade and commerce, and intercourse with the North-West during that period, if the communications were not afforded. That was another element which entered into the consideration, that we should, at the earliest possible hour, place the people of Manitoba and the North-West, and the people of the older Provinces, in direct communication all the year round. Then you take the means of communication which the want of that railway forced upon us. For six months of the year we were obliged to travel through the United States. The distance from Montreal to Winnipeg, through the United States, is 1,698 miles; of this, 654 miles are on Canadian territory, so that every Canadian who desired to reach Winnipeg had to travel for 1,044 miles upon American lines. He had to pay the fare on American railways, and patronise American Pullman cars and American restaurants, and, perhaps, would stay over a day or two to see the country. Therefore, every man passing to and fro for six or seven months was compelled to travel over the American railways, and contribute to support them. What does that amount to? I have looked at the returns of the various railways, of the number of people passing to and fro, but the number of people going to British Columbia and coming from British Columbia would lead the older Provinces and Manitoba—we will say 20,000 people a year would have been compelled, during six years, to pass to and fro over 1,044 miles of American railways. Now, what would each passenger have had to pay? I have ascertained from enquiries that the amount would have been at least \$50 each for railway and Pullman car, for restaurant and various other incidental expenses; so that you have a contribution by the people of old Canada and the North-West to American railways of \$1,000,000 a year. Then we have to take into account the freight for which the American railways have a monopoly for seven months in the year, during which we send at least 25,000 tons of freight to and fro from Manitoba to the older Provinces, and putting the average price at \$20 a ton, we were paying half a million dollars a year. Then for passage money and freight, going to and fro between Manitoba and the older Provinces, we were paying \$1,500,000 a year to the support of American railways, to say nothing of the commercial connections that would have been formed by our own people. Now, Mr. Speaker, in six years that amounts to \$9,000,000. We find that for the bare freight and passage fare that we should send through that country our people would have expended for the support of American railways \$9,000,000 in six years. That formed an element in the consideration of whether we should advance that money and have the road built six years earlier, in order to save that sum of money amongst our people. Then we are going to save 278 miles in travel, as the distance through our own territory, 766 miles, is 278 miles shorter than through American territory. By lessening the distance by that amount our own people would save in passage money \$400,000 a year, and in six years \$2,400,000. All this sum we have saved by opening this railway six years earlier than was proposed by the contract. Take only the lake shore route of 766 miles, and if you go beyond that and into the mountains, the difference will be much greater; but I shall be content to consider only the road around the north shore of Lake Superior. Now, 766 miles of railway require a large number of men to operate it, to watch the track, to run the locomotives, to attend to the machine shops, and keep everything in order. The average number of men employed per mile on railways is  $4\frac{1}{2}$ , so that upon upon the 766 miles this railway affords employment six years earlier for 3,452 men. These men have families, so that this railway affords employment and subsistence to a population of 13,803 for six years earlier than would have been the case under the old contract. Now, the Acting Minister of Railways tells me, and the superintendents of other railways tell me, that the average wages paid to railway men, from the trackmen to the highest mechanic in their employ, is \$50 a month; that would amount to \$172,600 a month, or \$2,681,200 a year, and for the six years \$12,527,000 that will be expended in our country and among our own people for the maintenance of this 766 miles of railway. All these advantages we secure for our own people by finishing this railway six years in advance of the time fixed by the contract. In this way we get the full value of the 40 millions we have expended upon the British Columbia sections and the Lake Superior sections, even assuming that the bare interest is worth \$9,600,000—and, of course, it was worth more than that to this country to have that money expended; otherwise, I do not suppose the people of Canada would have undertaken that work. But certainly indirectly it was worth more than the bare interest. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we felt justified in assuming this indebtedness six years in advance of the time named in the contract. I think when you look at the results that will be obtained, when you look at the bare saving that will be effected in keeping the expenditure of money in our own country, it will be admitted that circumstances justify the assumption of that indebtedness by the people of Canada. I have shown the hon. gentleman, who has employed all his ingenuity in filling up the indebtedness and the interest thereon, that if we only went back to his tariff of 1878 we would more than meet an increased expenditure' which the hon. gentleman is able to conjure up. But the hon. gentleman grows aghast at the fact that since 1868 we have increased our expenditure by an amount of \$24,000,000. Why, Mr. Speaker, he did not tell us that since 1863 British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba and the North-West Territories have been added to the Dominion, and have involved a largely increased expenditure. Then he would have us dwell particularly on the fact that from 1873 to 1878 they had not increased the expenditure in any way. Nothing could more condemn the management of the late Government than the fact that for five years they had done nothing more than hold their own, almost to a dollar.

Mr. VAIL. Oh, oh.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member for Digby laughs. The mummies in the catacombs of Egypt have not increased the expenditure one dollar in five years. Hon. gentlemen opposite were afraid to increase the expenditure. They were like the steward who went and hid his talent in a napkin. They were afraid to put it out, to employ it for the benefit of their masters, the people; and when they went to their masters, in 1878, they met with a similar answer to that given to the steward, to whom were applied whips and scorpions. If it is a great crime to increase the expenditure of the country, why almost all the rest of the world, except some dead countries and some completed countries, are guilty of it. If you find a country which has not increased its expenditure during the last five years it is some completed country or some dead country.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the United States?

Mr. McLELAN. I will show hon. gentlemen what the United States has done. Hon. gentlemen are fond of quoting the United States, and I will show that there is hardly any country which has increased the expenditure for civil government more than the United States has within the last five years. The following are statistics of governmental expenditure:—Austria: 1879, £47,116,365; 1884, £51,491,937, an increase of £4,375,572, or 10 per cent. Hungary: 1879, £25,643,638; 1884, £32,920,023, an increase of £7,277,385, or 33 per cent. Belgium: 1879, £10,944,258; 1884, £13,154,370, an increase of £2,210,112, or 20 per cent. Germany (Prussia): 1879, £35,692,889; 1884, £54,152,894, an increase of £19,460,005, or 54 per cent. Great Britain: 1875, £74,328,040; 1879, £85,107,789, an increase of £11,079,749, or 17 per cent. Greece: 1879, £2,145,670; 1884, £3,432,584, an increase of £1,286,914, or 57 per cent. Italy: 1879, £61,423,937; 1884, £62,227,073, an increase of £803,136, or  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. Netherlands: 1879, £9,607,605; 1884, £11,938,314, an increase of £2,330,709, or 22 per cent. Russia: 1879, £64,389,225; 1884, £80,200,000, an increase of £15,810,775, or 25 per cent. Spain: 1879-80, £32,263,638; 1883-84, £32,053,999, a decrease of £109,639, or 33 per cent. India: 1879, £63,031,070; 1883, £69,418,598, an increase of £6,387,520, or 10 per cent. Japan: 1879-80, £12,063,515; 1883-84, £15,121,211, an increase of £3,057,696, or 25 per cent. New South Wales: 1879, £4,570,720; 1883, £7,791,088, an increase of £3,220,368, or 75 per cent. Queensland: 1879, £1,678,931; 1883, £2,242,971, an increase of £564,340, or 33 per cent. South Australia: 1879, £1,768,167; 1883, £2,330,079, an increase of £561,912, or 33 per cent. Western Australia: 1879, £145,312; 1883, £240,566, an increase of £95,254, or 65 per cent. Canada: 1879, \$24,455,381; 1884, \$31,107,706, an increase of \$6,552,325, or 23½ per cent. United States: 1845, \$21,895,369; 1850, \$37,165,990, or 76 per cent.; 1855, \$56,316,197, or 49 per cent.; 1860, \$60,056,754, or 7 per cent.; 1878, \$134,463,452; 1883, \$206,248,006, an increase of \$61,784,554, or 46 per cent. Decrease in interest charges, \$43,340,743, leaving a total of \$105,125,297, or 77½ per cent., without interest reduction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Every penny of which went to reduce the debt. The expenditure of the United States decreased 50 per cent. within the last 17 years.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman says that the amount has been expended in reducing the indebtedness, and they have reduced the interest payment. I have shown that the increase was 46 per cent., notwithstanding the reduction of interest. The United States were paying \$43,000,000 less interest in 1883 than 1878, and yet the other expenditures for civil government ran the whole up to 46 per cent. If you take out the interest, for the benefit of the hon. member for Digby and the hon. member for South Huron, the increase is  $77\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I say they have reduced the expenditure 50 per cent. in 17 years. The statements of the hon. gentleman are incorrect.

Mr. McLELAN. We have increased our indebtedness, and to cover the interest on that increased indebtedness our annual expenditure has been increased  $23\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; but the United States, taking away the saving they have made in interest, have increased the expenditure  $77\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is wholly in error.

Mr. McLELAN. Then all the books that contain the returns of the expenditures of the various countries of the world are in error. Everything seems to be wrong that does not aid the hon. gentleman's own particular argument; and perhaps it would be unparliamentary to say that the hon. gentleman wishes to show this country in the blackest possible light. And, therefore, in everything that does not tend to show that the country is going to ruin, that we are all becoming bankrupt, there must be some error in it. He will not even admit that any of the public records of this country are correct, unless they make for his own particular views. After the hon. gentleman had piled up that prospective indebtedness, he said we will have an indebtedness of $55 a head. I have gone over a number of these countries, and I have shown how great an increase there is in the expenditure of the progressive countries of the world, and now I will refer to their indebtedness. That of Austria is $65 a head, Hungary $55 a head, Belgium $75 a head, France $129 a head, Great Britain—that country from which we obtain our moneys—$102 a head, as against our $55. You have in France and Great Britain nearly completed countries, in which there is not that room for development, growth and progress that there is in the Dominion of Canada, and there you find double the debt of the Dominion of Canada. Take, next, the Netherlands, which is $105 a head; take New South Wales, which has increased its expenditure of last year 75 per cent.—its indebtedness per head is $123, or more than double ours. Queensland, which increased its expenditure 35 per cent., has an indebtedness of $250 a head. So I do not think that the hon. gentleman should alarm us very greatly by counting up our prospective indebtedness, and making it $55 a head, when I have shown that almost all the countries of the world are increasing their expenditures very rapidly, and have a much larger debt per head than the people of Canada. But I have referred to the prospects we have for relief, for reducing that indebtedness and for meeting that expenditure. The hon. gentleman knows that when he has piled upon us all this indebtedness he has laid upon the people of Canada almost all the indebtedness it has been necessary for them to incur for a number of years. With the Inter-colonial system completed, with all those various lines which we have subsidised, with the Canadian Pacific Railway completed, the hon. gentleman knows that there need not be for a number of years any very large expenditure by the people of Canada on capital account. And, Sir, with the natural increase of our population, with the increase that there must be through immigration, provided the hon. gentleman will cease from making speeches defaming, decrying and belittling our country, we have nothing to fear. The people of this country are as enterprising and energetic as any in the world. The hon. gentleman prophesied, in 1878, that we were going to dry up the fountains of trade by the National Policy; that we would have no trade with the outside world, and no international trade. The hon. gentleman knows, from the returns of trade, that there has been an enormous increase of our trade with the world abroad, and that it has largely increased since 1878.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The returns do not show it.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman knows that when he was in power, from 1873 to 1878, the hand of trade turned backward on the dial, and that all our industries were paralysed. But if you compare Canada with the countries of the world, you will hardly find one that has more trade outside of herself, while her interior trade compares favorably with that of any country in the world of the same population. Our external trade places us in a proud position.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Take New South Wales. It has $100 to our $18.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman is very fond of going to the United States. He was there half a dozen times tonight, and I suppose the hon. member for North Norfolk will take us there a dozen times more. He will make all his comparisons with that country. Let us go to the United States. In Canada, our trade with the outside world was $53 per head of our population in 1884, while that of the United States was $30 per head. France was $47.60; Canada, for her population, exceeded the United States, exceeded France, exceeded Brazil, which was $19.65, exceeded Spain, which was $15. Great Britain was $103, and our standing on the list I have mentioned was ahead of France, ahead of Spain, ahead of Brazil, Italy, Portugal, Mexico, Russia, Prussia and the United States. I say that with the room for development which we have at home, with the uses we are making of these, and with the facilities we have for commerce with the world, there is nothing in the remarks of the hon. gentleman to cause us alarm. The hon. gentleman complains once more, for perhaps the hundredth time, that we have been driving people out of this country—that but for our impolicy we should have a prosperous North-West.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member for Bothwell says "hear, hear," just as if he had made the North-West. Five years his Government were in power, and what did they do for the North-West?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We had peace and good government there, and did not provoke a rebellion by brutal misgovernment.

Mr. McLELAN. No; but I tell the hon. gentleman that an Opposition on the stump and in Parliament and through their press can do more to provoke a rebellion than a Government; and if the hon. gentleman will go over all the utterances which have gone from this House and from the platforms of the various meetings he and his colleagues and associates have addressed, which have been taken up on the wings of the press and been scattered through the North-West and reached the half-breeds, and taken root in their hearts, and have led them to believe that we were ready for a rebellion, and that all they had to do was to rise and there would not be a man from any part of the Dominion who would go to put them down, he will find that an Opposition can do more to create a rebellion than can be done by a Government. But the hon. gentleman says we have had a prosperous North-West. Why, Sir, what did they do towards making a prosperous North-West? During the five years they were in office they attempted to get connection with the North-West, and open up and develop that country by that famous water stretch system—by running a little piece of railway from Fort William, for 114 miles, and using Rainy River, the Lake of the Woods, and the Fort Frances locks, and by building another 114 miles to Selkirk.

An hon. MEMBER. The Neebing hotel.

Mr. McLELAN. The Neebing hotel did not contribute very largely to the success of the North-West, unless it contributed to the defeat of that Government, and to bring into power a Government that administered the North-West in a proper manner. After reaching Selkirk they proposed to go by the lakes and by the Waterhen River, and up the Saskatchewan for 700 or 800 miles to the Rocky Mountains. I say that hon. gentlemen opposite never intended to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, as a Government work, beyond Selkirk. It is in the record. I have been advised by my hon. friend not to refer to the record, or to enter into that question; but we are ready to show that they never intended to go beyond Selkirk; and while they are blaming us for not doing enough for the North-West, the proof is in the record that they did not consider it worth while to deflect the line to Winnipeg for 7,000 or 8,000 people, but they wanted to go direct up into the North-West and carry the railway into a swamp. These hon. gentlemen taunt us and say that but for mismanagement we should have had a million people in that country, although they left it, according to their own admissions, with scarcely 30,000 of a population. Under the changed system of making rapid and direct all rail communication to that country, on the change of Government, the people saw that there was to be a country worth going into, and they believed that the Government would perform the work they had undertaken; and, Sir, from 30,000 the population has increased in five years to a very large number. The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) this Session, I believe, just before the rebellion broke out, moved a resolution here that there should be a new Province formed out of the Territory of Alberta, as its population had increased so largely; and when hon. gentlemen speak of the Farmers' Union they speak of 150,000 farmers as belonging to it; and yet the entire population of the country when they left office was not over 30,000. The hon. gentleman should not taunt us and say there are not enough people in the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taunted us, time and again, and challenge us to point out a single sentence they have uttered condemning that country. Why, that is only part of a scheme to defame that country. They want us to gather up all they have uttered against the country and put it in Hansard again and give it new circulation. It is not enough for the railway agents of the United States to take their utterances here on the floor of Parliament and print them, illustrated by pictures of those hon. gentlemen, but they must challenge us now to say what they uttered against the country. They wanted to have new circulation, that it may contribute to the damnation of that country. We are tempted to go over the record, to take the speeches and the language and the writings of those hon. gentlemen, to show how they have devoted, from time to time, their efforts to belittling and degrading this Dominion. Were it not that injury would result by new circulation being given to these utterances, were it not that these utterances would have their effect on capitalists abroad, we might go over their record; but capitalists abroad would be disposed to give these utterances some credence; they could not suppose that men holding responsible positions would attempt to decry their own country; they would not believe that in any country or city, since the destruction of Sodom, could be found men who would concentrate all their energies to degrading and belittling their own country. Therefore, we refuse to accept their challenge, not wishing to give new circulation to what has already fallen from those hon. gentlemen. The hon. gentleman says that our course has tended to reduce our credit abroad and prevent our borrowing at 3½ per cent. Well, it may be we are not able to borrow at so low a rate as some countries; but if it be true that there are men high in position here who are continually representing to the capitalists of other countries that we are an insolvent and ruined country, how can we expect our credit to increase. The hon. gentleman knows the advantage of presenting the silver side of the shield to the money lenders; he knows the effect in the English market which a bad speech, a speech pointing out that the finances of the country are in a deplorable condition, would have upon the money lenders; and he knows the effect of presenting the silver side of the shield to the capitalists, assuring them that we are in a prosperous condition and that all the expenditure we have incurred has been for works of a remunerative character. But there is another consideration for the money lender. It may be that he will consider that the revenue will meet our expenditure and interest; it may be that he will look to the permanency of the country; and when he takes up the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite, what does he find, that might induce him to consider the Dominion is stable and permanent? He finds the hon. gentleman advocating independence, stating that the time is near at hand, probably long before the bonds we are offering will be due, when the Dominion will be an independent country. Again, he will see by those speeches that in all parts of the country there is disunion and that Confederation will not continue, that there will be secession here and secession there, and that the whole thing will fall apart like a rope of sand; and the effect upon the money lender will be that he will not make investments in this country without being assured of the permanency of its institutions. But the hon. gentleman knows that our credit, despite his speeches and those of his colleagues, is bound to increase; that, taking into account our indebtedness per head, and our room for development, and our progress and our prospects, the Dominion is better security than Great Britain herself; that it offers a more secure investment than Great Britain herself. Look at the Dominion and the development she is making. Take the worst picture the hon. gentleman can present—that there is $55 a head of indebtedness upon us; and go to Great Britain. There you will find a large expenditure and a large indebtedness per head, and you will find that Great Britain has not that room for development and progress which is to be found in Canada, while in Great Britain there will always be heavy expenditure for the army and navy, to maintain the position she occupies in the world. Therefore, if you could persuade capitalists to keep away from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite the capitalists of Great Britain would be led to believe that in Canada there is a safer investment than in any country in Europe, Great Britain not excepted. The hon. gentleman has referred to the rebellion. I believe it will have this effect upon our credit, that it will prove the lie has been given to the utterances of those who have been preaching secession, who have been saying there is no feeling among the people in favor of preserving Confederation intact. The rebellion has shown the world that there is no desire for secession and separation, but that there is a determination among the people and a readiness among the people to preserve this Union intact. The result will be, I believe, that capitalists abroad will have greater faith in Canada hereafter ; they will see that there is not only a determination on the part of our people to preserve Confederation intact, but that we have men among us who have surprised the world by the readiness with which they took up arms and the courage they exhibited during the rebellion. We knew we had a large number of volunteers of whom my colleague (Mr. Caron) was very proud, but there remained the test of fire to be applied to prove their quality. The test has been applied, and the result has shown that we have in our volunteers the stuff of which soldiers are made. We have the proud satisfaction of knowing that not one man flinched or faltered in his duty, though they were in the most trying position in which soldiers can be placed, that of fighting against a concealed foe. Now we reckon heroes, where, two short months ago, we only counted men. The result of rebellion will be beneficial abroad. Capitalists abroad who are loaning us money will have faith in the Dominion of Canada and our credit will thereby be improved.

Mr. MILLS. You want another rebellion to improve it more.

Mr. McLELAN. I have to apologise for having detained the House so long. The hon. gentleman has, I fancy, done his best to present the finances of the country in a deplorable condition. I believe the effect will not be very serious. The hon. gentleman has a marked ability for making the worse appear the better cause. The hon. gentleman exhibits a wonderful ingenuity in proving what he desires. He asks us why a million of people have gone out of this country and are in the United States, but he forgets that he was Finance Minister for five years, and that half a million of the people who are out of the country and in the United States have stated, as was read by the hon. member for West Durham, last Session, that they went out in 1876 and 1877.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Nothing of the kind ; that is entirely incorrect.

Mr. McLELAN. It is stated upon the responsibility of the member for West Durham, and you must settle it between yourselves.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was quoted. Produce your authority.

Mr. McLELAN. At any rate, the hon. gentleman knows that he was five years in power ; he knows that there was no employment for people in this country, and that people will go where there is employment to be had, and that people went abroad and sought employment that they ought to have had at home. The hon. gentleman, in an elaborate argument, attempts to prove that there has been a great exodus, and that our whole population is being depleted, is running out of the country, and he takes up the municipal returns in one or two districts, and thinks he has the whole thing proven. If it would accomplish any party object, I believe the hon. gentleman, with his great abilities, with his great ingenuity, would go down beside the River St. Lawrence and elaborate a great argument to prove that it was running backwards. He would look at some of the circling eddies, he would look at some chip that was driven upwards by the wind, and on these little circumstances he would elaborate an argument to prove to the satisfaction of his own mind that the St. Lawrence was running upwards into the mountains and lakes. But we, who do not look at the eddies and the currents, but at the broad river itself, know that it is running downwards to the sea and increasing in depth and volume as it goes on. So, when he wants to prove that our population is leaving us, and that we are becoming day by day impoverished, he takes hold of some little circumstance, and from that elaborates an argument to prove that we are growing poorer year by year, while the facts and circumstances prove, as the waters that widen and roll down the St. Lawrence prove that the river is broadening and increasing, our trade and commerce and the investments of our people on every hand and in every savings bank prove that the prosperity of our country is increasing and growing and deepening and widening, and that we have nothing to fear from the prognostications and prophesies made by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall not detain the House long. It is not necessary to add to what was said by my hon. friend from South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), and all I shall ask the indulgence of the House for is a reply to a few of the points made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That gentleman, at the outset informed us that the member for South Huron on former occasions, when in office and when dealing with the question of deficits, was happy ; that he presented those financial statements to the House without that feeling of apprehension which he evidently entertained to-night. There was a good reason for the difference, if the difference existed, between the attitude of the hon. gentleman then and now. When presenting his statements, I do not know that he had special cause for alarm. He knew that the temporary difficulties under which Canada labored would pass away. He knew that the commercial depression that then rested upon the country was a matter of a few years, and would end. He knew that all the Government had to do in order to place Canada in the proper position was to husband the resources, keep down the expenditures, and administer the public affairs honestly, and that if the Government did this, as they did, if they strictly curtailed the expenses and economised our resources, he had but to bide his time, and all would be well. He knew that the tariff of 1876, upon a return of commercial prosperity, would give to this country an ample amount of revenue ; and the experience of the United States in that connection proves that the anticipations of the hon. gentleman in regard to that were well founded. In 1879 the United States derived from Customs the sum of $137,250,000. Without any change in the tariff whatever, they derived from Customs, in the year 1882, $220,000,000, an increase of over 69 per cent. in the brief period between 1879 and 1883. The change in commercial affairs which led to that great increase in the revenue of the United States, without any change in the rates of duties, would have led to an increase equally as great in Canada, if the tariff had not been changed, and if the increase in this country had been in proportion to that in the United States. With the continuance of the tariff he put upon the imports in 1876 he would, in 1882, have had a large surplus from the revenues derived from the duties imposed by that tariff. He had good reason for facing the future without alarm, for he knew he had only to keep the expenditures within reasonable bounds and give us an economical government, and the return of prosperity would give him ample funds for carrying on the affairs of the country. But what is the position of things to-day ? Why does my hon. friend look upon the future now with more apprehension than he did then ? Because we have a tariff that is not likely, under any circumstances, largely to increase our revenue ; because we have a Government that is not husbanding the resources of the country, but who, on the contrary, are reckless in their expenditure, and if I must use the expression, regardless of the interests of the people, who are increasing the expenditure by over $1,450,000 a year.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman proceeded to insinuate that the hon. member for South Huron was purposely guilty of seeking to affect the credit of the country in the loan that is about to be effected in England. Sir, my hon. friend has forborne to make any criticism of the financial administration of this country until he can no longer wait, and do so during this session of Parliament; he has purposely refrained from the criticism that he made to-night, fearing that it might, possibly, have an unfavorable effect upon our credit—knowing, at all events, that whether it had or not, he would be charged with unpatriotic conduct in doing so. Then, the hon. gentleman claims that it is unfair to take into account the extraordinary expenditure of this year in the North-West. That claim will not stand. The Government are obliged to meet the expenditure that it is necessary to incur from year to year, and in meeting our ordinary expenditures this year it is evident that we shall have a deficit.

Then the hon. gentleman proceeds to criticise the fiscal policy of the predecessors of this Government. He says that when the hon. member for South Huron went out of office we had a duty upon tea. Well, Sir, when he went out of office we had no duty upon coal and no duty upon bread, and I think that a comparison of the fiscal states of the two Governments will be infinitely in favor of my hon. friend. He tells us that the expenditure of this country largely increased under the administration of the predecessors of this Government. Well, Sir, I propose briefly to review the management of the financial affairs of this country under the Mackenzie Administration; and I venture to say that no Government of any civilised nation can present a financial record more honorable to itself than that of the Mackenzie Government. It came into power in 1874, when the general expenditure of this country had been run up from $13,486,000 to $23,316,000, and when we had a net debt of $108,324,000. It is true that that debt was increased; it is true that the net debt, which stood on the 1st of July, 1874, at the figures I have named, was $142,990,000 on the 1st of July, 1874; but it is furthermore true that the Mackenzie Administration were not responsible for anything more than a very small fraction of that increase. When they assumed the seals of office they were compelled to carry out contracts made by their predecessors, which rendered it necessary for them, during five years, to spend $17,645,000 upon miscellaneous public works, including the enlargement of canals, not one dollar of which they were responsible for nor had contracted. They had to discharge further obligations contracted by their predecessors to the extent of $11,052,000 upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to expend a further sum of $5,286,000 in the completion of the Intercolonial Railway, or a total capital expenditure, during their term of office, of $33,984,000, not one dollar of which they had contracted or that they could have avoided; so that, against a total increase of debt of $34,666,000 they had this $33,984,000 placed upon them by the acts of their predecessors. But in consequence of the financial years overlapping each other, they coming into office in 1874, when part of the financial year had run its course, and going out of office in 1878, when part of the financial year had also run its course, the comparison I have made with reference to the debt is less favorable to them than the facts justified, because they were actually responsible for the increase of the public debt to the extent of $100,000 only, to wit, the sum expended upon the St. Peter's Canal.

Then, Sir, I will take up the question of controllable expenditure. You know, Mr. Speaker, that we have fixed charges upon the revenue, and we have also an expenditure which we call a controllable expenditure, and it is only upon this latter class of expenditure that the Government can exercise economy. The fixed charges must be paid; the charges upon revenue for the management of public works, for post office expenses and the expenses of the Excise Department cannot be changed in any material degree. Now, let us see what the record of the Mackenzie Administration was with regard to the controllable expenditure. The controllable expenditure of the Macdonald Government during the first period was as follows: 1867-68, $3,630,298; 1873-74, $3,324,076, or an increase eleven times faster than the population of the country. We come to the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie and his colleagues. Starting with a controllable expenditure of $8,324,076 it was reduced, in 1878-79, to $6,941,577, or a decrease of $1,382,499. Then we come to the second period of the Macdonald Government. Commencing with a controllable expenditure of $6,941,577, it has been increased; until in 1884-85 it reaches $12,289,625, an increase of $5,348,048, or seven times faster than the population, with supplementary estimates and unprovided items yet to come. The following is a comparison of the total consolidated fund expenditure: First period, 1867-68, $13,486,092; 1873-74, $23,316,316—increase, $9,831,224, or an annual increase of $1,305,036. Second period: 1873-74, $23,316,316; 1878-79, $24,345,389—increase $1,139,065, or an average annual increase of $227,813. I may add, too, this increase was apparent rather than real. The real increase was actually very much less, because when my hon. friend went into office as Finance Minister he found that the estimates of Sir Leonard Tilley had been taken for $23,685,000 for the current fiscal year. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) spent only $23,316,000. Sir Leonard Tilley cannot claim that he would have spent less than his estimates. The estimates of Sir Richard Cartwright for 1878-79 were $23,669,000. He only remained in office a short time after the commencement of the fiscal year, and was succeeded by Sir Leonard Tilley who held office for more than three-fourths of the year, and spent $24,455,381, exceeding the estimates of Sir Richard by $786,381; for that excess Sir Leonard Tilley was responsible. In view of these facts the actual increase during Mr. Mackenzie's administration was really $353,000, or an average of $70,536 a year. With respect to the expenditure chargeable to the consolidated fund, in 1878-79 it was $24,455,381; 1883-84, $31,784,235., which includes unprovided items for 1883-84, $676,529 contained in the Estimates just brought down. The Estimates for the coming fiscal year are not yet complete enough for purposes of comparison, but were roughly stated by Sir Leonard Tilley at $32,850,000. The increase between 1878-79 and 1883-84 was $7,328,854, or an average annual sum of $1,465,770. That is a sufficient answer to the charge that the Mackenzie Administration had been guilty of maladministration of the financial affairs of this country. There was a large decrease in the controllable expenditure under that Government, as against a large increase under their predecessors—eleven times more than the increase of population during their first term of office, and seven times more than under their second term. There has also been a large increase in expenditure chargeable to the consolidated fund, amounting to more than $9,000,000, during their first term, and $7,000,000 during their second term as against an actual increase of $353,000 during the five years' term of the Mackenzie Administration.

The hon. gentleman resorted to an attack on the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) because he alleged that the Government had resorted to measures to secure support that were little short of bribery. That is known to be a fact; it is a matter of history that the Government have been obliged to buy support, that the Government have reconciled heterogeneous and conflicting elements, that the Orange is going hand in hand with the Bleu, and other dissimilar elements are united by buying their support. They could only obtain the support of the Bleus for the Canadian Pacific loan last year by imposing a further burden on the people to benefit local interests by granting railway subsidies. The Government has supported itself in this manner, it has made this practice part of its policy, and it has resorted to expedients of this kind in order to continue its term of office.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). How did the Government buy Orangemen?

Mr. CHARLTON. One way in which the Government is buying Orangemen is by giving Indians in East Hastings a vote. I do not think, however, that Orangemen have been so exacting as some of the other elements supporting the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman would like to see them fighting. They have, however, too much sense to be misled by his clap-trap.

Mr. CHARLTON. I admit that instead of the lion and the lamb lying down together, I should prefer to see them showing their natural tendencies. The hon. gentleman who addressed the House claimed that the record was sanctioned by the people in 1882. Had hon. gentlemen opposite evinced any confidence in the verdict of the people before they went to the election? Did they not, in order to make sure of a verdict, commit one of the greatest crimes ever perpetrated in any country. They showed by the Gerry-mander Act of 1882, by that base re-arrangement of ridings, that they had very little confidence in securing the verdict of the people. No doubt the hon. gentleman will claim that their conduct will be sanctioned by the verdict of the people at the next election. What steps are they taking to secure a favorable verdict? It will be sanctioned, perchance, by virtue of the decision of the revising barrister; it will be sanctioned, perhaps, by the trampling down of the fundamental principles of free institutions, by taking from the people the power of fixing their own representation, by putting in the hands of the creatures of the Government the power and the duty of forming and revising the electoral lists of this country, of giving barbarian Indians votes which may result in returning the hon. member for East Hastings and other supporters of the Conservative Government to seats in this House.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I was here before you, and will be here after you.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman has made some financial statements to-night, and I find it difficult to give credence to some of them. He says, for instance, that the Government are about to effect a saving of $1,900,000 on public works next year, out of a total vote of $1,500,000.

Mr. McLELAN. I said, if the necessity arose, it might be done.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not see what necessity could enable the Government to save $1,900,000 out of $1,500,000. If you can bring a pressure which will enable a man to do that, I should like to know how it can be done.

Mr. BOWELL. Just as you accused the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway of stealing eight millions out of six.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not remember that occurrence. Here is a summary of the Estimates for 1885-86, and I find—

Mr. McLELAN. My whole statement was on the expenditure of 1884-85—the full year.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not so understand the hon. gentleman. Perhaps he will tell us what are the Estimates for 1883-84.

Mr. McLELAN. I was talking of the expenditures.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman spoke of saving $1,900,000 out of $1,500,000 on public works. Then, Sir, he drew a very pleasant picture of the progress being made by this country in populating it; of orange blossoms; of nuptial wreaths; of cradles which were being established; and he said all this talk about the depletion of the population was imaginary, that nothing of the kind was occurring. Well, Sir, it is a lamentable fact that notwithstanding the rose-colored picture he drew we are losing a large number of our native-born Canadians; it is a lamentable fact that they are going from the country by thousands. Whether the exodus can be prevented or not is a question I cannot answer, but it is folly to deny that such a state of things exists. It is folly to charge on the Opposition any responsibility for that exodus, or that anything in the shape of the facts produced by their speeches leads to that exodus. The exodus is created by the condition of the country at the present time, and it has been largely accelerated since hon. gentlemen came to power. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that during the administration of affairs by the Mackenzie Government half a million of people left this country. Sir, the American statistics show that during the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie 134,000 Canadians left this country for the United States, and the same statistics show that since hon. gentlemen came into office that number went up to 450,000, or three times greater per year under the present Administration than under the preceding one.

The hon. gentleman proceeded to criticise the statements made by the hon. member for Huron with regard to the Intercolonial road. He asserted that the hon. gentleman misled the House in not stating that the capital account was increased $9,000,000 under the present Administration, and he referred to the fact that the River du Loup branch had been purchased and added to the road. I do not think that makes any particular difference. The capital of the road has been increased; the burdens of the country have been increased; and it yields a revenue of $10,000 on an investment of $45,000,000. Then he referred to the deficit of the previous Administration; but he forgot to mention the payments into sinking fund by that Administration, amounting to a sum almost if not quite great enough to counterbalance the deficits; and that if we take the payments into sinking fund, we have left a very light deficit, if any at all. He asks, what we had to show for our increase of the public debt, and he said we had public works. True, we have. He mentioned the Intercolonial Railway, which was said to have assumed the form of a Grecian bend to accommodate the hon. gentleman himself, and from which we got a return of $10,000 on an investment of $45,000,000. The money invested in the public works of Canada, all told, yield a revenue of about one-fifteenth of 1 per cent. Some of them are works of utility, like the canals, but the money spent on the Intercolonial road was squandered. The money invested in the Canadian Pacific Railway was millions and millions in excess of the amount required to secure the purpose aimed at; and if we sum up our investments in public works, we shall find that at least $70,000,000 to $80,000,000 of the debt of Canada are for investments in public works, with very little to show for them.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). If you go to the North-West you will not think so.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may go to the North-West a thousand times, but I shall never be convinced that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway secured, at a cost to this country of nearly $100,000,000, was a benefit to this country, when it could have been secured for one-third of that amount, or that that investment was a wise one.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Better men than you have thought so.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman should not indulge in these interruptions.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman dealt at great length, and apparently with peculiar pleasure, on the affairs of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He dwelt upon that portion of the policy of the Government by which the completion of this road was secured six years in advance of the terms of the contract, with a degree of unctiousness which clearly showed that he supposed the Government had done something worthy of approval in this portion of their policy. He asked, triumphantly, were they justified in their course? I say they were not. I say they were not justified in the mode in which the contract was first made; that the Government should have invited tenders from the capitalists of the world. In the second place, I say they were not justified in pushing the contract through when they found that better terms could be made. In the third place, they were not justified in their conduct with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in having failed to exercise a close supervision over its affairs, and to compel the company to use the money they received from this Government for the purposes of their contract. They were not justified in the efforts they made to secure the completion of this road six years in advance of the contract, because they secured it at a largely enhanced cost, without commensurate advantages to the country through which it was built. The hon. gentleman tells us that the development of the country is due to the rapid construction of the road. What growth is there in that country, that stretches to the Rocky Mountains and through the mountains? The population in the country between the base of the Rocky Mountains and Winnipeg could be located on one-third of the distance; it might be settled on 300 miles of that line and its branches. The line has been pushed through the prairie section faster than the necessities of the country required, though at an enhanced cost, and without conferring advantages on the country in any particular sense. If the original policy had been adhered to, of building the road slowly, and only so fast as the wants of the country required, it would have been better for the North-West, for the company and for Canada at large. Then the hon. gentleman refers to the great importance of having direct communication with the North-West by the road north of Lake Superior. Well, I am not disposed to question that the construction of the line north of Lake Superior is a matter of importance to the country. The Opposition never questioned the propriety of ultimately building that section of road, but what the Opposition contended was, that the financial strain upon the country was too great, the increase in the debt of the country was too rapid, and the obligations the country had incurred were so onerous that we should seek rather to economise our resources than to rush ahead heedlessly and incur a vast amount of debt. Reasoning from these premises, we contended that a line running south of Lake Superior and connecting with the lines to the west at Sault Ste. Marie would serve all the practical purposes of the country in the meantime, without straining our financial resources to the extent to which they have been strained. I believe that was the true policy. The great bulk of the trade of the North-West will be transferred at Port Arthur from the railway to steamer and be carried to eastern ports. I do not believe that in the summer the traffic will, to any extent, traverse the line north of Lake Superior. Then the hon. gentleman speaks a good deal of the advantages of opening those 760 miles of road. He told us the actual labor employed on that section will amount to $2,000,000 per annum, equal to $8,000,000 paid to trackmen and laborers over the whole line. I believe his estimate was very extravagant, and even if it was not, Canadians will not derive a great advantage from that expenditure, because the company seem to have a preference for Americans. They have an American general manager, and an American division superintendent at Winnipeg; nearly all their contracts have been performed by Americans; American engineers have located the different portions of the road; American drivers and conductors are employed on their trains; in fact, it is an American company, under American management and supervision, and any advantages that accrue to laborers are not likely, if the present system of management is continued, to accrue largely to our own people. Then the hon. gentleman makes very little of the increase in our expenditure, and says that the annexation of British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and the North-West has given us an acquisition of population which will fully counterbalance the increase in the expenditure. That is an absurd statement. The population of British Columbia was some 10,000 or 12,000; the population of Manitoba and the North-West was but a few thousands, and the population of Prince Edward Island is about 100,000. To say that this population of some 200,000, all told, out of a total population of about 4,500,000, could account for all this increased expenditure, amounting to $9,100,000 in the first term of office of hon. gentlemen opposite, and nearly $8,000,000 in the second term, is absurd.

Then, Sir, in this most wonderful part of this singular medley, the hon. gentleman, after having arraigned the late Government for its maladministration of affairs, and for increasing the public debt, proceeds to condemn them on the ground that they had not increased the debt during their five years of office. He says they are like the man told of in the Scriptures, who buried his talent in the earth—that they did not develop the resources of the country or increase the expenditure, that they did not embark in the Pacific Railway and other public works. They did spend large sums of money on public works, but they economised in all directions, wherever they could; and while they carefully avoided increasing the expenses of the country, they administered the affairs of the country efficiently; and I defy the hon. gentleman to show any interest in this country which suffered under the administration of the hon. Mr. Mackenzie and his colleagues, in consequence of parsimony on their part or their refusal to spend money where necessary. The hon. gentleman drew comparisons between the increase in the expenditure of Canada and that of the United States, and I cannot find in the statistics of the United States anything that will warrant the statements made by the hon. gentleman or the conclusions arrived at by him. I find, on enquiring into his statements, that the expenditure in the United States has increased less rapidly than in this country. For instance, under the head of Civil Government, the United States spent, in 1868 $58,177,000 and in 1883 $68,678,000, being an increase of $10,000,000, not a higher percentage than the increase in population. Coming down to the total net ordinary expenditure of the country, including interest, I find that in 1874 the United States expended $194,118,000 and in 1883 $206,248,000, or barely $12,000,000 of an increase in ten years.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Take the statistics for 1884. The hon. gentleman will find the amount is $244,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was spoken of was the necessary taxation.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have only the almanac for 1884, which gives the returns for 1883.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have it for 1885, which gives the returns for 1884, and these returns show an increase of about $40,000,000 in that year.

Mr. CHARLTON. The net ordinary expenditure in 1816 was $23,373,000, and in 1852 $40,389,000. If you take the Treasurer's report of the United States, giving the net ordinary increase every year since 1816, you will find the average rate of increase very much less than our own. Then the hon. gentleman made a comparison with other colonies, but there is this difference between our own and the Australian colonies, that we keep a capital account while they do not. In their expenditure the hon. gentleman has figured up loans, capital expenditure and ordinary expenses. But supposing we had figured up, as a part of our expenditure this year, the $60,000,000 we are borrowing, what kind of exhibit would that make? That shows the comparison is wholly unfair and unreliable, and my hon.

friend at my right (Sir Richard Cartwright) reminds me, with reference to the volume of trade in the different countries, that the exports of New South Wales were $100 per head and those of Canada only $18 per head during the last fiscal year.

The hon. gentleman proceeds to inform us that no further increase in our debt is now necessary. I should be very loath to trust the present Administration in any promise they might make to refrain from increasing our public debt. It would be something new for them to refrain from increasing our debt or unduly increasing our expenditure. That would be at variance with their whole past history since 1867, and I cannot give them credit for any such repentance until they show the fruits of their repentance by actual deeds. From $13,500,000 in 1867, hon. gentlemen opposite have run up our expenditure to $32,800,000 in the next fiscal year. A government which has so largely increased the controllable expenditure, a Government which has increased the public debt by $200,000,000, being six times faster than our increase in population, a Government with this record, I would not chose voluntarily to administer the fiscal affairs of the country for the next term of office. I would not trust them in any promise they might make that they would not increase the debt of the country. They cannot avoid increasing it, for if they hold power it is by means involving, necessarily, an increase in our debt. They retain office by virtue of the policy depicted by Petroleum V. Nasby, by virtue of plunder, by subsidising their supporters whenever they find themselves in a tight place, whenever any section of their supporters hold a caucus, in No. 8 or elsewhere, and determine to make fresh demands on the Government, in return for new demands of the Government on their allegiance. The very circumstance in which the Government are placed, the very conditions under which they hold power, the very measures which are necessary to reconcile the conflicting elements that form their following, render it imperative upon them to continue the course they have been continuing for years past. Many of the things with which they are charged they have not been guilty of voluntarily, but because political exigencies rendered it necessary they should sacrifice the interests of the country to retain office. The very reasons that compelled this Government to administer the affairs of the country in the way they have administered them, the very reasons that compel them to increase our debt and our expenditure as rapidly as it has been increased—these very reasons will work the same effect and produce the same results in the future as in the past.

The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries made what might be called a Mosaic speech, his transitions were so very abrupt from one section to another, and I must perforce make the same abrupt transitions in following him. He next proceeds to charge the Opposition with having provoked the rebellion in the North-West. Their utterances, he says, reached the half-breeds and the Indians. I wonder if they took the daily papers and watched the progress of events in this country.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Their leaders did.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Gabriel Dumont is said to have been a subscriber to the Minerve. Probably he derived his ideas and inspirations from that source.

Mr. WOODWORTH. One of the leaders, named Jackson, was a correspondent of the Toronto Globe.

Mr. CHARLTON. This criticism of the Opposition has not a single element of fairness in it. The Opposition have done nothing to provoke rebellion in the North-West, but the difficulties that existed in the North-West and culminated in a rebellion were due to the supineness and indecision of the Government, which failed, for months and years, to grapple with them. By their mismanagement, by their land policy, by their colonisation land company policy, by their policy with regard to pasture lands leases and coal land leases and timber limits, by their policy of bartering away and dividing an empire among their followers without competition, in a manner subversive of all the principles of free government—by these means the difficulties in the North-West were created and fomented, and, in consequence of the utter incapacity of the Government to deal with these questions, or to attempt to enquire into the grievances these men complained of, the rebellion burst upon us. The Opposition had nothing to do with it; on the contrary, they protested against the indecision, the lack of ability displayed by the Government. We pointed out the weak points in their whole policy; we showed up the evil results of this land policy, and the continuance of the policy by which the Government granted timber limits, and of their policy with regard to pasture lands leases and coal land leases—all the items in the Government policy which produced the results, the hon. gentleman most unfairly attributed to efforts of the Opposition, we protested against; and had our representations been accepted and the course we advised been followed, this catastrophe, which finally burst upon the country, would have been averted. The hon. gentleman asked tauntingly why did we not open up the North-West when we were in office. But we did so; we constructed the line of railway from Emerson to Selkirk; we had in process of construction a line from Port Arthur to Selkirk; we had made arrangements for continuing the construction of that system of railways west of Red River, as fast as the needs of the country required. The then Premier (Mr. Mackenzie) had conceived and was carrying into operation a broad and comprehensive policy with regard to the development of the North-West. If this Government had carried out this policy, if this Government had built the road from Port Arthur to Selkirk and continued the construction of the road in the prairie section as fast as the wants of the country required, governing themselves by the wants of the country, this country would have been saved, in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at least $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 in cash and the entire land subsidy. It is to be regretted that the wise policy pursued by the Mackenzie Administration in the development of the North-West has not been pursued by their successors. Then the gentleman proceeds to say: They challenged us to gather up what they had said about the North-West, in order to put it in Hansard and secure damnation to the country. That is rather a strong expression, and he says: We will not accept the challenge. No; no matter how often we hurled it in their teeth they will not accept it; they will not gather up the attacks we made on the North-West and our attempts to belittle the North-West. Because they cannot; because such charges do not exist; because the charge that we have engaged in any such attempt to belittle or traduce the North-West, or to attempt to divert the stream of settlement from that country or injure that country, has no foundation.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. If I furnish the hon. gentleman with statements made detrimental to the country, not only by the Reform press, but by hon. gentlemen opposite, will he read them to the House?

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, if the hon. gentleman wishes to read any extracts at this late hour he can have permission to read them. I do not deny that letters may have appeared in the Mail and the Globe, and other papers, giving expression to views in reference to the North-West; but, as a party, we have nothing to do with the expressions of individuals. If the Mail says a terrible frost has visited the North-West, and has carried bankruptcy and destruction in it, we are not responsible for that. If some writer in the Globe says there are alkali lands in the North-West, we have nothing to do with that. We have never attempted to belittle the North-West or to prevent settlers from going to the North-West.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman has challenged members to give these statements to the House. I will hand him the articles, if he will read them. I said nothing about the Mail, and refer to speeches made by leading Oppositionists and articles in Liberal newspapers. I would like to get the extracts incorporated in the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. CHARLTON. You will have a little difficulty in doing that. So much for the argument of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). It is not much, any way.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, it is not much. It reminds me of an old stanza in Col. John Hay's collection, descriptive of a Mississippi steamer stranded on a sand bar. My hon. friend may not have been on that river, but they have spars which the crews set upon the bottom and by means of which they lift the boat a little and set her ahead with her engines—then another pull with spar and tackle and another heave ahead, till the boat is released or the task abandoned. The stanza is this:

"And she hove and sot, and hove and sot,
And high her rudder flung,
And every time she hove and sot,
The wusser leak she sprung."

That is just the character of the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. WOODWORTH. That is in Hansard three or four times already.

Mr. CHARLTON. I admit that I used it once before in the House, but knowing the hon. gentleman's fondness for poetry I have given it to him again. In conclusion, the hon. gentleman gave my hon. friend to my right a compliment. He said he was capable of presenting the financial position of the country very ably, and had done his best to present the finances to-night in a deplorable light. I do not think the criticism was deserved. The speech of my hon. friend was a most temperate speech, and his statements were warranted by the facts he produced. I do not think that the statements made by the hon. gentleman were not the truth, and ought not to be presented to the whole of the people of this country. They were intended to show the whole people what was the financial condition of this country, with the alarming burdens which are being piled on the people. The only apology for this state of things, which was tacitly acknowledged by the hon. Minister, was that we were no worse off than some other countries, and he referred to the old effete despotisms of Europe, Austria and Germany, and Spain and Belgium, those old countries where the land is of great value and they have a larger debt per head than we have. We have a large enough debt in this country. If the public debt amounts to $250,000,000, as it does allow for the shrinkage which must have taken place in our assets, the share the hon. gentleman's native Province has to bear is $25,000,000. If that is the share of Nova Scotia, there are 188,644 acres of improved land in that Province, and the share of Nova Scotia amounts to $14 per acre, which, I am told by those who are familiar with the value of property there, is as much as the value of the improved land in that Province. If that is true, when the hon. gentleman goes back to Nova Scotia and explains to the people why the Government, of which he is a member, have placed that mortgage on every acre of improved land in the Province, I think he will have some difficulty in persuading the people of the correctness of their action. A debt of $55 per head, whether it be less than the debt in some of the European countries or not, is more than double that of the United States. We are side by side with the United States; both countries are presenting their claims to immigrants from Europe, and it is necessary to convince immigrants that they will have a good Government and light taxation; and if we are obliged to confess that our public debt is three-fifths greater than that of the United States, we are placed at a very great disadvantage at the outset.

In the discussion of this question we are accused of a lack of patriotism because we present fairly the state of public affairs in this country, because we warn the Government that their course is not in the interests of the people; because we demand of the Government that their course shall cease and the steps they are taking shall be retraced. We would fail in our duty as an Opposition if we did not protest against what we believe to be false policy and reckless conduct, and, whether patriotic or unpatriotic, we believe it is our duty to seek to protect the people and their interests from the recklessness of those who show no sign of having the interests of the people at heart.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Hon. members say "hear, hear." Everything is serene. But what are our immediate liabilities to day. We owe in Government notes, upon demand, $14,998,000. We owe to depositors in the Government savings banks, on demand, $17,148,000. We owe to depositors in the post office savings bank, $14,492,000, payable on demand. We owe, in the shape of temporary loans—I do not know exactly what we do owe. By the statement of my hon. friend, the amount is $15,819,000, but by the statement made a few days ago as to the floating debt being $62,000,000, and taking from that the amount of Government notes and the amounts on deposit in the savings banks, we have a floating debt unaccounted for of $17,500,000. We owe—perhaps, I ought not to count this, as it may have been arranged for by this time—$25,000,000 in maturing loans. We have to provide about $3,000,000 for Indian war expenses very soon. We have to provide for the Canadian Pacific Railway the balance of the subsidy and the loan authorised last year, $6,000,000, almost immediately. We have got to provide for the balance of expenditure upon capital account for the year ending 30th of this month, as brought down in the Supplementary Estimates, of $1,328,000. That amounts to $99,497,000 of immediate liabilities. In addition, we are about to loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $5,000,000 more; in addition to this, we are to spend in the next financial year upon capital, $10,497,000. Then, in addition to this, out of all the millions we have voted as railway subsidies for the purpose of conciliating these conflicting elements that the Government have to keep in hand, we have to expend on these subsidies, within a year, probably $2,500,000, making in all $117,464,000. This is a beautiful record. No pent-up Utica contracts our powers in the matter of incurring debt, but the whole boundless continent is ours. Now, Sir, our financial position is so desperate that we have had to send a sick Finance Minister and his deputy to England, in the midst of the Session, with his Estimates practically untouched, in order to borrow money. That fact alone shows that the country is in desperate financial straits, that something had to be done and done quickly. If we continue this course there is imminent danger of our finances breaking down. Our circulating notes now amount to $14,998,000, and there is danger of increasing that amount to an indefinite extent, and making them a legal tender without a basis of gold reserves at all. There is danger of an irredeemable fiat money in this country; and many prudent, careful men, to my knowledge, have not loaned a dollar upon mortgage for years past without making it a condition in their mortgages that payment shall be made in gold or its equivalent, fearing and foreseeing that the day will come when the legal tender of this country will be a depreciated currency. Sir, our Dominion liabilities, in the shape of notes, that are liable to be presented for payment to-morrow, amount to $14,998,000. Our deposits in the Government savings banks are $31,640,000, or a total of $46,678,000, payable upon demand, to meet which we have $2,887,000 in specie and about $2,000,000 in guaranteed English bonds. I say that if any bank in this country had liabilities in the same proportion to its resources as this Government have, that bank would inevitable fail; a statement of its affairs would destroy public confidence in it. Yet, Sir, in the midst of this desperate condition of affairs, the Government of this country, instead of seeking a remedy, instead of seeking a means to diminish the expenditure, have allowed things to drift, until here we are, on the 25th day of June, with the Estimates in such a condition that we cannot possibly get through them during this financial year. The Government have been neglecting this important duty, and for two months have been trying to put a measure through this House for the purpose of taking from the people of Canada the power to exercise their free choice to elect representatives to this House. Sir, the highest duty that devolves upon us as members of this House is to seek to secure a country that is well governed, a country that has a moderate taxation, a country that has simple and just laws. We should seek to make our land one that will be attractive to foreigners. The time is coming when a vast emigration will pour into this country. The time is coming when the public lands of the United States will be occupied; and, Sir, the interest of this country will be greatly promoted, immigration will be greatly increased, the prosperity of this country will be greatly increased, by the exercise of wise caution upon our part, and prudence in the character of our legislation. In furtherance of these objects we, the Opposition in this House, devote our energies, and if we can secure that result we shall have placed Canada in a position where she will increase in prosperity, wealth and population in a very much greater ratio than she will do under the reckless administration of the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches.

House divided on amendment of Sir Richard Cartwright.

Militia—Salaries, Military Branch and District Staff... $819,800

Mr. CARON. With respect to the salaries, military branch and district staff, $19,800, I desire to strike off an amount of $600, being payment for the deputy paymaster. The vacancy has now existed for some time, and it is not intended to fill it, as our storekeepers are now acting as paymasters.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2:05 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 26th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ADJOURNMENT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that when the House adjourns this day it stands adjourned until Tuesday next, at 1:30 p.m.

Mr. BLAKE. I regret that the First Minister should have put this notice on the Paper if he did not intend to persevere in the first one, and if he did not intend to persevere with the first one, that he should not have communicated his intention to the House; because it would have added very much to the convenience of members to know what the intentions of the Government were, as, after seeing this first notice on the Paper, many gentlemen had made their arrangements accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO MANITOBA.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That the capital sum on which the Province of Manitoba is entitled to receive half yearly payments of interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, as fixed by the Act 33 Victoria, chap. 3, and as readjusted or increased by any subsequent Act, shall, from and after the 1st day of July, 1885, be calculated on a population of 125,000, at the same rate per capita as was allowed on the estimated population under the Act 23 Victoria, chap. 3, and shall be charged with such advances as have been already made to the Province, and with such expenditure as has been made therein by the Dominion for purposes of a strictly local character, and with a further sum of $150,000, which the Dominion Government may advance to the Province to meet the expenditure of constructing a lunatic asylum and other exceptional services.

2. That the grants of land and payment, authorised by these and previous resolutions, shall be made on the condition that they be accepted by the Province (such acceptance being testified by an Act of the Legislature of Manitoba) as a full settlement of all claims made by the said Province for the reimbursement of costs incurred in the government of the disputed territory, or the reference of the boundary question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and all other questions and claims discussed between the Dominion and Provincial Government, up to the 10th day of January, 1885.

3. That the sums authorised to be paid by these resolutions may be paid out of any moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERY ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the First Minister to the subject of the Canadian fisheries. It appears by statements coming from American sources that a correspondence has been going on between the Hon. Mr. West, British Minister at Washington, and the American Government, in relation to the fishery question. A proposition is made that the question of the rights of Americans on the one hand and Canadians on the other to the free use of the fisheries of each country shall remain in abeyance until Congress meets. Of course, the statutory law of Congress provides for the imposition of duties after the expiration of the fishery clause of the Washington Treaty on the 1st of July next. The First Minister stated the other day that negotiations were going on with a view to arrive at some arrangement, and it appears that a mutual arrangement was arrived at, namely, that that portion of the fisheries clauses shall be continued until the meeting of Congress, when Congress will have an opportunity of considering whether any arrangement can be made satisfactory to both countries, with a view to the continuance of the mutual right, I presume, to prosecute the fisheries in the waters of either country. Now, Sir, there is one feature of that, as stated in the American correspondence, that is of great interest to the people of Canada, and it will be—

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman has a question to ask let him ask it, but I must invite him not to bring in any subject which will lead to a discussion. It must be simply a question, and it is irregular to have a debate on this subject now.

Mr. MITCHELL. My object is to establish the point clearly to the Government, with a view of getting the opinions—

Mr. SPEAKER. That leads to a discussion. I think the hon. gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, this is not the first time that the leader of the Opposition has chosen to make a suggestion which has interfered with getting information for the people.

Mr. SPEAKER. Orders of the Day.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I will put the question then: Whether or not, after the 1st day of July, the fish caught in our waters going into the United States territory is to be subject to duty or not; and, further, if it is subject to duty, whether any arrangement is made in the negotiations which have been proceeded with for getting a return duty. I hope that will satisfy the right hon. gentleman, who is so very particular, and who takes up so much of the time of this House on unnecessary questions.

Mr. ABBOTT. Not the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will take back the right—the hon. gentleman; I do not know that he deserves that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is rather inexpedient to answer a question of that kind under present circumstances. As I mentioned to my hon. friend, the other day, the Government is anxious to bring down all the papers, but some of the papers are of a quasi confidential nature, and could not be sent down without the consent of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The Governor General applied for that leave, but in the meantime the expiry of the clauses had taken place, and I can only account for the delay of the answer by that fact. I hope it will be satisfactory. All the papers are ready and waiting consent. Unless they are all brought down, I do not think the House will be in a position to judge of the course taken by the Government. In the meantime, however, I would say, in answer to one of the questions of my hon. friend, that Canadian fish going into the American market from and after the 1st of July, will be liable to duty.

Mr. MITCHELL. I supposed so.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

The Order of the Day for the third reading of Bill (No. 147) to authorise the grant of certain subsidies in land for the construction of the railways therein mentioned, being read.

Mr. BLAKE. There are some propositions which I have to submit to the judgment of the House, with reference to this measure. The first is with reference to the question as to whether, when we are now adopting a plan of giving free grants of land in aid of railways, we should not make some provision which will ensure those lands being opened in reasonable areas to intending settlers, on conditions of actual settlement and at prices within a maximum price. I do not intend to enter into any lengthy discussion on the subject. My views upon it are known. My opinion is, that it is important, when we are proposing to add in effect to the reserves of the North-West 4,262,000 acres of railway lands, which comprise some of the most available portions of the country, for settlement, that we ought to take warning from the lessons of the past and minimise, so far as we can, the obstacles to settlement which have resulted from former arrangements; and I believe that this can be done without injury to the prospects of the companies, and as calculated to obtain money upon those grants. Nor is my proposal without precedent. This subject has been considered in the neighboring Republic under similar circumstances, and I will read you extracts from some of the laws which have accompanied grants of lands in aid of railways in that country. The Act of Congress of 1862, which was an Act to aid in the construction of a railway and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and providing for a grant of land, reads as follows, in the third section:—

“And all such lands, so granted by this section, which shall not be sold or disposed of by said company within three years after the entire road shall have been completed, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption, like other lands, at a price not exceeding one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, to be paid to said company.”

The Act of 1869, being an amendment to the Act granting aid in the construction of a railroad from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon, contains this provision:

“And provided further, that the lands granted by the Act aforesaid shall be sold to actual settlers only, in quantities no greater than one-quarter section to one purchaser, and for a price not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre.”

The Act of 4th May, 1870, of the Oregon Central Railroad Company, chap. lxix., reads as follows:—

“And be it further enacted, that the said alternate sections of land granted by this Act, excepting only such as are necessary for the company to reserve as depots, stations, side tracks, wood yards, standing ground, and other needful uses in operating the road, shall be sold by the company only to actual settlers, in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, or a quarter section, to any one settler, and at prices not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre.”

A resolution, being the effect of an Act of Congress, authorising the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to issue its bonds for the construction of its road and to secure the same, etc., etc., passed 31st May, 1870, reads:

“* * * * * Provided, that all lands hereby granted to said company which shall not be sold or disposed of or remain subject to the mortgage by this Act authorised, at the expiration of five years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption like other lands, at a price to be paid to said company not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre; and if the mortgage hereby authorised shall at any time be enforced by foreclosure or other legal proceeding, or the mortgage lands hereby granted, or any of them, be sold by the trustees to whom such mortgage may be executed, either at its maturity or for any failure or default of said company under the terms thereof, such lands shall be sold at public sale, at places within the States and Territories in which they shall be situate, after not less than sixty days' previous notice, in single sections or sub-divisions thereof, to the highest and best bidder.'

An Act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company &c., &c., of 3rd March, 1871, reads at chap. cxxii:

"And provided further, that such lands so granted, by this section to said company, which shall not be sold, or otherwise disposed of, as provided in this Act, within three years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subjected to settlement and pre-emption like other lands, at a price to be fixed by and paid to said company, not exceeding an average of two dollars and fifty cents per acre for all the lands herein granted."

I have enumerated some of the Acts of Congress which show the recognition of the principle I desire to see attached to these grants; and without further remarks I beg to move:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole with power to provide, as a condition of the free grants of 4,262,000 acres authorised to be made to railways, that the ordinary agricultural lands so granted shall be open for sale in suitable areas, on conditions of actual settlement at prices not exceeding a fixed maximum.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know what the policy of the Government is; but the policy pursued by the hon. gentleman opposite during the present Session has been to obstruct and decry everything connected with the interest of this country. I wish to express my opinion as to what the effect of the amendment will be. We know how difficult it is to get capitalists to invest in the North-West, how difficult it is to get railways built there; and when we have succeeded in getting capitalists to invest their money and commence railways in that country, the first thing we find is that the hon. gentleman seeks to obstruct this measure with a view of paralysing the capitalists. What object have British capitalist in going to the North-West? They place the value of lands perhaps far in excess of the value estimated by ourselves, who know the great quantities of land there are; and I could quite understand the necessity of adopting such precaution as is proposed, provided the lands were limited in extent and the quantity was such that the public could not get that facility of settlement to which they are fairly entitled. But I can quite understand the disastrous effect of such an amendment as has been moved in regard to people who have put their money in good faith in those railway enterprises, depending on the promise of the Government to give the lands unconditionally as a bounty for building railways, some of which are in process of building to-day. We find the hon. gentleman ready to decry everything connected with the country, and he has decried Canada from the beginning of this Session; he has decried the Canadian Pacific Railway, and ran down our railway enterprises, and sought to paralyse this country. I am not surprised, therefore, that the hon. gentleman should have chosen his present course in respect to these enterprises; it is quite in keeping with the course he has pursued this Session. I am not astonished that the hon. gentleman should attempt to defeat the efforts of those capitalists in building railways in the North-West by the means followed by the amendment which he has moved. What the Government's policy is, I say, I do not know. I hope they will take the view that having held out the promise to those companies to give them grants of land untrammelled with conditions, they will decline to accept the hon. gentleman's proposal to add conditions now; that they will resist his motion, and tell the hon. gentleman that they will not allow him to imperil the good faith of the Government in the proposals made to those companies abroad, and which have been induced by those proposals to enter into those enterprises, and will not have their efforts paralysed by adopting such conditions as are now proposed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government and the third party are in accord.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear it; it will teach that gentleman a lesson.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the measure before the House holds out hope to those railway companies while this amendment would simply destroy. The proposition made by the Government, which they submitted to Parliament for its sanction, is that free grants of land shall be made to those railway companies on a certain condition—that the companies were to build the railways. Any extra condition beyond those imposed by the Government would defeat the object Parliament has in view in sanctioning the measure. It is with a great deal of difficulty that these companies, with all the advantages the Government may give them by these land grants, will be able to raise the money, and if it is provided that they cannot use those lands to raise the money out of them, except subject to the condition of actual settlement within a fixed time, they will not get a farthing of money upon those lands. In the United States, to the legislation of which the hon. gentleman has alluded, the circumstances are and have been somewhat different. They have in the United States in the first place a large population moving westward. Of the immigrants from the European world, a considerable number have gone to the United States. They knew there was a steady flow into the Western States of that European immigration, and the migration from the east to the west in the United States. In the North-West we know there is a sparse population. We know that these roads are to be built, not to meet the wants and desires of the present population, but for the purpose of inducing a future population to go in there. The companies which are interested in those roads, the companies that have raised the capital for them, will expect, of course, to pay dividends, or a considerable portion of dividends for a considerable time, out of the sales of those lands. They cannot expect that a road running, for instance, from the Canadian Pacific Railway due north to Edmonton, or Battleford, or Prince Albert, or any of those places, going through a large section of country utterly without population, will pay those dividends without assistance from the land. They can only hope to meet the working expenses and pay reasonable dividends from that source, and unless there is a prospect for reasonable dividends within a reasonable time they will find no investors. It is only out of the proceeds of the lands that for some few years they can work the road, and give a sufficient security to the investors that they will receive the interest or the dividends on their investment. So that this provision would be equivalent to withdrawing the whole use, the whole benefit and advantage of the appropriation of those lands. If they have lands they must sell them as fast as they can, to find purchasers, in order to build the road; they must sell them to pay working expenses and maintain the road in good working order, and to give a reasonable return for the capital invested by the shareholders. That, Sir, is a sufficient security, in all conscience, against the land being hoarded up to the disadvantage of settlement. This condition that the lands should not be sold except on the condition that settlement would actually destroy the whole advantage, the whole merit of the arrangement made by the Government; and fixing the maximum price is liable to the same objection. The first lands sold will have to be sold very low; they will have to be sold under the competition with the Dominion Government—competition with public lands given away for nothing to actual settlers. This will keep the prices low, and they can only hope in the beginning to sell the lands at a very small price indeed; and it is only when their line is being settled, when the construction of the line has brought in a population to the lands, that the company can only expect eventually, after a long deferred hope, to get a reasonable compensation for the capital they put in. There is no fear, Sir, that the price of these lands will be unduly kept up. In the Province of Manitoba they have the power of taxing the lands. At this moment, I am not sure whether the North-West Council has this power—I cannot speak positively from recollection—but, at all events, there will be no difficulty in conferring on the North-West Council, which is now rapidly becoming a representative institution—the power of taxation. Under these circumstances, I think it would be exceedingly unwise to adopt the amendment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In one important particular, the hon. gentleman is misinformed in his statement. He stated just now that with respect to these railways they run through a country in which there were no inhabitants.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The greater portion of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As to the Manitoba South-Western, as respects the entire length with which the resolutions are concerned, the country is and has been settled for a considerable number of years, and nothing but the absence of railway communication has prevented it from being very fully settled. The same is true, for, I think, about 100 or 120 miles, as regards the Manitoba and North-Western, which runs from Portage la Prairie towards Prince Albert. There have been very considerable settlement there, for the obvious reason that settlers took up grants along the line through which the Canadian Pacific Railway main line was expected to pass, and the line of the Manitoba and North-Western goes nearly over that line. The consequence is, that there are very considerable settlements all along there, as the hon. gentleman, as Minister of the Interior, must be aware. That alters the position materially, I may add that with regard to some of these railway corporations the objection was not to the Government fixing the maximum price of the land, as my hon. friend proposes, but to the dollars which had to be previously paid to the Government, and which they allege, and with truth, as an exceedingly formidable obstacle to their placing those lands in the market. Now, we propose to give these people 6,400 acres per mile, or practically 10,000 acres in the case of the Manitoba South-Western, which is now practically the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That amounts, in the one case, to a maximum of about $25,000 per mile, if the land can be sold at the rate my hon. friend named, and in the other to something like $16,000 per mile, a sum which, if it can be realised, would be amply sufficient to build the roads through such a country as they will traverse. The object of both parties, as I understand, is to facilitate the construction of branch lines, and there is no doubt that there is and has been considerable difficulty, that is if the companies are allowed to keep large blocks in their hands, and parties are not allowed to settle; there is no doubt that the progress of the country may be materially effected and affected for the worse. One of the serious obstacles to the settlement of the country, as the hon. gentleman knows has been, that the land is placed by the present regulations practically between each homestead, and that becomes a serious consideration in a sparsely settled country as regard the maintenance both of schools and churches, and a great variety of other matters. By giving the actual settler, along the inhabited portion, at any rate, the right to buy at that maximum, that difficulty might be avoided to a considerable extent. Now, I speak with knowledge of the facts, when I say that many of these people who are settled there would be glad indeed to bring out their friends and relatives if they were sure of obtaining the land at a moderate price. It may be, and I hope it will, that the railroad companies will deal very liberally with all those classes of persons, but it would facilitate settlement if they were assured on the authority of the House and the Government that they would be permitted, at any rate for a moderate space of time, to obtain possession of these lands. There is another point on which I desire to know if the Government have any assurance, and that is whether they are prepared to tell the House that these companies to which we are making these concessions, will positively undertake within the space of the next twelve months to construct a reasonable portion of the lines for which these grants are made. The correspondence laid before the House, puts considerable doubt upon that question. Now, I contend that this is a matter, particularly in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which ought to be clearly ascertained before the Government consents to part with its control over the lands. They ought to pledge themselves definitely to build a portion of the road within a certain fixed time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When I alluded to roads running to a great extent in unsettled districts, I spoke particularly of roads running from the Pacific Railway north in the direction of Battleford, Edmonton or Prince Albert. I know that the Manitoba South-Western road runs through a pretty well-settled country; even as far as White Water Lake, there are a good many settlers, but the district is not fully settled. Then the hon. gentleman will see that the conditions under which the companies get the free grants are fixed by Order in Council, and Parliament will only sanction these grants under those conditions. If they fail to carry out those conditions, the grants lapse of themselves without new legislation by Parliament; so that the matter is quite under the control of Parliament if the companies do not carry out the conditions of the Order in Council.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A statement was published in the Manitoba prints recently, purporting to be a communication from the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Premier of Manitoba, stating positively that one of these roads would be pushed forward this season. Are the Government able to say, from their communications with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that that will be done? I think that is a point to which, if they have not positive information, their attention might well be called, because it is a most cruel hardship to the settlers of that region if such communications are publicly made without due authority. The settlers have been disappointed for four or five years successively; and such statements, apparently authorised by the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities, should the people be disappointed again, would seriously damage the whole section.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I agree with the hon. gentleman that any delay in extending the south-western branch to White Water Lake will be a great disappointment to those people. The hon. gentleman has seen the assurances given by the company, the Government have had the same assurances. I believe the company are as fully alive as the settlers themselves are to the necessity for the construction of that road with all convenient speed; and we have had the general, and I may say the specific assurances of the company that they will press the construction of that road with all due speed, and as announced in one of those letters, so as to be used for the fall crop this year.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I cannot understand exactly why this amendment should be made. I understood that it was the policy of the Opposition, as expressed by their leader, by members of their party, and by their press, that these resolutions should be carried out, and that the free grants should be given, and we understood that they were writing letters taking credit for this very thing; and now to move an amendment to emasculate all the advantages derived from the Bill is something I cannot understand.

Mr. BLAKE. May I be permitted to say that as early as the debate on the Address, I expressed my satisfaction at the announcement that free grants were to be made, but I directed attention to the very proposition I make to-day as an essential condition to be imposed in connection with these grants.

Mr. ORTON. I cannot but regard the amendment as a direct blow against the advantages sought to be obtained by these free grants. I know that a great many settlers are looking forward with extreme anxiety to the early construction of these roads. A larger crop has been put into the ground this year than last year, and this resolution, if adopted, would have the effect of seriously impeding the companies in obtaining the money required for the construction of the roads. Some of them have already entered into negotiations with capitalists for the necessary means, and if new obligations are imposed on them, their efforts must be considerably thwarted. We all know the animosity the hon. leader of the Opposition has displayed in the past towards the progress of the outlying Provinces of this Dominion and his extreme opposition to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to British Columbia, and we find him constantly by every possible means encouraging everything that will operate to the detriment of the North-West in this House and the country; and to-day when the people of that country are waiting anxiously for railway facilities, and when measures are being taken by which they are about to get that benefit, he comes forward and seeks to place obstacles in their way. I regret very much that the hon. gentleman should have moved this amendment.

Mr. CHARLTON. The restrictions proposed by my friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) are not calculated to place obstacles in the way of the interests of the settlers in the North-West. The object of the amendment is to protect the settlers, and the charges made by almost every speaker on the Government side of the House in criticising it are most unfair. If there is a champion of the interests of the people of the North-West in this House, he is the hon. member for West Durham, who has always stood up and vindicated their interests against the schemes of speculators and corporations to enrich themselves at the expense of the people of that country. It is in that line that this amendment is made. The experience of the United States in regard to these land grants to railways is a most suggestive one, and one which we can profit. There is scarcely a railway company in the United States which has been subsidised by a free grant of land, that did not receive vastly more than it was entitled to or than was sufficiently necessary to construct the road. The railway companies were first subsidised without restrictions, and although the opening of the roads should have benefited the people of the country; in almost all the cases the companies have manipulated their land grants in a way not in the interest of the country. The experience of that country shows that it is proper to place restrictions on railway companies in connection with grants of land, and it also shows that it is not wise to make free grants of land to railways at all. It is now the fixed policy of the United States that these grants should not be made; and those familiar with railway construction in the United States, will acknowledge that at least one-half of those grants were unnecessary, and that it would have been in the public interest to have withheld them, because the roads would have been built by private capital as fast as the need of the country required. Now, the proposal to provide that Parliament shall fix a maximum price on these lands is a proper one. That maximum price is to be subject to the approval of Parliament, at all times. If the mode in which this amendment deals with the companies is not a proper mode, it is subject to change by Parliament at any time. It simply leaves in our hands the control of this matter. It leaves in our hands to say what is the maximum price these lands at any time shall bring—a power we may exercise in the interests of the people versus the railway corporation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who would invest?

Mr. CHARLTON. These grants of lands fixed at a maximum price by Parliament, a price proposed subject to the approval of Parliament, at all times, and which may be varied by Parliament at pleasure, will build the branch lines of the road. Six thousand four hundred acres of land to the mile, at $2.50 an acre, will build and equip the ordinary branch lines in the North-West. The hon. gentleman says these roads are to be built for the future population. It is unnecessary to build roads for the future population; it is bad policy to push railways into the wilderness in advance of the population. What we want is roads to supply the wants of the population as they come in, and not for a future population to follow years after the roads are constructed. The hon. gentleman says there is no fear that the price put upon these land grants, placed absolutely in the hands of railway corporations, will be too high. I say there is fear in this case, as in the cases in the past of railway land grants, that lands will be taken by speculators, persons interested in the railway corporations, and held until the adjoining lands are filled up; I say there is fear that these lands will be held by speculators at high prices, to the detriment of the interest of the people. The whole experience of the past in subsidies by land grants warrants my hon. friend in assuming that it is necessary to place some restriction of the kind, in the interests of the people. I acknowledge it is not in the interest of the railway corporations, but they will take care of themselves; and if we make them land grants sufficient to construct the railways, without expenditure of capital, that is all they require. I think the motion should be cheerfully accepted, since it merely leaves the control of prices in the hands of Parliament, instead of putting it beyond our control and jurisdiction forever.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Blake.

Mr. WHITE (East Hastings). The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) should have voted on this question; he has taken great interest in these leased lines.

Mr. FLEMING. The hon. member for Marquette is not in the House.

Mr. BLAKE moved :

That the said Bill be not read the third time, but be referred back to a Committee of the Whole with instructions to provide, as a condition of the free grants of railway and coal lands to the Coal and Navigation Company, that the Governor in Council shall have special powers with reference to tolls for coal, so as to prevent the practical monopoly which might otherwise accrue to the company in respect of the superior coals found near the proposed terminus of the aided line.

Mr. WOODWORTH. There is not the slightest danger of the forebodings of the hon. gentleman being fulfilled. At the Medicine Hat mines, coal can be taken out at a very low figure indeed; coal is also found at Crowfoot Crossing in large quantities, where no doubt mines will be opened up, and at Calgary and in the Rocky Mountains there are large deposits of coal, so that the hon. gentleman need not have the slightest fear of a monopoly being established. He should take the advice of his former leader and go out to the country and see it for himself. He would then form a better idea of it than he has of its resources, and not cover the Order Paper with these resolutions, compelling the House to waste valuable time in discussing and voting on them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This regular hauling of this company over the coals, if it had the desired effect, would prevent the company hauling coals over the railway. We must oppose this resolution. The Government have all the power required for regulating the tariff, and the company cannot carry a bushel of coal, except on the tariff fixed by the Government. There is no necessity for this motion. In one respect the Coal and Navigation Company owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. gentleman for moving this amendment, since in it the hon. gentleman has given them a certificate of character by saying their coal is of such a superior character that there must be special legislation to prevent the company making too much profit out of it. In this respect I do not know but that the remarks of my hon. friend from King's, N.S., (Mr. Woodworth) who took a little gilt off the gingerbread by saying that they had no such mine of wealth, might not have been as well omitted; for if it is in the interest of the country that the Coal and Navigation Company should be enabled to raise funds by which it may change its road from a narrow gauge to a broad gauge, this resolution, speaking so highly of the superior coals to be found in their mines, will be of great service to them. I cannot allow the amendment to receive the sanction of the House if we can help it.

Amendment negatived on the same division.

Mr. BLAKE moved :

That the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the clause 5 by providing that any alteration in the Orders in Council affecting the conditions of the land grants, shall be subject to the approval of Parliament.

Amendment negatived on the same division.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 147) to authorise the grant of certain Subsidies in land for the construction of the Railways therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.
 Mr. CHARLTON.

THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST— SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. BOWELL moved the third reading of Bill (No. 149) for granting to Her Majesty the sum of $1,700,000 required for defraying certain expenses now being incurred in connection with the troubles in the North-West Territories.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 134) respecting the Liquor License Act, 1883.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the first clause be amended by inserting the words "by the decision whereof a copy is in the schedule hereto annexed."

Amendment agreed to.

On the schedule,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron), I desire to call the attention of the First Minister again to the statement that I made when this Bill was before the House some weeks ago. I pointed out that, in the county of Huron, a county which has adopted the Scott Act, the hon. gentleman's Board of License commissioners have been actively engaged in the discharge of their duties and have licensed twenty-nine tavern keepers, while they have refused to give a license to any of the druggists in the county, and the men they licensed were not the very best class of tavern keepers in the county. After I made that statement the hon. gentleman said that, if that was correct it was intolerable. I am prepared to affirm distinctly the statement I made, and I have the strongest confirmation of its truth, if it is necessary to give it. I knew what I was talking about. I think the hon. gentleman ought to make provision in this Bill to do away with that extraordinary state of affairs. I will read a letter I received from a gentleman who knows something of the condition of affairs in the county of Huron. It is dated on the 15th April, 1885, after the Board of Commissioners had issued these licenses. It is to the following effect:—

"I just returned from attending a large county convention in Huron, and I find the following state of affairs: First, the Dominion License Board are all opposed to the Scott Act; the inspector ditto; the county crown attorney ditto. The board filled up the whole number of licenses allowed under this Act. Eleven druggists applied for license; all were refused. Twenty-nine tavern keepers and other liquor sellers have been appointed, and no license fee is charged; all free. I have written all these facts to Professor Foster. Huron is no exception in this respect. The Scott Act cannot be enforced with Dominion machinery. In fact, they do not want it enforced. We may just as well throw up the sponge."

This letter is, of course, written by a person who is a temperance man, a person by the name of Young.

"Will you find out from the Government why no license fee is charged for licenses when the Act is in force, and let me know. I am frequently asked this question."

I should like to know, also, very much by what authority the hon. gentleman's Board of License Commissioners have issued twenty-nine licenses in the county of Huron, a Scott Act county, and have charged no fee in any single case. In the first place I contend they had no right to issue those licenses in the way they have, and, if they had the power, it was an exceedingly injudicious exercise of that power. I may tell the hon. gentleman that his own commissioner, the deputy judge of the county, appointed in the town of Goderich, his own brother, a tavern keeper, as the first man who was appointed to sell liquor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That man is not worse than an infidel, at all events.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Perhaps not. I only desire to point out that it is manifest that these commissioners are utterly unfit for the proper discharge of their duty, and I think the hon. gentleman ought, at the earliest opportunity to remove these men from the position they occupy. They are making the enforcement of the Scott Act a farce. In fact, it is utterly impossible to enforce it in that county if the Dominion board of License Commissioners are to be at liberty to do as they think fit. Early in the Session I moved for a return of the number of licenses issued in Scott Act counties, and so on, and I find that the hon. gentleman's board in the county of Huron has made no return; at all events there is no return from that county contained in the papers submitted to Parliament, though every other county, with one exception, has made a full return such as was called for by the Order of the House. I think the hon. gentleman ought to call the attention of the Board of License Commissioners in that county to their conduct in that respect, and ought to adopt some measure to restrain them from the improper, unwise and injudicious exercise of the powers that are vested in them. There is another point to which I wish to draw attention. In the statute of 1878, section 99, sub-section 3, provides for the sale of liquor for sacramental purposes without any license or certificate; and sub-section 4 provides for the sale of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes upon a medical certificate, and for the sale for arts and other purposes upon a certificate before two justices of the peace. Now the Act of 1883, in section 86, provides that intoxicating liquors may be sold in any county for medicinal purposes up to six ounces without a license, and in any quantities with a license and with a medical certificate. Now, I apprehend that that being the last expression of the will of Parliament, the 86th section overrides section 99 of the Act of 1878, and that, in fact, now liquor can be sold in Scott Act counties to the extent of six ounces without a license and without a certificate, and over six ounces with a certificate and with a license. Now, in order to prevent the License Commissioners acting as they have done in the county of Huron, the hon. gentleman ought to provide that in Scott Act counties no liquor shall be sold for any purpose except by the druggists in the county, and if there is no druggist in the county or municipality, then somebody else. As it is now, under the interpretation put upon this statute by the hon. gentleman's board, in the county of Huron they contend that every druggist in the county has a right to sell liquor to the extent of six ounces under section 86 of the Act of 1883, and that they have a right to license vendors and others who are not druggists, to sell liquor in the same county. Now, if that be the meaning of the statute, I think the hon. gentleman ought to put a short clause in this Bill restricting the sale of liquor, in Scott Act counties, to druggists, where druggists are to be found, and where there are no druggists in the municipality, then somebody ought to be authorised to sell. In the county of Huron, according to the contention of the hon. gentleman's board, there are 11 druggists who sell liquor without a license, and 29 to whom licenses have been granted who are not druggists—40 persons entitled to sell liquor in the county of Huron. It is nonsense to talk about the will of the people prevailing if 40 persons are at liberty under the law to sell liquor in a county which has carried the Scott Act by a majority of over 1,600. I propose to the hon. gentleman that he should repeal the 4th sub-section of section 99 of the Act of 1878, and section 86 of the Act of 1883, and put another section in place of them, allowing the sale of liquor for medicinal and arts purposes in Scott Act counties upon a license being obtained from the Dominion Board of Commissioners. I have prepared an amendment in that sense, and though I have not consulted any of the advocates of the Scott Act in the House in reference thereto, I believe my amendment will meet the difficulties which I have pointed out. It is as follows:—

Sub-section 4 of section 99 of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, and section 86 of the Liquor License Act of 1883, are hereby repealed, and the following substituted for said sub-section 4:

Provided also, that the sale of intoxicating liquor for exclusively medicinal purposes, or for bona fide use in some trade, art or manufacture, shall, in counties where the Act respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors has been, or will be, adopted, be lawful only by such chemists or druggists as may be thereto specially licensed by the board mentioned in the Liquor License Act of 1883, the number not to exceed one in each township, parish, or incorporated village, nor two in each town; and in cities, not exceeding one for every 4,000 inhabitants; and in case there are no chemists or druggists in any such township, parish, village, town or city, then by such other vendor as may be thereto specially licensed by the said board, subject to the limitation aforesaid; but such intoxicating liquors, when for medicinal purposes, shall be sold in packages of not more than 6 oz. at any one time, to be removed from the premises and to be sold only on the certificate of a medical man having no interest in the sale by the chemist, druggist, or vendor, affirming that such liquor has been prescribed medicinally for the purpose named therein; and when such sale is for use in some art, trade or manufacture, the same to be made only on a certificate signed by two justices of the peace of the bona fides of the application, accompanied by the affirmation of the applicant that the liquor is to be used only for the particular purpose set forth in the application, and it shall be the duty of such chemists, druggists or vendors to record in a book to be opened to the inspection of the commissioners or other inspectors, every sale or other disposal by him of liquor; and such record shall show, as to every such sale or disposal, the time when, the person to whom, and the quantity sold. And the purpose for which sold. And it shall be the duty of such chemist, druggist or vendor to file and retain such certificates and affirmation, and they shall be opened to inspection as aforesaid; and in default of such sale or disposal being so placed on record, and in default of such certificates and affirmations being so filed and retained, every such sale or disposal shall be prima facie held to be in contra sanctionem of the provisions contained in the 83rd and 84th sections of the Liquor License Act of 1883, and of the Act respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors. And it shall be the duty of such chemist, druggist or vendor to make an annual return of all such sales or disposals with names of vendors, the purposes for which sold or disposed of, the names of the medical man or justices of the peace who signed such certificates, and the quantity sold to each vendee before the 31st day of December, in every year, to the collector of Inland Revenue within whose revenue division the county is situated, who shall at once return the same to the Minister of Inland Revenue. And any person who violates any of the provisions of this sub-section shall be liable, on summary conviction, before any justice of the peace or other person having authority to hear cases summarily, to a penalty of $ for the first offence, and to a penalty of $ for any second or subsequent offence.

I move this amendment in order to cover the difficulties I have suggested which have arisen in my own county.

Mr. FARROW. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman has chosen to picture the hotel-keepers in his own county as such black characters. The hon. gentleman is well acquainted with the county, with the hotel-keepers in his own town and with those in the smaller towns and villages. He has taken a very strange course in thus characterising them. He would not like to say in his own county what he has stated here with respect to those honorable and respectable men. He has stated they were utterly unfit. I do not know any better men following that pursuit—of course we have no hotel-keepers in Huron who are dealing out liquor. The united testimony goes to show that the hotels are observing the law. As a proof of this, I may mention the fact that Mr. Johnston in the village of Bluevale, who has a general license to dispense, was entertained by the Presbyterian and Methodist congregations at a social, for which they charged a quarter admission, held at his own place, in order to make something up for him. They all said he was fulfilling the law and carrying it out to the letter. This is one of the men whom the hon. gentleman chooses to stigmatise—a man who has a good character from the Presbyterian and Methodist congregations who know him well. I wonder if that testimony is as good as that submitted by the hon. member for West Huron. I would rather have it. The hon. gentleman states that those men are utterly unfit. I suppose their characters are very black, very vicious, they must be notorious men; but the hon. gentleman will have rather hard work to answer those charges when he gets out in the county of Huron. The hon. gentleman stated that in his own town one of the hotel-keepers lived a mile from the centre of the place. They have measured the distance. It lacks 1,500 yards of the mile. There are 1,760 yards in a mile, and deducting the 1,500 yards would leave the distance 260 yards. That is about as near the truth as the hon. gentleman can get at it. I know most of the hotel-keepers who have been granted licenses, and I would be sorry to say here or elsewhere that those men were mean, or such characters as they have been described. More honorable men, so far as I know, are not to be found following the same business in any part of Canada. Why did the commissioners select these men instead of giving the license to the druggists? My opinion was that the druggists should have had them. But the commissioners said: Here are a lot of men who have had all their means in hotel property, and if we give them some position to help them in a legal and legitimate manner, we would rather give it to those men who have lost so much, than put it in the hands of druggists. Liquor is not dealt out in the hotels. Each of those men has built a little place to contain liquor, and when a man comes with a doctor's certificate, he goes to that building, and the hotel-keeper fills the prescription. Is there anything wrong about that? Why should not an honest hotel-keeper be allowed to have liquor in quantity as well as a druggist? The testimony I obtained when I was home was that they were dealing it out according to the law; and as a proof of that there is the fact that the ministers with their congregations united in giving the man I spoke of a social, charging 25 cts. apiece, the congregations patronising the social, and the man thus making something like $40. They said: You are an honest man, carrying out the law, and we will back you. I thought it was my duty to rise and state a few facts as I know them.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron.) The hon. gentleman has said that I pictured the hotel-keepers as black characters. I did not. I said that the commissioners, in proceeding to select persons to whom to give licenses, did not, as a general rule, select the best men, but the worst. The hon. gentleman knows such is the fact in the town in which I live. Mr. Cox of the British Exchange, who has spent from $10,000 to $15,000 on his hotel, did not get a license, and it was the same with some others who had invested large sums in hotel property. Why not? The hon. gentleman says that the druggists ought to have got the licenses, but they were given to tavern keepers because they had invested considerable sums of money in erecting and fitting up buildings, and they were entitled to consideration. How is that principle applied in Goderich? Do the two men who have licenses own the houses in which they carry on business? No. The hon. gentleman will not say they do. One of those who got a license was Mr. Craig on the square, who has a rented place, and who does not own a foot of ground on which his place of business stands; and the other was Mr. Doyle, who is in a similar position. But one is a brother and the other is the friend of the chief commissioner. Cox, Martin and Bailey, all of whom have invested considerable sums of money in their property, were refused licenses. Mr. Jordan, Mr. Rhynas, and Dr. Whitely, druggists, were also refused licenses, while two tavern keepers, who do not own the property on which the business is carried on, but one of whom has a saloon and the other a summer hotel, got licenses. I say that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred in that county they have not appointed men who are the best qualified to have licenses. The First Minister declared that if my statements were correct, the condition of things was intolerable. I say it is intolerable; I say that the Scott Act, which was passed by a large majority in that county, is not being enforced there. I do not know what may be the state of things in the village of Bluevale. I do not know anything about Mr. Johnson, but I have no doubt he may be a very good man, and that he is endorsed by the Methodist and Presbyterian ministers. I do not say anything about that, but I say in a large majority of cases the best men are not selected. The men who have invested money in acquiring and improving property are not selected.

Mr. FARROW. What about Clinton, near your own town?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understood that a widow got the license there, and if it will do her any good, I have no objection.

Mr. FARROW. Has she not as much invested in that kind of property in Clinton as any person there?

Mr. CAMERON. Perhaps she has; I do not say she has not; but I say there are two druggists there, at least, and that the law never contemplated that liquor sellers should be appointed to sell liquor for medicinal purposes. The hon. gentleman knows that there are now twenty-nine liquor vendors in the county of Huron, who are still selling liquor, and though there may be some cases where the letter and the spirit of the law is observed, in my own town that is not done. I know there have been cases before the mayor in my own town for infraction of the law.

Mr. FARROW. They do not sell the liquor in hotels, but in separate buildings.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). So much the worse, for that is the spot where they will resort to. They have not a separate establishment in Goderich, so far as I am aware of, or at least they had not a month ago. The liquor was sold in the old place, and that is where they went to get prescriptions made out. But that is not the point. The point is that it is not within the spirit and intention of the Legislature, in passing the Act, that in counties where the Scott Act has been adopted, and especially where it has been adopted by an overwhelming majority, that almost every tavern-keeper should have a license to sell liquor for medicinal or art purposes. Any person can see how easily the law can be evaded under those circumstances, and I say that the chances for evading the law are not so great when the liquor is sold by druggists by whom other medicines are sold.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether this is a proper time for this discussion, but as the hon. gentleman has referred to me, I wish to say a word or two upon this question. I have had some representations made to me, as they have been made to the hon. gentleman and to others, from that county, and I believe that so far as I can judge, the state of things there is not as it ought to be. So far as the law goes, I think the commissioners are not excluded from appointing any person, the words of the Act being "druggists or other lawful vendors"; but I am strongly of the opinion, that if there are druggists in a place, the druggist is the man that should be appointed, and that it is not in the spirit of the law, although it may be allowed by the letter, that druggists should be passed over and other vendors appointed. The argument in favor of appointing druggists is simple, and I think it is cogent. They are the dispensers of medicine, and a person who wants a prescription filled for alcoholic liquors generally wants some other kind of medicine, and it is not for the convenience of the public that they should have to go to one place for one medicine and to another place for the other. The reasons why hotel-keepers should not be appointed are also strong and cogent. In the first place, it takes away the confidence the people will have in the law being observed. In the second place, I think hotel keepers, from their large acquaintance, and from the number who have been in the habit of frequenting their places, will be continually open to solicitations that druggists will not be open to, and that the law will be very frequently violated. My hon. friend sitting behind me (Mr. Farrow) said the reason assigned by the commissioners for appointing these men was that they had a good deal of money invested in the business, and that some return would be made to them in this way. Now, if they honestly adhere to the provisions of the law, to sell to none but those who have fair prescriptions, they will not make enough money to pay for their trouble, so that is really not a valid reason why the commissioners should overlook druggists and appoint the hotel keepers. That is not a matter of temperance against non-temperance; it is simply a question as to whether the law of the land shall be put in as good a condition as possible to be carried out. And I hold when commissioners make such a wholesale departure from the spirit of the law as, I think, it has been fairly established they have done in Huron, it is not for the benefit of the law in question, or the benefit of law in the abstract. It gives a chance for continued and repeated violations of the law, and is a strong argument which can be used by the opponents of this law, that the law cannot be enforced. I should like that some such provision as this should be inserted—though I do not know whether this is the place for it or not—that druggists shall be appointed for the purposes contemplated in the Act, and that only in the case of regularly certificated druggists not being available, other vendors might be appointed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman made a statement the other day which he has repeated as to the state of things existing in Huron. As I have stated already it is intolerable that that kind of thing should be allowed. The intention of the Department of Inland Revenue has however been called to the matter by the statements of hon. gentlemen, and that Department will see that the provisions of the Act are carried out in full integrity. This resolution does not however properly bring up or reopen the whole question of the Scott Act, which we have already discussed in this House. The Bill is simply a measure to declare that those clauses of the McCarthy Act which have been declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court, shall be suspended pending the decision of the Privy Council. That is the simple proposition standing by itself, and it has nothing to do with the principles of either the Scott Act or the McCarthy Act, or the administration of those Acts. It is simply a suspensory measure, to prevent the working of those portions of the Act which the Supreme Court has declared beyond the authority of this Parliament, and if the higher authority do not reverse the decision of the Supreme Court, they will still be considered beyond the competence of this Parliament.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is one point the hon. gentleman said nothing about—as to whether this board had made any return to the Government during the last year of the fees collected by them, and also by what authority they gave those licenses without exacting any fees whatever from the present vendors. It is quite clear from the letters I have read to the House, that the board had given indiscriminately 29 licenses in the county without exacting any fee. I think that is an extraordinary proceeding, and this board ought to be called to account for their conduct in this respect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. However, I cannot do that in the Act.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He can prohibit them from licensing vendors all over the county where there are druggists. He can carry out the spirit of the McCarthy Act, which provides that liquors shall be sold for medicinal purposes by druggists only; but these men are licensing others than druggists to sell in Scott Act counties.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I have not put the amendment of the hon. member for West Huron because I do not think it is relevant to the scope of the Bill. I cannot put it without the consent of the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to move a clause to be added to this Bill. As is well known, there have been a great many applicants for licenses under the Liquor License Act, and although in some cases the commissioners have granted licenses, under the law as it is at present interpreted, these licenses have been considered worthless; so that we may consider that up to the present time no applicants have received any value for the fees they have paid, and if it were in order for me to move a clause requiring the Government to recoup those persons, I should do so. However, I have been informed, on consultation with one of the authorities, that such a motion, as it affects the revenue, would have to originate with the Government. Therefore my motion does not extend that far; but I hope, as far as it does go, that it will be considered in order. I received a communication this Session from a druggist in the county of Simcoe, where the Canada Temperance Act is in force, stating that he had applied to the license commissioner for a license, and had deposited his fee of $10, and the only reply he received was an intimation that his application had been declined. There was no inspection of his premises, and therefore the commissioners rendered no services for the fee. It seems to me very unreasonable that a fee should be exacted under such circumstances, because the commissioners did not even take the trouble to inform themselves whether he was a proper person to receive a license or not. So much for the past. With regard to the future, I think it is unreasonable that an application for a license, whether a hotel, a druggist's or any other form of license, should be obliged to pay the fee when his application is refused; and my motion is to deal with that point. Section 16, of the License Act of 1883, enacts:

“The applicant shall with his application deposit a fee of $10 to cover the expense of inspection and advertising.”

That Act does not provide what shall be done with the fee in case the application is refused. I, therefore, propose to repeal that section and re-enact it so far as it goes, with the addition of these words:

Which shall be returned to such applicant if his application is refused.

I have no doubt the merits of that proposition are so strong and cogent that the leader of the Government will accept it as germane to this Bill, and I think the Chairman will be able to see no objection to it unless it is pointed out to him, and I hope the hon. First Minister will not point it out.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The same remark applies to this amendment that I made with regard to the last, that it is not germane to the scope of the Bill, and it therefore cannot be put without the instruction of the House.

Committee rose and reported Bill, with amendments.

SUPPLY—THE FISHERIES.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES. Before that motion is adopted, I wish to call the attention of the House to the remark of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), which he made when the Orders of the Day were called, with respect to the negotiations which have been going on with reference to the expiry of the fisheries treaty. He was prevented from making the remarks he intended to make at that time, and I thought it was unfortunate he attempted to make them, because it excluded others from taking part in the discussion. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail) attempted to take part in the conversation of the other day but was called to order. In common with others interested in the question, I have read with no small interest the telegraph reports in the morning papers of the negotiations going on between Great Britain and the United States with reference to the fishery question, and I think that now the result of these negotiations has been made public through the press of the United States and Canada, Parliament is entitled to some further information than it has had on the subject. What position do we appear to stand in by the arrangement made? As far as I can understand from the column and a half of the despatch which appears in this morning's Citizen, and which purports to convey an account of the memorandum of agreement between the British Government and the American Government, that agreement is as follows. The telegraph despatch says that:

"Under date of 12th March last the attention of the new Administration was called to the fishing question in the following memorandum sent by Minister West to Secretary Bayard * * *

If the telegraph report of that memorandum is correct, the memorandum certainly does contain some most extraordinary statements which, to my mind, demand explanation on behalf of the Government. That memorandum goes on to say:

"It has been represented by the Canadian Government that much inconvenience is likely to arise in consequence. Unless some agreement can be made for the extension of the period when the time comes (1st of July next), American ships will be actually engaged in fishing within the territorial waters of the Dominion. The vessels will have been fitted out for the season's fishing and have made all their usual arrangements for following it up until its termination in the autumn."

Then the despatch says further:

"It has been, moreover, suggested on the part of the Province of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada that, in view of the mutual benefit and convenience of the present local traffic, consisting of the purchase of ice, bait, wood and general ship supplies by the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing from the inhabitants of the British American fishing coast, the usual operations of the fishing season of 1885 should be continued by the fishing vessels belonging to citizens of the United States until the end of the season of that year, and that the local authorities of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada, in a spirit of amity and good neighborhood, should abstain from molesting such fishermen or impeding their progress or their local traffic with the inhabitants incidental to fishing during the remainder of the season of 1885."

It is perfectly plain that some representations were made by the British Government, with the sanction and approval and at the instance of the Canadian Government. As far as I can gather from the despatch, the Canadian Government have sought from the United States the arrangement contained in this telegraphic despatch. Having voluntarily thrown open, this year at least, our fishing grounds to American fishermen, without our receiving or asking any quid pro quo further than this, and that is what I wish to call the attention of the First Minister to particularly, so that he may state to the House whether it is true or not:

"The President of the United States would be prepared to recommend the adoption of such action by Congress with the understanding that in view and in consideration of such promised reconsideration, there would be no enforcement of the restrictive and penal laws and regulations by the authorities of the Dominion of Canada or the Province of Newfoundland against the fishermen of the United States resorting to British American waters between the 1st of July next and the close of the present year's fishing season, the mutual object and intent being to avoid any annoyance to the individuals engaged in this business and traffic and the irritation of ill-feeling that might be engendered by a harsh or vexatious enforcement of stringent local regulations on the fishing coast, pending an effort to have a just and amicable arrangement of an important and somewhat delicate question between the two nations."

From all I can gather from this lengthy despatch, the practical effect of the arrangements come to is to throw open to the fishermen of the United States our fishing waters, so that they may use them in common with ours, and we will get nothing in return. It does not appear to be stipulated, nor has the President, I think, the power to agree, that the duties which will come into force on the first July on Canadian fish can be remitted to our fishermen. As far as we can see from this despatch, the whole of the fisheries of this Dominion are thrown open to our American cousins, who will come in and use them, as they did until the Washington treaty was made, without our obtaining anything in return. If this is carried out, it simply means that our fishermen will have to compete, side by side with Americans, and be handicapped in the only market that is open to them, as far as mackerel is concerned, by $2 a barrel. Handicapped to this extent, our fishermen will be ruined, for it will be impossible for them to compete with the American fishermen against such odds. Had the arrangement included the refunding or non-imposition of this duty, there would be some ground for it, though I would prefer, as I frequently said, that the whole subject of these fisheries should be made a special matter of discussion, so as to rearrange all the trade relations between the two countries. But to admit American fishermen to our waters without compensation, while the United States exact $2 per barrel duty on our fish going to the United States, would be so to handicap our fishermen that they may as well give up their occupation. What I complain of is that the Government has been inactive and sluggish and regardless of the public interests in this matter. So late ago as March, 1883, when the United States gave notice of their intention to abrogate the fishery clauses of the treaty, Lord Derby sent a despatch to the Canadian Government informing them that joint resolutions of Congress and the Senate had been passed, that notice under these resolutions had been given that the fishery articles would expire the 1st July, 1885, and asking the Government what they were going to do about it. Nothing was done; the Government did not inform his lordship of their views or whether they intended to take any action. In May following, Lord Derby again called the attention of this Government to this matter, pressed its importance upon them, and asked for an expression of their views, but the Government gave no expression of their views. In January, 1884, Lord Derby again pressed for an expression of the views of the Government, but no expression appears to have been given; and in December, 1884, the First Minister tells us, in his interview with a New York reporter, that nothing had been done and it was not his intention to do anything. We complained in this House last year that the hon. gentleman was allowing valuable time to slip by, that he should take time by the forelock and utilise it in endeavoring to bring about negotiations with the United States, that it was dangerous to allow the fishery articles to expire without some effort being made to place the fishery question on a sound basis. We urged upon him that it would never do to let them expire without some effort being made to come to a satisfactory agreement, for if we did we would be brought face to face with the very serious question—which the hon. gentleman treated in a trifling manner then, but of which, subsequent events show he has realised the importance—so serious that we would be obliged to protect our fisheries at the muzzle of the gun, that we would be obliged to send an armed force to protect those fisheries, and drive out the Americans unless we made some arrangement with them, which everyone desired we should make. But the matter has been allowed to drift, and no steps were taken, as the hon. gentleman acknowledged, until a late period. In the month of December, 1884, he said that no steps had been taken, and he intended to do nothing. This very Session we brought the question up again, and said that already valuable time had been lost. Even in the month of March, it was almost too late to begin negotiations, but better than never. We got no satisfaction from the hon. gentleman. Nothing was done, and now we find that, very lately, the hon. gentleman has been moving in the matter with the only result which I think he could have hoped for as the consequence of his very late negotiations. The Americans have him at their mercy. He could not do anything. He was not prepared to carry out the belligerent policy which at one time was foreshadowed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. In the early part of the Session blood and thunder was spoken of in very loud tones here, but, when we came to approach closely to the date when we had to carry out our threats, we began to see how serious the matter was, and the whole negotiations appeared to have collapsed, unless the public are misinformed in the United States and in Canada. We are not to protect our fisheries; the Americans are to use them as they please, and we are to be met with a duty when we send our fish into their market. I contend that the hon. gentleman, when he said the other day, in reply to my friend from Digby, that he should not press his question because it might interfere with pending negotiations, was not perfectly frank, because those negotiations had been closed; the memorandum of agreement had been signed between the British Minister and the United States Minister, so that nothing we could say or do could affect the negotiations. The memorandum of agreement is dated on the 20th of this month. The matter was brought to the attention of the United States Government on the 12th of March last, and the memorandum was sent by Minister West to Secretary Bayard on that date, and, if this telegraphic report is correct, the hon. gentleman made in that memorandum the proposition to which I have referred. I think this Parliament is entitled to more information from the hon. gentleman. He says the papers have been ready for some time, and he is waiting for some telegraphic authority to bring them down to this House. The people of the United States are informed of the matter, and the Canadian people, through their press, are informed of the matter, and the Parliament of Canada alone are to be kept in ignorance. In conversation with members of Parliament to-day, I have heard them say that it is not possible that the hon. gentleman could have agreed to this without securing the free admission of our fish into the American market; that it would be the ruin of our fisheries. I hope that is true, and my object in rising now is to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity of dealing more frankly with us and telling us whether this report in this morning's Citizen contains a fairly accurate state of affairs as they exist, whether arrangements have been made and whether the fishermen who are now engaged in the investment of their money in the prosecution of their fisheries for this season are to go on or not? because it is no use for them to go on in the hope of the successful prosecution of those fisheries, if the Americans are to come in and use our waters and we are to be met with a duty on that side. In that case, we shall be placed at such a disadvantage that it will be impossible for our men to carry on the fisheries successfully. I protested last year against the inaction of the Government, against the policy of the Government, and the hon. gentleman said then that he was not going on his knees to the United States, he was not going to take any steps which would be undignified. Now we find that, so far as we have any information, the hon. gentleman has been obliged to go to the United States, and that the initiative was taken by Minister West, who says, as the representative of the Canadian Government, that the inconveniences are such that it is desirable to make a temporary arrangement and allow the Americans to come in and purchase their supplies and use our waters, and that we will depend upon the results which may flow from a representation of the facts by the President to the American Congress at their next Session. I was sorry to see in this statement what purports to be an extract from an official document, that the object of the President is to obtain a settlement of the much vexed legal questions which surround this matter of the fisheries, hinting that the matter is not clear, that the rights of the parties are not defined, and that the whole subject must be reopened and reconsidered. I hope nothing of that kind will be done. The rights of the parties are defined by the treaty of 1818 clearly and distinctly, and, although there may be some question as to the meaning of the word "bay," in that treaty, that is a matter for judicial interpretation, and, apart from that, their rights are clearly defined. I shall be exceedingly anxious, and I am sure the country will be anxious, to hear from the First Minister a clear and a distinct statement upon this matter. The negotiations are closed; no harm can be done; Parliament has a right to know; and I am sure the First Minister will tell us whether the statement in the newspapers is correct, and what position our fishermen are in with reference to the rights of the Americans to fish in their waters and their rights to send fish into the American market.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have already explained the reason why the papers have not been brought down before. Circumstances beyond my control have prevented their being brought down, and until I got the assent to which I have referred they cannot be brought down, and the House cannot discuss the matter until the papers are brought down; but before the House meets again I have no doubt the assent will be given and the papers will be brought down. I will not be dragged into a discussion now, and I will only say that the hon. gentleman's statement of the case is altogether inaccurate.

Mr. MITCHELL. At an early stage to-day I endeavored to get some information about this matter, and I think, considering the very short time that I have occupied the House this Session, considering how very little of the time of the House I have taken up, it was certainly not very much out of place on my part to preface the question which I intended to ask of the Ministry by a few preliminary remarks, in order to enable my constituents, when they got the answer of the Ministry, to understand the object of the question and the position in which they stood. I was, by the interference, by what I call the improper interference—

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. I have submitted to the hon. gentleman's observations before without remark, but, if you, Mr. Speaker, without rebuking him, will allow him to refer to a previous debate, and to allude to me in that way, I think it may be right for me to call attention to it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I called the hon. gentleman to order. He was clearly out of order, and I hope he will not refer to any previous debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon. gentleman from Durham thinks to conceal himself behind the fact that the remarks were made in a previous debate, all right.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall take another opportunity to attend to that gentleman when he chooses to interfere with me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, you may "hear hear." I am not afraid of his bullying, not a bit of it. I rose in regard to a matter which affects the interests of my constituents very deeply. They do not know to-day what position the trade is in, whether the fish that they catch now goes into the American markets free of duty or not. I rise in the exercise of my duty as one of their representatives, and properly rose, to ask the Government for some information, and I was stopped because I made a few preliminary remarks to enable them to understand what had been done. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island that this thing ought to have been taken up last year. I stated so in the House, and now that it has been taken up I find the position to be this: That in the face of the fact that the treaty is about to expire, the Government of the day have informed this House, and individual members have obtained the information outside, that negotiations have been going on between Her Majesty's Government on behalf, I presume, of Canada, and the Government of the United States, with a view to come to some solution of the fishery question. Everybody knows that that is a most desirable thing to accomplish, and that this question has caused trouble for the last century between these two great nations of a kindred race. What have the Government done in relation to that? The tongue of the right hon. Premier is tied in this matter. He is not at liberty to bring down the papers unless he gets the permission of Her Majesty's Government; he has not yet got that permission, and consequently we have to take such information as we can get from the papers published in the United States. The matter is this? Failing any arrangements having been made, and looking to the fact that a change of Administration has taken place in the United States which is looked upon throughout Canada as favorable to friendly relations between the two countries, to an increase in trade and commerce, and to a settlement of the fishery question, the Government in that case have chosen to open negotiations through the British Government, or directly with the authorities at Washington. We are yet unformed as to what course has been taken. What we now wish to know is the exact position of that transaction. We want to know whether the fish that are caught after the 1st July and sent to the United States market, will be subject to the duty which the termination of the fishery clause of the Washington treaty would call into existence. The right hon. Premier has informed us that although an arrangement has been practically arrived at by the use on the part of the Canadians of the American fisheries on the one hand, and of the Canadian fisheries on the part of the American fisherman on the other hand, still, in addition to that, the right hon. Premier has informed us that Canadian fish, exported to the United States, are to be subject to a duty. Of course anyone who understands the actual position of affairs, knew what the answer would be. We know that no disposition on the part of the President of the United States or his Cabinet could alter the law of that country or suspend it. That can only be done by the joint action of the Congress and President; therefore we know that while the Washington authorities may have authority to suspend the operations of that treaty in relation to fish in Canadian waters, and while our Government may have power to suspend the operation of the fishing of Americans in the waters of Canada, they have no right to interfere with the statute law of the United States, which is imperative and must be carried out. Therefore the fish of Canadian fishermen is liable to duty until some action is taken by Congress which will allow it to go in free. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island has referred to the fact that the Government ought to have taken this thing in hand last Session. I maintain they should have done so, but not having made any preparation for the protection of the fisheries, the next best thing to be done is to endeavor to secure, by a friendly arrangement, some settlement of the question, and the only course open to the Government of Canada to-day is to adopt the arrangement which has been made, and to allow the Americans, from now until the meeting of Congress, to occupy the fisheries in Canadian waters, while our fishermen shall have access to American waters, the fishermen of each country to occupy the fisheries of the respective countries without molestation and without exercising those rights of removal, and allow everything to remain as if no such arrangement had been arrived at. Sir, it may be said that in that arrangement the people of Canada are placed at a disadvantage. I admit they are. It is a necessity of the circumstances in which they are placed. If steps had been taken last year during the existence of an Administration which was not very favorable to Canada, it is probable we should have met with a rebuff, as we have done on former occasions, and that we would not have succeeded in bringing about a favorable result. But, fortunately for the people of Canada, in my opinion, and fortunately for the people of the United States, a change has come over that great country, and an Administration has come in which, if we are to believe the statements made in their press, are favorable to friendly relations between the two countries and to a settlement of this vexed question which has so long been a source of trouble between the two countries. Under all those circumstances, as their press and public men have shown a disposition to meet us half way, I think the Government of the day have done the only thing they could do in consenting to the suspension of the exercise of any rights, and any powers that we possess to protect rights which are specially our own within Canadian waters. It is there that the Americans get the benefit of our fisheries and compete in their own markets with the fish caught by our own countrymen, and that our countrymen are therefore at a disadvantage in the markets of the United States. But if by the temporary suspension of that arrangement we can hope in the future to secure an arrangement which will settle for all time the question of the fisheries, and which will, I hope, bring about a reciprocity not only in the fisheries, but in all our trade relations, and allow our own productions to go into the United States free of duty—I feel that if that object can be gained it is well worth the sacrifice for six months of our valuable fisheries. There is one thing that struck me in reading the correspondence to-day, that ought to have been attended to by the British Minister, and that is that he should have added to that correspondence this feature: that while the President of the United States, without the authority of Congress has no right to enter into any stipulation to allow our fish to go in free of duty, there might have been a suggestion which would have led to a return of any duties which were collected on fish going from Canada into the United States until such time as some definite arrangement was made as to the future. The complication of the fishery question by the introduction of reciprocity is a very doubtful policy. We all know how sensitive the people of the United States are respecting protection on the one hand and free trade on the other as they exist in the United States to-day. We know that it is quite possible by advancing an argument which involves the question of free trade or of protection to imperil the making of a satisfactory arrangement with respect to the fisheries. I am quite willing to leave the matter in the hands of the Government now that their attention has been called to it in Parliament. I am sure they will not overlook this fact. If no arrangement is arrived at with respect to the fisheries, with or without reciprocity—I would rather see it with reciprocity—I hope the Government will let the Government of the United States understand that the arrangement arrived at by Mr. West is an arrangement only for six months, and is only a temporary arrangement, and that we will not allow the matter to drift along year after year, as was done on a former occasion. I remember in 1867 when we occupied a similar position in regard to the fishery question, that the whole influence of the British Government was brought to bear on the Government of Canada to induce them to forego any question of the fisheries and allow the matter to drift along, the argument used being that time would bring an arrangement, and if we allowed the Americans to participate in our fisheries with our people, in course of time we would get reciprocity and the matter would be amicably arranged. We deferred to the British Government, and put a duty of 50 cts. a ton on American vessels. I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the time, and I gave the matter considerable attention. Next year, there being no disposition manifested by the United States authorities to give us reciprocity, we advanced the duty to $2 a ton; but we found no effect from it. We advanced it further, to $4 a ton; and when that ceased to have any effect, and the Americans ceased to regard the rules and regulations established, and when seizure after seizure was made by a force enrolled to protect the fisheries, we found the matter had reached such a crisis that the Americans, seeing that we were determined to protect our fisheries, came in and, under the pressure brought to bear, the Washington conference was held, and the result was the Washington Treaty, which has lasted eleven or twelve years. I hope that a similar result will be reached. We do not want a money compensation from the Americans for our fisheries—at least that is my own opinion. What we want is community of trade, is a general and free intercourse between this country and that country, whose peoples, institutions and spirit and everything that tends to make up the great Anglo-Saxon race are akin and between whom friendly relations should exist; that they should accept what we have to give them, and we should get compensation from them in trade. I hope when we are dealing with the matter it will not be from the standpoint of pounds, shillings and pence, but from the standpoint of national interest, we endeavoring to maintain our rights on the one hand, and on the other hand willing to give full compensation to the Americans. I approve of the temporary arrangement made, maintaining the position of the different nationalities in the several fisheries for the six months which will elapse before Congress meets; but I warn the Government to-day that their duty is, if no arrangement is arrived at, to take steps to place such a force of police vessels on our fishing grounds next year as will compel the recognition of our rights and protect the fishermen of our own country. For six months we allow Americans to enjoy our fisheries, and we can forego the value, which according to the values established by the Halifax commission would be about $500,000. But while we are anxious to create a feeling among the Americans that we are generous and fair in our treatment of them, and do not want to take any advantage from the circumstances that the treaty expires during the middle of the fishing season, while we are willing to be fair and generous towards them and to receive their approaches in a courteous spirit, yet we are determined to protect our rights. Some arrangement should be arrived at whereby reciprocal trade relations would be established, and we could send our raw productions into the United States, from which we would receive a benefit, and the Americans get the benefit of our fisheries. I can frankly say that reciprocity in regard to fisheries amounts to nothing. When the Americans talk about Canadians enjoying their fisheries as compensation for Americans enjoying our fisheries, it is a delusion; it is a misrepresentation of values so far as the American fisheries are concerned. Their fisheries are of no value to us. Our fishermen do not want to go to the United States coast to fish; they do not want to leave their own fisheries to go to fisheries that are overfished. There is no reciprocity in that, but I am willing for the present to accept the position so as to enable the Government to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion before Congress meets.

Mr. VAIL. I am rather astonished to hear the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) say that he is quite satisfied with the arrangement referred to in the telegram from Washington made known yesterday. If he is satisfied with that arrangement he is satisfied with very little, for I do not see that we get anything in return for having given away our fisheries for the next six months.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not said that. I said I was willing to accept it as a temporary arrangement.

Mr. VAIL. I am not satisfied with the temporary arrangement. If the statement published is correct, we have really given away our fisheries and got nothing in return. I do not feel disposed to-day to discuss the question after what the First Minister has said. What I complain of more particularly is that we have not had this information earlier. We have a High Commissioner in England and a member of the Government has been there for the last month or two, and between them they might have made enquiries at the Colonial Office, got the requisite permission and cabled this Government, so that they would have been in a position to inform the people of the Maritime Provinces exactly where they were in regard to the fishery question. This subject is one of vital importance to the Maritime Provinces. Fish is one of our most valuable exports, and any arrangement made with the United States which will enable the Americans to come within our three mile limit and fish, and anything with respect to the sending of fish into the United States, affects our trade very materially. I hope the First Minister will not lose any time in getting the necessary information from the other side, and that he will lay it on the Table, so that we may know exactly where we stand. I hope that the statement published in newspapers is not correct. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman say it was not correct. I hope such will prove to be the case, and that some better arrangement may be made than that fore-shadowed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When I said the statements were not correct, I referred to the fact that some of the statements made which have been read are very incorrect. A portion of a dispatch from Mr. Bayard has been read, and it is very incorrect. But I would say that the final acceptance, the final arrangements, only took place on the 22nd. They will no doubt be before us by the time the House meets again. With the permission of the House, and only with that permission, I desire to make one remark, and I hope the House will understand the spirit in which I make it. It will be remembered that the President is a Democratic president, and that the Republicans are in a majority in the Senate. The Democrats are in the majority in the House of Representatives. I believe the present American Government are sincerely anxious to enter into rather extended relations between the two countries, but with only one of the chambers in accordance with the general policy of the President, the matter is a very delicate one. The whole matter has to be brought before Congress and get the assent of both branches of Congress, and therefore, and as the fructuation of the treaty is in the hands of the Senate, which is a republican Senate, I would throw out the hint—no harm has been done certainly by any remarks which have been made to-day—but I merely throw out the hint that it would be very expedient, in any future discussion of this matter in the House that we should not afford by any discussion here, any opportunity for the enemies of extended relations in Canada, to use statements as against us, or perhaps arouse feelings against us. The House will quite understand the spirit in which I make that remark.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say that I cannot but feel that it is extremely unfortunate that these papers were not brought down earlier. Of course I understand the reason assigned by the hon. gentleman and it is a valid one provided every effort has been made by the hon. gentleman to avoid the delay which has taken place. My opinion is, having regard to the period of the Session, to the imminence of the change, and the importance of the subject, that it was the hon. gentleman's duty to have made arrangements with the Imperial Government, or to have endeavored to have made them, in advance of the formal conclusion of these negotiations, which would have authorised him, the moment it was concluded to place it before the people of Canada, and the Parliament of Canada, whom it so vitally affects. And now as the hon. gentleman several times told us that the Ministerial crisis in England has taken place between the Liberals and the Conservatives of that country, which prevents the people of Canada from knowing what their fate will be in this regard, while their Parliament is sitting, as those papers have become public in some shape or other, perhaps in a distorted shape, in the newspapers of the United States, and the newspapers of Canada, there is therefore an additional reason for their being brought down at once, so that the real facts may be made known to us. I may say I felt, while the hon. member for Northumberland was speaking, that it was a little unfortunate that in the course of the discussion such as this which we know to be a delicate and a critical discussion, there should be any allegations hostile to the inclinations of one of the great political parties of the United States, particularly when that political party was in the majority in the very Chamber which possesses decisive power with reference to the making of treaties. I think there could not have been a more unhappy declaration of war, as it were, against one of the political parties in the United States, than we have to-day. I think we have no right to assume that either of the political parties is hostile to this country in that regard. I see no signs of it myself, and I think it is unfortunate that the party which is in power in the treaty-making body of the Congress of the United States, should have been spoken of in the terms in which it was spoken of to-day. I think we have a right to expect fair play from both parties—from the Senate whether republican or democratic—from the President whether he belongs to one party or the other; and let it be remembered that it is not by suggestions that our hopes of a fair negotiation rests upon the preponderance of the party which is at this moment in a minority in the Senate, that we can expect to accomplish very much in the direction of extending our relations with the United States. I shall not say a word with reference to these papers, except to say that the fact that they have been made public, perhaps in a distorted shape, forms an additional reason why the free Parliament of Canada should know at the earliest moment, what has actually been done with reference to this matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to a personal explanation. I wish to say that I never made any reference to the preponderance of the republican or the democratic party in the Senate or in Congress. I referred to the fact, which is very well known, that the treaty was terminated by the party which is not now in power, as a justification for the Government in not bringing it up at an earlier day before the people of the United States or the Government of the United States. Therefore the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) are entirely uncalled for, as applied to myself. I will say that if he means to imply—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is making a personal explanation, and he cannot go on to make a general reply.

Mr. MITCHELL. I merely want to say it is not true; it is false.

Mr. MILLS. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for Northumberland says, I believe that the late President, Mr. Arthur, was as sincerely anxious to secure reciprocal trade relations with Canada as the present President, who is now chief executive officer in the United States; and I think it is greatly to be regretted that when notice was received two years ago, of the intention of the American Government to terminate those clauses of the Washington Treaty, that no steps were taken by the Government here, for the purpose of coming to an understanding with the United States, with reference to our fisheries and our trade relations. I believe that the opportunities were just as good under the presidency of Mr. Arthur as they are under the presidency of Mr. Cleavland, and if the hon. gentleman succeeds before the next meeting of Parliament in securing a better understanding with the people of the United States with reference to our trade with that country, he will simply have accomplished what might have been accomplished at a very much earlier period. We all know that the hon. gentleman has expressed views somewhat different from those of the hon. member for Northumberland. That hon. member rejoiced at the success of the democratic party, and he wished it well. The First Minister, as reported in an interview which took place in New York, while the election was pending, expressed his anxiety for the success of Mr. Blaine, and he gave as a reason for his anxiety for Mr. Blaine's success, that Mr. Blaine was like himself a Protectionist, while Mr. Cleavland leaned in the direction of free trade.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot be responsible for anything that may be stated about me in that way. The hon. gentleman must know that I never made such a remark.

Mr. MILLS. Then I think it is exceedingly unfortunate that the hon. gentleman did not contradict that statement at an earlier period. His friends believed, and I am sure I did, that that was a fair representation of the hon. gentleman's views. We know the views he expressed on our commercial relations at Washington, and it was natural to conclude that the opinions attributed to him were those which he undoubtedly entertained. There was a very strong impression, not merely in Parliament but out of it, that the hon. gentleman's delay in dealing with the subject of reciprocity, although it was brought under his attention by a formal dispatch, was due to the fact that he believed it was not in consonance with our interests that more intimate trade relations should exist with the neighboring Republic. The hon. gentleman's notion was that we should have Canada for the Canadians, and the failure of the Treaty of Washington, and the closing of the ports of the United States to our fishermen was another step in carrying out the commercial views of the hon. gentleman, and it does seem to me that the hon. gentleman's views clearly indicate why it was, that no active steps were taken to renew the fishery provisions of the Washington Treaty or to establish what some of us could regard as satisfactory commercial relations with the neighboring Republic. However that may be—and I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the subject on its merits so long as the papers are not before us—the fact remains that no steps were taken, and that the fisheries of Canada are open to the United States at least for the coming season, without any corresponding advantage being secured to our people.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have only a word to say with regard to a remark made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who rose for the purpose of denying that he made any allusion to the republican majority in the Senate of the United States, and in the course of that allusion made a very ungentlemanly remark with reference to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), accusing that hon. gentleman of saying what was false. The hon. member for Northumberland, in referring to the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty by the republican party, did convey the idea, by inference at least, that that party was opposed to the Treaty; and I hold that the criticism made by the hon. member for West Durham of the hon. member's remark was quite proper. The Reciprocity Treaty, which was abrogated by the American party in 1865, is a treaty that no party in the United States would renew. We need never hope to renew a treaty like that in the United States. I most heartily concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that there has been nothing in the attitude of the republican party for years past, to warrant us in the belief that they have been opposed to receiving proposals for a new reciprocity in the past, and I believe the Government have not made the efforts they should have made for obtaining a reciprocity treaty with the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think it is necessary for me to reply to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, because they have been already replied to. The hon. gentleman has said nothing new, nothing that calls for any remark from me—nothing worth notice.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Militia—Salaries, Military Branch and District
Staff ..... $19,800

Mr. VAIL. I would like to ask the Minister if he has reduced the staff of last year?

Mr. CARON. The only reduction in the staff is the reduction I announced last night of $600 for the district paymaster. I explained last night that that position had been vacant for some time, and that the policy of the Department was to place the paymastership in the hands of our storekeepers, doing away with one salary. That is the only reduction in the staff.

Mr. VAIL. The expenditure last year was $24,524, and it is hardly worth while to take a vote of $19,800 if we are going to spend the same amount as we did last year.

Mr. CARON. The whole expenditure last year was $19,800, and the Estimate for last year and that for this year is the same amount.

Mr. VAIL. Of course the hon. gentleman asks the same amount this year as he did last year, but he expended last year $24,524, according to the Public Accounts.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to read the page in the Public Accounts, he will see that that sum includes various other items. The item to which the hon. gentleman is referring now is salaries; contingencies are provided for in another part of the Estimates.

Mr. VAIL. Why are these included in the Public Accounts under the head of salaries and expenses of the district staff?

Mr. CARON. When the hon. gentleman himself was in the position I now occupy, the same headings were adopted. I do not know how the hon. gentleman can find that upon these services, most of them provided for by statute, we could have exceeded the vote. I cannot have exceeded the vote of last year, as I find in the Estimates the same amount as I estimate this year.

Mr. VAIL. My hon. friend must not think I am finding fault. I am simply asking for information. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in stating the service is carried out now as formerly, but what I wish to point out is that the Public Accounts should agree as far as possible with the amount set apart for that particular item in the Estimates, and the Public Accounts and the Estimates do not agree.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will look a little further down he will find in item 57 an allowance for contingencies $38,000 out of which these allowances are paid.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). As the hon. gentleman for Digby (Mr. Vail) states, the Estimates and the Public Accounts do not by any means agree and they are consequently confusing. The hon. member for Digby draws attention to this fact, because it is generally presumed that the vote in the Estimates is generally represented in the Public Accounts by an expenditure which covers the same purpose. As a fact, the salaries of the military branch and district staff are represented in the Public Accounts as being $24,000, while the vote last year and the one now asked is merely $19,800. I can understand the explanation of the Minister that the contingencies are provided for in another Estimate. Clearly then, the fault is in the preparation of the Public Accounts, to this extent, that they do not follow the Estimate of the year, and it would be convenient, in examining these accounts, that the same principle should be followed and the same headings, as is the case in almost every other instance. The Department contemplates the separation of the salaries paid to the military branch and district staff from the allowances, while the Public Accounts include the allowances under the same heading. If that is understood, we reach a practical explanation, but I think it would be convenient that the same system which pervades the Public Accounts generally were followed in this particular.

Brigade Majors' salaries, transport, etc..... $13,900

Mr. CARON. I desire to reduce this by $2,400, being the salaries $1,200 each of two brigade majors. The position of one, whose headquarters were at Kingston, has been vacant for some time, and I understand that, without interfering with the efficiency of the service, his office can be dispensed with. I have also abolished the similar position in New Brunswick. There I have followed the system which has been productive of great results, that of making our school of infantry the headquarters of the district. The commandant of our infantry schools at Fredericton, Col. Maunsell is now also the acting deputy adjutant general, or the officer in command of the whole district. I have been trying to make a school as much as possible the military centre for the district, and it has given so far much satisfaction.

Mr. WELDON. Has an additional allowance been made Col. Maunsell?

Mr. CARON. The reduction is merely a reduction of salary, and I give Col. Maunsell the allowance of $360 additional which formerly went to the brigade major. The salary of brigade major was $1,200 and $360 allowance, and I give the $360 to Col. Maunsell the acting deputy adjutant general. Last year, the estimate was $16,300, and in the Public Accounts the Auditor General's report shows an expenditure of $14,363.

Mr. VAIL. What is the cause of the reduction?

Mr. CARON. The reduction I have explained is in the saving of the salaries of 2 brigade majors. We estimated last year for two additional brigade majors, and did not fill the vacancy, and that amount remains over.

Ammunition..... $55,000

Mr. LANGELIER. I see by the Public Accounts that $5,000 worth of powder was purchased from a firm in Quebec. I should like to know whether any tenders were asked for. The firm is a very respectable one, but it is a firm of hardware merchants, and I do not think they are manufacturers of powder. I should like to know why this purchase was made from a firm of hardware merchants instead of directly from the powder manufacturers, and why tenders were not asked for?

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman is quite right. We got the powder necessary for the cartridge factory at Quebec from the firm of Beaudet, Chinic & Co., who are, as the hon. gentleman has stated, a very respectable firm. The reason for it is that we wished, as much as possible, to have the cartridge factory run altogether upon what could be found in Canada. We wanted to use Canadian powder manufactured in Canadian factories instead of going to England, as heretofore, to get the powder. The powder company that furnished us with the powder is the Hamilton Powder Company and the firm of Beaudet, Chinic & Co. are the agents for that company. The company gave us to understand that our orders would be sent to them through that firm without any additional cost, and it has been done in that way since the cartridge factory was started.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. Even if the powder is supplied by a Canadian factory, which is very proper, there is another manufactory in the Province of Quebec, in the Eastern Townships, not far from Richmond. I do not remember the name of the place, but I think it is Windsor. I am quite sure there is one much closer to Quebec than the Hamilton Powder Company. I do not object to the powder being got from the Hamilton company if it is cheaper, but I think an attempt should be made to get the powder at the cheapest rate possible. I am told by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) that there is also a powder factory in Nova Scotia, and I think, when there is such a number of manufactories of an article required by the Government, they should ask for tenders when they want such a quantity as $5,000 worth.

Mr. CARON. I did exactly what the hon. gentleman is suggesting, and I am glad to see that our views correspond so closely on this point. We asked for samples to be sent by the Windsor company, and they did not send them, and the Hamilton Powder Company, who have been furnishing that powder ever since we introduced the system of employing Canadian manufactured powder, naturally got the order.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what is the cost per thousand of the cartridges manufactured at the Quebec factory, compared with the cost of the same article imported from England? I am quite ready to admit that even if there was a difference of cost in favor of the foreign article it would be better to use the home article, but it would be of some interest to know how the prices of the article imported from Great Britain compare with the prices of the article manufactured at the cartridge factory? I do not pretend that there is any extravagance, but I only ask it as a matter of information for the public.

Mr. CARON. The estimate of $55,000, is made up in this way: Manufacturing 2,000,000 rounds of Snider ammunition cartridges, ball cartridges 1,000,000 rounds, estimated at $20 per thousand, $20,000; ball cartridges, 500,000 rounds for extra issue to militiamen, $10,000. I will explain how this ball cartridge extra ammunition is issued later, and how the Department is recouped for that amount which is served out to the force for the purpose of their annual rifle competitions and practice. Blank cartridges, 500,000 rounds, at $10 per thousand, $5,000. The hon. member will also see an amount, over and above that for the cartridge factory, that we have estimated for ammunition, including artillery ammunition. The artillery ammunition we have to import, as the hon. gentleman will readily understand, from Woolwich. It would be impossible, unless we had a regular factory here, to undertake the making of this heavy ammunition. Artillery ammunition from Her Majesty's Imperial stores, for 18 field batteries, at $400 each, $7,200, and for 47 garrison batteries, at $270, $12,800. This makes altogether $55,000. Now, as to the cartridges imported from England, we have not imported any for some time, but, as far as I remember—I have not got the prices here, because we have kept that completely out of any consideration in the Department, from the fact that we manufacture all that we require—the last year we imported them the price was $15, $16 or $17 in England. The quantity of ammunition we manufactured up to the 1st December, 1884, was 1,816,570 rounds. We had in process of manufacture, to be completed during the year 1885, 1,500,000 rounds. During the events which have taken place in the North-West I considered it advisable to double the number of men employed in the factory, and to work night and day during that period. We manufactured, from the 4th March to the 12th June, 1,147,720 cartridges. After the Batoche battle the staff was immediately reduced, as we considered that we had a sufficient reserve for all we required. The quantity ordered to be manufactured for 1885 and 1886, being double the annual quantity, is 3,000,000 rounds, including the quantity I have spoken of as being manufactured to provide for the emergency in the North-West.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. Does the Quebec factory manufacture ammunition for the Martini-Henry rifle or only for the Snider?

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will remember that the cartridge factory was established by my predecessor, the present Lieutenant Governor of Quebec. The order then given was only for the Snider-Enfield rifle. From the experiments which were going on in England with reference to rifles and small arms, I deemed it advisable, before the machines came out from England which had been ordered, to provide that they could be adapted so as to make our cartridge factory available for the manufacture of the Martini-Henry rifle. However, the problem is not yet solved. There are strong believers in the Snider, and from the information in my possession, and the reports of competent riflemen at the front, there are very many in favor of the Snider; in fact, they prefer it to the Martini-Henry. However, if it is deemed advisable at any time to change the Snider for the Martini-Henry, the cartridge factory can be made available for the manufacture of that ammunition at a very small cost, I think $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. I would ask whether, in order to keep in employment the trained hands we have at that factory, it would not be possible to manufacture cartridges for other countries than our own? There would be an economy in such an arrangement. Formerly, we imported cartridges from England, showing that they manufactured cartridges for exportation; and could not our factory be utilised in a similar manner for the manufacture of cartridges for importation?

Mr. CARON. That suggestion could not be carried out, as it would necessitate the purchase of quite a different set of costly machinery. The machinery we have at the present is adapted to the manufacture of only one kind of cartridge. I may mention, in regard to the extra ammunition, that we have served out over 700,000 rounds of ball cartridges as extra ammunition. It is served out to order, and the parties pay the cost price for such ammunition. During the year of 1883-84 we served out 711,546 rounds, for which the sum of $12,041 was paid into the Treasury.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Complaints are constantly made of the quality of the ammunition which is served out at the various rifle matches. Now, nothing is more practically important than that our militia should be taught to shoot properly; and it is becoming more apparent every day that a moderate number of men, as I am assured by officers who have served in the North-West, who know how to shoot, are very much more formidable than a large number of untrained men. I can inform the Minister that I have been informed from a number of quarters that the quality of the ammunition which the parties who contended in the rifle matches, with the object of making themselves good shots, has been very bad indeed. I can specify particularly the matches at Toronto during the autumn of last year. I was informed by some of the experienced riflemen who were there that so bad was the quality of the ammunition served to the marksmen that in one case the balls would hardly go 300 or 400 yards. I can inform the hon. gentleman privately of the names of several volunteer officers and privates who made these complaints to me.

Mr. CARON. I had not heard any complaints about last year's cartridges.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that they were last year's cartridges. I presume the cartridges were of considerable antiquity.

Mr. CARON. So anxious was I to guard against any possible mistake in the manufacture of cartridges, that two years ago I formed a board, composed of experienced officers, for the purpose of investigating the subject, and the board reported as follows:—

"The board are of the unanimous opinion, first, that the process of manufacture of Dominion cartridges is perfectly satisfactory, from the great care taken in testing the component parts of such cartridges, by which the slightest defect or blemish must be immediately seen. The powder used is such as is used at Woolwich.

"The board are of the unanimous opinion that the Dominion ammunition gave a better result than English No. 9 of the years 1877-82, from a fixed rest at 500 yards, as shown in the accompanying diagram. The result of the independent shooting at Levis at 200, 500 and 600 yards by 16 men of "A" Battery and a like number of the 8th Rifles endorsed the strength and quality of the Dominion ammunition. Therefore, the board have no hesitation in recommending the Dominion ammunition for general use in Canada. The board have much pleasure in testifying to the superior qualifications of the superintendent."

Lieut.-Col. T. J. DUCHESNAY, D.A.G., Mil. Dist. No. 7, President; Lieut.-Col. E. B. BEER, 7th Batt.; Lieut.-Col. E. G. SCOTT, 8th R.R.; Major C. J. SHORT, B.B., R.S.C.; Capt. H. F. PERRY, H. Q. Staff; Capt. G. H. BALFOUR, 8th R.R.; Capt. E. A. MACNACHTAN, C.G.A.

I may also say that at the Dominion Rifle Association matches the ammunition used was our Canadian ammunition, and last year it gave satisfaction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was at the rifle matches here?

Mr. CARON. Yes. This, however, is such an important subject that I will have an investigation instituted, so as to ascertain the facts, and if the hon. gentleman will let me have the names of the gentlemen mentioned, I will communicate with them and ascertain what the complaints are which they have to make.

Mr. VAIL. What is the relative cost of cartridges manufactured here and those imported?

Mr. CARON. I have already stated that the cost of our Canadian cartridges is about $20 per thousand. The cost of imported cartridges—we have not imported any for a considerable time—was, the last time we purchased any, between $16.50 and $17 per thousand at Woolwich.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). What charge of cost is made to the force by obtaining such ammunition as is required for rifle practice from the cartridge factory?

Mr. CARON. We charge cost price to the force.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Then, do I understand that the force is charged more since the cartridge factory has been established than previously?

Mr. CARON. I understand the hon. gentleman wishes to know whether the force getting our Canadian cartridges pay more than they paid when we imported English cartridges. We have charged the force exactly the same price as members were charged when we were importing English cartridges. If the price was $16.50 or $17 they got Canadian cartridges at that price. I thought it desirable, in the interest of the force, that we should give them the cartridges at the same price. What we may do for the future, I have not decided.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I have noticed some complaints made in the public press as to the ammunition supplied to the force on active service in the North-West. We know that in the opinion of some of the officers in the active force the ammunition was defective, and I may be pardoned for saying that we are bound to see that the ammunition manufactured here is of first-class quality, ball ammunition particularly, and that the ammunition put in the hands of the force on active service shall be the very best. One of the complaints was that the ammunition prepared at our cartridge factory was not reliable; that the same ammunition did not always cover the same range, because the powder was of different strength. That is a fatal objection to ball cartridge. While I have looked with some care at the report of the Minister of Militia for last year, with respect to the experiments made, I cannot refrain from drawing attention to the fact that complaints are made as to the quality of the ammunition served out for practical use. The experiments made with the ammunition at Quebec were thought to be very satisfactory. Nevertheless, it is the fact that a number of complaints have, to my knowledge, been made, as to the character of the ammunition put into the hands of the volunteers. Has the Minister considered the question of establishing a system by which ammunition which had remained in store for a length of time would be converted into blank cartridge? We know that the character of the powder will deteriorate by time, and the attention of the Department should be directed to the advisability of utilising cartridges that may have remained in store so long as to be of no practical use.

Mr. CARON. I have endeavored to ascertain by writing and telegraphing during the present campaign the facts in this regard, and I have not heard a single complaint from headquarters. I saw in the press some complaints about the ammunition. In one newspaper it appeared to be in respect of heavy ammunition for the guns. In another newspaper there was some complaint about the small arms ammunition. But so far as I have been able to ascertain, there have been no complaints as to the ammunition sent to the front. Previous to our getting our cartridge factory into perfect running order we had to keep a large reserve of imported ammunition. The reserve was added to year after year, owing to the fact that we did not require it, for we were in times of profound peace. Not once but on several occasions when competitions took place at headquarters, or at the Dominion Rifle Association matches, this ammunition, which had comprised our reserve, on being served out turned out to be very defective. The system we follow at our cartridge factory and Government stores is that all ammunition which is condemned is turned over to the blank cartridge department and is converted into blank cartridge, the ball being extracted and used in making new cartridges. The hon. gentleman remarked that the quality of the powder was unequal. I can tell the hon. gentleman that we imported from England the most precise and perfect instruments known to science, for the purpose of testing the powder, an instrument which is used in all the great arsenals, such as Woolwich. The powder which is used for manufacturing cartridges is put to every possible kind of test, chemical and otherwise. Major Prevost, the superintendent, who has been a close student, who studied at Woolwich, and is known to be a great authority, makes a specialty of that subject. He is constantly testing the cartridges and the powder, and there is no more efficient officer in the service. Nothing is accepted or paid for by the Department unless the material which enters into the manufacture of the cartridges has been accepted by him. We have taken every precaution which can be taken, and I hope what the hon. gentleman said about the inequality of the cartridges, will turn out to apply to some of those which compose the reserves that have been served out. In any case, I shall have the matter investigated without delay. I hope it will be found that our Canadian cartridges are as good and as perfect as the report of those skilled marksmen and riflemen indicate that they are.

Mr. LISTER. It is gratifying to know that such care is taken, but I may say that during the last year I heard myself many complaints in London that the cartridges were not of the quality which should be given to our volunteers. I would ask the Minister whether he has imported any small arms from the United States or elsewhere, or arms of any description.

Mr. CARON. We imported, quite lately, that is since the outbreak in the North-West, I think between 100 and 150 Winchesters, for the purpose of placing them in the hands of the scouting party which was organised. Most of these men have been living for years in the west, and they were accustomed to that arm, and asked that it should be supplied to them.

Mr. LISTER. Was the ammunition used in the North-West manufactured in our own factory?

Mr. CARON. Yes; for the Sniders.

Mr. LISTER. I see that last year the vote was $55,000, while the Auditor General's Report shows that only $24,044 were expended.

Mr. CARON. My attention has not been called to that particular item in the Auditor General's Report, but I fancy it refers to $12,000 which were paid to the Receiver General for ammunition which was served out to the forces.

Mr. LISTER. Was the ammunition furnished to our volunteers for small arms the same as that furnished to the North-West Mounted Police.

Mr. CARON. Yes. I forgot to tell the hon. gentleman that besides the Winchesters, we imported about 1,000 Colt's revolvers. We had no revolvers in our stores, and it was necessary to get them on short orders. The ammunition for the Winchesters was the same as for the Mounted Police, and so was the ammunition for the revolvers.

Mr. LISTER. You manufacture no small ammunition?

Mr. CARON. No.

Mr. LISTER. One would suppose so, from this item.

Mr. CARON. That refers to small arms or rifles as distinguished from artillery or cannon. All the cartridges manufactured for the Martini-Henry or Snider are called small arms ammunition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman considered the expediency, in view of the importance of encouraging good marksmen to train themselves at our ranges, of supplying, at somewhat below cost price, a reasonable amount of ammunition to be furnished under proper precautions to the members of rifle associations. Those who desire to make themselves good shots now-a-days are obliged to take a considerable amount of time, and the amount of ammunition they require is probably vastly greater than many of us suppose. I find that those who have any pretension of becoming good shots require to expend as much as 1,000 or 1,200 rounds per annum. Many of these men are privates in the ranks, and in addition to devoting a considerable amount of time to this practice, there is a tax amounting to $16 or $20 a year imposed upon them, for the purpose of making themselves qualified to be of use to us if their services were called for. It appears to me that the Government would be well justified in supplying a certain quantity of ammunition at moderate prices to these men, with, of course, due precautions against abuse.

Mr. CARON. I may say that we have been working in that direction. For two years we have been paying the cost of the transport of ammunition and supplying the ammunition itself at considerably below what it costs us. As the hon. gentleman knows, we give it considerably below what it costs us. But it is a very important matter, and I think we cannot do better than increase the number of our riflemen. Twenty good riflemen with good arms are better than a hundred men who are not efficient in the art of handling the rifle.

Mr. VAIL. Did the hon. gentleman import ammunition for the Martini-Henri rifle?

Mr. CARON.

Mr. CARON. Of course, I am ready to give the hon. gentleman any information we possess, but I do not want to mix up in this discussion matters connected with the outbreak, because these are matters that will have to be discussed on quite a different basis; but we had to import about 3,000,000 rounds, which we could not manufacture in time.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman's estimate of last year was similar in amount to the estimate we are now discussing, while the expenditure was something like $24,000. I have no recollection of having heard the hon. gentleman say what additional expenditure he proposes incurring this year to justify his asking the same vote as last year, which was largely unexpended.

Mr. CARON. Last year Parliament voted a sum of money for the purpose of enabling the Department to get out new field battery 9 pounder guns. When we come to the vote I shall explain to the hon. gentleman how we were successful in getting twelve guns instead of eight with the money voted. Owing to the pressure at Woolwich, these guns were sent very much later than we expected to receive them. Consequently, the amount of money we had voted for artillery and ammunition was not fully expended, but we estimate for it now, because we consider that, with the amount which has been carried over from last year and the amount voted this year, we shall be only getting what we require for the two years to serve our purpose.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). So that, practically, the vote for next year will be $55,000 plus $20,000?

Mr. CARON. Yes; exactly.

Clothing and great coats ..... $90,000

Mr. LISTER. Are these manufactured by tender?

Mr. CARON. Yes, by tender, largely advertised. The estimate is made up for 5,500 suits of uniform clothing, at an average cost of $10 per suit, and 6,000 great coats, at an average cost of $5.83.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do the officers in the field say of the character of the clothing they have had in the late campaign?

Mr. CARON. I have had no complaint at all, and the General, who is a good judge, says, so far as the great coats and the tunics are concerned, that he never saw anything approaching the value of the cloth.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope it is Canadian cloth.

Mr. CARON. Yes; all Canadian cloth.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Is the same clothing served out to the forces at the front as to the volunteers in their annual drill?

Mr. CARON. We had nothing to draw on, except what remained in our stores, outside of the ordinary uniforms. I ordered some light homespun coats, which, if the campaign had continued for any length of time, would have been very necessary for the men, being much lighter than the heavy tunics; but with the exception of 2,000 or 3,000 suits of this homespun, we had nothing to give to the troops at the front but what we served out to the whole force.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Were these tendered for?

Mr. CARON. Yes; all tendered for.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). There have been complaints made as to the character of the clothing furnished; and while I have no doubt every member of this committee will sympathise with the disposition to procure as much of this clothing as possible in the country, still I think our first duty is to our volunteers. Some of the Deputy Adjutants

General complain of the clothing as being very poorly put together, and one officer suggests that each officer commanding a corps be given a special allowance to provide for his sewing each button on the clothing. That is an evidence, in itself, that the character of the clothing is not such as we should like to see it.

Mr. BERGIN. I think I have had an opportunity of knowing something of the character of the clothing served out to the volunteers, and my observation during the last two or three years is that the clothing has very much improved in quality. The difficulty with me is how those people can furnish clothing of so good a character for the price. The great coats, I believe, are not equalled by those of any other service.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I, of course, defer to the opinion of the hon. gentleman; but I think W. H. Jackson, Deputy Adjutant General of Military District No. 1, is also a good authority. He is at the front at present, and is in control of this department in the force now on service.

The committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Before you left the Chair, Sir, I was drawing your attention to the character of the clothing furnished the service. I stated that the report of the Minister for the last financial year indicated that some of the clothing was not of a character suitable to the purpose. I then referred to the report of Col. Jackson, Deputy Adjutant General of No. 1 Military District, who states, under the head of equipment and clothing, that much of the equipment is very old and worn. The forage caps issued by the Department, he says, cause many complaints, on account of their being quite unsuited to the climate, either in summer or winter, and many men, willing to volunteer, decline to do so on being shown the caps. Complaints are also made of bad clothing, and of the make of the trousers and the bad sewing on of the buttons. The character of the clothing has more than once attracted attention through the press; and while I am willing to concede to the Minister the desire to have the clothing manufactured in the country, the first necessity should be that its character is durable. Our volunteers make considerable sacrifices, and it is certainly discouraging that the clothing should be of the character described in the report of the Adjutant General. It must have been a matter of observation, too, that when corps come into camp their uniforms are, in very many instances, very badly fitted. Of course, I know the difficulties that exist in that respect; I know that when clothing is purchased by contract it is impossible to get that fit which volunteers desire. I know that in some instances captains commanding companies have, out of their own pockets, paid a tailor to make such alterations as were deemed necessary. Whether the Department will think well to make an allowance to the captains of companies to meet this particular case, I cannot say, but certainly there are a good many complaints. There are also complaints resulting from the fact, easily accounted for, that there is such a large proportion of volunteers who are new men at each camp of instruction, some of the reports indicating that the number of recruits is as large as 90 per cent. I cannot indicate how that difficulty should be overcome, but I think it should receive the attention of the Department, to see whether some means could not be taken by which the men enrolled would be retained at their different commands for their entire term of three years. We know that they are enlisted for three years, but that the Act is very seldom put in force, and it is worthy of consideration whether some means, such as an increase of pay, would not obviate that difficulty.

Mr. BERGIN. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down is rather unfortunate, I think, in residing in the only district from which there is any complaint as to the character of the clothing in the past year. I have read the reports of officers commanding military districts, and I have failed to find any complaint from any officer, except the officer commanding the No. 1 Military District. All the others, who refer specially to the clothing, pronounce it to be good and almost invariably in good condition. I notice one exception, and that is where the inspecting officer says the clothing was not in good condition, owing to its having been stored by the officer commanding the corps in a damp place. It is impossible for the Militia Department here to look after every store that is in charge of an officer commanding a corps or a company, and it sometimes happens the storehouses are not suitable. In this case, I have no doubt it was inevitable, because it was in one of the districts in Manitoba, and no other building could have been had at the time. Now, I have had almost as long experience of the militia as any man in the country. For many years I have had the honor of commanding a corps, and I can venture to say, without contradiction, based upon fact, that the clothing of the militia in this country is exceedingly good, far better, during the past few years, than it ever was before. I am proud to say that since the clothing has been made from cloth manufactured in this country it is very much better than when made in the old country. The objection made by Col. Jackson to the caps is tolerably well founded, so far as the hot season of the year is concerned; but it is a most comfortable cap at almost any other season, and if I were disposed to be critical, I would say that Col. Jackson, when penning those lines, penned them with no disposition to ask men to volunteer. It is a most extraordinary reason to be given for the refusal of men in this country to join the militia, that the shape of the cap does not suit them. I did not think there were many man-milliners in the volunteer force, and I never, until I saw this report of Col. Jackson, heard it mentioned as a reason for not joining the militia service. The men are satisfied—have good clothing, and the caps furnished them are of good material. They are, perhaps, not fitted for walking down Broadway, if a man is disposed to be very particular as to the style of his dress, but they are comfortable and serviceable, and not at all injurious to the health. There is another objection offered? The hon. gentleman admits it is an objection that cannot be met, namely, that the clothing supplied from the Department will not fit every man who volunteers, at the moment he volunteers; and the hon. gentleman has himself supplied a reason why the Government ought not to permit the clothing to be changed or fitted to each volunteer, because it is the custom not to prosecute men who fail to complete the full term of their enlistment in the service, and there are many young men who, owing to various causes, very often, at the period of camp, are obliged to go to other parts of the country. They leave their clothing behind them, to be used by other men who take their places, and if the Militia Department were to permit the cutting up of clothing, so as to suit each man each time he volunteered, they would be, in a little time, without any clothing. The consequence is, that men are obliged to wear clothing a little too large for them in some cases, and in others a little too small; but it is in the interest of economy that these should not be cut up and made over for every man who wears them. In the cities, where the corps are of a more permanent character and the men are more apt to remain during the full period of enlistment, it is the custom to alter the clothing to suit the men, and I believe that in no case has the Militia Department suffered any loss by it, the corps having, generally, where there was the loss of a tunic or a pair of trousers, in consequence of the change, made it up. If no more substantial objection can be made to the clothing furnished by the Militia Department than this very curiously-worded paragraph of Lieut. Col. Jackson's, the only one in all the military districts who says the clothing is not of good quality, I think the hon. gentleman ought to be satisfied that there must have been some mistake made by Col. Jackson, and that the objection is not very well founded.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Assuming that Col. Jackson is the only officer who has any fault to find with the clothing supplied by the Department, we must not forget that, according to the number of military districts in the Dominion, he represents one-twelfth of the whole number of volunteers, and besides, his command is much larger, numerically, than many others of the twelve Deputy Adjutants General. But there were other complaints made, privately, of course, and perhaps they are not entitled to the same amount of consideration as this. I do not assume that, because the changes are frequent, the volunteers' clothing should not fit him. I think it would be a doctrine very prejudicial to the success of our volunteer force to assume that the clothing was to be invariably a misfit because somebody else might come along afterwards who might be compelled to wear it.

Mr. BERGIN. You say invariably; I say occasionally.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). My view of it is, that it results very largely from the fact that, in the country battalions the changes are very numerous, and the attention of the Department should be drawn to the fact, with a view of remedying what is a pernicious state of affairs, not only as far as the clothing is concerned, but in regard to the well-being of the force. It must be clear to every member of the committee that twelve days' drill is not sufficient to secure to the country that value for the expenditure which we expect. If some course were adopted by which the volunteers were kept in the ranks for the full term of their enlistment, the clothing could be altered to fit them, and it would not be argued, as a reason for change, that some one else would have a misfit in the following year. I think a larger fraction of the very fair amount which we expend on the volunteer force could be appropriated to giving the men a few cents more per day. I find that where the municipal bodies have implemented the pay of the volunteers by 25 cents a day, the character of the battalions is markedly in contrast for the better to those where they are only paid 50 cents a day. Perhaps the Minister will find in that direction the means of overcoming the difficulty that the hon. gentleman, as well as myself, admits to exist.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman was quite right in drawing my attention to these matters. When the uniforms were imported from England the complaints were just as numerous, and, I think, more numerous, than they are to-day. There were just as many buttons dropping off occasionally when the uniforms were manufactured in England as there have been since they have been manufactured in Canada. The hon. gentleman states that some means should be adopted to enforce the enlistment of the men who join the force for the three years of their service. We know that, in a country like Canada, men, for the purposes of their own business, go about from one place to another, and I think that so far the system has worked very well. These men may be serving to-day in one battalion in one part of the country and next year in another battalion in another part of the country, but whenever we have required them we have found them ready to fight the battles of the country, and they have done it most effectually.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). According to last year's Public Accounts, we have paid a very fair sum for a thorough inspection of the clothing, between $1,100 and $1,200, and I think that Col. Jackson's complaint really should not lie, when that amount has been expended in the inspection of clothing, and in seeing that they are received from the contractor in good condition.

Mr. LISTER. I think it would be expecting something from the Department of Militia which we have no right to expect, if the uniforms given out to the volunteers were expected to fit them. The least that can be expected is, I think, that something should be done to make them as good as possible. I think the hon. gentleman from Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) is unjust in his reference to Col. Jackson. Col. Jackson is an officer of the Government, and I think it is his duty to report to the Government the condition of affairs exactly as they are. If he did not do so he would be remiss in his duty. I have not the pleasure of knowing Col. Jackson, but I believe he is a very efficient officer, and I have no doubt that he has reported the condition of affairs as he found it. He represents that the clothing was not good and was not properly made up. I think the hon. gentleman from Cornwall was unjust in his reference to Col. Jackson, because that officer did what it was his duty to do. It is not pretended that the statement made is not strictly accurate, and if it is true, then he would be remiss in his duty if he did not bring it to the attention of the Minister of Militia. In looking over the report, I find that there are other complaints, so far as other portions of the service are concerned. There are complaints as to the arms from several of the commanding officers—serious complaints that the arms are old-fashioned and inefficient, and although there are no other complaints as to the clothing, there are abundance of complaints, as far as the arms are concerned. I think these gentlemen would not be doing their duty if they did not bring these matters to the attention of the Department. How can the Minister of Militia be expected to have an efficient force unless the officers bring to his attention everything pertaining to it, everything calculated to make it more efficient and more fit to discharge the duties it is expected to do. The hon. gentleman says that the clothing is better than was imported from England, and on that point I admit that he ought to be a better judge than I am. But we have seen reports in the newspapers that, when the volunteers arrived at Port Arthur on their way to the North-West, the uniforms were in a very dilapidated condition indeed, on account of the inferior material of which they were made. Now that the matter has been brought before the attention of the Minister, I hope he will see that all just cause of complaint is removed.

Mr. McCALLUM. An hon. gentleman has complained that the volunteers do not serve their whole time of three years. My opinion is, that just as soon as a volunteer has learned his drill he should step out and let some other man take his place. It is in the interest of the country that as many men as possible should be acquainted with drill. Now, in regard to the clothing, there always has been and always will be complaints. The question is: Are the clothes made for the men, or are the men made for the clothes? But take it all in all, I am satisfied that the uniforms furnished the volunteers, that are made in this country, are as good as any that you can find in any other country in the world.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I find that R. J. Webb & Co., of England, supplied clothing for the value of $15,776, while the amount paid for military clothing in Canada is $25,000. It may be that it is the English cloth that is at fault; I am only drawing the attention of the Minister to the fact that complaints have been made by the volunteers themselves, and that these complaints have been substantiated by the report of an officer of the Government.

Mr. CARON. I may state, in regard to the clothing imported from England, that the hon. gentleman knows, from previous discussions which have taken place in Parliament, that we import from England the scarlet tunics because we cannot get in Canada a scarlet cloth in which the color would hold. On account of the small quantity of cloth which would be required for militia purposes, it would not pay to construct a factory for the special purpose of manufacturing that cloth in Canada. The dyeing process, more especially, would make it very expensive. But outside the scarlet tunics and the scarlet cloth, all the other military clothing is manufactured in Canada.

Mr. VAIL. The Minister is quite right in taking that course. When I was at the head of the Department I found it impossible to get scarlet cloth here, so that the color would stand; it lasted but a very short time. I see the amount asked for this year is $90,000, the same as last year, but it does not appear whether the balance between the $47,740 expended and the $90,000, the estimate of last year, and granted by the House, has been expended.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will see that it is one vote, and the vote was transferred over. All the accounts covering the expenditure have not been paid up. The amount has been carried over, so as to meet the contracts which were given.

Mr. VAIL. I observe the unexpended balance carried forward is $7,676 for ammunition, clothing and military stores.

Mr. CARON. This is one vote, and the whole of that vote was carried over. It cannot be divided, and so it appeared in the report as having been transferred for the payment of one particular class of goods, and no other. But the contracts have been given out, and the money will be required for the purpose of paying these contracts. The whole $90,000 will be expended.

Mr. McCALLUM. I understood the Minister of Militia and the late Minister of Militia to say that we manufactured all the cloth necessary for the volunteers in this country, except the scarlet tunics. Now, I think we might discontinue altogether the scarlet color in the clothing of our volunteers, because it makes a too conspicuous mark. There is no better target and no better color for an enemy to shoot at than a scarlet tunic, and I hope the militia authorities of this country will consider the expediency of changing that color to some other—say, grey or green—and if we can manufacture it in the country, so much the better, and then we would be able to keep that industry, at least, at home.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It gives me pleasure to be able to coincide with the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), who has just spoken, in reference to scarlet as a color for uniforms. I believe that some other color would be much better for the purpose of our volunteer forces. I have an opinion that, for purposes such as our Canadian volunteers are likely to be used, for skirmishing and scouting work, the red uniform is an objectionable one. While I know there is a very strong feeling in its favor, on account of its associations, yet, in the interest of our volunteers, we can very safely abandon that feeling, and furnish them clothing adapted to the circumstances of the case. I have had that opinion for several years, and it is strengthened by the fact that scarlet clothing is very hard to keep clean, and that after a little use it has not the appearance that dark green has. It would be decidedly advantageous to the volunteer force if scarlet tunics were abandoned.

Mr. CARON. The question of scarlet versus other colors is not a new one. It has been discussed by high authorities, and the result of the experience of those who have made a special study of the matter is that scarlet is the best of all colors. It is a well known fact that if you take a rifleman uniformed in green he makes a better mark at almost any distance than a man wearing scarlet. I do not wish to interfere with military critics who have made this a special study; but this question has been so often discussed that it is now considered settled, and the result of all the discussion is, that scarlet is, after all, the best color. The fact of scarlet being retained in all the great armies of Europe must necessarily indicate that it cannot be so bad as the hon. gentleman fancies it to be.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Those who have accompanied the forces in the field have criticised the scarlet uniforms. I have seen references to the fact that it was thought that corps uniformed in red offered better marks, and it was suggested that their losses resulted, to some extent, from that fact. I know they did not suffer very severely, but we must remember that those who were uniformed in other than red were those who were most actively engaged. I am not aware that it has been so definitely ascertained that scarlet is the preferable color, as the hon. gentleman indicates. I certainly will defer, however, to the hon. gentleman's judgement, in a matter of this kind, which must necessarily engage his attention more than mine.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I had occasion, some years ago, to look into this question, and I read something about it; and I have read, not the whole of it, but I have looked through the report of the late commission, with respect to the volunteers in England. There is a general consensus of opinion among military men that red is a much safer color than rifle green. I had occasion some years ago, to look at a large body of troops in review, and those with red uniforms appeared as a blurred red line, while the men in dark green, with the sun light behind them, stood out with marked individuality. There can be no doubt that red is a much safer color than the rifle green. So much is that the case, that the authorities are making all the volunteer force in England change their rifle uniforms to red, and they are doing it very rapidly. The only question that is still not quite settled is as to whether a light grey is not a safer uniform than red. But notwithstanding that question, which, I believe, is not yet decided, the recommendation of the commission is that all the volunteers' uniforms, and they are principally grey, shall be given up, and red adopted as the uniform of the volunteer force.

Mr. PLATT. What is the average time during which a great coat and tunic is fit for use?

Mr. CARON. Up to three years ago we issued great coats every five years. From the superior material which we have secured in our Canadian factories, I believe we will be able to save two years upon each great coat. There is no doubt that in ordinary times great coats and uniforms will last five years. It is intended, when the men at present at the front return, that they shall be provided with a complete new outfit.

Mr. PLATT. The condition of great coats might be materially improved if arrangements were made by which they would not be used as bedding. In camps of instruction both great coats and tunics are more abused in the tents than outside. Complaint has been made that this arises from a scanty supply of blankets. It might be that a great saving would be effected if more blankets were supplied, and the great coats and tunics were put carefully away. Volunteers lie on the ground in their great coats and cover themselves with blankets. During wet weather the great coats get into a very bad condition, and are not fit for parade. The trouble about buttons being rubbed off arises from the men sleeping in their great coats. Is it made imperative that great coats shall be taken to the stores after camp?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. That is one of the regulations that is not carried out. It is not an uncommon thing to see a volunteer drawing wood in a military great coat, and laboring men wearing great coats and pants. In many cases where battalions are not fit for service on account of the bad state of their clothing, the explanation is that the men have been wearing it at all times, and have not taken care of it. I think if regulations were made compelling the commanding officer to take these uniforms immediately after camp and have them properly cleaned and stored, a great saving would be effected. From my experience, I have noticed, particularly with regard to the accoutrements of cavalry men, that they are frequently taken home and left in a barn or stable, and when collected they are unfit for service or inspection. I think, supplying two or three blankets, if necessary, to each volunteer in camp, would also be the means of effecting a great saving in clothes.

Mr. CARON. At every camp we usually supply two blankets per man, which, in June, should be sufficient, and at the camps of instruction, in September, we have issued one extra blanket, so that there is absolutely no reason why the great coats should be used for bedding. We cannot, of course, send bedsteads to the camps, but as the men have plenty of straw, as well as their blankets, there is no reason why the great coats should be put to the use to which the hon. gentleman refers. Our blankets are some of the very best that can be found, and if coats are used as bedding it is the fault of the commanding officer, as it is his duty, when the camp is over, to take care that the uniforms, accoutrements, etc., are returned to him. As to the use of military uniforms outside of military service, the hon. gentleman knows that after five years these uniforms are disposed of, and it may be that some of them, after being cast off, are used in that way. I would sooner see the old ones returned when they are replaced by the new ones, but that has not been the practice heretofore.

Mr. PLATT. With regard to head dress, I hope the hon. gentleman will not send the volunteers to drill this year with the forage cap for June or September drill, as there is great complaint on that score, owing to the fact that many of the volunteers, not being accustomed to long exposure to the sun, get their faces so blistered that they have to be sent to the hospital, being unfit for drill. I know that I have myself given certificates allowing them to be put on the sick list. Some battalions are purchasing helmets themselves from England, and if helmets or some cheaper article could be supplied, a change in the head dress would be very desirable.

Mr. CARON. I may say that that question is now being considered, as we have had complaints with regard to it, and I hope we will be able to find a head dress which is suitable to our climate.

Mr. PLATT. I may mention that some battalions have been calling on their friends, and have been raising money by concerts and other ways, to pay for their helmets, and I think, in such cases, the Government should at least pay one-half.

Mr. CARON. I may say that we allow the value of the forage cap to those battalions which import helmets.

Mr. PLATT. Does that apply to battalions which had forage cap, last year, and are buying helmets this year?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. VAIL. With regard to this item of military stores, could the hon. gentleman give us any idea of the quantity of stores on hand?

Mr. CARON. I could tell the hon. gentleman what we are estimating for. There are 5,000 sets of accoutrements, including haversacks; 5,000 blankets; 500 tents; material for repairs of artillery, etc.

Mr. VAIL. Is the regular quantity sufficient for this year?

Mr. PLATT.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will understand that, having to meet an emergency this year, we had to purchase a good many stores to complete what we had on hand. The vote taken every year is merely to keep up a force of about 32,000 men, and we have very little surplus over what was required for the ordinary wants of the forces.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Are any of the stores included in this vote, those that are supplied to permanent corps?

Mr. CARON. Yes; this covers not only the ordinary volunteer forces but the permanent corps—the batteries and the schools of infantry and cavalry.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Then the cost of the schools of infantry and cavalry has been increased by the amount they withdraw from these stores yearly?

Mr. CARON. Yes; of course.

Public armories and care of arms, including pay of storekeepers, caretakers, storemen and armorers .....	$60,000
--	----------

Mr. LISTER. Was the whole vote of last year expended?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Drill pay, and other incidental expenses connected with the drill and training of the militia.....	$250,000
--	-----------

Mr. VAIL. Will the Minister kindly tell us what he proposes to do the coming year—how many men he proposes to drill, and whether any additional amount above the $250,000 vote was expended last year?

Mr. CARON. The estimate for this year is for twelve days' drill of city corps and brigades of garrison artillery. The estimate is for 9,500 officers and men, at an average cost of 72 cents each per day, $77,760, and 385 horses, at $1 per day for twelve days, $4,620, making $82,380. We also estimate for 1,222 horses and 10,000 officers and men, at an average of $1.10 each per day, which covers rations and pay, $132,000; transport is estimated at about $3 per man, $30,000, and camp contingencies, $5,620; making the estimate of $250,000. We intend this year holding the camps of instruction and having the usual drill which we have had during the past four or five years.

Mr. VAIL. I observe, that while the vote for 1883-84 was the same amount, $250,000, the expenditure was $314,000. It seems to me we ought to keep a little nearer the vote. If the hon. gentleman wants more money it would be better to have it voted.

Mr. CARON. Last year, at the beginning of the season, there were some battalions called out for drill which, for some reason, could not turn out and did not turn out. The Adjutant General, fancying that we should drill as many men as possible, not exceeding the vote of Parliament, we took some other local corps. Later in the season the corps which had been called out for drill went through their drill, and the consequence was that the vote was exceeded. But the hon. gentleman will see that the expenditure for the present year has been below the vote. Of course, we do not know yet whether it will come up to the full amount of the vote, from the fact that a good many of the battalions drill very late in the year, and they have the right to drill up to the last day of this month. Consequently, a good many of the battalions have not been paid, and it is impossible for us to know how far the vote can go.

Mr. LISTER. I think it would be well for the Minister of Militia to consider whether the system which has been in existence many years past is really one in the interest of the militia force generally. Many people contend that the present system of bringing the different battalions out into camp once every two years is of no advantage to the force. We know that the volunteers enlist for three years and that the law requires that different battalions shall drill for twelve days at least every two years. It is possible that many of the volunteers may only attend camp once in three years, and we know that in practice they have only six days for drilling, because we must allow two days for going and coming, and two Sundays in the twelve days. Without any additional instruction, if the volunteers are to depend on the instruction they receive at those camps it is impossible that a man who has been in camp only eight days can receive any instruction that will be valuable to him two or three days from that time. I do not know whether the Minister of Militia has taken means to ascertain how many men of the different battalions attend camp more than once. I fancy that if that information were sought for, it would be found that the rural battalions, at any rate, do not attend more than once. If that is so, it will be seen that the instruction the majority of our volunteers receive there can be of no benefit to them at all, and we cannot expect that they will be at all efficient. Therefore, I think it would be well for the Minister to consider whether the system cannot be improved—whether we should not have a more efficient force, if the number of the volunteers were reduced and the length of the drill extended. The cost of this annual drill is very large, some $250,000, a large tax on the people. I believe that if the number of our volunteer forces were reduced to about one-half, and the drill were doubled, we should have a more efficient force of volunteers, which would be quite ample in time of danger to preserve the public peace. There is another consideration connected with this subject. If the Government insist on expending this amount of money the pay of the volunteers might be increased. It seems to me that the pay granted for attending these camps is ridiculously small—50 cents a day. That fact is of itself sufficient to deter a very large number of the most desirable young men of the country from going into camp at all. It is no compensation for a man's absence from his business or his situation, and I think, depending upon the volunteers as we do and must do, that the force ought to be made as attractive as possible, and that the men who enter the force should be paid as fair a rate of wages as this country is able to pay them. In the State of Michigan I know that the volunteers, while out in camp, receive $1 a day and their rations, and I think, myself, that is little enough when you consider the fact that the men are taken away from their labors and are, perhaps, losing wages to a much greater extent than they are receiving from the Government, besides undergoing much inconvenience. Unless you see your way to compensate them for the trouble, inconvenience and loss they are put to, you must expect to have our volunteer force, to a certain extent, inefficient. Men who ought to be trained and on whom the country could depend when called on, find substitutes to go into camp, so that often, instead of the regular volunteers, the other men turn out. The only remedy for this is better pay. If our volunteers were paid better I believe we would have altogether a more efficient force than we have to-day.

Mr. CARON. I am glad to see the interest the hon. gentleman takes in the force. The suggestions he has made are really very important. The hon. gentleman knows, as far as the city corps are concerned, that the men really serve out the 3 years of service, but in the rural corps he is quite right in saying that it is very much more difficult to get the men to complete their term of service. I merely express, not my own views, because in matters of that kind I do not pretend to be a military critic, but the views which have been expressed by every commanding officer, every general who has been in command of our militia force, when I say there is no doubt that the camps of exercise works wonders in increasing the efficiency of the force. I believe if you get a number of battalions together in camp you get more drill out of the men, from the fact that the competition of the different battalions with each other creates a spirit of emulation, which contributes very much indeed towards improving the men. Personally, I am strongly in favor of camp exercises. Of course, I cannot help admitting it would be a very great advantage if, instead of every two years, we were to drill our men in camp every year, because the more drill they get the more efficient they become. But hon. gentlemen must not forget that this year we are under very heavy expenses, owing to the events which have taken place in the North-West; and I should not like to recommend a change of system; but the question is one which will have to be considered shortly. So far, our system has worked very well; our volunteers in active service have done wonders, considering the fact that they had never been previously called upon to take the field. It would be much better if we could adopt the system of having yearly camp exercises, but the cost would be very much greater than what it is at present.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I merely rise with regard to the statement of the hon. member for Lambton, as I have some knowledge of the feeling of the force. Naturally, their disposition is, when they get out to camp, that the drill should be productive of as much permanent benefit as possible; and it is generally conceded that the few days spent in camp are of very little benefit, as regards permanence. If we are going to pursue the present system, I fear it will not produce as many benefits as we could reasonably expect. Of course, I realise the force of the Minister's statement, that having spent so much money this year and having so many volunteers under arms necessarily cripples the Government in their efforts to give the volunteers better drill; but we must not forget that those men who have been in the North-West have practically been securing the very best experience, and that they will return trained soldiers. But a large fraction of the force which has not had these advantages cannot be said to be in the same state of efficiency. I am satisfied an addition of 10 cents to the per diem allowance of the volunteers would produce a very decided advantage. In the report, it is a subject of very general remark that the corps in the rural districts do not keep their men for the full time. One of the Deputy Adjutants General remarks that something like 90 per cent. of the entire force is recruited between each camp. A slight increase of pay, I believe, will remedy this. It does not, I think, follow, that there is a greater migration of population in the rural districts than in the city. Of course, we know that there are circumstances which tend to keep the volunteer forces in the cities together to a degree which cannot be secured in the country, but still I believe that a slight increase of pay would have a great effect in making the country corps approach nearer the city corps, as regards the soldiers completing their full term of service. I would draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that one of the Deputy Adjutants General, in making his criticisms on the different battalions in one of the camps of instruction, remarked that the pay of one of the battalions, the battalion from the county of Bruce, was implemented by a grant from the municipal council of that county, and that this materially tended to bring in together a much better class of men. This is proof evident that were the Government to increase the pay very satisfactory results would follow. But we would get men to turn out the second year who had attended the previous year's instruction, and consequently were better able to form into line and do military duty than those who turned out fresh for military service.

Mr. PLATT. With respect to camps of instruction, I agree in part with what the hon. gentleman has already said,

As to the payment of the volunteers the pay of the rank and file should be slightly increased, not largely increased, as that is not necessary. The slight increase given by various municipalities has invariably had the effect of sending the best company from the municipality which paid the highest figure. As to the character of the drill, I have always been of the opinion that two drills out of three should be at battalion headquarters and the third drill at brigade camp. I am not satisfied that brigade camp is the best place for a raw recruit. He will not learn so much drill there as at company headquarters. Perhaps the best way to arrange the drill would be to have one drill at company headquarters, one at battalion headquarters and one at brigade camp. I hope the Minister will select some good camping ground. I have no sympathy with the idea that certain towns should be selected. I believe claims are put forward by one town and another, some offer to do this and that, in order to get the camp there, and a selection is made without regard to the ground on which the soldiers have to drill. In the 3rd Military District the only suitable ground is at Kingston, but the camp has not been there for many years. Last year, at Trenton, the ground was very rough and unsuitable. I do not accuse the Minister with selecting those grounds in order to favor the residents of particular towns, but it is not necessary, where we have such a ground as at Kingston, that the camp should be held at any other place. Last year there was a division of the brigade camp in the 3rd District, one-half being at Trenton and the other at Kingston. It did not give satisfaction, and increased the expense, while it did not give the soldiers an idea of brigade drill. As to the length of time which the force should be in camp, that is a matter of dollars and cents. If there were plenty of money, fifteen or twenty days would be good time, but economy must be considered, and I am not prepared to suggest increased expense. As little time as possible should be spent in useless parade. Nothing distresses and annoys men so much as useless march outs and review days. Some days are frequently wasted in preparing for a parade before an inspecting officer. A great deal of that kind of work might be dispensed with. I do not know any feature of the camp of instruction which does so much harm as the canteen. I have come to the conclusion, although I do not hold extreme views in regard to prohibition, that if there is one place where intoxicating liquors should be prohibited it is in brigade camp. Nothing does so much injury to the men at drill, and nothing has roused such a feeling of indignation among the people of the country. In my capacity as surgeon, parents have come to me and asked me to report that their sons were unfit for duty: not that they did not wish them to learn drill, but they did not want them to go to camp, because they knew they were more likely to contract the habit of drinking strong liquors there than anywhere else. I know that young men who never take liquor elsewhere drink it in brigade camps. They think beer must be taken; and if they are not used to drinking, it unfits them for drill, and the hospital tent is filled with sick young men in the morning, not from overwork, but from carousals at night with bottles of beer. Canteens should be abolished. We may safely leave it to grocers to supply the necessaries for the men. Nothing would so conduce to the welfare of brigade camps as the total abolition of all intoxicants, and we should not allow beer or large beer to come in, because, where one kind of liquor is admitted other kinds are almost sure to be used. No surgeon who has any humanity about him will send a young man upon drill in the morning when he is suffering from a severe headache. A great many drills are lost and a great deal of time is wasted on account of the canteens in the camps. Just another word, with regard to the target practice at the camps. I think, in the interest of the force, it might almost be done away with, so far as camp instruction is concerned. Too much is attempted and little or nothing is done. Recruits are not fit to take out before a target until they have had a chance of firing blank cartridges. I have seen young men brought out to target practice who never fired a rifle in their lives; the first time they fire they are hurt by the recoil, and many of them would not fire a rifle again. The rule, then, is for some officer to take the ground and fire the rounds for that man. I see in the Minister's report a suggestion that only half the number of rounds should be issued, so that the instructor could give more attention to the men and teach them how to hold the rifle. Some of the rifles give a rebound, and it is not very pleasant to a person who is unaccustomed to their use. I think I am correct in saying that a good deal of the money that goes for the purchase of ammunition, to be spent in target practice in brigade camps, is as good as thrown away. Just another point. There is nothing that a battalion is so proud of as of its band; and, from long experience in the volunteer force, I have invariably noticed that in every camp of instruction where several battalions have been grouped together for the purposes of drill, the battalion that has the best band was the best battalion there. I believe the Government should encourage, by every means, the formation of first-class bands, and give the bands every encouragement after they are formed.

Mr. CARON. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for the manner in which he has submitted his views on these several points. I quite agree with him in reference to the canteens. The hon. gentleman will see that in 1883, when we framed the new regulations, we inserted a provision whereby those canteens were prohibited. But if the commanding officer does not do his duty, of course my hon. friend will understand how difficult it is for us to control from headquarters a matter of detail like this. With regard to the question of rifle practice, I have always believed that giving a lot of ammunition to rural troops during the camp for rifle practice is practically throwing much of it away. My idea is, that we should work a scheme whereby the ammunition, instead of being given during camp, would be handed over to the different battalions, so that they might form associations within their organizations, and have a certain number of days for practice. I believe that scheme would result very satisfactorily. I think Gen. Middleton, whose attention I have called to this matter, views it very much in the same light. I also agreed with the hon. gentleman as to the importance of the band in keeping up the efficiency of the battalion, but the hon. gentleman knows that we have given as much encouragement to that branch of the service as possible, with the means at the disposal of the Department.

Mr. SCRIVER. I want to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that he has not said anything in reply to the suggestions which have been made by several members of the House, with reference to an increase of pay to the volunteers.

Mr. CARON. I thought I had answered it, by stating that this year we have a very heavy expenditure to meet, and I think it would be better to select some year of profound peace, when we can give all our attention to that important matter. I do not believe that this year it will be possible for us to increase the pay.

Mr. SCRIVER. Then I trust that another year, if the hon. gentleman should be at the head of the Department, something will be done in this direction. Judging from what I have seen in my somewhat limited experience, it is absolutely necessary, if we would obtain the class of men that it is desirable to obtain to go into camp instruction, to pay an increased compensation. The hon. Minister must be aware that the wages of laboring men are very much higher than they were a few years ago, when this grade of pay was fixed. He cannot expect efficient men to go to the camps of instruction unless they receive something equal to the pay that they get at home as farm laborers or as mechanics.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The hon. Minister will remember that the pay has been reduced instead of advanced within recent years. The late Government increased it to 60 cents a day, and those who were acquainted with the force at that time are aware that the increase tended to raise the efficiency of the force. We know very well that long range rifles, like the Martini-Henry, are pretty severe on untrained shoulders, and that shows the greater necessity for training. Without being able efficiently to handle the rifle they are very incomplete soldiers indeed; and while it might be quite improper to confine practice to a single day during the drill, or to enter upon practice without having been thoroughly trained into the manner of placing the rifle to the shoulder, still it does not follow that the amount of practice should be reduced, but, on the contrary, it should be largely increased.

Contingencies..... $38,000

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Are grants for drill in connection with public schools included in this amount? The attention of the Minister was drawn, some time ago, to the advantages that might result from furnishing our high schools with facilities for drill instruction. With the recent development of our high schools, particularly in Ontario, very material results might be produced at very light expense. There are 105 high schools and collegiate institutes in our Province, and the expense of training the pupils would not be large. Efficient officers are turned out of our military schools, and their services could be obtained at comparatively little expense. My connection with the collegiate institute in my own town has taught me that at a very slight cost we are able to secure the services of a thoroughly efficient drill instructor, and he has produced surprising results in one or two seasons.

Mr. CARON. This question is a very large one. It has already been brought before my notice by the Minister of Education of Ontario. In that Province alone there are 110,000 boys in the different schools, who would require to be drilled if the system were adopted. In the other Provinces there is also an army of scholars. The adoption of the proposed system would, therefore, involve a very large expenditure for instruction and procuring arms. It is a system which has been followed with great success in Germany, France and Switzerland. We cannot undertake that expenditure, however, this year, especially in view of the heavy outlay caused by the North-West troubles. I hope, possibly, at a future period, that we may discuss it, and I should like to see the schools, the high schools especially, placed in the position of receiving drill instruction, which would prove very useful in developing the physique of the boys, and in converting those boys, in later life, into first-class soldiers.

Grant to Dominion Rifle Association..... $10,000

Mr. CARON. This is the same amount as last year. It is to provide for a Canadian team to go to Wimbledon. Our men have brought back from Wimbledon valuable prizes, including the Kolapore cup four times. The team this year is a very good one, and is under the command of Col. Ross, who is a very good officer, the second in command being Capt. Clarke, who was wounded at Fish Creek. I hope our Canadians at Wimbledon will be as successful as they have been in previous years.

Dominion Artillery Association..... $2,000

Mr. CARON. I must ask the committee to drop this item. It will appear in the Supplementary Estimates for last year. An English team came from Shoeburyness, and Her Majesty sent a prize for competition, the first prize ever granted by the Queen, to be competed for in any of the colonies. The English team, under the command of Lieut. Col. Rae, came to Canada and competed with our Canadian artillery team at the Island of Orleans. The prize which we should have so much liked to have kept, was carried back to England, after close competition. I believe these competitions have the best possible result. For this vote of $2,000 we really get more drill out of the artillerymen and other branches of the service, who go in for extra drill, for which they are not paid, in order to be fit for competition, and this expenditure does good service in this way. This year, many of the men selected to shoot on the team in England against English artillerymen, are at the front, and I thought it better to drop the amount. Next year it will be put in again, and afford us an opportunity of sending our men to compete at Shoeburyness.

Royal Military College at Kingston..... $50,000

Mr. CARON. This item is the same as last year. The reports of the Department gives the particulars as regards the number of cadets at the college, and other matters in that connection. I may say that those who have come up for examination to be admitted this year amount to 29, the largest number we ever had. We have had to limit the number to 65, owing to insufficiency of accommodation.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex.) As regards the employment of the graduates of this college, a return was recently submitted, showing that there was a comparatively small number employed in our service, although it was understood, as a reason for the institution of the college, that we would educate a class of young men who would be at our service when required, either in the civil service of the State or our military service. It is stated that many of the graduates are on active service in the North-West. If so, the committee will be glad to have that statement confirmed by the Minister of Militia. I have been looking over the return brought down to indicate the number of graduates of the military college who were holding positions in the different schools of instruction, and I find they are but a small fraction. If the instruction they received is of the value we expect it is, these young men should be well qualified to fill positions in the different schools of instruction, but we found only a small number of them in those schools. Of course, it may be that they have refused such positions, and, of course, we know a number of them hold commissions in the British service. It may be contended it is not to the advantage of this country that we should educate young men for the English service, but it is a fair reply to say that they are available for our service when required; and we know that one or two of them who hold commissions in the English service are at present on active duty in the North-West. I think the services of these young men should be taken advantage of to a greater extent than appears by the returns. Would the hon. gentleman inform us how many military school graduates are now in active service in the North-West?

Mr. CARON. As far as I can remember, there are 26 in the force at the front, and that is really a very large percentage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is nearly all who have graduated and are in the country.

Mr. CARON. Yes, and that includes the men who are in the infantry schools and also the General's aide-de-camp, and 3 in the Mounted Police.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am very glad to hear that statement; it shows conclusively these young men have all done their duty. Deducting those who have received commissions in the English service, and who are now serving Her Majesty in another capacity, that 26 must be by far the largest moiety of those who remain. I take the opportunity of asking the First Minister, in this connection, whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a reasonable percentage of the new officers who will be required for the service of the Mounted Police from the ranks of the military graduates. It would be a fair recognition of the services of those who have gone to the front, that from the twenty-six who have gone to the front, should be selected for appointments in the Mounted Police, those who have shown themselves most capable and most qualified for military life.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, it is only right that a fair percentage of those who have distinguished themselves at the front, cadets of the military college as well as officers of the various corps, should be given preference in any new commissions issued. Then, the hon. gentleman knows there are a great many men of education serving in the ranks of the Mounted Police, who enlisted in the hopes of rising, and their claims will have to be recognised.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite aware that in the ranks of the Mounted Police, in our time, and I suppose the same thing has continued to occur, there was a considerable number of men of education. I do not know that they were all educated on exceptionally good subjects, but no doubt among them there can be found a fair percentage of men who deserve promotion, and I believe it would be very well indeed, in our service, that men should be promoted from the ranks if they show reasonable capacity. I am glad to hear the Minister say that those cadets who have shown themselves specially qualified will receive promotion. I suppose about 20 officers will be required.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. About 15.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If they were divided among the three grades the hon. gentleman referred to that would allow four or five to each. I have never myself contended that every man who passes through the Royal Military College should be held qualified, of course, for a commission under the Government; but what I have held is this, that the Government ought to provide a number of places in the civil or military service of the Dominion, or in the engineering service, as my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) suggests, for at least as many as the British Government takes off our hands. If it were known that the British Government gave four commissions a year, distributed among the most promising cadets, and that three or four positions in the civil service were given to those who deserved them most, and who were recommended by the commandant of the school, it would add very much to the utility and efficiency of that college; and, as I understand the Government limit the number to 65, that would provide for one-half of the graduating class each year. If the Government saw their way to make that announcement, I would suggest that, as the closing exercises of the military college are going to take place next Tuesday, it might be well to cause the announcement to be officially made, because I was informed by the commandant that the British Government had tendered a number of unusually high positions among the engineers to be granted to officers of the proper age; so that the Government would incur very little risk in offering to those who graduate with reasonable honor a chance for a place in the civil service. The British Government, I think, has given as many as a dozen commissions in the engineers and a dozen in the artillery, 24 in all. I shall ask the hon. gentleman to consider that matter, and I shall ask, on concurrence, what the decision of the Government is upon it. I would suggest that they offer, say, four appointments, which they will not have much difficulty, I fancy, in providing for, seeing that we are increasing our military force at a considerable rate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Pay and maintenance of A, B and C Batteries, Royal Schools of Artillery, at Quebec, Kingston and Victoria, B.C. .... $172,700

Mr. VAIL. What is the reason for the $20,000 additional?

Mr. CARON. That is for the purpose of organising C battery in British Columbia. Last year we took a very much smaller vote, because I could not see my way to organise that battery last year. This year, however, the military advisers of the Department have called my attention to its importance, and we consider that we shall be able to organise C battery exactly like A and B batteries, except that we shall limit it to 100 men. My hon. friend will remember that A and B batteries are composed of 150 men each. They are always up to the full strength—in fact, very often above the strength. C battery we have reduced to 100 men, because we believe that we can compensate the increased cost of living in British Columbia by reducing the number.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It is proposed to increase the strength of the permanent force to 350 men?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). And a portion of that force it is contemplated to station at London, and a portion at Winnipeg?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. HOLTON. I wish to enquire if it is the intention of the Minister to organise this battery (C) at once?

Mr. CARON. Yes; as soon as it is possible to do so. The plan contemplated is to have some men of the Royal Naval reserve. The difficulty we had to contend with was the fact that the labor market in British Columbia took most of the available men, and it was difficult to recruit in that Province. But we have the advantage of getting a class of men who are receiving pensions from the Imperial Government, and they are a very good class of men.

Mr. HOLTON. I notice in the Public Accounts that Lieut. Col. Holmes received pay as commandant of C battery from the 10th of August, 1883, to the 30th June, 1884, amounting to $1,975, besides his travelling expenses from Quebec, amounting to $731.25. I presume it is a fair question to ask how it is that this officer received pay for services which he could not have rendered, inasmuch as his command existed only on paper?

Mr. CARON. Lieut. Col. Holmes is Deputy Adjutant of the district. Previous to his being sent up there General Laurie was Deputy Adjutant General, but he resigned, and we sent Col. Holmes up to replace him as Deputy Adjutant General. He will command the C school when organised, and, in like manner, we made Col. Maunsell the commandant of the school of infantry at Fredericton, the Deputy Adjutant General for the district. I sent Col. Holmes up and made Col. Maunsell the commandant of A school of infantry at Fredericton and the Deputy Adjutant General of the district; consequently it is a mere misnomer, in so far as commanding the C battery is concerned, because C battery is not yet organised. It is a reduction in the expenditure, because, besides being the commandant of that school, he will still remain Deputy Adjutant General.

Mr. HOLTON. Does he not receive pay as Deputy Adjutant General?

Mr. CARON. No; he gets pay equivalent to the allowance made to Col. Maunsell, about $360 extra. Of course, as there were no barracks, he had to be given an allowance to pay his hotel bill. It is merely an ordinary allowance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total strength of A, B and C batteries?

Mr. CARON. A and B 150 each; C will only be 100 men. The expense of living being greater in British Columbia, I thought I would make it 100, instead of 150 men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it the intention of the Government to have these men who are to be stationed at Victoria instructed in the use of torpedoes?

Mr. CARON. Yes; that is a part of our programme.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman in communication with the Imperial authorities on that point?

Mr. CARON. Yes; we have been, for some time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then he and they propose to co-operate together, so as to protect the harbor of Victoria. If I recollect aright, the harbor is particularly defensible by the use of torpedoes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; and especially Esquimalt Harbor.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Is it the intention of the Government to utilise the services of any of those gentlemen who have undergone a three months' course of instruction under Col. Holmes, in the formation of C Battery? How many officers will be attached to the battery, and will the selection be made from those who have taken out certificates in British Columbia?

Mr. CARON. We have not yet been able to decide who the officers will be. I do not know the qualifications of the gentlemen to whom my hon. friend refers, and the organisation has not reached that point when I could tell the hon. gentlemen who will be the officers. The officer commanding will be Col. Holmes, now Deputy Adjutant General. No doubt, when the force comes to be organised, all those elements will have to be properly considered.

Mr. BAKER. There are about 15 or 16 gentlemen in British Columbia who have been under severe training for 3 or 4 months, at considerable disadvantage to themselves, and have taken out certificates. I have letters from them, in which they say they do not wish to be overlooked in the formation of the battery. If there are to be 3 or 5 officers attached to it, as I believe there will be—3 officers, paymaster-sergeant, and so on—they should be selected from those who have borne the heat and burden of the day in British Columbia. I would also like to know whether the Minister of Militia is in a position to know that 100 men can be got out there for the pay.

Mr. CARON. That is one of the difficulties we have to contend against, but I think we can safely get the 100 men out of the Royal Naval Reserve, because the deficiencies in pay will be supplemented by the pension they will be receiving from the Imperial Government.

Mr. BAKER. Could the hon. gentleman state how many officers will be attached to C Battery, other than the commander.

Mr. CARON. We have generally 5 in a battery of 150 men. There will probably be 3 or 4.

Mr. WELDON. In connection with the volunteer artillery in St. John, I would inform the Minister that the late appointment of Col. Armstrong has given great dissatisfaction, and a number of the officers have resigned. Col. Armstrong was in the cavalry in King's county, was taken from that and put at the head of the artillery. It is hardly fair towards the officers who have been long in the artillery to pass over them and to appoint Col. Armstrong to the command of that force. I have no objection as regards Col. Armstrong, personally, because he is a friend of mine, but his appointment has been the cause of a great deal of complaint. You can scarcely take up a newspaper in which you would not find that the officers are sending in their resignations. I believe that now about 10 officers have retired from the battery on this account.

Mr. CARON. I know little about the appointment. It came through the regular channel. It is a matter the General has more to do with than I. I know very little about it, except that the recommendation was made through the official channel. I knew no reason why it should not be accepted. It was submitted to me in the ordinary course, and I sanctioned it, and I am very sorry to see it has caused any dissatisfaction. My hon. friend knows, perhaps, whether Col. Armstrong has taken out a certificate as an artillery officer. I will look into the matter. The mere fact of his being a cavalry officer would not prevent him from taking command of the battery.

Pay and maintenance of Cavalry and Infantry School corps at Quebec, Fredericton and Toronto ..... $171,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to a matter in connection with the infantry school at Fredericton, that is, with reference to the canteen. Very strong representations have been made to me, over and over again, as to the sale and use of intoxicating liquors in the school itself, that civilians living in the city are sold to, and others are invited in and are treated to intoxicating liquors in the school. I think this ought to receive the attention of the Minister. A good step was taken in abolishing the canteens in the summer camps, and I am quite sure that it would meet with the approval of the people of Fredericton, and I think of the school itself, if the canteen were abolished there. Whatever may be said as to the necessity of liquors as medicine, it cannot be said that they are useful for the good order of a school, composed, for the most part, of young men.

Improved rifle ordnance ..... $3,000

Mr. CARON. I am asking $3,000 to complete the purchase of the guns required to replace the old smooth-bore guns.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was done with the $15,000 voted last year?

Mr. CARON. This amount was voted for the purpose of importing eight 9-pounder guns to arm the different field batteries which we have in Canada, and which, up to that time, were armed with the old, obsolete smooth-bore guns. By negotiation, we were able to get twelve guns for the amount voted, the Imperial Government, as usual, showing itself very well disposed and ready to help us in every way. Four of these guns have been sent to the Miramichi battery, and four are going to the Richmond battery, and the balance will be distributed among the other batteries, according to seniority.

Drill sheds and rifle ranges..... $10,000

Mr. WATSON. Are all the rifle ranges to receive aid out of this?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. Very strong petitions have been presented from the Stony Mountain range in Manitoba. The rifle association in Manitoba has spent a great deal of money in keeping up that range, and it has sent a number of good shots here, and has contributed its full share to the Wimbledon team. I would ask that the Government take this matter into serious consideration, as we have only one range in the Province, and will aid it to the greatest possible extent. The range costs the association a great deal of money to keep up, and the members have to go to a great deal of expense in order to get to it. About three years ago they were compelled to remove from Point Douglas, which they petitioned the Government to grant them. I hope the Minister will see that they are entitled to receive additional aid.

Care and maintenance of military properties... $12,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To my own knowledge the properties in Kingston want some looking after, particularly the front wall of Fort Henry. I do not know that it is a very valuable defence now-a-days, but it has a very unsightly effect, and as every tourist down the St. Lawrence sees it crumbling into the river, I think, for the credit of Canada, something might be done in regard to it, and a few hundred dollars would probably be enough to put it in a proper condition.

Mr. VAIL. I would like to know from the Minister with regard to certain properties belonging to the Department, which it was stated were no longer required for military purposes. There is a small property at Digby and another at Annapolis. Have they been transferred?

Mr. CARON. When any property is declared to be no longer of use for military purpose, it is transferred over to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. VAIL. It seems to me that when that transfer is made it should be made public.

Mr. CARON. Yes; it will be made public. It will be published in the Official Gazette.

Public Buildings—Ottawa—Additional public buildings, Wellington street..... $175,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contractor for these buildings is Mr. A. Charlebois, and the contract is dated the 20th September, 1883, for the sum of $295,000. That does not include the iron girders nor the iron roof. The total cost is estimated at $503,000. But in the specifications on which the contract was based there was a certain kind of stone mentioned as standard, but the contractor was to furnish stone of equal quality to that stone, which was to be satisfactory to the chief architect. The contractor has submitted to the chief architect a number of stones as samples, and finally the chief architect declared one of them of equal quality to that demanded by the specifications. That one came from St. Simon, near to Trois Pistoles; but after working that quarry for a little time, it was found it would take too much time to open the quarry, and have the stone in large quantities and in proper blocks. The contractor saw, himself, that he would be obliged to provide some other stone, and finally that stone was selected which is now on the ground. It comes from a quarry in New Brunswick, and is brought up by the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That seems a long way to go for stone for Ottawa. I suppose it is 800 or 1,000 miles away. Is that all carried by railway up here?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; it comes by the Intercolonial, the Grand Trunk and the Atlantic road.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the Minister has considered the question; but, ordinarily speaking, I should imagine that the conveyance of stone for the building here must add enormously and unnecessarily to the cost of the construction. Has the Minister any idea of what the charges are per cubic foot, or per ton, or whatever the measurement may be?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say; but whether the distance is long or short, the contract was a lump sum of $295,000; and therefore, if the distance is shorter, so much the better for the contractor; but the contractor found that the stone he was obtaining at that quarry was a good sandstone, which satisfied the chief engineer, and that he could obtain it at a lower rate than he could have obtained many other stones of good quality; and though the distance was greater, still the price was so much lower that he was enabled to give us a stone equal in quality to the sample, and he may even save 5 cents or 10 cents on it.

Esquimalt Graving Dock—To complete..... $400,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a contract for this. The contractors are Messrs. Larkin, Connolly & Co. The approximate amount of the contract, at schedule prices, is about $375,000, though we cannot tell exactly what it will be. Besides that, we are calling for tenders for the caisson, and the contract has just been awarded to the Montreal Bridge Company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did not the British Government contribute to this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, they will give $265,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the work, when completed, be large enough to accommodate a first-class man-of-war, or as large a man-of-war as comes to that station?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I believe it will, but I do not say that it will be able to accommodate the largest ships of the navy. I do not think it will, but the size of this dock has been determined, with the assent of the British Government, and approved of by the Admiralty, and that is the reason why they give $265,000. Besides that, we have changed one end of the dock. It was designed to have an entrance at one end and an exit at the other, to go into another dock, if we built one. As it was not likely that we would build another dock for many years, it was thought better not to lose the space at the other end, but to round it, as we have the Quebec dock, and in that way we got 50 feet more space, without a very large addition to the contract price. That has been approved of by the Admiralty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the dimension now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The inside length will be 380 feet clear. That length was estimated before the extension of 50 feet. Now it will be 430 feet.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). The dock is large enough to accommodate the largest class of vessel that has ever been out there. It is not expected that a vessel more than 400 feet long will ever go in there. The largest man-of-war that has ever been there was 386 feet in length.

Port Arthur Harbor and Kaministiquia River.. $70,000

Mr. TROW. What proportion will be given for the harbor at Port Arthur, and what proportion for the Kaministiquia River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The proportion is $28,000 for the deepening of the Kaministiquia, and the balance for the breakwater at Port Arthur. The local authorities at Port Arthur have contributed $25,000, besides this amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I recollect aright, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have decided to place their main elevators on the Kaministiquia River, and at Fort William.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They have placed one at Port Arthur and the other at Fort William.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the largest is at Fort William?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. Many people thought the bottom of the river would be sand. It has been found that it is clay, and the clay is very hard. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves have been digging lately. Most likely, at the end of the season, we will find there is a large channel going up as far as the works done by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. TROW. Is the dredging at the mouth of the river in the bay, or does it extend up the river?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The deepening is at the bar, and that has been cut. Now, there are certain spots where we wish to have the same depth of water as at the bar, so that large vessels may go up the river. The depth, I think, is, on the average, 16 feet, and the width 100 feet. There is a channel 3,700 feet long, 100 feet wide, average depth 18 feet through the centre and 14½ feet at the side.

Mr. TROW. That work properly constructed and of sufficient width and depth, would be permanent, for it is a natural bed of clay which has to be removed, and once removed there will be no difficulty about it.

Mr. MILLS. It is gratifying to discover that the Minister finds the late member for West York was quite right with regard to the place for the establishment of a harbor at Port Arthur. We remember the fierce attacks made on the Ministry then by the hon. member for Niagara, Mr. Plumb, and other hon. gentlemen. We remember the enquiries made in the Senate Chamber with regard to the establishment of this harbor and the great mistake made of placing the harbor in the Kaministiquia River instead of at Port Arthur. Now, the action of the Government completely vindicates the wisdom of the course adopted by the hon. member for East York when he was Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DAWSON. I do not know that opening the mouth of the Kaministiquia is adopting the policy of the Minister of Public Works in the late Government. The place he selected was 4 miles up the river. I think it is good policy to open both places, both Port Arthur and the mouth of the river. The harbor accommodation that will be afforded is very great.

Mr. TROW. The expenditure of a large sum of money at Port Arthur is quite out of place, for the simple reason that Port Arthur has no harbor, except at the lake itself, where there is a sweep of 24 miles, and which is subject to frequent storms and squalls.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. gentleman says there is a sweep of 24 miles. Its extreme width to the east is 12 miles, and on the south and north-west it is completely sheltered. As to waves breaking over the wharves, there is, on a wharf, just in front of the town, a little board shed, which has stood there for nearly two years, and which a single big wave would have swept away. This proves that the harbor is well sheltered.

Mr. TROW. I have seen vessels that could not get into the harbor for an entire day.

Cape Tormentine Harbor..... $150,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This has not been expended. It is a large sum, and we do not want to make any mistake about the site. The chief engineer caused a certain examination to be made. I decided, after consulting with the chief engineer of the Department, to postpone the matter until he could visit the place himself, in order to obtain certain information he required about the locality. He will then be in a position to make his report, and be prepared to begin the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will this be any use, except in the winter, as a protection against the ice?

Public Buildings, Nova Scotia..... $91,525

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Amherst public buildings—the whole amount required to complete is $29,798; so that the vote of 1884-85, $19,000, will complete the work. The next item, Baddeck post office and Custom house, $4,000. That is in the county of Victoria, N. S., and is the county town. I think the population is small. The exports amounted to $89,926, I suppose for last year. The next item, Halifax Dominion buildings, is required for some repairs to the floors, $1,500. Halifax examining warehouse—this, with the vote of last year, will complete the work. It will cost altogether about $39,000. North Sydney post office—that has not gone on yet. We have had difficulty in obtaining a proper piece of land. Sydney marine hospital—I think that is for some repairs.

Mr. VAIL. Sydney is faring pretty well. It is getting three public buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It looks big, but these items have been there for two years; $800 for the Sydney marine hospital is for the erection of a small detached building for the reception of dead bodies. Then the Truro Custom house, post office and savings bank—this is to complete. It will cost about $35,000. Then the Windsor post office—$3,000 more will be required next year. The cost will be about $32,000. Yarmouth post office and Custom house, $10,000. This work is proceeding; it will cost about $37,000.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to ask the Minister if he has fully considered the application that has been made from Guysboro' for a building there. I see there is no sum in this Estimate for that purpose. Perhaps he is to place an item in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid I will not be able to answer the hon. gentleman to-day. I think he will have to mention this question when the Supplementary Estimates come down. I will be able then to give the answer. I could not expect him to put that question among these matters, because this work was not mentioned among these items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If we are to indulge in such luxuries as revising barristers, and all that sort of thing, you cannot expect to have post offices and Custom houses.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. the Minister of Customs says only $700 was collected in Guysboro', last year, for Customs. Looking over the estimates of imports and exports in the districts in which Custom houses and post offices have been built, I find that Guysboro' stands at the head of a number of them. In Amherst the exports are $179,710, and imports $90,814; in Baddeck the exports are $50,643, and imports $36,321; in North Sidney, exports, $142,694; imports $93,116. In Sydney, exports, $205,725; imports, $45,577; in Arichat, exports, $33,623; imports, $25,265. In Guysboro', exports, $196,689; imports, $32,530; yet the hon. gentleman says that in consequence of the business being so small in Guysboro' it is not necessary to erect a building there.

Mr. BOWELL. Where do the imports come from?

Mr. KIRK. Never mind where they come from, they have come. I have already called attention to the fact that the Minister has reduced the imports and exports of the port of Guysboro' by eliminating from that port one of the largest outports in the country, Port Mulgrave, which has been attached to the adjoining county. In consequence of that, the showing for Guysboro' is much smaller than it would be otherwise. It would be quite easy for the hon. Minister, if he were to take away all the sub-ports in Guysboro', to show that its business is very small.

Mr. BOWELL. I only spoke of the collection of Customs duties at that port. At Amherst $25,000 was collected—I am not speaking of the outports—while only $700 has been collected in Guysboro'. At Mulgrave only $900 was collected; so that even if that were added to Guysboro' it would not make much difference.

Mr. KIRK. What rent are you paying yearly?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know.

Mr. KIRK. You are paying treble rent for a building which is used also as a caucus room for the Conservative party when elections are being held. With regard to the amount collected in Guysboro', I dare say that if the hon. gentleman would analyse the amounts collected in the ports I have mentioned the same result as in the case of Guysboro' would be ascertained.

Public Buildings, Prince Edward Island.....$91,525.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Charlottetown new Dominion building is in course of construction now. Montague post office—a lot has been secured for the erection of the building, but as we could not have a clear title immediately, the matter is being investigated by the Department of Justice, in order to obtain a title. Summerside public building, $10,000; this amount will not cover the balance of expenditure, and $3,000 more will be required next year. The total cost will be about $33,000 or $34,000, including fencing, etc.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to the Charlottetown new Dominion building, an alteration was made in the stone required. It was got from Cumberland, and afterwards it was taken from the River John.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the specification of that building the same conditions were put as were put in all the others; that is to say, we give a certain standard or sample, and the stone must be as good as that. In this case, the stone that was furnished came from the River John. The other day, it was said the stone was not good stone, and I sent an officer down and he ascertained a portion was not up to the standard. That portion was set aside. Then he went to the quarry, and ascertained that on exactly the opposite side of the River John there was plenty of stone for the work, equal to the sample.

Mr. WELDON. What part of the country was the sample sent from?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the specification here, and I cannot tell what part of the country it came from.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman said the sample was obtained from Cumberland county, and I should like to know from what part of the county.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say.

Mr. McINTYRE. Has any contract been entered into for the building at Montague? The amount was voted three years ago, and now I see it is revoked. The hon. gentleman said the Government were taking steps to take land there, but they are taking a long time about it. It is useless to place amounts in the Estimates if they are not to be used.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have secured a lot, and we desired to have the title clear, but it has to be investigated by a barrister from the Department of Justice, as it appears that it was not a good one.

Mr. McINTYRE. From whom are you getting the land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Lambert estate. The lot was secured for $800, and the money has been deposited in the Bank of Montreal; but I would not, no matter what the pressure might be, erect a building on a lot unless I was sure the title was good, and therefore I have done what I have in many other cases—delayed the building until the title is proved good.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). The building was going to be proceeded with, but it was found that the title was a little defective. The matter was considerably complicated, but it is now about completed, and the title is found to be all right. No doubt the Minister will proceed with the building as soon as possible.

Public Buildings, New Brunswick ..... $76,400

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Bathurst post office and Custom house, $12,000. The amount of the contract is $18,325. The whole building will cost a little less than $30,000. The vote this year is $12,000. Nearly the same amount, $11,600, will be required next year to complete. Carleton post office, $1,500. This will complete the building. The whole cost will be about $13,600. Dorchester penitentiary, $22,000. The hon. gentleman knows that constructions are going on there. This is required to carry on the contract, and provide for the most urgent wants to which attention has been called by the Minister of Justice. Next year we will have to provide a little over $3,000 to complete. Moncton post office and Custom house, $12,000. This sum is to complete, and will be sufficient, according to the statement which I have.

Mr. WELDON. The cost will be about $32,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. You have to add to that the furniture and fittings, and heating apparatus and the incidentals. It will cost about $40,000 altogether. New-castle post office and Custom house, $20,000. The balance of the contract is $26,000, and the incidentals, the heating apparatus, and so on, required to complete, $33,000. It is only on the way, and therefore we will require next year about $12,000 or $15,000 more.

Mr. WELDON. What does the Government propose to do with the building now used as a Custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose we will have to dispose of it. St. John Custom house, $1,400. These are small repairs to the building. St. Stephen's post office and Custom house, $7,500. The tenders are being called for now.

Public Buildings, Quebec..... $120,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hull post office and Inland Revenue offices, $2,000; Grosse Isle quarantine station, $10,000. All this is required to make some repairs in the buildings. As happily that station has not been much used for a number of years, it has been allowed to get out of repair, and last year we thought, in view of the danger of cholera, that we ought to put the place in proper order, and therefore we incurred expenses for which we are asking a vote in the Supplementary Estimates. We also established telegraph communication with Quebec, in order thus to be able to communicate freely with the city. Montreal drill hall, $90,000. I am under the impression that, in the Supplementary Estimates, we will have to ask a vote for the armories. The building is nearly complete. The Montreal examining warehouse—to complete. That building was in a very bad state, and we thought at a time we might have to rebuild it altogether. All the girders and floors were gone, and we had to renew them. Sorel public building, $19,000. This will not complete the work; we shall require nearly $11,000 next year. St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, $19,500. This is for materials and tools for the use of convicts, described in the estimates of the superintending architect who gives the items.

Public Buildings, Ontario..... $227,610

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Amherstburg, $8,000. There is a public building being erected there, and this is towards the completion of the work. I think, however, we will require $2,000 more to complete. Brockville post office and Custom house, $11,500; this completes the building. Berlin post office and Custom house, $12,500. About $4,500 will be required next year to complete. Barrie post office—the sum of $14,000 is required to complete. A vote will be required next year of a little less than $5,000. Brantford post office—repairs and improvements. That building is in bad order. Cornwall post office and Custom house, $8,500. That will complete the expense on this building. Clifton post office and Custom house, $5,500. This will complete the work. Galt post office and Custom house, $3,000. This is towards the contract on that building, but we will require next year a little more than $14,000 to complete the work. Hamilton post office and Custom house, $92,000. I think this will complete the work. The contractors have pushed that work with great vigor and to the great satisfaction of the Department. Kingston penitentiary, $8,000. This is for works embraced in the estimate of the superintending architect for the purchase of machinery to complete the permanent gas works, which have been placed under contract, and for loads of sand and brick, and so on. Orangeville post office, $7,000. This building is proceeding well, but we will require $4,500 next year to complete. Port Hope post office and Custom house, $4,500. That is most likely to complete the work. Peterborough post office and Custom house, $10,000. This has not been proceeded with yet. We are in treaty about lands for the buildings there. Prescott post office and Custom house, $8,000. That is in the same position. Sarnia immigrant sheds. We require $350 more for that. St. Thomas post office and Custom house, $13,600. That is to complete the work. Toronto Inland Revenue building—we require some repairs there, to the amount of $1,660. Toronto examining warehouse, $12,600. Hon. gentlemen may recollect that we have been building an extension to the examining warehouse, and this is only about one-third of what was supposed to be required, but we could not afford to build more last year and this year, and we have been limited to the amount of money which has been given to us.

Mr. SMALL. This is not for any new work, is it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; we have taken $25,000 last year and $12,000 this year.

Mr. SMALL. That is under the old contract.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I think so. The building we have erected there is in continuation of the main building, and at the west end of the building the intention is to erect another building, in order to put the engine and the hoist, so that the building may be more useful than it can be as it is. I think it will be built with the money given us, leaving the question of the machinery for next year.

Public Buildings, Manitoba..... $90,612

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Manitoba penitentiary, to pay account for furniture supplied in 1880, $112. That is an old account, which was left over because we could not find the proper officer to certify it, but when the officer went to Winnipeg we gave him a commission to report on it, and the account, which was $134, was reduced to $112 Manitoba penitentiary, $37,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that the building at Stony Mountain?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. We would like to ask more than this, but we could not afford to ask for more this year. We intend to erect a residence outside for the warden, and all that portion now occupied by him will be turned into new cells, and we think that by that means we may avoid going to the cost of a new wing for perhaps two years more, and so may delay the expenditure therefor. Winnipeg drill shed, $3,500. That is a contract, and this is to meet the balance of the contract, and provide for the fitting up of the armories and the cost of the superintendence. During the summer a portion of that shed was blown down, but it was at the cost of the contractor. I was sorry for him, but it could not be avoided. Winnipeg post office, $50,000. We have a contract for that. This building is proceeding well, but we will have a large sum of money to provide for the works before completing the building, which will cost us about $90,000.

Public Buildings, North-West Territories..... $37,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Indian industrial schools at Qu'Appelle and High River, $11,000. This is to complete.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is it there was no entry last year if this is to complete?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This was a vote given to the Department of the Interior, and by Order in Council it was transferred to my Department, to erect the buildings, as the Department of the Interior had not the proper officer to look after it. I saw the building at Qu'Appelle, a few acres from the mission. It is a very good building, and I think will meet the wants.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentleman has no particular information to give about the industrial schools? It is not strictly in his Department.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I suppose it will come when we take up the Indian Department. Regina new Indian offices, $6,000. The Indian office is near the North-West council room, and this was found too small. There was not sufficient accommodation for offices and committee rooms, and, therefore, as this building, the Indian office, was next the council building, we thought we would make communication between the two, and build a new Indian office in a more central place. For that purpose we asked a vote of $6,000. Regina jail and lunatic asylum. This building has been put under contract; the amount of the contract is about $16,000.

Repairs, Furniture, Heating, etc..... $360,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you to add to the electric light here?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If we have the electric light in this Chamber as well as in the Senate and lobbies, we will require to have engines erected below the cliff, because it would not be safe to put them in the building here. I have had an estimate made, and the whole thing will cost between $25,000 and $27,000 as the first expense. After that, I am told by my officers that the annual expense will be about two-thirds or one-half the cost of gas now. If the money is put at my disposal this year I will try, before next Session, to have better light in this Chamber. Then, allowance for fuel and light at Rideau Hall—this is the only amount given to the Governor General.

Harbors and Rivers, Prince Edward Island—balance of reimbursement to the Government of Prince Edward Island in settlement of their claims for the construction and maintenance of harbor and river works of federal importance, 1st July, 1873, to January, 1883..... $24,210

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the sum total which is being paid?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A little over $77,000. The mode adopted in determining this amount is as follows:—

There was a claim made by the Island Government about the harbors, and, with the consent of my colleagues, I appointed a commission of engineers to go and examine them. They were accompanied by one of the engineers of the Local Government, and they brought a report to the chief engineer of the Department, who classified the returns made by that board, and stated which of these were of federal importance and which were of local importance. That was laid before Parliament, and we selected those that we considered of federal importance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do the Prince Edward Island Government accept this sum in full satisfaction?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $31,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. St. John Harbor—Negro Point Breakwater—$25,000. This is a very important work for the harbor of St. John. Storms have carried away a portion of the work, and large repairs are being made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know if this is ever coming to an end. This breakwater has been a source of expense to this Dominion for about fifteen years. I should like to know, approximately, how many hundred thousands of dollars it has cost us altogether.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The history of the expenditure is this: In the four years ending June, 1877, we expended on it $145,000; in 1878 we spent on it $80,000; in 1879, $16,000; in 1880, $5,900; in 1881, $2,200; in 1882, $5,200; in 1883, $30,000; in 1884, $41,000; in 1885, $15,000; and now we are asking $25,000. The total cost $344,000. The hon. gentleman wishes to know when we will see the end of it. Well, I went to St. John, and it was so long I could not see the end of it. It is a very important work. The fact is, that it is a protection of the harbor. It is a necessity, and Parliament has always found it so, because for the last twelve years we have voted these large sums.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). This is for extending the breakwater?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; I think that in the end of 1882 the storm came and we had to expend $30,000 on it.

Harbors and Rivers, Maritime Provinces—Repairs and improvements generally..... $10,000

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). Inasmuch as British Columbia is one of the Maritime Provinces, I would ask the hon. gentleman whether any of that money is to be expended there?

Harbors and Rivers, Quebec..... $70,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. British Columbia may not be included in this, but she will not be forgotten. With reference to the item, Chateau Richer, we have been dredging this harbor, and this expenditure of $2,000 will remove the boulders and widen the channel. Quebec marine hospital wharves, $4,000. I think it was the member for Quebec (Mr. Langelier) who said that some people, afflicted with small-pox, had been carried through the city of Quebec to the hospital. When these wharves are completed boats will be able to go direct to the hospital from the ships' side, without touching at the city at all. Rivière St. Louis. This is to complete a work undertaken three years ago; $5,000 will complete it. Percé, $3,000. This is for completing the purchase of stone and timber, and for the labor necessary to complete the work on that place.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... $55,500

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With reference to Collingwood, Lake Huron, $24,000, this is required for the construction of the remaining length of breakwater, 600 feet. Wilson's Channel, Lake Huron, $4,500; that is on the course of vessels going west. There is a light-house on a rock which has been discovered there and which is about 10 feet below the water. By making that rock disappear, a great danger would cease to the vessels going westward. Little Current, Lake Huron, $5,000. This work has been going on for some years past, and I understand from the chief engineer that this will complete the work. Port Hope Harbor, $1,500. This is to complete the repairs commenced on the western pier and towards adding a further length to the breakwater. We had $7,000 voted last year. Thornbury, Lake Huron, $1,000. This is to be applied towards opening a passage of 12 feet in depth at low water. Kingston Harbor, Lake Ontario, $4,000. That is a continuation of the works which have been going on there for years past.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I observe that there was a vote last year of $4,000 for Bayfield Harbor. I would ask whether that sum has been expended, or if any portion of it remains unexpended? I would also ask whether the hon. gentleman has let the works there by tender, or how they were carried out?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As this harbor is not one of those for which money is to be voted this year, I have not the information with me, but if the hon. gentleman wishes to have the information, I will give it to him at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understand that the $4,000 has been expended, or very nearly. I also understand that the hon. gentleman did not let this work by tender, but did it by employing a superintendent and by day's labor. I am satisfied, from the information I have received from the locality, that $100 worth of work has not been done for the $4,000 expended, that the work was grossly mismanaged, that during the whole of last fall the superintendent did practically nothing. If the hon. gentleman will enquire as to the condition of that harbor and the value of the public money expended there, he will find that, practically, no good has been done by this large expenditure of public money. It is just another indication of the absurd notion of letting public works of that kind be done by day's labor and appointing some favorite of the Government to superintend them, as in this case. I believe the village council have petitioned the Department on this subject, and I know that the people of the locality have complained bitterly that the liberal grant which was made has been squandered and wasted in this work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to contradict what the hon. gentleman says, but I am sorry that he did not call my attention to this or notify me that he would call my attention to it, so that I might be ready to answer him. I could not expect that this would come up this evening, but I may say that I am not aware of any complaints having been made to the Department, though there may be some that I do not know of. After the statement of the hon. gentleman, I will take care to ascertain how things are, and I will state them as they are. If there has been mismanagement there, the officer who has mismanaged will have to answer for his conduct.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Will the hon. gentleman explain why the works were not let by tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot give any more information about that, because I cannot keep these things in my memory. The hon. gentleman may keep that one matter in his memory, because his attention is specially called to that work; but if his attention had been called to 350 different works, he would not be able to remember them all, or would probably mix a few of them with the others. I will give him ample information the next time I come to the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is it not the rule of the Department that these works are let by tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The rule is to give contracts for all large works, but when there are small works, and it is considered that the public interest does not require it, and that the work will be done better by days' work, it is done by days' work. That has been the course under all Governments, and the Public Works Act does not require that works under $10,000 should be put under contract. I do not, however, follow that. As a rule, I call for tenders. I find it is less trouble to the Department, that it is more satisfactory, and that there is less responsibility; but sometimes we have to do it by days' work; sometimes it is a pressing work, and in this case I cannot remember what this money was for. The hon. gentleman may go on with his statement, if he pleases, but I am unable to give him the information, and I think he had better reserve his other remarks until I am in a position to answer him, and until he is well informed about it. I can thank him for calling my attention to the matter, because I would not allow an officer of my Department to do what he should not have done. If he has not followed his instructions, if he has squandered money, he must be punished, but until I have the proof of it, and have seen the chief engineer, I cannot accept the statement of the hon. gentleman, except that I thank him for calling my attention to it. I will enquire into it, and will be able to meet him when next we come to Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I happened myself to visit that locality at the end of last autumn, and at that time I was informed by some of the people on the spot—in fact, by some of the parties the Public Works Department were employing—that they had been at work upon it since July. This was in October or November. The whole of the entrance to this small harbor was choked up with sand to a depth of 10 or 12 feet, I should say, and it was quite apparent, even to non-professional parties, that from whatever cause, no earthly good had been done by any expenditure which had taken place up to that time. How much of the $4,000 had been expended up to the date of my visit I do not know, but I believe a good deal had been expended, and I suspect more than one-half. I think some attempt has been made to remove the sand, but, at any rate, at the present time not even a skiff could get in or out of the harbor, it was so completely choked up. This harbor of Bayfield has cost us a good deal of money in times gone by, and that coast is so exposed that it is a matter of importance, wherever a little harbor can be made, to give a chance for the smaller craft which navigate the lake to run in.

Mr. MILLS. I observe the whole vote that the hon. gentleman has taken in the Province of Ontario is less than one-fifth of what it was last year. This does not indicate a great deal of confidence on the part of the hon. gentleman in the prosperous condition of the country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With regard to the harbor at Bayfield, an attempt was made to open the bar, and two or three days afterwards a storm came and filled it up again about as badly as it was at first. I am sure that the people must have felt sorry to see all the work and money lost that we had expended there. But I will give the whole facts to the hon. gentleman at the next sitting of the House, and if the officer has misbehaved, he will have to suffer for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In any case, I would say that, unless it be the intention of the Government to entirely abandon that harbor, it is really necessary to take some vote for the purpose of removing this obstruction. The character of that coast is such that if this sand formation is left alone it will go on and accumulate to such an extent that, in the course of a few years, it would be an exceedingly expensive business to remove it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). This is the only harbor between Goderich and Sarnia. A large sum of money has been expended for that harbor and a large portion of it was from private sources. When this work was first attempted by the Dominion Government something like $20,000 had been expended by the local authorities, and it was thought in the public interest that a like sum should be voted by Parliament, which was done. If the work is allowed to remain as it is the harbor will be wholly useless in a short time. There is a considerable trade there, especially by fishing vessels and small craft.

Harbors and Rivers, Manitoba ..... $1,000

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister if this is the only vote that is to be given to Manitoba this year? Last year $10,000 were voted for making surveys in the Water Hen River, and the most of that money was expended in preparing plant for dredging the river and improving the lake. Nothing has been done with that plant, and yet it is all on hand, lying at Westbourne. Is it the intention of the Minister to bring down something in the Supplementary Estimates whereby that plant may be utilised that is now lying idle?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These items are the ordinary estimates to continue works already undertaken; for any new work, the items will be found in the Supplementary Estimates that are yet to come down, and I cannot now tell the hon. gentleman what the new items will be.

Dredging—To meet expenses..... $117,400

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Are these the dredges purchased last year from the Yankees for $50,000?

Mr. KIRK. Has the Minister settled where the dredging is to be done in Nova Scotia this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These works are done in accordance with the report of the chief engineer, where they are most needed. I am not in a position to say the exact place, because the reports of the engineer come after the Session.

Mr. KIRK. Why is the vote so much less this year than last? Is it because there is less work to do?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it is not because we have less work to do, but because we have less money to expend.

Mr. WATSON. I would ask, where is it intended to expend the $10,000 in Manitoba?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The dredge has been employed in clearing the entrance from Lake Winnipeg to the Red River, but it had only commenced the work at the close of the fiscal year, and I suppose the chief engineer will recommend the continuance of that work.

Mr. WATSON. Will this money be all expended on Lake Winnipeg?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not say that. It will be spent where it is most needed.

Mr. WATSON. I believe the dredge Sir Hector was found to draw too much water to get over the bar from outside, so that it had to commence to do the work from the river, and instead of conveying the mud and sand out into the lake, it conveyed it up into the river. I think there was some mistake in getting a dredge drawing 8 feet of water to go over a 6-foot bar, and I am afraid that a good deal of the work done will result in the sand being again deposited in the channel. If this work has to be done over again I think it had better be done from outside

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was some difficulty in consequence of the shallowness of the water, but afterwards the dredge did good service. I saw her there myself, and I know she was doing good service. Some time may have been lost in trying to work from one side or the other, but the chief engineer tells me he is convinced that this dredge will do the work. Of course, if we find that the statement of the hon. gentleman is correct, that it would be useless to work her, we would have to stop and not expend the money; that is all. The hon. gentleman may be sure that if we find that by using the dredge, as he has stated, it would produce that effect, we would not expend the money, and I thank the hon. gentleman for calling my attention to it.

Mr. WATSON. I did not call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the money could not be well spent in cleaning out this channel. I think it can be spent in that way there as well as anywhere in Canada, but it seems to me to be working back side foremost to carry the earth up the stream when it ought to be carried down. Usually, the refuse is carried out into the lake and not up the river. It is not with the intention of having the Minister withdraw this expenditure that I have called attention to it, but I think he should enquire into it before he expends more money there, because this will not improve the channel as it should. Lake Manitoba is a lake on which there is a great deal of traffic, and it appears that the troops and supplies from the North-West are to be brought that way, and it is very necessary that that channel should be expanded.

Telegraphs..... $15,250

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Reconstruction of line between Battleford and Edmonton via Fort Pitt, $12,000. The line, when it was built in the first instance, years ago, was not located where it should be; there are swamps and difficulties in the way, and the wood for the poles is very bad. We think that by building the line in a north west direction we might succeed better. I am not in a position to say whether we will be able to extend it this year. This amount may purely and simply repair the line as it stands now, and we will wait until next spring to see if another line will be built. The loop line between Fort Carlton and Stobart, on the Prince Albert branch, $2,500. Hon. gentlemen must have seen that during the troubles in the North-West this little line was much required. It is a short line of 14 or 15 miles. Saskatoon, Saskatchewan to Clarke's Crossing. $750. This is to help the Saskatchewan people to have communication with the main line.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1 o'clock, a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 30th June, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CULLING AND MEASURING OF TIMBER.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the resolution relating to the culling and measuring of timber in Ontario and Quebec be concurred in.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask what articles are to be culled by these cullers—lumber, spars, masts, and what other articles?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Deals are included.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the standard of deals—how many superficial feet?

Mr. COSTIGAN. About 1,980 feet.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 154) further to amend the Acts relating to the culling and measuring of timber in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Royal Military College of Canada..... $59,000

Mr. CARON. I promised to bring down the names of the cadets on active service; they number twenty-six in all. Their names are as follows: Doucet, Wise, Weller, Tomlinson, C. E. Cartwright, Wood, Casgrain, Drayner, Sanders, Nanton, Coryell, Leonard, Groig, Freer, Sears, Laidlaw, R. Cartwright, Ogilvie, Chalmers, Nuthell, Rivers, Perry, Laurie, R., Strange, Woodman, Dixon and Hesketh.

Indian Industrial Schools at Qu'Appelle and High River—To complete..... $11,000

Mr. MILLS. I think it would be well if the Minister in charge of Indian Affairs would give us some information with regard to these industrial schools, what number of Indian children are attending them, who is in charge, and how the expenditure has been incurred. We have not yet had a particle of information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The plan adopted was to utilise the public buildings at Battleford as a Protestant industrial school, and, instead of having one large industrial school for Catholics, it was thought better, after consultation with the archbishop and bishop in the North-West, to have two smaller schools, one in the vicinity of Fort Qu'Appelle and the other near the Rocky Mountains, under the charge of Father Lacombe. These schools are just in their infancy. I am not able just now, without notice for papers, to say what progress has been made.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The buildings are up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have only been completed, I fancy, but they are still in an inchoate state. When the Indian estimates come up I shall be glad to obtain the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I understood that the school at Qu'Appelle was for half-breeds.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no. The school at Fort Qu'Appelle is under Father Hugonnard. It is in the diocese of Archbishop Taché. The other school, farther west, is for the Blackfeet and Blood Indians of the Red Deer River, and is under Bishop Grandin, Bishop of St. Albert. Both schools are for Indian children, not half-breeds.

Harbors and Rivers—General repairs and improvements, Maritime Provinces..... $10,000

Mr. VAIL. A very large proportion of this sum is, to my mind, diverted from its proper purpose. I notice by the Public Accounts of last year that over $2,000 from the year before is added to the $10,000, making a sum of $12,426, of which no less than $4,300 was paid for salaries and travelling expenses of engineers. It seems to me it is hardly fair to charge this large amount out of so small a grant, which is intended for the repair of works. I merely call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this fact, so that he may make a little enquiry, and see if these expenses cannot be charged against public works generally, so as to leave the full appropriation for repairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We had not a special vote for these engineers, who are only temporarily employed, and we must charge the expenditure for them in some vote connected with the region where they are employed. If they are employed in the Maritime Provinces we charge the expenditure in one of the votes for that Province instead of distributing it over the different votes. This has always been the case, and I do not think it makes any difference. With respect to the vote of $4,000 last year, for the improvement of Bayfield Harbor, I am sorry the hon. members for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) and West Huron (Mr. Cameron) are not here, as the latter of those two gentlemen made a statement the other day about the harbor and was supported in a mild way by the other hon. member, who evidently did not attach so much importance to the matter; and I then said that if the hon. gentlemen had given me notice that they intended to bring up the matter, which was not one connected with the Estimates then before the House, I would have been prepared to have met them. If the statement made by the hon. gentleman was correct, if he was properly informed—because I do not suppose any hon. member would make a statement knowing it to be incorrect—the officer who had misbehaved should have been punished. I have obtained information from the Department since that time, and I will read the statement I have obtained, which meets the accusation of the hon. gentleman:

“At the last Session of Parliament the sum of $4,000 was voted for repairing the harbor works at Bayfield, Ont. It having been brought to the notice of the Department that, owing to the breach through the northern pier, the sand had accumulated at the mouth of the harbor to such an extent as to completely block it and to prevent the ingress and egress of fishing boats, the sum of $200 was spent in opening a sufficient channel to permit them to pass. Arrangements were at once made to procure the necessary timber for repairing the breach through the pier and extending the pile work a distance of 500 feet eastwardly into the harbor, in order to protect the north side of the basin. This work was commenced in July last and fair progress was made up to October, when it was found necessary, owing to stormy weather, to suspend work. This spring the work was resumed and completed, the length of work done being slightly over 600 feet. In confirmation of this I send two photographs, taken by the engineer in charge in May last, showing the position and nature of the work constructed and completed by the Department at Bayfield. The dredge Challenge is under order—as soon as it has completed its work at Kincardine—to proceed to Bayfield and remove the shoal which has accumulated. The material removed will be placed over the pile work to make a solid beach, as it were, to the northward, thus strengthening and protecting the same. The work above referred to was done by day labor, under the supervision of Mr. Gray, assistant engineer of the Department, and the foremanship of Mr. James Addison, of Goderich, and it was thus done because, owing to the extent of damaged work in the north pier, it was impossible to prepare a specification of the work to be done in the way of repairs, and it was considered to be advisable to do it by day labor, as then every exigency could be met and overcome at once and without delay.”

The dredge was there only a short time, doing work to the extent of $200, in order to obtain a channel for fishing boats while the work of closing the gap in the north pier was being performed. The work proceeded during the season and was completed in the spring. Thus, we have closed the gap and the harbor is again as it formerly was, with this exception: there is a sand bar which was formed by the fact that another outlet had been formed by the gap in the pier. The dredge will go there and open it out. I have no doubt this statement will be satisfactory; but I think it will be more satisfactory for hon. gentlemen opposite to see for themselves how the work is done; and so far from having squandered the $4,000 that Parliament gave my Department for this purpose, the money has been put to very good account, as these two photographs show.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. member for Huron, I think, complained that the work was undertaken by day work instead of being given out by contract; that the nature of the work required to be performed was not advertised and tenders were not asked; and he said, what the statement of the Minister seems to confirm, that the harbor is still obstructed by the sand bar at its entrance. That work is still to be done. The hon. gentleman has not stated what the cost has been for the repairs to the pier, whether it has come within the $3,000 estimated or not, and what will be the expense of removing the sand bar.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In regard to the statement made by the hon. member for Huron, with respect to the work being done by day labor, I gave the good and strong reason, which the chief engineer stated, that it was so done because the Department did not know the exact damage that had been done to the pier. But hon. gentlemen will see that the new work, which is on the west side of the harbor, is a very good work, and now that the silt which has accumulated at the mouth of the harbor will be removed and thrown behind the pile work, a solid work will be obtained. The hon. gentleman wants to know what the cost was. It has cost the amount of money which Parliament placed at my disposal, and a little more money will be required, which will be taken from the general works account, to clear the bar, which expenditure is a necessity in order to put the work in proper order. I have made this statement, because I thought it was due to my Department and to myself that Parliament should know that this work was properly performed, and that the money expended last year in opening the bar was only the small sum of $200, and it was necessary in order to facilitate the ingress and egress of boats while the other work was being executed.

Dredging..... $117,400

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to ask where the new dredging plant will be procured?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This item is for making large repairs to three of the present dredges, one of which wants a new boiler and the others different repairs. It is not an amount to be expended for new plant.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it for repairs on dredges procured at Lockport?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. Those dredges are very good dredges and are in perfect order. As the hon. gentleman will remember, those were obtained, and properly obtained, at that place at that time, because we could not produce them in this country.

Mr. WATSON. Where is the amount of $10,000 for dredging in Manitoba to be expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have already stated that part of the amount will have to be paid for dredging at the mouth of Red River. I was afraid the hon. gentleman was placing obstruction in the way of this work being done, and I hinted that to the hon. gentleman. I think it will be a good work and in the proper direction. We may have experienced difficulty in the beginning, but those will be overcome; and if the hon. gentleman has a little spare time, he might visit the work and see how it is progressing.

Mr. WATSON. I thought probably some of the amount would be expended at Lake Manitoba.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman as to that point.

MANITOBA CLAIMS SETTLEMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain further proposed resolutions (p. 2889) for the settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I thought it was to continue at $150,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The per capita allowance is based on $150,000. The debt is based upon $125,000.

Mr. MILLS. What is the amount of the expenditure in the Province of Manitoba which may be charged against the Province under these two heads?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position to say. I made special enquiry to ascertain if I could obtain the information for the House, but I found I could not. There has been a large amount of expenditure, covering a number of years, and it will require full investigation before the amount to be charged against this increased capital account can be obtained, and will have to be a matter of investigation in the future and agreement between the Province and the Dominion.

On resolution 2,

Mr. WATSON. Has the Minister any idea of the quantity of lands which will be transferred to Manitoba.

Mr. BOWELL. I have made enquiry, and one or two clerks were set to work to ascertain the quantity of swamp lands that would be included in that portion of the Province which has already been surveyed, but I have been unable to obtain it, as I expected. As the hon. gentleman knows, in regard to that portion of the Province not yet surveyed, it is impossible even to form an approximate idea as to the amount of lands that will be covered by this resolution. I can only repeat that the desire and the intention of the Government is to be as liberal in the settlement of this question as they possibly can be under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I understood from the hon. gentleman before that the Government did not assume or hold that they were transferring to Manitoba as swamp lands those lands that were rendered unfit for settlement by the overflow of Lake Manitoba. I understand that these lands that are overflowed—and they amount to a very large extent of territory during the season of high water—are lands that may be rendered fit for cultivation and settlement by some improvement in the drainage of the country by dredging the Waterhen River, and that, for a few thousand dollars' expenditure, over 100,000 acres would be brought within the range of land fit for settlement. It is as well that the House should know what they are doing in the matter because it would be very important if the Government of Manitoba knew that they would obtain 100,000 acres of land near Winnipeg or near the settled part of the Province for the expenditure of a few thousand dollars.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has put altogether too wide an interpretation on the language I used. What I said was that lands which were overflowed in the spring or fall by a rise of water could not be termed swamp lands; and I think the interpretation placed upon that term by the United States Government in transferring lands to the different States will be put on the language by the Government of the Dominion. Whether the lands which are overflowed by the rise of water in Lake Manitoba will come under the designation of swamp lands or not, I repeat, what I said the other night, is a question I am not prepared to answer distinctly. There are large areas of land in Manitoba which are occasionally overflowed in the spring, but which during the summer become dry, and not only fit for pasture but for growing the best crops. I know that the question of the overflowed lands about Lake Manitoba has been before the Dominion Government for a number of years. The lands have been surveyed and estimates have been made as to the expense that would be incurred in lowering that lake. The question is one which I have no doubt the Manitoba Government will bring before the Dominion. If the Dominion Government has to go to the expense of lowering Lake Manitoba and thereby reclaiming those lands, which a few years ago were dry, and on which settlers had taken up homesteads, I presume the lands would belong to the Dominion Government, being the result of its expenditure. If, however, arrangements should be made between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of Manitoba for the transfer of these lands to Manitoba on condition of their being drained and reclaimed, that will be a question in the future to decide. But lands which are occasionally overflowed by the rise of water, cannot be termed swamp lands. All lands decided to be swamp lands will go to the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. MILLS. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that these lands would not be regarded as swamp lands, and would not be transferred. I think it is desirable that we should understand clearly what is actually transferred. Whether the Government would, outside of this contract, propose to transfer other lands to Manitoba on condition of something being done, as a matter of public policy, is a wholly different question. But what Manitoba is entitled to claim under this contract ought, I think, to be clearly stated, so that the people here as well as in Manitoba would see precisely how one party to this contract, at all events, interprets and understands it, and so that the House, in giving its sanction to the procedure, may know precisely what it is doing. I am not saying that we should not deal fairly and even liberally with the Province of Manitoba; but I think we should know precisely the meaning of the contract, so that if any discussion arises—and I think it is quite possible that instead of laying the foundation of a settlement we may be laying the foundation of a controversy—we should know how one party to this so-called settlement interprets it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must say I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. This is about as loose a kind of legislation as was ever before this House. This term swamp lands may apply to anything; one-half of the territory of Manitoba was swamp land at one time, and I can see that the Province of Manitoba might, at some future time, claim what we never intended to give. It seems to me that before this legislation is passed the lands should be surveyed and should be definitely located in the Bill. If that is not done, I can see that we are likely to have a great deal of correspondence and unpleasant complications in the future unless we concede to Manitoba all that it will claim.

Mr. BOWELL. I must dissent from the remarks of the hon. gentleman. It is not loose legislation, and I go farther and say that it is scarcely possible in any Bill to define what swamp lands are. I do not see how there could be any misunderstanding of the resolution; or how, from its wording, any difficulties can arise in the future more than necessarily arise in transferring any portion of the territory from one authority to another. The resolution says distinctly:—

"That all lands in Manitoba which can be shown to the satisfaction of the Dominion Government to be swamp lands be transferred to the Province and enure wholly to its benefit and uses."

The hon. gentleman must see, and I think the committee will agree with me, that this question must be one of future investigation and negotiation. It is impossible to define swamp lands in the resolution, or to say whether a piece of land that is under water in the spring is swamp land, as the hon. gentleman knows, from his own experience in travelling from Emerson to Winnipeg, where the land and the railway were under water for days and weeks at the time when the Red River overflowed. Certainly those lands could not be designated, or accepted as swamp lands. But swamps land, as we understand them, are lands which are under water, and which cannot be cultivated or used in any way, without being cleared of the fallen wood and the debris which prevents the escape of water, or without being reclaimed by ditching. I take for granted that lands which are continuously under water, and which are not capable of being utilised but by means of a drain to let off the water so as to make them not only pasture or meadow lands, but also fit for the raising of grain, are the lands that would be interpreted to mean swamp lands, and that would be conveyed under the terms of this resolution. I confess I do not see the difficulty my hon. friend from Northumberland does, in interpreting the clause.

Mr. WATSON. I think the Government ought to be able to come to some conclusion with regard to the lands around Lake Manitoba. Elaborate reports have been made upon these lands, and they cannot expect to obtain much more information regarding them than they have at present. For that reason I think the Government ought to be able to form an opinion and tell the House whether those lands are to be regarded as swamp lands or not. The hon. Minister of Customs has referred to the lands which have been overflowed by the Red River. There was a flood there one year, but that is not a frequent occurrence; but the lands around Lake Manitoba have been overflowed for years. The lake has receded, but it is liable to rise again at any time. I think those lands should be considered swamp lands. The Minister stated that swamp lands would be held to be lands covered with water all the year round. There are very few such lands in Manitoba, as they generally dry off in the fall. Under such an interpretation, a very small quantity of land would fall to Manitoba. The House should understand something more in regard to what sort of a "deal" it was making with that Province; it would be more satisfactory to Manitoba and to the Dominion to know what class of lands are to be transferred to the Province under this arrangement. The Government should be able to say whether the lands round Lake Manitoba will be classed as swamp lands and be transferred to the Province. They possess sufficient information, for the facts have been obtained during different years, and are very elaborately set forth in the reports of engineers who have surveyed those lands. This matter should be settled before the final stage is taken.

Mr. ORTON. The Minister has very clearly defined what are to be considered swamp lands in Manitoba. I regret, however, some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland, in respect to the character of the lands in that Province. It is very wrong to give the impression that at certain seasons of the year half of the Province of Manitoba is under water. It is not the case.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. Minister of Customs said so.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not.

Mr. ORTON. The Minister of Customs said that the railway between Emerson and Winnipeg is frequently under water. I have never seen that railway under water, not even the greater part of the land alongside the railway. Certain portions of the land are under water in the spring of the year; but by the drainage already made in the Province of Manitoba many of the lands have been reclaimed and many of those which were formerly under water are now dry. No doubt, as the Minister stated, the class of lands which will be considered swamp is such as cannot be reclaimed for the purpose of growing cereals. Any land considered mere pasture and hay land will be included in the lands to be handed over to the Province. That is a clear and well-defined description of the kind of swamp lands to be handed over to Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. I differ from the hon. gentleman, who thinks that is a clear definition as to what lands will be handed over to Parliament. The definition is not plain even to the Minister himself. There is nothing defined in the resolutions as to what are to be considered swamp lands. The lands around Lake Manitoba to which I have referred have been reported on repeatedly by engineers of the Public Works Department, and if the Minister will look over those reports he will be in a position to say whether those lands will be handed over to Manitoba or not. There are elaborate reports on them, and as good reports as can be obtained. It is desirable that the people of Manitoba and this House should understand whether those lands are to be handed over or not. In those reports there are particulars as to the height of water, and the quantity of land that can be reclaimed by lowering the level of the lake.

Mr. McLELAN. It is not known to the Government whether the Manitoba Government would desire to have those lands. The arrangement was made and the question was, whether the Legislature of Manitoba would accept the proposition made as a settlement of the claims. Until they knew whether the Legislature of Manitoba would accept the proposition, it was unnecessary to go into details. At present we do not know whether the Manitoba Government desire to have the particular lands to which the hon. gentleman has referred. If the representatives of the two Governments meet, and a proposition were made by the Legislature of Manitoba for the Dominion Government to hand over the lands to which the hon. gentleman has referred, then the matter would be considered by this Government, and acting on the information they possess it would be for this Government to say whether they would give those lands as coming under the denomination of swamp lands or not. Until that time arrives, it is premature to discuss what lands may be included.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think it is a matter between the two Governments alone, but the representatives have a right to know what lands will be transferred to the Province of Manitoba when those resolutions are passed, granting aid to the Province. It does not rest entirely between the Local Legislature of Manitoba and this Government. We have all a right to know what will be transferred by these resolutions. So far as regards the Lake Manitoba lands, I say, as representing that particular portion of the Province, that they are looked upon as among the best lands that can be reclaimed, and as forming about the largest tract that can be obtained for the least expenditure. I know that the Province expects those lands to be transferred, and it is not out of place to make these enquiries.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not think it is out of place, but it is premature to say whether those particular lands will be handed over or not.

Mr. WATSON. This House should be aware, in confirming this arrangement, as to what lands will be transferred. If the Minister will see fit to look over the information possessed by the Government, he will be able to tell whether the Government would be willing to hand those lands over to the Province or not. Manitoba will be willing to take all she can get, and look for more. If the hon. gentleman will state, at some future stage, that the lands referred to round Lake Manitoba will be transferred to the Province, if the Province will accept them, the matter will be satisfactory.

Mr. ORTON. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has read the report with respect to the cost of reclaiming those lands.

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. ORTON. He will recollect that the estimated cost is something enormous, such a one as this Government should not impose on the Manitoba Government for the reclamation of lands round Lake Manitoba. It involves also questions concerning the navigation of Lakes Winnipegosis and Manitoba, which comes more particularly under the Dominion Parliament. The hon. gentleman has not shown that justice I should have expected him to show with respect to the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. I might inform the House that I am thoroughly posted in the matter. I know the lands and the lake, and I know the estimated cost of draining these lands is 50 cents per acre. I can assure the hon. gentleman that those lands are well worth reclaiming, and that if reclaimed some of the finest lands in the Province will be around Lake Manitoba.

Mr. MILLS. We have had an extraordinary statement from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He says it would be premature to enquire into the exact nature of this contract. It is true that the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Canada had entered into arrangements with reference to the amount of subsidy and other benefits that Manitoba is to receive from the Dominion; that this settlement between the two Governments is subject to the ratification of the Parliament of Canada on the one hand and the Legislature of Manitoba on the other; but the hon. gentleman says it is premature to enquire into the exact nature of this settlement before either party has ratified it. Now, one would suppose that the proper course for Parliament to adopt would be to make itself acquainted with the nature of this understanding—to ascertain what sort of a bargain it is, whether it is one to the advantage of Manitoba, whether justice has been done that Province, or whether the Government of Canada has been prudent in the arrangements which it has made with the Government of Manitoba. It certainly does seem to me that the statement of the hon. gentleman is a reversal of the natural order of proceedings. Most parties entering into a contract or arrangement with each other undertake to ascertain the nature of the contract before it is finally ratified; and I think that is the course which prudence requires us to take. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries seems to have as little knowledge of this subject as he had of the important subject of the Indian trousers a few evenings ago.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155) to increase the yearly subsidy to the Province of Manitoba, and for other purposes therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COUNCIL OF THE NORTH-WEST.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 2531) for the appointment of an additional member of the Council for the North-West Territory, and an additional stipendiary magistrate, etc.

(In the Committee).

On resolution 1,

Mr. CARON. This resolution is to enable the Government to appoint another stipendiary magistrate in the
Mr. WATSON.

North-West. The people of Calgary and other sections of the territory have urged that another magistrate be appointed. Having seen the difficulties which now exist in the North-West, we consider it would be reasonable to make provision for the appointment of another magistrate, because we have no doubt the work must be very largely increased there from what it has been heretofore. These gentlemen have, as hon. gentlemen know from the geography of the country, enormous distances to travel. It is almost impossible for them at times to be in the locality when their services are most needed. One resides at Battleford, another at Regina, and the third at Fort McLeod, and the resolution proposes to appoint a fourth.

Mr. MILLS. It may be that an additional magistrate is required for the purpose of administering justice in the North-West Territory, but that is a wholly different thing from appointing another member of the North-West council. At the time the Bill was introduced by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) for the establishment of a government for the North-West Territory, it was provided that a certain number of members should be appointed to that council to assist the Governor in framing ordinances and administering justice in that widely-extended territory. But it was also promised in that same Bill that certain members of the council should be elected by the people, one for every thousand of the inhabitants, and that when the council consisted of a certain number of elected members the members appointed by the Crown should then cease to be members of the council. In fact, as fast as circumstances would warrant the policy, they are to give to the council a representative character. It was recognised that it was not expedient to put in the hands of a nominated body the power of legislators for the people of that district. We know that our people are all trained to representative institutions; and no class of the population are so little likely to submit to the restraints of government by a body over whom they have no control as the population residing upon a border settlement. We know that in this country, as well as in the United States, the people residing upon the borders acquire habits of self-reliance to a larger extent than those living in towns and long-settled districts, and if they are not satisfied with the parties in whose hands the government is placed, they are not likely to respect very much the ordinances and laws made by those parties. It was therefore felt to be highly expedient that the administration of the affairs of our distant Territories should be as early as possible in the hands of those who enjoyed the confidence and respect of the people. Now, the provision for the election of members of the council still continues in force. The hon. gentleman has not informed us of the number of elected members now in the North-West council, but I apprehend that it must be very considerable; in my opinion, the number is sufficiently large to exclude the nominated members of the Crown altogether. There is no reason why, with the large population now living in the North-West Territories, there should be a council nominated by this Government at all. The council should be a body enjoying the confidence of the people of that Territory. They should be chosen to advise the Governor from those whom the people themselves have elected. There is no reason why the principle of responsible government should not be fully adopted, in so far as we have entrusted the people of the North-West Territories with the affairs of government at all. Now, it is impossible to suppose that the people of those distant regions can be satisfied with having a council to advise the Lieutenant Governor appointed by the Government at Ottawa. Why, Sir, we might just as well say that the people of Canada would be content to have the Administration of this country chosen by the Colonial Minister in Downing street. There would be as much propriety in that proposition as there is in this. If, as the Minister of Agriculture states, there are now more than 50,000 people who are settled in that country, it is monstrous to withhold from them the right to elect those who are to advise the Lieutenant Governor as the executive officers in that country. There is no doubt that the course pursued by the Government in this matter has been a highly negligent course. The intention was, from the first, when my hon. friend from East York introduced that Bill, that the Lieutenant Governor should estimate the amount of subsidy that was required for carrying on the government of that country, and that a vote should be placed at his disposal the moment that there was a sufficient number of elected members of the council to justify such a proceeding, and that this money should be placed at the disposal of the council, precisely for the same purposes as subsidies are given to the various Provinces to carry on the affairs of the Provincial Governments. Now, what is the hon. gentleman doing? It may be that another stipendiary magistrate is required in that country. I do not pretend to say that he is not; I do not say the Government are not doing what is right and proper in proposing to appoint another; but I do say that they are doing what is highly inexpedient and highly improper, when they propose to make that stipendiary magistrate a member of the council, which, if the law was respected, would long ago have been superseded by a properly constituted council, enjoying the confidence of the people and chosen from amongst them. Why, Sir, the Government here have no more right to appoint a member of that council now—I mean a constitutional and moral right—than they would have to appoint the executive council of Quebec or Ontario. Are not the people who reside in that country, people who have enjoyed the elective franchise and assisted in carrying on the government in their respective Provinces, before they removed to the North-West? Are they not just as competent to determine who shall be councillors to advise the Lieutenant Governor as are the people in any one of the Eastern Provinces? Sir, I say that this proposition is a monstrous one. It is one that we ought not to entertain for a moment, and it is impossible that the Government could have seriously considered it before making this proposition. I say this in all sincerity. The hon. gentleman has but to look at the North-West Territories Act and he will find that whenever the population has reached a certain number in a particular district they have a right to elect a representative, and when there are a sufficient number of elected representatives the members of the council appointed by the Crown shall cease to be members altogether. What right has this Government to name a member of the council to advise the Lieutenant Governor? I say the time has gone by when the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories should carry on the Government as he may see fit, acting under instructions from the Government here, which is the same thing as acting under the advice of men appointed by the Government here. Why, Sir, it was an attempt of this kind, in 1870, that led to the rebellion in Manitoba. When Governor Macdougall was sent up there, the Government proposed to send along with him a number of councillors as advisors, ignoring the people of the Territory altogether, and now the Government propose to continue the same policy. They propose to name a member of the council in that Territory when, if the Minister of Agriculture is to be relied upon, there are already a large population possessing habits of self-reliance, intelligent men, men accustomed to representative institutions in the Provinces from which they emigrated, and they ought to have the councillors of the Lieutenant Governor chosen from amongst the men they have elected to be members of their Assembly.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman does not object, as I understand him, to the appointment of a new stipendiary magistrate. The circumstances of the country, I believe, establish beyond the possibility of discussion, that there is a necessity of increasing the number of magistrates now in the North-West. As I have already stated, the work is increasing so fast that the present incumbents of the office are not sufficiently numerous to meet the requirements of the situation. The only objection is, as I understand from the hon. gentleman, that the new stipendiary magistrate should be appointed a member of the council, as is provided by this resolution. I really cannot see in what way this provision is so obnoxious. It is impossible for me to see, admitting that we have, as is well known, in the council of the North-West, these magistrates who are acting as stipendiary magistrates, why, when increasing the number of magistrates, we should leave out the new man who is to be appointed. The hon. gentleman says that it is quite a different thing appointing a new member of the council and appointing a stipendiary magistrate. That, of course, I admit, but I consider it is an advantage in these territories that men like the stipendiary magistrates should have seats in the council. The territory was a new one in which it became necessary to introduce a constitution that would apply to the requirements and necessities of the people, and, as I have said, it was an advantage, in framing the regulations, in framing the laws in that territory, to appoint men who possessed legal knowledge and had legal experience as have these stipendiary magistrates, members of the council. I do not see in what way we are trenching on the rights and liberties of the people of those territories. If the present resolutions are before Parliament, it is at the request of the people of Alberta; very large petitions have been presented to this House by the hon. member from Toronto (Mr. Small) asking that the changes provided in the resolutions should take place. I believe the people of Alberta are sufficiently intelligent to see danger if there is any danger threatening their liberties in this matter, and would not send petitions here for the purpose of making the changes which hon. gentlemen opposite say will deprive them of their liberties.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Are there any petitions praying for additional members of the council?

Mr. CARON. So I understand.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman read me one petition to that effect, I understood it was for the appointment of a magistrate. At a public meeting in Calgary, it was pointed out there was no necessity for Government members at all.

Mr. CARON. The petitions, I understood, ask for the appointment of a stipendiary magistrate, and also that he should be a member of the council. If not correct, I am perfectly willing to stand corrected, but I was under that impression. In any case, the petitions asked for the appointment of a new stipendiary magistrate. I should like to know the reason why one more stipendiary magistrate in a council, eight members of which are elected by the people, and in which there will be a larger number of elected members under the Bill to be introduced based on these resolutions, as the population increases, should be left out when his three colleagues have seats in the council. As far as I can see, there is no danger whatever, so far as the liberties of the people are concerned, and I believe when the necessity exists for the nomination of a stipendiary magistrate, he should be treated as the others are and have his seat in the council.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says he sees no good reason for leaving out this one when the other magistrates are embraced. If the law is respected, and there is anything like the population, if there is half the population which the Minister of Agriculture says there is in that country, it is contrary to the law that any appointed member of the council should any longer be a member of the council. Let me call the hon. gentleman's attention to section 15 :

"When and so soon as the Lieutenant Governor is satisfied by such proof as he may require, that any district or portion of the North-West Territories, not exceeding an area of one thousand square miles, contains a population of not less than one thousand inhabitants of adult age, exclusive of aliens or unfranchised Indians, the Lieutenant Governor shall, by proclamation, erect such district or portion into an electoral district, by a name and with boundaries to be respectively declared in the proclamation, and such electoral district shall thenceforth be entitled to elect a member of the council or of the Legislative Assembly, as the case may be."

Section 21 provides :

"When the number of elected members amount to 21, the council hereinbefore appointed shall cease and be determined; and the members so elected shall be constituted and designated as the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories."

That Act is the constitution of the North-West Territories, the Government exists under it. If the Lieutenant Governor has been acting in a fraudulent manner, if he has failed in his duty, if he has failed to secure to the people in the various districts a fair representation, that may be reason for calling him to account; but if there is anything like the population the hon. gentleman claims there is in that territory, then the members appointed by the Crown should no longer continue to sit in that council. Instead of going further, the Government should withdraw from the position and respect the rights of the people therein, so far as they have been entrusted with the power to govern the country and to elect that legislature. These men called councillors are not ordinary advisors, they are legislators, they sit in the body that legislates for the people, and assist in making the ordinances by which the people are governed. Unless you distrust the population altogether and propose to govern them by military force—the mounted police and volunteers—you should leave the Government, in so far as local affairs are concerned, in their hands just as it is left in the hands of the people of the different Provinces. They best know their own wants and they constantly complain that the Government do not understand their wants and their circumstances. That being the case, it is a serious usurpation to foist upon their local legislative body an appointee of the Government here. The condition which justified the appointment of a council has gone by, and we should recognise the fact instead of forcing an appointee of the Crown upon the people there as a legislator. The time has come when they will seek representation in this House in order that they may be heard here. I think that a more imprudent course could not have been adopted, looking at the circumstances and at what has transpired there. You have had men whom you knew were loyal, men who were devoted to the Government, partisans of the Government, aiding and abetting the rebellion against the Government. Why? Because you have failed to allow them that fair expression of their views, because you have failed to give them an opportunity of administering their own affairs in their own way, and, instead of profiting by events, you are now marking out a course of a different character. It would be infinitely wiser and better, that you should retrace your steps and leave the people in the North-West Territory to govern themselves in their own way, in so far as you have entrusted the Government to a legislative body there.

Mr. LANGELIER. This measure is one of great importance to the North-West Territory. It is nothing more nor less than a serious invasion of the rights of the people of the North-West.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LANGELIER. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, because probably they have not read the resolution on which they are going to vote. It is proposed to allow the Governor
Mr. MILLS.

General to appoint an additional stipendiary magistrate of the North-West Territories, according to section 5.

Mr. CARON. Of what Act?

Mr. LANGELIER. Of the North-West Territories Act, the statute of 1880, chap. 25.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Consolidated Act.

Mr. LANGELIER. These resolutions provide :

"That it is expedient to authorize the Governor General to appoint in the manner provided by the 5th section of the North-West Territories Act, 1880, an additional member of the council for the said Territories, and an additional stipendiary magistrate in the manner provided by the 74th section of the said Act, and for the purposes mentioned in the said Act."

If we turn to section 5 of the Act, we find that it gives power to the Governor in Council to appoint a stipendiary magistrate who is to be, ex-officio, a member of the council of the North-West. The result is that two additional members of the council may be appointed under these resolutions to vote in the council of the North-West against those who are elected by the people. The same statute says that the council of the North-West shall be composed of six members appointed by the Governor in Council, with an unlimited number of members elected by the people. There is to be one elected by the people for each electoral district constituted by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West, and when it is ascertained that there is a population of 1,000 souls on a territory of not more than 1,000 square miles. We have no information before us to show how many electoral districts there are. Suppose there are only six.

Mr. CARON. There are eight elected members.

Mr. LANGELIER. The smaller the number the worse the measure is. The representatives of the people in the North-West have all the power possessed by this House or by the Legislatures of Quebec or Ontario, and if this measure passes, the hon. gentleman says there will be eight elected members of the council, and, instead of six now appointed by the Crown, there will be eight; so they will be equally divided.

Mr. CARON. We are providing for only one.

Mr. LANGELIER. You are providing for two, because it is proposed to have an additional stipendiary magistrate who shall be a member of the council, and then another member of the council. The resolutions provide in this way for the appointment of two members of the council. If the resolutions were amended, it would remove one serious objection, but as they stand, they constitute a very serious invasion of the rights of the people of the North-West. No information has been given us on that subject, but, if there should be a division of opinion between the members of the council appointed by the Crown and the members of the council elected by the people, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman, the representatives of the people would now be in a majority, but, after these appointments are made, they will no more have a majority, but they will be over-ruled by the members appointed by the Crown. The reasons which have been given are self-evident against such a principle as has been proposed, even if there were no other objections. According to clause 6, whenever any territory in the North-West has a population of 1,000 on a territory of 1,000 square miles, the Lieutenant Governor may constitute that an electoral district, and clause 21 says that, as soon as there are 21 elected members of the council, the members appointed by the Crown shall cease to act, and the name of the council shall be changed to the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territory. If we are to believe the information given us by the Minister of Agriculture the other night, there should be materials in the North West for electing more than twenty-one members, if the Lieutenant Governor did his duty and constituted electoral districts according to the Act. There is no reason whatever for appointing an additional member of the council for a few months or a few weeks, until the Lieutenant Governor constitutes sufficient electoral districts to make the elected members twenty-one, when there would be no more a North-West Council. This is a very serious proposal, one which constitutes a serious invasion of the rights of the people of the North-West, and for which there is no justification. Under these circumstances, I think this should be postponed until we get some further information. It is stated by the Minister of Militia that there have been petitions, we have not seen those petitions; we do not know what they ask; the hon. Minister himself does not know whether they ask for the appointment of an additional stipendiary magistrate or an additional member of the council; and it is quite possible that those who have asked for the appointment of an additional stipendiary magistrate do not know that by doing so they are asking for an additional member of the council. They may not know that they are asking for something to curtail their rights. I think it is important to have more information as to the grounds on which a demand is made on the House for an additional stipendiary magistrate and two new members of the council.

Mr. WELDON. How many members are now appointed?

Mr. CARON. Six.

Mr. WELDON. And eight elected—fourteen in all?

Mr. CARON. Yes, and the present stipendiary magistrate will make another. I do not know how the hon. gentleman comes to understand that we are going to appoint two new members of the council. The clause, as I understand it, provides solely for the appointment of a stipendiary magistrate. Under the Act as it now exists, the stipendiary magistrates are members of the council. The intention is that the one we are going to appoint under this resolution should be placed exactly in the same position as the other stipendiary magistrates, and that he should become ex officio a member of the council, thus increasing the council by one simply. If there be eight elected councillors, the majority still remains in the hands of those elected by the people.

Mr. LANGELIER. The resolution says most plainly that the authority asked is for the appointment of an additional stipendiary magistrate and an additional member of the council.

Mr. CARON. That additional stipendiary magistrate becomes the additional member of the Council.

Mr. LANGELIER. If that is what is intended, it would be quite enough to say that the Governor in Council shall have power to appoint an additional stipendiary magistrate under clause 5, which says:

"The Governor General, with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, by warrant under his privy seal, may constitute and appoint such and so many persons, from time to time, not exceeding in the whole 6 persons, of which number the stipendiary magistrate hereinafter mentioned shall ex officio form part, to be a council to aid the Lieutenant Governor in the administration of the North-West Territories."

The resolution refers to this section, and provides for the appointment of an additional member of the council and an additional stipendiary magistrate, which shows clearly that it does not refer to the same officer. I do not say such is not the intention of the Government, but it is impossible to express it in a worse manner than it is done in the resolution.

Mr. CARON. If it is so, it can be remedied in the Bill; but the resolution is for the purpose of providing for one stipendiary magistrate who, under clause 5, shall be ex officio a member of the council like the other three magistrates. The resolution, to my mind, is perfectly clear; it provides merely for the appointment of one stipendiary magistrate, and I think it necessary to state that that stipendiary magistrate should also be a member of the council. It is for that purpose that these words have been introduced.

Mr. WELDON. The 5th clause of the Act provides that the stipendiary magistrates shall be members of the council. That Act provided for an appointed council, but with the view that as fast as the country developed, it should be superseded by an elective council; and it is an infraction of the constitution of the North-West Territory, as laid down in this Act, to appoint another member, because I think the intention of the Act was that the council of six appointed members should gradually melt away and be merged in the elective council. At present the council consists of fourteen members, eight of whom have been elected by the people and six appointed by the Government. The hon. Minister now proposes to appoint a seventh; but he says the majority will remain with the elected members. If he looks at the Act he will see that the 12th section provides:

"The Lieutenant Governor shall preside at all sittings of the council; he shall on all subjects have the same right to vote as councillors have, with a casting vote in case of a tie."

So that, by voting with the seven members, and then having the casting vote, the control is taken from the elective members of the council and thrown into the hands of the members appointed by the Government. It seems to me that that is contrary to the principle of the Act, and it is not at all necessary, in the present juncture of affairs, that this stipendiary magistrate should be a member of the council. What might have been a matter of policy in 1880 is not necessarily proper in 1885, and the petitions the hon. gentleman referred to only pray for a stipendiary magistrate in the District of Alberta, and it seems to me, in order to carry out the constitutional principle set forth in this Act, which is in accordance with our own institutions, that even if a stipendiary magistrate is appointed he should not be a member of the council. It will be subversive of the principle of this Bill, and will be practically throwing the control of the council into the hands of the appointees of the Government.

Mr. ORTON. The hon. gentlemen opposite have been very successful in the past in their attempts to manufacture grievances, and the object of the present discussion is to manufacture a new grievance for the people of the North-West. The hon. member for Bothwell stated, and it has been repeated by the hon. member for Megantic, that there was a grievance, and that it was the duty of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territory to now have an election of members to represent the people in the Territory. The hon. gentleman must be perfectly well aware that it is utterly impossible for the Lieutenant Governor of the Territory to be in a position to hold such an election, from the fact that the Territory is entitled to more representation. A Bill has been passed during the present Session empowering the Government to take a census of the population of the Territory with the object of giving it just and fair representation. If the hon. gentleman had been just and candid in his remarks he would have stated that fact to the House, instead of trying to create the impression abroad that there was a grievance existing which the Government were not trying to remedy.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in his statement. He does not know much of what he is talking about. The North-West Territories Act which provides for the appointment of a council, also provides that the Lieutenant Governor may, upon representations made to him at any time that there exists within a limited area a number of souls entitled to a representative, authorise a census to be taken. Such censuses have been taken repeatedly in the North-West Territories by the local authority, and upon proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor the members of the council have been added to. The Census Bill of this Session has no such purpose. The member for East York, who brought in the provision with respect to the North-West Territories, did not pass legislation so imperfect as the hon. member for Wellington supposes. He did not leave that part of local legislation to be done here in 1885, when the law was that the council might be increased when the population was sufficient to give it a representative. The hon. gentleman says we are manufacturing grievances. The hon. gentleman thinks he knows all about the North-West, having been there a few weeks at different times. I know the grievance exists, that the representative system has not been applied in the North-West. I know it not from private but from public information, and it is to be found in the newspapers and in the mouths of those who come from the North-West.

Mr. ORTON. The hon. gentleman has it from his agents.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman thinks the people of the North-West are such fools, idiots and babies that they will believe they are aggrieved, though they are not aggrieved, because some agents go and tell them so. They are just as intelligent as the hon. gentleman's constituents in Wellington.

Mr. ORTON. I never referred to them in any sense whatever.

Mr. BLAKE. They are as little likely to be gulled by designing politicians as are the people of Ontario. I say, this question of the rapid creation of a really representative territorial government, is one of the last consequence. If the Government had not been so completely in the hands of the Executive as it has been for some time past, it would have been better for the North-West to-day. The power of that Government has been largely impaired by the fact that so large a proportion of the council was composed of members who sat there as representatives, but were never elected. It was difficult to arrange it otherwise at the start. I admit there was a difficulty. I remember at that time the First Minister was opposed to the proposal, because he thought it was a bad thing to give representative institutions to the Territory. He would have the council all nominated. But to propose at this time of the day, after we have had experience of the consequences of the lack of representative institutions in that country, to impair the existing power and balance as between popular and nominative representatives, is something most extraordinary. I say it ought not to be done. I know of no public reason why the number of nominated members of the council should be increased; but, if the number of nominated members is to be increased, the number of elected members should also be increased, and increased in still larger proportion. That is what is wanted. We must recognise the dissatisfaction and discontent existing, because we do not choose to apply there the principles of popular representative government which we here would decline to live without, but which hon. gentlemen opposite think are too good for the people of the North-West.

Mr. ORTON. I think the hon. gentleman has made remarks that are not justified. He has referred to my temporary visits to the North-West. I am a resident of the North-West; I have been there several years and have travelled a good deal over the country. What I have said in regard to the feeling existing there is likely to be more accurate than the reports to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I know for a fact that agitators have been sent there; that letters have been received from gentlemen in that country representing the party opposite, in which they tried to make the people of the North-West believe that they are oppressed and ill-used; and I maintain that there has been no attempt to ill-use the people, but that, on the contrary, the Government are ready at any time to give them their rights, and to give them the right of electing members to represent them, and that during the Session the Government have taken power to have a census taken in the North-West, with a view to giving them representatives. With respect to the power given the Lieutenant Governor to cause an election to be held, I do not see anything in the Act empowering him to call for such an election to take place. At all events the means of obtaining the census must come from Ottawa, because it is from this Government the sinews of war have to be obtained. The remarks I made were, therefore, not out of place, and were not of such an ignorant character as the hon. gentleman would lead the House to believe.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman evidently thinks he is the only one who has been in the North-West. I stated in his absence that I was present at a public meeting at Calgary at which this subject was brought up, and at that meeting complaints were made that the Government were taking away from the people the right of self-government. I warn the Ministers that if this course is proceeded in, evil results will inevitably follow. The people are determined that no attempt to keep the power out of their hands shall succeed, and efforts will only be repelled by improper means.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Does the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Orton) expect the House to believe that the people of the North-West are willing that the Government here should send nominated persons to represent them in their local affairs? He knows nothing of the class of people who have settled that country if he imagines that they are asking this Government to send up men there to regulate their affairs. You might as well suppose that petitions would come in from any county in Ontario asking the Government to appoint members of their councils so as to overbalance their own local representations. If the Minister wishes to accomplish this object I can tell him that he is taking the very course which will enable him to do it. The local members are in a majority in the council, but if this Bill passes, that majority will be at the end, and if it continues in the same way, you will go on for all time appointing more stipendiary magistrates, who will have seats in the council and will overbalance the local members. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) has stated what has occurred at a public meeting. I had the honor of being present at that meeting, and I can tell the House that that was not all that I heard on that subject. I know the people of that section of the country are not satisfied that their local affairs should be managed by men who are appointed by this Government. In fact it would be impossible that men who have had their training should be content with that sort of thing. The great majority of the people are from the older Provinces—largely, indeed, from the Province of Ontario, and I have no hesitation in saying that in no portion of the Dominion of Canada to-day, so far as intelligence is concerned, in proportion to the population, are the people better qualified to take care of their own affairs than they are in that portion of the Dominion. There is a higher average of intelligence in proportion to the population in that section of the country than in any other. It is not the lame, the halt, and the blind that go to the front: it is the very cream of the old Provinces who have gone there—the men who have most energy, the young men, those who have touched the highest grade of intelligence; and to expect to make this House believe that those men want the Government to appoint representatives to take care of their own local matters, is certainly undertaking a serious contract.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) said we were trying to manufacture a grievance for the people of the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman altogether under-estimates the general intelligence of the people of the North-West. They are perfectly competent to exercise their own judgment as to their own condition and circumstances, and so much is this the case that they are not willing to take their grievances or their lessons from this side of the House or from the other. They are fully competent to decide what is best in their own interest and they claim the right to exercise the powers of self-government, so far as their own local affairs are concerned, precisely the same as the population in other parts of the Dominion. A meeting was called nearly two years ago at Prince Albert, which was largely attended by the people in that district, and they declared that they were not satisfied with the retention of the nominated side of the North-West council. They said the time had come when it should come to an end, and they insisted on the council being entirely in their own hands. If the hon. gentleman will look back through the Saskatchewan Herald he will find a report of that meeting some time in 1883, and he will find that one of the grievances was the nominated members of this North-West council. Now, the hon. gentleman, when the people are feeling sore, when the country is agitated, when they still feel that they have grievances against the Administration, proposes to aggravate the condition of things existing there, by the nomination of another member to the council. I think that ought to come to an end, and I am satisfied that the population is sufficiently numerous to bring this council to an end, if proper provisions were made for the election of members to represent the people of that Territory. If the Minister will look at Section 15, of the Consolidated Act relating to the Government established in the North-West Territories, he will find that the Lieutenant Governor is limited in his power to erect representative district to districts of 1,000 square miles in extent. Now, that provision was inserted in the Act at an early period, when there were but a few isolated settlements in the North-West, and when the population were scattered round some little villages, as in the case of Prince Albert and Battleford, and the provision was made with reference to those settlements. Now facilities are given for the population extending over the entire territory; the people are scattered far and wide; the building of the railway has furnished those facilities. That provision of the law ought to be amended so as to permit the whole country to be divided into electoral districts, each of which will be entitled to send a representative to the North-West council. The hon. gentleman will see that under the provisions of the Bill there were many scattered settlements where you might not be able to find an outlying population of 1,000 on 1,000 square miles of territory, and in that respect the Government should amend the law rather than to undertake to provide for further appointments to the council.

Mr. CARON. The Bill provides for that.

Mr. MILLS. If so, so far the Bill will be an improvement on the present law. But it is anything but an improvement. It is wholly contrary to the spirit of the law for the hon. gentleman to undertake to create other members of council by nomination here. The time has gone by for that, and I am satisfied the population of the North-West will not tolerate the interference of the Government in their domestic legislation by appointments of this sort; and I think they will be unworthy of the rights of freemen if they did tolerate such a thing. It is impossible that the government of that country can be satisfactorily carried on, when you have interferences of this sort.

Mr. ORTON. The hon. gentleman, by implication, charged me with having advocated that the Government in Ottawa, should control the affairs of the people of the North West. I advocated nothing of the kind. What I stated was that I believed the people of the North-West, who had petitioned the Government to appoint a new stipendiary magistrate, knew what they were doing. They knew that every stipendiary magistrate was ex officio a member of the council, and they knew that if they petitioned for an additional stipendiary magistrate, he would be ex officio a member of that council. They have sufficient intelligence to know what they were doing, and I do not think they require to be told by hon. gentlemen opposite what their desires and intentions are, when they petition Parliament to that effect. I desire to impress the fact that the statement made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that the Government have neglected the rights of the people there, is wrong; that instead of that, they have taken the necessary steps to give the people of the North-West Territories, at an early date, representation according to their population in an intelligent manner, by having a census taken, so that electoral districts may be set aside, and the people may fairly have an opportunity of electing members to represent them.

Mr. WATSON. I agree with the hon. member for Central Wellington (Mr. Orton), that the people of the North-West do not want to be dictated to as to what are their rights or their wrongs, or, as to whether they have grievances or not. He says, the people petitioned Parliament to appoint another stipendiary magistrate at Calgary. Now, I feel satisfied, that if the people of the North-West had had the power to petition to have a stipendiary magistrate appointed, who should be a member of the council, they would have done so; and I think the Government ought to take an early opportunity of providing that stipendiary magistrates should not be members of the council ex officio. The Government should take lessons from the past, and should avoid appointing more officials in this North-West than they can possibly help. I do not know whether these stipendiary magistrates receive anything additional for being members of the council, but I do not think that any stipendiary magistrate appointed by the Government should be a member of the council. It is a thing which is detestable to the people of the North-West, to have officials appointed by this Government instead of being elected by the people. The sooner the Government realise that they should have men ruling over the country who are elected by the people, the better it will be for the Government and for the country as a whole. It may be necessary to appoint a stipendiary magistrate for that section, or it may be done for the purpose of making a position for some individual. We know that such has been the case in the past. In 1879, Judge Ryan, who was a stipendiary magistrate in the North-West Territories, was deposed because the portion of the territory within his jurisdiction was added to the Province of Manitoba, and it was only a few months afterwards that Judge Rouleau was appointed in his place. We have yet to learn whether there were any reasons for removing Judge Ryan and appointing Judge Rouleau unless they were political reasons; Judge Ryan filled that position satisfactorily, and no reasons have been given by the Government why he was dismissed, except that a portion of the territory he had control of was added to Manitoba. I might inform the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) that if he looks at clauses 15 and 16 in the Act of 1880, he will find that the Lieutenant Governor has power, at any time, to hold an election for a member of the North-West council in any district which has sufficient population; it is not at all necessary for him to wait until the census is taken under the Act passed by this House this Session. During the time I have had a seat in this House I have heard members year after year urging the Government to give the North-West Territories representation, and the people of that country have been clamoring for representation, both in this House and in the North-West Council. It is now proposed to make the appointed members and the elected members of that council equal, so that, the Lieutenant Governor having the casting vote, the majority will be the appointees of this Government. That is wrong. If it is necessary to appoint a new stipendiary magistrate for the North-West, I think the Government ought at once to provide that the stipendiary magistrates, if members of the council, should be elected by the people. Do not make it compulsory upon them to be members of the council, but do not let their appointment disqualify them. If the people choose them, well and good; but there are men in that country just as able to make laws for the government of the people as men appointed by this Government.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentlemen opposite who regard it as so very objectionable that the stipendiary magistrate should be appointed with seats in the council, have only to refer to the statutes to find that that was the policy of the ex-leader of the Government. The Act of 1877 contains the same objectionable clause which is now complained of. I have not heard any complaints from the North-West with regard to these magistrates. I understood that the petitions which have been presented required that the stipendiary magistrates should be treated just as the other stipendiary magistrates have been heretofore, and I take for granted that the people of the North-West, knowing that every stipendiary magistrate had a seat in the North-West Council, had they considered that objectionable, would certainly have requested that the stipendiary magistrate should not have a seat in the council. Clause 3, in the Act of 1877, states:

"The Governor General with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada, by warrant under his privy seal, may constitute and appoint such and so many persons, from time to time, not exceeding in the whole six persons of which number the stipendiary magistrates hereinafter mentioned shall ex-officio form part, to be a council to aid the Lieutenant Governor in the administration of the North-West Territories."

Mr. MACKENZIE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to refer him to clause 74 of the same Act which provides for the appointment of barristers of five years' standing, not exceeding three, as stipendiary magistrates. So that the provision the hon. gentleman has read only applies to three; you have three now, and you are appointing another, giving him the same power as the others, which the Act does not give. It would require a specific power to make a new stipendiary magistrate a member of the council, and you are not taking that.

Mr. CARON. I have explained to the hon. gentleman that, in consequence of the increased work in the North-West Territories, it has become necessary to increase the number of stipendiary magistrates, and I need not refer to the petitions which have been presented, asking that this appointment should be made, to show that the people themselves consider that the three stipendiary magistrates appointed by my hon. friend the ex-leader of the Government by that Act, are not now sufficient to do the work of the Territories. If it be true that under the Act which I have quoted the hon. gentleman gave to his stipendiary magistrates the power of advising the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to-day, when it becomes necessary to appoint another stipendiary magistrate, why treat him differently from the others who have been appointed heretofore?

Mr. MILLS. The change of circumstances.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Because the Act distinctly provides that the elective element should prevail in the course of time, and that the nominative element should cease when the number of elective members shall reach 21; and if the council does not consist of 21 elected members, it is simply because the Lieutenant Governor has neglected his duty. There have been complaints in the Territory already. I have given the hon. gentleman an instance in which the present state of things was publicly discussed and complained of, and the hon. gentlemen is making it worse instead of better. The popular element should be strengthened, but the hon. gentleman is weakening it and introducing an element of discontent which will produce disastrous consequences.

Mr. CARON. The only difference between the hon. gentleman and myself is that he established the principle of giving the stipendiary magistrates a seat in the council.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Because there was nobody else to sit in the council.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman says the time has come to change that policy and to deprive the stipendiary magistrates of their seats in the North-West council. Well, we do not agree with the hon. gentleman that the time has come to make that change, and we will hold to his policy of giving stipendiary magistrates seats in the council. The hon. gentleman says the Lieutenant Governor might have been derelict in his duty if the number of elected members of the council is not larger than it is. The hon. gentleman knows that by section 15 of the North-West Territory Act, the Lieutenant Governor is given power to erect into an electoral district any portion of the North-West Territory not exceeding an area of 1,000 square miles, which contains a population of not less than 1,000 inhabitants. By the 19th section, it is also provided that when any electoral district contains a population of 2,000 inhabitants of adult age, exclusive of aliens or of unenfranchised Indians, the Lieutenant Governor shall issue his writ for the election of a second member for the electoral district. However, notwithstanding these two clauses, the Lieutenant Governor considered, and there has been a long correspondence in reference to that point, that having once constituted an electoral district, it was not within his power to change it. Well, the Bill which will follow these resolutions will provide for this. Now, I see really no objection to this resolution as presented. There still will remain a majority in the hands of the elected members of the council.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. CARON. There are eight elected members of that council and if you appoint one more magistrate and make him a member, you still remain with seven, instead of six to eight.

Mr. MILLS. The Governor is a member, and he has two votes.

Mr. BLAKE. The Governor has a vote and then he has another vote. You will have seven nominated members who, with the Governor's two votes, will make nine votes against eight of elected members. The hon. gentleman seems to think that because at the very commencement of the business, when there was hardly any population in the Territories at all, my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) proposed that three stipendiary magistrates, and no more, should be members of the council. That was intended to be a permanent policy under which, not only these three magistrates, but also any future stipendiary magistrates should be for all times members of the Local Government of the North-West. That is practically what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. CARON. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. That is practically what the hon. gentleman says, because he says that we, on this side, are objecting to the policy of my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie). But the policy of my hon. friend, when there was hardly any population in the Territories, and when he was proposing to appoint not exceeding three, and for some time there were only two, stipendiary magistrates, members of the council, was that these three—and that was the maximum number of stipendiary magistrates who could be members of the council—should not be permanent, because he looked forward to the time when there would be sufficient population in the Territories to elect members to the number of 21; and when the council was to cease, and the members, 21 in number, were to constitute a Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territory. Therefore, the provision of my hon. friend, under which the number of nominated councillors was not to exceed three in the earliest stages, was not to be a permanent, but a temporary provision, to continue in force until the population reached the required figure to enable it to elect 21 members. Now the population of the Territories is sufficient in number and sufficiently compressed into different areas, I have no doubt, to accomplish that result. I have no doubt there are now 21 areas of one thousand inhabitants each, or, at any rate, if not that many areas, there are sufficient as of two thousand each which can return and who are entitled to two members, to make up the deficiency. But if not, that day is fast approaching, and under these circumstances why should the hon. gentleman propose, just at this time, to add to the representation of the nominative against the elective system? He says, because the people of Calgary sent a petition declaring there was a deficiency in the administration of justice, and that, since they required a stipendiary magistrate, they evidently wished to have an additional member of the council. In the first place, what the people of Calgary wanted was justice, and the only way they could get it was by the appointment of a stipendiary magistrate, and, perhaps, the people of that area might be content, if they could get justice on no other terms, to accept the condition of having an additional stipendiary magistrate added to the council.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend says not. He says they were complaining of the power of the nominative members, as they stand at present. But, in any case, the people of Calgary are not the people of all the Territories. They are entitled to justice, and, if the necessity of the case require it, to another magistrate, but are not entitled to impose upon the Territories an additional nominated member. The people of the North-West Territory are in a different position now to that in which they were when the Act was passed. Their circumstances are different. The exigencies of the country then required as many nominated members as we proposed should be appointed; the exigencies of the country do not now require them. On the contrary, they require that, as rapidly as possible, the nominated members should disappear instead of being increased by Parliament. There is no reason why this magistrate, whose duties are to be judicial, should remain a member of the council, simply that he may be put on as high a pedestal as the other magistrates. The question is what are the rights of the people and what will satisfy the people. When my hon. friend, Mr. Mackenzie, introduced this measure, the right hon. gentleman, the First Minister, objected to the elective element being introduced, because, from his point of view, it was too soon to talk of such a thing; and when he came to power in 1878, the rumor spread abroad, and some of his organs announced, that a change was going to be made and that the territorial government which the hon. gentleman rather condemned, was going to be abolished or modified. The moment the rumor spread abroad, which it did in 1879, that an attempt would be made to abolish the territorial government, the people of the Territories were aroused, even the people who had not at that time the benefits of the representative element, but who were in hopes of obtaining it in course of time, and whose hopes would thus be checked, were alarmed exceedingly. Repeated applications were made to have a census taken in the District of Lorne, amongst others, and two censuses were taken before a sufficient number of persons were found to entitle them to a member of the council. They were taken on the petitions of the people, anxious to obtain that portion of self-government which the Act had guaranteed to them as soon as their population would admit it. The Act did not immediately take effect. It was some time in the year 1880, I think, before these people were entitled to a representative in the council. In February of that year a meeting was held at Duck Lake to protest against the intention of the Government, as stated in the ministerial organs, to abolish even this rudimentary system of government. The meeting was called by Father André, and was addressed by him, and his speech will show how the people felt, so long ago as 1880, on this subject:

"He said before long this together with several other settlements will be entitled to representation in the council at Battleford. Then the council would be in a better position to speak in the name of the people, to press their wants and remedy their grievances at Ottawa."

He proposed that they should send a petition to Ottawa against the idea of abolishing the territorial government, a share in which these people had not, but expected to get in a short time, and a protest and petition, signed by numerous persons, on the 23rd of February, 1880, was sent to the Government. This protest and petition was couched in the following terms:

"That your petitioners would further press upon your hon. House the consideration, that as the inhabitants of the North-West Territories are now nearly equal to the population of the Province of British Columbia or of Manitoba, with a near prospect of a large majority in favor of the Territories, it will be manifestly unfair to deprive them of a local council in which several settlements, even though the basis of representation under the present be not extended, are not now or will shortly be entitled to direct representation. Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that your hon. House will sanction no legislation which would have the effect of depriving the people of the North-West Territories of a resident local government.

Public meetings were held at Prince Albert, St. Laurent and other places, in the spring of 1880, to give expression to the views of the people on the subject of the suggested abolition of the territorial government. The feeling was all but universal in condemnation of any change, and petitions against such a retrograde step were almost unanimously signed. At Prince Albert, a couple of gentlemen spoke against taking any action, one of them being reported as having said that it would be much the better course to let Sir John Macdonald have his own way without opposition or remonstrance, as he knew much better than the people of the country could possibly do, what was for their real good. But this extreme view of party fidelity did not find an echo in the mind of the meeting, people preferring to trust their own judgment to that of a gentleman who has never seen the country, and who could, therefore, know nothing personally of its requirements. I mention these things as occurring upon a rumor that it was intended to deprive the people of that territorial system, to show you how satisfied they were with it, and how important it is not to increase the absolute as well as the relative weight of representation by our resolution of to-day. If, at a period some time ago, these people thought that it was important to have representation here, if they thought it was important to have that territory divided into provinces, how much more now ought we not to add to the weight of the nominative as against the representative element. In the fall of 1882 the people of Prince Albert petitioned the Government, and one clause of the petition runs thus:

"And whereas the North-West Territories is increasing in population at an unprecedented rate, and doubtless next year a larger immigration will flow in from all parts of the world, and certain sections of the country are already thickly populated, such as the district of Saskatchewan, this has now a population almost as large as the Province of British Columbia, and as it is impossible that the inhabitants of such a large tract of country could be understood by the representatives sent to Parliament by the older Provinces, and as there are settlements such as Prince Albert desirous of becoming incorporated as towns, and as it is absolutely necessary that roads should be improved, bridges, schools, and other public buildings should be erected, to keep pace with the immigration flowing in, your petitioners believe the time is ripe for forming the North-West Territories into Provinces with the powers and privileges of the other Provinces of the Dominion."

I read that to you as bearing directly upon a proposition made in the year 1885, to have more of the Crown colony and departmental system of Government than that which now exists. If, four or five years ago, they thought they ought to have provincial rights, you propose to say now: No, we will send you up another ruler from Ottawa. Then, the North-West Council, on the 9th October, 1883, made another representation—a council which was certainly at that time composed of a preponderating element of nominated members.

"Your memorialists believe that the success of the North-West Territories is of such importance to the whole Dominion that the time has arrived when representation for the Territories should be had in Parliament. At the present time, the people of the North-West are without representation of any kind, and have to depend solely on petitions and memorials to make their wants known."

There was a meeting at Prince Albert in October, 1883, and amongst the resolutions passed at that large meeting was one endorsing the view that the Territories should have representation in the Dominion Parliament. Then, there was a meeting in February, 1884, at Colleston school house, in this section, and, of the resolutions that were passed, these were two:

"6. That the North-West Territory are entitled to representation in the Dominion Parliament, and that it is unjust to compel the settlers here to pay taxes until such representation is granted.

"7. That the North-West Council should be composed purely of representative members, and that it should exercise the same powers and enjoy the same privileges as the Provincial Legislatures in the established Provinces."

That shows what the feeling of the people was, and that is more than a year and a half ago. They were then complaining of the existing nominated element, and now you say: We will add another nominated member to the council. Then we had a debate here in the year 1884, in which some of these questions were raised and suggested to the consideration of the House. Then, we had on the 15th November, 1884, a very largely signed petition passed through the Territories which prayed for responsible government for the Territories. This was not confined to one section. My hon. friend has spoken of what he saw at Calgary himself and at Moosomin in the winter of this year. A large meeting was held, and a resolution was passed as to the representation of the people in the Government of the North-West Territories. I might give many more citations. I give these to show that the people of this country are yearning, as we ought to know they would, for their full share in the rights of citizenship in the Federal Parliament, and for a fuller meed of self-government in the country in which they live, and to that I think they are entitled. I think, therefore, that it is very objectionable to commence to increase the weight of the nominated as against the elected body. You say the elected body will have a preponderance, but there may be unfaithful members. I have known members of Parliament who have been unfaithful to their trust. There may be an unfaithful elected councillor who may combine with the powers that be, who may combine with the Lieutenant Governor appointed here and with the people who are nominated here, and, if a question is on the balance, you will find that, although the weight originally preponderated a little one way, the nominated element will get the sway. I have read with attention the reports of the proceedings of the North-West Council and the comments of the newspapers upon those reports, and I have seen expressions, I may go so far as to say of disgust, but certainly of regret, as to the inefficiency of those proceedings, due, as was stated, to the preponderance of the nominated as distinguished from the elected members. If that is so, we ought not to-day to propose to increase the weight of the nominated as contrasted with the elected members.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. LANGELIER. I think it would be advisable to change the words of this resolution. If the construction given to it by the Minister of Militia is correct, the wording should be altered, otherwise it would be taken that hereafter eight members of the council were to be appointed by the Government. There is no difficulty, because it is understood that the intention of the Government is to add only one member of the council.

Mr. CARON. Yes, it is.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that language is entirely inapt to express the intention of the Government in the sense which they profess to desire. They ask to appoint a member to the North-West Council, but they also ask to appoint a stipendiary magistrate who per curiam officii will be a member of the North-West Council. You might appoint a member who was not a stipendiary magistrate at all.

Mr. CARON. Not under clause 74.

Mr. BLAKE. I am speaking of the appointment of a member of the council.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would remind the Premier that according to the 74th clause the limitation is to authority. You have the authority already.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The additional man is to be appointed in the manner provided by the 74th section.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the stipendiary magistrate. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor General to appoint in the manner provided by the 5th section, an additional member of council, and an additional stipendiary magistrate in the manner provided by the 74th section—that is what you say. You say you are going to appoint an additional member of council by one section and an additional member of council by another section.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move in amendment:

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor General to appoint an additional stipendiary magistrate in the manner provided by the 74th section of the North-West Territories Act, 1880, and for the purposes mentioned in the said Act, who shall be an additional member of the council of the said Territories in the manner provided by the 5th section of the Act.

Mr. BLAKE moved in amendment to the amendment to strike out the words: "Who shall be an additional member of the council of the said Territories."

Amendment to amendment (Mr. Blake) negatived.

Amendment (Sir John A. Macdonald) agreed to.

On resolution 2,

Mr. CARON. This resolution is to make provision for recapturing insane persons who have escaped from the asylum. At the present time these unfortunate people are sent to Manitoba, and the Dominion Government has to pay the Government of Manitoba so much per head for the maintenance of the insane. It is providing the means of maintaining inmates when the transfer to another asylum, which is in course of construction, takes place.

Resolution to be reported.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 141) respecting the Administration of Justice and other matters in the North-West Territories.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

HARBOR OF THREE RIVERS.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 150) to authorise the advance of a certain sum to the Harbor Commissioners of the harbor of Three Rivers.

Mr. MILLS. Explain.

Mr. BOWELL. I have already explained this proposal upon two occasions. It is simply to enable the Government to loan the Harbor Commissioners of Three Rivers a sum of money upon debentures issued by the Board of Commissioners, in order to relieve them from paying 6 per cent., which rate they now pay, upon the bonds issued by them; and also in addition to the sum already borrowed of $63,600, to loan an additional sum of about $18,400 to enable them to complete. That will be a loan to them upon the security of the debentures of the harbor.

Mr. MILLS. What sum do they now pay, and what will they pay under the new arrangement?

Mr. BOWELL. They at present pay 6 per cent.; under the present arrangement they will pay 4 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. What is the amount annually under each heading?

Mr. BOWELL. The amount already expended is $63,600, upon which they are paying 6 per cent. It is proposed to loan an additional sum of $18,400, to enable them to complete, making a total sum of $82,000 at 4 per cent. The revenue of the harbor will more than cover, with the proceeds of the leases into which they have already entered with certain parties, 4 per cent. on the full amount of the loan.

Mr. MILLS. What is the annual amount of revenue?

Mr. BOWELL. The revenue from harbor dues is $3,900, and from rents of wharves assured $2,000, making a total of $5,900.

Mr. MILLS. Does any portion of that form a sinking fund, or is it a perpetual charge.

Mr. BOWELL. No; it is for 25 years.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. MILLS. I do not see any arrangements by which the principal is to be paid off. The Harbor Commissioners might expend the surplus, over the sum required for the payment of interest, and there would be nothing to meet the principal.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no provision for sinking fund as it is expected that the increase of the business of the port, after the improvements have taken place, will be such as will enable them to pay the debentures when they fall due.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that there ought to be some provision for sinking fund, as it is certainly legislating in a rather extraordinary way not to provide for the payment of the principal.

Mr. BOWELL. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is a good one, and perhaps it would be as well to provide for some sinking fund, even though it should be a very small one. I, therefore, suggest that at the end of the clause, after the word "whatever" the following words be added:

And the said commissioners shall also pay to the said Finance Minister every half year as aforesaid, one-half of 1 per cent. as sinking fund, towards the redemption of said debentures.

Mr. MILLS. Is there a provision for the imposition of harbor dues or tolls?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, under the Act which incorporates them.

Mr. MILLS. Have they power to fix the amount of the tolls?

Mr. BOWELL. No, that is in the hands of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MILLS. They could not increase them without the consent of the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, nor could they go on with new work without the previous sanction of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that the sinking fund rate is a very low one—not sufficient to pay it up in the time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It would not be enough, but the hon. gentleman must have such confidence in the growth of the place, and in the effect of these works, that with no other encumbrance upon the board, this will be quite enough.

Mr. MILLS. One-half per cent. every six months means one per cent. per annum.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. That makes one-fourth in every 25 years. I do not think the hon. gentleman can be accused of dealing niggardly with the city of Three Rivers—a place so largely dependent on the lumbering business, which is every year becoming less.

Mr. BOWELL. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman does not accuse my hon. friend of dealing niggardly with the city of Three Rivers.

On section 4,

Mr. WELDON. Are these debentures overdue?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. WELDON. How can you call them in?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These people wish it so, because they know they could not pay their interest, and therefore they would be only too glad to give up their debentures and have them redeemed. In fact, that is the reason the Bill was introduced.

Mr. WELDON. How can this Parliament declare that the interest shall not be paid after a certain date? That interferes with civil rights.

Mr. BLAKE. The debenture holders are entitled to certain rights under their contract, and I do not think we ought to provide absolutely that those rights shall be changed or modified. The hon. gentleman says he is quite sure they will bring in their debentures for redemption. Very well, let him trust them for that; but do not provide that if they refuse to bring them in you will not give them any interest, because the law is such that they are entitled to it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In compliance with what the hon. gentleman has said, I would suggest that all the words after the words "Harbor Commissioners," in the 8th line, be struck out. That leaves the bondholders free.

Amendment agreed to; Bill reported with amendments which read the first and the second times and concurred in.

CONSOLIDATED INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second the reading of Bill (No. 146) to amend the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883. He said: One part of the Bill is intended to provide for the better carrying out of the regulations of the Act. Owing to the deficiencies in the Act as it now stands, our officers in many cases have not been able to secure convictions. Another change is consequent on the increased duty placed on cigars this Session. A very important question is that of a drawback to distillers on whiskey which must be kept on the distillers premises for a certain time. This drawback is allowed in the old country and in the United States, and there is no reason why it should not be allowed here. No allowance is to be made unless the spirits have been kept in wood or in such ventilating tanks as are approved of by departmental regulations during the whole period for which abatement is claimed. The allowance to be made will not exceed six per cent. for the first year, four per cent. for the second year, and three per cent. for the third year and two per cent. for each succeeding year up to seven years in all. Some of our officers have visited the distilleries in the United States and consulted the excise officers in that country, and the opinion of the American excise officers is that these allowances are about fair for shrinkage by evaporation; but this is not absolute, because after all the spirits will be regauged. It has been remarked in the newspapers that the principle adopted here of prohibiting the sale of any but mature whiskey was a scheme concocted by the distillers to create a monopoly. It is only fair to state that while the distillers asked for the first clause and the drawback for shrinkage, no suggestion was received from any one of them with regard to this other clause. This was a suggestion made by the committee, after giving the matter a good deal of attention, and which I thought worthy of consideration. The object is to have the purest spirits put in the market, and prevent the sale of adulterated liquors.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any process by which it has been ascertained that although not stored in woods, but in properly ventilated tanks this process of improvement will go on as well as in wood? If stored in metal tanks, the spirits might as well be bottled as the process of adulteration must go on in order to have improvement. I have seen it stated that a process has been discovered, which is now in use, by which this improvement can be obtained almost as soon as the liquor is distilled.

Mr. COSTIGAN. From what I can learn, the maturing of whiskey takes place in wooden vessels. I have seen the reference the hon. gentleman alludes to, but the Department has no idea of that process having been successfully carried out. There are certain preparations or drugs that may be put into the liquor that will apparently remove the objectionable elements sought to be removed by adulteration, but in reality they only conceal them. Being put in wooden vessels and kept there, the evaporation proceeding through the wood, is the only means of purifying the spirits.

Mr. BLAKE. What are these ventilating tanks?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know what is meant by ventilating tanks; they must be wooden vessels. In a large distillery they have copper tanks.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the proposed amendment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In committee, I shall either have to amend that section limiting the period when liquor may be entered for consumption, or strike it out.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that the hon. gentleman will either eliminate the section altogether or will make provision for the sale at any time of spirits which are to be used for methylated spirits or vinegar or anything of that kind; not that he has any proposition for continuing it in a modified form.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I shall either strike it out altogether, or, if amendments can be made to meet the objection of manufacturers, and also in the direction of new distilleries which may be established, I shall propose the amendment.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

ENQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MILLS. In the return brought down relating to the boundary of Ontario, the only papers were letters from the Secretary of State, Earl Derby, enclosing copy of the order for the decision of the Judicial Committee and a letter from the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario with the proposed draft Bill. There was no letter from the Government here acknowledging either of those communications, and there was no intimation as to the views of the Government with reference to any proposition, either the one made by the Imperial Government or the one made by the Government of Ontario. Has there been any further correspondence?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, those communications have been acknowledged. There has been a good deal of semi official and verbal communication between the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Ontario on that subject. The Minister of Justice is in Toronto and will be back to-morrow, and I fancy there will be some more information about it then.

Mr. WELDON. Will the hon. gentleman state when he will bring down the correspondence in reference to the fisheries?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I expected to have received the assent to-day, but, I am sorry to say, I have not.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Steam mail service between the United States and Victoria, British Columbia..... $17,640

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I desire to ask the Minister if it is contemplated to increase that subsidy, owing to the increased number of trips. At the present time they are making five trips every month during the summer, between April and, I think, the end of October.

Mr. CARLING. I would say to the hon. gentleman that it is not the intention to increase the subsidy at present.

For subsidy to line of steamers to run fortnightly between France and Quebec..... $50,000

Mr. VAIL. How many trips are they required to make in a year? Who is the contractor?

Mr. BOWELL. The agreement has been made with the Halifax Steam Navigation Company through their representative and manager, Mr. Wood, for $2,000 per trip. Payment has been made for one trip. I am not able to inform the hon. gentleman of whom the company is composed.

Mr. MILLS. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what the service is that is performed, how the contract is let, and what is there to warrant this expenditure?

Mr. BOWELL. The contract was entered into with this company for a service between France and Quebec during certain seasons of the year, the vessels to land at Halifax or some of the maritime ports.

Mr. VAIL. Has the French Government granted an equal sum?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I think not; and that is the reason why the stipulation that is in the former vote has been left out on this occasion.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will see that the authority given by Parliament was to pay this sum provided the Government of France gave an equal subsidy, and he says the Government of France did not give any subsidy. The question is, then, under what authority was the $2,000 paid.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have only paid for one trip, $2,000, so that if we had used the $50,000 it would have been $4,000 a month for the whole year. In paying only $2,000 we have really remained within the vote of Parliament, and within the intention of Parliament, because we have expended only one-half the amount that we would have expended each month if the French Government had given an equal amount; and now we ask that this course be followed for the next year instead of the vote of the year before, otherwise France would not give the necessary amount. Therefore, we thought it better to try to open commercial communication with France, even with half of the subsidy, in order to obtain an outlet for our commerce.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but Parliament was asked to agree to a scheme of steam communication between France and Quebec upon a basis that $100,000 was to be contributed as a national encouragement, one-half by France and one-half by Canada. What the hon. gentleman has done has been to expend $2,000 of the $50,000 granted on that condition, without the performance of that condition, not in pursuance of the intention of Parliament at all but in contravention of the vote and of the intention of Parliament, because the intention of Parliament was, that this amount should be given only on these conditions, and it was the hon. gentlemen themselves who proposed these conditions. They said themselves that $100,000 was the least public encouragement that would enable us to have an efficient line and, having done so, they decided that each country ought to pay half. Then, not having been able to carry out that arrangement, they seem to have made an arrangement unwarranted and unauthorised, and of a different character. Under these circumstances, I think the committee is entitled to know what style of steamers and of what power were employed and how it comes about that an efficient arrangement has been made for $50,000 when the Government thought it would require a public encouragement from both countries of $100,000 a year. Then one wants to know what is the meaning of this arrangement the hon. gentleman has spoken about as between France and Halifax. The vote of Parliament was between France and Quebec, but the hon. gentleman says that a certain number of trips are to be made between France and Halifax. That may be a very proper thing; but if we are going to arrange for a line of communication all the year round, between France and Quebec during the shipping season and between France and Halifax during the winter, a vote should be taken accordingly. Now we are told that a contract or arrangement has been made, and the particulars should be brought down. Hon. gentlemen have been asking for steamship subsidies in various quarters for a number of years. They have been projected by speculators. Now it is said this service is arranged for. If so, we should know particulars of the arrangement; how many trips are to be made between France and Quebec, how many between Halifax and France; what is the result of the trip that has taken place, and what are the prospects as to the future.

Mr. PAINT. Some of the facts are these. I happened to see the agent here last week. There are two ships running; they are something under 2,000 tons, and are first-class ships. The service is from Quebec and Halifax to Havre, touching at Swansea, in Wales.

Mr. BLAKE. Now that the Deputy Assistant Minister has explained the matter, perhaps the Minister will throw some light upon it.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not the full terms of the contract here, but I will bring them down before I ask concurrence, in order that full information may be given, and I will present any further information I obtain.

Mr. PAINT. The French Government would not vote a subsidy. They required that two of the ships should be officered by French officers and should fly the French flag.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose that some one on the Treasury benches is acquainted with these interesting matters as to the negotiations with France, and the great difficulty which prevented the success of the scheme of the Canadian Government. Or is all the wisdom on this subject to be found in the rank and file of the ministerial party?

Mr. PAINT. I may say, also—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not believe it is as black as it is painted.

Mr. MILLS. I think we are entitled to further information on this subject. It is pretty evident from what the Minister said, and from what the Deputy Ministers also stated, that the French Government did not think trade between Canada and France of sufficient consequence to justify any expenditure for this purpose. Before the Government undertakes to commit the country to this expenditure we are entitled to know what they expect to accomplish. In what way do they expect to promote the interests of the country by subsidising a mail steam line between Canada and France? There are trade relations between Canada and the United Kingdom to offer some justification for a subsidy to a line of steamers between those points. But what is the trade between Canada and France to justify an expenditure of that kind? Surely mail communication required with France could be had through the United Kingdom. France does not take our raw products, and the present trade policy of the country is such as not to encourage the importation of manufactured goods from France. Besides, the Government have never succeeded in securing more than two or three immigrants a year from that country. Looking at the present state of the public revenue and the large expenditure of the Government, Parliament is entitled to further information on this subject before the vote is passed, and it is not sufficient that the Minister promises to bring down a statement as to the form of the contract, for what is required is to know what justification there is for entering into such a contract. In pursuing the present course the Government have treated the committee with indignity.

Mr. PAINT. One of the ships sailed from Halifax, not more than two weeks ago, for Havre, with a cargo and 24 first-class passengers. The capital for building the ships has been furnished by France, Scotland and Halifax.

Mr. LANGEVIER. I know that one of the steamers came to Quebec some time ago, but positively refused to take any cargo from that port. It seemed to me most extraordinary that a line receiving a subsidy should decline to take any cargo from Quebec. I know a firm who had prepared a lot of deals to send.

Mr. PAINT. What was the description of the cargo?

Mr. LANGEVIER. Deals.

Mr. PAINT. A first-class steamer cannot carry deals, and pay.

Mr. LANGEVIER. The steamer declined to take any cargo whatever from Quebec. The facts of the matter were published in the newspapers. There was a good deal of correspondence in the papers about it, and I may tell the hon. gentleman that the name of the firm was Plamondon & Auger; and it appears from these statements that this so-called line which is subsidised for travel between France and Quebec, does not touch at Quebec at all. This same steamer, it was stated, went down to Montreal with about one-third of a cargo, taking nothing from Quebec at all. Now, I say, if that is the case, that cannot be construed as performing the contract.

Mr. BOWELL. After the statement made by the hon. gentleman for Megantic (Mr. Langelier), I would ask the committee to allow this item to stand, until full enquiry can be made into the statement which the hon. gentleman has made. If a vessel which is subsidised in order to create a trade—for I think I may use that expression—between France and this Dominion—refuses to carry freight when offered from a Canadian port, it strikes me it would be a very good reason for annulling the contract. I may say, however, to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that if the Parliament of Canada at its last Session voted $50,000 per annum, in order to subsidise steamers to ply between some port in France and some ports in Canada, in order to build up a trade which has not in the past existed between those countries, conditional upon the French Government giving an equal sum or more to subsidise them, and if the Government of Canada could secure such a service as was contemplated when the first vote was made, without being aided or subsidised by the French Government, the object for which the money was appropriated has been accomplished; and there could be very little difference to this country, whether the French Government really subsidised the line or not, unless that subsidy was absolutely necessary to secure the services of such a class of vessels as was contemplated when the vote was given, although the contract may not have been, as intimated by the leader of the Opposition, strictly in accord with the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know what the terms of the contract may be, but having some knowledge of ship-owning for a number of years, and knowing something about the trade of carrying lumber, I may say that I can quite understand why the owner or master of a first-class steamer would decline to carry lumber. The truth is that the freights on lumber for some years back have been so low that no first-class steamers will carry it, unless they carry enough to ballast the vessel. It is true that even the Allan vessels and other steam vessels frequently take a portion of their cargo in deals, not because it pays them to do so, but because sometimes it is necessary, when they cannot get a full return cargo, to take part of a cargo in timber, which is a non-paying freight for a steamship, at a merely nominal price. Now, I can quite understand a vessel coming to Quebec and refusing to be chartered at the current rates to carry deals to either British or French ports, and if the rates are not sufficient to pay the vessel it would naturally go to Montreal and try to get another freight there. That is quite consistent, and is in itself no reason to suppose that the contract should be open to be cancelled. It was not because the lumber was offered at Quebec any more than if it had been offered at Bathurst, Miramichi or any other place, but simply because the freight was not of a character to pay the ship for the expense of carrying it. I can quite understand that it might be desirable and very probable that a trade should be opened up with France, but it is open to the Government to enter into a contract or not, and they can put in such conditions as will best promote trade and best suit the interests of the country. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) is perfectly accurate in his statement, but that is no reason, in my opinion, for cancelling the contract, without looking into the fact of whether the freight was at such a rate as would warrant the vessel in carrying it.

Mr. McLELAN. I may say that I met the agent of the vessel in question during the last trip, and he mentioned to me that he had offered deals as part of his cargo at Quebec, and he gave the price and it appeared to me to be so low that it could not have been carried even on a sailing vessel. He declined it because it was even below the ordinary sailing ship rates, and those would be a loss for any steamship to carry. He mentioned to me that he had about one hundred tons at Quebec, and that he was going to Charlottetown and then to Halifax to complete his cargo, not with lumber, but with other goods which would tend more to develop the trade between the two countries than the carrying of deals.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The explanation of the Minister of Marine is quite different from the statement of the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier). We understood from the statement of the hon. member for Megantic that the cargo had been refused positively, but now we see that the company did not carry it, simply because the rates were not satisfactory—an explanation which puts the matter on a different footing altogether.

Mr. LANGELIER. I gave the information as I saw it, for it was published in all the newspapers in Quebec and a great deal of indignation was expressed about it. No answer was given to the communication of Messrs. Plamondon & Auger, which was not that they did not agree upon terms but that there had been a positive refusal to take any goods from Quebec. I do not myself know whether the information was correct or not, but that was what was stated in the newspapers of the city.

Mr. BLAKE. Are we to understand that the arrangement is such that the vessel is to touch at different ports, or that it is to make stated trips from Quebec, calling at Halifax, Swansea and Havre; for we hear now the steamer was to call at Charlottetown. Of course, one of the elements for which I suppose we pay a subsidy is the loss in departing at stated periods from certain ports, thus giving merchants the certainty of obtaining pretty rapid despatch. but if the vessel is to go on a sort of coasting through the Dominion, picking up a cargo here and there, that may be a very good service, but it is a different kind of service from that which I understood from the hon. gentleman who undertakes to paint the lily.

Mr. WELDON. In regard to the remark of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint), that the French Government would not give the subsidy because they wanted a French vessel, it was put forward as one reason for this grant last year that it was given to two French vessels in order to obtain from the French Government $75,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. BOWELL. I wish it distinctly understood that the language used by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) induced me to ask the committee to let the item stand, that is, that the owners or managers of the boat refused to accept not only deals but any other kind of goods from Quebec. One can scarcely conceive that possible, but when it is stated on the authority of a member of this House the actual facts should be ascertained. I must take exception altogether to the view of this question taken by the leader of the Opposition. No one ever supposed that a small subsidy of this kind was granted for the purpose of establishing a line of steamers running direct from Quebec to Havre or any other port in France. It was always understood that if a cargo could not be obtained in Montreal or Quebec the vessel plying between the Dominion and France should be allowed to call at any other port to make up her cargo. It would scarcely be fair to ask any steamer, particularly one of that size and value, to sail from only one port of the Dominion to a port in France, whether it had any cargo or not. The object in making the grant was to build up a trade that has not existed in the past, and in order that every part of the Dominion might benefit by it, the vessel was to be permitted to go to any port in the Dominion to complete her cargo. Nothing could be of greater advantage to the Island of Prince Edward than for a vessel of that character to call at Charlottetown or Georgetown or any other port of that Island in order to obtain canned fish—

Mr. MITCHELL. Or cattle.

Mr. BOWELL—or horses for shipment to Europe, and if the cargo could not be completed there, the vessel ought to be allowed to go to Halifax or to some other Dominion ports and then proceed on her voyage. It was never intended to have a weekly or a fortnightly line. The object was to give so much a trip between this Dominion and some port in France, and so increase the trade of the country and build up a direct communication between France and Canada, so that immigrants might take advantage of a line of that kind. It was also hoped that Canadian merchants might receive their goods as cheaply as possible, and that, after ascertaining what we could furnish to the markets in France, we could send goods direct to that country, and thereby enable our exporters to secure the full benefit of their own trade.

Mr. BLAKE. The grant as proposed was to promote steam communication between France and Quebec, not between France and Canada, and the proposal this year is the same. It may not be a wise proposal; the suggestion the hon. gentleman makes now may be much wiser—that it should be between any port in Canada and France; but that is not the proposal in the vote. The original intention as stated by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon)—I very well remember the discussion—was that the subsidy should be no less than $125,000 a year, we to pay $50,000; and we were so cunning that we were going to have French steamers, which would get the advantage of the tonnage or mileage bounty given by the French Government, and thus practically make the French pay $75,000 of $125,000. This is a considerable subsidy from the public to promote this trade, and it ought to secure a very good line, and frequent and tolerably direct communications. Even $50,000 a year is a very considerable subsidy. I do not know what these 2,000 ton vessels consume of coal per trip; but I fancy that subsidy goes a pretty long way towards paying their coal bill.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman says there is no trade to be promoted at present by the subsidy given to this line of steamers, but it is for the purpose of securing trade.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say it was for that exclusively.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman said it was a trade to be created, and a trade to be created is certainly a trade that does not exist; and the hon. gentlemen neither last year nor this have given the House the slightest information as to how the trade was to spring up. We know that the commercial policy of France is not one favorable to the establishment of an extensive trade with this country, and I am at a loss to understand in what this extraordinary trade that is to be built up is to consist. In the debate that took place last year on the subject, not the slightest information was given as to what the nature of this trade was to be. The hon. gentleman proposed to subsidise a line of steamers, and seemed to assume as conclusively established that if the subsidy were given, a trade would actually spring up. I take the following from the debate of last year:—

“Mr. MACKENZIE. I object to any term so long as ten years. The contracts given to the Allan Line have never exceeded five years. Is not the bounty referred to confined to French bottoms?”

“Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

“Mr. MACKENZIE. Then the bounty could only be obtained by the vessels being built in France.

“Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If they were built here and sold to France a sum would be obtained, but a smaller one.

“Mr. MACKENZIE. About one-third.

“Mr. DESJARDINS. Besides the bounty given on ships built in France, there is another bounty granted to ships running under the French flag. For instance: If there were four steamers of 2,500 tons each, the bounty of construction would be $128,000, while the bounty for navigation would, supposing there was a fortnightly service, reach $101,000 or 505,000 francs besides.”

That is they would obtain $229,000 from France and $50,000 from this country. This would be a very excellent and profitable arrangement, no doubt, for the company, but in what way will it profit this country? What particular trade or business do the Government expect to benefit by subsidising these lines? Because it is well known that a Canadian line of steamers would not obtain these profits which the hon. Minister and his supporters said it was one of the objects of the Government to secure. We are bound to assume the Government are dealing in this matter as a private corporation would deal with their own money; we are bound to assume that the Government are acting in the interests of the people, but we have the right to know what particular interest or interests are to be benefited. Surely the Minister must have some idea upon this question. We cannot assume that there are certain supporters of the Government interested in a particular line of steamers who are expected to be benefited by contributions taken from the public treasury; we cannot suppose the Government are seeking to help their friends and protect them against losses by putting their hands into the public treasury and distributing public money amongst them. What is the interest of this country the Government hope to promote by subsidising this line? Surely they have information on this subject. They must have formed their opinions upon intelligent data, and where is the data upon which those conclusions were reached. That information we are entitled to have and the committee should have it before passing this vote.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised that the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) has taken, upon that question which interests peculiarly the city of Quebec, the position he has just taken. The hon. member must know that there is not only the lumber trade we can do with France. There are, in our country, large mines of phosphate and other mines; there is the cattle trade; there are thousands of articles we can exchange with our old mother country, and I do not understand why the hon. member comes, in this occurrence, and speaks against the interests of the Province of Quebec, and especially against the interests of the city, of which he is proud of being mayor. If he wished to be useful to the city of Quebec, I think that, under the circumstances, he had better remain silent. When he said here that the French company refused to take any freight from Quebec, he has done that city the worst service he could do. He told us that we, from the city of Quebec, did not require the opening of commercial relations with France, and, under a disguised form, he asks the Parliament not to vote the $50,000 the Government are willing to give to the city of Quebec. It is under such circumstances that the people of Quebec could say: O God, deliver us from our friends, and especially from our mayor! The hon. member mentioned the names of Mr. Auger and Mr. Plamondon as those of whom freight was refused. I do not know whether Mr. Auger and Mr. Plamondon form the whole of the city of Quebec; I know that it is not very long ago since, if they were not proprietors of the whole city of Quebec, they were, at any rate, proprietors of L'Electeur, a paper edited by the brother of the member for Megantic. Since that time, I believe that those familiar and intimate relations have disappeared, and more extensive relations with France are also likely to vanish. I do not know whether it is for the same reason, but, at any rate, I think that the refusal met with by MM. Auger and Plamondon, should not be a reason why we should refuse to the city of Quebec the advantages that the Parliament and the Government particularly are willing to give them. If one bird is not the spring, the proposition not accepted of MM. Auger and Plamondon should not have any influence on the decision of this Parliament, and, notwithstanding the desire shown by the hon. member for Megantic of vindicating the private interests of MM. Auger and Plamondon, I believe that the interests of the city of Quebec ought to be the first. I hope, considering those interests more general, that the House will be disposed to take a note of the words of the hon. member for Megantic, so that they will not forget that, apart from the lumber trade, there are also in the city of Quebec other things with which it is possible to freight a vessel. As I have said before, we have the cattle trade; we have the phosphates; we have also the products of various mines, and in all those things, there is enough not only to freight one vessel, but a great number of vessels, for France. For those reasons, I hope that the Minister of Customs will be disposed to defer the quasi-threat, so to speak, he made to us of not giving that subvention, and that he will give to the Province and the city of Quebec the advantages the Government are willing to give them, advantages that the hon. member for Megantic would deny them.

Mr. LANGELIER. I have in my hands a paper published in the city of Quebec, L'Evénement, a ministerial paper, and in it I find the following leading article. It is headed "Why?"

"We desire to call the attention of the Government to a fact which seems to be most singular. It is known that the Government have granted a considerable subsidy to the new line of steamers plying between Havre and Montreal. Our despatches from the latter city inform us that the Ulunda, the first steamer that has gone up the St. Lawrence, has left that city with scarcely 100 tons of freight. The despatch adds that the agents of the company, Carbray & Routh, were in hopes that the cargo of the Ulunda could be completed at Halifax. One thing that surprises us enormously is this: We are just informed that Auger & Plamondon, lumber merchants of this city, who have made considerable sales in France, and who were relying on that line to send their lumber goods to France, have been informed that the steamers of that company would not stop at Quebec to take any portion of their cargo. We do not understand why Quebec should be deprived of the advantage which that line is calculated to afford to our merchants who have any business transactions with France."

That line if subsidised by the Government, one of its steamers leaves Montreal without obtaining a complete cargo, a firm at Quebec offered to complete the cargo, and the company refused to stop at Quebec.

Mr. MITCHELL. What was the price of freight named? For the whole thing turns on the price.

Mr. BOWELL. What is the date of that article.

Mr. LANGELIER. The 3rd of June. Whether the facts are correct or not, I do not know. I take my information from the newspaper article and the correspondence which appeared in the paper, and the statements have never been contradicted. The hon. member for Montmagany (Mr. Landry) said I was complaining that the French line did not stop at Quebec. There is no French line. The two steamers have been built on the Clyde, and they are owned by English shareholders. I do not complain of that, but there is no use calling it a French line. It is a line running between Havre and Montreal, which does not stop at M. LANDRY (Montmagany).

Quebec. I remember, when the Ulunda visited Quebec for the first time, that the Captain invited a certain number of newspaper men and prominent citizens to visit her. She was found to be a very fine steamer, quite new, about 2,000 tons burden, and was much praised, and it was expected after the reception she had that she would come back, but she only stopped to change pilots. There is another line to which I have called the attention of the House, the Beaver line, whose steamers do not stop at Quebec, but we have nothing to say against the Beaver line because it is not subsidised, by the Government. When we have a line, however, subsidised to the extent of $50,000 a year to do service between the port of Quebec and France, and which will not stop to receive cargo at Quebec, we have a right to ask the reason why. The hon. member said the cargo was not suitable. Had the steamer been able to obtain a full cargo or nearly so in Montreal, I could understand that objection; but as she had only 100 tons of cargo and her capacity was 2,000 tons, I am at a loss to understand why she refused to take cargo at Quebec. Other steamers which cannot complete cargo at Montreal, complete with deals at Quebec, and why this subsidised line should not follow a similar course requires explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have only a word to add in explanation to the statement I made. The hon. gentleman has read the correspondence in the newspaper.

Mr. LANGELIER. The editorial.

Mr. MITCHELL. The editorial, in which it is charged that a vessel subsidised by the Dominion of Canada, between Canada and France, refused to take a cargo from Quebec. I suppose the vessel was going from Montreal?

Mr. LANGELIER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. He says they had only 100 tons at Montreal, and they refused to stop and take deals at Quebec. I can quite understand why that is so. My hon. friend says that steamships are at this moment taking deals from Quebec. I know, and I have stated before, that even the Allan steamships—first-class vessels—take a portion of deals when they cannot fill up otherwise, or when they have a heavy cargo of wheat, and as they do not desire to sink their vessels, take a lighter cargo of wood to make up for it. It is very evident to me why this vessel did not take the deals at Quebec. It is probable that the freight was insufficient, probably £2 a standard for carrying deal, and, when you take into account the enormous duties which are imposed at Quebec, owing to the action of the ship-laborers' society, and other extravagant expenses there which they impose upon vessels, I can understand that that would create reluctance to take a cargo at Quebec. No one can make me believe that a business agent, controlling steamships in Liverpool or in Montreal, would allow the ships to go without a cargo or refuse to take paying freight at either Quebec or Montreal or anywhere else. Everyone knows that deals are not freight to make a paying cargo for steamships; everyone knows that a steamship will not take them if she can possibly take anything else. If she has enough to ballast her, it would pay her better to run down a few hundred miles to some other port in order to get a paying freight. I believe the true reason was that the freight offered was not as much as would be remunerative in view of the heavy charges in the port of Quebec. The hon. gentleman says this editorial has never been answered. Is that a reason why this vote should be refused? Because an editorial was written making statements as to the management of the line which have not been answered? There are hundreds of thousands of editorials written which are never answered. I have written several myself which have not been answered. I know that the reason was that most of them could not be answered, but I have written some that could have been answered. As a business man I say that, considering the offer which was made, I would rather let the ship go empty than go into Quebec and pay the additional insurance, the cost of loading, and the enormous charges which the Union in Quebec has imposed upon ships, which is something iniquitous. I can understand why the owner or the agent of a steamship, who would not refuse to stop and take a cargo which would be remunerative, would refuse to take a portion of his cargo when he did not know that it would pay.

Mr. PAINT. Apart from all this, the cargo was not ready, neither would it have been for several weeks.

Mr. VALIN. (Translation.) Will the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) tell me what these gentlemen wished to ship? If I understand aright what has just been said, it was lumber, deals, which it was intended to ship. But I do not understand how Mr. Auger could ship lumber, because he is a notary. Did he have any documents to ship, I wonder? Then, Mr. Plamondon is a tanner. He might ship leather, hides or anything of that kind, but besides that, I do not think that he can be considered as an authority in the lumber trade. I never knew him to buy a board or a deal. For my part, I will tell the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) that if we wish to ship anything to France we can do so. I myself have shipped to France large cargoes, not only of lumber, staves and deals, but I have shipped grain; large quantities of grain may be sent there. But as to notaries or tanners, steamers cannot be sent for them, if they only wish to send a few boards as samples, as they are called in the trade. I do not see why the Government should base their opinion on the report of these gentlemen, one of whom is a notary and the other is in the leather trade. They are probably respectable people in their professions; but we do not know them as merchants at Quebec, and they have never shipped, in the sense of the editorial which the hon. gentleman is trying to use, in order to induce a steamer to call at Quebec. Every day we can stop steamers at Quebec to ship lumber. So that this is no reason why the Government should take notice of that the hon. member for Megantic has just said; and I hope that the Government will not take any heed of it.

Mr. LANGELIER. If the hon. gentleman did not understand the translation that I gave of the article I have just read, I will give it to him in French. It reads as follows:

"We do not understand why Quebec should be deprived of the advantage which that line is calculated to afford to our merchants who have any business transactions with France. That line is subsidised by the Government. One of their steamers leaves Montreal without having been able to obtain a cargo. A Quebec firm offers to contribute towards its cargo, and the Quebec agent refuses. Why is that?"

And the article further states—and I can say that the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Valin) is as badly informed on the profession of Messrs. Auger & Plamondon as he is on the facts—the article says:

"We are just informed that Auger & Plamondon, lumber merchants of this city, who have made considerable sales in France, and who were relying on that line to send their lumber goods to France, have been informed that the steamers of that company would not stop at Quebec to take any portion of their cargo."

Mr. VALIN. (Translation.) Is it a fact that Messrs. Auger & Plamondon are lumber merchants? How long have they been in that business?

Mr. LANGELIER. (Translation.) This shows that the hon. member does not know what is taking place in Quebec. These gentlemen have been in the lumber business in Quebec for seven or eight years. As I said awhile ago, there may be more than one Auger in the world. The hon. member knows a Mr. Auger who is a notary, but there is more than one Mr. Auger in Quebec. There is also a Mr. Auger, who has been in the lumber trade for over twenty years.

Mr. VALIN. (Translation.) I can tell the hon. member that there is not one Mr. Auger, nor one Mr. Plamondon, known at Quebec as lumber merchants.

Mr. LANGELIER. (Translation.) It is quite possible that the hon. member does not know that; no doubt there are a great many other things that he does not know. But it is a perfectly positive fact that there is a Mr. Auger who is a lumber merchant in Quebec, and has been for several years. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Valin) says that a lumber cargo should not be taken from a party because that party happens to be a notary. Well, has a ship-owner the right to require from those who wish to use his vessel that they should pass an examination? And if he is offered cattle for a cargo, has he a right to say: Hold on a bit; are you a lawyer or a notary or a cattle dealer? The hon. member has not always exercised the same profession; he has been a ship-builder, he has done something else before that, and will probably do something else after.

Mr. VALIN. (Translation.) The hon. member will understand that when one abandons a trade, one must be known in a second trade or in a third. But here these gentlemen have never changed their profession, and they will probably exercise it for a long time without carrying on a trade of any kind.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). (Translation.) I shall ask the hon. member for Megantic if he really believes this editorial of L'Événement, of which he has just quoted an extract, as evidence, and whether he believes in that evidence? Evidently he cannot.

Mr. STAIRS. Some time ago I had an interview with the agent of the steamship company. I did not pay particular attention to what he said, but, as far as I can remember, I will explain it to the House. He told me that there was no real offer at Quebec at all; the whole thing being contingent upon a sale being made in France. The agents in Quebec were to cable to Havre to see if they could sell these deals so that they could make a fair cargo for the vessel, and I think, as my hon. friend from Northumberland has stated, that the price was to be only 40s. a standard, a very low price. I believe the agent would have taken that if it was a firm offer, but if they kept the steamer there waiting it would not be enough to pay, as there was a very slight probability of getting anything.

Mr. LANGELIER. It would be as good an answer to say that, because it was not paying to get a cargo in Quebec or any other port in Canada, these steamships could go to New York, although they have a subsidy. The subsidy is voted to them as an encouragement, and, if they go to a port simply because they get paying freight, they should not come to our ports at all unless they get a paying freight. Whether the information given is correct or not, it is not in accordance with the information given by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs). The information given in the paper is that the agent said he would not take any cargo in Quebec. These are the words of the editorial.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Do you believe that?

Mr. LANGELIER. I have been informed that the steamers of that company would not stop at Quebec to take any portion of their cargo.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman drew inaccurate deductions altogether from the utterance made by my hon. friend from Halifax. What he stated was that there was no bond fide offer made to this steamer of any freight, but that they desired the steamer to remain in Quebec until they could ascertain from France whether they could obtain a market for their deals. That was the statement. I do not vouch for the accuracy of it, because I know nothing about it. The hon. gentleman says that, unless they would do that, they might go to New York with equal propriety, or to any other American port, to get their cargo. There was nothing to warrant that deduction from the language of my hon. friend. On the contrary, if the statement made by the member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) be correct, the steamship company had a good reason for not remaining. I asked the committee to allow the vote to stand, in order that I might ascertain what were the facts of the case. Before we go into committee again I will endeavor to ascertain whether the statement made in the paper which has been read is borne out by the facts.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The editorial, as read and translated by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier), does not at all convey the meaning given to it by that hon. gentleman. The paper does not say that the ship has refused any cargo at all. They have refused that kind of cargo, and that is all, and that is the meaning of the article.

Mr. LANGELIER. They have refused that particular cargo, and stated in their refusal that they would take none at all. That is the statement in the paper.

Mr. WELDON. I hope the hon. gentleman will also give us the correspondence that took place with France on the subject.

Mr. BOWELL. As far as I can. But I can only reiterate what I have said: If we have accomplished the object which Parliament had in view in granting the subsidy, I cannot see what difference it makes to Canada whether France gave a subsidy or not; but I will, as far as possible, ascertain what the facts are.

Mr. MILLS. We want to know what the trade is to be also.

Item postponed.

For subsidy to line of steamers to run between Liverpool, or London, or both, and St. John, N.B., Halifax, N.S., a port in the Dominion to be the terminal port..... $25,000

Mr. WELDON. What has been done under that grant?

Mr. BOWELL. This subsidy is paid to the Furniss line of steamers at the rate of $1,500 a trip. Up to the 1st June eleven trips have been made, and $16,500 have been paid under the contract. The contract is still continued. I suppose they run either to Liverpool or London, wherever they can get freight.

Subsidy to steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé, and intermediate ports ..... $12,500

Mr. WELDON. What steamer performs this service?

Mr. BOWELL. The Admiral.

Mr. WELDON. I have understood that this steamer does not make connection with the railway from St. John, with the night train that brings western passengers, and that she leaves Dalhousie before the morning train arrives.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed by the Minister of Railways that connection is made at Dalhousie. There may be times when the train is behind, or the vessel may be delayed by stress of weather.

Mr. WELDON. I am informed that she leaves in the morning before the night train from the west arrives, and, consequently the passengers have to remain over.

For steam communication from Port Mulgrave, at the terminus of the Eastern Extension Railway, to East Bay, Cape Breton..... $6,000

Mr. KIRK. I would like to enquire whether the Government intend to put an additional sum in the Supplementary Estimates to enable this service to be performed during the winter season. It seems that this subsidy, together with an amount nearly equal to that granted by the Local Government of Nova Scotia, enables the steamer to do the work in the summer season only. The steamer that was under contract for the performance of this service in summer ran nearly all the winter between Port Mulgrave and Cape Canso and Arichat. Application has been made for an additional subsidy to enable the steamer to continue the service for another year, and a strong petition has been sent up by the people of those ports for that purpose. I think $3,000 more would support a boat all the year round, and the traffic that is accumulating on this route would prove very profitable to the vessel.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position now to say whether the Government will add anything to this amount in the Supplementary Estimates. I have made a note of it, however.

To provide for subsidy of $1,500 a voyage, for five voyages, of steamers from Prince Edward Island to Great Britain, or a continental port..... $7,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was that taken advantage of during the past year?

Mr. BOWELL. No; not for the past two years.

Mr. WELDON. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the service being performed there now. A gentleman has started a vessel running from Miramichi to Liverpool and calling at Charlottetown. He has performed one satisfactory trip both ways, affording great accommodation both to Miramichi and Charlottetown. She is now on her second trip. I hope some arrangement will be made, not only to give an additional subsidy to that vessel, but to furnish a first-class vessel that will perform the service that is needed. I hope, under the circumstances, that not only $1,500 but an additional subsidy will be granted as they deserve it.

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been an application before the Government for two months for the service of which the hon. member for St. John speaks. In expectation of getting this subsidy a vessel has been purchased called the Clifton, 2,665 tons, and she is now running between Miramichi, Prince Edward Island and Great Britain, London I believe. She is put on to carry produce, potatoes, oats, cattle, horses and sheep, and fill up with lumber when she cannot get a more remunerative cargo. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the application made, and to endorse the statement of the member for St. John. I hope in the Supplementary Estimates an amount will appear for a service between Charlottetown and Miramichi.

Steam service between Canada and Antwerp..... $24,000

Mr. VAIL. How many trips have been made?

Mr. BOWELL. The White Cross line received $2,000 a trip up to 1st June last. Six trips have been made, and $12,000 paid in accordance to the contract.

Mr. VAIL. At whose instance was the grant made?

Mr. BOWELL. I really cannot say just now.

Mr. VAIL. The fact of the matter is, that this line, as well as the line to Germany, brings out beet-root sugar at 14 shillings a ton, which sugar comes into competition with the West India sugar, and is killing out the West India trade. The vessels carry nothing back from this country. They go to American ports. They call at Halifax on the return trip, and some one runs up to the post office for the letters. Sometimes there is only one letter, and then they sail. They leave nothing in the port. There is nothing to ship by them. I consider the grant is wholly thrown away, and it is merely to encourage beet-root sugar importation, which has the result of driving away the West India trade. I do not think this sum should be voted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has any contract been made, and, if so, what are its terms?

Mr. BOWELL. There is a contract, but I am not able to say what its terms are. I will make enquiries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt there is much to be said as to the policy under certain conditions of assisting in developing trade between this country and other countries, where there exists material for carrying on considerable trade. I have very great doubt as to whether many of these grants have not been made without looking very far ahead to see what we could exchange with those countries. The facts which the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) mentioned are rather significant and suggestive. In coming down after certain sums have been paid by the country on these accounts, the Minister should be able to give considerable details as to what trade is going on. The hon. member for Digby has stated that there is practically no export trade from Canada either to Antwerp or Germany. The Minister of Customs will be able to inform us on that head, whether considerable quantities of our goods have been shipped by those lines. To merely bring over at very low rates a considerable quantity of beet-root sugar is a service which can be performed at less cost than the amount of this vote.

Mr. BOWELL. It may be possible—I am not prepared to say that the hon. member for Digby has not made a correct statement—that the vessels bring out beet-root sugar. The committee will remember that the principal object the Government and the House had in view when they placed that item in the Estimates, and also the item respecting communication with Germany, was in order to secure German immigration to this country, knowing, as they did, that the vessels coming from Antwerp and German ports to the United States carried immigrants to that country. It was believed that by giving a subsidy to these steamship lines and compelling them to land at a Canadian port the result would be that a large portion of the German immigration would be induced to come to Canada.

Mr. VAIL. Has that hope been realised?

Mr. BOWELL. To a considerable extent.

Mr. VAIL. Will the Minister of Agriculture tell us how many immigrants were brought out by this line?

Mr. POPE. Not a very large number. The steamers have been very unfortunate. The company have lost two or three steamers.

Mr. VAIL. Not this line.

Mr. POPE. Yes; if it is the line I think it is, from Montreal to Antwerp, of which Mr. Munderloch is agent. Several immigrants have come out. Most of them have settled in this section of the country, and many have gone west to the Pacific. Quite a large number of Belgians have settled in Quebec.

Mr. VAIL. Very few immigrants have settled in Nova Scotia during last year, probably a dozen, but I do not think any considerable number came by that line, and really the only object there can be in subsidising this line would seem to be to bring in sugar into this country to compete with the West India sugar.

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the importation of beet-root sugar would injure the West India sugar trade. If it had that effect I do not think it would be wise to encourage its importation, but the hon. gentleman must recollect that it is absolutely necessary for our refiners to have the same class of sugar that is used in the Scotch refineries, and if we shut out a certain proportion of this beet-root sugar it would do the West India trade very much harm. There would be less sugar refined in the Dominion altogether, because the low grade Scotch sugars, which are made to a large extent out of this beet-root sugar, would compete so closely with our own refiners that they would not be able to compete with it. It is quite certain that our refineries in the Dominion are using a far larger proportion of cane sugar than is used in Scotland, and they want a certain proportion of the beet-root sugar, which is a hard, crystallised sugar, to mix with the cane sugar. I do not think it would be to the interest of our refiners, or to the interest of the West India trade, which we all wish to see prosper, and especially the Maritime Provinces, that this small proportion of beet-root sugar should be shut out.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not a question of shutting out beet-root sugar, as the hon. gentleman seems to think, but whether we shall provide free freights for beet-root sugar, as against the regular freights which are paid on the West India sugar.

Mr. STAIRS. I was not speaking of the question of subsidies at all, which is another question, but I was answering the argument of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail). He argued that it would be to the disadvantage of the West India trade to allow a certain proportion of this beet-root sugar to come in. I was trying to point out that was not the case.

Mr. VAIL. I do not think the hon. gentleman has looked at the statistics of the West India trade, otherwise he would have seen that the encouragement of the importation of this beet-root sugar has had the effect, within the last six months of the last year, of bringing in seven times as much from foreign countries as we imported before, while that imported from the West Indies has been about 28 per cent. of that which was imported for the previous six months. If subsidising vessels to bring in beet-root sugar will have that effect on the West India trade, which is the most important trade that Halifax has, or can have, the hon. gentleman must see that although it might benefit one or two refiners it must ultimately injure our trade with the West Indies.

Mr. STAIRS. I will admit, for the sake of argument, that seven times as much beet-root sugar came in during those six months as came in for the corresponding period of the previous year, but that does not prove that it injured the West India trade; because he will find that if he shut out that sugar the sugar would not be refined in the Dominion. I say, if you shut it out it will be impossible for our refiners to compete with the Greenock sugar, and instead of the sugar coming in from the West Indies it would come in as refined or cheap yellow sugar.

Mr. BLAKE. There is where the hon. gentleman begs the question, as he did in answer to my interjection. He seems to think that the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) is proposing that beet-root sugar should be shut out in some way or other. My hon. friend does not propose that, but he says if you subsidise a steamer trading from a port which enables it to import beet-root sugar free, if you practically give free freight for beet-root sugar, while West India sugar has to be imported in vessels which have to find paying freights, you are producing unfair competition between the two. Put them both on the same footing, and if it is necessary to import beet-root sugar, import it at a proper freight, as you do with the other. But you are giving an undue advantage to the one, because you are practically importing beet-root sugar free while the other has to pay a freight.

Mr. STAIRS. I do not think I was begging the question. I was replying fairly, I think, to the argument of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail), whose line of argument was not the same as that of the hon. the leader of the Opposition. As to the advisability of these subsidies, that is one question, and I am prepared to defend them from another standpoint altogether. But I was not speaking of that question at all.

Mr. VAIL. It is plain, as the leader of the Opposition has stated, that if you subsidise steamers to bring beet-root sugar here, and you do not do the same for West India sugar, you are certainly giving a great advantage to the one over the other, in the matter of competition. Under the present system I understand you can import beet-root sugar, which has 96 per cent. of saccharine matter in it, and land it at Halifax at $3.90 per 100 pounds, whereas it costs $4.25 to import it from Demerara, which is at a little less distance away than Germany. And when you consider that Demerara sugar has only 85 or 86 per cent. of saccharine matter, and beet-root sugar has 96, it makes a difference in that respect alone of something like $1 per hundred. The hon. gentleman will see that this is bringing beet-root sugar into very close competition with the other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What we want to see is, whether we are getting value for our money in these subsidies. Now this subsidy to Antwerp and the subsidy to Germany must be taken together, and we ought to have from one Minister or another some details of the trade which has been developed. In the first instance, when you create a trade, as the Minister of Customs recently said, a good deal must be taken on trust, but after the steamers have been employed a certain number of months or years we ought to receive full details of what has been done, what sort of trade is in process of being developed; and as to that we have not received any information as yet, except from the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail).

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman disputed the point I made, that one or two of these steamers have been lost. The steamers which were put on were understood not to make more than six or seven trips the first year. I think it was the second year or the last of the first year that two of these steamers were lost, which has had the effect of disarranging things. The object, of course, was to encourage the trade, and a better man or a more painstaking man than this gentleman could not have been found in the country. He has been of great assistance in bringing immigrants from Antwerp, from which a great deal of the German immigration comes.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has been asking to what extent German immigrants have availed themselves of this line of steamers, and the Minister was not able to give the House any information on this subject. The hon. gentleman comes down again and asks us to vote $24,000 to subsidise this line. We ask what the steamers are doing for the money, how far they have succeeded in securing immigration to this country, and the hon. gentleman has not given any information at all. On the contrary, he said it was a line of steamers that had been singularly unfortunate—that had lost two of its steamers. Several hon. gentlemen said the steamers lost did not belong to this line at all.

Mr. POPE. They did.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister of Customs was asked what the terms of the contract with this line of steamers were, and he said he was unable to give the House that information. So that we have the Ministers coming down and asking for this subsidy without stating what the terms of the contract are or what advantages the country has secured from this contract during the past 12 months.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has a very happy faculty of putting words in people's mouths which they never uttered. He said I was unable to state to the committee what the terms of the contract were. I read the terms of the contract, and I informed the committee how many trips had been made and how much money had been paid.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman said he had not them.

Mr. BOWELL. I said I had not the conditions of the contract, but I gave the terms of the contract, so far as the money subsidy is concerned, and stated that the reason for subsidising both of these lines was for the purpose of encouraging German immigration.

Mr. VAIL. I find, on looking at the returns of the Minister of Agriculture, that the total number of immigrants who arrived at Halifax during the past year was 5,604.

Mr. POPE. They come to Montreal.

Mr. VAIL. These steamers are to run from Halifax, and they go to United States ports and load there, and call back at Halifax.

Mr. POPE. That is in winter; they come to Montreal in summer.

Mr. VAIL. The nationalities of the immigrants I find to be: English, 4,097; Scotch, 197; Irish, 697; and other countries, 608.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister of Customs, of course, told us how much money was paid and how many trips were made, but the question is much wider than that: we want to know what advantage is derived from this subsidy. When we are told that the object is to encourage immigration—

Mr. POPE. And trade.

Mr. BLAKE. But the main object was to encourage immigration. A little while ago, when we were at the trade, it was immigrants; now, when we get to the immigrants it is trade. What I have to say is, that we ought to know what has been done in the way of encouraging trade, so far as that was the object, and what has been done in the way of obtaining immigration, so far as that was the object; and when the Government, after having asked for these votes, as speculative votes, and having got the money, come down and ask us to renew them, we are entitled to know in detail what the result of the experiment has been. That is information we ought to have; but here we are, in the sixth month of the Session, in Supply, and hon. Ministers are not yet in a position to give information on which these Estimates can be intelligently disposed of by the committee. My hon. friend asks me to read these remarks of the Minister of Finance last year:

"This is an arrangement made with a line of steamers to sail between Antwerp and Canada, once a month, $2,000 for the round trip. The company made five or six trips last summer."

That was in the summer of 1883; they have been doing business, I presume, during the summer of 1884, and now we have come to the third year:

"The object of granting the money is to encourage, if possible, German immigration."

The Minister of Finance did not say trade. If it had been the Minister of Immigration, I suppose he would have said trade.

Mr. POPE. I say both.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman does not take care, he will fall between the two stools, and get lost, like those steamers:

"We provide that the vessels shall be of certain size and speed and have accommodation for steerage passengers. The arrangement made with respect to the Hamburg service is that they shall perform not less than ten trips during the year. One of the steamers was lost on the way, having some passengers on board."

If the hon. gentleman would only arrange that the rest of the steamers should be lost, perhaps we should get rid of the subsidy.

Mr. VAIL. The German immigration to Montreal and Quebec does not seem to be very great. I see that during the past year none at all arrived at the port of Quebec from Germany or Norway, and in the arrivals and departures at Montreal the number of Germans is put down at 53.

Mr. MILLS. So that the result of this expenditure of $48,000 for these two lines is, at most, to secure less than 700 people from Germany, although we know that the larger number of Germans and Norwegians who come to this country come by way of Liverpool, and not by these lines of steamers.

For steam communication between Canada and Germany ..... $24,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What port of Germany does this line sail to?

Mr. POPE. I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. MILLS. This was to promote immigration, and surely the Minister ought to know what port the vessels sail to.

Mr. POPE. I explained the other, which I happened to know by chance.

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps the Minister will tell us what Minister we are to apply to.

Mr. POPE. The Minister of Finance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will cable to ascertain.

Mr. POPE. I will.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the item had better stand until you get your reply.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman had better consult the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint) on this subject. He is the only man in the House who knows anything about those questions.

Maintenance of Government steamers..... $130,000

Mr. McLELAN. The steamers Sir James Douglas, British Columbia $15,000 estimated for her repairs. Not expected to be anything more than the ordinary wear and tear. No special repairs, except a new screw and probably a shaft. The Napoleon, $26,000; the Druid, $20,000; the Newfield, extensive repairs and new boiler, $26,000, maintenance and repairs. A portion of the repairs have been paid out of 18-4-85. This year the Newfield has earned nearly enough to pay for her repairs by salvage in assisting other steamers. The Northern Light, estimated $20,000, not very large repairs, but the ordinary expenses of running, from $18,000 to $20,000 last year. The repairs amounted to something like $20,000 last year; she will not require any special repairs. Lansdowne, $22,000, estimated for the running expenses. Total, $130,000.

Mr. WELDON. What is the total cost of the Lansdowne?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the figures, but it borders on $55,000 to $65,000.

Mr. MILLS. Where are those different steamers engaged?

Mr. McLELAN. The Sir James Douglas on the Pacific coast; the Napoleon and Druid in the Gulf; the Newfield about the northern part of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island; the Lansdowne intended to be employed in the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. WELDON. Has any attempt been made to increase the speed of the Lansdowne?

Mr. McLELAN. The engineer recommended a new screw, but it has been found, on later trial, that when submerged more at the stern she does better.

Mr. BLAKE. That does not include any of the original cost of the Lansdowne?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Does this amount for the Northern Light include what is necessary to make her fit for service during the approaching winter?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Does it embrace any portion of the ice boat service?

Mr. McLELAN. No; nothing further for the ice service, but only for the running of the Northern Light. She was specially repaired last year out of the expenses 1884-85, and this year she does not require heavy repairs.

Mr. BLAKE. What expected repairs belong to the vote of this year?

Mr. McLELAN. $20,000 was put down for maintenance. We keep the engineer on all the year round. We have to take the engine apart and make the ordinary repairs. Almost every season some considerable part of the machinery has to go to the foundry and workshops to be put in order. From $2,000 to $6,000 is the ordinary repairs during the year.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any intention to propose another vote for another steamer for that communication?

Mr. McLELAN. We have had enquiries made as to the best means of crossing at the cape. We have had a man engaged in examining the service there. He spent some weeks while the boats were crossing, and took observations, and he will visit the place shortly, so as to have observations in summer and winter. On receiving the results of his observations we will decide what action to take.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this some one who is familiar with the locality?

Mr. McLELAN. He was with the Northern Light one winter, and he crossed a number of times on the ice at the cape.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope, after the experience of this year, better arrangements will be made in connection with the winter crossing. I think it has been made very plain that the arrangements are not such as they ought to be, as to the shelter and the accommodation and the supplies. I think that ought to demand the attention of the Minister.

Mr. McLELAN. It is intended to improve the system of crossing. The matter has been placed under the charge of my Department. Before it was managed by a contract from the Post Office Department, and private individuals had the matter under their control. The system was much in want of some controlling head, and it was decided to place it under my Department, in connection with the Northern Light, as the officials in that Department were more likely to be familiar with that service. We hope that, by next season, we will have the service better attended to.

Mr. VAIL. I am told that the Lansdowne is even slower than the Glendon. I did not think it was possible that any steamer could be slower than the Glendon. I hope it is not the case, for she has cost a great deal of money. If the engines are too small for the hull, a great mistake has been made.

Mr. McLELAN. When they learned the trim of the vessel, the screw had a better hold of the water, and I think she averaged from 7½ to 8½ knots an hour. That is not a very great speed for a steamer, but the Lansdowne was not intended for a fast boat. After the plans were made, it was thought better that she should be built for ice service, and before she was launched she was sheathed with a covering, which decreases her speed about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  knots an hour. I am told by engineers that, by changing the screw, that will be to a great extent, remedied.

Mr. BLAKE. Was there anything in the contract as to speed?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I understood from the Minister that $26,000 was to be expended on the steamer Sir James Douglas

Mr. McLELAN. No; we estimate $15,000 for this year for the Douglas.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). For repairs?

Mr. McLELAN. No; for the maintenance of the vessel and for any repairs that may be needed. She will require a new screw and a new shaft.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). The speed of the vessel is very much under what it ought to be at that cost.

Mr. BLAKE. Does this include the Canadienne?

Mr. McLELAN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. What is her armament?

Mr. McLELAN. Two or four, I am not sure which.

Mr. WELDON. She was used as a ram last fall; she ran down a vessel in Gaspé Bay.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. We should like to have some information as to the expenditure of the money voted last year, and some intimation that this was not an issue whereby some advantage to the commercial and mercantile interests of the country were united.

Mr. McLELAN. Since 1883 we have had the examination of masters and mates on our coasting and inland service. A number of men have been examined and certificates issued in the last two years, and I think the service has been greatly improved in this way.

Mr. PLATT. Is the Minister aware that the law has been disregarded in many cases, as to the production of certificates at the different ports?

Mr. McLELAN. That must be the fault of the collectors of Customs, in not asking for the certificates. I know that many vessels have been held by the collectors because the master or mate had not got his certificate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This vote is $500 more than it appears to be, because, on the next page I find that $500 is entered for John Taylor, with a note, "previously paid out of vote, examination of masters and mates, as he also acts as clerk to the chairman of the board."

Mr. LANGELIER. Is any portion of that sum used for the schools of navigation that used to exist at Quebec, Halifax and St. John?

Mr. McLELAN. In the city of Quebec we have been paying a man there who taught the school, and we have appointed him examiner of masters and mates. In that way he has been enabled to maintain the school, and has given a good deal of assistance to those who are desirous of obtaining certificates of masters and mates. But at St. John and Halifax there is no sum given to any of the teachers of the schools of navigation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What about that $500?
Mr. McLELAN.

Mr. McLELAN. We cannot exactly fix the amount, because it depends something on the travelling fees of the examiners of masters and mates, and we did not reduce that $500, not knowing what their travelling expenses might be this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was spent last year?

Mr. McLELAN. $5,580, and the fees were $2,000.

Mr. BOWELL. My recollection of the duties of collectors of Customs is that, as a rule, when the captains and mates upon vessels land at their ports, perhaps once a year, and they have ascertained that they are duly licensed to perform their duties, they are not in the habit of troubling them afterwards. However, as the hon. gentleman has called attention to it, I will make enquiries, and see whether that duty has been neglected to the extent the hon. gentleman mentioned. It must always be borne in mind that the inspectors of these boats, before they are permitted to run in the spring, satisfy themselves that the captains and mates who are to manage the boats are properly certificated. If they are not, they will not grant them the permit or allow the vessel to run at all. It may be that the collectors, knowing that to be the duty of the inspectors, may not have been as rigid as they were formerly in asking for this certificate.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria.) It has not unfrequently happened in Victoria that the mate of a vessel may possess a master's certificate for an inland coasting vessel, and the captain of the boat is an American citizen, having no certificate at all. The mate goes to the Custom house and clears the vessel; then, even before the hawser is let go, up jumps the Yankee skipper and takes charge of the vessel right in our own waters. I would like to see that put a stop to. I have seen that myself several times from the docks of the Hudson Bay Company's wharves.

Mr. McLELAN. We will have that attended to.

For purchase of life-boats, stations and life-preservers, maintenance of crews and rewards for saving life.....	$8,000
---	---------

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would just remark to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that on the coast of Lake Huron, which he knows is extremely exposed, there have been of late some demands, I believe, submitted to him for the establishment of one or more additional life boat stations. The trade of Lake Huron is very considerable and increasing, and it is hard to imagine a coast upon which there is more danger than that, when there is a severe gale from the south or south-west, or even from the north-west. Several points have been named—has the hon. gentleman come to any decision as to the desirability of establishing an additional life-boat station on Lake Huron?

Mr. McLELAN. From information that I have received, applications that have been made to the Department, I have felt that one might be established at Collingwood. It is contracted for and is being built. I propose to station one at Collingwood, one at Pelee Island, one at Cobourg, one at Goderich, one at Fort Stanley and one at Toronto. Toronto has been a station for life-boats before, but the the boat was not very good, and it was proposed to put one of the more modern boats at Toronto. I have adopted the plan of appointing a captain and paying him something for taking charge of the boat, and he selects the crew. These men are to practice once a fortnight, and at the end of the season we pay them for the number of times they have practised.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Minister any life-saving station at Long Point, upon Lake Erie, which is the most exposed portion of the whole coast? More wrecks occur there than at any other point upon Lake Erie, or, in fact, upon any of the upper lakes.

Mr. DAWSON. There are several points on Lake Huron a little farther west where it was contemplated to have life-saving boats. The shipping is increasing very largely on the western lakes, and I think there are other points farther west than Collingwood where it is very desirable to have something of the kind.

Mr. McLELAN. I know there are a number of other applications. I am having them considered, and we will probably have a few more boats constructed when this contract is terminated, and it has proved satisfactory.

Mr. McNEILL. There is a great need for life-saving appliances farther west than the points mentioned by the hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not with me a list of the points that have been named, but only those that we are considering now.

Mr. CHARLTON. If any station is to be placed on the north shore of Lake Erie, certainly there should be one at Long Point, Port Stanley, which the Minister mentioned, is by no means as exposed as the coast along Long Point.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I would impress upon the Minister the necessity of establishing a life-boat service at Burlington Beach, near the Burlington Bay Canal. There have been several wrecks there and a number of lives lost within a few years. Certainly it is most desirable that there should be some service of that kind established.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I desire to enquire of the Minister whether the Government have decided to give a fitting reward to Mr. Joseph Vincent, a brave man, in recognition of saving numerous lives from drowning.

Mr. McLELAN. The matter has been under the consideration of the Department, it having been brought to our notice that this man has saved between thirty and forty people from drowning in and about the harbor of Montreal. It certainly is a case deserving of some testimonial from the Government, and a testimonial is in course of preparation.

Mr. PLATT. As regards the location of the life-saving stations, the Minister has told us that it is a very difficult matter to decide on the exact location on a long line of coast with many dangerous points. But there are stations at points within fifteen miles of which there has not been a wreck for ten or fifteen years. Hon. members who point out dangerous places will not be likely to get life-boats placed at them. I cannot understand why the very simple method is not adopted of asking master mariners to give their opinion. The Minister has the names of all certificated masters and mates for our inland waters, and he might easily issue circulars, asking them to state what points were most in need of life-saving stations, and it should be understood that their answers will rule the Department. It is true that in one case they were asked as to the location for a life-saving station. But their recommendation was not followed, and it was placed where the mariners said it would be no use. It is all very well to send a marine engineer to report. But neither the Department nor Parliament know anything about such matters, compared with the knowledge possessed by the mariners. Their advice and direction should be satisfactory in every case. Unless our life-boats or life-saving stations are more efficiently maintained in the future than in the past, it is not worth while for the Government to spend much money in increasing the number. It would be better to increase the efficiency of those already in existence. I see by a return which was brought down at the close of last Session, asking for the location of all the life-boats in Canada and a description of the boats and other particulars, that a very meagre statement is furnished. A single page contains the whole report of the life-saving service of this country, which costs $8,000 a year. There were only 8 life-boats last year on our extended and dangerous coast. The crews amount to very little; there are no articles of enlistment; there is a captain, who is paid a small salary for taking care of the boat. He has to select a crew and practice twice a month. He gets a crew together—anybody he can. If the Minister will look at the accounts he will find he has not paid the same crew twice, but that there was a different set of men every time. There is no instruction given to the crew, for there are no teachers. They draw their pay; but, as I have said, there is no instructor and no prescribed system of drill for them to pursue while on the water. In Prince Edward county we have two excellent boats; but we have the captains and boats, and they are all. The locations are not the best, and sometimes the boats are not available. In case of a disaster occurring near the station volunteer crews have to be depended on, and I believe they are not able to get out the boat in anything like a respectable length of time. One of the boats is no less than one or two miles from the shore. When it was necessary to get it out last fall a man's team was taken from the field, against his earnest protests, and after several hours the boat was dragged to the shore on sleds. The captain was not so much to blame, for he had no crew to call upon. No man need join him unless he chooses. On that occasion only four of the crew selected by the captain got into the boat, after all. If there were a few stations really efficient, where crews were stationed, and had efficient instruction and obtained some idea of what drill or practice should be, that would be of some use. To expend the present amount, without speaking of a larger sum, will be throwing money away, if the service continues of the present character. If there were one good station, entirely efficient, which would form the model for other stations and give spirit to the service, other crews would take pride in becoming efficient. We have, however, no regular crews. The character of the boats is perhaps all that can be desired in boats costing the sum expended. I should like the Minister to state where the boats ordered are being constructed.

Mr. McLELAN. It is true we have not had many stations at which captains and crews were appointed and were kept in practice. I think the hon. gentleman in his own county has the first and only ones, with the exception of one appointed a few weeks ago. The life-boats referred to in the list by the hon. gentleman are old metallic life-boats.

Mr. PLAIT. It included the surf-boats.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; and yours too. The places of the station where certain boats should be found were stated. In case they were called for, crews could be gathered together and go out. In consequence of this system, and of the boats not being in charge of anyone, they were neglected, and when called for were very often unfit to use. I have been trying this other plan. I purchased from Buffalo two of the most improved boats of the present day. They were placed in the hon. gentleman's own county. I had the captain of the life-boat service of the lakes of the United States, Captain Dobbin, come and examine the location and points at which the boats were to be placed. Captain Dobbin decided that the point referred to by the hon. gentleman was the best point for the boat, because the roads led to different places; and the boats are on carriages, and can be dragged by teams. Sometimes you have to go to the windward of where the wreck is, in order to be carried within reach of the wreck. Captain Dobbin, who has had very long experience in the life-saving services on the lakes in the United States, has said that that was a proper place to locate the boat, and he also approved of the location of one at Wellington. At Wellington the boat-house is built, and at Poplar Point the boat-house was rented for a time, but the matter came up this spring, and I have directed that a boat-house should be provided there.

Mr. PLATT. On the lake shore side or the bay side ?

Mr. McLELAN. I think on the same point where Capt. Dobbin had it located. I have twelve of these boats building, six for the Maritime Provinces and six for the lakes. These others are being built on the same patterns, but they are not so costly as those we imported. I propose to put them in charge of a captain, making him responsible for the care of the boat and the training of the crew, and we will see that he performs those duties.

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) that this $8,000 is practically wasted. I think it is a small sum to put against the value of even one life saved, if it were saved in one year or five years ; and I think it is to be regretted that the sum is not larger, and that more life-saving stations are not to be established. I am glad the hon. Minister has decided to place one at Owen Sound, and I think that with the increasing trade which is going on on Georgian Bay there should be more. When the Jane Ward was lost at Collingwood, some thirteen lives were in imminent danger, close to the shore, but as there was no life-saving station there the people who were looking on from the shore were helpless ; whereas, if they had had a boat and a captain they could have had a voluntary crew, who would have gone to the wreck and perhaps have saved these lives, but they were lost because there were no appliances to save them. I think the Minister, instead of asking for $8,000, should have asked for a much larger sum, for the establishment of more of these stations. I think one should have been established between Meaford and Owen Sound, and also one or two on Manitoulin Island, where there have been some disastrous wrecks the last few years, and almost every one of them within a short distance of the shore. The sailing there is peculiarly dangerous, and in many cases had there been life-saving appliances there is no doubt a number of lives could have been saved. I think there is no difficulty in ascertaining at what points it is most desirable to place these stations, for it is only necessary to look at the records of where these wrecks have taken place in order to ascertain the most important points to place them. I agree with the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt), with reference to having trained men to man these boats ; but even if that were not done, and a boat and a captain were supplied at the proper places, I have no doubt they would be very serviceable in saving many lives, which otherwise would be lost.

Mr. PLATT. The hon. gentleman must have failed to comprehend my remarks if he thinks I complain that the amount is too large. It is not the amount, but the character of the expenditure, that I complain of.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the money was practically wasted.

Mr. PLATT. That might be the case if $100,000 instead of $8,000 were spent, if the service was inefficient. I believe that the money has been too much scattered, and that we should have had a life-saving station which would serve as a school of training for the crews of other stations. We have eight or ten stations, and we are about to establish some ten or twelve more by this same expenditure, and for that number of stations $8,000 is not sufficient to carry them on successfully or efficiently. With reference to the location of life-boat stations in my own county, I cannot possibly see, nor can any of the sailors in that part of the country see, why the life boat should be placed on the bay side, where by no possibility can wrecks occur, and from which the boat could not be taken to the lake shore, except by carrying it on a wagon. I could not see why it should have been placed where it is, unless for the convenience of the captain. The station at Wellington is looked upon by the mariners on that coast as being an out-of-the-way place, but as the life-boat house has been built there, I suppose the station will remain. I would strongly urge the sending one man from each crew in connection with the life-boat service, to the United States for instruction, in order to qualify them as the instructors of the others. These captains are desirous of receiving instruction, but they have received no list of instructions. I have taken the pains, so far as my own county is concerned, to procure books of instructions from the other side, and they have been endeavoring to learn something of the system. But what they complain of most is, that they have no enlisted crew. They may have volunteers to act under them during a season, but they may dislike the first drill, and they cannot be got back. I think the service, as on the other side, should be regulated by law, that the crews should be enlisted, and should be as much under the command of the captain as if they were in military service. At present the captain has no command of them, and when they go out in the boat one is as much a captain as the other. Then there are complaints of the absence of the appliances which should accompany each boat. I believe that there are only three or four life-belts, or life-preservers, as they are commonly called. There is not one for each of the crew, to say nothing of those whom they seek to rescue. There should be at least twelve preservers or belts for each boat. I am glad the Minister is securing the building of these boats on this side of the line, instead of getting them built at Buffalo, and I suppose the boat wagons will likewise be built here. The two wagons which came to my own county were built in Buffalo, the freight was paid by rail to the town of Picton, 12 miles beyond Wellington, although it was known that they were to be stationed there, and they remained for some time drying in the sun, and then it cost $3 or $10 to take them back to Wellington. In various ways the service has been so managed that the people now look upon it as of no account. There is no county on the inland lakes where a better crew can be got than in the county of Prince Edward, if they have sufficient encouragement. I have no doubt the suggestions I have given to the Minister, if acted upon, will do something towards infusing some spirit into the life-saving service, and I hope that the Minister will establish one station which will be looked upon as a school, or centre, for the training of other crews. That can never be done until we have an enlisted crew, and some drill instructions sent out to them. They have not even any instruction as to the resuscitation of the apparently drowned ; they know nothing about it. That is one of the first things taught to the enlisted surfmen on the other side ; but here, when a man is rescued, who has been a few minutes in the water, no attempt would be made to resuscitate him. The men feel themselves so helpless that they do not care to remain in the service. With regard to the rewards for saving life, I would like the hon. Minister to state on what principle they are given ; how does he obtain his information as to whether they are deserved or not ?

Mr. McLELAN. Generally, a report is made by the ship that rescues ; then we send an enquiry to the captain of the rescued crew, and taking the two together, we see what has been the nature of the service—whether it has been especially hazardous or not—and regulate our reward according to the risk run, and according to the detention of the ship for the purpose. Sometimes the ship has to lay alongside of the wreck for 24 hours before it is able to rescue the crew, and in that case, although the captain has not risked his life, he is considered entitled to some reward as well as the person who mans the force to rescue the crew.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I wish to enquire of the Minister if it is a fact that there are no life-belts supplied to the crew of the life-boat service?

Mr. McLELAN. We do provide life-belts. I was surprised to hear that some of the crews were without them, and I will make enquiry in reference to that. The boats are made self-righting and self-baling.

Mr. PLATT. There are life-belts sent to the stations, but there are not sufficient for the crew.

Mr. McLELAN. There should be one for each member of the crew, and some extra for rescued people.

Mr. PLATT. To show the necessity of having persons in command of these boats who understand them, I will mention an instance in which the life-boat at Poplar Point was called upon to capture a vessel that had parted its cable and got out to sea. When the crew returned and got near the shore the boat was half full of water, and they did not know the reason; so they left the boat in the water, and got out themselves, and let it remain in the water all night, and it was hauled out of the water in the morning by a team of horses. This happened simply because they did not know how to regulate the valves at the bottom of the boat. That could not occur if there had been a man there who understood the management of the boat. I think these boats are admirable if they are manned by crews who understand them; but the sailors and fishermen of that coast prefer their own boats, because they understand them, and could do better service in them than with these boats. If these boats were managed by competent men, who understood their business, they could stand any sea on that coast; but the men have not yet learned how to manage them. My question with regard to the rewards for saving life had especial reference to the granting of medals and watches, and the character of the evidence which comes before the Minister as to the men entitled to recognition. No doubt the Department has been played upon, to a certain extent, for the distribution of the rewards has not been conducted, in my opinion, as it should have been. I need only refer to the awarding of watches in two instances which occurred in my own county during the past year, to convince the hon. gentleman that some other system of securing evidence should be adopted than that which now exists. The two instances I refer to, the hon. gentleman will call to mind. I am sure the evidence was purely of an interested character. There was nothing those men had done in the past 20 years to entitle them to recognition above their fellow sailors and fishermen on that coast. The secret was, that those two men were disaffected politicians; they had both been promised light-house positions, and failed to get them, and being supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, they felt themselves entitled to recompense, and in order to keep them to their first love they were rewarded. I do not say these men are not deserving, but I say there are scores who have done as much and perhaps more in saving life, and they will feel that those two men were selected for some particular purpose. If that is the manner in which the public money devoted to rewards for saving life is expended throughout the country, it is worse than thrown away, and might better be applied in some other way. I would be willing to vote almost any amount of money to make our life-saving service what it should be.

Mr. McLELAN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that those men, a number of years ago, did save life.

Mr. PLATT. I did not say that.

Mr. McLELAN. Suppose it was several years ago that this occurred, and those men were never rewarded, I do not think the Government were to blame, or I was to blame, in recognising the rescue of life that they effected, because a number of years passed since it occurred. I met one of those men in my visit to his county; I saw his wife, who detailed the circumstances of one case to me, which I think was certainly deserving of recognition by the Government. I had some enquiries made as to another case that was mentioned to me at the time; reports were made to me upon it, and I thought those men were entitled to some recognition for the rescue of life they accomplished some years ago, in order that it might have an influence on the men along the coast generally. They will see that their efforts to rescue lives are not to be passed unheeded and unrecognised by the Government. If nothing else were chargeable against me at the end of my political career, but having rewarded a couple of men who risked their lives to save the lives of others, I will get off very well.

Mr. PLATT. With regard to one case that occurred twenty-five years ago, I think the old man was deserving of recognition and should have been recognised at the time, but in the other instance one man was selected and the rest of the crew overlooked. The rest of the crew regarded it as an insult that they should have been overlooked, because they did not happen to have a grievance against the Government.

Mr. McLELAN. I knew nothing of their politics.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many years ago was this instance of gallantry performed?

Mr. McLELAN. I think it was a continuation of instances, dating back twenty-five years and coming down to a few years ago. Some hon. members from Quebec have referred to a case in Montreal, which has been brought to my notice, of a man in the harbor of Montreal who has rescued some thirty or forty lives at various times. The habit has grown upon him of saving lives, and it ought to have some recognition, and the case in the hon. gentleman's county was something similar.

Mr. PLATT. There is just one instance in the whole of his long career where a life was saved, by individual effort. In most instances, 8 or 10 men share the danger and should share the reward. Though the hon. gentleman says he knew nothing about their politics, the impression exists in the neighborhood where these people reside that politics had a great deal to do with it. A few summers ago, at the time the agitation was raised in favor of these two individuals, a young lady at the Bay of Quinté rescued her comrade at the risk of her own life. Her mother applied to the same party who obtained the recognition for these individuals, and the reply, in the first place, was, that her case should be considered with the others. On repeating the request, she was told that he had since learned she was not a very good friend of his at the elections and could not expect any favors. I would suggest to the Minister that that money could be well spent in encouraging the fishermen on the long line of dangerous coast of my county. The life-boat at Poplar Point could be removed if the hon. gentleman would give a bounty of from $10 to $15 to whoever would keep a boat of a certain standard always in readiness on the coast, with an additional bounty for every life saved. The coast is not a dangerous one; only one life has been imperilled since the life-boat was stationed there, and in that case the rescue was not effected by life-boat, but by brave fishermen in their own boat.

Mr. BOWELL. I wish to set the hon. gentleman right with reference to the bringing of the life-boats and taking the one to Picton instead of leaving it at Trenton. My hon. friend was not in the country then, and I was acting head of the Department. Positive orders were given to have the boat left at Trenton, and carried over the railway to its destination; but from some blunder, it was carried to Picton instead. To carry it from Picton to its destination cost nothing from Toronto, as, owing to the generosity of the Grand Trunk Railway, these boats were carried over the whole of this line free.

Mr. WELDON. Where are the boats to be put?

Mr. McLELAN. They have not been finally located yet.

Mr. PLATT. Has any change been made at Sambro Island since a year ago?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not located the boats in the Maritime Provinces yet.

Mr. WELDON. In the case of the loss of the Amsterdam on Sable Island, there were serious charges made in American papers against the people on the Island.

Mr. McLELAN. I am placing two improved lights there. I have put a new superintendent, a young, energetic man, who has had a great deal of experience; and I am about putting a telephone wire across the island, about 20 miles, connecting the three stations, so that information may be conveyed from one station to another and all be able to concentrate at one point in case of necessity.

Mr. WELDON. There were letters written complaining of the conduct of the people on the island. Were any complaints made to the Department?

Mr. McLELAN. Two or three men got liquor on board ship.

Investigation into wrecks and collection of information relating to disasters of shipping..... $1,500

Mr. PLATT. Will the Minister state if his officers were at all to blame for the disaster on the Sambro Island?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not got it here, but I can bring it down to-morrow. I know of no irregularity brought before me, of any officer who was neglecting the working of the Department.

Canadian registration of shipping ..... $500

Mr. McLELAN. This is for the registration of shipping. The surveyors are paid by fees from the owners of vessels, but the registrars have to keep a set of books.

Mr. WELDON. Did not the Imperial Government furnish the books and forms?

Mr. McLELAN. No; we are called upon now to do that.

Montreal and Quebec water and river police..... $40,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a vote which has gone on increasing steadily for half a dozen years, until it has assumed very respectable proportions. It does not appear to me that there has been any increase in the trade which has caused this large increase, or even this increase of this year. What is proposed to be done with the $2,000 additional, and, in fact, what is proposed to be done with the whole $40,000?

Mr. McLELAN. In Montreal there will be some increase by the extension of the service, by which the ground they have to go over and watch is increased; and the offices that we keep at Montreal have been found to be unfit for the health of the occupants, so that we have been obliged to take new premises, and some considerable expense will be incurred in fitting up the new premises; and, with two additional men, the extra sum has to be asked for.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters..... $2,000

Mr. VAIL. How much of this vote was spent last year?

Mr. McLELAN. $350.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. VAIL. It seems to me that the vote might be made more useful. I am sure that a good deal more than that could have been spent with advantage to the people. I am afraid that this service does not receive the attention from the Department which it should.

Mr. McLELAN. When there has been a wreck in a harbor or a channel my Department attends to its removal. When it is a natural obstruction, rocks or boulders or anything of that kind, the Department of Public Works attends to it.

Mr. VAIL. I thought the Department of Marine attended to the removal of boulders.

Mr. McLELAN. No; the Minister of Public Works is the boulder man.

Salaries and allowances of lighthouse keepers ..... $172,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of the increase?

Mr. McLELAN. There is a very considerable increase in the number of lights. We established more than 20 last year; and quite a number of these were not in operation until late in the season; and the full year's salary was not paid last year, but they will be in operation this year, and the amount will be required. Before the close of 1886 a large number will be added to the lights.

Mr. KIRK. Has the Minister a list of those erected last year?

Mr. McLELAN. They are all mentioned in the report. There were about 23 or 24 from the year 1883 to 1884.

Mr. VAIL. Were they mostly in the Maritime Provinces or in the Upper Provinces?

Mr. McLELAN. We are building more westward now. There have been some built in the Lower Provinces.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. gentleman promised last year that a light should be put on Goose Island, in Guysboro' county, but I do not think that has been done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the Minister aware that the practice prevails, I do not know how extensively, among the lighthouse keepers, of regularly farming out the work assigned to them? Not a few of the hon. gentleman's employes are in the habit of sub-leasing the work they are bound to do to other parties, and getting the work done at half or two-thirds the salary, as the case may be.

Mr. McLELAN. This matter has been brought to my attention, and the parties have been notified that they must attend to the business themselves or resign, and in all cases the man who receives the appointment must understand that he must perform the duty and not farm it out. It sometimes happens that a man, from illness, asks leave of absence for a few months, and names a party to replace him, and if we ascertain that he is capable of attending to the duties, we give the leave of absence and put that party in charge. But where it comes to our notice that the party has not attended to the duty, we remove him at once.

Mr. KIRK. Is it not customary, where a father is appointed, for instance, as lighthouse keeper, that the son may do the work, and the father not attend to it at all himself? The Minister is aware that that is the custom.

Mr. McLELAN. In many cases the man who is appointed is assisted by his family, but he is supposed to be there as the overseer of the light. Sometimes a man's sons, sometimes his daughters, and sometimes his wife do a great deal of the work connected with the lighthouse; but our inspectors, in making their rounds, always enquire into these matters, and if there is any neglect of duty it is always brought to our notice.

Mr. KIRK. Has it ever been brought to the notice of the Minister that in one case, at any rate, in the county of Guysboro', where the light is on an island, the person who is appointed lives on the mainland, while his son lives on the island and keeps the light?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not aware of that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have known instances where daughters keep them, and they are much better and cleaner kept.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say the hon. gentleman is right enough, but in cases where it is in the family one does not want to be too critical. But the point I mentioned is totally distinct—that is, the cases of farming out lighthouses, because I have heard of cases in which the work has been seriously neglected. The temptation in those cases is always to take the man who will do it for the smallest sum, and he is very apt to be very indifferent about performing the work.

Mr. PLATT. Sometimes the substitute to whom the keeping of the lighthouse is farmed out may be of service in detecting the appropriation of the Government's supplies. I would like to ask what has become of the complaints that have been made to the Department from the substitute of the lighthouse keeper at Knapp's lighthouse, near Kingston. I have it on good authority that complaints were made by the substitute that the lighthouse keeper was in the habit of appropriating Government supplies to his own use.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not recollect the case to which the hon. gentleman refers. I know we have one or two investigations going on now into charges against lighthouse keepers for misconduct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a matter of notoriety in some parts of the country that the barns and houses of men who are lucky enough to be lighthouse keepers are always painted in the identical colors that the Government supplies for the use of the lighthouses. I suppose their eyes become familiarised with these colors and they find them suitable for their own barns and houses. There is no doubt a good deal of speculation is going on in a small way by some of these lighthouse keepers. My hon. friend was alluding to Knapp's lighthouse. I think I heard something about that, and formal complaints were made to the Department here. The Minister might bring us some information as to what was done. My recollection is, that the report was made to the Department, I think, a couple of years ago, and an investigation was promised, but none took place.

Mr. McLELAN. I will make enquiries into the case.

Agencies, rents and contingencies in lighthouse and coast service.....	$20,290
--	----------

Mr. McLELAN. There is an increase of $2,290. Our building at Charlottetown was burned last year, and we are compelled to rent one. Then there were $1,721 previously charged to maintenance of lights. These two items make up the difference.

Maintenance and repairs to lights, fog-whistles, buoys and beacons, humane establishments and provision depots.....	$308,900

Mr. McLELAN. There is an increase in this service. During the last year 22 or 23 new lights have been added. I wish to place automatic fog-horns at points where there are now steam whistles. The expense of the former is much less than the latter, and the change is therefore desirable, as an economical one. The old-fashioned steam whistles take from 200 to 300 tons of coal a year, while the fog-horn can be ran for about 70 tons. I am having twelve or thirteen constructed. It is intended to place them where steam whistles now exist, and to retain the latter. The Americans have duplicates of whistles or horns at their stations. The cost of an automatic fog horn is $1,000, exclusive of patentee's fee, cost of transporting and raising them. I have tried gas buoys in the lower St. Lawrence. During my visit to England I made particular enquiries as to them, both at London and Glasgow, and I felt they were desirable on our waters. I imported two and placed them on the St. Lawrence. They are charged with condensed gas, are anchored at certain points, and burn night and day for about three months. Ship owners and mariners are delighted with them, for they enable vessels to be brought up instead of being compelled to anchor all night. If it is found that the rough weather in the fall does not extinguish them, it will be desirable to procure a larger supply.

Mr. KIRK. What is the expense?

Mr. McLELAN. They cost about £700 each. They burn ninety days. They contain gas condensed, and they are supplied at intervals with gas in a condensed form.

Mr. GILLMOR. Will a fog-alarm be placed at the south side of Grand Manan this season?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. WELDON. In regard to the lightship Miramichi and the Lady Gordon, I desire to say a word about this particular case. The vessel was going up harbor in charge of a pilot, and damage was done to the lightship. The pilot commissioners entirely exonerated the pilot from blame; but, notwithstanding that, the Department commenced a very expensive suit in the Admiralty Court against the owners of the vessel. The suit has been dismissed. There is a most extraordinary provision in our law, entirely contrary to the English law, making owners responsible when pilots are in charge of vessels. The owner of the vessel is a very active opponent of this Government. He opposed the Minister of Finance at the last election—and that gentleman has been put to heavy expense, although the court not only decided the case in his favor, but said that the Government should pay the costs. And after putting the party to this expense, they should meet the expenses he would be put to. Communication was made to the Minister, but the matter was persisted in, with the result I have stated.

Mr. McLELAN. The pilot commissioners may have, on the trial, given different evidence than what was given to the Department. It was reported to the Department that the ship was in fault entirely, and the owner of the vessel, when applied to, having made no answer, there was no alternative but to call on him as usual to make good the damages.

Mr. WELDON. He stated that he replied both to the legal gentlemen in the case and to the Department, repudiating all liability, but it shows that the Department must not have investigated the subject, because the result is a large amount of costs, when on investigation the decision of the pilot commissioners is sustained by the Vice Admiralty Court.

Mr. PLATT. I wish again to call the attention of the Minister, as I did last year, to a petition received from the mariners of Lake Ontario, as to the necessity for changing the deranged lights at Weller's Bay. The hon. gentleman promised to send engineers there to report, but nothing has been done. They represent that these lights are not in due range with the best channel, that they are too low to be of any real service, and that the buoys are not placed in the proper position. The channel has shifted considerably since these representations were made, and the matter is consequently of greater importance. In consequence of the position of these lights, one or two vessels have been stranded there in the past year. I hope another year will not elapse before the Minister sees that his engineer visits this place.

Mr. BOWELL. Were the lights, as originally placed, correct?

Mr. PLATT. The sailors say not.

Mr. BOWELL. That cannot be, surely. They were placed there by the late Government.

Mr. WELDON. By a change in our Act Canadian vessels are under a liability from which British vessels are free under the Merchants Shipping Act. I understood that our Act was an exact copy of the British Act, but there has been a most radical change, and one which seriously affects Canadian vessels.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman mentioned that matter to me a short time ago, and it is now under consideration.

Cape Race Light .....$1,300

Mr. McLELAN. I may say, with reference to this item, that a proposition has been made to us by the British Government. There is a tax imposed on all vessels coming to Canada by the British Government, for the light at Cape Race, and from those dues there has been a large accumulation, amounting to something like £13,000 or £14,000 sterling, and they have proposed to us to hand over the maintenance of this light and pay us over a certain sum, which would probably enable us to abolish this tax on our shipping.

Mr. WELDON. What is the cost of keeping it up?

Mr. McLELAN. According to my estimate, it costs the British Government more than we would be able to do it for. I think that $1,300 and the interest on the sum they offer to give us will maintain the light and allow our shipping to go through free.

Mr. WELDON. Does not foreign shipping pay?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; all north of a certain point.

Completion and construction of lighthouses and fog-alarms..... $40,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has not furnished us with the details of this. Generally speaking, a sort of memorandum was placed in our hands, giving us these details.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not had it printed, but I have a memorandum here. I propose to place a light at the entrance of Lake Nipissing, a fog-alarm at Caribou Island, Lake Superior, and another fog-alarm at Thunder Cape. The Americans have placed a fog-alarm on their point, and mariners say that when they pick that up and hold it, if they have another on our point, they can get to Port Arthur, even in foggy weather. There are lights and fog-horns to be put up at various other places, and the balance of the vote is to be applied to lights which have been undertaken. The estimates we have made have been low, and it is necessary to complete the lights which are under way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total number of lighthouses now in operation?

Mr. McLELAN. About 590.

Mr. WELDON. I would like to call the hon. Minister's attention to the Quaco Head lighthouse, which was burned down in 1881, as showing the importance of not changing the site of lighthouses. The effect of changing in this case has been very disastrous. The lighthouse was on a reef opposite the bay, and when it was burned a new one was constructed on the head, where four or five acres of land were purchased at a cost of $40 an acre. Since then there have been four or five vessels lost. In one case, that of the A. J. Baxter, Mr. R. Brown and Heber Brown made two trips to the vessel and rescued a lady passenger and the crew, and they are certainly deserving of reward. One is the assistant keeper of the lighthouse, although I do not know but that since then he has been dismissed. The old lighthouse keeper, who was there 28 years, has been dismissed or superannuated, and a man named Charles Brown has been appointed in his place. Last year a large three-masted American schooner struck on the reef. One man escaped and the rest of the crew were lost; and a most unfortunate circumstance was, that the mate and several other men got on the foundation of the old lighthouse, where they remained all night and perished, and where their bodies were found in the morning. There was a great deal of feeling throughout the community about the lighthouse keeper hearing the cries of those men and making no efforts to save them. I think it my duty to call the attention of the Minister to this matter, to show that the change of the site of the lighthouse, instead of being a benefit, has been an injury, causing, not only a great loss of property, but a loss of life.

Mr. McLELAN. I think the hon. gentleman is going a little too far in saying that all that loss of life was in consequence of the change of site, which was made by the the advice of nautical men who visited the place and reported in favor of the change. I think the wreck he refers to took place in a thick snow storm and fog, when it was impossible that any light could be seen.

Mr. DAWSON. There were appropriations made for certain lights upon the great lakes in former years. I suppose these lights will be gone on with by-and-bye. For the Victoria light, the Spanish River light, and some beacons on Lake Superior, appropriations were made two years ago.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not remember the particular ones the hon. gentleman refers to, but all for which appropriations were made are under way.

Mr. DAWSON. Every lighthouse in that part of the country has been placed in the position where it would do the most good. All the lighthouses are admirably placed and admirably managed, and all we want is a good many more of them. I simply call attention to the matter, so that it may not be overlooked.

Mr. WELDON. Since the spring of 1883 there have been no less than four vessels lost at Quaco, and there was never a wreck on that reef before. I do not recollect, from the correspondence that was brought down, that any nautical man examined that site. But there are the facts, that when the light was on the old place there were no wrecks, and probably, if the light had been on the reef when that vessel was wrecked, it might have been seen in time, and 13 or 14 lives might have been saved.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to enquire again about the preparation made some years ago to erect a lighthouse on Goose Island. Last year I was informed the reason why the building was not erected was that there was difficulty experienced in procuring the land on which the officer reported the house would be built. The Minister stated, last year, he intended to expropriate the land and proceed with the building of the house.

Mr. McLELAN. I will get the information and bring it down.

Mr. GILLMOR. Has attention been called to the lighthouse at Culbar? I have some friends there, who told me it was the general impression the lighthouse was not in the proper place. When the house was on the reef the vessels had better warning than now, when it is inside the reef. I have a great deal of confidence in the judgment of Mr. Harding, but really this is a very serious matter, and I would like to know whether it is on his report the house was built inside the reef.

Mr. McLELAN. My recollection is that it was on Mr. Harding's report that the change was made.

Mr. WELDON. With reference to telephonic and telegraphic communication on Sable Island, the hon. gentleman said it would cost about $100,000. Has he had communication with the American or English Governments, as this is a matter in which these Governments should bear a share? Sable Island is right in the track of vessels bound for the United States and England.

Mr. KIRK. Where is it intended to erect those signal stations?

Mr. McLELAN. To the greatest extent, along the Gulf of St. Lawrence, part of which is along the coast of Nova Scotia.

Mr. PAINT. I would bring to the Minister's attention the pressing necessity there is for a signal station at the Strait of Canso, in connection with the Point Tupper lighthouse. It is only half a mile from where the large steamers pass daily, and it would be a great advantage to report them to their owners or agents.

Mr. KIRK. I corroborate the statement of the hon. gentleman for Richmond (Mr. Paint). In 1882, when we were running our elections, my opponent stated there were $7,000 in the Estimates for the purpose of erecting signals in Guysboro'. Not one single dollar has been expended. I would ask if these $7,000 are to be expended in that county?

Fish-breeding, building fishways and clearing rivers..... $35,000

Mr. WELDON. Can the hon. gentleman tell us anything about the success of the fish-breeding establishments?

Mr. McLELAN. They are treated at length in the reports submitted to the House, and we hear reports every year that they are of much benefit. In reference to the Nepisiquit, a gentleman was here, with whom I had a conversation, and I asked him if he would not put in the form of a letter to me the evidence which he had. I received from him a letter, dated the 8th June, in which he says:

"As evidence of the practical results following the planting of salmon fry, from the Restigouche and Miramichi hatcheries, in the river Nepisiquit, I have the honor to report some facts that have come within my own observation. In the year 1881, after the planting of fry from the Restigouche hatchery, in 1878, in the Nepisiquit there was a larger than usual return of grilse to that river, the majority of which, being larger and very different in form from true Nepisiquit grilse, left no doubt as to their parentage. They were the product of the Restigouche fry planted in 1878. So, in like manner, in 1883, after the planting of fry from the Miramichi hatchery, there was an unusual supply of grilse in the Nepisiquit. Now, except to a close observer, the Miramichi grilse are not very unlike those of the Nepisiquit; the excess in number were due to the planting of fry from the Miramichi, and, as removing any question on this point during the following year, 1884, the fly-fishers upon the river and the net-fishers upon the coast observed a marked distinction in most of the salmon taken, unlike the Nepisiquit salmon, and concur in the opinion that they were Miramichi salmon, and thus the most natural conclusion that these were the products of the planting of the fry from the Miramichi hatchery in the waters of the Nepisiquit, in 1880."

That is sufficient on the point the hon. gentleman speaks of.

Mr. EDGAR. I would ask the Minister whether he has made any attempt to stock the rivers that run into Lake Ontario with salmon. That was done for a time, at any rate, and every year I believe salmon have been running up the stream as far as Newcastle, just as they did up to the streams in former years, the Humber, the Don, and the Credit: they have abandoned those streams on account of the mill dams which have been erected upon them, but they have always been running up to Newcastle, where the hatchery is. I understood that the salmon were to be deposited in a number of streams running into Lake Ontario, but I have not heard or seen whether the result was successful or not. There was another interesting experiment tried, by putting young salmon fry into some of the rivers that run into Lake Huron, to test the question whether it was possible for salmon to exist without getting to salt water. Certainly, they do exist in Lake Ontario, and some say they go to the salt water, and some say they only go to the deep waters in Lake Ontario. But, at any rate, if they had succeeded in getting the young salmon to return to the rivers where they were spawned, in Lake Huron they would not have had an opportunity of climbing up Niagara Falls on the way back from the sea. Perhaps the Minister will tell us as to the result of the experiment.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman the information he requires. I was under the impression that there had been no salmon in the Newcastle stream of late years. I understood from Mr. Wilmot, the manager of the Newcastle hatchery, that those salmon, a number of years ago, were very abundant in that stream, but they had now disappeared entirely. He attributed that to the water having become warmer as the country became denuded of its forests.

Mr. TAYLOR. Two years ago I made application to the Department for a supply of salmon fry, and I got ten cans, of which I placed four in an inland lake in which there was no salmon. There is a creek leading out of this lake into another lake, and between the two there is a mill race. At the setting in of cold weather the miller discovered that a large number of them, in passing through the mill race, had been killed by the wheels. They were 4 to 6 inches long. They had been put in in the spring, and this was in the fall.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I believe that the diminution in the number of our fish is due to the habits of the fishermen in destroying the fish during the breeding season. In portions of Lake Ontario I have observed constantly that in spite of the orders of the Department immense quantities of fish about spawning time are seized and taken.

Mr. LISTER. So far as the fisheries in the Georgian Bay and about Cockburn Island are concerned, some complaints were made that the inspectors there were negligent. The close season is not at all observed by the fishermen. I have been told by persons of the highest respectability that they have seen fish taken off the boats of these fishermen by the shovel full. It is notorious that such is the case. If that system of fishing is to go on for any length of time, it will result in the depletion of Lake Huron of its fish, and it will be a great misfortune to the people engaged in that industry.

Mr. McLELAN. I have given a good deal of attention to the close season for fish in the Georgian Bay and the north-western lakes, and this year I have extended the time for about twenty days, as I am satisfied the close season was not long enough, and I hope by that means to avoid the great destruction of fish at the spawning season. It is difficult to regulate or control this matter and to prevent the catch of fish during that season, but with the extension of time and with increased diligence I hope to protect the fish largely during the spawning season.

Mr. DAWSON. The fisheries in Lake Huron are largely within the district which I have the honor to represent, as is also Cockburn Island. I believe the cause of the destruction of fish is, to a considerable degree, due to over fishing. The natives and half-breeds and Indians depend a great deal upon the fish they catch, and suffer a good deal from over fishing by people who come from a distance. There is one system which I think ought to be abolished, and that is the system granting boat licenses. A band of men get a boat license for $5; they go out at all prohibited seasons and into all places, and they have no interest in preserving the fish, but to catch as many as they can. I think the best system is to grant licenses for certain places for certain areas in which they can fish, because the holder of a license has an interest in protecting the ground and prevent it from being over fished.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not the wish of the fishermen in the Georgian Bay to have their licenses localised; they wish to have boat licenses. Then they had very good fishing grounds, and were fishing among other fishermen. When stormy weather came they got under the shelter of the island, and they fished with much greater advantage than their competitors. At Meaford, Owen Sound, Collingwood, and as far as Penetanguishene, the system of licensing localities has been abolished, and they have licensed only boats. My experience as to the abuse of the fisheries is not that of the member who last spoke. I think the fishermen of the Georgian Bay observe fairly well the regulations, and do not fish in the close season. Many of the abuses, I am told, come from Americans fishing in Georgian Bay and Lake Huron.

Mr. DAWSON. The fishermen have exhausted all the fisheries of the Georgian Bay, and are now going west and depleting the waters of Algoma and depriving people of the means of living. In a few years there will be no fish to dispute about. In Algoma fish is the staff of life with the Indians and half-breeds, and it is to the Indians there the same as buffalo was to the Indians of the plains. Some of the Indians are half starving on account of the lack of fish. The fishermen of Georgian Bay should remain nearer home, and there should be some plan adopted for restraining them.

Mr. SPROULE. That object can be obtained by compelling the fishermen to use a larger mesh for their nets. The present net is too small, and large quantities of small fish are taken. Under the net regulations this evil will be avoided in future.

Mr. LISTER. The information I have with respect to the fishermen having a right to fish in the Georgian Bay and at Cockburn Island is of such a reliable character that I can prove the statements I have made, that those fishermen have thrown from their boats shovels full of the ova of the fish they have caught during the close season. The company to which I refer is a very extensive one, and carries on fishing on a large scale. It has a very large number of men employed, large numbers of boats and steam tugs. They catch thousands of dollars worth of fish every month and carry it to Detroit and other ports, where it finds a ready sale. It is of very little consequence to consumers whether it is caught in the close season or not; but it is of vital consequence to the Indians that the close season should be observed, as otherwise their full supply is destroyed. If one inspector is not sufficient, more inspectors should be appointed; and, at all events, the close season should be rigidly kept and offenders punished. What I have said I am fully prepared to prove.

Mr. DAWSON. The close season was formerly only ten or twelve days. The Department have, very properly, extended it to one month.

Mr. KIRK. The question of protecting river fisheries is one of considerable difficulty. The regulations in Nova Scotia are sufficiently stringent, but it is difficult to have them carried out. It would be cheaper to protect the rivers than to supply them with fry from the hatcheries. Another cause of the decline in the supply of fish is the condition of the streams in some localities. A petition was presented to the Department, asking that a sum of money should be placed in the Estimates to clear the debris from Country Harbor. As regards Indian Harbor, the stream sometimes fills up with sand, and a small amount should be expended annually to keep it free from obstruction. Then, again, there are several streams upon which there are dams, which obstruct the streams and which require fish-ways. There is one to which the Minister's attention has been called several times, and it has been reported upon by the overseer this year as well as last. It is called Fisher's mill dam, and there should be one of the best fish-ways placed in it. I have recommended, on several occasions, that a warden should be appointed at this place. There has been a fish-way there for some time, but it is one of the old kind, and does not suit very well. It is on the east branch of the East River of St. Mary's. I believe salmon do not go through there now, but gaspereaux and trout do, and if a proper fish-way were put in, I have no doubt salmon would also get through.

Mr. EDGAR. With regard to the Newcastle fishery, I have taken a little trouble in looking into the results as regards speckled trout. I find that since 1877 they have been laying down a large number of eggs and hatching out a great quantity of fry—from 50,000 to 200,000 eggs a year, and nearly as many fry are reported as hatched. Now, I cannot find in the reports any statement of the places where these fry or eggs have been distributed, nor can I find anything of the practical results which have been arrived at through all this expenditure. It is a matter which is of great personal interest to many people in this country, and it has also some commercial importance. There appear to be about one million of eggs produced for distribution to about one-half as many fry hatched out, and if any intelligence or care had been exercised in spreading those through the streams of Ontario, instead of having the fish a great deal scarcer every year, we would have found them increasing in quantity. We know that in France and Germany, if a man has a stream or creek on his place, he makes it a source of revenue as well as pleasure, by cultivating and producing trout. They learn how to extract the ova and place them where a little running water will hatch them at a proper time of the year. There is nothing to prevent that being done in Ontario. I believe, as a matter of fact, that the Government do not peddle out eggs or fry, or sell them to individuals. I suppose they distribute them in the streams, free; and, at any rate, I see no returns of money from the sale of them.

Mr. McLELAN. None are sold.

Mr. SPROULE. You could not have searched very far back, or you would have found how they are distributed.

Mr. EDGAR. If they are not sold, I am afraid there is something very much like it going on in Newcastle. I suppose the Department does not allow them to hatch out eggs to be bought by the manager there to hatch and sell. That would be the same thing, and I have some correspondence on that point from two different sources. I have a letter to a friend of mine from Mr. Wilmot, in which, when enquiries are made about getting young fry, he says that he cannot supply them; that the eggs are short, but he will try to get them from other people, at so much a thousand; he will hatch them free, and then they can go and get them. Now, it is an extraordinary thing that in two different years and to two different persons there should be a complaint of such a short supply, because in everyone of those years, from 1877 to 1884, I find that nearly double the quantity of eggs were laid down as the quantity of fry reported. The first letter was in November 1881, in which Mr. Wilmot replies to a gentleman who is establishing a pond which he is anxious to have stocked. It is a very fine one; I have seen it myself.

Mr. BOWELL. Was it brook trout?

Mr. EDGAR. Yes; he writes, in November, 1881:

"If you will let me know at Christmas what numbers you will want, I will be able to tell you what they will cost, as the only amount you will require to pay will be the first cost of the eggs."

Then he says he will hatch them for nothing; but he does not say how much they will cost. Then, in November, 1882, he says:

"I sent off my orders for all eggs asked for some time ago, and I am almost afraid it is too late now. But if you telegraph me what number you want, I will wire the breeders, and know if they can send them out to me yet. Do not delay in this, as one or two days will make a great difference. They will cost you $5 a thousand, and we will hatch them gratis."

So, at any rate, he is there hatching, at Government expense, eggs for breeders. My correspondent gives me the following account of what subsequently took place:—

"With regard to Wilnot and the fish, his price was $5 per 1,000, for eggs and hatched fry. I gave an order for 15,000, and after detaining me for six months, he disappointed me, which, in reality, meant a year's loss, when I determined to go to the United States to see Seth Green at Rochester, and while there he offered to furnish me with anything he had free of cost. He says if Wilnot had sent an order for any number, they would have been sent free of cost, too."

That is very extraordinary, when Mr. Wilnot says he had to send $5 a thousand. The other gentleman received a letter from Mr. Wilnot, dated September, 1884, and he says, in reply to enquiries on the same subject:

"With regard to young fry produced from the ova, we sometimes obtain eggs for private individuals by their supplying us with the funds to purchase the eggs, and then we hatch them out here gratis. The eggs are usually sold by American dealers for from $1 to $5 a thousand. If we secure a lot of eggs, as we sometimes do, from the Lower Provinces, the mode of the disposal of the fry from them is through the Minister of Marine at Ottawa. Formal application is necessary."

I think it is extraordinary that the establishment there cannot stock streams free if the Government are maintaining it in that way, and it is still more unfortunate if the means supplied are used only to enable some one else to sell trout ova in the country, when it is certain that an enormous number of ova are produced in the year.

Mr. McLELAN. Not very many of speckled trout; there were only 50,000 last year.

Mr. EDGAR. This year, 1882, there were 200,000.

Mr. McLELAN. I hope the hon. gentleman will give me the names of the parties, because he makes a charge against Mr. Wilnot, and it is necessary that it should be investigated.

Mr. EDGAR. Yes; I will let you have the names at once.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not believe Mr. Wilnot does that for the purpose of making a profit. I know that many of the United States hatcheries charge for their fry and ova. I dare say that if an individual applied to Mr. Seth Green or to some of the State hatcheries, he would get the fry for nothing, but they would not give it as a matter of business. If Mr. Wilnot is able to purchase across the border from parties who are making a business of hatching and selling the fry, for an individual in our own country, who wants to supply a stream or a lake, and if Mr. Wilnot hatched them in the Government hatchery, I do not think he would be doing anything very wrong. All the fish hatched out there are distributed more or less in every county of the Province of Ontario where there are streams which he considers suitable for the fish, and to which there are means of transporting the young fry without injury.

Mr. SPROULE. I have had communication with Americans on the same subject, and I know they are in the habit of selling the ova. A gentleman in Rochester to whom I have written several times has informed me that they could be purchased at the same price the hon. gentleman states, $5 a thousand. I think he is entirely wrong when he says there is no knowledge of where fish fry are distributed. To my own knowledge, for some years past, they have been distributed in the Georgian Bay.

Mr. EDGAR. I am talking of speckled trout only.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought he had reference to all the fish hatched out at that hatchery. The speckled trout have been very limited. When they have been applied for to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, an order has always been given for them, when they are there, and as far as I know, in my part of the country, where they have been put into the streams, they have done very well.

Mr. EDGAR. I think it would be a very good thing if the Department, in order to promote the increase of speckled trout throughout the country, would direct the preparation of a little pamphlet of some kind, instructing the people as to their protection, such as allowing shrubs and bushes to grow along the streams. It is well known that many streams become unfit for trout because the temperature of the water, owing to exposure to the sun, becomes too high, and if trees are allowed to grow along the banks they keep the temperature of the water low in summer. If a few instructions of that kind were given, and it were announced that the people could obtain fry, and even if township municipalities were notified that they could have streams stocked, it would be a good thing for the country.

Mr. LISTER. I see that one P. McCarrum and one J. B. Moody are appointed overseers for the north branch of the Sydenham River. I would ask the Minister what licenses have been taken out to fish in that river?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not prepared to answer that question; but even in cases where no licenses are taken out, if there be fish in the river it is very necessary to appoint wardens and overseers to protect it.

Mr. LISTER. As a matter of fact, there are no fish in that river of any commercial value. It was only the other day that I received a letter from a friend in my own county, pointing out that to keep Mr. Moody in the position of overseer is perfectly ridiculous. Mr. Moody has drawn, for a number of years, $50 a year, and has done absolutely nothing. There is not a fish that can be got between the two points where he is overseer.

Mr. SPROULE. These overseers are distributed all over the country, but were appointed by the late Government. There are a number in my county drawing $50 a year, who have not done a day's work all the time they have been appointed. If they were discharged now it would be said they were discharged because they were political opponents.

Mr. LISTER. Mr. Moody was appointed by this Government. It is a matter of no consequence to me whether an officer is a Conservative or Reformer. But it is not reasonable that so many men should be paid for doing nothing.

Mr. KIRK. Strike off all the wardens in the Dominion for doing nothing and you would have nothing left.

Mr. McLELAN. Let the hon. gentleman name some in his county?

Mr. KIRK. I could name dozens of them, who do not leave their houses, so little work have they.

Mr. McLELAN. Will the hon. gentleman send me their names?

Mr. KIRK. No; I am not going to give any names. It is not to be expected that for the small pay they get these men are going to watch the streams day and night to find out who are violating the law. They will wait until someone comes and tells them. I believe it would be better for the Minister to have fewer men and pay them more salary.

Fishery, protection steamers and vessels—Maintenance and repairs ..... $50,000

Mr. McLELAN. With reference to this item. I explained that the Canadian fisheries would be placed under charge of the Fisheries Department, and it is necessary that money should be voted for the fishery service. We hope it will not be necessary to spend a large amount, but it is possible no result may be reached with the United States, and it may be necessary for us to provide for the protection of our fisheries. I purpose to take the Druid and devote her to that purpose, and I propose to call tenders shortly to make the proper repairs and fit her for the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is necessary we should have some idea how the Government propose to use the vote. Are we going to have a lot of small boats or powerful steamers to cruise about, or what do the Government propose to do to protect the fisheries with this vote?

Mr. McLELAN. I have explained that the Canadienne is to be maintained, and will be employed on that service, and that the steamer Druid is to be fitted with new engines and boilers and will be devoted to that service. We have a number of other steamers that may be occasionally employed for that service; and then comes a question, whether it may not be advisable to employ some sailing vessels, which may have the appearance of fishing vessels. I think it is true, as the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) says, that this vote is rather insufficient, but if the arrangements we have made had not been arrived at, we would have asked for an additional sum. In the meantime, this may suffice, before the fishing season of next year arrives the House will assemble again, and we shall be in the hands of Parliament.

Mr. WELDON. I understood that the Druid was included in the vote for Government steamers.

Mr. McLELAN. There is something in that vote for her, but I now propose to have new engines and boilers made, and she, perhaps, may not be taken away from the service until later in the season, in the fall or winter.

Mr. KIRK. I desire to call the attention of the Minister to a paragraph in Overseer Rogers' report, in reference to the county of Guysboro':

"The fishermen of Chedabucto Bay complain of the damage done their fishing gear by the American seiners, and with justice, as from forty to fifty sail could be seen at one time sailing to and fro through the nets, etc., for several weeks, and the fishermen say that whenever and wherever their gear came in the way of the Americans, who were casting their seines, it was 'out knife and cut away.' Mr. Tory fears fatal results will follow a continuation of such acts, as the fishermen will not endure it. It calls for protection on the part of the Government."

It appears to me that this is a matter which requires the attention of the Government. I can myself corroborate the statement of Mr. Tory in regard to this matter. Last year I counted 37 sail, and I am quite sure there were more than that, who were seining at the time, and they paid no respect to the nets. Some of the fishermen lost all their nets. It was done sometimes in the night and sometimes in the day, and they always denied it, and said it was some other vessel. The people were very much incensed about it last year, and this year the feeling will be intensified, because I know they feel very strongly in regard to the Americans being allowed to fish in their waters without any compensation.

Canadian Fisheries Exhibit ..... $1,500

Mr. McLELAN. There are two or three unsettled accounts in connection with the fisheries exhibition, and there are some expenses in connection with the exhibition in the hall here in Ottawa, which is open to the public. It is also desirable that, if any valuable specimens are offered, they should be secured, so that, if ever we have to make another exhibition, we should have the material at hand.

Services by persons in Customs and Fishery Departments and other expenses in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty and collection of Statistics..... $4,000

Mr. VAIL. Last year the Minister suggested that the whole of this work might be done through the Customs. Has that been acted upon?

Mr. McLELAN. In a great many cases it has. The Customs officers have been used and paid for that service.

Mr. KIRK. In looking over the reports of the fishery overseers of the different Provinces, I notice that they complain of the falling off of the lobster fishery, and of the fact that lobsters are smaller now than they were formerly. They attribute this to over-fishing, but I am informed by the fishermen that that is not the only reason, but that another reason is, the time at which the fish are caught. They say that the close season is not a suitable one. You will destroy more fish by fishing for lobsters when they are spawning and the shell is soft, in one week, than you will destroy in a month at any other season. Besides that, at that season they are not fit for food, and should not be caught. The question is, what is the proper time during which to protect those fish. The fishermen say no lobster should be caught after the middle of July. The regulations allow them to be caught up to the 1st August, and the Government have allowed them to be caught up to the 15th August, and then allow no fishing in the fall of the year. The regulations, our people think, would be much better if the fishing were stopped on the 15th July and thence to the end of August. They destroy more fish during those six weeks than they do in all the rest of the year; and it would be much better for the fishermen themselves, if they were stopped from fishing on the 15th of July and allowed to commence again on the 1st September. I know the packers object to it. They want as long a time as possible; they object to being obliged to open up their factories in the fall of the year, and would prefer fishing a little longer in the spring of the year. That is the reason they press upon the Government to be allowed to fish when they ought not to be allowed to fish at all. I think it would be better to make the seasons vary in different parts of the Province. So far as Guysboro' is concerned, at any rate, the fishermen agree that fish ought not to be caught later than the middle of July.

Mr. McLELAN.

Scientific Institutions—Grant for meteorological observatories, including instruments and cost of telegraphing weather warning..... $50,000

Mr. McLELAN. There was a very large increase in the vote of last year, in order to provide for additional stations in Manitoba and the North-West, and several storm signals have been put up at Port Arthur and other points, and in order to complete them $500 more is required.

Mr. WELDON. What is the object of changing the vote in New Brunswick?

Mr. McLELAN. It was formerly a special sum, and was placed under the supervision of the meteorological service.

Mr. PAINT. In connection with this vote, it has been brought to my notice by leading parties in the county of Richmond and by the lockmaster at St. Peter's Canal, where over a thousand vessels pass every year, that there is a necessity for a storm signal station there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What stations has the gentleman opened in the North-West Territory?

Mr. McLELAN. I am not ready to name them. I think most of the stations along the Canadian Pacific Railway have been made signal stations, and about fifty in Manitoba, and forty-five along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WELDON. Why should $1,500 be taken out of a special vote granted to New Brunswick last year, and put into the general vote this year? A year or two ago Mr. Murdoch was relieved from his position after thirty years' service, and, apparently, it was for the purpose of reducing expense, but now it appears that the expense will be increased.

Mr. McLELAN. There were two gentlemen employed, and one was dispensed with, and the other does the whole service.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Murdoch was in charge of the meteorological service altogether. Mr. Hutchinson dropped the time ball at noon, that was all he had to do. Mr. Murdoch, a most efficient and invaluable officer, was dismissed, and Mr. Hutchinson was put in charge of both employments. Whether he is capable of performing the work or not I am not able to say.

Marine hospitals for sick and distressed seamen..... $62,000

Mr. McLELAN. At St. John we have a hospital that is maintained out of this fund. At Halifax we have an arrangement with the general hospitals, which we pay so much for every patient. At various other points we have the same arrangement. We employ a physician at a salary ranging from $100 to $400 a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The amount required for each Province should be stated, instead of six Provinces being lumped together in one sum of $35,000.

Mr. McLELAN. The amounts are as follows: The large hospital at Quebec, $20,000; various other hospitals, Quebec, $5,000; Nova Scotia, $13,000; New Brunswick, $11,000; Prince Edward Island, $1,400; British Columbia, $4,000.

Mr. VAIL. A very large amount, collected by the sick mariners' fund, is paid in by Nova Scotia; and the amount received is comparatively small, remembering that its ports are open all the year round. The Department should be very liberal with respect to small bills sent in for parties when there is no marine hospital at the place.

Superintendence of Insurance ..... $6,250

Mr. VAIL. Is this item necessary? I thought the superintendent had retired.

Mr. BOWELL. He is to be superannuated on 1st August, but he is still actively engaged in the performance of his duties. It is, of course, intended to fill his place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not many years since the superintendent was appointed; I appointed him myself 10 years ago. Professor Cherryman is not such an old man as to require to be superannuated after 10 years service, and it will undoubtedly involve a very considerable addition to our superannuation allowances. It is a matter that requires to be seriously considered. The professor is a man of very considerable mathematical ability, and I believe he has done his work well, and is quite capable, for years to come, of doing his work well. He is far too young a man to be superannuated, at a heavy charge to the public service, without grave reason.

Mr. BOWELL. The reason is, that he made application himself, and he insists upon its being carried out, on account of his health, he not being able to continue the performance of his duties; that is established beyond a doubt, although apparently he is a healthy man. The hon. member for South Huron is quite correct; it will add quite an addition to the superannuation fund, from the fact that when he was appointed it was with a distinct understanding that when he retired, having been appointed at an advanced age, he should have ten years added to his term of service. That was part of the condition on which he agreed to accept the appointment. I was not aware under what Government he was appointed until the hon. gentleman from South Huron informed the House that he was appointed by himself; but when the question came before the Treasury Board I was very much surprised to find that ten years were to be added to his length of service; but on investigating the documents in the Finance Department, it appeared that one of the conditions on which he accepted the position was, that that number of years was to be added to his term of service whenever he should be superannuated. The resignation of Prof. Cherriman was not done with any desire on the part of the Government, because he was not only a clever man, but he had proved himself to be a very valuable officer, and there may be some difficulty in getting a man to perform the duties as satisfactorily to the Government and in the interests of the service as Mr. Cherriman has done, and it was a matter of very great regret, on the part of Sir Leonard Tilley, that he was obliged to make the recommendation he did.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am very sorry to hear the cause. If it had been any cause other than ill health, I should have hesitated to agree to the superannuation, especially for the reason that when we were obliged to bring in an officer from outside we were compelled to make a bargain such as has been referred to. If the superintendent's health is such that it will not allow him to continue in his position, it is another matter.

Mr. VAIL. He has always received a large salary, $4,000.

Mr. BOWELL. You cannot secure a man of his ability and of the position he held in educational institutions without paying a large salary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We get enough out of the insurance companies to pay it.

Committee rose and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1:45 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 1st, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 150) to authorise the advance of a certain sum to the Harbor Commissioners of the Harbor of Three Rivers.—(Mr. Bowell.)

ADDITIONAL STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE, NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. CARON moved concurrence in the report of Committee of Whole on certain resolutions for the appointment of an additional stipendiary magistrate under the North-West Territories Act, 1880, who shall be an additional member of the council of the said Territories.

Mr. BLAKE moved in amendment that the said resolutions be not now concurred in, but be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out the provision for the new stipendiary magistrate being a member of the council.

House divided on the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Resolutions concurred in and referred to committee on Bill (No. 141) respecting the administration of justice, and other matters, in the North-West Territories.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Steam communication between the United States and Victoria, B. C.....$17,840 00

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I would like to have the words "San Francisco" substituted for "United States" in this vote. We have mail communication between Puget Sound and Victoria. This appears to be a clerical error, and it should be "San Francisco" in accordance with the terms of union.

Steam communication between Canada and Antwerp..... $24,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We want the information which was promised to us on this item and the following one, and which should have been given in committee.

Mr. BOWELL. I have just sent for the papers, and the item may perhaps be allowed to stand in the meantime. I believe the only information asked for last night, that we were unable to give, was the points at which those steamers were to touch in Germany.

Mr. BLAKE. There was more than that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was some information about the exports.

Mr. VAIL. It was stated that the object of this subsidy was to increase the immigration from Germany, and I think we showed plainly from the returns that there was no increase in immigration in that way. That was one of the things the Minister promised to look into, and there was also the question of the extension of the trade. I think he should give us a reason why these subsidies are granted at all. My own opinion is that the money is worse than thrown away.

Fishery Protection Steamers and Vessels—Maintenance and repairs..... $50,000 00

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask whether any of this vote will be used to provide vessels for the protection of the fisheries in case nothing should come out of the expected negotiations with the American Government.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, for the protection of the sea fisheries.

Grant for meteorological observatories ..... $50,000 00

Mr. WELDON. I would like to know how the amount for New Brunswick is divided, and in what places.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. McLELAN. In Sackville, St. John and Fredericton.
Mr. WELDON. What will be the amount for St. John?
Mr. McLELAN. I think $700, speaking from memory.

Superintendence of Insurance ..... $6,250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Customs stated the other night that Professor Cherriman's resignation was accepted, to take effect on the 1st of August, and that the superannuation allowance was agreed upon. What is the amount of that superannuation allowance?

Mr. BOWELL. I speak under correction, but I think it is based upon 20 years' service—that is, 10 years of actual service and the 10 years which is added under the agreement made at the time he was brought into the service.

LIQUOR LICENSE ACT, 1883.

Amendments made in Committee of the Whole to Bill (No. 134) respecting the Liquor License Act, 1883, were read the second time and concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. I beg to move :

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend the same by adding thereto the following clause :

Section 16 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor :

"The applicant shall with his application deposit a fee of $10, which shall be repaid to him in case his application is refused."

I presume the Government have no objection to this clause being added to the Bill. Under the Canada Temperance Act of 1878 provision was made for druggists to obtain licenses from the Lieutenant-Governor in Council in the respective Provinces. By the Act of 1884, that provision was repealed, and thereafter it became necessary for druggists to apply, under the Liquor Act of 1883, for licenses, those applications having to be made, under the Act of 1884, to the commissioners appointed under the Act of 1833. Therefore, under the law as it stands at present, the applications for licenses, whether by liquor sellers or druggists, are required to be made to the commissioners appointed under the Act of 1883; and the section of the Act of 1883 requires that every applicant for a license shall make a deposit of $10 with the commissioners, as a fee to defray the expenses of the examination of the premises and advertising the nature of the application. That provision can hardly apply to the case of the druggists, because the examination that is necessary in the case of hotel keepers is not at all necessary in the case of druggists. As a case in point, I might mention that I received a communication during the present Session from a druggist in my constituency, in which he stated he had made his deposit of $10 with his application, but that his premises had never been examined and no Governmental expenditure of any kind contracted, and the only outcome at all, as far as he was concerned, was that it cost him $10. His experience no doubt is that of all others whose applications have been refused. The same remarks, though not to the same extent, apply to the applications of hotel keepers. It appears to me that those who applied for permission to carry on a trade, which permission was ultimately refused, should be refunded the money they deposited. Under the Act of Ontario, no fee is exacted from the unsuccessful applicant. There are precedents in favor of refunding the money under such circumstances. For example, when parties apply to this House for private Bill legislation, the invariable rule is, I believe, when the application is unsuccessful, to return the fee, and in this particular case the same rule should be followed. Not only in the future should that be the policy it should be retroactive, though,

I regret that, as a private member, I am unable, under the rules of the House, to move that this provision be retroactive. It seems to me to be a special hardship in regard to the past, that all the fees which have been paid to the commissioners have been practically valueless, as the Act under which they made the payments has been declared ultra vires, so that every applicant, whether successful or unsuccessful, has simply, under the Act, been compelled to pay a fee of $10, for which he gets no value, and for which, under the law as it at present stands, he is not going to get value. I will not press the matter further now. I have no doubt the fairness of the position I take is such that it will recommend itself to the favorable consideration of the Government and the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that this section ought to be introduced in committee in the first place, but I do not take that point. The point I take is that this is an amendment to the McCarthy Act, and I do not think we ought to take up one clause of the Act more than another until we have the Bill before us. We cannot well be supposed to have the Act before us when this Bill is merely to suspend those portions of the McCarthy Act which have been declared by the Supreme Court ultra vires. A decision will be obtained this autumn, I have no doubt, before Parliament meets again in January, and then we can deal with this question more properly, as with many others that very likely will arise. I ask the House not to accept the amendment on that ground, but to keep the Bill as it is, leaving the rest of the Act intact. At this late stage we cannot well go into the discussion of the McCarthy Act.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I regret very much the position the hon. gentleman has taken. Although I have advocated, both by voice and vote, a strict enforcement of the Temperance Act, I do not see any reason why Parliament should inflict an injustice upon those who have been honestly engaged in the liquor trade. The hon. gentleman knows quite well that, under the provisions of his Act of 1883, the liquor dealers of this country are being subjected to great annoyance and trouble in their business and put to very considerable expense. The hon. gentleman assured them that he would secure the passing of an Act by the Dominion Parliament, restoring to the municipalities the power of dealing with the liquor question, taken from them by the Local Legislatures. He succeeded in getting an Act passed through Parliament, not restoring it to the Local authorities, but taking it into his own hands, by appointing a Board of License Commissioners to deal with the whole question. These commissioners have issued a large number of licenses. I find, in reply to a return called for, that 6,054 applications have been made for Dominion licenses, and each applicant had to deposit $10, making a total deposit of $60,500. True, a number of the applicants did not take out licenses. Their eyes were opened by the decision of the Privy Council and the decision of the Supreme Court, and they found the hon. gentleman's Bill was valueless; but the applications and deposits were made, and such as obtained licenses had to pay $5.00 more, the total paid to the Board of License Commissioners being $77,336. The hon. gentleman says this is a Bill for a specific purpose, that of suspending the clauses of the McCarthy Act which the court has declared ultra vires, and that it would not be right to engraft on the Bill any other provision; but he forgets that the board are still proceeding in the discharge of their duties, that they are still granting licenses and will continue to grant licenses unless we obtain a decision of the court before next license year comes around. It is a hardship to people engaged in a trade legalised by Parliament that they should be harassed and put to expenses and costs by reason of the Act passed by this Parliament, and the only redress that they can expect at the hands of the Government, a redress which they have a right to expect, is that the moneys illegally and improperly taken from them under color of this Act, which turns out to be no Act of Parliament, should be refunded them. They have paid to the Government the sum of $77,336, and the hon. gentleman knows the Supplementary Estimates ask for $60,000 for the past financial year, for the purpose of meeting the expense of carrying out this Act. Besides the hon. gentleman knows that this Bill now passing through Parliament will not suspend the operation of the Act entirely. It only suspends the portions which the Superior Court has declared to be beyond our competency. The Supreme Court appears to have decided that this Parliament has the right to grant licenses for wholesale purposes and for the sale of liquor upon vessels. The hon. gentleman's board throughout the whole Dominion have still the power under this Act, with which the Bill now before Parliament does not interfere, of granting licenses for the sale of liquor wholesale and for the sale of liquor on board vessels. Therefore it is only right that the motion of my hon. friend should pass, and that those who see fit to make an application to the board of license commissioners appointed by the Government, but, who do not take out licenses from such board, should have restored to them the money they had paid on their application. I go further; I think every dollar that has been taken from the licensed victuallers in the Dominion of Canada, under color of this statute, should be restored to them by the Government, and the Government ought to stay the hands of the licensing board entirely until the question has been finally decided by the Privy Council as to the right of this Parliament to deal, not only with the retail trade, but with the wholesale trade and with licensing vessels for the sale of liquor. However, as my hon. friend says that a private member of the House cannot by the rules of Parliament ask to restore to the licensed dealers the money improperly taken from them, we ask, at all events, that in future, in making application for licenses which are not taken out, the money shall be restored to the applicants. There is another great difficulty in the enforcement of this Act, to which I call the attention of the First Minister. In almost every county in Ontario, the license inspector is not in sympathy with the Scott Act movement, but is in sympathy with the liquor vendors. In the majority of cases, the boards are composed of men who are not in sympathy with the Scott Act, and in almost every case the inspector is opposed to it. In Milton, in the county of Halton, a meeting was held and the difficulties of enforcing the Act, an Act of the Parliament of Canada, were clearly pointed out by the friends of the temperance cause. On the 22nd June, 1885, a meeting was held in Milton and the following resolution was passed:—

"Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to at once call the attention of the Dominion Government to the situation and ask if it is the intention of the Government to furnish funds to put the enforcing machinery at present in existence into operation."

And a person by the name of Brothers, who is an advocate of the temperance cause and takes a lively interest in the movement, writes, enclosing the resolution, in the following terms:—

"I was instructed to communicate with the Government regarding the Scott Act here. They appointed officials here who refused to take a hold of any cases of liquor selling unless the costs were secured by a guarantee or deposit, and we would like to find out whether the Dominion intends to furnish funds to carry out the law or not. Will you please give the copy of the resolution enclosed to the Department and ask them to let us know or find out yourself and do so, though it would perhaps be better to get the Department to communicate with us. We would then have something from the Government direct.

"Yours truly,
"W. D. BROTHERS."

This letter is addressed not to me, but to an hon. member who handed it to me, and I call attention to it because I know, from other information in my possession, as well as from this, that in many cases where the Scott Act is in force the Dominion board are not in sympathy with it and peremptorily refuse to take the first step to enforce it. The Scott Act is the law of the Dominion, and the Dominion authorities ought to see that the provisions of the law are properly and strictly enforced.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). The hon. gentleman is riding two horses. First he is with the licensed victuallers, and then he is with the Scott Act. What he has said is not strictly correct. He states that all the inspectors are in sympathy with the licensed victuallers and opposed to the Scott Act people. That may be the case in Huron, but it is not the case in Hastings, and the hon. gentleman has no right to stand up and accuse men who are not here to take their own part, when he has no evidence to prove it. I believe the officers selected by the Government as inspectors are good men, and are anxious to discharge their duty in the public interest, not to injure the Scott Act people or to injure those who are engaged in the sale of liquor. The hon. gentleman says the money should be refunded, but the next moment he admits that this matter is to be appealed to the Privy Council in order to decide whether we have the right to legislate upon it or not. I think it will be time enough to refund this money when we find out whether we have the right to give these licenses or not. It is not decided yet. I am satisfied the Government will do what is right. We do not intend to take money from the liquor dealers unjustly, or to treat them wrongfully. The hon. gentleman speaks of a wrong being done by this Parliament, but he forgets that it was the Provincial Parliament of Ontario that did the wrong, and that many hundreds of the parties engaged in the sale of liquor begged for a Dominion Act, in order to get out from the tyrannical Acts of the Local Government, to get out from the tyranny of the commissioners.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). You cannot deny it, and to get out from the tyranny of the inspectors, who said: You must do as we say or you will not have a license. They, the dealers in liquor, wanted to get out from the tyranny and the dishonesty and want of justice on the part of the inspectors and the license commissioners, and they are only too anxious and glad that they should come under the Dominion Act, because there is at all events, under that Act, one officer whom the people elect, and that is the warden. There was a time when they could control the council, and when, I contend, the law was better administered and the licensed people kept better houses and gave better accommodation, and when they had not to pay so much for their licenses; they had only to pay $30, and now they have to pay $60 or $70; and I say they are unfairly treated by the Local Government. When it is decided whether this Parliament has the right to grant licenses or not, the Government will do what is right by the licensed victuallers of the Dominion of Canada, and why should they not? They ought to be fairly dealt with. The hon. gentleman knows, he is satisfied in his own mind, that they will be fairly dealt with, but, in order to make a point against the Government, he is riding that horse. He has rode the temperance horse a long time, and now he wants to ride the other horse.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I could not manage to ride the Indian.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I know the Indians in my part of the country, and they are all right—a great many of them better and whiter than you are. Thank God we have none of your breed on the reserve.

Mr. McCRAVEY. I came into the House as the second reading of this Bill was announced, and, having received this letter and not having looked at it, I handed it over to the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron). It comes from the Secretary of the Scott Act Alliance in the county of Halton, and shows how the Act is working there under the machinery we have at present. When the Act was first passed in the county of Halton, the friends of the Scott Act not having the machinery to enforce it, went to the Local Government and asked them to give them the machinery. The Local Government agreed to appoint a stipendiary magistrate, an inspector and three commissioners, and to receive the fees and pay the stipendiary magistrate as well as the inspector, which they did, and the Act worked well until such time as the new machinery under the McCarthy Act came in. Commissioners were appointed under the McCarthy Act, but some of them are not in sympathy with the Act. I have nothing to say against those gentlemen, I believe they are all honorable men; and, as has been stated by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) a large number of the commissioners appointed under that McCarthy Act are not in sympathy with the Scott Act in Scott Act counties. I can name a number of counties in which the whole three of the commissioners are pronounced opponents of the Scott Act, where the inspectors are pronounced opponents of the Scott Act, and where the county attorneys are pronounced opponents of the Scott Act. I have been told such is the case in the county of Dufferin, and that such is the case in the county represented by the hon. member who has just spoken—so much so that these commissioners, instead of licensing the regularly licensed druggists in the county of Huron, have granted to nearly 30 hotel keepers licenses to sell under the druggist clause, and have charged them no fees, so that it is utterly impossible under the present machinery to enforce the Scott Act. The people are now complaining, and they want to know whether it is the intention of the Government to provide proper machinery for enforcing the Act. On this point I will read a few words from a letter written by a gentleman who has had large experience in enforcing the Act in the county of Halton. Speaking of the McCarthy Act he says:

"You know how this was forced upon us against our will, and you can truthfully say that it has done much harm, and done more to retard the progress of the successful working of the Scott Act in Halton than any other cause, and the whole blame lies at the door of the Dominion Government"

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Give us the name.

Mr. McCRAVEY. The name is W. H. Young, stipendiary magistrate for Halton. I do not think he will object to my giving his name. Now, Sir, I do say that the Parliament of Canada, having given us this law, the Government are in duty bound to provide the machinery for enforcing that law, and I think they ought now to let us know what they intend to do in reference to this matter.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman speaks about giving machinery to the Scott Act people. We went so far as to take an order from the bottom of the paper and move it to the top, and proceed with it, and pass through this House a Bill framed and drafted by the Dominion Alliance. We were told that was the machinery they wanted, and before that Bill has been finally assented to by the Governor General, the hon. gentleman says that the Parliament of Canada ought to give them machinery. If the hon. gentleman means that one-half the revenues of this country are to be devoted to the detection of infractions of this law, and to pay costs where people see fit to go around and make complaints that they cannot prove, I doubt very much whether the Parliament of Canada will be disposed to appropriate money for that purpose. I think that many of the members of this House would prefer to see the Government using a little more care with reference to paying the expenses of efforts to pass the Scott Act in counties where the sentiment of the people is not ripe for it.

Mr. McCRAANEY. If the House will allow me to make an explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. A personal explanation of course, but no reply.

Mr. McCRAANEY. I just wish to say that the machinery I referred to was the appointment of men who would see that the Act was fairly carried out.

Amendment negatived.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. MULOCK. I believe under the rules I am not entitled to any reply, having simply moved an amendment, but I suppose on the motion for the third reading I am at liberty to refer to the subject again. I wish to refer to the reasons assigned by the First Minister for not granting this amendment at this date. He says this is a Bill simply to suspend the McCarthy Act. I would remind him that when this Bill goes through, the McCarthy Act for the whole of the year 1885 is suspended, and no matter what is the result of the decision of the Privy Council, you are rendering valueless all the applications and all the licenses granted by the commissioners for this year. Therefore, practically, when this Act is suspended, no matter what may be the decision of the Privy Council, the effect will be that during the year 1885 this Act has no validity, and yet during the whole of this year the commissioners have exacted these fees. The applicants, out of respect for the legislation on the Statute Book, put in their applications. I think under these circumstances the Government is bound as a matter of honor to return the amount of money they have paid, no matter what may be the decision of the Privy Council respecting this Bill in the future. The hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. White), who accuses hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, more particularly the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron), with desiring to ride two horses, has himself attempted that feat.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Three horses.

Mr. MULOCK. He deplores the hardships to which the licensed victuallers have been subjected, and he proposes to add to those hardships by refusing to grant them relief under the present circumstances. If they have had to pay such high fees, if they have been so harassed, why does he help to increase their burdens, as he now proposes to do in refusing his sanction to the little portion of relief that was here suggested? I hope that before Parliament rises the Government will see that it is their duty towards these men who, out of respect to the law, have made their applications in the year 1885, and which applications have been practically rendered useless now, to return this fee.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I do not want to add to the burdens of the licensed victuallers; the hon. gentleman was mistaken in saying so. I said that when it shall be finally decided that this Government had no right to pass the McCarthy Act and to grant licenses, the Government ought to take into consideration whether they should refund the money. I am in favor of the money all being refunded in case it is decided that we had no right to pass the Act. When the hon. gentleman says that the licenses have been increased, he knows it was the Local Government and not this Government who increased them, that it was the Local Government who increased the burdens on the people, and put them in the position they are in now.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NORTH WEST TERRITORIES.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 141) respecting the administration of Justice and other matters in the North-West Territories.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. CARON. This amendment is to remove the limitation of the power of the North-West Council to impose a fine not exceeding $100. By the Act as it now stands the power of the council is thus limited. Stipendiary Magistrate Richardson and some others thought that by this limitation there was some doubt cast upon the right of the council to impose imprisonment as a penalty. It was pointed out to them that this was given by an Order in Council; but still as the limitation is considered to be an unnecessary one in view of the very large powers which the North-West Council now possess, it is deemed advisable to strike it out.

Mr. EDGAR. Then it strikes out the limitation altogether?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

On section 2,

Mr. CARON. The object of this amendment is to make it clear that the North-West Council had power to pass the school ordinances which were passed at the last session of the council. In order to remove doubt about this power the clause provides that this amendment shall date back to the date when the North-West Territory Act came into force. From the information given to me it appears that some correspondence took place between the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territory and between some of the stipendiary magistrates and the Department of Justice. The doubt was raised in consequence of the fact that at some places in the Territories there is not as yet a system of taxation. This amendment has been introduced for the purpose of removing any doubt and relieving the old Act of any disability.

Mr. WELDON. The school system was a voluntary one and could be adopted by the people of the district if they pleased. The effect of this amendment will be that the Governor in Council could pass a school ordinance without the consent of the district.

Mr. MILLS. When the Act relating to the North-West Territories was first adopted, in 1875, there was some discussion on representation and taxation, and I think the conclusion generally reached was that it was not desirable to violate the fundamental principle recognised in the English constitution, that where there is no representation there should be no power of taxation. That was recognised, and, although the North-West Council was intended to be given power to establish school districts and provide a school system, it was left optional with the people to decide how far they would agree to a system of taxation for school purposes. The hon. gentleman proposes to depart from that principle, and to provide that the council of the North-West, in which a majority of votes would be cast by those who are nominated by the Crown and not by those elected by the people, should have the power to provide for the imposition of taxation upon the people of the North-West. That would be a very wide departure from a well recognised rule. What is the fundamental rule recognised in regard to taxation? It is not that taxation is voted by Parliament simply as a representative body, but it is provided by the House of Commons as a delegated body. The taxation imposed on the people and the subsidies given to the Crown are given by those to whom they properly belong, and Parliament decides for what purposes the Crown may use the money offered it. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes to introduce a wholly new doctrine, and that is that property may be taken from the holders thereof without their consent. The hon. gentleman also proposes to make that law which has not been law up to this moment. He proposes to introduce a principle which he says has been recognised by the Government of Ontario in the Streams Bill. He proposes that that which was not law shall be made law by this Parliament, and it shall not only be made law, but it shall be dated back, so as to come into effect from the passing of the North-West Territories Act. No matter how contrary to law that may be, the hon. gentleman proposes by this Bill to make it law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not advised as to how any doubt should have arisen as to the part of the section which is intended to be amended; but some doubt has arisen in the North-West, and on the representations made, it is proposed to strike out that portion of the section. The hon. gentleman will see if he reads the section in the Act of 1880 that it will not have the effect of subjecting the people to taxation without representation. We will suppose that the words which are to be left out, are left out, and I will read the clause as it stands:

"The Lieutenant Governor by and with the consent of the Council or Assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education; but it shall therein be always provided that the majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the North-West Territories, or any lesser portion or sub-division thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and, further, that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such latter case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools, shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they may impose upon themselves in respect thereof."

In both cases the Lieutenant Governor, with the consent of the council or the assembly, may pass all the necessary ordinances for the purposes of education, but such ordinances must provide that a majority of the ratepayers in any district or portion of the North-West, must do so and so in the way of making the necessary assessment and collection for the purposes of these schools. It seems to me that as the establishment of the schools themselves and the levying of the rate is left to a majority of the ratepayers, the question of representation without taxation cannot well come in.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is unfortunate that we should be asked to pass this clause, amending the law as it now stands, when the Minister who is responsible for putting the measure through the committee, cannot give us any explanation of the necessity for the amendment, and the First Minister cannot tell us the nature of the doubt which is supposed to render that amendment necessary. We are informed that there has been a great deal of correspondence on the subject, but we have not seen or read that correspondence; they do not communicate the correspondence to us, or give us any opportunity of forming an intelligible opinion as to the necessity of passing such an amendment, or making the amendment retroactive. All sides admit that retroactive legislation is only to be justified by special circumstances; and when such legislation is proposed, the special reason or emergency should be stated to us in order to justify the passing of such a law. I think, therefore, both as to the general amendment and as to the circumstances of its being retroactive in its effect that some explanation is required. I would understand this clause as it stands in the Bill, to intend that the people in any district, before any general or special ordinances are passed in effect creating municipal institutions in that district, shall organise themselves into municipalities, which they cannot do without taxation; and the first step for them to take if they want schools, is to secure the local municipal institution, of which the necessary and the wholesome ingredient is a local system of taxation, to sustain those institutions. There was a practical test of their wanting schools, or of their being able to establish schools in a particular district. When any portion of the Territories had been put in a position that there was a local system of taxation established, thereupon the Lieutenant Governor, with the consent of the council, could establish school ordinances, and the local system, the local machinery or ordinances, are carried out under that. Now, what is the doubt, what is the difficulty? What is the intention hereafter? Is it intended, for example, that general ordinances, establishing schools all over the North-West Territories, or in any portion of them in which the nominated council is to have preponderance, may be passed as they think it expedient, and is there to be some compulsion on the people to raise the funds or to be a dead letter until they do establish a local system of taxation and raise the necessary funds?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that, although the amendment may be open to the remarks the hon. gentleman has made, on reading the clause again, the object is clear. It is a case of the cart before the horse. According to the Act the system of taxation must be established first. I take it that the moment this Act was passed, which was in 1880, the Lieutenant Governor in Council passed a law establishing a system, and in the same Act they provided that the schools should be established, and that Act contained all the clauses of this Act. It is done at the same time pari passu. It is quite clear that a doubt has been raised whether there must not be a special system of taxation adopted first by a separate Act, before the second portion of the Act can come into force.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman's suggestion is purely hypothetical, and it is based on an error, because this clause was introduced in the original Act of 1875, and has been the law ever since, while the Minister who is in charge of the Bill vouchsafed the information that it was only last Session that this difficulty arose. So it will not do for an ingenious and a subtle mind to conjecture an explanation without the facts to sustain it.

Mr. EDGAR. If this amendment is only to correct an error in one clause, why do we require to change the general law which is a good one? We do not think that this clause can possibly mean what the First Minister suggests, because it does not say a general system of taxation for the whole North-West, but only applies to separate districts or portions. It means that when in any separate district, or portion, a system of taxation is adopted, they may make provision for separate and other schools.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). This is not an isolated case at all. It applies to scores of cases in the North-West Territories. To my mind it is quite clear they cannot have a school or a school section in any portion of the North-West Territories, they cannot impose taxes on themselves for the purpose of establishing a school unless there has been first adopted in the district of which the school section forms a part, a system of taxation. This is only another instance of how thoroughly ignorant hon. gentlemen are of the condition of affairs in the North-West. This difficulty arose two years ago in the village of Moose Jaw, which was not then incorporated, and I do not know that it is yet. The people there undertook to establish a school and to assess themselves to pay a teacher, but when they came to levy the taxes they found they could not do it, because the township in which Moose Jaw is situated had never adopted a system of taxation; and Moose Jaw itself, not having been incorporated as a village or town, had no system of taxation. The difficulty is not limited to Moose Jaw; it has existed in several places in the North-West, and I think the Government must have heard of it. I know that the authorities of Moose Jaw had correspondence with the Government on this subject so far back as 1883. I was consulted by parties in November, 1883, and I recommended communication with the Lieutenant Governor and with the Government at Ottawa. This is not an isolated case, but there are similar cases in many places in the North-West Territories; and the hon. gentleman knows that in very few districts in the North-West has any system of taxation been yet adopted.

Mr. CARON. It seems to me that this amendment exactly meets the point the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has just stated. He says he sees no objection at all to our confirming the ordinance. That is really what this amendment is doing. Doubt having existed as to the North-West Council having the power to pass a school ordinance, this clause removes that doubt, and really confirms the ordinance which has been passed. I think it is very desirable that in the future there should be no doubt as to the powers of the council, and this amendment provides that in the future there can be no doubt. It is quite true, as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down said, that the establishment of a school section must be preceded by a system of taxation. That law is left as it has existed, but I think it is right that the doubt I have referred to should be removed by this amendment.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is desirable that we should understand what the result of this amendment is going to be. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon), from a cursory perusal of the Act of 1880, has been unable to find a clause which immediately preceded the school clause in the original Act. I call the attention of the First Minister to the cast of the original Act. The first portion of the 10th clause is as follows:—

"Whenever any electoral district shall be found to contain not less than 1,000 inhabitants, the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, as the case may be, may pass ordinances erecting the same into a municipal corporation or corporations as they may think fit: and thenceforth the power of the Lieutenant Governor and council or assembly as herein conferred in respect of taxation for municipal purposes shall cease."

That, I believe, is in the new Act; but my hon. friend has been unable to find in it this portion of the 10th clause:

"And every such municipal corporation shall thenceforth have the right to pass by-laws for raising within such municipality by taxation a revenue for municipal purposes in such district, and for the collection and appropriation of the same in the promotion thereof; and the Lieutenant Governor and council or assembly, as the case may be, shall pass any ordinance or ordinances prescribing the powers and authorities which may be exercised by any such municipal corporation and the mode and extent of such taxation; provided that the power herein given to the Lieutenant Governor and council or assembly, as the case may be, of taxation for local purposes of such district shall not be prejudiced by the erection of the same into a municipality or municipalities, but such power shall continue vested in them in respect of local purposes not comprised within such municipal purposes as to which powers may be conferred by any ordinance or ordinances as aforesaid."

So that there was a power to erect districts into municipal corporations; there was a power given to the municipalities so erected to tax for the purposes for which they were allowed to tax, and the power of the Lieutenant Governor and Council to impose local taxation for that class of purposes ceased; but there remained the other power to the Lieutenant Governor to pass ordinances in respect to other purposes, such as education, and the ratepayers of the district were to make the necessary assessments and collection. So that it seems to me the original cast of the legislation intended that unless and until the municipal corporations had power to levy rates for school purposes, it was intended that the Lieutenant Governor should have powers to assess for schools; but that when the local corporation was clothed with power to tax for school purposes, it should go on and create schools, and then the latter portion of the 10th section should apply. If the latter part be left out, that may have created a doubt, but we should know what is the exact nature of the doubt and what the result of the legislation is going to be. If we have no power to pass this local legislation we may be left in a worse position than before. We want to have the power, either indirectly through the medium of the Council of the North-West Territories to levy rates for the purpose of a sustaining schools, or power directly by ourselves; but the nature of the doubt not being now explained to us, I am not satisfied that we shall make a satisfactory piece of legislation even now. If your intention is that there shall be local taxation for school purposes, though there is no municipal organisation for any other purpose, you might very well have put in more words than there are here. If your intention is they shall have a school only when there is a municipal institution of wider range established, that is a different thing, but it may be necessary for the purpose to say what provisions in the present law are substituted for those which appear to have been stricken out of the 10th section of the original Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy that the difficulty of establishing these municipalities was found to be a bar to the introduction of the school system. Under the old Act, the establishment of a municipality must precede any school whatever. Well, the settlers are even now scattered, and in 1880 they were still more so, in small groups all over the North-West. There were not a sufficient number to establish a municipality, but quite sufficient to establish a school system, and therefore, I presume, in order to enable any group of parents or settlers to establish a school system without establishing a municipality in the first place, this law was adopted:

"It shall therein be always provided, that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the North-West Territories, or any lesser portion or sub-division thereof by whatever name the same may be known may establish such schools therein as they may see fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor."

They form themselves into a school district and tax themselves for the purpose of establishing a school. That is evidently the intention of the clause, and this is merely to confirm it and remove doubt.

Mr. MILLS. The Act of 1877 provides:

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly, as the case may be, shall have such powers to make ordinances for the government of the North-West Territory, as the Governor in Council may, from time to time, confer upon him, provided always such powers shall not at any time be in excess of those conferred by the 92nd and 93rd sections of the British North America Act, in 1867, upon the Legislature of the several Provinces of the Dominion."

I remember well there was an Order in Council prepared under this provision of the Act, defining what the powers of the Lieutenant Governor in Council in the North-West Territory should be, and among the powers conferred upon him, under this section, was one providing for legislation on the subject of schools, and the power to pass ordinances in relation to public schools, and I have no doubt whatever that ample power was given under that section. That law is continued, and, in all probability, if the Local Legislature there has legislated upon the subject, they will have as ample power to deal with it as the hon. gentleman now proposes to give them.

On section 3,

Mr. CARON. This is to remove a doubt as to dealing with electoral districts when created.

Mr. EDGAR. As the clause stands now, it is not stated that when an electoral district is divided into two electoral districts, whether the member for the old electoral district will continue to sit and the people wait until his term expires before they can get another member. Words of this kind might be added: They shall be entitled to elect a member after the expiration of the term of the sitting member, or on a vacancy occurring, for any cause, in the representation of the electoral district. Otherwise, you would postpone the additional representation until the next general elections.

Mr. MILLS. I have called the attention of the Minister to section 15: "When, and so soon as the Lieutenant Governor is satisfied by such proof as he may require, that any districts or portion of the North-West Territories, not exceeding an area of 1,000 square miles." At the time the Act was framed there were three settlements, Prince Albert settlement, Battleford settlement, and the one in the vicinity of Fort Macleod, and the object no doubt of this provision was to prevent migratory people, who resided perhaps amongst the Indians, being counted among the electors and to discourage the scattering of electors over a wide extent of territory. But the hon. gentleman will see that this is a very limited territory in a sparsely settled country to erect into an electoral district, and that a very much larger territory ought to be embraced. 50 miles square makes 2,500 square miles, and no doubt the small representation in the North-West Council is in part due to the fact that a large population, scattered over a large extent of territory, is so sparse that you cannot find 1,000 adults on 1,000 square miles. That ought to be remedied, and the Act ought to be so amended, that the North-West Council should be authorised to make such boundaries as they see proper for their electoral districts. Otherwise you may have more than half the population of the territory, for many years to come, wholly unrepresented. You cannot erect into an electoral district any territory that does not contain 1,000 adult persons on these narrow limits. If you were to say that it should be 100 miles square, in a sparsely settled district, it would not be very large in that country, and it would contain 10,000 square miles. The hon. gentleman will see that it is highly expedient that the restriction should be removed, and that provision should be made as to the term for which the council are to be elected.

Mr. CARON. By the 15th clause, to which the hon. gentleman has just been referring, the Lieutenant Governor may erect into an electoral district any portion of the North-West Territories not exceeding an area of 1,000 square miles which contains a population of not less than 1,000 inhabitants of adult age, exclusive of aliens or unfranchised Indians. By the 19th clause it is provided that, when such electoral district contains 2,000 such inhabitants, the Lieutenant Governor shall issue his writ for the election of a second member for such electoral district. The Lieutenant Governor is of opinion, as far as the information I have goes, that, having once constituted an electoral district, he is not able to change it, and it is to remove that doubt that, concurring in the view entertained by the Lieutenant Governor, the Bill has been prepared to meet the difficulty. I believe also that one of the members of the council, Mr. Jackson, when my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works was in the North-West, had a conversation with him in reference to this very important matter from their standpoint, and he asked to have the law so amended that the boundaries of an electoral district could be altered. The two things upon which this Act appears to lay stress are that the area of the electoral district shall not be more than 1,000 square miles, and that the population shall not be less than 1,000 inhabitants of adult age. The amendment, as now proposed by the Bill to section 19, has been framed for the purpose of meeting this difficulty, and I think it does. It meets exactly what was suggested, enabling the Lieutenant Governor to divide any electoral district which has more than 2,000 inhabitants into two electoral districts, issuing his writ for the purpose of allowing another member to be elected to represent that district.

Mr. BLAKE. I think what we ought to endeavor to attain is the early and speedy representation of the various localities which have a substantial number of inhabitants. I do not think we can place too much stress upon that safety valve which is given by the system of representation. I think we ought to regard the mode of settlement as it has happened in the North-West. The Act, when passed by my hon. friend, was wholly speculative and experimental, and at that time there were just three settlements, although at least two settlements were not then, or for some years afterwards, large enough to get the benefit of it. What I would like to see is this: I would, in the first place, adopt the principle of dividing the districts, instead of agreeing that there should be a second member for the same district. It would be more satisfactory, in dealing with local affairs, that the different localities should elect their own members than that a large number should elect two members by a single vote. It would be more just and reasonable. Suppose you have a district in which there are 1,000 square miles, in which there are 1,900 adult souls. You cannot provide either that that district should be divided, under the amendment, or that a second member should be given to it; but, immediately outside of that district, there may be 500 adults settled; so that you could cut that district, with the adjacent districts, into two districts each with more than 1,000 square miles, and each with more than 1,000 souls. What is wanted is that, when you come round to the last session before the election, the council should reconsider the divisions. Take the case of the Lorne district. If you find that, in that 1,000 square miles, there are, with an adjacent part not exceeding another 1,000 square miles, 2,000 people, you might get in the Prince Albert and St. Laurent districts, and you might thus have it declared that there should be proper representation at the earliest practicable opportunity. I do not think we can hope that, in so short a time as two years, you can effectually make provision, except with regard to the so-called general election, but you must wait for the termination of the existing man's term. But, in the rapid changes of population and condition which we hope for in that country, if there shall have supervened a change in the affairs of that country, an arrangement of the bounds would be a thing which it would be very desirable to bring about, and we should have facility to do that. I think the hon. gentleman would find it very important to have it arranged in that way rather than that there should be a larger area with two members. I believe it would be better, for example, to emphasise it by a locality, but there might be a member for the easterly portion or the southerly portion of the Lorne district, and another member for the upper portion, and that would be better than to have two members for the whole district. No doubt, in order to get the two members, you will have to take larger bounds but you will get the men in faster and you will get them to represent smaller areas in fact, and smaller area of population, and you will have a better result than by this plan.

Mr. MILLS. A district of 50 miles square would contain 2,500 square miles, and you might find a population of over 1,000 adults entitled to elect a member for such a district, whereas, if you confine it to about 33 miles square, which would make 1,000 square miles, you would not have that population, and you might have a number of such districts succeeding each other, which, under this law, could not have any representation at all. I think it is desirable that even a sparse population should have representation given to it, and I think the time has gone by when a distinction of this kind should obtain. We have had many constituencies in Ontario which contained more than 1,000 square miles before the population was as large as it now is. There was the western district for instance, which included Essex, Kent and Lambton, and which at one time returned a member to the Legislature of Canada; and those three counties contained a much larger area than the one I have mentioned. Then there was the district comprising Huron, Grey and Bruce, which was very much larger than even the western district, and that returned a member. I think the restriction here is no longer appropriate, looking at the circumstances of the country and the conditions of settlement. We know, too, that distance is even less regarded in a prairie country than it is in the older portions of Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the whole system is but experimental in the Act of 1880, and the previous Act, and I have no doubt that it must be fully considered hereafter, with the view of bringing the legislative bodies more in accordance with the system in the Provinces. I do not think, however, at present that it would be well to alter the area, but in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. member for the West Riding, I would suggest to my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill, that to the amendment which says: "The 19th section of the Act is hereby amended by adding thereto the words: 'Or he may, in the manner aforesaid, erect such electoral district into two electoral districts, each of which shall be entitled to elect a member;'" these words to be added: "with the advice of the council or assembly, as the case may be, rearrange the electoral districts or any of them from time to time." That is to say, he may, with the advice of his council, gerymander the different districts so as to meet the case mentioned by the hon. member for the West Riding, that there may be in one electoral district 1,900 people and there may be a few outside. In order to meet such a case he may, with the advice of the assembly, rearrange them so as to bring these people in.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that some indication be made in order to secure, as far as possible, a representation for each district of 1,000 square miles with 1,000 souls in the territory, or something of that kind. You will find the phrase just now used, "rearrange the electoral districts," is an extremely vague one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. EDGAR. The number of one adult to the square mile, come to think of it, is a considerable population in a new country, because it involves a population of at least two and a half to the square mile, including children, and requires a much more dense population than I think ought to be required in that country. Now, I have just been looking at the density of population in some of the United States. Our population, according to this scale, must be about 2.5 to the square mile. In Colorado the population is 1.9 to the square mile; in Idaho there is not 1 to the square mile; in Montana nothing like 1 to the mile; Nevada, less than 1 to the mile; New Mexico, just 1; the State of Oregon, 1.8; Utah, 1.7; Washington Territory, 1.1; so that the population to the mile that we require for representation in any portion of the North-West is much more dense than in any of the States I have mentioned.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I think the point in relation to distance in the North-West is well worth the attention of the Government. There is no doubt that in that prairie country distances appear less than half what they do in the older Provinces. People there think less of 50 miles than we do of 20. Even in Ontario, some counties are a 100 miles in length. When thrown into a square, a 1,000 square miles, come within a small fraction of a block 32 miles square. Now, an adherence to that principle that there must be 1,000 adult persons in that area, deprives all those portions where the population is more scattered, from representation. There are many practical reasons in the North-West why that rule should be varied. It is certain to be the case that farms will be much larger in area than they are here. There is a necessity that pastures should contain a greater area than they have in this country. Moreover, the season is closely limited at both ends, and it will be found necessary to do a certain amount of ploughing at a time when the crop is maturing. There are many reasons why this rigid rule of 32 miles square should not be adhered to, because if it is there are many parts which are more thinly settled which will be without representation.

Mr. CARON. I beg to submit the following amendment to that clause which I think covers the points brought out in this discussion:—

Or he may, with the advice of his council or assembly, as the case may be, from time to time rearrange such electoral districts or any of them, so as to secure as far as possible the representation of each electoral district of not less than 1,000 square miles, and containing 1,000 inhabitants of adult age.

On section 4,

Mr. CARON. The object of this clause is to enable the Government to appoint another stipendiary magistrate. I explained yesterday that the people of the districts consider this necessary owing to the increased population and business.

On section 6,

Mr. CARON. The attention of the Government has been called to the fact that in cases of appeal to the Queen's Bench of Manitoba no provision has been made up to the present time to allow costs to successful parties. It was thought desirable to amend the law so as to make the necessary provisions.

On section 10,

Mr. EDGAR. What are the provisions of the North-West Territories Act as to declaring a person to be insane, because this seems to be a very serious clause? It gives the Lieutenant Governor power to shut up persons in asylums or other places for almost any time he chooses. There should be some provision as to how a person is to be declared insane. In the other Provinces a certificate signed by two doctors is required.

Mr. CARON. Sections 10, 11, 12, and 13 are intended to take the place of the Act 42 Vic., cap. 1, section 13. This Act makes provision for the keeping of lunatics in Manitoba penitentiary. At present those unfortunate people have been kept at a temporary lunatic asylum in Manitoba. The intention is ultimately to remove them to Selkirk lunatic asylum, pending the erection of a proper building at Regina. Section 10 corresponds with section 1 of 42 Vic., cap. 28. Some little departure was made from that section, and the present section has been drawn more in conformity with the section of the Procedure Act relating to insane prisoners, 33 and 34 Vic. The additions are principally upon two points. First, by the Act of 1879, the Lieutenant Governor only acted when authorised by the Governor General. It was found in the experience of those who were applying the law, that a great deal of time was lost and a great deal of useless correspondence had to be exchanged, for the purpose of obtaining the authority to which I have just been referring. It is considered better that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories should be allowed to Act on his own responsibility, the same as the Lieutenant-Governors of the Provinces do. In the second place, by the Act of 1879, the Governor General could only authorise the Lieutenant Governor to act when he was satisfied that the person was afflicted with permanent insanity. This has been omitted, and I think it is a desirable omission to make. The Lieutenant Governor has been authorised to act in respect of any insane person who is under any law or ordinance kept in custody until the Lieutenant Governor's pleasure is known. Section 11 corresponds with section 3 of the Act of 1879, without any material change. Section 12 is new, and is necessary to legalise the transfer which was made from Manitoba penitentiary to the temporary lunatic asylum of Manitoba, and also the transfer which it will be necessary to make from that place of confinement to the asylum to be erected at Selkirk. Section 13 is the section which provides to the maintenance of lunatics, and it was the subject of discussion upon one of the resolutions which I had the honor to bring down yesterday.

Mr. EDGAR. I daresay all the machinery which is provided for here, is quite necessary, but what I would like to know, is, how a person is declared or found insane, in the territories, under what law or ordinance, so that he can be dealt with under this clause? We are providing that all these stringent and arbitrary measures which override the ordinary rules of law, shall be put in operation with respect to any person who under any law or ordinance in force in the North-West Territories, is kept in custody as insane. It all depends on that. I do not dispute the wisdom of that provision, provided we are told what the ordinances of the North-West Territories are as to the insane, because they ought to be understood by the House.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman is quite right in stating that every possible precaution should be taken, and that this law should be guarded by every possible means, lest under such extensive powers abuses might occur. It struck me as much as it strikes the hon. gentleman at present, and I took particular trouble to ascertain what had been done, and if since the Act was put in operation, any abuses had taken place. In the North-West, so far as I can ascertain, every precaution is taken. No lunatic can be placed in an asylum without the order of a stipendiary magistrate. That is a very great source of protection to these unfortunate people. Knowing the high judicial position occupied by the stipendiary magistrates, it is plain that leaving it to them to issue an order without which no insane person can be placed in confinement, gives all possible protection against abuses of any kind. These orders are also sent down here for approval, and great care is taken with regard to them by the Department of Justice. That is another source of protection. They are gone over by the deputy, or the Minister of Justice himself, and every possible precaution is taken to see that they are perfectly right.

Mr. MILLS. It would be advantageous if these orders were published in the volume of the statutes, the same as the general orders, because in the majority of cases, the ordinances relating to government in the Territories, are not printed or very widely distributed. They embrace, I suppose, but a limited space, and I see no reason why they might not be published along with the statutes of Canada. I think this is specially desirable, so long as nominated members continue to be members of the council, and the Government and Parliament are largely responsible for their acts.

On section 14,

Mr. CARON. This clause refers to the sale of arms in the North-West. Referring to the speech delivered by the Minister of Justice when he introduced this Bill, I see he stated that it was prepared after consultation with Colonel Richardson, one of the stipendiary magistrates, and it was deemed advisable after that consultation, that the burden of proof should lie with the person who has arms in his possession, to show that he has a license to carry them. The smooth bore shot guns will be the only arms which will be left to the Indians under the provisions of this Act. All fixed ammunition and arms of precision are taken from them. It is considered that smooth bore shot guns will be sufficient to enable them to carry on the hunting and killing of the fur-bearing animals and the small game which abound in that district.

Mr. BLAKE. This section would deal with the case of a private individual selling or exchanging his own arm with another. Of course I quite agree as to the importance of some provision which will ensure no more of these dangerous weapons getting into the hands of the Indians; but we must see that the general convenience of the public is interfered with as little as possible. A settler may go up there and he may have a rifle or something of that kind; he may get hard up, and another settler may come along with whom he may want to exchange his rifle. This Bill prevents that. Would it not be better to confine the limitation to the class of persons you are providing for? I do not much object to licenses being required from persons making a trade of selling arms; that is one thing, but in a country like that, I can understand a very frequent commerce of the kind I have described in arms and ammunition between the settlers themselves; and it would seem to be a hard thing that that should be prevented, unless the hon. gentleman showed that there was a public danger which required a restriction of that kind to be imposed upon white men.

Mr. CARON. I think it would be very difficult, more especially under present circumstances, to prevent these arms getting into the hands of the Indians if the trading and bartering of them were allowed. I have no doubt the day will come when this restriction will be removed; but at present I think it is necessary, and I am confirmed in my opinion from having read the discussion which took place in another Chamber where a similar objection was urged. I think it would be better to allow the clause to remain as it is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think under present circumstances the ordinary settler will be very glad to see this clause. It cannot be too stringent at this moment. The great object is to collect arms of precision, and not allow them to be in the hands of certain classes. If a white person went into the country having arms in his possession, and happened to sell them to Indians or a half-breed or a horse thief, it would be very difficult to trace them. The Bill requires that he shall have them in his possession. That is stringent but it is absolutely necessary that we should know where the arms are. The Lieutenant Governor will appoint commissioners—magistrates of the country who will be commissioners—and any respectable person going to a magistrate will get permission to carry a weapon. It is registered that he has that weapon, and if he cannot produce it at any time, he will be obliged to show to whom he has sold or traded it. Without that, you have no means of tracing the clandestine exchange of arms. This is only a temporary provision, which I daresay will disappear as the country grows older; but at present I can assure the committee it will give satisfaction and confidence to the settlers.

Mr. MILLS. What is the reason certain powers are given to the Lieutenant Governor and others to the Governor in Council?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Lieutenant Governor and council is a legislative body.

Mr. MILLS. It is an administrative body in a larger degree than a legislative body.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It only sits once a year for a few weeks.

Mr. MILLS. You trust them with the liquor business.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the hon. gentleman intend to include pistols and revolvers in this provision?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I may just say that I perceive the difficulties of the situation, but at the same time I feel there would be a very great danger of difficulty arising from this provision. You are dealing with a sparsely settled community at a very great distance, and you are practically taking the arms out of the hands of white men unless they get these permits. I have not read the debate which took place in the other Chamber, and I have not the grounds of the satisfaction produced by its perusal in the mind of the hon. Minister; but I do entertain some apprehension lest, in our laudable desire to prevent dangerous characters having arms, we may interfere with the protection of peaceable subjects.

Mr. MILLS. I cannot help thinking this measure will be regarded with very great displeasure in the North-West Territory. There is good and sufficient cause for taking arms out of the hands of the Indian population. They no longer subsist by the chase, as there is none there, and we wish to confine them to their reservations and put it out of their power to be dangerous to the new settlers; but to provide for disarming the entire population and treat the white people as people not fit to be entrusted with arms, to deal with them as the Russian Government deals with the Poles, does seem a very extraordinary course to adopt, when our desire is to encourage immigration and the settlement of the country. I believe the people of the North-West Territory will regard this with great indignation, and I think with just reason. If you have a sparse population, which you cannot sufficiently defend against the murderous attacks of the Indians, to say to them: You shall not have arms in your possession without a license, is to say to them: you shall not go into the country and take up lands for the purpose of cultivation and settlement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has not read the whole clause or he would not say so. In the first place, there must be permission given by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or a commissioner appointed by him to have arms. Then the Governor in Council may, from time to time, issue general regulations for the granting of permission to sell, exchange, trade, barter, give or possess arms or ammunition. The 5th clause provides: "The provisions of this section respecting the possession of arms and ammunition shall not apply to any officer or men of Her Majesty's forces of the militia force or of the North-West Mounted Police force." Then "the Governor in Council may, from time to time, declare by proclamation that upon and after a day therein named, this section shall be in force in the North-West Territory"; so that until the issue of the proclamation this clause shall not be in force. "Or in any place or places therein in such proclamation designated, and upon and after such day but not before, the provisions hereof shall take effect and be in force accordingly." Then the 7th section provides: "The Governor in Council may, in like manner, from time to time, declare this section to be no longer in force in any such place or places, and may again, from time to time, declare it to be in force therein." This refers to districts where an insurrection or outbreak may take place, and this restriction will be taken away when the exigency is passed.

Mr. BLAKE. The spirit in which the Government proposes this section is that such proclamation will be issued only in case an emergency shall arise in particular districts, and that it will have force only for a limited period of time. From his original statement, I would have supposed he had intended to give the Act a wider application, and to act in a different spirit from that which he has indicated. We are certainly giving the power to the Governor in Council at once to put the whole North-West under this restriction.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it is but right that the Indians should not be allowed to have military rifles; the Indian is a very different person with a Winchester in his hands from what he is without it. No one can read the report of the Mounted Police without gathering from it that the tendency on his part is to become rather saucy, and nothing would please the settler more than to find that rifles are no longer to be in the possession of the Indians. There is no necessity that they should have them, for with the exception of a few tribes who inhabit the mountain ranges and hunt the wild sheep, which are outside range of shot, there is no chase that requires the use of the rifle. But if there is to be any restriction placed on the white settler having the rifle, I fear we are stepping on to thin ice, treading upon dangerous ground.

Bill reported with amendments.

Mr. CARON moved that the Bill, as amended, be now taken into consideration.

Mr. MILLS moved that the Bill be referred back to the committee, with instructions to amend the same so as to provide that electoral districts may be established embracing areas of 2,000 square miles.

Mr. CARON. As I have already stated, we consider that it is more advisable before making any such change that we should have an opportunity of consulting the local authorities on that point. I think for the present the Bill should remain as it is.

Mr. MILLS. The local authorities will have an opportunity of considering this proposition after we have adopted it; and if they do not choose to enlarge their districts, they will not be under obligation to do so. This takes away no power, but simply gives them the discretion they are best able to exercise in that territory. I may remind this House that the Minister of Agriculture has informed us there are more than 100,000 people in that territory, and there are only 8 representatives, which, at most, would not represent a population exceeding 25,000. There must be a very large population scattered over that territory that is not embraced in these electoral districts, and it is easy to understand why not. They are not sufficiently numerous to constitute the required number within the area of a 1,000 square miles.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am opposed to this amendment, because by it Parliament would be expressing an opinion it ought not to express before consulting the local authorities.

Mr. BLAKE. We are getting very particular about the local authorities, so particular that we will not allow them, should they think it wise, to give more representation to the people of the North-West. We are passing a law under which it is impossible for them, if they think it wise, to give representation to the people, unless they find in a 1,000 square miles 1,000 souls. And we are so particular about their interests and so afraid that they will be oppressed by the weight of our opinion that we refuse to give them the opportunity of having representation for a district extending for 2,000 square miles unless 1,000 souls are found in it. I am afraid we are running into extremes. There has been too much neglect in the past, and there is too nice a distinction in the present.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The addition of 1,000 square miles to 1,000 square miles would only make a difference from the centre to the outside of the square of about  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles. A square containing 2,000 square miles would be 45 miles across, and a square containing 1,000 square miles would be 32 miles across, so that there is only a difference of  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles from the centre in consequence of the addition of 1,000 square miles. In a country where the roads are good, and you have not to make the angles as you do here, the distance is immaterial.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mills.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 146) to amend the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1833.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is a new clause, is it not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; there is now a penalty in reference to spirits, and we are extending it to malt.

Mr. PATERSON. It seems to me that an innocent person might be made to suffer under this clause. A carter or a teamster who was engaged to move some of this stuff illegally manufactured, without any knowledge that it was illegal, might be compelled to forfeit his horses and all that he had.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Customs law, I think, provides for the same thing, and I suppose that, if the party proves his innocence, he would not have to pay any penalty. Some such provision is necessary, as we have had cases of this kind.

On section 4,

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is a change here from the old Act. The old Act attached the penalty to the selling of the package, the barrel or cask, while this attaches the penalty to the sale of the contents of the package.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The question is whether that is not a little too stringent. Suppose a person went into a cigar factory, for instance, and saw an empty cigar box and asked to have it to keep a plant in, or for some other innocent purpose. If the label remained on that box the manufacturer would be liable to a penalty.

Mr. FAIRBANK.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, but manufacturers will take means to make themselves acquainted with the provisions of this Act.

On section 8,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is entirely new. Distillers have for some time complained that they have a right to a refund for the shrinkage in spirits that are warehoused, and they claim that they are actually paying duty on a quantity of spirits that they do not put into the market. In England and in the United States the Government allows this drawback, and we propose to do the same. Having now a high class of excisemen, who have been thoroughly trained by practical examinations, this new system may be adopted with safety.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This clause means the introduction of the English law with respect to abatement. This means a loss of revenue, except the proposition which was in the resolution, which was somewhat changed before it passed through committee, is carried out in another form and an extra duty is imposed on spirits. Is it the intention of the Government to impose an extra 5 cents a gallon, which we were given to understand it was the intention of the Government to do, in order to make up the loss of revenue that will follow?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Finance Minister would answer the question if he were here.

Mr. BLAKE. This is part of the whole proposition. The scheme of the Government was said to be to impose an additional 5 cents a gallon, but in effect to give it back again, so that the revenue might not be diminished. The form of the proposition was objectionable. The Government had no right under constitutional rules to give the power of taxing the people to the Governor in Council. The Government yielded to this objection, and it was understood they would obtain in proper constitutional form this increase of duty. We have not seen any proposal to raise the duty, and therefore may suspect, in fact I have suspected it for some time, that looking at the period of the Session at which we have arrived, there has been some change in the policy of the Government, and it is not intended to protect the revenue against the change that will be effected by this Bill. We ought to know what the policy of the Government is upon this subject.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This year there will be no loss of revenue by the operation of this clause. I do not think it is necessary to make any changes now. Parliament will meet again before the revenue can be affected by this provision.

Mr. BLAKE. No. Whiskey will evaporate during the next 12 months, as it has done before.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I feel bound to say that some remarks have been made in this House and in the country which were rather unfair to the distillers. It has been said that they were taking advantage of this notice that was given to them of an increase of duty, and that this was a put up job between the Minister of Inland Revenue and the distillers to get $1,000,000 into the treasury.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, it was the other way.

Mr. BLAKE. We did not charge the distillers with being so anxious to assist the hon. gentleman by depleting their pockets of large sums.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The committee having struck that clause out of the Bill, I cannot ask the committee to put it in again; and I must go on with the Bill as it now is.

Mr. BLAKE. That is not a wholly satisfactory answer. The committee struck the clause out at the Minister's request upon the objection being taken, to which no answer could be given, that it was not in accordance with the constitution that the Governor in Council should be given power to impose burdens on the people; but those burdens were to be imposed by the Act of the Legislature. The statement was certainly implied, and I think it was stated, that the policy of the Government was unchanged, and that which made it important to make the proposal still remained, and the Government would endeavor to accomplish it in a proper and constitutional manner. Now the Minister has hinted that it is not his intention this Session to propose that increase of duty, because no difficulty will arise for 12 months. Being reminded that whiskey will evaporate during the next 12 months as it has during previous periods, and that there will be a diminution of revenue. He has no answer to that argument, and he falls back on the committee and says he has no alternative but to go on with the Bill. If so, it must be upon the understanding that the present proposal is to pass without making any effort to replenish the revenue. I think the revenue would have been diminished in any event, because I do not think the 5 cents additional would have been equivalent to the reduction. The first proposal was in form a permissive one, and the Governor in Council might have said that they would not raise the duty by 5 cents on the gallon. I do not remember that the statement was made that he had "put up a job."

Mr. COSTIGAN. That statement was made in the newspapers.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, the newspapers may have said so, but of course the newspapers are not subject to those rules of politeness and elegance of speech which we so studiously observe in this chamber. Therefore, I would not say that hon. gentlemen had "put up a job" on them, but would say that they had combined together to extract a large amount from the pockets of the distillers, first of all by threatening them with 5 cents additional duty and threatening them with an indefinite restriction in the power of vending their goods, and in order to avoid which restriction and the increase of duty, they withdrew a very large quantity of spirits. In fact I heard of one firm who had paid in a cheque of $450,000 in a single case, and I do not suppose that they would be very much gratified with this. But having done this, the hon. gentleman now proposes—perhaps to compensate them—to say to them: Well, gentlemen, it is true I played rather a sharp game on you; I did threaten, or frighten, or induce you to pay in these large amounts, but I will make it up. I will give you drawbacks; I will not charge you duty, so that you will be able to do very well, as it is well known that you are a close combination, that you combine to keep the prices up, and that as the Customs are so much in excess of the Excise, you can succeed in doing so; so do not think so badly of us; we were hard up; we wanted the money badly, but we have taken this plan of compensating you.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As I understand, the point taken was that this clause was objectionable because it placed the power in the hands of the Governor in Council. I think perhaps I was in error in stating that there would be no loss of revenue during the balance of this year, but I am quite satisfied that it is not the intention that there should be any loss of revenue. However, that difficulty will have to be made up in some way, and some other steps will have to be taken to meet the deficiency.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course the committee will take it for granted, after what the hon. gentleman has said, that the 5 cents will be put in a proper constitutional way.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood that that was the arrangement the other night—that the objection was that the Governor in Council should have the power. If that is the case, and if it will cover the shrinkage—though I think that is doubtful—the objection is to a large extent removed.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister will recollect that I asked for some information as to the ventilating tanks which are mentioned here.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only information I can give is that it is claimed by the distillers and all others with whom I have discussed this point, that spirits can only be matured by evaporation through wood.

Mr. BLAKE. That is a speculative suggestion. Up to this time, there has apparently been no method discovered of accomplishing this useful evaporation, which causes to depart some of the noxious qualities of the whiskey. I think we had better deal with it—what is ascertained up to this time; because if you have some of these tanks, there might perhaps be an evaporation or a going out of the whiskey by the ladle; it might be counted twice. If science has not yet discovered, in the prosecution of its laborious efforts to make whiskey, an innocuous, useful, and nourishing drink, any method except by keeping it in wood, had we not better in the meantime refer to what has been done up to this time, and if by next year the distillers can convince the hon. gentleman that there is some other method, he can then enlarge this provision of the Bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Perhaps it would be as well to amend the clause in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, and make it apply only to evaporation in wood.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 9,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister has perhaps had under his notice, as other members of the House have had, a circular in which very strong representations have been made with reference to this clause. It is a circular from Montreal. It points out that the effect of the clause is simply to create a monopoly of the liquor interest. Without committing myself wholly to it, I think, when the matter is brought before the House, the Minister should give some explanations. The circular also points out that, if it were necessary to retain the whiskey for two years before any of it should go into consumption, such an amount of capital will be required to carry on the business as to place a monopoly in the hands of the few engaged in it at the present time.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have seen the circular the hon. gentleman refers to. I am satisfied that the objections to this clause have come from persons who are interested in the manufacture of methylated spirits and vinegar, because there is no provision made in the Bill to allow them to get the spirits for such manufacturing purposes. With regard to the complaint of monopoly, I do not think there is much danger of that, but I intend to remove even that cause of complaint. I propose to add to the section:

"Provided always that spirits may be entered and removed for consumption at any date for chemical or manufacturing purposes only, when such entry and removal are made and effected in accordance with regulations in that behalf made by the Governor in Council; and provided also that, in the case of new distilleries established after the 1st day of July, 1887, by any person who is not the holder of a license as a distiller on the 1st day of July, 1885, the distiller licensed in respect thereof may enter and remove for consumption for any purpose one-third part of the product of such distillery at any time after it is manufactured during the two years next following the issuing of the license relating to such distillery, and that during the three years next following the expiry of the said two years such licensee may enter and remove for consumption for any purpose one-third part of the product of such distillery, which third part has been manufactured for at least 12 months."

The effect of this will be to bring any new distillery that may be started, under the operation of this Act by slow degrees.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister has fallen into another difficulty in trying to remedy this. When the resolutions were under discussion the other night, the strong reason urged for this change in the law was that it had been demonstrated that it was unhealthy to use spirits too soon after they had been distilled, and the Government having an eye to the public health, had instituted this change in the law. But the amendment the hon. Minister proposes is designed to let out on the community one-third of the quantity the new distiller may produce in this highly dangerous condition. I do not know whether he could devise any remedy for that difficulty.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the hon. gentleman should have allowed some one else to make that speech. In his first speech he represented a certain class of the community who issued circulars denouncing this clause as an attempt to place the distilling of liquor in this country in the hands of a few men. I pointed out to the hon. gentleman how I proposed to remove that objection. Then he rises and goes to the other side of the question and says, that having asked the House to adopt this principle on the ground that the matured whiskey was better for the consumers in point of health, I am now going to throw one-third of the product of the new distilleries on the community without being matured. There may be something in the argument, but we cannot always accomplish all we wish to accomplish. The hon. gentleman will admit that if this legislation is carried through, the bulk of the spirits distilled in the country will come under the operation of this Act. Still, in order not to appear unjust to the new distillers, we allow them to dispose of one-third of the quantity they may manufacture without being matured.

Mr. BLAKE. There are some people who get case-hardened. Could we make any arrangement by which they would sell only to case-hardened people who would not be hurt?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. Minister aware whether this restriction which he proposes has been introduced elsewhere, and if so, where it is?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know any other country where it prevails; but that is no reason why we should not introduce it here.

Mr. EDGAR. It is all very well to talk about this being a measure for the public health. I do not think anyone in the House is carried away by that story. I think everybody understands that it is a measure to give monopoly to a few large distillers. There are only a few in the country, and notwithstanding the concessions the hon. gentleman proposes to make, the Bill will prevent anyone else going into the business. It may or may not be a good thing for the country to give monopolies in whiskey; but that is going to be the result. Suppose a new distiller is allowed to take out a small portion of the new whiskey he manufactures; when he goes a little farther he will not be allowed to take out any portion, and it will require enormous capital to remain in the business. I do not suppose any existing distiller will be able to do business when this comes into force without putting millions of dollars into the particular portion of their business that will require them to keep all this stuff in stock. Some of them will have to put in $2,000,000, or $3,000,000, or $4,000,000, for that purpose, and in that way they will be able to keep everybody else out of the trade as long as they like, and create an enormous monopoly. If the hon. gentleman can show that it is for the good of temperance or the health of the community that there should be this enormous monopoly, there will be some ground for voting this change in the law. Otherwise there will be no ground.

Mr. BLAKE. We ought to confine ourselves to persuasion and not go into prohibition or restriction. We ought to persuade the liquor dealers without money. The hon. gentleman offers them a handsome bonus for keeping whiskey in stock, and to prevent them selling for those years with the consequence referred to. It may be very serious; there may be a limited supply.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman said I should not have made the two speeches I did, but I did not commit myself to the circular. I took care to say that I had simply brought it under notice. I also alluded to the fact that the Minister (Mr. McLelan) who was in charge of the resolutions before, had pointed out that the object of this provision was to benefit public health, and I said that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) could not reconcile both his amendments. The circular said it was not necessary for the public health that the liquor should be kept in store, because the quality of the spirits was not improved by it, and that the new process of manufacture overcame that difficulty as to age. If the hon. gentleman is able to say positively it is an absolute necessity, in order to have pure spirits, that age should be upon them, he will contradict one statement in the circular that age is not necessary to secure purity of spirits. If it be not necessary, it does look as if there was some force in the complaint that the tendency of this clause will be to create a monopoly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Having once come to the conclusion to ask Parliament to allow a drawback to the distillers of whiskey that is being purified in wood, the question came, not from the distillers but from the Department, whether, if the maturing of this whiskey makes it a better and a safer article to use, it would not be well to try and lead up to that point where nothing but mature whiskey would be used.

Mr. BLAKE. You do that by making it profitable to the men who keep it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We do it still further by the 2nd clause. The hon. gentleman stated, in referring to that circular, that there was some other chemical means by which the same object can be obtained, that is, the maturing of the spirits. From all we can learn, every 9 out of 10 agree that the ageing of whiskey in wood is the only means of improving its quality or maturing it. With regard to the particular process alluded to in the circular, I have learned—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that by some chemical process you may introduce such elements or drugs into the whiskey as will cover up the objectionable elements that you require to eliminate by evaporation, but that when you come to use the whiskey you find these objectionable elements are still in it.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think the hon. gentleman by any chemical or mechanical means has succeeded in covering up, much less removing, the objectionable parts of the clause. Every body knows that fresh bread is unwholesome and that it ought to be kept a little time before being used. Let us restrict the consumption of fresh bread.

On section 10.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Under this clause, every person who exposes or offers for sale, or who removes from the place of manufacture any compounded article which is not designated by some label or brand, in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained, shall incur a penalty of $50. Any innocent person who does not know anything of the law, and it is not expected that people should know this law except those who come under its operation as manufacturers, and who happens to buy and sell a compounded article in good faith, contrary to the provisions of this measure, will incur this penalty. The penalty should be upon the manufacturer and not the innocent person unless the Minister has some reason. I do not know why we should take this extra precaution which bears not upon the compounder but upon the innocent purchaser.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the section is open to that construction, although it is not intended.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then we had better alter the wording of it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The words "the person who removes for sale" would cover it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I quite agree with the Minister that there must be strong provisions made to prevent fraud, but a license is granted every year to compounders, and a druggist or grocer may have been in the habit of obtaining a compounded article from a certain compounder, and after the license has expired and has not been renewed, the merchant may go on buying from the man who is illegally compounding, without knowing that he has no license. The danger is that the innocent person may suffer for the guilty. In the case I have named, the druggist or grocer would be subject to the penalty, though he was perfectly innocent.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think, if we make the change which I have suggested, we will meet the difficulty. If a man has been doing business with a firm he will see that there is something wrong if the goods are not labelled.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then the Minister trusts to the label as a warning to the merchant who purchases?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

On section 17,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In this clause the words, "having knowledge of the fact," which were in the old Act, have been dropped out. I should like to ask why, because it seems to me that the officer should have a knowledge of the fact before he seizes.

Bill reported, and amendments concurred in.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 2531) to grant the further subsidies therein mentioned towards the construction of the railways therein described, said: The resolutions that I have to move for the consideration of this House refer to a very important subject connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. This Parliament has voted large subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in order that the system of railways in Ontario and Quebec might by that line be connected with the Pacific Ocean, and also, in order that we might open the Territories of the North-West, and form, including the Province of British Columbia, one great country extending from ocean to ocean. That policy has been followed from year to year, until now we are on the eve of seeing the Pacific Railway completed from the Pacific Ocean to the city of Montreal. The fact is, that in a very few months the realisation of our wishes in that direction will be a fait accompli, and that great work will have been completed in a little more than half the time that was stipulated at first. But that great road would not produce all the results that Parliament and the people anticipated from it if we were to stop half way, and to bring it from the shores of the Pacific only to the city of Montreal. The policy of this Government has been to secure the connection of that railway, not only with the harbor of Montreal, but also to extend it to the port of Quebec, at all events, for the summer, and that during the winter months it should communicate with the seaports of the Maritime Provinces, by an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal. That policy was promulgated and supported by Acts of Parliament passed last Session, by which we voted, for a direct line from Montreal to the seaports of the Maritime Provinces, a yearly sum of money during a number of years, in order to assist the construction of that extension from Montreal to St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax. On the other hand, Parliament, at its last Session, expressed its desire that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be extended from Montreal to Quebec by the north shore of the St. Lawrence. An Act of Parliament was passed to that effect, and certain conditions were inserted, by which the Canadian Pacific Railway could extend its line from Montreal to Quebec, or failing that, certain other conditions were put in the law. Thus the policy of Parliament and this Government has been that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be extended on the south shore of the St. Lawrence down to the seaports of the Maritime Provinces, and on the north shore of the St. Lawrence by the North Shore Railway to Quebec and thence by the Intercolonial. To follow this policy the Government had the honor to submit to this House certain resolutions, the first of which relate to the extension of the Intercolonial, or a branch of the Intercolonial, if you may call it so, from River du Loup or River Ouelle, in Quebec, to Edmonston, in New Brunswick. During a previous Session, I think it was in 1882, Parliament passed the Act 45 Vic., cap. 14, by which certain subsidies were given to certain railways, and amongst them one for a railway from a point on the Intercolonial, at River du Loup or River Ouelle, in the Province of Quebec, to Edmonston, in New Brunswick, $3,200 per mile, or a subsidy not exceeding $240,000. This subsidy has been on the Statute Book since 1882, but it has been found to be insufficient for the purpose of accomplishing what Parliament had in view; and, moreover, the survey of the line has shown that while it was supposed to be a distance of 75 miles, it has proved to be 83 miles in length, and, therefore, the subsidy voted by Parliament at its Session of 1882 was found not to meet the exigency, because 8 miles were without a subsidy. The intention of the Government is to ask this House to sanction an increase of the subsidy by $2,800 per mile, in order to make it altogether $6,000 per mile, and for the 8 miles which the line is shown to be over and above the 75 miles, the proposal of the Government is to vote $6,000 per mile, in order that the 83 miles may be covered by a subsidy of $6,000 per mile. This road is an important road. It is an important link, because it will place the city of Quebec, the district of Quebec, and a large portion of the Province of Quebec, which cannot be put in communication with the lower Provinces by the proposed short route from Montreal on the south shore railway by the Eastern Townships, in communication with St. John and other seaports of the Maritime Provinces, and also will develop the northern portion of New Brunswick, which is now without communication by railway. This route will also facilitate, by the extension of the Canada Pacific Railway from Montreal to Quebec, the commercial intercourse of a large portion of the Province of Quebec with the Province of New Brunswick, and vice versa. And, therefore, we are of opinion that the proposition of the Government to aid this road and increase its subsidy, so as to secure its construction, is one that will be acceptable to this House as well as the country. I come now to speak of the proposed short line on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. In accordance with the promise made to this House last Session, that the Government would see proper surveys made, in order to ascertain which line was the best and shortest between Montreal and the seaports of the Maritime Provinces, the Government, through the Department of Railways, gave directions to engineers to go and examine the country and certain routes, in order to see which was the most desirable and the shortest and best for the country and to secure the object Parliament had in view in voting a certain sum of money during a certain number of years for that purpose. Those lines have been surveyed: (1) from Montreal via Sherbrooke, Moorehead Lake and Mettawamkeag. (2) Montreal via Sherbrooke, north of Moorehead Lake and Canterbury. (3) Montreal via Quebec and Hartland. (4) Montreal by River Ouelle or St. Rochs and Edmonston. (5) Montreal via Quebec, River du Loup and Edmonston. These five lines were examined and surveyed, and the engineers, after their labors in the field had been performed, reported to headquarters, and during the winter they have prepared plans and specifications. The result has been, so far as the distance in miles and grades and curves are concerned, as follows:—I had better make the comparison between the different lines from the same point to the same point; thus hon. gentlemen will see more clearly the difference in length and in other respects to St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, respectively. By the southern route via Mettawamkeag and Macadam to St. Andrews, 430 miles; by the southern route via Canterbury to St. Andrews, 444 miles; by the northern route via Quebec and St. Charles to St. Andrews, 491 miles; by the northern route via Quebec and St. Rochs to St. Andrews, 543 miles; by the northern route via Quebec and River du Loup to St. Andrews, 578 miles; so that these five routes, as to length in miles, stand thus: 430, 444, 491, 543, and 578. Now, to St. John, taking the routes in the same order, we have, first, the southern route by Mettawamkeag, 472 miles; by the Canterbury route, 472 miles; by the northern route via Quebec and St. Charles, 517 miles; by Quebec and St. Rochs, 569 miles; and by River du Loup, 604 miles; so that to St. John the distances stand thus: 472, 472, 517, 569 and 604. The distances in miles to Halifax are as follows:—B by the Mettawamkeag route, 720 miles; by Canterbury, 721 miles; by Quebec and St. Charles, 744 miles; by Quebec and St. Rochs, 796 miles; and by Quebec and River du Loup, 831 miles; and the distances to Halifax stand thus: 720, 721, 744, 796, 831. The grades to St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, by the first route, are 74 feet a mile; on the southern route by Canterbury, 74 feet per mile; by Quebec and St. Charles, 85 feet; by Quebec and St. Rochs, 85; by Quebec and River du Loup, 85; so that the grades vary from 74 for the two first lines to 85, which is the maximum for the three others. The curves for the first route are 6, 6 and 10, respectively, to St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, and they are the same for the Canterbury route. For the route by Quebec and St. Charles they are 6, 10 and 10. For the route by Quebec and St. Rochs they are 10, 10 and 10, to St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, respectively, and they are the same for the River du Loup route. So that the distances to St. Andrews, to St. John and to Halifax are the shortest by the Mettawamkeag route, though the difference between it and the Canterbury route is not very great. As to St. Andrews, it is 14 miles more; to Halifax, 1 mile more, and the others are still larger. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the House will wish to know what are the railways that form these different lines—or, at least, the shortest line; and, of course, I will give the others, if hon. gentlemen desire to have them. I will take the Mettawamkeag first. That road from Montreal to St. Andrews will be composed of the Montreal, Portland and Boston Railway, 20 miles, built; then section "A" of survey, 80 miles, to be built; then the International Railway, 89 miles built; then section "C" of survey, 136 miles to be built; then the European and North American Railway, 62 miles built; then the New Brunswick and Canada Railway, 43 miles built; so that the line to St. Andrews gives you 214 miles of railway built, and 216 miles to be built, making the 430 miles. To St. John the lines are the Montreal, Portland and Boston, 20 miles built; section "A" survey, 80 miles to be built; International Railway, 89 miles built; section "C" of survey, 136 miles to be built; European and North American Railway, 62 miles built. All these are the same as the first route and the following are different: the St. John and Maine Railway, instead of the New Brunswick and Canada, 85 miles built, making 256 miles built and 216 to be built. Then, from Montreal to Halifax by that same route, we have the Montreal, Portland and Boston, the same as in the first instance, 20 miles built; section "A" of survey, 80 miles to be built; the International Railway, 89 miles built, the same as before; section "C" of survey, 136 miles to be built; the European and North American Railway, 62 miles built; while the following are different: the St. John and Maine Railway, 19 miles built; unsurveyed, 113 miles; Intercolonial Railway, 201 miles built; making a total from Montreal to Halifax built 391, and to be built 329 miles. That is the same as the two others, plus 113 miles to build. That is the route via Mettawamkeag. I do not know whether the House wishes the same figures with regard to the others, but if they do I will give them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By the second route, which is the Canterbury route, Montreal to St. Andrews, we have the Montreal, Portland and Boston, 20 miles built; section "A" of survey, 80 miles to be built; the Intercolonial, 89 miles built; section "B" of survey, 191 miles to be built; New Brunswick and Canada Railway, 64 miles built; making 172 miles built and 271 miles to be built. Then, from Montreal to St. John, by the Canterbury route, we have the Montreal, Portland and Boston, 20 miles built; section "A" of survey, 80 miles to be built; International Railway, 89 miles built; section "B" of survey, 217 miles to be built; St. John and Maine Railway, 66 miles built; making, from Montreal to St. John, 175 miles built and 297 miles to be built. Montreal to Halifax—Montreal, Portland and Boston Railway, 20 miles built; section "A" of survey, 80 miles to be built; International Railway, 89 miles built; section "B" of survey, 212 miles to be built; not surveyed, 119 miles to be built; Intercolonial Railway, 210 miles built; making a total of 310 miles built and 411 miles to be built. Hon. gentlemen must see by these figures of distances that the Mettawamkeag and Macadam route, 430 miles, is the shortest; the next is the Canterbury route, 444 miles; and the others are, respectively 491 miles, 543 miles and 578 miles. By the Mettawamkeag route the distance to build to St. Andrews and St. John is 216 miles. This route has been found to be the shortest of the five lines that have been surveyed. The object was, if possible, to find a line on Canadian territory all through. The only line entirely on Canadian territory is the line by Rivière du Loup, which is 578 miles to St. Andrews, compared with 430 miles by the Mettawamkeag and Macadam route, or the shortest by 148 miles; to St. John the distance by the Mettawamkeag route is 472 miles, against 604 miles by the Rivière du Loup route, a difference of 132 miles; to Halifax the distance by the Mettawamkeag route is 720 miles, against 831 miles by the Rivière du Loup line, making a difference to Halifax of 111 miles. Hon. gentlemen will also observe that this short line—the shortest we can find—is a line which will compete, as far as we can, with the line from Montreal to Portland. If I am not misinformed, the distance from Montreal to Portland is 297 miles, and the shortest route we can find from Montreal to St. John, St. Andrews, Halifax or Louisbourg, is much longer than that; the shortest to St. Andrews is 430 miles. Therefore, with all our desire to have a line, if possible, that could compete with some chance of success with the Portland line, that would pass through Canadian territory from the moment it leaves Montreal to the time it would reach a port in the Maritime Provinces, we have been unable to come to the conclusion that we could adopt that line around by Rivière du Loup as the shortest line. Nevertheless, we have thought it was due to that large section of the Province of Quebec and the Ottawa region, a large portion of which could not take advantage of the short line, the shortest we can find to these ports in the Lower Provinces, that we should give a chance to that region to get to St. John, Halifax, St. Andrews, and other sea-ports of the Lower Provinces, by increasing the subsidy on that short piece of road, 83 miles, from Rivière du Loup to Edmonston. But though we encouraged that line, we had to look elsewhere to find the shortest route practicable under the circumstances, and after examining the whole matter we found that this line, No. 1 line, going to St. Andrews and St. John and Halifax—the Mettawamkeag route, if we can distinguish it so—is the shortest of all the lines that have been surveyed. We have been told by Mr. Light, one of the engineers employed to survey certain lines in the Province of Quebec for this object, that another line might be considered, which they called the combination line; we have been told that it might be made the shortest line; we have been told that that line, which had been examined also by Mr. Wicksteed, through the Etchemin valley towards Hervey, might be found to be the shortest line. It would have been our duty to examine that line, and if found so much shorter, or at all shorter than the other line, to see whether, in every sense, in every aspect, it could be considered the best line. Under those circumstances I caused another map to be prepared for this purpose, showing the proposed Mettawamkeag route to St. Andrews and the other ports and to Louisbourg, which eventually, I hope, will be found the greatest sea-port of Canada, the point where steamers will come from Europe in a shorter time than they can reach any other point on this continent, and therefore show that after all the European pioneers of this country, the French, when they selected Louisbourg as a great boulevard against their enemies, selected really the harbor which will be the harbor of the future. At all events, I asked the chief engineer of railways to prepare this other map, and to show on it an air line from Montreal to Louisbourg, that is to say, the straight line from one point to the other. I have had that line drawn, and the Mettawamkeag route is contrasted here with the other lines passing through Quebec and the other portions of the territory; and the result is, that this Mettawamkeag route is, at its greatest distance from the air line, distant 20 miles from it; that is to say, that the distance to the air line, from the point which is the farthest on the Mettawamkeag route from the air line, is 20 miles, whilst the most distant point on the other lines through Quebec is 80 miles from the air line. It is impossible that any calculation can show that a line which is 80 miles at a number of points from the air line can be shorter than the other line, which is, at its most distant point, distant about 20 miles from the air line. It stands to reason, though there are curves, that if, instead of putting a curve, you draw a line from Montreal to the extreme point, and another line to the point where it reaches the air line on the Quebec route, and do the same thing for the Mettawamkeag route, you will find that that will make two triangles; and it is elementary that the longest side of a triangle is shorter than the two other sides. Therefore, if the distance from the base to the farthest point of the triangle is 20 miles, the route or distance of the two sides of that triangle must be shorter than that of the two sides of the other triangle, in which the distance from the base to the highest point is 80 miles. Therefore, with all my goodwill to my native city of Quebec, with all the desire to do all I could for it, facts are facts, truth is truth, and I must go by the facts and the truth. I have only to see which of these lines is the shortest, which is the best, and which we should adopt, in order to carry out the policy of Parliament and this Government, of connecting the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal with the harbors of the lower Provinces by the shortest route. The result of that examination is, that the Government have come to the conclusion to recommend that this line, the Mettawamkeag route, be adopted as the shortest and the best line. I think this will do, at all events, for the present, as the exposé of the reasons why the Government think they should adopt this line. Now, I come to the third portion of these resolutions, which relates to the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal to Quebec by the North shore of the St. Lawrence and the North Shore Railway. The House will, no doubt, remember that last year an Act was passed authorising certain subsidies and grants for and in respect of certain lines of railway therein mentioned. Amongst these, there was an item to this effect :

"For the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from its terminus at St. Martin's junction, near Montreal, or some other point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the harbor of Quebec, in such manner as may be approved by the Governor in Council, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $960,000."

Then it was provided by the Act that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, within six months after the passing of the Act, could come to an understanding with the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the authorities of the North Shore Railway, as it is stated here :

"To purchase the North Shore Railway from St. Martin's junction to Quebec, or may obtain control of the same, or may make, with the owners of the said railway, such arrangements as will allow the said Canadian Pacific Railway Company to extend its railway to Quebec, failing which the provisions contained in the three following sections may take effect."

That was not done. The six months elapsed, and a few months more, and nothing done, and the result was that the other clauses of the Act mentioned there might have come into effect, but the provisions of the Act were that the Pacific Railway Company could make a bargain or a treaty, or come to an understanding with certain individuals or companies for the purpose of building for the Pacific Railway the extension of its line from Montreal, or some point on the Pacific Railway, to Quebec, by the north shore, and that, whenever that treaty was made and signed between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and these parties, then these parties would apply to the Government of Canada and obtain from them a charter, which the Act authorised, with the powers ordinarily given to such companies, and that the Government could then promise them the subsidy of $960,000 voted by Parliament for the building of that line, of course, with the necessary conditions of building so many miles, and so on. That was not done. This Act has not had the effect which the Government and Parliament expected, and therefore it has remained what we call in French lettre morte—a dead letter. Under these circumstances, the Government, knowing its intention and the intention of Parliament to extend the Pacific Railway from Montreal to Quebec, thought that it should try to obtain that result by some additional legislation, and some additional aid, if possible. Therefore, these resolutions have been laid before the House, but they will have to be modified in one or two points, and I will state, in a few minutes, in what direction. On the other hand, I should state that the Government, being very anxious that the desire and the wish and the intention of Parliament, and their own intention, should be carried into effect, have opened negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, as well as with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to ascertain how far those companies would be disposed to meet the wishes of the Government and of Parliament; and it has come to this point, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, who control the North Shore Railway by the stock they possess, have declared to the Government that they are ready to transfer and sell the North Shore Railway from Montreal to Quebec under certain conditions of payment to reimburse them, and the Jacques Cartier Branch, or Junction Railway, under certain conditions of price, in order to recoup them the amount paid by them for the stock of the company, which will go, of course, with the railway to be transferred, and also the price of certain improvements made on the road. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are disposed and ready to take the North Shore Railway under these conditions, so that the North Shore Railway would pass to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with the amount of debt due to the Quebec Government on that road and also the bonds which are the first mortgage after the debt to the Quebec Government. Then the Grand Trunk Railway Company are ready to sell, and have promised that they will sell, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are ready to accept and have stated so on their side. Under those circumstances, when we come to the paragraph next before the last of these resolutions, I will move that all the words after "North Shore Railway" in the fourth line, should be expunged, down to the word "then," in the second line from the end of the clause. The Government will ask also to have power to purchase this railway, if it is found necessary for the purpose for which Parliament has voted the money, and that these words should be added to the 6th paragraph :—

And, if it should be expedient so to do, in order to facilitate obtaining such access—

That is access to the harbor of Quebec—

the Governor in Council may acquire the North Shore Railway, and may apply the said sum of $1,500,000, or any part thereof, in aid of such acquisition, and, upon such acquisition, may transfer or lease such railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, subject to such obligations as the Government shall have assumed in acquiring it.

The hon. gentlemen will see that the money the House is now asked to vote is not a million and a-half, because we already voted last Session $960,000, as I stated a few minutes ago, for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also $200,000 for the the Jacques Cartier Junction Railway, so that $340,000 is the additional vote now proposed, in case that amount is required, to attain the objects that this House and the Government have in view, and had in view in voting this sum last Session, and in passing two or three statutes since 1880. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have explained these resolutions so as to be understood; at all events, I have endeavored to do so, and I now move that you leave the Chair and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider these resolutions.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. BLAKE. In 1882 the Government informed us, when inviting us to vote a subsidy of something under $250,000 for this branch, that they were satisfied it would be adequate to accomplish the purpose in view, that they had made proper enquiries and were satisfied that the result which they proposed to Parliament to achieve could be achieved at that expense. The Minister has now informed us that the Government have been disappointed in that expectation, and they have now brought down to us a proposal which doubles the charge. I desire to know what enquiries have been made, what information has been received, and what pledges have been obtained on which the Government bases this renewed and enlarged estimate as adequate to accomplish the object in view?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The best answer I can give is, that though this statute was passed on the 17th of May, 1882, over three years ago, the road has not yet been built. One of the companies has just done enough to keep itself alive, like all other railway companies—just enough to save the charter; but the fact is, that the railway has not been undertaken. If I remember a right there are two companies; there is a company incorporated in the Province of Quebec, and the other in the Province of New Brunswick; but although there are two companies, they could not obtain the necessary funds to build this road. The $3,200 per mile would not suffice. We have been informed by the parties connected with these companies that if the subsidy were increased to $6,000 they have no doubt they could obtain the necessary funds to carry on that work. I suppose the hon. gentleman is not very well acquainted with that route, but I understand that though a good portion of the road is rather level, a part of it is far from being so, where the grades will be heavy, and therefore it will be a difficult road to build. Nevertheless, I think this road from Rivière du Loup will not be more difficult than the New Brunswick route.

Mr. BLAKE. I failed to make myself understood. What I stated was, that in 1882, when we were asked to grant this subsidy, we were informed by the Government that having made the necessary enquiries to enable them to speak upon the subject, they had satisfied themselves that that sum would be adequate to accomplish the object they proposed to us, by giving about a quarter of a million to achieve, that is, a connection between the Intercolonial Railway to Edmonston, on the New Brunswick Railway. They have failed in the accomplishment of that object. The expectations which they led Parliament to entertain have been disappointed, and the hon. gentleman tells us that the best answer to my question is that fact. Now, I want that fact explained. What I object to is, that we are told by the Government that certain sums will be adequate to achieve certain results, that we are asked to vote these sums on that assurance, and that a little while afterwards we are told: Oh, they are not adequate; you must double the amount, in order to accomplish the result. I want to understand how it was that the expectations of the Government, after having made proper enquiries and based their statement to Parliament upon the result of those enquiries, have been disappointed. Next, I want to understand what better assurance there is now, what further enquiry has taken place, what further investigation has been had, which enables Parliament now to say that even double the money will accomplish the result.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the answer I gave in the first place is a very good one, and certainly the best the hon. gentleman could expect under the circumstances, namely, the fact that although the money had been voted for three years the road has not yet been built, though that road is a very desirable one, though it would open direct communication between the Province of Quebec and the Province of New Brunswick, though it would open a very fine country, though it would open a large trade between the two Provinces: nevertheless the subsidy that Parliament authorised the Government to give, has not been sufficient to induce any company to undertake the work. The fact that it has not been asked for shows that it was not sufficient. The hon. gentleman wants more explanation than that. Well, the hon. gentleman knows that during the last few years railways in America have not been a very favorable investment for capitalists in England, and therefore those railways which it was considered could be built with the aid of a subsidy of $3,200 have not been built, and no one has ventured to undertake the enterprise. I do not see that as regards the Provinces comprising the Confederation there was any good reason why capitalists should lose confidence and not invest their money in building railways. But hon. gentlemen know that the line which divides us from the United States is a political line, a line which exists on paper and is indicated by meets and bounds; but it is a line which does not prevent capitalists believing that railways which fail on the American side, where a great deal of stock has been watered, are in some ways connected with our railways, and the result has been that those who invested money have lost it. Capitalists do not make a difference between the two countries; they call it all America, and determine, on the grounds I have indicated, that they will not invest their money there. I know this perfectly well. When I went to England for different purposes I found great ignorance prevailing about the position of Canada. The people were confounding Canada and the United States; it was America all the time; and therefore we had the misfortune to be placed with our cousins on the other side of the line and to suffer for the misdeeds of some of their people; and the result has been that these railway projects have not had the success that was expected. Very few of those railways to which Parliament voted a subsidy of $3,200 a mile have as yet been successfully undertaken. A few of them have been commenced and they are being pushed forward quietly, perhaps too quietly for the expectations of those who have undertaken the work. In this case, though this road seems to be a very good one, yet we find that the promoters of this railway cannot raise the capital with a subsidy of $3,200 a mile, but an additional amount would, in all probability, give them the success which they have not yet achieved. I hope this explanation will be satisfactory to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. If the explanation were accepted as satisfactory I would be very easily satisfied. I say that the statements made in 1882 have turned out to be unjustified by the facts. We were told at that time that the money voted would secure the object we had in view. I ventured to say, the other day, and I repeat it to-night, that it is a very serious thing for the Government to propose to Parliament to embark in various enterprises, upon the assurance that the grants of money will be adequate to execute the policy which they propose, and the Government, two or three years afterwards, or one year later, as is the case with some of the proposals before us, to come and say: We were all wrong; but you have agreed to the policy, and we must now furnish the means which we are told will be adequate to accomplish the result desired. The hon. gentleman knows, of course, the gauge of the New Brunswick Railway. Are the 75 or 83 miles from River du Loup to Edmonston to be of the gauge of the Intercolonial or new Brunswick Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand the gauge of the two railways is the same.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the gauge will be the same as the Intercolonial?

Mr. WILSON. The gauge is the same.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been widened. Then the hon. gentleman stated that the alignment would be equal to that of the New Brunswick Railway. He is, no doubt, aware that that is not regarded as a first-class line.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I said the worst portion of the 83 miles to be built would be better than the New Brunswick Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. It is an easy road to build.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is an easy road to build for a long distance.

Mr. BLAKE. I am told that the New Brunswick Railway cost between $8,000 to $9,000 a mile. It was cheaply built. I am speaking of it as a narrow gauge road. Has the hon. gentleman received from the promoters of this enterprise any estimate as to what the cost of the 83 miles will be?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the Government have no information as to what the cost of the railway will be?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No more than we have for other railways. We suppose that this road will cost about the same as other railways built recently in other portions of the country. Taking that into account, we think a subsidy of $6,000 a mile is not too large.

Mr. BLAKE. I may remark that as a sort of offset, I cannot call it a compensation, for the misfortunes in which Canada has been involved by being confounded with the United States sometimes in the opinion of capitalists, and our greater financial strength and money power being thus obscured from the eyes of the world for a time, it is a well-known fact that the cost of railway construction on this continent has been at a very low ebb for the last two years, partly due to those difficulties which have resulted, perhaps, in a good many projected railways failing to proceed, and partly to the state of the iron trade, and in reducing the cost of rails. As a result, the cost of construction on a good many lines, more particularly in the north-western States, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and others—where it is not buried in the water to which the hon. gentleman alluded—is very low. That is to be considered when we determine the amount of public assistance required. The original proposal made to Parliament was based upon a principle, and it was this: the subsidy of $3,200 per mile, including sidings, would iron the road, and it would be sufficient inducement to enable a contract to be made for building the road. The price of steel is very low, and there is a comparative low price for labor as well. When we are told now that the cost of building the road is to be about double that what it ought to have cost, I feel that it is due to us to furnish some more accurate information as to the estimated cost of the road and as to the financial scheme of the company. We have been disappointed before, and now when another scheme is laid before this House by the Government, no information is furnished, beyond that given by the promoters, that they could not build for $3,200 per mile, but they now think they can get on with $6,000. I do not think that is a proper preliminary enquiry upon which to base public grants, and I think it is the more important because this grant has been on the Statute Book for three years. There have been two companies incorporated: they have been doing something or other, the hon. gentleman says, and they ought, at any rate, to have been able to furnish him with fuller materials upon which to base the assurance that this sum if granted, will be adequate to the purpose.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. Minister explain why it is that there is an alternative proposition—one line by Rivière du Loup, and the other by Rivière Ouelle?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By the Act of 1882 the grant was for a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway at Rivière du Loup, or at Rivière Ouelle; of course, we are increasing the grant by this resolution, and we want it to be for the same railway.

Mr. LAURIER. This was three years ago, and since that time the Government have had a survey made of the Rivière du Loup valley. They have had time to make up their minds which line should be subsidised. As I understand, no survey has been made by the Government of the Rivière Ouelle valley, and I would like to know if it is proposed to dispose of the subsidy without further survey.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The surveys have been made by the company.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes; but the Government have thought proper to have a survey of one line made by their own engineers. Is it proposed to give the subsidy without further survey, or to dispose of it only after a survey has been made of the Rivière Ouelle valley?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a survey made by the Government for another purpose, and of course it answers this purpose as well. The survey of the Rivière Ouelle Company was made by themselves, and therefore the information is there. It is complete. The company will, of course, have to take the line which is best for the interests of the company, and also best in the interest of the public, and the Government will have to see which line is the best in the public interest.

Mr. LAURIER. I hardly think that is a good answer. The hon. Minister says the survey has been made with the object of ascertaining, I suppose, whether or not it was in the interest of the public that this line should be subsidised. It cannot have been for any other purpose. The subsidy was granted under the idea that it was in the public interest to subsidise one or other of these roads. If the Government propose to dispense with the survey in one case, what is to enable them to decide between the two?

Mr. COSTIGAN. With regard to the statement made by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, as to the cost of the New Brunswick Railway, I think he is correct as to the cost per mile; but it must be remembered that that road was constructed as a narrow gauge road, and in the cheapest and most rapid way possible to reach a given point. The curves were very sharp, and the bridges were of a temporary character. It went through the valley of the St. John, and there were no heavy engineering difficulties met with, so that it was very cheaply constructed. As to the cost, the gauge has to be broadened to make it the same as the Intercolonial Railway, and then they have gone on for the last three or four years replacing the cheap temporary structures by those of a heavier and more permanent character; and besides having in view making it part of the through line, they intend to alter the road very materially, as to its curves, etc. Whether $6,000 per mile is sufficient or not, I may say the New Brunswick Railway Company were very anxious to push the road through, as they repeatedly represented that if a subsidy of $6,000 per mile were given they were prepared to push the road through vigorously, and I have no doubt they will do so.

Mr. BLAKE. Have there been any representations made by the New Brunswick Railway Company to the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer says that there was an offer on the part of that company, through its president, to build a railway, if they had had a subsidy of this kind.

Mr. BLAKE. Because I moved, three or four months ago, for any correspondence which had taken place between the Government and any railway companies with regard to subsidies, in order to have this information with reference to the propositions which I suspected would come down.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not suppose that it was considered that that motion covered this case, because there was no subsidy given to that company, or to a company which had been incorporated.

Mr. BLAKE. Which was the company that was to have it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There were two companies.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; and one of the two was to have it. I take it for granted that it was the company, but it was not named in the resolution, so it was not thought worth while to give Parliament the information.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I may say that Mr. Burpee was vice-president or manager of the road, and that he was here; and he told me, in conversations I had with him, that the company would consider a subsidy of $6,000 sufficient to put the road through, though he did not seem very anxious about it at the time. But if this subsidy was voted and given to them they would undertake to push the road through. There was no desire to get the subsidy, but they wanted to see the road built.

Mr. BLONDEAU. I would like to know the reason why the route has been changed. We are told that it is from St. Rochs to Edmonston; but I know a route has been surveyed from Rivière Ouëlle to Edmonston, and I hope the report of that survey will be brought down before this matter is decided.

Mr. LAURIER. I happen to know there has been no survey in the Rivière Ouëlle valley. I heard the Minister speak to-day of the line to St. Rochs. What line is it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It appears that the engineer who was sent to survey this line reported that he could not come out at Rivière Ouëlle, as there were difficulties in the way, and he came out at St. Rochs. I do not know how far that is from Rivière Ouëlle, but it is in the next or the second parish from there, and that is the reason the name of St. Rochs was inserted.

Mr. LAURIER. Who was the engineer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Crawford.

Mr. BLONDEAU. I am surprised that he did not come out there. He had to start from Rivière Ouëlle to make his survey, and he made that survey before he made the survey to Rivière du Loup, and then he made his report for this line. It was the same engineer, Mr. Crawford. We have been promised the report of this survey, and we have not got it yet.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems, from the statement of the hon. Minister, that the engineer made every effort to reach my hon. friend's point, and he could not get there. The Minister said the difficulties of the country were too great.

Mr. BLONDEAU. All I know is, that he started from Rivière Ouëlle to Edmonston; but we have no more information about it. We should have the report of the survey. I wish to know which is the best route; if the Rivière du Loup is the best, all right.

Mr. BLAKE. If the engineer did commence to survey from Rivière Ouëlle to Edmonston, perhaps he never was able to get to Edmonston. But probably, if the hon. gentleman would telegraph to the engineer, he might find him somewhere between Rivière Ouëlle and Edmonston.

Mr. BLONDEAU. He had to go to Ste. Anne instead of St. Rochs; but he did not go to either place, and he has not been to Edmonston; he went to Rivière du Loup, that is all.

Mr. BLAKE. And this is the way the public money is voted.

On resolution 2,

Mr. DODD. I would like to ask why it is that this resolution varies from that which was brought down last year, inasmuch as Sydney and Louisbourg are left out? I trust the Government do not intend to ignore that important part of this Dominion, and that something will be done for it, in some way or other. The claims of that island have often been represented to this House; and just now, when the Imperial Government are taking steps to establish one of their coaling stations there for the protection of the Canadian marine, I think we should have some information as to whether this Government are going to increase the subsidies already granted, if they are found insufficient to secure a railway through the island. In case of war or invasion, I think it is necessary that we should have a line of railway to some Atlantic port on that island, so that the militia troops of Canada, who have shown themselves quite capable of defending this country, would be enabled to repel an enemy seeking to destroy the collieries of that important section of the country. I know of no part of the Dominion of Canada to which the Government are under so many obligations as to the Island of Cape Breton, because at the last election it sent five representatives to support them, the first time since Confederation, and it should not be ignored. I trust we shall receive from some member of the Government a statement that something is to be done, and that we are not entirely to be ignored, as this resolution, in its present form, would indicate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would point out to my hon. friend that provision has been made already for building a railway through Cape Breton, either to Sydney or Louisbourg, and there is a chartered company for that purpose. There has never, however, been any location survey made through Cape Breton, and it is the intention of the Government to come down to Parliament this Session, and ask Parliament for a grant for a location survey through the island, in the first place. Then, I do not know, but I hope that either the company which has now got the charter, or some other company, may build the road. My hon. friend, in moving the resolutions, has stated that we look forward to Louisbourg being the great Atlantic port for Canada some day or other, that it is the port nearest to Europe, shortening the distance to Europe, and there are great expectations by those who have considered the question—for instance, certain men, such as the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Stephen, who is very enthusiastic on that point—believe that will be a point of departure eventually for first-class steamers carrying passengers from the Atlantic States, as well as from Canada, to Europe. People who fear the long sea voyage will choose that line. Whether that will be realised I cannot say; but, no doubt, that road will be built. The Government have shown goodwill towards it, Parliament has shown goodwill towards it by the vote of last year, and there will be a grant asked for the survey.

Mr. VAIL. Another very important road overlooked this year is the important link connecting Annapolis and Digby.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The missing link.

Mr. VAIL. The missing link. The grant, last year, of $3,000 a mile, is not quite enough to ensure the completion of the road, and I was in hopes of seeing another $3,000 a mile added this year. There are two or three heavy bridges to be built, and I hope the Government will see their way to add another $3,000 to the subsidy. Of course, the smaller Provinces are not in a condition to subsidise their roads at present.

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Dodd) on the admirable manner in which he wields the whip and the fortunate results he has obtained by the process. These results do not come upon us with the pleasant shock they would if we had not seen it stated in the newspapers that there was to be a survey in the island of Cape Breton. It is fortunate for my hon. friend that there has been a prolongation of the Session, for without it he would not have got the survey. Being here, fortunately, in July, he has had time to melt the Government into a survey; and while the other parts of the Dominion are getting railways, the hon. gentleman will have engineers. I know there will be a great deal of difficulty in deciding where the route shall be, as that is a delicate question in the island. However united the hon. members may be in their prime duty, as members of the island, in supporting the Government, there may be a little discord among them as to the way the engineers should go through the island; but I do not want to disturb the harmony of the happy family by saying anything more on this point.

Mr. GILLMOR. I was pleased to see the Minister of Public Works make reference to St. Andrews so frequently, but I am sorry to see that it is not referred to in these resolutions. This third resolution is for a line of railway connecting Montreal with the harbors of St. John and Halifax via Sherbrooke, Moosehead Lake and Mettawamkeag, but there is not a word about St. Andrews. I think it ought to be inserted, because it comes first in order. If it has been an oversight, I would like to have it inserted. I would move that St. Andrews be inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. There is one point I do not observe the hon. the Minister mentioned in his explanations before the Speaker left the Chair. Of course it is not of much consequence; it is only a little more than $1,500,000. We were told last year the $170,000 a year for fifteen years would be adequate to accomplish the result set before us by this resolution, and the subsidy is now to be made $250,000 a year for twenty years. I desire to know how it turns out that the $170,000 for fifteen years is inadequate, and on what calculation it is now proposed to vote $250,000 a year for twenty years, making an addition of $1,500,000 to the proposed vote of last year.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). (Translation.) Before this motion is adopted I have a few words to say on that subject. In the first place, I must express my regret that the Government should have comprised under one single resolution the three questions which they submit to the approval of this House. The resolution which they have just proposed and which is now under consideration involves three distinct votes: one in favor of the Rivière du Loup to Edmondston, one in favor of the short line through Sherbrooke, and one in favor of the terminus which it is intended to give to Quebec. This terminus was promised last year by the Government; it was promised to the country at large, and therefore the Government are bound to keep their promise. As regards the choice of the short line, that question was not decided last year by the Government, and if I remember what certain newspapers have said—for I am too discreet to state all that I have heard—the Government had decided to let Parliament choose for themselves whatever line was thought to be the shortest. Now, people have come down with surveys. It will be remembered that the Government had promised us surveys of the most extensive and complete kind. Have they given them to us? I do not think that we have obtained all that we have a right to expect. To quote only one instance, I may state among the returns brought down by the Government we do not see any mention of the survey made by the Government officers of the line known as the combination line. That line has been completely ignored. Not only that, but in the official remarks which we have before the House, we see that the report sent to the Railway Department by Mr. Light has been violently criticised by the chief engineer of the Government railways, and not only violently criticised, but I must say maliciously criticised, and I think I ought to use a still stronger expression while speaking of that criticism. Now, Mr. Chairman, in that report we find:

“Mr. Light gives, on page 7, the distance from Montreal to Hervey via Quebec as 248 miles. This should be 406 miles.”

Here is the answer. Mr. Light claims that he has said the following:—

“What I did say was: ‘The distance from Montreal to Hervey via Quebec, to build, is 248 miles.’ (See page 55, engineer’s report).”

omission of these two little words, to build, makes all the difference in the statement.”

And further on the engineer again attacks Mr. Light on account of another distance, which Mr. Schreiber tries to rectify in the same dishonest manner. He concludes as follows:—

“I have not looked into the matter of distances, etc., beyond the 7th page, but I fear they may be no more accurate than those I have remarked upon.”

The engineer, Mr. Chairman, makes this dishonest criticism—dishonest is the word—to arrive at the conclusion that the report of Mr. Light was not worth looking at. I think that before proceeding with these resolutions, before adopting them, before choosing, with the Government, the short line via Sherbrooke and Mettawamkeag, we ought to have the reports which were promised on several occasions by the Government last year. For my part, in spite of all the goodwill I may bear to the Government, I must say that I cannot accept these resolutions as long as we have not a correct report of the surveys which have been made, or more satisfactory explanations. The Mettawamkeag line has been compared to any other line, and we see by Mr. Schreiber’s report that 113 miles of that line are still unsurveyed; its grades and curves are unknown, and therefore we have none of the points of comparison which would be needed to compare that line with any other line. The hon. Minister of Public Works said, awhile ago, that he had compared that combination line with the other line, but the terms of comparison which he has taken appears to me to be somewhat extraordinary. He said: If we draw an air line, we find that the combination line lies at a distance of 80 miles from that air line, while the Mettawamkeag line is only at a distance of 20 miles from it. If the combination line was to be a railway built as theoretically as that air line, I could understand that the comparison might be somewhat correct; but when we are building a line of railway, we must keep account, not only of the length of the road, but also of the difficulties which are to be met by the locomotive. The curves and grades are as many factors, which we must not omit to keep account of when reckoning the distance, and if a locomotive can draw forty cars on a road whose gradients are more or less steep, and, perhaps, a little longer than another, it must not be inferred that that road is longer than a neighboring line, shorter in length, but on which a locomotive could only draw twenty cars by reason of the steepness of grades. Now, if we look at the profile of the road—I have it before me, and I will take the liberty of laying it on the Table of the House, so that any one may look at it—we find that the Intercolonial has a level of 1,873 feet, and that the highest level of the Intercolonial is 750 feet. Well, it will be readily understood that a locomotive going over that road, with 20 or 30 cars attached to it, will meet such difficulties that the road will be virtually longer; that it is only shorter in appearance on account of the summits being higher. There is one report of Mr. Light to the Government, which is now before the House. That report shows that what is called the combination line is 10 miles shorter than the Mettawamkeag line; consequently, if it is intended to choose the shortest line, instead of making a theoretical reckoning, as the hon. Minister of Public Works has done, we may and we ought to guide ourselves on the figures given by that engineer, and adopt that combination line. Let it be proved to me that these figures are false and I will be the first to reject them and to pronounce in favor of the Mettawamkeag line; but as long as there is no proof that Mr. Light’s report is false, and that the report concerning the other line is correct in all its details, I shall believe that I have not before me sufficient information to make a judicious choice, and in that case it is my duty to require from the Government that they should lay before us all the necessary papers. Here is another fact which corroborates my assertion, and which shows, besides, what is the feeling of the Government engineer. Mr. Schreiber, in the 5th page of his report, says:

"The line between Quebec and Chesuncook has not been surveyed."

Here is what Mr. Light answers to that:

"I have always considered that a survey of this line was most important, and strongly recommended to Mr. Schreiber that it should be made by telegram dated 18th August, 1884. His reply was a peremptory refusal. Mr. Wicksteed's barometrical examination was subsequently ordered, having the result, already stated, of corroborating my figures."

So that here is an engineer who works not only in the interest of the Province of Quebec but also in the interest of the country at large, because if a shorter line is found, which will pass through Quebec, I believe it is the country at large which will be benefited by it; here is an engineer who asks the Government to allow him to make an instrumental survey on a certain line, and the Government engineer answers by a flat refusal. Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that justice has not been done to the country; justice has not been done to the Province of Quebec, and the promises of the Government have not been kept. It order that the Mettawamkeag line may be preferred to all others, we are told that it is a few miles shorter than the combination line or any other line. And what is the argument which is brought forward? They say: It is the shortest line, and therefore it must be chosen, because traffic will follow that route in preference to any other which would be longer. But, Mr. Chairman, if a bridge is built at Lachine—as it will be the necessary consequence of the choice of the Mettawamkeag line—the same argument ought to apply, and the moment trade finds a shorter route to go to Portland, by the Portland and Montreal route, the southern line will become completely useless, because traffic will never follow that route. The argument which may answer to choose between the different lines from Montreal to the seaboard, must hold good for traffic in its choice of the shortest line, and will undoubtedly bring on the choice of the direct line between Montreal and Portland. To do away with this inconvenience we must legislate so as to bring the Pacific extension by the northern route, which will place the bridge over the river more to the east; and the traffic being a great deal further than Montreal in its passage over the American lines, will have more chance to pass into the Maritime Provinces. From that point of view, the interests of the Maritime Provinces, of the Province of Quebec and of the country at large, requires that the line which is intended to direct the Montreal traffic towards the Maritime Provinces should cross the river at the most eastern point; the more so, since the eloquence of figures indicate in the most positive manner that it is that line which the Government ought to choose, since it will most certainly insure the flow of trade towards the Maritime Provinces. I am not speaking now about the Quebec terminus; the statement which has just been made by the Government shows that nothing is done; that, on the contrary, all remains to be done; offers have been made, or at least negotiations are going on with the Pacific Railway and the North Shore Railway for the sale of that road; but nothing has been absolutely settled, and from the very words of the hon. Minister of Public Works, we are told that he will move an amendment to the resolutions asking for the power, if it should be expedient. There is still that restriction—to acquire the North Shore Railway from the Grand Trunk Company, to give it to the Pacific Company. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I regret that these three resolutions, affecting three distinct questions, have been combined into one. There is one, perhaps two, which might suit us; but if one of them does not please us, then the Government will forgive us if the three resolutions have to suffer from the fact that we cannot approve of them as a whole in a clause such as that to which I have just referred, as regards the shortest line. For these reasons, the Government, before asking us to vote on these resolutions, must fulfil the promise they have made to us, to make a complete survey of these different lines, a survey which will enable members who are not here to defend the interests of our constituents to tell them: Well, we have accepted the views of the Government, because it has been proved to us, by figures, that this route will be the shortest; but as long as that proof is not given, I believe we cannot accept this resolution.

Mr. HALI. In reply to the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), I may say that when the line by Quebec was first suggested, there was no pretension whatever that, a shorter line could be found between Montreal and the seaports of the lower Provinces than the one proposed vid Sherbrooke and Moosehead Lake. The only pretension urged was, that for patriotic reasons it was extremely desirable that the line should be built through on Canadian soil. The application for a survey was based entirely on that ground. Not a single hon. member who asked the Government at that time to consent to a survey, advanced any pretension that by this route could a shorter line be found than by way of Sherbrooke and Moosehead Lake. We must assume that those from Quebec who advocated so strongly the building of the line entirely through Canadian territory did so, in the first place, from patriotic motives, but we may also assume, without impropriety, that they were actuated to some extent by motives of self interest; because, if that route were adopted, it would secure the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the maritime ports vid Quebec. In order to secure that, a bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec was necessary and Mr. Light, of Quebec, a civil engineer, had prepared a very elaborate plan for the construction of such a bridge, and was most pronounced in his advocacy of that line. The Government acceded to the very reasonable request, that if a line could be found on Canadian soil which would give an approximately short route to the maritime ports, that line should be chosen, and consented to the survey. The conduct of the survey was placed in the hands of Mr. Light. It required but little investigation after Parliament adjourned to determine that it was an impossibility that a short commercial line, which was a desideratum, and which had been promised to the lower Provinces, could be secured on Canadian soil. Mr. Light, however, with a laudable desire to have his name connected with the construction of the bridge for which he had prepared a plan, having come to the conclusion that the line which was advocated here by the representatives of Quebec, and for which a survey was promised, was not practicable, started the theory that it was possible a shorter line could be found by way of Quebec, even if it crossed the State of Maine. It was a startling theory, because it was asserting that the two sides of a triangle could be made shorter than the base line. His project was taken up by parties interested in the city of Quebec, and the survey, which was authorised by Government for the purpose of obtaining a line on Canadian soil, was diverted from that purpose, to give him the opportunity, by any method in his power, of securing a short line by way of Quebec through the State of Maine. He had entire charge of the survey, selected his own route and employed his own engineers, and the following are the distances he reported: From Quebec to St. Andrews by the line he surveyed, 482 miles; as against 430 miles by way of Sherbrooke and Moosehead Lake; to St. John, a distance of 508 miles against 472 by way of Sherbrooke, and to Halifax 735 miles against 720 by way of Sherbrooke.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). Those figures are not proved.

Mr. HALL. They are taken from Mr. Light's own report, and they show distances in favor of Sherbrooke of 52 miles to St. Andrews, 36 miles to St. John, and 15 miles to Halifax, over the line by way of Quebec. Even with these distances, Mr. Light did not report that he had found a line which he could recommend. He stated in effect that it was hardly practicable, but he believed that a little distance further south or north of the line he had surveyed, a practicable line could be secured. This report was sent in on the 23rd March.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). The hon. member is speaking of the line surveyed by Hartland, and not the combination line at all.

Mr. HALL. I am coming to the combination line presently, but that is not the line which Mr. Light professed to have surveyed. The report of the other survey coming in about the same time, gave Mr. Light the opportunity to discover that the distances were considerably shorter by way of Sherbrooke; and three days later, on the 26th March, without having gone over the country and without having any additional information, Mr. Light sends in a supplementary report upon what he calls the "combination line." This has been designated a theoretical line, and such, I think, I can prove it to be. He shows the distance to St. Andrews by that route to be 453 miles, against 430 miles by way of Sherbrooke; the distance to St. John 481 miles, against 472 by way of Sherbrooke; and the distance to Halifax 710 miles, against 720 by way of Sherbrooke. The only point to which he found the line was shorter was Halifax, and that only by a distance of 10 miles. The Government, of course, had before them these two conclusions, the one the result of thorough surveys as far as Mettawamkeag, and the knowledge the engineers possessed of the 130 miles beyond that, over an almost level country, with no engineering difficulties; and on the other side, they had the assumption by Mr. Light that a line could be secured over the route he had designated. In order to come to a conclusion between these two lines, the first thing which would naturally occur to members of the Government, and which will occur to members of the House, would be: which is by nature or superficially the shortest line; and in determining that, the most natural and common sense method would be to determine which was the shortest by an air line. The Minister of Public Works has referred to a portion of this subject. I was not aware he had had any examination made of it, and I took care to have the air lines measured on a standard map by a competent engineer. I find that the air line distance by way of Sherbrooke to St. Andrews, is 316 miles and to St. John 330 miles. Of course, in reference to Halifax, my argument would be all the stronger if I took the air line; but that would be unfair, because it would involve the crossing of the Bay of Fundy; so I take Salisbury, which is a common point to both these lines, and I find it is by an air line from Montreal 412 miles. The shortest distance that can be reckoned from Montreal to Quebec is by the North Shore Railway, which is 172 miles in length. That is the line adopted by Mr. Light himself in all his calculations. Taking that, and adding it to the distance by air line by that route, the result is, that the distance from Montreal to St. Andrews is 408 miles; to St. John, 444 miles; and to Salisbury, 472 miles; being a difference in favor of the Sherbrooke line of 92 miles to St. Andrews, 114 miles to St. John, and 60 miles to Salisbury. I think it would strike anyone who applied the ordinary principles of common sense to it, that it would be very difficult to overcome those figures. They are confirmed by the measurements taken at the instance of the Minister of Public Works, determining that the surveyed line by way of Sherbrooke was only 20 miles from the air line, while that by the combination line was 80 miles. There is another matter to be taken into consideration in deciding between these two reports, and that is the character and professional standing of the parties who made these investigations. It is, of course, a matter of some delicacy to refer to any gentleman's professional standing, nor would I do so now had not Mr. Light made insinuations and charges against the Government engineer, and also made a reflection upon the staff which had been selected. I think he has done gross injustice to those who are interested in what I believe to be the shortest line, and therefore my comments upon Mr. Light and his professional position are simply made in refutation of such aspersions. In the first place, I refer to Mr. Light's assumption of title and position. His reports are signed by him as a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers for Great Britain. I have looked over all the catalogues of that institution, and I hold in my hands the last catalogue published, and I fail to find the name of Mr. Light there, although we find the names of gentlemen whom we know very well—Mr. Schreiber, Mr. Fleming and Mr. Petersen—appear in each addition of it. By some strange mishap Mr. Light's name appears to have been omitted from every catalogue published. Then, he styles himself Government engineer for the Province of Quebec. I have received a telegram from a provincial Minister, stating that Mr. Light is not and has not been, for two or three years, in the employ of the Government.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. Because they have nothing for an engineer to do. As long as they had, he was the engineer.

Mr. HALL. I am going to state the circumstances under which he ceased to be their engineer. It is the misfortune of the Province of Quebec that he was their engineer. He was their engineer when the north shore road was located and constructed. The portion of the road from Montreal to Ottawa had first been constructed and completed. The first line that was located from Quebec was what was called the shore line, giving an independent connection to the city of Montreal. The line had been located and the contract made for the construction of that line, but interests at Terrebonne were brought to bear, to make the Government think a line by Terrebonne would be more desirable, and Mr. Light, for some reason, seemed to concur in that view, when he was called upon by the Government to report upon it.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. As Mr. Schreiber is doing to-day.

Mr. HALL. I think the sequel will turn out differently from what it did in the case of Mr. Light. Mr. Light reported, in the first place, that by going by way of Terrebonne there would be a saving of over 1,000 feet of iron truss bridging, that there would be only two slight curves upon that route, as compared with 15 curves on the shore line, and that there would be a saving of $289,312 in the construction of that line. The Government, it seems, were not quite satisfied. The report astonished them somewhat, and they obtained the reports of other engineers, which contradicted Mr. Light, to some extent. Mr. Light made a second examination some eleven months afterwards, and on the 17th December, 1877, reported that the saving by this line would be $531,458, or $200,000 more than he had first reported. Upon the strength of that report, which seemed to be very carefully prepared, and which he gave upon his authority as Government engineer, the Government of the Province of Quebec changed this shore line to the Terrebonne line, although it had the effect of depriving them of the independent connection with the city of Montreal, as they would have had by the other line, and left them with a terminus 8 miles distant from that city. What was the result? Instead of the iron bridging being 1,000 feet shorter upon the Terrebonne line, it proved to be 1,600 feet longer; the curvature, instead of being, as reported, proved to be in the ratio of 86 to 182, that is, about 1 to 2 instead of 2 to 15, a very material change. As to cost, the result was something very astonishing. Instead of saving $531,458, as Mr. Light had promised, the Government of the Province of Quebec not only paid, under Mr. Light's own certificates, the full amount of the old contract, but also, upon his certificates, half a million dollars in addition, and the claim is not yet settled; so that his calculations were over a million dollars wrong, even upon his own subsequent admission. The Government were so dissatisfied with the result that they resisted the claim, and the matter went to arbitration; and when Mr. Light, as a witness before the arbitrators, was confronted by the statements he had made himself, under which the Government had been induced to make these changes, the only explanation he could give of the discrepancy was, that he had acted upon insufficient data. At the time he had made these surveys, not hastily, but extending over a period of eleven months, he had been acting in this official capacity and made these reports upon the responsibility of his official position, and yet there resulted this disastrous and unaccountable discrepancy. The House has to consider, under these circumstances, with such a record as Mr. Light has, when, in the present case, he does not pretend even to have made any instrumental survey over the line he recommends, whether it is wise to accept his theory with reference to this combination line. Apart from the question of distance, however, which I think is satisfactorily settled by the reports before the House, there are some other advantages in favor of the Sherbrooke line which should be referred to. There is, in the first place, the question of bridging, for although, of course, connection with the lower Provinces cannot be secured except by a bridge across the St. Lawrence, it is to be remembered that a bridge already exists at Montreal which may be perhaps utilised in some form; and, under any circumstances, there is no claim or expectation that any company seeking to build a line by way of Sherbrooke, will obtain Government aid for the construction of a bridge across the river at that point. Now, all the reports of Mr. Light are based upon the construction of this bridge at Quebec at Government expense. It is true that, with his capacity for elasticity in figures to which I have referred, he has reduced the estimated cost to some $3,000,000, but other competent engineers have estimated that the expense cannot be less than $7,000,000, to be added to the cost of the railway, in order to secure connection by way of Quebec. Then, with reference to grades. Of course, Mr. Light has made a very serious point against the line by way of Sherbrooke, that there is a grade of 74 feet. He ignores, or at least omits to mention, the fact that the line by way of Quebec is governed continually by the grade of 85 feet from Hochelaga, upon the north shore road, as it is impossible to get out of Montreal and make the connection which he recommends by way of the north shore without overcoming that grade of 85 feet, which must govern the whole line for through freight. It is to be borne in mind that a grade upon a road which has only been laid out for local purposes may possibly be reduced. The International Railway has been built partly for local purposes—but it has demonstrated the important fact, that the height of land can be got over by a grade not exceeding 74 feet; that grade can be probably very much reduced, as well as the curvature, which is objectionable in its present form. But we know, at any rate, the worst, that 74 feet grade is the highest that we will be obliged to meet with in making connection by way of Sherbrooke; whereas, by way of Quebec we have to overcome a grade of 85 feet in getting out of Hochelaga, and we do not know what other grades we may have to meet in going over the height of land. The altitude on this theoretical line has only been barometrically ascertained, and even Mr. Wicksteed himself, who surveyed a portion of the line, reports that it was very unsatisfactory in that respect, and that he found a great discrepancy between the barometrical indications at particular points in going and returning. When we bear in mind that a single inch in the variation of the barometer indicates over 800 feet difference in altitude, it is easy to perceive how very far astray Mr. Wicksteed may have been in depending upon the barometer for ascertaining the altitude over this line. Then there is another feature in relation to this line by way of Sherbrooke, in respect of which there is no authentic information before the House, but which I state because I have personal knowledge with reference to it, and that is, its extreme freedom from obstruction by snow. Last winter was one of the most trying for obstruction by snow that has ever been known. The Intercolonial Railway was blocked for nearly a week, with no trains passing over it. The Grand Trunk in that vicinity was also blocked for two or three days at a time, and the trains were cancelled. But the International Railway, during the whole of last winter, with four trains a day passing over it, was never delayed over half an hour. Now, I think that is a very important consideration in endeavoring to establish the best connection with the lower Provinces. Another feature is the fact that if the line by way of Sherbrooke be adopted, and the International line be consolidated with it, we have the advantage of a charter which has already been obtained for the construction of a line through the State of Maine. That charter was obtained with a good deal of difficulty. The Legislature has only biennial sessions, and two years must, at all events, elapse before another charter can be obtained; and therefore it is perfectly impossible for any other railway company to make any arrangement for constructing a line through Maine, before a delay of two years has elapsed. Then (in contradiction to Mr. Light's own statement in that respect), we have already railway communication with Quebec, by which the district of Quebec would get the advantage of the construction of this short line by Sherbrooke. As an illustration of Mr. Light's unfairness in his representations, I read, on page 5 of his report:

"This line, termed the 'International,' has been traced by way of Sherbrooke to Lake Megantic."

The line has been built and in operation for the last five years, with four trains passing upon it daily, yet Mr. Light has the fairness to speak of it in his report as a line that "has been traced." Again, he says:

"The disadvantage to Quebec of such a line may be briefly stated. No connection with the city of Quebec could be made with it, because its extra length would destroy its usefulness."

As a matter of fact, connection has been made. The Quebec Central Railway, running from Sherbrooke to Quebec, has been in operation for the last three or four years. At the last Session of this Parliament, in anticipation of the eventual adoption of the short line by Sherbrooke, the Government gave a bonus to encourage a line to connect the Quebec Central at Beauce Junction with the International Railway, in order to give Quebec better connection with that line. I may say, and it will please the leader of the Opposition, who took a good deal of interest in that line, last year—that, in addition to the railway of 139 miles in length, from Sherbrooke to Quebec, which has been running for a number of years, under the impetus of this bonus given last year, 17 miles of this extension, through the valley of the Chaudière, giving this better connection to Quebec, have been built during the last summer, and inspected and accepted by the Government engineer. Taking all these facts into consideration, on the one hand the certainty of a practicable route in close proximity to the air line, giving the best average connection with the three seaports of St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, and acceptable as such to the representatives from those localities; on the other, a line contrary to natural selection, and only theoretically reported upon, I think there will be no hesitation on the part of hon. members in this House, in deciding that the Government have acted intelligently and judiciously in accepting the line by way of Sherbrooke; and that in doing so they have fulfilled the condition of their original resolution, "to secure the shortest and best practicable line for the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway system to the seaports of the Maritime Provinces."

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). I have only a word to add in answer to the speech of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), and it is this: The hon. gentleman did not answer a single word of my argument; but, on the other hand, he proceeded to abuse Mr. Light. Why did the Government accept Mr. Light as the engineer, if they have no confidence in him, and if he is not able to do the work?

Mr. HALL. Quebec insisted on having him.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). If Quebec insisted on having a bad officer, could not the Government put him aside and appoint another? The hon. gentleman said the grade will be 15 feet from Mile End to Hochelaga. If so, it would be the same by his own route. From Montreal he would have to cross at Lachine.

Mr. COLBY. Is not the hon. gentleman aware that there is a line from Back River to Lachine in operation to-day?

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny). There is one from St. Thérèse to Quebec. We shall not want to pass by Mile End. I do not object to passing by Sherbrooke; but the Government promised us that we should have a thorough exploration of the whole route. Have we had that exploration? If hon. gentlemen can prove that the short line is by Sherbrooke, we will go by that route. If not, let us be at liberty not to select that route.

Mr. LANGELIER. I am not going to discuss the question as to the route by Sherbrooke, but I shall content myself by offering a few remarks with respect to Mr. Light. I did not expect to see him placed on trial here to-day. He happens to be my personal friend, and he does not need a defender. The way the matter proceeded reminds me of the old saying: "No case, abuse the plaintiff's attorney." That seemed to be the course pursued by the member for Sherbrooke. He said Mr. Light assumed a title which he does not possess. I do not think Mr. Light is a man who would take any title to which he is not entitled. In addition to the remarks of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), I must say that it was a most extraordinary proceeding for the Government to have selected Mr. Light if he is such a bad and unreliable man as the hon. member for Sherbrooke has stated; and if such were the case, the Government would deserve severe censure for having employed such an officer. But this is not the first time that Mr. Light has been placed in charge of most important works. Perhaps the member for Sherbrooke does not know that Mr. Light was one of the district engineers for the construction of the Intercolonial, and that he had four sections under his charge as engineer. He was chief engineer for the construction of the North Shore Railway; and I happened to be in the Government during a portion of the construction of that railway, and if we had found Mr. Light, who was appointed by our predecessors, such a bad officer, he would have been dismissed. But we found him a first-class engineer in all respects. As to the point made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke: engineers had very little to do with the selection of the line through Terrebonne. Politicians have had infinitely more to do with it than engineers have. If the question had been left entirely in the hands of the engineers I do not know what their recommendation might have been; but I know, as a fact, that engineers had absolutely nothing to do with the question of the terminus. The hon. member for Sherbrooke made several errors as to the cost of building the two lines.

Mr. HALL.

There is the strong point of economy in favor of the line that was selected at first, the route by St. Martin. It saves 8 or 10 miles, and a very large bridge over the St. Lawrence. I am not going to enter into this matter further at present. Mr. Light's reputation as an engineer is perfectly made, and the particular reason that the hon. member for Sherbrooke gave for attacking Mr. Light was that Mr. Light himself had attacked Mr. Schreiber. This is not the case. Mr. Light was defending himself against most extraordinary misrepresentations of his report made by Mr. Schreiber. Mr. Schreiber, for instance, made him say something quite ridiculous, and what he never said, that the distance between Montreal and St. John is only 246 miles. Mr. Light never said anything of the kind. He said that between Montreal and St. John, by the line proposed, there were 246 miles to build. Very dishonestly Mr. Schreiber struck out those two words, "to build," and made Mr. Light say that the distance was 246 miles. Mr. Light was only doing himself justice in defending himself against misrepresentations which had been made by Mr. Schreiber. I am reminded that Mr. Light has been employed as Government engineer in Nova Scotia for 20 years, and has also been employed in New Brunswick. I only want to rebut the aspersions cast on Mr. Light's character about the surveying question. As regards the general question, I am not going to enter into it, until we have fuller estimates from the Government as to the line which they propose to follow.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I desire to call attention to another point in the resolutions, namely, an omission of the line to Salisbury, and in the copy of the resolutions which appear in the Votes and Proceedings this link is not mentioned. I assume it is the intention of the Government that this link shall be a part of the short line. I find it laid down on the map I have before me, and certainly no through line to Halifax or Louisville could be considered complete without that branch, and the amount of subsidy proposed to be given should be sufficient to secure the construction of that branch. I think it desirable that in the resolution or Bill this should be specified.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Votes and Proceedings on which the resolutions appear, page 665, he will find that the point is covered. In order to meet the views of the hon. member for Charlotte I move that the resolution be amended by inserting, after the words, "harbors of," the words, "St. Andrews."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. IRVINE. I desire to ask the hon. member for Sherbrooke a question, and that is, what is the difference in distance between Sherbrooke and St. John, N.B., and between Sherbrooke and Portland, Maine, on the proposed International line; and also what reason the people of St. John, N.B., have for believing that the company will select that city as the port of the Maritime Provinces in preference to Portland?

Mr. COLBY. The hon. gentleman has addressed his enquiry to the hon. member for Sherbrooke, but with your permission I shall take the liberty of answering it, because I have a memorandum of figures and distances which I think will give the desired information. The distance from Montreal to Portland via Bangor is 486 miles—that is the nearest possible way that Portland can be reached by the International Railway. The distance from Montreal to Portland by a road now in operation, and available for the purposes of connecting Montreal and Portland, independently of the Grand Trunk, is 272 miles, making a difference of 214 miles; so we can hardly believe that there would be a great deal of anxiety on the part of anybody to reach Portland by way of Bangor at an excess of distance of 214 miles on an aggregate of 486 miles.

Mr. IRVINE. That is not the question I asked. What is the difference in distance between Portland and Sherbrooke and St. John and Sherbrooke? It is not comparing the Grand Trunk line between Montreal and Portland with the Sherbrooke line, but it is the difference in distances. We are led to believe that we are building a road to benefit the Maritime Provinces, and I contend that we are building a road to benefit the State of Maine.

Mr. COLBY. I have not the figures in precisely the form in which the hon. gentleman makes his enquiry, but I think from the data before him he can easily ascertain the difference in these distances. The gist of the hon. gentleman's suggestion is this: Objection has been made in some quarters to the southern line by way of Sherbrooke and Moosehead Lake, that it would have a tendency to divert trade to Portland and the harbors in the State of Maine.

Mr. IRVINE. Hear, hear.

Mr. COLBY. The hon. gentleman seems troubled with that idea, and others seem to have the same solicitude. Well, anything more senseless than that—really, I must beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I do not mean anything personal—but to anyone who has studied the situation and has looked at the figures, anything more senseless could hardly be conceived. We are shortly, I suppose, to have the Canadian Pacific Railway completed to the St. Lawrence River. We are to have the Canadian Pacific Railway connected with all the principal cities and places of business in the Province of Ontario and in the Province of Quebec, on the north side of the St. Lawrence River. We are to have the Pacific Railway bringing down, in the near future, as we believe, large quantities of produce, and large numbers of passengers from the west, seeking the seaboard; and I think we may fairly assume that it will be in the interest of that railway, in the interest of commerce, in the interest of the Dominion at large, that all freights coming down over that railway, whether they come over the main line, whether they come over the Minneapolis connection, which we hope before many years will be built to the Sault, whether they come by the Ontario and Quebec, or by any other portion of that system, to have convenient outlets to the seaboard. Now, I suppose we cannot direct these things precisely as we might wish. It would be impossible, I suppose, by building an air line to the nearest lower provincial port, to divert and control all the trade which might come from the westward seeking Europe. Those things will go, and should go, by different channels, and will be consigned by different ways. If any portion of that freight seeks Portland, seeks the Maine ports, it will go to Maine by the shortest route, other things being equal. The Portland and Ogdensburg road is completed, with the exception, I think, of 8 miles, which are graded—it is independent of the Grand Trunk Railway, independent of all adverse influences, and is open to the Canadian Pacific Railway, or to any railway wishing to carry freights to Portland, by a distance of only 272 miles, or 27 miles shorter than the Grand Trunk Railway. Access is thus provided to the Maine ports if commerce seeks it, or if the Canadian Pacific Railway people, in their interest, desire it. If freight wants to go to Maine for shipment it will go to the only harbor in Maine which is at all likely, for a reasonable period, to be suitable for trans-Atlantic commerce. It will go there by a line 27 miles shorter than the Grand Trunk Railway, instead of going 214 miles by the other route, which the hon. gentleman suggests. Now, the objection made to the southern route, that it does connect with railways in the State of Maine, that it will do business in connection with that State, instead of being a well founded objection to that route is, to my mind, a strong argument in its favor. In seeking the best route to the Maritime ports we must take commercial as well as engineering considerations into account. We require a road which will be, if possible, self-sustaining—a road which will pay—a useful, commercial road; and I am sure, all other things being equal, a railway making connections with the cities in the State of Maine and with railways already existing in that State, will stand a better chance for trade and business than a railway passing far away north, and not connecting with those systems. It is well known to hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces that Bangor is a great distributing point for a large lumbering district to the north of it. That portion of the State of Maine, which projects into Canada, which we may say, geographically, belongs to and should be part of it, has Bangor, as its distributing point; and large quantities of flour, pork and other articles consumed by lumbermen are distributed from that point. This road by Sherbrooke is the nearest way by which Bangor could reach Chicago, and the great flour and pork centres, and consequently we can compete for, and I think we may expect, a very considerable portion of that trade. We want a live commercial road, as well as a good road in other respects. Now, I had supposed, until very recently, that there could be no doubt as to where the location of the short line was to be. Just so long as we were constructing lines of railway through the Eastern Townships at our own expense, with the expectation that they would be portions of the short line, just so long as we were devoting our private energies and our municipal and provincial aid to the construction of the short line, we were not interfered with; just so long as there was an expenditure and a sacrifice, we had the monopoly; there was no question where the short route was to be, but the moment it was known that a money subsidy was to be granted other competitors entered the field. Now, no man who looks at the map, and has any knowledge of the country, can fail to see that the line from Montreal by way of Sherbrooke and Mettawamkeag to St. Andrews, to St. John, to Salisbury, the common point for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island, is a shorter line than any it is possible to obtain by way of Quebec. It is unfortunate that we have to discuss the character of those who give us information—that we have to discuss the professional reputation of the friend of the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier); but what he lays before us I think we may discuss with all fairness. Now, in looking at Mr. Light's report of this mythical line, which has no existence, except in his own imagination, I do not know whether most to admire the audacity and ingenuity, or to be amazed at the disingenuousness and deceptiveness of that report. I do not think it is possible to find anywhere so much misrepresentation in so few pages as is crowded into the pages of that report. I would not say that unless I was sure that I could demonstrate it to the mind of my hon. friend, the friend of this engineer, the hon. member for Megantic. What does he do? He illustrates his report by a map, which he says is Mr. Taché's map, an authentic map, upon which he lays the down line which he advocates. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) I think knows where Sutton Junction is, and I think he knows that there is a distance of 20 miles between Sutton Junction and the point north of Waterloo, where the line actually runs; and Mr. Light, in order to deceive the public with regard to the length of this line—for I can conceive of no other purpose—he, the engineer of the Province of Quebec, who ought to know so much about it—in the map which he represents as authentic runs the line 20 miles south of where it ought to go, in order to show a curvature downwards and a curvature backwards, making an apparent difference of 40 miles to the eye. What else does this engineer do? Mr. Light tells us about his proposed combination line running from Chaudière Junction to Chesuncook Lake, where it connects with the line, surveyed by Mr. Denven Smith, and tells us that the distance would be 105 miles. If any gentleman will draw a straight line between these points on the official map he will see that the distance by air line is 105 miles, and Mr. Light knows that through that country you must allow about 20 per cent. for curvature, so that instead of being 105 miles the distance should be 126 miles; and if you read his report you will find that he gives you the grades and the curvatures and summits and distances, although there never has been an instrumental survey or measurement of that route, and no man knows anything about the grades or curvatures or summits, except what Mr. Wicksteed ascertained by a barometrical survey, which he himself pronounces unreliable. And now let me show another little bit of disingenuousness on Mr. Light's part, which you will find if you look at page 6 of his report; and I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to this point, in order that they may explain it, if it is susceptible of explanation. Mr. Light says:

"East of Mettawamkeag, I measure the distance over the existing lines of railway, through St. John to Halifax"—

Mr. Light, in giving his comparison of the distances, makes the southern route run down to McAdam, St. John, and thence to Halifax by the Intercolonial. Then he tells us why he does it; he says:

"While Mr. Schreiber estimates over 113 miles of country, which is unsurveyed"—

The country referred to is that between Fredericton and Salisbury. Then he adds:

"This fact accounts for the further variance in our figures. I have taken my measurements over the existing lines of railway from a practical conviction that the same will be in use for many a year to come."

That is the way Mr. Light throws the southern route by way of St. John to Salisbury—because the 113 miles have been unsurveyed, and because for many years that work will not be used. And yet what does Mr. Light do? He appropriates that same 113 miles, only he calls it 19 miles less than it is, as a portion of his own line. Mr. Schreiber honestly makes allowances for curvatures, while Mr. Light makes it out to be an air line, and steals 19 miles in the transaction; and that is the way he makes out his route. I say that an engineer to do that deliberately, to deceive persons who know nothing about this route or the country through which it runs, is unworthy of credit. Why had he not the honesty to say: These 105 miles have not been surveyed; I do not know the curvatures or grades, but I believe the line when surveyed will not be longer than 105 miles. But he tells us the grades and curves and distances, when there never has been an instrument put upon the line. More than that: he pledges his professional reputation, which is held so high in some quarters, to all these figures when, according to his own report, 50 miles of his line have not been surveyed, and so far as we know never have been stepped upon by mortal man. What is the secret of the grand combination line? Mr. Light was employed because he has the confidence of the people of Quebec. That is the reason he was selected. It was in order that the reports might come from a man in whom the people of Quebec would have confidence he was instructed to make a careful survey. Of what line? The very line he recommended. He selected his own line before he set out; he wrote to a member of the Government, indicating where he wanted to run the line; he ran a line of his own selection, and was obliged to condemn it in the winter after he returned. The line he had recommended and surveyed he was obliged, when he came back and looked over his figures, to condemn; but shortly after he put in this condemnatory report, he finds a good line has been found to Mettawamkeag and sees he has to do something to meet this new aspect of the case. He says: "The line now advocated passes through the said lake to Mettawamkeag. And in order to meet this altered view of the matter a revised or supplementary report was submitted on the 10th of May in place of the first. The first report was his official report, but finding then that the report was going to be useless, so far as a report in favor of any northern route was concerned, and to meet the altered position of the case, he suggests this hypothetical line. He takes his distances on the map, as any gentleman may see for himself, without making any allowance for curvatures. When he finds his own line is to be condemned and cannot be adopted, he thinks of this combination line, 50 miles of which have never been walked over, no portion of which has been surveyed, and in reference to which we have no reliable data. It is too much to attempt to impose either upon the good nature or credulity of this House, to ask us to delay this important matter until further exploration be made, to see if some possible line running around by Quebec cannot be found. There are other considerations suggested by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall). The bridge at Quebec is an absolute essential to the carrying out of the line by Quebec. The bridge at Lachine is a commercial necessity; it will be built as such without any subsidy from the Government; it has been contracted to be built already by the Quebec and Ontario road; they have set aside the funds for that purpose; it is essential to their system. But in order to build the Quebec bridge, what must we do? Mr. Light says they will require a guarantee of $5,000,000 for a period of 25 years, at 4 per cent. interest. They will require the exact maximum amount which is proposed to be used as a subsidy for this entire short line vid Sherbrooke. The whole subsidy for that line will be required to build the bridge at Quebec. Mr. Light says it will be self-sustaining. How? The Intercolonial, he says, will give it an immense revenue. Will this Parliament, for a moment, consider the idea of transferring the business of the Intercolonial from the Grand Trunk to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in order to show favoritism to one corporation over the other? Do not we all know that the road from Richmond to Lévis would be of no value whatever were it not for the Intercolonial traffic. The North Shore road takes the business between Quebec and Montreal largely, the boats taking their share during the season of navigation. What would the Quebec and Lévis section of the Grand Trunk Railway be worth if Mr. Light's project were approved. If it were thought good policy to ruin that section of the Grand Trunk Railway line by giving the trade to the Canadian Pacific Railway, our own traffic on the Intercolonial will have to pay for it. That traffic is now carried by the Grand Trunk Railway at reasonable rates over the Victoria bridge, but if we build a bridge at Quebec and charge ourselves tolls in order to pay the interest on the cost of the bridge, we will be transferring money from one pocket to another. Whatever the Intercolonial contributes to the traffic of the bridge will be a tax on our own road. The bridge at Lachine is recognised as a necessity; the Victoria bridge is found to be inadequate to the requirements of trade and commerce, and not only is the Lachine bridge to be used by the Canadian Pacific Railway system of railways, but other railways leading to New York and Boston feel the necessity of having this bridge, and are prepared to make contributions to build it. At all events, the Dominion will be relieved from any applications for subsidy for the building of this bridge at Lachine. There are many points I would like to discuss in connection with this matter, but I do not want to weary the House. I say that the Maritime Provinces have the right to this promised assistance. There has been no controversy on that point; there seems to be no objection to granting the amount asked for, so far as we can judge from the discussions hitherto, and from our going into committee without any debate. It is only a question of route, and I say that the Eastern Townships have contributed more than any other section of the Dominion to the great works which have received aid from the Local and Dominion Governments, in comparison with the benefits we have received from them. We have helped to build your railways and your wharves and your light-houses. We have helped to build up and improve the canal system; but where has any expenditure been made in the Eastern Townships? We have not asked for it, though we have taken our share of the public burden. Our own enterprises have been built up largely by our own contributions. The township in which I live, and which will be benefited by this road, has contributed no less than $250,000 to railways. The counties of Sherbrooke and Compton have contributed a quarter of a million of dollars to a railway which should become a portion of this system. The county of Brome has contributed $196,000 to railways which cross the system and will be tributaries to it, and will be benefited by it. The county of Shefford has contributed $350,000 to railways, which, very likely, will be tributaries to this system or become part of it. I might go through the list; no less than $1,500,000 have been contributed by the municipalities in the Eastern Townships to railways which will be portions of this line or tributaries to it, so that these people will get the benefit, and they number no less than 250,000. I say a quarter of a million of people who have contributed a million and a-half of money to railways which will be a portion of this line or tributary to it, are entitled to receive consideration at the hands of this House, and I have no doubt they will receive it, inasmuch as they never have been in a position to ask for favors of any description. This is not asked as a favor, but only to indicate that if a locality of the northern route would like to have this subsidy, there are other localities in other parts of Quebec which would be entitled to it on such considerations. But it will not be decided on these considerations; it will be decided upon broader, upon common sense and upon commercial principles. If you are building a line to the nearest Atlantic port, St. Andrews, you would go via Sherbrooke; because a line via Lennoxville is only four miles from the straight line. Draw a straight line from Montreal to St. Andrews, and it passes only four miles from Lennoxville, which is the most remote point from the air line. If you draw a line from Montreal to St. John it passes only eight miles from Lennoxville. Go by way of Quebec, and, as has been stated by the Minister, and also by my hon. friend from Sherbrooke, you get from 80 to 96 miles to the north of the air line. Draw a straight line from Montreal to Salisbury, and it carries you by this route, which is as nearly an air line as is practicable, except through a dead level, flat country. What more is wanted? It is proved to be a practicable road. I had heard certain objections made to the International road. I had heard it said that the maximum grade on that road was 74 feet, and I wanted to know the inwardness of that, and so I wrote to the engineer who located the road, and there is not, in this country, a better engineer for that purpose. He has just located 450 miles of the eastern section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he tells me that they were limited to a 66 feet maximum in locating that road. That was thought suitable for the present requirements of the road. For a short distance a 74 feet grade was used, but it was with the view of subsequently changing it, so that the grade would be 66 feet to the mile, and this engineer assured me that the whole line from Lennoxville to the boundary could be brought down, without considerable expense and without lengthening it, to 60 feet to the mile as a maximum. That answers every practical requirement. You cannot pass over the Grand Trunk Railway, or the Intercolonial Railway, or any railway between this and the seaboard, without, of necessity, passing over certain points where considerable grades exist, because we all know that those ranges of mountains which are known in the United States as the Green Mountains and the White Mountains, extend into Canada and reach to the St. Lawrence and to the ocean. You have to cross them somewhere before you get to the seaboard, and there must be a short distance of grades which are not equal to the level grades to be found in the valley of the St. Lawrence. It has been sufficiently demonstrated that this is the shortest practicable route, and that, in every sense, whether you take its commercial advantages, or take it as being a compromise road for all these ocean ports, it is the best. The road which the Government engineer prefers in his report is not the best route to St. Andrews, for there is a shorter route to St. Andrews. It is not the shortest route to St. John, but it is the shortest route to Halifax, which is the most distant point, and it is not sufficiently inconvenient to St. Andrews or St. John to make it objectionable on that account. As a compromise road, to reach the ports of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and to serve Prince Edward Island, it is the best that can be drawn. Though it is not the shortest line to St. Andrews or St. John, it saves over 400 miles to St. Andrews, 300 miles to St. John and 140 or 150 miles to Halifax, in comparison with the Intercolonial Railway, and is the route which would command the largest amount of traffic. There is another thing which I desire to mention here, and which I ask those hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces to consider seriously. As my hon. friend from Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) has indicated, there is but one chartered road across the State of Maine, and that is by the Megantic route. No meeting of the Maine Legislature occurs for two years, and therefore no charter can be obtained for two years across the State of Maine. No short line can be built to the Maritime Provinces except across the State of Maine, and consequently, if this line be not adopted, you have no guarantee that for two years to come our friends from the Maritime Provinces can begin to see their expectations realised. And who knows what changes may take place within two years? The thing is within their grasp now, and they can have it if they wish. If they postpone it for two years more, who knows what changes may come over Governments, what changes may come over parties, or what changes may come over the country. No one knows what two years may bring forth. Now, a very strong desire was felt to obtain a charter on the north side of Moosehead Lake, in the interests of this same Megantic line, and at a time when it was not known which would be the best route. The company wanted to secure the best route, but they had not made a survey, and they did not know whether they would go south of the Moosehead Lake or go north of it, and they wished to obtain a charter that would enable them to take either of those routes. But they were emphatically told: No; you must have no road that does not connect with our system of railways; and would any one say that they were not right? What advantage can it be to the people of the State of Maine to have a railway passing north of Moosehead Lake and running into the Province of New Brunswick, without making any connection with the Maine system of railways? It would throw the traffic which now comes down to Bangor, the lumber supplies and everything that goes to their own cities and over their own railways, over an alien railway and to a foreign country. Well, none of us are so disinterested as to be willing to do that under like circumstances, and the people of Maine are not so unselfish as to be willing to do that either, and they refused to give a charter to a railway passing north of Moosehead Lake.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COLBY. Hon. gentlemen say, "hear, hear." Do they mean to imply that they expect that we are going to send the commerce of this country 214 miles by a roundabout way, in order to reach a Maine harbor? There are local interests in the north part of Maine that would be injured seriously if a railway was to pass through that State, which was in no sense tributary to their own railway system, and which would enable a Canadian railway to furnish supplies to the lumbermen of those regions, instead of doing it themselves. They are within their right, and they refused to give to this Megantic road the privilege of locating a line on the north side of Moosehead Lake, and they would not permit the Megantic road to pass Lake Moosehead on the route now proposed, unless they would undertake to make a connection of eight miles with the railway running to Bangor. I know how the Bangor people feel about that matter. I have been to Bangor myself, and have had consultations with those gentlemen; I tried to enthuse them on the subject, but they would not enthuse a bit—not enough to put their hands in their pockets. They say: We have no objection to your road coming here, but we have serious objection to your road running through the north part of the State and making no connection with our system of railways, so that we can get no advantages from it. And they took a business view of the matter. I have no doubt it will be a great convenience to the commerce of that State, and I have no doubt that if the road is built vid Moosehead Lake it will supply the whole of the lumbering district to the north of it, and all the freights of those regions will be carried over this railway, because it is the shortest, the most direct, and it will work in harmony, to a certain extent, with their own system of railways. Now, I would impress upon our friends from the Maritime Provinces the fact that no Legislature in Maine will meet for two years to come, and if they determine upon postponing this work for another year or two, in order to see whether this mythical route may not prove to be an actual route, they incur the great risk that usually attends upon delays. I think they have the thing now within their grasp, if they choose to hold it, judging from the sentiment in the House. Last Session 135 members of the House to 28 favored the subsidy given then; that subsidy is to-day repeated and enlarged, and there seems to be no fault found with the amount; so I take it that it is conceded that the amount is acceptable to this House. The only thing to be determined on now is the route. On that point I think enough has been put in evidence before the House, together with the map that has been laid upon the Table, to show that the shortest route is vid Sherbrooke and Megantic, that it is the best, as a compromise route, the most advantageous to the maritime ports for commercial purposes, and that as an engineering route it is the most practicable which can be adopted. I think these points have all been established, and I am therefore in favor of this resolution.

Mr. BURPEE. I am quite willing to endorse the route as indicated by the Minister of Public Works, as well as by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, if carried out in its entirety. But the eastern portion of the route has not yet been put forward in as satisfactory a light as it was possible to do. The distance from Fredericton to Salisbury has been described as 95 miles, but it is only 85 miles. It is described as not having been surveyed. Well, it has all been measured, it has all been traced, and more than half of it has been surveyed and located, so that the road is well known. So that in these two respects it is more favorable than has been represented by either Mr. Schreiber or Mr. Light. But I would like a little more information from the Minister of Public Works. I do not find any fault with the money that is given. Considering the amount of mileage that is to be built, I think the grant is not too much. I have no doubt the Government have taken means to ascertain whether it can be built for that amount. I see by the resolution that it starts at Montreal and ends at Halifax; that would include a bridge, I presume, as the hon. member for

Mr. COLBY.

Stanstead (Mr. Colby) has mentioned. Now, I wish to know if this road is to start from the southern bank of the St. Lawrence or from the city of Montreal? Is this amount to include the cost of building a bridge across the St. Lawrence?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is nothing about a bridge. The road is to go from the south bank of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. LANGELIER. The river must be crossed. Is it proposed to cross the river at Montreal or at Lachine?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The question asked by the member was whether any part of the subsidy is to be appropriated for building a bridge. I say no.

Mr. LANGELIER. Will the road cross at Montreal or at Lachine? The river must be crossed at one point or the other. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) has stated that it is intended to cross the river from Lachine to Caughnawaga. Is such the fact, or is it the intention of the company to build a bridge directly from Longueuil to St. Lambert?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member for Sunbury.

Mr. BURPEE. Then, I take it for granted that no portion of the money will be devoted to building a bridge. Is it decided definitely whether it will cross the lake or go on the southern side?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. To cross the lake.

Mr. BURPEE. Is there any estimate of the cost of the bridge across the lake?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. BURPEE. How long will the company have to complete the road?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Two years to begin, and four years to complete.

Mr. BURPEE. I think that is too long a time. I would press on the Government that it should be two years to complete, instead of four. It is very important, in the interest of the whole route, that the road should be proceeded with simultaneously at different points. If the company have four years to complete, the people of the Maritime Provinces will have a long time to wait before they will get any benefit from it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the ordinary time. I am afraid the hon. gentleman finds that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been built so rapidly, that we must now build every other work with the same rapidity. This company has not equal means. They will, of course, do the best they can, as it is in their interest to build it as rapidly as possible. If the term were diminished to two years, those undertaking the work might have more difficulty in raising the funds. The hon. member has no doubt followed the proceedings in the Railway Committee, and is aware that this is a very ordinary concession made to a company undertaking a work of such magnitude.

Mr. LAURIER. A good deal has been said as to the relative merits of the different routes. It will not be opportune to discuss this subject until the Government have submitted further information. I have one word to offer to the remarks made by the hon. member for Stanstead. He gave it as an argument in favor of the choice made by the Government that the counties through which the road will pass have contributed several hundreds of thousands of dollars to railway construction. I do not want to depreciate in any way the efforts made by those counties, but I would remind the hon. gentleman that a large portion of the money which has been expended in the Eastern Townships in the construction of railways, if not the greater portion, has been derived from the municipal loan fund.

Mr. COLBY. No.

Mr. LAURIER. In Shefford the whole of it was so derived. In other counties it was much the same.

Mr. COLBY. No; very little, except Shefford.

Mr. LAURIER. The county of Shefford has contributed $300,000 to railways, and derived that amount from the municipal loan fund, on which it has never paid a cent, either principal or interest. We are entitled to have more information on this subject than that already given. Will the Minister explain why, in computing the distance between Montreal and Sherbrooke, the distance is computed over the Montreal, Portland and Boston Railway.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is because that road is already built, and we take advantage of the railways already built, provided they do not increase the distance much.

Mr. LAURIER. The reason I asked for an answer was this: It has always been understood that the Short Line Railway, so far as this line has been laid out, is to tap the St. Lawrence and carry over a bridge at Lachine. The hon. gentleman said there were 216 miles to build: that is, 80 miles between Chambly and Huntville, and 136 miles between the international boundary and Mettawamkeag.

Mr. COLBY. I suppose the engineer has taken the existing railways and the existing bridges. In case a change should be made, instead of the distance to be constructed being lengthened it may be materially shortened. The distance from Lachine to St. John's, Quebec is about 20 miles, the same as the other line already constructed. When you strike St. John's, Quebec, you strike a road running all the way to Sherbrooke, so instead of having 80 miles to build you have only 20 to build. The Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly road is in operation from St. John's to Waterloo, where it connects with the Waterloo and Magog, which connects with the Sherbrooke, and the line, with little alteration, is very likely the best possible to go through that country. So that the change may very likely result in utilising 80 miles of railway already built, instead of 20. That, I say, may be among the probabilities.

Mr. LAURIER. That would be utilising a portion already built.

Mr. COLBY. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. The more explanation we have the more confused we are, because it is stated that between Chambly and Lennoxville a new line would have to be built. We were not to make use of railways already existing, but the subsidies contemplated the construction of 80 miles of new road between those places.

Mr. COLBY. Precisely so.

Mr. LAURIER. Not precisely so, because we would use a portion already existing.

Mr. COLBY. I do not understand that there is anything in the report of the engineers, or in the recommendation of the Government, to prevent them making the best possible arrangement in the interests of the country. It may be that there are better arrangements than any indicated in the engineer's report, I suppose the Government resolutions are based on the engineer's report, but my own individual opinion is, that if the bridge is located as high up as Lachine, it will ultimately result in arrangements being made quite in the interests of the country, in which an economy may be effected from what it would cost to build an entirely new 80 miles of railway.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no objection to the Government selecting the best route, but I think we are entitled to know exactly what the Government consider the best route, when they are asking for the peoples' money. The hon. gentleman says it is within the possibilities that instead of building a new line between Chambly and Lennoxville, use may be made of the line already constructed between Lennoxville and St. John's. But the Government have not so stated. The Minister of Public Works, when explaining the policy of the Government, stated that on this line 216 miles of new railway would have to be built—136 between the end of the International Railway and Mettawamkeag, and 80 miles between Sherbrooke and Lennoxville. If that be so, we know where the subsidy will go, and we can judge whether the subsidy is excessive or not. But, if instead of applying it towards building the railway between Lennoxville and Chambly, it is proposed to make use of a part of railway already existing, we ought to know it. We have a right to know what is proposed to be done.

Mr. COLBY. I do not know but this is very well as ad captandum, but I certainly think it is not business like. If the Government suppose that possibly it might be thought best to utilise a road belonging in part to foreigners, I do not think that they should so limit themselves in their declarations in Parliament, or in their Bill in the House, that they should place themselves entirely at the mercy of those people, and be obliged to do it. The Government state an available proposition; they state what can be done by the construction of this line, and if the hon. gentleman complains of anything, he complains that they did not preclude themselves from doing something better, if the opportunity should present itself. I think the Government acts wisely in not doing so. The Government do not know whether this road can be acquired on any terms. I stated this for the information of the hon. gentleman, as amongst the possibilities which had occurred to my own mind; but the Government do not intend to build a railway, nor do they propose to place themselves in negotiation with railway owners. The Government is not the party to move in any matter of that kind, but they need not limit themselves in such a way as to make it absolutely necessary to acquire a road which, perhaps, could not be acquired at all, and which it might not think best to acquire. I mentioned that as a possibility more favorable to the company than anything suggested in the Government resolutions.

Mr. LAURIER. I take complete issue with the hon. gentleman, even on the score of business. When the Government are asking the people to vote them the money we have a right to know how they will apply that money, and it is business that we should know exactly how they will do so. If they think there are one or two methods in which they can apply the money, let them say so. I do not object to their stating their policy, whether it is building a new railway or making use of an existing railway, but the House should know exactly what they are doing when they are voting the money. So far, the Government has said nothing of the possibilities which the hon. member for Stanstead now suggests. The explanation of the Government is, that the subsidies shall go towards building 216 miles of railway, including the 80 miles between Sherbrooke and Chambly; and if it is upon the tapis that the money is to be expended, not only as suggested by the Minister of Public Works, but as stated by the hon. member for Stanstead, then I say we are entitled to know from the Government themselves.

Mr. HALL. The hon. gentleman seems to overlook the fact that it is a matter of indifference to the Government or to the country whether a section is acquired and improved, or built anew. Estimating that the cost will be $20,000 a mile for the 585 miles to Salisbury, it would amount to $11,700,000, on which $250,000 a year is less than 2½ per cent. So that this subsidy which is being given is just about one-half the interest on a bond for the cost of the construction and equipment of that road, whether it is built new or acquired and improved; and the statement about the portion built and to be built, I understand, is made by the Government, not as a matter of much consequence to the House, but as determining the facility and the rapidity with which the line could be completed.

Mr. BLAKE. But I think there is a very important consideration as to that. I do not understand that we are to vote away the public money in order to aggrandise private fortunes. Nobody can deny that if there is any merit in this scheme whatever, the result of its completion must be largely to enhance the value of those lines already constructed, which are now to become, instead of isolated local lines, also parts of a great through line. They are there; somebody owns them; but is it to be said that besides paying a large subsidy towards the construction of the links which are to give them an enhanced value, we are to give the public funds in order that somebody may buy somebody else's property? I say the enhanced value of those lines is a piece of great good fortune to the proprietors of those lines, without our giving public money in order to their being bought. Let them be thrown into the common stock of the new through line, at what price may be agreed upon between the fortunate proprietors of the new combination; but do not let it be said that the public are to pay for those lines at the enhanced value they will acquire as new lines. It seems to me we are entitled to know on what basis this proposal is made. The Minister of Public Works did not think it worth while to tell us how it was that a subsidy of $170,000 a year for 15 years, which we were assured emphatically last year was enough to accomplish this object, is now to be changed into a subsidy of $250,000 a year for 20 years. I have given the capitalised value of this subsidy; it is an addition doubling the amount of last year. I asked Sir Charles Tupper last year how he knew $170,000 a year was enough. He said he could not tell, but he assured us that he had made enquiries, and that it was enough. Now we are not told that more is necessary or why it is necessary, except that we see it in the resolution. Is it necessary because it is found necessary to buy the proprietors of these large roads and pay them for them? The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) said, awhile ago, that as long as there were sacrifices and expenditures to be involved by themselves, they had a monopoly. Well, they were promoting their own interest. Some of the municipalities which have paid inordinate sums and have not reaped the fruits have suffered some misfortune. I do not know whether it is intended to recoup them; I do not know whether it is intended to purchase the International line—not only to give it an enhanced value as the concern it will become as part of the through line, but also to give the money to buy it at that enhanced price. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), a little while ago, spoke of Mr. Light, whom I do not know; but he was employed by this Government to make this survey, and I suppose he had their confidence, and the hon. gentleman said he knew Mr. Light, because, as the Government engineer of the Province of Quebec, he had made a report as to the north shore in consequence of influences from Terrebonne. Well, we know what that meant; it was not because Terrebonne had more voices, but because the voice that spoke for Terrebonne in the Legislature of Quebec was the most powerful voice in that Legislature; and the hon. gentleman knows the unfortunate results that were achieved by Mr. Light, because the Prime Minister of that day wanted the road changed to suit his constituency. And to-day we have a gentleman appointed Acting Minister of Railways in this House, in whose charge Mr. Schreiber is, who has been directing these surveys, who is the political officer responsible for the direction of these surveys, and for the orders in which these surveys are given; and he is not in the House at this moment listening to this discussion.

Mr. POPE. I am here.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, he is here; but he is on the back benches. He comes forward now, and I am glad to see him. It is in his Department in which these surveys have been going on, but he does not take charge of the resolutions; they are not placed in his hands to move.

Mr. POPE. Nor was it under my charge the surveys were made.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I do not know to whom the hon. gentleman's deputy and engineer was allotted for the surveys.

Mr. POPE. I refused to take any part in these surveys. Sir John A. Macdonald said he would do it himself when I accepted the position of Acting Minister of Railways.

Mr. BLAKE. There is the acknowledged incompatibility in the hon. gentleman's position. That is what I complain of; I say he ought not to have been appointed Acting Minister of Railways during the time these great interests were decided, because his personal interests were such as to prevent him acting in that position.

Mr. POPE. No; I have no personal interest.

Mr. BLAKE. He is reported to have a large personal interest in the International Railway.

Mr. POPE. You should not take everybody's reports.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman won't give me anybody's report. I think it is unfortunate that the hon. gentleman should have been appointed Acting Minister of Railways at the time and under the circumstances that this change was to be made. I think it would have been better that the political officer at the head of that Department should not have had the interest the hon. gentleman had in the solution of this question. That very circumstance was not to disqualify the hon. gentleman continuing in the Government; but he had his own Department, the Department of Agriculture and Statistics. But why should he be taken out of the Department of Railways, which had to settle this question? Now I have extracted from the hon. gentleman the admission that he felt himself he could not touch this question, and that the First Minister had to instruct Mr. Schreiber, that he had to give orders about the surveys, as the political person responsible for all this, although up to this instant he had supposed the Acting Minister was the person responsible. There was a hidden hand, and the hidden hand is now disclosed.

Mr. POPE. No; there was no hidden hand.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it was the hon. gentleman's hand, for his was the hand we saw.

Mr. POPE. It was the open hand of the Prime Minister.

Mr. BLAKE. No; it was not, because it is only to-night that we learn it was his hand. But although the Prime Minister wrote, I dare say the hon. gentleman was at his ear.

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Are you sure? What a dreadful position for the Acting Minister of Railways to be in, that he could not even speak to the First Minister about an important affair. What a shocking position for him to be in. Would it not be very much better if he were not Acting Minister of Railways?

Mr. POPE. That is too thin.

Mr. BLAKE. I really think the hon. gentleman's statement is too thin, quite too thin, so thin that we understand it. It is a polite way of saying it was managed in this particular manner. Here we are with this proposal, the Acting Minister of Railways acknowledged he could not take part in it. I did not know his disability went so far that he could not say a word about it, even in private. We have this important admission, that in the decision of this matter we are deprived of the responsibility of even the Acting Minister. We want information of the principle upon which this subsidy has been fixed. Is it on the principle, which is now ascertained, that the hon. gentleman's railway and others will have to be bought, and the public money will have to be paid for them? Is it on the principle that a part of the subsidy will have to go in that way? If so, how much? When we find an addition of $1,500,000 to the sum said to be sufficient last year, and find that addition coincident with the announcement that we require the International line, we have a right to be informed what sum of money is to go into the acquisition of the International line.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) put me a question whilst the hon. member for Sunbury (Mr. Burpee) was addressing the House, and of course I could not then answer it. As I said to the hon. member for Sunbury, this vote has nothing to do with the bridge at Montreal. The vote is for a line of railway to connect Montreal with St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, vid Sherbrooke. When the time comes to apply this subsidy due the line mentioned here, of course the Government will take care that the connection between the south shore and the St. Lawrence be made in such a way as to meet the requirements of trade and the public interests generally. There are different ways of making the connection. Of course, there is always the Victoria bridge, and then the proposed Lachine bridge. That question has not come up. The hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has asked what is to be done with this money, whether it is to be employed in purchasing this line or the other, or whether it is to build the 216 miles which are mentioned in the tabular statement I gave as a portion of the line which is not built, and which must be built, if we want to have a complete line from Montreal to St. Andrews, St. John or Halifax. No doubt this money will go towards securing a line from Montreal to these ports. How will that money be employed? As the hon. gentleman says, it is so much a year for so many years; therefore, the Government must see that the conditions of the vote be fulfilled; that is to say, they must have proof positive that this line will be obtained, which is considered the shortest and the best under the circumstances, from Montreal to the maritime ports. I cannot say whether there will be so much for rolling stock or so many miles built, but when I gave these figures about the miles built and to be built, I wished to show in what position was the line for which we were asking a subsidy. A portion of the line is built and a portion is not built, and the company that will be formed must show that they comply with the requirements of this vote; that is to say, that this line will be obtained, by which we can reach, for example, St. Andrews by a line not to exceed 430 miles, as mentioned here. The hon. member for West Durham said we must not use this money to increase the private fortunes of anyone. There is no desire or intention on the part of the Government to use this money in any other way than the resolution says, purely and simply, that is, to give to the company the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal to the seaboard in the Maritime Provinces. That is the sole object we have in view. The amount of money is large, as the hon. gentleman says, but we believe, on the information we have now from our chief engineer, that this sum is required. This vote is a heavy one, no doubt, but it is a vote which, after all, will give good return to the country. It will secure our connection between the Atlantic and the Pacific by the shortest route possible under the circumstances. Of course, if we do not build this direct line we would have to see our trade go from Montreal to Portland. Then all the advantages of the terminus of such a great railway in winter would be to the benefit of the United States. We do not wish this. In the same way that we have taken care that our railway shall not be tapped in British Columbia for the benefit of the United States of America, our enterprising neighbors, who have their own rival railway, the Northern Pacific, so we thought that we should not allow them to benefit at the Atlantic end of the railway; or, after all the sacrifices we have had to make, to obtain the terminus at Portland or elsewhere in the United States. We thought the railway should end on our own territory on the Atlantic shores, so as to give us the benefit of the cargoes which are to be sent abroad and the return cargoes which would secure to us the benefit of that foreign trade. Under these circumstances, we expect that Parliament will not refuse to make this sacrifice again in order to complete this system. After the large sacrifices the country has made for the opening of the North-West by the Canadian Pacific Railway, though this vote of $80,000 a year for twenty years is considerable, nevertheless we think it is not such as to warrant a refusal on the part of Parliament. Parliament would wish to complete its work by linking the two oceans by its railway route, and therefore we believe that the vote which we are asking will be cheerfully granted by Parliament. The hon. member for West Durham has alluded to Mr. Light. As far as he is known to me personally, I have nothing against him, and I have never known anything against him, except what was stated to-night by hon. gentlemen who brought reports and statements, and of course were responsible for those statements. The hon. gentlemen who made them must have had good data, and I am only sorry that the opportunity has occurred to bring them here, because it is always a pity that a man in the position of Mr. Light should be damaged in his reputation. But if these figures are not correct, as given by the hon. gentlemen, the latter must take the consequence. The hon. member for West Durham has given his version of the way in which the North Shore was extended to Terrebonne, and so on.

Mr. BLAKE. No; it is the statement of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. member for West Durham has added something to the statement of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, in giving the name of a gentleman connected with the Government, one of my colleagues. I am sorry my hon. friend the Secretary of State is not here, because I have no doubt he would have been perfectly able to defend himself before the House, and I hope he will be in better health to-morrow, so that he may answer the hon. member for West Durham. As to these resolutions being in my hands, this is not the first time that one Minister takes a portion of the work of another Minister, and brings up a matter and does his best to lay it before the House and to help his colleagues. I did so the other day, in regard to the railways in the North-West and their land subsidies, though those were matters connected with the Department of the Interior. I am not Minister of that Department, but I was asked by the First Minister to take charge of that matter, and I did so, as I have done now; and, no doubt, I might ask some of my colleagues to take some of my work, if I were not in good health.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the Secretary of State, I must say that the hon. member for Sherbrooke having pointed out that it was influence from Terrebonne which caused this change in the Act, and that it was made on the reports of the chief engineer of the Province at the time—a very unfortunate selection—I pointed out where the influence from Terrebonne was.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. member for Sherbrooke spoke of influences, but he gave no name. It was my hon. friend from West Durham who gave the name of the Secretary of State, and I have no doubt that my hon. friend from West Durham, when the Secretary of State is in the House, will repeat in his presence what he has said.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member can report to the Secretary of State what I have said, and if he has anything to say in answer he can say it. I have no occasion to repeat my remarks. I pointed out that the influences from Terrebonne were obviously those of the member for Terrebonne, who was the First Minister of the Province.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He was not the First Minister at the time.

Mr. BLAKE. No; he was not at that time the First Minister, but he was the Provincial Secretary; he was a Minister of the Crown for the Province of Quebec in the DeBoucherville Government. The hon. gentleman has said he has no doubt Parliament will grant this cheerfully, and that it is an addition of $80,000 a year for 20 years. But there is also $170,000 for 5 years, which the hon. gentleman forgot to mention. And the present value of the whole, as I have said, is a million and a-half. The hon. gentleman says great results are going to be achieved by it. We will not discuss that question now; we may differ in opinion as to the magnitude of the results. Last Session I stated that I had always desired to see shorter communication between the different Provinces of the Dominion; that I thought it was a great mistake not to have had that shorter communication, even before the Intercolonial was built. I believed a great error had been committed at that time, in not accomplishing the short communication between the two Provinces, and one of the serious consequences of this step is in relation to the Intercolonial Railway itself. But that is not of prime consequence. The hon. gentleman does not tell us that he has any assurance from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they are going to take the through traffic of their railway to the provincial ports. He has no such assurance. But the company have announced their policy. We know what they propose doing. We have found them going to Portland and negotiating for facilities there. We have found them discussing the question of the Portland and Ogdensburgh. We have heard Mr. Stephen declaring publicly that they were desirous of obtaining a Portland connection, and indicating their understanding of what the people of Portland would do, in order that they might make that connection. At that time the city of Montreal was their summer port and they wanted to go to Portland for their winter port. Why? Not because they disliked the Maritime Provinces or the Province of Quebec, as some people have said. I do not believe they have any feeling of liking or disliking about it, but it was from commercial considerations that they believed they should reach Portland. I have heard hon. gentlemen in this House, at least one, say that it was hatred for the city of Quebec which actuated them. I had no idea that they were moved by either love or hatred; I thought they were passionless in the matter. They believed, rightly or wrongly, that Portland was their objective point for their through traffic. Well, if they believed that, and if they make that connection, I suppose that it will be from purely commercial considerations. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) told us that there was a line of road something over 200 miles long between Montreal and Portland, but he did not tell us what the distance would be by the proposed route. But that is not the question. The question which

Mr. BLAKE.

I put to the hon. gentleman and which he, experienced in avoiding giving answers to difficult questions, answered by a patriotic effusion, was this: Last Session we were told that this subsidy of a capital value of under $1,900,000 would accomplish this result. This Session we are told it will take a subsidy of the capital value of $3,400,000. I asked him to state how it was that he told us last Session that this first sum would suffice for building this road, and that twelve months afterwards he comes down and tells us that he was mistaken, and that he requires $1,500,000 more. The hon. gentleman says it is based upon the report of the engineer. But I have not seen any report of the engineer which says that this additional subsidy is requisite, or that it will answer. It must be a verbal report of the engineer. But is that sufficient data? After we have been deceived and disappointed last year, after the experience of last year, is it enough to say that the chief engineer thinks this $1,500,000 is necessary and that it will suffice? I say there is no satisfactory information upon which Parliament is to be called upon to agree with the Ministers who were so egregiously mistaken, as they now say they were, last year. But what were the data of last Session? Upon what ground was it that last Session we were told that a subsidy, the capital value of which is under $1,900,000 a year, would do this work? The information was kept in the Ministers' breasts, but they told us that they had acquired it, and a confiding Parliament believed their statement and voted a subsidy. And this Session we get no more information, except the statement that they were all wrong themselves, that their information was imperfect and inaccurate, and that they require a million and a-half more. Who is to get this million and a-half, and why is it required? On what basis is it that $150,000 for another five years and $80,000 for twenty years are now required, when $120,000 for fifteen years was ample twelve months ago? That is an important question, because we have no assurance in the face of these facts, that we will not be called upon next Session to vote a still further sum. I think after the experiences of last year, when the Ministers have come down and told us that they were disappointed in their expectations of last year, they ought to have brought some data, some tangible information to guide us in our decision, some information from those persons who are to take an interest in this matter, some information from the anonymous individuals who are at the back of all this transaction, which will show, first of all, that it was necessary to give so much, and secondly, that so much would do.

Mr. STAIRS. This question is so important to the Maritime Provinces, that I must ask permission to point out some of the reasons which induce me to support the line which has been selected by the Government. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) has fallen into an error, I presume inadvertently, as to the length of the road provided for by these resolutions. I understood him to say that there were 216 miles to be built.

Mr. LAURIER. That is what the Minister said.

Mr. STAIRS. I think the chief engineer estimated the distance from Fredericton to Salisbury at 95 miles, and the distance as given by the Minister, I understood, was the distance which was necessary to reach St. John. But of course it is necessary to reach Halifax, which requires about 113 miles. But the whole length which it will be necessary to construct to reach the ports in Nova Scotia, will be something like 300 miles. We have heard a good deal to-night upon the question of routes and distances, and we have heard about a line by Quebec, and this line which has been chosen by the Government, represented in Mr. Schreiber's report as No. 6. I may say that a very careful examination, even before the subject was brought before the House, convinced me that the line (No. 6) was the best that could be chosen in the interest of Halifax, and it is in that interest alone that I support it. There have been objections raised against it, and it has been said that a shorter line could have been found by way of Richmond. Now, I think if any hon. member will look at the map we have before us this evening, he will see that it is impossible to get a line that is much shorter by an air line from Richmond than the one chosen. Because, if you continue the line from Richmond to a point where it will connect with the line surveyed by Vernon Smith, which runs to a considerable distance to the north of Moosehead Lake, you will find that line goes as far north of the air line as the line No. 6 at the most distant point diverges to the south. So, even if an air line could be got to Richmond, to a point connecting with Vernon Smith's line, it would not materially shorten the distance. And when a line is carried from Richmond you would have to allow the ordinary curvature, which would make the air line that is being sought for about as long as No. 6. There has been one point touched this evening which needs a little consideration, I think. It is in connection with diverting trade to United States ports. The reason why I support this line (No. 6) is because I am convinced there is no more danger of trade being diverted to American ports by this line than if we ran a line 20 or 30 miles to the north. If the through trade of the Dominion is to go to American ports, it is quite certain that a distance of 20 or 30 miles, north or south, is not going to affect it. I believe that is certain, and think, therefore, the line chosen by the Government, all things taken into consideration, is the one which gives us the best chance of sending to the ports of the lower Provinces a good share of the trade of the west. There is another important matter that should not be forgotten. It is that the resolutions are to provide for one complete line to Salisbury, from the south shore of the St. Lawrence opposite Montreal. It is absolutely necessary that it should be one line, not a line worked or operated by different companies and under different control. The Government have entered into a contract to give the people of the lower Provinces this one line to Salisbury, Nova Scotia, and connections with St. John and St. Andrews, and possibly, at some future day, with Louisburg. If that is the case, it would be wise for the Government to consider the advisability of providing, at some future stage, that a condition should be imposed upon the company which makes the contract for the construction of the line, that it should be completed and a junction effected with the Intercolonial, and that it should not be permitted to terminate at any intermediate points. This is of vast importance to the lower Provinces, and I trust when the Bill is introduced such a condition will be inserted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to send me his suggestion in writing, so that it may be considered before we take another stage.

Mr. STAIRS. I shall have great pleasure in sending it. There is another most important point in connection with the interest of the Maritime Provinces, and it is that the line from Montreal to Salisbury shall be under the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will read letters which have been received from the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which will throw some light upon this point, and will answer, to a certain extent, some of the objections urged to these resolutions by the hon. member for West Durham. In a letter dated 25th February, 1885, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, addressing you, Mr. Chairman, said :

"M. B. DALY, Esq., Ottawa :

"DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of the letter of the 24th instant, signed by yourself and Messrs. Wood and Stairs, upon the subject of the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Maritime Provinces, so as to connect it with the Ports of St. Andrews, St. John, Halifax and Louisbourg.

"OTTAWA, 25th February, 1885.

"With reference to the matter of the location of such an extension as you refer to, I beg to say that my opinion remains unchanged by the various surveys that have been made. On the contrary, my previous opinion has been confirmed, and I am fully satisfied that the best line would be a line running as directly as possible from Montreal via Sherbrooke, Moosehead Lake and Fredericton to Moncton, utilising existing lines as far as practicable. I may further say that if the Government should decide adequately to subsidise such a line, it could, in my opinion, be completed within two years from the date of the contract.

"I estimate that a first-class road, thoroughly equipped, would involve a capital cost of $12,500,000. While I am not now in a position to commit my colleagues to an actual offer to undertake the work, I feel safe in saying that with a subsidy of $300,000 a year for 20 years the Atlantic and North-Western Railway Company would be willing to enter into a contract with the Government to make the direct connection, as above stated. Speaking for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I may say that, in my opinion, if such a railway were built, the latter company would undertake to lease and operate it, provided suitable provision were made for the carrying of freight over the Intercolonial Railway from Moncton to Halifax.

"I may add that Moncton would be the proper point to connect the Louisburg Railway with the Canadian Pacific Railway."

"I am, dear Sir,

"Yours very truly,

"GEO. STEPHEN."

In addition, there is another letter from Mr. Stephen, of a later date, 16th June, 1885, as follows:—

"THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.,

"OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,

"MONTREAL, 16th June, 1885.

"M. B. DALY, Esq. :

"J. F. STAIRS, Esq. :

"SIR,—Replying to your letter of the 16th June on the subject of the proposed short line between Montreal and the sea-ports of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, I have to say that the route indicated therein is, in the light of our present knowledge, the best that has been proposed, and this route is preferred by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to any other that has been suggested.

"I will say, further, that it is the desire of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to take up this scheme as a natural and necessary supplement to the Canadian Pacific Railway as it now exists.

"The company will be ready without loss of time to enter into negotiations with the Government for carrying out this project, as soon as the necessary legislation is obtained."

"I am, Sirs,

"Yours truly,

"GEO. STEPHEN, President."

In view of those two letters, there is a possibility, almost a certainty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company being able to secure this line and work it to the Maritime Provinces. One of my reasons for supporting the present line is, because we have a better chance, in fact, the only chance, of securing their assistance in this work if we adopt it. I believe it is impossible for many reasons to take up the Quebec line. Great delay would certainly take place in securing the construction of a bridge at Quebec and making further arrangements to connect with the Maritime Provinces. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company do not soon see a fair chance of getting trade to our own ports, it will be diverted to American ports, and it will be out of their power to prevent it. This is, to myself and other members of the lower Provinces, very important indeed. We have to consider, and I have always considered, the trade interests of our own Provinces. In view of the expenditure that has taken place in the North-West and in building the Canadian Pacific Railway, the people of the Maritime Provinces have a right to ask for a sufficient subsidy to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to own that road. I am sure the propositions contained in the resolutions will be supported generally throughout the Maritime Provinces. As has been ably pointed out by hon. gentlemen in supporting the resolutions, this chance is one of the most valuable that could have been found. It suits, in the highest possible degree, the citizens of Halifax and the people of Nova Scotia; it suits, more nearly than any other, the people of St. Andrews, St. John, and other parts of New Brunswick. In view of these considerations, I think the Government have acted wisely, and that those who are interested will be able to support this line. If there have been criticisms against it, I think a full knowledge of the circumstances existing will justify the course of the Government, especially when we take into consideration that it is an impossibility for the Canadian Pacific Railway to procure a connection with the Maritime Provinces by any other line, and the absolute necessity which exists for a line which will secure us connection with the railway system of the west, not only having the shortest line to Montreal, but also—which is far more important, in my opinion—having extensions into the west, to connect us with the great grain centres, not only of Canada, but even of Chicago—I say, in view of these considerations it is of vital importance that we should endeavor to get such a line worked by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. LESAGE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, before these resolutions are adopted in committee, I feel it my duty to say a few words on the subject, and to examine their intrinsic value. I do not intend, at this late hour of the night, to make a long speech, especially as it might be considered that I have more than a personal interest in the question, but there is a fact which the present discussion has shown to me, a fact which had not yet come under our notice, and which I would have noticed with regret. That fact is, according to the speech delivered by my hon. friend, the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall), and that delivered by my hon. friend, the member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), I would always have thought that in railway matters the engineers were competent authorities. I had never dared to speak on the question of the short line in this House without having under my hand the papers required to establish the position which I occupied as a member from the district of Quebec, and having, by chance, the combination line within my district, I say I have noticed the fact that it seems that all the engineers are dishonest men. The hon. member for Sherbrooke has taken as his ground for the discussion of the question in which we are interested in so high a degree, and in which he is interested personally, like myself—and I do not try to conceal that fact—that the engineers who do not agree with Mr. Schreiber are men who have made false reports. My hon. friend from Stanstead, corroborating these assertions, even went further. Not only did he pretend that Mr. Light had made a report more or less reasonable or rational, and I will even say a report signed beforehand, but he has even tried to force upon us, from a sympathetic point of view, in a most brilliant peroration, such as he is always wont to make, the question of the short line, on account of the sacrifices which the municipalities of the Eastern Townships had made in favor of the roads which are connected with this line. Mr. Chairman, I wish to put myself here in the favorable position which my county has given me on that question. It is true that the famous combination line which has been so much discussed to-night, and which has been discussed in a more or less partial manner, in my opinion, goes through the county of Dorchester, which I have the honor to represent. But I am bound to say that the county of Dorchester, which is composed of sixteen large parishes, has sent to the hon. First Minister, who was then Acting Minister of Railways, petitions signed by the great majority of the county and representing the most influential part of the population, reminding him, in the first place, of a fact which had been recorded in the Parliamentary papers by the then Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, who had declared that the shortest and most advantageous line would be chosen. I, as member for the county of Dorchester, and our friends thought, according to a report made in 1834 by Mr. Yule, civil engineer, that we had the shortest and the most advantageous line, and under those circumstances I have thought it my duty to ask the hon. Minister of Railways for a survey of the Etchemin valley. That was kindly granted to me. Mr. Light, provincial engineer, was sent to make a barometric survey, as far as the Maine boundary.

Mr. STAIRS.

A little later on, not being satisfied with that survey, which was not a complete survey of the valley, I renewed my demand to the Minister of Railways, who answered that satisfaction would be given to me. In the course of the two following months, Mr. Wicksteed, an engineer connected with the Ottawa Railway Department, was sent, and he said to me, in an interview I had with him: "I was sent here to make a barometric survey of the valley of the Etchemin River." I said to him: "I do not think that this will be useful, for it has already been done by Mr. Light." Mr. Wicksteed said: "It is not made over the whole road." Then he made a barometric survey from Chaudière Junction to Lake Churchill, which is about 40 miles on the other side of the Maine boundary. A little later on, I again insisted upon the Government placing us on an equal footing with the other rival lines, by granting us instrumental surveys. The answer was favorable, and I think I may remind this House that in two different circumstances my hon. friend the member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry) and myself, have put questions to the Government, asking for instrumental surveys. These have not been made, and therefore I think my hon. friend, the member for Stanstead, has gone a little too far when he compared the various lines and when he pronounced in favor of the International. Why should Mr. Schreiber be more credible than Mr. Light, Mr. Wicksteed or Mr. Vernon Smith? They are three engineers whom we had not asked, but whom we had accepted from the Government; and when these reports are discussed before the House, we are told that they are not true, that they are exaggerated reports. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask you, what are we to believe? For my part, when I submitted the question to the Government, I have not made a sectional question of it; I made a federal question of it. We had the promise from the Government that the shortest and the most favorable line would be chosen. It seems to me that that promise was sacred, and when we asked for surveys, and when I had the honor to present petitions, such as those which I have mentioned, it seems to me that it was a proof that we were not making a local question of it. Bear in mind, that on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, from the county of Lévis to the State of Maine, on an area covering sixty-seven miles in length and fifty miles in breadth, there is not one solitary railway. The question now before us cannot be discussed before the House from a sectional standpoint. Sixteen parishes are saying to the Government: If you wish to carry out the policy inaugurated by the construction of the Pacific Railway, that is, to have a through line on Canadian soil, although we have not the advantage of having direct communications with the large centres, we are ready to sacrifice all that in favor of the policy you have inaugurated. We are now asking you if you wish to have the short line. Considered from the point of view of the distance, and taking into account the curves and grades, we ask you to adopt the line of the River Etchemin, if it offers more advantages. Mr. Chairman, I can say it here, I do not fear to be contradicted by the reports of any engineers. The Etchemin River valley does not need any favor. It is a bed formed by nature for a railway. It has been repeated—and Mr. Schreiber has not feared to make false statements to support his contention—he has pretended that Mr. Light made false statements. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not an engineer, I am not a railway man; I am unable to say whether Mr. Light stated real facts or not, but I say that Mr. Schreiber, when he saw fit, in order to give more weight to his own assertions, to strike off certain words from a report, in order to kill that report, put himself in a very bad position indeed. The valley of the Etchemin River, as I said just now, does not want any favors. And I repeat it, we want surveys by competent engineers, in whom we have confidence. We ask for a report made after a survey, and not a report prepared and signed beforehand; that is all we ask. It seems to me I am taking a very disinterested position when I stand up to-day to defend the north shore line, I who live on the south shore. I must say that I am not sectional, and if I were, I would perhaps have some reason to favor the south shore. But I hold myself above these considerations, to see only the general interest above private interests. But at the same time I desire to rectify the remarks made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) and the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby), remarks which he made in good faith, I hope, but which are not correct. These gentlemen do not know the line of the River Etchemin. All that I have asked is reports by competent engineers. In this, Mr. Chairman, I do not find fault with the Government, for I know that they have been well disposed towards myself and towards my county as regards the barometric surveys. It may be there are special reasons, unknown to me, for having refused more than that, when more was asked, but still I could not get satisfaction. I have not had the advantage of visiting the location, but it seems to me that the Government, when they submitted these reports, might have made them more complete. The hon. Minister of Public Works has given us the distances between Montreal and St. John, Hervey and Halifax. How is it that the Government should have come to such an important decision, when it is found, by the discussion which has just taken place, from both sides of the House, that it is almost unanimously admitted that all the reports of the engineers were false, that some 130 miles of the line which has been chosen as being the shortest line are yet unexplored, and may, in some places, have grades of more than 100 feet? All this may be supposed, for it has been stated that the engineers have exaggerated the reports and deviated from the route. I appeal especially to the members from the Maritime Provinces, so that they may not suppose that I am dealing with the question from a sectional standpoint. It is a federal question, and my county has signed petitions, praying that the line should pass where the interests of the Dominion should be best promoted. How is it, I say, that the Government appropriates such a large sum without these correct reports, and especially when the result will be to isolate from the Pacific trade the whole district and the city of Quebec, that old city which possesses such a large and magnificent harbor, that city which is so richly endowed by nature. Still the Government decides this important question in the sense indicated by their resolutions, and we find in Mr. Schreiber's report, a report which was quoted very often here to-night, that over 130 miles of the International line have never been explored. But if, later on, the railroad could not go through there, owing to insuperable engineering difficulties, and we are not sure that that will never happen, where would we be? I am in favor of the short line; but I am in favor of a surveyed line, whatever it may be. However, I must say that I am not in favor of a line which, according to competent engineers connected with the Administration and under the control of the Minister of Railways, has not been surveyed. Why should Mr. Schreiber be more credible than Mr. Light, Mr. Smith or Mr. Sullivan, who have given locations on maps, which have been distributed to members of this House? In such a position, Mr. Chairman, I feel ill at ease, and it seems to me that the Government might have postponed the question until reliable surveys should have been made. It is evident that if all the reports which are in favor of our line are taken away from us, all I have to do is to resume my seat, and to submit to that which is inevitable. According to competent authorities, I had considered Mr. Light as an able engineer, and as a man capable of making an honest and comprehensive report to the Government and the country. It seems that I was mistaken. That is just possible; but I should like to have the proof of my error. If we go across the Maine boundary and if we strike Lake Chesuncook; if it is established by Mr. Vernon Smith's report that on certain distances there are grades of 50 feet per mile, which may be brought down to an average of 35 feet, and when we see Mr. Schreiber pretending that the valley of the Etchemin River has grades varying between 53 and 84 feet, I, who have been living in that district for the last fifteen years, say that I am inclined to think that Mr. Light is right, in the present case. And yet I do not wish to force my opinion upon the House. I simply ask that before a question of such importance for the Maritime Provinces and for the district of Quebec is decided, especially when the line which I am patronising goes through the northern part of the State of Maine, which is the best timbered part of that State, and whose lumber must all come through the Province of Quebec, and when that line is 71 miles shorter on American territory than the International line to the south would be, I say that in the face of these considerations we should have instrumental surveys to determine which is the shortest and the most favorable route. Let it be proved to me that the International line is the shortest and the most advantageous, and I, with my whole county, will be ready to accept it. But it is not with such reports as those which are now before the House that I will accept the verdict of those who patronise the Sherbrooke and Mettawamkeag line. It has been pretended, in the course of the discussion, that Mr. Light had made a false report; and yet Mr. Schreiber has said somewhere, while criticising Mr. Light's report (page 7), that the distance from Montreal to Hervey via Quebec was 248 miles. This, he added, should be 406 miles. The words "to be built" had been omitted intentionally, no doubt. It seems to me that I have a perfect right to think that Mr. Schreiber is not more credible than Mr. Light, even if there should be a doubt on that point. If these reports are so contradictory, let us re-establish the position and let us have reliable surveys, and if the conclusions at which we arrive are in favor, with due regard to the general interest of the country, of a line other than our own, I am ready to say to the Government: Let it be adopted, and we will be satisfied. I am very sorry to contradict the Minister of Public Works, but it is not I who contradict him; it is an engineer's report. In the first report submitted to this House is found the description of the different lines. Mr. Light gives a comparison between the different routes for the proposed short line between Montreal and the ports of St. John and Halifax, that is to say, by two lines, one by Sherbrooke and Megantic, the other, the combination line, via Quebec. Here is the tabular statement which he gives:

Description of the line.	Via Quebec & Difference

Now, we have the bridge question. I shall not deal with it lengthily, because it is very late; but it would seem to me that the question of the connection between the northern and southern shore can be easily solved. The part with which I have dealt has reference to distances. I have given fac-taken from the reports of civil engineers, which were submitted to the House. If these are not accurate, let us have new surveys. I do not say that they are accurate, nor that they are inaccurate; I do not know; but if I can contend that they are right, and if others may contend that they are not, there is such a grave doubt, in this case, that the matter must necessarily be the subject of further enquiries. We are asked: How are you going to connect the north shore with the south shore? It is the question of the bridge. I never was an advocate nor an opponent of the bridge; but it seems to me that the question is secondary. When one hundred and fifty to two hundred millions of dollars may be appropriated for an undertaking such as the Pacific Railway, it seems to me that an amount of four or five millions, when it is a question of giving satisfaction to all the eastern Provinces, which have so largely contributed towards the construction of the Pacific Railway, is a matter of a very secondary nature. It is very true that the Pacific, if it wishes to come via Sherbrooke to Mettawamkeag, can only do it on condition of building a bridge at Lachine. It can be calculated that a bridge at Lachine will cost over $3,000,000, and a bridge before Quebec, with a double track, ought to cost, according to the report of Mr. Bunless, only $5,000,000, with the abutments. Now, if we give satisfaction, from a short-line point of view, to the Maritime Provinces and to the Province of Quebec, I say the construction of the bridge at Quebec ought to be looked at from a more liberal standpoint. We have readily voted for the Pacific with pleasure and enthusiasm, of late years. We have done so again lately, and we are ready still to help it along, with all our might, until its completion. But it seems to me that we must consider, in a special manner, the interests of the great eastern Provinces, and give them satisfaction, as far as possible. For all these reasons, Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, it would be a question which it would be interesting to discuss more fully. But at this late hour, perhaps I have already said too much, especially in the French language, before an audience which is partly English-speaking. And yet I am anxious to define the position which I occupy. I said I hope that the question of a short line ought not to be considered as a sectional question, but as a federal question. And the district of Montreal having been benefited by the Pacific—a matter of which we are proud, and which was obtained partly through the exertions of the members from Quebec—we, the members from Quebec, are in a position to tell our friends generally, that after having, for a year past voted from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000 to complete the Pacific, we will not see it, if the present resolutions are adopted; and here is the way I explain the matter: It is because the short line question involves the whole question of the Pacific extension and of the advantages which would be derived therefrom by that district and by the Maritime Provinces. The true short line would be one starting from Montreal and going to the seaboard. We have always understood that the terminal port on the Atlantic would be a Canadian seaport. I have no objection to the Pacific reaching Portland, on account of its commercial necessities, to sustain competition or to compete with other lines. I am not against that. All our great railroad lines, including the Grand Trunk, go to Portland. The Pacific wishes to go there. I have no objection. But when we are voting such a large sum of money to bring the Pacific to a Canadian port, I say that it ought to go there; and I may add that if the Pacific wishes to go to an American port, they ought to go at their own expense; we have no need of voting any money for that. Let them do it themselves, if it suits them. I am not against the requirements of trade, but we are voting here in this House, before the country at large, a certain amount, to appropriate it to the development of the resources of the different Provinces of the Dominion; we vote in view of the results which we expect. That is the position. We have heard the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) saying, a few moments ago, that the Eastern Townships were entitled to a share in this Pacific question. My hon. friend knows that the members from the Province of Quebec, whether French or English, are all as one man on matters concerning this Province. My hon. friend knows that we are by no means jealous of the Eastern Townships, and that on the contrary we admire them in the successful efforts which they have made for their own improvement. But there is one fact which we must bear in mind, and that is, that the city of Sherbrooke has now three railroads—the Grand Trunk, Farnham and Magog and the South-Eastern—which connect with the Passumpsic, besides the Quebec Central, which runs from Lévis to Sherbrooke. Therefore, in that respect, it seems to me, that our friends are well supplied. If we take a glance at the map of the district south of Quebec, what do we see? We see no railroad whatever. I, for my part, live in a very important district; and from Lévis to the boundary line, composed of old parishes, some of which have been settled for some fifty or sixty years, and all have been settled for at least thirty years; there is not one solitary railway for twenty leagues in a bee line and fifty miles crossways. I do not make this remark with regard to the Pacific question, but, if my hon. friend bases his claims on the amount voted by the different municipalities of that district to develop their lines of railways and give them what he calls vested rights to the possession of the Pacific, it seems to me that the complete want of railway facilities must weigh a little on the other side of the scale. And yet, Mr. Chairman, all I have asked, and all I am now asking from the Government, before these resolutions are adopted—and I regret to say that I cannot accept them without that—is, that they should give us a reliable instrumental survey, to be made by engineers in whom we have confidence. The discussion will then come up before the House, and if the short line is then located by the House via Sherbrooke, after having been surveyed and explored instrumentally on the whole length of the line, then I will agree to it, and I will vote for that measure; and I am sure that my county will not find fault with me. Such is, in substance, the position I now take. I hope the Government will take my suggestions into consideration, and will give me credit for the frankness of my views on this question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved to strike out, in the 7th paragraph, all the words between the words "North Shore Railway" and the words "Canadian Pacific Railway," and inserting the following at the end of the paragraph:

And if it should be expedient so to do, in order to facilitate obtaining such access, the Governor in Council may acquire the North Shore Railway, and may apply the said sum of $1,500,000, or any part thereof, in aid of such acquisition; and upon such an acquisition, may transfer or convey or lease the said railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, subject to such obligations as the Government shall have assumed in acquiring it.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood the Minister to state that the Grand Trunk Railway had agreed to sell, and the Canadian Pacific Railway to purchase, the North Shore. Will the hon. gentleman give the terms of agreement between the two companies.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The understanding between these companies is this, that the Grand Trunk Railway sells the North Shore on these terms: The Grand Trunk Railway will receive the amount paid by them as stock in the company, and by which they became proprietors of the road, and an additional sum for improvements made by them on the railway since they have had it, and they will deliver the railway free of all charges and liabilities, except the two debts of which the hon. gentleman knows. The first is the debt to the Quebec Government of $3,500,000, for which the Government of Quebec has a mortgage, and then the sum of $1,725,000, which forms the amount of the bonds on the road issued by the company. The Canadian Pacific Railway will take the railway on those conditions, and will probably have, in addition, a sum of money to complete the terminal facilities at Quebec, in the way of elevators, and the renewal of certain wooded bridges, so as to put the road in the same condition as other portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman state the amount of stock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think about $250,000 or $260,000.

Mr. LANGELIER. There are other large claims against the North Shore Railway Company for right of way in the city of Quebec, and not only claims, but judgments, some of which have been taken as far as the Supreme Court. I would like to know whether provision has been made to secure these claims. Among the claimants, I may mention, are the nuns of the Hôtel-Dieu and the Ursuline nuns, who have obtained judgments, which have been confirmed by the Court of Queen's Bench, and have been taken to the Supreme Court. There have been two or three other judgments obtained in the city of Quebec against the North Shore Railway for damages to the passage of the line alongside the River St. Charles. These persons will lose any means to get their claims paid.

Mr. IVES. What means have they now?

Mr. LANGELIER. They have the railway.

Mr. IVES. There are the mortgage bonds ahead.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is, as I stated just now, to obtain the railway free of all debts, except $3,500,000 of the Quebec Government and the bonds to the extent of $1,725,000. The Government will take care that the road is delivered without the debts the hon. gentleman speak of.

Mr. LAURIER. Can the hon. gentleman give any statement about the additional improvements which have been made by the Grand Trunk? Can he say what they consist of?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I have no information of that this evening; but the hon. gentleman will see that the undertaking of the Grand Trunk is to deliver the road free. As the Government have the money in their hands, they must see that the railway will be free of all debts before the money is paid.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman did not understand my question. The hon. gentleman stated that the price to be paid to the Grand Trunk was, first, $250,000 for the stock and $250,000 for improvements made by the Grand Trunk since it acquired the ownership of the road. What I wanted to know was, what these improvements consist of?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Since the railway passed from the hands of the Government to the hands of the syndicate, which is represented now by the Grand Trunk Company, a number of improvements have taken place. I think the new line mentioned by the hon. member for Megantic, for which large sums were to be paid, was one of the improvements. Then there are improvements of other kinds. Of course, the Government have to take care that everything connected with the road will be put into such a shape that all the improvements are paid for; that, in fact, everything the company would have to pay themselves if they were selling the road is paid, so that the property will be free.

Mr. LAURIER. My question was not intended to refer to the application of the money, but to ascertain what improvements have been made by the company. Apart from the change of the line in Quebec, I am not aware of any improvements having been made by the company.

Mr. LANGELIER. And that has been paid before. Some $250,000 was paid by the North Shore Railway since it was purchased from the Government of Quebec for these improvements.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) (Translation). Is it the intention of the Government to purchase the North Shore Railway, or is it the intention of the Pacific Railway Company to purchase it for themselves?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). According to the resolution, the Government will purchase the railway, if necessary, for it is the intention of the Government to let the Pacific Railway Company, as far as possible, purchase it themselves, and they will interfere with only if the company would not purchase it.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) (Translation). If the negotiations did not succeed, what would secure the terminus of the Pacific to the city of Quebec?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). The resolutions will show the hon. member what the guarantee is.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) (Translation). I may possibly see it, and perhaps, I do not see it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). Well! I would ask the hon. member to read the resolutions before concurrence and I am sure they are correct.

Mr. EDGAR. In the correspondence between the Grand Trunk Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which was published, I think I saw it stated that the Grand Trunk had offered certain facilities to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to get this line from the Grand Trunk without purchase. Has any reciprocal arrangement been made? Has the Grand Trunk any traffic arrangements over this line after it gets into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the Grand Trunk Railway Company sells this road to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of course the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be in the same position as if it had built the road itself, and if the Grand Trunk Company wish to pass over that road it will have the same rights as any other company has to pass over the road of another company. I have no doubt the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be glad to facilitate the traffic of the country.

Mr. DESAULNIERS (Maskinongé). (Translation.) If I understood aright the question put by the hon. member for Montmagny: If the two companies, the Grand Trunk and Pacific do not agree, what position will be taken by the Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) The resolutions state what will happen. There is a million and a half voted to build another line.

Mr. DESAULNIERS (Maskinongé). (Translation.) That is just the point. I do not think the two companies can ever agree. But if they should happen to come to an agreement which would satisfy the city of Quebec, which seems to me the most hard to please at the present moment, it seems to me that all the counties on the north shore would be satisfied; but in the opposite case, what is this line which it is intended to build on the north shore? I have heard quite often, since I have had the honor of being a member of this House, that the Government or the Pacific Railway Company would build a line, following nearly the direction of the present road, between Montreal and Quebec. I do not believe any such thing. A great many members from the north shore would be anxious to know where the new road would be built. Would the Government be disposed to build a road which would run parallel to the present one? Or would they be disposed to build what we call the Great Northern, which would start from Lachute, or from a certain point on the Ottawa River, between Montreal and Ottawa? This, in my opinion, is a very important question. It is contended that this road cannot be built; that the thought of it even, is ridiculous. Well, if that question of the Great Northern is ridiculous before the House, why did the Government mention it in their resolutions? Why do they come and tell us that if the North Shore Railway is not bought by the Government or by the Pacific Railway Company, a new line will be built? Is it possible that it is intended to build it along the line of the North Shore Railway? It is impossible to suppose it. Would the people of the Province of Quebec permit that five or ten millions more be appropriated to build a railway which would run from Montreal to Quebec, alongside of the North Shore line? No; that is impossible. Well, Mr. Chairman, if it is really the intention to build a railway, which would be an extension of the Pacific, as far as Quebec, I contend that that line ought to start from Lachute or from a certain point on the Pacific line between Montreal and Ottawa. At all events, I think that, under the circumstances, the Government would do well to promise us that the new line which is to be built, will start from the Pacific Railway, on the Ottawa River, and would run towards Quebec, through the interior.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I believe the hon. member can give his fears as regards the line through the interior or the Great Northern, as he has styled it. I stated awhile ago what were the agreements which the Grand Trunk and the Pacific promised to make with the Government. Now, I have moved to amend the resolutions, so that the Government may have the power to buy, if need be, the North Shore Railway, and to sell it or lease it for a long term to the Pacific Railway Company, in case an accident should happen. But there is no fear of that. These companies are important companies, presided over by honorable men, and when two such companies make promises, such as they have made to the Government, there is no reason to believe that their promises will be broken. Therefore, I think my hon. friend has no need to fear about the construction of a second line.

Mr. DESAULNIERS (Maskinonge). (Translation.) I have no fear on the subject of the construction of a second line. On the contrary, I would much prefer that the second line should be built, but I have not understood where the Government would build this second line, in case that they should not succeed in making these agreements.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. Minister spoke of the expenditure of $1,500,000. As I understood him, he only accounted for an expenditure of $500,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I said $460,000 for the Grand Trunk Railway and the balance in improving the road, giving terminal facilities at Quebec, changing some of the bridges, and putting the road in a condition equal to that of the other portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. LANGELIER. Those terminal facilities are already provided for in the resolution concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway; $200,000 were reserved for them, which is much more than will be expended. I do not know what other terminal facilities are to be provided.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. On concurrence, I will bring down a statement of that.

Committee rose and reported.

Mr. DESAULNIERS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:45 a.m., Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 2nd July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to call attention to the irregular hours at which we meet in this Chamber. I do not understand the principle upon which these hours are so irregular. We arranged, some time ago to meet at half-past one; it was suggested that the hour should be two, but the Government insisted on making it half-past one. Since that time the practice has grown up of our not meeting until two, and sometimes after that hour. Relying on that practice many members have not assembled here before two; but yesterday you took the Chair at something like a quarter before two, and to-day it is something like a quarter past two. Our hour of meeting in the evening is half-past seven; by the unspoken practice, it is thought to be eight o'clock; but many times it is not until some time after eight. I do not impute this to your not being ready to take the Chair, but to the practice which has grown up, of postponing the meeting until such time as it is convenient for the Ministers to come in, when you are sent for. That is not the practice in the English Parliament, and it was not the practice in this Parliament formerly; when Mr. Cockburn was Speaker, he always came in at the appointed hour. I maintain that we ought to commence business at the appointed hour, particularly when the hour is so early as half-past one; but to come here at half-past one and wait until two, or until such time as the Ministers are ready, is nothing less than intolerable. But after what took place yesterday I shall feel bound hereafter to be here at half-past one, and I shall feel it my duty on every occasion in the future to call attention to the fact that the House has not been able to enter on business at the appointed hour, whatever that hour may be. I do not stickle at the hour, which is regulated by the rules of the House, but if it is to be departed from, it should be by common consent across the House. It is not right that the time of the members of this House should be at the disposal of the Ministers, and that the business of the day should commence at such time as they please, instead of such time as the Order of the House prescribes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is true that in England the Speaker takes the Chair generally at ten minutes after the hour fixed, without regard to the requirements of the Government of the day. There, however, the Government has a very large staff of members of the Government who do not belong to the Cabinet, and who are always supposed to be in their places, especially the junior Lords of the Treasury. It is said their only business is to make a House and cheer the First Minister. Here we have no such assistance, and occasionally, as was the case with the Government of my hon. friend opposite, the Government do not come exactly up to the time, and one can understand that. There are acts of the Administration which sometimes are very pressing, and which require to be attended to, for fear of injury to the public service, and sometimes, in consequence, we may be delayed for half an hour or so, but on the whole, I think we have been tolerably punctual.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we are as punctual as the hon. gentleman was when he was on this side.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And we did not grumble, because we knew the necessity of the Government of the day. When a subject of pressing importance is before them it has to be discussed; there may, perhaps, be differences of opinion which have to be arranged. It is not, surely, too much for any Government to ask that the House should wait half an hour on occasions of that kind; and when the hon. gentleman is on this side he will find that exigency as much as we do, or as much as the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) did. We must remember that the Government have very little time to consider these matters. We sit all day and all night, and we, perhaps, may be excused if we are sometimes twenty minutes or half an hour too late.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the hon. gentleman ought to be excused, certainly, because it is impossible to get through the Government business in five months. Formerly it could be done in two months, but now it cannot be managed in five months.

Mr. BLAKE. I must admit it was an extraordinary omission on my part not to perceive, as one cause of these delays, the differences of opinion the hon. gentleman mentions, which so frequently prevail, and which require some time to be adjusted. I feel that perhaps I have been a little harsh after that open confession of the hon. gentleman; but I must say that almost immediately after the hour of half-past one was fixed, it was called two in practice, and I do not believe it is going to be anything else in the future; but while an uncertainty prevails as to the hour, every one of us is to be inconvenienced to come here and kick our heels about this Chamber for some time before the House meets. If the Ministers find it so difficult to be here at half-past one, let two be the hour, but do not let us fix the hour, and not be ready for business when it has arrived.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Call it two.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, Mr. Speaker, you have heard your lecture.

RAILWAY CONNECTION WITH CAPE TORMENTINE.

Mr. WELDON (for Mr. DAVIES) asked, Whether the Government intend taking any practical steps during the present year to secure railway communication between Cape Tormentine and some point on the Intercolonial Railway? If so, is it the intention of the Government to ask Parliament for the money to build a branch from the Intercolonial Railway to the cape, or to propose to Parliament the granting of a subsidy for the construction of a private line? Can the Government state when railway connection between the Intercolonial Railway and Cape Tormentine will be complete?

Mr. POPE. The Government have had that question under consideration, and the result of their deliberation will be made known before the House rises.

SALES OF DOMINION LANDS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What sum has been received up to date on account of sales of Dominion lands, for fiscal year 1884-85? 2. What sum has been expended up to date, and charged to capital account, for surveys of lands in the North-West, during the present fiscal year?

Mr. McLELAN. With respect to the amount received for sales of Dominion lands, I have the amount up to 19th June, $371,801, and the amount expended $271,425.

CORNWALL PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. LISTER asked, What was the amount of the contract price for the Cornwall post office and Custom house buildings? What was the amount paid under the contract? What was the amount claimed for extras, and the amount paid for extras? What was the amount paid for furnishing, and to whom was such amount paid? Was the furnishing supplied by contract, under tender, or how? Who was the contractor for the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of the contract price for the building was $27,698,63, and that amount has been paid for the contract. The contractors claimed for extras $12,087.30. The amount paid to them in full payment was $8,059.20. The amount paid for furnishing was—for letter box fronts, $1,158; post office fittings, $2,811; hot water apparatus, $1,575. The letter box fronts and the hot water apparatus were publicly tendered for, and the lowest tender for each was accepted. The fittings were tendered for by the contractor for the building, and judging by similar work in other buildings, the price being reasonable, the work was awarded to him. These fittings are of similar character in most of the post offices, but require modification in the details, which it is found can be more satisfactorily arranged by the Post Office Department after the building is erected. As the proper cost of the fittings can readily be arrived at, it is considered only fair that, if the contractor has faithfully carried out his contract, he should be awarded the work connected with the fittings, provided his price is reasonable; and this course has been adopted in many cases, such as Montreal, Windsor, Brantford, Stratford, Chatham, Clifton, Woodstock, Sussex, Carleton, and other places.

FISH INSPECTOR IN THE CITY OF ST. JOHN.

Mr. WELDON asked, Has any appointment of a fish inspector in the city of St. John been made in place of the late G. S. Young? If not, is it the intention of the Government to fill the vacancy, and when?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The certificate of qualification required by law has been forwarded within a day or two, and action will be taken on it.

MAJOR GENERAL LAURIE.

Mr. KIRK asked, For what purpose was Major General Laurie sent to the North-West? What duties has he performed there, and what are his duties now? What is his pay? Is he still on duty in the North-West? Is it usual to have two general officers to command so small a force as was engaged in suppressing the rebellion in the North-West?

Mr. MACKENZIE. There are three generals.

Mr. CARON. Major General Laurie offered his services to serve in the North-West Territories. Those services were accepted. He sank his rank as major general. His services were offered, as those of everyone else, to assist in quelling the disturbance in the North-West. He was placed by General Middleton in command of the base, first at Swift Current, and afterwards at Moose Jaw. He is still on duty, unless he has been relieved by the major general. We have in our force at present three majors general.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What about the pay?

Mr. CARON. The matter of pay has not been settled yet. Major General Laurie is receiving a pension from England, and it was thought advisable to leave it to be settled afterwards.

THE LAST ENGLISH LOAN.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, What commission has been paid to the agents on the last loan of £4,000,000 effected in London? What "allowances" have been made to parties tendering for said loan?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These particulars have not yet reached us, but I suppose they will reach us in a day or two.

THE ONTARIO BOUNDARIES.

Mr. MILLS. When does the First Minister propose to submit to Parliament the Address inviting Imperial legislation on the subject of the boundaries of Ontario?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that we are going to submit an Address to ask the Imperial Legislature to deal with it. I said the House would deal with the subject, and that it would be brought before the House during the present Session.

PROTESTANT VOLUNTEERS IN THE 65TH BATTALION.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to call attention to a paragraph or statement made with reference to the treatment of Protestant volunteers in the North-West. I suppose our laws guarantee freedom of conscience and worship to our volunteers as well as to other citizens. I find a statement copied from the Edmonton Bulletin, of 13th June, to the following effect:—

"On Sunday morning last, about nine o'clock, Capt. Des Troismais ordered No. 2 Company of the 65th Battalion to fall in for church parade, it being the intention to have the company parade to St. Albert to take part in the services of Procession Sunday on Corpus Christi Day. One of the privates, named Cawthorne, a Protestant, refused to fall in, saying that he had promised the minister to attend the Presbyterian Church on that day. The captain demanded what right he had to promise to attend any church without consulting him, and after some words, ordered him into the guard room. Six others also refused to fall in. Col. Ouimet was then sent for, and he ordered the men to fall in. Private Conway said he would fall in, but would not go to church, and used some disrespectful language. He was sent to the guardroom. The remaining five fell in and the colonel told off three for extra guard duty, and ordered the remaining two, on their still refusing to go, to the guardroom, with Conway and Cawthorne. On Monday the four who had been sent to the guard room were brought up for trial before the colonel. Conway was not allowed to speak in his own behalf, and was sent to the bastion for eight days on bread and water. The remaining three were dismissed."

I see that, in the regulations and orders for the militia of Canada for 1883, it is provided as follows:—

"268. In assembling troops for public worship in the field, care is to be taken that they are not brought together in numbers greater than the voice will reach. Soldiers attending divine service are to wear their side arms.

"269. Every man is to be at full liberty to attend the worship of Almighty God according to the forms prescribed by his own religion, when military duty does not interfere.

"270. Men of any religious denomination, if their number shall exceed 20, are to be regularly marched to and from their own places of public worship under the command of an officer, or in charge of a sergeant, if not exceeding that number. The officer or sergeant is to remain with them during the performance of the service."

If this report contained in the Edmonton Bulletin is correct, a gross violation of the rights of conscience on the part of these men has been perpetrated. I ask whether the Government have any information in reference to the matter, and, in the event of this statement proving true, what steps they would propose to take?

Mr. CARON. The Department have had no information whatever about the facts which the hon. gentleman has just been submitting to the House. My attention was drawn to it, I believe yesterday, by the leader of the Government. I think the hon. gentleman had mentioned the fact to him. I immediately telegraphed to get all the information from Col. Ouimet and the officers at headquarters, in relation to the case. Until I receive that, it is impossible for me to express my opinion. The regulations are perfectly clear, and the rules are quite sufficient to deal with any case of that kind. As the hon. gentleman has very properly said, every man is allowed to follow the worship and go to the church he belongs to; but until I get the information which I have asked for, it is impossible for me to say anything more about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I hope the hon gentleman has communicated by telegraph?

Mr. CARON. I have.

Mr. MACKENZIE. And that the persons who are suffering punishment for the rights of conscience have been immediately released?

Mr. CARON. I am not sure that they are suffering punishment for the rights of conscience until I hear more about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. When was the message sent?

Mr. CARON. Yesterday, as soon as I heard it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) told me he was going to call attention to this matter. Of course, if this has been done, it is an outrage. That question, it so happens, was settled long ago in Canada, when the 79th Regiment came to Montreal. They were ordered to march to church, The chaplain was a member of the Church of England, as was usual in those days. The men grumbled a good deal, but they marched to church—under protest, however—and on the way the band played a tune. That was the last time that rule was enforced.

Mr. BLAKE. I may just call the attention of the Government to another statement that I have seen in the newspapers of this city. It is that one of the prelates in the North-West who was desirous of officiating in religious services on behalf of the bulk of the prisoners, was refused the privilege—I think it was Bishop Grandin himself. I think some enquiry ought to be made on that subject. Though these persons are accused, I do not see why they should be denied the consolations of religion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am personally in some degree responsible for that. I was aware that there was going to be a large number of prisoners coming down to Regina, and that the means of keeping them secure were very inefficient, so I sent a short telegram—I may say in cipher—to the Lieutenant Governor, stating that no person should be allowed to see them just now. I never thought it would deprive them of any religious instruction. The moment that was mentioned, a telegram was sent, of course, that it was not in any way to interfere with the right to see their own clergymen.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Since there is a general disposition to regulate these affairs in the North-West, perhaps it might be well to call the attention of the Minister to some correspondence and reports published in the Mail and in the Manitoba and other papers, regarding the treatment of the natives by the soldiers after the several engagements. I have here a correspondence from the Mail, dated 19th June, and it is translated into French, I will read it as I find it:

"What a distressing picture is offered by these poor families, cruelly plundered and stripped by the volunteers! The soldiers only came out of the houses of the half-breeds after having broken whatever they could not carry away; stoves, clocks, bedsteads, tables, etc., were all mercilessly destroyed by these raving maniacs. Poor mothers of families, who had only one bed and one blanket, were brutally deprived of these articles. The soldiers, being unable to carry off the bed, took hold of the blanket, and splitting with their knives the ticking, which contained the feathers, enjoyed the barbarous sport of throwing them to the wind.

"Let me now say a word to induce the Government to aid these half-breed families who have lost all they had at St. Laurent and at Fish Creek. A great many of the half-breeds in that district were loyal; others were dragged into the insurrection against their will, and cannot consequently be held responsible for the result. Moreover, in spite of the strict orders given by General Middleton, the soldiers have robbed and destroyed everything they could lay their hands upon in that region, leaving the residents in the most destitute condition.

"I see by the papers that Mr. Caron has contradicted, in the House of Commons, a report similar to the present one, written by your correspondent 'G. H. H.' Nevertheless, that report was not only strictly true, but it was even put in a very mild form. It is likely that the volunteers have not destroyed the property belonging to those loyal half-breeds simply for the fun of it. They wanted to bring home with them souvenirs of the campaign, and I must say that they cleaned out everything. But whether they acted through love of plunder or through a desire of carrying away with them souvenirs of the campaign, it is certain that they have only left skin and bones to the half-breeds. What will become of these poor people next winter, if the Government do not come to their aid, is more than I can say, but it cannot be the policy of the Government to let them starve to death."

Now, there are other correspondences which corroborate these facts, and I believe they are of such a nature that the hon. Minister of Militia will be pleased to take the matter into consideration and to see what is to be done under the circumstances. If it is true that the half-breeds have been treated in that manner by a certain number of volunteers, I believe that something more than a simple report should be had.

Mr. CARON. (Translation.) In answer to my hon. friend, who has called my attention to the facts mentioned in this newspaper article, I must say that as to that part of the correspondence which speaks of the most stringent orders being given by General Middleton to prevent such disorders as those which are complained of, I have received a communication direct from the General, stating that he had given the most absolute orders to that effect. I have even called his attention to the facts mentioned in that article, and the General has answered that, as far as he had been able to judge of the facts, he did not believe in these reports. Now, the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langelier) has approved these reports which have been read by my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins), and he said that he had already called my attention to these facts; but the hon. member for Megantic forgets that he has called my attention to the fact that panes of glass had been broken in a village which had been under fire during three days. I thought there was nothing there to be wondered at. He also called my attention to the fact that an unfortunate sewing machine was broken during the fight. I then replied to the hon. member, what I repeat to-day, that the official despatches which were sent to me from the seat of war did not mention the fact that that sewing machine had been broken. As regards the facts mentioned in that correspondence, a certain allowance must be made, because, when a village is under fire during two or three days, and when it is overrun by a small army—for we then had, at that moment, quite a large number of men there—it is just possible that such little irregularities, which cannot fail to take place in times of trouble, should have taken place. But as far as I have been able to make out, from the official reports sent to me by the General, I believe that these other reports have been greatly exaggerated.

Mr. LANGELIER. (Translation.) The hon. Minister has referred to the questions put by me some time ago. The question I have put was taken word for word from the Mail correspondence; there was not one word from me, and what I have read in the Mail is not at all what was said by the hon. Minister. The Mail correspondent has never pretended that that sewing machine had been broken by bombshells or cannon balls; on the contrary, he has stated that after the fight was over the soldiers entered the houses by breaking the windows and doors. The hon. Minister has made fun of that. I believe that is not a fit subject for joking, irony or witticisms. I did not charge General Middleton with having authorised these acts; on the contrary, the correspondence in question stated that the General had given stringent orders to prevent them. The same thing has been repeated since in other Mail correspondences. I did not speak of them, because I did not wish these poor unfortunates to be insulted by the answers of the hon. Minister of Militia. I now see the same thing repeated in two correspondences of the Manitoba, a Conservative newspaper. I believe that question is of such gravity that people might dispense with joking and irony on this subject. If the hon. Minister of Militia had friends or relations in these places he would not be so fond of joking about it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I ask that the Clerk reads the article in English.

Mr. LANGELIER. I have already read that article to the House.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings.) This is not the way to treat the House. There is no gentleman in this House who does not understand the English language, but some gentlemen do not understand the French, and I think we ought to have all this discussion in English, and the article read in English also. We are all equally interested in what is going on in the North-West.

OFFICIAL REPORT FROM THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the official reports and despatches with reference to the various engagements between the troops and the half-breeds of the North-West, and which I tired of asking for long ago, and which it was understood were in some shape in the hands of the Government, have not yet been laid before the House. We have not had before us up to this day a single word, officially, with reference to any one of these events, already many weeks old; and surely there must be full reports of many of these affairs in the hands of the Government.

Mr. CARON. I told the leader of the Opposition that, when the reports were received, I would bring them down, and I shall do so. I got one three or four days ago; I got a telegram from the Major General stating that he was preparing an official report concerning Batoche and Fish Creek. The leader of the Opposition cannot expect that I shall lay before the House reports before I have received them. He must know that the Major General has been on the move ever since Batoche. He has been following Big Bear north of Fort Pitt, and has been kept constantly occupied. I have given to the House all the information I have received. However short or scanty it may appear to the leader of the Opposition, I gave him all the information I had. When the other comes I will lay it on the Table.

Mr. BLAKE. I gave a memorandum of what was required. There was the question of the Duck Lake fight and the evacuation of Fort Carlton. These are in the police papers, and there is no reason why they should not be produced. Then there is the fight at Batoche, of which, no doubt the general has made a report, and a considerable interval of time has elapsed since the battle of Fish Creek. There ought to be an account of that engagement.

Mr. CARON. I do not intend to bring down these papers until I can put them before the House, because the most of them are quite incomplete unless taken up as a whole.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman laughs, but it is a fact. The manner in which the troops were disposed of makes it very inconvenient to take one report and lay it on the Table. The report of the battle of Fish Creek is almost textually what I have read in the House, and what has appeared in the papers.

Mr. CHARLTON. The returns asked for with reference to timber licenses granted within the disputed territory of the North-West and in British Columbia have not yet come down, though I have asked for them repeatedly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have been induced to rise, from the spirit of enquiry that seems to pervade this House, simply to ask the right hon. the leader of the Government whether the Grand Trunk Railway Company have yet given him the returns ordered by this House, or whether they still treat the Order of the House with contempt, and if the latter be the case, whether the Government intend to let the Session close without insisting on the company paying that respect to the Order of the House to which the House is entitled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot give the hon. gentleman any more information than I gave him when he last made the enquiry.

Mr. MITCHELL. That was not much.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can only assure the hon. gentleman the step the Government will take is under the gravest consideration.

Mr. WELDON. Can the hon. gentleman inform us when the fisheries correspondence will be brought down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot bring it down until His Excellency returns. He will be here in a few days.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ORTON. I desire to make a few remarks on a question of privilege. The News Record, an Opposition organ printed in my county, thus refers to me:

"DR. ORTON SHIRKS THE VOTE.

"It will be seen by the yeas and nays, published elsewhere in this paper, that the name of the member for Centre Wellington does not appear as voting either for or against the proposition to permit wine and beer to be sold in counties that may hereafter adopt the Scott Act. In this instance the doctor evidently thought discretion the better part of valor. Hence, after taking part in the debate, when the critical moment arrived, he ignominiously shirked the vote. And in doing so we believe that Dr. Orton made a grave mistake. Because the issue is one of practical importance to his constituents, and therefore he ought to have had the courage and manliness to come squarely out and show what side he is on. But whatever view Dr. Orton may take of the question, he ought to have had the moral courage to stand his ground and vote as his judgment dictated. It was unmanly to dodge out of the House and shirk the vote. School boys are punished for playing truant; and members of Parliament being older and in positions of greater responsibility are still less excusable when at a critical juncture they desert their post and step aside from the path of duty. The doctor's best friends and warmest political supporters feel that he did wrong in dodging the vote on the beer and wine clause."

Now, it is a well known fact that I have very pronounced opinions upon this question. And not only have I expressed them in this House but also in my county previous to my election. My views are entirely known to my constituents. So far from shirking the vote, I wish to state here that though I was called away by telegraph to attend the Assize Court in Toronto, where I had a case, had I thought my vote would be counted or would not be paired, I would have run the risk of losing a considerable sum of money rather than have shirked expressing, by my vote, my opinion on an Act which I have always considered unjust in its operation, and therefore dishonest and utterly worthless as a temperance measure. I desire to state that on that occasion I requested the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) to pair with me. He agreed to pair with me, and I spoke to the whip on our side, the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small), and I think the fact of my being paired can also be testified to by the hon. the Deputy Speaker. The reason why the hon. member for Lunenburg voted on that occasion, I do not know. He has never explained to me the reason, and as a matter of privilege, I have the right to demand that his vote be struck off or mine added to the opposite side.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORY.

Mr. CARON moved the third reading of Bill (No. 141) respecting the administration of justice and other matters in the North-West Territory.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee with instructions to amend the same so as to relax the restrictions imposed on white settlers as to the possession of fire arms. I think this provision of the Bill is a very objectionable one. The constitutional rule is that it is one of the rights of a British subject to have fire arms in his possession; it is in fact one of the provisions of the declaration of rights. We see in the constitution of the United States when they were copying the fundamental privileges of British liberty, a provision that Congress shall not have power to deprive any citizen of the United States of his right to bear arms. This provision originated in a country that had its border settlements, that had its difficulties with the Indians, and so far were they from being disposed to adopt the rule which the Government propose to introduce here, a rule similar to that which has prevailed in the disturbed districts of Ireland, that they have found it all the more necessary to extend the provisions of the law in that particular, and to secure absolutely against even legislative interference the right of the citizen to have arms for the purpose of protecting himself. Sir, we appreciate in this country the principle of self-government. We admit that the great mass of our population are disposed to obey—and to uphold the law, and to maintain peace and order in so far as they have the power. It would be an extraordinary commentary upon our ability to maintain free institutions if it were held that the condition of the settlers in the more distant parts of the country was such that, instead of being a class who could be relied upon to uphold peace and good government, it was necessary to disarm them in the interests of peace and order. Now, I think if there is anyone class of the community who, more than another, require to retain this inestimable privilege of British freemen, it is that class of men who, denying themselves the ordinary advantages of living in an old settled community, go out into the distant territories of this Dominion to make new homes for themselves. No doubt we have in the North-West Territory a certain class of men who do not appreciate the principles of self-government, the Indians of the North-West, and they require, to a certain extent, at all events, to be under restraint and supervision. In ordinary civil matters they do not enjoy the full rights of citizens; you exercise a certain surveillance over them, and, in a large degree, you undertake to discharge for them the duties which white men discharge for themselves. Because they do not fully appreciate the privileges which belong to free men, you withhold from them the use of firearms of a particular class. I think that is a wise provision. You deal with them in that particular just as you regulated in times past the sale of intoxicants. But, Sir, the white population are in a wholly different position, and you say to these men who are living scattered over the prairies, that they shall not be entitled, as a matter of right, to retain fire arms in their possession, that they shall not have a right to defend their homes, and to protect themselves against the attacks, against the threats of the Indians. In fact, if we were to carry out the provisions of this Bill, we would, in a great measure invite attack on the white population; we would make it difficult to retain the white population, and we would impose serious restraints upon future settlement. I am strongly of the opinion that there is no measure which would cause a greater feeling of insecurity and excite more indignation in the minds of the people of the North-West than this proposition to place it in the power of the Government to disarm the white population. Those people are entitled to our sympathy, to our confidence. We are inviting them to go there and take possession of the waste land. We expect, in time, they will become a prosperous and contented people. We hope the country will, at no distant period, fill up with population so that they may enjoy the advantages that belong to all older and wealthier communities. But if we say to those people: You shall not have arms in your possession; you shall not be trusted; we do not believe you will seek to maintain law and order; that you will be on the side of good government but rather against it; that you need to be restrained rather than to exercise the privileges of freemen; then we are doing that which, beyond any other measure proposed this Session, will tend to create discontent and prevent the settlement of the country. Holding those views I propose the amendment which I have read. The course pursued by the Administration this Session is a very extraordinary one. The first proposition we had was to enfranchise the savages, and failing to do that, in consequence of the war and the strong feeling that existed in the country against such a proposition, the Government now propose to place the white and civilised settlers upon the footing of savages.

Mr. CARON. It is not my intention after the discussion which took place yesterday to go into this matter very fully to-day. I merely wish to answer one remark made by the hon. gentleman in addressing the House. The hon. member for Bothwell stated that by the Bill as amended the Government are attempting to deprive white citizens of the right of possessing arms. The hon. gentleman has not looked into the question so fully as he generally examines questions. On reading the Bill the hon. gentleman will see that with a permit any white citizen can possess arms. The reason why this clause was introduced was obvious. Since the troubles which have taken place in the North-West the white people themselves are very anxious to keep all arms, except those specified in the Bill, out of the hands of the Indians. The clause provides that in order that white settlers may hold arms, it is necessary that each one shall obtain a permit from the Lieutenant Governor. The reason for inserting this provision is that it will be quite easy for the arms to be traced and found. Under the circumstances the clause is a very good one. Of course it is special legislation for a special purpose, but its necessity has been doubly demonstrated by the events which have taken place in the North-West, and I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman in believing that this clause should be struck out and the amendment inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. I have looked at the debate in the Senate on this subject, and I confess I do not see any strong reasons adduced in support of the Bill. We must consider the condition, position and circumstances of the country and the character of the population. The character of the white population is eminently one which fits them to be trusted with arms. That is the ordinary right of British citizens, secured to them in effect by the great charter; and it is secured to citizens of the American Republic by the constitution; and it ought not to be taken away from settlers in the North-West, and the power should not be placed in the hands of the Executive to take away that right. They have done nothing to disgrace themselves so as to render them subject to such action. It is said that a white settler may possess arms if he obtains a permit. Look at the geographical area of the country and the distances which have to be traversed, and the difficulty of obtaining a permit is apparent. We have to consider their position relatively to that of the Indians. It is proposed that the Indians shall be allowed to have smooth bores; but the smooth bores which whites use are breach-loaders. The modern gun is a breach-loader for which fixed ammunition is used; and so you deprive the white men of weapons for different purposes—I will not say for sporting purposes, because I believe there are important purposes in the North-West beyond those of sport—when you provide that white men shall not carry guns having fixed ammunition. The sporting gun of the white has fixed ammunition; the Indian's sporting gun is a smooth bore; and therefore you allow the Indian to sport, but you do not allow the white man to sport without a permit. I retain the opinion I uttered yesterday, that it is a proper thing to prevent the sale of those weapons to the Indian population, and the possession of them by that population should be very stringently guarded; but a provision which places in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor the power to determine whether any white man is worthy of having a breach-loader, rifle or revolver is one which ought not to be placed on our Statute Books.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). I agree with the hon. gentleman. It will be imposing a great hardship on settlers in the North-West if they are prevented from exercising the right of having weapons with which to defend their homes. The Government should not place the white settlers under the power and control of the Lieutenant Governor and compel them to ask a permit from him. That is a great and an extensive country, and unless the white settlers have a right to have arms to defend themselves from the Indians, people certainly would not like to go into the country. I believe the Government should not place these restrictions on the white settlers of the North-West, and I consider it my duty to vote for the amendment of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have only just seen the amendment, and indeed, I have only just seen the clause of the Bill. I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. I think it would be a great hardship if the people settling in that country were not permitted to have arms to defend themselves. What will be the effect of passing such a provision? Will settlers want to go out there, where their lives and their property may be endangered, and where they will not be allowed the free privilege of having arms in their possession to protect themselves and their families? I think the effect of that clause will be most detrimental to the future settlement of that country, and will remain a stigma on the legislation of the country that passed it.

Mr. WATSON. I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White), the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and those who have expressed themselves on this side. I believe it would be a great hardship, in the present state of affairs in the North-West, to prevent the white settlers from having rifles in their possession. I think that not only should the people have the privilege of buying arms for themselves, but that the Government should take on themselves the purchase of a certain number of rifles to arm the people there. Of course, from the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Militia, some time ago, I am not surprised at his bringing in a Bill of this description, because he as much as imputed disloyal motives to the white settlers of Prince Albert and other portions of the North-West. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the settlers of that country are as loyal as any in the Dominion, and will make good use of their arms in protecting themselves from the invasions of the red men of the west, and I hope the amendment will be adopted. So far as fowling pieces are concerned, I do not know whether this ammunition will apply to cartridges or not; I should not suppose that it would apply to any but rifle cartridges. Of course, if shells for shot guns are to be classed as fixed cartridges, it would be a monstrous thing to pass such legislation, and to compel sportsmen to use the old muzzle loading guns as sporting pieces; and I hope the clause will be so amended that the white men may have breech loading guns in their possession as well as rifles. Rifles are used for sporting purposes in the North-West. I believe the Indians should be deprived of rifles, but that the white settlers should have all the privileges of white settlers in any part of the Dominion. The idea of the settler, when he wants to have a rifle or a revolver in his possession, having to get a permit from the Lieutenant Governor, is absurd. The Lieutenant Governor may do, as I believe he has done with regard to liquor permits for the North-West Territories—he may sign a lot of blank permits to be filled in by anyone who may happen to have a little patronage in that country, and who will give them to his friends, while any one who may be supposed to be disloyal, as the Minister of Militia would style him, or who has not sufficient influence with the Lieutenant Governor, will be deprived of a rifle to protect himself.

Mr. ORTON. I quite agree with many of the remarks which have been made on this subject. I think it is of the greatest importance that the white settlers of that country should have arms to protect themselves. I had the honor of being present at a deputation of white settlers in the neighborhood of Prince Albert, who waited on General Middleton, and presented him with an address after the battle of Batoche; and after the address was presented, the General said he was astonished to find such a large number of settlers in that country without arms, and he recommended every one of them to arm himself with a rifle. In fact, he stated that in England, people living a few miles distant from one another, kept firearms in their houses. I certainly hope the Government will reconsider this Bill. I also think that the power given to the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories would not be a wise one, for, however carefully he might exercise that power, he would be liable to be misinterpreted. I do not agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). I think he is mistaken in his remarks with regard to granting blank permits for keeping liquor. I do not think that such blank permits ever were issued in the North-West, and I know very well that even the warmest supporters of the Government have the greatest difficulty in the world in getting permits from him. Nor can I entirely endorse the hon. gentleman's remarks even with regard to the white settlers. I regret to say that I have myself heard sentiments expressed by the white settlers of the North-West, which were not loyal and true to the country. I attended a meeting of the Farmers Union at Winnipeg, and I heard remarks made there which were calculated to agitate the people, and foster a rebellious feeling—in fact, to give encouragement to those who desired to rebel. I am also perfectly aware of the fact, that in the neighborhood of Prince Albert, there were some white settlers there who, during the recent troubles, were not as loyal as they should have been, and who had a great deal to do with the rising which occurred. It is a well known fact that this Mr. Jackson who was Riel's secretary, was a leading advocate of the Farmers' Union, and a strong friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. His utterances on many occasions, as told to me, were of the most rebellious character. In interviewing him, though it was said he was crazy, he recalled every step he took with reference to the encouragement he gave to Riel, and the reasons he joined him. They were certainly very peculiar reasons, but such reasons as actuated many others in that country, not from any grievances he could lay his hands on, but from some general complaint against the party who happened to be in power. So far as I could ascertain, those general complaints were nothing more than arose in the minds of those who had different views from those held by gentlemen on the Treasury benches to-day. Indeed, I know well that this family of Jacksons not only had repeatedly entertained Riel in their house, but they were very bitter opponents of the present Government, because I had that from the members of the family themselves, and especially the mother of this Jackson who was with Riel. At the same time, I believe that the great majority of those who expressed those extreme and improper views in connection with the rebellion, never desired or intended in their hearts to take up arms against the powers that be, and they themselves were perhaps the most frightened, when they found that the result of their improper remarks was to give encouragement to the real enemies of our country. I certainly hope some improvement will be made in this measure, by which the white people of the North-West will, at any rate, be able to arm themselves for self-protection and other purposes.

Mr. ROYAL. I believe in the propriety of surrounding the possession of firearms by the Indians with all the necessary precautions. This course has been adopted in the United States, and I believe we have much to borrow from them in that respect; but as to the propriety of extending this measure to the white population, I have my doubts. I do not believe the majority of the white population of the North-West should be punished for the deeds of a certain portion of them who have been chiefly instrumental in bringing about the late rebellion. I believe also, that we are enacting a provision which it will be impossible to carry out. Look at the extensiveness of that vast territory, with 50,000 or 60,000 people scattered over it, and you will see how difficult it will be to put this Act into operation, compelling every white settler to make a declaration with respect to his having firearms in his possession, except by means of an army of inspectors or commissioners. It is all very well for such a law to exist in France, where the country is thickly settled, and where municipal officers are appointed to execute the law; but in the Territories, with their sparse population, I believe it is impossible, and I do not believe it is proper to enact a law the execution of which will be impossible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sorry I was not here at the beginning of this debate, as I was engaged in another place. A number of objections have been made to the disarming clauses of this Bill, which should of course have every consideration. Under the circumstances, therefore, I shall move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 146) to amend the Consolidated Inland Revenue Act, 1883.—(Mr. Costigan.)

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolutions:—

That it is expedient to impose an entry fee or duty of fifty dollars on every person of Chinese origin entering Canada;

That no vessel carrying Chinese immigrants to any port in Canada shall carry more than one such immigrant for every fifty tons of its tonnage;

That the master of any vessel bringing Chinese immigrants to any port of Canada shall be personally liable to Her Majesty for the payment of such fee or duty in respect of any immigrant carried by such vessel.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I was pretty severely criticised on another occasion, because, without going altogether outside of my subject, I happened to make reference, in speaking upon the question before the House, to historical reminisences. Although the question of Chinese immigration is a great deal more tempting in that direction than that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I shall not expose myself to such criticism on this subject. I shall have other considerations to-day to lay before this House. The questions incidental to Chinese immigration, which are numerous, which date from an early period in history—all the different questions which might be raised in connection with that subject have been, I think, fully laid before the House in the report which the commissioners appointed to enquire into the subject of Chinese immigration submitted some time ago. That report contains an elaborate examination of the question. I shall content myself with stating that last session a motion was made by one of the hon. members representing the city of Victoria, British Columbia, to the effect "that in the opinion of this House it is expedient to enact a law prohibiting the entrance of Chinese into that portion of Canada known as British Columbia." I must say that at the time I was rather struck with a feeling of surprise, which I am sure has been shared by many hon. members of this House, that a demand was made for legislation to provide that one of the first principles which have always guided the English people in the enactment of their laws and regulations for the maintenance of the peace and prosperity of the country, should be violated in excluding from the shores of this great country, which is a part of the British Empire, members of the human family. I then remembered having read years and years ago, when England was attacked for giving shelter, not only to suspicious strangers and to political refugees, but to men who had proclaimed the assassination of the rulers of Europe as a maxim, and had tried several times to put their nefarious doctrine into practice, that the English writers and statesmen answered that British soil was open to any member of the human family not committing upon the land any of the offences coming within the province of the laws of the country. That motion was met, after certain discussion in this House, by the declaration of the right hon. the leader of the Government, who promised those who were complaining of the evils of Chinese immigration into British Columbia, and who eloquently and forcibly put before Parliament the grievances of their Province, that the Government of Canada would take the matter into their earnest consideration, and that immediately after the Session, during the recess at least, a commission would be appointed and sent to British Columbia to enquire into the trade relations, the social relations, and those moral considerations which, it was alleged, made Chinese immigration undesirable. Faithful to the sense of duty that they were discharging towards their constituents, the hon. gentlemen from British Columbia, who were disposed to press that measure, yielded to the request of the Government, on the assurance that not later than this Session legislation would be brought in, if the enquiry, which would be made during the recess, would bear out the statements made before the House by those hon. gentlemen and justify the legislation they asked for. The commission was appointed the 4th July, and on the 8th July I proceeded, as one of the commissioners to make the investigation which the Government considered necessary to be made. I proceeded to California, the classical land, I might say, of the struggles between anti-Chinese advocates and pro-Chinese sympathisers. On arriving at San Francisco I commenced the work, with the assistance of the secretary of the commission, whose name is attached to the report which was laid before the House, and whose researches in history, have contributed so largely to the consideration, I might say complete, exposition of the Chinese question. The Government intended that the members of the commission should put themselves in communication with the people and obtain all the information that might be had from those versed in the question. About three weeks were spent in taking such information in San Francisco, and the information obtained will be found in the report. I proceeded to British Columbia to meet there my colleague, the other commissioner, Mr. Justice Gray, who had been jointly appointed with me, and I met him in Victoria about the 4th or 5th of August. On the 9th we held our first meeting, and after that time, during three weeks, we took all the information and evidence we could reasonably expect to obtain, and the result of that we have inserted in our report. I cannot here avoid mentioning that a certain amount of feeling appeared to exist, on the arrival of the commissioners in Victoria, which found utterance in a kind of protest that was at first presented, and then, I will not say withdrawn, but requested to be withdrawn. The protest says that the Government of the Dominion and the commissioners had not given to the proper authorities in British Columbia the necessary notice to hold that enquiry. It is my duty to state here, as I did at the time, that I thought the fact being public, it having been made known by the hon. members of British Columbia and by the answer given by the Government in this House, that a commission would be held, the complaint or protest was certainly not one that was completely justifiable. More than that, a long time before the commission sat at Victoria, letters had been sent to the Provincial authorities on the 20th July and to the municipal authorities about the same time, so that all those concerned in the question had full opportunity to know that it was their duty to bring before the commissioners all the evidence they could in support of their views. More than that, the members of the Provincial Cabinet, acting upon the advice or rather the command of the House, presented in the month of May, I think, or in the beginning of the year 1884, a detailed petition to the Federal Government, setting forth that legislation had already been passed in the Local Legislature of British Columbia, and that the facts which had come to the knowledge of the authorities of the Provincial Legislature were sufficient to warrant the petitioners in their demands. That petition contained all the grievances which were then and will now be raised with regard to Chinese immigration. And the facts which it gave in support of the demand were presumed to be known at least to those who had signed the petition. However, the question of Chinese immigration is one which interests the whole Dominion, not one single Province, although up to this present moment, only one Province has raised its voice against such increasing immigration, and I dare say for the very good reason that this is the only Province where Chinese immigration has developed to any important figure. After having heard the witnesses who appeared, after having had from the authorities, both municipal and provincial, all the information and official documents that were wanted, the commissioners visited, as much as they could, the principal points of the Province to gather the information which they thought was required. We visited New Westminster. We made the journey as leisurely as we could on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Moody as far as the Thompson River, and we collected important information there in relation to the subject of our mission. I would be more tempted, if I were at the beginning of my remarks, to give a description of that most magnificent and picturesque country. Really it would be worth while in the future for tourists to come from all parts of the world to admire the beauties, unequalled in any country, of the canyons of the Fraser River on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have been a good deal over the world, I have visited more than one country, I have visited in Europe those countries which are most renowned for the grandeur, the picturesqueness, the inattendu of their scenery, and I have never seen anything to surpass the beauty of the sight when one arrives at Mount Hope, seeing there, what I saw, like in a dream, an anchor made by the glaring ice on the top of the mountain, as if the hope of the country was well rested in that colony, so true to the Crown and so decided to mark its way in the path of the progress of Confederation. But I must come now to the rather prosaic part of my duty, to put before the House the work we have done, the conclusions we arrived at, and those which the Government expressed by the Bill now before the House. We visited, after having gone over that part of the country, the beautiful port of Nanaimo. I had the pleasure of meeting there our friend the able representative of that part of British Columbia, and I must say, to the credit of the country he represents, that happy days, days of wealth, days of prosperity, grand days are in the future for Nanaimo, with its mines of the greatest wealth, with its immense facilities for navigation and landing—for it is one of the features of the coast on the whole of the straits in British Columbia that vessels of the largest tonnage can come and load in still water at a natural wharf made by the granite of the shores. We visited Nanaimo and saw the works of the two great mining companies; one at the head of which is Mr. Dunsmuir, the proprietor of the three mines worked by the company; the other which is under the control and superintendence of Mr. Robbins. We could see there things of the greatest benefit to our investigation. After having accomplished that duty we came back, and with all the evidence and information necessary to place before this Parliament and this country, I might say before the world, a complete record of the question, the commissioners, with the valuable assistance of the Secretary, prepared the report which has been laid before the House. We thought it was worth our while to add to the evidence we had gathered ourselves, to the personal information we had taken ourselves without any special testimony of witnesses, a condensation of the very valuable though voluminous evidence which in 1876 had been taken before the commission appointed at that time by the United States Congress. I think it is not out of my way to mention at the present moment the steps which had been taken in British Columbia to bring the question of Chinese immigration before the Government, and to bring it to an end, as I hope it will be brought, by the adoption of the measure the second reading of which I shall soon have the honor to propose. In a paper which has been submitted to us, I see that, so far ago as 1876, a report of the Committee of the Whole House on the 9th May, was adopted in favor of legislation to prevent this Province being overrun by the Chinese population, to the injury of the settled population of the country. Later on, on the 31st July, 1878, another resolution of the Legislative Assembly was passed and concurred in against the employment of Chinese laborers on public works, the Local Government not to be responsible for the payment on contracts if the contractors used Chinese labor. In 1879, on the 28th of March, a select committee of the Legislative Assembly made a report in which they adverted to the veto by the President of the United States of an Act similar to the Queensland Act, and drawing attention to the fact that Her Majesty Queen Victoria had been pleased to sanction the Queensland Act concerning Chinese immigration, notwithstanding the treaty with China, which had always been urged in the United States as a bar to the enforcement of the different enactments of the California Legislature. I may state here that, as soon as the Government of the Dominion had decided to take this matter into consideration, we received from the Imperial authorities a communication stating that notwithstanding the commercial treaty between Great Britain and China, the Imperial authorities left the Canadian Government free to dispose of the question as they deemed expedient. In the report I have mentioned, calling attention to the fact that Her Majesty had sanctioned the Queensland Act, I find this paragraph:

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

"It has, however, been admitted that this Legislature has no power to pass the Queensland Act, as its provisions would interfere with trade and commerce, and thus conflict with the British North America Act, which confers the regulation of that subject upon the Dominion Parliament.

"As the Australians are now organising a combined movement to obtain, if possible, from the Imperial Government such measures of protection against the further influx of Chinese into their country, the time would seem opportune for united or independent action on the part of the Dominion in the same direction.

"Your committee have ascertained that several measures of an anti-Chinese tendency, and more or less restrictive in character, have been passed in New Zealand, and in Victoria and other Australian colonies, but have been disallowed by the Home Government."

In 1880, on the 21st of April, a resolution was passed by the Legislative Assembly of Victoria, asking that the Queensland Act should be made the basis of legislation by the Dominion of Canada. It might be well, perhaps, that I should mention now the principal provisions of the Queensland Act. It provides that any vessel bringing Chinese passengers as immigrants shall bring no more than one Chinaman to every ten tons burthen of the vessel, and that every such Chinese immigrant shall pay an entry fee of £10, and imposing penalties upon the master of the vessel or other persons when contravening the Act. In the 7th section there is a proviso to the effect that if at any time within three years from the date of landing or arrival of any Chinese in respect to whom such sums shall have been paid, he shall depart from the colony, the sum that he had to pay shall be remitted to him on his departure from the colony. That feature has not been inserted in the Bill before the House. On the 26th February, 1882, the British Columbia Legislature passed another resolution, and a Minute of the Executive Council dated the 7th March was sent to the Dominion Government requesting them not to employ Chinese labor on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and asking us to assist white immigration. The answer given to the provincial authorities is to be found in the following document. The then Acting Secretary of State, sent a letter to the Lieutenant Governor in the following terms:—

"I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has had under his consideration in council the resolutions of the House of Assembly of the Province of British Columbia, which were embodied in a minute of your Executive Council of the 9th March last, a copy of which was enclosed in your despatch of the 16th of that month, in reference to the advisability of assisting immigration, and inducing the railway contractors to employ white rather than Chinese labor on the Canadian Pacific Railway in that Province.

"I have now to state, for the information of your Government, that his executive is advised that there are no means at the disposal of the Government to induce the contractors on the Canadian Pacific Railway to import and employ the labors of white immigrants on their works instead of Chinese.

"If, however the contractor desires to prepay the passages of white laborers from the United Kingdom, the utmost facilities of assisted ocean passages, and such services as can be rendered by the agents of the Department of Agriculture, will be freely afforded. Transportation across the continent is, however, at present, both difficult and expensive, and the Government have not at their disposal any means to assist such movement of immigrants.

"The advantages offered by British Columbia as a field for settlement of immigrants, have been fully set forth in authentic publications disseminated by the Department of Agriculture to promote immigration to that Province, which will, however, be difficult until the transcontinental railway through Canadian territory is completed."

The executive of British Columbia, in a Minute of Council of 19th August, 1882, which was transmitted by the Lieutenant Governor, asked the Dominion Government to promote the necessary legislation:

"For the purpose of preventing the immigration of Chinese to this Province, and for the prevention of their employment upon Dominion public works; and further to provide that in the event of a charter being granted to a railway or other public work in British Columbia, a clause may be inserted preventing their employment thereon."

In 1883, on the 28th February, the Legislative Assembly passed a resolution again making a request similar in substance to the one I have mentioned. The outlines of an Act were submitted to the Government as those which would be satisfactory to the petitioners, that is to say, the representatives of the people of British Columbia. I dare say that at the present moment the Act they then proposed would not be satisfactory to them, and we hope that the legislation now proposed, and which is more stringent than the Bill they suggested, will satisfy the most exacting, as well as the most reasonable men who are interested in the progress of the Province. In 1884 the British Columbia Legislature sent a petition to this Government asking that "an Act be introduced by the Dominion Government restricting and regulating the immigration of Chinese." I am quoting this last and most forcible demand of British Columbia to compare it with the measure which is now before the House, the title of which and the provisions of which are exactly the same as suggested by the petition of 1884. I might now, perhaps, mention the measures of repression adopted, the different Acts passed by several colonies and nations of the world in respect to Chinese immigration into those countries. As far back as the end of the 16th century and the beginning of the 17th, in the Island of Manila, the Chinese were found to be too numerous, too obtrusive and too much inclined to encroach upon the rights of others. We read in history that edicts and regulations were resorted to to prevent the influx of Chinese; they had become so numerous that the Spaniards took up arms in 1603, and a general massacre ensued in which 30,000 Chinese were killed. In 1634, 30,000 Chinese were still on the island. Another massacre took place in which 20,000 were killed and at that time 7,000 surrendered. Strange to say 50 years afterwards the Chinese were again masters of the island, and it was only after a strong administration had passed a decree that they were expelled in 1709. In 1762 they were still in sufficient numbers on the island to be of great assistance to the British forces in conquering it. In Java the same treatment was given the Chinese by the Dutch population who had settled upon that island. In 1730 a measure of oppression was passed against them, and in 1740 the Chinese were all deported; but a little time afterwards the race had returned in such numbers that history relates that 10,000 of them were killed. At Singapore, Penang, Malacca under British rule there are now over 260,000 Chinese, who are considered, I must say, as most valuable settlers in the interest of British trade in those islands. In the Australian colonies to which we have to look for legislation in regard to this question, an Act was passed in Victoria in 1864, which was afterwards repealed by an Act passed in 1865, which contained the following provisions:—"The master of every ship having passengers on board shall distinctly specify and state in his list of passengers, to be examined by the Collector of Customs, those who are Chinese immigrants, and in default the offender shall be liable to a penalty of £200." Penalties are also enacted against those who obstruct officers in the discharge of their duty. By the Act of 1881 a penalty of £100 was imposed upon all owners and masters of vessels who carry a greater number than one Chinese immigrant for every 100 tons register of the vessel, and each immigrant is called upon to pay £10 entry money, an exception to those penalties being made in the case of Chinese who come into the colony and who are British subjects. I must say that the provisions of the statute appear to be rather severe. In New South Wales, in 1851, legislation was passed somewhat similar to that I have already mentioned, and also imposing an entry payment of £10. If we wanted precedents for legislation upon the subject we would have to come to the United States. The Chinese restriction Act was passed on the 5th August, 1882, after an agitation that had continued from 1872 to that date, or over 10 years. That Act was not superseded exactly but was amended by an Act passed in 1884, on the 5th day of August, which came into force 90 days after it was passed, and is to continue for ten years. That legislation, as is well known, is prohibitory legislation. As to whether it has worked beneficially in California is a question which is not yet well settled. Whether it is owing to the too great stringency of the law or to the persistency and constancy of the Chinese immigrants coming into that renowned land, it is difficult to say; but complaints are made that the Act up to this moment has not worked very satisfactorily, and has given rise to a great many suits and proceedings before the courts. So we see that almost everywhere the Chinese have grown, except where British rule prevails, they have gradually grown to such an extent that stringent measures had to be taken against them. From 1849 to 1859, after the period of the discovery of gold in large quantities in California, Chinese immigration began; and not only was it well received in the United States, but it was welcomed, it was induced to come. And when a treaty had been made with China, opening five of her ports to the commerce of the European nations that had forced that treaty on her, every one knows that in 1856 a special treaty called, I think, the Burlingame Treaty, was entered into, at the instance of the American Government, between China and the United States, creating more intimate relations with the American Government than even those which had been imposed by these European nations upon China by the first treaty. Strange to say, in that land of extreme liberty, persecution raged as fiercely as amongst the Spaniards of Manila one hundred years before, and the strong arm of the federal authority could alone prevent the renewal of those brutal massacres. "Although," an American writer says, "they had been welcomed, and they were our friends; although in 1862, they took part in the processions of the 4th of July, and were received as good citizens of the United States, if they chose to be so; yet in 1872 it would have been impossible for them to show themselves at our feasts and holidays; they would not have dared to mix in the national festivities." Between 1872 and the date of the passing of an Act of Congress the most atrocious acts of barbarity were committed upon them, under the eyes of the authorities of the State of California—committed against a peaceful population, who had been brought to American shores by American diplomacy, and by the inducements of American merchants and agents. The "Sand-lotters," as they were called, having at their head the notorious Dennis Kearney, kept San Francisco in a state of terror, and everyone who has read, knows what atrocities were committed during a long period of time, under the eyes even of the Federal authorities without repression. It is true that there the laboring element, the voting element, in a great measure, in that land of universal suffrage, prevailed, and was soon turned into a mob element—an element which was so strong as to prevent even the Federal Government from enforcing the laws of that country. That reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of a little reminiscence of those days, a word of witty sarcasm attributed to the Chinese Consul General in San Francisco, and it will prove that that nation is not so far behind, or so degenerated as some people would believe them to be. The wit of the answer which was given by this gentleman, was worthy of any English or French wit. The story goes to say that one day, before the eyes of an officer, two or three young Chinese children were pelted by soldiers, first with apples and then with stones. An English gentleman who happened to be present, had remonstrated, but in vain, and had reported the inhumane conduct of the soldiers and the criminal stupidity of the officer. The Consul General heard of it, and being on his way to Washington, when he was there, he made representations to the Secretary of State, asking him that the authorities should take proceedings so as to punish the offenders. The American Minister after hesitating a little, smiled and said: "Well you know, sir, I think it is very wrong that such a thing should have happened, but you know the presidential elections are coming, and we must reckon upon the Irish votes, and the Irish population are all down on your people and they would resent any action taken in this matter. I am much afraid you will have to swallow the insult to your fellow countrymen, as I will have to swallow the humiliation of not enforcing the penalties which should have followed the outrage which was committed." "Well, sir," replied the Consul General, "I do not know what answer to send to my master, unless I would advise him to send the Chinese to Ireland, the only place where the Irish do not rule." It was well known that in California, this bad treatment was going on with impunity, so far as the ruling and voting element in the community was concerned. Well, in British Columbia, the first comers of Chinese origin, have also been welcomed. The question of how their presence in British Columbia is now appreciated is one which I suppose this House will not have any difficulty to understand or to judge by the expression of opinion of the Legislature of British Columbia, and of the representatives of British Columbia in this House. Are we to discuss here what is the reason of this violent opposition to Chinese immigration? The opposition to Chinese immigration is two-fold. Some people say that they are a degraded race; they are a mischievous race; they are an uncivilised race; they are barbarians of some kind; and the advanced civilisation developed under British institutions, cannot suffer such an element on British territory. Others say no, no, it is not that, but they are actually invading all the different paths of industry. If you allow them to come in, they are going to monopolise every kind of labor and industry in the country, and with the hordes of hundreds of millions that inhabit the Chinese Empire, no one knows what America will become, if a check is not put at the beginning upon the invasion of these barbarians. I must say that both in California and British Columbia, opinions are divided as to the appreciation, abstractively, of the Chinese race and Chinese immigration. In California, if you consult the manufacturer or the railway contractor, the vine grower, the land reclaimer, the mining proprietor; if you consult the man who wants to develop some large new industry in the country—for California is still a new country—requiring a large amount of labor, and not having at hand all the labor, and especially all the cheap labor, which is necessary to make those works productive, they will tell you that Chinese immigration has been and still can be made useful and desirable. In British Columbia amongst the foremost men in the community, opinions are divided as to the good that has been produced by Chinese immigration and the evil which would eventually be produced if Chinese immigrants were driven out of the country. In general, the wealthy class, the best educated class, is favorable to the Chinese. There is perhaps no question that has so much divided writers, thinkers, historians and philosophers as the question of what is really Chinese civilisation and whether China is an effete nation or a nation having attained a peculiar perfection, which has stood the ravages of centuries which have gone over other nations and other societies, and under which those nations and societies have sunk and disappeared. I only mention these differences of opinion. If you open books treating upon that subject you will find opinions divided, with certainly a majority of the writers, historians and thinkers in favor of the yellow race rather than against. At the same time you will find contradictions in these appreciations. Well, Sir, what are the bad qualities or the defects which prevent us from accepting that immigration as desirable? In the whole of the investigations we have made—I do not speak of the books that have been written upon the subject—with perhaps one or two exceptions, which will not count at present, the conclusion has always been, and very naturally, the same. No doubt, Sir, Chinese immigration has been useful; no doubt it has done a great deal of good; no doubt it may still do a great deal of good; no doubt if all the Chinese immigrants were taken away from the State or the Province, great injury would be done to the State or the Province; but we prefer white immigrants to Chinese immigrants. There exists a certain natural repulsion to these people.

Mr. CHAPLEAU.

What is the reason for that kind of repulsion, which I must say is almost general and natural? Is it because of the color of the race? Surely not. Though the negro population is certainly more distinct and should be more repulsive, we do not see that black immigration has been prevented by the means which have been used to prevent Chinese immigration into the different countries of the world. How is it that when people are discussing this question, they cannot avoid not only expressing themselves strongly against the incoming of that race, but using invectives almost instinctively against them? Is it by reason of their color? No. Is it by reason of their dress? Why should it be? Certainly there are other nations in the world who dress more extraordinarily than the Chinese. The garment the Chinaman wears is after all not very different from the workingman's blouse in France. Is it on account of the dress? I do not think so. Is it on account of the manner in which they braid their hair, or the manner in which they shave a part of their head? Surely not; the shaving of the head is an element of cleanliness; and I am still of opinion that the braided queue is after all not so repulsive as the methods of wearing hair in some other nations—Indians, for instance, who do not excite the same repulsion as the Chinese. Is it their religion? Why should it be? They are not fanatics; they have never interfered with the religion of others; they are peaceful in that respect. It is said that the Chinese are free-thinkers—that their religion is rationalism run to decay. Well, in some parts of the world, which are considered to be very enlightened, some people are regarded as more highly gifted intellectually than others if they put forward their title of free-thinkers, of having the right to criticise their own creed and that of others. It cannot be that. Is it their way of living? After all, when we regard it closely, it certainly cannot be their diet. They eat and drink lightly, which is a virtue with us. Is it their way of living altogether in filthy dwellings, where many are congregated together, and where ventilation necessary to life is not found? That reason would certainly have a good application, if by it bad health or diseases were engendered. Nothing of the kind—and I say it most emphatically—has been shown either in the United States or in British Columbia. All that can be said is that Chinese quarters were a most unenviable neighborhood. People at times speak as if leprosy was a common disease among the Chinese immigrants. Well, I have interrogated many of those who were able to speak on that subject, and the only case of so-called leprosy which was mentioned by any of the witnesses—and certainly not well disposed witnesses—was not only contested, but was denied by the professional man having charge of the gaol where the case was reported to have been discovered. It is true that the neighborhood of the different quarters where they reside are not tempting or attractive. This might be remedied no doubt by municipal legislation. Still, I must say that cleanliness for cleanliness, disorder for disorder, repulsive appearance for repulsive appearance, I have seen in some of the streets of San Francisco something that was a great deal worse than the worst sights I have seen in what they call the Chinese slums. No doubt this is a condition which is found in certain classes of humanity, as well amongst the Chinese as other races. I had occasion to visit some of the good Chinese restaurants in San Francisco. I visited a couple of high class Chinese clubs, and I confess that the comforts, the luxuries of life are as well appreciated and as easily found as amongst the best of ourselves. Have we repulsion for them because they lack courage? Surely not. It is true they are a timid people, but they have a kind of courage which is considered, amongst some civilised nations, as heroism. The fact is that we are naturally disposed, through inconscient prejudices, to turn into defects even their virtues. In support of my pretension I might quote here one of the writers on the subject, and one who, in my estimation, has really taken up the subject, not only with great vigor, but perhaps in the best possible sense. He says :

"He is generally honest, it is true, but the most prominent Chinese merchant in San Francisco admitted that his race was honest simply because it was the best policy, and for no other reason. Now, a man who is honest from the mere force of logic, simply because honesty is generally the best policy, must inevitably be dishonest in the exceptional case when dishonesty is the best policy."

This is the argument the writer puts forward as one of the arguments against the Chinese. I think it would not be right to blame a people for boasting that they are honest because they have found out that honesty is the best policy. I have always understood that amongst civilised people it is a maxim which, when followed out, is rather a sign of perfection than degradation.

"The two races are further separated by fundamental differences in language, in dress, in customs, in habits and social peculiarities and prejudices. In all these respects the Chinese differ from us more than any known race. Even their virtues are not the same as ours. While they are, as a nation, more apprehensive of danger than we, and more selfish and cowardly in avoiding it, in the presence of death they display a rare intrepidity and yield up their lives with a courage which we should consider heroic in one of ourselves."

We have seen during the war which has been waging the last two or three years between China and one of the first nations of Europe, that the Chinese have proved themselves to be individually, certainly not deserving the accusation of cowardice, which is one of the vices put forward as explaining the repulsion felt against them.

"They excel us in industry and economy, but they are even more reckless and prodigal when they choose to indulge themselves."

So much for those who accuse the Chinese of natural avarices. It is true, they are generally prudent and saving, but when they are willing to be liberal their liberality really borders on extravagance.

"There is nothing in their religion or in their education to counteract or ameliorate those tendencies. Their religion is rationalism run to decay; their education is principally directed to forms and ceremonies. In fact, their civilisation is so ancient that it has become rotten."

"Thus the Chinaman has brought to us and planted within our border all the vicious practices and evil tendencies of his home, aggravated somewhat, perhaps, by the circumstance that he has lost what little restraint his home Government imposed upon him without submitting to the restraint of ours."

What is mentioned here as being something repulsive to our civilisation is, when reasoned out, not sufficient reason to explain that hatred, that natural, instinctive repulsion felt towards them. What, then, is the real reason? I have stated first, those differences in physical peculiarities, in dress, in habits, which might not be an object of special attention and special estrangement, were it not for the prejudices which, at every moment, point out to those differences and produce that repulsion. Suppose for example, says a writer, that red-headed men were rigidly excluded from general society and compelled to consort together. The result would be, that in a few generations we should have a red-headed sept, and after æons of ages it might be, or at least it might be believed that there were mental as well as physical differences between us. Physical peculiarities tend to make other and less important divergencies conspicuous, and in this and other ways are constantly operating to isolate the race possessing them from other races. I am inclined to think that physical peculiarities which now pass unnoticed might, if a prejudice were aroused against them, ultimately result in the separation and isolation of new races and septs now unknown. Upon the whole, I doubt if there is any obstacle in the way of the fraternisation of races so difficult to overcome as this one of physical peculiarities, and the prejudices, sometimes very idle and senseless, which are begotten of them. The continuation of the prejudices engendered by those differences is certainly, and has been, acting very forcibly upon the estrangement of the Chinese race amongst other nations. We are prone to generalise the fault of the individual culprit and attach its stigma to the whole nation to which it belongs. A Chinese servant runs off with my spoons; I hasten to vociferate that all Chinamen will steal. An Indian horse-trader tells me a falsehood I feel safe to say that no Indian ever told the truth. Worse than this, the sin committed against me is taken up by my race as a sin committed against our whole family, and individual crimes are thus catalogued into national grievances. This sort of race hostility is materially strengthened by a large class of men who find their principal scope feeling and fostering race enmities.

To them the community is everything, the individual is nothing. Insult them and you may be forgiven, but insult their sept and you have committed an unpardonable sin. Lost in such a generalisation, they become morbidly sensitive as to the community's honor, fretfully irritable as to its grievances, and inordinately jealous of its rivals or competitors. For such small cattle they are capable of a great deal of harm. It is admitted that Chinese immigration has done an immense amount of good, both in the United States and British Columbia. In the States, what are the great works they not only have aided in building up, but which, without their assistance, could not have been built? These people have been the cause of the prompt, efficient, and profitable, building of the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, and the Southern Pacific, the greatest enterprises of modern industry. I am sure I will not be contradicted by those who know, when I say that they have been, not only a good element but a most efficient element, in the carrying out of the works of the Canadian Pacific Railway. What is the testimony rendered to them by those who have employed them? I was, when visiting British Columbia, brought in contact with the general superintendent, I think, at all events he was acting, and was really, the assistant contractor, a gentleman by the name, if I am not mistaken, of Michael Haney, who was conducting the works of Mr. Onderdonk the contractor. He was an Irishman of pure water, and boasted of it with reason. He had all the intelligence, the wit, the pertinacity, and the vigor of his nationality. That gentleman told me that when he came to take charge of the works he had decided—he was quite a young man, I must say, to his credit, a few years over 20—not to employ Chinese laborers, if possible, in the building of the road. More than that, I think that at the time the contractor imported from the States other workmen who were christened a rather singular name; they were called Onderdonk's lambs; they were not Chinese. Every one will understand the difficulty, in districts where there is no administration of justice to speak of, of controlling and directing an assemblage of 10,000 people. That gentleman had come with a distinct determination to do without Chinese labor. Read his testimony, and you will see that, by himself, without any other reason but the experience he had of these men at work, he came to a conclusion diametrically opposed to his former views; his testimony goes to show that, as far as practical work is concerned, as good patient laborers, as peaceful men, important to bring to success such an enterprise under such difficulties as attend the building of those roads in the wilderness, they were the best kind of people. That was the evidence which in San Francisco was given before by Mr. Crocker of the Central Pacific, and by several other gentlemen who were examined and who gave the same testimony in favor of the Chinese laborers. What is, then, the reason of that antipathy? Have they not done good work? They have built these immense works in the State of California. They have done more. One of the most important industries in the State of California is that of fruit growing, vine growing. By those who are cognisant of that industry it is plainly admitted that, without that cheap labor, that most important industry would not have succeeded; and that industry represents millions in the great Pacific State. Another one will tell you that in the work of reclaiming lands they have done great service. I think we have in the report the evidence of Mr. Roberts, if I am not mistaken, the president of a land reclamation company there. In the evidence of that gentleman you will find that that kind of work could not be done by other than Chinese laborers, that white men could not do the work, that it was even dangerous to them; and once again I am called to ask whether their habits and their diet are against good health and the most natural physical requirements of a human being, properly behaving himself. And I say that generally they are not subject, in other countries and in ours, to those diseases which are so frightful in their ravages amongst the white men. It is a well known fact that in China typhoid fever is almost unknown. These people were employed at reclaiming lands in California which the white men could not do. The Chinese have done it to the extent in one year, of between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 acres, representing, when reclaimed, a value of between $75 and $100 per acre. Mr. Roberts said that the Chinese in California have been adding to the wealth of the State and to the wealth of the country generally between $80,000,000 and $90,000,000 in work which, without their assistance would not have been done, or which it would have taken a great lapse of time to perform. So California owes to Chinese the vine growing, the fruit growing, the land reclaiming, they have also engaged in mining. In the States, as in British Columbia, the Chinese have taken a great deal to gold mining, and strange to say in a great measure in British Columbia, as in California, they have been to a great extent engaged in taking up claims that had been worked and abandoned as worthless, and they have had great difficulties in getting licenses, and owing to those difficulties they preferred working as they have done, taking these abandoned claims and working them with a small profit, but still with a profit. It is true that I was told in British Columbia: That is wrong; it is true that these claims were abandoned, and that nobody was looking at them, but it is wrong to see a Chinaman working there, because it is future wealth for after generations, when the country becomes thickly populated, and that gold might be taken up by white immigrants. That is a very poor argument. If the Chinese were giving nothing, were producing nothing for the country, I could understand that, but in a moment I shall state what is the value of a Chinese immigrant in this country as well as in other countries. I was saying that they have done good work so far in the States and in British Columbia, and I was asking the question: Why is there such an antipathy? That antipathy exists, and the only reason, or the great reason for it, is in the antagonism between the Chinese and the other laborers. It is not to be found really in any other cause than the competition of cheap labor with laborers who want to exact a higher price. Is the object of the white laborer, in trying to force himself into the building of works and the carrying on of industries at higher wages than the cheap labor which is offered by the Chinese—is that a laudable object, and is Parliament going to come to the rescue? That is the question which this measure will decide, I think, in a way acceptable to all. But let me say that there are not differences enough between the two races to prevent them from living together, if the knowledge was not spread now all over the world that the Chinese, with his frugality, with his sobriety, with his contentment with very little, with his assiduity to labor, with his quiet, peaceable conduct when at work, is a superior instrument in the hands of the builder and of the manufacturer, especially for works of great magnitude requiring many hands, and requiring necessarily cheap labor to be brought to a successful issue. During the discussion before Congress, I think the point was made with the greatest eloquence by Senator Jones of Nevada. He used the language of a laborer. Surely few miners would have been found to say what Mr. Jones has put in their mouths, but Mr. Jones in his expressions had felt really and rightly the pulse, had given the keynote of the situation in California, in British Columbia, and all over the world:

"While my work is very arduous," says the laborer, "I go to it with a light heart and perform it cheerfully because it enables me to support my wife and my children. I am in a position to bring up my daughters to be good wives, and faithful mothers, and to offer my sons better opportunities in life than I had myself. I cheerfully contribute to support those churches, charitable institutions and other objects that enter into our daily life; but, after I have maintained my family and performed these duties, not much is left of my wages when the week is ended.

"How is it with the Chinaman? The Chinaman can do as much work underground as I can. He has no wife and family. He performs none of these duties. Forty or fifty of his kind can live in a house no larger than mine. He craves no variety of food. He has inherited no taste for comfort or for social enjoyment. Conditions that satisfy him and make him contented would make my life not worth living."

This is the feeling of the workingmen, and I am not prepared to say that it is not excusable or even justifiable. It is no argument to tell the American laborer that if he would live as the Chinaman lives he might subsist on the Chinaman's wages. It has taken the Chinaman centuries to learn to live on so little. "With the lapse of time his necessities have gradually accommodated themselves to his small earnings until now very little suffices to procure him abundance. He has made a prodigious stride toward the ideal ration of a straw per day. Early education and constant habits have so led him to practice the closest economy, that economy has itself become a habit, and no longer involves self-denial. The world around him has graduated itself down to his standard. His butcher, his baker, his candlestick-maker, his manufacturer, his merchant and his common carrier have reduced their prices to suit his measure. The doctor who attends his sick and the priest who buries his dead demand little because he gets little. Labor can afford to be cheap when everything else is cheap. But we cannot expect labor to be cheap when everything else is dear." Now, as I said before, we find a universal repulsion against the Chinese, and a desire to prevent their encroachment upon the white population. We have seen in the reviews and periodicals accounts of the progress that Chinese merchants have made. In the English colony at Hong Kong, Governor Pope Hennessy stated in 1877 that the number of houses belonging to the British and German citizens were decreasing, while the trade beneficial to the general interests of the empire was increasing. Wherever the Chinaman has got a foothold he has succeeded in all the occupations he has undertaken, and has become a most formidable rival, indeed a successful rival, to the white man. It may be asked, how is it that the Government are yielding to the prejudices of race and class in restricting Chinese immigration to Canada? Why do you not allow the Chinaman to remain if he does his duty? He has done it in a certain measure. I have heard it stated, for instance, in California, that Chinamen send home on the average $300 every year. An examination of the earnings and expenses of a workingman shows that this cannot be correct; the Chinese laborer earns on an average about $25 a month or $225 for nine months' work, which is the average per year. But on the other hand he has to spend for his food, clothing and rent; and on this point we obtained information from the assistant consul of San Francisco, Huang Sing Chen, a very intelligent man, who gave a great deal of assistance to the commissioners. If the Chinaman spends $10 or $11 a month for food and clothing he does not save even $100. In San Francisco the Chinese reside in hovels, but they pay a rental of $15 to $16 a month. In Victoria perhaps the rental is less, but, even if a Chinese pays only $2 a month, that would make $24 a year. Then they expend on tools and travelling expenses $10; taxes $5; doctors $3 and other expenses $5. He expends for all purposes $182 a year that would only leave him $43 as his net earnings.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Would the hon. gentleman state how many Chinese there are living in those tenements that pay $2 a month?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not know how much the Chinese are paying for rent, but I said that, taking it for granted that they pay on an average $2 per month for their lodging, and I do not think that is an extra amount—

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. Fifteen men in one cabin pay $2 a month.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The estimate expenses that I have given have been published on the Pacific coast, and I do not care about discussing them. I have seen eight or ten men in one tenement, and they were paying as much as $50 or $60 a month.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. It is not so in Victoria.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In Victoria they are better treated. That is the reason why the Chinese of Victoria appear to be a great deal better than in other places where we saw Chinese, but I am sure they do not pay $2 for lodgings for fifteen men. Putting even a margin of 50 per cent. on that statement, you will see that each man would at least spend in the country a sum of at least $100 a year. I know that the Chinese in their living obtain nothing but that for which they pay very dearly. I am not pleading for them. They have undoubtedly spent in the country a large amount of money, and I shall show by statistics that the goods coming from China have been in a large measure consumed by the Chinese population in the Province. Let us say that each Chinese laborer spends $100 a year, this would give a result of $962,900, taking 9,629 as the exact number of Chinese laborers in British Columbia. Each of them pays to the state in duties, provincial and municipal taxes, over $25 per head, and the absolute value of the Chinese labor, a value which remains as a capital invested in the country, is not overrated at two dollars a day, making for the 9,629 laborers, at the rate of 230 days a year, a total of $4,429,280 of net profit for the country. I have indicated the real, fundamental reason why opposition is given to Chinese immigration. I am satisfied that my statement will not be contradicted when I say that prejudice and rivalry are the main sources of opposition to their presence amongst us. But are we for that reason not to take into consideration the social and moral condition of the country where they are living? Are we to ignore feelings and antipathies? Is it not necessary, for a Government dealing with questions on its responsibility, to respect even prejudices? Are we not obliged very often to respect prejudices? Do we not respect them very often in our legislation? I think that this would alone constitute a sufficient reason for any legislation the Government may choose to enact in respect to the Chinese: that they are a stumbling block in the way of the development of the country, in the way of any Government on account of those prejudices that are founded on facts that cannot be ignored. That Chinese labor has taken the place of white labor, which might not so far have come into the country, but which must come in the future, is likely to create a sentiment in the country that the Government cannot ignore. Whatever views we may entertain I do not think hon. members would differ in the conclusion to which we arrived after the investigation I made with my brother commissioner in the United States and in British Columbia. Opinions differ on this question, but no one differs in this, that we would infinitely prefer that white immigrants should occupy the field. We examined witnesses in British Columbia, and Dr. Helmcken stated—though it is not reported in his evidence—the matter in a very clear manner. He said the whole thing is very simple; "we want you to prevent the influx of Mongolians because we want to be here ourselves, and do not want others to be here. You will not consider it strange if we tell you that as good Englishmen we see no reason why any men except good Englishmen should live in this country." I knew in what sense the witness said that. There was no reason, he thought, for anybody living in a British colony but Englishmen. "We are despotic—you know it; as regards our customs and usages and habits we are despotic in a certain sense; and you know it." And we all know it. But we have to condone that, and to do the best we can among ourselves; but there will always be a certain amount of feeling existing, not to the same extent, perhaps, because differences exist, in regard to the Chinese; and when they come in large numbers they threaten us, not the peace of the country, and not the morals of the country, but they hurt the sentiments of the people. From the whole of the evidence taken—of course there is immorality amongst the Chinese, as there is amongst other nations in like classes—it is evident also that immorality among the Chinese does not prevail to the extent often mentioned; for if immorality was carried on to that extent, the intense feeling which would be aroused against the Chinese would lead to lynching, and no one could prevent summary justice being dealt out in cases when such crimes as have been intimated had been committed by Chinese domestic servants. We know that when similar crimes were committed in the Southern States by a race to which the white race had antipathies, lynching was the order of the day for many years. Everyone knows that no one could prevent the Chinese from being similarly punished if such outrages were committed by them. They are not better than other races, but they have virtues as well as vices. The Government cannot, however, ignore the national or provincial feeling, the feeling that prevails among the white population. A number of the witnesses examined by the commission declared that people could not keep house in British Columbia and would be obliged to leave the country, being unable to obtain efficient servants, except for the Chinese domestics. As to the immense fisheries in British Columbia the yield of which was last year no less than $1,498,082, they could not have been developed except for the Chinese. The same may be said of the coal mining industry; the export of that product amounted, during the three last years, to 622,897 tons, or $2,178,353. Market gardening, that great luxury of the rich and the poor, that important factor in the economy of a new country, is entirely a Chinese creation. But in spite of all those facts, the Government cannot ignore that a wave is coming up, and I say it would be a blot on the administration of the Government, not to take action as we have taken it. I may have my own personal opinion of what I have read, and of the intelligence I have been able to obtain on this question, but I agree with my hon. friends who represent British Columbia in this House, that if they were to go back to their Province without legislation of some kind being arrived at in the direction of settling this problem, the peace of the country would be threatened. Such legislation is not new. Great Britain has permitted her colonies to pass such legislation and nobody has complained. I know that some may find fault with this measure, though it is not an arbitrary, a despotic, or a cruel measure; but it will at least have the result of effectually checking Chinese immigration into British Columbia, to a very large extent; in fact I may say that it will probably almost extinguish Chinese immigration, except to a desirable extent and of a desirable kind. I have been rather surprised at some of the criticisms of this Bill. I find that some journals have called it a draconian measure, while others said it was a milk and water measure. I say the measure was necessary; I say that legislation was demanded by men who understood what they were doing, and what are the exact conditions of things in British Columbia. It was a good thing that there should be a large influx of Chinese immigration at the time when the resources of British Columbia were at an early stage of their development, but I say the evil will be less when our great transcontinental railway is completed, although even then there are some works which will more profitably be done, some industries which will be more profitably developed, with the cheap labor which will remain in that Province. I do not think that any one will object and I am quite sure that the people of British Columbia do not object, to seeing the class come into their country who make up the respectable merchants whom I saw in the stores of Victoria, whom I met in the drawing room at a reception held by the Lieutenant Governor of that Province. To such a class I am sure nobody there will object, except the few to whose declamations reasonable men will not attach much importance. But I say that the mass of Chinese immigrants are of a class who necessarily will compete with the laboring men, with the ordinary workmen of the country, and I say it is little wonder that objections should be raised to the large immigration of that class. I noticed that the other day some resolutions were passed by a trades union meeting at Montreal. With regard to trades unions, I may say that I have my own personal opinions with regard to these organisations. I do not favor trades unions, nor do I think that strikes are good things for the protection of the laborers themselves. I think that the laborers of Montreal have shown their good sense in the fact that they have not engaged in that kind of strife for many years, since the time when they were led into a strike by that celebrated demagogue, Médéric Lanctot, and that they are not disposed to be deluded another time. They paid too dear for their experiment at that period. I think the good work of trying to find a level between labor and capital and of allaying the jealousies and ill-feeling which necessarily spring up between the poor and the rich, of trying to prevent one class from attempting to get the best of the other class—I say that this task never can be well accomplished by mere organisations on the part of those who are interested in the contest. The task is one which belongs to those who teach the virtues that make good christians and good citizens; it belongs to those who teach the virtues of obedience and contentment, in whatever calling in life; to those who will say, and who will be understood in saying, that the laborer in his quiet labor, or amongst his family after his day's work, has perhaps more real comfort and happiness in life than the man who is engaged in the legislation of his country, or the great statesman who reaches the height of honor and power, who knows little of the comfort, pleasure and real happiness which a good, kind, peaceable, and peaceful laborer enjoys in his home. I say the solution of that great problem, which is threatening the old institutions of Europe, threatening them with revolution; the great problem of labor against capital, is not to be solved by such organisations or societies, composed of those who are most interested in raising up these feelings of jealousy and enmity between different classes of the community. But I say at the same time, that it is a natural and well-founded desire of British subjects, of the white population of this Dominion, who come from either Britain or the other European States and settle in this country, that their country should be spoken of abroad as being inhabited by a vigorous, energetic, white race of people; I say that it would be much more pleasant to have this said of the Province of British Columbia, than to have that Province even if it grew richer than it is, with two-thirds of its population composed of a race which is not similar to ours, and which cannot assimilate with ours. That is the difficulty, and we know it, and it is our duty to overcome it. The Chinese government, conservative, exclusive as it is, will understand the policy of protection which we are forced to adopt, notwithstanding our desire to keep friendly relations with their nation. The Chinese race, good as it is, perfect, if you like, cannot and will not assimilate with the whites—I do not say because they are too bad; I simply state the fact. It may be pretended that it is owing to the perfection of their social organisation, but I was reading the other day an article from one of the great religious writers of France, who would certainly not be suspected of being at all democratic in his ideas, belonging rather to the class of ultramontaine writers. He was comparing the two civilisations—the civilisation of China with that of Europe—and he said that the Chinese had proved the perfection of their social organisations by the fact that they had absorbed other nationalities, and not only absorbed them, but drowned them out, so to speak; because though they had a national existence extending over 42 centuries, they had been able to resist to the present day every innovation and had made of the various people they had absorbed, the same nationality as themselves, with the same laws, the same customs, the same religion, and the same institutions. For centuries past, small colonies of these people have established themselves amongst the most powerful, the most absorbing nations of the globe, and in no case have they lost a particle of their individuality, of their national character. They have one of the finest countries in the world. Every body knows that China is composed of all kinds of different climates, that its productions are exceedingly varied and that it is probably the best watered country in the world. One of the reasons why I consider that in Canada we do not stand in the same relation to what is called the Chinese question, as they do in the United States, and one reason why we are not in danger of being overwhelmed with “hordes of Mongolians,” as some would seem to fear, is in the fact not only of our race, but of our climate. There is no danger of that. I would be ashamed to be a British subject, or to be of the nationality to which I belong, if I believed for a moment that the survival of the fittest would be the survival of the Chinese race on this continent. The Chinese have said themselves that they do not want to come to this part of our country, that its climate is too cold. It is true that some have gone to New York, and that some have gone to Montreal; but the climate is too cold for them. On the shores of British Columbia where nature has been bountiful in climate, in vegetation and scenery, and then, as it were, the breeze from the old country comes to them, regenerating their nationality to such a degree that they do not even want to be buried in the land they come to colonise. They only come to the country to get labor, and in doing that they only pursue a laudable object; but they do not want to assimilate with us, and we do not want to assimilate with them. As a piece of wood in the tissues of the human body, unless it is removed, must cause disease in the places around it, and ultimately to the whole body, so the civilisation of Chinese, introduced into Christian civilisation, must disappear, or it will be a cause of danger to the community. There is no danger, it is true, to our politics, as the Chinese have not the right of voting. I asked the Consul General of China if his people wanted the right to vote. “Oh, no,” he said, “we do not want that;” and he added, with a good deal of reason, “if we sided with one political party, we should have the hatred of the opposite political party.” I suggested that perhaps the sympathy of the other side would more than compensate for that. He said, “we do not want to interfere; we are laborers who have come out here to work, and when it is done, we go back to our own country; we may have enriched ourselves, but surely we have not made you poorer.” Now, the Government have thought that the time has come to introduce legislation, which in a few words, to conclude my remarks, I will explain to the House. The Bill provides first for the payment of $50 for the entry of any Chinaman into the country, by land or by water. The payment is to be made at the time he enters. If he returned to his country and came back to Canada, he would have to pay the second time, with the proviso that, when he has landed and identified himself, as a former resident in Canada, the money will be re-imbursed to him. No vessel carrying Chinese immigrants shall carry more than one Chinese immigrant for every 50 tons of its tonnage. Some thought that was too low, and that one for 100 tons would not be too high, but with 50 tons, a vessel of 3,000 tons of tonnage would not be allowed to carry more than 60 immigrants. It will be said probably that the steamers plying between San Francisco and Victoria every week might bring a large number of them into Canada. These steamers have a capacity of not more than 2,000 tons, and so would not be able to carry more than 40 Chinese passengers; so that, multiplying the number by 52, there would not be a large number of immigrants every year. But I think the greatest safety lies in the payment of the sum of $59, which is quite sufficient to prevent any penniless laborer from coming. Another clause provides that no vessel carrying Chinese immigrants will have a right to land a single passenger until the master of the vessel delivers to the Controller of immigration a detailed list of all the Chinese passengers on board; and until a medical officer shall examine the passengers to see that none having any infectious or contagious disease are on board. That is a precaution against the alleged propagation of disease by Chinese immigration. The Controller of the immigration will keep a register of the immigrants and give a list of the same to the Provincial authorities. The officer of Customs can be appointed to such a position. There is a clause in the Bill providing for the appointment of an interpreter at a salary of $3,000. One of the great objections made against Chinese immigration has been that the cost of the administration of justice was very large, because it was very difficult to obtain trustworthy interpreters who knew the language of the offenders or of the witnesses. Therefore we thought it would be well to have a Chinese interpreter, and the Government will select a man as far as possible not having Chinese proclivities. By that means the administration of criminal justice in the Province at least will be facilitated. Now, I have only one word to add. I must give this testimony in favor of those who have asked for this legislation, that no one wanted to have legislation to expel or exile the Chinese now in the Province. But they do not want to have an increase of them. Everybody knows that the work of the Pacific Railway has been carried on successfully with a large number of those men as laborers; At one time 6,000 or 7,000 were employed as such; every one knows that these men, if they are in the charge of a company, are likely to seek employment in some other great work undertaken in other countries; as they are skilled men in that kind of work, they would no doubt be like those travelling bands of laborers who in old times built up all large works in various parts of Europe. A great number of those who have been working on the Canadian Pacific Railway will emigrate to China, and those coming to the country must necessarily be superior to the undesirable class who should not be allowed to come into British Columbia. In passing this law we must not forget an important consideration. We know that the prospect of trade with China is a subject that has engaged the attention of all the Governments of Europe; and at one time a bloody war was the consequence of the refusal of that country to open its ports to the commerce of the world. The commerce of a nation of 350,000,000 inhabitants is a commerce not to be despised; and everyone will understand at the same time, what has been discussed all over the country, that the prospect of bringing Asiatic trade through the channel of the Canadian Pacific Railway would render that great national work of importance and profit to the country. Every body knows that it is the intention of the enterprising people at the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway to build a fleet of large steamers for the trade between China, Japan, and British Columbia. We know very well that that trade can be made prosperous. We must know, at the same time, that it would not be wise or prudent on our part to legislate in such a manner as to cause a bad impression on that nation, which, is a proud nation. I must say that every time I have met with the dignitaries of China, they have said they expected always to have fair play from us and that they respected the English people and the Government more than any Government in the world. It is true at the time they were not on very favorable terms with another nation not very far from England. I think our relations with China should be those of a people desiring to have good commercial intercourse with them. They have no reason to blame us for protecting ourselves; they would have reason to blame us if we were to pass a measure which will be considered as cruel towards their fellow countrymen. With these remarks, I move the resolutions preparatory to the introduction of the Bill. As I have said, a good part of my remarks is merely personal impressions, another part is merely quotations or expressions of opinion of others, but the conclusions I have come to are those of the Government, and I hope the House will accept the measure which is thoroughly in accord with the sentiment of the people, not only in the Province of British Columbia but in the whole of British North America.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. It is with some feeling of pleasure I rise on the present occasion with reference to this Chinese matter. I do not intend making a speech; in fact, I have made up my mind it would not be necessary to offer any remarks at all on this question, as I think the House has been informed of all the phases of this question over and over again. I simply rise to express my pleasure at the prospects the people of British Columbia have of being relieved of the scourge they have been suffering under, to a certain extent at least. It is with pleasure I support the provisions of this Bill, because, whilst it may not be all that some people would require, at the same time it is the beginning of better days, it is getting in, as we sometimes remark, the thin end of the edge. We have commenced well to-day, and I hope we will not stop until we have completed the good work. I cannot help making a few remarks on the many quotations the hon. the Secretary of State has given this House this afternoon, and which are calculated in my mind to mislead it. With regard to the Chinese paying $2 a month rental, the evidence the hon. the Secretary of State has given is that of the Chinese agents. Now it is well known to every man who knows anything at all of the Chinese character, that they are not to be relied upon in scarcely any particular; hence this man's word in this case is not to be relied upon. With regard to the statement that these men pay $2 a month rent, hon. gentlemen not acquainted with the question would naturally conclude that each Chinaman pays $2 a month rent. That is not the case. In these cabins where they pay $2 a month, and some of them only pay $1.50, you will find 10 or 20 Chinese. That is the way they live. I desire to quote from the report of the Chinese commission, just one or two extracts from the evidence of men in that Province well posted on the subject. Many of the quotations which have been made in favor of the Chinese have been taken from American sources; I would view the matter as it concerns British Columbia, and to show you the people of British Columbia do not believe the word of the Chinese, is not difficult. Here is the evidence of the hon. Mr. Drake, president of the council in our Local Legislature:

"I have been a resident in British Columbia since 1859, practising my profession as a barrister and solicitor. The Chinese did not appear in any large number until after 1870, but even before that time they gradually absorbed all the light labor which used to be done by white people. They first invaded the washing interests, and gradually ousted the women who did this work; then they absorbed the market-garden work, and are now the sole suppliers of garden produce; and in all the various industries which require light work they have driven all competitors from the field. The effect of this is that white people will not come to compete with the Chinese, and one consequence is that all persons requiring house-work done are driven to employ Chinese at extravagant wages. $25 to $30 a month is the ordinary rate of wages, and they are so well organized that if any attempt is made to reduce the wages it is impossible to obtain a servant. They will not compete against each other, and the ordinary law governing demand and supply is entirely evaded by a higher law of compulsion. If any one attempts to act for himself in this direction, the general body have means at their disposal to compel obedience to their rules. False charges are trumped up against the offender, or his fears are worked upon so that they dare not disobey their secret rulers."

They have organisations amongst themselves and ignore the laws of the land entirely.

"I have had a very large experience in Chinese cases, especially in criminal cases, and I find that where Chinese alone are concerned, a conviction is hardly ever obtained."

We often hear the remark: Look at your court statistics; they show conclusively there is not as much crime among the Chinese as some people make out. But the reason is they are seldom discovered.

"The calendar of convictions gives no criterion of the number of offences. Several murders have been committed and no clue to the perpetrators. The administration of justice obtains no assistance whatever from the Chinese themselves; if, however, the question is one between Chinese and white persons, the Chinese strain every nerve to obtain a conviction, and are utterly indifferent whether the charge is brought against the real criminal or some other white person."

"The Chinese are utterly unacquainted with truth, and it is a universal comment on their evidence that you cannot believe anything they say. They shelter themselves under their ignorance of the English language so that no cross-examination can reach them, and it is generally believed that the interpreters guide the evidence. In one case that came before me, a charge of murder was preferred against a Chinese, and he was arrested. The murder was committed at Seattle, and the presence of the prisoner distinctly sworn to. I was, however, in a position to prove that the prisoner was on his way from San Francisco to Victoria at the time of the alleged offence, and after producing that evidence the prosecutors, who were applying for extradition, abandoned further proceedings, but compelled the prisoner's friends to pay $250 for expenses, stating if they did not do so they would have him arrested on some other charge. The reason, I after discovered, was that the prisoner had refused to pay a sum to a secret society which exists among them. They are governed by laws of their own, entirely uncontrolled by the laws of the country where they reside."

This is the class of people we are asked to legislate against here to-day.

"Prostitution of the most flagrant character is carried on wherever a few men are collected. The women are slaves and sold by their importers at prices varying from $300 to $600. Cases connected with the system have frequently been brought before the court, and in no case have, I think, the true facts ever been elicited. The complaint of inveighing boys into these dens of infamy, and the diseases which are there caught, are numerous and painful."

These are facts which have been referred to in this House on previous occasions, but they have been doubted, and insinuations have been made that they were not true.

"The Chinese are not settlers in any sense of the word; they are no benefit to the country as settlers; they tend to exclude a more valuable population, and even where they are engaged in numbers the employers would prefer white people but cannot get them. The numbers that are in the Province it is very difficult to estimate, as the leading merchants do not wish the numbers to be known, but there can be very few short of 18,000. It is not expected that those present should be driven away, but it is hoped that such restrictive legislation will be passed as to prevent their influx. There are sufficient numbers here to fulfil all the requirements of labor for years to come, and if restriction is granted we shall find that white labor will become more plentiful at once."

That corresponds exactly with statements made in this House on previous occasions. Now, I desire to give the evidence which has been referred to this afternoon in regard to the railways. I will give the evidence of one man, Nelson Bennett, formerly of Toronto, contractor for the Cascade division of the Northern Pacific Railway.

"Q. Do you employ many Chinese?—A. Not as many as white laborers. We employ Chinese because we are at present showing things, just because we need them. I prefer white labor if I can get it. I am partial to Scandinavian labor if that can be got. Two Chinamen are worth about one white man."

"Q. How much do you pay the Chinamen?—A. Eighty cents a day, and they furnish themselves with board and tents."

Mr. SHAKESPEARE.

Is it possible that any hon. gentleman in this House or in this country will think for one moment that it is possible for a white man to live and support a family on such wages?

"Q. And how much do you pay the white laborer?—A. Two dollars a day, and I furnish tents and they pay their own board."

"Q. Then you get the Chinaman for less than half?—A. Yes; but we get no trade from them. They furnish themselves through their own officers and stores, whereas the white men buy their provisions and clothing from us. We make a profit on that, and the difference between $2 a day for the white man and eighty cents for the Chinaman is compensated by the profits on that trade and the greater amount of work done by the white man. Half the number of white men is cheaper for a contractor than double the amount of Chinamen. They have not much endurance. Men that do not eat, they cannot endure."

"Q. What is your system of employing them? Do you deal individually with them?—A. No; we hire them in companies or gangs. When you hire them in gangs you cannot individualize them, and consequently if you have a trouble with one Chinaman it is a trouble with the whole gang. On the other hand, if you have trouble with one white man you can discharge him alone."

They are so united, and so complete are their organisations, that, if you offend one man, they will all put down their tools and quit work, until you settle with the man who has been the cause of it.

"Q. We have been told that if a Chinaman was not satisfactory he was pointed out and at once removed?—A. Yes; and the next moment he is in another gang."

"Q. Is there anything else which occurs to you as likely to prove useful to the Commission in its enquiry?—A. The Chinaman is of no earthly account in a country. If you employ white laborers one out of ten settles in the country. We find this in Montana where we employ white laborers altogether; but on this coast where Chinamen are employed you will find 500 miles at a stretch without settlement excepting railroad employes."

I think that is an answer to the many quotations that have been made by the hon. the Secretary of State. Those people are still coming into our Province. I received a letter two days ago from one of our merchants in the city of Victoria. He says:

"Two shiploads of Chinamen arrived yesterday, numbering 803. The same day a steamship arrived from San Francisco with 97."

So that within 24 hours the population of that Province increased about 900. He says:

"It is impossible to populate the country with whites when so many Chinamen are coming in. Now that the railway is near completion, we are beginning to feel the effects, and next year will be still worse."

The idea is that when the railway is complete, these men will have no work to do, and they will be a greater curse to the people of that Province than they are even at the present time. We are told that there is no leprosy amongst the Chinese. Why, there can be any amount of evidence obtained in British Columbia on that question, and one reason why it was not given was that persons who had the information were opposed to the commission, and deemed it unnecessary, and hence they failed to appear. We are told that these Chinese in California built large works. Admitting all that, admitting that they build these large works, is it to be granted that we are to allow this element to come into our Province and monopolise all the labor there is, to the exclusion of the white men? What is the fact? There is not a year that passes by but hundreds of men go to British Columbia and have to return because they cannot get employment, and yet there is abundance of employment in that Province to-day which is monopolised by these people. Yet we are told they are such a beautiful class of people, they are so intelligent, so nice, so accommodating, so gentle, so obliging, that we should favor them and allow them to come in as they please. The people of that Province are united upon this question, as former petitions have shown, and I am happy to say that the people of the Dominion of Canada are waking up to this question, as is shown by the fact that petitions have been sent to this Parliament this Session from different parts of Canada asking the Government to legislate upon this question to prevent any further immigration of these people to this country. That shows that the people of this Dominion are unanimous in favor of legislation, and I am happy to see there is a prospect of getting a little relief in this direction.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). It is a very old saying that every dog has his day, and a cat nine lives. Every Province in this Dominion has had what is called its day; the time has now arrived when British Columbia should have its day. The remarks of the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill—if he will not feel offended at my criticising those remarks, not in an unfriendly, though in a slightly unfavorable way—one would almost imagine were in opposition to the Bill rather than in favor of it. It would appear to me that nine-tenths of his remarks were leaning towards what he was pleased to term pro-Chinese rather than anti-Chinese. He said that the British Columbia members were not actuated solely by prejudice against the Chinese race. In that he is certainly correct—at least so far as I am concerned. I have unquestionably not the slightest prejudice against the Chinaman as an individual, but I have a dislike to their presence in British Columbia as a collective mass, because I know it is disadvantageous to the Province and distasteful to by far the greater number of those persons who sent me to represent them in this House. I have been accused of not being as strongly anti-Chinese as some of my constituents desire, still I consider that in this matter I have not to consult my own individual feelings, as the Secretary of State has done to-day, but I have to speak for those people whom I represent in this House. The hon. gentleman stated that there were apparently two classes of people who came before the Chinese commission—anti-Chinese advocates and pro-Chinese supporters. Now, the anti-Chinese advocates, I think, are confined, more particularly, to the laboring classes and to the trades' unions, than to the mechanics and the more educated portion of the people; and the pro-Chinese supporters, as he terms them, are confined almost exclusively to those people who are conducting industries in that Province—the shoe factories, the canneries on the Fraser, the coal mines at Nanaimo and similar enterprises. In the evidence taken before the Royal Commission, I think it will be found that those who are in favor of keeping the Chinese in the Province were almost entirely those who have some interest to serve by means of the Chinese presence and their cheap labor. Therefore, it is not surprising that they were willing to give their evidence before the commissioners, knowing that their own pockets would be touched if any steps were taken to drive out the Chinese, or to restrict their immigration. The Secretary of State also says that when the commissioners arrived in Victoria considerable feeling was evinced against them. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think there is good ground for the existence of that feeling. The people then felt and still feel that after having given expression to their wants and requirements in the Local House by a resolution which was carried by 16 to 8, and when their representatives in this House, in the present Parliament, as well as those who preceded us, have argued so strenuously and so long in favor of the restriction of Chinese immigration, I say it was a little distasteful to the people when the Government appointed a commission to go over the whole ground in so short a space of time as two or three weeks, which the representatives of the people had taken several years to explain to this House. Therefore, I think it is pardonable on the part of the people of Victoria and British Columbia if they express themselves as annoyed and surprised at the appointment of that commission. The hon. gentleman also stated that the only Province in this Dominion which had raised its voice against the immigration of Chinese was British Columbia.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said we had demands from Ontario and other places, and I mentioned the city of Montreal.

Mr. BAKER. In the earlier part of his remarks he did state that so far as he was informed only one Province had raised its voice.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I said that British Columbia was the only Province where the people were suffering from Chinese immigration.

Mr. BAKER. Of course, I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. But as a matter of fact, a number of laboring associations in the older Provinces, in Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal and Quebec, have raised their protest against the immigration of Chinese into the Dominion. I will read to the House the following resolution which has been sent to me from the city of Hamilton:

"The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the wage-workers of Hamilton, and I was instructed by resolution of Labor Convention to forward the same to you:

"Whereas, the system of importing pauper and Chinese labor to this country by the Government of the Dominion of Canada does not in any way protect the industries of our country or increase the wealth of the producers, but the importation of pauper and coolie labor in an already glutted labor market brings and increases poverty and its attending evils. The enforcement of labor contracts made in foreign countries, detrimental to the interests of wage-earners of Canada, will result in a degrading competition that will break the noble spirit of labor and render our slavery unbearable. We denounce the actions of the Government as criminal in protecting the manufacturer and strangling competition by the many unfair advantages derived from such protection, while the producers are taxed in order to increase their number and cheapen the cost of production.

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the workingmen of Hamilton condemn the policy of the Government in allowing the importation to our shores of pauper immigrants, and call upon them to take measures to return such foreign paupers as are now in our land and to legislate against the arrival of others.

"That we demand the recall of the emigrant agents and lecturers employed by the Government and the application of the money appropriated for their remuneration to some public work upon which some unemployed Canadians can earn their bread. That we especially protest against the introduction of Chinese labor in any part of the Dominion, and call upon the Government to send back all Chinese now in Canada, or enforce such a poll tax as will drive them hence.

"That we demand the repeal of all laws that do not bear equally upon capital and labor, and the substitution thereof of such laws that will protect the laborer's rights from the encroachments of selfish capitalists.

"That the workingmen of Hamilton refrain from giving support to either of the political parties in the future, until such time as they secure by legislation, not promises, their rights.

"The flag of liberty unfurl,
To float throughout our land,
From power traitors hurl
And let the righteous stand."

Now, I do not read this for the sake of condemning the Government for anything they may have done, but simply to prove that there are persons in other parts of the Dominion than that of British Columbia who advocate the restriction and even the prohibition of Chinese laborers, and some even go so far as to ask that we expel those who are already here.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BAKER. When the House rose at six o'clock, I was endeavoring to follow, with soft and humble tread, the remarks of the Secretary of State. He made reference to the report of the special commission appointed in the United States in 1876-77. I have not the advantage of having perused that document, because, like many other documents, I find it is not in the Library at the present moment; but I am convinced that the general tone of that report was strongly anti-Chinese, so far as the United States were concerned, and led to the legislation which followed in 1880. The hon. gentleman also referred to the pressure which had been brought to bear by the Local Legislature of British Columbia, as embodied in the representations made on 9th May, 1876, and subsequently on 31st July, 1878. Those were also with a view to the enactment of restrictive legislation upon the Chinese question. I think that while we are discussing this subject, which is the most important that can possibly be discussed in this House, so far as British Columbia, an important part of this vast Dominion, is concerned, it is only fair that those who have preceded us in this House should have credit for the utterances they have made and for their humble, though, up to the present, fruitless, endeavors to secure that legislation which I am now happy to say we are really about to secure for our Province. On 8th March, 1878, Mr. Bunster, who is well and no doubt favorably known to a good many members, took up the question, and moved a resolution to the effect that a clause should be inserted in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that no Chinese should be employed upon that work. I notice also, on referring to Hansard, that the ex-leader of the Government of that day (Mr. Mackenzie), and also Mr. Thompson and the present Sir Charles Tupper, spoke on that motion, and did not think the time had arrived, in consideration of the fact that no detriment should be placed in the way of the contractors prosecuting the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when such a clause should be placed in the contract. I notice that one of the previous representatives of Victoria district (Mr. DeCosmos) did not speak on that occasion. The resolution of Mr. Bunster was in these terms:

"That the Government insert a clause in each and every contract let for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that no man wearing his hair longer than 5½ inches shall be eligible for employment on said work, under a penalty varying from $100 to $1,000, or imprisonment for three and twelve months respectively, &c., &c."

Later, on 24th February, 1879, Mr. DeCosmos enquired if the "Act (passed by the Local Legislature) to provide for the better collection of Provincial taxes from Chinese," last Session, would be disallowed or not, and was informed by the Ministry of the day that said Act and other Acts of the Legislature of British Columbia were then under the consideration of the Government; and further, that the Act to which the enquiry had reference had been declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court of British Columbia, or one of the judges thereof, and that said decision had not been appealed from. On 16th April, 1879, Mr. DeCosmos moved that the petition of N. S. and some 1,500 others, respecting Chinese labor, be considered in Committee of the Whole, but with a view to arriving at a more practical conclusion than could possibly be attained in committee, he asked the House to allow him to substitute for said resolution (of which notice had been given) the following resolution, and by that means refer the matter to a special committee: That the petition from N. S. and others of the Province of British Columbia, praying for the passing of an Act to restrict further immigration of Chinamen; also, that in the construction of the Intercolonial Railway the employment of Chinese labor may be prohibited; and that the Act of the Provincial Government of British Columbia, in placing the local rate upon the Chinese in the country, may be confirmed, be referred to a select committee, to report on the same and generally on Chinese labor and immigration as affecting the Dominion, with power to send for persons and papers; said committee to consist of Messrs. DeCosmos, Williams, Charlton, Bunster, Bannerman, Trow, Brooks, Thompson and Connell. The motion was agreed to. I beg to state, although I have sought for that report, I have been unable to find it, and I am not in a position to say whether any special report from the select committee was ever laid before the House. I am, however, credibly informed that a short report, tending in the direction in which we are now walking, was laid before the House and embodied in the Votes and Proceedings. On 24th March, 1880, Mr. DeCosmos moved that all petitions respecting Chinese, presented to this House during present Session, be printed in Votes and Proceedings, which was so amended as to read "be printed for use of members." If that has been done, I have also been unsuccessful in my research. I may say that I desire to place these facts and dates on record, as they are of the highest importance to our constituents and also to the people generally of British Columbia, who are so thoroughly absorbed at the present time on this Chinese question. On 21st April, 1880, Mr. DeCosmos again moved for select committee to be appointed, to whom should be referred all petitions presented to the House during the then present Session respecting Chinese immigration, who shall report on the same, and generally on Chinese labor and immigration, as affecting the Dominion; with power to send for persons and papers, and to report from time to time; said committee to consist of Messrs. DeCosmos, Williams, Charlton, Bannerman, Brooks, Trow, Ouimet, Thompson, Connell, McInnes, Schultz, five of whom are to form a quorum. The motion was agreed to. I have been very desirous to see this report of the select committee, but I have been unable to find it, and I therefore can only conclude that no report was presented to the House. On 17th February, 1881, Mr. Bunster moved for a return of the duties collected on rice and powder for the year, and he entered at some length into the Chinese question. The hon. gentleman at that time endeavored to show that the duty had been taken off rice and retained on gunpowder, thereby placing the miners of British Columbia at a considerable disadvantage, so far as the Chinese were concerned. On 14th March, 1881, Mr. Bunster objected to the Chinese being included in the Bill for the naturalisation of aliens. On 12th April, 1882, in Committee of Supply, under the head of immigration, some further slight references were made by Mr. Bunster to this important subject. On 12th May, 1882, Mr. DeCosmos again refers to Chinese immigration, and quotes the United States Bill of 1876-77, to which the Secretary of State has referred, and also to the enactments of Australia, whereby £10 per head is charged upon all Chinamen coming to the colony, and also a restrictive Act, making it impossible for more than one Chinaman for every 100 tons of the tonnage of a vessel to enter the colony. Again, on 13th May, 1882, Mr. Bunster refers to the subject on a question of privilege, and objects to the duty being taken off rice while that on powder remained. Now, in the Session of 1883, this matter, as everybody is doubtless aware, was brought up in this House; and again, in 1884, not only by myself and colleague, but by every member coming here from the Province of British Columbia, and we endeavored to show, and I think successfully, that it was important, not only to the Province of British Columbia, but to the Dominion at large, that some such legislation as we are now discussing should be enacted. Even as recently as 1884 the Legislature of British Columbia enacted a law upon this subject. The principal feature to which I shall refer was that embodied in the preamble of the measure, in which they assert, rightly or wrongly, that the Local Legislature has something to do with legislation of that nature. I find, in the proceedings of that Legislature, referring to this subject, they say:

"Instead of sustaining the action of the Provincial Government and Legislature and that of the members of British Columbia in the Federal Parliament on the subject of the prohibition of Chinese immigration, the Dominion Government appointed a commission, composed of the hon. Mr. Chapleau, Secretary of State for the Dominion, and the Hon. Mr. Justice Gray, of this Province, to enquire into and report upon the Chinese question. The enquiry did not seem to be so thorough as, if undertaken at all, the importance of the subject fairly demanded that it should have been. It is to be hoped, however, that hurried and imperfect as the enquiry in this Province was, sufficient information has been obtained by the commissioners to induce them to report to the Federal Government the urgent need of restrictive legislation being undertaken during the ensuing session of the Dominion Parliament. It will be for you to consider whether, in view of the Chinese Immigration Act passed last Session having been disallowed by the Dominion Government, it is advisable to repeat legislation on the subject during the present Session."

This appears in the speech of the Lieutenant Governor to the Legislature. Further on, during the Session of that Legislature, I find that they again took up the subject of Chinese immigration, notwithstanding the fact that the previous Act passed in 1883 had been disallowed. The petition ran in these words :

"That we view with great alarm the thousands of Chinese coolies continually arriving in the Province of British Columbia, and while we regard this country as free to every man seeking an opportunity to better his condition in life, we deem it but just and right that those who come to our shores shall not be such as to work injury to the moral and material welfare of the Dominion.

"That the unlimited admission of the race of people known as Chinese coolies does work such injury to our country, for the following reasons :
 "That they do not come to make a home or settle in the country, or to add to the country's wealth ; but to prey upon our natural resources, and take what they earn out of the country.

"That they are leprosy in blood and unclean in habits.
 "That they are destructive of the means by which the white mechanical and laboring classes earn a living wage.

"That there are immoral practices, debasing habits and contagious diseases, peculiar to this people, which they have already introduced to an alarming extent upon this continent, and against which we have a right to defend ourselves and our children

"We therefore humbly pray for the enactment of such laws as will prohibit any further introduction of this undesirable class of people into any part of the Dominion of Canada."

Now, that is the opinion expressed by the representatives of the Province of British Columbia, 26 in number, in the Local House of Parliament. These gentlemen represent, collectively, exactly the same people, precisely the same country, identically the same wants and requirements of those people that we represent in this Federal Parliament ; and they thus stated their objection to the introduction of any more Chinese into that Province. I do not give these utterances altogether as my own, because I do not go quite to the same extent, as regards the leprosy in the blood, or the unclean habits of the Chinese, as I am not familiar with those facts. Personally, I have never seen any Chinaman with leprosy, nor am I as well posted as some gentlemen in this House may think I ought to be, living so much among them, upon the unclean habits of that race. But for as much as this testimony is worth, I have read it, because it emanates from a constitutional authority existing in the Province of British Columbia. Later on during the Session, I notice the following :—

"That we are glad to hear, too, the chief commissioner was also instructed by His Honor to urge upon the Dominion Government the absolute necessity of either recognising the right of the Province to legislate, with a view of checking the increase of Chinese in our midst, or, failing that, to induce the Dominion Government to substitute effective federal legislation calculated to remedy the evil complained of."

Now, in view of these utterances, hon. gentlemen in this House can quite understand why we are so strenuous in our endeavors and so loud in our efforts to secure that legislation which we desire, individually as well as collectively. I notice in the Debates of the Local House that they complained somewhat bitterly that after legislation on this subject should have passed, to the effect that the time had arrived that legislation should ensue for restrictive and regulative measures affecting the Chinese, the Dominion Government, in their wisdom, should have seen the necessity of appointing that commission at all. However, I am willing to bow to the greater wisdom of the combined rulers of this confederacy, and to say that they must be in a better position to know why, after the resolution which was passed, it was necessary to send that commission out to make further investigation or glean additional facts. One thing is certain : the result of that commission has been the production of a very nice volume, called a report on Chinese immigration. It is highly interesting, and a good deal that is in it is certainly true. A good deal of it has been collated from such persons as have only taken a one-sided view of the disabilities of which we complain. Later on, on the 9th of February, 1884, I see they again passed a resolution in the Local House, setting forth the reasons why restrictive if not prohibitive legislation with regard to the Chinese should be adopted by this Parliament. Again on the 25th February, 1885, in the latter part of their Votes and Proceedings, I find these expressions :

"The Chinese are alien in sentiment and habits.

"2. They do not become settlers in any sense of that word. They have no intention of permanently settling in the country, but come for the purpose of trading and laboring, in order to return to their native country with the means to pass the remainder of their days in ease. The Chinese population chiefly consists of male adults, and thus—without the responsibility of providing for a family—they come in unfair competition with white labor.

"They are the slaves or coolies of the Chinese race, accustomed to live on the poorest fare and in the meanest manner, and hence their presence tends to the degradation of the white laboring classes.

"Their presence exerts a baneful influence in restricting the immigration of white labor, and especially in the class of house servants, who will not be brought into contact with this race.

"They have a system of secret societies which encourages crime amongst themselves, and which prevents the administration of justice."

This is another matter which I am not prepared to say, of my own knowledge, actually exists ; but in the opinion of a great many in British Columbia, and certainly in Victoria, whenever a Chinaman or a gang of Chinamen are suspected of a theft or a murder, or any other atrocious crime, there is always a difficulty in getting sufficient evidence among them to convict the offender, or even to discover who the principal culprit is.

"The use of opium has extended throughout the Province, to the demoralisation of the native races, and the Chinese encourage the use of this drug amongst others of our own rising population.

"And we urgently request that some restrictive legislation be passed to prevent our Province from being completely overrun by Chinese.

"And that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the honorable the Speaker of the House of Commons of Canada."

On the 2nd March, 1885, the foregoing expressions were again reiterated in the Chamber of said Assembly and (being a reproduction it is unnecessary to embody them in these remarks) formed the principal feature of the resolution then passed, viz :

"That the following address be forwarded by the Speaker to his Excellency the Governor General in Council :—

"We, the Legislative Assembly of the Province of British Columbia, extremely regret the disallowance of the Act for the prevention of the immigration of Chinese, passed at its last Session.

"The disallowance of the Act, according to the correspondence, did not proceed from a view of its being unconstitutional, but because the Act was regarded as inexpedient.

"We see nothing to change the carefully considered representations and opinions which we have heretofore expressed on the Chinese question, and which from time to time have been communicated to and urged upon the Dominion Government."

Now, although I have not had time to read the whole of the Chinese report which has been presented to this House, I think my residence of twelve years in the Province of British Columbia enables me to speak with some authority on this subject without the labor of reading such a massive volume as that report. But even in that report reference is made to the fact that there exists among the Chinamen the excessive use of opium, which is being disseminated to a great extent among the juniors of the white population. I think these facts speak for themselves, and show that it is highly desirable that a class whose habits are such as are described here should, if possible, be prohibited from coming into a civilised country at all. But that in any case they should be restricted. Some of the evidence in the Chinese report is of a very tentative nature ; some of it is very much in favor of restrictive measures. I notice, particularly at page 188, the evidence given by Mr. King, a merchant of San Francisco, in which he says :

"All Chinese coolies embark at Hong Kong. Have superintended the examination of immigrants to comply with the coolie laws of the United States Government, which law enables the consul to exact large fees from every coolie, which the ships pay, and requires them to charge more charter money. * * * On their arrival they are packed like hogs to such companies, having his contract vised, and commences his fees to ensure the care of sick, and return, dead or alive, but not his pay from the contractor, but that he shall fill his part, if able to compel him, the coolies, to do it, or prevent his return until he does. When breaking his contract the companies' spies hound him to prevent his return to China, by arranging with the steamship company, or through Chinese in the steamship company's employ, to prevent his getting a ticket, and if obtained by others for him, he will be forcibly stopped on the day of sailing by a large force of the six companies' highbinders, who can always be seen guarding them. Highbinders are men employed by these companies here to hound and spy upon these Chinese, and pursue them, if they do not comply with their contract, as they see fit to judge it. * * * The principal reason why other sections of China do not come here is the enmity and the cause of trouble arising between the two sections or adjoining counties, as now here, and the greater ignorance of this country, because those speak a different dialect from the other sections of China."

If this statement is correct, as I believe it to be, inasmuch as there are some nineteen Provinces in China proper, and at least eight different dialects, it appears to me that there will be very great difficulty in selecting an interpreter who will be able thoroughly to understand the dialects of the Chinamen who come from various parts of China. Further on, in his evidence, he says:

"Not half a dozen legitimate families can be found in the Pacific States among the Chinese. Often women who have been bought bear children, who are cared for and treated as their children, care being bestowed to raise them, especially if males. The companies only know how many Chinese women are in this country, and they never tell, fearing an outcry. Few come, except from Chinese brothels, or raised for prostitution in China, which is a business there. On arrival they are sold to live with some one man in the city or the interior, or live in some brothel in the city."

And so on. (See pages 188 to 195 of the printed report of the Royal Commission on Chinese immigration, appointed by Government of Canada.) In that testimony, which is embodied in the report of the Chinese commissioners, I think there is sufficient to show that the Chinese women are not, like Cesar's wife above suspicion, and that there exists among the Chinese, both male and female, a very low scale of morality. The hon. Secretary of State, in his remarks, did not place any very great stress upon their immorality. In fact, if I remember correctly what he said, he gave the House to understand that their morals were certainly no worse than those of the corresponding grade of white men. That I take exception to, because I know, from living in a part of the world where they are to be found in great numbers, that their morals are almost beyond description. In fact, to thoroughly describe their state of immorality I should have to use language that would entitle me to be called to order; and I shall therefore not attempt it, but leave hon. gentlemen to draw their own conclusions. It is pleasing, however, to know that the legislation which has already taken place in the Australian colonies of Victoria and New South Wales to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration into those portions of Her Majesty's dominions have been assented to by Her Majesty, and that with regard to the legislation we are about to adopt Imperial objections, as the hon. Secretary of State has informed us, have been entirely waived, so that it entirely rests with the hon. members of this House to say whether or not a particular Province, laboring under so great and peculiar disabilities as those I have been endeavoring to describe, shall have legislation which will remove those disabilities. The Local Government have at various times protested against the influx of Chinese into British Columbia; they have sent memorial after memorial on the subject, and the people have done the same thing; the municipalities have also protested against the influx of Chinese. Therefore, I cannot conceive that any more testimony is required to prove that the whole people, with very few exceptions—the exceptions being those who are interested in certain industries that require Chinese labor and who desire to get the greatest amount of work for the smallest amount of money possible—raise no objection to the legislation now before the House. In order to show the objection to Chinese in different parts of the world, the hon. the Secretary of State was good enough to refer to what took place in Manila some years ago. There he clearly shows that the Chinese were in the habit of making very great encroachments on the rights of the white people. To such an extent did they do this that the Spaniards, in 1603, massacred about 23,000 of them. Subsequently, another 30,000—because it is an easy matter for a population varying from 450,000,000 to 500,000,000 to supply the gap caused by the death, whether rightly or wrongly, of 23,000—came to that island, but these also, the hon. gentleman stated, in 1709, were expelled. In the spring of 1762 they came to the front again, and eventually tried to conquer that island. The hon. gentleman also referred to Java, Singapore, Penang, Malacca and the Australian colonies, and to the Acts passed by them. All these references clearly show, to my mind, it is utterly impossible to keep down the aspirations of the Chinese race; they show that if the Chinese have the opportunity to grasp (their motto being "that they should take who have the power, and they should keep who can") as it were, everything that comes in their way, no matter at what sacrifice or by what means, they will certainly secure everything they can. What an unfortunate position would this place British Columbia in, situated as she is, so far from the centre of the Dominion. We have frequently in this House had it cast in our teeth that the population of British Columbia is very sparse; that, in fact, there are not more than 26,000 or 28,000 whites there. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) was good enough, on one occasion, to tell the House that the Province of British Columbia did not possess more than 10,000 white people. In that he was vastly in error, because there are certainly from 26,000 to 30,000 white people in that Province. Unless some such restrictive Act as this is put in force, there never will be, notwithstanding the closely approaching completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a very large influx of population into British Columbia. Unless the Chinese are first removed, so as to admit of the possibility of white people coming in, with a fair prospect of success in settling the Province and in labor competition, the immigration of this desirable class will not reach any figure worth mentioning. The Governments in Victoria and in New South Wales, as everybody in this House knows, have been allowed by the Imperial Government to restrict the importation of Chinese, and their legislation has had the desired effect, of not only keeping out that undesirable class, but of affording a great impetus to the influx of the population which it is desirable and necessary these colonies should have, in order that their development may be promoted. I have no doubt the same results will follow from the legislation which I feel certain this House is about to give us. The hon. the Secretary of State, in his remarks, referred to the matter of dress. He said that objections cannot be taken to the dress of the Chinese. Certainly not. I do not know that anybody in British Columbia has ever taken exception to the dress worn by the Celestials. On the contrary, the general opinion is that it is a very cool, airy, clean and becoming dress, to the fellow who wears it. The hon. gentleman says that exception cannot be taken to the way in which they wear their hair. I think not, because their head is shaven very close, leaving enough hair to be brought down and plaited in what is commonly known as the pig-tail. No doubt this fashion of wearing the hair is very clean, and more particularly when one of this unfortunate class is thrust into prison, it is very easy to keep it clean. The hon. gentleman also said no one could object to their religion. I agree with him that no one can take exception, because we know very little about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because they have none.

Mr. BAKER. They claim to have some, I believe. The Mongolian worships a god of his own, and therefore he has, I suppose, what he is pleased to term religion. It is not to be found in the evidence taken before the commission that anybody objected to their religion. I do not think that such a factor has ever been, in legislation, even the most unimportant question of consideration. Their mode of living certainly is a matter to be complained of, for the simple reason that they can and do live—or, rather, they exist—upon certainly not anything more extravagant than about 20 cents a day, and I think in that estimate I am allowing them possibly 5 cents a day more than they really spend. At this rate, the Chinaman can really live in his way luxuriously for about $6 a month. The hon. the Secretary of State referred also to what they pay for their cabins, which, he said, was $2 a month. My colleague (Mr. Shakespeare) corrected that statement. In fact, there were several statements made by the Secretary of State which I would like to have corrected, but innate modesty and parliamentary courtesy prevented me from interrupting his eloquent speech. As a matter of fact, they do pay $2 a month for their cabins, but not individually; they pay collectively. For instance, Chang Wah or Wang Key may take one of these cabins, and then he gets all his cousins into it, as many as they can pack, like sardines in a box, and they divide $2 monthly rental among them; so that, taking an average of ten for a cabin, which is a fair estimate for an ordinary cabin, each man pays 20 cents a month. I am sure their clothing does not cost $2.50 a month each, so that the whole thing would be something under $9. The Secretary of State places it at $11. I consider, and I believe I am speaking strictly within the figures, that $9 is as much as they ever spend upon themselves per month. Then, again, the Secretary of State said that the average maintenance would be about $25 a month. I suppose, to a certain extent, he may be right: that is, if you take only those who work for wages, but there are those who are in business, who carry on the opium trade, and who carry on the business of first-class Chinese merchants, and if you take an average of the earnings of those merchants, and those who have gardens, out of which they reap large profits, and combine it with the average of the working men, you will find that the average wage-earning of the Chinese is very much higher than the estimate given by the Secretary of State. The same hon. gentleman certainly did the Chinamen the credit to say that they were essentially a liberal race. Their liberality is certainly unbounded, in anything that pertains to display, but I have never known, in the city of Victoria, any Chinaman give anything substantial to a church, a charitable institution, a hospital, a Protestant orphans' home, a Roman Catholic orphans' home, or any of those institutions which do so much good in any country. A Chinaman seldom or ever puts his hand in his pocket for a 10 cent piece for such a purpose. Therefore, their liberality is confined exclusively to one kind, that of display. If the Governor General were going there to-morrow, or any member of the Cabinet, John Chinaman would come out most liberally to entertain them, putting up most magnificent arches, and doing anything for display. Anything that pleases the eye of the Chinamen they are willing to pay for, and they are very frequently known to go in for those displays at the expense of their stomachs. It is not so when they are domestic servants. Then John Chinaman obtains and enjoys as good a dinner as anyone else, and frequently eats more heartily, knowing he has not to pay for it. My colleague (Mr. Shakespeare) mentioned the fact this afternoon, that within the last month two vessels arrived in Royal Roads, port of Victoria, and that on board of these vessels there were 900 Chinamen. To be precise, on the 22nd June, 907 Chinese arrived in the port of Victoria, B.C., by sailing vessel direct from Hong Kong and by mail steamer from San Francisco. They represent, says the Colonist:

"Nine hundred and seven individual reasons why the Chinese Restriction Act should be strictly enforced. The following are the names of the vessels, with number of Chinese brought:—

Alden Besse , Captain O'Brien.....	386
W. H. Besse , Captain Gibbs.....	436
Martha , Captain McPherson.....	35
Queen of Pacific , Captain Alexander.....	80
	907

To whom this large lot of Celestials is consigned is not known, though it is believed that Tai Chong & Company have a considerable number of them."

Each of said vessels brought about 500 tons of a general cargo. The Colonist concludes by saying:

"How these Chinese are to be disposed of is hard to imagine, considering the fact that this fall will see work on the Canadian Pacific Railway finished, and Island Railway construction will also be completed in about nine months; we have altogether too many Chinese in this country now, and this recent consignment is like adding the last straw."

He did not state how many were males and how many were females; but I will state, without fear of successful contradiction, that there were not 10 females in the whole 900. Hon. gentlemen in this House know that we are all human, and that we all have our human failings, and so great a disparity between the males and females of an importation like that is not likely to lead to any result which would stand decent criticism; but it would be a little impolitic and lacking in good taste, under the circumstances, to discuss it in this House with so many ladies in the galleries. I shall, therefore, leave hon. gentlemen to draw their own inferences from so great a disparity between the male and female importation of Chinese, not only into British Columbia but into every part of the world. There is no doubt, in one regard, that the Secretary of State is right. I will not say that he is only right in one regard, but he is very pointedly so in one regard, and that is, that the trades' unions and working class associations are much more opposed to the immigration of the Chinese element than we are, who occupy professional positions, or are engaged in trade, for the simple reason that we are all likely, in this world, to sing out when the shoe pinches, and no doubt it does pinch the white laborer much more than it does those who employ the Chinese as domestic servants, or in canneries, or in boot factories, or in other occupations. They are brought into infinitely closer and keener competition with the Chinese and consequently are much more vociferous in their declamation and exclamation than we are, who do not feel so pointedly the grievance under which they suffer. The hon. the Secretary of State also made the remark, and I do not say this in an offensive way, because everyone in this House speaks the truth, or comes as near to it as he possibly can, that the difference in the feelings, the sentimental part, as between the white and the Chinese race, will never allow them to assimilate. The Indian, I think, in our part of the world, is the nearest approach to the Chinaman, and yet they never seem to chum up. They are never seen together. Although there are a very large number of Indian women, Chinamen never marry them, or in any way are brought into—I will not say close proximity—but have not any kind of intercourse, with them. They disassociate entirely. They have no trade relations, no relations of any kind. If that is the case, how much less likely is it that the Chinaman and the whiteman will assimilate? I would like to ask any hon. gentleman in this House if he would like to live in the same room with a Chinaman?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). You would? Then there is no accounting for taste. I think, from what we know of the Chinese race, what we know personally, and what has been told us in this House by those who represent the constituencies where those individuals so largely predominate, there is sufficient to convince us that they are a most undesirable class to be brought into our midst, and that they will never become permanent settlers. In fact, although the Secretary of State says that possibly $43 a year is about all they take out, I know for a fact, from the statistics in the banks, that the ordinary Chinaman who works for monthly wages saves certainly from $20 to $25 a month, that is about $300 a year; and about every three years, or certainly every four years, regular batches of these Chinamen go away, with from $750 to $1,000 in their pockets. They obtain drafts from the banks in Victoria upon the banks in Hong Kong, and away they go, and the place which knew them once knows them no more, for ever—but they send back their cousins; so that, after they have sucked the orange and thrown away the peel, they send others to do the same; and in that way the population of British Columbia will not only be of an undesirable class, unless it is restricted, but it will never consist of anything but a transient population. The Secretary of State also made reference to some conversation which he had, either with an Englishman or with several Englishmen, and stated that they had given utterance to some such expression as this: that you know very well Englishmen are essentially arbitrary, despotic, and even sometimes cruel. Now, I deny that impeachment. I rejoice that I am an Englishman, and, although by adoption a Canadian and a representative of a Canadian constituency, still an Englishman, and I do not like to hear those things said about Englishmen, which are far from being the case. I have no doubt the hon. the Secretary of the State said it inadvertently, and not with the intention of giving offence to me individually or to any other Englishman, any more than I would say anything offensive to or of a Frenchman; but he recounted a conversation which he had had, which led to the conclusion that, in a colony which is essentially British and thoroughly loyal, as loyal as any Province in the Dominion, to the British Crown, those Englishmen who are there, (and they are a people composed principally of Englishmen), have made up their minds to this: We are going to have the Chinamen out of the country, at any rate. To a certain extent he is right when he speaks of the laboring classes. There is no doubt that they are—to use the expression that was used the other day about the temperance people—intoxicated with their success. The laboring classes at the present time are very strongly anti-Chinese, and they may be led away with their success to do almost anything, not only to restrict those who are coming in but to drive out those who are in. Now, this does not refer to those right-thinking Englishmen of which that community mainly consists, and who are composed principally of the better class of mechanics and the upper middle classes. I have already stated that we are not without precedent for legislation of this character. In Victoria, Australia, and in New South Wales, Acts have been passed, and on the 5th August, 1882, the United States passed a prohibitory measure to last for ten years. Now, if we were to pass a prohibitory measure for ten years, I think there would be no necessity after that for either restrictive or regulative legislation at all. However, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied with the honesty of purpose and the good intention of the Government in bringing forward this measure at the earnest and persistent requests of the British Columbia members in this House, and I think the people of British Columbia will be satisfied that if it does not give all they want it will, at least, be the thin end of the wedge, and they will hope that it will be well driven home. The Secretary of State also referred to the treaty ports of Canton, Shanghai, Amoy, Foo-choo-foo, Ning Po (and Hong Kong, of course being a British possession since the treaty of 1840-41.) Now, as I suggested last year, if the Minister of Agriculture, who so ably seconded the introduction of this Bill, would throw open only the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, St. John and Niagara, as those through which Chinese immigrants might come into this country, and then let them filter through the Eastern Provinces and through the United States, British Columbia would never be troubled with any of them. I think if these ports were thrown open as those only through which the Mongolians might enter the Dominion of Canada, very few of them would ever reach British Columbia, and then, possibly, no such legislation as we are now advocating would be needed. The Secretary of State also referred to the atrocities committed by the Irish under Dennis Kearney, in California, and that the Irish ruled everywhere except in Ireland. Now, I submit we cannot accept the breaches of the peace committed by, as he termed them, the lower order of the Irish in San Francisco, or any other part of California, as being the normal condition of things in this country. It is a very safe maxim that we should speak of a man as we find him. In British Columbia, although recently we have had mass meetings held and resolutions passed, some of them certainly very loud and declamatory in their nature, and although there may have been some threats of harsh measures if legislation did not ensue, I do not think that in the minds, and certainly not in the hearts, of those people, was there any thought of perpetrating such acts as have been committed in California. Now, to show that the Local Legislature of British Columbia represent the popular sentiment in asking for this legislation, I would mention that not long ago the municipal council of Victoria—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh! carried!

Mr. BAKER. If I am a little tedious on this subject, it is because I believe that of all the measures introduced into this Parliament since British Columbia entered the Confederation there has never been one so important as that which we are now discussing, to the people of British Columbia, and therefore I am desirous of placing on record, not only the utterances of public men, but also the expression of public bodies. On the 12th March of this year, the municipal council of Victoria passed resolutions in respect to this matter, of which I have received a copy, and I believe that all the other members of British Columbia are often in receipt of similar complaints from their constituents about the Chinese. The letter accompanying this resolutions says:

"I beg to hand you copy of resolution passed at a public meeting held in the City Hall, Thursday evening last, the 5th instant; also a resolution passed by the municipal council at their regular meeting held last evening, in relation to the report of the Chinese Commission, which I have been instructed to forward to you."

Now these resolutions are not passed in order that the clerk of the municipality may have the pleasure of writing me an official letter and sending them to me for my own benefit and special edification. He certainly expects me, in my representative capacity, to do something with them, and I conceive it to be my duty to inform the hon. members of this House what those resolutions contain:

"Whereas, the reports and recommendations made by the commissioners upon the question of Chinese immigration are such as to render it necessary that this council as the representatives of the municipality of the city of Victoria, should bring before our representatives at Ottawa our great disappointment at and disapproval of the conclusions arrived at by the commissioners, Messrs. Chapleau and Gray, and express, at the same time, the views of this council thereon, and on the question generally, in order that further efforts may be encouraged for the accomplishment of the unqualified and repeatedly expressed wish of the people here, through their representatives, to prevent, by Act of Parliament, the immigration of Chinese into this Province.

"Be it therefore resolved, that this council record its unreserved dissent from the recommendations made by the commissioners, to continue to allow Chinese to come into this Province in large numbers upon the terms named by them."

The terms named by them are not such as are embodied in this Bill, but such as appear in the report, more particularly in the report of Mr. Justice Gray, who thought a small fine of $10, or what is commonly known as head money, to that amount, should be exacted from every Chinaman entering the Province. At that time the people of the city of Victoria were under the impression that the recommendations of the commission would be the extent of legislation in this House during the present Session. That is the reason the resolutions were passed. They go on to say:

"That in the opinion of this council the findings of the commissioners are not justified by the facts: that the presence of Chinese is and has been highly injurious to the industrial population of the Province, and that our representatives in the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa be requested to bring to the notice of the Dominion Government the views expressed in this resolution, and urge upon them, by every constitutional means at their command, the necessity that still exists for immediate legislation to restrict the immigration of Chinese into Canada as being antagonistic to the moral, social and material well being, not only of this Province, but of the Dominion at large."

Although I am sorry to detain the House with these details, owing to the unprecedentedly prolonged Session, I know that if any other member were placed in the position which I occupy in regard to this all-absorbing topic of Chinese immigration, he would pursue precisely the same course as I am adopting. I may state frankly to hon. gentlemen that I am not placing this matter in such punctiliously minute detail before the House for the sake of what is known as political clap-trap, because I am free to confess that if I should run another election, and the people who sent me here do not feel inclined to be satisfied with the candid expressions of the individual and the honest working of that individual, they are very welcome to send some one else in my place, and I do not know but that I would profit by it myself more largely than anyone else. But I certainly apprehend it to be my duty, as these resolutions were sent by a representative institution to me as a representative, to lay them before the House, so that hon. members may have in their possession as many facts as possible. The resolutions go on to say:

"Whereas the action of the commissioners, Messrs. Chapleau and Gray, appointed to enquire into the Chinese question, has, to a great extent, failed to recommend such measures as would be calculated to remedy the evil effects of the presence of Chinese in our midst, and if their recommendations were to be wholly acted on by the Government of Canada, it would necessarily fail to accomplish the object desired.

"Be it therefore resolved, that this meeting mark its disapproval of such portion of the commissioners' report and recommendation as shall be contrary to the wishes of the people of the Province, and that our representatives in Parliament be requested to urge upon the Government the necessity of immediately adopting the strongest restrictive measures as to Chinese immigration."

These resolutions were moved at that meeting by Mr. Duck, member of the Provincial Parliament, now Minister of Finance of the Province, and seconded by Mr. Theodore Davie, also a member of the Provincial Parliament, and they are certified to by Mr. R. P. Rithet, the mayor of Victoria. There can be no doubt, therefore, as to the authenticity and reliability of the resolutions I have read. I do not wish to inflict on the House all the material I have here, because we have arrived at a period of the Session when we desire to return to our homes, and no one is more anxious to get home than I am myself. At the same time, when we consider that some fifty-seven days were occupied in "Franchisee," as some hon. members called it, I need not make any great apology for inflicting on them in return a little Chinese. We have also received telegrams from our constituents, because they are, to a certain extent, uninformed even in substance, let alone details, as to what legislation is about to be enacted with respect to the Chinese, and they are even sceptical as to whether the Bill will pass or not. I have received the following telegram amongst others:—

"Mass open air meeting, citizens Victoria, last evening, four thousand people present, conclusion of appeal adopted. We demand that Chinese Restriction Bill be passed this Session, and it be so amended as to go into operation on 1st July, 1885. For years we have waited for this relief and our patience is exhausted. Full text forwarded by mail.

"(Signed) W. A. ROBERTSON."

I read these documents in common justice to those who sent them, and in order that the contents may be made known to the House and made matter of record. I shall not tire out the House by reading an excellent article from the "Resources of British Columbia," on this subject, but with the consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, I will hand it to the reporter to be included in these humble remarks:

"THE GREAT CHINESE QUESTION.

"The workingmen's meeting in Victoria on the Chinese question was remarkable, alike for the intelligence and eloquence of the speakers, and the order and moderation displayed.

"We were glad to notice that the workingmen have discovered the strength of their case does not lie in villifying the Chinese, and in raking up against them all kinds of accusations, both true and untrue, but in the great fact that it is with them, and with all of us, a question of how to avoid a desperate struggle for existence, and that, where the white man and the Chinese come into competition, the Chinese must prevail, unless the white man will descend to the same sordid level of his competitor. No doubt the white man can do a better day's work than the Chinaman, but the latter can beat him in being able to accept a continually descending scale of wages. The reason why the latter can do this is because the Chinese can herd together in the most contracted of habitations, if, indeed, their miserable abodes are worthy of being so called, and on account of their economical mode of living.

"It will be found, if our workingmen attempt to meet the Chinese on their own ground and accept Chinamen's wages, that the Chinese will accept lower and still lower wages, until the workingman is fully starved out. Besides, the Chinese are very clever workmen. What a Chinaman cannot do has yet to be determined. His imitative powers are extraordinary, and he is wanting neither in perception nor manual dexterity. What he now does and does so well, is often with little training and tools of the clumsiest description. With proper mechanical appliances and with a system of apprenticeship, it is hard to understand how any mechanic in the world, even the ill-paid mechanics of Europe, could exist side by side with such a competitor. It is, therefore, impossible for our workingmen to compete against the Chinese, and unless they receive the legislative protection to which they are entitled, they must leave the Province and seek a clime where Chinese are unknown.

"So patent is this to all thinking and observant minds, that we should be astounded at the blindness of most of our capitalists and merchants, if we were not well aware that they are blinded by that they consider their self-interests, and are utterly indifferent to the welfare of the workingman, so long as the Chinaman will work for them at less wages. We are willing to grant that a Chinaman will, on the whole, do his work more satisfactorily, in proportion to his wages, than the white man.

"He is not so strong as the white man, but then he works for half the money the white man asks, and he never 'sauces' his employer, and will keep steadily at work, seemingly indifferent to leisure. Granting that this is all true, what will the merchants and capitalists, who consider this so satisfactory an answer to the cry of 'the Chinese must go,' say, when their time comes to compete with the Chinese merchant and middleman, or 'compradore,' who will gladly accept a quarter of their profits, and who consider neither buggy-riding, yachting, nor even the Union Club, as belonging to the necessities of life. Will they then regard the question so complacently as one merely affecting the labor market? They are attempting to decry the movement as a mere political manoeuvre, and the workingmen as merely the tools of a political party, but they will find out their mistake before very long, and bitterly must they repent it if they do not discover it in time. Some time ago we were endeavoring to impress upon one of our most influential citizens the necessity of getting rid of the Chinese. His reply was: 'Well, but I really cannot see how we are to do without them. Somehow, we can treat a Chinaman almost as a woman. I can put a Chinaman in our kitchen and he is most useful there; but, you know, I could not do that with a white man, and there are no women to be had.' We will grant the truth of this reply as matters now stand, but it is eminently unsatisfactory, and the fault lies at the doors of those who make it. There are large numbers of young women, both in Canada and England, who would gladly come out and work at Chinamen's wages, as they stand at present if they were assured of employment when they arrived, and it would be very easy to establish an agency for the purpose (in London) of choosing honest and steady young women for such work. But the employers are indifferent in the matter—are accustomed to the Chinese and perhaps have got to prefer their homely features to those of a bright-faced girl. Our young women have been taught to look upon domestic service as 'Chinamen's work,' and to despise it accordingly, but if some eastern girl were introduced and the Chinese turned away, Victoria women would, after a time, look upon such employment in a different light. And this forms another and very serious grievance with our workingmen. A steady man, the man we most want, and who is certain to be of use to us, naturally looks forward to finding a wife, and, if he is wise, he well knows that he can find no better wife than among those women who have proved themselves the best servants and have become skilful household management. But this is also denied him. The woman who should become his wife is shut out by the very race that is crowding him out of his existence.

"A short time ago most of our capitalists were in a state bordering on panic, verging indeed on the contemptible, at the thought of the arrival of the Russians. They set up a great cry of 'To arms! To arms!'—towards—not the Chinese, whom they employ, but towards the white workingmen, who are going about in search of work, and who might starve for what they cared, and appealed to the loyalty of these men to volunteer to save their Queen! What loyalty can a man have towards a place that refuses him a home—that in reply to his cry for work gives him a stone? What loyalty is there to our Queen to protect a few men whose only God and Queen is themselves and their pockets?

"The workingman's reply was unanswerable—'You would have the Chinese, ask him to fight for you. We have nothing to lose, and our country is the country that will give us a living.' Her Majesty's birthday has just been celebrated with every outward token of the utmost loyalty.

"We venture to say, however, that loyalty so brilliantly displayed, is, in many of our capitalists and merchants, mere sentimental loyalty, if, indeed as much as that, which would not stand a test which would in any way affect their pockets. A good deal of money was, no doubt, spent upon the celebration, but with many the sole reason for contributing to the outlay has been to bring money into the city. We rejoice to see the day so celebrated, because such celebrations tend to create the loyalty that is so much wanting. But what loyalty can there be without deeds? To be loyal, we must begin by being loyal to one another, and the man who pretends to be loyal to his Queen and is loyal neither to his city nor his countrymen, is a thorough hypocrite. The Chinese are loyal to one another, and will always employ a Chinaman when it is possible—but many of our merchants, capitalists and contractors are loyal neither to the workmen nor to themselves. On the other hand, the workman is expected to be loyal to the merchants and to take up arms in their defence, even if he have to give up a situation which he has obtained with difficulty, and which will, he knows, be filled by a Chinaman, directly he gives it up. We remonstrated with one merchant, who employs a Chinaman as porter, on the shortsightedness of so doing, and he replied, in mock humility: 'You may be right, but what can I do? My standing in this city is not high for my example to be followed by any one, and if I do not do as others do I shall lose in the end.' This is true as regards the individual, but it is no excuse for the merchants. Some man, of greater acuteness than the rest, should call a meeting of the principle men and get them to pledge themselves not to employ any Chinamen, after a certain date, and not to rent any buildings to them. But this is not done, because, we suppose, what is everybody's business is nobody's business.

"In the San Francisco Chronicle of the 19th of March last, appeared a very interesting letter from the Hong Kong correspondent of that paper, which should serve as a warning to those of our citizens who are still so blind to the danger ahead of them.

"What he writes is fully borne out by what we learn from other sources. He tells us that in Hong Kong general merchandise is coming more and more into the hands of the Chinese, all the American firms have retired from it, and only two or three of the English and German companies are left. Competition is next to impossible. The Chinese sell nearly everything that is sold at the general retail shop, and usually at three-quarters or half the price. The Queen's road is the principal retail thoroughfare in Hong Kong. At the Chinese importing shops on the road the housekeeper can get his fine groceries, his wines, liquors, and everything needed to maintain a luxurious table, at prices at which no foreign dealer can afford to sell them. He can get his furniture made by cabinetmakers who keep by them and are constantly using the sample or pattern book of the best furniture firms in London. White cabinetmakers and carpenters are unknown there. A gentleman who wishes to be well clad has no occasion to go to a foreigner for any article of dress—the Chinese tailor absolutely swarms in Hong Kong. The Chinese shoemaker is quite as apt of hand as the Chinese tailor, and so engrosses the business that he has not a single foreign competitor. The mechanical skill of the Chinese is equally remarkable; they fill alike all branches of mechanical labor; they build junks, small steamers, tugs and steam launches, the last usually under foreign superintendence, and they are the sole workmen at the docks and machine shops. Their embroidery, their carvings in wood and ivory, their pottery and their silks, are famed all the world over. The Chinese build the houses in which the foreigners live, furnish and decorate them, and then clothe and serve the occupants themselves. The pleasure of being waited upon by a retinue of Chinese servants, the dolce far niente of life in a summer land, the servile homage offered by an apparently subject race, create an atmosphere of self-satisfaction, a kind of glamor, which renders invisible the tyranny of the real rulers, and the indescribable subjection of the white race, which is inevitable and not far distant. To hasten their own discomfiture, the English colonists are educating the Chinese in their public schools, and fitting them to hold the positions of clerks, book-keepers and other places that require intelligence and a certain amount of education. The result will be, that speaking English fluently, and easily acquiring the necessary amount of commercial knowledge, they will soon fill the counting houses of Hong Kong, as their untaught countrymen have filled the workshops and retail avenues of city business. The type-setting and the foreign job printing and newspapers in Hong Kong, as well as elsewhere in China (and here we personally feel the rub, for no trade or business squeaks until the Chinese infringe upon it), is all done by native compositors, with the exception of a few hybrid immigrants from Macao. The business of book-binding is all done by Chinese workmen, even where, as is sometimes the case, the establishment is the property of foreigners, but most of the book-binders where all kinds of blank books are made, and not a few of the printing offices also, are owned and entirely operated by Chinese. And now comes the rub for you, our blind selfish friends! The insurance business is gradually getting into the hands of the Chinese capitalists, and they will eventually capture and absorb the shipping business; they already furnish a large portion of the engineers and pilots doing duty on the small steam craft that ply in the harbors and for short distances along the coast. They understand the making and working of steam engines, and already two shipping companies have been formed, although with indifferent success.

"We have quoted the Hong Kong correspondent because we do not pretend to be disinterested in this vital question and no man is a prophet in his own country. He sounds the knell of Hong Kong and Victoria in the following words:—'With these facts before us, it is not hard to cast the horoscope of Hong Kong. As the Chinese population increases, the foreign element will gradually disappear, or be limited to fewer avenues of business. In twenty-five years there will not be a foreigner engaged in any branch of retail trade, and few firms in shipping, banking or taking insurance risks. Foreign mechanics, artisans and clerks will, long ere that, have disappeared, having been either pauperised or driven back to their native lands by cheap Chinese labor.'

Mr. BAKER (Victoria).

The foreign society of Victoria will comprise a few bankers, a few shippers, clinging by the eyelids to the wreck of ancient commercial interests, a dozen lawyers, principally supported by Chinese patronage; a handful of missionaries, a bevy of sleek and well-fed civil officials, and a few score officers in foreign flamingo uniforms, whose regiments will be needed to suppress guild riots and to aid the police.

"The question is, however, far too serious for any joking. All evidence points, as we have shown, to the certain destruction that will come upon all white traders in Victoria if our capitalists, both great and small, do not make common cause with the workmen. Standing aloof, as they are now doing, they must inevitably be discomfited. For either the workmen will succeed in their appeal to the workmen of the Dominion, and united they will prevail upon the Dominion Government to grant their just demands, or they will be defeated for want of the support which all true men are bound to afford them, and will be compelled, sooner or later, to leave British Columbia and abandon its capitalists to their just fate, of being, in their turn, crowded out by the ubiquitous Chinese.

"Chinatown is a terrible cancer in the very heart of Victoria and must be removed, whatever may be the cost, before it spreads itself over the whole of our fair city. We call, therefore, upon all our citizens to join, while there is time, the workmen in the movement, and as the workmen have, in their despair, appealed—and wisely, too—to their fellow-workmen of the rest of the Dominion, let our citizens bring all their influence to bear on the Dominion Government to grant the petition which has so long and so patiently been submitted to it. As to the workmen, we wish them every success, and advise those of the eastern Provinces to support their fellow-workmen in their distress, with all their heart and all their strength.

"The horse would not be the patient slave to man that he is if he knew his own strength, and the same may be said of the workman.

"Let our workmen steadily write, knowing no party, and agitate steadily, persistently, and with the same moderation as hitherto; and in the end victory must be theirs. Their strength is so great, if they did but know it, that they cannot fail when justice is with them."

Seven or eight years ago Mr. Bunster stated in this House that there were 3,000 Chinese in British Columbia. I may safely state, without fear of contradiction, that there are certainly five or six times that number now. Opinions differ as to how many there really are, because the Chinese always want to avoid, if possible, payment of what was formerly known as the school tax, but which is now known as the provincial revenue tax. Chinese merchants, to whom these people are consigned, do not care to have the exact number of Chinese in the city or Province known. But I find, on reference to the immigration report of last year, that the Dominion immigration agent for the Province of British Columbia says:

"Unfortunately, there were but few avenues of employment open till the island railroad was commenced in the fall, and numbers of men were thus disappointed in their expectations during the spring and summer months. Many of these called over and over again seeking work, and though willing to take Chinamen's wages, at almost any kind of labor these undesirable people are doing, yet they found it impossible to obtain employment."

Now, in the statistics which he gave, he shows that 3,183 Chinamen entered British Columbia from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1884; and I believe that that estimate is considerably under the mark. But that one donation to the present Chinese population of British Columbia, is equal to the Chinese population of the Province which existed 8 years ago, when this legislation was first sought in the Dominion Parliament. The immigration agent also says:

"Additions to the Chinese population number more than half as many again, as several Chinese from San Francisco were reported as steerage passengers and counted with the whites during the first part of the year. Nearly 200 of these people left this city a few days ago on the SS. Sardonyx, for Hong Kong. A few of them may probably return, but a large majority went home to reside permanently in China."

I mention these facts to show that the Chinese population of British Columbia not only is, but has been, steadily on the increase, year by year, and even within the last month testimony goes to show no less than 900 have been added to that particular class of immigrants. I also notice, in the report of the Minister of Mines, recently received, that during the year 1884 of the total number of people employed upon the various gold mines of the Province, 49 were white miners and 1,366 Chinamen, or pretty nearly three to one, in the following localities:

OARIBOO—BARKERVILLE DIVISION: Williams Creek, Mosquito and Red Gulch, Sugar and Hardacrabble Creeks, Lowhee Creek, Grouse and Canadian Creeks, Antler Creek (Upper and Lower), Cunningham

Creek (Upper), Conklin Gulch, Stouts Gulch, Steven's, Begg's and California Creeks—desultory mining. LIGHTNING CREEK DIVISION: Lightning Creek, Last Chance Creek, Van Winkle Creek, Chisholm Creek, Davis Creek, Ruchon Creek, Slough Creek and Devil's Canon, Nelson Creek, Burn's Creek, Peter's and Campbell's Creeks, Swift River and Fountain Creek, Deadwood and Barry Creeks, Cottonwood and Lower Lightning Creek—desultory mining. LILLOET—Fraser River (from Foster's Bar to mouth of Chilcotin River, including Bridge River).

YALE—Desultory mining on bars and benches of Fraser and Thompson Rivers.

KOOTENAY—Wild Horse Creek, Moyea River and tributaries, Palmer's Bar, Bull River, Canon Creek, Quartz Creek, Dutch Creek, Finlay Creek, Quartz Claims, Kicking Horse Section, Quartz Creek, Kootenay Lake.

OMINECA—Manson and other Creeks.

SKEENA—Lorne Creek.

In other words, of a total number of 1,900 people employed in these mines, no less than 1,366 were Chinamen; and so that if at any time they chose to show a hostile or revengeful spirit towards the whites, they outnumbered them three to one, and they might create a large amount of trouble, which it would be difficult to allay in those places. Now, as already stated, the Chinese come principally from Hong Kong, but there are other ports from which, if they do not come directly, they come by way of Hong Kong, and ship from there. It is easy to imagine, with a mail steamer plying between San Francisco and Victoria, which now runs every five or six days, between the months of April and November, vessels of from 1,800 to 2,200 tons—that even under the provisions of this Act they can and probably will bring in at least forty Chinamen per trip every five days. Now, taking into consideration the fact that prohibitory legislation is in force in the United States, it is reasonable to infer that those Chinamen, particularly in the State of California, will be very prone to find their way to the ports of British Columbia, and scatter themselves through the various districts of that Province. By the vessels I have mentioned there would be forty coming in every five days, which would be 240 a month, or something like 3,000 a year, from that source alone. But that is not the only source from which they could come. We have a steamer running between Portland and Victoria every fortnight or three weeks, and it is quite possible that even in that steamer, which is one of not more than 800 tons, a certain number would come from that particular direction. Then there are daily steamers of from 450 to 550 tons from Puget Sound, and each and every one will bring in some Chinamen, notwithstanding the restrictions of this Bill. Last, but not least, we have to guard against the wholesale importation from the Chinese ports direct, that is, in vessels which do not come for the sake of the freight on their cargoes, except their live cargoes of Chinamen. They come with the distinct knowledge that they will get so much per head for the passage money of so many Chinese coolies, or, in a more refined form, it is a species of slave traffic. They are sent from Hong Kong, Shanghai, or Canton, as the case may be, to the ports of British Columbia, and then distributed through the Province. There is also the fear that some may elect to go to California, and thus cause trouble between Canada and the United States. These have been known to come at the rate of from 650 to 800 in a vessel, and as many as ten vessels in two months. Now, I do not apprehend that they will come in as large numbers as that in future, because there will not be the supply of that class of immigrants, unless there is a demand or occupation for them. At the present time, I am happy to state the British Columbia section of the Canadian Pacific Railway is about completed, and the graving dock is also well under way. Both of these works have as many Chinamen employed as will be required for their completion, and if not there are many available from those already there, so that I think that we may fairly let the future, as regards contractors and their requirements in the matter of a Chinese working population, take care of itself. To show you how easy it is to have a large influx of Chinese population in British Columbia, I have only to mention the fact that these vessels that I have more recently referred to—sailing vessels, bringing almost exclusively live freights of Chinamen, can certainly make that passage in forty-two days from Hong Kong to Victoria. Now, with all these Chinese ports and other ports in such close proximity to British Columbia, it is much more probable, not only from the experience of the past, but from what we may reasonably apprehend in the future, that Chinese immigration will be, if not exclusively, almost entirely, directed to the Province of British Columbia, and that the rest of the Dominion will not feel tangibly that evil of which we so bitterly complain. Therefore, I think that inasmuch as this House has not only to legislate for individual Provinces, but that we are sent here to do the best in our humble endeavors for the benefit of the Dominion as a whole, it is clearly our duty to seriously take into consideration the representations which have been made by the members who represent that Province in this House, and give them, unless we see very good reasons why we should not, that which they so earnestly desire. Now, it will be a matter of some interest to this House to know that Shanghai is 5,220 miles from Victoria; Hong Kong, 5,760 miles; Canton, 5,880; Yokohama, Japan, 4,200; Hacdadie, Japan, 3,900; Auckland, New Zealand, 6,120; Sydney, Australia, 6,780; Melbourne, Australia, 7,260; Port Elizabeth, Australia, via Cape Horn, 10,860; Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, 2,340; Valparaiso, South Pacific, 5,880; Coquimbo, 5,760; and Iquiqui, 5,340. These are the shortest distances, being calculated on the arc of a great circle, which any mariners there may be in this House will know are the shortest distances upon which any vessel can sail. So that even with these distances between said places the Chinese ports are farther from British Columbia than British Columbia is from the capital of this Dominion, and still that Province is sufficiently well known to John Chiuaman to induce him to come over those long sea voyages of close on 6,000 miles to reach it. Now, it is not my intention to detain the House any longer upon these resolutions, as I have claimed the clemency of this House for a sufficient period. I shall not, therefore, inflict the House with any more extracts, although I have lots of them here, much as I would like to place them on record, by handing them to Hansard for insertion, so that my constituents might read them. We are at present, as I understand, simply debating the expediency of the resolutions before the House; the first is:

"That it is expedient to impose an entry fee or duty of $50 on every person of Chinese origin entering Canada."

That resolution I can heartily support. I would not like to see more than $50 imposed upon them, because I do not think it is expedient to make the monetary fine any heavier for the Province of British Columbia or the Dominion of Canada than that imposed by the colonies of Victoria and New South Wales. But with regard to the second resolution:

"That no vessel carrying Chinese immigrants to any port in Canada shall have more than one such immigrant for every 50 tons of its tonnage."

I think it would meet with greater favor in British Columbia if we made it one for every 100 tons. I have endeavored to show the large numbers that will come in, notwithstanding the restrictive legislation, and I think, owing to the number of sources from which they can be imported, that we should make this resolution a little more restrictive, and even then it will only be equally restrictive with the law in force in Australia, namely, one to every 100 tons. With regard to the third resolution :

I think it is certainly highly desirable that the master of a ship should be made as responsible for everything that pertains to freight of that kind as he is in the case of freight of every other kind. In conclusion, I have only a word to say about female domestic servants. It is said that a Chinaman will perform the same functions as three female domestic servants will perform. The Chinaman certainly will perform the functions of cook, gardener, housemaid, chambermaid, and almost every other kind of work that it is possible to mention. I have shown that other labor will not come until these fellows go—that it is necessary to restrict the immigration of the Chinese, so that the Department of Agriculture, Provincial and Dominion, may be successful in their endeavors to bring out a number of the much desired class of white female domestics; and I would like to know if there is an hon. gentleman in this House, although there are some who crack up the usefulness of the Chinese, who would not prefer a bright-eyed maiden to attend his table. I think there is not a gentleman in this House who would not infinitely prefer to have his table properly arranged, his food nicely cooked, and all those duties which are necessary in a well kept household performed by white women and girls in preference to Mongolians. But we shall never be able to get them until we show, by every legitimate means, by every honest piece of legislation, and by every honestly and freely expressed conviction, that we are really sincere in our desire to prevent this very undesirable class of immigrants coming, not merely into the Dominion of Canada, but more particularly into the Province of British Columbia. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen, for the patient hearing you have given me, and I only hope this legislation will pass through this House without a single dissenting voice.

Mr. GORDON. I am almost afraid to trespass on the good nature of this House to-night. I am sure it is a compliment to British Columbia that in a mid-summer Session, two or three hours of patient hearing is granted to the discussion of any question affecting our distant Province. I certainly, as one of the representatives of that Province, feel it my duty to congratulate the Government upon the action they have taken with reference to the Chinese question. I have felt, since the last Session of Parliament when the resolutions passed committing this House unanimously to a measure respecting and regulating Chinese immigration, that the Government would deal with this question satisfactorily. That the Government intended to keep their pledge to this House. At that time, it will be remembered, the right hon. the leader of the Government assured the House that it was the intention of the Government to send a commission to British Columbia to examine the question in its various details. No exception was taken to that declaration on either side, neither was any exception taken to the passing of the motion. I felt a little surprised, when the commission reached British Columbia, that exception was taken by many people to the appointment of the commission. I felt that this House had committed itself, that the Government had committed itself, to the appointment, and I, for one, felt it would be a relief to the members of that Province to have an independent commission go out and examine into this question, which had been so often brought before this House by the members from that Province. What were we doing? We were coming to this Parliament, six members of a distant Province, asking this Parliament to violate all the traditions of parliamentary government in Canada since it had self-government. We were asking this Parliament to restrict people from coming into the Dominion, something that had never before been done or asked, and I felt it would relieve the members of that Province, who were acting in no other respect than from a sincere sense of their duty, if an independent commission was sent to the Province to report to the Government. I have to congratulate the Government, further, upon the fact that this Bill, which is now before the House, is far in excess of what the people expected at the time the report of the commission was published. At the time the commission was in British Columbia, there was a general feeling of distrust, that the commission was a mere pretext for avoiding the question and delaying the question. For those reasons, I shall not go into the past history of the question. I shall not enter into the details of the character of the Chinese or their habits, or the rental they pay. I assume that Parliament, when we passed that resolution last year, saw there was a difficulty coming that would reach every part of Canada, if some action were not taken. I felt assured it was no longer necessary on the part of the members from that Province to enter into the details of the character of these people. I shall not, therefore, attempt to do so to-night. I do not agree with my hon. friend, who states that he would not like to see more than $50 imposed on them. Individually, I would like to see the tax $500; but I am willing to yield to the feelings of the House, in order to get what can be obtained. I am in favor of giving this measure a fair, and test I feel satisfied this Parliament will, from time to time, provide any further remedy that may be necessary. With regard to the various clauses of the Bill, it may not come up to what some people may anticipate; but, on the whole, the Government, in bringing these resolutions before this House, have shown a good faith towards the people of British Columbia far in excess of our anticipation when the report of the commission was issued. I shall not detain the House, but simply express my sincere congratulations to the Government and the commission on the results obtained.

Mr. HOMER. When this Chinese question came before Parliament, in the Session of 1883, I took the position that it was premature at that time to restrict the importation of Chinese labor into the Province of British Columbia, on the ground that the facilities existing at that time for obtaining white labor were not sufficient to meet the labor requirements of the Province. The Canadian Pacific Railway, then, was not more than half completed. The Pacific division was almost entirely dependent upon the Chinese labor for its construction. Therefore, if a restrictive measure had been enacted and enforced at that time, the probability is that a strike would have been made of Chinese labor along the road, which would have caused heavy loss to the contractors, for which they could make a heavy claim upon the Government. At the same time, I stated that so soon as there was a certain prospect of securing sufficient white labor for the purpose of railway construction and carrying on the various industries of the country, I would then give my support to a measure restricting the further importation of Chinese labor. Last Session this measure again came before the House, and I took the position that the time had then arrived when we should enact restrictive measures, because the Southern Pacific Railway was completed to a point on Puget Sound, within the immediate vicinity of British Columbia. From that road a large number of railway laborers had been discharged, and by that road a large immigration was conveyed to the State of Oregon, Washington Territory, and to British Columbia. From those different sources and from the Chinese already in the Province could be obtained all the labor required for the purposes of railway construction and for carrying on the various industries of the Province, and from that time to the present there has been a surplus of labor in British Columbia; in fact, a great deal of white labor has had to leave it within the last six months, owing to the avenues of labor being filled with Chinese. This whole question has to be considered from one point, and that is labor; whether we shall, by the free importation of Chinese labor, convert British Columbia into a Chinese colony, or restrict the importation of Chinese labor and retain that Province for the white population. That is the point which this Bill has to decide. It is my firm conviction, as it is the firm conviction of nine-tenths of my constituents, that unless a restrictive measure is enacted that Province will become a Chinese colony. The small amount of wages for which Chinese labor; the small amount upon which they can subsist, having no family to support, or, if they have, the family reside in China, where they can live very cheaply. They do not settle in the country; they make but few improvements in it; they do not assist to build up the country; they do not spend their earnings in the country, with the exception of the small amount it requires for them to exist upon. The surplus they take with them to their native country, and when one leaves the country, others arrive to fill his place, and they, in their turn, after two or five years' residence, leave, with their $500, or $1,000, or $2,000, for their native country, where they can live for the remainder of their days in comfort and peace. What is the case with the white immigrant? He settles in the country; he sends for his family; they improve the country; they engage in various branches of business and contribute to the general welfare and prosperity of the country. So you will see that, owing to the small requirements of the Chinese, it is quite impossible for white labor to compete with them. Consequently, the very people whom we wish to settle in the country and to assist in building it up will not emigrate to it when they know they have to come in contact with, and to compete with, Chinese labor. Many of the immigrants who went to British Columbia in the last few years have been obliged to leave again, because they saw they could not compete with Chinese labor; that with the labor of their hands they could not realise sufficient to build permanent homes and to make themselves comfortable in that country. Unless a restrictive measure is passed, I feel sure that the business of that country, and the various industries, will all pass into the hands of a few capitalists, with Chinese to perform the labor, and that all individual enterprise will be crushed out. In Australia they passed a restrictive measure, seeing what the result would be of the free importation of Chinese labor. In California they enacted a prohibitive measure, knowing what the result would be. In neither of these countries were the Chinese equal to those in British Columbia. In California, with a population of 1,000,000 whites, they had but 60,000 Chinese, which is only 6 per cent. of the entire population. In Australia the percentage was still less, while in British Columbia we have 15,000 Chinese to a population of 30,000 whites. I shall not refer to their manners or customs, or to the immorality of those people. That is a question which has been thoroughly dealt with by others; neither do I attach that importance to these points which many do. The great question which we have to decide is the labor question. Unrestricted Chinese labor means unrestricted poverty for the white man. It means the conversion of British Columbia into a Chinese colony, from which they can spread and demoralise the whole labor market of the Dominion; and in order to prevent an occurrence of this kind in the future, I would ask every hon. member of this House to give his support to the Bill now before Parliament.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 2,

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I would ask the Minister in charge of this Bill if he would kindly act upon my suggestion, and make it 100 tons, the same as in the Australian Bill.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As I have stated, the proportion is already very large. A vessel fitted out to carry 3,000 tons could only carry 60 of them. I think my hon. friends should be satisfied. At all events, if it was shown, between now and another Session, or within a year, that it had not the effect, no doubt the Government would see that the regulation would be made more strict than it is now.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I do not want the hon. gentleman to think me too persistent and importunate in this matter, but it is a matter vitally affecting my constituents, and they have urged me very strongly on this point of the tonnage; and I should fail in my duty if I did not ask the Government to accede to their wishes and to increase the tonnage.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a very good instalment. You had better take this.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). We have to be, and we are, very thankful for small mercies, but it is a very good principle in life to take all you can get and ask for more.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the order for the second reading of Bill (No. 124) to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration into the Dominion of Canada be discharged, and the Bill withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 156) to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration into the Dominion of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CHINESE INTERPRETER.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the House resolve itself into Committee, to consider a certain proposed resolution (see page 2421) respecting the appointment and remuneration of the controller, the interpreter and other persons who may be appointed under the Bill regulating and restricting Chinese immigration into the Dominion of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I really think we ought to have some explanation of the supposed necessity for inflicting this additional charge upon us. For aught that I can see, all the duties that are required to be discharged for the purpose of carrying into effect the restrictive measures that the House has consented to might be very easily discharged by the regular Dominion officials at the port of Victoria. I presume there is very little risk of Chinamen in any numbers making their way into Canada, except at one or two ports in British Columbia, where we already have a sufficient number of Dominion officials, and I say that adding $4,000 or $5,000 more to the yearly expenditure of the country is very objectionable. However, I shall be glad to hear what the Minister in charge has to say for this, which appears to me to be an unusual and unnecessary expense.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not think the hon. gentleman is right in saying that it will be a charge. If there is no immigration there will be no need of an officer, and we can abolish the office. If there is an immigration the salary would not be a very large amount; probably $500 a year would be sufficient, and this could be very nearly all collected from the entry fees paid by the immigrants. If the immigration is more numerous there will be more fees collected, which will be, no doubt, sufficient to pay the officers to be appointed. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman that the Collector of Customs at the port of Victoria might do this work. I am sure that another officer will be required. The Bill provides that at the minor ports the Dominion officers in charge may be appointed to perform the duties of controller of immigration without any sensible addition to the salary. The only expenditure which we shall have to provide for will be that of an interpreter. I think that an interpreter is really needed. He is needed for the Chinese who will remain. There are now between 13,000 and 15,000 Chinese in the Province, and if a third of them remain an interpreter would still be needed, and it will be for the interests of the administration of justice to have one appointed. I may be told that the administration of justice in British Columbia should be supported by the Provincial Government, but it must be remembered that the influx of Chinese has taken place against the will of the provincial authorities. I do not think that there is any extravagance in this expenditure. The Bill will provide that all the Chinese residing in British Columbia shall secure a license of residence, that is to say, a certificate of residence, at the time this Bill comes into force. I do not think that the collector of Customs could really perform that duty. The keeping of a register will be a considerable task, and looking after that immigration will also take up a good deal of time. Steamers arrive at least once a week at the port of Victoria.

Mr. MILLS. How will it be with regard to the Chinese who land at San Francisco and then come over into Canada? Will they be subject to the same restrictions that are imposed upon Chinese coming directly from China?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; by land or by water, and coming from any country.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. It will be impossible to enforce the provisions of this law without the appointment of an officer to discharge the duties which this Bill creates in the city of Victoria; at least, I am sure that the Custom house officer is already fully employed. That is the principal port where the Chinese arrive. In fact, I have seen as many as 1,000 Chinese arrive there in one day.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I see no objection, certainly, to the expenditure on this account. It is absolutely necessary that we should have an interpreter in connection with the administration of this Act; but I do foresee a great difficulty in the way of the selection of a proper interpreter. It is certainly absolutely necessary, for the proper working out of this Act, that there should be an interpreter, and it will be a matter of serious difficulty to obtain such an officer, who will possess general confidence for uprightness, truthfulness, and so forth.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Will there be difficulty in obtaining such an officer at the salary mentioned in the Bill?

Mr. BAKER. Not so much on that score, but from the fact that there are at least eight different Chinese dialects, and these immigrants do not all speak the same language.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Nearly the whole of the immigration comes from one Province. I think an interpreter, judiciously chosen, would be able to do the work.

Mr. BAKER. Has the hon. gentleman any idea whether the interpreter will be an English person speaking Chinese or a Chinaman speaking English?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If possible, he will be an Englishman speaking Chinese.

Mr. HOMER. I think there will be very little difficulty in securing an interpreter. I do not think it desirable to have a Chinaman.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I hope the interpreter will not be a Chinaman. There are plenty of white men capable of speaking the Chinese language. I have conversed with one or two myself.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is quite evident that the interpreter should not be a Chinaman.

Resolution to be reported.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. POPE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 153) further to amend the Acts respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and to provide for the completion and successful operation thereof.

Mr. EDGAR. Before the Bill is read a second time I desire to offer a few remarks. Of the $5,000,000 of loan to be made to the railway company, I suppose $1,000,000 is intended to go for equipment. In a printed circular, signed by Mr. Stephen, which was sent round the House, the purposes for which $5,000,000 were required were stated. Among those was $1,000,000 for equipment. I suppose those purposes are the purposes for which the $5,000,000 is intended to be applied. If not, perhaps the Minister will inform me.

Mr. POPE. The $5,000,000 is intended for paying off the floating debt.

Mr. EDGAR. I see, in the requirements set out by Mr. Stephen as those for which he wants to raise money, either by means of this $5,000,000 or out of additional moneys which the Government have given the company facilities to raise by a rearrangement of the securities, $1,000,000 is mentioned for equipment. It is a little difficult to understand how that can be. It will be recollected that on 2nd March I made a motion respecting certain items that appeared in the progress estimates of the railway, respecting rolling stock. It appeared that when Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways he signed his last progress estimate on 7th April, 1884, and in that progress estimate he held back from the payment to the company, on the western end of the eastern section, just where the work was going on, near Callander, $450,700; and it appeared by the very next progress estimate, which was signed by the Acting Minister of Railways, that that whole sum so held back for rolling stock was paid to the company, although no rolling stock appeared to have been supplied in the meantime. In fact, the road was not so far constructed that rolling stock on that portion was required. It also appeared that about the same time, at the other end of the eastern section, $68,000 which had been held back for rolling stock by Sir Charles Tupper was also paid over to the company by the Acting Minister of Railways, making in all about $518,000 that was paid over to the company, and paid by them for grading, instead of being held for rolling stock. It was not very easy to understand how that happened, and the House passed a resolution, on my motion for a return, calling for some explanation as to how that happened, and as to what information the Government had between 7th April, when Sir Charles Tupper held that money back to provide rolling stock, and 1st May, when the Acting Minister did not think it necessary to hold it back any longer, but paid it over to the company. A return has been brought down, in answer to my motion, and I find that it is explained in this way: In fact, there can be only one explanation—that the rolling stock was not required, or, of course, the money would have been held back by the Government until it was procured. On 27th April there appears to be a letter addressed to the Minister by Mr. Schreiber, in which he refers to a memorandum of rolling stock upon the line between Montreal and Port Moody on 22nd September, 1883, and he showed that on the length of the line, 2,900 miles, there were 236 engines, 126 passenger cars, 48 box cars and 6,125 freight cars. And in another memorandum, in order to show what number of engines will be required for this line, a statement is given, showing the details of train service prior to the opening of the road for traffic from Montreal to Port Moody. They give the engines for through trains so many, local trains so many, pilot engines, shunting engines, etc., making 195 altogether, and then he adds 12 per cent. for engines in the shops for repairs, or a total of 218, while Mr. Schreiber's letter shows that there were twelve more than that, or 236. Now, if the passenger cars were in the same proportion, it would appear clear to the engineer that there was a sufficient amount of rolling stock, and he goes on that ground, and reports to the Minister as follows:—

“As the line runs through a large extent of unsettled, undeveloped country, it is probable that this rolling stock would be nearly sufficient for the traffic upon the first opening of the road; hence, I am applying the whole of the $27,000,000, with the exception of $286,000, to the completion of the works of construction.”

It appears that there was at that time sufficient rolling stock on the road when it was to be opened for traffic. However, Mr. Stephen, in his statement, shows that in 1884 they had expended in the additional equipment $547,000; so, apparently, they had enough equipment on the road to open with, when Mr. Schreiber made his statement, and in the year 1884 they added one-half a million more for equipment, and still it seems that Mr. Stephen, when he comes before the House and makes a statement of what he wants the money for, says they require $1,000,000 more for equipment, and among the items are locomotives, and so on. Now, that is rather extraordinary, and I think requires some explanation from the Minister. Of course when Mr. Schreiber sent in his letter it was not for the purpose of applying for further assistance from the Government, but in order to get over the difficulty that the Minister felt, when he allowed the money which had been kept back for rolling stock to be otherwise applied. The money was kept back by Sir Charles Tupper for rolling stock, and it was applied in the payment of the grading and other work of that kind, according to the estimates. Now, let us see for a moment if that money was really wanted for that other work. It will be remembered that on the same occasion, on asking for this return, I also asked for more information, which seemed to me to be very important, about the cost of the line beginning at 100 miles west of Callander and ending at 200 miles west of Callander—or a distance of 100 miles. The profiles of that road had been brought down to the House, and from an examination of them, and from what other information I was able to get, it seemed to me perfectly clear that the cost of that 100 miles was a very great deal less than the amount that the Government was advancing to the company for the purpose of constructing it, out of loan and out of subsidy; because, in the first 20 miles of that road they were advancing at the rate of $23,000 per mile, and on the last 80 miles of the 100 they were advancing at the rate of $27,000 per mile. What I contended was, that the Government should not certainly advance more than the cost of the road, and I asked the Government to bring down the estimates and the statement of quantities upon which they had based their calculations that they ought to pay the company $23,000 and $27,000 per mile for that work, and I also asked them to bring down a statement that the railway company could make for them, of the actual quantities of the work done, when the road was finished and paid for. In reply to that Order of the House, a statement was brought down. That statement showed that so far as the Government estimate was concerned they had acted upon most extraordinary and loose information. It says, that the way they arrived at the probable cost of the road was by comparing it with similar work on the line of the Intercolonial Railway. They did not take any pains to see what the quantities were, or what the cost would be, although the Government had made it its business to build railways since the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. It has been building the Canadian Pacific Railway, and there was no difficulty whatever in the Government taking the prices in the various contracts they had made on that road, and taking the quantities out of the profiles and thus ascertain what the road was going to cost. I ventured to do that as well as I could, upon the information which was then before me, and I found that, so far as I could see, the Government, on this portion of the road, were paying to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, out of loan and subsidy, about $10,000 per mile more than the road was actually costing them at the time; of course, giving them 9,000 acres of land grant per mile besides, and giving them the road and everything else that goes with it. Since then we have not got any information from the Government, but upon a requisition of the Government to carry out that Order of the House, Mr. Van Horne sent to the Government, and they brought down a statement of the quantities of the work done on that line, in detail, giving all the particulars and the items. Now, there is no difficulty in arriving at what the cost of that part of the line was, after we had that information. I have taken the trouble, from the data we have in our possession, to make an estimate of what that piece of line costs the railway company to build, and we know what the Government have paid them towards it. I find that taking the statement of quantities which Mr. Van Horne gave in his statement, which accompanied his letter to the Minister of the 17th of March, 1885, and taking the prices from the contract of Marks & Conmee on the higher scale of the tenders which were accepted by this Government on section “A,” 118 miles from English River to Eagle River, a remote and difficult part of the Canadian Pacific line—taking the higher scale for the earlier construction, I find this result: I find that the clearing of 1,350 acres on that 100 miles, at $22 per acre, the price of section “A,” amounted to $29,700; close cutting, at the prices and the quantities given by Mr. Van Horne, $2,625; grubbing, based on the prices and quantities given by Mr. Van Horne, $4,900. Then we come to the heavy item of earth excavation, of which Mr. Van Horne says there are 1,336,848 cubic yards. Now, there were two classes of prices in Marks & Conmee's tender—one, 26 cents a yard, and the other with 10 cents a yard added when there was a longer haul. Now, I put in a considerably larger portion of this earth excavation as being on a long haul than there was in the work on section “A” and I find that at 26 cents a yard it produces $330,000, and a portion at 36 cents a yard $24,000. Then there is cemented earth. That is what it is called in the statement of Mr. Van Horne, which I do not find anything analogous to in any of the tenders of these contractors. It is not loose rock, but it is cemented earth, and it was not tendered for in Marks & Conmee's tender at all, but I estimate it at double the other, 50 cents a yard, which makes $132,898 for that item. Rock, 202,456 yards, which I estimate at Conmee's tender of $1.55, makes $313,806. Loose rock, 86,198 yards, at 95 cents a yard, Conmee's tender, $81,888. The bridging was estimated for by the Government at $1,500 a mile, which, in that part of the country, is a pretty heavy estimate; but I take their own estimate for that, which makes $150,000. Then, service roads was an item which was not in Marks & Conmee's tender—about $250 a mile, and that is $25,000 more. Then, there is a large number of other works, such as rails, sleepers, track-laying, engineering, buildings, water service and ballasting, all of which were estimated by the Government on the scale they had settled, and which they called standard, and they paid $5,100 a mile for this service. The hon. Minister, in reply to questions I put to him early this Session, gave me the details of that estimate. That, for the 100 miles, amounts to $510,000. The total cost, therefore, of that 100 miles, if we take these prices and quantities, about which there can be no possible dispute, amounts to $1,605,000. Now, what amount of money have the railway company received from the Government in actual cash towards assisting them to build this section of the road? They received, first, $23,000 a mile, on 20 miles, which makes $460,000; they received $27,000 a mile on the other 80 miles, which makes $2,160,000; making, in all, $2,620,000 in cash, which the company received from the Government this last year to assist them to build a piece of road which cost $1,600,000, or $1,014,000 more in actual cash than that road cost them to build. This estimate is made from figures which any practical man can test and understand for himself. In addition to that, they received 9,000 acres of choice land per mile in the North-West in respect of this portion of the road, which, even at $1 per acre—and I have heard rumors that it is recently estimated as worth $1.50—would make $900,000 more; so that they received from the Government on this 100 miles, nearly $2,000,000 in money and land more than the road actually cost them to build. Now, this is a part of the section on which it is said the company are spending so much more than they had estimated. Perhaps the other end of this section about Lake Superior has cost a great deal more than this end; but we must remember that the company got a great deal more from the Government for it, if it did cost more. For a long distance they got $80,000 or $90,000 a mile from the Government for that expensive portion of the road; and if the estimates which we have not got for that part of the road show up in the same way as these, the company must have got in proportion a great deal more than the cost of the construction of that part of the road. At any rate, as far as we have the figures and details, they show that on one part of the road the company have been receiving, on every mile, just about what I estimate on the data before me in March last, that is to say, $10,000 a mile more than it cost. These are figures it is impossible to controvert; so far as this part of the line is concerned, they are unanswerable, and, in the face of that, I think we should have a little more explanation from the Government, before we are asked to pass this Bill through its second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not intend to discuss this question at any length, as I think the subject has been exhausted. But I wish to consider for a moment some remarks which fell from the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies). In a speech characterised by singular force, power and eloquence, he pointed out the Protean shapes assumed by the Canadian Pacific Railway in applying to this House for additional subsidies. In the first place, it was assumed that, when the original contract was made, we were treating with the millionaires, plutocrats and merchant princes of the world; that the accumulated wealth of the old world would be applied to the advancement of the interests and development of the resources of the new; that the great social problems would receive solution, and the hoards wrung from the toil and the sweat of the starving millions of Europe would be repaid with interest on the western prairies, where plutocrat and proletarian, lion and lamb, would lie down together in that pleasant paradise. It was to be a millennial period, when all wrongs would be righted, and

"Bertram's might and Bertram's right,
Would meet on Ellaagowan's height."

The Baron Von Reinach, and the Count of Monte Cristo and their congeners would take an intelligent interest in the
Mr. EDGAR.

Dominion generally, and the Canadian Pacific Railway particularly, and afford us precise information as to the price of gold in Amsterdam. But all is vanity and vexation of spirit. The millionaires, merchant princes, and plutocrats disappeared like the baseless fabric of a dream; and the Baron Von Reinach, and the Count of Monte Cristo, retired to their chateaux in Spain, and their castles in Bohemia. It was the old, old story over again. Some one must do the work or face the responsibility. This duty, in the last resort, devolved upon the tax-payers of the Dominion, the toilers on the sea and the toilers on the land. After assuming many shapes, after playing the parts of Claude Duval, or Jack Sheppard, these commercial condottieri had at last assumed the garb of mourning and donned the weeds of the widow and the orphan. In doing this, they manifested their wisdom. Widows have played an important part in political and social matters. As a rule for general application, the advice of the late lamented Mr. Weller to his son Samuel, may be taken as correct—"beware of vidders." But there are exceptions to this general rule. Who does not remember the charming acquaintance of the hon. member for Cardwell, the widow Machree? Who does not remember the fascinating female who melted the iron heart of the hon. member for Northumberland, the widow Murphy? Who does not remember the important part played by that estimable female in the history of the country? Who does not remember the pleasant picture painted with such artistic skill and power by the hon. gentleman? The pleasant cottage in the very heart of the great forest of New Brunswick. One knew by the smoke that so gracefully curled that if there is peace to be found in this world the heart that is humble could look for it here. The Sabbath stillness of the scene, the lovely widow surrounded by her young orphans, drawing the lacteal fluid from the patient Brindle, and the warning wail of the banshee, the baying of the blood hounds, the neigh of the iron horse, ravening for his prey. In the evening, everything was peaceful and prosperous; in the morning, all was desolation and despair. In the darkness of night, the widow's cow had drifted to her doom; but there was balm in Gilead. The knightly member came to the rescue of his fair constituents. The widow obtained compensation, and the hon. member immortality. By this kindly and generous act, he won his brevet rank in the nobility of his country. But by the generosity of his acts he was declared noble by an earlier creation, by the imposition of a mightier hand. It is no wonder that all opposition melted away like a snow ball before the noon day sun:

"And now his name sounds stirring in many a forest lone,
Like the trumpet call of the Light Brigade when they charged the Russians home.
And the bushmen pour to Bacchus libations many a score
When they think of Peter's triumph on their wild New Brunswick shore.
And in the long nights of winter when the cold north wind blows,
When the boys are making the axe helves and the girls are knitting hose,
When François mends his moccasins and Sophie warms her toes,
With shouting and with triumph still is the story told,
How well Sir Peter fought the fight in the brave days of old."

Well, widow Murphy has disappeared and the widow Stephen reigns in her stead. The pines of New Brunswick give place to the tall masts of the ships bearing treasure and tribute to the commercial capital of the Dominion. In the foreground the mighty St. Lawrence sweeps on its majestic way to the ocean; in the background Mount Royal looms up in all its splendor and beauty. As the chill and gray morning dawns, the widow Stephen leaves her humble habitation, her squalid cot and proceeds to Ottawa to milk her parliamentary cow. The orphans, Van Horne and Smith, smile pleasantly at the prospect of renewed refreshments. But a wail is borne upon the breeze, like the wolf's long howl on Onalaska's shore. It is the lament of the Opposition banshee; it is the neigh of the demon horse, which has destroyed the cow of the widow Murphy and is on the track of the parliamentary jersey of the widow Stephen. Such is the interpretation which I place on the speech of the hon. gentleman. I do not believe that he is a seer or has the gift of second sight. I am more disposed to adopt the generous, enterprising policy of the hon. member for Northumberland than the cool and cautious one of the hon. gentleman. I am disposed to give reasonable assistance to the widow and to cast in my lot with the orphan. During the month of November last, I went over a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I have been requested by some of my friends to give my impressions of it, and of what has been termed our magnificent heritage in the great North-West. I may state my visit was of a very brief and hurried character, and that consequently I could only see a small portion of the country and study to some slight extent its general features and outlines. You will recollect that during last Session there was much discussion concerning the North-West generally, and the railway particularly. Among others, the hon. member for Lisgar delivered a speech characterised by great force and power and eloquence, in which he pointed out the marvellous resources of that marvellous land. It was thought by many that his picture was painted in too gorgeous and glowing colors, its hues more resembling those of a California sunset than the cool gray tints of our northern skies. I remember telling that hon. gentleman that if, instead of devoting his fine talents to speculative purposes, he had turned his attention to imaginative literature, Canada would have boasted a great writer, superior, in many respects, to Sir Walter Scott, Dickens, Thackeray and the great masters. But I must make an amend to the hon. gentleman. I must confess, from what I saw in my brief visit to the North-West, that he was right and I was wrong. Although somewhat skeptical, I was bound, as a patriotic Canadian, to believe that we had in that country a veritable garden of Eden. Yet I must confess that I started on a journey with much misgiving, feeling that, like Blanche Amory, in Thackeray's "Pendennis," I should be awfully disillusioned. As you are well aware, it was considered by many that, in taking possession of the northern portion of this continent, the Canadian Government assumed a terrible responsibility, and incurred such gigantic obligations, that if the fruition did not realise the anticipation, the result must be of the most disastrous character. It was thought we had taken a leap in the dark and that it was doubtful whether we would land on safe and solid ground or be plunged in some Serbonian bog, some bottomless quagmire, which would swallow up the prosperity, the credit, and the future of the inhabitants of the older Provinces. I must confess that I was somewhat of a pessimist, and while I was prepared to face the inevitable, yet I could not but watch the solution of this problem with much anxiety. Well, time passed, and the destinies of the Dominion were being moulded into the shape which they now assume. It was agreed on all hands that a railroad from ocean to ocean was absolutely necessary, in order to link the Provinces together. When, at last, this policy assumed definite shape, and the arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway were finally concluded, a change came over the spirit of our dreams. We had entered upon a new phase of our national existence, and it was necessary that we should assume the garb as well as the proportions of manhood. You will remember the old fable, which tells us of what occurred in a pleasant meadow, when a frog, animated by a laudable ambition, wished to rival the proportions of an ox which was grazing near it. Well, we commenced the process of inflation, and then, as a natural consequence, came the great boom, that marvellous sirocco of speculation which swept over the land and produced such singular results. Our

Castilian castles assumed the most magnificent proportions. We had entered into the pleasant land of Beulah, a land of corn and oil, of milk and honey. We had discovered the El Dorado, and, in all its pomp and pride, the New Jerusalem dawned upon our vision. It was the syndicatorial heaven; it was the land of Paradox. The colder the climate the warmer one became; the frost was to the North-West what the irrigation of the Nile was to Egypt; by a wise dispensation the Chinook winds played on land, the roll of the gulf stream on the ocean, and gave a balmy and spring-like atmosphere to the bleak regions of the north. It was a land of gold and silver and precious stones. The cattle upon a thousand hills are ours. Millions upon millions of the richest prairie, pasture and wheat lands of the world had come into our possession. The wildest dreams of the great Irish satirist had been more than realised. It was an agricultural Elysium. If you tickled the land with the hoe or the plow it laughed with a harvest. The cool mountain streams on their way to the ocean ran over shining pebbles of gold and silver, and rubies and other precious stones; and we have the authority of one of the most practical members of this House, who assured the people of England only last fall, that everywhere through the great North-West, wealth could be had for the picking up. As Dr. Johnson said of Thrane's brewery, it was the potentiality of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice. The excitement of that period of national insanity produced hallucinations not unlike the delusions of the opium eater. The lessons of the past and the perplexities of the present were forgotten, and we launched our bark boldly on the sea of speculation. It became our business to trade in the difficult and dangerous wares of the future. Well, we had entered into a very pleasant paradise; but the trail of the speculator was over it all. The dream was a very gay and gorgeous one, but alas for the hour of awakening! The banquet had been very gay and brilliant, but when the flowers faded and the lights were extinguished and the chill and gray morning dawned, our sensations were not of so pleasant a character. We had to learn the stern lesson that the doctrine of compensation obtains in public as well as in private life, that action is followed by reaction, stimulation by depression. It is the ancient doctrine of Nemesis, which keeps watch in the universe, and lets no violation of law, either physical or moral, go unpunished. We had the feast and we must have the famine. We had gone up like a rocket and we must come down like a stick. As the country was unduly exalted so it was unduly depressed. The optimists had their innings and the period of the pessimists was to set in. Then came the saturnalia of the croakers and the cowards and the descendants of doubting Thomas. All the creeping, the crawling and crouching things which fatten on the dead forms of nobler creatures flocked to their unholy feast. It was the old, old story over again, they said; history was repeating itself. It was the Darien scheme once more which lured the sober Scots to their ruin; it was the South Sea Bubble in another time and clime; it was the Mississippi Madness, with which Law deluded the Frenchmen of the regency to their destruction. The land, they said, was not an agricultural Elysium but an abomination of desolation; it is well called the "Great Lone Land," for it was never intended for human habitation; it had been intended, they said, for the feræ naturæ, the fur-bearing animals; it was a happy hunting ground where the Nimrods of the north and the nightly hunters of muskrats might indulge in the pleasures and secure the profits of the chase in security; it was a veritable Siberia, an Alsatia, a Cave of Adullam, into which all who were in debt and difficulty, all the outlaws from human justice and humanity might, in their exile, find congenial companionship; it was a land of blizzards, cyclones, grasshoppers and syndicators. What the locusts spared, that the syndicate devoured. The cold was so intense that when the clergymen depicted the horrors of the infernal regions, they dared not speak of the fire that is not quenched, lest, in order to thaw themselves out, their hearers should rush incontinent to the lake of fire and brimstone. It was said that these holy men depicted the place of everlasting punishment as a cold, icy, glacial inferno, where the mercury was always solid—a place something like that terrible palace of ice in which, with fiendish cruelty, Catharine of Russia immured her unhappy victims. For mortal sins Winnipeg was the inferno where protracted punishment was meted out by a curious course of congelation; for venal offences the northern regions were selected, where the sinner would find his agony shortened. The doom of this land of the aurora borealis had been to be always cursed and governed by monopolists. As it was in the beginning so would it be to the end. The despotism of the muskrat hunters, who acted under the charter granted by the Second Charles, was not of so galling and grinding a nature as that of the muskrat hunters who acted under the charter granted by the Canadian Parliament. In the first, they had been scourged by whips in the second by scorpions. It was a land without wood or water, without trees to shelter the unhappy exiles from the scorching heat of summer or in winter from the fierce winds which swept and howled in their agony over this desolate land. It was a land where, owing to the early frosts in the fall and the late frosts in the spring, agricultural operations were uncertain and precarious. The only crop to be cultivated with any certainty was that of English and Canadian idiots. It was a first-class country for Esquimaux, Greenlanders, Mennonites and Icelanders. It was also a first-class country for other human beings to emigrate from. Well, in November last I was somewhat reluctantly induced to visit the crater of this extinct volcano, this debateable ground, this land scorched by speculation, scourged by grasshoppers speculators and syndicators, this paradise of projectors, promoters and prodigal sons. We had an exceedingly pleasant journey, and it was somewhere said that we travelled in a very humble and unpretentious fashion being desirous of realising the hardships which might attend the hardy settlers on their way to the land of the setting sun. If all who make that journey do it in as pleasant and as comfortable way as we did, they can have no reasonable ground for complaint. The weather was exceedingly fine, although the season was somewhat late. We passed through portions of many of the northern States of the Union, and so far as one could judge in the cars, we were forced to come to the conclusion that the soil of our own prairie country was superior to that of the United States. We also visited some of the large cities, among them the famous city of Chicago. Some years ago this city was described by a western poet in the following terms:—

" Oh, Sodom was some and Gomorrhah was great,
And in Venice each man's an lago,
But the towns of the plain were free from all stain,
Compared with that of Chicago."

We did not see this wonderful wickedness, but we saw many proofs of the intelligence, wealth, ability and enterprise of the inhabitants of that marvellous city. We crossed the headwaters of many of the great rivers of the continent, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Columbia, the St. Lawrence, the Saskatchewan, the Assiniboine, Red River and others. The weather was exceedingly fine, and for 14 days we carefully and minutely examined our magnificent heritage and the parts thereunto adjacent almost always at the rate of 40 miles, and sometimes at the rate of 60 miles an hour. Our view was consequently somewhat of the birds-eye character, but notwithstanding the hurried nature of our visit, we were able to take in many of the broader outlines and features of the country, and from information which we received from many gentlemen with whom we were acquainted we were enabled to arrive at certain conclusions with regard to its present position and future prospects. We spent a portion of two days in the famous city of Winnipeg, which, like all the Western States, is one of magnificent distances. Of the future growth and prosperity of the city, I think there can be no doubt. It is surrounded by an agricultural country which, when it passes out of the hands of speculators into those of actual settlers, will prove one of the richest in the world, and when its farmers adopt the system of mixed farming instead of confining themselves to one product, as at present, their success must be assured. This statement will apply to the North-West generally. The foundations of Winnipeg have been laid broad and deep, and many of its public and private edifices would be creditable to any city on the continent. When its waste places are filled up, it will be one of the foremost cities of the Dominion. It is the centre of a colossal railroad system, which of itself will secure its prosperity. It is inhabited by an active, energetic and enterprising people, who will learn wisdom and moderation in the future from lessons of the past. Our reception was of a most pleasing and kindly character. We had a most interesting and entertaining interview with His Grace Archbishop Taché, who gave us much information concerning the past history of the country, its present condition and future prospects. We had heard much from the representatives of the Farmers' Union of the despotism which was said to prevail in the syndicatorial regions. It was once said that the Government of Louis XIV was a despotism tempered by epigrams. It appeared to us that the despotism of His Majesty, Norquay I., was tempered by a public opinion still more lively and epigrammatic. Under our English system, Her Majesty's Attorney General is one of the most important functionaries. As justice constituted is the state, so the Attorney General is the special custodian and guardian of its interests. From time immemorial his function has been to see that no offender goes unwhipt of justice. Active and zealous in the discharge of his duties, this most kindly and genial gentleman, for such I believe him to be, performed this function not wisely but too well. A public meeting was held, and it was decided that sauce for the goose was sauce for the gander, and that what was good for the unhappy prisoner could not be bad for the Attorney General. You will remember that during the great French revolution a terrible cry arose in the streets of Paris of the aristocrats to the lamp post. Well, we were told that, on the day preceding our arrival, a great cry arose in the streets of Winnipeg, of the Attorney General à la lanterne. With a wise discretion, which proved the highest order of military ability, he made a strategical movement not unlike the famous retreat of Moreau from the Black Forest, from the land of the meteor flag to that of the stars and stripes, and by these means saved himself from an unpleasant exaltation. The next morning we left Winnipeg about 7 a.m. and reached Regina about 5 p.m. All this day we passed over a fine prairie country, and everything we saw was new to us who came from the older Provinces. The Bell farm is one of the modern agricultural marvels. We saw everywhere the tracks of the countless herds of buffaloes which once wandered over these vast solitudes; now their white skeletons dot the plains. Innumerable prairie chickens surround every wheat stack. The lakes and water-courses were literally teeming with geese and ducks and other wildfowl. On our return, we saw a herd of thousands of cattle with its attendant cowboys, on its way from Montana, to be shipped by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Chicago. The animals seemed in excellent condition. We saw many Indians who seemed to be well fed and clothed. We were told that they were gradually acquiring the arts of agriculture, and would soon be self-sustaining. Regina, like Brandon, Moose Jaw, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Portage la Prairie, and all the other cities of the plain, is surrounded by excellent land, admirably suited for the culture of wheat and all other products. They are centres of great agricultural districts, and their future prosperity is undoubted. When we went to bed that night, the ground was covered with snow; when the morning dawned we were in another clime. At nightfall winter lingered in the lap of autumn; in the morning spring clasped us in her warm embrace. The air was pleasant and balmy; the sun was shining brightly; the change was as though it had been caused by magic. We had reached the country where the Chinook winds exercised their benign influence. We saw some herds of antelopes, and the scenery in the vicinity of Calgary and the country drained by the Bow River was very fine. The country, so far as one could judge from the cars, was very beautiful and pleasant, and seemed to be admirably fitted for pasture. We saw the sheep ranches of Senator Cochrane, and its flocks seemed to be in good order. About noon we had our first glimpse of the Rocky Mountains. A long line of silver, marking the limit of the great prairie ocean, a long line of coast over which the white waves were perpetually breaking. As we moved along swiftly and silently, a change came over the landscape, a strange mirage appeared to pervade the atmosphere. One could understand how the famous fata morgana had startled the hunters and travellers in these lonely regions. As we advanced the forms which the clouds and the mountains assumed became still more strange, weird and fantastic. In the folk lore of almost every nation there is a reference to some lost city, some mysterious land, which has disappeared from sight, but which at some unexpected moment dazzles the eye of the hunter and traveller and then disappears in the same strange manner. Plato gives us a glimpse of this in his lost Island of Atlantis. In Hypatia Mr. Kingsley tells us how the fierce Berserker came from the frozen regions of the North and ascended the Hot Nile in search of the lost city of Asgard. Mr. Washington Irving has reproduced the story in his Adelantado of the seven cities. And there is a beautiful Irish legend which tells us how the fishermen, off the Isle of Arran, see rising from the waves the beautiful towers and gardens of Hy-Brasail, the lovely island of the blest. As we move towards that glittering mountain range, we could understand how it was that poets and painters had not even attempted to depict those mountain solitudes. With every chance of movement there came a change in the magnificent panorama which was unrolled before us. Magnificent cities, with gorgeous palaces and cloud-capped towers, and great cathedrals appeared on every side. Now the grand and substantial architecture of the great European cities loomed up before us. Then the mosques and minarets of the Orient flashed upon the sunlight—and then a marvellous mirage—a great sheet of water, a vast inland sea; and one could fancy that, rising from its lagoons, Venice in all her brightness, the peerless queen of the Adriatic, dawned upon our vision. At last we entered the great mountain range, and the contrast between the vast prairie ocean and the vast sea of mountains was so great that we are lost in wonder and awe. That mountain rampart it appeared impossible for humanity to scale or conquer. Involuntarily the words of the Second Spirit in “Manfred” sprang to our lips. The mountains were so gigantic and colossal, the human beings threading their recesses so weak, puny and small, we could not but imagine the genius of the place addressing us in the words of the famous invocation:

“Mont Blanc is the monarch of mountains;
We crowned him long ago
On a throne of rocks, in a robe of clouds,
With a diadem of snow.

Around his waist are forests braced,
The avalanche in his hand;
But ere it falls, that thundering ball
Must pause at my command.

The glacier's cold and restless mass
Moves onward day by day;
But I am he who bids it pass,
Or with its ice delay.

I am the spirit of the place,
Could make the mountains bow
And quiver to their cavern'd base—
And what with me would'st thou?”

Heine tells us, that once when he was in the mountains of Jura, he was so impressed with the awful sublimity and grandeur of the scene that he forgot he had been the arch mocker and scoffer, and skeptic of his age; that he had laughed at and scorned everything that men and women held in reverence and honor; that he had tarampled every system of human belief under his feet; that he had subjected everything divine to his scathing analysis and merciless criticism, but when a little child came to him with her catechism in her hand and said, “Sir, what do you believe in?” He bowed his head reverently and replied, in the words of the grand formula of the Christian faith:

“I believe in God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth.”

I think that every one must experience this feeling who enters those mountain solitudes, and of necessity must look from the finite up to the infinite. On we speed through mountain passes and defiles, the Devil's Head and many a castellated crag looking down on us with grim defiance, until, sweeping by Silver City and many a mountain hamlet, we reach the line which separates the great North-West from British Columbia. Then we give three cheers for the Pacific Province; and some of us thought sadly of the kindly, able and genial gentlemen who came to us from their far off western homes, who won all hearts by their kindness, frankness, and manliness; who always defended so bravely the rights of their magnificent Province, and who, alas, too many of them, sleep the sleep that knows no waking. At last we reach the summit. It was in the dusk of the evening, “amid the gloaming and the mirk,” that we descended into the valley of the shadow of the great Columbian pass. Here the scenery was superbly grand. Above us towered the hoary and snow capped head of Mount Stephen; far, far below us was the great canyon at the bottom of which the silver thread of the river went on its flashing and dashing way to the ocean. The mountain sides were covered with shrubbery and timber, and as the shadows flitted to and fro, with every passing moment we had a change of scene. We were moving slowly along the mountain side on the verge of the dread abyss, drinking in at every pause the awful grandeur and sublimity of the scene, a whisper reached us: “Have you any dear friend in Canada you would like to see again; for if a bolt should break, or a wheel give way, your journey will be a short one.” We replied there were many in Canada whose hands we would like to clasp once more, but that to some extent we were fatalists, and quoted the old Moslem proverb:

“On two days it steads not to run from your grave:
The appointed and the unappointed day.
On the first, neither balm nor physician can save;
Nor thee on the second, the universe slay.”

We also quoted the more cheerful philosophy of the Boston transcendentalist who, when a horse ran away, said that she trusted in Providence until the breeching broke, then matters became mixed and she lost confidence in things generally. We said that the Saskatchewan had so far borne us faithfully and well, and we trusted her good conduct would continue to the end. The fact that she was constructed for the directors and not for the commonalty, did not diminish our confidence in her, and if she should go back upon her record; if, at an imprudent moment, she should kick over the traces; if a coupling bolt should break, or the breeching should give way; if facilis est descensus might be freely translated into a rough and tumble descent into a canyon, where could we find a quieter spot in which to await the sounding of the last trumpet? Where a more magnificent mausoleum than that great canyon? Where a grander headstone than Mount Stephen while the Columbia would chant for us a perpetual requiem, and the good Saskatchewan would clasp us lovingly in her arms, and scare the coyotes and the mountain wolves from their prey? The answer was as old as the time of Homer. You will remember that Achilles says he would rather be on earth the meanest herdsman of Admettus, than be in death the greatest king that ever reigned in Hades. A magnificent mausoleum down there may be all very fine, but I would much rather be with my poor little girl in Montreal. I may state that the danger of a descent was more apparent than real, and that it is the intention to obviate the necessity of descending this pass by the construction of a tunnel which can be done at a comparatively trifling cost. The next morning we visited the Golden City, the point where the Kicking Horse joins the Columbia River. The weather was very fine, and as we walked a portion of the way we had a very pleasant time. The scenery here is very grand. Far up the mountain side we saw tote roads over which innumerable teams were drawing supplies for the railway. Every now and then the carcass of an animal marked the spot where a mis-step had been made. We crossed the Kicking Horse eleven times, passing through four tunnels. Some of the bridges were not unlike that of Al-Sirat. In Golden City we found one of those mountain settlements so graphically described by Bret Harte. Railway men, Mounted Police, hunters, gamblers, miners and Indians form a strange social conglomerate. We saw the outcasts of Poker Flat; we shared in the luck of Roaring Camp; Miggles and Mlies appeared in bodily form before us. I wished to form the acquaintance of Brown of Calaveras, and Tennessee's partner, but as they were engaged in a protracted game of draw, whatever that might be. I could not do so. The scenery in this vicinity was very wild and grand. The white crests of the Selkirk Range in the distance, the flashing river below, the mountains raising their heads towards heaven, the strange inhabitants of Golden City—all formed a picture which Bierstadt or our own Canadian Forbes, alone could paint. Bret Harte's lines breathe the very spirit of this wild region:

“ Above the pines, the moon was slowly drifting,
The river sang below,
The dim Sierras far away uplifting
Their minarets of snow.
The roaring camp fires, with rude humor painted
In ruddy tones of health,
The haggard face and form of those who fainted
In the fierce race for wealth.”

There was a little cemetery on the mountain side in which was a newly made grave. We were told that a few days before a man had passed in his cheques: that is, had been shot. It was said to have been a case of self-defence, of wild western justice. The victor had been admitted to bail, pending his trial in a higher court, and was now working in sight of the little mound which marked the spot where the vanquished was so quietly sleeping. We were much impressed with the appearance and soldierly bearing of the detachment of Mounted Police at this place, under the command of Captain Steele. We thought that these brave young Canadian soldiers were a credit to the country and the service to which they belonged. The officers appeared to be admirably fitted for their difficult and trying positions, and we were assured they were officers and gentlemen, in the highest and best sense of the word. We heard of many instances of their bravery and dauntless courage, and also of their coolness in dealing with the fierce western Indian and the fiercer whites of those regions; we were assured it was impossible to estimate too highly the services which this force has rendered to the cause of law and order in these western isles. I say this the more willingly, because it appears to me at this time the force is under a cloud which I trust will be soon dispelled. Here I may perhaps be permitted to say a few words regarding the railway itself. It appeared to me that the manner in which this road has been constructed through the rocky mountains was one of the modern engineering marvels; the courage, practical ability, and engineering skill, displayed in the performance of this most difficult work, is, I believe, unparalleled in railway history. In Mr. James Ross the company have secured the services of a gentleman admirably fit to cope with the difficulties of the situation. The great success achieved by him in the Rockies will doubtless be followed by like results in the Selkirk Range. So far as the railway generally is concerned, I should say that not only has it been constructed with extraordinary rapidity, but in a most substantial and workmanlike manner. The testimony of all with whom we came in contact was that the General Superintendent, Mr. Egan, and the officers generally of the western section were not only men of great practical ability, who thoroughly understood their business, and who also are endowed with a spirit of kindness and courtesy to the general public, which is worthy of all praise. The same may be said of Mr. McTavish and the officers of the Land Department. Well, we had reached the end of the track. We had had an exceedingly pleasant journey, but we had failed in one object of our mission. We expected to follow the grizzly to his lair and to obtain some of the spoils of the chase. There was a mysterious disappearance of one of our party, who wished to secure the skin of a grizzly, but his search was in vain, and he returned to us a sadder and wiser man. On our way back, we remained a few hours at Regina, where we received a warm welcome from many old friends. Thence we proceeded to Winnipeg, thence down the Kaministiquia, passing on our way that historical building, the Neebing Hotel; thence, after a pleasant voyage around that magnificent sheet of water, Thunder Bay, we landed at the prosperous town of Port Arthur. The scenery in this vicinity is exceedingly romantic and beautiful. Although the country adjoining it is somewhat broken and undulating, we were assured that in addition to its unlimited wealth it possesses in some parts agricultural capabilities not unlike those of the famous Eastern Townships. I have a vision of a splendid building composed of the red stone of that region, perched on the great eminence which overlooks that magnificent sheet of water, where letters and customs will combine to add to the prosperity of the inhabitants of this region. Thence we went to Nepigon, passing over a portion of the famous bridge which is one of the finest structures of this kind that I have ever seen. It is composed of the red stone of that region, and its appearance is very beautiful. Thence back to Port Arthur, where we had a most hearty welcome, and so home. I will give briefly my own impression of the country through which we passed. Some time ago, I read in an American paper a statement which will apply to the country we are now considering. A distinguished American statesman, who resides in the vicinity of Boston, lost by death a young and beautiful wife to whom he was devotedly attached. Brooding over her loss, he would not be comforted, although many a fair consoler offered to supply her place. With the enterprising and adventurous spirit of his race, he determined to follow her into the celestial, as Orpheus did his bride into the tropical regions. Accordingly he consulted a famous medium, who was armed with all the powers of modern mystical science, and by the process of what is termed materialisation she stood in all her pristine beauty before him. The interview was very tender and touching, and can be better imagined than described. At length he enquired as to the intellectual culture of the inhabitants of the celestial abode, whether the writings of Ralph Waldo Emerson and Oliver Wendell Holmes were properly appreciated and whether the system of lectures was in consonance with the civilisation of the age. Receiving satisfactory replies, he inquired as to the surroundings of the celestial city. In a tone of mingled beattitude and regret, she told him it was beautiful exceedingly, so beautiful that the imagination could not conceive nor the tongue describe it, but, she said, of course, it is not Boston. Well, one touch of nature makes the whole world kin. There is some spot on earth which is our home, some little hut among the bushes which is dearer to us than the whole world besides; and I venture to say that to-day the brave hearts from Severn and from Clyde and from the banks of Shannon who uphold the honor of England on the hot sands of Egypt, and the brave Canadian boys who uphold the honor of Canada in the frozen regions of the north, before they gather themselves together for some desperate charge, cast one lingering look towards some English, Scottish or Canadian home, some little Irish sheeling far up the mountain sides, where the dear ones at home are praying for the brave lads who have loved them, and who, they know, will win the day for their Queen and country or die, as becomes men of their race, with their face to the field and their feet to the foe. Well, notwithstanding the vast expanse of fertile prairie land, notwithstanding those magnificent mountains, notwithstanding the marvellous resources of this marvellous country, to me it is not the land of my birth, it is not the great Province of Quebec, it is not the county which I have the honor to represent. I would not advise the inhabitants of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, or British Columbia, who are at all in comfortable circumstances, to leave a certainty for an uncertainty. If they apply the same patience, perseverance, the same energy and courage, in the old land, which is necessary to success in the new, they do not require a change; but if they must leave the homes and the graves of their fathers, if the restless spirit of our race is upon them, if the blood of the old sea kings runs hotly in their veins, if the nomadic spirit impels them irresistibly to a change, if they are animated by the spirit of the grand old French missionaries and explorers and voyageurs, I would say in God's name, go forth, not to the United States, but to the land over which the old flag still flows, and where the men of the best blood of the Dominion has laid the foundation, broad and deep, of a mighty empire, where you can have every variety of soil and a salubrious climate, where you can obtain an honorable independence on the cheapest and easiest terms. Montesquieu tells us that the lands which a man inhabits, the air he breathes, the mountains and rivers which are his neighbors, the climate and all the impressions which result from it—in a word, the external world—exercises upon him the greatest influence. He says: "Give me the map of a country, its configuration, its climate, its waters, its natural productions, its geology, its botany, all its physical geography, and I pledge myself to tell you what will be the man of that country and what place that country will occupy in history." It appears to me there can be no doubt of the place the North-West will occupy in history. It must, of necessity, be a great one. I was forced to come to the conclusion that in that country we had a land where many millions of the toilers and proletarians of the old country could find happy homes; and I have great authorities for coming to this conclusion. Their Excellencies Lord Dufferin and the Marquis of Lorne, specially studied this country with the view of understanding its capabilities for colonisation and settlement; and they were convinced that it was admirably adapted for both. Then the members of the British Association, who visited that country last fall, tell us the same story; then, every member of our House who has gone there confirms their statements. A gentleman of my own acquaintance, who, for 20 years, was a neighbor, Mr. John Mather, of whose integrity, judgment, and reliability, there can be no doubt, has assured me those statements are literally correct; and when I was in the North-West I formed the acquaintance of a gentleman, whose name is a household word through that region, and who, I believe, has done us yeoman services during this emergency, Mr. Taylor, the American Consul at Winnipeg, who assured me, as he has assured the public in his speeches and writings, that in that great North-West we have the wheat fields of the world. I was forced to come to the conclusions that in that country we have a land of which the Dominion may be proud. It is a land inhabited by a people in the very flush and prime of manhood, the very flower of the Canadian people; a land where the weather is at times exceedingly cold, but at the same time bracing and healthy. Its inhabitants bear upon their countenances the impress of its healthfulness, whose women have exceedingly lovely and rosy complexions, and the men are pictures of health and manhood. I told them I thought in that healthy and bracing climate they had discovered the fountain of perpetual youth which Ponce de Leon sought so long in vain. It is a land where a man of moderate means and courage and perseverance can obtain an honest independence on the cheapest and easiest terms, where the toilers of the world can stand erect and call no man master. I would advise everyone who wishes to escape from the sorceries of this western enchantress not to enter within her borders; she casts a glamor upon all who do so, and makes them perpetually her slaves. It was said of the Norman nobles who were sent to conquer Ireland, that they became so enchanted with the beauty of the green isle, the loveliness of the women, and the bravery of the men, that they became more Irish than the Irish themselves. So I think it will be with all who enter our western domain. I trust that all who do so will have as pleasant a trip as I have had, and leave the country with as many pleasant and kind recollections.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. POPE. I propose, after the word "dollars," in the 5th line, to amend by inserting the words "or equivalent thereof in sterling money of Great Britain."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. POPE. I propose also to strike out the words "and also including the interests of the company in railway lines leased to it." This includes leased lines, which will be covered by the bonds which it is proposed to issue, and consequently the rights of the company in the leased lines would be kept by these bonds during their currency for 50 years. The object is, that the company may hold their leases on these lines. It does not change the hold of the Government in the slightest degree, until the whole amount of the loan is paid in. There can be no object in the world in having these as security for the bonds; in fact, I believe that it will not enhance the value of the bonds, though it may be a great drawback to the company.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, of course, a consequential amendment is to be made, creating a lien, I suppose in the same shape as the Algoma branch.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. But that plan will have this result, that the general public, whom it is proposed to invite to take these bonds, will have a less security than as arranged under the resolutions and under the Bill as it now stands, and all those inconveniences which were suggested as possible to follow from the statement of the company, as to the importance of the leased lines to the whole enterprise, will follow, in so far as the public takers are concerned. I do not intend to renew the discussion, but simply to re-state the proposition which was made the other day, and which I understood had been conceded, which was, that according to the company's statement many times repeated, and particularly according to their report, and the speech of their president the other day, the leased lines were essential to the proper and profitable working of the enterprise. These essential attributes to the proper and profitable working of the enterprise it is proposed not to embrace in the security to be offered to the public takers of the bonds, and by consequence it is intended so far to render the bonds less inviting.

Mr. POPE. I may say that, from information the company have got, they think it will not render the bonds less valuable, but that it will be more difficult to dispose of them without this arrangement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say that the company is of opinion that the fact of the bonds being a charge on these leased railways will affect the sale of the bonds, on the ground that it will be considered in England that they are more or less responsible for the rental of these leased roads. I do not see the argument myself, but that is the reason given; and the company express very strongly their belief that, from the habits of the people who deal in these kinds of things, the fact of there being a mortgage on these leased lines, which lines are subject to the rental which is to be paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway, complicated matters with the Canadian Pacific Railway so much that it will operate against the ready sale of the bonds. Of course, we can have no objection to assisting them in the sale of their bonds as far as possible.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has, on one question, at least, differed from the Canadian Pacific Railway; but though he does differ from them, he still yields to their wishes notwithstanding; and it is just possible that this is not the only difference of opinion, in which, notwithstanding, the views of the Canadian Pacific Railway may prevail. The hon. gentleman says he wants to assist them sell their bonds. Well, I presume the English negotiators of bonds—I admit they have been fooled very often, it is true—well, I admit they have been fooled very often; but I presume they have an ordinary measure of acuteness, and it will depend on this consideration: Do they think there is profit, direct or indirect, on these leased lines or not? If they do, they may think the loss of the bonds will affect them injuriously. Surely, if they think the leased lines are an encumbrance on the main enterprise, they would rather be without them. Either one of two things—the report is true, or the bonds must be less inviting to the public.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think so. The road is free from encumbrance, except these bonds. These bonds are the first charge on the railway. The railway is of more value than the encumbrance. They say: We have a lien here; we have not looked into the security; we are satisfied with having a first charge on the $35,000,000, and we do not want to see whether it is in the interest of the bondholders or not to pay the rental and keep the leased lines.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps it may be so. If it is so, it certainly is an extraordinary commentary upon the accounts we have had of the value of these leased lines. But to accomplish the result the hon. gentleman now desires to accomplish for the public investor, he says how very important it is to arrange that that obligation should not exist—in fact, that he is so much afraid that investors would not touch the bonds if they were on the leased lines at all.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say they would not touch them.

Mr. BLAKE. That they would not touch them at so good a price—that their value would be impaired if the leased lines were covered by them. We all remember the story of the worthy gentleman who had a clean piece of paper to which he appended his name, and who said that it was worth a penny a moment ago, but it was worth nothing now. This is a little like that. The leased lines are so very bad that if we stick them into the security they would only make it worth less than before. But if the investor says: I have a clean thing without these lines; there are obligations upon them and they may not be paying their way, and I may be brought in to pay their way for them; you see how important it is that there should be a clean thing for the investor, and that the accounts should be kept so that if they do not pay their way and there is a little deficiency, it should not be thrown on the main line of the railway. This investor, who has been pictured to us as so very skittish, and so very apt to shy at the security if it covers the leased lines, may say: I perceive that the Government of Canada have taken a security on those leased lines, but they do not offer them to us; how is that? Oh! we thought you would not like it; in point of fact, there is nothing in those leased lines, and you are better without them. Well, if that is so, there is a possibility of the leased lines not paying their way? Yes; we do not like to mention it, but that is the fact. Then, is it quite clear, if there is a deficiency in the leased lines, that that deficiency will not come out of us? That is what I pointed out to the hon. gentleman; I pointed out the importance of a separate arrangement. I fancy the shy investor, if he takes so shaky a security, will want to see that he is not charged in any sense with the rentals of those leased lines, in case there is a deficiency in the profits of the leased lines themselves. There is no such provision now, as I have explained. The company have declined to keep their accounts in any such way. They are keeping the accounts of the whole railway as one concern, rendering it impossible for us to tell whether the leased lines do or do not make a profit. That fusion of the main enterprise with the leased lines, which the hon. gentleman thinks will be so alarming to the public investor, has taken place, in practice, and the proposals made on this side of the House, so far to separate them as to have the accounts separate, so that they will show how much money the leased lines earn or how they are deficient, have been rejected.

On section 3,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is here that it is proposed to bring in the charge on the leased line, in the same manner as the charge is now kept on the Algoma branch by the Act of last Session. I propose to add the following words:—

And the interest of the company in any railway line leased to it shall also be charged with the said lien and charge to the same extent and in the same manner as if the same had been expressly included as being so charged with the property and securities mentioned in the said Act; provided, that the rights vested in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to exercise, from time to time, any powers granted to any of the companies whose lines are leased to it, may be so exercised, if and when such exercise is specially sanctioned by the Governor in Council."

On the preamble,

Mr. BLAKE. It is to be observed, after what the hon. member for West Ontario has said, that the paper which has been brought down indicates that of the sum of $700,000, which was provided by the loan of last Session for equipment, some $286,000 only has been applied to equipment, and the difference, $414,000, has been applied to construction. Therefore, the proposal which is now made, one element of which is, we would give a million dollars for rolling stock and equipment and another sum for fixed equipment, is an element which is required in consequence, admittedly now, of the provisions of last Session having been inadequate even to complete the road, according to the narrow and, to my opinion, absurd interpretation placed upon the word "complete" in the course of discussion. The $27,000,000 was to complete. Of that $27,000,000, $1,700,000 was for equipment, but $286,000 only of the $1,700,000 has been applied to equipment; $1,414,000, which was to be applied to equipment, has been applied to construction, and we are now giving more money to complete that equipment, which was to be provided for out of the $27,000,000, but the sum which was to pay for that has been used in this so-called completion, leaving this equipment unprovided for.

Mr. POPE. The engineer reported that the equipment was sufficient to commence this operation. My hon. friend says that was done in May. I do not think it was; but it was done; so it is immaterial when. The hon. gentleman can understand how this $1,000,000 is put in here to finish the furnishing of the rolling stock which the company will require after the road is fairly opened. The engineer reported at that time that there was rolling stock enough to commence operations, but not to carry on a large operation.

Mr. BLAKE. I hold in my hand—not literally, but I have it in an apartment very near here—the engineer's statement, under his own hand, made last Session, and handed to me by Sir Charles Tupper, showing the details of the estimate of $27,000,000, and it comprised $1,700,000 for rolling stock and the balance for construction. He then estimated that $1,700,000 would be wanted for equipment. A little later, he declares that only $286,000 is wanted for equipment, but the balance is required for completion, and he takes the $1,400,000 reserved for equipment and puts it to construction; and, that being done, before the road is completed they come down and tell us that $1,000,000 is wanted for equipment and some hundreds of thousands or millions more for fixed equipment; so it is plain that there was a playing with these estimates, and that the sum was used because it was wanted for construction. The engineer stated that he was reserving an adequate amount for completion, that is, $1,700,000. They found they had not enough to finish, and they took $1,400,000 and put it to completion, and now they say: We want more, and it is evident it is because the estimates of last year wholly failed to borne out, even upon the construction of the meaning of "completion," which is something you can look at but cannot go upon.

Committee rose and reported.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in, on a division.

SUPPLY — GOVERNMENT PRINTING AND ADVERTISING.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I wish to call the attention of the House to a matter which is of considerable importance, with regard to the public expenditure, and at this late stage of the Session I will be as brief and as concise as possible. I have given considerable attention to the question I am about to bring before the House, and I have found that the following sums have been spent during the year for printing and advertising, outside of the regular contracts, according to the Auditor General's report—advertising, $54,079.85; printing pamphlets, maps, etc., for the Agricultural Department, $81,667.06; half the amount paid for the Rev. Mr. Bray's pamphlet, which was charged to Dominion lands, $2,500; paper used in printing pamphlets, $27,660.79; advertising and printing for Intercolonial Railway, $28,319; printing Civil Service list, $7,688.74; total amount expended, $201,915.44 altogether, outside of the sum paid to the contractors for the parliamentary and departmental printing. Before proceeding, I wish to refer to a statement made by the hon. the Minister Customs in the House the other evening, with regard to a statement which was made by myself, with reference to the amount which was paid by order of the Court of Exchequer, on a judgment given by that court, to McLean, Roger & Co., for damages sustained by them for extra printing which was given out to other parties, which should have been included in their contract. The Minister of Customs said:

"I call the attention of the committee to the error of the hon. member for Brant, quite unintentional, no doubt, in reference to the time covered by the suit entered by McLean & Roger, by which they obtained a verdict of over $69,000. He said it covered a year of printing done during this Administration, and to prove that satisfactorily, he said the suit was not entered for a year or eighteen months after this Government came into power. The action was not entered into until a year or eighteen months after this Government came into power, and it was only after the last Session of Parliament that it was finally adjusted on the award made by the Exchequer Court. The hon. gentleman is in error in saying it covered any part of the printing done by the present Administration. I think I can establish that fact, for I have the dates and the items in my office, and will be happy to show the hon. gentleman that he is in error.

"Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I was so informed by an authority I have no reason to doubt, but if the hon. gentleman will show me, as he says he will, a convincing statement, I will be convinced. I think my authority is very good, and until I see those statements, I am not prepared to admit I am wrong.

"Mr. BOWELL. From my experience of the hon. gentleman, I do not expect him to admit that he is wrong. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the confidence he places in me. He is not prepared to accept my statement when I tell him I have the proof, but says he has the statement from a gentleman who is a good authority."

Now, when I made that statement I thought I had good authority for it, and since that time I have taken the trouble to obtain an extract from the court record, which is as follows:—

"Exchequer Court.—Alexander McLean and John Charles Roger vs. Queen.

"Action commenced by petition of right, dated 14th January, 1880. Petition filed 22nd April, 1881. Award covered from 1st October, 1874, to 31st October, 1879. Amount of award, $69,781.43."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that the elections were held in September, 1878, and the present Government was formed in October of the same year, and consequently, according to this record, one year and one month was included in the judgment which was given by the Court of Exchequer, giving McLean & Roger damages on the account referred to. I think I have satisfactorily answered the statement which was made by the Minister of Customs, and the House will see now that he did me an injustice in making the statement he did to the House. Furthermore, I will refer to a statement which was made by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) in reference to—

Mr. BOWELL. Let me ask the hon. gentleman, before he goes further—for if I have been wrong I shall be glad to be set right—if he examined the records to find what dates were included in that account from September, 1878, to October, 1879; or has he just taken the record of the dates?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I have just taken a record of the dates.

Mr. BOWELL. Then, you did not examine the account to see if there was any of the work performed between the time of the elections in 1878 and 1879?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It included one year and one month of the time of the present Administration, and I fancy, from the record they have made since in giving work to outside parties, that there cannot be any doubt with regard to the amount that was given during that year and one month.

Mr. BOWELL. You verify my opinion of you.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. At all events, I think I have established the fact that the statement I made was correct. I did not refer to any amount that was done under this Administration; but I think I have established, beyond doubt, that the Minister of Customs did me an injustice in that statement, and that my statement was correct. I wish also to refer to another matter which was discussed at that time, with reference to the publication of the Report of the Geological Survey. It was stated, during that debate, by the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), in relation to the Geological Survey Report:

"It was originally printed, I believe, by Mr. John Lovell, of the city of Montreal. When the hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, it was transferred to the Herald office, the late Senator Penny and Mr. Wilson being at that time the proprietors of the Montreal Herald. It remained in that office until the change of Government, and then the managing director of the Montreal Gazette, finding that a job of this kind had been done at the Montreal Herald office, made application to have it done at the Gazette office, and it was done there; but it was done at a price very much lower, and the price now arranged to be given, and to be given for it next year, is very much lower than the price paid to the Herald office during the time they had it."

Furthermore, I wish to quote from the same Hansard a remark made by the leader of the Government, who said:

"The hon. gentleman says that the Geological Report was printed at Montreal by his directions, in consequence of the Director General living there. It was given to the Montreal Herald in his time at a higher price than it has been done for since by the Montreal Gazette."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to show the correctness of the statement I made on that occasion by an authority which I think this House will consider good; it ought not to be disputed, at least by the gentlemen who sit on the Government benches—I give the authority of the Montreal Gazette as to prices paid for this work in the time of the Mackenzie Administration. The Montreal Gazette, of the 18th April, said:

"During Mr. Mackenzie's term, and during the earlier years when it was printed by the Gazette, it was done at what are called confidential rates, that is, 50 cents per 1,000 ems, but the Government have recently changed this, and now pay for it at what are known as the Ontario rates, that is 35 cents."

I will also quote from the Toronto Mail, the Ontario organ of the Government, which said, on the 21st of April:

"It was found that the Government had simply continued the system as to the printing of the Geological Survey Reports which was inaugurated by the Mackenzie Government. The only difference under the two administrations is, that the price now paid is much less than it was in 1874-78. During the latter period the cost of printing the Geological Survey Reports was 50 cents per thousand, whereas it is now only 35 cents."

Now, I think I have established the fact by these authorities that the work was done during the Mackenzie régime at 50 cents per thousand. The Montreal Gazette says so, the Toronto Mail says so, and I believe the records of the House will say so; consequently, there cannot be any dispute with regard to that. Now, I want to show the House that the statement made by the Montreal Gazette and the statement made by the Toronto Mail are totally incorrect, and in order to do so I will refer the House to the account which is published in the Auditor General's report, page 209. The account for the work is published in full, and it shows there were 3,500 copies of the report published at the Montreal Gazette office. The composition was paid for at the following rates: 181,000 ems, plain, at 50 cents; 434,000 ems catalogue at 75 cents; 25,000 ems tabular at $1. Or all told 640,000 ems at an average price of 69 cts. per thousand. I think I have established beyond a doubt the truth of the statement I made, that a very much larger price is now being paid for this work than was paid for doing it during the Mackenzie régime. I have established the fact by quotations made from the Toronto Mail and Montreal Gazette, and I may refer to the Auditor General's report to show that he also thinks an exorbitant price is paid for the work. In a letter he addressed to the Director of the Geological Survey he says:

"Please let me know why your report for 1881-82 and Mr. Macoun's report, were printed at the Montreal Gazette office instead of by the parliamentary contractors at Ottawa. I estimate the difference in cost at $790.10."

I think I have established beyond doubt that the statements I made, with respect to this work given to the Montreal Gazette, were correct; and therefore I leave that branch of the subject. I now desire to call the attention of the House to another matter which is referred to in the Auditor General's report, and has been referred to in this House before, and that is, the printing of the Civil Service list by the St. Hyacinthe Courier. The Auditor General has endeavored on several occasions, as can be seen by letters which are to be found in his report of last year and the year previous, to overcome the difficulty which has arisen with respect to the prices to be paid by the Government for printing given to outside parties. The Auditor General, I suppose, is endeavoring to discharge his duty in this matter, and he has had some difficulty in bring the Government to believe that he is right, or, at all events, to agree with him in the position he has taken, with respect to payments to be made for this class of work. The printing of the Civil Service list amounts to a large sum of money. The Government saw fit to purchase for the proprietor of the St. Hyacinthe Courier the type to be used in the publication of those lists, at a cost of $3,931.12, which ought to have been given to the regular contractor at much lower rates. The Auditor General calls the attention of the Under Secretary to the fact that $1,857.34 were charged in excess of the prices which the regular Government contractors could have charged under their contract. But, contrary to the opinion expressed by the Auditor General, that this amount should be deducted from the account rendered by the St. Hyacinthe Courier, the Treasury Board, after considering the matter, decided that the ruling of the Auditor General should be set aside, and that this money should be paid to that newspaper, in spite of the protest entered by the Auditor General. I observe that the Secretary of State has another pet this year. The report of the Chinese commission was given to the Montreal Minerve, and was printed by that journal. In the Supplementary Estimates I find the sum of $4,369.60 provided for the payment of that work. I have not had an opportunity to examine that account, but I am perfectly satisfied the work has been done at what are called confidential rates, and the prices paid are very largely in excess of the prices at which it would have been done by the regular parliamentary contractors. I believe an hon. member of this House is interested, if not directly, indirectly, in that newspaper, which is published in the city of Montreal. The Minister of Militia has also his pets, and two years ago he purchased type for Mr. Foote, of the Quebec Chronicle, for his use in printing the militia list. I find this year that the militia list has again been issued in the same form, and, I suppose, by the same party. Furthermore, I observe, in addition to publishing it in that shape, the Minister of Militia has seen fit to publish the same list in his report. He has had the type reset at Ottawa, and the list forms a large number of pages, and thus adds to the cost of the report. I can understand readily why he directed the work to be given to his friend in Quebec. That, I suppose, was to be considered as a legitimate perquisite, and it seems to have been not only necessary that the information should be thus printed in special form, but that the Minister should have it printed in Ottawa, and embodied in his annual report. I fail to see any necessity for extravagance of this kind being perpetrated by the Government. A few words with respect to the advertising given by the Government to the newspapers. Any hon. member who gives the subject the slightest attention must come to the conclusion that a great deal of extravagance is indulged in by the Government in dispensing advertising patronage to the Canadian newspapers. The advertising given out last year by the Government, according to the Auditor General, amounted to $54,079.85. I will give some of the items: Belleville Intelligencer, the organ of the Minister of Customs, $271.86; Bertin News, $232.82; Brockville Times, $206.80; Montreal Gazette, $737.70; Montreal Herald, $246; Shareholder, $719.90; Star, $619.80; Quebec Chronicle, $808.31; Toronto Mail, $1,278.55; and other amounts in proportion, I suppose, to the importance and influence of the organs of the Government. In the city of Ottawa, I find that the Citizen got $515.17, and the Investigator $147.90.

Mr. LISTER. What paper is that?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). There is something strange about that paper. It is a paper which I find is published semi-occasionally in the city of Ottawa. It makes its appearance once a year, when the House is about to meet, and I have here a specimen of this publication. Its editorials are devoted to lauding the good qualities of some particular Ministers of the Crown—and I have no doubt they are possessed of many good qualities—and in speaking in high terms of praise of their abilities as Ministers of the Crown. You see the size of this journal, and I do not think it circulates to any great extent outside of this building. I know we are all favored with one copy when we come here, but I never happen to see another after the first. This little journal, I find, contains an advertisement from the Department of Public Works, another from the Department of Agriculture, another from the Assistant Commissioner of Crown Lands, another from the Department of Public Works, another from the Department of Marine, another with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, another from the Department of Public Works, another from the Post Office Department, and another from the Department of Inland Revenue. Now, I think that is a very good exhibit for the little Investigator, and for the work that journal performed last year it was paid the sum of $147.90. Then the Regina Leader got $1,710.68, and I think I may refer to an account which was rendered by that journal.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is the editor?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin is the editor, and he seems to be a particular favorite with the present Government. I find in the Auditor General's report, page 367, that the Regina Leader rendered an account for the publication of mining regulations, and in one charge which helps to make up the amount I mention, I see that the Queen's Printer has seen fit to raise the amount of the account which was rendered, that gentlemen evidently thinking that the Regina Leader man knew nothing about his own business, that he did not charge enough, and consequently he increased the price $31.93. I find that he dealt in the same liberal way with the Winnipeg Times, the account of that paper for publishing the mining regulations having been raised $35.78. Furthermore, I find that the Brandon Mail rendered an account for the same work, and that the Queen's Printer raised the number of lines which the proprietor of that journal charged for, and he was paid a larger sum than he demanded in the first place. I think it must be admitted, from these facts, that this Government acts in a very paternal way with regard to their newspapers, and it is also evident that the officers of the Government have an idea that the men who publish newspapers in support of the Government do not know their own business, and do not know how to charge enough, and when their accounts are brought down to the Department, they are raised to the sum which the Government thinks they are entitled to receive. That certainly is very generous treatment. I would just say, in connection with this matter, that I believe a vast amount of money is being squandered annually by this system of advertising. When they advertise for contracts to be let, the advertisements are distributed all over the Dominion, whether there is any chance or not of the advertisements proving of any benefit to the Government or to the country. I think there is a fearful waste of money in this regard, and it is evident that the money is spent more for the purpose of subsidising the organs of the Government than benefiting the public service. Besides this amount of $54,079.85, which I have referred to as having been paid for advertising by the several Departments, I find that $28,319 was paid for advertising and printing for the Intercolonial Railway. This work was dispensed among the organs of the Government in the Maritime Provinces principally, some of them receiving very large amounts of money, footing up, in some cases, to $1,000 for this work. Now, I wish to draw the attention of the House to some facts in connection with the work which is given out by the Department of Agriculture. I find the following statement in the Ottawa Citizen of the 22nd April, headed "Facts about the Pamphlets":

"The number of publications issued and circulated by the Department of Agriculture in 1884 was, at all points, 2,597,579. The total cost of this service was, in the calendar year, $80,066.01, including paper and all charges for freight."

By referring to the Auditor General's report, I find that the Ottawa Citizen made a mistake of only $27,660.79. That can probably be easily accounted for by the fact that the Ottawa Citizen is one of the favorites of the Government, and receives its proportion of patronage, sometimes in a very liberal way. This year the proprietors of that paper have not been favored so extensively as in former years, but they received an advance, amounting to $1,600, for work which was not done, which was not delivered, and of which no account can be given. In addition to that, they were paid over $500 for advertising, amounting in the whole, to over $2,100 in the past year. I do not wonder so much at the Citizen's statement, which I have read from that journal, and which I have conclusively proven to be incorrect. It is evident that it is the intention of the organs of the Government, the Montreal Gazette, the Toronto Mail and the Ottawa Citizen, to misrepresent everything they possibly can with regard to this printing matter; but I feel it to be my duty, as a member of this House, to reveal the facts in connection with the matter, so that the country will thoroughly understand them. And in connection with the publications issued by the Department of Agriculture, I do not believe that they are issued in a way which will be of benefit to the country. I have been astonished, ever since I have been a member of this House, at the way in which this literature is given out to members of this House, to be circulated throughout Ontario and the other Provinces. We are told that this literature is prepared and printed at great cost, for the purpose of inducing immigrants to come here, and when we come down here, we find some members busily engaged in this House, during three months, in directing pamphlets, which have been printed by the order of the Department of Agriculture, to their own constituents. I think it is safe to say that tons and tons of this literature, which is supposed to be published to induce immigrants to come to this country, is sent by members to their constituents, to show them that they remember them here. Now, I think this system ought to be put a stop to. I do not think it does either the members themselves or their constituents any good, or tends to increase the population of this country, to circulate that kind of literature in this country. If it is to be circulated, it ought to be circulated in countries from which it is expected to obtain immigrants. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to some of these publications, and to give some particulars as to the price at which they have been printed, and the number of editions that have been published. I think it is important that the House should be put in possession of these facts, which I have gone to considerable trouble to collect; and I wish to state here, from my experience in the newspaper and printing business, that I am positive the statements I am going to make are strictly true in every respect, and are incontrovertible. I ask the criticism of any gentleman in this House or out of it upon them, and I defy any contradiction of the figures I am about to give. Of the tenant farmers' report, there were a large number of editions printed; and in order to show how this patronage was dispensed, I wish to state that the journal to which I shall refer first, the Hamilton Spectator, is the property of a company composed of Messrs. Southam & Carey, and some other gentlemen, and that the same firm own a job printing office, connected with the Toronto Mail newspaper. I find that in July, 1883, that company received an order for 50,000 copies of the tenant farmers' report, for which they were paid $3,134.40. In May, 1884, they received another order for 53,000 copies, for which they were paid $3,458.86. The Toronto Mail job office, which is owned by the same company, also received an order, in May, 1884, for 51,158 copies of the same publication, which cost $3,126.04. Then I find that an account was rendered by the Spectator company, without any date, for 51,479 copies, for which they were paid $2,979.99. I presume that the date was the same at which the other order was given to the same company for the same work. The Auditor General, in his report, notes that no date was attached to this account. Then, the same company were favored with the publication of what is known as the Guide Book. On the 26th of June, 1883, they delivered 54,000 copies of that book, for which they received $3,205.08. On 18th August, 1883, they had another order for 31,000 copies, for which they were paid $1,992.81, and I find that to this amount must be added $1,500, which they drew during the previous year on account, and which was referred to in the Auditor General's previous report. The total amount paid for this work, to the Spectator company, was $17,897.18; and they also received advertising, in addition, to the amount of $301.02; so that the total amount which went to the Hamilton Spectator company during the last year, for printing and advertising, was $18,198.20. Now, I wish to go into some of the details of this account. There was paid for composition, at 35 cents a thousand, on those orders, $747.04, which would have cost, at the contractors' price, 10 cents a thousand, $71.20; so that the excess paid to the Spectator company on composition was $675.84. They were paid for press work, 20,865 tokens, at 30 cents., $6,259.50. They were allowed to charge for 20,865 tokens of 250 impressions each—because that is what a token means—when only 10,433 tokens were printed, which the contractors would have done for 10 cents a token, amounting to $1,043.30; so that the excess paid to the Spectator company was $5,216.20 on press work alone. Now, I cannot see why those journals which are favored with the patronage of the Government should be allowed to charge for work which they do not perform. I see by the accounts which have been rendered that they are not only allowed to charge for double the amount of work they actually performed, but they are paid for it at 30 cents a token, whereas the Government contractors are only allowed to charge 10 cents a token, which I consider is a gross outrage. For stitching, covering, folding in maps, etc, the Spectator company charged $10,425 for the tenant farmers' report and the guide book. This work could have been contracted for, at ordinary binder's rates, for say, $7 per 1,000, or $2,030, which shows an excess paid for binding to the Spectator company of $8,395. So that they received on these jobs a total excess of $13,287.04 over the regular prices on work which cost $17,897.18. It was not only necessary to feed the Hamilton Spectator at the rate of $18,000 a year, but this same tenant farmers' report was given to the Montreal Herald office; for I find that on the 19th of February, 1884—I believe that was before the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) became proprietor of that journal—the Montreal Herald received an order for 50,000 copies of this same pamphlet which was printed by the Hamilton Spectator, for which it was paid $2,767.20, at the same extravagant rates which were paid to the Hamilton Spectator. I find that the Government not only dispenses this patronage to the journals which support them, but they do not forget their other friends, for I find that the Allan Steamship Company, which has recently been subsidised to the extent of $126,000 a year for carrying the mails—which is considered by those who know what that service is worth, to be double what ought to be paid for it—is favored by having its advertisements placed in these pamphlets free of any charge. It is not in the interest of the country that the Allan line should be favored above all other steamship lines, by having their advertisements printed and circulated at the expense of the Government. Now, I will devote a little attention to the patronage which has been given to the Montreal Gazette. I find the Gazette was favored with the printing of a pamphlet on British Columbia during the past year, and published five editions of that pamphlet—a 32-page pamphlet, with cover and map. The account was rendered 5th October, 1883, for 185,000; in January, 1884, 140,000; in March, 1884, 54,000; in April, 1884, 56,000; in June, 1884, 25,250; or, all told, in a little over eight months, five editions, amounting to 460,250 copies, at a cost of $9,211.15. I find that the composition of these pamphlets was paid for four times, although stereotype plates were used in the printing, and the composition was paid for at 35 cents per 1,000, which, multiplied by 4, makes the total amount paid at the rate of $1.40 per thousand, fourteen times more than the contractors' rate, 10 cents per thousand. I admit the amount paid for composition is not very much, because it was not a large pamphlet. It was composed of 32 pages and contains 185,000 ems, but still the difference paid the Montreal Gazette, as contrasted with the contractors' rates, amounted to $117.30. There was paid for press work for these pamphlets, 11,046 tokens at 30 cents, $3,313.80, when only 5,523 tokens were actually printed, which the contractor would have charged for at 10 cents per token, or $552.30, showing an overcharge of no less than $2,761.50 on press work over and above what the contractors would have charged, or five times the contractor's price. For binding 460,250 copies, the price charged was $4,768.02, and the work could be done for $4 per thousand in any bindery, which would amount to $1,841, or an excess paid on binding of $2,927.02. The following are the overcharges to which I have just referred:—

Excess paid on binding.....	$2,927 02
“ “ composition .....	117 30
“ “ press work.....	2,761 50
	$5,805 82

Thus, on a work which cost, all told, $9,211.15, there is an overcharge of $5,805.82 over and above the ordinary business profit. But this was not all the Montreal Gazette got during the past year, in the way of Government pap, as the Public Accounts reveal the following payments:—

For pamphlets for Immigration Department..	$9,211 15
Printing Geological Report.....	2,876 14
“ reports on fossil plants.....	126 45
“ proceedings Royal Society.....	5,321 29
Advance for work in process.....	1,500 00
Advertising .....	737 70
	$19,772 73

And I find there was an advance made on the work in progress, and in this regard the Gazette is in the same position as the Ottawa Citizen. It is very convenient for the organs to have the Dominion Government acting in the capacity of their banker. When hard up they draw on the Government for sums ranging from $500 to $1,500. The Gazette drew for work in progress $1,500, and received for advertising $737.07, making a total of $19,772.73, for printing and advertising, as the total amount the Gazette received. It is said I have no right to put in this amount the sum paid for printing the proceedings of the Royal Society. True, that account was not rendered in the name of the Gazette, but the order was given to Dawson Bros, of Montreal, who get their printing done at the Gazette office, and this report was printed there, because it bears the imprint Gazette. It must be admitted that the Gazette had to furnish the paper, to print the book, and to pay for the binding; and by the accounts rendered the Government it is impossible to say how much was paid for binding and paper. Take off $1,772.73 for the paper which was used in the publishing of the book, and for the binding, and that is double the amount which might properly be allowed for it—the Montreal Gazette pocketed, during last year, $18,000 for printing and advertising. I do not know that the “exigencies of party” require that the Gazette should be paid this exorbitant sum for Government printing. It is not in the interest of the country or to the credit of the Government that they should pay these large subsidies to the chief organs in Montreal and elsewhere. Furthermore, I believe there is an Act in force with regard to the independence of Parliament, in which it is provided that no member of the House shall have any interest in a Government contract. I do not say that any member of the House is directly interested in the Gazette, but I believe it is the general opinion that a gentleman who occupies a seat here has some indirect interest in that paper. It does not add to the independence of Parliament that by the organisation of a company a member of this House can have an interest in Government patronage, and that these exorbitant prices should be paid. Now, I find that the Quebec Chronicle has been favored again. It was not sufficient that the hon. Minister of Militia should purchase type for Mr. J. J. Foote, of the Quebec Chronicle, to enable him to print Militia lists, and he was favored with four editions of the pamphlet “What Farmers Say,” from 10th April 1883, to February, 1884, and the actual amount paid to the Quebec Chronicle was $3,780.46. The composition was paid for, considering the number of editions published, at $1.13 instead of 10 cents, or 11 times the contractors’ price. The press work was paid for at 30 cents instead of 10 cents, and for double the quantity of work actually performed. I will not refer to very many more of these interesting accounts, but there is one document which deserves particular attention, and that is the pamphlet which you all had an opportunity of seeing here the other evening, when it was produced by the member for Queen’s P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), the celebrated National Policy pamphlet, published by the Rev. A. J. Bray, of Montreal. There is a history connected with this pamphlet. I have authority for stating that the speculation was entered into in the city of Montreal by the Rev. Mr. Bray and some associates, for the purpose of getting up an advertising scheme. They formed a company for that purpose, and, after having soliciting orders for and obtained a large number of advertisements, they thought it would be advisable to draw upon the Government for a slice. The Rev. A. J. Bray had been of service to the Government in many respects in times past; he was a friend of the Government, and he naturally thought the Government would be very likely to patronise his little book. It is not necessary for me to refer to the contents of that book. It has been shown that, instead of being useful as a medium for securing immigration to this country, it was worse than useless. It has been asserted that Mr. Stewart, of Montreal, now the publisher of the Times, was interested in the publication. The Minister of Agriculture stated the other night that he gave the order for this work to Mr. Stewart. I will not dispute the correctness of that, but Mr. Stewart was acting as the agent of the Rev. A. J. Bray in this transaction, and he did not secure any of the plunder for this job. He tendered, as all the newspaper and job offices in Montreal tendered for it. His happened to be the lowest tender, and he received the work, but he received no portion of the plunder which was given to the Rev. A. J. Bray in connection with the publication of this pamphlet. It appears to me that the Government must have been ashamed of this matter themselves, for the simple reason that I find, by the records of the House, that it was ordered by the First Minister that 2,500 copies of this work should be charged to the Dominion Lands Department. It was rather too much for the Minister of Agriculture to carry such a load as the payment of $1 a piece for 5,000 copies of this publication. I believe the whole $5,000 was wasted, because I do not think it was any benefit to the country to have that publication circulated. It may have been a benefit to the hon. gentlemen whose portraits were given to the public and whose characters were depicted in such glowing terms in a few pages of that pamphlet, but in the interests of the country I do not think it was necessary that the publication should have been purchased at all by the Government; and I will state that, after figuring on the work, I find that the Government paid, in excess of the actual value of that publication, no less than $3,500 to the Rev. A. J. Bray. This order to the Rev. A. J. Bray is about on a par with the job which was given to the Stephenson Brothers in the town of Chatham, that is, the publication of the report of the Royal Commission in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will be remembered that the Messrs. Stephenson, who are sons of a gentleman who now holds an office under the Dominion Government in the North-West, and who was at one time the member for Kent in this House, and a strong supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, received the order for printing this Royal Commission report; that they never touched the work, never set a type in connection with the publication of that work, never read a proof, never handled the copy in any way whatever; but they were favored with the order for that work, and came to Ottawa and handed the work over to the Government contractors, who did it at their regular rates, I suppose, or probably more than their regular rates, taking it second hand. At any rate, the Messrs. Stephenson pocketed $3,000 in clear cash for this work which they never touched. This was a wilful waste of the public money, and this matter of giving the Rev. Mr. Bray $3,500 more than the pamphlet actually cost was also a wilful waste of the public money. There is another interesting job which I wish to refer to, and this is probably the most interesting of all the interesting jobs I have referred to as yet. It appears that the Government or the Minister of Agriculture deemed it was necessary, in the interest of his Department and in the interest of the country at large, that this Government should publish a pamphlet in German, and they looked about to find some man who would undertake the work. It happened that they struck Mr. H. W. Bennett, of the Prescott Messenger. I do not know how it came about that he was picked out among all the newspaper men of the country for the publication of a German pamphlet, for it must be obvious to the House that he was in no way in a position to publish German work. It was stated in another place in this House that before he got this order he was interviewed, or he interviewed some member of the Government in regard to this work, and he was promised the work if he would furnish his office with German type. It is well known to every member of this House that Prescott is not in a German settlement, and that there are very few, if any, Germans within the reach of the circulation of the Prescott Messenger, and that no German work is required to be printed in that neighborhood; and it seems strange that the Government should pitch upon Mr. H. W. Bennett to do this work; but, at any rate, they did, and we find that he was favored with two orders for the guide book in German. In September, 1883, he received an order for 30,000 copies, for which he was paid an advance of $379.70 previous to the delivery. For this order he was paid $4,107.50. The composition was allowed at $1 per thousand. It is well known to every practical printer in the country that German composition is charged for at no greater prices than English composition, and that a German newspaper man charges the same for the composition in German as the proprietor of an English newspaper would charge for the composition in English. But we find that this favorite of the Government was allowed $1 per thousand for composition, and was allowed for press work at 30 cents. In May, 1884, he got another order for 20,000 more of this pamphlet, for which he was paid $2,764.15, and for the composition again at $1 per thousand, and the same for press work; he was allowed to charge, like all the others, for double the amount of press work that he actually did. Well, after this matter came up in the Public Accounts Committee, I received a letter from a German publishing house in the county of Waterloo. The proprietors of that journal asked me to send them a copy of this German pamphlet, and a copy of the account which was rendered to the Government. I complied with their request, because I wanted to have some one to back me up in the statements I was about to make to the Public Accounts Committee and to this House, in regard to these printing accounts, and I received a letter from the publishers of that German newspaper, in which they say that "after a careful calculation the work can be done here for $1,800;" and the letter further says "that the foreman of another office in the same town also made an estimate and he arrived at the same figure." Now, it will be seen, as I have said, that the total cost of this work was $6,871.65. The sum this work would have cost if the order had been given to any German printer in this country would have been $1,800, which shows that the excess paid on this job was no less than $5,071.65. The excess paid on this one pamphlet would buy a steam press, a steam engine, and all the type that would be required to furnish the office of the Prescott Messenger. In giving this work to the Prescott Messenger the Government presented to the proprietor of that paper enough money to buy his office and furnish it with all the material he requires in his business, together with a power press and a steam engine to drive it. I do not know that I will particularise any more of these jobs, but I will just call the attention of the House to some of the statements that were made by the gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches when they were in the cold shades of Opposition, with regard to the course they would pursue if they were ever favored with the confidence of the people of this country again. I find that Sir Leonard Tilley, in the election contest of 1878, stated as follows:—

"Had the Government of which he was a member been in power during the last five years, he was satisfied that the average expenditure would not have exceeded 22½ millions, where the Mackenzie Government had levied 24 millions."

I find that Sir Charles Tupper, in a speech in the House, before the election, in 1878, said:

"I trust I have satisfied the House that it is not a question of high or low taxation any further than this, inasmuch as we governed the country with smaller taxation, and inasmuch as we are prepared to govern the country again without these extravagant expenditures which have been made by the present Government since they have been entrusted with power. All that we ask is, not that the taxation of the people shall be increased—because we do not require so much money as hon. gentlemen opposite, as we have shown by our economy in the past, and which we are prepared to practice in the future; but that the money shall be levied in such a way as will furnish employment for the people and provide the means of having the taxation which is levied upon them."

Now, I am not going to enter into a discussion of the subject opened up by these statements. I am not going to refer to the fact that they have failed to furnish employment to the people, and therein they have failed to provide the people with the means of paying the taxation which is levied upon them. They have kept their promises by increasing the annual expenditure of the Dominion from twenty-three and a half millions to thirty-three and a-half millions! This is a fair sample of the economy practised by those hon. gentlemen, after all the professions they made before the elections of 1878. Then I find that Sir Charles Tupper said in the House, while in Opposition:

"I say the Government have no right to have a surplus. If they have a surplus, they should endeavor to get rid of it by lightening the taxes on the people."

Well, they have had surpluses, but they have not carried out the doctrine which was laid down by Sir Charles Tupper. They have been boasting of their surpluses for years past, but they were obtained by imposing an exorbitant taxation on the people of this country. I would like to ask what they have done with their surpluses? They have got rid of them, not by reducing taxation, but by extravagant expenditure in every department of the public service; by creating offices for relations of their own and for relations of their political friends; by giving extravagant aid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; by bonusing purely local railways, to keep their supporters solid, and by giving large grants to railways in which members of the Government themselves are interested. Now, Sir, I do not think it is right that the people's money should be expended in dispensing advertising patronage to organs of the Government, and subsidising them in this manner. I do not think it is in the interests of the newspapers themselves. A newspaper that has to be fed in this way at the public crib does not deserve the confidence of the people. I say it destroys its own influence—though it may not destroy its influence with the Government—but it destroys its own influence in the community where it circulates. On several occasions we have had notable instances of the influence which was possessed by independent journals, journals which are not afraid to speak their own mind. I would just refer incidentally to the noble instance which was furnished by the Montreal Witness two years ago, when, in the interests of the public who travel by sea it ventured to expose in its columns the treatment which had been received by immigrants who came over in the Allan line of steamers. It is well known that the Allan Company is a powerful corporation—it is probably the most wealthy to be found in Canada. It has great influence in Montreal, and it has great influence with the Dominion Government, as we have found in times past. That company saw fit to enter a suit against the Witness for $50,000 damages for having libelled, as they said, the company, by publishing the article complained of, showing the public that the company was not treating immigrant passengers by their steamships in a proper way. The suit was fought out in the courts, and to the credit of the jury which tried the case it found a verdict for the defendants. If the Montreal Witness had been a subservient journal, if it had been fed with Government pap, if it had been fed with Allan line pap, if it had depended for its life upon any Government or corporation, as these organs seem to depend upon this Government for life and subsistence every day, it could not have had independence to make the statement it did make in the interest of the public at large. That was a notable instance of what a free, untrammelled and independent press can do for the benefit of the people. Where do we find the organs of the Government, the Montreal Gazette, Toronto Mail, Hamilton Spectator, Regina Leader, all those journals which are fed so systematically by this Government? We find them constantly praising this Government. Every iniquity practised by this Government is ignored by those journals. They see eye to eye with the Government on every public question under discussion. We have had noteworthy instances of this during this Session and last Session. We found, notwithstanding the fact that this Government was wasting the public money, by expending extravagant sums in aiding railways, for the purpose of consolidating their following in this House—that the Government was advancing immense sums to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and this year has been doing the same thing—those organs all sang the same tune. They never can criticise fairly any action of the Government, but they sink their independence completely. They lose their influence, or ought to lose it, with the intelligent electors of the Dominion. During this Session, notably in the case of the Franchise Bill, those organs have made some queer statements. The Montreal Gazette, as has been stated by the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) had—I was going to say independence, but I hardly think that word would be applicable; but it did state with respect to that Bill, especially the clause relating to Indians, that if the Bill really meant what was said by Opposition organs that journal would oppose the measure. It was proved in this House that the Bill did really mean what the Opposition organs said. We had the evidence of the leader of the Government himself that the Opposition interpreted the Bill properly. Did the Montreal Gazette have sufficient independence, after this was made plain, to carry out the resolution which it made—that it would oppose the Bill if it contained any such provisions? Not a bit of it. The Montreal Gazette was whipped into line, as all the organs are, if ever they manifest the slightest independence. The Montreal Gazette, Toronto Mail, Hamilton Spectator and London Free Press, and all those journals receiving patronage from the Government, sang the same tune. They misrepresented a great deal of what was said in this House by the Opposition, and from day to day, week to week, month to month, during that discussion, they misrepresented the Bill, the views expressed by the Opposition, and they sustained the Government which paid them for doing so. We may have a partisan and subservient Senate, as I believe we have; we may have a corrupt Government, as I believe we have; we may have a venal House of Commons, as I believe we have; but with all these, if we were possessed of a free and independent press, the country might hope, in time, to throw off all those barnacles from the ship of State and eventually secure honest government.

An hon. MEMBER. Like the Government in Ontario.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). We have it in Ontario—that is where we have honest government. But when the press of the country is a purchasable and purchased press, there is not much safety for the Dominion. When public opinion is led by men who are openly bribed to mislead and misrepresent public questions, there cannot be much hope of the purification of the public service. I hope the facts I have presented to-night will be of service to the Government and of service to the newspapers to which I refer. It would be more to their credit if they acted in a different manner with respect to this printing question. I know for a fact that after the first Session I was down here, after I took a little trouble to investigate the accounts and expose the jobs being constantly perpetrated, immediately afterwards there was a perfect swarm of proprietors of newspapers round the office of the Minister of Agriculture, asking him for pity's sake to give them a little patronage. I have no doubt that he was induced to dispense a little more patronage than he otherwise would have done had not an exposure been made. But I hope, for the future, the members of the Government will see that it is their duty to conserve the interests of the people and be a little more economical in their expenditure in this regard.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We had a threshing bee in another place over the statements made by the hon. gentleman, and having at that time pretty thoroughly separated the wheat from the chaff, I do not propose at this time to detain the House more than a few moments, while I refer to two or three of the more palpable mistakes into which the hon. gentleman has fallen. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has dealt with three classes of patronage—as he calls it—which is given to some of the newspapers of this country. The first of these is the printing of the Report of the Geological Survey; and what I want to point out in regard to that is, that the Geological Survey Report forms no part of the contract for the public printing, but is expressly, by arrangement with the contractors themselves, exempted from it, and for the reason that the work is of a character which it was believed by those in charge of the Geological Survey Department could not be done, or ought not to be done, in the same style as our ordinary Blue Books are printed. I think, if the hon. gentleman has looked at the volumes of the Geological Reports—I do not say as they are printed now, but as they have been printed during the last ten or twelve years—and will compare them with the ordinary Blue Books of Parliament, he will admit at once that there is a vast difference in the character and style of the work, and that it would not be creditable to this country to send out books of that kind, if they were printed in the manner in which our ordinary Blue Books are printed. But I desire to call the attention of the House to what seems to be a rather disingenuous statement by the hon. gentleman. When discussing this matter the other evening, I said the Government had reduced the price of printing that report. Formerly it was printed by the Messrs. Lovell, in Montreal, and when the late Government came into office the printing was transferred to the Montreal Herald office, and for the first time went into a newspaper office to be printed, as distinguished from an ordinary job printing office. The price paid for it then was 50 cents per thousand ems—the ordinary composition price for that kind of work—and the hon. gentleman has charged me with having misstated the price as now paid. I notice by the Hansard report—and, if I remember aright, I corrected it in the revised edition—that I am made to say, in the daily edition, that the price which has since been paid has been a very much reduced price. The statement which I did make, the statement which I thought I was careful in making, was that the Government had now reduced the price, and that the price now paid was very much less than what was formerly paid. That was brought out in evidence in another place. The hon. gentleman quotes from the Auditor General's Report, that the price paid last year to the printers of the Geological Survey Report was 50 cents for ordinary composition, 75 cents for other classes of work, and $1 for other classes of work; and hon. gentlemen about him cheered those statements, as if they implied that whereas, during Mr. Mackenzie's Administration 50 cents was paid, a higher price was paid now. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman, if he is a printer, knows that the price of 50 cents, paid during the Mackenzie régime, was increased to 75 cents for certain classes of work, and to $1 for other classes of work.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The Gazette does not say so.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman knows as a printer—and therein comes the disingenuousness of his statement, which has been contradicted by what is practically the sworn testimony of the officers of the Government, examined before the Public Accounts Committee—he knows that when he undertakes to assume that because 50 cents is stated, that means 50 cents for all classes of work. If any one went into his office and asked him what he would charge for printing a particular job, and he said 50 cents a thousand, he knows perfectly well that if he got the job, under the well established rules of the trade, for tabular work and for figure work, he would be paid certain higher established prices, and that without these being even mentioned, they coming in under the regular rules of the trade; and I state here, on my responsibility, that that same principle of accounting applied during the time Mr. Mackenzie was in office. So much for that particular work. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the printing of the proceedings of the Royal Society. Now, that matter was dealt with in another place, and the hon. gentleman ought to have known, if his memory had not failed him, that the statement he made to-day was calculated to deceive this House. He knows perfectly well that the Government had nothing whatever to do with the printing of the Royal Society's Report. What the Government, or, rather Parliament, did, was to vote $5,000 to the Royal Society, to enable it to get its transactions printed, and it was no matter of patronage by this Government in connection with the printing of that work. Then the hon. gentleman says that the Gazette office got $5,300 for the printing of that work. The hon. gentleman knows, or he ought to know, that that statement is incorrect. I have in my hand a letter which was obtained from Dawson Bros., by the manager of the Montreal Gazette office, in answer to a letter from him, in which Dawson Bros. explain how that work was done; and though it is a matter of business which does not affect Parliament in the least, with which Parliament has nothing to do, I will read the letter. The letter is dated on the 24th of April, after the discussion took place in the Public Accounts Committee. It is as follows:—

"DEAR SIR,—Your letter of the 23rd is before us, and in reply we beg to say that the printing of the Royal Society transactions is entirely in our hands, and that if we had the work done at your office it is because we found there the best facilities for doing the work.

"The volume is a large one, and being divided into five sections, going on simultaneously, each section being, moreover, composed of the contributions of many authors, it demands the lock-up of a very large mass of type, both in small pica and long primer, but especially in small pica. The work must therefore be done in an office like yours, which has very large fonts of these styles, and can permit them to be locked up for an indefinite time.

"Yours truly,
"DAWSON BROS."

Now, Sir, as a matter of fact, the amount received by the Montreal Gazette office for the printing of that report was simply a matter of composition and press work, and was not half the sum mentioned by the hon. gentleman. The Messrs. Dawson supplied the paper; they did the binding; and a committee of the Royal Society, headed by Dr. Sterry Hunt, the chairman of that committee, supervised the printing. They came to the office and read the proofs, and it was a matter with which the Government had no more to do than they had with the publication of the admirable work of Mr. Bourinot, which was also printed at the Gazette office, and for copies of which the Government, I believe, subscribed; and therefore, with as much propriety, it might be said that that was Government patronage bestowed upon the Montreal Gazette. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the matter of pamphlets, and again he is disingenuous. He referred to a particular pamphlet called "British Columbia" and he tells us that there were five editions of that work, and that the composition was, therefore, charged five times over; and he went on to show what an extravagant job that was, and how utterly extravagant the Government were in permitting it. He said, if that work had been done by the public contractors there would have been but one composition, and that the Gazette got some seventeen times much—

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Fourteen times.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell)—fourteen times as much as would have been obtained by the Government printers. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows that the Government printers in Ottawa are perpetually printing extra or new editions of the same work. Take, for instance, blank forms from the Customs Department. A certain number are ordered, and if the printer is skilful, if he knows his business—and judging by the success of the contractors in their work, upon which I congratulate them, a success which I do not begrudge them—if they are skilful, they have every one of those forms stereotyped, and every time a new order is sent to them, precisely the same composition is charged, as the hon. gentleman knows; and, therefore, if this work went to the contractors here for five editions, they would not charge only one composition, but, as the hon. gentleman knows, if the same work was repeated over and over again, they charge every time a separate composition. But one point was, that there was an enormous price paid for the work in connection with the matter. Why, Sir, when I tell you that of this $9,000, which the hon. gentleman said was paid for the 460,000 copies of this pamphlet, the amount paid for composition was $17 for each edition, this House will understand how scrupulously honest the hon. gentleman was, and how exceedingly careful he was not to deceive the House in any way in the statement he made. But with regard to this and other pamphlets, what are the facts which were brought out in evidence by officers of the Government in the Committee of Public Accounts? There it was established that since 1872 there has not been one single pamphlet printed by the public contractor. This work has always been done in the same way; the late Administration—and I am not using the tu quoque argument, but am dealing with the facts as they exist—gave out similar pamphlets to outside offices owned by friends of the Government, and not one single pamphlet was ever given to the public contractor. The same policy has been pursued by this Government, with this difference, that the price has been very largely reduced. The hon. gentleman knows the evidence which was given by the Queen's Printer in the Public Accounts Committee, and he knows that on one edition of the pamphlet relating to British Columbia, of 56,000 copies, at the prices which were given for that kind of work by the late Administration, the cost would have been $1,506, while the price actually paid by this Government was $1,034, or nearly 50 per cent. less. On another pamphlet, "What Farmers Say," of which 50,000 copies were printed, the price which would have been paid under the former Government was $2,653.50, while the price paid by this Government was $1,495.67, and these figures were made up in the office of the Queen's Printer and were given in evidence in the Committee of Public Accounts, the hon. gentleman knowing all the time that that evidence had been given. Then, the hon. gentleman has referred to the matter of advertising, and he tells us that it is an outrage that advertising should be given to friendly newspapers. Does the hon. gentleman not know that advertising must be given somewhere—that the Government must advertise? If they do not advertise—if they let contracts, for instance, without advertising—I venture to say that the hon. gentleman would be the first to blame them for it. The advertising, therefore, must be done, and does the hon. gentleman not know that it has always been the practice of all Governments to give the advertising to papers friendly to them? That is a legitimate patronage which the press has, and it is about the only patronage the press generally has, in connection with the political party which they favor being in office. If the hon. gentleman will look back to a historic event which took place in this country in 1864, he will find that the late George Brown, the leader of the Liberal party at that time, when the coalition which led to the adoption of Confederation was formed, issued a circular to the Reform newspapers throughout the Province of Ontario, in which he stated that if they supported Confederation they would have the patronage of the Government; whereas, if they would not support it they would not have the patronage of the Government. I remember my hon.

friend, the late Senator Penny, denouncing that circular as an outrage—as an insult, in fact, to the press of Canada. But it was defended in the Toronto Globe, on the ground that the advertising patronage of the Government always went, and must always, in the very nature of the case, go to friendly newspapers, and to friendly newspapers practically alone. But I find that this Government have not been confining themselves to friendly newspapers. The hon. gentleman, for instance, stated $600 as the amount received—over the average of the newspapers he quoted—by the Montreal Star. Everyone knows that the Montreal Star is not a Conservative or Ministerial newspaper; everyone knows that it boasts of being a thoroughly independent newspaper; but those who read it carefully know that it has always three words for hon. gentlemen opposite for one that it has for this side of the House. But it is a paper with a large circulation—perhaps a larger circulation than any other paper in Canada to-day.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The Government want to get it over.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I venture to say the hon. gentleman would not make that statement in the presence of the proprietor of the Montreal Star. It shows, Sir, that he, a newspaper man, he who once occupied the position of president of a press association, if I mistake not, so degrades the profession to which he belongs, so fouls his own nest—and every one knows that it is an ill-bird that does it—as to say that $600 can turn over the Montreal Star. Shame on him, Mr. Speaker! A gentleman occupying the position he does ought not to make a statement of that kind. He knows it is not true. I know that statement is not in order; but I trust, Sir, under the circumstances, with an insult of that kind cast at the press, that one may be permitted to transgress the rule of order to the extent of saying that he ought, at any rate, to know it is not true. Then, the hon. gentleman dealt with the question of the independence of the press. Well, Sir, I do not think the press is on its trial here. The Government are on their trial, always on their trial, not only when Parliament is sitting, but during the recess as well; and, looking at their records in connection with public printing, remembering that they have not done what hon. gentlemen did when they were in office, distribute the ordinary printing of the Departments to their friends, but have simply continued these two classes of work, or rather one class—because the Report of the Geological Survey is not in the contract at all—have simply continued the policy with regard to the printing of these pamphlets, but at a much lower price than their predecessors were in the habit of paying, I venture to say that they can very well appeal to the public judgment as to their treatment of this particular question. The hon. gentleman made a statement with reference to the Messrs. Allan having an advertisement in one of these pamphlets. That was also explained in the Public Accounts Committee. They got that advertisement as a compensation for circulating the pamphlets through their 1,200 agencies in Great Britain. It was about the cheapest way in which that could be done, and it was paid for in that way. I do not intend to delay the House on this question any longer. I thought it necessary to make these few statements in reply to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I wish to say a word of personal explanation. I wish to say that the member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has twisted the expression I made about the Montreal Star. The imputation I wished to cast was on the Government, not on the Montreal Star at all.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Subsidy to a line of steamers to run fortnightly between France and Quebec, provided the French Government appropriates a sum equal to the amount contributed by the Dominion of Canada for the same services..... $50,000

Mr. BOWELL. I asked to let this item stand, particularly on account of the statements made by the hon. member for Montmorency, and also to be enabled to lay before the House a statement of the contract into which the Government has entered with the Halifax Steamship Company. Before entering into the question of the contract, I desire to state that I asked the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), who was personally acquainted with Mr. Wood, the agent of the line, to telegraph and ascertain the facts as to the correctness of the statement made by the member for Montmorency. These answers are very explicit. When the hon. gentleman reads them, it will be found that the statements made on the authority of Messrs. Plamondon & Auger, in the Quebec Chronicle, are entirely unfounded. A contract under this item has been entered into with the Halifax Steam Navigation Company. The contract is for a fortnightly line between Canada and Havre, sailing alternately from the St. Lawrence and Halifax, from the St. Lawrence during the seven months following the opening of navigation, and from Halifax the remainder of the year. When a full cargo cannot be obtained in Canada for France, the company are to be permitted to go to Boston or Portland for cargo, but in all cases they must stop at Halifax or some Canadian port. The duration of the contract is five years. During the first three years there are to be 20 round trips, and during the last two years fortnightly trips all the year around, the subsidy in no case to exceed the $50,000 voted by Parliament. They are specially permitted to call at Charlottetown and Pictou if any cargo can be obtained at these points. Goods for Canada must be landed in Canada before the vessel sails for any other port. All steerage passengers shall be landed in Canada and not ticketed or re-shipped for the United States, Canadian merchants to have preference, and special provision is made against discriminating rates against Canadian ports. Most hon. gentlemen at all acquainted with the trade from the United States and Canada must know that in many cases discriminating rates were established in favor of American ports, but special provision is made that Canadian merchants shall not be placed at a disadvantage compared with the Americans. Their service was to commence 1st of April, 1885; the steamers to be first-class, special survey at Lloyds or the French Bureau Veritas, with a carrying capacity of 2,000 tons, and speed not less than 11 knots, and to be managed by first-class officers. They are obliged to carry whatever mails are given to them at the different ports at which they call, and to deliver them at their destination, without any additional charge to the Government, other than that which is paid for the all-round trip, $2,000. The contract may be declared void at any time by the Finance Minister, in case of a violation of any of the conditions of the contract, and he is to be the sole judge as to whether the contract was violated or not. These are the terms of the contract into which this company has entered with the Government. The question of building up a trade between this country and France has been discussed in this House so often, almost every Session for the last seven or eight years, that I do not deem it at all advisable to repeat what has been said on former occasions; but I am glad to know, from the telegrams received, that the vessel has been able to obtain a cargo in Canada, and that there is every prospect of its succeeding. We only hope it may, in order that the desire of Parliament in voting this sum may be realised.

Mr. STAIRS. The following are the telegrams sent and received. I sent the second one, as the first did not seem to be understood:—

"To Joseph Wood, Halifax, N.S. :
"OTTAWA, 30th June, 1885.

"Criticism in House to-night on refusal of Ulunda take freight at Quebec, Langelier said, agents said steamers would not take any there. Wire me full particulars refusal to take deals, and particulars of any other freight.

"(Signed) JOHN F. STAIRS."

"OTTAWA, 30th June, 1885.

"To Joseph Wood, Halifax, N.S. :

"Refer to letter in Quebec Morning Chronicle, 3rd June, respecting refusal to take cargo Quebec in connection mine to-night. Give an answer to it.

"(Signed) JOHN F. STAIRS."

The following is the answer received :—

"HALIFAX, 30th June, 1885.

"John F. Stairs, M.P., House of Commons, Ottawa :

"No freight offered at Quebec to Ulunda. Quebec agent enquired day before she sailed if we would offer room for deals. I refused, because nothing was certain, and steamer ready to leave; 100 tons got in Montreal. Positively we were never offered any deals. Please inform House we could not afford to stop 2,000-ton steamer at Quebec waiting doubtful cable from France. It was a broker's enquiry of no value whatever.

"(Signed) JOSEPH WOOD."

As I thought, very likely, that Mr. Wood, the manager, had not access to the letter from the Quebec Morning Chronicle quoted in the House, I sent him the following extract :—

"Plamondon & Auger write to Quebec Chronicle of 3rd June : 'What is the reason that the pioneer vessel, the first of the line between Quebec and Havre, refuses to take freight at this port. We have contracted for and made sales to several parties in France, with the expectation of being able to ship by this line. To our great surprise, we were told by the agent for the line at Quebec that the steamer Ulunda will not be permitted to stop here for freight, although this line receives a large subsidy from the Dominion Government.' Were any orders given that this or any other steamer of the line would not stop at Quebec. Contradict this explicitly, if not true. Your telegram yesterday not clear on this point."

And I received the following reply :—

"No orders were given not to stop at Quebec. On the contrary, I stopped Ulunda, on arrival, 25th May, at Quebec; kept her there three days; got not a single offer of cargo; sent her to Montreal; kept her there five days; got 100 tons; ordered her right away, when ready. Quebec enquiry for deals came too late, and, as already explained, was only enquiry. The statement that we refused to stop at Quebec for cargo is entirely false."

Then I sent another :

"I understand Ulunda got nothing at Quebec. Of what description goods did Montreal cargo consist, and what from Halifax on both trips?"

The reply is as follows :—

"Montreal cargo all potash; Halifax cargoes, lobsters. Twenty cabin, four steerage passengers. Eight thousand cases lobsters here now waiting our steamer."

I presume that refers to the sailing of the next steamer which is to go. I think the telegram sent by Mr. Wood is sufficient to show that the statement made in Quebec, as to the refusal of the steamers to take this freight, is not correct. This trade between France and Canada is a most important one to the people of Canada, for this reason: that it is impossible for us to ship goods to France indirectly without having to pay an extra amount of duty. That is a very great disadvantage under which we lie. It may be probable that it will take some time to build up this trade, but I think that, if the people are content to accept such services as this line of steamers can give, as the trade develops, better facilities can be provided. If we have no direct trade with Canada the exporters of our products to France are at a great disadvantage, because the trade with the United States is large enough to go directly from their own ports. It has been true, in the past, that some portion of the products of Canada have been sent through the United States, and, in order to secure entry into France at the ordinary rates of duties, they went as American goods. I think it would be well, if this subsidy encouraged the trade sufficiently, to support a good line of steamers, so that in time it might be carried on without any subsidy at all.

Mr. MILLS. I think it is very desirable that the Government should be prepared to give to the House some information upon the character of the cargoes, and their amount and value, which go from Canada to the continent of Europe, and come from the continent of Europe back to Canada. We have three lines of steamers subsidised by the Government, and hon. gentlemen pretend to justify these subsidies, on the ground that they are to build up, at an early day, a trade between this country and the continent of Europe. The statements of the member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) and the Minister of Customs, go to show that these lines of steamers are practically running between American ports and the continent of Europe, and they are subsidised to call at our ports. It shows how small is the amount of freight carried from Canada, because, if there were any considerable amount, it would not require a subsidy to induce those steamers to call at Halifax or other points on their way between American ports and the continent of Europe. I think the statement made by the member for Halifax and the Minister of Customs shows that really there is at the present time very little trade indeed between Canada and the continent of Europe, and in my opinion there is nothing that will justify the very large expenditure incurred by the Government.

Resolution to be reported.

TRADE RELATIONS—NEWFOUNDLAND AND THE DOMINION.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask the question of the Minister in relation to a very important question in connection with the trade between Canada and Newfoundland. I received the following telegram a short time ago :—

"Newfoundland duty on Canadian flour $1 a barrel, gone into force. Newfoundland merchants telegraphing their correspondents here to stop jobbing."

This is of great importance to the trade, as it is an important object to ascertain whether any steps have been taken, and what they are, to avoid this difficulty in the trade negotiations between Newfoundland and Canada. I would like to know if the Ministry can give me some assurance that the matter is being arranged?

Mr. BOWELL. Telegrams of a similar character have been received by the Government to-day, and we expect to deal with this to-morrow in some way. The Parliament of Newfoundland imposed an extra duty upon certain products coming into that country from other countries that have the right of fishing in their waters, in case they should put a duty upon the fish they have caught in Newfoundland and shipped to their country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it likely that some amicable arrangement will be entered into?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 3rd July, 1885.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at half-past One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE DISTURBANCE IN THE NORTH-WEST—CIVIL SERVICE VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. EDGAR. I should like to ask a question of the Government in reference to some members of the Civil Service who are out as volunteers in the North-West. I have observed that some of the educational institutions and the Law Society of Ontario, I think, have allowed students who have gone out on service with the militia to have their standing as if they had passed the examination. I would suggest to the Government whether, as a Civil Service examination has taken place while these troops have been out, it would not be worth while for them to see the propriety of not allowing the examination to be lost for the members of the service who are out in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This question has been, and is now before the Government, as to the manner in which the civil servants who have gone out to fight the battles of their country shall be recompensed for their services at the front, as well as the services of all other militia men.

CULLING AND MEASURING OF TIMBER.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 154) further to amend the Acts relating to the culling and measuring of timber in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the hon. Minister promised us some information the other day in reference to the mode of inspecting spars and masts, by what measurement they were inspected, and what was the standard measurement.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I find that the measurement adopted in Quebec is similar to that adopted in the other Provinces.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then the measurement is obtained by multiplying the diameter by the length. I do not see how the measurement in board measure can be obtained in that way.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew.) The contents of the stick is not the question which arises in regard to the sale of masts and spars at all. The length of the mast and spar must be in a certain proportion to the diameter. It is not computed by board measurement at all. The stick is to be three times in feet the diameter in inches at one-third from the bottom.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know from the Minister what was the total loss on this to the consolidated revenue for the last year or two? What were our net receipts and expenditures?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The receipts are about $43,000, and the whole expenditure $71,000 in round numbers, leaving a loss to the revenue of $28,000. That was due to the falling off in trade, and partially to the reduction of the fee that was formerly charged. But the present Bill does not propose to increase the charges upon the consolidated revenue; on the other hand, there will be much less of a charge than at present; there will be a reduction of, I think, $3,000 or $4,000 by this arrangement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We were promised that although at the time the deficit could not be extinguished, it would be gradually reduced to nothing. It is clear that $20,000 a year is a large sum to pay. It looks very much as if an unnecessary number of pensioners were being placed on the public Treasury, which is neither in the interest of the country or of the trade.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is becoming more evident every day that reductions must be made both in the culling department and the different offices. I propose to work out the reduction, and to commence it by the reductions proposed in this Bill, and next year to effect a saving in the offices at Quebec. Next year the reduction will amount to from $5,000 to $6,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We shall be glad of that. Can the hon. gentleman say, approximately, within what space of time he will be able to make the receipts equal the expenditure, or what does he suppose will finally be the extra charge under this Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It depends greatly upon the lumber trade; and all I can be expected to do is to assure the House that this reduction of staff and, therefore, of expenditure, will be made. It is quite evident that the staff is too large. With respect to the objection of increasing the number of pensioners: that is one of those things which is unavoidable. When hon. gentlemen opposite were in power they found the necessity of dealing with this Department. They found the staff too large, and they reduced it by placing on the retired list 26 or 27 cullers. I do not propose to add more than 8 or 10 to that list, and that at the same rate as those who were previously retired.

Mr. LANGELIER. What authority will decide as to whether cullers are incapable, by reason of age or otherwise, from pursuing their business? There is nothing in the Bill to show what is the authority to decide that point, which is one of great importance.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman will have to place a little confidence in the Department fairly administering the law.

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not object to the Department deciding the question; but the Bill does not state whether the Minister or supervisor of cullers will decide it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first action taken will be by the supervisor of cullers at Quebec. If he certifies to the Department that "A" and "B" have reached that age when they are incapable of performing the duties of culler, then the cases will be taken up by the Department. Several communications have been made to me by gentlemen who differ in politics from the party at present in power, as to how the men will be treated. I have in all cases assured them that no man will be removed for political purposes. If he is incapable of performing the duty, then he will be placed upon the retired list. That is all the assurance I can give.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew.) I am pleased to hear the Minister state that no culler will be removed for political reasons. In 1877 the Bill was introduced by the Minister of Inland Revenue, which contained a provision nearly similar to that in this Bill. I am sorry to say that a good many cullers were removed for political reasons at that time. I would suggest that "1880" be replaced by "1878," and that the words, "all who may since be employed," be added.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it not time to consider whether there is any real propriety or necessity in having those persons pensioned after a certain period of service. They are not civil servants. I would not interfere with those who are now members of that distinguished fraternity, but why should everyone who undertakes to be a culler be qualified to receive a pension, when it may appear, for some reason, that it is undesirable to employ him any longer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thought I had given the reason already. I had before me the example of our predecessors in that case, and I do not think it will be fair to those who are now engaged in that service to depart from the rule which has been followed so long. It must also be remembered that the lumber trade has contributed a very large sum to this fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The case stands thus: That the country is taxed $28,000 a year for the purposes of this trade. I agree with the hon. gentleman that so far as the men who are at present actually engaged, and as to whom it may be said that some kind of understanding has been arrived at, it may be impossible to refuse them a retiring pension. But the question is why the cullers who may hereafter be appointed should be pensioned, while the country is taxed to a considerable extent for the benefit of the cullers or the trade? It is true, a part of this money comes from the lumber trade, but at the same time there is a steady annual deficit, which is paid by the country at large.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). As I understand the Bill, there is no provision for pensioning cullers who may be attached to the office hereafter, but only those who are employed at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister, apparently, does not so understand it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). That is how I understand it, and I think if the hon. gentleman looks at the Bill, he will so understand it too. As to the country being put to the expense, I would just say that up to, I think, 1874, the fees which were collected from the lumbermen in connection with the culling of timber in Quebec, were much in excess of the requirements of the office. It is true there have been some deficits, but I think, taking the whole receipts since Confederation, it will be found that there is still a small surplus in favor of the office. This Bill provides that the Governor in Council shall have the power to raise the tariff of fees whenever it may be necessary to meet the expenses of the office, and I have no doubt that the Minister of Inland Revenue, for the time being, will exercise that power when it is found that the surplus previously collected from the lumbermen shall have been exhausted. With regard to pensioning the cullers, a larger number of them were employed in the office than was deemed necessary, and in 1877 the then Minister of Inland Revenue—from the pressure which was brought to bear on him by members in the trade—of there being a large number of cullers who were wholly incapable of discharging their duties, deemed it expedient to reduce the staff considerably, and I do not think it would be considered fair to discharge these men without making some provision for them. The sum of $200 was regarded by the Government, of which the hon. member for Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) was a member, as a fair annuity, and it is not now proposed to increase it. Therefore, as it does not apply to those who may hereafter be appointed, I think there can be no objection to the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it is clearly understood and stated that that was the case, it would meet the objection I raised. What I objected to was, that when there was a serious deficit every year, every man should be entitled to a pension on retiring. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is right in saying that when we found that there were employed a great many more cullers than were wanted, in the interests of the country and the trade, at large salaries, some such arrangement as he mentioned was proposed. I think it saved a good deal of money to the country, and, if I remember aright, the hon. member for Renfrew was one of those who complained of the unnecessary burdens which were placed on the trade.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the Minister state what is the balance still to the credit of the fund, if any; also the amount of the deficit for the last financial year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As I understand, the surplus has been exhausted, and there is a slight balance on the other side of the ledger.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what I understood. I think the surplus was exhausted at the last financial year, and I think there is about $30,000 on the wrong side.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, I think it is about $18,000 or $19,000. With regard to the question put by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) the Bill does not establish the principle of gratuities to that class of officers. It recognises the general principle that where an office is abolished in the public interest the holder of the office is entitled to consideration. It is only in cases where a reduction is made in the staff in the public interest that the granting of annuities would be considered at all. It will be several years before a new appointment is made, at any rate.

Mr. BLAKE. On that subject I wish to make this observation. You are dealing with what is apparently a diminishing industry. On two occasions there has been a reduction in the staff, because it was too large for the current exigencies of the office. Now, it seems to me it would be well for the future to make an express provision which would disentitle those who come in from any expectation of an annuity. Then the men who came in would come in upon that risk and understanding. As a general rule, when men come into a public office, it is supposed to be permanent—that the public service would continue to require them. In this case there are serious risks of the public service not requiring them, as has occurred on two occasions, and it seems to me the hon. Minister should make an express provision to disentitle them from any expectation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I agree thoroughly with the hon. gentleman; but no such change may take place for perhaps ten years, and I do not think we should bind the actions of any future Parliament. Men who accept the position ought to consider its uncertainties.

Mr. BLAKE. But after this debate, if the hon. gentleman appoints new men without such a clause, the expectation would be created, and the Parliament will not be free to act in the future when another reduction may be made. What we want to do is to prevent the raising of a claim, which we can only do by declaring the conditions on which the men are appointed.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This Bill makes no provision outside of those already employed. It does not provide for any gratuity to those who may hereafter be appointed. Therefore, it lies with this Legislature to deal with those cases which arise hereafter, and if Parliament in future sees fit in its wisdom to grant a gratuity, I do not see that we can prevent it.

Mr. BLAKE. We cannot, by any law we pass to-day, prevent a future Parliament from doing it in its wisdom, if it pleases. But we may impose an equitable obligation to do it. I know that in 1877 when we made a reduction we paid a gratuity, and in 1880, when we made another reduction we paid a gratuity; and when we have the Minister declaring that that was in accordance with the general policy of the country. I think the probability is that in ten years hence, if we are called upon to reduce the staff, we shall say that these men entered the office on expectations based on two former occurrences and on the statement of the Minister also as to the policy that we are not free, but are tied. Of course, the Parliament is not tied by our Act, because it may be generous if it chooses, but it may feel bound, under the circumstances I have stated, to give a gratuity that it would not give if it were free.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would suggest that after the words, "until 1876" you insert "or who may be employed up to the time of the passage of this Act only."

Amendment agreed to, and committee rose and reported Bill with amendments.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

Mr. BLAKE. Not to-morrow. We do not sit to-morrow, it is the 4th of July.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Does the hon. gentleman propose that we should adjourn on the 4th of July?

Mr. BLAKE. No; the hon. gentleman refused to propose that we should meet on the 4th of July.

Mr. MILLS. We sat on the 1st of July and voted several millions to the State of Maine to build a railway there.

Mr. BLAKE. And we are carrying out the Act on the 4th. Bill ordered to be read the third time on Monday.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CARON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 152) to amend the Consolidated Militia Act, 1883. He said: The object of the Bill is to give authority to the Government to increase the number of the permanent corps now in existence from 750 to 1,000 men. This Bill is required to provide for the establishment of the two new schools of infantry, one to be established at London and the other at Winnipeg.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say briefly that the impression remains which I entertained before when the hon. gentleman proposed the change in the law of which this is an extension, that much more could be done by another use of the public money which is to be expended in this, and particularly with reference to the North-West. My opinion is that a more liberal encouragement of the formation of local corps through that country would be an infinitely wiser and more effective application of the public moneys for the advantage of the country than the establishment of a corps or school at Winnipeg.

Mr. MULOCK. For how long are these men to be enrolled?

Mr. CARON. Three years.

Mr. BLAKE. That is all in the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. No, it is not in the Bill. The Militia Act, section 21 provides that the 750 men thereby authorised shall be in the service for periods of three years continuous service. This Bill does not so provide, but says "for continuous service." Is there to be any limit of time or are these men enrolled for an indefinite period of time? Is this the commencement of the creation of a standing army for all time. I think it is a mistake to drop the words "three years," and I suggest that the Minister should amend the Bill by inserting them before the word "continuous." If he does not, I shall move the Bill back to Committee for this purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to ask your opinion, Mr. Speaker, as to how far this Bill is in order. It is in terms a Bill to authorise an addition to the number of men of 250. The Act provides that the whole strength of the force which Her Majesty is, by the 21st section of the Consolidated Militia Act of 1883, authorised to raise, may be any number of men not exceeding 1,000, it provides that 250 more men may be raised. The Consolidated Militia Act, of course, provides for the pay of all the men who may be raised. The practical result of this Bill, if it should be passed in this shape, is therefore to provide for the payment of 250 more men. Can that be done without a resolution and by such a clause as this?

Mr. SPEAKER. The money must be voted in the Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course there is an annual vote for the militia, but the rate at which the militia officers are to be paid is fixed by the Act.

Mr. CARON. This is only taking authority to increase the number of men. The pay of the men must come before Parliament, and, if it is not authorised, of course the men cannot be paid, but I do not see that it is necessary to introduce resolutions before this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The point is really a very important one. I do not so much say it is necessary to initiate this measure by resolution any more than it was to initiate the Consolidated Militia Act by resolution, but the Consolidated Militia Act, which provided for the creation of this force, provided also for the pay of this force, and the resolutions providing for the pay, although there is an annual vote, were brought in, and properly so, in committee, as the journals, which I have here, show. The clauses providing for the pay were in blank, and they were put into the Bill in committee. This proposes to deal with the existing statute, which provides for the pay of all the forces to be raised under it, and you propose to add to their force; and, of course, if the Bill passes in this form, you add to the charge because you make the money clauses applicable to 250 more men, or one-third more. Therefore, if the Bill passes in this shape, we shall, without a preliminary committee, have practically added to the public charge.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think that, when the resolutions were moved in the first instance for the Militia Bill, the object was not to determine by those resolutions the sum of money to be paid for the militia, but to determine the rate—at all events, that is as far as I recollect it—the rate per man, to say how much money might be paid to the men who would serve under that Militia Act. That has been done. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia does not ask to change that rate, but only says that instead of 750 men we ask that the number shall be 1,000 men. The rate remains the same, and the amount of money will be put in the Estimates if this is passed, and then the House of Commons will determine whether that sum is in accordance with the rate fixed by the House of Commons for the militia. But we are obliged every year to come down and ask the money from Parliament notwithstanding that these resolutions were passed. The rate of pay is to be the same for the 250 additional men as for the 750. Of course the question that has arisen is a very nice one, and it may as well be settled now; but I think there is something in the statement I made to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. I will explain to the hon. gentleman my view of that matter. When the Act was passed it was proposed to authorise the creation of a force of so many men at such a rate of pay, and by multiplying the rate by the number of men you understood the total amount of public charge that was being authorised by the Act. Of course, it was understood that it would be necessary to vote the Estimates every year. But, notwithstanding that fact, we had to have a committee before we could get the clause into the Bill. What is proposed now is to increase the number of men to whom the rate shall be applicable, to make it 1,000 instead of 750, and thus to increase the public charge. Parliament did not say that the Government shall have any definite power of raising the number of men at their will. Parliament said: You may raise and pay 750 men at this rate, and we know what we propose to do. But if you now add one-third to the number of the men you add one-third to the public charge, and that you do without a preliminary resolution.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps so, but would it not be better to ascertain the facts by seeing what that resolution was. I have not seen it. Perhaps the resolution was only to determine the rate for each man without determining the number.

Mr. BLAKE. That is so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the resolution did not state that it was a force of 750 men, I think we could go on with this in the same way.

Mr. BLAKE. The resolution had reference to the legislation before us. We had a Bill before us authorising the creation of a force not exceeding 750 men, and we had a resolution before us authorising the pay for the force at such rates, therefore we had the whole effect of the proposal before us. That is not the case now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, we have the number of men and the rate that is fixed by law to be paid them.

Mr. CARON. I beg to remind the leader of the Opposition that these resolutions state that no sum of money shall be paid without being included in the Estimates. The rate of pay which was introduced into the Bill was to fix the salary that would be given to the officers and men. As it now stands we could have paid the officers and men belonging to the different schools out of the sum voted by Parliament for the ordinary militia; but this Bill does not preclude the Minister of Militia from paying the schools of infantry and the schools of gunnery out of the ordinary sum voted by Parliament every year for militia purposes; consequently I thought, and I think now, that it was not necessary to initiate the Bill by a preliminary resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. I find on the Journals of 1883 that a resolution was then introduced, on which a clause in the Militia Act was founded, which regulated the rate to be paid to the various branches of the service. The resolution was:

"That it is expedient to provide that the pay of the officers and men of the active militia land force, for each day's drill of three hours, under section 45 of the Bill to consolidate and amend the laws affecting the militia of Canada."

But that is not the section which is now being amended. The section now being amended is section 21 of the Consolidated Militia Act, and that does not appear to have been founded upon a resolution. That clause provides that a certain number, not exceeding 750 men, may be enlisted for continuous service out of the force authorised by the Act. Now it is proposed to empower the Department to increase that force to a number not exceeding 1,000, but the pay for that force has to come before the House by a Message and be voted annually, and if it is not voted annually the force cannot be paid and will have to be disbanded. I do not think, therefore, under these circumstances, that it is necessary that this clause should be founded upon a resolution.

Bill read the second time on a division, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. BLAKE.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CARON. In order to make it perfectly clear I propose, after the word "for," to add the following words: "periods of three years of continuous service."

Mr. BLAKE. I think the original clause provided for a division into three corps. The present proposal is very much larger, because it proposes to give power to divide this 1,000 men into as many corps as you see fit. Is it the intention to take that power deliberately and to divide this number into more than five different corps?

Mr. CARON. This is the reason why I put this into the Bill: Take, for instance, the school at Winnipeg. It was the intention to organise a corps of 150 men. This year I do not propose to organise a corps stronger than 100 men. But it may be necessary, in view of the situation, instead of having one corps of 100 men, for instance, to have one of 200 men. I thought that if Parliament knew that the Department could not go beyond the strength of a 1,000 men, it would leave discretion to the Department to divide that force as circumstances might require.

Mr. BLAKE. That does not answer my question. The hon. gentleman's point is concentration; mine is division. His original Act provided for not more than three companies of infantry. What the hon. gentleman suggests is that, although he wants to take power to have 250 more men who may make two companies of infantry nominally, he may wish to have those 250 under one command and at one place. That would still be accomplished if he provided that there should be not more than five companies of infantry. But by the proposal he now makes he takes power, by dividing the force, to have seven, eight or ten companies of infantry. If you have troops at different points, it is impossible to maintain them at the same expense as if they were all at one point. I do not see any objection to the whole five companies being at one point at one time, and although the Minister's intention is to have them at London and Winnipeg, he might have them all at Winnipeg for a time. By his present proposal the hon. gentleman may divide the force into ten companies instead of five, and have them at ten different points, and then the expenditure would be increased.

Mr. CARON. The intention really is to create two new companies of infantry. I have no objection to insert that in the Bill—the force to be divided into such corps as is provided by clause 21 of the Consolidated Act of 1883, with the addition of two companies of infantry.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this the whole provision which the hon. gentleman proposes to submit to Parliament this Session with respect to the North-West militia force?

Mr. CARON. It is. When the Estimates were up I had occasion to state that the corps which were organised in the North-West during the troubles as permanent corps will be retained as part and parcel of the militia force. But outside of the 91st and 92nd, the militia will not be increased beyond what is contemplated by this Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the reports of the hon. gentleman's local officers and of the officer who is commanding the forces confirm the fact which I have dealt upon, the extreme importance of the formation of local corps and perhaps of mounted infantry corps in various points of the North-West. My opinion is that special attention should be given to the formation of those corps, and that in a country sparsely settled as that, with settlements so remote, it is of extreme consequence that this subject should be dealt with, and dealt with this Session.

Mr. CARON. I call the attention of the leader of the Opposition to the fact that the corps which it is contemplated to organise will be a mounted infantry corps. Whatever decision we have arrived at has been reached after consultation with the Major General. He believes that with the increased Mounted Police force and the corps we are going to organise in Winnipeg, the force will be quite sufficient.

Mr. WELDON. How many officers from the Maritime Provinces are in the infantry schools? There is not one, I believe.

Mr. CARON. It is not considered an advantage to appoint an officer from one locality to a school in the same locality. In other schools there are officers from the Maritime Provinces who have proved themselves thoroughly competent. Mr. Seers is a cadet of the Royal Military College.

Mr. WELDON. He is an officer of the 38th regiment of the Imperial service.

Mr. CARON. That may be so. Whether he has served in the English army or not, he remains a Canadian and a cadet turned out by the Royal Military College. He is like Mr. Freer in this respect. I thought it would be of great advantage to have cadets who had been in the army and seen active service, and those officers to whom I have referred both served in Egypt.

Bill reported, and, as amended, concurred in.

MANITOBA CLAIMS SETTLEMENT.

Mr. BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (No. 155) for the final settlement of the claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I would suggest that the word "Crown" should be put in after the word "all."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs if he has any idea of the quantity of land which will be transferred to Manitoba under the provisions of this Bill?

Mr. BOWELL. No, I have not.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman stated that so far as the surveyed parts of Manitoba were concerned, calculations were being made in the Department of the Interior, with a view of supplying the House with that information.

Mr. BOWELL. I certainly did, but when we were in committee, when the hon. gentleman was absent, I stated that I was unable to obtain the information.

Mr. WATSON. Has the hon. gentleman looked over the reports of the different surveyors who have surveyed the lands south of Lake Manitoba, as to whether that land will be included?

Mr. BOWELL. I have not looked over them, but I am satisfied that the reports would not give such information as the hon. gentleman asks for, from the simple fact that the handing over of the swamp lands was not contemplated when the reports were made.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. gentleman misunderstands my question. These lands were reported on, and on looking over the reports it might be decided whether or not they would be included.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the condition of that particular lot of land is extremely unsatisfactory. One hon. Minister, in discussing this question, said it would be premature to decide it; that it should not be decided now, but at a subsequent time; that Parliament should be left in the dark for the present. I think we should know what sort of a bargain we are making. It might be impossible to know how many acres there are, but I think that with regard to the surveyed portions of the Province, an approximate estimate might be formed, and the general principle of decision which has been reached—especially as the bargain is not left to form the subject of subsequent dispute—as to what the meaning of the term "swamp lands" is, with reference to those particular lands which were not long ago cultivable lands not covered by water, but have since by reason of the overflow of the lake, been covered with water. I say whether these lands are included or not, is certainly something which we ought to know. Is it to be a matter of negotiation or arbitration to clear away the doubts, or are we to have a repetition of the plan of having it clothed in designed obscurity, the legislation we are passing as we did in another piece of legislation the other day?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is almost impossible sometimes to find a definition which is more explicit than the word itself. You cannot find words to explain more clearly what "yes" means or "no" means, than the words themselves. So with the word "swamp," a term which is as well known in the country as dry land. It has its meaning. It certainly does not mean land periodically overflowed by water or by inundation. It is swamp land, or marsh land, as understood by everybody—where water and earth and liquid mud permanently cover the land. Everybody knows what a bog in Ireland is, and everybody knows what a swamp in Canada is. The check provided for here is sufficient to guard against the Government giving away any other land; we do not leave the Province of Manitoba to decide what swamp land is, because it must be proved to be such to the satisfaction of the central authority here. I do not know that we can make it any more explicit. Swamp means a swamp, marsh means a marsh, water means water, yes means yes, and no means no.

Mr. BLAKE. We are still in the bog. The hon. gentleman has told us it is difficult to define the term more clearly than yes or no; but what I object to is that the hon. gentleman has not given us yes or no. I am not asking him at this moment to alter his definition; I am asking what his definition means as applied to the lands of the particular locality I referred to. The hon. gentleman says the difficulty has not arisen in the United States. I do not know anything about that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We did not hear of it.

Mr. BLAKE. It may have arisen, because I am afraid a good many things happen that neither of us hear of. But the circumstances are peculiar as to those particular lands, and they may not have arisen in another country. The hon. gentleman says it is very clear what swamp lands mean. If it is so clear, he will have no difficulty in telling me whether those are swamp lands or not.

Mr. BOWELL. This is not a new question. It came up the other day, when I stated that the lands referred to by the hon. gentleman do not come within the meaning of this Act—that lands temporarily overflowed by water could not, in the meaning of the Act, be considered swamp lands. I specially referred to the land overflowed by Lake Manitoba, which if reclaimed by lowering one of the outlets of the lake and allowing the surplus water to flow into Lake Winnipeg or some other lake, could not under those circumstances be considered swamp lands.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must say I do not like this legislation. I objected to it the other day and gave my reasons. I think it is entirely ambiguous, and is going to lead to a vast amount of correspondence and a great deal of difficulty with the Province of Manitoba. I think the Government should be more definite in their legislation. If they have made an arrangement with Manitoba to give them the swamp lands, they ought to find out what they are giving; they ought to know what they are doing. But this general power to take swamp lands is something entirely too indefinite for the legislation of this country. When asked what swamp lands were, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs said he would put the same definition upon the term as was put on it in the United States. It is a matter of notoriety that some of the greatest swindles in that country have occurred under this term—that great corporations have obtained—under the guise of swamp lands, good coal lands and fertile agricultural lands. We do not want a repetition of that in this country, and when this matter comes up again in a few years, we do not want Manitoba to claim the same definition of swamp lands as that which has prevailed in the United States. I hold in my hand a definition which I think would cover the ground: swamp lands are, first, muskeg; second, a permanent marsh; third, lands which are perennially wet and undrained, and useless for agricultural purposes.

Mr. BOWELL. The last one, I think, would cover the whole.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well, take the last; but do not let us legislate in this ambiguous way, and call up trouble on ourselves and have the time of Parliament taken up in the future in discussing Manitoba's claims and rights in this matter. I think, when we are giving away a portion of a whole Province, it should be something more definite than that provided in the Bill before the House.

Mr. DAWSON. In the State of Minnesota, near the boundary line, for hundreds of miles together, the lands are swamp lands. They are not necessarily bogs or swamps, but they are declared to be swamp lands for a certain purpose—for taking them over to the State. There are mountains and valleys in those swamp lands. They are not equal to prairie lands, perhaps; but in those swamp lands there is a great deal of good land, and it is an arrangement made between the Federal and the State Governments as to what lands shall be given. I suppose that definition would be applicable to this case.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a valuable contribution; the hon. First Minister and myself know more about swamp lands in the United States than we did a few minutes ago. The hon. member for Northumberland says that some of the greatest swindles in the United States have occurred under this term, and my hon. friend who is familiar with the State of Minnesota, says that mountains come under the definition of swamp lands, and that lands which are not swamps or bogs may be swamp lands for the purpose of being transferred. If that be so, I think we are in a very serious predicament when we propose to use this term, which the hon. gentleman says is as plain as yes for yes and no for no, particularly when we have a marginal note attached to the Bill by the Minister of Customs, which says we are going to use the term in the same sense as the United States has used it, with the consequences the hon. member for Northumberland and the hon. member for Algoma have just stated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It may be that in the State of Minnesota mountains are swamps. I do not think that in the rest of the world they have been accounted swamps, unless Nosh called Mount Ararat a swamp, which was covered with water when his ark struck there; but mountains are certainly not swamps according to Johnson's or any other dictionary. The hon. member for Northumberland says he wants this term explained in such a manner that there will be no further trouble. There would be further trouble if we did not pass these resolutions. We have made a bargain with Manitoba, and the Legislature of Manitoba has passed a Bill adopting these terms. If this Parliament does not approve of this arrangement let it say so, but the whole thing is up, and we must take the consequences.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Both parties are subject to the interpretation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought hon. gentlemen opposite were, as a general rule, in favor of State rights. I think I have heard some of them say the lands should be handed over to the Province of Manitoba—that Manitoba should be in the same position as Ontario and Quebec, and have its own lands. But what we really desire to do is this: The original arrangement was made, as the House knows, at the time the lands were supposed to be much more valuable than they are believed to be now—during the time of the boom. The Province of Manitoba agreed to drain certain swamps on condition of getting half the recovered land, the Dominion keeping the other half. They tried the experiment, they spent the money, and found that they lost by the operation. Subsequently, looking at the example of the United States, of giving the swamp lands, we said: We cannot ask the Dominion Parliament—it is not likely that the Dominion Parliament would vote money, for the purpose of draining those swamps and making them fit for settlement; and therefore we had better hand those lands over, so that the enterprise and capital of the Province of Manitoba may be employed in draining those lands whenever they think it will pay them to do so. If we did not do so, then those lands must remain in their present state. The Dominion of Canada will not, I think, in our generation spend any money in draining the swamps. Then we ought to allow the Province of Manitoba or capitalists to do so. I have little doubt that the Government of Manitoba will find enterprising capitalists who will take up a swampy country, and agree to drain it, for a certain proportion of the lands, and that country will be made fit for settlement and population, and indirectly will be of great service to the Dominion by adding to the wealth and to the population of the country, although we give up the swamp lands which in our hands would be utterly valueless.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman speaks as if we had some objection to the bargain. The question which we are now considering is what the bargain is. We want to understand that. Then the hon. gentleman says that hon. gentlemen on this side said they thought Manitoba should have her lands, and that we are now objecting. We are not objecting to Manitoba getting the lands, but we want to know what she is getting. He says we are in favor of State rights. Yes, but we are not in favor of State quarrels; we are not in favor of putting a state of controversy between Manitoba and the Dominion, or of leaving the bargain practically at the option of the Dominion to put further pressure upon the Province in connection with the interpretation of it. We want the meaning to be made as plain as circumstances will permit, so that there may be no ground for controversy in carrying out the bargain, so that the settlement itself shall not be the cause of quarrel, dispute and controversy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That might be, and the arrangement might be clearer if, in the settlement, the word "swamp" was defined, but it has not been defined, and they have passed their law accepting the swamp lands under this arrangement, and if we define the swamp lands in a way different from that in which they would look at it, we would start with a quarrel instead of ending with one. The hon. gentleman admits that he is willing that Manitoba should have the lands within the Province. Then, the larger and the wider the construction is, and the more lands they get under their claim, the more agreeable it will be to the hon. gentleman. The arrangement being made, and the word "swamp" not being defined in their Act, it ought not to be defined in our Act. It may be, from the point of view of the hon. gentleman, that it would have been better if the word "swamp" had been explained in their Act, and then we could have had the same explanation in our Act; but it would be no use for us to put it in without their consent, and have the arrangement upset ab initio.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the difficulty arises from the imperfect character of the bargain the hon. gentleman makes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. He says it would be better to have the definition in the arrangement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said from the hon. gentleman's point of view.

Mr. BLAKE. I think from the common sense point of view it would have been better to have a definition of the word "swamp." The hon. gentleman has made a bargain which is, as it now appears, inadequate, vague, obscure and likely to lead to trouble.

Mr. POPE. If a swamp is drained, that would be swamp lands.

Mr. BLAKE. What about the Lake Manitoba lands?

Mr. POPE. They are exactly in the same position.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. POPE. If they are swamp lands.

Mr. BLAKE. I admit that if they are swamp lands, they are swamp lands.

Mr. POPE. It cannot be supposed, when you are going to give the swamp lands to the Province, that you are going to give lands fit for nothing. It would be no object to give them lands that were not worth a copper after they got them. The best lands we have in the country may be and are swamp lands. Any agriculturist who is accustomed to drain lands knows that the land, when drained, which has been the deposit of years, is often the finest in the country, and yet that is swamp land. I do not think there will be any difficulty at all.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps, if the hon. gentleman was permitted to decide for both parties, there would be no difficulty, if he remained in the same mind for two days; but as he is not to decide for both parties, and as he differs pretty completely from the Minister of Customs in the circumstances I have brought forward, I am afraid there will be some difficulty.

Mr. WATSON. In looking at the return of a report of the survey, I find that Mr. Guerin, in 1881, reported to the Government as follows: He made a calculation that 696,320 acres are to-day flooded, that is, around Lake Manitoba, which might be lowered by an expenditure, which appears to be a very extravagant amount; but he intends to make a canal from Lake Manitoba to Lake Winnipeg, from the Fairford River and through Lake St. Martin. The total amount of plant and work and keeping this in repair he estimates at $281,000. He puts the value of the land, when the water is lowered, at $2 an acre, which would be $1,692,640. This report of Mr. Guerin is commented upon by Mr. Perley, and he states to the Government that Mr. Guerin has made a very careful examination of the lake and of these lands. I would call attention also to the correspondence between the Minister of Public Works of Manitoba and the Government. Under date of the 25th June, 1881, the Minister says, in his report:

"I beg leave to report that the settlements in the vicinity of Lake Manitoba affected by the overflow of the waters of the said lake are suffering severely from the superabundant water; that many of the settlers have, from this cause, been unable to harvest any crop for three or four years"

Now, I consider that any land that would be overflowed for four years, so that the settlers could not harvest their crops, should be deemed swamp lands. That was in 1878, 1879, 1880 and 1881, and they have been vacant since that time, though the lake has receded somewhat; but they will not be occupied unless the lake is lowered and kept lowered:

"Constant appeals for relief are made to this Department by the settlers in the affected localities. These settlers complain that unless immediate relief is accorded them, they will be forced to appeal to the American Consul here for a location in the United States."

The Government have apparently paid very little or no attention to the reports sent in by the Local Legislature of Manitoba, by the Minister Public Works of that Province, and by other deputations, for this lake remains without a dollar having been spent on it since 1881. I know that the Local Government, from the reports which have been made, expect that these lands around Lake Manitoba will be transferred to the Province; and I think that, after the reports that have been made and the action of the Government as to these lands, and the number of years they were covered with water, the Minister of Agriculture and other gentlemen might be able to state whether it is the opinion of the Government that these lands should be termed swamp lands or not. We ought to have some clear idea as to what construction shall be placed on this term "swamp lands." The Minister of Customs says that these lands will not be termed swamp lands, but the Minister of Agriculture states that, in his opinion, they would be termed swamp lands. According to the report of the Minister of Public Works, the settlers in that vicinity could not harvest a crop for four years, on account of high water. Surely, lands of that description ought to be termed swamp lands. They cannot be termed agricultural lands, and the question is, whether, under this Bill, those lands would be termed swamp lands or not.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the term "swamp," if it is synonymous with "swamp lands," is vague, and may lead to some confusion. If you turn to Worcester's Dictionary, you find the definition there given is:

"Spongy land; low ground, filled with water; soft, wet ground, marshy ground; land wet and spongy, usually covered with water."

Now is it proposed to assign to the Province of Manitoba all lands that come within any one of these definitions? How are you to deal with the case of a section, a part of which may be considered swampy and a part of which may be good arable land? Is the Province of Manitoba not to get the whole section because a portion of it may be deemed swampy, or is it to lose the whole section because it is not all swamp? Or what portion of the section is it to get? When the contract was made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, if I remember rightly, it was provided that in case a certain quantity of a section was unfit for cultivation, the company could reject the whole section.

Mr. DAWSON. I have discovered precisely what a swamp is now.

Mr. BLAKE. Don't get into it.

Mr. DAWSON:

"Low ground, saturated with water; wet, spongy land; a quaggy, boggy place; a marsh; a bog; a morass."

"Where wild Oswego spreads her swamps around."

"A swamp differs from a bog and a marsh in producing trees and shrubs, while the latter produce only herbage, plants and mosses."

Mr. BLAKE. I do not find any mountains in that description.

Mr. TROW. I wish to ask the First Minister if any swamp lands have heretofore been ceded to Manitoba under a previous arrangement. I ask, because there is a very large swamp in the Boyne settlement, which, some years ago, I think, was ceded to Manitoba, and they undertook to drain it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot, without notice, answer that question. I know the Government of Manitoba say they lost money by the operation, but whether the land has been reclaimed I do not know. I will enquire and see.

Mr. WATSON. I suppose, if any land has been reclaimed in the past by the Local Government spending their money upon it, that would be transferred under this arrangement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If any portion of those lands have ceased, before the passing of this Act, to be swamp lands, they will not go over to Manitoba.

Mr. ROSS. I may say that the Local Government did get some lands from the Dominion Government, because the latter had an auction sale, and sold a large quantity of those lands three years ago. If they sold them they gave deeds for them, and if they did that, the Local Government must have got a grant from this Government. I refer to the lands in the Boyne marsh.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) spoke of the land arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I think there is a difference between that company and the Province of Manitoba. In this case the Government have it entirely within their power to say what the term "swamp lands" shall mean; but, in the other case the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had it entirely within their power to say what lands they should accept.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the objection taken by the hon. member for North York ought to be considered by the Government. You can scarcely travel over the North-West for more than two or three miles without finding portions of sections that form large "sloughs," as they are called in that country, which are swamps, or bogs, or marshes, or something of that character. Now, I think the Government and the House ought to understand what they are doing. Suppose there is a quarter section or whole section of land upon which there is one of these sloughs, which is mud, grass and water, all mixed together, would that be conveyed under this Bill? or would the whole section go, in case three-fourths of that section was dry land and cultivable? Would it be construed as it is in the American Act, that wherever a portion of a township is swamp they take the whole township? I am afraid that is the construction that will be put upon this Bill by the Manitoba people. It is true that our Government may put a different construction on it, and if so, that will lead to correspondence, to expensive negotiations, and new arrangements, and will lead to the time of this House being taken up in discussions.

On the preamble,

Mr. MITCHELL. As we have now got through the Bill, except the preamble, if the Government would amend it, so as to give all ungranted lands, all lands not given to railways and not granted to individuals, all lands not granted to benevolent institutions, to the Province of Manitoba, they would get my entire support. I would rather see that done than to see this Bill pass in its present shape. That would be a finality; but the effect of this Bill would be trouble, negotiations of all kinds and expense.

Bill reported with amendments.

Mr. DAWSON.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The Resolution respecting the appointment and remuneration of the controller, interpreter and other persons who may be appointed to restrain and regulate Chinese Immigration into the Dominion of Canada was concurred in and referred to the Bill (No. 156.)

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 156) to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration into the Dominion of Canada.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 5,

Mr. BAKER. I should like to repeat my suggestion, that the tonnage should be increased to 100 tons. I have been particularly urged to press this on the Government, and I would be failing in my duty if I did not do so.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman will see—as has been said by his colleagues—that the beginning is a good one, and if the first experiment prove that this is not strict enough, the regulation will be made more strict.

On section 8,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I move that the section be amended by adding, after the word "payment," "in default of payment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months." And, also, after "Her Majesty," "and shall be seized by any officer charged with the duty of carrying this Act into effect, and be dealt with accordingly."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 11,

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I would move the insertion of the following words: "and such other books and documents as he may be instructed from time to time to keep."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That goes by itself.

On section 23,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have been informed, and I think the information valuable, that if six months from 1st January were allowed, a number of Chinese would, within that time, secure what is called double residence, by coming from San Francisco to British Columbia, and they would return immediately, after obtaining the certificate, which might be traded away, as opportunity might offer. I therefore propose this amendment:

That as regards any vessel sailing from any port on the continent of North America, this Act shall come into force one month after the passing thereof, and as regards ports in China, six months after the passing of the Act.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I would respectfully urge on the Minister that the whole Act should come into force on 1st October of this year. For vessels arriving from China, and be operative in ten days from its passage as far as the United States are concerned. The distance between Hong Kong and Victoria can be traversed in twenty-eight days. So that information can be conveyed after the passage of this Act in, say thirty days, which would be ample time to warn every person there who had the intention of leaving, to go into British Columbia before the Act came into force, and ample time would be afforded to intending shippers of Chinamen to complete their contracts within a reasonable time. I am not underrating the intention of the Government, because we are all delighted with the Bill as far as it goes, and have reason to felicitate ourselves upon the success achieved therefor, and which we hope will very nearly if not entirely meet the requirements of British Columbia, but it would give the people of British Columbia still greater pleasure if my suggestion were adopted.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is not reasonable. The period of twelve months was first mentioned, because we, too, thought that a reasonable time, but representations having been made by my hon. friend and his colleagues from British Columbia, we thought that probably if a year was given a large number of immigrants might come in in some other way. I think the concessions we have made in that respect will be quite sufficient, and if we adopted the suggestion of the hon. gentleman it might interfere with the contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I am deeply sensible of the concessions the Government have made, nor am I unreasonable in my request now made, but if the hon. gentleman were in my position he would advocate precisely the same provisions as I am advocating now.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I dare say; and if the hon. gentleman were in my position he would do as I am doing now.

Mr. BAKER. That entirely depends upon circumstances. Bill reported with amendments.

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that Bill (No. 103) respecting the Electoral Franchise, be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House, for the purpose of amending the same. He said: The first amendment is as follows:—

By inserting at the end of the paragraph of the second clause, defining the meaning of the word "city," the following words: except the cities of Hull and St. Hyacinthe, in the Province of Quebec, which, for the purposes of this Act, shall be held to be towns.

I explained, in the discussion before, that the value of property in these two cities is not equal to that in most other cities, and we propose that for the valuation of property they shall be considered as towns; otherwise, a good many men who now have votes might be disfranchised. Then the definition of farmer's son have been altered a good deal by extending, its meaning for the purposes of the Act; but there is no provision made for the meaning of the son of an owner of real property other than a farmer. Therefore, I propose this amendment:

By inserting at the end of the paragraph of the second clause defining the meaning of the expression farmer's son, the following words: Son of an owner of real property in cities and towns, means any male person, not otherwise qualified to vote, and being the son of an owner and occupant of real property, and includes a grandson, stepson, or son-in-law; and, in counties, means any male person not otherwise qualified to vote, and being the son of an owner and occupant of real property other than a farm, and includes a grandson, stepson or son-in-law.

Then, in accordance with a promise I made, the Bill was amended on the suggestion of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock), to provide that in the case of tenants in counties, where the residence is not specified in the assessment roll, the valuation of the property should be prima facie evidence of the right of the tenants to vote, if the property is assessed at $150; but by some accident that provision is not made quoad cities and towns, and therefore I propose that the Bill be further amended:

By inserting after the word "certificate" in the last line of sub-section 4, of clause 3, the following words: And providing, further, that where, on any revised or final assessment roll, the amount of the tenant's rent is not stated, the fact that the real property in respect of which he is entered on such roll as the tenant thereof is assessed in cities at $300 or more, or in towns at $200 or more, shall be held to be prima facie evidence of his right to be registered as a voter.

Mr. MILLS. When the Bill was last under consideration the hon. gentleman said it was the intention of the Government to provide that a judge might be the revising officer within his own judicial district, and also to provide that the judge should not only sit for the electoral district within which he might reside, but also for part of an electoral district which might be within his judicial district and outside of the electoral district in which he resided. The schedules of the Bill were amended accordingly; but the various clauses of the Bill would require some amendment in the same direction, and the hon. gentleman said he would have amendments prepared by the law clerk, but he has not mentioned them now. I would like to know whether he has these amendments ready;

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the 13th clause we can insert the provision that the judge can be appointed revising officer for an electoral district within his county, or for any portion of an electoral district within his county. That would meet the case, I think.

Mr. MILLS. So far as that particular clause is concerned; but if the hon. gentleman adheres to the promise he made, and I suppose he does, to make provision to that effect, when we get into committee it will be necessary to make some little alterations in other sections. For instance, the revising officer is to have an office within the district. Section 15, in one part, provides that if the list is not printed the revising officer may charge for a copy of it at the rate of 6 cents for every 10 names, while according to the first part of the section he must have the list printed, and then the price will not exceed 5 cents a copy. My impression was, that part of this clause was struck out, but it is clear that if this was to stand, the revising officer would never have the list printed, because it would always be to his interest to furnish the list at 10 cents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We can amend that by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. As the 28th clause stands at present, it is not the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to cause to be printed in the Gazette any portion of the voters' list until the entire list for the electoral district is completed; so that, if there was one polling division in which the list was not completed, the list of the whole electoral district would be inoperative. Other sections assume rightly that the list for any municipality, when it is completed and certified, should go into operation. It will, therefore, be necessary to amend section 28, to make it correspond with the other sections. Section 44, for instance, is not consistent with section 28, as it now stands. Then, I would compare section 44 with section 58. Section 44, I apprehend, is intended to operate, not in the first election or in the preparation of the first voters' lists, but in all subsequent voters' lists; but section 58 is intended to apply in the case of the first voters' list. It would be better for the First Minister to strike out the first three lines and a-half of section 58, and allow the proviso to stand for the whole section. I mention this, so that when we go into committee, if there is no objection, the committee may revise all these sections.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the slightest objection to that, because we ought to have the Act as perfect as possible.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman also proposed to make some amendment with reference to the Indian voters.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I asked the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) to give me a copy of the amendment he proposed to move.

Mr. MILLS. Would the hon. gentleman object to amending the law relating to Indian voters in such a way as to provide that the Indians who reside upon their reserves and vote should be enfranchised Indians, leaving those off the reserves to qualify the same as any other party?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is reopening the whole question.

Mr. MILLS. Not necessarily.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot do that.

Mr. MILLS. I am only mentioning matters about which, I think, there will be no controversy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then we can consider all these matters, except that in reference to the Indians, included under my motion.

Mr. MILLS. We had better go into committee to reconsider the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; we cannot do that.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the First Minister would allow the amendment of which I gave notice to be considered at the same time, in reference to Indian agents interfering. I was obliged to leave, and in my absence the amendment met with some criticism from some gentlemen on this side of the House, and was not adopted, though the First Minister was agreeable to the adoption of it. I have since been able to satisfy those who objected to it that it might be considered of some use.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we would get on faster if I were to move my resolutions, and the hon. gentlemen were to move these clauses in their proper order.

Mr. EDGAR. There is one amendment which I am sure the hon. gentleman will adopt, because it is clearly an omission. It was agreed that the actual value should be prima facie evidence of the rental of a tenant, if the rental was not on the assessment roll. The provision has been made for counties, but the hon. gentleman has forgotten to make it in the case of towns.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is part of my present motion.

Mr. MILLS. I see the hon. gentleman, in the definition he has given, speaks of "Mongolian or Chinese race." I do not remember that the word "Mongolian" was in the amendment, and that would exclude the Japanese, whom the hon. gentleman did not propose to exclude.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The word "Mongolian" was there, decidedly.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman has a copy of the motion I made, and I think it would save time if he would put that in with his other amendments. I have noticed that any motion made by him seems to prevail much more readily in the committee and in the House than if it were made by anyone else, and I think it would expedite matters if the hon. gentleman would put that in with his other motion.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move the first amendment which I read, as to the interpretation of the word "city."

Mr. MILLS. I think it is pretty clear that the hon. gentleman's amendment is made purely for political considerations, and is not based upon any principle. When this subject was under consideration we reminded the hon. gentleman that in the case of the town of Sandwich there was a population of about 1,000 inhabitants; that in the case of the village of Leamington there was a population of 2,000 and upwards; in the case of the village of Essex Centre there were over 2,000; in the village of West Tilbury, over 2,000; Wallaceburg, over 2,000; in the town of Bothwell there is less than 1,000. The principle upon which the hon. gentleman professes to proceed, that these are towns rather than cities, does not apply to these two cases alone, but to a score of other instances that were pointed out by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) when the Bill was under consideration.

Mr. MILLS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot go into the populations and sizes of all the various villages and towns, but we take up these two cities, which were, properly, ambitions. They ought to have remained as towns; then there would be no difficulty. I do not think the hon. gentleman is quite correct in stating that this amendment is made for political purposes. It is true that my hon. friend from Ottawa county (Mr. Wright) is a Conservative and supports the Government, but I do not think Mr. Bernier supports the Government, though it adds to his constituency, or rather leaves his constituency exactly as it was before.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I now move the amendment which I read, with regard to farmers' sons.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) called my attention to the need of making the same provision with respect to tenants for counties as in cities and towns; I therefore move the amendment which I read to the House before the Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. MULOCK. The point was, whether it would not be just as well as to allow the tenant to vote in both cases—first, if he has the rental that is required of him here, or if his property is worth that amount. If he has property valued at $150, let him vote on it; it will save a good deal of trouble in enquiring into deeds, etc.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That offends the principle of the Act, which is that the tenant, in order to have a vote, must pay a certain rental. In order to expedite matters, the clause says, that even in a county, the fact that he is assessed for $150 shall be prima facie evidence, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he pays the requisite rent.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported with amendments.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. I beg to move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House, in order to amend the same, by adding a new clause, as follows:—

That any person being an agent within the meaning of the Indian Act, 1880, and who, either directly or indirectly, seeks to induce or compel any person, being an Indian or of part Indian blood and qualified to vote only in respect of property forming part of a reserve, as defined by said Act, to cause his name to be registered as a voter or to vote or refrain from voting at any election of a member of the House of Commons, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and if found guilty thereof, shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, or by both, and shall not be entitled to hold any office or place of emolument in the appointment of the Governor or Superintendent General of Indian Affairs for a period of two years from the date of his conviction."

Bill re-committed and amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS moved in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole House, in order to amend the same, so as to provide that a judge may be the revising officer for the whole of his judicial district; and also to amend sections 15, 28 and 58.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This amendment is certainly not necessary. It is now provided that the judge may be the revising officer for the whole of the electoral district, or a portion of the electoral district, which is what the hon. gentleman wants. If the judge has a certain judicial district, a portion of which belongs to another electoral district, the Government may appoint the judge as revising officer for that portion of the judicial district which belongs to another electoral district. That is in the discretion of the Government in either case, so that I do not think that there is any object in that part of the amendment. Then, as to the latter part of the amendment, the hon. gentleman does not say how he proposes to amend these clauses.

Mr. MILLS. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that as the Bill now stands the revising officer for an electoral district must be the revising officer of the whole district. Of course, if the hon. gentleman chooses to leave the Bill in a position which makes it impossible to appoint a judge for his entire judicial district, he is taking a position contrary to the promises which he made in Committee of the Whole.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I promised to adopt amendments which would make the Bill more workable.

Mr. MILLS. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to section 18.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MILLS. According to section 14, wherever the revising officer is referred to, it is provided that he shall be the revising officer for the whole district. The whole plan of the Bill is such that unless it is amended a judge cannot be the revising officer for his judicial district.

Bill re-committed and amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the Bill as amended be now taken into consideration.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to place a motion in your hands, which I shall do without any remarks, as the question has already been fully discussed. I move:

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, so as to provide for leaving with the people the control of the voters' lists by officers of their own selection; and for avoiding the useless expense of double machinery for preparing voters' lists, the extra expense contingent upon a Dominion Franchise Bill, and the confusion and annoyance to the people resulting from two distinct methods of preparing and revising voters' lists: by providing that each Province shall be allowed to judge of the proper requirements for the exercise of the franchise within its own limits (inasmuch as the diversities of conditions in different Provinces render it difficult, if not impossible, to fix a uniform franchise for the entire Dominion that will fully meet the conditions and wants of each separate Province); and that a uniform franchise for each Province, for both provincial and Dominion elections, shall be secured, by providing that the voters' lists used in each Province, in the election of members of the Dominion House of Commons, shall be voters' lists in each Province prepared under the laws of such Province, and in use for the election of members of the House of Assembly of each such Province.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 28) to incorporate the Dominion Drainage Company—(Mr. Haggart.)

THE FRANCHISE BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of Bill (No. 103) respecting the Electoral Franchise.

Mr. JENKINS. I beg to move:

That the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same as follows:—By inserting after clause 8, the following clause:—In the Provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island besides the persons entitled to be registered as voters, and to vote under the foregoing provisions of this Act, every person who at the time of the passing of the same:—

1. Is of the age of 21 years and is not by this Act or by any law of the Dominion of Canada disqualified or prevented from voting, and
2. Is a British subject by birth or naturalization and resident of this Province, and is entitled to vote in the said Provinces respectively by the laws now severally existing in the same, shall have a right to be registered as a voter and to vote so long as he shall continue to be qualified to vote under the provisions of the said last mentioned laws and no longer.

He said: In 1854, the Legislature of Prince Edward Island passed a Bill conferring manhood suffrage on the people of that Province. At that time many were opposed to the measure. It was looked upon as an infringement of the rights of property; a measure fraught with great danger to the State, and it was thought that mob rule; with all its concomitant evils would be the result. The experience of 30 years had proved the failure of those predictions. No evil consequences followed the extension of the franchise; on the contrary, the results have been in every way advantageous, and those most hostile to manhood suffrage at that time are now desirous of having it retained. It was supposed that the electors admitted to the privilege of the franchise by that Bill would attach themselves en masse to the Radical element. The contrary has been the case, and it is well known that a majority of that class of electors support the Liberal Conservative party. The knowledge of this fact induced the Hon. David Laird, Minister of the Interior in the late Government, to introduce a Bill into this House, intended to wipe out as voters all those who voted on manhood suffrage. That Bill passed the House, and was supported by hon. members who now look upon the very slight restriction of the franchise which will result from the Bill before the House with righteous indignation; and the young men of Prince Edward Island have to thank their friends in the Senate that they have not been deprived of a voice in the election of their representatives. Efforts of various kinds have been made to palliate this attempt to rob our young men of the franchise; it has been said that it was only intended as a temporary measure, to be in force until the Local Government should pass a registration Bill. Now, Sir, while I fully admit the right of this House to fix the franchise and control the machinery by which its members are to be elected, I deny its right to coerce a Provincial Government into passing a registration Bill, or to compel it to assume any part of the expense of Dominion elections, or to disfranchise any body of electors till it had done so. The case is clear; it was a deliberate and most unjustifiable attempt on the part of the late Minister of the Interior to get rid of a class of voters that were obnoxious to him, and no amount of special pleading can deprive it of that character. My hon. colleague seems to be imbued with much the same spirit; he is very anxious to have the names of franchise voters struck off the list; he considers it arbitrary, unjust and outrageous that the present list should be taken as prima facie evidence of the right to vote. Sir, I do not share with my hon. colleague this extreme anxiety to have names struck off the voters' list; on the contrary, Sir, it would be to me a matter of regret if even one voter should be struck off, and I hope the House will see the injustice of depriving any class of the franchise who have once exercised that privilege. The Bill before the House is a very liberal one, verging closely upon manhood suffrage; in most of the Provinces it will enlarge the franchise, but in Prince Edward Island it will, to some extent, restrict it. Now Sir, while I admit that it may be advisable to have a uniform franchise for the whole Dominion, I contend that it would be impolitic and unjust to make the provisions of this Bill retroactive; it would be contrary to the spirit of the age, contrary to the spirit and intention of this Bill, to deprive any man who has once enjoyed it of the right to vote. My experience of manhood suffrage is, that those who vote under it are as intelligent and independent as any other class of electors, and they have invariably exercised their privilege in a manner becoming to themselves and reflecting credit on the Province to which they belong. Sir, this amendment is intended to secure the franchise to all who have ever voted under manhood suffrage or who would have been entitled to vote under the old law at the next general election, and I trust that the good results which I feel sure will follow the extension of the franchise, effected by this Bill, will remove the doubts and scruples of those who are now opposed to manhood suffrage, and that before a second general election shall take place that system of voting will be adopted, and every educated honest citizen of this Dominion, will be entitled to record his vote for the representatives who are to make the laws under which he lives.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). Since we have failed in retaining to the people of Prince Edward Island the full privilege they have hitherto enjoyed, I have much pleasure in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's. I should be sorry to be a party to depriving voters of any privilege which they now enjoy. There is no doubt that although uniformity is not actually necessary to the Bill, it is highly desirable. As Prince Edward Island and British Columbia are the only Provinces in which the franchise has been restricted to any extent,

Mr. JENKINS.

I hope the House will accept the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Jenkins). The people of Prince Edward Island have every confidence that the leader of the Government will not be a party to disfranchising any of the electors of that Province, and I hope the House will see proper to adopt the amendment. No doubt this House has a perfect right to pass a Franchise Bill, making arrangements for carrying out its own elections, and I hope that, under the circumstances, it will not be deemed necessary to disfranchise any of the electors of Prince Edward Island and British Columbia.

Mr. MILLS. I congratulate hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island on their change of views with respect to this question. A few moments ago they voted down the principle of conferring on the various Provinces the same qualifications for voters for members of this House as for the local elections in those Provinces. The hon. gentleman is quite willing to disfranchise a large number of voters in every other Province, but he protests against any voters in his own Province being disqualified under the Bill. I do not know why hon. gentlemen should deny to other Provinces the rights which they claim for their own; but it is evident that the hon. gentleman has not looked at the qualifications of voters in the other Provinces, or he would hardly agree to the restriction of the franchise at the expense of the other Provinces. I do not know a Province in which the Bill extends the franchise, because in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, many thousands of those who are now entitled to the exercise of the franchise will be denied that privilege.

Mr. HACKETT. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the members from Prince Edward Island are very inconsistent. The privileges enjoyed with regard to the election of members for the Dominion Parliament in the last Dominion election are to be continued, and the hon. gentleman said, a few moments ago, that we voted against a resolution giving the same privilege to the other Provinces. I do not think the hon. gentleman is correct. The last resolution simply referred to the fact that the voters' lists should be taken in each Province for the Dominion elections; and in Prince Edward Island we have no voters' list, and if the resolution had carried, it would have been necessary to change the whole Bill and to disqualify a large number of people in that Province. But the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Jenkins) does not at all break upon the uniformity of the Bill. If passed by this House, as I hope it will be, it will only confer the right to vote on the electors of Prince Edward Island who voted at the last election, so long as they continue in the possession of the franchise that entitled them to vote at that election; and the young men coming of age shall have to conform to the law, the same as people in other parts of the Dominion. I look upon the amendment as very important to the electorate of Prince Edward Island—to those who have exercised the privilege of voting there for twenty-five years or more. The hon. mover of the amendment stated that twenty-five years ago, or upwards, when manhood suffrage was introduced into the Province, a great deal of uneasiness was felt by the property holders, that it was too radical a change, and they very much feared that the men enjoying the right of suffrage would deprive them of the rights and privileges they formerly enjoyed. But such has not been the case. After an experience of twenty-five or thirty years of manhood suffrage, the most tenacious to uphold that privilege are the property holders of the Province, and the people of that Province look upon that privilege as one of their dearest and most cherished rights. Although the Bill before the House is a very liberal and progressive measure, and very comprehensive in its details, almost amounting to manhood suffrage, yet, in the Province of Prince Edward Island, it will, in a small degree, restrict the vote, and a few young men and perhaps a few old men who enjoyed that privilege before will be deprived of it by the Bill. I therefore trust that this amendment will pass and that the privilege those people have enjoyed so long will be retained to them. We laid the foundation of this amendment a few weeks ago, when this House adopted the provision that the poll books should be taken as the basis upon which the revising officer should make up his list, in places where no voters' list is in existence. The revising officer will have no difficulty at all. The poll book will be prima facie evidence of the right of the elector to vote. I was surprised to observe in the Votes and Proceedings that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), who, I regret to see, is absent from his seat in the House, gave notice of an amendment, that all those who are not possessed of certain qualifications in Prince Edward Island should be struck off the list. His amendment is as follows:—

"That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of amending the same by striking out the provision making the poll books at the last election, in each electoral district in Prince Edward Island, prima facie evidence of the right to vote of the persons whose names are in such poll books as voters, and by providing, in lieu thereof, that in Prince Edward Island the revising officer for each district shall, as soon as possible after taking the oath of office, obtain certified copies of the assessment lists in the cities and towns where there are such lists, and, in the counties outside of the cities and towns, certified copies of the last revised assessment rolls of each school district, and that such lists shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the value of the lands therein mentioned."

The hon. gentleman pretended to be very much in favor of manhood suffrage in his speeches in this House; he seemed to be very desirous that the privilege enjoyed by the people of Prince Edward Island so long should be continued to them; but he was very much afraid that the poll books should be taken as the basis for the voters' list, and he gave notice of this amendment to strike off all the names of those on the poll books, and in lieu thereof to take the assessment lists of school districts throughout the Province. I am very much surprised that the hon. gentleman should go that far. If you do not take the poll books in the Province of Prince Edward Island as a basis, you cannot have a voters' list at all. We know that it is a very easy matter to strike a name off the list while it is very difficult to get an elector, particularly during the busy season, to come forward to get his name put on the list. The salaries of the school teachers are paid by the Provincial Government; the school district may vote a supplement to the salary or not, and it may have an assessment list or not, just as it chooses, or the people may voluntarily subscribe an amount for the running of the school. So that a list could not be framed at all in that way, and I am glad the right hon. First Minister adhered to his proposition to retain the poll book as the basis on which the revising officer would make his list in the Province of Prince Edward Island. We had at one time a registration of voters in that Province. It was the intention of the late Government to disfranchise a large proportion of the population, or otherwise to coerce the Province into the expense of preparing the voters' list. The people of the island were very indignant at that proposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite now speak of uniformity, but this was a great breach of uniformity. While in all the other Provinces the same franchise that qualified an elector to vote for a member of the Provincial Legislature qualified him to vote for a member of this House, Prince Edward Island was made an exception. We had two sets of qualifications there; one was manhood suffrage, on which members of the House of Assembly or the Lower House were elected; the other was a higher qualification, based on the ownership of £100 worth of property, on which legislative councillors were elected. In the Bill introduced into this House in 1874 that qualification was adopted for the election of members to this House. It is true, that provision was rejected in the Senate, and the rights and privilege enjoyed by the people of Prince Edward Island were continued to them by the action of the Senate at that time. Now, the hon. member for King's (Mr. McIntyre), who was in the House at that time, and who, I am glad to see, is in the House this evening, in addressing this House a few days ago on this question, stated that it made little or no difference to the people of Prince Edward Island whether the Senate adopted that amendment to the Bill or not. As the hon. gentleman on that occasion referred to myself, I will take the liberty of reading an extract from his speech, and correcting him in a few particulars. Referring to the clause in the Bill as it went from this House, he said:

"This clause was of a merely temporary character, and was inserted only to make provision until the Local Legislature passed a registration Act, which they did the very next Session. So whatever difficulty was caused by inserting this clause was completely removed by the Act of the Local Legislature. This clause would never have been inserted had it not been known that the Local Legislature was about to pass a registration Act. This was merely a temporary clause, and whether it was thrown out by the Senate or not, made no difference in regard to the island."

Now, the hon. gentleman is not quite correct in that statement. It may have been intended as a temporary clause, but it would be a permanent matter, unless the island Legislature went to the expense of providing a voters' list. But the hon. gentleman says the island Legislature did do so at the very next Session of the Legislature. Now, the hon. gentleman is not correct in that regard. The island Legislature did not pass a Registration of Voters' Act until 1877, three years after the Act of 1874 was passed. If the Senate had not amended the Bill, and an election had taken place in Prince Edward Island in the interim between 1874 and 1877, at least three-fourths of the electors of Prince Edward Island would have been disfranchised. The hon. gentleman complained very loudly of the measure now before the House, and said it would disfranchise a great many of the young men and the old men in that Province, but the Act passed at that time would have disfranchised three-fourths of the electors of Prince Edward Island. This Bill, while it is not as liberal as we would desire, is still a very liberal measure. A man owning $150 worth of property has the right to vote; the tenant, the occupant, the farmer's son, the mechanic's son, the fisherman, have the right to vote, while, under the Bill of 1874, as it went from this House to the Senate, no man in Prince Edward Island would have had a vote unless he had $325 worth of real estate. I cannot understand how any hon. gentleman who tacitly assented to the disfranchisement of so many under that Bill can say that this Bill is a gross infringement of the rights of the people of that Province. It may be said that I go too far when I say that three-fourths would be disfranchised by that Bill; but on looking over the election lists in the Province, I find that at the last election for legislative councillors in Queen's county, the metropolitan county, the vote polled was 1,491, while the vote polled at the last partial election for the House of Commons was 6,816; so that under the Laird Bill more than three-fourths of the people would have been disfranchised. In 1876, one year before the Registration of voters' Act was passed in the Province, the Hon. David Laird, Minister of Interior in the late Government, resigned, and was appointed Governor of the North-West Territory. An election was held in the county of Queen's, in October, 1876, for a representative in the place of Mr. Laird. If that Bill had not been amended by the Senate three-fourths of the electors of Queen's would have been disfranchised at that time, so that it made a very important difference to the people of Prince Edward Island whether that Bill was allowed to pass as it went from this House or was amended by the Senate. The hon. gentleman says it would make very little difference. I have an authority which he will not dispute, the high authority of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), who is not only the hon. gentleman's leader but is, I believe, the recognised leader of the Opposition members from the Maritime Provinces, and that hon. gentleman stated that the temporary provision in the Laird Bill evoked a storm from one end of Prince Edward Island to the other, a justifiable storm, because, as a temporary provision, I say it was unjustifiable. I need not deal with the merits of this question at any greater length. The subject is well known to hon. members. I trust we have their sympathy, and I hope we shall have their support. Hon. members from all parts of the country do not desire to deprive any person who once exercised the right of the franchise of that high privilege, and although the Bill is of a very liberal nature, and I have supported it for many reasons all through, it does not go as far as I would wish, and I would like to have continued to the free and independent and intelligent people of Prince Edward Island, who have exercised the franchise before, the right which they have hitherto possessed.

Mr. McINTYRE. It appears to me that the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island who have preceded me have occupied a very peculiar position in regard to this Bill. They conveniently forget that their names are on record as voting for the second reading, which included the adoption of the whole Bill. Now they pretend to be very anxious to mitigate the evil they have already committed, by reading amendments, which they know very well will not be accepted by the Government of which they are prominent supporters. It is a foregone conclusion that they will not be accepted, but those gentlemen must have their names on record against depriving the men who sent them here of their votes. The hon. gentleman says this is a very liberal Bill; but, instead of sticking to the Bill, he talks about a Bill passed here some ten years ago, with which we have nothing in the world to do at present. His speech was intended to throw dust in the eyes of the people of Prince Edward Island and to draw their attention away from this Bill to one passed ten years ago. I will show how liberal this Bill is, and what the hon. gentleman understands by liberality. In Prince Edward Island manhood suffrage prevailed for those who had no property qualification, and after performing their statute labor or paying $1, which was its equivalent, they could vote. How are they going to vote to-day? On the qualification of $1 they formerly had a vote, and to-day that qualification is raised to $300 for income. Again, as far as property is concerned, any person having property of the value of 40 shillings a year, or $6.40, had the privilege of voting, and the lowest qualification under this Bill is $20 a year rental. There is a great difference between voting on a qualification of $6.40 and $20 a year. This is some of the liberality the hon. gentleman thinks is attached to this Bill. Of course, if a person has property he has a vote on all occasions, but it is the young men who have no property who are favored by the manhood suffrage qualification. I look upon this Bill as a step in the wrong direction—at least, so far as Prince Edward Island and British Columbia are concerned. We are going back to a state of affairs which prevailed 30 or 40 years ago. According to this Bill the poll books used at the last election are to be taken as prima facie evidence of those whose names appear thereon having a right to vote. But there are hundreds of persons whose names appear on the poll books who will have no vote, because they voted at the last election on the manhood suffrage qualification. Then there is that class of young men who have since become of age, and they have as good a right to be put upon the list as those who are now on, yet they cannot vote, because they have no qualification. If these men who really have no qualification are left on the poll book, it will be due altogether to the goodwill of persons on both sides of politics in refraining to take objection to them; because, if any person desires to have their names struck off, it can be done. The hon. gentleman who spoke before me referred to the Bill of 1874, and had a good deal to say about its disfranchising tendency. On a former occasion I stated that this clause which referred to Prince Edward Island was for the purpose of affording a sort of registration of voters until the Local Legislature should pass a registration Act, which, the hon. gentleman says, they did about two years after that. I think it was passed previous to 1877, but I am not sure about that. I shall close my remarks by moving an amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Queen's county (Mr. Jenkins):

That all the words after "that" be left out, and the following be inserted: to amend the same, so as to provide that the provincial qualification of voters in Prince Edward Island shall continue to be the qualification of voters for the election of members to the House of Commons.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think there is much chance of that amendment to the amendment carrying, as on a previous occasion the House has declared, in unmistakable terms, against it; therefore, I fancy there is not much use in discussing that point. The question really before the House is the amendment moved by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Jenkins), and I shall say at once that I accept that amendment. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) declared that as, a short time ago, we had voted against the resolution of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), it would be quite inconsistent for us to support this. I do not see that at all. The motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk was against the principle of this Bill, namely, that the Dominion Parliament should fix the franchise for the election of members to this Parliament, instead of leaving it to the Local Legislatures. That is the principle of this Bill; therefore, those hon. gentlemen who voted against that, and at the same time support this amendment, are in no way guilty of inconsistency. I think, however, that this amendment is practically of very little importance. I agree with the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Hackett) that under the present Bill almost every man can vote. I heard a Liberal say that any man in Canada who could not vote under one or other of the franchises provided in this Bill deserves to be in the poor house, and will find his way there. Whether it be as a property owner, real or personal, or under the income clause, or as a wage-earner—by some means or other, every independent man in this country—such is the happy condition of the country—that the people earn enough and ought to own enough property to have a vote. So I think that the number of men who will be added to the list in Prince Edward Island by adopting this amendment will be exceedingly small—so small as not to really affect the election in any constituency on the island. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a sentiment about it, and the hon. gentlemen contend that no man who now has a vote in Prince Edward Island or British Columbia ought to be disfranchised. Now, this Bill is not a disfranchising Bill in any way whatever. The hon. member for Bothwell said that people were disfranchised by it. I say they are not. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, alludes to the Bill that is to come into force in Ontario in January next. But that is a matter in the future. The present Bill, which has been introduced before, and is introduced this Session, is an enfranchising Bill, and very many men, a large number of men, who hitherto have had no vote in Dominion elections, will come in under this Bill—there is no doubt about that. It is an enfranchising Bill. Those who hitherto have had votes in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia might feel aggrieved if any few of them were cut off by this Bill, and as it will not affect the principle of the Bill substantially, and will only affect the men who now have a vote, and will have no effect in the future, I accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jenkins).

Mr. MILLS. What about Manitoba ?

Mr. EDGAR. The First Minister has just stated that this is not a disfranchising Bill. Now, to-day I took the trouble to see how the case stood in a couple of wards in the city of Ottawa, to see whether this was a disfranchising Bill or not. We know that under the new Act of Ontario, voters who are entitled to vote for members of the Ontario Legislature are at present entitled to vote for members of the House of Commons. Now, in the Act passed by the Ontario Legislature the qualification of owners, tenants or occupants of real estate in cities is $200; the qualification adopted by this Bill for cities is $300 in respect of real property. Now, in this city, the last assessment rolls printed were made in 1879. I ascertained that in By ward, in this city, there were 82 persons assessed in respect of real property valued between $200 and $300. These men will have the right to vote under the Ontario Act, but if this Bill is passed they will be disfranchised. I take another ward. I take Ottawa ward, in this city, and I find there are 181 persons in that ward alone who will be disfranchised by this Bill. In those two wards there are 263 names on the assessment roll for 1879, the last printed, who will be disfranchised by the operation of this Bill, because the Ontario Act is the law to-day. It is not a speculative matter; it is not what may be the law—it is what is the law to-day. It was passed and came into operation on 1st July for a great many purposes. For all purposes connected with assessment, for instance, it is the law to-day, and after 1st January it will be the law in all respects, and we do not expect elections before that date. That does not include another class who will be disfranchised by this Bill, that is the class of wage-earners and income voters, who, if they have an income of $250, have a vote to-day under the Ontario Act, whereas by this law such persons will not have a vote, unless possessed of an income of $300. There will be a very considerable class who will come between $250 and $300 in regard to income, who will be positively and absolutely disfranchised by this Bill when passed. I dare say, in each constituency of this Dominion—and Ottawa sends two members—there will be as many disfranchised by this Bill as in these two wards of Ottawa city. If that is correct, then by this clause there will be over 25,000 disfranchised through the Province of Ontario alone by the operation of this Bill; and yet the right hon. the First Minister tells the House that this is not a Bill to disfranchise.

Mr. STAIRS. I should like to direct the attention of the House to the effect this Bill will have upon the Province of Nova Scotia. I understood the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to say that this Bill will disfranchise large numbers in all the Provinces of the Dominion. Having taken the trouble to ascertain what the effect will be in the county of Halifax, I beg to state that I have received from Halifax the assessment roll for five polling sections, which can be taken as representative districts. They include fishing, farming and mining, and a careful analysis of the figures shows that in those five polling sections there were 944 resident ratepayers at the last assessment. Under the old Nova Scotia Act—the House will recollect that it was stated there was a new Act passed during the last Session of the Local Legislature—652 of those ratepayers would be qualified to vote under the real estate qualification. The only class that could possibly be disfranchised under the present Dominion Bill would be those who were entered under the real and personal property qualification. Out of 659 qualified voters there would be only 7 who would be disqualified and not have the right to vote under the Dominion Bill, which does not include a real and personal property qualification. So, if there was nothing else in the Dominion Bill, the House will see that there was an insignificant number of persons disqualified in the five sections for want of real and personal property qualification as under this Bill.

Under the Dominion Bill there will be the same number of persons qualified out of those 944 as there would be under the local Act, as far as the real estate qualification is concerned, as owners, that is, 652. Then, there will be a very large number, indeed, of persons qualified under this Bill on account of the different way in which the qualification is arrived at, the one being by assessment and the other actual value. Anyone who will take the trouble to look over the lists will perceive that there are a very large number of persons on the list in those polling sections, and, of course, this will cover very many persons who come within a few dollars of having the amount necessary to qualify. In running my eye down the list, I saw several amounts, such as $145, $140 and $130. Under the present local Act those would not be qualified to vote; but under the Dominion Bill it is certain they will be qualified to vote. There is not the slightest doubt but that there will be 200, at least, qualified as real estate owners under the Dominion Bill who are not qualified under the local Acts, either past or present. Besides, I find there are 37 persons whose names are not on the list who will probably be qualified to vote under the qualification for fishermen, namely, owning $150 worth of real estate, fishing tackle, etc. They are not qualified to vote under the local Act, because they have not the fishing qualification; for under the local Act they must have personal property to the value of $300, whereas the amount is only $150 to qualify as fishermen under the Dominion Bill. On looking over the assessment rolls it appears that very few, not more than one or two out of the seven, were qualified under the real and personal property qualification. Besides, on looking over the assessment lists, I noticed there are 219 ratepayers whose names appear on those rolls who have property sufficient to qualify one or more sons under the Dominion Bill. Those parties did not vote under the Nova Scotia Act, and therefore, strictly speaking, they cannot be said to be disfranchised, but there has been an enlargement of the franchise. I do not want to deceive the House, and I have great pleasure in explaining that the Act passed last year will give those persons qualifications the same as they will have it under the Dominion Bill. I have added also the fishermen, and there are a very large number who will be qualified, because they own sufficient real estate and nets to give them the vote under this Bill, which they do not possess under the local Act. Instead of their being disfranchised, there will be really an enlargement of the franchise, to the extent of 700 votes, at least.

Mr. LAURIER. I am one of those who do not believe in universal suffrage. I do not believe it is right in principle, for I believe that the primary principle which ought to govern this matter is that the regulation of the franchise should belong to each Province, and if you have in Prince Edward Island universal suffrage, and if the people there are satisfied with it, I would not be a party to depriving them of it, any more than I would be a party to the majority in this House imposing on us in the Province of Quebec a more extended suffrage than prevails in that Province. The Prime Minister has stated that he would not deprive any voter in Prince Edward Island of the suffrage. I say that the same principle of justice requires that votes should not be given to any man in the Province of Quebec, or any other Province, to whom the Legislature of that Province has not thought proper to give the vote. For this reason, I am prepared to vote for the amendment and the sub-amendment.

House divided on the amendment of Mr. McIntyre to the amendment.

Amendment to amendment negatived.

Mr. WELDON. So far as the Province of New Brunswick is concerned, some material alterations in the franchise have been made, and some of my hon. friends have indicated the changes which will take place in some of the constituencies under the operation of this Bill. I have in previous speeches referred to the effect of the Bill upon the voters of the city of St. John, and I regret that many voters in that city, who have been exercising the franchise for years, will be deprived of that privilege. I think if the people of Prince Edward Island and British Columbia are to be regarded in this matter, it is right that the claims of the classes to which I have referred in the Province of New Brunswick, who will be disfranchised if this Bill passes in its present shape, should also be considered. There are a number of people who are in possession of large and valuable properties in the cities of St. John and Portland who will be disfranchised under the provisions of this Bill, and others who now enjoy the franchise by virtue of their being freemen of the city. I venture to think that if the Minister of Finance were present he would agree with me that these men should not be deprived of the franchise, for I believe the Minister of Finance owes many a vote in the city of St. John to the very class whom this Bill will disfranchise. Holding these views, I would move an amendment to the amendment:

To insert the words "New Brunswick" after the words "British Columbia," and to strike out the words "in the Provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island," and insert the following: In order to enable persons now entitled to vote in the Provinces of British Columbia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward, to vote at future elections of the members of the House of Commons in the said Provinces.

Mr. LAURIER.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I regret very much indeed that the First Minister has accepted the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island, if I understand that amendment. I have listened patiently and with interest to the discussion, and I have endeavored to understand the amendment. I am not sure that I understand it fully; but if I do understand it, I regret very much that it has been accepted, inasmuch as I should feel constrained to vote against it. A few moments ago I sent for the amendment to read it for myself, but was not able to get it, as it was in the hands of some other hon. member, and as there was no notice given of it, I may not be familiar with its details; but if I understand it, it proposes to give Prince Edward Island the right, for the first electoral list that will be made under this law, to act on the law of Prince Edward Island as it exists to-day: that is, to take the present qualification as the basis of the lists for the federal elections, and that is to continue for all the voters who will then be found entitled to vote, so long as they live; but if new voters come forward they must qualify under the law that applies to other parts of the Dominion. The result of that, according to my interpretation, is that a young man who is to-day 21 years of age, and otherwise qualified under the island law, will, if he lives to be 81 years of age, be entitled to vote for 60 years longer without the necessity of acquiring any other qualification; whereas, a young man who is only 20 years of age, just one year younger, will come in next year, and if he should not happen to have the necessary qualification under the present Bill, will not be entitled to vote at all during the same length of time. Moreover, that exception destroys the uniformity of the Bill. I feel that I could not vote against the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from the city and county of St. John (Mr. Weldon) if I did not vote against the other; I feel that I should vote against both. I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the hon. member for St. John and also that of the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Jenkins), if my explanation of it is correct.

Mr. BURPEE. I differ from the conclusions of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry). It is an old saying that half a loaf is better than no bread. I would prefer universal suffrage all over the Dominion, as they have it in Prince Edward Island, to the franchise of this Bill; but it is clear, from the last division, that we cannot get universal suffrage for Prince Edward Island, or for any of the other Provinces. Now, I am willing to accept for New Brunswick what has been conceded by the Premier to Prince Edward Island; that is, I am willing to take the lists of New Brunswick as they stand now, and allow those whose names are now on the voters' lists to continue there as long as they live, and accept for those who will come in after this year the franchise which is adopted for the whole Dominion, rather than these electors should be disfranchised whose names are now on the lists. Now, I think New Brunswick has a good case in this matter, and I cannot for the life of me understand on what principle this concession can be denied to us if it is granted to Prince Edward Island. The real estate qualification in New Brunswick is based on $100 worth of property. By this Bill it is made $150, and we have official accounts from the officers of five counties showing the number of persons who have not property to the value of $140, and whose names will be struck off the list. In the county of York there will be 804; in Queen's, 527; in Sunbury, 394; Charlotte 550; and Carleton over 300. Now, what we ask by the amendment of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is that these people should be put upon the same footing as those who are enfranchised in Prince Edward Island. If the hon. gentleman can give a good reason why this should not be conceded to New Brunswick as well as to Prince Edward Island, I should like to hear it. This is uniformity with a vengeance; it is making fish of one and flesh of another in earnest. I do ask the consideration of the House for this amendment, which is based on the principle that the different Provinces should be placed on the same footing in this respect.

Mr. BLAKE. Surely the people of New Brunswick have the same right to consideration as the people of British Columbia and the people of Prince Edward Island. If the prejudices and the passions and the sentiments of the people of one Province be considered, are not those of the people of another Province to be considered? The hon. First Minister says he does not think it will make much difference in the island of Prince Edward—that he believes there will be very few persons enfranchised under the amendment he has accepted who would be disfranchised if the amendment were rejected, but he believes it is a proper concession to make to those gentlemen, who propose that no man should be disfranchised who has the franchise now in these Provinces. It has been pointed out to him repeatedly, in the course of these discussions, that large numbers of persons would be disfranchised under the operation of this Bill in the Province of New Brunswick, and surely the same rule should apply to them. If the hon. gentleman denies the statistics which have been given, and says there would be very few disfranchised in New Brunswick, can any more be said with regard to Prince Edward Island? But apparently a very large number will be disfranchised in New Brunswick, not merely with reference to the property qualification, but also, as the hon. member for King's (Mr. McIntyre) pointed out, with reference to the personal property qualification, under which a very large proportion of his constituents voted—a qualification which is not recognised by this Bill at all. Now, what is justice for one Province is justice for another. Hath not a Jew eyes, affections, passions? Is not a New Brunswicker as much to be considered as a Prince Edward Islander on the Atlantic coast or a British Columbian on the Pacific coast? As my hon. friend has said, are fish to be made of one and flesh of another? Is an exception to be made of one and no exception to be made of the other? What sort of justice is this? It is the deformity of uniformity, Sir.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is all very brave talking, Mr. Speaker, but there is an important difference between the two cases. In Prince Edward Island and British Columbia everybody has the right to vote, and therefore the operation of this Act is alleged, in some degree, to cause the disfranchisement of some men; but there is a property qualification in New Brunswick, not identical with that provided by this Bill; but one of the most experienced men in elections in that Province is my colleague, the Minister of Finance, who is not here, and he says this Bill will, on the whole, largely increase the votes in the Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. BURPEE. It will disfranchise a good many.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The two franchises do not run on all fours; every qualification is not nominally the same; but in the various franchises given by this Bill the number of voters in the Province of New Brunswick, from the best information I have got, will be largely increased. Therefore, there is no similarity between the two cases.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has told us that, on the whole, the Bill that he has submitted will give to New Brunswick as liberal a franchise as it now has.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Larger.

Mr. MILLS. But he forgets that his Bill will disfranchise many persons in New Brunswick. It is all very well to deal in generalities, but the hon. members for King's (Mr. McIntyre) and Sunbury (Mr. Burpee) have gone into this matter with care, and have obtained the necessary information, and have stated that, in one constituency, upwards of 400, and in another upwards of 800, will be disfranchised. The hon. gentleman says that in Prince Edward Island a considerable number of people will be enfranchised; but is it any compensation to one man that another has received the franchise when he is disfranchised? The hon. gentleman may confer the franchise upon a few who do not now possess it. I do not object to his conferring the franchise, but I do object to his disfranchising those who are possessed of the elective franchise now. I pointed out, when this Bill was under discussion, that except for some offence, no one who has enjoyed the franchise in England is disfranchised when there is a change made in the qualification of voters; but the hon. gentleman has undertaken to disfranchise a large number of the people of this country. One of my hon. friends went into a calculation, and showed that he had disfranchised upwards of 130,000 in the Dominion of Canada; and I say it is monstrous to deprive those who have enjoyed the elective franchise of that inestimable privilege, when nothing has been done to show that they are unworthy of the trust committed to them. That is what he does. My hon. friend from Sunbury pointed out that, in his constituency, several hundred persons would be disfranchised; and he asks that the Bill be so amended that those persons who now possess the elective franchise shall continue to enjoy the right they now have. The First Minister says that there are no parties in New Brunswick who will be disfranchised. If he is right—I do not admit that he is, but if so—this amendment could do no harm; it would leave the parties just as they are now. There would be no semblance of injustice, although no more would have the franchise than those to whom he proposes to give it. What harm is done by this double security against disfranchisement? The hon. gentleman gives the franchise now to those whom he proposed a few days ago to disfranchise in British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. What right have these people to the elective franchise that the people in New Brunswick, who have had it up to this moment, cannot assert? The proposition is a monstrous one, one that this House ought not to entertain. This House has humiliated itself on more than one occasion during this Session at the instance of the First Minister. It has said and unsaid the same thing many times this Session. The hon. gentleman is asking hon. members to-night to unsay what they have said with regard to Prince Edward Island. I do not object to that. He was wrong before; he is more nearly right now. But let him do the justice to the people of New Brunswick that he says he can do to the people of Prince Edward Island; let him deal out the same measure of justice to the people in one Province that he proposes to allow to the people in another. In this Dominion we suppose that we stand upon a footing of equality. I am not willing to refuse to the smallest Province what I would claim for the largest and most populous Province in the Dominion. Let us respect the rights the people have hitherto enjoyed, and, to do that, let us vote for the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from New Brunswick.

Mr. GILLMOR. I was somewhat surprised when my hon. friend behind me stated to me that some 400 would be disfranchised in Queen's county, N.B. I could hardly believe it, but I took the trouble to send home and have the list examined in my own county of Charlotte, and I learned, though there were two voting places in which the lists were not then available, that there were 530 disfranchised under this Bill. As to who can vote under this Bill, it is a mere matter of speculation. I know as much about it as the Finance Minister, and he knows no more about it than any one else. We cannot tell how many will be enfranchised until the new list is made up, but in the meantime I am satisfied that some will be disfranchised. It is a mere matter of speculation how many, and I cannot say how many, but some will be, and who knows how many will be qualified under it? They may qualify under the wage-earners' qualification, or they may prevail upon somebody to value their property at $150 when it has been valued heretofore at $100. I do not see how the Government can give the right to two Provinces and refuse it to others. I cannot go to all these 500 or 600 men who are disfranchised, to all appearance, and tell whether they will be able to vote under some other qualification or not. The same thing may be said also as to Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. My hon. friend from Kent, N. B. (Mr. Landry) says he is going to vote against both amendments. No doubt there will be some disfranchised in his county. He does not want that. They voted to send him here. Why should he not claim for them the same privilege that the Government is willing to concede to Prince Edward Island and British Columbia? I cannot see on what principle it can be refused. My opinion is, that there will be 10,000 disfranchised in New Brunswick, and how many of these will be enfranchised under this Bill who can tell? It will do no harm, however, to let those who have been enfranchised remain so. If the amendment is not adopted, it will be inconsistent, and will not be dealing fairly with all the Provinces.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The fact is, that the conduct of the First Minister in this matter is wholly unjustifiable, and no one knows it better than the First Minister himself. He proposes to allow every man in the island of Prince Edward and in British Columbia, who is now entitled to a vote, to retain that right as long as he lives, and when my hon. friend from St John (Mr. Weldon) submits a similar proposition, the hon. gentleman refuses it to the Province of New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman says the cases are different, and I agree with him. Wherein does the difference lie? In Prince Edward Island and British Columbia they have universal suffrage; every man is entitled to vote. A man may be here to-day and he may be somewhere else to-morrow; he has no ties in the country that will justify the Government in allowing him to retain the right to exercise the franchise. In the Province of New Brunswick no man can vote unless he has a property qualification, unless he has a house and land, unless he has a home; and unless he has property to the amount that the hon. gentleman exacts by this Bill to qualify him he is not entitled to vote. But in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia no such qualification exists. In New Brunswick the very men who have a claim upon the consideration of this House, the very men whose homes are in the Province, are deprived of a vote by this Bill. I ask what justification there can be for this proposition? The hon. gentleman tells us that he has largely extended the franchise. How has he extended it? He has given the Micmac Indians of New Brunswick a vote, and he proposes to cut off the freemen of the city of St. John, who are now entitled to exercise the franchise. Yet the hon. gentleman pretends to say there is some distinction between the two cases. There is no distinction that would give the voters in the island a right to vote, and he knows it. The hon. gentleman knows that his followers in this House from Prince Edward Island have notified him that they dare not go back to their constituents unless he makes this change. The hon. gentleman knows full well that unless he makes this change in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, instead of having nine supporters from those Provinces he would not have one. The hon. gentleman is guided by no principle. With him, it is a pure question of expediency. He is willing to sacrifice every principle for the sake of political exigencies. The hon. gentleman thinks, no doubt, that he can secure the support of three members from Prince Edward Island and six from British Columbia by doing them the full measure of justice that he is not willing to do to any other Province, and he calls that fair play and justice to all. Sir, my hon. friend has said that the First Minister has dragged his supporters through an amount of filth and dirt during this whole contest that is not creditable to himself or to them, and he will have to drag them through a good deal more filth and dirt before he gets this Bill through in the shape it is now.

Mr. IRVINE. When I spoke upon the second reading of this Bill, I gave it as my opinion that none of my constituents would be disfranchised by it. Since then some of my colleagues, in conversation with me, have assured me that I was not correct, and so I took the trouble to write home to the secretary-treasurer of my county to look over the new assessment rolls of this year and to send me the result. I asked him to see if there were any persons assessed between $100 and $150 in real estate and in personal property. I received a letter, which I am willing to show to the First Minister, and this letter states that in my county there are some 300 names on the assessment roll who will be disfranchised under this Bill, as not having the qualification required by it. Now, Sir, the First Minister stated that the Finance Minister, his colleague from New Brunswick, was a good authority on this subject. He may be, but I think I am justified in saying that the assessors appointed under the law of New Brunswick are equally as good authority, if not better. They are required to take an oath to value the property of the inhabitants for assessment purposes as correctly as they would the property of a deceased person. They go from door to door to assess the real and personal property of every person, and I think it must conceded that they are better authority than either the First Minister or the Finance Minister.

Amendment to amendment negatived.

Mr. WATSON. In the Province of Manitoba, at present, the qualification for voters is $100 in cities, towns and villages, as well as in country municipalities. I feel satisfied that under this Bill, as it stands at present, a great number of the electors of Manitoba will be disfranchised; therefore, I hope the First Minister will consent to attach Manitoba to Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, and give them the same rights. If he does not do so, he will be doing a great injustice to many people in Manitoba. Therefore, I beg leave to move, in amendment to the amendment:

To leave out the words "the Provinces of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island," and to insert the following: "in order to enable persons now entitled to vote in the Provinces of British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba at future elections for members of the House of Commons in the said Provinces."

Mr. MULOCK. I think the First Minister will make a mistake if he departs from the principle on which this measure is founded. He has, during the discussions on the Bill, steadily endeavored to impress on the House the necessity of uniformity, that whatever law may be made for one Province shall be applicable to another Province. Only this afternoon, when a suggestion was made as to a proposed change, the First Minister replied that it would interfere with the principle of uniformity—that was in regard to tenants' right to vote. This evening the First Minister has announced that the franchise enjoyed in the two extreme Provinces should not be interfered with. He has affirmed as a principle that because men enjoy manhood suffrage the vote should not be taken away from them. If that is a sound principle, it is applicable generally; and the same right must be extended to every citizen of the Dominion. If he thinks it is an unsound principle to disfranchise any citizen in British Columbia or Prince Edward Island, I ask him to extend that principle to every other Province. On what principle is he proposing to disfranchise the electors in Ontario and Quebec or Manitoba? If you take the old law in Ontario, and compare the rights of tenants, it will be found that they are restricted by this Bill. Under the local law the tenant was not obliged to be in possession of the property demised, in order to have a vote. Under this Bill he will require to be in possession. If you compare this measure with the enlarged Bill recently passed by the Ontario Legislature, it is evident that a large number of people will be disfranchised. In Algoma manhood suffrage is in force to-day. Is it fair, then, that the voters in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, who, but for this amendment, would not be entitled to vote on that qualification, should have the franchise, while many of the citizens of Algoma would be disfranchised. For those reasons I propose the following amendment, which follows exactly the language of the amendment respecting Prince Edward Island:

That the following words be added: In the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, besides the persons entitled to be registered as voters under the foregoing provisions of this Act, every person who, at the time of the passing of the same, first, is of the age of 21 years, and is not by this Act or by any law of the Dominion of Canada disqualified or prevented from voting; and second, is a British subject by birth or naturalisation, and a resident in the Province, and is entitled to vote in the said Provinces respectively by the laws now severally existing in the same, shall have a right to be registered as a voter, and vote, so long as he shall continue to be qualified to vote under the provisions of the said last mentioned laws, and no longer."

Amendment to the amendment negatived.

Mr. LANGELIER. It was expected that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Jenkins) would be accepted by the Government. Almost immediately the First Minister said he would not accept the amendment. Now that amendment is accepted, or something to the same effect, and I think that the members from the Province of Quebec should see that their Province is as well treated as the other Provinces, and therefore I move:

That the Bill be not now considered, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of inserting therein another clause, as follows: In the Province of Quebec, besides the persons who are entitled to be registered as voters, and to vote, under the provisions of this Act, every person who, at the time of the passing of the same, is of the age of 21 years, and is not disqualified by this Act, or by any law of the Dominion; who is a British subject by birth or naturalisation, and is entitled to vote in such Province, under the laws now existing in the same, shall have the right to be registered as a voter, and to vote, as long as he shall be qualified to vote under the provisions of the last mentioned laws, and no longer."

Mr. SPROULE. Before the motion is carried, I wish to give a few words of explanation of the vote I have already given on this question. I have always held that this Act is wide enough; that it would be unlikely that any person of 21 years of age, in the enjoyment of health and able to earn a livelihood, would not be able to vote under this Act. With regard to the amendment, however, if there is a necessity for it for British Columbia or Prince Edward Island, then I say it should apply to all the other Provinces. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Kent on this question, and if a vote were taken upon it, I should record my opinion in favor of the views I have expressed.

Amendment agreed to and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee).

Mr. MILLS. Supposing one of the parties living on the island should leave, and should take up his residence elsewhere, he will cease to be a voter for the time being, but if he returns to the island, does he stand on the same footing as any other person without property? I understand that a large number of those persons on Prince Edward Island, who have hitherto voted on property, are fishermen, who sometimes reside on the island but occasionally reside elsewhere. The hon. gentleman is carrying through a Bill undertaking to qualify a number of parties to vote; he is introducing what is a serious disintegrating element, for he cannot suppose that the Bill will remain in its present form for any length of time, and therefore he should explain what he intends by the clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Bill speaks for itself.

Mr. MILLS. No, it does not. What is the legal effect of it? The hon. gentleman has some intention with regard to those to whom he purposes to give a vote, and I ask him what is his intention?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we ought to know the purport of an amendment which is distinctly contrary to what was declared to be the object of the Bill. No doubt the object was to save the hon. gentleman's friends in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MILLS. It is currently rumored in this Chamber that the hon. gentleman himself is the revered parent of this clause, and that the hon. member for Prince Edward Island is only its foster parent. The hon. gentleman having drawn it up, ought to know and ought to tell the House its exact purport.

Bill reported with amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the Bill as amended be now taken into consideration.

Mr. LANGELIER. I beg to move:

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend it, so as to provide that every person having the right to vote at the elections for the Legislative Assembly of any Province shall have the right to vote at elections for the House of Commons.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I rise to move an amendment to the tenant clause of the Bill, and I wish to call the First Minister's attention to that clause for a few moments. I find there is an invidious distinction made between the tenant and the other two classes who vote on property qualifications. As regards the owner of property, there is nothing required with regard to the amount of interest he has in the property; he is simply required to be nominally the owner of it. The property may be mortgaged for all it is worth, and he may be in debt besides, but still he is allowed to vote on the property. Then, again, as regards the occupant, it is not necessary he shall have any monetary interest in the property at all. He may be simply a squatter, but still he has a right to vote. It is entirely different when we come to the tenant clause. There the distinction is made, that he must pay a certain amount of rent, no matter what the intrinsic value of the property may be. Not only that, but a certain portion of that rent, up to $20, shall be paid before he will be allowed to vote. I say, again, that is an invidious distinction. Then I find there is one class of tenants entirely debarred from the franchise. The section only provides for two classes of tenants: first, the class that pays the rent in money; and next, the class that pays, instead, in kind, or a part of the produce of the land. But in Ontario, and I suppose in the other Provinces as well, there is a large class of tenants not included under either of these heads. We have often tenants who, instead of paying money or produce, remunerate the owner by making improvements, by making, for instance, fences, or clearing a portion of the land, or draining a portion of the land; or erecting buildings, or in some way or other not included in either of these classes. This I take to be a great hardship. A tenant of this class may be paying a large consideration. The property he is holding may be worth $1,000 or $10,000, and the consideration he is giving for the use of it may amount to hundreds of dollars; yet, under this Bill, he will have no right to vote. The clause, as it stands now, requiring that this rent shall be paid, will also be troublesome in finding out the correct amount of rent, and, in many cases, will cause a good deal of annoyance. That annoyance may be very much intensified. Poverty is no disgrace, if a man has not brought it on himself through his own misconduct, but there is no man, no matter how poor he is, who wishes to have that poverty flaunted in the face of the public. Under the Bill, as it is, when a tenant goes to vote, the first question asked is whether he has paid his rent or not; and it has always been open to the landlord, if he is on the opposite side of politics, to trump up a bill against him and dispute whether he has paid the amount of rent required or not. Not only that, but we can easily conceive a poor tenant may often be subjected to another species of annoyance. We know that not only candidates, but agents, are in the habit of canvassing a party who is supposed to have a vote. A tenant who is unable to pay his rent may be from day to day annoyed by these parties coming to solicit his vote, and at last, in order to get rid of them, he will have to acknowledge that he has not and is not able to pay his rent. I say, again, an invidious distinction is made against the tenant. It may be said the principle of the Bill is that not the value of the property, as regards the tenant, but the rent paid, is to be the qualification. But why should a principle of that kind be adhered to when it is not only going to debar a large number of voters from the franchise, but is going to make an invidious distinction, not productive of any good or not answering any useful purpose? I beg to move, in amendment:

That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of amending the same, so as to provide that the qualification of a tenant shall be determined by the actual value of the property of which he is tenant, the same as in the case of occupant or owner in all the Provinces in which the actual value appears on the assessment roll.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I desire to move an amendment in the direction that I favored when the different clauses of the Bill were discussed in committee. I strongly favored the proposition which was then made, that those in charge of the preparation of the local electoral lists, in other words, the clerks of the different municipalities, should have the preparation of the primary lists under this Bill. The men who have had the preparation of those lists in their hands throughout the Province of Ontario have done their work satisfactorily; they are men of all political parties, and they have been actively supervised by the municipal councils of their own municipalities, while there has been an appeal to the judge. Under this Bill, the preparation of the lists is left in the hands of one individual, who has not such supervision exercised over him. While I take exception to the change proposed for these reasons, I also take exception to the course pursued in this matter in the Bill now under discussion, because I believe we are passing over an efficient, a reliable, a thoroughly responsible body of men, who have had these duties to discharge for a number of years, and have, in much the greater number of instances, discharged them with a credit which certainly should not be reflected upon by the course proposed by this Bill. Independent of political reasons, these men are able to discharge the duties of the preparation of the voters' lists throughout the Province of Ontario with care, and so as to secure to us what is the main purpose of any electoral system, the success of the party that is in the majority. I deny that the same purpose can be as efficiently secured by this Bill. This Bill proposes to remove the control of the voters' lists from the people themselves to an appointee of the Government of the day, a course which, I think, will result in great dissatisfaction among the people. Independent of these reasons there is that of expense. In the present case we are assuming a responsibility which can be avoided by the adoption of the proposition I desire to make. For all these reasons, I beg to move, in amendment:

That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of amending the same, so as to provide that the preparation of the voters' lists in the Province of Ontario shall be in the hands of those who now prepare the voters' lists for the election of members to the Provincial Legislature.

That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of amending the same, so as to provide that in case of an appeal upon the claim of any person to be put upon the voters' list or the right to remain upon such list, such person may vote, but his ballot shall not be counted, but shall be sealed up by the deputy returning officer in an envelope endorsed with the polling division, the election and the number opposite the voter's name upon the poll book, and such ballots shall be forwarded to the court in which such appeal is pending, and when the appeal is decided the court shall certify to the returning officer the votes to be added, if any, to the number counted for each candidate, and the return shall be corrected accordingly, and the court shall also certify the result of the appeal to the revising officer, who shall amend the voters' lists, so far as may be necessary, in accordance with such certificate.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I desire to move an amendment which I discussed in Committee of the Whole. It is permitting an appeal from the adjudication of the revising officer, and is substantially the proposition which the First Minister submitted in the Bill as originally introduced into the House. Under this Bill, where the revising officer is not a judge there is an appeal to the county court judge, but there is no appeal beyond that. I propose, by this amendment, that there shall be an appeal from the adjudication of the judge of the county court, or the judge of the Superior Court, as the case may be, when he is the revising officer or the judge in appeal. I think the amendment is of the first possible importance. It is the law in England, and I think it ought to be the law here. The proposition that the First Minister has submitted to Parliament in this Bill is that where the revising officer is not the judge there shall be an appeal to the judge, but where the revising officer is the judge there shall be no appeal from his decision. We know that under this Bill important and difficult questions of law are likely to arise, and I think it is of the first consequence that we should have the law properly settled. In my amendment, I propose that there shall be an appeal from the adjudication of the judge to a Superior Court. The amendment covers the whole propositions contained in the original Bill introduced by the First Minister, together with the necessary machinery for working it out. I beg leave to move, in amendment:

That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of adding to section 47 the following sub-sections:—

(a.) Any person or persons who, under the foregoing sections, shall have made complaint, according to the practice therein provided for in respect of the list of voters in any polling district, with respect to the final revision thereof, whether such list be the first or any subsequent voters' list for the polling district, prepared under this Act, or any person or persons, with reference to whom such complaint was made, who shall be dissatisfied with the decision on any point of law of the revising officer or the judge in appeal, in respect of such complaint, may give to the revising officer or such judge, within seven days after the day of such decision, notice in writing of his desire to appeal to a superior court from such decision, stating shortly in such notice the decision complained of and his reasons for appealing against it; and the revising officer or such judge shall, as soon as he conveniently can do so, state, in the form of a special case, the facts established according to his opinion by the evidence, and necessary to be laid before the court above in order to determine the said point of law; also his own decision on the same, as nearly as may be, according to the form and practice provided for the stating and hearing of a special case in the court intended to be appealed to, and he shall then sign the same as revising officer or such judge, and shall require the appellant, or his counsel or agent, after reading the same to him, to sign a declaration at the end of such special case in the words: 'I appeal from the above decision;' after which the revising officer or judge shall endorse the said case with the names of the parties, appellant and respondent, if there be a respondent or party desiring to maintain the decision appealed from, and the number of the polling district, and the name of the electoral district thereby affected, and shall deliver to such appellant, or his counsel or agent, a certified copy of such case, and, also, if required, to the respondent, or his counsel or agent.

(b) No such appeal shall be allowed or entertained against any decision of the revising officer or judge upon any matter of fact, or the admission or rejection of evidence adduced or offered on any matter of fact, but the appeal shall be allowed only on some point or points of law, as before mentioned. With the consent of the revising officer or judge, any number of persons desiring to appeal on the same point or points of law may be joined in the same statement of case, making it one appeal.

(c) The appeal shall be in the form of a petition to the court, accompanying the statement of the case, certified by the revising officer or judge, and praying that the voters' list in question may be amended by the insertion or omission of the name or names alleged to be wrongfully omitted or inserted, or otherwise, as the case may be, and shall be presented on behalf of the appellant, at the next sitting of the court appealed to, after the expiration of the said notice of appeal, by any barrister or advocate practising therein.

(d) A copy of the petition must, at least four days before such presentation, have been served upon the revising officer or judge, and upon the party in whose favor the decision appealed from was given, with a notice of the time and place at which the petition will be presented, such service being made in the manner prescribed in any ordinary case of summons to appear before such court in civil cases or in any other manner prescribed by any rule made by any court in that behalf under this Act. The revising officer or judge, and the opposing party (if any) may appear by any barrister or advocate practising in the court, upon whom any order made by the court in the case, or any notice or other proceeding therein, may be validly served.

(e) If the petitioner or petitioners does not or do not appear on the day on which the petition is to be presented, or, appearing, withdraws or withdraw his or their petition, the case shall, on the application of the revising officer or judge, or any other party on whom the petition has been served, as aforesaid, be dismissed as respects such petitioner or petitioners, and the polling list shall, as to him or them, remain unaltered:

If the petitioner or petitioners appear, and neither the revising officer nor any other party aforesaid does so, or appearing, does not oppose the petition, the court shall order the polling list to be amended, as prayed for, and the revising officer shall amend it accordingly.

But if the petition be opposed by the revising officer or other party aforesaid (if any), then appearing, the court shall appoint a convenient time and place at which the case shall be heard by some judge of the court, who shall hear and decide the same summarily, and without being bound by any technical rules of proceeding; such decision shall be subject to no appeal, and shall be notified in such manner as the court may direct to the revising officer, who shall obey the same and shall amend the polling list or leave it unaltered accordingly.

Provided always, that the court may, if it be of opinion that the case submitted is not sufficient to enable it to give judgment in law, remit the case to the revising officer to be more fully stated.

The court may award costs to or against any party in the case.

The court, or the judges thereof having by law power to make rules of practice for proceedings therein, shall (subject to the provision hereinafter made as to the Province of Quebec) have power to make rules of practice for appeals under this Act, and a tariff of costs and fees on such proceedings respectively, and to alter the same; but if and so long as no such special rule or tariff shall be in force and applicable to any appeal under this Act, the court or judges shall cause the proceedings for which no such special provision is made to be conducted in such manner as they may deem best adapted for doing substantial justice to all parties, and shall allow such costs as they may deem reasonable; and the court deciding the case in appeal shall, in its order on that behalf, direct by what party the costs on any or all the proceedings shall be paid, and they shall be subject to taxation, as in other cases in the court, and recoverable in like manner.

(f) The appeal, in the Province of Ontario, shall be to any of the divisional courts of the High Court of Justice for that Province, or to any one or more of the judges thereof, sitting at such court,—in the Province of Manitoba to the Court of Queen's Bench for Manitoba,—in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, to the Supreme Court of each of such Provinces respectively,—and in the Province of Quebec to the Superior Court at the city of Quebec, if the polling district in question be in any of the districts of Quebec, Three Rivers, Saguenay, Chicoutimi, Gaspé, Rimouski, Kamou raska, Montmagny, Beauce or Arthabaska,—and to the Superior Court at the city of Montreal, if such polling sub-division be in any one of the districts of Montreal, Ottawa, Terrebonne, Joliette, Richelieu, St. Francis, Bedford, St. Hyacinthe, Iberville or Beauharnois; and any three judges of the said Superior Court residing at the city at which the petition is presented shall have and exercise, with respect to such petition, all the powers by this Act vested in the court, except only that any rules of practice or tariff made under this Act shall be made or altered only by the judges of the court resident in the said cities, or a majority of them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) moved in amendment :

That the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, by adding the following words at the end of section 14 : Provided, also, that the name of any Indian or person of part Indian blood living on a reservation, and who has not been enfranchised under the Indian Act, shall not be entered upon any list of persons entitled to vote in any electoral district, without the consent of such Indian.

He said : An amendment was offered in committee, providing that under the peculiar circumstances of the Indians living on reservation, where there are no assessment rolls, and nothing to guide the revising officer, the Indians should make personal application to the revising officer and give a description of the property, the post office address, and so forth. Some little exception was taken to this, because it was thought it would be placing Indians in a different position from anyone else. That has been abandoned; and I simply provide that an Indian's name shall not be entered on the voters' list without his consent. It is an amendment which all who have the welfare of the Indians at heart should support. I would be failing in my duty to the Indians who live in my district if I did not present this amendment. I have already explained that some of the Indians claim that they came here under a treaty made with Great Britain; that they are not subjects, but allies, of the British Crown. And that affords one of the great reasons why they have not availed themselves more largely of the enfranchisement clauses of the Indian Act. From indications I have had, I believe this measure is not sought by many of those Indians, although it has been intimated that the Indians desire to have votes. I know that well educated and intelligent Indians, for whose opinions I am willing to give every consideration, have, in the public prints, and one in a letter to the First Minister, declared that the Indians wanted votes; but I believe they did not speak on behalf of their people. It is but right and proper that we should determine that their names shall not be placed on the list except with their consent.

Mr. McCALLUM. They are not obliged to vote, even if their names are on the list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman has given that reason before. But the moment Indians are placed on the voters' list you give them a certain right, and you are telling them that they must work like the others. I think the First Minister adopted an amendment this afternoon, one of the provisions of which was that the Indian agent should not—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Induce or compel them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And also that the Indian agent shall not put their names on the roll. I supposed that the Indian agent would have to go there, and that being the case, any Indian desiring to have his name entered on the list, it would simply be enough for him to give his consent. But as to those who do not desire to have their names entered upon the list, it will be respecting their prejudices and feelings, and I feel confident that in my own riding there are some Indians who will desire to be in that position, and I think in such a case it would be unwise to compel them. I think the amendment is a reasonable one and a proper one, and one which will be accepted by those who desire the well-being of the Indian, and I present it to the House in the confident expectation that it will be adopted.

Mr. GILLMOR moved, in amendment :

That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of amending the same, by providing that the voters' lists shall be prepared each year by the municipal officer or officers, who, under the law of each Province, is or are required to prepare the voters' lists for the election of members of the Legislative Assembly; and that in the Province of Prince Edward Island, where there are no voters' lists for the provincial elections, the voters' lists shall be prepared annually by the county court judge in which the electoral district is situate, and that every such officer shall, before entering upon his duties, take an oath of office before any judge of the Superior Court or Court of Record of the Province in which he is to act, in the form contained in the schedule to this Act, for such purpose, which he shall forthwith thereafter cause to be filed with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at Ottawa.

Mr. HOLTON moved in amendment:

That the Bill be referred back to the committee, for the purpose of amending the same, by providing that the county court judge, in each county where there is such judge, shall be the revising officer for the electoral district or districts, or parts of an electoral district, within such county, and in the Province of Quebec the Superior Court judge of the judicial district, in each electoral district or part of an electoral district, shall be the revising officer for such district or part of a district; and that in any case where a judge, who is a revising officer under the Act, shall be unable to discharge the duties of revising officer for his entire county, or for any part thereof, he shall forthwith signify such his inability to the Chief Justice of the highest court of his Province, and if his inability extends only to a part of his county, he shall specify particularly which part, and such Chief Justice shall thereupon forthwith appoint another county judge or a barrister of at least five years' standing as revising officer in the place of the judge so signifying his inability to act for the county or part of the county, as the case may be, and the person so appointed shall have all the powers conferred upon a county judge acting as a revising officer under this Act.

Mr. MILLS. I trust the hon. gentleman will accept this amendment. I think he expressed his intention to appoint county court judges as revising barristers. I understood him to say, since that announcement was made to the House, that he had communication with many of them, and that they have all expressed their willingness to serve.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not all, but many of them.

Mr. MILLS. I think, in a matter of this kind, it should be made a matter of duty, and not of choice, on the part of the judges, and it would remove a serious objection to the Bill if Parliament should indicate in it the party who is to be the revising officer. I think the hon. gentleman should accept the amendment. He says he is anxious to make the Bill perfect, and we have certainly made great efforts—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To destroy it?

Mr. MILLS. No; for the hon. gentlemen must admit that a great many important changes have been made to the Bill. Our efforts remind me of a story which is told of Bismarck.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Dispense.

Mr. MILLS. He said there was great difficulty in getting His Majesty to come to the ditch; but if he got there, he would have no difficulty in getting him to jump. We have had great difficulty in getting the hon. gentleman to consent to the appointment of county court judges, and now I think he should at least go as far as the amendment proposes.

Mr. FISHER. I believe, in the Province of Quebec, the people have been well satisfied with the manner in which the work has been done by the municipal officers. The voters' lists are prepared free of cost, and I believe the electors will feel it to be a grievance to have Government officials going through the country doing this work for pay. In that view, I move the following amendment:

That the said Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same, so that the voters' lists in the Province of Quebec may be prepared by the municipal officials, in the same manner as are now the voters' lists for the election of members of the Provincial Legislative Assembly of that Province.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. members on this side are perfectly right in moving these amendments. I know that several municipal councils in the Province of Quebec have passed resolutions for the same purposes, amongst others, the council of Beauharnois, who adopted, at their last meeting, the following resolutions, which I will read to the House:—

"MEETING OF THE 10TH JUNE, 1885.

"PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

"At a general sitting of the municipal council of the county of Beauharnois, held in the Market Hall, in the town and county of Beauharnois, Wednesday, the tenth day of the month of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, at one o'clock, p.m., according to the provisions of the municipal code of the Province of Quebec;

"Present: Jean Baptiste Myre, Esq., warden of the county; I idore Pilon, Esq., mayor of the parish of St. Timothée; Jean Baptiste Desgroselliers, Esq., mayor of the parish of St. Etienne; Henri Sauvé, Esq., mayor of the parish of St. Stanislas de Kostka; and Théophile Trudel, Esq., mayor of the parish of St. Clément; being a quorum of the municipal council of the county of Beauharnois; his honor the warden being president.

"The mayor of the parish of St. Timothée, seconded by the mayor of the parish of St. Stanislas de Kostka, moves:—

"That, whereas the mode followed heretofore for the drawing up and revision of the electoral lists gives more security than the mode proposed in the Franchise Bill now discussed in the House of Commons, under which a revising officer shall have the absolute control of that work;

"Whereas, the council in each municipality are the most competent authority for the drawing up of those lists and that by leaving that right with the municipalities, the Government or corporations will spare a great deal of money, it be resolved: that for those reasons, and many others, the said council are expressly opposed to the adoption of such a Bill; that the council declare, without hesitation, that they give, at the present moment, the true expression of the general dissatisfaction which exists in their division;

"That, in consequence, the council of the county of Beauharnois do protest energetically against the adoption of such a measure, and do respectfully pray the Parliament of Canada to not adopt it, especially the provisions tending to deprive the municipalities of the right to make up and revise the voters' lists;

"Finally, that the secretary-treasurer be authorised to send the member for this county, a copy of the present resolution, requesting him earnestly to oppose all measures contrary to those wishes.

"(Signed), J. BIE MYRE, Warden.

"(Signed), E. H. BISSON, Secretary-Treasurer.

"Certified a true extract from the Minutes Book.

Amendments made in Committee of the Whole read the first time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the said amendments be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I wish to ask the First Minister how he proposes to get a list of the Indian voters. I have pointed out to him, at different times, that they are not in the same position as other voters. The Bill provides that the revising officer shall take the assessment roll, and that where there is no assessment roll, as in Prince Edward Island, he shall take the last list of voters; but the Indians have no assessment roll and no last list of voters. The agent is not permitted to tell who are entitled to vote, and by what means is the list to be made up? It seems to me the First Minister ought to have given the matter some consideration. The Indians occupy an exceptional position altogether, and that is what led me to make the motion I did. But how are the Indian names to be got, and got fairly.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). What will prevent the agent giving the names?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The fact that an Indian is a red man does not prevent his going and having his name put on by himself or by his agent, just the same as a white man. The revising officer will go to a municipality and will hold his little court, and the Indians will themselves call personally or by an agent.

Mr. MILLS. How can an unenfranchised Indian appoint an agent? He has no legal capacity.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. FISHER. I spoke a few moments ago to the right hon. leader of the Government about a very slight amendment which I think is necessary in the 18th section of the Bill. It was arranged by that section that anyone objecting to a name on the list should notify the revising officer by a registered letter, and also that the person objecting must notify the person objected to; but it does not say by registered letter, and I simply propose that those words should be added. The right hon. gentleman, in conversation, a few minutes ago, said he was quite willing to accept this amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I mentioned to the hon. gentleman that as those words had been omitted by general consent they could be added at this stage.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS moved :

That the Bill be not now read the third, but that it be read the third time this day three months.

He said: I will make a very few observations on the motion which I have put into your hands. This is a very important measure, and one upon which there is a very wide difference of opinion between hon. gentlemen on that side and those on this side of the House. We regard the measure as less objectionable than it was when it was introduced, but we still think it is a very objectionable measure—one not in the public interest, one not calculated to secure a fair expression of opinion in the country, and one which gives to the Government of the day a power they ought not to possess. In my opinion, the Administration stand before the country as an interested party, precisely the same as do hon. gentlemen on this side of the House; and the policy of the law, hitherto, has been, not to put the preparation of the voters' lists into the hands of either the Ministers or their opponents, but to leave it in the hands of the electorate, those who are the masters of Parliament, with whom the supreme power is vested, and who are to decide by whom the government of the country shall be carried on. Now, this measure, it seems to me, violates that important principle, in putting into the hands of the Government, for the time being, the appointment of those parties by whom the lists are to be prepared. Besides that, there is a very wide departure from what hitherto has been the well recognised rule in introducing and carrying through Parliament an important measure of this kind, without first having had the opinion of the country expressed upon it. I have called the attention of the House, during the discussion of this Bill, to the rule which has been observed in England since the period of the Revolution in every case, with the single exception of the changing of a triennial into a septennial Parliament, which has been justified by those who were parties to it only on the ground that it was to prevent revolution—that it was to prevent conspiracies for bringing back the Stuart dynasty to the throne of England. Now, we have called the attention of the House to the fact that every change of the electorate is regarded, not as an ordinary act of legislation, but as a change of the constitution, and that the nation undertakes to protect itself against the improper conduct of a majority in Parliament for the time being, by requiring that there shall be an expression of the opinion of the country on the subject before it shall be dealt with. This was so in 1831, in the case of the Reform Bill; it was so in the case of Catholic emancipation; it was so in the case of the Bills of 1866 and 1867; it was so in the case of the abolition of Church and State in Ireland; and it was so in the case of the last election, when the proposal to confer the elective franchise on householders in rural districts was submitted to the country. Now, that has not been done in this case. Besides, ther,
