I now have the information with regard to the price of bait at Burgeo. I find that we do not have a bait depot at Burgeo, so the price referred to must be the price charged by a private firm.

Mr. Batten: With regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, would this particular firm be entitled to a rebate on the bait assistance?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): It is not a question of a rebate, it is a question of a grant which is earned in a period of 10 years if certain services, up to the standards set by the department, are provided by the firm concerned. This grant is not reflected directly in the price of the bait sold.

Mr. Peters: I, too, wanted to inquire about the progress in the control of the lamprey eel in the great lakes area. I was very interested in it. A few years ago, there was evidence that this lamprey eel was continuing to spread into other areas and that was the reason for my interest. Four or five years ago, I was told that the method for exterminating them was electric shock. Barriers had been established throughout the lake Superior area as well as lake Huron. Statements were made that there would be a much better method for destroying them shortly, but they were under control.

I notice there has been no increase in the amount of money authorized for this purpose. It would seem to me that $150,000 is not a large sum of money to be spent controlling a fish that has such a devastating effect. It spreads very rapidly. It eliminates all the fish with which it comes in contact. It seems to me that we should not wait for a year and a half in order to assess the situation. It seems to me that we should devote more money to getting rid of it now. It will be easier to do it now than it will be a couple of years from now.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I believe the hon. member may be labouring under a misunderstanding. The vote on which this discussion started is item 148 and it does not really apply to the destruction of lamprey. The money provided for that purpose is in item 150. It is a much greater amount than the $150,000 referred to. The chemical destruction of lamprey is being carried on at a high rate. Finances are not a limiting factor at the moment. All of the lampricide that can feasibly be used at the present time is being used this year in a very heavy program that is going on both in Canada and in the United States as far as the destruction of lamprey in the lakes are concerned, it is a total of $424,000. That is the Canadian share of this item making a total, with the United States share, of $1,300,000.

As I said earlier, it is a little bit too early to be definite about the success of this program but it looks to be very encouraging indeed. The electric barriers to which the hon. member referred are still being used but not primarily to control the lamprey. They are being used as a counting device to determine the success of the poisoning process used in the streams for the destruction of lamprey. Poisoning has a great advantage. When the eggs are laid in these streams, the larva takes about five years to develop before the young lamprey migrate back to the lakes. With the lampricide method you wipe out five-year stocks in one fell swoop whereas in the other method you can only control the mature lamprey or each year's crop of small lamprey coming down. This looks very encouraging. However, I think I should not say more at the moment.

Mr. Peters: I am appreciative of the statement the minister has made. Can he explain how the system is working out, how the bait is laid down or the process that is being used in relation to the spreading of this lampricide? What I am curious about is this. Does it leave any opportunity for co-operation and assistance of the municipalities which showed a great deal of interest in the control that originally was implemented through the electric barrier method?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): We are receiving co-operation from all levels of government as we require it. The program is going ahead well. It has not been inhibited in any way by any lack of co-operation on the part of anybody. As far as the problem of restoring the balance of fish life in the lakes is concerned I might say this. Concurrently new types of gear are being developed for the catching of smelts in the great lakes in greater volume than was possible by earlier methods.

Mr. Noble: I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether his department has used any influence on the great lakes fishery commission with respect to the suggestion I have made over the past couple of years, namely to do something about stopping these lamprey from coming in from the ocean. It seems to me that we are spending a great deal of money on lampricide year after year and that nothing has been done about the source of the infestation. I suggest that some sort of electrical barrier be put somewhere on the St. Lawrence river to stop these predators from getting into the great lakes system.

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I might say that the international great lakes fishery commission has examined all these possibilities. The problem now is, as it were, to control the predator on their front, the area to which they migrate farthest. There is such a great infestation in the lakes now that it would be locking the stable door after the steed has escaped. But this is something that is being closely watched. If we succeed in cleaning out the lakes we will, of course, have this problem raised by the hon. member for Grey North looked into.

Fisheries research board of Canada—

150. Operation and maintenance including an amount of $55,000 for contributions towards fisheries research and for scholarships, and authority to make recoverable advances of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the international great lakes fishery commission of the cost of work on lamprey control and lamprey research, $4,653,075.

Mr. Batten: I wonder whether the minister has any brief report to make with respect to research on the herring schools in the north Atlantic.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This work is carried on chiefly by the research board station in St. Andrews and in St. John's. I have not any concise report to make at the present time, but the work is being done along several levels with regard to this problem. The oceanographic level is being studied to determine the effect of water temperature change on the migration of herring. Considerable money has been spent and research done on the locating of herring schools in their migration. Then on a different level again work is being done in co-operation with the industry on better methods of the actual catching of herring. But I think the chief problem to which the hon. member refers is the difficulty, under certain circumstances, of locating bodies of herring, or finding where they are. We are still working on this problem. There are several approaches to it. The matter is not being neglected. We are also doing work at the present time on directing the migration of herring into certain areas by what are known as air bubble curtains. This has to do with the actual catching of herring. It is a method that has been developed in the United States. We have full information on what has been done there and further research is being done in this country.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

152. Departmental administration, $1,090,452.

The Chairman: This item will be found on page 31 of the blue book, the details on page 225.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the committee in advance for the indulgence that they will apply, I am sure, to the new minister and to the new department. I appreciate very much the many courtesies which have been extended to me since I entered this house last autumn.

It is a unique privilege to be charged with the responsibility for presenting, for the first time, estimates for the newly established Department of Forestry. Hon. members will be familiar with the report of the committee on mines, forests and waters which was tabled in July, 1959, and which reflected a truly remarkable study of the significance of forestry in the national economy.

Recommendations of that committee, hon. members will remember, were implemented by the government with promptness, and it is remarkable that the bill establishing the new department was adopted by this house without a single dissenting vote. It seems to me that this unanimity is a most important fact which should never be forgotten because it demonstrates the recognition by all hon. members, regardless of party, of the importance of the forest resource to the present and future well-being of all Canadian citizens.

Before proceeding with a discussion of the estimates of the department, I should like to recall, and to associate myself with, a statement made by the Prime Minister when he introduced the Department of Forestry bill, to the effect that the establishment of the new department would in no way affect the rights of the provinces to administer their publicly owned forests as they saw fit. This important principle is being scrupulously recognized in all operations of the new department.

The Department of Forestry was created by transfer of staffs of the forestry branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the forest biology division of the research branch of the Department of Agriculture. In this way it has acquired, at the beginning, experienced and highly trained personnel, the larger number of whom are engaged in research relating to forest management or to the utilization of forest products. Through the closer association thus provided, the research work conducted by the government concerning the whole field of forestry will be more easily co-ordinated and consequently more effective. Although recruiting of staff for certain units is still in process, the structure of the new department has been fully planned, and it is my hope that all the presently vacant posts will soon be filled.

The branch directors were formerly heads of divisions in their respective departments and are men of demonstrated ability and lengthy experience in the government service. Most of the new positions are being filled through competitions within the civil service, although a few appointments from outside the service may be necessary.

The department consists of an administration branch, three research branches, and an economics division which reports directly to the deputy minister. Its objectives are to promote, by means appropriate to this government, improved management and protection of the forest resources of Canada, more effective utilization of wood including reduction of avoidable waste, and improvement of the competitive position of Canada's forest industries.

These objectives will be attained chiefly through the performance of the following functions. First and foremost there will be a continuance and expansion of comprehensive programs of research relating to forestry and to the use of the products of the forest. Economic studies of the forest resource and the industries depending upon it, and co-operation with the Department of Trade and Commerce in matters relating to the improvement of external trade in forest products, will receive special attention. Additional efforts will be made to inform the public regarding the importance of our forests and forest industries, and to encourage public interest in their welfare.

The estimates before the committee provide for continuation of financial assistance to the provinces which is extended to help them expedite their own activities in specified fields of forest management. In addition, the Department of Forestry will provide forest surveys and technical advice and assistance to other agencies of the federal government which are responsible for the administration of forest lands. Finally, this department is responsible for co-operation with international organizations concerned with forestry and in which Canada maintains membership.

Estimates for the Department of Forestry for the fiscal year 1961-62 provide for a total amount of $15½ million, representing an increase of $4½ million over the amounts provided for the former forestry branch and the former forest biology division for the fiscal year 1960-61.

However, it seems proper to point out that most of this increase is attributable to an item of $4,170,000 for financial assistance to the provinces in the construction of forest access roads. The increase also includes certain amounts which would have been requested on behalf of the former organizations had they remained in their previous departments. The increase directly attributable to the establishment of the new department amounts to a little more than half a million dollars and provides for necessary administrative staff and moderate expansion of certain activities, chiefly in the fields of forest economics and public information.

Mr. Chairman, I now propose to describe briefly the fields of activity of the major units of the department. The administration branch is responsible for all purely administrative matters, including personnel, purchasing, financial services, and property and building management. In addition, it includes units concerned with information and technical services, administration of federal-provincial agreements, and the provision of forest management services to other agencies of government.

Briefly, this branch is responsible for most of the non-research functions of the department. It provides administrative services to the head office of the department and to the three research branches. This arrangement has been adopted in an effort to relieve the directors of the research branches of as much purely administrative detail as may be possible, and to allow them to concentrate their attention on their heavy and complex responsibilities in the direction of research programs which are of great importance to our economic future.

Estimates for this branch are included in vote 152 under the heading "Departmental administration", which also includes provision for the offices of the minister and deputy minister. The total amount requested for the current fiscal year is approximately $1.1 million, which includes an increase of $520,549 compared with similar services provided by the parent departments during the previous fiscal year. Relatively small numbers of administrative personnel were available in the units transferred from the parent departments, and it has been necessary to provide for a reasonable expansion of administrative staff in order to enable the new department to function independently.

Votes 153 to 155 provide a total of $6.8 million to cover the federal responsibilities under agreements with the provinces, whereby financial assistance is given for the continuation of forest inventories, reforestation, acquisition of equipment and other capital assets for forest fire protection and the construction of forest access roads. This represents an increase of $3½ million as compared to the previous year.

[Mr. Flemming (Royal).]

Hon. members will note that an item of $500,000, which was provided to cover Canada's share of the cost of combating the spruce budworm in New Brunswick, does not appear in the main estimates for 1961-62. It was hoped that the outbreak of this scourge was dying out to a point where spraying programs would not longer be necessary. Unfortunately this hope was not realized, and surveys of budworm population last autumn made it necessary to ask for authority to make a further contribution to this activity through supplementary estimates.

The forest research branch is responsible for investigations in all aspects of forestry, excepting forest entomology and forest pathology. Its fields of study include silviculture, ecology, tree physiology, forest mensuration, tree breeding, forest fire protection, and forest survey methods. It maintains seven district offices, and five forest experiment stations. A forest research laboratory is maintained at the Petawawa forest experimental station, and additional laboratory facilities are being developed at other locations. Appropriations for this branch, under votes 156 and 157, total $2.3 million, an increase of $260,000 as compared with the previous year.

The forest entomology and pathology branch conducts research and forest insect and disease surveys throughout Canada, and provides technical advisory services related to insect and disease programs to the provinces, the forest industries, private owners, and other agencies concerned with forest woodlots and shade trees. Eleven regional laboratories and numerous field stations are maintained in suitable locations. The chemical control section is established in Ottawa. Estimates for this branch, under votes 158 and 159, total just over $4 million, representing an increase of nearly $653,000 as compared with the previous year. I should point out, however, that some $264,000 of this increase is being requested in connection with the continuation of a building program previously approved when this organization was in the Department of Agriculture, and a considerable part of the remainder arises from provisions for replacing certain services formerly provided by the department. Hon. members will be glad to know that arrangements are being made with the Department of Agriculture whereby the forest entomology and pathology branch will continue to enjoy the services of several research institutes of the Department of Agriculture which are essential to its work. Thus unnecessary duplications will be avoided.

The forest products research branch maintains forest products laboratories at Ottawa and Vancouver. It is responsible for all aspects of research relating to improved utilization of the products of the forest, except research relating to paper pulp and paper, which is conducted by the pulp and paper research institute of Canada. It studies include problems relating to timber mechanics and engineering, plywood, wood preservation, wood chemistry and physics, paints and other coatings, design of containers and improvement of saw milling techniques. Special efforts are made to discover means for the reduction of unnecessary wastage of material. A liaison service is being developed to take the results of research to the operators of smaller saw mills and woodworking plants, and to keep the laboratories informed of their problems. This branch is represented on many governmental and non-governmental committees and provides technical advice to government agencies such as the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the building research division of the national research council, and the Canadian Standards Association. Appropriations for this branch, under votes 160 and 161, total nearly $1.2 million, an increase of $135,595 over the previous year.

The economics division will advise the department regarding economic implications of present and proposed policies; keep the economic position of Canada's forest industries under continual review; keep in touch with forestry and industrial developments in other countries, and conduct economic studies of production in Canada. It will co-operate closely with the Department of Trade and Commerce and with international forestry organizations.

The research programs undertaken by all units of the department are established in consultation with the provinces, the forest industries, the university forest schools, and other interested bodies. An endeavour is made to insure that research programs will make the maximum contribution which the facilities available to the department permit to the improvement of forest management and the use of wood throughout Canada. Various committees are established for this purpose and great care is taken to avoid undesirable duplication of work. Numerous projects are carried on in direct co-operation with outside agencies, and I hope that means will be found for taking fuller advantage of the research potentialities of our university forest schools.

In the final analysis, new knowledge gained through research will be a major contribution to Canadian forestry and is essential to progress. The new knowledge obtained by my department is made available to provincial forest administrators and to our forest based industries, and it is their function to put that knowledge to practical use. The best available estimates of future expansion of world markets for wood suggest that there will be ever-increasing demands for the products of our forests if these products can be made available at acceptable cost. The need for producing useful results from research as rapidly as possible is, therefore, urgent.

In conclusion of these remarks I should like to say to the committee that I have no reason to be anything but optimistic concerning the future of the forest products industry. I am sure all members will agree that this is a subject in which every province of Canada has a tremendous interest. In connection with our activities, I seek from all members, regardless of where they may be sitting in this committee, the utmost in co-operation so that we may bring to our forest resources the progress and the advance of which I think they are capable.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks, I would be remiss in failing to congratulate the minister not only on his appointment to the new Department of Forestry, but also on the presentation of his first estimates.

As the minister mentioned, I think it is useful, in analysing the policy of the new department, to refer to the recommendations of the committee on mines, forests and waters. In a report tabled in the house on July 4, 1959 the committee recommended:

> Your committee strongly recommends consideration of steps which would widen the scope of the forestry branch, increasing its status in such a way that a deputy minister would be in direct charge. The fact that such a status, comparable to that of a department does not exist now reflects a lack of appreciation of the importance of the forest industries to Canada, in the past, now, and in the future. Other departments of government are considered essential to serve industries or aspects of our national economy which are of much lesser economic consequence.

Then, on page 668 of the Journals of the house, we find this recommendation:

> Your committee recommends that the entomological and plant pathology research relating to trees and forests, now under the Department of Agriculture, be transferred to and co-ordinated directly with the recommended and expanded forestry department.

And now, Mr. Chairman, referring to page 669 of the report of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, and particularly to paragraph 70, here is what we find:

Your committee feels that Canada cannot afford to ignore a potential so great for lumber and pulp sales as is offered in the Orient and, therefore, it recommends that these markets be approached on an open-minded basis. Study should be made of our changing share of traditional markets in the U.K. and the U.S.A. A marketing section should be created within the proposed department of forestry to aid the Department of Trade and Commerce in the merchandising of our wood products.

We can say that the first recommendation has been followed, but we do not think that the mere fact of setting up the department is enough to give adequate recognition to the importance of the forestry industry.

The second suggestion has also been adopted. With regard to the third, however, the department in the past year has added absolutely nothing to what was done previously, and apparently has totally ignored the recommendation of the committee as well as the great potential markets offered in the Orient.

We are of the opinion that the department should not only co-ordinate certain activities of departments like agriculture and northern affairs and national resources, but that, in addition to research, it should set up, as suggested, a marketing service within the department.

Such a service could assist the Department of Trade and Commerce in the marketing of our wood products.

Mr. Chairman, everybody recognizes the importance of the forest industry to Canada. It could not be otherwise considering that 68 per cent of the land area of the ten provinces consists of forest land. In this regard, it must be kept in mind that this is almost four times as great as the area devoted to agriculture. Here is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated on June 28, 1960, as reported on page 5485 of Hansard:

I think I might commence by placing before the committee in summary form a few pertinent facts regarding the importance of the forest industry to Canada. More than 40 per cent of the land area of the 10 provinces consists of productive forest land. This area, by way of comparison, is almost four times as great as the area devoted to agriculture, which in capsule form reveals the extent of our forest resources. The pulp and paper industry is Canada's largest manufacturing industry; the lumber industry still stands high on the list. These industries are distributed throughout the country from coast to coast, and in addition to producing products of great value they are among the major sources of employment. External trade in wood, wood products and paper yields a balance in Canada's favour far larger than that contributed by any of the other major commodity groups recognized in national statistics form. Furthermore, a very large proportion of that favourable balance becomes available in United States funds.

[Mr. Racine.]

Further on, the Prime Minister had this to say:

I might point out that in September, 1959, the food and agriculture organization brought out a report dealing with paper and paper products which stated in summary form that while world demand for paper and paper products in 1955 amounted to 56 million metric tons, in 1965 it will amount to 88 million metric tons and by 1975 to 134 million metric tons.

If Canada presently supplies 16 per cent of the world market, I feel it is appropriate that we should intensify research work so as to meet the demand, but it is also very important that the forestry department ensures that we keep that market, and that is where a marketing service would be just as useful within the department as a research service.

We do not wish to minimize the importance of the pulp and paper industry, but we feel that the lumber and related industries are also quite important; yet, to our knowledge, the new department has not done much in that respect.

The department should not just administer the division it has inherited from the Department of Agriculture, that is the forest biology division, because it was not of great consequence within that department. Research in the field of forest biology should be stepped up. And the same remark applies to the former division of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Avila Bedard, the former Quebec deputy minister of land and forests, reports that the following was written at the beginning of the eighteenth century by Intendant Dupuy:

Wood should be considered as the resource of Canada which will replace fur-trading. Wheat and wood, he added, will be the two great trading products of the country. It is therefore one resource substituted to another by Providence and there should be use and not abuse of it.

Times have changed since the eighteenth century when forests were burned by settlers clearing land. Today the emphasis is on conservation.

We know from history also that forest depletion was mainly the result of forest fires, insects and fungi, as well as of the normal action of nature's forces.

Nowadays, thanks to scientific developments, such plagues can be curbed.

Mr. Bedard also reports that in 1886 a German, Otto Hann, foresaw all the possibilities. He wrote:

It occurs to me that Canada will know how to make use of its vast forest resources for making paper to satisfy not only its continental, but also its international needs.

We have since covered a good deal of ground to arrive at a radical change. Things have changed greatly from the economic point of view since the beginning of the colony. How right was the man who wrote that, for our country has now become the first exporter of this commodity.

The paper industry ranks first among our great manufacturing industries.

The two earliest censuses, those of 1850-51 and of 1860-61, indicate that there were then five or six paper mills in the province of Quebec.

Both parts of Canada had at that time 16 paper mills whose production had a value of $372,000.

The Canada Year Book reveals that, in 1957, our exports reached $715,490,000, and it is expected our production should double within about 15 years.

Lumber and other forest products are also of great importance in that industry.

Mr. Marie Albert Bourget, in a book entitled La Forêt, one of a collection on our environment, points out that local needs, as well as the needs, even limited, of the mother country, could not but make for the early establishment of saw mills.

And he mentions that as early as 1668, Mr. Hazeur established two saw mills at La Malbaie and that about 50 years later, in 1720, the country had about 28 such mills and that in 1732, 10 new constructions showed that it was possible to find a source of wealth there.

Here again, we have come a long way: the figures for 1957 show that the export value of boards and beams amounted to $281,681,000.

From an economic point of view, forest products continue to make a most important contribution toward a reduction of our trade deficits.

On the domestic level, the forest industry paid salaries and wages amounting to $1,117 million in 1958.

The same year, forest operations gave jobs to 67,327 people, and those figures have been compiled on a man-year basis and exclude men engaged in transportation activities.

If we consider that the pulp and paper industry gave employment to 64,084 people, the lumber industry to 47,763, the wood products industry to 73,159, and the paper products industry to 28,851, we can appreciate the economic contribution of that important market.

That source of employment and wealth we have in our forests has a great social value for our country.

Our forest resources must be used to meet the needs of our population, and with its welfare in mind and it is up to this new department to co-operate closely with the provinces and the various research and conservation organizations, so as to set up an economic and social policy and search for the most efficient formulas to reach that end.

The solution depends in the first place on the kind of resources to be developed.

Now, here in this country, there are no problems as far as that is concerned, providing there is reforestation and intelligent development.

From the point of view of conservation and reforestation, we have in Canada an organization concerned with action in the field of forestry and whose objective it is to obtain public co-operation in the wise use of our renewable resources.

I am thinking of the Canadian Forestry Association, which was founded about the year 1900, under the patronage of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and which organized the first conference on conservation.

In 1959, it became a federation of provincial forestry associations. It has to its credit the organization of three national conferences on resources, in 1906, 1954 and 1958.

That organization comprises the following groups throughout Canada: Canadian Forestry Association of B.C.; L'Association Forestière du Québec with its ten regional groups; Ontario Forestry Association; Manitoba Forestry Association; Alberta Forestry Association; Saskatchewan Forestry Association; Canadian Forestry Association of New Brunswick; Canadian Forestry Association of Nova Scotia.

The association has a membership of 35,000 adults and 18,500 young people. Since their registration, the junior forest wardens have brought in 39,500 boys and the Quebec 4-H clubs 56,000 boys and girls.

These youth organizations have many activities, including fire warden clubs, summer camps, annual contests, forestry schools, conservation, etc.

Among the public at large, the association has been a great protector of the forest through its educational activities, using various media such as the press, radio broadcasts, movies and the distribution of literature.

In addition, forest fire prevention campaigns are organized each year.

Since 1954, tree farms have been included in the program, and so far, the association had to its credit, as of December 31, 1960, 820 such farms with a total area of 515,000 privately owned acres.

To this well-rounded program, the Canadian Forestry Association has added studies on sylviculture and reforestation.

This is a very brief summary of the work done by the federation of provincial forestry associations, whose sole purpose is to educate the people on the problems of forestry, which it considers as crucial.

We now have in Ottawa a forestry department. It was set up with a great flourish of publicity, but perhaps it is important to raise the matter of the co-operation it can offer to the members of the federation, to find out whether it is just a ghost department or whether it really intends to do something worthwhile.

In March of this year, a brief was submitted to the minister, specifically requesting an increase in the $20,000 subsidy now being granted by the department.

When you look at the efforts put forth and the results obtained by the federation, it seems to me that this request for $100,000 was reasonable. However, it apparently did not get the consideration it deserved from the new department or indeed from the minister who, I must admit, has great experience in this field. It is not that the federation did not have a good case, but the government seems hard to convince. I would not like to accuse the minister of refusing to raise this subsidy because he saw no political advantage in such a course, though I must say this is a specialty of the government.

However, here are the arguments put forward when this brief was submitted, and I think they are most realistic and convincing. It is stated in the first place, and I quote:

(Text):

1. Investing in the associations is much cheaper for the government than trying to do his job itself.
2. The job of conservation education we are doing is a "long term preventive unemployment medicine", as Canada's future hangs on the wise use of resources.
3. C.F.A. can tell the public about the activities and the importance of the Department of Forestry in a way this latter could not; so, the value of C.F.A. for the public relations of the Department of Forestry could be very high.
4. The Department of Forestry Act states that public education is a right and proper field for the new department to engage in.
5. The expansion of the access roads in the forest requires parallel education of travelling public.
6. Forest protection against fire starts with prevention and prevention is a matter of information and education.
7. Boy scouts are receiving an annual grant from the federal government; so are the agricultural youth clubs. Forestry youth clubs, which are—not to say more—as active as the others, have never been helped.
8. All meetings dealing with natural resources and forestry, and it will certainly be the same with the resources for tomorrow conference, recommend more public information and education regarding the conservation of the forests; it is exactly the work of C.F.A.
9. By providing a nationally integrated conservation program, the federation of provincial forestry associations presents a ready-forged medium of communication which, we feel, deserves the fullest support from government at all levels.

(Translation):

It seems to me that the arguments put forward were rather convincing, but the minister took no heed of them to date.

It is indeed to the credit of the government to have set up this department, but, up to now, it has accomplished nothing more than was done before by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

The Canadian Forestry Association pointed out to the minister that its request was based on clause VI of Bill C-82 of the Forestry Department Act, and stated moreover, that it had the support of all ministers of lands and forests in the eight provinces which have forestry associations.

Moreover, the provinces were willing to remit the amount due to each association, through their departments of lands and forests, or directly through the national federation.

In the case of the required amount, which was $100,000—of which $25,000 were for the federation itself, while the balance was equal to the amount now subscribed by provincial governments for their provincial forestry associations—the federal government would only have contributed on a 50-50 basis in that field, as it does in many others.

We know that the present federal grant to the federation is $20,000. Of course, with the creation of the new forestry department the federation expected a more generous contribution from the federal government for such important education work with regard to our natural and forest resources. It was an excellent opportunity for the new minister, when speaking, on March 10, at the annual assembly, to show that his department had not been set up solely in order to give a post to a former premier who had been defeated in his own province but who had moreover, as a Conservative feather in his cap, the advantage of having moved the choice of the present Prime Minister rather than the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice at the Conservative convention in Ottawa.

This department, like all others, seems to have fallen asleep and to care but little about what is happening.

I do not want to be unfair to the minister who has the personal ability to do much more and the necessary knowledge to do well in his department, which, however, seems to have been steeped in the same uneasiness as all departments under this government.

This niggardly refusal to accede to the request of the only Canadian association concerned with forest conservation in Canada is an additional proof of this government's anarchy.

As I said, the minister has all my admiration.

Mr. Broome: Will the hon. member permit a question? In his summation of the request of the Canadian Forestry Association, will he make quite clear the contribution now being made by the provinces which, incidentally, are the only recipients of revenue from this natural resource while at the same time they contribute only 15 per cent of the total amount required to run this association?

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of discussing the contributions made by each of Canada's ten provinces.

I am sure that my hon. friend is more interested in what the government of British Columbia is doing in this respect. It may be that that province contributes only 15 per cent.

As I was saying, I personally trust the minister. However one thing I should like to say is that the Prime Minister should consider him as qualified as we do on this side of the house, and that he should not be used any more as a mere messenger between Ottawa and New Brunswick, and as a propagandist for the government.

This department was organized with a view to co-ordinating research work to promote production and forest resources conservation in Canada; unfortunately, we find that nothing has been done to that effect, that all that used to be done previously—and not only would it be advisable but it would even be more important that the government should do away with the routine followed by certain sectors of the departments of northern affairs and of agriculture, and that a real desire to look after our forests be shown.

In addition to marketing, as I said in my opening remarks and as the committee suggested, the department should be aware that it can do much more. It should be recognized that the training of people in forestry should be positive and well controlled. Methods should vary as between cities and rural areas, and as between lumbermen and industry.

We on this side of the house are often accused of criticizing and not making any suggestions. By contrast to that and as we usually do, I should like to draw the minister's attention to certain suggestions which could be given greater consideration by his department. Most of the suggestions I wish to make could be considered and applied in co-operation with the provinces, because I am one of many who still believe that the rights of the provinces concerning forestry must come first.

Everyone knows that the provinces own almost all of our forest resources in Canada, and so they must remain the only administrators of those riches. It is with pleasure that I heard the minister restate that policy again today. However, what I have to suggest could be realized on the basis of co-operation as in the case of access roads because never, never, and on that I perfectly agree with the minister, should this department open the door to interference with purely provincial matters.

I feel that there is nothing wrong with the promotion of continued co-operation between federal and provincial governments and a recent Ottawa meeting of the ministers of forestry of Ontario, New Brunswick and Quebec shows that they are ready to co-operate. The minister himself having given us an indication to that effect, I believe that we have there proof of a real desire to co-operate without the slightest infringement upon the rights of the provinces.

Here are a few suggestions which the Department of Forestry might consider and thus help all the provinces.

First of all, it could help increase real model forests across the country like they have in the United States.

Second, it could co-operate with experimental farms where there is already a wood lot in order that it be developed and used as an outdoor laboratory. I refer especially to the Lennoxville experimental farm near Sherbrooke.

Third, it should increase research on the use of our hard woods.

Fourth, it should increase research on the use of our soft woods.

I was very pleased indeed this week to receive a pamphlet from the Department of Forestry, entitled "Properties and utilization of Canadian poplars". I might tell you, Mr. Chairman, that it is a most interesting pamphlet and I wish to commend the officials who prepared it. If I may be allowed to express a wish—may it be distributed all over Canada and also be sent to different manufacturers.

Fifth, the department could increase its grants to forestry associations, as requested by the Canadian Forestry Association.

Sixth, the department could give more help in order to promote reforestation of waste lands. A bill along this line has been introduced in the house by the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder why this question of reforestation has not been left to the Department of Forestry instead of being handled by the Department of Agriculture.

Seventh, the department could help in setting up and maintaining nurseries.

Eighth, the department could set up an exhibition of forestry products from every province, and send it all over Canada and abroad. On this point, I should like to quote the following article which was published in the 1961 issue of the magazine entitled Timber:

(Text):

Early in January, 1962, while Canada slumbers under a blanket of snow, a Canadian "army" will move eastward to West Africa, where snow and frost are unknown to most of the inhabitants. Although sponsored by the Canadian government, this army will go in peace. The soldiers are Canadian manufacturers and merchants, their ammunition consisting of nothing other than a briefcase containing advertising material describing the products they wish to sell. Their aim is to sell the Africans only such goods as will foster their development and aid their economic progress.

(Translation):

The department should bear the cost of the exhibition and organize an increasingly greater number of events in different countries, in order to promote and expand our exports of forest products. Our domestic trade should also be promoted by familiarizing Canadians with products made in Canada.

It could also—and this is my ninth suggestion—patronize a special fire prevention week each year in co-operation with the provinces.

Tenth, it could also immediately increase grants to the provinces, so that the forestry inventory can be drawn up as soon as possible. Knowing exactly what the resources and the industrial potential of our forests are, the opportunities in both fields could be determined. I know that the Department of Forestry is co-operating in the inventory of provincial forests, and I wonder if it would not be appropriate to increase these grants.

Eleventh, it could promote reforestation and development by setting up long term forestry credit facilities. I believe that this suggestion is by far the most important, for it would prompt many farmers operating on marginal lands to undertake reforestation and the development on those lands.

Twelfth, the department should study the qualities of some varieties of trees which are not being used at present, so as to give the industries now using hardwood a chance of maintaining their operations with varieties which have been left aside, for it appears that hardwood lots are being depleted.

Many other suggestions could be made, but I believe it would be a step forward if the department would take under immediate consideration those I have just mentioned.

However, as I say, in order not to be misunderstood, these steps should be applied so as not to encroach upon the rights of the provinces who have exclusive jurisdiction in the administration of their own forests. I see that the minister is smiling; he understands why I stress co-operation between his department and the provinces. He knows I want no interference in provincial jurisdiction. If it has been possible to co-operate in the access roads program, then I believe a similar procedure could be followed to apply the recommendations I have just made.

In the May 1961 issue of the magazine Timber, reference is made to a speech given by the Minister of Forestry on the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of the Canadian Forestry Association. I should like to quote part of the article which is entitled:

(Text):

Flemming addresses C.F.A. annual meeting.

(Translation):

And the article reports, among other things, the following words of the minister:

(Text):

1. Continue and increase the current programs of research relating to forestry and the utilization of forest products.

2. Maintain and increase the information branch of the forestry department.

3. Provide economic studies of forest resources and forest industries.

4. Aid provincial agencies, or individuals, in specific forestry programs.

5. Provide forest surveys, technical advice and other assistance to any federal agency dealing with forest lands.

6. Co-operate with international organizations (such as U.N. agencies) concerned with forestry, and in which Canada has membership.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, it is strange to find these words being repeated so often—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

(Text):

I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to allow the hon. member to carry on with his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, would the committee agree to have the hon. member for Beauce—

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for its patience and I will try to conclude as briefly as possible.

As I was saying, it is strange indeed to come so often across the words "continue" and "maintain". The forestry department has not been set up, I believe, solely to maintain without any change what already existed in the Departments of Agriculture and Northern Affairs and National Resources, because we should then be justified in saying that if that were the intention of the minister —I do not think it was—the new department was unnecessary.

The booklet entitled "Canadian Forestry Statistics", and more particularly table 16 on page 18, provides the following indications. I quote the figures on exports of wood products.

1955	386,297,929
1956	328,098,874
1957	282,690,031
1959	323,716,841

The average for the three years from 1954 to 1956 inclusive is $347 million, while that for the years 1957 to 1959 inclusive is $300 million, that is, an annual decrease of $47 million. That is why I believe the setting up of a sales service in the department is most important.

The forest industry itself is doing everything possible. The magazine also pointed out the various continuing steps taken by industry in this regard, and I quote the article:

(Text):

New Canadian hardwood grade for the U.K. market

Strenuous efforts are being made to boost shipments of Canadian hardwoods to Britain this year and to build up a larger future trade more comparable with pre-war business. First shots in this campaign were fired last year when the Canadian lumber trade mission visited the U.K., and now there has been a follow-up by a visit from two hardwood specialists—Mr. Robert Staniforth, director and general manager of Staniforth Lumber and Veneer, Ltd., and a director of the C.L.A.; and Mr. Jack Barrier, chief inspector for the N.H.L.A.

They have made a brief springtime visit to Britain with the aim of selling the U.K. trade on a new utility grade of Canadian hardwoods for the furniture and pallet industries at economic prices. The Canadian shipment of 750,000 cu. ft. of hardwoods last year to Britain is not enough—they want to get back to the figure of 1940—6,600,000 cu. ft.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether we should not see there another indication of the usefulness and the contribution of the Department of Forestry particularly through support to our trade commissioners promoting a Canadian product everywhere in the world. It seems to me that the statistics are self-explanatory and that they show the urgency of the problem.

As for the situation of supply, I quote page 203 of the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. It reads:

Does Canada possess the forests capable of meeting the projected increases in output of wood products? The requirements of wood to meet the various projected productions of forest products have been estimated for us.

Based on these estimates, to meet the 1980 requirements of the wood-using industries, the annual cut of wood will have to be 58 per cent larger than it was in 1954. These estimates include sizeable allowance for increased use of mill leftovers—waste material—in the production of pulp and paper. We are told that at the projected level of lumber, plywood and veneer output, as much as 6 million to 8 million cords of usable material would result as waste.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the supply situation must be correlated with the possibilities of sales and exports, if stability is to be maintained in that most important industry. To verify that point let us refer once again to the report on Canada's economic prospects, particularly page 193 in connection with only one section of that industry. I quote:

We shall begin with the lumber or saw mill industry, one of Canada's oldest manufacturing operations but still one of its largest. In output, sawmilling still ranks within the leading ten manufacturing industries; in employment it rivals the pulp and paper industry. It is an industry made up of more than 8,000 mills, many of which are very small, but some of which are extremely large.

Research within the department must not only be maintained but accelerated, and the central government, through this new department, should accelerate research and offer its co-operation to the provinces, while respecting their sovereign rights, in order that an inventory be made and that the development of our forests and protection against forest fires, insect, cryptogamic disease be carried out; that reforestation methods to increase output be discovered; that better utilization of forest products be achieved and that a study of market requirements be made to find ways of selling the products; that the system of forest concessions which is too uncertain at present and therefore paralyses the progress of forestry be stabilized; that the financial structure of our industry be adjusted; that research be made into forest economics, technology and science; and finally that higher specialized education in forestry be developed to give the government the administrators it needs, and to provide industry with good technicians to help it maintain its position.

I would not want my remarks to be misinterpreted; neither would I want to minimize the work carried out by departmental officials. But I condemn the government for its lack of action. It seems to me that since it was established, the department has not accomplished what the forest industry had the right to expect.

I have here a pamphlet issued by the laboratories of Canadian forest products entitled:

(Text):

Comparison of taper sawing and through-and-through sawing.

(Translation):

This document is most interesting and important for every saw mill in our country and it is well made, because it might help small saw mills which cannot afford to retain the services of experts. I should like the department to tell us how many of those pamphlets were distributed and whether they are available in both official languages.

On the other hand, I have here three other pamphlets published by the laboratory. The first one is entitled:

(Text):

Some effects of Mill type on the sawing of small logs.

The second one is called:

(Text):

Strengthening ring-connectored timbers with steel strapping.

(Translation):

And the third one:

(Text):

Wear, play and heat distortion in veneer lathes.

(Translation):

Those pamphlets are most interesting and the department is to be commended for having re-issued them. I hope they were distributed in all provinces.

[Mr. Racine.]

I hope the Prime Minister will have as much confidence in the Minister of Forestry as we have, and that he will provide him and his officials, whom I want to congratulate, with the means to accomplish things that will show that the head of the government had good grounds for creating the new department, which has not been proved so far.

Private enterprise deserves also our congratulations, as well as the different forestry organizations for their unfailing co-operation.

Briefly, I want not only to congratulate the minister for what he has done in the past, but to ask him to do much more in the future.

Moreover, I trust that all the hopes raised by his appointment will be fulfilled, and that those who have entertained such hopes will soon have clear evidence of the capital importance he wants to give to the question of our forests.

(Text):

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order and, I think, privilege. It was our understanding, following the statement made by the house leader, that on Saturday we would spend the hour between five and six o'clock on private and public bills, to recover time that had been lost previously. We have not spent this hour on those matters.

I also understand it was suggested by the house leader that if we did not do that, we would adjourn at five o'clock. I rise on a point of order because it was our understanding that between five and six o'clock on Saturday private and public bills would be dealt with, and that procedure has not been followed.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is inaccurate in his statement. I threw out the suggestion the other night that on Thursday between five and six o'clock, or alternatively on Friday between five and six o'clock, we might deal with private and public bills.

Mr. Winch: On Saturday.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, on Thursday or Saturday. This was to be in exchange for the hour missed on Tuesday.

Mr. Winch: Was it agreed to by all parties?

Mr. Churchill: It was not agreed to by all parties. The second suggestion that I threw out was that if we finished justice, fisheries and forestry early today, I would be quite prepared to move the adjournment of the house. I thought perhaps hon. members would finish by 4.30. However, that has not happened, so we are continuing.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have had so many phone calls lately and committee meetings—

Mr. Brunsden: And letters.

Mr. Herridge: —and correspondence—

Mr. Brunsden: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: —and visitors—

Mr. Brunsden: Yes.

Mr. Herridge: —that I have had very little time to do much reading or get together a few notes in anticipation of the estimates of this important department. However, I do want to say that the members of this group, naturally, having urged the necessity and the need for a Department of Forestry for many years, are very pleased that this department has been formed. In forming this department the government has recognized the importance of the management of our forests, the needs of the industry so far as the department is concerned and, on that account, the necessity for a department whose sole responsibility is to devote its attention to these matters.

Before proceeding I wish to compliment the minister on his appointment as the first Minister of Forestry for Canada. I wish him every success in all he undertakes with respect to the activities of his department. I think it will provide a great opportunity for plenty of work because there are a great many things which require to be done and which have not been done in the past. The minister will have an opportunity to do these things because of the establishment of this department, provided, Mr. Chairman, that in the years to come we see the estimate for the Department of Forestry is considerably greater than $15,464,427. I do not think it would be fair, possibly, on the first estimates of this department to expect too much, but when we consider the importance of the forest industry to the economy of Canada I think it is quite right for hon. members of this house to expect to see that importance recognized in the years ahead by a greatly increased estimate for this department.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, I am going to speak quite briefly on this subject. The forests of our country, their management and the forest industry are very seriously affected by the policies of both federal and provincial governments. It is one of those spheres where there is a great deal of overlapping in a number of aspects. Therefore the first essential, if this department is going to be a success and if the management of our forests is going to be along the proper lines and our industry is going to prosper, is that there should be co-operation between federal and provincial governments to this end. I do urge that every effort be made on the part of the minister to promote this co-operation, particularly in view of the opportunities provided him as minister of this new department.

I think a second essential is a national policy for the conservation, development and utilization of our renewable natural resources, of which the forest resources are a very major portion. I trust that as a result of the resources for tomorrow conference we will see a step forward in that direction. For years we have urged as a second necessity the need for a national policy to this end. If the department has the funds, if we have the required federal-provincial co-operation, and if we have agreement on principles and policies with respect to the conservation, utilization and development of our natural resources, we are on the right road to steer a steady and permanent course for the greater development of this industry.

I listened with interest to the minister's speech, which naturally on this occasion dealt with the organization of his department. I was glad the minister informed the committee of this organization and certain aspects of it. The minister told us that the heads of branches in this department are, as we anticipated, experienced personnel who have had service in this field. The minister also said that the recruits to the department would be obtained through civil service examinations, and so on.

Then the minister mentioned a matter that is interesting to me. I refer to the co-ordination within the department, particularly with regard to the various branches that have to do with forest management, forest development, forest research, forest products research and research into diseases, pests, and so on. The minister then mentioned his plans for co-ordination with other departments, particularly, I presume, with the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. He then mentioned it is the intention of his department to co-operate with various international organizations which are concerned with the international aspects of the development of the forest industry. I think that is a very important segment of the department's activities which can be developed to a greater extent in the years ahead. It is very closely related to the scientific development and utilization of forest products and also to our marketing abroad.

I was interested recently to read an article in Saturday Night. The only reading I do is usually in bed after eleven o'clock in order to try to get some sleep when I have been particularly annoyed by a speech made by someone on the benches opposite. This is an interesting article and very thoughtfully written by Mr. Robson Black. It expresses a changed relationship between the forest industry and the rest of our economy as well as a changing situation inside the industry itself. The article appeared in the issue of April 2, and it reads in part:

The fortune-tellers who once spelled out Canada's destiny appraised the nation's timberlands as a diminishing and expendable asset in the balance sheets of the future. They did not foresee that a perishable resource can do something better than to perish; it can add and multiply.

That shift in emphasis only occurred because of the change which has come about in the attitude to our forest resources taken by governments and, fortunately, in recent years by industry itself. The writer goes on to say:

The most dramatic proof that Canada has emerged from forest exploitation to "resource management" is the decision of the pulp and paper industry to double production by 1980.

That would have been unheard of 20 years ago.

Such doubling entails an extraction of an additional 15 million cords of wood annually, more than twice as much as is now required. To attain that level of raw material will impose a systematic harvesting of the increment of the tree growth without impairing the total "capital stock". This may seem a curious sequel to early tales of Canadian saw mills "pursuing" the forest from township to township in an ever-widening swath of spoliation. Unfortunately it is from such storied accounts that so many Canadians rate their woodlands as a fugitive possession.

Unfortunately there are many people who still have that conception and who have not realized that a change in direction has taken place. I remember as a boy seeing timber thoughtlessly destroyed, though on a much smaller scale than has happened in the history of eastern Canada. But the assurance that our forests will be managed throughout the years is to be found in a statement such as I have read indicating that planning is taking place for tremendously increased production, because this is where self-interest will guide the activities of these companies engaged in the industry. The tremendous and increasing investment in the industry in plant and equipment will make the wise management of our forests necessary as a means of protecting the investment itself, otherwise the investment would not be made. The article goes on to say:

No other industry is so suited to Canada's natural advantages of great forests, abundant water and power supplies, in the utilization of which pulp and paper manufacture has made its own way without subsidies, price floors, guarantees or other forms of public assistance.

I think that is to the credit of the lumber industry, the pulp and paper industry and all segments of the forest industry. Then I read, further, in this article on the subject of the general situation in the forest industry and the pulp and paper industry:

[Mr. Herridge.]

Legislation and tax structures now encircling forest industry offer little encouragement to those seeking to practice constructive management on their timberlands.

I can assure hon. members that I have personal knowledge of this. I could speak with great feeling on this question.

They effectively erase whatever rewards an operator might expect from paying conservation costs on a public-owned estate. New forest regulations must be drafted, the tenure of licensed woodlands made secure and, in general, the long-outmoded concepts of government partnership with forest industry will have to be re-stated in enlightened terms. Lacking a prompt and liberal re-orientation on the part of the government landlord, the industrial tenant will be in no position to contribute his full quota to national advancement.

That was written, particularly, I think with respect to the type of timber management leases in operation in Ontario and, on a larger scale, in British Columbia. But even those who own their land and timber are suffering from the same disability and this is something to which both federal and provincial governments should give a great deal of attention.

The pulp and paper industry also faces a hazard of federal political policy that may constrict its competitive position in world trade.

The first hazard is related to uncoordinated and unscientific taxation policies. The next has to do with political policy which may constrict Canada's competitive position in world trade. The writer asks:

To what degree should Canada's economic program be shaped by the needs of her primary natural resources industries? Should protective tariffs and other restraints on imports seek to proliferate secondary enterprises, thereby raising production costs for the export industries and reducing the power of foreign markets to buy Canadian products?

I think there is a good thought there. While we want to promote the development of secondary industry, if we do so by means of protective policies and things of that sort we shall be affecting the greatest sources of our revenue, which are the lands, forests and mines of this country. The writer goes on to refer to Swedish public policy—and there is a lot to be learned from Sweden both in regard to government economics and forest management. He says:

Swedish public policy and advanced technical skills have succeeded in keeping the country's timberlands matched to the needs of 190 pulp or paper mills and 4,000 saw mills. Quite true, secondary industries also have multiplied and greatly prospered but without artificial stimulation. The Swedish government has adhered to a tariff protection scale never higher than 9 per cent, the lowest in the world except for Denmark. The national policy of minimum tariffs is, in effect, an ultimatum to secondary industry to "keep on its toes ", to compete for domestic and export trade through maximum technical efficiency in manufacturing processes and vigorous pursuit of home and foreign buyers.

In conclusion, this writer says:

> It is well to decide what Canadian product is most durably founded upon an ascending international demand and is best prepared to bring increase and enrichment to the Canadian people and new security to the nation's most vital natural resource. We must turn to our pulp and paper industry for the answer.

And also, I would say, we must turn to the other basic primary industries of this country upon which we depend so much for our prosperity. The minister dealt with a number of other questions. I wish to emphasize before concluding that I believe there is great scope for increased and improved public relations as one of the functions of the department in order that the Canadian people may better understand what this forest heritage means to them as far as prosperity, economic development and recreation are concerned.

I believe special consideration should be given to the taxation policies of both federal and provincial governments. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, the policies in this respect both federal and provincial are hit and miss in this regard? The large companies in Canada engaged in the forest industry get exemptions in respect of investments in road developments and other developments but the smaller operators do not enjoy the same advantages because of certain technicalities in the Income Tax Act. This is something which the minister will be well advised to consider, namely the position of the small operator under that act as compared with the position of the large operator. In some cases, of course, small operators lose advantages because of ignorance of the provisions and lack of advice from appropriate persons. In British Columbia, at the present time, the government of that province is actually taxing the owner of private land on his capital in standing timber. Not only does he pay land tax and a royalty when his timber is cut but he must pay a tax on his standing timber, too. That is just the same as taxing a man on his capital in the bank, or his capital invested in bonds, or on any other personal asset, rather than taxing him on the revenue, the interest, the income or the profit.

The last item I wish to mention, which I think is of tremendous importance, is the research which is required in respect of marketing. There are new opportunities opening up through the changing of conditions throughout the world. We in British Columbia believe that Asia is going to be one of the great markets in the future for the forest industry of British Columbia. I suggest that this department, in addition to its research into forest management, the protection of forests from insects and fire, forestry inventory activities, and the roads to resources program, as well as the very necessary research into forest products, should undertake a program of research in respect to marketing possibilities in addition to that which now takes place through the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken quite briefly in discussing the few items which came to my mind as I sat here. Once again I should like to say to the minister, as one who has spent most of his life among trees, sawdust and horses, that I wish him well in all he undertakes in the management of this department, and look forward in the years ahead to a much larger appropriation and a great extension in his activities.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the committee will indulge me for a few moments during which time I wish to speak in regard to the estimates of the Department of Forestry. I should first of all like to congratulate the minister on his appointment as the first minister of the Department of Forestry, and suggest that he has a mighty big job on his hands to some extent occasioned by a difficulty in respect to federal-provincial co-operation.

We have heard a great deal this afternoon from the hon. member for Beauce about provincial rights. I suggest to him that, first and foremost, each time a province accepts a right it must also accept a responsibility. My remarks this afternoon will have reference to that subject.

In Alberta at this moment the forest areas are suffering from the most serious forest fire situation which has existed for some time. There are over 105,000 acres of forest land either burning, or burnt off. There have been 367 fires in the Edson area alone, with 30,000 acres of forest land burnt off or now burning. This is a very serious situation. I asked the Minister of National Defence on Tuesday last whether he had received a request for the assistance of the armed service. His reply was that he had not received such a request. I suggest this is the type of problem in regard to which there must exist federal-provincial co-operation. It appears that because of an unnatural pride on the part of some in regard to provincial rights the people of northwestern Alberta are facing a serious handicap which they should not have to face. At this moment, in all the towns of that area other industries are suffering serious hardships because of the fact that all available manpower is out on the fire lines. It seems reasonable to me to suggest that a co-ordinating council at the federal level should be established to coordinate fire fighting activities in all provinces of Canada, so as to make available all the firefighting equipment possible, and to establish a system to facilitate the successful use of air force and army personnel to fight these very serious outbreaks of fires which are now taking place.

I should like to point out that there appears to be some delay particularly in respect of Alberta in making requests for help. This might well be the result of political reasoning more than because individuals do not wish more to be done in regard to this serious situation.

Before I conclude, Mr. Chairman, I should like again to make the suggestion I made to the minister shortly after his appointment. The forestry laboratories located at Kananaskis should be moved to the centre of the forest industry in Alberta, which I suggest is the Hinton-Edson area. I make this suggestion to him again because I feel that the centre of the timber industry in Alberta, being in that area, would lend itself to closer cooperation between the department's research facilities and the commercial operators so that the gap which it is felt has developed, between the research done by the department and the research it is felt should be done, might be lessened or perhaps eliminated.

I feel that the amount of money which the federal government is paying on a shared basis with the provinces, particularly in regard to forest inventories, reforestation and forest protection, should be considered seriously with a view to making sure that the provinces not only accept their rights but accept their responsibilities.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether the house leader could indicate if the business for Monday and Tuesday is as was indicated at the conclusion of the sitting last night, and whether he is in a position to indicate what estimates will be taken up next week?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the legislative items which I indicated would be taken for Monday and Tuesday will retain their order, except for one matter which has appeared in Votes and Proceedings today. That is the motion in the name of the Prime Minister for the appointment of a special committee to consider and recommend changes which should be made to the War Measures Act. That will be the first item of business for Monday, which will be followed by the bill in respect to the Canada Shipping Act, and the other items that I outlined on Friday. In so far as the estimates are concerned, those of the Department of Public Works will be called next week. I do not think I shall go any further than that because of changes and adjustments that have been made during the last three weeks to accommodate individuals on both sides of the house.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 12, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

NEW MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk of the house has received from the chief electoral officer certificates of election and return of two members, namely Mrs. Margaret Mary Macdonald, for the electoral district of Kings, and George Louis Chatterton, for the electoral district of Esquimalt-Saanich.

TABLING OF LETTER OF THANKS FROM PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house I should like to table a letter of thanks received from the President of the United States just before I left for the recent visit of parliamentarians to Washington. I think perhaps hon. members would like to hear the expression of appreciation.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Speaker:

The high point of my recent visit to Ottawa was the opportunity so generously accorded me to address the distinguished members of the Canadian parliament in the chamber of the House of Commons. Such an opportunity comes to few men and I am most grateful for it. I think the occasion was highly symbolic—and as such should be well noted throughout the world—of the splendid relationship enjoyed between your country and mine. In addition to registering my thanks for being invited to speak before parliament, I must add that I thoroughly enjoyed the experience.

Please accept my great appreciation for the very great consideration shown to my wife and myself during our visit to Ottawa. I note that you will be coming to Washington soon with other Canadian members of the United States-Canadian parliamentary group, and I hope to have the chance to thank you personally for your friendliness during my visit to Ottawa.

Sincerely,
John F. Kennedy.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Seventh report of standing committee on veterans affairs—Mr. Montgomery.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING AIR DEFENCE AND PRODUCTION SHARING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for some time representatives of the Canadian and United States governments have been working on an agreement relating to the defence of Canada, more particularly to air defence and to the Canada-United States production sharing program. The objective of such an agreement was to reflect the desire of both governments to ensure more effective use of the productive capacities, skills and resources of each country and at the same time to demonstrate our mutual determination to improve the defensive strength of NATO and particularly of NORAD under it.

An agreement has now been concluded which contains three major terms, all of which are closely interrelated.

(1) By the terms of the Pine Tree line agreement of 1951, and a further agreement of 1955, responsibility for the Pine Tree line was divided between the two governments. Canada will assume responsibilities hitherto resting on the United States under these agreements for manning, operation, maintenance and financing 16 stations of this line. The take-over of these stations will begin immediately and will be carried out as fast as possible having regard to the R.C.A.F.'s capacity to assume these additional responsibilities, and will be so phased as to maintain the efficiency and effectiveness of the line.

(2) In consideration of the financial and other benefits which will accrue to the United States as a result of Canada's assumption of additional responsibilities under the Pine Tree agreements, Canada will be furnished with 66 F-101B interceptor aircraft and appropriate support equipment. These aircraft, title to which will be vested in Canada, will be armed with conventional weapons and will serve to re-equip R.C.A.F. squadrons allocated to NORAD and will be operated in accordance with NORAD plans. As aircraft are already in existence, being the latest of that series off the production line, deliveries will commence immediately and will be phased in accordance with the R.C.A.F.'s ability to absorb them.

The cost of spare parts, flight simulators and related equipment for these aircraft will be shared on the basis of the United States paying two thirds and Canada paying one third. The cost of the armament to be obtained for the aircraft will be shared on the same basis.

(3) The United States agrees to the procurement in Canada of a number of F-104G aircraft, associated support equipment and initial spares to the total value of $200 million, of which the United States share will be $150 million and the Canadian share $50 million.

Mr. Speaker, I shall be asking leave at the conclusion of my remarks to table copies of the exchange of notes and the memorandum of understanding. So that the acting leader of the opposition and the acting leader of the C.C.F. party will have these notes and documents available now, I am sending them copies.

The aircraft procured will enable Canada and the United States to make a significant contribution to the collective strength of NATO under their respective mutual aid and defence assistance programs. The deliveries of these aircraft are to begin in mid-1963 following the completion of production of the aircraft of this type ordered for the first Canadian air division in Europe. It is anticipated that deliveries will be made at the approximate rate of 48 aircraft per year and will continue until the said sum of $200 million has been expended.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement, representing as it does an important and constructive development in Canada's defence relations with the United States, is futher evidence of the determination of both countries to maintain the operational effectiveness of the North American air defence system. It will make a significant contribution to the security of North America and to the European area of NATO as well.

I would stress that the approach of both governments has not been based on narrow self-interest but reflects a genuine effort to find a way for each to co-operate with the other, to the benefit not only of both but of mutual allies as well. The letter which we have just heard read from the President of the United States is the epitome of the relationship which is embodied in the agreement entered into.

The agreement is therefore more than just a bilateral agreement. It expresses the desire to make common use of those resources which each possesses and which can be made available for the benefit of each other and our partners in NATO in the pursuit of peace, and makes possible a more substantial contribution toward the security of the west than could be made by either government acting alone.

Despite past indications and the widely accepted views of military staffs in the western world, and statements of Russian leaders too to the effect that the U.S.S.R. was completely replacing bomber aircraft with missiles, it has not done so and is continuing to maintain a large and effective fleet of bombers. Indeed, the experience of all the nations in the western world has been that widespread changes have had to be made in plans, and various armaments have had to be discarded as events have altered decisions previously made and as the U.S.S.R. has changed or has departed from anticipated courses of action.

The Canadian government has done much to support disarmament, but recent world events re-emphasize that the U.S.S.R. is obviously not of that mind. In the days ahead we shall continue the representations which have been made in the past. Indeed, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will leave tomorrow for Geneva. At the same time we must realize that there is no survival in adopting the attitude that if Canada does not maintain her most effective defences her people will thereby escape havoc and destruction should war come. Canada, in common with the other nations of the free world, must therefore continue to maintain its defences.

Now I ask leave to table the exchange of notes and the memorandum of understanding in both languages.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the announcement the Prime Minister has just made is an important one, and I am sure it will be welcomed by the country at large. The Prime Minister has divided his announcement into three parts. He has referred first to the assumption by Canada of the Pine Tree line and the 16 stations, in consideration for which Canada will get the 66 Voodoo fighters for certain purposes. Third, the United States agrees to procure from Canada 200 F-104G aircraft to the value of roughly $200 million.

In so far as the general purport of the Prime Minister's statement is concerned, I say at once that we on this side of the house welcome it. However, there are certain aspects on which I should like to comment briefly. I feel that so far as the F-101 jet fighter, the Voodoo, is concerned, we on this side are glad to see this replacement. We think it is a worth-while replacement; we should have this aircraft in order to allow the R.C.A.F. to control and maintain sovereignty over Canadian skies.

In so far as the cost is concerned, that is another matter. If we add into the deal the cost of the operation and maintenance of the Pine Tree line, this amount will be but a down payment on the triangular deal.

In so far as the deal itself is concerned, I cannot refrain from making this comment; that if the government had put as much effort into selling the Avro Arrow, which was the most advanced interceptor in the western world, we might have been successful in achieving this agreement much earlier. It is unfortunate that the effort was put into selling the United States plane, even though it is extremely helpful that a substantial part will be purchased from Canadair of Montreal and the Orenda engines from Toronto and Malton as well. It seems to us if that had been done and much more effort had been put into trying to sell the Canadian plane, our research and development in Canada should not have suffered.

The original deal, sir, included, I believe, a triangular exchange of the CL-44, which is built by Canadair in Montreal, for the F-101. It seems to us on this side of the house that deal would have been more advantageous than the one which has been announced. We regret that because of this long procrastination on the part of the government it has taken now many, many months, running into several years—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not restricted the hon. member's comments which, to some extent, approach a debate. However, I think if he proceeds, using words such as "procrastination", he will definitely be entering a debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There must be a reply, too.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to relevant comment, but to make such reservation of approval as he sees fit, reserving his right to debate the matter later.

Mr. Chevrier: I say to Your Honour that in the course of my remarks I have tried to be as objective as possible. I have stated we are supporting and approving the deal. I have stated also, sir, in accordance with the rights of the opposition, that there are certain shortcomings in the deal. If I have used any—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is entitled to comment, of course, but the distinction I ask him to preserve is between factual disagreements with the policy announced and to refrain from the accusation charged which is implicit in the use of a word such as "procrastination". If the hon. member can walk that narrow path he will be in accordance with our better practice.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I shall keep away from the use of that very bad word. Perhaps I may use the word "delay" and say there has been, it seems to us, a great deal of delay.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the hon. gentleman saying these things, but I am going to ask for the right to reply.

Mr. Chevrier: If I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to establish a new practice. In this house we have followed a course permitting the government to make factual statements in respect of policy or administrative action, as in this case, as well as allowing comment from the opposition without thereby entering into a debate. This practice is not easy to apply or to follow. When it is clear that a statement is for the information of this house and is presented here rather than having hon. members of this house receive the information elsewhere, the right of comment is very limited, and if the comment goes beyond that limitation or tends to enter into the realm of the making of assertions of a controversial character which no hon. member could expect to leave unchallenged, then the problem is presented that the government inevitably seeks the right to comment on that sort of statement.

It has not been the practice to permit the minister to reply. I have indicated that where, in the course of comments from the opposition a statement has been misinterpreted it is an inherent right of the minister as it would be of any member whose statement had been misinterpreted to seek to correct the misinterpretation by an explanation. But I would not like to see the practice develop, unless by consent of the house, of replying in kind to remarks which have been improperly permitted to go on the record. Therefore I trust that the hon. member for Laurier will not put the Prime Minister, who made the statement, in the position of having either to leave the accusation stand or ask to initiate a new practice.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that my comments were fair, and I ask permission to complete the remarks which I intended to make. They are these. While we are glad to know that the government has taken belated action in respect of this deal, which is four years old, we are sorry that the exchange could not have been more beneficial to Canada.

In so far as the financial aspects and implications of the deal are concerned, namely their effect on the treasury and the economy of the country, I think we shall have to look carefully at the deal itself, and perhaps when the estimates of the Department of National Defence are up for consideration we shall then have an opportunity to deal more extensively with the matter.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of a group which has a great respect for our parliamentary institutions I shall do the best I can to properly walk the tight rope of parliamentary procedure and propriety at this time.

I thank the Prime Minister for sending over this correspondence and memorandum of understanding. Of course he will understand that we have only a few minutes to glance at it. The announcement he has just made is very important, involved and complicated; therefore I am sure the house will understand that we shall require time to study it fully and appreciate all its implications. We shall take that time, Mr. Speaker, and deal with the matter fully on the defence estimates.

However, I do want to say—and may I say I am speaking personally now, without consultation with my colleagues—that this has wider implications. In view of the cancellation of the contract with the Avro people, a British firm, to their great cost and inconvenience, and in view of our present relations with Great Britain and concern over the common market and so on, I think this has broader implications than are confined just to this straight matter of the announcement and the issue at stake. I trust that members of our group will deal with those general and broader aspects on the appropriate estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Laurier mentioned that I had said there would be 200 F-104G's involved in the deal. That I did not mention. I do not wish to enter into a debate, but the statement made in comparing this deal with the Avro matter cannot pass unchallenged. There has been no delay or procrastination.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No one would buy the Avro. That is the reason it was not sold. We endeavoured everywhere to sell it but the cost was prohibitive.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. After listening to what Your Honour had to say about the practice that you did not wish to see develop, does Your Honour not think the situation might well and effectively be dealt with if the government would follow the practice of its predecessor and give the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other parties some indication, at least some reasonable length of time before the house opens, as to what the government proposes to discuss? Of course, to present an invalued proposed agreement half way through a statement by the Prime Minister is an affront to this house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking me a question. I am not here to answer questions of that kind. The hon. gentleman has not raised a valid point of order.

The practice is that new information is brought to the house in this way. It is brought by way of information rather than by way of discussion. I think on both sides the normal practice has been exceeded. Perhaps it would be advantageous for the committee on procedure to have a look at this practice, which is one which creates problems for the Chair from time to time.

If the statement is purely factual—and in this case there was, in addition to the statement, some discussion—then I should think that opposition members should limit their remarks to purely factual statements. When statements of opinion are added, on both sides, it is very difficult to restrict discussion. I hope that hon. members on both sides will consider that matter, and I hope the committee on procedure will also consider the problem that arises.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING SALE OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-106, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (Instalment Purchases).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a difference in the controls that are used as between the selling of straight mortgages and the selling of chattel mortgages. What we have done in this bill is to apply to the Bills of Exchange Act the regulations that now apply under the Patent Act. Those regulations have worked effectively in Canada and have been copied in other countries throughout the world. The application of these regulations to the Bills of Exchange Act will have the similar effect of providing protection and eliminating abuses under this act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAR MEASURES ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER AND RECOMMEND CHANGES

On the order: Government notices of motion:

June 9—The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—

That a special committee be appointed to consider and recommend changes that may be desirable in the War Measures Act;

That the committee consist of fifteen members to be designated by the house;

That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house;

That the committee have power to send for persons and papers;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as it may deem advisable and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation to the printing thereof; and

That the committee be empowered to report from time to time.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day.

Mr. Churchill: Next sitting of the house.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

C.N.R. PROPERTY RENTAL

Motion No. 144—Mr. Pigeon:

For a copy of the contract, correspondence, and other documents exchanged between the Canadian National authorities and the Meunerie Coopérative de Joliette (Joliette Co-operative Flour Mill), following the acquisition by, or rental to, the Meunerie Coopérative de Joliette, of the Canadian National property.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. friend would agree to let this motion stand.

Mr. Pigeon: I agree.

Motion stands.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether the hon. gentleman has anything to report on his proposal to the British government that a meeting of the commonwealth prime ministers be held to discuss Britain's entry into the common market?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to report at this time. I will possibly make a statement tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: When?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Tomorrow.

REPORTED STATEMENT BY ONTARIO CABINET MEMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a statement reported to have been made by Hon. J. Wilfrid Spooner, minister of lands and forests of the province of Ontario. I wish to quote the statement because it causes some eyebrow raising, to say the least. The statement reads in part:

Canada needs more salesmen in Europe, lands and forests minister J. Wilfrid Spooner said yesterday following a tour of the United Kingdom, France, Switzerland, West Germany, the Soviet union, Sweden and Finland.

He said Canada's trade representatives should intensify their activities. In his view, these officials are highly qualified but are hampered by a shortage of staff and inadequate facilities.

Would the minister inform the house whether, in his opinion, his department has the number of trade representatives with adequate facilities necessary to satisfactorily promote the sale of Canadian products abroad?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask the question. I have checked into the matter, and I understand that Mr. Spooner was referring to the commercial representatives of commercial companies which he felt were in greater need in the markets in which he had been travelling.

With regard to our own trade commissioners, permit me to say that we have 120 commissioners presently stationed abroad in 62 posts in 48 countries. Their offices are located in the principal commercial centres of the world. The record indicates that these men are well trained, enthusiastic and effective. The annual report of my department for the year 1960 records that their joint efforts influenced more than $100 million worth of new export business for Canada in that year.

May I also remind the house of the effective trade promotion work that these officers have carried out in consequence of the export trade promotion conference held in Ottawa last December. I regularly receive letters of commendation from Canadian businessmen who indicate that they are getting the trade promotional assistance from the trade commissioner service of which they stand in need.

The service recruits new officers annually. Seven young men are in the last weeks of their training now and will be going to their first posts by early autumn. Twelve new recruits are about to report for training. With these young men we will be able to strengthen posts which need additional officers; equally, we will be able to open new posts where this is warranted. In the last 18 months we have been able to open four new posts at Canberra, Moscow, Lagos and Philadelphia. I believe that the record of new business influences, the approbation of Canadian exporters, and the international reputation of the Canadian trade commissioner service indicate that it is meeting its responsibilities.

With regard to greater efforts being made abroad by the sales representatives of commercial firms in Canada, I agree with Mr. Spooner that there are tremendous additional sales opportunities for many of our products in the markets of the world. I believe that, and I have urged continually upon Canadian firms which produce goods for which there is a market abroad that they intensify their selling efforts in these potential markets.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—INQUIRY AS TO CURRENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question arising in part out of the Prime Minister's statement of a few moments ago. When the Prime Minister referred to disarmament and the difficulties attending that problem, he indicated that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was going to leave tomorrow for Europe. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether he is leaving for the purpose of attending unexpected disarmament discussions, or for the purpose of attending the conference in Geneva dealing with the situation in Laos? In the latter event, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs give the house a report as to the Laotian situation as he now sees it?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be attending the conference at Geneva dealing with the situation in Laos. As a result of the discussions between the United Kingdom and the Soviet co-chairmen yesterday this conference resumed its work this morning. The co-chairmen at the same time reiterated their appeal of April 24 to the parties in Laos to co-operate with the international supervisory commission in effecting control over the cease fire. As yet there has been no reaction by the parties in Laos to the commission's letter of June 8 expressing serious concern at the violation of the cease fire and announcing its intention to visit a number of trouble spots and to report to the co-chairmen. A preliminary report setting out the commission's proposal to the parties has already been forwarded to the co-chairmen.

In the meantime, I believe that the princes heading the three principal parties in Laos have arranged to meet tomorrow at Zurich for talks about the political questions connected with the settlement of the Laotian question.

If as a result of these various developments the cease fire is made more effective, the conference may then be expected to turn to the detailed consideration of the proposals which have been put before us relating to the international aspects of the Laotian problem. Canada, of course, is very much concerned about this problem of long term arrangements, and we shall be making our representations from time to time.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Now that another week in June has gone by, has the minister yet set a date for the budget?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. It will not be possible to bring in the budget this week, but I hope soon to be in a position to announce the date to the house.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LAKEHEAD—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ARTILLERY UNIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received an offer from the Canadian lakehead exhibition to the effect that they would welcome the establishment of an artillery unit within the grounds of the exhibition? Can the minister inform the house whether such a unit is now being contemplated?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I do not recall receiving any such communication from Fort William, Mr. Speaker, and I have no knowledge that the creation of such a unit is under consideration, although that may well be the case. I would have to inquire into that matter and give an answer later as far as the latter part of the question is concerned.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-98, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—"Builder's mortgage".

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister make a statement in connection with the further discussion of this bill?

Mr. Balcer: I made quite a lengthy presentation on second reading of this bill. The bill was sent to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, where many experts appeared as witnesses. I had four or five of my officials who with myself answered many questions. Also a representative of the pilots appeared as a witness and was questioned, as well as a representative of the guild, Mr. Langlois, who appeared also as a witness. In the committee an extensive study was made of the bill clause by clause, so at the present time I do not intend to add to what I said earlier.

Mr. Chevrier: There are many objectionable features to this bill which were brought to the attention of the minister during the sittings of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and I should like to deal with them now. They have to do with exemption from payment of pilotage dues of United States vessels moving in the pilotage district from Montreal to Cornwall-St. Regis, giving the United States vessels a privilege which they do not possess under the treaties signed between Canada and the United States over the years. There is the question of sovereignty involved in this matter, wherein I believe Canada is ceding to United States vessels sovereignty in purely Canadian waters, and there is also involved a question of safety in navigation.

In order to put the matter in perspective I think I should say there are seven groups of pilots established on the Seaway. There are four groups, totalling 200, whose territories cover purely Canadian waters. There are the groups in the Quebec district which involves an area from Quebec to tide water; in the Montreal district, which involves an area from Montreal to Quebec; in the harbour of Montreal; and fourth, in the Cornwall district, which is the pilotage district established last November by the Department of Transport and which extends from Montreal to Cornwall-St. Regis.

Then there are three other groups totalling 92 men whose territories cover international waters. They are the three districts known as international pilotage districts: district No. 1, Cornwall to Kingston; district No. 2, Welland canal and waters connecting lakes Erie and Huron; and district No. 3, waters connecting lakes Huron and Superior.

Beginning May 1 of this year the so-called great lakes pilotage regulations which have been worked out over two years of negotiation between Canada and the United States, came into effect. I refer here to the act which was passed last year and which is known as chapter 40 of the Statutes of Canada 8 and 9 Elizabeth II, 1960, which established part VIA of the Canada Shipping Act and set up what is known as great lakes pilotage.

What is rather astounding to me is that this was done after an agreement had been entered into between the Minister of Transport acting on behalf of Canada and the secretary of commerce of the United States. This agreement was signed by the present Minister of Transport on May 1, 1961 and by the secretary of commerce of the United States on April 28, 1961. It is strange that in this agreement, which covers the whole field in the great lakes, no mention whatsoever is made of the exemption from payment of pilotage dues in the area from Montreal to Cornwall-St. Regis.

In order to bring the matter, as I think it should be brought, to the attention of the committee, it is necessary to point out that what is being sought here is this. Perhaps I should just put on the record again what is demanded by the government through the Department of Transport, namely that ships registered in Canada or the United States whose operations are upon the great lakes, or between ports in the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river, or whose operations are primarily as described in subparagraph 1 and which make occasional voyages to ports in the maritime provinces of Canada while operating in any pilotage district on the St. Lawrence river above the pilotage district of Montreal, shall be exempt from the payment of pilotage dues.

As was stated in the committee, this has the same meaning and effect as the exemption from compulsory pilotage. Therefore this means that United States ships travelling in the Montreal-Cornwall-St. Regis district will be exempt from the payment of pilotage dues. In other words, it will not be necessary for them to have a Canadian pilot on board. They may, if they wish, take one on, but there is no obligation so to do, and the masters and mates of those vessels may, if they so desire, take the ship right through.

I say, first of all, that this is an infringement upon the sovereign rights of Canada in these international waters. In so stating I should like to make brief reference to the manner in which this whole subject was dealt with by treaty. I refer to the evidence given by Dr. Skelton, former deputy minister of external affairs, before a committee of the other place dealing with the development and improvement of the St. Lawrence river. This evidence can be found in the proceedings of a special committee of the other place in 1928. Dr. Skelton was giving evidence before that committee, and he dealt with the various treaties covering this matter. I refer to page 70 of those proceedings and I quote Dr. Skelton's words:

> Coming then to the treaties dealing with the St. Lawrence, we begin, of course, with the treaty of 1783, ending the war of American independence. It was there provided, you will recall, that the boundary between the United States and Canada was to run along the 45th parallel—

That is the 45th parallel of latitude:

> —until it struck the St. Lawrence and was to follow the middle of the river St. Lawrence up to lake Ontario.

There was some dispute about the line, which I need not go into now. Then Dr. Skelton went on:

> Now, the next treaty point to which I need refer is the Ashburton-Webster treaty of 1842 . . . Article 7 of the Ashburton-Webster treaty reads as follows:
> "It is further agreed, that the channels in the river St. Lawrence on both sides of the Long Sault islands and of Barnhart island, the channels in the river Detroit, on both sides of the island Bois Blanc, and between that island and both the Canadian and American shores, and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the river St. Clair with the lake of that name, shall be equally free and open to the ships, vessels and boats of both parties."

Dr. Skelton went on to deal with the treaty of Washington which was passed in 1871, article 26 of which reads as follows:

> The navigation of the river St. Lawrence, ascending and descending from the 45th parallel of north latitude, where it ceases to form the boundary between the two countries, from, to, and into the sea, shall forever remain free and open for the purposes of commerce to the citizens of the United States, subject to any laws and regulations of Great Britain or of the dominion of Canada, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation.

Then Dr. Skelton said:

> That is from Cornwall to St. Regis. The second paragraph of the same article provides:

I will not read it because it deals with rivers other than the St. Lawrence. Until the treaty of 1871 there was never any question of conferring on United States citizens any rights below the Cornwall-St. Regis line. Then we come to the boundary waters treaty of 1909, the preliminary article of which reads as follows:

> For the purposes of this treaty boundary waters are defined as the waters from main shore to main shore of the lakes and rivers and connecting waterways, or the portions thereof, along which the international boundary between the United States and the Dominion of Canada passes, including all bays, arms and inlets thereof, but not including tributary waters which in their natural channels would flow into such lakes, rivers and waterways, or waters flowing from such lakes, rivers, and waterways, or the waters of rivers flowing across the boundary.

Then Dr. Skelton added this significant statement:

> Now, there may be boundary waters to which article 1 specifically applies. Boundary waters roughly include part of the St. John river, the Ste. Croix river, the St. Lawrence river from Cornwall to lake Ontario—

That is above, but not below. He was asked this significant question by Hon. Mr. Reid:

> But would not include from Cornwall to the sea?
> Dr. Skelton: It would not, senator.

So I say all the rights which have been given by treaty to United States vessels and United States citizens have to do with international sections of the river, that is from the Cornwall-St. Regis line, the international boundary line, up to the head of the great lakes; but the area from the Cornwall-St. Regis line down to the gulf has been considered through the years to be purely Canadian waters.

What is being done here is to enact a bill by way of an amendment to a section which has the effect of a treaty giving rights to United States vessels which they do not possess today. What we are doing, sir, is abandoning to the United States our right to insist that their ships be piloted by Canadian pilots in an important and costly section of the St. Lawrence river. Furthermore, we are abandoning our right to determine the qualifications necessary for such pilots in this section of the river. We thereby concede to the United States a status equal to that of the owners and operators of our own vessels. We therefore lose our legitimate right of control of navigation in these waters, and we do all this without treaty. There is therefore no give and take.

The minister stated during the sittings of the committee that as far as he was concerned nothing would be done below Montreal, and we replied that we think this is a step in that direction. It is all right for the minister to give his assurance that this will not be done, and I am sure that in making that statement the minister was sincere. However, we know that conditions change, that circumstances alter, and a minister may move from one department to another. A statement such as that has no value with respect to legislation; it has no effect and no legislative force at all.

There is therefore being enacted here legislation which we fear will be a step toward exempting the other districts from the payment of pilotage dues. What is very difficult to understand is why Canadian ships should be included in this when they are exempt already by an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act. The committee will probably have realized that under one of the sections of the Canada Shipping Act, namely section 346 (e), steamships registered in any part of Her Majesty's dominions are exempt from the payment of pilotage dues. It is difficult to understand why we should create a redundancy by including them in this bill.

There is also the question of safety of navigation. I think it should be brought to the attention of the committee that the waters from the Cornwall-St. Regis area down to Montreal are dangerous waters; they are considered as treacherous in some areas. In fact I believe the water drops close to 100 feet from that point down to the port of Montreal. Very costly navigation facilities have been constructed in this area. There are the St. Lambert lock and the Ste. Catherine lock on the south shore, the two locks at Beauharnois, the channels between these locations and the stretch from the upper Beauharnois to the international boundary line. Why the government has seen fit to exempt this area and put it in the same class as the international pilotage area is difficult to understand, particularly when last year it introduced legislation in this house which covered those international waters in the great lakes area. It seems that after this was done negotiations were entered into between Canada and the United States, in which Canada probably gave the United States to understand that it would grant this exemption in a purely Canadian section of the river.

It has been clearly stated in the committee that this is a serious infringement of the rights of the pilots, let alone the sovereign rights of Canada. In any event, from the point of view of safety there is also the consideration that pilots who normally operate for six to eight hours will, because of this, have to work longer hours. Hence it seems to those of us who sit on this side that there is an injustice being done to the Canadian pilots.

I shall not repeat here what was said by Mr. Lalonde appearing on behalf of the pilots and by Mr. Langlois appearing on behalf of the guild, but it is worth while to remind the minister of the definitions which were given in the former act, chapter 40, referred to earlier, where the great lakes pilotage area was described. It is clear that the description ends at the Cornwall-St. Regis dividing line.

Then the minister indicated, in the committee, I believe, that the Cornwall-Montreal district would remain as it is, and that ships whose captains were desirous of taking on pilots could do so. This would mean that the Canadian government would have to maintain a pool of pilots, presumably, in the Cornwall area at the city of Cornwall; because if United States vessels are going to have the option of taking on pilots, pilots must be provided and a pool established. I presume the logical place for that would be the city of Cornwall. However, there would be no obligation upon the captains of United States vessels to use these pilots, and they might well decide to sail right through without using the services of the pilots.

The objection we see to the part of the bill with which I am now dealing is twofold. First, it is giving to United States vessels rights which they do not now possess by treaty. All the rights and privileges of United States citizens in the international waters of the St. Lawrence have heretofore been granted by treaty, and it is difficult to understand why in a section which is purely Canadian an attempt is being made to give an exemption which does not exist in the rest of the waters of the St. Lawrence. The next point to which we draw attention is the fact that in this area the waters are swift and treacherous. We object to the provision now being made. We think it should be made compulsory to take on pilots, and that this exemption should not be granted.

These are the remarks which I have intended to make, and I hope they will be received by the minister in the manner in which I feel they should.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I wish to direct my remarks to the point which has been covered by the hon. member for Laurier. We cannot take a narrow or parochial view of this amendment. The St. Lawrence seaway is one, from Fort William and Port Arthur in the west to Montreal in the east, and from the United States ports of Duluth and Chicago in the American west to Montreal in the east. There is no practical possibility of devising an artificial boundary or terminal for the seaway at Cornwall or St. Regis. The economic end of the seaway is Montreal, and that, too, is where the United States contribution to the works of the seaway stopped.

We have heard the hon. member for Laurier demand on many occasions that an economic survey of the effect of the seaway be made. I represent a riding on Georgian bay, part of the great lakes system which was probably more affected in its economic life by the seaway than any other part. Many of us, and many other people interested in shipping, wish that the survey which the hon. member now requests had been made when he was in a position of administrative responsibility and could have had it carried out himself.

In order to straighten out a few of the facts I think a timetable of the negotiations which preceded this amendment might be useful to the committee. We shall begin in the summer of 1960, a year ago. Negotiations for the joint pilotage of all the confined waters of the seaway between ourselves and the United States began in September, 1960. The pilots between Kingston and Montreal made certain demands on the government—we should be clear as to this—prior to November, 1960. There was no compulsory pilotage, nor was there compulsory payment of pilotage dues between Kingston and Montreal in either section of that area.

In September, 1960, the pilots in that area made certain demands or requests of the Minister of Transport. As a result of these requests the area from Kingston to Montreal was made a compulsory pilotage dues area. I think the exact date was November 17, 1960. At that time the pilots were told that United States shipping would likely be exempted in this particular section. The pilots told us in the committee that they did not agree, and I can understand that they did not agree. However, they were certainly warned in November, 1960 of what was going to happen.

Following the order in council and the negotiations, a press release was issued by the pilots in Montreal. The United States representatives negotiating the agreement took up this press release and brought it to the attention of representatives of the Department of Transport who were negotiating with them. They said that if we wanted to get an over-all agreement with the United States we would have to exempt United States vessels from the payment of compulsory pilotage dues in this area, St. Regis to Montreal. I think that is an understandable demand on the part of the United States. After all, it has contributed many millions of dollars to the improvement of the seaway works in that particular area of the seaway.

I should like to again emphasize the fact that Montreal is the eastern terminal of the seaway. Much has been made of the fact that this particular area was not included in the agreement, nor in the definition of the great lakes basin. As I understand it, the reason for that is quite clear. The area from St. Regis to Montreal involves only Canadian waters, just as the waters of lake Michigan are completely United States waters and are not covered by the agreement. However, the United States has exempted our ships from compulsory pilotage regulations in respect of the waters of lake Michigan.

As a final note regarding the sequence of events which preceded this amendment, I should like to say that agreement with the United States in respect of pilotage was concluded in May of this year, and provides equal pilotage rates in those sections of the waters which are bordered by the two countries.

A great deal has been said during this debate regarding sovereignty. It has been suggested that if we give up something by treaty we give up some of our sovereignty, because in order to recover that which we had lost a breach of that treaty would be incurred. I suggest we have not given up any of our sovereignty in this way because in respect of Canadian waters we have done this by act of parliament rather than by treaty. Surely there is no derogation of our sovereignty in the passing of a law which can be repealed by a future parliament. I suggested this involves much less in the way of derogation of our Canadian sovereignty than would be involved had it been done by treaty.

In regard to this subject, the hon. member for Laurier has suggested that we have established a precedent and that the United States will be asking next for free pilotage from Montreal to the open waters at the mouth of the St. Lawrence river. I suggest we have not established a precedent of that kind at all. The United States has contributed nothing to the building of the seaway works beyond Montreal and has no right to do so. However, we are dealing with portions of the St. Lawrence seaway development above St. Regis, toward which the United States has directed millions of dollars.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. member a question? Did I understand him to say that the United States is spending millions of dollars toward this development?

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I said "has", using the past tense.

Mr. Chevrier: The United States has not spent one cent toward the development of this section of the seaway. Surely my hon. friend should know that.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): They did not?

Mr. Chevrier: The United States has spent money in the section from Cornwall to St. Regis upstream, not downstream.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): That is what I said. The hon. member misunderstood me, or perhaps I did not make myself sufficiently clear.

Regarding the question of sovereignty, it seems to me that one obvious area where we may have lost sovereignty resulted from the location of the eastern end of the western part of the works entering lake Ontario. It might very well have been located in the channel north of Wolfe island, and would then have been entirely in Canadian waters, rather than south of Wolf island so that it is more logical to locate our pilot stations on the United States side.

I suggest that the issue in respect of safety is not a clear issue at all. The available statistics do not clearly establish the value of pilotage. A great many people fall into the common error of thinking that because a ship had an accident when there was not a pilot aboard, the accident occurred because of that fact. Surely that cannot be a valid understanding, because the corollary would be that if a pilot was aboard at a time the ship had an accident, regardless of the reason, the responsibility would be entirely his. In this regard I suggest that the department should keep statistics in such fashion as to indicate clearly whether these accidents resulted because of the fact that a pilot was or was not aboard.

It is true that these confined areas of the seaway are hazardous. However, I suggest the hazards are much less than before as a result of the great changes which have been made in recent years. Many Canadian captains as well as United States captains have had much experience in operating through the seaway. I suggest those captains have had much more experience in this regard than the captains of ocean going vessels. It must be remembered that great lakes masters, whether Canadian or American, because of their activities have much more experience in handling ships along this seaway than captains of sea-going vessels who are more interested in navigation. For that reason there are many more competent pilots among our Canadian and American masters than among the masters of those sea-going vessels. While much larger ships, such as the 735-foot bulk carriers, are now using the seaway, it must be remembered that those ships are equipped with many safety devices and are handled with greater ease than many of the older ships. I suggest the matter of safety, for that reason, is again inconclusive. I also suggest that if safety is a prime requirement, then compulsory pilotage is the answer.

It has been equated that the imposition of pilotage dues in effect makes pilotage compulsory. In the final analysis of the situation I suggest that is not true at all. However, if safety is a prime consideration there ought to be compulsory pilotage. In this regard, pilots have stated that the imposition of compulsory pilotage will not affect their earnings, and that they have been given the assurance it will not. We have been informed by pilots appearing before the standing committee that prior to November of 1960, when there were no restrictions at all, no ship, either Canadian or United States, attempted to go through this section of the seaway without a pilot. I suggest it will be some considerable time before any will make such an attempt.

When considering the effect of this amendment on the operation of the whole seaway and the great lakes system, I suggest it is a good one. Many bogeys have been raised which on examination are found to be invalid, and I do not think we should be embarrassed because of this amendment being made after our agreement with the United States.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier raised many points this morning which had been raised earlier during our consideration in the committee, as well as during meetings of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I feel that many of his questions have been extremely well answered by the hon. member for Simcoe North, and that he has dealt with the most important of them. However, I feel it is my duty as minister to bring forward certain suggestions for the consideration of this committee so as to clarify the situation so there will be no misunderstanding regarding the policy of the government.

We are very fortunate in Canada in having extremely well qualified pilots. They are parts of very old corporations; they have ancient traditions. I should not like to leave the impression that we are in any way putting a strain on the very good relations that the Department of Transport, my officials and myself have always had with the members of the pilotage trade. However, I think I should take this opportunity to make sure that the committee has the actual facts as events happened prior to the decision of the government to bring forth this amendment.

As the hon. member for Simcoe North explained, there was a certain difficulty with the pilots last November. We had some very long sessions with them in which we discussed the general policy of the department on the matter of pilotage on the St. Lawrence, and also more particularly the formation of a new district for the Kingston-Cornwall-Montreal area. At that time the pilots made quite a point of this. They requested from the department, myself and the shipping authorities in Canada the imposition of compulsory dues for all ships except Canadian ships going from Cornwall to Montreal and from Montreal to Cornwall.

Well, that would have been quite a step, because by this move we would have recognized a new pilotage district, and we would be imposing compulsory dues in a pilotage district for the first time. Prior to that time all ships in that particular district had been exempt, Canadian ships, commonwealth ships, British ships, foreign ships and United States ships. We wanted the pilots in that area to be put in the same position as other pilots on the St. Lawrence. We conceded that, but I remember very well—and I was the spokesman for the government—that I told the pilots myself that we were going to impose compulsory dues but at the first opportunity we would exempt United States ships by law, by an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act, because in all fairness we thought it would have been unfair and unnecessary to impose compulsory dues on United States ships.

The pilots themselves recognized the soundness of my argument. At that time, in November, I said to them, "Well, so that we do not upset the apple cart, and owing to the fact that it is pretty late in the season and we cannot have an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act except very late in the next session, will you exempt the Americans yourselves?" I simply said, "Is it satisfactory to you that as far as United States ships are concerned, you agree not to charge them anything until the end of the year?" The pilots, who were extremely pleased to see that we were imposing compulsory dues on foreign ships apart from United States ships, were agreeable to that. They agreed not to impose dues on United States ships. I remember very well they also said, "Of course we are not in favour of the exemption of any ships, so we will probably have to put in a sort of objection to that but it will be pro forma." That is pretty well the situation.

The hon. member for Laurier talked about sovereignty. I should like to remind the committee that there is absolutely nothing in this amendment to the shipping act which says that a United States pilot will do any pilotage in any Canadian waters. Of course, if any ship requires a pilot from the Canadian border and from St. Regis-Cornwall to Montreal and lower down the river, the law is there, the shipping act is there always to make sure that the pilot will be a Canadian. The only thing we are doing is exempting the Americans as we exempt commonwealth ships in those areas.

As far as safety is concerned, I think it is even more important and more logical to exempt United States ships than commonwealth ships for this reason. The United States ships are lakers and, of course, the United States laker captains have had experience in these waters; they have been plying in these waters all their lives and are in a much better position to man their own ships than others. They know exactly how their ships react in various currents, winds, and so forth. United States captains are certainly more qualified than the captains of commonwealth or British ships who come in those waters only once or twice a season.

So far as the safety factor is concerned, my hon. friend from Simcoe North puts forward a very good argument when he says that the new seaway, with better aids to navigation, better lighthouses, wider canals and so forth, is certainly a safer area for ships than it was before. My hon. friend from Laurier will admit the inference that it should be safer for a ship to go through those waters than it was before. Of course the traffic may be heavier than it was before, but I do not think the fact that we have this seaway has increased the danger; on the contrary, I think it has decreased the danger in those waters.

I think this is about all I have to say at the present time, but I want to repeat that in what we are doing there is nothing extraordinary at all. United States ships have never paid any dues in those waters. The only reason they were included in the act, and that we must have a special amendment, is that it was too late last November to exempt them by legislation. We told the pilots at that time —they agreed among themselves and they were extremely pleased to see it—that we were imposing compulsory dues on foreign vessels.

I think it is a good thing to have compulsory dues on foreign vessels, because it pretty well forces them to take on pilots. Foreign ships are a real danger in these waters, because their officers and crews have not the experience and they are really the ones who can cause damage. I think safe navigation in the seaway, our relations with our United States friends, and the guarantee of progressive shipping operations in this area all will be secured by this amendment to the act. Therefore I strongly recommend to the committee the adoption of clause 15.

Mr. Chevrier: Some statements have been made both by the hon. member for Simcoe North and by the minister which should be discussed at greater length, if not challenged entirely. The hon. member for Simcoe North regretted that a parochial view was being taken of this matter. I am sure the hon. member does not understand the situation, otherwise he would not have used that expression. Surely the pilots who operate in the whole of the seaway are not taking a parochial view, and they have opposed this legislation. They have not opposed it because of a parochial attitude; they have opposed it because they think these are matters which have been disposed of in the past by treaty, and which should not be regulated by amendment to the Canada Shipping Act in this fashion.

Then the Canadian Labour Congress has put itself on record as being opposed to this amendment, and has given reasons for that opposition. I will not take the time of the committee to put on Hansard the telegram which was sent by the Canadian Labour Congress, but for those who want to read it I may say it can be found on page 173 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence, No. 6, of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. The labour congress certainly did not think they were taking a parochial view when they were dealing with this matter.

The hon. member for Simcoe North was inaccurate in a number of the statements he made. I am sure he will not feel that I want to be disrespectful to him in any way, because I want to deal with the matter as objectively as I can. In the first place, he said that the hon. member for Laurier had been advocating an economic survey of the seaway for a long time, and that if that had been done when that hon. member was in office, perhaps we would have better information available to us now. I have advocated such a survey for years now since I have been in this house, and I have given the reasons why it was not done when I was the president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. It was not done then because our job was to build the facilities for the seaway and not to seek the establishment of an economic survey, although I had asked certain economists to begin the work because I thought it would be a good thing for Canada, and they had embarked upon it but had not completed it. It was for this reason that I made recommendations to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines some years ago, and that recommendation was adopted but not a thing was done.

It seems strange to me, and I bring this to the attention of the hon. member for Simcoe North, that when the hon. member for Laurier suggests a matter which is approved unanimously, the government does not move. However, when it is some other member who suggests that, for instance, the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways be increased from seven to 12, the government accepts the suggestion right away with hardly any discussion in the committee. I shall leave it to the committee and to the hon. member for Simcoe North to decide for themselves whether political considerations motivate the government. However, let it be known to this committee that a recommendation for an economic survey was passed unanimously. It should have been acted upon, because it would have been a good thing for all these sections of the seaway today if that survey had been made.

Now, the hon. member for Simcoe North seems to be under a misapprehension as to the extent to which United States funds have been used in the construction of this section of the seaway. There was absolutely no United States money spent in the area of Cornwall-St. Regis and down to Montreal. Canadian funds only were used to construct the facilities, which were entirely in Canadian territory.

Then there was some question, both by the minister and by the hon. member for Simcoe North, of the seaway beginning at Montreal and going up to the head of the lakes. It was stated that it was logical, therefore, to exempt the pilots in this area. Well, I ask the minister and the hon. member, what is the definition of the seaway? According to one of the treaties between our two countries signed in the early days, the seaway begins below Quebec and goes up to the head of the lakes. Certainly in the report of an investigation made by engineers of Canada and the United States into the possibility of joint power and navigation development, the seaway is described as extending from below Quebec right up to the head of the lakes.

This is the fear of the pilots, that once you make any exemption for this fifth pilotage district, Montreal, Cornwall and St. Regis, the next step might very well be Montreal and Quebec, including Les Escoumains or down to Havre St. Pierre or wherever the new dividing line is likely to be. The objection raised by the pilots is that in the pilotage section of the Canada Shipping Act, which was enacted last year, you have already defined what you understand by the district to which this will apply. Certainly it ends at the international line, Cornwall-St. Regis. All the assurances and saving statements made by the minister, as the minister knows, from a legislative standpoint have no value whatever. There is no assurance that another step might not be taken at a later time.

Then the question of safety came up, and it was raised by both the minister and the hon. member. Safety is a prime consideration, but I ask this question. Who is to determine whether or not this is a safe pilotage area? I think the pilots certainly have as much experience of it as the officers of the department, if not far more. I say this with respect, because I have the greatest confidence in the officers of the Department of Transport.

I believe the minister was in error when he made a statement to the effect that United States vessels have been plying these waters all the time. This is not a fact, because I know the area. The United States vessels that have gone through these waters have used Canadian pilots, and that is why Canadian pilots have been stationed at Cornwall for years and years. I could name many of them. I can think now of Captain Ouellette, who plied from Prescott down to Montreal the greater part of his life. I knew him when I was a child, and people used to marvel at the way he would take a ship through the rapids down to Montreal. I can think of Mike Corkey, captain on the C.S.L. boats, who resided there many years. There were many masters. The United States vessels did not use their own captains. Few of them went through the old 14-foot canal system.

It is not accurate or correct to say, as has been stated here, that new aids to navigation have been established. This is not so. The aids to navigation extending from Cornwall-St. Regis to the international boundary line and down to the entrance to the new Beauharnois canal are, for the most part, exactly the same as they were in the old canal. It is true that the canal is much deeper. It is true that the canal has been widened, and while it is the intention to modernize the aids to navigation they are still, for the most part, exactly the same as they were in the old canal system.

Here is the position. Whereas you had smaller ships carrying loads of 2,000 tons and having a draft of 12 to 14 feet operating in the old canal, now you have ships of 725 or 750 feet in length carrying loads of 25,000 tons which require greater care on the part of those who are operating them than ever before. Once you get into the canal, as was said by the hon. member for Simcoe North, it may well be that because of more modern equipment found on these ships you can manoeuvre through the canals at any rate more easily than was possible previously. But that does not apply to all the ships. There is still a large number of ships that are of the 14-foot calibre. I think the traffic report of the St. Lawrence seaway authority indicates that at least 25 per cent of the ships which moved up and down the seaway in the season of 1960 were of that variety.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): The number is less and less every year.

Mr. Chevrier: That is quite true. In time, of course, vessels with draft under 25 feet will disappear entirely. How long it will take I do not know. According to the experts it may well be 10 years or more. I remember having heard an expert say it would take 25 years—this was before the seaway was built —before the 25-foot vessels would disappear entirely. As I say, last year about 25 per cent of the traffic was carried by these small vessels. As time goes on they will disappear; none the less it is not so much with regard to the small ships as with regard to the larger ships that one must be careful.

We had one sad experience I mentioned in committee; that of a United States pilot or captain, I have forgotten which, taking a ship through these dangerous waters, finding himself in serious difficulty, and blocking the passage for a substantial length of time. I therefore do not think it is fair or accurate to say that the safety of navigation will not be affected by this measure. I believe it will be affected, and the pilots say it will be affected. Surely those who have had experience all the way up and down this great river and these lakes should be given greater consideration than they have been given in this legislation.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): Under the agreement with the United States for the construction of a seaway was it not a condition that Canada make certain expenditures in the area from St. Regis to Montreal in addition to what the Americans were spending on the other sections in Montreal?

Mr. Chevrier: The only agreement there was between Canada and the United States is contained in the legislation which was passed by congress and the House of Commons, and in it there is no mention of that matter. I do not know what my hon. friend has in mind, but there certainly was no agreement as to the expenditure. There was United States legislation directing the United States corporation to build all the navigational facilities on the United States side of the line at a cost of $105 million, I think it was then, and there was Canadian legislation directing our authority either to build in Canada or to enter into an agreement with the United States for an understanding as to construction in the international section.

Finally what was arrived at was this. The United States decided to build a canal and two locks at Barnhart island on the United States side, and we decided to build a canal and one lock at Iroquois, Ontario, opposite Rockway Point, New York, but there was never any agreement as to the division of costs. The United States decided to build those facilities at a cost of $105 million then; I think they finally cost somewhat more than that. Our costs also increased over the estimate announced in those years.

I was just about to conclude by saying that I do not want to make this a contentious matter. I want to deal with it as objectively as possible. That is what I have tried to do this morning, as well as in the committee. However, I think it is a serious thing, first, to deal in an act of parliament such as this, with a matter which has always been dealt with by treaty; and second, not to give greater consideration to the safety aspect in that part of the St. Lawrence which it seems to me is one of dangerous waters.

Mr. Balcer: I also want to deal with this matter objectively, and I just want to answer shortly two or three points that have been raised by the hon. member for Laurier. The hon. member said that one of the big worries of the pilots is that this is a kind of first encroachment, and that it might have a tendency to produce the result of United States ships asking for exemption in the pilotage districts below Montreal. Mr. Chairman, United States ships have been exempt at all times right up to last November, and it has not produced any real pressure or nothing has been done with regard to exempting them from pilotage dues below Montreal. What we are doing at the present time actually is leaving the status quo as far as the United States is concerned. My hon. friend said that the ships are now larger and so on. I want to repeat that what we are doing is nothing new. United States ships have always been exempted. Of course many of them use pilots, and they are using pilots at the present time. However, when they do so they use Canadian pilots.

The hon. member for Laurier said I was making a comparison, as far as safety is concerned, between the pilots and the United States captains. That is not what I had in mind. As far as safety is concerned, what I am saying is that I do not think it is logical to exempt commonwealth ships and British ships, when their captains certainly cannot have had the same experience in these canals, these lakes and these waters as a United States laker captain who has been working all his life on ships plying these waters, although maybe not as a captain. I know of a United States captain who is in charge of a big laker and who has spent practically all of his life in lake waters. He therefore has had tremendous experience in these waters. When you are discussing safety, I think it would be illogical to allow a commonwealth ship to go up without being forced to take on a pilot and to refuse the same thing to the United States ships. I am also told that at the present time United States ships are using pilots and that they are Canadian pilots. We felt that this is a matter that should be left to them. They may develop some captains who are extremely used to these waters, and in some circumstances they might not feel that they need a pilot for one reason or another.

The other point raised by my hon. friend as far as safety is concerned is that we should not exempt United States ships because the situation is not the same at the present time; that ships are getting bigger and so on. May I say that the situation is exactly the same for Canadian ships. These huge long lakers going from lake Ontario to Montreal at the present time are new. They started on this route since the seaway was built. Our Canadian captains on our Canadian ships are faced with the same problem as that faced by United States captains on United States ships. There is no question of not exempting Canadian ships. So far as safety is concerned, I think we must not exaggerate this point. I am quite sure that the captain of a huge laker, when taking his ship down these waters and through these canals, will continue to take on our very good Canadian pilots if he is in any doubt about the safety of his ship.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question. Is it the intention of the department to establish a pool of pilots at Cornwall?

Mr. Balcer: There is a pool of Canadian pilots there at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: How many pilots are there?

Mr. Balcer: There used to be 24, but now I think it is about 20 or 21.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Chevrier: Not too fast, Mr. Chairman; I cannot follow you.

Clauses 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, this is a clause in this very important bill that we from British Columbia would certainly like the minister to comment upon. Coming from the west coast of British Columbia I must say that I was quite amazed to see one of the changes being made to this section. I can assure hon. members that it is of serious import to marine employees in British Columbia; they are very, very much concerned about its application.

I realize that a brief may have been presented to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines by Mr. R. G. Greaves, president of the national association of marine engineers of Canada, but as I am not a member of that standing committee I do not know just what consideration was given to this section or what consideration has been given by the minister to the brief on behalf of this association.

I do want to emphasize the seriousness with which clause 9 (2) (l) (iii) is viewed in British Columbia, in particular by all tug boat employees. Very briefly I should like to point out that this particular phase of the clause makes a major change with regard to whether or not there is to be an engineer continuously on duty on tug boats having a certain nominal horsepower.

I am not going to go very deeply into this question of nominal horsepower, because it is something which I have not been able to fully understand. If it is electrical horsepower, I know it; if it is brake horsepower, I know it; but nominal horsepower is something rather nebulous. I understand these words were used at the end of the last century, although the expression was not included in our own act until 25 or 26 years ago. Nominal horsepower, as I have been able to understand it, is horsepower which is based on the area of a piston, but it does not have any relationship whatsoever in these modern times, to the stroke or the speed of the piston. Therefore nominal horsepower actually, in this day and age, does not bear any relationship to brake horsepower.

However, if my information is correct the majority of tug boats in British Columbia are going to be most seriously affected by a change being made to section 9, in that it will enable tug boat owners to comply with the act and will yet result, according to the national association of marine engineers, in a lay-off of between 50 and 100 engineers.

There is not only the factor of the laying-off of between 50 and 100 engineers who are employed on tug boats off the coast of British Columbia to be considered. There is also the most important question of safety.

I just cannot understand how this recommendation could come from anybody who knows the coast line of British Columbia. We have literally hundreds of dangerous channels. During particular periods of the year we have very, very severe rain and fog conditions. In addition, there has been a radical change in the tug boat industry, not only with regard to the greater power and efficiency of the motors themselves but also in their speed and in the loads they tow. It is not so long ago that the large log booms were towed at approximately one and one half to two knots per hour, but now we have the new log barges carrying between 3,000 and 4,000 tons of logs being towed at between seven and eight knots per hour.

In view of the increased power—that is, the brake horsepower—in tug boats today, this matter of safety is mighty important. Many of these tug boats have been re-engined in the last two or three years.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps we may call it one o'clock.

Mr. Winch: Yes, Mr. Chairman; may I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Winch: When the committee adjourned at one o'clock I was discussing a certain phase of clause 9 which is of serious import to those engaged on coastal work in tow boats in British Columbia, and which seriously concerns that industry as far as the safety of its employees is concerned.

In the few minutes during which I spoke I made mention of the fact that in this clause we still have the legislation aligned with an antiquated term, namely "nominal horsepower". I made some mention of that, and I pointed out the difference between nominal horsepower and brake horsepower. I should like to return to this question of nominal horsepower and relate it to the point I had taken up at one o'clock, namely the safety of tow boat operations in British Columbia.

I do not think the advance made in the efficiency and power of the engines used in tow boats has generally been recognized. I am advised, and it was confirmed by my reading during the lunch hour, that the actual change in the relation between nominal horsepower and brake horsepower has been fantastic. I have discovered that an engine as fitted to a tow boat in 1935, a four cylinder diesel engine with a nominal horsepower rating of just over 10, was capable of developing 240 brake horsepower. Today a modern engine such as the Werkespor diesel of four cylinders, rated at 8.6 nominal horsepower, is capable of developing 800 brake horsepower. Thus a modern engine whose nominal horsepower is rated at less than an engine turned out in 1935 can develop 800 brake horsepower as compared with 240 horsepower, and the remarkable increase in the power of modern tow boats at once becomes apparent. Yet because of an insistence for some reason or another in clause 9 that the power of a propelling engine should be measured in terms of nominal horsepower, proper consideration is not given to the work of the engineers, the responsibility of the engineers, and the increasing necessity for paying attention to safety.

It is my understanding that at the present time in British Columbia there are approximately 160 tow boats which require two engineers or, as I believe the proper term has it, a continuous watch. If this provision of clause 9 which I am now discussing comes into effect it is my understanding that not more than 30 tow boats on the British Columbia coast will require a continuous watch involving two engineers. Irrespective of the increased efficiency and brake horsepower of diesel motors on tow boats, one of the basic reasons for the practical development of this greater power lies in automation, or the automatic control of these engines. The majority of those instruments and gauges operate on electricity. I should like all hon. members to realize that fact. I am aware of the situation, as I am an electrician by trade although perhaps a member of parliament by profession. I appreciate what can happen to automatic electrical equipment as the result of salt brine in the air and oily conditions in engine rooms, as well as because of disturbances through the vibrations caused by choppy water. Many of the new engines have automatic electrical gauges which require close examination and attention to make sure they are working properly. The checking of these instruments must be done by highly skilled individuals who understand their workings.

With the adoption of clause 9 of this bill between 50 and 100 engineers are going to be employed on a 12 hours on and 12 hours off basis in British Columbia. This will have the result that an engineer will be in the engine room for a 12 hours period, and during his 12 hours off duty the deckhand, the master or the mate will have to check the gauges. How will an inexperienced deckhand, or even a master or mate, be able to tell at a glance what is happening in the engine room below? I suggest they will not know because they are not trained to tell whether these highly automatic and delicate instruments are working properly.

That is my first point regarding safety. My second point has to do with the greatly increased efficiency and power of these engines which, as I pointed out earlier, on some occasions enable tow boats to travel from one and a half knots per hour to approximately eight knots per hour in British Columbia waters. I suggest the dangers involved are terrific. If this clause, particularly that portion regarding the nominal horsepower ratings is adopted, a situation will develop where the vast majority of tow boats operating off British Columbia will do so without engineers being on duty for at least 50 per cent of the time. Surely it cannot be expected that masters, mates or deckhands of these tow boats, who have other responsibilities, will know what these gauges and instruments indicate, particularly when their duties keep them in other parts of the ship than the engine room.

I should like to point out that the coast line of British Columbia is very tricky and dangerous from the point of navigation. I have had the privilege of living on the British Columbia coast for some 50 years. I have travelled along the coast on innumerable occasions from the Fraser river on the south to the Nass river on the north, by C.P.R. and C.N.R. steamship and by Union Steamship as well as by fishing boat, and know the situation which exists there. There are hundreds upon hundreds of passengers carried along this coast, to say nothing of the passengers carried on the inland waters which are plied mainly by tow boats twisting and turning up the river.

I do not intend to be derogatory to British Columbia in any way when I say there is quite a bit of fog, rain and stormy weather there, but that is the fact. As a result of this situation the masters and mates of these vessels must focus their attention, particularly during storms, on the navigation aspect rather than the operation of the engine. I think it is well known that in past years these masters have depended on echo sound to know where they were in these channels. They did this by blowing their whistle and counting the seconds until the echo was heard. In order to do this successfully one must give careful concentration. I understand that many ships today are equipped with radar, but even with that equipment the master and mate must direct their attention to those instruments and not the instruments in the wheel house which show the condition of the engine. However, the adoption of this clause will mean that the masters and mates, and in certain cases even the deckhands, will have to divide their attention between their normal duties and those of the engineer who is not there.

It is my understanding that the law requires that there must be a deckhand, who very often is a young boy, on watch on deck as well as the master or mate in the wheelhouse. I suggest that regulation has been adopted for a purpose, and because of the requirement under this clause that the deckhand, master or mate must check these engine room instruments, that purpose will be lost, to say nothing of the fact that these individuals are not trained in the reading and understanding of the instruments.

When considering the whole situation which will develop as a result of the adoption of clause 9, particularly in view of the conditions which exist off the coast of British Columbia, one can only conclude that the provisions of this clause are the result of thoughtless recommendation, not only from the point of view of diminished employment but also having regard to safety.

I sincerely ask the Minister of Transport to acquiesce to my suggestion that this clause be not pursued at this session, but that it be postponed until further detailed consideration has been given to it. I suggest to the minister that the officials of his department should consult fully with representatives of the national association of marine engineers of Canada. I regret very much that representatives of that association, who are vitally concerned with this subject not only from the point of view of employment but in regard to safety as well, did not have the opportunity of appearing before the standing committee which considered this bill. I do not understand why they were not invited to attend, because I know that representatives of that national association have had correspondence with officials of the minister's department for over a year. In spite of that fact they were not advised in any way by the officials of the department as to when this bill was to be considered by that standing committee of this house.

This is most unfortunate, because to my knowledge they are definitely reasonable and sensible men. I feel certain they could have contributed a good deal, and could have explained far better than I can why they are so concerned over this part of clause 9, as regards both safety and employment. In view of all the circumstances, I cannot understand why the minister would insist on this clause going through.

As I have said, this is a most serious matter to the tow boat industry in British Columbia. This committee should not be interested in the additional profits which the tow boat owners would get by laying off from 50 to 100 engineers. Our interest should be a recognition of the increased efficiency, power and automatic controls of the new diesel engines. It should be a recognition of the fact that a 24-hour watch in the engine room is required. There is a requirement for engineers who not only know their engines but also the equipment and special controls, and who have the time to check them constantly so that the salt brine, the oil and the rocking disturbance on a tow boat off the coast of British Columbia do not throw their gauges and instruments out of kilter. There should be somebody on duty 24 hours a day who knows exactly what is taking place in the engine room.

I think the association is making a most reasonable and responsible request, and I hope it will be agreed to by the minister who is in charge of piloting this bill through the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just say a word on the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East. I was particularly interested in what he said because certain representations have been made to me along the lines of the subject matter on which the hon. member spoke. I learned that there has been a great deal of correspondence between the national association of marine engineers of Canada and the minister over quite a period of time dealing with the matter brought up by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

When I was approached in connection with it I asked why it was that representations were not made to the committee, and was told they did not know the committee was sitting. I can readily understand why that would be, since they live at the other end of the country in Vancouver and when the committee sat very little notice was given. I am anxious to know what answer the minister will be giving to this representation, and I hope he will find it possible to give it careful if not sympathetic consideration now.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, earlier in the discussion of this bill—and I am thinking particularly now of paragraph (c) of subclause 2 of clause 9—I expressed some concern over the application of the rule insisting on having engineers on fishing boats which were powered with engines of more than 10 nominal horsepower. First I should explain that although I recognize the need for properly qualified engineers on the larger boats which go to sea, at the same time with respect to the inshore fishing fleet consisting of small boats operating in coastal waters, which are manned by crews composed of fishermen, frequently a combination of a father and son or brothers and others, it would be very difficult, in fact it would be impossible, for those boats to have certified engineers.

However, I am glad to be informed that nominal horsepower in its relationship to brake horsepower is so varied as to be almost without relationship, if I may use that phrase. For instance, I am told that a diesel engine rated a 165 brake horsepower at 2,000 revolutions per minute, with a bore of 4.25 inches, and six cylinders would have a nominal horsepower of 1.8. I am given to understand that the nominal horsepower formula is the diameter of the cylinder squared times the number of cylinders divided by 60. A high speed engine develops its horsepower through speed rather than size, and its nominal horsepower would be lower than that of a heavy duty engine with comparatively large cylinders and low r.p.m.'s. The latter would develop its horsepower at a slower speed, and its nominal horsepower would be greater. In either case it is very unlikely that a small inshore fishing boat would have more than 10 nominal horsepower.

I was also happy to be informed that engineers for fishing boats would be rated at least in part according to their practical experience. The only request I have to make in that connection is that some statement be made to clarify this for the public, and I have in mind in particular the fishermen in my district. I ask that this be clarified so there will be no misunderstanding of what nominal horsepower really means and what the requirements will be for engineers for fishing boats.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, we have just had a very interesting although not too technical observation on this matter but I do not want to get too involved in a discussion of the different types of horsepower. All I want to say is that so far as we are concerned in the department we must have fixed horsepower ratings on which to base the requirements of the act.

Brake horsepower, of course, can be influenced by revolutions and cylinder pressure, both of which can be varied at the will of the operator of an engine, and is quite unsuitable as a criterion for this reason. If we adopted brake horsepower as the criterion of measurement we could have two engines of the same size rated at different brake horsepower, because it can be varied by different revolutions. Nominal horsepower might not be so correctly indicative of the actual horsepower, but it is based on cylinder diameter and the number of cylinders, which are non-variable factors. I am just stating this to explain why we have gone by the nominal horsepower rather than the brake horsepower.

However, Mr. Chairman, at the request of the owners the department sent to the west coast an experienced marine engineer who has been aboard the tugs themselves. These tugs are now propelled by modern diesel engines, and they are fitted with a full set of automatic devices by means of which the man on the bridge can keep himself advised of what is going on in the engine room. Furthermore, the tendency toward breakdowns has been considerably reduced. Indeed, the machinery is now constructed in such a way that when repairs are necessary they can be carried out only at a site where full repair or replacement facilities exist. The report we have received from this very experienced engineer inspector leads us to believe that there is less and less necessity for an engineer to be on the watch at all times.

This is the information upon which we have acted. However, Mr. Chairman, I must say that I was impressed by the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I would not like the engineers to feel that we were pushing something on them when they had no chance to study the matter and no opportunity to appear before the committee. Of course it can be stated that this should be a matter for collective bargaining between the owners and the engineers, and I imagine that in the near future it will be. However, I hesitate to ask the committee to pass this clause. According to the hon. member the engineers had not been properly advised of the study of this matter by the committee. As hon. members know, these committee sittings are more or less last minute decisions, and it is always very difficult to give advance notice to the various people who express a desire to appear before a committee.

On the other hand, these engineers are on the west coast, rather a long distance from Ottawa. I certainly would not like it to be said that I pressed these new regulations upon the engineers, especially since they are closely related to their employment. I do not know how many engineers might be laid off if these new regulations were enacted, so I intend to ask the committee to postpone action on this clause. At the same time, however, I should like to give notice to the engineers and to the house that the next time the Canada Shipping Act is brought forward for amendment, a similar amendment will be introduced. We must make sure at that time that the engineers come before the committee and express their views. I would therefore ask the committee to drop paragraph 3 of clause 9.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the Minister of Veterans Affairs would compose an amendment to cover this change, and put it in writing.

Mr. Churchill: Very well.

Mr. Winch: While this is being done, may I express my appreciation of the attitude of the minister, Mr. Chairman, in meeting the request of the marine engineers. I appreciate it, and I know that they will appreciate it a great deal. May I ask the minister whether it is clause 9 (3) (c) that we must delete, or whether it is 9 (2) (c)?

Mr. Balcer: It is only subclause 3.

Mr. Churchill: I move:

That subclause 3 of clause 9 of the bill be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 9 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 10 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 15—Penalty.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, during the noon adjournment I had a short conversation with the hon. member for Greenwood. He said he was extremely interested in the discussion which took place during the earlier part of the morning because of the pilots who used to shoot the rapids when he lived near Kingston. I too have some very vivid recollections of this, and I wonder if I may be allowed to put on Hansard the experience of two Canadian men, Mr. T. R. Glover and Mr. D. D. Calvin, two Kingston men, so we will learn how they shot the rapids at Lachine, in the days of the drams years ago.

Presently, the long dram undulated over the first smooth rounded waves of the rapids, a moment more and we had fairly entered. As the dram hit the first big waves of the sharper descent the steersmen hauled in their oars and ran back to escape the water as it boiled over the bow of the dram, whose whole fabric bent and strained to conform to the long waves of the rapids—we dashed down the main "pitch" in what seemed no more than a few seconds. There was a curious illusion that the great barely submerged rocks were rushing upstream as we passed them; the heavy timber bumped and thudded underfoot, the water spurted up in great jets as the sides of two pieces of it struck flat together.

For those who have shot the rapids that is a most interesting and, I believe, accurate description. I raise the matter on this clause so the minister will realize what work of importance the pilots have to do in any section of the river but more particularly in this one, for the reasons I gave this morning. It strikes me that they must be highly qualified people in order to carry through these difficult waters ships of the kind, length and draft mentioned earlier.

I wonder whether the minister would not give consideration to treating this clause in the same way as he dealt with clause No. 9. I am sure that the pilots and those who sit on this side of the house would be very grateful to him if this clause were withdrawn for the time being, until a definite arrangement on it is made with the United States.

Mr. Balcer: I think there is a wide difference between the two clauses. With respect to clause 9 a major aspect of employment arose. My impression is that the employment of a number of engineers on the west coast was at stake, and also that these engineers or their association did not have an opportunity to express their views before the committee. With regard to clause 15, as far as the pilots in the Cornwall district are concerned no question of employment or of salary arises. Also, I think the pilots themselves or their representatives appeared before the committee and had all the opportunity in the world to express their views, to be questioned and to give their opinions on the whole matter. I therefore think there is a great difference between the two clauses. I really believe that clause 15 will not hurt the pilots. It is not unfair to anybody. I believe it will not hurt anyone either now or in the future.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Chevrier: The pilots, of course, do not agree with that statement. As the minister knows, they made representations against it and they made their position quite clear. However, I am not going to pursue the matter other than to ask one or two questions, if I may do so. Can the minister tell me why this section was not included in chapter 40 of last year's statutes which introduced a new section, namely the pilotage section, as an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act? Why was it not introduced at that time?

Mr. Balcer: The amendment last year dealt purely with great lakes waters. The Cornwall-Montreal district is one that deals only with strictly Canadian waters. That is the reason it was not included.

Mr. Chevrier: Is Canada getting anything in exchange for this concession to United States vessels?

Mr. Balcer: Quite lengthy discussions have taken place between our officials and United States officials. As is well known, as to pilotage in the great lakes, the St. Lawrence river and practically everywhere else in the world, very complicated and very technical matters are always involved. My officials and the United States officials carried on lengthy discussions and both sides tried to act in a most fair way.

We obtained some extremely advantageous results as far as we were concerned. One that comes to my mind is with regard to the lake Michigan area, which was not restricted. These are purely United States waters. I could say that this is an example of give and take or of the consideration that the United States has given to us. Also they have been very co-operative in determining the number of United States pilots who are going to be brought into the picture. They could have asked that on the great lakes half of the piloting be done by United States pilots and half by Canadian pilots. Instead of doing that they accepted a gradual increase in the proportion over a period of five years. They did that instead of asking for it immediately. I think those are fairly important considerations on top of all the others I mentioned this morning.

Mr. Chevrier: One of the considerations the minister has just mentioned is that compulsory pilotage will be exempted for Canadian vessels on lake Michigan, which is purely a United States lake. My question is this. Has the United States congress enacted legislation similar to that which the Canadian parliament is now considering?

Mr. Balcer: In the agreement on pilotage between the two countries the lake Michigan area was expressly exempted, or rather the exemption was withdrawn in favour of Canadians and it was expressed in that agreement. I am also informed that it is provided for in the United States legislation.

Mr. Chevrier: I have the great lakes pilotage agreement, and in it there seems to be no reference to lake Michigan.

Mr. Balcer: I am informed that lake Michigan is designated in the agreement. I have not the agreement at hand, but I am informed by my officials that lake Michigan is mentioned in it, that the waters of lake Michigan are considered as designated waters and that Canadian pilots may operate in the designated waters.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the minister point to the legislation passed by congress which exempts Canadian ships from pilotage dues on lake Michigan?

Mr. Balcer: I do not think we can find an exactly parallel example that would fit the picture. What the present amendment consists of is an exemption from pilotage dues. As to the agreement and the pilotage legislation in the United States, it deals with pilotage. There is nothing in the agreement which forces Canadian ships to take pilots on board in lake Michigan, which is a designated water. I have the text of the agreement here, and it says:

Registered vessels—

Mr. Chevrier: From what page is the minister reading?

Mr. Balcer: Pages 1 and 2 of the agreement:

Registered vessels of the United States and foreign vessels navigating United States waters of the great lakes which are not designated by the president by proclamation are required by the act to have on board a United States registered pilot or a Canadian registered pilot or other officer qualified for the waters concerned who will be available to direct the navigation of the vessel in such undesignated waters at the discretion of and subject to the customary authority of the master.

The secretary of commerce of the United States is responsible for carrying out those provisions of the act relating to the registration of United States pilots—

And so on.

Mr. Chevrier: Reading that very quickly, Mr. Chairman, I am not so sure that it covers the position as enunciated by the minister.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I think if you read it slowly, it will.

Mr. Chevrier: Why was it that the equivalent of section 15 was not introduced into this agreement? In other words, why should it be necessary for Canada to implement this agreement by way of legislation, whereas the United States, if the minister is correct—and I have some doubt that he is—implements it by the agreement to which he has referred? What is good for the United States surely ought to be good enough for Canada.

Mr. Balcer: As I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, it is not exactly the same situation. Navigation on lake Michigan is very different to navigation from Cornwall to Montreal. Everybody who is at all familiar with navigation on the great lakes will appreciate the difference.

The agreement that was arrived at between our two countries on the matter of pilotage in the great lakes area was extremely advantageous as far as Canada was concerned. All these pilotage districts are well defined, and consideration was given at all times to the status of our pilots. It was a very satisfactory agreement. As I said earlier, the United States could have asked for parity in the number of pilots right off the bat and it would have created extreme hardship for our pilots, because with regard to these pilotage districts the committee will realize that if suddenly, in a place where we had 20 pilots, we had to cut that number in half it would mean that ten pilots would be unemployed.

The United States saw our point of view and agreed to this agreement between the two countries, which agreement is quite advantageous to Canada. I think it is fair, and it does not create unemployment for or jeopardize the jobs of Canadian pilots. At the same time it does not impose on United States ships the obligation to pay money that they have never had to pay since confederation or since there has been navigation in these waters. Actually the pilots of Canada are much better off than they were prior to November, 1960, and at the same time we have not created complications and unnecessary hardship for United States shipping, which would have been unfair in the circumstances.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister say why the effect or the wording of section 15 was not put into the agreement, rather than being made an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, in November, 1960 we explained very clearly to the pilots that we would have to do this. They were not taken by surprise. We told them at the time we would have to do it. With regard to the reason for adopting this procedure, I will be in a position to tell the committee this in just a moment.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, while the minister is considering the matter I should like to say that the United States is getting certain advantages by way of agreement. Is the minister ready to deal with the point?

Mr. Balcer: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Of course the only way we can withdraw exemption from payment of pilotage dues is through an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act. There is no other way as far as we are concerned. That is the reason we did it by amendment to the statute. That is also why in November, 1960 I told the pilots we were going to do this and obtained their voluntary agreement to this exemption of United States ships.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the minister says he told the pilots. The pilots accept that, but they reply that they were certainly led to believe all along that this would not be implemented by way of legislation; that the position would remain from the month of November until such time as the agreement had been negotiated between Canada and the United States. I refer to the agreement which was mentioned during the committee hearings.

After the agreement was negotiated it was announced by the minister, and they had no opportunity to make any further representations. The point I am trying to make now is that if it is proper for Canada to exempt from pilotage dues by way of legislation, surely the United States should do the same. After all, this matter is just as important to one country as to the other. Instead, if the minister is correct, Canadian vessels are exempted from the payment of pilotage dues on lake Michigan by way of an agreement.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier the United States does not have legislation parallel to this, because as far as lake Michigan is concerned their legislation covers exemption from pilotage and it is not an exemption from pilotage dues. That is the difference. As far as Canadian ships are concerned, they were exempted from compulsory pilotage on lake Michigan by legislation. As I said, it is not exactly the same thing because their legislation is not parallel with that in Canada. On the St. Lawrence we have compulsory pilotage dues, and as far as lake Michigan is concerned they talk about compulsory pilotage, period.

My hon. friend has said the pilots did not have a chance to express their views and make representations. I do not agree with that at all. We have met with the pilots many times; we have received briefs from them; they have appeared before the committee, and I can assure my hon. friend and the committee that they had every opportunity to express their views and give us their opinion of this legislation. As I said earlier, not only were they advised that this amendment would be forthcoming when the bill was introduced in the house, but it was explained to them very clearly in November, 1960 that we intended to do this. That is when we requested the voluntary exemption of the United States ships and that is what they have been doing since the end of navigation last year.

Mr. Chevrier: One has only to look at the minutes of the committee meeting to see what the position really is. If hon. members turn to volume No. 6 of the minutes of evidence of that committee they will find that the position is entirely different to that which the minister has suggested. One would think, from what the minister has said, that the pilots were delighted by this clause but, in fact, they are, of course, opposed to it. Anyway, I am not satisfied with the minister's explanation and that is why I propose to move, seconded by Mr. Granger:

That clause 15 be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 9; nays, 36.

Mr. Chevrier: During the course of the proceedings in committee it was established that section 346(e) of the act already exempts Canadian ships and it was clearly stated that it was a redundancy to try to exempt Canadian ships once again by virtue of the wording in this clause. Hence, I desire to move seconded by Mr. Granger:

That the words "Canada or" in line 26 be deleted so that line 26 of clause 15 (ee) would read "ships registered in the United States".

Mr. Balcer: It is true that this matter was brought up in the committee. At that time the suggestion was turned down, but my officials have made a thorough study of this point and the government would be agreeable to making this change. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the words "Canada or" are not necessary and that they should be deleted.

Amendment agreed to: Yeas, 46; nays, nil.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has been more sympathetic to the second amendment and I wonder whether he would give consideration to the following suggestion. In the course of the committee hearings he indicated that this clause would affect the Cornwall district only, that is to say, Montreal-Cornwall-St. Regis. I wonder whether he could give the same favourable consideration to this amendment which I propose to move now:

That all the words after "in" in line 34 be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "while operating in the Montreal-Cornwall-St. Regis pilotage district".

The effect of this would be to leave the operation of the pilots upstream covered by the amendment which was brought in last year under chapter 40 when there was established a pilotage section in the great lakes as an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act. It would seem to me that there might be a redundancy there, too. Since the minister felt that this affected one district only, I wonder whether he would not consider accepting this amendment to the Canada Shipping Act thereby limiting it to the Cornwall district alone.

Mr. Balcer: I am not objecting to this for the mere sake of objecting, but I am informed that there is a legal technicality here which would make it difficult for the government to agree with the hon. member. Apparently there is a difference as far as the Cornwall pilotage district and the St. Lawrence river district are concerned. The districts below Montreal have all been established by act of parliament while what is called the Cornwall pilotage district has been incorporated by order in council. I am advised that if we were to accept this amendment it might lead to the creation of some legal difficulties due to the fact that these pilotage districts have not been incorporated in the same way. For example, the name might be changed, or the boundaries might be changed and that could create difficulties in the future.

Mr. Chevrier: Does not this wording now cover everything right up to the head of the great lakes?

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I should like to ask the hon. member for Laurier a question. How would his amendment work if instead of defining the present seaway limit of the exemption by a geographical line we were to define it by a pilotage area or district and then that district were extended far to the east? Would the hon. member want the exemption to extend, possibly, well east of Montreal island if the area of the district were changed?

Mr. Chevrier: I think I can answer that very quickly by repeating what the minister has said. There is a difference between this pilotage district, in that it was established by an order in council whereas the others were established by act of parliament.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): It is still safer to establish them by geographical limit.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Chevrier: No, I am waiting for an answer from the minister.

Mr. Balcer: I am advised that this is purely a form of drafting. The other part of the old district from Cornwall to Kingston is part of the great lakes pilotage area, which is why it is worded this way rather than as the hon. member suggests. For that reason I must—

Mr. Chevrier: Accept the amendment?

Mr. Balcer: —vote against the amendment.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 12; nays, 35.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 16 to 28 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 29—Regulations.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, in regard to clause 29 I understand that the governor in council is given the authority to make regulations to prevent the pollution of the air by products of combustion from ships. It also provides a penalty for violation of the regulations. I am interested in the pollution of water as well as the pollution of air by ships.

In the Niagara district the cities of Welland and St. Catharines, as well as two towns, buy water for domestic purposes from the St. Lawrence seaway authority, that is, from the canal. The water is filtered and chlorinated. The Welland canal is a confined waterway. The flow of water is controlled and is, therefore, not nearly equal to the flow that would attain from a river of equivalent width and depth. Ships discharge raw sewage directly into the canal, as they do in the great lakes. Very often this discharge of sewage takes place in the canal at some docks which are very close to the intakes of domestic water supply. Very often the ships are there for a number of days loading and unloading. In view of this situation I wonder whether the minister would give some consideration to a provision preventing the discharge of sewage into our great lakes and canals, and particularly in those confined areas from which domestic water supplies are obtained, as well as in those areas in close proximity to bathing and swimming areas. If we are going to clean up our international joint waterway, I think we should do something to prevent the ships making use of this waterway by discharging raw sewage directly into it.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment ot this clause. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Niagara Falls, that the clause be amended by inserting a new section, paragraph (b), as follows:

For regulating and preventing the pollution of the water by sewage, oil or any other chemical compound,

The present paragraph (b) would then become paragraph (c).

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, my department is extremely sympathetic toward the arguments presented by the hon. member. I should like to remind hon. members of this committee that this government has already made an effort in an attempt to prevent pollution of our waters. It has offered special grants and advantages to municipalities to help them combat water pollution. Section 495 of the act also deals with pollution of water by oil. We should like to prevent pollution of our air by products of combustion from ships, and I am in agreement with the hon. member in his suggestion that we should attempt to prevent ships from polluting our waters by the discharge of garbage, oil, sewage and the like. This matter is already under consideration by my department in conjunction with the Department of National Health and Welfare. I would ask the committee to await further legislation on this matter either at the next session of parliament as an amendment to the Canada Shipping Act, or by way of some other legislation, because if we are to police the enforcement of such a regulation that would emanate from my hon. friend's amendment it might present some difficulties. We should like to have a chance to look at this. My officials would like to study the problem more closely with the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare in order to come up with something that will be sensible and at the same time really effective. This is why I ask the committee not to agree to this amendment at this time but to give us a chance to study more fully all the implications of this subject so that it could be policed in a proper way and really enforced in an efficient manner.

Mr. McMillan: I am not asking for legislation; I am just asking the governor in council to be empowered to make regulations when and if they wish to use them.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 12; nays, 34.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 29 carry?

[Mr. McMillan.]

Mr. Balcer: Just before it carries I want to draw the attention of the committee to Bill No. C-86, to amend the Fisheries Act. Clause 4 of this bill states:

The governor in council may by order deem any substance to be a deleterious substance for the purposes of subsection (2).

Subclause (5) reads:

Every person who violates any provision of this section is guilty of an offence and is liable upon summary conviction,

(a) for the first offence, to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and not more than one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term of not less than one month and not more than six months, or to both such fine and imprisonment; and

(b) for a second and each subsequent offence, to a fine of not less than three hundred dollars and not more than two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term of not less than two months and not more than twelve months, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

In the long run this clause will probably have exactly the same effect as the amendment which my hon. friend wanted us to include in our legislation. If we have legislation and regulations under one department it would be extremely complicated if two or three departments were trying to police such legislation or regulations at the same time. I think the new bill to amend the Fisheries Act, particularly this clause, will have the effect of preventing pollution of our navigable waters by raw sewage or garbage.

On clause 31—Observance of regulations.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, clause 31 says that every owner, master and person having the conduct of a vessel or raft shall obey the collision regulations, and so on. Does the term "raft" apply also to rafts of logs and things of that sort being towed or free of power, say floating? Do masters of the vessels towing logs have to comply with this clause? If so, what is done to make certain that the statute is obeyed with respect to minor and inland waters?

Mr. Balcer: This clause applies to those rafts whether they are towed or not. I am sure it is the intention to cover rafts which carry logs. As far as the meaning of the clause and the way it is applied are concerned, it makes the owner, master or person having the conduct of such vessel or raft liable for damages. This is the way in which this clause can have some teeth, if I understand the hon. member's question correctly.

Mr. Herridge: What lights are required by law on a boom of logs being towed by a tug at night?

Mr. Balcer: We would have to have a look at the regulations. We have not that information with us, Mr. Chairman.

Clauses 32 and 33 agreed to.

On clause 34—Extension of limitation of liability.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): This clause deals with the extension of the limitation of liability. It was drawn to my attention that there appeared to be some doubt whether it applied to the man who was master and also owner of a vessel. I believe the officials were going to give it some consideration. Are they now in a position to give us the information? Can the minister let us know what has happened in that regard?

Mr. Balcer: Yes. When this clause was considered in the standing committee a question was raised, as my hon. friend says, whether or not limitation would apply to the liability of the master or member who is also the owner. My officers have expressed the view that the wording was such as to achieve this purpose. However, they undertook to discuss the matter further with the drafting officers of the Department of Justice. After such consultation they have now suggested a change in wording so that lines 44 and 45 would read as follows:

> Actual fault or privity and to any person acting in the capacity of master or member of the crew of a ship and to any servant of the owner or of any person—

I believe that if the clause were so worded it would be clear that there is a limit to the liability of any person arising out of an act or an omission of a person in his capacity as master or member, regardless of the fault or privity. For this purpose, I would ask my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to move the appropriate amendment.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 35 to 39 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 40—Application of penalties.

Mr. Herridge: This is a rather interesting clause from my point of view. It reads, in part:

> Where a fine is imposed under this act for which no specific application is provided, the court, justice of the peace or magistrate imposing the fine may direct that the whole or any portion of it may
> (a) be applied in compensating any person for any wrong or damage that may have been sustained by the act or default in respect of which the fine is imposed;

My point is this: When a person whose craft was injured in a collision with an unlighted boom or barge, and the accident was the responsibility of the owner of this barge or boom, makes a charge to the magistrate, it is possible that the case will come before a local justice of the peace without very much knowledge of the circumstances. This seems to be the only place where a person can lay a charge against a person for a violation of the law and then collect the fine. As I see it the amount of the fine could be paid to the person who is laying the charge.

Now, this could influence the magistrate or justice of the peace in either one of two directions. First, because of his lack of knowledge of the circumstances he may levy an improper fine in lieu of damages or he may impose a fine having in mind the fact that this person ought to be compensated, and may lessen or increase the fine as a result of his opinion. The minister could perhaps explain why this section is included in this act.

Mr. Balcer: This clause has been there for years and years, and I am informed that it has never been used. Actually, if the hon. member reads the clause itself, he will find that a person does not even have to lay the charge himself to collect the money. I am informed that although this clause has been in the act for years, it has never been applied to the knowledge of my officials.

Mr. Herridge: I am very glad I raised the question because I know of persons whose small craft have suffered damages from other craft, but they were so poor they did not feel they could take action. I shall now make sure that they all know the law.

DRUGS

PROVISION FOR CONTROL OF DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF NARCOTICS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 7, consideration in committee of Bill No.

C-100, to provide for the control of narcotic drugs—Mr. Monteith (Perth)—Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Winch: At the time this matter was last under discussion, the Minister of Justice gave an explanation as to why the government could not accept or take any action on my recommendation concerning voluntary commitment. I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare intends to say something about this matter, and for that reason I should like to take a couple of minutes of the committee's time before he speaks.

I was quite intrigued by the main argument that was used by the Minister of Justice in opposing the proposal relating to voluntary commitment for the treatment of narcotic addicts. He used, as an example, the mental health laws. He cited the fact that if one were mentally ill one had to be committed for treatment by law. I thought that in putting forth that argument he killed his own line of reasoning. I do not know what the legislative provisions are across Canada relating to mental health, but I do know the provisions in British Columbia. Up until a few years ago if one were mentally ill, the only way the individual could be handled was to have him committed to the mental institution by law. He was either committed by the order of a magistrate and one doctor who was obliged to sign the committal papers or he was committed by the signature of two doctors. However, that is not the situation now. If a person is suffering from a mental disability he is not obliged, automatically and axiomatically, to go through the process of being committed to the institution as an insane person. He can have a voluntary commitment, a commitment whereby the person knows that he requires treatment just the same as the person who has a certain condition in the way of disease or broken bones knows he must have treatment.

In British Columbia—and I am just using this province as an example because I know so well the situation and the legislation—instead of having to go under the impact of the law and be committed as an insane person, on examination by a doctor who feels that person requires some treatment for a mental disorder the person can, on the examination and recognition of the doctor, voluntarily sign himself or herself into the Crease clinic, just the same as at a general hospital for an acute disease or disability. He signs himself into a specific clinic of psychological medicine. It is all in the same area as the mental hospital but it is an entirely different building. On a doctor's recommendation, as I say, he voluntarily commits himself.

If, when I was speaking of voluntary commitment the Minister of Justice or the Minister of National Health and Welfare was under the impression that I thought he could just walk in and say, "I am a narcotic addict and I want treatment", let me say at once that I did not mean that at all. What I meant was this. If a person is a narcotic addict and wants to get that monkey off his back, to use an expression which I used the other day and which is common in the terminology of an addict; and if he sees a doctor and the doctor examines him and says that he is an addict, then the question I ask is this. Instead of the situation being as it will be without change in this present bill No. C-100, namely that of having to be actually under the Criminal Code or under this act picked up, committed and sentenced, why can there not be something whereby we can have a voluntary commitment as a narcotic addict, as we now have it in British Columbia and I believe in many of the other provinces, a commitment on a voluntary basis without going through that stigma, shall I say, of a commitment basically and actually under the law?

I just want to emphasize, as I tried to do the other day, that to many people a great deal depends upon a psychological attitude and approach. I feel most strongly that, where we have those who want to help themselves to be cured, there should be in our law some means whereby they can do it, or some provision that will differentiate between them and those whom the law is obliged to pick up and to compel to go through treatment. I feel quite strongly about this matter. I feel quite certain that I am correct about the psychological viewpoint of that type of person. When the minister speaks on this matter I hope he will tell us whether or not, on review, it is possible to cover that aspect which I feel to be of such great importance.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I wonder whether I might say a few words at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to deal with this matter, if I may.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): That is perfectly all right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I regret that I was not able to be here when this bill was introduced. I should like to say a few words on this bill which I, along with other members in this committee, strongly support. It surprised me a little bit that the initiative in this matter seemed to have been taken by the Minister of Justice. By saying that I am not implying that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has not shown great interest in this matter. However, it always puzzled me why, in a matter of this sort involving essentially matters having to do with the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Justice should have emerged as the spokesman for the administration. The first public intimation that was given of this measure was when the Minister of Justice was in British Columbia about two years ago. There, at a press conference, he announced the government's intention to proceed with legislation of this kind. At the time I suggested to the minister that I hoped this was a matter about which he had carefully consulted the Minister of National Health and Welfare because it was a matter that concerned the Department of National Health and Welfare in a large degree, although not entirely. I am therefore glad that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is here today to assume the functions that were so clandestinely and later so demonstrably taken away from him by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Don't overdo it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think this bill marks a progressive step forward. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will have had the opportunity of having a great deal of background material in the department on this matter. He will have had the valuable experience of his officials, particularly the deputy minister and the solicitor of the department. In the bill there are some features that cause me to ask some questions and also to make one or two observations.

The idea of detention, as is provided in clause 15 of the bill, is I think an important and desirable step. However, if we are going to make fully effective the policy that is revealed in this bill I think we shall have to appreciate the fact that certain things not covered in the bill will have to be done. I am sure both ministers have had an opportunity, either directly or vicariously, of learning of the work that is being done in this field in Lexington, Kentucky by the government of the United States. I myself had the opportunity of visiting that institution with officials of the department, of ascertaining the extent of the success of the experiment there and also of learning of some of the inadequacies not of the care provided but of some of the follow-up practices which are not as effective as they might be.

It cannot be said that the detention, imposed or voluntary, of a drug addict in an institution such as that in Lexington is necessarily 100 per cent effective. One of the reasons is the inadequate follow-up system that is or at least was practised in that institution. Under this bill it is not contemplated that one found guilty of trafficking in drugs shall necessarily spend his full life in an institution. If that was contemplated by the use of the word "indeterminate" there would be cause for further interrogation.

It would be interesting to learn from the Minister of National Health and Welfare what system will be used to follow up cases of drug addicts detained under the provisions of this act following judicial determination. The problem in this country is not as great as it is in the United States, because we have relatively fewer addicts. I think we have some 3,000 drug addicts in Canada.

If we are going to do an effective job in providing for treatment and rehabilitation while these people are detained, knowing the number of cases where drug addicts resort to their former practice after having abandoned it while being detained, we will want to establish an effective follow-up system.

The provincial governments have a responsibility in this matter and indeed they can play a very great part. After all, the health services of the federal government are limited in so far as treatment facilities are concerned. Under the provinces are to be found the most effective and efficient methods of providing for the health care of the people of our country. A policy of decentralization in that regard is the pattern of our country. I am sure no one wishes to disturb that.

It would be interesting to know what the prospects are for provincial co-operation, particularly from the provinces where the largest numbers of drug addicts are to be found. For instance, is the province of British Columbia prepared to co-operate in some way? If it did co-operate it could meet the point which the hon. member for Vancouver East has just raised.

With regard to voluntary commitment, I must say that in principle I fully share the hon. member's concern and his objective, as I think do most hon. members. The proposal is that individuals who have been found guilty of drug trafficking and who are placed in detention will serve the punishment provided for under the act but at the same time, it is presumed, because of the general statement made by the minister, they will be given curative attention; they will receive the rehabilitation processes that have been devised for users of drugs.

This will be a form of care which will cost some money, but wholly justifiable. We do not want unnecessary duplication if we can avoid doing so. It seems to me that, depending upon the type of institution, it would be wise for the provinces to co-operate fully, rather than to set up a series of institutions to serve a limited population.

If an individual suffering from drug addiction who had not committed a crime wishes to take advantage of this treatment, it seems to me there ought to be means provided to bring that about. I think one of the difficulties is the constitutional difficulty. In so far as this parliament is concerned there may be difficulty, under this act, in making it legislatively possible for an individual to receive treatment in such an institution. I doubt that the parliament of Canada would have the power—and perhaps the Minister of Justice will give us his views about this—to provide that an individual who had not committed a crime and who was not being charged with a crime in connection with trafficking should be placed in an institution, pursuant to a federal act.

Mr. Drysdale: Does not clause 19 cover that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think clause 19 covers the point. It covers the objective, but it does not cover the point the hon. member for Vancouver East has in mind. However, there is no reason why an arrangement, in accordance with the provisions of clause 19, could not be provided so as to enable individuals who are suffering from drug addiction and who had not been convicted of trafficking to receive the benefit of the desired treatment. It seems to me this would depend on the kind of co-operation the provinces are prepared to provide. In any event, I think this would meet the hon. member's objective.

I agree with the hon. member that individuals in this country who are suffering from drug addiction should be given the opportunity, as a result of voluntary effort backed up by the proper medical certification, to enter institutions and receive the kind of rehabilitation treatment which is now proposed.

The institution at Lexington which I mentioned a moment ago is essentially a jail; it is a penitentiary; it has bars; it has all the physical properties that one usually attaches to the more modern jail as compared with places which have not been influenced very much by prison reform. There are departments in the institution where there is proper segregation of those who might be regarded as dangerous from those who are not. In any event, those are details that could be worked out.

If it is not possible to work out an arrangement with the provinces along those lines, it would be hoped that the federal government would be prepared, perhaps under the national health program if it were necessary, to share with the provinces, as was proposed in 1956 in the case of British Columbia, the cost of treating drug addicts who have not been charged with trafficking in drugs pursuant to the narcotic and drug control act. I hope that when the minister replies he will give the hon. member for Vancouver East and other hon. members some encouragement with regard to the drug addict who is not charged with trafficking.

When we come to the various clauses of the bill we will have further observations to make. I make this observation now, however. It is unusual to find in a bill of this kind no explanation of the various clauses and no indication as to where an amendment is being made to the existing act, even though the existing act is being repealed entirely. It would have been helpful—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): That is the reason.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, that is the reason, but often times when there is the repeal of an act an explanation is given of the differences between the two acts. In any event, there are no explanatory notes at all in this bill. When we come to the various clauses we will indicate how valuable this might have been.

I am sure there is wide approval of the general purposes of this bill. The bill will go a long way in the treatment of drug addicts, I am sure, even though the experiment of their treatment in institutions is not as yet a fully established fact. If we have the kind of follow-up system that is necessary, this could be an important reform and an important step forward.

The government has our full support in the initiative it has taken, but I would simply point out that if this follow-up is not pursued, much of the good will be lost, as I am sure the minister's officials would confirm. I have seen records of individuals in the institution at Lexington who had left the institution after a period of two years fully cured and fully relieved of the terrible disability under which they suffered. I have known other cases where as a result of a failure to follow this thing through, people have left the institution, gone out into the community and then reverted to their former habits of addiction.

The hon. member himself drew an analogy in terms of people receiving treatment for mental illness. As we all know, in the case of mental illness today the process of cure and rehabilitation does not end when a patient is discharged from an institution. Many people, after a period of confinement, are allowed to live outside where social workers and others follow their cases through and give the help and guidance which are necessary. There are other cases where the patient never enters a mental institution; all the necessary treatment is carried on outside. Supervision of this kind is necessary, in my opinion, in order to make this act effective and if the minister can give us some information in this regard I am sure the committee will be interested.

It may be that the minister has in mind that the necessary supervision must be left to the provincial authorities. I can understand that, and it may be the best arrangement because of the difficulty of trying to supervise from the centre. Perhaps the ministers have the idea that the supervision will take place from the central institution provided under this act. In any event, these are points which engage our interest and which justify our understandable curiosity with regard to a measure which, I believe, deserves our full support.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Before clause 1 carries I should like to make a further statement. In reply to the hon. member for Essex East, I hope he does not think that the remarks he made at the beginning of his observations will prevent the Minister of Justice and myself from playing golf together or any such thing. We do not want to get angry at each other. Maybe the hon. gentleman has been carried away by his feelings to an undue extent, because he must have boycotted the speech made by the Minister of Justice on second reading in which my colleague set out in some detail the answers to some of the questions the hon. member has been asking.

In the bill, under the definition clause, "minister" means, with respect to part I, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and with respect to part II, the Minister of Justice. Clause 15, as the hon. member will see, is the first clause in part II and it is only logical, I think, that treatment, after this stage has been reached, should come under the Minister of Justice because he has responsibility for handling the institutions; the parole board comes under the Department of Justice, and so on. I know that if there are any further questions about this part of the bill the Minister of Justice will be glad to answer them.

I should like now to say a few words about the discussion we were having on Wednesday last when the house rose. At that time we were discussing the question of facilities for the reception on a voluntary basis of narcotic addicts who desired treatment and who did not come within the provisions of this bill. My colleague the Minister of Justice clearly explained the purpose of the control measures provided by this measure in connection with treatment. He also pointed out that the treatment of non-criminal addicts would be a matter entirely within the scope of provincial legislative authority.

It is understood, of course, that if a province enacts complementary legislation, a narcotic addict could voluntarily subject himself to committal procedure and thus secure the benefit of treatment. I gather, however, that what hon. members may have had in mind is some form of treatment program on a wholly voluntary basis that would not involve a formal committal procedure.

When he spoke a few minutes ago I believe the hon. member for Vancouver East corrected the impression which had been drawn from his earlier remarks in this respect. But I should like to go on and assure the committee of my support for and co-operation in any treatment program that may be provided under responsible and experienced auspices. This would, of course, include, to the extent necessary, medical supervision. We would be very glad to give consideration to any proposals which might be advanced in this regard, and would certainly contribute the benefit of our knowledge and experience to the furtherance of their success.

However, I would point out that there are certain difficulties which appear to be inherent in what may be described as a voluntary treatment program. I refer here to the necessity for the right of legal control of the individual undergoing treatment. It is the view of my department that desirable as it may be that an individual should be encouraged to seek treatment, if treatment is to be effective there must be a legal right to continue it for such period as is necessary. In other words, while voluntary application for treatment is an important factor as indicating a necessary motivation by the individual, there must be some means of ensuring that treatment does not wholly depend on the continuation of such motivation. Some provision must be made to the end that treatment can be carried on even though the addict himself feels he has reached the point where he no longer needs it.

While there has not hitherto been available in Canada any intensive or comprehensive treatment program for narcotic addicts, treatment has been available on a limited basis through a number of facilities. In many instances, these facilities have been privately operated. I am advised, however, that it has been the experience of those concerned with such institutions that although a person should be encouraged to accept voluntary commitment, there must be some form of legal procedure which would prevent him from discontinuing treatment whenever he wished.

I think the reasons for this are self-evident and I am sure hon. members would agree there is nothing unfair or prejudicial to an individual in requiring him to submit to treatment for whatever period of time competent authorities may feel is required.

While the expression "voluntary treatment" suggests a proper and humane approach to the problem, experience strongly suggests that the motivation of the individual addict sometimes needs critical examination. In some instances, this may stem merely from a desire to reduce a habit that has become too costly to support. Here there is clearly a necessity for legal control.

In other cases, the addict's motivation, though satisfactory in the first instance, may tend to disappear once withdrawal has been accomplished. Cessation of treatment at that point would not likely lead to continued abstinence from drugs and, therefore, no useful purpose would be served if he could discontinue at will.

These conclusions, I might add, are in accordance with views expressed by competent authorities at a conference held in the city of Vancouver in 1952 at which were represented various levels of interest in the problem of addiction in the community. They are also in line with the thinking of authorities in charge of the narcotic treatment hospital at Lexington, Kentucky, to which the hon. member for Essex East referred a moment ago, as well as of New York state authorities who are presently undertaking treatment programs on an experimental basis. As late as last Friday afternoon, as expressed during discussions that my officials had with New York state authorities, it was still their point of view that they must have legal control.

I can assure the committee that my department has been actively concerned with all aspects of treatment as it is currently being considered in various parts of the United States and in this country. In addition to maintaining direct liaison with authorities in various areas where experimentation in treatment is being carried out, our officials also work through the mental health advisory committee which is assisted by a special subcommittee on drug addiction.

A year ago, this subcommittee set up a working party under the chairmanship of Dr. Halliday who was referred to in this debate as the head of the British Columbia narcotic addiction foundation. This working party is charged with the task of examining and reporting on treatment and other health aspects of addiction and, to my mind, points up the active and continuing interest being shown in this problem.

We would not be optimistic of the success of a program that was based solely on the voluntary desire of an addict and that was not accompanied by some right of custodial control. Moreover, we feel that the measures contemplated by this bill in leading to committal under provincial legislation for the purpose of treatment, do not depart substantially from those which would be necessary in any proper treatment program. It is our view that regardless of whether treatment is carried out in the institutions which are now being proposed or in institutions unrelated to those covered by this bill, the factor of compulsory detention and supervision would seem to be equally a requisite.

It goes without saying that any province would be free to institute a special treatment program separate and apart from that which this measure proposes. It could also count on our wholehearted co-operation in contributing whatever knowledge and experience that might be pertinent in making such a program successful.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister would permit me to ask a question at this point. If the provinces set up institutions of that kind, is the minister prepared to say now whether he could offer financial assistance under the national health program?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I was just about to refer to that subject.

In certain circumstances, it might even be possible for the dominion government to provide some financial assistance under the health grants program. Any project in this regard would, of course, have to be submitted through the province to receive consideration. I must say that if we were asked to provide assistance to a purely voluntary program, we would feel obliged to draw attention to the aspects of control and supervision to which I have made reference. This would not, however, preclude our helping to the greatest extent possible in any experimental project on a voluntary basis. Certainly, there is need for more research and experimentation than up to now has been carried out.

In this connection, I would like to conclude by quoting from a recent paper published in the New York state "Journal of Medicine". It is written by Dr. Larimore, deputy commissioner of the New York state department of health and Dr. Brill of the New York state department of mental hygiene, and covers their investigation of the so-called British treatment system with particular reference to the need for further research. Speaking of the situation in the United Kingdom, the authors had this to say:

> There is general scepticism about the effectiveness of existing methods of treatment, as well as a general dissatisfaction with the long term results which are generally described as marked by a very large proportion of recidivism or relapse—
> Placing the patient in a hospital for withdrawal is certainly sound. Beyond that, in the treatment of the underlying condition, it must be recognized that neither we nor the British have at the present time a satisfactory treatment method for narcotic addiction.
> Nevertheless there are a number of important reasons to believe that addiction is treatable and that better methods should be sought since "spontaneous cures" do occur, especially with increasing maturity, and it is a well known fact that older narcotic addicts are far fewer in number than young ones.
> Further, some cases respond even to present treatment methods. However, the development of more successful treatment must await the results of research—
> In both the United Kingdom and the United States, there is strong agreement as to the need for much basic research to be done in this field. Because of recent advancements in chemical and other technologies and in the theory of psychiatric drugs, there is better reason than ever before to expect constructive results from research.

I would just like to emphasize, in respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East about treatment centres, that we certainly feel the provinces can do this at any time they wish without conditions being attached. It is our view that this is a separate discipline. Over the years we have received requests, as has the Minister of Justice, from individuals and organizations for help in regard to treatment along the lines we have advanced.

Mr. Chairman, I should like personally to congratulate the Minister of Justice for proposing this new concept of assisting and curing, if possible, narcotic addicts. I should also like to pay tribute to the late Mr. E. P. Winch, the father of the hon. member for Vancouver East. It was evident from a review of old files only last week that this gentleman while a member of the legislative assembly for British Columbia, was perhaps the first to suggest the establishment of treatment centres and that he urged consideration in this regard many, many times.

I feel that is all I need to say at the moment Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, before making any comment in regard to the statement which the minister has just made, may I express my great appreciation of his kind remarks in relation to the studies and work that were undertaken by my late father some 25 years ago, when he was a member of the British Columbia legislature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: It is because of the work which he did in that field, as well as in others, that I know I can safely say that irrespective of politics, he is revered by all who knew him in British Columbia.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the minister has had to say this afternoon. The viewpoint which he has put forward places emphasis on the remarks made the other day by the Minister of Justice, but I must say he has not convinced me as yet. I am quite certain there are not insurmountable obstacles in the way of achieving what I have suggested.

In regard to his remarks about separate provincial institutions being established for the treatment of addicts on a voluntary basis, I should like to think them over before I come to any decision. I feel quite honestly that, in view of the expenditures which the taxpayer must make through the federal treasury in order to handle this problem in providing the expert professional care which is required, and the building of the institutions, I am not certain whether there is any clear foundation for duplication in this field.

Mr. Broome: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winch: Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to continue for a moment or two, following which I shall answer his questions if I am able to.

I believe we must pay special attention to this question so as to avoid duplication. I am not yet convinced that a plan could not be worked out, but I do wish to emphasize immediately I completely agree that even if a method of voluntary commitment is worked out on some basis, whether federally, provincially or jointly, before a person goes into any institution for treatment of a corrective nature for narcotic addiction it can only be done on a legal basis under which the person is accepted under certain controls, regulations, discipline, timing and care. I do not know of anything in the constitution or in law under which that can be done as part and parcel of the availability of the opportunity to take curative treatment in an institution by a person who volunteers to go in. Therefore I say, sir, I do not think this is an insurmountable obstacle in any way, although it has been raised by the minister.

One could speak for a long time on this and be repetitive; therefore I am not going to comment any more on it. I do not think I can add anything to what I said the other day or to what I said today.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise just one other matter before I sit down because I think I can only raise it in the discussion of clause 1. I regret that I cannot be here this evening. I know this is my responsibility but I do feel that since I have been at the United Nations I owe the courtesy of my attendance at the dinner tonight in honour of the president of the United Nations. Therefore I hope you will not mind, sir, if I change the subject at this time.

I think a great many of us in the committee, and particularly members from British Columbia, would appreciate it very much if the Minister of Justice could give us a clearer picture of the basis of his thinking on the establishment of narcotic treatment centres. We would appreciate it if he could give us as fully as possible his view of the basis upon which they are to be established. I do not have to reiterate to him my interest in this matter and my desires. If I am wrong I should like to be told so, but I should like to know why in the announcement made by the minister through the provincial member for Chilliwack there is to be a $5 million institution built at Matsqui. It is not the location at Matsqui that I am interested in, it is the institution itself and that is what I should like the minister to comment on. Statements are being made by those interested in this matter in British Columbia. Editorials of a somewhat critical nature are being written. I am not going to comment on whether they are right or wrong. That is what I want the minister to discuss. The Minister of Justice, together with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, are now breaking new ground on this question of narcotic addiction and how it should be approached. Undoubtedly mistakes will be made. We shall never get anywhere if we are afraid of making mistakes. I am certain that the two ministers and all of us are prepared to learn by mistakes and we are prepared to make some. We realize that this is a new field of endeavour and that a great many troubles will have to be faced. But why, in the breaking of this new ground, has it been decided to erect a $5 million institution—if this figure is correct and I presume it is because it was given out by the member for that area—on the information and authority of the Minister of Justice? Is there a good reason why this policy is being followed? Is there a better reason to move perhaps—and this may sound amazing coming from me—a little bit slower, to feel our way, to see how it works? Then if you need a larger institution you have the experience upon which to move.

I believe that some of the questions being asked in the editorials are good. I hope that the Minister of Justice has not, all of a sudden perhaps, been overcome a little by the magnitude of the great task which he and the Minister of National Health and Welfare are undertaking. I hope that some of his officials—and I have one particularly in mind who I know likes to do things on a grand scale—have not influenced the minister too much in this direction. I can see that the minister knows the individual in his department to whom I am referring. I do hope that he will give us a policy statement and as detailed a picture as possible on how they decided on the magnitude of this particular institution which has already been announced, and why the thing was handled in that way instead of perhaps, as I said before, feeling the way before such a terrific expenditure is made on one institution.

Mr. Broome: May I ask the hon. member a question now with regard to the point he made on duplication of facilities and the fact that he thought this would be perhaps wasteful of the taxpayer's dollar if it was not carried out all the way by the federal government. Would he not agree that we in British Columbia already have facilities which can take care of voluntary committals and which as we know do have psychiatric and skilled medical staff to handle the particular problem of drug addicts? We already have means of voluntary committals at the Crease clinic at Essondale.

Mr. Winch: No, I am afraid not. I believe the hon. member when he spoke made reference to the narcotic foundation. The narcotic foundation in British Columbia is doing a wonderful job and should have received much more support than it has received up to now.

The hon. member referred to the Crease clinic. I say that this is not the answer because although there can be voluntary committal to the Crease clinic for certain disorders after consultation with a doctor, a person can only stay a certain length of time in the Crease clinic. Unless they have changed the regulations since I was a member of the legislature the period is three months. That is what it was when the act was passed. As the hon. member knows, I was leader of the opposition at that time. It is only a temporary stay for curative purposes if you can be handled. It is only of a temporary nature. I can assure the hon. member from my knowledge of narcotic addicts that you do not in the majority of cases bring about a cure, especially anything of a lasting nature, in a matter of three months. A longer period of time than that is required. As a general rule I believe it is well over one year. I believe, if I heard correctly a little while ago, the hon. member for Essex East said the treatment had to be conducted for a period of from one year to three years and then the doctors are not always completely sure. So I say that the Crease clinic very definitely is not the answer. I doubt very much if they receive very many in that institution with a narcotic drug problem.

Mr. Drysdale: I should like to supplement the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I am concerned particularly with the treatment centres, and the provisions to which the hon. member for Vancouver East has already alluded, particularly as they relate to the narcotic addiction foundation of British Columbia. At the moment this is the only community based centre offering treatment and rehabilitation services for narcotic addicts, including those who are discharged from federal or provincial correctional institutions. This organization is the only one with any practical experience in this particular field. I think we would do well to listen to suggestions made by this organization with regard to treatment centres.

I have received correspondence from the director of this foundation with regard to this particular bill. The letter is dated June 6, and reads in part as follows:

> Reference is made to "treatment centres", and one hopes that the federal government will soon begin the construction of such a centre in this area. I would draw your attention again to our belief that such an institution should be located close to the metropolitan area, the further away it is the less effective will be the personal communication and the liaison necessary between the institutional and community (rehabilitation and after care) services, and it is the latter, or rather the absence of the latter, that has been the major cause of breakdown in various treatment programs.

The point with which I am concerned is the fact that the treatment centre is going to be established at Matsqui, about 50 miles away from the centre of Vancouver. Second, we already have this narcotic addiction foundation, and I am still not too clear despite the discussion last day, as to how it fits into the over-all picture. I do not believe it fits in with clause 19 of this bill because then it would be considered as part of a penitentiary. In view of the objectives of the foundation, which I should like to put on the record, I think it is important to consider how the foundation is going to be placed in the picture.

In the fifth annual report, 1960-61, the president, Mr. Carson, set out the following objectives:

> As a community-based agency, the narcotic addiction foundation is in an ideal position to carry out the following functions:
> (a) to accept, on a voluntary basis, any or all narcotic addicts who request help;
> (b) to work closely with the probation officers (as and when appointed) in the after care and rehabilitation program of the federal government;
> (c) to act as a training centre for physicians, social workers, nurses, volunteer groups, and others directly concerned with the rehabilitation of the addict in the community;
> (d) to carry out an educational program among such groups as: professional personnel; educators; adolescent and young people's groups; employers; service clubs, etc;
> (e) to initiate or co-ordinate research into such aspects of drug addiction as the following:
> (i) the natural history of addiction;
> (ii) the epidemiology of addiction;
> (iii) the effectiveness of a voluntary treatment program, and if there is a group of addicts that will respond to such an attempt;
> (iv) the relationship between narcotic and other forms of addiction;
> To achieve these objectives, the foundation will need to become an increasingly independent organization, feeling free to draw on financial and other resources from all levels of government and from the community we are attempting to serve.

The point that interests me particularly is how this foundation is going to fit into the new legislation. Second, this is the only organization of which I know with any direct experience in the treatment of addicts, and it is located in downtown Vancouver. It is a voluntary treatment centre which is treating, I think, approximately eight in-patients as well as a considerable number of out-patients.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I should answer the questions asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East and referred to by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, because I would not want some of the things that have been said about this new centre to go unanswered. I do recall that at the very end of the debate on Wednesday of last week I had reached some of the comments that had already been made out on the west coast. I said that to me it seemed to be a pretty peremptory dismissal of a far-reaching new proposal to say, as the party of my friend in British Columbia did, that it was altogether quite wrong and a proven failure. In so far as I have not even seen the plans for this building as yet because they have not been completed, I am quite sure that Mr. Barrett, a C.C.F. member of the legislature in British Columbia, has not seen the plans or had any discussions about the proposal.

I notice there is a doctor in Vancouver who is reported to be an expert in the field, and who has also condemned the institution in a telephone call from Montreal to a British Columbia newspaper. Dr. Tyhurst has not telephoned me as yet, so I do not know the real basis of his objection. I do want to make it clear that in devising this plan, in devising the details of the custody for treatment program, the officials of my department have had lengthy discussions with officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare. This department is constantly in touch with capable and thoughtful people in this field, as well as having capable and thoughtful officials in their own service. In addition, the officials of my department, particularly the commissioner of penitentiaries and other members of the correctional planning committee, who first began the study of the development of the federal institutional program to treat narcotic addicts rather than merely incarcerate them, themselves had discussions in the course of their study with senior correctional officers in California, where we are informed they are now developing a plan much along the same lines as we have here envisaged. They also had discussions with officials, psychiatrists and psychologists and other persons in Vancouver interested in the problem, including members of the university staff. I understand that Dr. Tyhurst is head of the University of British Columbia department of psychiatry. Apparently Dr. Tyhurst was not one of those with whom the committee consulted in Vancouver two years ago, but other representatives of the university were consulted.

I am not in a position at the moment to give a blueprint of this institution because we have not drawn up the plans as yet. We are consulting architects now and of course we will lay down, in consultation with the Department of National Health and Welfare, the general design and purpose of the institution and ask the architects to produce the plan of a building which will carry those purposes into effect.

In so far as the location at Matsqui is concerned, may I say that I have learned it is only some 50 minutes from the centre of downtown Vancouver. This could hardly be said to be remote. The route of the new trans-Canada highway, according to our information, is going to pass Matsqui. I am told that a journey of 45 minutes, at the maximum, from downtown Vancouver will take one to the institution. There are many people in our cities today who spend far more than 45 minutes struggling to and from work. I do not believe we are really putting obstacles in the way of any professional person who desires to come there to assist us or in the way of the members of the narcotic foundation if they want to get in touch with the treatment centre at Matsqui. We feel, however, that we must have the institution physically removed from downtown Vancouver, if for no other reason than that we do want to have some element of control over the persons who pass by and who may thus introduce narcotics into the institution.

You cannot have an institution of this kind located in downtown Vancouver with the kind of drug trafficking and organized trafficking that we know exists, and expect to successfully keep narcotics from being smuggled into the institution. I would not guarantee that we can completely prevent it at Matsqui, but we will have a better chance of controlling things around the periphery so people will not have a chance of caching narcotics, then picking up the caches and getting them inside, than if it were in a huge city.

As to the criticism that it is going to be too big—that is, that it is too big and will have too many inmates—may I say that it has never been our intention simply to have an institution in which some 400 narcotic addicts are all treated on an identical pattern. The institution might well be capable—and this we have in mind—of operating on the basis of separate clinical units with perhaps 80 patients or 100 patients or inmates in each unit. Just because it is going to be physically capable of housing perhaps 400 or more people, it does not mean that we have decided that every one of those inmates is going to receive absolutely equal treatment. In planning the institution we have in mind that it should be so designed that it can be capable of being operated in smaller units, although all contained in the same general area.

I think I should just say that one purpose at least which it will achieve is the segregation of all the criminal drug addicts in British Columbia from the non-criminal addicts. Not until we have done that can we really start treatment programs on, to some extent, an experimental basis and it will have to be on an experimental basis because no compulsory treatment program has ever before been designed or attempted in Canada. The first requisite therefore is segregation. Then we can test out the treatment program and develop it as we along. That is absolutely impossible to do under the present circumstances.

We intend to proceed on an experimental basis. We intend to consult extensively and continuously with the experts in this field; I refer to the medical and psychiatric experts. We are not going to go blindly ahead on the assumption that we can draw up a blueprint of treatment without consultation; of course we are not going to do that. May I point out that this building will not possibly be ready for complete operation within a matter of two years. It has only just been decided where the location is to be. There is plenty of time for consultation and for us to learn and to acquire the additional benefit of the views of others over and above those with whom, as I have pointed out and emphasized, our officials have already discussed the matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a question?

Mr. Fulton: May I just finish this one sentence? I appreciate the reasonable approach of the hon. member for Vancouver East. He expressed concern. He asked for reassurance. I hope I have given it to him. I also hope that he will urge on those who are interested in this field that they should not at this great distance, when the bare outlines of the plan have just been announced, make these very sweeping statements which are calculated to prejudice the operation even before it starts. Let us at least have the opportunity of discussion and exchange of views. We can probably learn and profit by suggestions and we are quite prepared to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I presume that the largest and most vigorous drug addict population in Canada at the moment is in Vancouver, although I do not know what the statistics are.

Mr. Fulton: That is correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says that is correct. That fact was undoubtedly in the minister's mind when a location in British Columbia was selected for the new institution. However, having in mind the vacillation or the movement of the drug addict population and the fact that Montreal has been a centre and that Toronto has been a centre, I wonder whether the minister has given adequate consideration to the location. Might it not have been better to locate it in between the extremities of our country?

Mr. Fulton: I think one of the answers to that question is this. It must be recognized that there are in Vancouver experts or researchers in this field to an extent to which they are not found at the moment in other cities. Our thought was that we might well ultimately have an institution in British Columbia, one in Ontario to serve the Toronto district need and one in Quebec, probably near Montreal, to serve that area where there is also a concentration of addicts. But by far the greatest concentration is in Vancouver. It so far outweighs the others that it was perfectly clear that the first institution should be established to service that area.

Mr. Winch: Actual addicts do not move a great deal.

Mr. Drysdale: Since the key to the program is the after care and rehabilitation of narcotic addicts and as it is estimated that about 60 per cent of those in Vancouver were born and raised in Vancouver and they would have to return from the treatment centre some 50 miles or 60 miles outside of Vancouver, I was wondering how the rehabilitation will be conducted. Will there also be another centre in Vancouver to which they will go for after care treatment or will the treatment be finished at Matsqui and then they will just return to Vancouver from there?

Mr. Fulton: No. It is not envisaged that they would be kept in the institution at Matsqui for the whole time until they are pronounced fit subjects to be released from institutional custody and then turned out and sent back to Vancouver with no acclimatization as it were. As the program of rehabilitation is developed there may well be hostels in Vancouver or in much closer to Vancouver and the parole board, on the advice of the medical and psychiatric experts will supervise the move of inmates from the institution into the hostel or from the hostel into employment if we can find it for them. This would be the objective while they are still in the hostel, working in the daytime at useful occupations. Then gradually they will be released from the hostel and live their own lives in their own homes although under the supervision of the national parole board. That is the sort of program we have in mind, although I do not want to be taken as giving a blueprint of it at this moment.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Possession of narcotics.

Mr. Roberge: Clause 3 deals with possession. I want to refer the minister to his remarks on Wednesday last as found at page 5980 of Hansard, where he said there would not be a minimum punishment. The other act provided for a minimum punishment. If procedure was by way of indictment it was a minimum of six months plus a fine of $200, and at the discretion of the court, whipping. If it was by summary conviction, the minimum punishment was still six months and the minimum fine was also $200. In his remarks the other day, as found on this same page, the minister said the government thought it would be better to leave the discretion to the court as to a minimum. If we are to break this trend with regard to the possession of narcotics I would think, speaking personally, that there should be a minimum. Will the minister enlarge on his remarks on that topic? The same statement, of course, will apply to the other clauses except the clause on importing and exporting.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I understand that in the Senate committee report, it was indicated that the general feeling of the committee was that there should be no minimum but that the maximum, of course, should be much more severe than it had been. These are the steps that have been taken in this new legislation with the exception of the case of importation or export and in this instance there is actually a minimum sentence. Otherwise, however, it was felt advisable not to have a minimum sentence but to increase the maximum.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Trafficking in narcotics. Possession for purpose of trafficking. Offence.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make one or two remarks on this particular clause, primarily on the question of the punishment of life imprisonment. During discussion on the recent amendments to the Criminal Code I think it was fairly clearly pointed out to the house that we were retaining the death penalty in some instances because it was a deterrent to the crime of murder.

In 1960 I introduced a bill amending the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. At that time I tried to distinguish between a user and a non-user of narcotics for the purpose of trafficking and suggested there should be a sentence of death or imprisonment for life imposed for this offence.

The thing that concerns me particularly about the clause now before us is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in his earlier remarks when referring to the Senate committee, said as reported at page 5980 of Hansard for June 7:

> The report of the Senate committee recommended that trafficking, regardless of its purpose, should be made a costly and hazardous undertaking in terms of a penalty. While the Senate committee did recommend that there be mandatory minimums for second or subsequent offences for trafficking, it was the view of the enforcement authorities that a more effective deterrent would lie in the increase of the maximum penalty and that the courts should be empowered to impose within the framework of a lengthy maximum what might be an appropriate penalty for trafficking.

The minister went on to say:

> The sentence which may be imposed has been raised to life imprisonment. In this way parliament will have indicated clearly the seriousness with which it regards trafficking offences and the courts can, therefore, take cognizance of this in fixing appropriate penalties.

The Miniser of Justice is reported at page 5986 of Hansard as having made the following statement:

> The law relating to the suppression of trafficking, then, should be sufficient in terms of punishment reasonably to deter the would-be trafficker from engaging in that form of activity and, if it does not do so, it should be adequate to protect society against him when he persists.

I was very impressed by the statements made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, who has been noted in this house as an abolitionist. At page 5994 of Hansard he is reported as having said:

[Mr. Monteith (Perth).]

> There is also the clause that deals with trafficking. I am discussing it only in principle. A person can have no sympathy for one who breaks the law, no sympathy at all for one who commits homicide and, of course, no sympathy for one who traffics in narcotics. I think about the lowest depths that any man or woman can sink to is to be a trafficker in narcotics. A murderer kills and that is it. But one who traffics in drugs, who brings a person to addiction, to that insatiable craziness, makes an absolute hourly and daily hell for life for the addict. I, therefore, have no sympathy for him, and I agree that for the trafficker there should be a penalty of up to life.

I would point out that the hon. member said quite clearly, following up his philosophy, that there should be a penalty of up to life, but I felt—and I am putting my own interpretation on his words—that he came very close to advocating the death sentence for this offence.

Mr. Winch: No. That will be the day.

Mr. Drysdale: The point that concerns me is this. A survey was recently made by the narcotic addiction foundation. They sent out questionnaires to over 330 young people in Vancouver. I understand the questionnaire was not limited to particular areas where narcotics are a problem. The findings of this survey are quite interesting. For example, 19.5 per cent of the 18 year olds said they had an opportunity to use heroin, and some 50 per cent of those in the 15-18 years of age category said they had an opportunity to use heroin while they were drinking.

In the last two years the narcotic addiction foundation has treated some 285 patients. Of that number 45 per cent of the males and 48 per cent of the females were drug addicts by the age of 20 years. I am concerned that these very, very young people are exposed to the dangers of drugs. I feel that a trafficker who is either a user or a non-user himself—and I think it is more serious in the case of the non-user—should be subject to the maximum deterrent.

Logically, since we said in connection with the amendments to the Criminal Code that capital punishment was a deterrent to somebody who wanted to commit a robbery, for example, or to various types of murder, it seems to me that we have here the most obvious case for the maximum deterrent. I say this because in the case of a trafficker, especially in the case of a trafficker who is a non-user, the prime incentive is the monetary return that he gets. I think in these circumstances we are justified in imposing the maximum deterrent, which is the sentence of death.

Accordingly I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway:

> That clause 4 (3) be amended by adding after the word "life" in line six, the words "or sentenced to death".

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I could not help but note with interest the fact that the mover of this amendment quoted some of the remarks I made the other day. I want the hon. member and this committee to know that I meant every word I said. There is no question whatsoever in my mind that one of the most heinous crimes which can be committed is the illicit trafficking of narcotic drugs.

I agree with the hon. member that the worst of these traffickers is the non-user, because he is motivated wholly and solely by the profit motive. That was the reason why during my remarks last week I added to the words used by the Minister of Justice "demand and supply", the words "and profit". I pointed out that I thought if we could by this bill directly, or in co-operation with the provinces, wipe out the profit motive we would take a major step forward in wiping out the entire narcotics problem.

However, I think the hon. member and the committee know that I still stand in complete opposition to the death penalty. I think it is inhuman, unchristian, unnecessary and is no deterrent. I know, from speaking to many people who have been serving terms of life imprisonment that a life sentence is a pretty horrible thing to contemplate. These people are under regimentation every hour of their lives and are denied meeting with society.

In speaking to the amendment directly, if my memory is correct there is only one country in the world which has the death penalty for drug trafficking, and that is Iran. In the not too distant past Iran was one of the greatest producers of narcotic drugs for illicit trafficking. Iran also had one of the largest percentages of population in the world of people who were addicts. I am speaking from memory, but I believe that only about three years ago they had in the neighbourhood of 325,000 known addicts in Iran. That is why in 1959 Iran took a major step forward and opened up treatment clinics for drug addicts. In two years 65,000 addicts have been treated in these clinics. But they also provided the death penalty as the ultimate punishment for any key person who was engaged in the growing or illicit trafficking of narcotics.

I had the opportunity of speaking to two of the cabinet ministers from Iran this year at the United Nations. They have been able to make great steps forward, but they have found they can get results without having to resort to the death penalty. I am sorry that after the progressive thoughts which have been expressed by the hon. member he should be so reactionary and retrogressive as to move this amendment.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): We have had a good deal of discussion in the house on capital punishment in the last year or so. I do not think the argument put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver East should carry too much weight in this debate, because the house did not accept his views on capital punishment before, and he has added nothing to them at this time.

Mr. Winch: It has gone a long way, though.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am one of those who held strong views in favour of the retention of the death penalty. However, after listening to a number of other members express the view that for certain kinds of murder capital punishment is no deterrent I felt I could support the government measure brought forward exempting certain crimes from the death penalty.

Nevertheless, the hon. member for Vancouver East has agreed that the trafficker in narcotics is at least as bad as the worst type of murderer, and the other members of this house believe that the worst type of murderer should be sentenced to death. Thus I think he has put forward a fair argument for saying that a trafficker in narcotics should be sentenced to death. The hon. member does not believe a trafficker should be sentenced to death, because he does not believe murderers should be sentenced to death; but the rest of the house believes they should be sentenced to death.

I think the hon. member was wrong in saying there was only one country which prescribed the death penalty—

Mr. Winch: I said there was only one to my knowledge.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): I noticed an article in the Globe and Mail of November 19, 1960 entitled "Dope Pushers Face Death". It read:

> Bangkok. Nov. 16 (Reuters)—Heroin and morphine manufacturers and peddlers face the death sentence or life imprisonment under a bill approved by the Thai cabinet today.

This seems to be a growing problem. A murderer does, of course, cause the death of a person but a trafficker in narcotics may ruin the lives of several people, perhaps of hundreds. Having accepted the view that capital punishment is a unique deterrent and that it should be retained in Canada I suggest there is no more suitable course for the house to take than to apply it to those who traffic in narcotics and I wholeheartedly support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I hope it will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. Fulton: I feel I should say now that the government, while appreciating fully the sentiments of the hon. members who have spoken in support of this amendment, is unable to accept it. This is not because we disagree with them as to the despicable nature of the crime of trafficking in narcotics, particularly when engaged in for motives of profit and not, for instance, to support a craving arising from personal addiction. The trafficker who is not himself an addict and who puts this substance into circulation deserves condemnation in language stronger than one could devise to describe him.

The fact of the matter is that we have decided, and recommended to the house, and the house has approved, that generally speaking the grounds for capital punishment should be restricted rather than enlarged. I know that it is still a potential penalty for those guilty of treason or piracy but broadly speaking capital punishment is now restricted to those who kill as a result of planning and deliberation. We think it would be completely inconsistent with that principle to enlarge the types of crimes to which capital punishment is now applicable so as to include trafficking in narcotics.

May I remind the committee that not very long ago the penalty for trafficking, for whatever purpose, was seven years. It is only about six years ago that the maximum penalty was increased to 14 years which it presently is under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. We are now providing for a maximum penalty of life imprisonment which represents a substantial and real increase in the severity of the penalty. I would ask hon. members to remind themselves that a person convicted and sentenced for trafficking on a second or any subsequent offence will be liable to an indeterminate sentence and in these circumstances he would be released only on the certificate of the parole board and would be under supervision of the parole board for life. In these ways we think, first, we have provided a sufficient increase in the maximum penalty to indicate to the courts, the country as a whole and the traffickers themselves the detestation in which this crime is held and to provide the courts with sufficient means of ordering detention in the case of these offences. If this does not work the first time, an offender will be subject to an indeterminate sentence which would have the effect of his being under supervision for life even if he should be released from prison.

On these general grounds, therefore, I am unable to accept the amendment. There is a particular ground, too, with respect to the drafting. It will be observed that clause 4 now provides that every person who violates subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life. This relates to all traffickers, whether the trafficking results from personal addiction or whether it falls into the still viler class of trafficking for profit. The penalty can be exacted with respect to both kinds of traffickers. Therefore, the effect of the amendment would be to make all traffickers liable to the death penalty. I appreciate that this is a technical matter, and that it could probably be dealt with. Nevertheless, the effect of the amendment would be as I have indicated—a person who is forced into drug trafficking because he himself is addicted and has no other means of sustaining his drug habit would be liable to the effect of the amendment. Thus, though I appreciate and to some extent accept the sentiments of the mover of the motion I am unable to go all the way with him and accept his amendment.

Mr. Drysdale: I think the minister has confirmed the interpretation which I myself was placing on this amendment, because he has said it was an alternative to life imprisonment. I think that is what should be hanging over the heads of these people who are drug traffickers—the possibility that they may be executed. The minister has clearly drawn to the attention of the committee that this was exactly what I was trying to do. Also, the trafficker who is not a user himself is purely in the business for the sake of the financial reward and I can see no value in attempting the rehabilitation of an individual of this type. He goes into it consciously. I would suggest such an individual causes more hardship and misery than a murderer who kills one person, because in the trafficking of narcotics, as we have seen in the city of Vancouver, he can ruin the lives of approximately 3,000 individuals.

I feel the state should not be obliged to pay approximately $2,000 per year to maintain a person who has been sentenced to life imprisonment for the crime of trafficking. I do not think the state should be required or prepared to go to that expense, as those individuals are involved in this business solely with the motive of profit. I think that has been borne out by the fact that the Mafia decided, after its Appalachian conference, because sentences had been increased and enforcement was becoming stronger, to get out of the business. That is exactly the result which I hope will come from the inclusion of the death penalty. There may never be a case where it has to be carried out but, if we consider it as a deterrent under the Criminal Code in respect of those amendments put forth regarding the crime of murder, surely it will be more of a deterrent to those individuals in the field of trafficking with the sole motive of making a profit.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, when the amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with capital punishment were under consideration, I mentioned that traffickers, those who promote the sale of narcotics—not the drug addicts, but the traffickers—should also be liable to the death penalty.

An amendment is being introduced today and, in my opinion, a distinction is in order. There are actually two types of drug traffickers: first, those who are drug addicts themselves and who sell drugs for the leader of a drug ring; and then those who are not addicted but who peddle drugs here and there.

Narcotics are being sold in universities, in colleges, in a word, in all spheres of society.

It has been said that capital punishment applies only to a criminal convicted of capital murder. According to me, the worst murderer is the person who is responsible for drug addiction, who sells drugs to people who will develop the habit which, in time, may become compulsive and possibly make criminals out of the addicts. In fact they are victims. It is the trafficker who is the true culprit, the real murderer. He is the one who prepares murderers through his activities.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the proposal made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale). Indeed, in spite of all the amendments to the law and of the R.C.M.P.'s work throughout the country, the latter cannot always get to the brains of drug traffic rings.

The worst individual is not the one who, having become an addict himself, must peddle drugs to satisfy his own needs, but the individual who has set up vast traffic rings. The latter is fully conscious of what he does. His only concern is to make big profits for himself. In my opinion, that is the worst kind of criminals we have in Canada and capital punishment should be their penalty.

For those reasons, I am in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great attention to what the mover of the amendment had to say and to the answer given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton).

As the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) has just stated, we have before us a bill dealing with what may be the foulest crime society has to cope with.

Many lawyers can see for themselves the pernicious effects narcotics have on an individual.

All means possible should be taken to protect society against traffickers. For the protection of society, capital punishment is imposed on those who commit capital murder. They have to die to pay their debt to society. But who could tell all the murders committed not by the victims of traffickers but by the traffickers themselves, who are, as far as we are concerned, members of the underworld.

These traffickers unfortunately operate on a great scale in many places and especially in Montreal as far as the province of Quebec is concerned.

Youth must be protected. All possible means must be taken to avoid the social disturbances caused by drug users. We must do everything to curb this social evil.

That is why I congratulate the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Drysdale) for his amendment. Nothing must be neglected to give the fullest effect to the legislation we are considering now.

I think all hon. members have the same object in mind: to check this plague and make sure that the penalties will be as severe as can be for those who go about spreading social death around them. By spreading death, I mean that their victims become poor human trash. That is why they are not entitled to any consideration from society since they do not have any for anybody, their only concern being to satisfy their greed.

For those reasons, I will vote for the amendment proposed by the member for Burnaby-Richmond.

(Text):

Mr. Payne: Mr. Chairman, I rise to give my unqualified support to the amendment presented by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I feel very strongly that there is too much soft soap handed around, and too much questionable sympathy given to those individuals who perpetuate some of the most insidious crimes known to humanity. I feel that if, by the inclusion of the death penalty for those individuals who are convicted of trafficking in narcotics—not necessarily because they are addicted to the use of narcotics—we will in any way be providing a further deterrent, it is an obligation on all members of this house to do so.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I find myself in a difficult position and should like to ask for further information. I fully intended to vote against this amendment but have not been able to resist the feeling, after listening to the last two or three speakers, that the matter is not as simple as I thought. I should like to ask one or two questions of the Minister of Justice who can perhaps clarify the situation a little further.

Much has been said in the last few minutes about the situation growing worse, and that the penalties provided at this time are not sufficient. Part of the answer given by the Minister of Justice indicated that he felt the additional penalties might help take care of the situation. I should like him to comment further in that regard. Perhaps the minister has given the answer to this question while I was absent, but I should like to ask him if any comparisons can be made with other jurisdictions or places where the death penalty has been imposed for this crime and, if so, could he make some reference to the results?

I feel there is great responsibility involved in voting for the addition of the death penalty, yet I cannot take lightly what has been said by the mover of the amendment and other hon. members who have spoken subsequently. I do not think it is fair to ask the Minister of Justice to speak again on this but I would be glad if he would.

Mr. Fulton: Part of the question has been answered already in that there are I think two countries we know of, and possibly a third, which provide the death penalty. One is Iran where they have, according to my information, 1,400,000 addicts as against our 3,100 known criminal addicts. The other is Thailand. The death penalty was introduced there much too recently for us to have any information. I am told that the third one is possibly nationalist China. These are the only countries where the death penalty is, according to our information and our present supposition, provided for the offence of trafficking. I remind the hon. member who probably came in after I had spoken earlier that six years ago the maximum penalty was seven years. At that time it was raised to 14 years. We are now raising it to life imprisonment so that a trafficker can be put away for life. If by any chance he should be released and then recommit his offence he is automatically subject to an indeterminate sentence and to supervision for the rest of his natural life. Therefore it cannot be said the penalty being provided is other than very severe.

Let me emphasize again that as the amendment is drawn it makes no distinction between the trafficker who traffics to support his own craving for drugs and those who are traffickers for profit. Therefore even the trafficker who was forced into trafficking because of his own craving for the drug would be liable to the death penalty. We are not able to accept the amendment.

Mr. Deschatelets: I should like to ask a further supplementary question of the minister pursuant to the point raised by the hon. member for Greenwood. Do we have any statistics showing that some of the murders which have been committed in Canada during the past years have been committed under the influence of a narcotic?

Mr. Fulton: We have no statistics on that point.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it not a fact that we have some statistics on the matter but they do not reveal any real influence along alarming lines such as those that would agitate the hon. member for Greenwood?

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 44.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe advise the committee which way he voted? He was not seen by the Clerk Assistant.

(Translation):

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Chairman, I voted for the amendment.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 8—Procedure in prosecution for trafficking.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This will relieve the Minister of Justice, I know. I do not propose to repeat the argument of the other night when we alleged that the bill dealing with controlled drugs in one or two of its provisions was a violation of the bill of rights. I simply want to record that what we said about that bill in reference to denying the presumption of innocence principle applies to this clause and to the subclause immediately above. Although there is no point in trying to persuade an unwilling minister who will not agree with me, I simply want to put on the record the fact that here again is another violation of the bill of rights, and also a violation by the minister of section 3 of the bill of rights.

Mr. Fulton: Of course the hon. member likes to put things on the record whether they are accurate or not. He is again putting a second inaccuracy on the record in what he has just said. In addition, he implies that he was right in his assertion with respect to the earlier bill which he was not.

There is a clear distinction between his case there and his case here in that under this bill possession is an offence and in order to traffic in the drug, you obviously must have it in possession. Therefore it might be said that the one offence is included in the other.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I admit the statement of fact but I do not agree with the deduction.

Mr. Fulton: On two grounds my friend is incorrect this time.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Search and seizure.

Mr. Winch: I have time to ask a question. As I said, I cannot be here tonight. Is the minister in a position to say a word on the point I raised last week? If a home is wrecked by officers going in to search and the person is completely innocent, if he is in legal possession of narcotics, what is the position? The home is wrecked. Has he any claim at all for assistance from the crown?

Mr. Fulton: I was asked a similar question in the committee the other day on my estimates. Our policy is where it is the federal police carrying out the enforcement of a federal statute if the premises of the innocent person are injured or damaged in the course of executing a warrant, and if the damage is minor we make restitution at once; if the damage should be major, then the matter is referred to the minister or to the deputy minister of justice for a submission to treasury board with regard to restitution. That is the policy with respect to an innocent person.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 21, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Winch: You talk about co-operation now.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Penitentiaries Act

PENITENTIARIES

REPEAL AND SUBSTITUTION OF ACT

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-105, respecting penitentiaries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it may be of interest to the house to know the first act of the parliament of Canada in relation to the subject matter of penitentiaries was passed in 1868. From time to time thereafter statutes were enacted by parliament in relation to this subject matter, but it was not until 1883 that all the relevant legislation was gathered together and enacted by parliament as an act to amend and consolidate the laws relating to penitentiaries.

Since 1883 the Penitentiary Act has been amended from time to time in one respect or another but at no time until now has parliament been presented with a bill that would revise completely the Penitentiary Act and put it in a form and give it a substance consistent with an enlightened approach to the problem of penitentiary operations. Evidence of this is to be found in the fact that, of the 82 sections in the present Penitentiary Act, more than 50 repeat almost word for word the corresponding section that was enacted by parliament in the statute of 1883 to which I have referred.

Hon. members will recall that the Fauteux committee, in its report of 1956 concerning the principles and procedures followed in the remission service of the Department of Justice, went into a considerable number of further fields than those encompassed by its terms of reference and embraced, indeed, the whole of the penitentiary system. They pointed out that there are certain features which, in the opinion of the committee, should be emphasized in the development of the Canadian correctional system. The Fauteux committee enumerated those features as follows:

(a) a high degree of integration between all parts of the correctional system;

(b) a well developed and extensive system of adult probation;

(c) a concentration of effort on treatment by way of training, rather than the mere imposition of punishment; this is especially so in the case of special classes of offenders, particularly youthful offenders and persistent offenders;

(d) specialization of institutions and specialization of methods of treatment, with a concentration of professional staff in the areas where it is most needed;

(e) the development of small, open, minimum security institutions;

(f) a planned policy of recruitment and training of professional staff; and

(g) a willingness to make full-scale experiments in all phases of the correctional system.

Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that on Friday or Saturday of last week I outlined to the committee of supply the progress made by the government in implementing the recommendations of the Fauteux committee report as expanded by the correctional planning committee which we appointed at the end of 1958. I indicated at that time that much progress had been made in modernizing the Canadian correctional system and that, in introducing the present bill, I would be introducing a measure to give form and substance and legislative authority, if you like, to the reorganization that has been going on in the penitentiaries branch as a result of the implementation of these plans.

The purpose of the present bill is to provide the legislative authority necessary in order to develop, in the Canadian federal correctional system, those features that relate particularly to the operation of the penitentiaries. The principal changes, therefore, under the new act that hon. members will find, in comparing it with the present Penitentiary Act, are as follows:

1. It will permit a reorganization of the headquarters of the service in Ottawa along functional lines and will permit the establishment of regional penitentiary directors. This headquarters reorganization and regional development is essential if the headquarters of the service in Ottawa is not to be bogged down by a mass of details concerning the day to day operation of individual institutions.

2. This bill will bring all officers and employees of the service under one central authority for the purposes of appointment, promotion and transfer. I outlined, during the consideration of the estimates, the new approach to this staff problem, and the new career opportunities which would open up. Prior to 1933 penitentiary officers were appointed under and were subject to the Civil Service Act. Since 1933 the headquarters staff in Ottawa has been appointed by the civil service commission; wardens, deputy wardens and other administrative or executive officers in the institutions have been appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the commissioner approved by the minister; and all other employees in penitentiaries, such as guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers have been appointed by the commissioner upon the recommendation of the warden of the penitentiary concerned.

This is a very unsatisfactory arrangement because it does not permit transfers and promotions of officers between headquarters and the field. If we have a penitentiary officer who is, in our opinion, eminently suitable for a position at headquarters, it is necessary for him to enter a civil service competition and, of course, there is no assurance that he will win it. If he does win the competition, he must then resign his position on the penitentiary staff in order to accept the new position under the Civil Service Act.

It is essential that all officers and employees should come under one jurisdiction and that the penitentiary service should be organized in a way that will permit, first:

The development of a career service, in which promotions are made on the basis of career planning and specialized training: for example, the headquarters staff should, as far as possible, have had experience in institutional work and the benefit of specialized correctional training.

Second, it is also necessary that the service should be organized in a way that will permit a code of discipline applicable to penitentiary service officers, especially in the field, comparable to that of the R.C.M. Police.

Third, it is necessary to provide for the speedy appointment of institutional staff members, having regard to the responsibility of the penitentiary service to see to the safe custody of inmates committed to the penitentiary by the courts. The method of appointment of employees established by this clause will give much greater flexibility to our system of career planning for officers.

The next feature that hon. members will observe in comparing this bill with the present act is that the bill authorizes the Minister of Justice, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into an agreement with the government of any province for the confinement in federal institutions of persons who are sentenced under the criminal law to less than two years. In the absence of such authority persons sentenced to less than two years could not be detained in a federal institution.

The house will recall that in 1958 we had a dominion-provincial conference related to prospective changes being made in Canada's correctional system. This conference was called for the purpose of discussing with the responsible provincial ministers the problems that arise in connection with the implementation of the Fauteux committee's recommendations and other recommendations that we had developed as a result of our consideration of that report. At that time it was stated as a matter of policy by the federal government that we were prepared to accept the Fauteux committee's recommendation that the federal system should assume the responsibility for persons sentenced in Canada to terms of more than six months. I think that recommendation was "sentenced to terms of more than one year".

We outlined the problems that would confront us in accepting this proposal and the planning which would be necessary if we were to put it into effect. I refer to planning related to the improvement of our own federal system in order to bring it to a point where it was of such a standard that we could say that it was as good as or better than any existing provincial system and that therefore it would be logical and proper for us to accept this additional responsibility; and also planning that would be necessary in order to enlarge the facilities of the federal system so that we might be physically able to take over that extra responsibility.

At that time I indicated to the provinces that if they agreed that this approach was correct, we would base our penitentiary planning on the first assumption and would press on with the necessary reorganization as rapidly as possible; but that in view of the tremendous physical problems with which we were confronted under the responsibility that we then had, it would in fact be several years before we could expect to be in a position to take over the increased responsibility consequent upon the inclusion in our institution of prisoners sentenced to the shorter term. I said, however, that although it might be a matter of years, as it will be, before we would be in a position to implement this recommendation in full, nevertheless, in individual cases where a particular province or particular provinces might find that they had a situation in which they were confronted with the necessity of substantial expenditures on their own part in order to modernize perhaps their own prison system and where they were reluctant to undertake this large scale development to the provincial prison system, we might be prepared to enter into individual arrangements with them under which we would assume, by virtue of agreements then to be entered into, the responsibility for prisoners who would otherwise have been part of the provincial system.

This would have two results. First, it would save the province concerned large outlays on their system which they might find it difficult to make and which might in part at least be wasted because, within a matter of a year or two, we would be taking over their system. Second, it would have the result that, by our assumption of this responsibility under these individual agreements, we would be in a position in which we would be able to plan any development of the prison system in that province so that it would conform with our over-all plan for the ultimate over-all federal correctional system. I have reference now to this part of our understanding with the provinces, namely, our understanding that we will be prepared, in advance of the over-all acceptance of the additional responsibility, to enter into agreements with individual provinces to solve their problems.

I should emphasize that the purpose of this change to which I have just drawn attention in the new bill is not designed to implement in full the understanding reached at the dominion-provincial conference of 1958, but rather is merely an interim measure designed to provide authority under which this basic change in the law can be made on an over-all basis. Arrangements may nevertheless be made between the federal government and certain provincial governments whereby inmates who are now the responsibility of the provinces may be detained in federal institutions at provincial expense.

One major change to which I should draw attention will give effect in part to another understanding reached at the dominion-provincial conference of 1958. This was to the effect that no person under the age of 16 should be sentenced to a penal institution where adults are confined except where he is convicted of an offence mentioned in section 413 of the Criminal Code. This section includes such offences as murder, manslaughter, and rape. In order to give full effect to the recommendation to which I have referred, an amendment to the Criminal Code would be necessary. However, such an amendment to the Criminal Code could not reasonably be presented to this house for consideration until the necessary institutions, either federal or provincial, are available for the confinement of persons under the age of 21 years. What this bill does, however, is to provide that where facilities exist for the separate confinement of young offenders within a region of Canada no person who, being under the age of 16 years, and having been sentenced to penitentiary, shall within that region be confined in association with persons who are 21 years of age or more unless the commissioner otherwise directs in writing.

Then again, this bill changes the method whereby an inmate qualifies for remission of his sentence by reason of good conduct and industry while he is in the institution. The relevant factors to be considered in connection with remission of sentence and parole would seem to be the following. First, it should operate as an incentive to the inmate to apply himself towards his self-improvement while he is in the institution. Second, there should be a parole period of reasonable length for those who are granted parole so that they can obtain full benefit from it and be under supervision for a reasonable period. Third, there should be an incentive to the inmate to accept parole when it is offered to him rather than to serve out his sentence to completion. At the present time, by virtue of section 69 of the Penitentiary Act, an inmate earns remission at the rate of six days a month until he has accumulated 72 days, whereupon he earns it at the rate of 10 days a month.

This bill is designed to achieve the purposes that should be served by a system of remission by dividing it into two types: statutory remission, amounting to one quarter of the sentence, which will be credited to the inmate as soon as he arrives in the institution and which will not only be subject to forfeiture for disciplinary offences committed while he is in custody but will also constitute part of his parole period, if he is granted parole; and second, earned remission, under which the inmate will be motivated to apply himself industriously to his work, in order that he may shorten his sentence by three days for each month in which he works industriously and provide an added incentive because, having earned this time off by reason of his industry, it will not be taken away from him by way of disciplinary procedure nor will it constitute part of his parole period.

Further, this bill also provides for the remission of forfeited statutory remission in proper cases. Some inmates have difficulty in adjusting to prison life at the beginning of their sentences and, as a result, have remission forfeited for disciplinary reasons. In time, however, many of these inmates become well adjusted and benefit from the prison program. It is desirable that, where such improvement has taken place, authority should exist for the return to the inmate of statutory remission that he may have lost early in the sentence by reason of his failure at that time to adjust to prison life.

Another feature of the bill is that it also authorizes the commissioner or the officer in charge of a penitentiary, in proper cases, to authorize an inmate to be absent from the institution, with or without escort as the case may be, for medical or humanitarian reasons or to assist in the inmate's rehabilitation. Under the law as it exists at the present time an inmate may not be absent from the institution, without escort, except under the authority of His Excellency the Governor General, acting on the advice of a minister of the crown. This is done as an exercise of the prerogative of mercy.

I am quite sure hon. members will appreciate that there are many, many situations in which it becomes cumbersome and administratively unwise to seek the authority of His Excellency the Governor General every time it appears desirable to allow an inmate, for a short period, to be absent from the penitentiary. Therefore it seems to us to be desirable that the authority to authorize such absences should to an appropriate degree be vested in the commissioner or the officer in charge of the institution in order that it can be exercised as a part of the over-all training program that has been designed for the inmate in the institution.

The eighth major change is that the bill authorizes the establishment of a committee to be called the advisory committee on penitentiary industry in order that the penitentiary administration may have the benefit of the best advice available in connection with the development of industrial training programs designed to fit inmates for employment in industry and free society when they leave the institution.

Finally, the bill provides for the enactment of regulations by the governor in council for the organization, training, discipline, efficiency, administration and good government of the service; for the custody, treatment, training, employment and discipline of inmates and, generally, for carrying into effect the purposes and provisions of this act. These are regulations which, under the present act, the commissioner himself could make subject only to the approval of the minister. The regulations so made will, of course, be subject to tabling in the House of Commons by virtue of the Regulations Act.

As will have been apparent to hon. members in the course of the discussion that attended the passage of the penitentiary service estimates last week, we have embarked upon a program of penitentiary development that is designed to provide for Canada, in the shortest possible time, a penal system that is at least the equal of any in the world. The science of correcting the offender is developing rapidly. This bill is designed to enable the Canadian penitentiary service to take full advantage of that science and to put it to full use on behalf of the people of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition I wish to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) for the statement he just made. That statement in fact covers most of the provisions of the Penitentiary Act.

As the minister said, the last enactment of the Penitentiary Act of 1939 re-enacted most of the clauses of the 1883 act.

After 78 years, and particularly after more than 20 years, needless to say, there is room for some changes and streamlining in the existing statute.

Where there were 82 clauses then, there are now 32 in the proposed legislation. I read the old statutes, and it seems to me that a great many of the provisions they contained could easily be incorporated in the regulations edicted by the governor in council and the commissioner of penitentiaries.

In my opinion, it is not necessary that the text of an act provide all the details of its application. I think the principle followed in this case by the minister and the government is a sound one.

Of course, as the minister said, in view of the conclusions of the Fauteux committee, it was imperative to redraft the Penitentiary Act, in order to define the framework and methods of application of the new correctional system, as the minister did indicate last Friday, when his estimates were under consideration.

At that time, I said there was no use prolonging the consideration of those estimates. I realize tonight that there is no use prolonging either the consideration of the Penitentiary Act.

Besides, the minister repeated tonight certain remarks he made last Friday.

I think everyone agrees on the principle of this bill because it involves no major change of policy.

Its purpose is to provide legislation for the commission of penitentiaries and especially for the inmates, to facilitate the latter's rehabilitation.

I feel that the main purpose of this bill is to promote the rehabilitation of inmates by means of methods of committal, remission, temporary absence and statutory remission.

Last Friday, when I asked him a question concerning the federal-provincial agreements regarding inmates, the minister made a rather thorough report of the situation resulting from the negotiations with the provinces.

Under section 16 of the bill, if an agreement is reached, the minister may, with the general or special approval of the governor in council, negotiate with the provinces so as to bring about a more complete reorganization of the penitentiaries.

Even inmates who are committed for six months or more should be included in that federal system.

In my opinion, this is a sound principle, because under the present legislation, even though an inmate spends three or six months, a year or two in jail, he is not compelled to work nor to take certain courses; in a word, he does not learn anything that might contribute to his rehabilitation. But when he is detained in a federal penitentiary, he may take courses and it is easier for him to rehabilitate himself.

Those in the law practice know that very often instead of sending a young man of 18, 19, 20, and even 23 or 24 to a district jail, the judge sends him to a penitentiary, simply because he will be able to learn a trade there and thus prepare his rehabilitation within society.

To sum up, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the house readily support the principle of this bill, even though we shall probably have some questions to raise when the measure will be considered in detail by the committee.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to add. The hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) has summed up very well the position which we on this side of the house, intend to take with regard to this bill.

The principle of the bill is very clear. It deals with a program of reform with regard to our penal system, but as we are now discussing clause 1—

An hon. Member: On second reading.

Mr. Deschatelets: —on second reading, I would like, before we get to the committee stage, to say this to the minister: We now have a complete rehabilitation program as regards our penitentiaries.

Now, I hope that, in carrying out this program, we will not fail to modernize obsolete institutions such as the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, for instance.

In that regard, may I point out to the minister that, not very long ago, some trouble broke out in that penitentiary. I was informed that one of the causes that was rising was precisely the building of the Leclerc institute on penitentiary grounds. We should therefore keep in mind that when proceeding with such drastic reforms, which enable us to erect buildings like the Leclerc institute, where inmates find living conditions entirely different from those that exist in an old building, those who remain in an old building are quite understandably filled with resentment.

I hope that thanks to this program of reform and rehabilitation for inmates, it will be possible to proceed with the modernization of our older institutions, because the carrying out of such a program will perhaps take several years. We will, therefore, I trust, see to it that all inmates, even those remaining in the older institutions, benefit from those reforms with a view to their readjustment to civilian life when they are discharged.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Chown in the chair.

On clause 5—Directors.

Mr. Roberge: This clause provides that the minister may appoint officers of the service to be known as directors of division and regional directors. In the estimates we considered last Friday I see that provision is made for the commissioner of penitentiaries, a deputy commissioner, a first associate commissioner and several associate commissioners. Are these positions or grades to be abolished and replaced by others?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, there will be under the authority of the new act simply the commissioner, the deputy commissioner and directors of divisions such as treatment and training, or services and supplies. Then there will be regional directors.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Other officers and employees.

Mr. Roberge: The minister explained on second reading that under this bill not all the employees of the service would be subject to the Civil Service Act. Although I agree that in dealing with establishments of this kind it is better to have specially trained people organized, perhaps, on the lines of the R.C.M.P., will the minister explain how this will work out, bearing in mind that many employees are now subject to the act and that those who come in later will not be subject to the act?

Mr. Fulton: Those personnel in the headquarters who continue in the service will be protected by clause 10(1) of this bill. With respect to their superannuation rights, and so on, they will be protected by the normal provision made applicable in such cases. I should inform the committee that there are, I believe, only 110 officers out of a total of some 2,800 in the service who are subject to the Civil Service Act, so this is not a big change which we are making. We are taking only a small minority out from the Civil Service Act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—Tenure—Suspension.

Mr. Roberge: In clause 8 subclause (1) it is provided that officers and employees of the service hold office during pleasure. Is there a reason why it is found necessary to make these positions tenable at pleasure instead of during good conduct?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This is normal in what we call a disciplined force where absolute standards of discipline are essential for the maintenance of the conduct and order of the penitentiaries themselves.

Mr. Deschatelets: On the same point, is there any contract of service with the employees who have been engaged?

Mr. Fulton: There is no contract of service in the ordinary sense. A man is appointed to a position at a certain salary authorized by treasury board and he will hold that position during pleasure, subject to being removed for any offence against the code of discipline and subject to promotion if he shows himself qualified for promotion.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I should like to ask a question on the same lines with regard to all three subclauses. Is there any machinery of any kind or any agreed procedure for rectifying grievances felt by the employees? This seems to me to be a most autocratic way of dealing with the service. Those engaged in it are to hold office at pleasure. The commissioner may suspend them and so may the directors. Is there any procedure whereby an employee can appeal against such a decision if he feels he has been unjustly dealt with?

Mr. Fulton: Most of the procedures in this matter will be handled by regulations. The regulations of the penitentiary service will follow very closely the regulations under the new Civil Service Act. There will not be very much difference in that respect. Perhaps I should point out that paragraph 2 of clause 8 is virtually the same as the first part of section 30 of the present act, and paragraph 3 is the same as the second part of section 30 of the present act.

Mr. Deschatelets: Suppose that an employee is informed verbally by the commissioner that his services are no longer required. Is there a board to which he can appeal in the event he feels he is being unjustly treated?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the regulations will provide for that. At the present time the regulations provide that an employee may bring grievances to the commissioner. Under the regulations of the new act which will be similar in nature, there will also be provision for the regular procedures of airing grievances on the part of employees. That is not going to be unregulated at all. The conduct in respect of employees and their rights to conditions of service will be clearly laid out by regulations.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, if my memory serves me correctly, when we studied the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act there was machinery provided to grant the right of appeal to members of that force. There were some changes made by the committee at that time with regard to the delay of appeals. In view of the fact that officers and employees of the penitentiary service are more or less a type of police officer except that they are required to assist in the rehabilitation and teaching of inmates, which will require special training, in the case of a suspension or removal, why is there no provision in this act for the right of appeal?

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend remembers the discussion in respect to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, he will recall, by virtue of the act, the powers of the commissioner with respect to disciplining members of that force are considerably greater than the powers of the commissioner of penitentiaries in respect to disciplining members of the penitentiaries service. The commissioner of the R.C.M. Police has the disciplinary authority to reduce a member in rank and/or to impose penalties, financial and otherwise. There are no such regulations giving that power to the commissioner of penitentiaries. Because of the rather overriding powers of the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. it was felt necessary to write certain safeguards of procedure into the act regarding the method of dealing with these matters. That situation is not the same with regard to the penitentiaries service and, therefore, it was felt appropriate to leave the same questions to be covered by the regulations as will be the case under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Roberge: In this case there is power to reduce pay, impose sentence or to dismiss an employee. I suggest it is worse to be dismissed than to lose pay for a certain period.

Mr. Fulton: All I can say to the hon. member is that the provisions herein contained will be closely parallel to whatever provision is provided under the regulations of the Civil Service Act. The probability is that there will be a right of appeal established by those regulations.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the last answer given by the minister does not satisfy me. For instance, if an employee at Halifax is reported by the superior there, that report is sent to the commissioner who will decide what to do. If the employee wishes to appeal, the commissioner will simply tell him there is no provision in the act authorizing an appeal.

Mr. Fulton: If the matter is covered by the regulations, that answer will not be open to the commissioner.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, may I say in respect of this clause that there will be two categories of employees in the penitentiary service. We will have the category of employees engaged after the passing of this act, and the category of employees already engaged in penitentiary service who will be coming under the civil service commission. All hon. members realize that under the civil service commission there are safeguards protecting the employee in case of dismissal. I suggest it is not a sound principle that we should have two categories of employees governed by two different sets of regulations.

Mr. Fulton: Those individuals who are presently in headquarters staff will continue, while they are occupying their present positions, to hold those positions under the Civil Service Act by virtue of section 10. When they will be promoted or transferred, the promotion or transfer will be made in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—Authority where commissioner and deputy commissioner absent.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my question should have been asked when we were dealing with clause 5, but as clause 9 also deals with the deputy commissioner, I should like to ask the minister whether he would give consideration to the appointment of a French speaking Canadian as either a commissioner or a deputy commissioner?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, at this moment, two of the very senior personnel at headquarters are French speaking officers. I refer to one of the deputy commissioners who will, under the new act, become the director of medical services, and another who will be the director of staff training. Both those very senior appointments will be French Canadian.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 10 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 16—Agreement.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Chairman; I am sorry to hold up the proceedings, but I wonder whether the minister could clarify this clause and its application to the New Westminster penitentiary and the Oakalla prison farm. With the adoption of the legislation in respect of treatment of narcotic addicts approximately one third of the inmates of the New Westminster penitentiary will be moved to the new centre. In the meantime, pending agreement with the provinces, the objective of this clause is to have the addicts transferred to New Westminster from the Oakalla prison farm, and then to the new treatment centres. I wondered whether there is an agreement with the province of British Columbia in this regard and, if so, is there any indication of the eventual abandonment of the Oakalla prison farm which is in the centre of residential Burnaby?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the narcotic drug addict who is sentenced to Oakalla prison farm at the present time would not be transferred automatically to the new drug treatment centres when it commences operations, only persons sentenced in the future. This clause is designed, as I said on second reading, to enable us to enter into individual agreements with certain provinces to provide for the assumption by us of responsibility for the custody of inmates who would otherwise be a provincial responsibility.

In advance of that time when we are able to bring about an over-all change and assume that responsibility recommended by the Fauteux committee, there are certain provinces, primarily the maritime provinces, which feel very desirous of seeing changes, shall I say, reforms, improvements, made in their present system because they, being humanitarian and progressive minded persons in charge there, recognize that perhaps there is left something to be desired in the present jail system. They recognize, however, that it would involve them in very heavy expense to bring their present system up to the standard that they themselves would like to see. Since therefore we have agreed with them in principle that just as soon as we can do it we shall take over the responsibility for a large number of their prisoners, they have said to us, "Will you help us to avoid the necessity of this substantial expenditure on facilities which when you do assume that responsibility we shall not require?" We have said, "Yes, in your case what we would be prepared to do is enter into an individual agreement, even in anticipation of the time when we can enter into the same agreement or arrangements all across Canada, to relieve you of the responsibility for at least some of your prisoners and take that responsibility ourselves so that you will not be faced with the responsibility of this very heavy and unrewarding capital expenditure." What we shall do under the authority of this clause we shall do in order to enter into such agreements to meet individual cases, where we will assume the responsibility for the custody and care of those prisoners; but because we are not yet doing it with all provinces we will require during the period to have a per capita payment from the provinces with which we enter into agreements. When we have legislation, as I expect we shall, under which we are responsible for the custody of such prisoners, then, of course, the necessity for a per capita payment from the provinces will cease.

Mr. Drysdale: I was trying to get one point clarified by the minister. Perhaps it is not within his knowledge, or it may be unfair to ask him this question at this particular time. I am quite concerned about the situation at Oakalla prison farm which is a provincial institution located in central Burnaby and extremely close to the Vancouver area. It is surrounded by residences. There is a continuing problem, despite the very close supervision, of occasional outbreaks by inmates of that prison. I wonder whether it is within the minister's knowledge if any agreement is being contemplated with the province of British Columbia at the present time to use this legislation in fact to bring about an emptying or a movement of Oakalla prison farm? I ask the question because the minister has indicated that eventually the addicts in New Westminster penitentiary, who I understand are approximately one quarter of the population, will be moved to the new treatment centres and the addicts who are in Oakalla will subsequently be moved. I thought perhaps the space in the penitentiary might be utilized temporarily by those who are occupying Oakalla at the present time with a view to an eventual abandonment of the institution. I was wondering whether that was within the minister's knowledge at this time?

Mr. Fulton: No, I would not be able to forecast any such developments. The arrangements to be made with British Columbia will of course depend, at the time when we can assume this over-all responsibility, on whether or not the facilities that British Columbia operates would be considered to be satisfactory to be taken over by us and whether British Columbia would be prepared to turn them over to us because they will have a residual responsibility for some prisoners under provincial jurisdiction. Whether they will want to turn over Oakalla prison farm to us I do not know, nor am I able to say at the present time whether in fact British Columbia will empty out Oakalla under the situation contemplated by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I suppose it is true that when we get the new drug treatment centre going out there we might have a transfer of a considerable number of our present inmates from the penitentiary in New Westminster. Then if this space were vacant and we entered into an agreement with all the provinces or, rather, passed legislation under which we assumed responsibility for large numbers of prisoners who are now the responsibility of the provinces, it is possible that we might transfer inmates from Oakalla to New Westminster or take those inmates now at Oakalla and transfer them to New Westminster; but this is quite some time in the future and I am unable to say whether or not that will actually happen.

We are not too happy with Westminster penitentiary. It is a very old fortress-like prison and we may well be looking around for new institutions ourselves. I am not able to say what our building program will be at that time, or how quickly we can take them over and what the move will be.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 16 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 21—Not to associate with adults.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I do not know whether this is a fair question to ask the minister; possibly he can decide whether or not it is. I am thinking of a particular case with which the minister is familiar. I am wondering whether this particular clause would cover a situation of that kind?

Mr. Fulton: I am very sorry; I did not quite catch the hon. member's question.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Clause 21 (2) has to do with inmates being transferred from federal jurisdiction to provincial jurisdiction. I was thinking of the case to which I drew the minister's attention not too long ago. I was wondering whether this particular clause would cover a situation of that kind?

Mr. Fulton: I do not think it would, Mr. Chairman, because if I recall the case correctly the lad in question was sentenced under the Juvenile Delinquents Act and from there he goes to an institution for juvenile delinquents. The provision in clause 21 is intended to cover the case of a person under the age of 16 years who may be sentenced under the provisions of the Criminal Code and would therefore be a federal responsibility. Here we are providing that generally speaking he shall not be confined to an institution with persons over the age of 21 years.

The position with regard to our right to transfer from provincial to federal institutions remains as I outlined it to my hon. friend in the letter which I wrote to him about the case.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I was wondering about subclause (3) which reads:

> Where, in any region of Canada, a person under the age of 16 years is confined in an institution operated by the government of a province for the custody and training of persons under the age of 21 years and the warden, superintendent or other officer in charge of that institution is of the opinion that the person is unsuitable for training in that institution, he may, by warrant, approved in writing by the attorney general or other provincial minister of the crown, authorize the transfer of that person to any institution operated by the government of Canada within the region for the separate confinement of young offenders.

Mr. Fulton: It is true that if the attorney general of the province approved, the inmates might be transferred to a federal institution; but the reason why I said this did not cover the case my hon. friend had in mind is my recollection of that case is that I was asked if I could arrange for the transfer from one provincial institution to another provincial institution. I think the answer is that I have no authority over the provincial institution and I could not arrange that. It was a matter to be arranged between the attorneys general of the two provinces. It is true that clause 21 (3) provides that there may be a transfer from a provincial institution to an appropriate federal institution, but that was not the request that was made in this particular case.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): However, if such a transfer had been arranged, then subclause 1 would have applied. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this clause provides machinery that was not available before in relation to cases of this kind, where a transfer might be considered to be best for the party concerned.

Mr. Fulton: The difficulty is that the boy in question is confined under a provincial warrant of committal which runs only in the province within which that warrant was issued. We could not receive him into a federal institution, and then transfer him into another province, because the warrant of committal would not run in that province. We could receive him in a federal institution under subclause 3, and keep him there, even though it might be in a different province. However, we could not then transfer him into a provincial institution in a different province.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Having once been transferred under subclause 3 into a federal institution, then would not subclause 1 apply, which relates to facilities in federal institutions for young offenders?

Mr. Fulton: If we had an appropriate institution we could transfer him under subclause 1 to another federal institution, that is quite true. However, my hon. friend will see that the facilities referred to in clause 21(1) are federal facilities; that is inherent in the scheme of the act. All that are referred to here, therefore, are federal institutions.

As I explained, what was requested in the case under discussion now was that I might endeavour to arrange for a transfer from one institution in one province to an institution in another province. When somebody is committed to an institution under a warrant of committal in the first province, there is no way in which I can do that. It might be possible to have it done by agreement between the attorneys general of the respective provinces. I cannot order it done, nor do I have any jurisdiction under which I could authorize it.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In so far as this particular case about which we have spoken is concerned, or one similar to it, under subclause 3 of clause 21, there could be a transfer to federal jurisdiction. Having accomplished this transfer, then could not the balance of the transfer be made under subclause 2 by agreement between the federal authorities and another provincial government?

Mr. Fulton: If the hon. member will look at subclause 2, he will see that it refers to a situation where, in any region of Canada, a person under the age of 16 years is sentenced or committed to a penitentiary and, within that region, an institution is operated by the government of a province for the custody and training of any person under the age of 21 years, then, the commissioner may, by a warrant, authorize the transfer of that person to such institution and that person shall be dealt with accordingly. Here, you have the case of a person committed under the Criminal Code and, by virtue of the statute, under our authority. Then we may provide here, as we do, that we can transfer that person to a provincial institution within that region, but it is within that region.

The difficulty in the case to which my hon. friend refers is this: There would be a warrant of committal under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, and that warrant is authority only within that province. I do not see how we could take a person into custody, then transfer him into some other province where that warrant of committal does not run. We have no control over the committal or the institution to which that person has been committed. I believe that in order to cover the situation there would have to be an amendment to the Juvenile Delinquents Act to provide that the attorneys general of the provinces could make an arrangement for the transfer from an institution in one province to an institution in another.

Mr. Lambert: There is one question I should like to ask the minister. It deals not so much with young offenders under the age of 16 but with youthful offenders between the ages of 16 and 21. There is no federal institution in the province of Alberta, but there is a youthful offenders' institution at Bowden. I wonder whether there is any provision here for the transfer of a person beyond the age of 16, but who had been committed to a federal penitentiary—say he was 17 or 18—to a provincial institution such as the one at Bowden?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: The answer, Mr. Chairman, would be no.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 22—One quarter remission.

Mr. Deschatelets: This clause deals with remission for inmates sentenced to fixed terms. What about those who have been sentenced to indefinite terms? They are not covered here. I am referring to habitual criminals.

Mr. Drysdale: While the minister is considering his answer, perhaps he could at the same time deal with the situation with regard to life imprisonment. I believe that formerly that was considered to be 20 years, and there was a review after 10 years. We have been dealing with amendments to the Criminal Code and the narcotic act, both of which make provision for sentences of life imprisonment. I wonder if the minister could indicate what factors are taken into consideration, the minimum period and the normal period of a sentence of life imprisonment.

Mr. Fulton: With regard to the first question about indeterminate sentences may I say this. There can be no earned remission as provided by this statute. The case will be reviewed every year. At the present time it is every three years. I am sorry; I should have said that at the present time it is not less than every three years. We propose to change this under the new Criminal Code amendment to every year in the case of an indeterminate sentence to see whether the person is in fact qualified for release on parole; but even if released on parole, he is released for the balance of his life because his sentence is indeterminate.

I should also say that the commissioner advises me that it has been decided that the parole board with the penitentiaries commission will not fictitiously make entries but will make entries crediting this person with earned remission as though he were there for a determinate sentence so that the parole board, when it comes to assess his conduct and his progress, will have something to look at in assessing what would have been credited to him had he been there for a determinate period but it will have no value other than evidenciary value to the parole board to show what kind of inmate he is.

With regard to life sentences, there again the sentence is for life and again the point or the time at which he will be paroled will be in the determination of the parole board. They have passed regulations under which they have provided that where the sentence of life is the result of a commuted death sentence, then they will not consider the man as being eligible for parole before a minimum of ten years; but where the life sentence is for other offences they have wider discretion to determine at what point the man should be considered from the point of view of eligibility for parole which is in the discretion of the parole board; and again, if paroled he is still subject to a term of life imprisonment and therefore he is subject to supervision by the parole board for the rest of his life.

Mr. Drysdale: Do prisoners initiate the study as to when the person is likely to be paroled or does the commissioner do that or is it automatic?

Mr. Fulton: The inmate may apply for it under the Parole Act or the penitentiary officials may make a report bringing him to the attention of the parole board.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 23 to 28 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 29—Regulations.

Mr. Broome: I should like to say a few words on this clause. It has to do with the regulations with regard to the operation of the penitentiaries. I should like to call to the minister's attention the fact that some of the regulations have been, in my opinion, unduly restrictive. Some of them have been changed in the last year. I refer to a prisoner having one sheet of paper on which to write a letter. If a prisoner wanted to have more than one sheet, he was not allowed to have it. It is not too long ago that he was limited to one sheet. He was also limited to the number of letters that he could send out. Also with regard to visitations there was a restriction. For instance, a male prisoner was supposed to be visited by members of his family. I talked to the warden at the British Columbia penitentiary who told me that the prisoners said this: "Having regard to the life I have lived, how can I have anything in the way of decent relations with the people on the outside?" He has not any relatives who can come and visit him, so the women he had known when he was outside come in as aunts or relatives and so on.

I think it is not in the best interests of the service or of the prisoners to be unduly restrictive with regard to visitations or with regard to such small items as letter writing. However, these things bulk large in the views of the prisoners. I know that the regulations have been changed a bit. However, I do not know how far they have gone along the line of enlightened penology. They certainly were restrictive not too long ago.

At the same time I should like to say that I have visited, as I say, the British Columbia penitentiary and I have talked to the wardens. There have been two wardens there. I have also talked to other people in the penitentiary service. I think the minister has not really been given full credit for the tremendous job he has done in visiting all the penitentiaries across Canada and for the interest he has taken in penal reform. This interest of the minister is certainly appreciated by the staff. It has done much to bring about better conditions within the penitentiaries system. However, I would say this. Let us not have restrictions and regulations just for the sake of having them. Where reasonable, shall I say, advantages or reasonable conditions can be brought about, I think this should be done. I think the previous regulations in many ways have been unduly restrictive and in fact have been punitive without there being any reason for their being punitive.

Mr. Fulton: I think I must send the hon. member some copies of my speeches because I have taken exactly the same point of view as he has taken in the remarks I have made from time to time. I am sure he will be glad to know that those in the service, and myself as minister, have been discussing problems of this sort and how the regulations should be changed and brought in line with the new concept of correction and rehabilitation. This problem and the views of the senior personnel on it were discussed at a warden's conference at the staff college in Kingston last November and, as a result of the exchange of views which took place there, a change was made in the regulations effective last November. The visiting regulations have been substantially relaxed as have the regulations in regard to the writing of letters. An inmate may now write as many letters as he wishes to write subject only to one restriction, namely the warden's decision as to whether it is in his interests and in the interests of his rehabilitation that he write to an individual. But subject to that restriction on the individual basis of the desirability of his correspondence he may write to others with whom it is desirable for him to correspond as often as he likes, except that we will pay for only one letter a week. We have also increased the amount of money he can earn in prison so that the problem of writing letters and increased postage should not be great.

With regard to visiting, the restrictions have been lifted to the maximum extent possible. Indeed, it might be almost correct to say that the only restriction is the restriction imposed by the physical accommodation available. In our old maximum security institutions which are over-crowded, we just do not have the space to permit visits without rationing the number of visits that an inmate may receive. It is not that we think it is bad for him. It is simply that in order that we may allow everybody to be visited we have to ration the number each may have. In our new institutions and minimum security institutions such as Williams Head there are, I think I can say without exaggerating, virtually unlimited rights of visiting on the part of inmates.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to increase the capital of the farm credit corporation from $8 million to $12 million.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, on this resolution—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): I would advise the hon. member that there is no debate on this motion.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: House in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Farm Credit Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is filibustering his own resolution.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —I have the choice of speaking at some length on second reading or on the resolution. In view of the fact that the resolution calls for the expenditure of public money I think the reasons why we are asking the House of Commons to amend the section of the act that we have before us should be advanced at this time.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Farm Credit Act by increasing the authorized capital of the farm credit corporation from $8 million to $12 million. Under the provision of section 13 of this act, this will have the effect of increasing by $100 million the amount which the corporation may borrow from the Minister of Finance. I believe the reasons behind this proposed increase are of sufficient general interest to justify some comment at this stage.

It will be recalled that when the Farm Credit Act was being debated in committee on July 13, 1959, as reported at page 5948 of Hansard, my predecessor found it necessary, in order to refute criticism that the proposed act did not meet the expressed needs of the Canadian agricultural community, to place on record the comment of a leading official of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, to the effect that the new act embodied practically everything which the federation had proposed.

In view of some of the comments made during that debate there seemed then to be, and there may still exist, some question in some quarters whether the expectations of the government and of the Canadian farmers were going to be justified when the Farm Credit Act became operative. I believe that the bill now before us, if examined in the light of its real implications, will reveal whether those expectations have been realized. To understand those implications it is necessary to refer very briefly to the intent of the Farm Credit Act as conceived by the government at the time of its introduction in this house, and to the record of lending operations that followed its implementation.

It will be recalled that the legislation of 1959 had the effect of increasing the amount and broadening the basis of the security requirements of long term mortgage loans to Canadian farmers. The express object was:

—to assist Canadian agriculture to voluntarily reorganize itself into economic family farm units, each of sufficient size to be capable, under the management of the owner, of producing sufficient income to pay operating and maintenance costs, provide a good standard of living, and to repay the loan necessary to set up such a unit within an appropriate period.

While there was general agreement that increased credit facilities were required, there were many who questioned the adequacy of the government's proposals and their reception by the farming community. I would like to reassure these critics by outlining very briefly the circumstances which make the proposed amendment necessary.

It will be conceded that an objective appraisal of the reaction of the farming public to the new Farm Credit Act can be made only by examining the record of lending activity since the establishment of the farm credit corporation and comparing it to the record under the previous legislation. I may say at the outset that it is this record which necessitates the amendment we now have under consideration.

The Canadian farm loan board in 1929, the first year of its operations, loaned $2,630,377 to 1,270 farmers. During the first decade its annual average lending amounted to $3,862,725 and the average number of borrowers was 1,889. During the second decade the average annual lending dropped to $2,669,675 and the average number of borrowers was 1,196. In the third and final decade of its operations it averaged $10,358,134 in loans to an average of 2,378 farmers each year. The total amount of all its outstanding loans at the end of its last full year of operations amounted to $89,301,022.

Mr. Benidickson: Does that mean that amount was on the books at that time?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, that was the total amount of all its outstanding loans. The Farm Credit Act came into force in the fall of 1959 and on March 31 this year the farm credit corporation concluded its first full fiscal year of lending activity. During that year it approved 5,597 loans in the amount of $60,704,050. As of March 31, 1961, the total of its outstanding investment in farm loans had increased to $162,534,854.

While it is true that we are here comparing the long term averages with a rather brief period under the new legislation, it should be borne in mind that the trend in lending volume under the new farm credit corporation has been continuously upwards and may reach $75 million during the current season. These figures in themselves are conclusive evidence of the enthusiasm with which this legislation was greeted by the Canadian farmer, but they tell only part of the story.

The government's object was to try to ensure that the credit extended to farmers would not only allow them to adjust their operations and their living standards to modern conditions, but would also be within their capacity to repay. Our supporting evidence here is their repayment record. As at March 31, 1960, 90.9 per cent of all mortgage loans were in good standing. By March 31, 1961, this percentage had risen to 92.5 per cent despite the increase in the average amount of the individual loan and the correspondingly heavier repayment obligation.

This speaks well of the care exercised by the farm credit corporation in ensuring that its loans are sound and constructive and in line with the intent of the act, and it illustrates the soundness of the new and intensive program of pre-loan counselling service which its staff extends to all loan applicants.

The soundness of the new legislation and of the farmers' reaction to it is also confirmed by an analysis of the purposes for which loans are made. For example, in 1956-57 only 33.6 per cent was used to purchase land and effect improvements to land; in 1960-61 the proportion used for these purposes was 59.9 per cent, almost double. This means more emphasis on increased income. In 1956-57 54.1 per cent was used to pay existing land debts and other debts; in 1960-61 the percentage used for this purpose was only 34.7 per cent.

These figures taken together represent and confirm the government's expectation that the Canadian farmer, given access to adequate and well-administered credit, could be depended upon to put it to good and productive use, in line with the state objective of the legislation—"The progressive reorganization of agriculture into economic family farm units."

I should perhaps interject a word at this point about the cost of administering these improved services to farmers. The net administrative cost to the corporation, expressed as a percentage of the outstanding loan investment, amounted to .865 per cent during the fiscal year just ended, down from an average of 1.06 per cent during the previous four years.

The figures I quoted a moment ago illustrate the farmer's investment of this new long term credit in the creative and productive development of the farming unit. This does not mean that his short and intermediate term credit needs have been neglected. In the year ended December 31, 1960, he also took advantage of government guaranteed bank credit under the Farm Improvement Loans Act to the extent of $79,942,352 to purchase agricultural implements; $10,064,430 for farm buildings; $9,624,919 to purchase livestock; and $2,224,045 for other purposes related to the development of his farming enterprise, for a total of $101,855,746 up from a total of just over $69 million in 1957, $70 million in 1956, $69 million in 1957 and $62 million in 1959.

Working together and complementing each other, these two sources—each performing a separate function and serving a different need—make adequate credit available to establish an economic farm unit for every farmer who is able to establish that he has a sound proposition, the necessary managerial ability, credit-worthiness and the minimum financial resources required. If he has $9,000 in cash or in land, stock and equipment and the other required qualifications, he can borrow up to $27,500 from these two sources, giving him a working capital of $36,500. Should he be a young and beginner farmer—where the early repayment of a farm improvement loan, along with an F.C.C. loan, would be more than he could reasonably handle—he may borrow the whole $27,500 as a "package-deal" loan under Part III of the Farm Credit Act, in which case he will actually pay interest only on his land debt while repaying the part of the debt secured by his stock and equipment. Under this latter arrangement he also has, during the early years of his enterprise, the advantage of a supervision service provided by the corporation. By the use of one or both of these pieces of legislation, full-time farmers who have acquired 25 per cent of the capital required for the setting up of an economic family farm unit can now be adequately serviced. Of these, the only applicant likely to be turned down is one who cannot establish to the satisfaction of the corporation, by his past record and by a sound operating plan, that he will be able to pay operating, maintenance and living costs and at the same time repay the loan requested, or one who already has an adequate economic unit or sufficient capital of his own to complete or acquire such a unit.

The Canadian farmer's response to these two pieces of credit legislation has been extremely gratifying to this government, illustrating as it does not only the soundness of its over-all agricultural policy, but justifying the confidence it has continued to place in the basic soundness of the agricultural industry itself. Wherever the natural conditions are such as to make commercial agriculture feasible and profitable under modern conditions, our farmers have shown us, I think, that they require only a little encouragement and co-operation from the government in order to work out their own salvation. Their response to the farm credit legislation, reflected in the expanding lending operations of the farm credit corporation and of the banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, speaks for itself.

To recapitulate the situation with respect to the capital requirements of the corporation: the lending authority of the Minister of Finance, in so far as the farm credit corporation is concerned, is limited by the corporation's present capital to a maximum of $200 million. The corporation to date has on loan from the Minister of Finance a total of $151,653,944, leaving only $48,346,056 to finance new farm loans for the current season. The greater part of this balance is already encumbered by loans in process, and it is anticipated that loan demand during the current fiscal year may reach $75 million. The proposed amendment would provide an additional $100 million to meet these credit needs.

Mr. Benidickson: I had intended, and I think most people on this side of the chamber had intended, to be very brief on the resolution stage, but we usually find that the Minister of Agriculture has something to sell and a great deal to say.

I am sure he has found since he has been in the Department of Agriculture that those who are employed in that department in the most useful way are engaged in trying to grow ten plants where one was formerly grown. But encouraged by the great number of public relations officers who have been added to the staff of the ministry of late, I am sure that the minister is determined always to use ten words where one word was used before. Thus some reply is necessary, I think, even with respect to legislation which normally would have the swift approval of this committee.

If hon. members would look at the resolution they will find it seems to be a very simple one. Some of us might think it involves only $4 million extra capital. It does not mean that, because while it says that the capital of the farm credit corporation is to be allowed to increase from $8 million to $12 million we must recollect, if we have not looked at the statute recently, that there is a multiplication factor here involving an increase of 25 times the capital of the corporation which means that what we are really doing in connection with this simple resolution is saying that the amount which will be available for lending will be increased, not by $4 million but by 25 times $4 million, which is $100 million.

As I have indicated, I had intended, had the minister not been somewhat verbose, to say with some alacrity that we have very little quarrel with that proposal. However, I now feel that while the resolution, on the face of it, appears to be simple it does involve an examination of the entire operation of the farm credit corporation. Let me say, first of all, that in so far as the financial operations of this corporation are concerned we are more than a year out of date. The last financial report available to us, as far as I know, is the public document provided by the corporation to parliament covering its first year of operation, under a new system, for the year ending March 31, 1960. I therefore suggest to the minister, inasmuch as under the new act we are for the first time embarking upon an element of subsidy and bonuses in connection with farm loans, that he should provide to parliament when he speaks on the introduction of the bill and on second reading, an up to date statement concerning the salient factors of these operations covering the period between March 13, 1960 and March 31, 1961.

I thank the minister for the figures he has given us today in connection with gross lending and matters of that kind. The minister very properly took pride in connection with the very obvious growth in gross lending and I might say that we too are pleased to see this. On the other hand I thought the minister was not as objective as he might have been in this case because, if he will look at the first reports presented by this government in the year ending March 31, 1959 in respect to farm loans, he will find figures at page 4 indicating that it was not unusual to have prominent growth, year by year, in the dollar value of farm loan lendings either under the former legislation or under this new act.

To illustrate that fact, I should like to point out that from 1956 to 1957 farm loans increased from $8.2 million to $13.2 million, and from 1957 to 1958 they increased from $13.2 million to $19.3 million, and so on over the years. There has been a general increase which I believe has been comparable to the growth in the gross national product as well as to the dollar growth of our industries across Canada during the same period. There has been, to use the phrase of the minister, a continuously upward increase in loans that have been provided to farmers under the former statute and under the present one.

I have no desire to detract at all from the good growth which has developed under the statute introduced in 1959. However, inasmuch as the minister chose, when it was known to him that this legislation could go through very rapidly, to point to certain features of improvement that were provided in 1959, I felt obliged to inform this committee that this farm loan legislation was introduced in 1929, and that there never was anything but an advance in so far as the maximum amount of loan is concerned except during that period of Conservative administration from 1930 to 1935.

In 1929 when the original legislation was provided, the maximum loan was $10,000. That maximum was reduced in 1934, under the Bennett administration, to $7,500, and was further reduced in 1935 to $6,000. Fortunately the trend ever since, either under one administration or the other, has been upward. I should not have mentioned these matters had it not been for the rather lengthy outline given by the minister.

Many of the normal queries that have concerned members of parliament have fortunately been answered before we came to this stage of the debate through the publication of a most useful report put out by the farm credit corporation within the last month under the title "Farm Credit Corporation Lending Policy". I should like to compliment the minister and the administration, as well as the chairman of that corporation, in respect of this very useful publication.

Most of the correspondence I have received has involved matters which are referred to in this particular publication which, as I say, was released last month, and I commend it to the attention of all hon. members. As members of parliament, we are still laymen in this field, receiving inquiries which we find we are not able to answer. I think the chief reason is that the new application form almost requires the services of a Philadelphia lawyer to understand. To that suggestion perhaps the present administration will reply that since the new act came into force, and in view of the greatly enlarged amount of money which has to be paid by an applicant before his application will receive attention, in consequence, it is hoped that because his application fee is ten times greater than it was before he will receive from the officers of the crown more personal assistance in completing this very involved application form.

Another criticism which I regard as most important, in a secondary sense, is that criticism with respect to something which existed before, and which used to exercise members of the Conservative party when in opposition, namely, a reference to the appraisal which apparently must be based on land value, and not necessarily on income coming to the farmer from his operation.

Mr. Brunsden: Land productive value.

Mr. Benidickson: I received a letter from a woman who is in partnership with her husband in the operation of a not large chicken farm in my riding. She found that it was hopeless to apply for this farm loan, even after the amendment of 1959 because, while their income has not been bad, and while their business record has been splendid, to use her words "The main emphasis is on the land value". She therefore felt that, although in the northern Ontario area this enterprise might be regarded as most successful, the farm credit corporation loan was not available to them, and eventually they had to seek private funds for the expansion of their rather outstanding poultry endeavour. Their poultry operation is so spectacular that even chain stores in Winnipeg have found that buyers there look for the Davidson poultry label as an indication of quality. This operation is a relatively small operation but, in spite of that, the quality of their product is noted throughout that locale, and as far away as Winnipeg.

In spite of that fact, and apparently because of the continued appraisal system based on land productive value, those people were disqualified from obtaining assistance which would have enabled them to expand. I do not wish to say anything more at this stage of the debate.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question. Could he tell us the area of this poultry enterprise in acreage?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I should have to look at my correspondence in order to do that. I confess I have not read it within the last few days. At the time I received it I considered it in the usual way, without putting any pressure upon the corporation, but knowing that the individuals are perhaps the most progressive in my area of northern Ontario, I did commend their comments to the farm credit corporation. The application was rejected and they had to go to non-government sources for a loan. And yet these are not the type of people that we sometimes hear about when we debate agricultural matters in this house. We talk about the integrated farmer, the large poultry operation and so on. This is not that at all; it is a family operation. The application proved to be fruitless even under the amendments provided in 1959.

Before I resume my seat there is some other information I should like to get from the minister, either now or on second reading of the bill. It is a parallel situation with respect to farm lending between the federal government and the provincial government. Only this morning I am sure that other members read, as I did, a review of the legislative program of the province of Quebec. It was stated that in Quebec the farm credit legislation had been liberalized or enlarged during the past session. My recollection is that a very substantial subsidized farm loan program has existed in the province of Quebec for a great number of years. Farm credit was so largely subsidized that few farmers would apply either to the farm credit corporation or to the farm loan board which both come under federal jurisdiction, if it was possible for them to get consideration under the former Quebec legislation. When the minister makes his report, either now or on second reading of the bill, I should like him to comment on the effect, if any, of this legislation, and particularly part II of it, on the junior farmer loan program of the province of Ontario.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

I think it was in 1958 that the province of Manitoba introduced new legislation which offered loans to farmers. To what extent is there duplication? To what extent is an effort being made to co-ordinate our programs? In the third place, to what extent is any advance in the federal sphere reducing or eliminating the usefulness and efficacy of loans in the provinces to which I have referred?

Perhaps there are other provinces which have similar farm loan programs. I think it would be useful to have this information because, as I said at the beginning, while this looks like a simple amendment to the act, it does involve all the principles of the act which was introduced in 1959. Because of the multiplication factor, we are really dealing with $100 million, not the difference between $12 million and $8 million, which is referred to in the resolution.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, if one looks at the statistics of the report of the minister with a jaundiced eye one might come to the conclusion that there are a great many more farmers in the hole now than ever before and a great many more are going further in the hole than ever before. Possibly one could go so far as to assume that farmers have at long last adopted the principle that you can borrow yourself into prosperity.

In this particular instance, Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not look at it with a jaundiced eye. I think this is something that has provided the farmers with a very badly needed service. I should like to compliment the minister and ask him to extend the benefits of the legislation even further.

There is one thing the minister said that I should like to underline. He pointed out that the administrative costs of this corporation, if I am not mistaken, amounted in the last year to .865 per cent, down from 1.6 per cent previously. I think this is something that we should really take a long look at, not only in this field but in many other fields as well. I recall that hon. members on the government side rose in their places in this house and objected to a bill to limit finance companies to charging 12 per cent because, to use their own words, they said that amount would not even meet the administration costs. When we compare that with the administrative cost of .865 per cent, of this crown corporation which is supplying the same service, surely it is something to give us all good reason to do some concentrated thinking.

Mr. Benidickson: Surely that is good socialism.

Mr. Brunsden: There are not any repossessions.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I would say that this is a good honest deal for farmers. Certainly we in this group are heartily in favour of it. As I said at the beginning, I should like to congratulate the minister on extending this legislation further, and I look forward to the day when similar honest deals are made available to other economic units in our society.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure that all of us are pleased with the time the minister took tonight to give a résumé of the farm credit corporation. It was high time that we in this house heard again of the many good things which have flowed from this act.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River made some remarks and I should like to cover them a little later on.

First of all, I should like to cover my own constituency of Okanagan Boundary because the act has produced very definite and beneficial results there. All through the boundary country, the Similkameen and the Okanagan valley itself, we have had benefits from this act, which show that in its initial inception it was based right. It is the fulfilment of a need of the farmer; it is something that had to be done. As the hon. member for Timmins expressed it, he is completely in support of it and to use his exact words, it has provided the farmer with a very necessary service. I think we all agree with that.

One of the most important things that has come out of this act is the counselling by those who are administering the legislation. There is no question about it at all, the growth of money which is going into the purchase of agricultural land shows that this act deals with a situation which was becoming chronic in Canada. Many of the farmers' orchards were too small in size. In other words, they did not have the estimated requirements to make a decent living.

One of the things that comes to mind immediately is the fact that in many instances quite a large percentage of the loans made are in excess of that which was actually requested by the farmer or the orchardist. This came about through what I previously termed "counselling". In other words, a farmer or orchardist wishes to borrow money. He first takes his problem up with the farm credit corporation supervisor or appraiser and gets good solid advice. In other words, what has happened in many instances is this. The appraiser said, "Well, I do not believe that you will have an efficient organization which will put you in a better position if you have only so much. What you need to do is to consolidate all the way through, your debts and so forth, and put yourself on a firm financial basis". This was done throughout my area. I might say that originally the response to this act overloaded the facilities, but my understanding is that it is being run smoothly and efficiently now.

Certainly, great credit is due to those who came from the Veterans' Land Act administration to act as appraisers. They have done a fantastic job. Many of them spent long hours, to my own personal knowledge, in making these appraisals. They worked a great deal longer than many civil servants feel is appropriate. These chaps even used a great deal of their spare time to accommodate other people, and they certainly deserve a great deal of credit.

I should like now to say one or two words with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. There is no doubt in my mind that he intended to try to fool the people of Canada by saying that there is no difference between this new farm credit corporation and the old Canadian farm loan board. He cited a number of figures and said, "Look; what is happening here is normal growth." Then he used that magical phrase which is used by all finance department experts, he related this to the gross national product. He referred to the years 1957, 1958 and 1959, and indicated that the amount ran up to between $18 million and $19 million. He said, relating that to the gross national product, that it showed normal growth, and that the Conservative government has not gone any further.

I should like him to take a look at the figures for 1960-61 which show the amount has increased to $60 million, which is a tremendous jump from the previous $19 million. Goodness knows what it is going to be this year. If one can gain an indication from the further amount required under the act, there will be a large increase. Certainly, as a statistician, the hon. member is getting into the class of the hon. member for Essex East. I know that if he looks at the little book he has in front of him which contains figures produced by the department, he will get a great deal of satisfaction from realizing that this government has produced something that the previous government never even thought of. We are having good success with this act and the minister and those who work under him deserve commendation.

Mr. Granger: I just have one brief comment to make. I express my regret that the Canadian government will not do for Canadian fishermen what it is doing for the Canadian farmer, that is to provide direct loans through a federal agency to the fishermen, as this measure does for the farmers.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, very briefly let me say that the proof of the pudding is in the eating. Some figures came to my desk the other day with regard to the percentage increase in the loans approved during the period from April 1 to May 15 this year as compared with the same period the year before. The increase is over 800 per cent. As I recall the figures, they were $1,450,000 for this year compared with $140,000 for last year. This is an indication, sir, that this policy is well accepted by Alberta farmers. While the legislation and the administration of it still have some bugs, and probably will have for some years I do feel, as one who at one time appraised for the Canadian farm loan board, that the raised limits are of a tremendous advantage.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River dealt with a specific case, and I should like to call that a specialty case. It is all right to talk about a substantial loan on a small poultry farm, but there is no assurance whatever that the persons making the application, admirable though they may be, will be in that business two years from now. There must be full security in respect of the amount. This is what this act calls for, and this is what is required.

Perhaps the minister will accept one suggestion from me, and that is that the appraisal fee, which has been steeply upgraded, should be returnable in whole or in part in the event of the loan being declined. I do feel that, particularly in the case of younger men and their families, this involves a hardship. I wish he would give some consideration to some kind of an amendment.

Mr. Benidickson: I take it the minister is going to deal with some of these questions on second reading. I should have asked him, when speaking earlier, if he would, in connection with the résumé of operations between March 31, 1960 and March 31, 1961, report upon the borrowings of the corporation from the government and the rate of interest paid. I think it is obvious that this corporation has had to pay the government, under its tight money policy, as much as 5¾ per cent according to the last budget figures. In view of the fact we are dealing with $100 million additional, I think we should have a report for the most recent fiscal year.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-107, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Brunsden.]

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LIMITS OF LIABILITY UNDER SECTION 21

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act to provide that the two hundred million dollar limit of liability specified in section 21B of the act, now applicable to both contracts of insurance entered into by the corporation under section 21 and instruments guaranteed by the corporation under section 21A, be made applicable solely to contracts of insurance entered into under section 21; and further to provide a separate limit, in the amount of two hundred million dollars, on the liability of importers under outstanding instruments guaranteed by the corporation under section 21A.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

Mr. Hees: The Export Credits Insurance Act at present provides a ceiling of $200 million for both export credits insurance under section 21 and export credit financing under section 21A.

Under section 21 in cases where the board of directors of the export credits insurance corporation is of the opinion that a proposed contract of insurance would impose upon the corporation a liability for a term or an amount in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake, and if in the opinion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce it is in the national interest that the proposed contract of insurance to be entered into, the governor in council may authorize the corporation to issue the insurance policy.

Insurance policies in force today under section 21 total $125 million. As insurers of supplier credits, and in accordance with the Berne union understanding, the maximum period of credit that the corporation will insure is five years after delivery. This principle carries the government's approval.

Under section 21A the government has authority through the corporation to finance export sales of capital goods. It is intended that this financing would be provided only where credit terms extending beyond five years are required. Financing commitments under section 21A today total $58 million. Thus, $183 million is committed out of the $200 million available. This leaves only $17 million available for both additional insurance under section 21 and any long term financing under section 21A.

The bill proposes that $200 million available for both insurance under section 21 and financing under section 21A be allocated solely to insurance, and that an additional $200 million be provided for export financing.

Both export credits insurance and export credit financing are an important part of our drive to get Canadian manufacturers into the export markets of the world. The government for its part is doing everything possible to encourage exporters. We had the export trade promotion conference last December; we have held a number of trade conferences around the country since that time; in a splendid example of co-operation between the government and the banks, the nine Canadian chartered banks have established the Export Finance Corporation of Canada, Ltd., which will make financing readily available to capital goods exporters who have export credits insurance; and finally, in cases where longer terms of credit than five years are required and are justified, the government will provide the necessary financing under the Export Credits Insurance Act.

With these facilities in Canada we are offering Canadian exporters the equivalent of anything available to exporters in any other country. I am more than pleased to have to come to parliament to ask for an increase in the financing authority under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act. This requirement shows that our potential is expanding and that exporters are being given every possible assistance to help them increase export sales, both by minimizing their losses with the protection of export credits insurance, and by helping them quote on large orders for capital equipment by providing financing possibilities.

Mr. McIlraith: I thank the minister for his explanation of this resolution. I think tonight the committee would understand it as a friendly remark if I referred to him as the honourable and somewhat breathless Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think I could make that reference in the sure and certain knowledge that it would be well understood in the sense in which it was uttered tonight.

Mr. Hees: I agree with that statement.

Mr. McIlraith: In 1959 when the provisions contained in section 21A and 21B of the act were added to the legislation the government retained the limit on the power to insure under special circumstances with the approval of the governor in council under section 21 and the added power to guarantee and discount paper under section 21A at $200 million, which was the amount that had formerly been the ceiling on insurance only under section 21. In other words, there was in effect a reduction of the amount of business authorized to be covered.

I recall on that occasion raising the point with the then minister of trade and commerce. Indeed, if hon. members will take the trouble to check Hansard, I think they would find that there was a bit of a hassle over a procedural point because on that occasion the legislation was not preceded by a resolution. In any event, I am glad to see that the authority for insuring under section 21 is being separated, as to the limit of the money available, from the authority to guarantee and discount paper under section 21A. Indeed, at the time section 21A was enacted in 1959, I had gone so far as to suggest that it might more properly be done under a separate corporation as is the case in the United States. However, the government did not see fit to follow that policy and I have no special criticism to offer of that fact. But it is clear that the authority under the two sections should be kept wholly separate and that the authority for the larger amount of guaranteed paper and the larger amount of insurance under section 21 should be granted.

I wonder whether the minister would mind putting in somewhat categorical form on the second reading of the bill based on this resolution the amount of insurance outstanding at the latest available date under section 13 of the act. The amount outstanding which he gave tonight was under section 21 of the act, that is insurance on contracts approved by the governor in council where it is the opinion of the government that the proposed contracts of insurance will impose upon the corporation a liability for a term or an amount in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake in relation to any one for which authority was being sought. Then will he give the amount separately under 21A of the paper that has been guaranteed and the amount of any paper that has been purchased under the provisions of section 21A. If he could put those figures on the record at second reading it would be helpful.

I wish to raise briefly one other matter that I had asked the minister to consider when the 1959 legislation was before the house at the committee stage. I refer to the provision for tabling the orders in council passed under the act. The requirement is now contained in section 21B, subparagraph 4 which reads as follows:

> All orders in council made under sections 21 and 21A while parliament is in session shall be laid before parliament during such session and, if made while parliament is not in session, shall be laid before parliament at the next ensuing session.

That provision, as will be seen, merely requires the tabling of orders in council passed under the section of the act on the closing day of a session. Indeed on June 9 there was tabled a quite important order in council dated September 16, 1960. The tabling of it at that late date was in full compliance with the law as it exists, but it surely is not a satisfactory procedure. I would hope that the minister would look at the possibility of making a slight amendment in that requirement so that it could be dealt with at the committee stage of the bill.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the Export Credits Insurance Act I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question relating to the statement made on Saturday by the Minister of Agriculture referring to the sale of wheat to Poland.

First of all I would suggest to the minister that when announcements of this kind are made the minister should perhaps refer to bushels rather than tons. Most of us better understand figures in connection with the sale of wheat if they are given in bushels rather than tons.

We were not given details as to the utilization of the Export Credits Insurance Act. The phrase used was simply that the terms would be the same as those that applied to the previous sale. I think that was some years ago. My recollection is that it involved a 10 per cent cash payment and a 30 per cent payment for each of three years. Is that what is involved in the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture on Saturday last?

Mr. Hees: That is my recollection, Mr. Chairman, but I will be glad to check on it accurately and give the hon. member the answer when we come to second reading.

Mr. Benidickson: My second question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce relates to the sale of wheat to China. Will the Export Credits Insurance Act be involved in connection with the transactions that have taken place to date, or is the credit involved something that has been arranged by the wheat board itself through the banks or otherwise?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I should like to give an accurate statement on these matters and I will give the facts to the hon. member on second reading.

Mr. Benidickson: That will be satisfactory.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hees thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-108, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Next sitting.

Mr. McIlraith: Next sitting.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PURCHASE AND SALE OF SECURITIES BY MINISTER, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Financial Administration Act to permit the Minister of Finance to buy and to sell securities guaranteed by Canada as well as securities of Canada; to permit the governor in council to authorize the deletion from the accounts of debts due to Her Majesty not exceeding one thousand dollars and to also permit the treasury board to make regulations for the deletion from the accounts of small debts not exceeding one hundred dollars, rather than twenty-five dollars as at present; and to provide for further amendments in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Chown in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Financial Administration Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think the committee might wish to have a rather brief explanation of the purpose of this resolution.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The main purpose of the bill to be based upon this resolution is to place the crown in substantially the same position as a private person with respect to the assignment of a crown debt incurred under a contract, provided the assignment is made in accordance with certain specified procedure. There is included provision whereby the governor in council may authorize the assignment of other choses in action to be recognized where it is considered to be in the public interest.

There are additional amendments which are set out in the resolution; the first permitting the Minister of Finance to buy and to sell securities guaranteed by Canada as well as securities of Canada, and the second permitting the governor in council to authorize the deletion from the accounts of debts due to Her Majesty not exceeding $1,000. At present there is a ten year waiting period before such a debt may be deleted from the public accounts. Third, there is authorization to treasury board to make regulations for the deletion from the public accounts of small debts not exceeding $100, rather than $25 as at present; fourth, authorizing the comptroller of the treasury to make recovery of salary overpayments from any moneys payable by Her Majesty to the person to whom the overpayment was made, and finally there are some further and incidental amendments in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment concerning the assignment of crown debts is a completely new one and is being introduced to set out the classes of crown debts which may be assigned, the manner in which assignments are to be made and the procedure by which notice of the assignments is to be given to the crown.

As hon. members know, the position traditionally taken and maintained by the government in the past has been that the crown is not bound by the assignment of a debt owing by the crown to a subject. Over the years a practice was developed whereby banks and other persons engaged in business accepted from crown creditors powers of attorney and arranged their affairs, in many cases, apparently on the basis that such powers of attorney operated in the same way as assignments, although in fact they did not confer on the donee any rights as against the crown to be paid in the place of the crown creditor.

In 1954 a petition of right was brought against the crown by the bank of Nova Scotia in payment to it of debts owing by the crown to Roy Swail Limited. These crown debts had been assigned to the bank by a general assignment of book debts given by that company. The petition of right challenged the position traditionally taken by the crown and the action was vigorously defended and the legal and constitutional questions were argued at some length in the exchequer court.

On January 24, 1961, the president of the exchequer court handed down his judgment and this decision places the crown in the same position as a subject with respect to the assignment of a crown debt provided that the assignment was made in accordance with the laws of assignment of the province in which the assignment was made and that adequate notice of such assignment was given to the crown.

In this connection the president stated in part as follows:

> It may be conceded that the practice avoided the occurrence of administrative difficulties, but this fact does not justify the continuance of a practice that runs counter to long accepted principles . . . The reformation of the law should be concerned with the avoidance of the administrative difficulties.

I might mention to the committee that the judgment in this case has not as yet been reported in the law reports. The view of the government is that the assignment of crown debts arising under contracts should be recognized but because of the complexity and widespread scope of government operations it is felt that some administrative safeguards are necessary.

Consequently it is proposed to amend the Financial Administration Act to provide for the recognition of the assignment of crown debts arising under contracts, but because of the widespread operation of government business and the fact that the paying offices may be located in many parts of the country the notice of assignments must be given in a certain manner in order to make the assignment binding on the crown. It is also proposed to include in the legislation provision whereby the governor in council may authorize the recognition of assignments of other choses in action subject to the same rules and conditions.

As I have indicated, it is proposed to make other amendments to the Financial Administration Act. Some of these amendments change in substance the present legislation, while others are for the purpose of simplifying the language and clarifying the intention of the existing legislation.

It is proposed to amend section 17 of the act to enable the Minister of Finance to purchase, acquire, hold and sell "securities guaranteed by Canada". As that section now reads, the minister is precluded from dealing in such securities and there are occasions when it is considered to be in the public interest that the minister should be able to purchase securities guaranteed by Canada.

It is proposed to amend section 23 regarding the deletion from the accounts in whole or in part of any obligation or debt due to Her Majesty or any claim by Her Majesty. Under the present legislation it is necessary to wait for a period of five years before an uncollectable debt may be deleted from the accounts where the amount does not exceed $500 and for a period of ten years before a debt not exceeding $1,000 may be deleted from the accounts. In many cases it is clearly evident that a debt is uncollectable long before the expiration of the required waiting period. Under the section as it now reads it is necessary to maintain records with respect to these uncollectable items even though such records serve no useful purpose and increase the burden of administration. The proposed amendment will permit the deletion of uncollectable items without regard to the period during which the debt has been outstanding, but the monetary limit on the amounts which may be deleted on the authority of the governor in council to $1,000 will be retained.

I should mention, of course, that the provision relating to reports to parliament is also retained.

It is also proposed to amend the section to permit the treasury board to make regulations for the deletion of small debts not exceeding $100 instead of $25 as at present.

Mr. Benidickson: What section is that?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think section 23(1) is the particular section to which I am now referring. There will be an amendment of that section.

There are other incidental amendments mainly for the purpose of clarity and simplification of language. At present, section 32 makes no reference to the "rendering of services" and the amendment will make it clear that a certificate is required for this purpose. Similarly the present section 35 makes no reference to "work performed" and the amendment will clearly authorize that payment may be made during the 30 day period following the end of the fiscal year for "work performed".

It is proposed to enact a new subsection to section 95 of the act. This new subsection will permit the comptroller to make recovery of overpayments of salary, wages, pay and pay and allowances from any moneys payable to the person to whom such overpayment is made without the necessity of complying with the procedural requirements of subsection (1) of section 95. This will result in greater administrative efficiency but will in no way impair the rights of the individual since recovery will only be made with respect to overpayments which it is clear the individual had no right to receive. The comptroller by section 36(3) of the act is presently empowered to recover any accountable advance or any portion thereof that is not repaid or accounted for out of any moneys payable by Her Majesty to the person to whom the advance was made. The proposed amendment will provide a quick and efficient means of recovering overpayments of salary, wages, pay and pay and allowances in the same manner.

The committee will see that these are all somewhat technical and detailed amendments which I believe it will be simpler to discuss when the bill is before the house.

Mr. Benidickson: I am sure the committee appreciates the explanation given by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. I was surprised, having read only the resolution, which is all any of us could read before we reached this stage of the legislation, to find that the parliamentary secretary seemed to emphasize and concentrate upon the fact that we were to get a bill having something to do with a change relative to the assigning of debts, contracts, the forgiveness of debts and so on. I think parliament is entitled to a better explanation of government intentions in a resolution than we have been given in this one, the parliamentary secretary having told us what he did tonight. This resolution is not a new one and it therefore cannot involve any new idea on the part of the government—any idea it might not have had two months ago. It was given to us on May 29, and there is not a word in it with respect to assignment of debt.

It does refer to three things upon which I was prepared to speak. The parliamentary secretary referred to four points, and one of them, naturally, was something of which members of parliament would have no knowledge until he spoke, because there is no reference to it in this resolution. Of course, we shall wait for the bill.

The first of the three matters with which I am prepared to deal concerns the permission to be granted to the Minister of Finance to buy and sell securities guaranteed by Canada. I know of no securities in that category other than those of the Canadian National Railways. The parliamentary secretary has said it would not be possible for the minister to buy and sell those securities at the present time. He did not say why it has not been possible in the past, nor did he tell us why it is considered advantageous that he should be able to do so in the future. I hope that on second reading we shall have a little more information given us both as to the departmental view on this question of why it was not possible in the past and as to why it would be advantageous in the future.

With respect to what I call the second item, the permission which will be given to the cabinet to delete from the accounts debts not exceeding $1,000. I think this relates, as the parliamentary secretary said, to section 23 of the existing Financial Administration Act. I would expect, inasmuch as nothing has been said to the contrary, that there will be no change in subsection (2) of section 23, and if so I do not think that this proposal will encounter any objection from this side. I refer to what I presume to be the fact that while we are increasing the amount which may be deleted at the instance of the cabinet it would still be subject to a report in the public accounts for the year in question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is correct.

Mr. Benidickson: That is being done. Well, we all realize that business is getting bigger in volume and I think it is sensible that the same type of operation should prevail there with a larger dollar amount.

The third item on my list is the amendment which will provide for the deletion from the accounts of debts not exceeding $100 in place of the former limit of $25. The hon. gentleman said that this was contained in section 23. I just cannot find it for the moment—I may have an old consolidated copy of the Financial Administration Act. However, we can certainly find it between now and second reading.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The section is 23 (1a). The present provision is for $25 and that is being increased to $100.

Mr. Benidickson: Well, for the moment I have been using the audit office guide compiled by the former auditor general and I may not have the latest amendments in that respect. Again I think there is no objection to this deletion of debts. I do feel, however, that the attention of the committee should be drawn to the fact that this matter of the assignment of debts was not referred to in the notice given us in regard to this resolution, although it appeared worthy of considerable comment in the speech made by the parliamentary secretary. I feel also that it is not too desirable, although not unusual, to add at the conclusion of a resolution of this kind the words, "to provide for further amendments in connection with the administration of the act", about which fortunately we had, as we do not always have, some detailed explanation. I do think that any administration should attempt to inform members of parliament, if possible, in greater detail in advance than has been done in this regard.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Churchill (for the Minister of Finance) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-109, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Chown): When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: At the next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, that completes the business for today. The committee has shown commendable activity in getting the business completed today. I am very grateful to hon. members for extending the time for a few minutes at six o'clock to complete the business in which we were then engaged. I think it would be quite reasonable to adjourn now. Before doing so, I should like to indicate the business for tomorrow.

We will first proceed with third reading of Bill No. C-98, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, followed by a motion in the name of the Prime Minister to set up a special committee to consider and recommend changes to the War Measures Act; to be followed by second reading of the bill to amend the Farm Credit Insurance Act. Having completed that business we will then proceed to second reading of the bill to amend the Financial Administration Act, followed by consideration in the committee of the whole of amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act, which have been reported by the standing committee on veterans affairs, and will appear on the order paper tomorrow. Having completed all that business the last item will be second reading of the bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could ask the minister if the government hopes to put more important and perhaps more controversial legislation on the order paper some time in the near future?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in view of that indication of a desire for more controversial legislation, we shall try to accommodate the hon. gentleman. If the house completes the business outlined for tomorrow I think we will be able to see our way clear to complete the business of this session by the end of this month.

On motion of Mr. Churchill the house adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 13, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk of the house has received from the chief electoral officer the certificate of election and return of Edgar E. Fournier, Esquire, for the electoral district of Restigouche-Madawaska.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—REFERENCE TO EDITORIAL IN TORONTO "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might rise on a question of privilege. I shall be very brief about it. My question is based upon an editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail of June 12, 1961 wherein it states:

> Twenty-four Canadian parliamentarians attending an interparliamentary meeting in Washington last week agreed with their United States colleagues that nuclear weapons should be used if necessary to defend West Berlin.

While I feel it would be unwise and unethical to refer to the position taken by any other member of the interparliamentary group, each of whom will have to speak for himself if he so desires, I would point out that the editorial incorrectly reflects my opinions on this question. This is understandable because of the wording of the press release issued by the interparliamentary group and subsequent changes thereto.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Alan Macnaughton (Mount Royal) presented the third report of the standing committee on public accounts, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY POSTMASTER GENERAL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In accordance with the regular practice I wish to announce the appointment of the deputy postmaster general, effective June 20. Mr. William Hugh Wilson is to fill the vacancy resulting from the forthcoming retirement of Mr. George A. Boyle, who has served for 45 years.

I should like to express appreciation on behalf of the government for the service Mr. Boyle has rendered. He has made many outstanding contributions to the development of Canada's postal service, particularly in the field of international postal affairs where he has represented Canada as vice-president of the executive and liaison committee of the universal postal union.

Mr. Wilson has been director of operations in the head office of the department since April, 1959. He entered the post office in 1929 as a temporary postal helper in Vancouver. He became postmaster in Vancouver in 1955, and in 1958 was named regional director of postal service for the Pacific region.

Mr. Wilson brings to the position of deputy postmaster general outstanding administrative skill and unusual ability to achieve results while maintaining the support of those who work for him. He has been responsible for numerous major innovations in postal techniques. As director of operations he has been responsible for all the aspects of the day to day operation of the postal service except matters of transportation.

Mr. Herridge: I simply wish to say—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I apologize to the hon. gentleman, but I was speaking to my deskmate the hon. member for Essex East.

I simply want to add a word to what the Prime Minister has said. We on this side of the house would like to commend the retiring deputy postmaster general, Mr. Boyle, for the long service he has rendered to Canada. It has been outstanding service over the many years he has served our country. We should also like to join the Prime Minister in wishing his successor, Mr. Wilson, a long and successful career.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I was interrupted by the hon. member for Laurier. We are very pleased to hear of the appointment of an experienced and competent member of the civil service from British Columbia to this post of deputy minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS AND BUDGETS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): By leave of the house I move:

That the annual reports for 1960 of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian National Railways securities trust, the auditor's report to parliament in respect of the Canadian National Railways for the year ended December 31, 1960, tabled on March 28, 1961; the budget for 1961 of the Canadian National Railways tabled on April 19, 1961; the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for 1960 tabled on March 14, 1961, the auditor's report to parliament in respect of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1960, tabled on March 28, 1961, and the budget for 1961 of Trans-Canada Air Lines, tabled on January 16, 1961, be referred to the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—MISSION TO DISCUSS ENTRY BY U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he has anything to report in regard to the success he has had in organizing a meeting of the commonwealth prime ministers to discuss Britain's entry into the common market.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the house will allow me I should like to add to the remarks I made on June 9, 1961. At that time I stated that the government was convinced of the necessity for a proper balance being observed as between bilateral and collective consultation on this matter. I said at that time that I envisaged bilateral consultation both at the official and the ministerial levels, but that because of the potential consequences of United Kingdom membership in the common market I believed that the fullest consideration should be given to collective ministerial discussion and also, if necessary, to a meeting of prime ministers.

In the light of that statement there have been further exchanges with the United Kingdom government. As a result, arrangements are now being made for bilateral talks on a ministerial level to take place in Ottawa at a time to be arranged, probably in the second week of July, between the secretary of state for commonwealth relations, Right Hon. Duncan Sandys, and the Canadian ministers concerned—the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I also hope on that occasion to see Mr. Sandys.

[Mr. Herridge.]

In agreeing to these arrangements it has been made clear that the Canadian government will regard talks with Mr. Sandys as exploratory in nature and as not constituting the basis for any binding decision or understanding as to Canada's attitude in this matter. I say this because, while I acknowledge the value of preparatory exploration of the issues between the United Kingdom and Canadian governments, I am equally convinced of the necessity for these matters to be discussed by representatives of the commonwealth association meeting together.

Collective discussions were held in London some three weeks ago among senior officials of commonwealth countries, and I should hope that following the conversations which Mr. Sandys will have here, and other United Kingdom ministers in other countries of the commonwealth, it will then be thought appropriate and advisable for collective ministerial discussions to take place. There will be occasion for this in the regular way when the economic ministers of the commonwealth assemble for their fall meeting.

There has been comment in the United Kingdom and Canadian press about my reference last Friday to the need for a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers in respect of this general subject. Some newspapers and commentators have assumed that what I called for was an immediate meeting of prime ministers. The reading of what I stated makes clear otherwise. I did not call for an immediate meeting of prime ministers; and also, in speaking of such a meeting, I said it should be held if necessary. What I wished to convey at that time, and I reiterate it now, is that I can envisage circumstances in which a meeting of prime ministers would be desirable and indeed necessary. It is not possible at this time to decide with certainty whether or not a meeting at prime ministerial level should take place. This is a matter which can only be decided in the light of developments and, in particular, on the outcome of the various bilateral and collective discussions and consultations which will take place.

I want once more, in answer to the question put by the hon. member, which is indicative of his interest in this matter, to emphasize the great importance to Canada, and indeed to the commonwealth association as a whole, of the United Kingdom's future relationship with the European economic community. The political and economic implications are so vast and complex that they deserve the most searching examination on the part of all countries concerned. It is this consideration, and of course in particular a concern for Canadian political and economic interests, which underlies the government's insistence on thorough and effective consultation.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I presume that I should be allowed some latitude in view of the statement the Prime Minister has made.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the house will permit the hon. member to comment, in view of the fact that the statement goes beyond the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. members of the house for this consideration.

The statement the Prime Minister has made prompts one to ask himself immediately what has become of the principle of consultation in so far as the commonwealth is concerned, because I am sure the Prime Minister will agree at once that in former conferences it was clearly laid down that there should be consultation among the commonwealth prime ministers. This question comes to mind at once.

Then there is the other question of whether or not—and I say this without wanting to be contentious in any way whatsoever—the Prime Minister has been repudiated by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom in the suggestion he made for a collective conference of the various commonwealth prime ministers. As the Prime Minister knows, the prime ministers of Australia, New Zealand and also India have given indications that they would not be prepared to meet at this time on the basis mentioned by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a long way from repudiation.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry; I did not catch that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a long way from repudiation.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps. I said I did not want to be contentious. If the Prime Minister does not like the word "repudiation" perhaps I could use the word "disagreement".

In view of what the Prime Minister said there comes to mind at once the whole question of what effect the common market will have upon our trade. In the face of tariff reductions in those countries what is Canada doing to protect its trade? What can we do to stop widening the gulf between the rich, prosperous and dynamic common market countries—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Laurier would agree with me that it would not be proper to extend the scope of his comment into matters not initially raised by this question nor dealt with by the Prime Minister in his answer. The hon. member for Laurier has raised one or two other questions which it would be appropriate to answer, and I would suggest that he allow the answers to be given rather than open up new subjects.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to complete my remarks, if I may. I will discontinue the line which I had intended to pursue, but I go back to the statement made by the Prime Minister in which he said that "the government will regard the talks with Mr. Sandys as exploratory in nature" and that "collective discussions were held in London" and he felt that the same thing might well take place again. Well, of course, the matter that raises is this. What are the alternatives being proposed by the Canadian government? What alternatives are being advanced? Are we to be face to face again with another 15 per cent diversion of trade?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should not get into the substance of what may be before the conference or before the ministers in bilateral discussions. What his question related to were the mechanics of dealing with the problem of possible adherence by the United Kingdom to the common market.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, the Prime Minister said he did not call for an immediate meeting. Of course the house must accept what the Prime Minister has said, but certainly that is not what the United Kingdom government understood the situation to be. From the comments that have appeared in the United Kingdom press, and Canadian press as well, the indication seems to be to the contrary.

However, in order to complete what I have to say I want to make this brief statement. Our view is that instead of trying to be obstructive the Canadian government would be better employed in seeking to associate Canada with the common market through the establishment of an Atlantic trading area rather than in preventing Britain from joining—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is opening up a very broad subject which cannot be debated on routine proceedings. If the Prime Minister wishes to reply to any of the questions asked I think he might have the floor for that purpose.

[Later:]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister, reverting to the statement he made earlier on the commonwealth prime ministers' conference. May I ask the Prime Minister what alternatives Canada would advance at such a conference of commonwealth prime ministers?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I seem to recall that over the years questions of this nature have been regarded as improper.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is a fact that Mr. Jean Rey, a member of the economic European community commission, is to be in Ottawa tomorrow or this week for the purpose of carrying on talks with regard to the relationship between Canada and the common market? If that is a fact, will the Prime Minister relate that fact to the statement he made this morning?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there is no relationship whatever between that fact and the statement I made this morning. The gentleman in question is coming and he will naturally discuss with appropriate ministers of the government the viewpoint of that commission.

STATEMENT ON EXCHANGE OF LEAD FOR SURPLUS U.S. GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, June 9, I undertook to take as notice the question raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia as to whether the reported transaction between the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada and the United States authorities, involving the barter of Canadian lead for United States grain, would have any effect on Canada's own grain marketing policy.

I have now been informed that this transaction has been concluded and that it does not depart from the pattern of previous barter transactions entered into by the United States authorities in obtaining primary or strategic commodities under public law 480. From the government's standpoint this is a private business transaction concluded by a private Canadian firm and, as the hon. member is aware, the government does not interfere in private business transactions. Our only concern is that the sale of surplus grain thus acquired through barter will not displace normal commercial sales of grain. On this point we have been assured that this barter transaction will be subject to the same safeguards as those already established and agreed upon, and which have been applied in the past for the protection of our commercial marketing areas.

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and ask him whether he has a report to make to the house on the uranium contract negotiations.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. A meeting was held yesterday and very useful discussions took place. Further meetings are taking place today on the technical level, and other meetings will be held later.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—REPORTED REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF GOVERNOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a question. Is it a fact, as now reported by the Canadian Press, that the Minister of Finance has asked for the resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have not seen the report, and I do not think I wish to make any comment on that matter until I have had an opportunity to examine the report.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a supplementary question based on a Canadian Press report dated Ottawa, June 13, in which it is stated that "Governor James E. Coyne of the Bank of Canada said today that finance minister Fleming had requested his immediate resignation". In view of this report, will the minister tell the house whether this is a fact, so the house can exercise its rights under the Bank of Canada Act with regard to the governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, this is the first intimation I have had of the report. I wish to examine the report, and I wish to be assured as to the accuracy of the reference to Mr. Coyne having made this statement before saying anything in the house. There will, of course, be something said in the house at the proper time, but I think that reference should be carefully checked first.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the importance of this matter I can well understand the minister's desire—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to check the report, but I ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I fail to see how any supplementary can arise out of the minister having taken the matter as notice and declining to answer the question today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I can well appreciate your concern, but in view of what the minister has said will you permit me to put my question so you can then determine whether or not it is in order? In view of what the minister has now said, is it a fact that he has asked for the resignation of the governor of the bank?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I refer the hon. member to the answer to the last question. It was quite clear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A statement later today.

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN—R.C.A.F. ASSISTANCE IN COMBATING GRASSHOPPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. I understand that the federal government has extended its assistance in the battle against grasshoppers and cutworms in Saskatchewan. Can the minister give the house further details regarding the R.C.A.F. airlift of insecticide?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I informed the house, following a request from the Saskatchewan minister of agriculture an airlift was undertaken by the R.C.A.F. over the week end to transport supplies of insecticide from Toronto to Regina. To begin with the amount was supposed to be approximately 30,000 pounds, but there were subsequent requests so that the operation has grown into a very considerable airlift.

In response to a further request from the Saskatchewan government two additional R.C.A.F. aircraft are leaving Toronto today with an additional 70,000 pounds of insecticide. This will bring the total airlift to over 330,000 pounds of insecticide and it involves 17 flights in all.

I think hon. members will be interested in a telegram which I received yesterday from Mr. Nollet, the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan, which reads as follows:

> We very greatly appreciate the R.C.A.F. airlift authorized by you. This has been a real life saver in our unforeseen emergency shortage of chemical control supplies during a critical period of our grasshopper and cutworm campaigns. The timely response of the R.C.A.F. was outstanding. The good spirit and co-operation of the air crews was wonderful. The farmers of Saskatchewan will greatly appreciate the emergency assistance given. Would you kindly convey our appreciation to the personnel involved and my sincere thanks to you for the help given.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO QUOTA POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister bring members of the house up to date on the status of the Canadian wheat board quotas as they now apply to Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the house is aware of the tremendous urgency, so far as farmers of the west are concerned, with regard to the marketing of grain at this time. I have answered several similar questions in recent days, but for comparison purposes I can give the hon. member the figures for two weeks ago, May 29, and for yesterday, June 12. They are as follows:

Quota Distribution

	Number of stations, May 29, 1961	Number of stations, June 12, 1961
Manitoba
3 bushels per specified acre	121	0
4 bushels per specified acre	188	132
5 bushels per specified acre	34	162
6 bushels per specified acre	21	70
	364
Saskatchewan
3 bushels per specified acre	190	—
4 bushels per specified acre	635	450
5 bushels per specified acre	197	498
6 bushels per specified acre	54	128
	1,076

The pace of moving grain is still being maintained this week, as last week, at 1,600 cars per day.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT ON REPORTED OFFER OF U.S. FIRM TO SELL MUSTANG PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 8 I was asked the following questions by the hon. member for Assiniboia as reported at page 6017 of Hansard:

> I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Defence Production. Would the minister care to make any comment on the report in this morning's Globe and Mail that a United States firm has in its possession 15 Mustang fighter aircraft which it purchased for $500 and which it hopes to sell for between $6,000 and $50,000?
> Were tenders called in this case, and were the planes in flying condition when they were sold?

I have received the following information from Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. In reply to the first question, ten Mustang fighter aircraft with engines and five Mustang fighter airframes without engines, located at Carberry, Manitoba, were sold by Crown Assets Disposal Coporation to James H. DeFuria and Fred J. Ritts, of Syracuse, N.Y. in November, 1956. The ten aircraft with engines were short of carburetors and other navigational instruments; all 15 aircraft and airframes were sold in an unserviceable condition. The ten Mustang aircraft with engines were sold at $3,000 each, and the five airframes less engines were sold for $1,000 each.

In reply to the second question, I am advised that tenders were solicited from 101 firms or dealers.

LAKEHEAD—STATEMENT AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ARTILLERY UNIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Fort William asked whether I had received a letter from the Canadian lakehead exhibition to the effect that they would welcome the establishment of an artillery unit within the grounds of the exhibition. I did receive such a letter yesterday afternoon. Mr. Walker, the secretary manager of the Canadian lakehead exhibition has written to me with regard to the construction of a building on the exhibition grounds and has suggested that this building might be used to accommodate a militia unit. His recommendations are being considered.

With reference to a supplementary question asked by the hon. member as to whether an artillery unit would be established at the lakehead, I might say that there is already an artillery unit at the lakehead, the 118th medium battery, stationed at Port Arthur.

CANADA-UNITED STATES—ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURE BY CANADA ON PINE TREE LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the statement he made in the house yesterday concerning the triangular deal between the United States and Canada, I should like to know what will be the additional expenditure imposed on the federal treasury as a result of Canada assuming full responsibility for the Pine Tree line?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer this question. The annual costs of civilian staff, operation and maintenance are estimated at $5 million in 1961-62; $9.6 million in 1962-63; $15.1 million in 1963-64 and $16.1 million when the stations are fully taken over.

As far as the duration of the NORAD agreement is concerned, which is to run to 1968 and will be reviewed at that time, the total estimated cost during that period is $94.1 million.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister said that was the cost of the civilian staff and maintenance. Would the minister say how many armed forces personnel will be employed in this work, and what the cost and maintenance of these personnel will amount to?

Mr. Harkness: The military personnel, of course, will be provided from within existing R.C.A.F. staffs. The total number which will be required to man these stations will be in the neighbourhood of 1,700 to 1,800—I am speaking from memory now, but I know it is in that area—and some 800 to 900 civilian staff.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to prepare a comprehensive answer to this question so we will know the total cost involved both for civilian and service personnel.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Harkness: The estimated cost of the 1,700 to 1,800 military personnel who will be involved in manning these stations when the take-over is complete is around $9 million a year.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—METHOD OF PROVIDING FUNDS FOR SPECIAL PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last I directed a question first to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and then to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance asking in what fashion or by what method the government intended to ask for parliamentary approval for the $1½ million special vote announced some time ago to provide for additional employment in Cape Breton. I was wondering whether the Minister of Finance could answer that question.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on June 10, as reported at page 6135 of Hansard, was brought to my attention. The answer is that the manner in which this particular matter is dealt with in the estimates will depend on how far particular projects are developed while the house is in session.

Various departments of the government which have possible projects in the area which will provide employment are studying those now with a view to advancing them. That is the way the matter stands at the moment. So far as provision is to be made, if those advance sufficiently while the house is sitting then there will be an item to deal with them as such.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does that mean that the minister is contemplating another set of supplementary estimates?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, there will have to be one further set of supplementary estimates before the house rises. It will not contain many items, I may say. But this particular matter could be dealt with as it stands now, in the absence of a particular approved project, out of a vote in the Department of Finance. If the projects are approved and come within various departments, thought will then be given to an item in one particular department to cover the various projects which will come from other departments.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Are these additional supplementary estimates for the purpose of putting in things like this vote that the minister forgot in others?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course, Mr. Speaker, this was not forgotten, and the observation implicit in the question is utterly stupid and uncalled for.

Mr. Pickersgill: But true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have given the reason why, when the supplementary estimates were tabled, it was not proper at that stage to put in an item because of the fact that the particular projects had not been selected. I have given a sufficient explanation of the matter this morning, Mr. Speaker, I am sure, to clarify it to the satisfaction of all hon. members except the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting every hon. member of this house. The minister has said that if a further supplementary estimate for this purpose is not introduced into this house, this money could be paid out of a vote in the Department of Finance. The minister knows that vote is entitled "Unforeseen", and he also knows that this matter was foreseen and announced in this house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see no question of privilege in what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, because the hon. member has attributed to me a statement I did not make. It was one that the hon. gentleman hoped I would make, because he had his little set speech prepared in advance and he proceeded to argue his case as though I had made the statement that he hoped I would make.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not been convinced that there is a question of privilege there.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DOMINION DAY—REQUEST FOR OBSERVANCE ON JULY 3

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not sending him notice but it came to mind only a few moments ago. I am rather sluggish this morning. In view of the fact that July 1 falls on a Saturday, would the government consider giving all civil servants the opportunity of enjoying Monday, July 3 as a holiday, on that account?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter was considered, and it was decided that it was impossible to accede to the suggestion contained in the hon. member's question.

TRANSPORT

NIAGARA FALLS—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF SAFETY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the tragedy in the upper Niagara river the day before yesterday, which resulted in the death of four people, has the minister considered barring pleasure craft from the water of the upper Niagara river below Navy island to the falls?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think everybody was extremely grieved by this terrible tragedy, and I can assure my hon. friend that we will investigate her proposal very closely.

Miss LaMarsh: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I also inquire whether the minister has given any consideration to the provision of some coastguard facilities at this point in the Niagara river both for watching in order to prevent these tragedies occurring and for assisting if it appears that a tragedy is going to take place?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker, but we will investigate this proposal also.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CENSUS

INQUIRY AS TO CENSUS COMMISSIONERS ACTING AS ENUMERATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say whether census commissioners can appoint themselves as enumerators, and thus draw two salaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for an interpretation of a statute and regulations?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not customary to ask for legal opinions. If the hon. member has a specific matter to inquire about, it would be in order, but a request for a legal interpretation of statutes and regulations is not in order.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I bring to your attention the fact that this is a matter which is of importance at the moment because the census is being carried on. It is not a matter in which an opinion is being sought with regard to interpretation of the law. Therefore I submit to Your Honour, with deference, that the question is one which is well put and should receive an answer under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: The question as phrased is purely one of opinion. I do not want to prevent the hon. member from inquiring into any factual circumstances in relation to the census.

Mr. Garland: If I may say so with respect, Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of interpretation; it is an inquiry concerning the regulations.

An hon. Member: It is a matter of fact.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has some factual situation to inquire into, that is quite proper. However, as has been pointed out quite frequently, the regulations are open to all hon. members of the house, as is the statute under which the census is taken. To ask the opinion of the minister for their interpretation is asking about something which is open to any hon. member to interpret for himself.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, you mentioned that my question would be in order if I made reference to a specific case. Perhaps the minister could tell me if Mrs. Priest, of 147 Riverdale avenue, has her husband, her son and herself out enumerating?

An hon. Member: Where; what town?

[Mr. Balcer.]

Another hon. Member: Montana?

Mr. Garland: In the electoral district of Broadview.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this particular case, but I will be glad to look into it.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TORONTO—REPORTED EXPOSURE OF CHILDREN TO RADIOACTIVE CONTAMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on June 10 the hon. member for Assiniboia asked for my comments in connection with a recent incident in Toronto in which children were in contact with some powder containing radium, which they discovered in a warehouse.

I should like to pay tribute to the prompt and efficient manner in which the local authorities acted, which seems to have averted the danger of any serious results. On the basis of all the information received there seems to be no reason to expect that any of the persons involved will suffer any ill effects. The last stages of the clean-up and accounting process are now going on under the immediate direction of officers of the Ontario department of health.

During world war II large amounts of radium powder were used to paint luminous dials in aircraft and other equipment. It seems clear that the supplies in this case came from that source and were obtained before 1947, when the regulations of the atomic energy control board came into effect. Such material cannot now be acquired except under licence from the board, and licences are not granted unless the board is satisfied, on the advice of its health advisers, that the recipient has adequate knowledge and facilities to ensure that no health hazard will result.

It may be that some of the radium powder obtained prior to 1947 is still stored in industrial establishments, warehouses and similar places. After so many years the material will have lost its usefulness for the painting of luminous dials, but it will remain a potential danger to health because of its radioactivity. I wish, therefore, to advise all organizations to make quite sure that they do not have in storage any old stocks of radium luminous compound. My colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, whose department advises the atomic energy control board on matters relating to health and safety, suggests that the radiation protection division of his department be notified if any such material is found. That division can then make arrangements for proper disposal, which should not be attempted by other parties.

Meanwhile, every effort is being made to locate any other supplies that may still be in existence under similar circumstances.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-98 to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent yesterday afternoon when the bill was considered on second reading and in committee.

I should like now to give the reasons that would have prompted me to take exception, not to the bill itself, but to section 15 in particular.

On account of that section, numerous representations were submitted to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, when the latter examined the bill, by the St. Lawrence pilots' federation and other organizations.

It now seems obvious that since 1959, that is, since Bill S-3 was introduced, the government has never given up the idea of eventually abolishing pilotage on the St. Lawrence.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if hon. members would take their seats and maintain reasonable silence so that we may hear the hon. member for Levis.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, in 1959, following representations made by various pilots' associations and several members of parliament, the then minister of transport withdrew Bill S-3 to exempt any ship designated by the governor in council from the obligation of paying pilotage dues.

The government undoubtedly realized that their action was too drastic and they decided to proceed by steps but, I repeat, always with a view to abolishing pilotage all along the St. Lawrence.

That, in my opinion, is why section 15 was inserted in the bill we now have before us.

Indeed, section 15 stipulates that American lakers will be exempt from the obligation of paying pilotage dues in the St. Regis district down to Montreal, that is in an exclusively Canadian zone.

The scheme is clever. The exemption is only for that section for the time being but, in a few years from now, it will be extended to the whole length of the river.

The minister may tell us, as he did before the committee, that it will not be so. I am quite willing to take his word for it but, on the other hand, he will agree with me that his statement binds neither his successor nor the government.

The assurance he has given to the committee is no guarantee for the pilots as far as the future is concerned.

When this bill was examined in committee, we had the opportunity of hearing the legal adviser of the St. Lawrence pilots' federation and the representative of the Canadian merchant service guild.

These two representatives indicated before the committee that they took particular exception to clause 15 first on grounds of national sovereignty and then on grounds of safety in navigation.

The matter of sovereignty and of treaties was clearly dealt with yesterday by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). I will not therefore take it up again.

As for the question of safety, it must first be recognized that with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway, the traffic is bound to increase considerably in the coming years. Moreover, as the ships plying those waters will be bigger and speedier, the danger will be greater. The logical thing to do then, Mr. Speaker, is to render more stringent the safety measures, not to relax them. As a matter of fact, that is what we have been doing for several years now in the case of highways. In order to insure the greatest safety on our highways, the traffic laws have been tightened each year.

When asked by the members of the committee to comment upon the conditions of navigation in the district concerned, Mr. Guy Chartier, president of the Cornwall district pilot association, stated that the channel was quite narrow and difficult. He added that in his opinion no one should be allowed to pilot a ship in those waters unless he had been plying them for six or seven years. He also remarked that on the Canadian side, before getting a pilot licence, one had to have a master licence and two years of navigation in this area after apprenticeship while, on the American side, licence is granted after 12 trips only, which gave him reason to conclude unhesitatingly that such persons could not be qualified to navigate in that district.

Mr. Balcer: Would my hon. friend allow me a question?

Mr. Bourget: Surely.

Mr. Balcer: Is he not aware that it is absolutely forbidden to any American pilot to pilot a ship in Canadian waters, between St. Regis and Montreal?

Mr. Bourget: Yes, but is the minister not aware also that, under the amendment to section 15, captains of United States ships shall not be required to take a pilot on board and that, according to the statement made in Montreal by the president of the federation or association of the St. Regis district pilots, after 12 trips masters or captains will to be able to obtain a certificate allowing them to pilot their ships from Cornwall to Montreal. Therefore, I base my assertion on the statement made by the president of the association of pilots.

Mr. Chevrier: This allows the Americans to pilot their ships without the help of a Canadian pilot.

Mr. Bourget: This is the argument of the hon. member for Laurier: under section 15, United States ships may now ply from Cornwall to Montreal without the help of a Canadian pilot.

Mr. Balcer: They could do it before.

Mr. Bourget: I admit they could do it before, but circumstances were different, as the hon. member for Laurier mentioned when he discussed that point.

I wish to point out, that it is strange that the Department of Transport does not require the American masters—and I repeat the point the minister and I just mentioned—to pass tests before they are permitted to pilot their ships in exclusively Canadian waters. It seems to me that we should expect from the American masters the same qualifications and the same degree of experience as we expect from our own pilots.

Therefore, it seems clear to me according to the views of experienced men, that to exempt those ships of the payment of pilotage dues would endanger the safety of navigation in that area. Furthermore, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, the adoption of clause 15 would be a step toward the abolition of compulsory pilotage by Canadian pilots in the other districts of the St. Lawrence river.

The minister is aware that strong representations have been made in Washington—and there is no call to doubt their continuance in the future—to grant the American lakers the same privileges upon the whole length of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that it was for those reasons that I would have supported yesterday the amendment of the hon. member for Laurier to the effect that clause 15 of the bill be deleted.

I regret very much that the minister refused to agree to that amendment.

(Text):

Mr. H. E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it was suggested during the committee stage of this bill that Canada had given up something but had not received in return a quid pro quo. I should like to deal with that point for just a moment or two.

I should like to refer to pages 1 and 2 of the treaty between Canada and the United States dated May 5, 1961. At page 1 it is provided that the President of the United States by proclamation may declare certain areas compulsory pilotage areas, and listed there are districts Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Without reading the detailed descriptions, district No. 1 is the St. Lawrence area between St. Regis and Kingston, district No. 2 is roughly the area of the St. Clair river, and, district No. 3 is the area of the St. Mary's river and Sault Ste. Marie.

I should like to read the paragraph following the description of those districts, which is as follows:

> Registered vessels of the United States and foreign vessels navigating United States waters of the great lakes which are not designated by the president by proclamation—

That refers to the three preceding areas that have been designated. I continue:

> —are required by the act to have on board a United States registered pilot or a Canadian registered pilot or other officer qualified for the waters concerned—

To me, and I think to anyone who reads it, that is a clear indication that Canada does receive some rights in United States waters and the great lakes, particularly the waters of lake Michigan.

There was a question asked in the committee as to why this matter of having a pilot or not having a pilot betweeen St. Regis and Montreal was not covered by the treaty. One answer is that the waters are exclusively Canadian. I think perhaps an analogy can be made regarding the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. In order to make a workable navigation seaway in Canada, certain work had to be done on the canals between St. Regis and Montreal. That work was done at a cost to and by the Canadian government because it is exclusively Canadian waters. Would the United States government have spent the $100 million odd it did spend without having the assurance from the Canadian government that it was going to improve the channel between St. Regis and Montreal?

I think the analogy is clear there. The United States government would not have given us a general pilotage agreement concerning the whole of the St. Lawrence system without having received an undertaking or understanding that certain provisions would be made for it in respect to that section of the St. Lawrence seaway from St. Regis to Montreal.

I am not sure that the argument of the hon. member for Levis is valid when he says this is only a first step. I cannot go as far as he does, because it seems to me quite clear that Montreal is the end of the seaway works built either by Canada or the United States, and there would be no validity in a United States request for pilotage rights beyond Montreal by reason of that fact. It is true, of course, that the traffic between the United States and Canada, in that section from Seven Islands to the Ohio steel ports on the United States side, is increasing and that possibly fewer ships than heretofore will now turn around at Montreal, although I think for some years Montreal will be essentially the eastern terminal of the seaway in regard to grain shipments.

Again I should like to emphasize the fact that there has not been any clear indication as to the matter of safety. Sometimes we tend to make open assumptions that when an accident happened at a time when there was no pilot on board, it happened because there was no pilot on board. I do not think our pilots would be happy if we made the similar assumption that because there was a pilot on board at the time an accident happened, it was his fault. As I pointed out in committee, I hope better statistics and records are kept so that more detailed statistics can be published. If this is done we will then have the opportunity of assessing that portion of responsibility for an accident which is attributable to the fact that a pilot was not on board.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise and join in the debate, but I am wondering whether on third reading the minister has the right to reply. Before I make my intervention I should like to point out that situation to Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: The minister does not have the right to reply, and would only be speaking on the basis that he had not spoken in moving the motion but had deferred his remarks. That is sometimes permitted by the house, and I think is a reasonable practice. If the minister speaks now he will not close the debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am not objecting to the minister replying, but I should not like to be cut off after his speech.

Mr. Speaker: His reply will not close the debate.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you.

(Translation):

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not seek to raise a new debate or continue the one we had yesterday, but just the same, the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) has raised some points that have to be considered and to which I must make some correction.

First of all, for the hon. member's information, I should tell him that the Department of Transport gives the St. Lawrence pilots a remarkably good treatment. In fact, I think there are few Canadian corporations whose employees are so highly paid proportionately to their work. I realize that pilots have responsibilities, and my department has always seen to it that their salaries or dues be guaranteed and in line with their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing we seem to forget sometimes about our pilots: our primary concern should be the safety of navigation on the St. Lawrence river. On the other hand, if we impose all sorts of charges and give rise to all sorts of difficulties, if, in a word, we enforce special procedures for vessels using the St. Lawrence river, there is a risk of less efficiency in the St. Lawrence shipping trade.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in our discussion with the United States, in order to come to some agreement with regard to piloting on the great lakes or any other waterway where both countries have a common interest, we must keep in mind that the safety of navigation must be the prime consideration. The same applies to the efficiency of seaway traffic. We do not wish ships to be hampered in their business; on the contrary, they should be able to go about their business in a logical way. That is why, in those discussions with the United States, we always have in mind not only the improvement of seaway traffic but also the protection of the Canadian pilots' position, their salaries and the part they play in the seaway traffic of this country.

That is why in this case, when we had to negotiate with the United States, we came to an agreement which, to my mind, is justified. As a matter of fact, as the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith) explained a moment ago, the Americans also made some concessions, and I am convinced that the agreement which has been concluded is entirely reasonable, as not a single Canadian pilot will lose a cent because American vessels benefit from an exemption. Not a single Canadian pilot will lose his job following this arrangement, because we did insist that no American pilot be entitled to do any piloting on the St. Lawrence river, between St. Regis and Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Levis suggested a moment ago that the Department of Transport did not seem to care too much about the fate of our Canadian pilots, and that our officials seemed to want to please the Americans. Well, I must point out to him that the Department of Transport guarantees very attractive salaries to the pilots, and that there are not many Canadian corporations which pay their staff a salary of about $12,000 a year, not including an expense allowance of up to a couple of thousand dollars, and all that for eight or nine months of work.

I know Canadian pilots have responsibilities and that their services are most important to shipping and in many other ways. Just the same, they are paid very attractive salaries. Members of the Canadian corporation of pilots enjoy rights based on an ancient tradition which I respect as much as anyone else; however, in view of the fact that the Department of Transport guarantees jobs and fees to Canadian pilots, I feel they enjoy great benefits under our legislation.

Mr. Bourget: Would the minister allow me a question? What will happen to the pilots in the Cornwall-Montreal area?

Mr. Balcer: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Bourget: What will happen to the pilots in the Cornwall-Montreal district if, within a few years, all American ships can be piloted by Americans?

Mr. Balcer: I am very pleased that my hon. friend has asked this question because as Minister of Transport, I was asked by the pilots themselves to grant compulsory pilotage in that district. In fact, in November 1960, I told them: Your request is a serious one, and we shall do our utmost to grant it. After studying the matter, we imposed compulsory pilotage on all foreign ships. At the time, I indicated to the pilots that I was not prepared to impose compulsory pilotage on American ships because we were then discussing pilotage on the great lakes. However, I asked the pilots to grant voluntary exemptions to American ships until the Canada Shipping Act was amended. Well, that is what happened, and the pilots themselves exempted American ships.

My hon. friend has asked what will happen to the pilots in that district. Well, their position is better today than it was in November 1960. We have improved their position. Moreover, I would point out to those who feel inclined to raise cries of persecution in a case like this, that I think there is a tendency to make a bogey out of everything that is done by the Department of Transport in regard to pilotage.

These pilots are members of an old association with traditions going back many years. They are jealous of their rights, and you may be sure I respect those rights. However, representations are constantly being made as if we wanted to deprive them of their livelihood. There is always a hue and cry whenever a word is changed in any document dealing with pilotage.

Pilots are now organized in a federation, they have well defined districts, their working hours have been reduced, their salaries and expense allowances have gone up from year to year. Considering that they were granted compulsory pilotage on all foreign vessels under the sole condition that American vessels be exempted, I feel that the pilots should not raise any bogey in such a case, because their situation has improved in that district since last November. It should be kept in mind especially that those districts did not even exist before. There was only the Ottawa-St. Lawrence district where pilotage was not compulsory. Consequently, they were at a disadvantage as compared with the pilots downstream from Montreal. Their position is much better nowadays. Pilotage has become compulsory. Their association is recognized and so are their districts. I think they have made a great step forward.

I know they did not get everything they wanted, but they have made a great step forward.

I feel that our agreement with the United States concerning the great lakes is both reasonable and justifiable. We did not twist their arm. We ensured fair treatment for our pilots. The United States agreed to our request, namely that there should be equal treatment right from the first year. They made that concession and, in return, we made concessions on other points.

Consequently, I feel that as far as pilotage on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence is concerned, the pilots' situation is better now than it has ever been.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in the discussion on the third reading of this bill but I rise again because of the intervention by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith) whom, I hope, will resume his seat. Incidentally, I also rise because of what the Minister of Transport just said.

First of all, with all respect, I say that the Minister of Transport added nothing to the debate a while ago. He only repeated what he had said yesterday. But he used a new phrase, that is, safety is the prime consideration.

The safety of the shipping traffic urges us to conclude an agreement with the United States. Very well. As a matter of fact, the pilots themselves have been saying that. That is why they asked the minister not to exempt from compulsory pilotage, as the minister says, from the payment of pilotage dues, United States ships. They claimed that if such an exemption is granted, what would surely happen, as the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) indicated, is that eventually there will be no more demand for Canadian pilots in that district. The United States ships will be handled through these dangerous waters by their own captains or masters, so that in five or ten years, there will be no need for Canadian pilots in that district.

Now the minister says that compulsory pilotage was granted the pilots. Prior to last November, no compulsory pilotage existed in that district.

Why was the pilotage made compulsory by the department in that district? For the same reason of course that brought the setting up of pilotage districts on the great lakes. It is on account of the increase in traffic in that area, because compared to the period which preceded the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway, the volume of traffic has more than doubled. Ships are bigger and longer, with a deeper draught and a carrying capacity of 20,000 to 25,000 tons, which explains the need to ensure the safety of American, Canadian and foreign vessels in those waters by making pilotage compulsory.

Now, after having agreed to that in November, exemption is intended for American ships. Well, pilots are objecting to that.

There is no question of raising cries of persecution or of making a bogey out of that. Neither the hon. member for Levis, nor I ever said any such thing. We made our argument here the same way as the pilots did before the committee where I think, they very calmly made very logical representations. They feel it is an invasion of their rights and of our sovereignty over Canadian waters. Furthermore, they feel that safety of navigation is threatened and they put their case to the minister.

The minister says they are well treated and that their remuneration is excellent. Remuneration or salaries are not involved in that legislation; only two things are involved: upholding of sovereignty and protection against accidents.

(Text):

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): Is it not a fact that even before November, 1960, when there were no compulsory requirements either as to dues or pilotage, all vessels using the seaway at that time employed pilots; and does the hon. member not think that in the future as in the past the safety of these valuable ships will be a factor whether or not pilots are employed, regardless of the legislative requirements?

Mr. Chevrier: I think the answer to that question was given by the minister in committee, when he said that while it is true that most of the United States vessels are now using Canadian pilots because they are unfamiliar with the waters, there is no doubt that in due course the necessity of using Canadian pilots will gradually disappear and the day will come, which in our opinion is not far off, when the masters and mates on United States ships will be able, because of the experience they have gained, to take these ships right through to Montreal without using a Canadian pilot and therefore the pool of Canadian pilots will in due course disappear.

I wanted to say a word or two about some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Simcoe North. Since he understands so well what I am saying in French, perhaps I might continue in that language. However, it might not be courteous to do so. The hon. member concluded his remarks by asking whether the United States government would have spent upwards of $100 million without having the assurance from Canada that they would obtain exemption from pilotage in this section of the river.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I think the hon. member misunderstood me. I said it was related to the problem of getting the United States government to spend $105 million in that particular section, and that part of the implied agreement must have been that we would approve canal facilities between St. Regis and Montreal.

Mr. Chevrier: I took down the exact words that my hon. friend used, and I think they jibe very accurately with the argument he was trying to make. Why would the Americans spend over $100 million in the international section of the river if they did not expect to get the same treatment from Canada that the United States has given to Canada under the United States-Canada pilotage arrangement which he mentioned earlier?

The point is this, and it seems to have been forgotten entirely both by the hon. member and by the minister as well. We are dealing here with the international section and the international section alone. That is the point. It seems to have been forgotten both by the minister and the hon. member that in the international section, where the Americans have spent money for navigational facilities, they have all the protection that is required in so far as pilotage is concerned. They got it under the amendment to section VI of the pilotage act which was passed last year, and they also have it under their own legislation.

The point I am trying to make is that we are giving them in Canadian waters rights which they have not got today, rights which they have in United States waters under their own legislation and rights which they have in international waters by legislation which we passed last session. Now the hon. member comes forward and says we have received a quid pro quo, and that is why we have put this in the legislation. There may be a quid but I should like to know where the quo is. As the hon. member for Simcoe North has said, the quid is the exemption on lake Michigan. Canada gets rights for its Canadian pilots on that lake, which is wholly in United States territory. That is true. But why, and I have asked this question repeatedly, is that right of exemption on lake Michigan not placed in United States legislation in the same way that the right of exemption for United States ships is placed in Canadian legislation in this bill?

If it is a good thing to amend the Canada Shipping Act to give United States ships, because of certain commitments that have been made by Canada, the right to be exempt from pilotage in the Cornwall-Montreal district, why should the Americans not do the same thing in their legislation? The minister replied that their laws are not the same as ours. However, they have enacted certain laws so far as the great lakes pilotage area is concerned, and the question that comes to my mind is why should they not do it in this case?

The hon. member for Simcoe North attempted, and I say to him respectfully that he did not succeed, to argue away the treaty aspect of this matter. United States citizens were given rights in the international section of the river by treaties going back as far as 1783 and extending right up to the boundary waters treaty act of 1909. Those rights are clearly established in these treaties. It seems to me that if they are to have additional rights, particularly in the Canadian section of the river, it should be done by way of a treaty as well.

I know those who sit on the other side of the house challenge this argument, but it seems to me that there is a loss of sovereignty in these Canadian waters. It seems to me that the law so far as these Canadian waters from Montreal to Cornwall-St. Regis are concerned should remain as it was before, and I know the minister will reply at once that of course it does remain. It does not in this sense, that the pilots no longer have control in that section of the river, but they have in the section extending from Montreal to the sea. For that reason the pilots have come and protested against this legislation.

No one is challenging the statement that the pilots are well paid, but the pilots would not have been before the committee of the house as they were for two days protesting against this legislation unless they feared not only the international and safety aspects of it but also that it might represent a step toward taking from them certain rights in the river downstream. Furthermore, I am sure the pilots will continue their representations in that regard, which is indicative of the fact that they are not satisfied with this legislation.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): Would the hon. member permit another question? I think the hon. gentleman is perhaps being deliberately obtuse. Does the hon. member think the United States in constructing the seaway would have spent $105 million, or whatever amount was spent, in the international section of the St. Lawrence if there had not been an undertaking, either firm or implied, on the part of the Canadian government to improve and deepen the canal between St. Regis and Montreal?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to that question is "no", and I shall tell the house why. There is no doubt that the United States government made an expenditure on the seaway long before there was any question of an agreement on pilotage.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I was not talking about pilotage. My question related only to the question of the improvement and deepening of the canal. I was not attempting to relate it by analogy to pilotage. I was relating it to the deepening and improvement of the canal between St. Regis and Montreal. It strikes me that it would have been rather odd for the United States government to have spent $105 million and then encountered the question of a much shallower canal opposite Cornwall.

Mr. Chevrier: The point is that the Americans made that expenditure without receiving that assurance. I am attempting to make that clear to the hon. gentleman but he will not let me reply. I wish to add this. Not only did the United States government make that expenditure, but the question was never raised before 1960. It was certainly never raised in 1959, and certainly not before the seaway—

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): If I may interrupt, permit me to say we did not have to agree to deepen the canal between St. Regis and Montreal before the Americans would commit themselves to spend $105 million.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member is now changing his ground.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I am not changing my ground. I am merely emphasizing the point I attempted to make earlier.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member is changing his ground. There is no doubt that if the United States government had not had from Canada the assurance that we were going to build 27 foot facilities downstream, they would not have been foolish enough to build facilities upstream in the international section. But that is not the point the hon. member was making. I took down the hon. member's words. The hon. gentleman said "Why should the United States government have spent this money without having the assurance that they would have an exemption from pilotage?" Those are the words the hon. member used, as I took them down.

Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that the expenditure was made by the United States government without receiving any assurance whatever from Canada with respect to pilotage. Furthermore, the directions to the United States authority that was building the seaway are set out in the United States legislation. In that legislation there is no reference whatever to pilotage. That was a matter which, I take it, was to have been ironed out eventually between the two governments.

Mr. Deschatelets: The hon. member for Simcoe North is all wet.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Unless the minister is rising to correct what he considers to be a misinterpretation, I must inform him that he cannot speak twice in the debate. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is for third reading of the bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, will you call the yeas and nays?

WAR MEASURES ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER AND RECOMMEND CHANGES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to consider and recommend changes that may be desirable in the War Measures Act;

That the committee consist of fifteen members to be designated by the house;

That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house;

That the committee have power to send for persons and papers;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as it may deem advisable and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation to the printing thereof; and

That the committee be empowered to report from time to time.

He said: Mr. Speaker, ever since 1914 there has been on the statute books of this country an act known as the War Measures Act, which was passed immediately after the commencement of the first great war. Following that war there were discussions on various occasions both in the House of Commons and in the other place regarding this legislation, particularly as to whether or not it should continue in effect following the declaration of peace.

The act in question, and I shall make only a short reference to it, provides for the issue of a proclamation by Her Majesty, or under the authority of the governor in council, who may then "do and authorize such acts and things, and make from time to time such orders and regulations, as he may by reason of the existence of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection deem necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada"; and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms—"the power to censor, control and suppress publications, writings, communications and means of communications, arrest, detention, exclusion and deportation, control of the harbours, ports and territorial waters, and the movement of vessels in Canada, and also the control of transportation by land, air or water, control of trade, exportation, importation, production and manufacture, as well as appropriation, control, forfeiture and disposition of property". In other words, under the general powers there is virtually nothing that the governor in council cannot do within the powers granted by the act.

Following the second world war the government of Right Hon. Mackenzie King and later the government of Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent brought in and had passed by parliament two acts which contained virtually the same powers as the War Measures Act, and enabled the governor in council to draft orders in council which, regardless of whether or not they were infringements on provincial jurisdiction, were none the less lawful.

In 1960 parliament passed the bill of rights and made certain provisions therein respecting some of the powers contained in the War Measures Act. Section 6 of the War Measures Act reads as follows:

The provisions of the three sections last preceding shall only be in force during war, invasion, or insurrection, real or apprehended.

Those are the sections giving the power, imposing penalties, and providing that anyone held for deportation under this act, or under arrest and detention as an alien enemy, or upon suspicion of being an alien enemy, or to prevent his departure from Canada, shall be released upon bail or otherwise discharged or tried, without the consent of the Minister of Justice.

The bill of rights provides that section 6 of the War Measures Act is repealed and substitutes therefor the following:

> Sections 3, 4 and 5 shall come into force only upon the issue of a proclamation of the governor in council declaring that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists.

For the protection of the rights of parliament there is this provision. The proclamation declaring that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists shall be laid before parliament forthwith after its issue or, if parliament is not then sitting, within the first 15 days next thereafter. A further subsection provides that when the proclamation has been laid before parliament a notice of motion in either house signed by 10 members thereof, praying that the proclamation be revoked, shall be debated in that house at the first convenient opportunity within the four sitting days next after the motion in the house is made. This section further provides that if both houses of parliament resolve that the proclamation be revoked, it shall cease to have effect. In other words there was restored to parliament the right to assure that the executive power exercised by the governor in council shall be subject to the elected representatives of the people.

Various hon. gentlemen participated in the debate on the bill of rights. I am not going to refer to what they said, but I would point out that their views are dealt with at length in Hansard of August 3, 1960, at page 7503, when clause 6 of the War Measures Act, as part of the bill of rights, was before the house. Various suggestions were made for amendments to the War Measures Act. At that time I said, as reported at page 7506:

> If a committee is set up and, of course, I am in the hands of the house as always—

To which the hon. member for Essex East with his customary suavity remarked as follows:

> The right hon. gentleman has some influence.

I said:

> I thank my hon. friend for those kind words. His geniality has brought about the recognition of a fact that he often denies.
> This would be a most important contribution to the Canada of today and to the Canada of the future. At that time we would not deal as we are asked to now on a piecemeal basis with the rights under the War Measures Act. If there is a degree of unanimity, and I think there will be, that Canadian citizens should not be deported the committee might make that recommendation along with such other recommendations as will bring about a war measures act which on the one hand will maintain the solidarity and security of the state and on the other hand will have before it the paramount necessity of not needlessly sacrificing the rights of Canadians.

That summarizes the general tenor of the views expressed by me and also by the Minister of Justice. Later at page 7511 of Hansard I said:

> In so far as this is concerned—

I was referring to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition.

> —no naturalized Canadian may be deprived of his citizenship and no naturalized British subject may be deprived of his status as a British subject under this act, and we accept that as a desirable objective when full and complete amendment of the War Measures Act or other acts is made.

There seemed to be general agreement at that time that there was the necessity for parliament to have the opportunity to deal with this matter. It is not a partisan matter. I am not going into anything which by the greatest exaggeration could be considered as bringing partisan considerations into this debate. I simply say there was agreement that something should be done to bring about amendments to the War Measures Act and to assure that the act, while maintaining the need of security at all times, should be so altered or changed as to provide that security, while at the same time preserving to the greatest degree possible the rights of the individual.

On January 27, 1961, at page 1475 of Hansard, the Leader of the Opposition asked me this question:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he could confirm or deny a report in the press this morning to the effect that during this session the government is going to amend the War Measures Act?

I replied:

> I did not see that report. The government feels —and it expressed its feeling in this regard at the time discussions were taking place relative to the bill of rights—that some committee of the house might well consider the War Measures Act and, having considered it, make recommendations as to what revisions or amendments could be made to that act to render it a measure from which injustice would not follow.

A little later on I said:

> I feel and I think the Leader of the Opposition will agree, that a full and complete review of the War Measures Act would be following a course in keeping with the desires of Canadians as a whole. In time of war the measure is necessary in the interests of maintaining security, but in the days of peace there cannot be too large a degree of justification for its maintenance in effect without giving parliament at least the opportunity, through a committee, of fully considering the representations that have been made from time to time with regard to this legislation.

Following that, the hon. member for Essex East indicated that a private member had a bill on the order paper showing the intention to introduce amendments to the War Measures Act. With customary modesty he did not refer to himself but simply said an hon. member had such a bill on the order paper. Later, on May 29, the Leader of the Opposition asked this question as recorded at page 5504 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, having regard to the statements made by him during the debate last year on the bill of rights and similar statements on January 27 this year, whether the government intends to submit the War Measures Act to this session of parliament for consideration?

To which I replied:

> I can only say at this time that depending on the progress that is made in the house, a decision in that regard will be announced to the house.

Again a supplementary question was asked by the hon. member for Essex East. All this indicates, I think, that there is a desire to bring about a close scrutiny and examination of this legislation. I had hoped to bring it before the house yesterday, but in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition and at the request of the hon. member for Laurier the motion was set over until today.

Mr. Benidickson: It was introduced only on Saturday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope the house will accept this motion. I realize that many hon. members will argue, as they have argued throughout the session, that committees are becoming too numerous. This committee is one on which I am sure all who are chosen will be most happy and honoured to serve. It is the kind of constructive work in which members who wish to devote themselves to the maintenance of our freedoms will naturally desire to take part.

The question might arise as to how long this committee would sit. I think a start should be made. Many representations were made in 1960 and prior thereto. Various groups of lawyers, constitutional law professors and professors of history made representations. Professor Lower, professor emeritus of Queen's, has given many years of study to this question. I think of others equally well intentioned and well equipped who would be most desirous of playing their parts in this investigation and examination, and also in making recommendations consonant with the purpose of the legislation, but at the same time assuring the preservation of those things that should not be denied to Canadians.

This is now the 13th of June. I have no idea how long the session will continue, but the progress that has been made would seem to lend support to the hope that by the end of this month we should be in a position to conclude. If, however, we are not, I want the house to make its own determination. In that regard I return to a view that I expressed earlier, that in the interests of hon. members, particularly those with families including small children, they should not be denied the opportunity to be with their families during the months of July and August.

During the summer the committee might conceivably exchange ideas and views on this particular matter and have representations made while not necessarily having to convene. In that way the committee would perform its duty without inconvenience or interfering with the legitimate desires of members not only to do that to which I have already referred, but also to see their constituents. Therefore, without further argument, I place this motion before the house. It may be contended it should have been done earlier. That will always be an argument; but if it had been done there would have been one more committee in addition to the number already sitting, about which complaint has been made.

Is this a necessary work to be done? I think it is. I do not feel that recommendations for amendment of this legislation should be the prerogative of departmental officials or cabinet ministers. This legislation crosses all party lines, and members of the committee when chosen will be able to do something to meet the anomalous situation which has prevailed in two world wars and following, that while we fought for freedom we found it necessary to place in bond as security for their preservation, the freedoms for which we fought.

I hope the house will accept this motion so the committee may commence the discharge of its duties and make decisions as to such suggestion as I made earlier, so as to enable not only the exchange of ideas between members of the committee, but also the reception of ideas from those learned in the law and also those learned in the processes of freedom. Then, the committee may bring about recommendations which will maintain the essence of the War Measures Act as the instrument for the mobilization of our people should war ever come and at the same time preserve so far as possible those things which are dearer than life itself.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): May I ask a question arising out of the Prime Minister's motion to set up this committee? The Prime Minister indicated that there might be a new departure from past practice, in that the parliamentary committee might sit during the recess. I am sure he is aware that this has become a very common practice of the provincial legislature in Ontario. I wonder whether the rules committee could be considered as a committee that could do this kind of useful work so that its work would not come in conflict with other legislative duties when the House of Commons is in session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member has asked a very challenging question. I did not, of course, say the committee should sit during the recess. I said it might exchange views. If it chose to sit, that would be its right.

Mr. Benidickson: It would require government approval.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I recall that during the war days I was on the committee on the defence of Canada regulations—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Defence expenditures.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, defence expenditures. We sat most of the summer, and found that we were able to do worth-while work. However, after the months that hon. members have been here I would not wish on them a continuance of their presence in Ottawa, though the hon. member may represent a large group who believe that committees should sit during the summer holidays as well.

Mr. Benidickson: Not I, but there may be others who want to do so, and it might save time later.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If there is that enthusiasm and such a desire—

Mr. Benidickson: I want to get back to Kenora.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —to apply the suggestion of the hon. member to the fullest extent every month in the year, I must say I would be the last to suggest a detour.

Mr. Herridge: I will be the last to suggest that we do so.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in presenting this motion, which provides among other things that a special committee be appointed to consider and recommend changes that may be desirable in the War Measures Act, the Prime Minister has pointed out that he believes there is a general desire to give consideration to amendments to the War Measures Act and, he might have added, to take steps to make sure that the War Measures Act be rendered consistent with the bill of rights passed by parliament in 1960.

I think the Prime Minister is right. There is a desire that the War Measures Act should be considered in the light of present and future conditions. In so far as we in the Liberal party are concerned, we are anxious, as the record demonstrates, that the War Measures Act should be consistent with the provisions of the bill of rights and the security of the state.

The Prime Minister has said there is nothing that the governor in council cannot do under the War Measures Act subject only to the provisions of that act. That is a fact, of course, and the consequence is that the War Measures Act supercedes the bill of rights.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Only after proclamation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Only after proclamation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Only to a limited extent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And to the extent indicated in the bill of rights itself, to which I will make reference in a moment. The Prime Minister has suggested that because of the importance of this measure and the common attitude that prevails about considering amendments, this is not in itself the kind of question that should divide the house. I readily agree that such is the case. The Prime Minister will not expect me, of course, to refrain from putting on the record with regard to this matter which seem desirable in the light of the position we took last session with regard to amendments to the War Measures Act. However, with his general statement I do not quarrel.

The Prime Minister will recall, as he himself has reminded us by his several references to Hansard, that questions were put to the government and in particular to the Prime Minister asking when steps would be taken to bring about amendments to the War Measures Act. The Prime Minister mentioned one of the replies he made in which he said by way of response, I think somewhat vaguely, that it would depend largely on the progress that was made during the course of the present session.

I take the position, of course, that this is not the view the Prime Minister took when we discussed this matter in 1960. I believe his words in that regard, to which I will refer later, were more definitive than was the indication given in reply to the questions put to him during the course of this session by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Prime Minister has referred to the fact that there is now on the order paper a bill standing in my name which embodies the proposed amendments to the War Measures Act which were submitted last session in this house by the Leader of the Opposition and later in the committee on the bill of rights, by me, supported by the hon. gentleman from Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

The practical consideration, however, is one that we must bear in mind. The government brings in, on the 13th day of June, a proposal that a committee should be established for the purpose of considering the War Measures Act and any amendments thereto. Under our procedures a bill introduced by the government, of course, will likely have precedence over a bill proposed by a private member of this house. If it is a fact that my bill, which obviously encouraged the government at long last to take some action, is to be superseded by the action taken today by the government, then of course I can have no legitimate procedural complaint, nor would any such complaint get very far. I would be practical enough to recognize that situation at once.

That being the case, and if this is the government's final stand in the matter, as one who wants to see amendments to the War Measures Act and who wants to see the War Measures Act brought into a position consistent with the bill of rights I would under those conditions, of course, support the motion proposed today by the Prime Minister. However, I would do that not without some complaint on other grounds.

It is regrettable that this particular motion was not presented early in the session. We have complained from time to time that the government's mismanagement of the business of this house has been such as to crowd in, in the dying days of the session, not only much important legislation to be considered exclusively in this chamber, and other legislation to be considered by parliamentary committees, but as well the work of many of the standing and special committees of this house, with the result that not only are we sitting from 11 o'clock in the morning until 10.30 o'clock at night in the House of Commons but at the same time we have obligations in committees that are meeting simultaneously, some three times, some four times and on one occasion five times in a day, with one committee actually having had its sittings—I refer to the external affairs committee which is an extremely important one—during the luncheon recess from one o'clock until two thirty in the afternoon.

With the background of this heavy schedule for our committee and house work, the government now comes forward at this late moment to present this motion, which could well have been presented in the month of January. If it had been presented at that time, ample opportunity this session would have been provided for consultation with law experts and other competent people outside to assist in our deliberations of the amendments thought desirable in the War Measures Act.

The Prime Minister will therefore not be surprised if, seeking to be as conciliatory as possible at this time of the session, I lay before him with some justification our complaint for not having brought this measure forward early in the session. That was the time to bring forward something about which the government had been properly forewarned and which indeed the Prime Minister himself, as he indicated in what he said today, had suggested to the house would be the action taken by the government during the course of the present session. I believe this matter is so important that we ought to begin the work of this committee at once, if that is to be the procedural situation in relation to the bill now standing in my name.

The Prime Minister has referred to some observations of Professor Lower. I am not surprised that he should do so, because Professor Lower obviously is a protagonist of the Prime Minister. He made that fact clear in the committee on the bill of rights when he spoke glowingly of the Prime Minister's efforts and generally of certain other points of view and positions taken by the Prime Minister. I do not fail to recognize the merits of Professor Lower, although I would not be as enthusiastic, and the Prime Minister would not expect me to be—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did not the hon. gentleman quote him?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am going to quote him. I would not be as enthusiastic nor would the Prime Minister expect me to be as enthusiastic about him as within this limited context Professor Lower has been of the Prime Minister. However, Professor Lower made this statement, and I refer to page 5650 of Hansard of July 1, 1960, and to words quoted by the Leader of the Opposition:

> I submit that if we are going to have a bill of rights in Canada, and there will be a great deal of debate about it, we ought to have one that means something. I believe that in normal peacetime our liberties are not in very serious danger. But in wartime they are in very serious danger, the liberties of all of us. Hence, it is the duty of the government to find a method of enacting legislation which will give at least minimum guarantees. Suggestions could be made which would modify the War Measures Act. In the meantime, as long as it is on the books it is the duty of everybody who loves a free society, who loves liberty, to bend his best efforts to attack this act and try to get rid of this invidious liberty-destroying statute, the War Measures Act.

I do not agree, and I am sure the Prime Minister does not agree, with this full denunciation of the War Measures Act, because I think we feel that human liberty already recognizes that in wartime there are certain exigencies in the interests of the security of the state which must be borne in mind. Professor Lower has expressed his views in a number of other publications. In the Canadian Commentator of March, 1959, he wrote an article entitled "The Bill of Rights" in which he said:

> The Canadian War Measures Act is the most iniquitous piece of legislation ever to disgrace a British statute book—at least since the celebrated legislation-by-proclamations act of Henry VIII, 400 years ago. Its parallel is to be found not in any other English-speaking country, for none have disgraced themselves in this respect as has Canada done—

Then he went on to say:

If Mr. Diefenbaker, in the fullness of his wisdom, decided tomorrow that a state of apprehended insurrection existed, and proclaimed the War Measures Act, he could call parliament and the immense liberty-loving Conservative majority behind him, shocked at his conduct, might then proceed by open vote in the commons, to require him to withdraw his proclamation. This provision (section 6, etc.) is fantastic in its futility. I cannot understand how serious-minded public men can have the effrontery to put such words on paper. And yet there they are. If Mr. Diefenbaker has any regard to his future reputation—

I suspect that the Prime Minister has, and that would be understandable:

—(especially among those who make or mar the reputations of public men, that is, the historians and the constitutionalists), he will withdraw this section of his bill.

So the Prime Minister is right—

Mr. Diefenbaker: One year later he supports it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. So the Prime Minister is right in saying that Professor Lower had strong views about the War Measures Act, particularly in relation to the bill of rights. It is a fact that in the committee on the bill of rights I asked Professor Lower whether in view of his strongly expressed views regarding the War Measures Act he did not think appropriate amendments should be made to that act in the bill of rights. He answered in the affirmative. I think I should point out, in fairness, that after I left the room the Minister of Justice —and this is a matter of record in Hansard; the minister was not taking advantage of my absence and it was a mere coincidence; I mean that sincerely—put questions to Professor Lower and as a result got from him replies in direct contradiction to the position he had taken earlier in the committee.

This does not in any way affect the merits of the proposal now before the house, but since Professor Lower's name was mentioned I thought I should let the Prime Minister know that I was not unaware that this great admirer of his had strong views on this matter, views which in principle if not in every detail coincide with those expressed by the Leader of the Opposition when he spoke in this house on the occasion of the second reading of the bill of rights. On that occasion the Leader of the Opposition pointed out that the only change made in the bill of rights regarding the War Measures Act was to make possible parliamentary debate on the proclamation of the War Measures Act, which of course brings that act into force, and on its revocation. The bill of rights provides that after such debate parliament may take a particular course of action as to whether or not it wishes to withdraw the proclamation. The point is that there was reference in the bill of rights to the War Measures Act, but only within the limited terms I have just mentioned.

The Leader of the Opposition urged that there should be amendments to the War Measures Act, and that these amendments should be incorporated in the bill of rights. While he recognized that the mere reference to the War Measures Act in section 5 of the bill of rights represented an improvement, he argued that it did not go far enough. The Leader of the Opposition said that because of the way the bill of rights dealt with the War Measures Act we were giving to the latter a greater sanctity and a greater prestige than was necessary or desirable, and that we were giving it as well a pre-eminence by that kind of amendment, rather than dealing with it in its form.

The Leader of the Opposition also pointed out that notwithstanding this provision in the bill of rights the law would remain in such a position that whatever had been done before would continue to be possible, notwithstanding the passage of the bill of rights. But he did point out—I think this is important for us to note, and it is something that Professor Lower has not taken into consideration—that we have to take into account war emergencies and, while that is the case, he would be a bold man who would argue that war emergencies may not make it necessary in the future for persons to be detained in a manner that apart from the exigencies of war would seem undesirable, not because of any act they had done but because of the danger of what they might do with regard to certain acts which obviously would involve the security of the state.

The War Measures Act, as the Prime Minister said, was placed on the statute books in 1914. As the Prime Minister said, it gives to the governor in council, in time of war, virtually unlimited powers to restrain the freedom of the person of the Canadian citizen. The Prime Minister did not note, however, that since the passage of the act we have adopted in our own Canadian Citizenship Act legislation that now makes it impossible for the government in peacetime to deprive any Canadian citizen, resident in Canada, of his citizenship.

Notwithstanding that, the Leader of the Opposition urged that we should now go a step forward. He said that any bill of rights should contain a provision limiting the powers given to the governor in council under the War Measures Act by expressly excluding from those powers the power by order in council to deprive any Canadian citizen of his citizenship. The Leader of the Opposition argued, and I believe we would all agree with this, that the governor in council should be expressly forbidden to act under the War Measures Act to banish or exile any citizen from our country. I think we would wish it were possible to agree that the governor in council should be expressly forbidden, even in wartime, to detain any citizen or resident of our country without providing for an early trial on charges specifically laid in accordance with the law of Canada.

However, I am sure careful reflection will suggest that this would not be a responsible thing for parliament to do, and we are not prepared to go that far. Certainly in the bill I have before this house we do not take that extreme position. Nevertheless we in this party do feel that there should be, in the light of all that has transpired, a limitation by law on the absolute and arbitrary power of the governor in council to detain persons, even in wartime. We believe that a provision should have been written into the bill of rights which would limit the power of the governor in council to detain any person for more than let us say three months, or the period might be less, without a hearing before a supreme court judge and satisfying that judge that there were serious grounds for believing that the detention of such person was essential to the security of the state.

This measure, in so far as the Prime Minister is concerned, admittedly has a long association. I remind the Prime Minister that it was on May 16, 1947, when he as a private member of this house recommended not only that there should be amendments to the War Measures Act but as well that the Official Secrets Act should be repealed. The latter act was objectionable, I suppose, on the ground that it presumed guilt on the part of an accused contrary to the common law tradition which has existed for a long time and contrary to section 3(f) of the bill of rights, which now guarantees by law that an accused person is presumed to be innocent until proven otherwise.

The Prime Minister said in 1960 when this matter was discussed, as may be found on page 5948 of Hansard for July 7 of that year:

> I think the whole act—

He was referring, of course, to the War Measures Act.

> —deserves to be considered ... I think if we could get together the membership in the house and deal with the War Measures Act and ascertain the degree to which the rights of the individual may be maintained to the highest extent without detriment to the security of the nation as a whole, changes and amendments might be made to that act. If hon. members of the house so desire, I would be willing that at the next session a committee be set up to consider this whole field, for the War Measures Act, like all measures passed for the purpose of ensuring the salvation and survival of the state, has been found in the light of experience not only here but in other countries to contain provisions that ought to be ameliorated or subdued in the interests of the individual while at the same time maintaining the security of the state.

The Prime Minister referred to some parts of this discussion, but I did not note that he read all that was relevant. I may be wrong in that particular. I formed the impression, listening to the recital of what he did say in 1960, that he did not give the full text as I find it before me now in volume 6 of Hansard for last session. I had been urging, as indeed, had the Leader of the Opposition, that we should incorporate into the bill of rights certain amendments which we proposed. By such incorporation, we would bring the War Measures Act, without depriving it of its desired strength, into a form consistent with the bill of rights.

To return to the Prime Minister's statement which I have just quoted, I took that as an undertaking by the government that at this session such a course would be followed. I agree, the Prime Minister could say consistently that he is taking that course and fulfilling his promise in so far as this present procedure represents a compliance with the letter of the assurance given. But, I repeat, the course taken by the Prime Minister at this late date in the session is not consistent with the spirit of that assurance. That course could have been taken early in the session, particularly when it was prompted by the two interrogations of the Leader of the Opposition and referred to by the Prime Minister a few moments ago. Not only did the Leader of the Opposition press this matter, but I myself asked a number of questions in connection with it. I cannot put my hands on the precise quotations at this moment, but I asked the Prime Minister two questions—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think I have them here.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, if I had all the research facilities of the Prime Minister I can assure him I should not be wanting at this moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did the research on this myself.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister says he did the research on this himself, but the Prime Minister has more time than other people—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —because he has so many people to help him. Again, it must not be forgotten that on the estimates of the Minister of Justice I asked the minister only ten days ago, or thereabouts, when we were going to have the opportunity of considering amendments to the War Measures Act pursuant to the assurance given by the Prime Minister in 1960. I do not have the minister's reply here but he can look it up, because, he too has more time and more help than I. He will remember that his answer was very equivocal. He did not possess the same positive assurance that the Prime Minister displayed today. The Minister of Justice did not seem to know what would be done.

I can understand that, because after all this is a matter which primarily concerns the Prime Minister and perhaps there has not been time for the usual conversations to take place. However, the fact that the minister was not conversant with the thinking of the Prime Minister in this connection merely indicates how dilatory this government has been in putting the matter before the house.

Be this as it may, I asked the minister ten days ago whether the government would support Bill No. 62 introduced by a private member, the hon. member for Essex East. Again I got an equivocal reply. If the government had given careful consideration to this matter, it could easily have indicated what it thought of these amendments, and what it thought of the amendments introduced last year by the Leader of the Opposition; what it thought of incorporating these amendments in the bill of rights. These questions could easily have been answered by the Minister of Justice, who is an intelligent man, if there had been the same preoccupation with this matter then that seems to exist now, but which certainly did not exist during the early period of this session. So I hope the Prime Minister will not misunderstand me, if I suggest that it is this Bill No. C-62, to amend the War Measures Act, introduced by a private member, which has forced the government at long last into doing something which the Prime Minister spoke about doing in 1957.

An hon. Member: Would you like to think so?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, I would like to think so. I would like to think that some of the things I do have some constructive influence as far as the government is concerned.

Mr. Aiken: Would the hon. member permit another question? Does the humble member for Essex East take the stand that the bill he has introduced, Bill No. C-62, contains all the necessary amendments to the War Measures Act?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not intend to assert the doctrine of infallibility as far as I am concerned. It may be that many of the things I propose are inadequate or wrong. I do not assert that I am infallible, but if this bill is inadequate the government has had all this session in which to indicate that it is inadequate. It could have set up a committee to consider it, and it could have appointed the brilliant member for Parry Sound-Muskoka to that committee to assist us to determine whether this bill is adequate or not. I am simply saying that in the absence of evidence to the contrary—and no one has contradicted the substance of this bill—it does seem to put forward substantial and desirable amendments, particularly in relation to the bill of rights.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suppose there is time.

Mr. Martineau: Would he indicate to the house whether when he sat on the treasury benches he also exercised the same persuasive powers that he is personally applying to the government while he is in opposition?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should think that the record of legislative achievement by the former minister of national health and welfare is sufficient answer to the enlightened question put by the hon. member.

But the record must be clearly observed. The Leader of the Opposition argued, as I said, that there should be further amendments to the bill of rights, and that the one amendment of the bill of rights dealing with the War Measures Act was insufficient because the character of that amendment gave to the War Measures Act a position in relation to the bill of rights that was undesirable. He further urged that there should be amendments to the War Measures Act, and that those amendments should be incorporated into the bill of rights so that we should have had in one legislative document something that would have been more compact to clearly indicate the full character of our desire to preserve fundamental freedoms and human liberties. Those amendments were not accepted in the house, but they were put forward by the Leader of the Opposition on August 1, 1960, and in the committee in respect of the bill of rights prior to that, on July 29, 1960.

As will be found in the reports of the committee, I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr.

Deschatelets), certain amendments to the War Measures Act which, in principle, are incorporated in Bill No. C-62. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), whose observations will be found at page 712 of that committee's report, without in any way deprecating the character or the form of the proposed amendments, replied that the government took the position that it would not want to deal with the War Measures Act in bits, piece by piece, without studying the whole problem of emergency powers in wartime. That was the position he took in a forthright manner. We pointed out to him that, as the War Measures Act did abridge human freedoms and fundamental rights, the government should have given consideration to that particular aspect of the problem, and incorporated the amendments in the bill of rights.

Following that we came back to this house where the amendments were put forward again—two of them moved by the Leader of the Opposition, I believe, and two of them by me—they were overwhelmingly defeated by hon. gentlemen opposite. The Minister of Justice, who piloted the measure at that time, gave as the reason for the government's position, substantially the answer he had given in committee.

I feel it is important that the provisions of Bill No. C-62 should be noted, because there has been no suggestion by the government, with regard to the substance of the amendments proposed in the house or in the committee last session, that these amendments were not satisfactory nor, as I recall, that they were alleged to be incorrect, inapplicable, or that they had gone too far, or not far enough.

The bill which I introduced in this house received first reading on January 31, 1961, so this is not a bill that was brought in during the dying days of the session. This was a bill brought in by the hon. member for Essex East on January 31.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was it not January 27?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, the date of first reading was January 31.

That should have been ample warning to the government of its own assurance to set up a committee to deal with this matter early in the session. All this time has gone by, yet all we have received from the administration are vague replies which indicated no positive intention to proceed with the matter this session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are you disappointed now?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister asks if I am disappointed now. Of course I am not disappointed, but we should have preferred that the government would have dealt with this matter early in the session, and should have preferred it had the government to have accepted at once our amendments which were carefully considered, and which apparently the government considered satisfactory because there was no suggestion to the contrary.

Bill No. C-62 is not without its significance. It provides that subsection 5 of section 6 of the War Measures Act be repealed and—

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is now proceeding to discuss Bill No. C-62 which is not a matter before this house at the present time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, surely I am entitled to point out the kind of amendments which we believe should be provided for in the War Measures Act. These amendments are now contained in a bill which is now before this house, and I know of no violation of our rule that precludes me from doing so. If I cannot refer to the act at all I shall simply give the substance of it and thereby satisfy my hon. friend, if there does seem to be a violation of the rule. However, I am in your hands, Mr. Speaker, and should like a ruling before I proceed.

Mr. Speaker: It would not be in order to carry on now a debate on the principles of the hon. member's Bill, C-62, such as would be relevant when it comes up for second reading, but I see no objection to a reference to the fact that this committee would be able to deal with a matter which has already been raised before this house in another way. It is largely a question of extent, I should think.

For the guidance of this house I refer to May's comment about debate on a motion of this kind. In May's sixteenth edition at page 452 it is stated:

> On a motion for the appointment of a select committee, or for determining the number of its members, the merits of the matters referred to the committee have not been allowed to be debated. Our practice in this house has varied from motion to motion, but in general terms the desirability of establishing a committee is the subject of debate, which necessarily involves a discussion in general terms of the matters which will come before it. I should think that if the hon. member wishes to refer to his bill in general terms as an argument in favour of establishing the committee, he can do so, but he should not debate the principles of his bill, which would be anticipating another matter on the order paper.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I should like to state that the reason I raised it is that, when I attempted to discuss a resolution which I had put on the order paper under similar circumstances, the hon. member for Essex East was very quick to rise on a point of order and to suggest that I was discussing it at that time, following which I was ruled out of order.

Mr. Fulton: That is the old principle of the rules applying equally to both sides.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I recall the incident, the hon. member did have a great deal to say about his resolution on the order paper. I do not intend to be too severe, but I do caution the hon. member that this is not a debate on his bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that I was not debating the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I assure the hon. members, and particularly my young friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), who seems to laugh louder than the others, that if the house decides that my bill does not have precedence, that is the end of it. All I am seeking to do now is to indicate the character of the amendments which I believe should be incorporated in the War Measures Act. I fully agree with the position taken by Your Honour.

We proposed that, subject to certain sections of the War Measures Act, any act or thing done or authorized or any order or regulation made under the authority of these amendments, should be deemed not to be an abrogation, abridgment, or infringement of any right or freedom recognized by the Canadian bill of rights.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member indicate what he is presently reading from?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am referring to the bill.

Mr. Martineau: Which bill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am referring to Bill No. C-62. I am not arguing the merits of the bill but simply pointing out the amendments which are proposed.

We also urged that a naturalized Canadian citizen should not be deprived of his citizenship and a naturalized British subject should not be deprived of his status as a British subject.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, in regard to the point of order, I suggest the hon. member is even going further than the course he took which you just ruled to be out of order. Not only is he discussing the principles of Bill No. C-62, he is also discussing it clause by clause.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite wrong in that.

Mr. Aiken: I suppose you are quite right?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course, I am quite right.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ruled that if the argument the hon. member is advancing is the subject matter of his bill it would be a proper subject matter for this committee to consider. However, I do think it is a simple matter to indicate that, without an extensive review of the bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The bill is very short. We took the position that a Canadian citizen should not be deported from Canada under this act.

Mr. Aiken: He is also reading from the bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We also took the position—well if hon. gentlemen are so vitally interested in human liberties as by their interruptions they indicate I shall let their interventions stand on the record and the public who read Hansard will judge their interest. We also propose, as the Leader of the Opposition proposed last year, that a Canadian citizen or a British subject—

Mr. Aiken: Subclause 4.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —should not be detained under the act beyond a limited period unless the cause for the detention had been reviewed by an appropriate impartial tribunal, which would thereafter report to the minister who would have the sole authorization for detention.

Then it was finally proposed—

Mr. Aiken: Subclause 5.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —in this bill that there should be an opportunity in this house to debate the provisions of the act and, finally, that there should be revocation of an order by resolution in this house. These are the amendments which are incorporated in the bill to which hon. gentlemen expressed such objection to having recited, although the Prime Minister has acknowledged that these were the liberties, and properly so, that should be carefully examined in order to bring the War Measures Act into conformity with the bill of rights. And yet hon. gentlemen in this non-controversial debate have sought to display that characteristic opposition to anything that comes from we who are vitally concerned, about the preservation of human liberties in this country.

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The matter is not completed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I do not object to references in general terms by the hon. member for Essex East. I was one of those who interrupted him because in spite of your ruling he read subclauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 of his bill, Bill No. C-62, verbatim, as he went through them. The only comment I made was that he missed out subclause 5.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, I had not intended to include the hon. gentleman in my indictment but since he has discredited his own witness himself I have to let that act stand by itself.

I am not aware that the mere recital of a bill is a contravention of the rules. However, I am so used to those interruptions from hon. gentlemen that I can only say it gives me a certain amount of exhilaration when they are present and are so persistent.

We have discussed the War Measures Act but at the same time we ought to consider all of the legislation which exists on our statute books which is inconsistent with the bill of rights. While the Minister of Justice did not give assurance that that would be done, he did indicate at the last session that it would be considered although on his estimates this year he modified his position. There are many acts of parliament in addition to the War Measures Act—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is going beyond the scope of the debate in referring to other matters. The motion is a specific one for the establishment of a committee to consider amendments to the War Measures Act and does not refer to other matters which might contravene the bill of rights.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know of any rule that prevents one from making reference in passing to the inadequacy of the motion—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There again we have hon. gentlemen who respect the Chair so much as to not allow an hon. gentleman to make his speech without any difficulty. I say I do not know of any rule that precludes an hon. gentleman from saying that a particular proposal is inadequate in that it ought to include within the compass of its reaches certain other things. That is all I was seeking to do.

This is the position. We have on the order paper Bill No. C-62 which provides for amendments to the War Measures Act. The Speaker will have to rule which of these measures takes precedence. This bill has been on the order paper since January 31.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I understand the hon. member correctly he is now raising a point of order which, it seems to me, should have been raised when the motion was made. The debate has continued on the motion to set up the committee and without protest that it in any way interfered with other matters on the order paper.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I thought one could always raise a point of order. Do I understand that Your Honour just now ruled that Bill No. C-62 must be superseded by the bill proposed by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Fulton: There is no bill.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The resolution.

Mr. Speaker: No. I just suggested that if the matter were to be raised it should have been raised when the motion was introduced. A point of order might have been taken then that something on the order paper impeded the progress of this particular bill but it has now been proceeded with and debated. The hon. member himself has debated it. I would think it is not in order now to raise the point.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): On the point of order raised, I believe it should be brought to the attention of the house that according to the rules Bill No. C-62 could not possibly come before the house for debate this session and the hon. member must have known it when he put it on the order paper. Parliament would have to sit for seven months for the hon. member's bill to be discussed, because of its position on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I am not hearing the point of order of the hon. gentleman. I trust the hon. member will proceed with the debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to argue the point because I do not believe it is necessary to argue it at this stage. The bill will take its position and if it is reached, then the point will have to be determined.

I did clearly indicate at the outset that if the position was that Bill No. C-62 would be superseded by the proposal of the Prime Minister, I would naturally welcome it under those conditions. That is what I said. I never took any other position. I think all that I shall do is to leave the situation as it is. It may be that in the course of the session an opportunity will be presented to consider whether or not Bill No. C-62 should be discussed. That being the case, I simply point out that this bill providing for amendments to the War Measures Act was given first reading on January 31, 1961. On June 13 the Prime Minister put forward the proposal that we should consider amendments to the War Measures Act, with no indication given by the government, as I said before, whether or not the amendments incorporated in Bill No. C-62 were acceptable or undesirable. In the absence of a declaration by the government the presumption was that the bill was not unacceptable to them in principle. In any event, in the dying days of the session we are now faced with a proposal that might well have been brought forward by the government at the beginning of the session, particularly in the face of the assurance given by the Prime Minister last session. In my judgment, to have waited all this time demonstrates that the government was not as concerned about those amendments as it professes to be. It would not have been difficult for the government to come forward with this proposal early in the session when we could have given the matter the fullest consideration. However, it has chosen another course. It has chosen to increase our work in the dying days of the session in such a manner as to make it impossible for every member to give full consideration to the work of the house. There is not a member within sound of my voice who does not know that what I am saying is true. That is the situation. The country knows it. The country must know the kind of pressure that has been put upon us in the dying days of the session in the effort to discharge our duties.

However, the government has finally brought forward this measure. I hope the committee will be set up forthwith. I hope an opportunity will be given us to call the necessary persons to consider whether amendments should be made to the War Measures Act consistent with the security which I agree with the Prime Minister must ever be foremost in our minds in time of war which we all sincerely hope will never again eventuate. But I feel that the record deserves to have this statement of the events that have transpired since the introduction of the bill of rights, since the introduction of amendments to the War Measures Act similar to those in Bill C-62 introduced last session, similar to the amendments put forward in the bill of rights committee by Liberal members of the house to determine whether or not we can reconcile further with the bill of rights any act that is inconsistent or is a violation of our liberties and rights. These, it seems to me, are reasons that the government might well have expected us to express at this time.

I cannot explain why the government did not bring forward this measure earlier in the session other than the reasons I have given. They seem to be the only reasons in the light of all the facts that are apparent. I am sure that some hon. members, like the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), young members who seemingly have recognized in the Conservative party, although I am sure by now they realize their mistake, a hope for the preservation of liberty, must be wondering why after all these assurances, why after all this time the Prime Minister should only now come forward on the 13th day of June with amendments which were discussed in this house last session and with respect to which we were assured there would be a committee.

I can only conclude that the government is so overwhelmed by the many problems confronting it and finds itself in such a difficult situation with regard to the making of decisions that it has had to place certain problems in one basket and certain other problems in another basket. It thus happens that because they were slow in dealing with the problems in the basket on the right they have been so slow and so tardy in dealing with problems which they recognized as urgent a year ago but which have remained in the basket on the left. At long last the government has acted, but it must be clear to everyone, it must be clear even to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi that it was the Liberal party, that it was Bill C-62 that finally brought the government to the point of taking action and caused it to make a decision which it should have made over 14 months ago.

Mr. Fortin: Will the hon. member permit a question?

(Translation):

The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) made quite a fuss over a suggestion he put forward on clause 4 of Bill No. C-62, to the effect that a citizen should not be held more than 60 days without a trial. Could he have been prompted by feelings of remorse he may have felt at the thought that a few years ago, the Liberal government of which he was a member held the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Camilien Houde, for several years without trial and without giving him a chance to defend himself?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, in view of your decision, that I cannot reply to the hon. member, because I would be out of order in discussing this plan of which I spoke at such great length in my speech.

Mr. Fortin: You are taking an easy way out.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak for this group I must first of all say that I regret that I was detained for 15 minutes by a delegation dealing with the principle of this particular measure or some personal aspects of it and because of being detained I missed the usual demonstration of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) laconism in introducing questions of this kind, his usual gems of language and his explanation of the legalities surrounding a problem of this nature. However, shortly after my arrival I was briefed by a fellow member as to what the Prime Minister had said so I think I have a very good idea of his remarks in introducing this motion.

I think everyone will realize that as a layman I suffer some disadvantage in following such legal luminaries as the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who are well versed in legal problems and constitutional matters. However, regardless of that I wish to assure the house that although I am a sort of simple, naive layman I have always had a great interest in this question and I fully realize and appreciate the purpose and the importance of this motion. While I am not able to discourse on the legal aspects of the question with any degree of knowledge compared with the previous speakers, I can say that I am one who always has been easily aroused by injustices and any transgression of human rights and human dignity has always concerned me.

In fact, over the years and until recent years I felt almost frustrated and exasperated on occasions at the lack of understanding of other persons' rights and I felt at times that I was tilting against windmills. I will say that I feel the situation in Canada has changed quite rapidly in recent years. More and more people are realizing what the citizen's rights are in a democratic state.

Like the previous speaker, I regret that this very important motion has been introduced at this late date in the session. The question is an important and serious one that requires time for almost leisurely study, shall I say. It is not one of those technical questions where you can deal with the matter with exactitude after certain facts have been produced. There is an infinite variety of aspects to a problem of this nature. Plenty of time must be taken for the hearing of views of legal authorities by the committee, for hearing the views of representatives of various sections of the community throughout the land and even the views of individuals who have paid a great deal of attention to this subject and have studied it for many years. Following the hearing of these views, I am sure the committee will require some time before it arrives at its conclusion.

This is a subject that will arouse a great deal of interest. As I said before, even in the smaller places I find that in recent years there is more interest in this topic than there was years ago. Years ago it was considered too abstract, not in the ordinary day's activities, shall I say, but there is greater concern and interest now and the committee will need plenty of time to give consideration to the evidence, facts, views, suggestions and recommendations presented to it. Members of the house as individuals will want time to read the evidence and proceedings of the committee and I believe plenty of time should be provided. Later when legislation is introduced the house will want ample time to discuss this very important question properly and at suitable length. On that account I say again that we in this group regret that this motion was not introduced earlier in the session.

I am not going into the legal aspects of the matter. I am only going to deal with it from a broad point of view. As I said before, I am not competent to deal with the niceties of such a problem but I can deal with its impact on the citizen and speak of it in general terms. I believe that several advantages can flow from the passage of this motion, the study of the problem by the committee, by members of the house generally and the consequent proposed amendments to the War Measures Act. First of all, I think that the primary advantage is that the legislation will make certain, as far as it is humanly possible to do so under the circumstances, that the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens are protected in periods of emergency. I think that is the primary advantage.

Then I think there are two or three others. I believe that the gathering of evidence, facts, opinions, suggestions and recommendations from all those sectors of the Canadian community should prove of value to the present generation and to future generations. The record itself should prove of great value. Then I believe that the hearings of the committee and the discussion of the problem generally in the house and in the country will provide general interest in the subject and I am sure, as the result of happenings in recent years—I am talking of happenings within the last ten or fifteen years, particularly since the second world war—greater understanding will be brought about. If the committee fulfils its responsibility and if the government accepts those recommendations which will come from people in all groups of society with various political opinions, including persons who support the group for which I have the honour to speak at the present time. I believe this whole study and consequent legislation will do something more to strengthen the sinews of democracy.

The average citizen is not learned in the law and is not learned in parliamentary procedure but he is interested in the basic rights of the citizen in a democracy. When you find that this average citizen has a greater understanding, democracy is strengthened to that extent. We must realize that. While we are complacent and while we have accepted without question our freedom and our rights throughout the years, when we view the world around us it is marvellous to note how, under certain circumstances and certain emergency conditions, those rights can crumble if they are not supported by an informed citizenry.

In conclusion I wish to say that this group will co-operate in the work of the committee and in making suggestions as to amendments to the War Measures Act and will do all it can to the end that the demands of freedom and the rights of Canadian citizens are better served by this resolution, the consequent legislation and the action of this parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I believe that all members agree that the establishment of this committee to examine the War Measures Act is in order, and we take no exception to the passage of this motion.

However, two things strike me for which the Prime Minister is responsible. First—and I come back to the argument put forward by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin)—why wait until the end of the session to examine this measure, when a number of bills mentioned by the government in the speech from the throne have yet to appear on the order paper, many of which are contentious and will give rise to discussion?

In addition, we are being asked to serve on committees while the house is sitting. From the start, we have objected to any committee sitting at the same time as the house.

If we were to accept such an arrangement, I wonder how the Prime Minister could find time to operate such a committee.

I have here a list of the days on which committees sit at the same time as the house.

On May 1, the committee on agriculture sat at 3.30 p.m. and 8.00 p.m.

On May 3, the committee on external affairs met at 2.00 p.m. and the committee on Indian affairs, at 2.30 p.m.

On May 4, the committee on Indian affairs sat at 2.30 p.m.

On May 8, the committee on agriculture met at 2.30 p.m. and again at 7.30 that evening.

On May 9, the committee on Indian affairs sat at 3.30 and the committee on external affairs at 1.00 p.m. In this case, the members did not even have a chance to take a decent meal.

The committee on research met at 2 o'clock that same afternoon.

On May 10, the committee on Indian affairs held a meeting at 2.30 p.m.

On May 11, the committee on Indian affairs and the one on research met at 2.30 p.m.

On May 12, the committee on agriculture met at 2.30 p.m.

On May 16, the committee on research sat at 2.30 p.m. and 8 p.m.

On May 18, you had Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m., research at 2.30 p.m. and at 8 p.m. and procedure at 3 p.m.

On May 19, the committee on agriculture met at 2.30 p.m.

On May 22, again agriculture at 2.30 p.m. and at 7.30 p.m.

On May 23, Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m., research at 2.30 p.m. and 8 p.m. and the committee on external affairs at 1 p.m.

That was another lunch cut short for the members.

On May 24, research sat at 2.30 p.m. and Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m. also.

On May 25, the committee on broadcasting sat at 3 p.m.; Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m., and research at 2.30 p.m. and 8 p.m.

On May 26, the committee on agriculture met at 2.30 p.m. and external affairs at 2.30 p.m.

On May 29, the committee on agriculture at 2.30 p.m. and 7.30 p.m., then the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee at 3 p.m.

On May 30, the committee on Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m. and that on procedure at 3 p.m.

On May 31, the committee on external affairs at 2.30 p.m., Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m. and research at 2.30 p.m.

On June 1, the committee on broadcasting met at 3.00 p.m., Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m. and research at 2.30 p.m. and the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee at 3 p.m.

On June 2, the committee on agriculture at 2.30 p.m. and external affairs at 2.30 p.m.

On June 5, the committee on agriculture at 2.30 p.m. and 7.30 p.m.

On June 6, the committee on Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m., research at 2.30 p.m. and 8.00 p.m.

On June 7, the committee on external affairs at 2.30 p.m. and Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m.

On June 8, the committee on broadcasting at 3 p.m. and the committee on veterans affairs at 2.30 p.m.

On June 13, the committee on Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m. and the committee on research at 2.30 p.m. and again at 8 p.m.

On June 14, the committee on Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m. and the committee on external affairs at 2.30 p.m.

On June 15, the committee on broadcasting at 3 p.m. and the committee on Indian affairs at 2.30 p.m.

On June 16, the committee on agriculture at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caron: Certainly.

Mr. Ricard: Did the hon. member make a survey on the attendance at those committees?

Mr. Caron: I noted that we did not always have a quorum and in view of the great number of Conservative appointments, I was quite amazed at that.

Mr. Ricard: Can the hon. member say that he was never absent?

Mr. Caron: I may happen to miss a meeting of a committee, because I am attending another committee meeting. At any rate, I will continue to attend the committee meetings as I see fit.

Mr. Ricard: Then if it is all right for you to take such a stand, it is undoubtedly right for others.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, those are facts that nobody can deny.

Members are overworked. They move from one committee to another or they attend the sittings of the house.

We are now trying to close this session as soon as possible and we are asked to hasten the business of committees.

The list of committee meetings I just read, Mr. Chairman, is merely an addition to a longer list relating to the business of the house.

Considering all those facts, I think the Prime Minister is showing evidence of gross inconsistency.

He wants an improvement of the War Measures Act. Yet, he knew right from the beginning of the session that this act had to be amended, as a result of the adoption of his bill of rights.

Why, then, did he not act with consistency?

We have thus been taking up the business on the order paper since the beginning of the session, so much so that yesterday at 10.15, the government had nothing left on the order paper and we had to adjourn for lack of business.

Well, I submit that if the government had better planned its session, if it had placed its bills on the order paper in due time, we would have had time to do the work properly, instead of being pressed at this late date to rush through such important legislation. I think it ill becomes the Prime Minister to act in this way, particularly in view of all the time he has had at his disposal since the beginning of the session.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Caron: As you wish.

Mr. Pigeon: Does the hon. member not feel it is never too late to introduce legislation to avoid such glaring injustices as in the case of Mr. Houde who was imprisoned without trial?

Mr. Caron: I agree that it is never too late to do good. I recognize that in the case of Mr. Houde, action was taken on the basis of the legislation then in force, but we must now look to the present. When it comes to such important legislation as this, the proposer should place it before the house earlier. In fact he has known since last year that this bill would be introduced, because he is the one who introduced the bill of rights.

(Text):

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take only a few minutes of the time of the house in speaking on this resolution. It is certainly the right of a free people to voluntarily surrender their rights in times of national emergency. It is certainly also the right of a free people to have this voluntary surrender supervised by their elected representatives to the end that these rights will be given up only when this is really required.

The bill of rights, in part II, section 6, sets out that the operative sections of the War Measures Act, when brought into effect by the governor in council, shall be laid before parliament and parliament itself shall agree that the government shall have these all-inclusive and overriding powers in connection with the lives, property and movements of citizens of the country.

When one reads the War Measures Act one discovers it is rather a frightening act in the degree to which free people voluntarily give into the hands of the government the right to do whatever that government may wish to do. Section 3 (1) of the War Measures Act provides:

—it is hereby declared that the powers of the governor in council shall extend to all matters coming within the classes of subjects hereinafter enumerated, that is to say:

(a) censorship and the control and suppression of publications, writings, maps, plans, photographs, communications and means of communication;

(b) arrest, detention, exclusion and deportation;

(c) control of the harbours, ports and territorial waters of Canada and the movements of vessels;

(d) transportation by land, air, or water and the control of the transport of persons and things;

(e) trading, exportation, importation, production and manufacture;

(f) appropriation, control, forfeiture and disposition of property and of the use thereof;

Then it says:

All orders and regulations made under this section shall have the force of law,—

This means that the government, by executive decree, can imprison or report people and seize property. In short, the government has all the powers of a dictator state. These powers are given by a free people; they are given voluntarily; they are surrendered in the national interest during a time of emergency.

Hon. members will notice that the wording of this act contains the phrase "real or apprehended". The bill of rights puts a limitation on this. The limitation is that these powers shall be confirmed by parliament and that parliament shall say whether it is a real emergency such as requires that these overriding powers be given to the executive whereby this free nation voluntarily surrenders to the government, of its own free will, all of the rights which have been won over hundreds of years in seeking a truly democratic status.

It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the work of this committee will be most important in trying to marry two concepts and in trying to reconcile two points of view; one as expressed in the War Measures Act, that in times of emergency the state must come first; and the other as expressed in the bill of rights, that the rights of an individual must be protected against the state. These two viewpoints are not incompatible, but it does mean that perhaps the committee will have to spell out in more detail how they shall be reconciled.

I believe that in bringing forward this resolution the Prime Minister has married together the magnificent concept of the bill of rights and the very practical and utilitarian measures carried in our statutes by the War Measures Act.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss this motion of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), which is one more evidence of the right hon. gentleman's real interest and determination to protect the rights and freedoms of the citizens of this country. It is one more step in the steady progress which has been made since the right hon. gentleman assumed the office of Prime Minister to undo the steady erosion of our rights and liberties which had taken place over the previous 22 years.

In discussing matters of this sort it is generally desirable to be calm and not to introduce notes of criticism. Of course, when dealing with intemperate speeches such as that of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) one recognizes that the hon. member gets carried away with a sense of his oratory, if not importance, and makes allowance for this kind of speech on that account. However, the hon. member did say something which I think calls for comment, because if there were no comment it would stand unanswered on the record of Hansard.

The first thing I wish to say simply by way of reply to my hon. friend is that he shows now a refreshing change of attitude from that which he showed during the many years he was a member of the treasury benches. Indeed, the government of which he was a part had 22 years in office during which time they had ample opportunity to deal with the War Measures Act and to remove from it those features which constitute the possibility, if not the fact, of an undue interference with human rights and fundamental freedoms. It was conspicuous then, and it is more conspicuous now in view of the hon. member's present attitude, that the previous administration did nothing during that time to bring about the results which the hon. member now professes himself so anxious to achieve.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when we listened this afternoon to the strictures heaped upon the government for not getting on with this proposal sooner, I think we are able to put the hon. gentleman's strictures in their proper perspective by recalling that his conversion, although we may welcome it, is very late.

The hon. member cannot take refuge in the answer that this measure is only necessary now because we did not have a bill of rights before; therefore his party and his government were blameless, because they did not have a bill of rights and it is the bill of rights that makes this necessary. It will be recalled that in the discussion of the bill of rights itself last year during all that lengthy period when we had to listen to the strictures he heaped upon that measure, he persisted in saying it added nothing by way of rights but was a mere codification of existing rights. If that is the hon. member's view, then the rights which are in the bill of rights now existed at the time the hon. gentleman held office and the War Measures Act was as much in conflict with those rights then as it is now.

The hon. gentleman is now so anxious to see something done that he professes to claim exclusive credit for everything that is being done, yet, as I say, in all those years he was unable to see the importance of the measure which the Prime Minister has now brought forward. It is well understood, of course, that there is no one so keen as a recent convert and we welcome the hon. member to the ranks of the converted, the ranks of those who are now prepared to align themselves in support of the liberty of the individual. In contrast to the sudden conversion and the over eagerness now displayed by the hon. gentleman, may I emphasize that this government has been proceeding steadily and surely to the restoration and protection of those rights which were so eroded in earlier years. A major step was the enactment of the bill of rights itself. At that time the Prime Minister gave an undertaking that he would look at the War Measures Act and invite parliament to consider in what ways it might be amended so as to bring it into harmony with the bill of rights, and do what could be done to protect the rights of citizens even in times of emergency without unduly prejudicing the interests of the state as a whole.

Pursuant to the bill of rights we have brought in two important amendments to statutes this year to bring them into line with the bill of rights, and now comes this further measure initiated by the Prime Minister in order to make amends for the 22 years of erosion of rights—the motion we are now debating to set up a committee to examine the War Measures Act. Indeed, when one considers the change of attitude of the hon. member for Essex East I cannot help, while listening to him, thinking that he displays all the frustrated inconsistency which would be displayed by the outcome of a cross between a leopard and a chameleon, because you know, Mr. Speaker, the leopard's trouble is that he cannot change his spots while the chameleon changes colour with every perch upon which he alights. We come now to consider this motion which the hon. member professed a desire to see carried because that would have the result of amendments being made to the War Measures Act, and yet the hon. member has invited you, Mr. Speaker, to rule this motion out of order. Of course, with your usual wisdom and perspicacity you refused to entertain the point of order which the hon. member sought to raise, but the extraordinary thing to contemplate is this measure of frustration felt by the hon. member for Essex East. He is so frustrated because he cannot himself claim the exclusive credit for what is being done that he forgets he has told us he intends to support the measure and solemnly invites Your Honour to rule it out of order. I think all members will understand the situation and accept the speech made by the hon. gentleman with the caution and reserve which it deserves.

What, then, of the proposal of the Prime Minister which is now before us, a proposal consistent with the undertaking which he gave last year when we were considering the bill of rights? This proposal, I suggest, sets out the proper way of dealing with this problem. The opposition has consistently suggested that we should get the bill of rights and the War Measures Act all mixed up and confused. Indeed, this desire on their part to confuse things was brought to my mind by one of the comments made by the hon. member for Essex East when he said the government had the habit of putting certain problems into one basket and certain other problems in another basket. He seemed to think this was a matter for criticism. It seems to me that this orderly method of dealing with things is the proper method instead of getting them all mixed up until, like the hon. member for Essex East, they are hopelessly confused. We have persistently and consistently taken the position that these matters should be dealt with separately because that is the most effective method of dealing with them.

When the bill of rights was before the special committee of the house last year there was a lengthy discussion on the bill in context with the War Measures Act and, as has been pointed out, one of the chief witnesses in this regard was Professor Lower of Queen's University. Professor Lower certainly repeated then a stricture he had uttered earlier against the War Measures Act and urged strongly on the committee that parliament should repeal the War Measures Act. It is true that Professor Lower at one point in his evidence did comment on the fact that we had incorporated in the bill of rights itself the provision having the effect that if the government proclaimed the War Measures Act due to a state of emergency parliament would have the right to review that proclamation and if it felt that the state of emergency was imaginary rather than real it would have the right to overrule the proclamation. Professor Lower did at one stage say this was a meaningless provision, particularly when he was being prompted in that regard by the hon. member for Essex East. That seemed to be the position he took. But it is also significant to note that Professor Lower admitted the necessity for some legislation conferring special powers on the government in time of war. I refer to his evidence at page 321 of the committee reports when he was being questioned by the hon. member for Essex East. The passage reads as follows:

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Now, that does not seem to me to be completely what you said today. You recognize, I take it, from what you said today, that there is a need to preserve the War Measures Act.

Mr. Lower: Yes, you will find that in the statement. I made it very clear I would like to get rid of the War Measures Act. I think there could be a change.

Again, at page 322 he said:

There is an important point there where we might misunderstand each other—and I hope we will not, because I think we are in agreement. I would like to get rid of the present War Measures Act completely. I agree you have to have special legislation in war, but I think it could be much more carefully framed than it is in this legislation.

Again, when he was being asked what he thought the War Measures Act should contain, he said, as reported at page 323 of the committee's proceedings:

I would agree with that, but I think you would want to make a provision there that the judge would have the right to have the hearing in camera, would you not?

The witness was being questioned at this point with regard as to whether there should be a right of hearing enjoyed by persons detained under the War Measures Act—a provision written into the act itself. He said:

I quite agree in wartime there are certain things that must not come out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You see a necessity that there should be the right to have this hearing in camera?

Mr. Lower: Yes, I think that would be pretty necessary.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. Well, that might run contrary to another section of this proposed bill of rights which provides for public hearings.

Mr. Lower: Which one are you referring to Mr. Martin?

Mr. Fulton: That is clause 3 (f).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, 3 (f).

Mr. Lower: Yes. Well I would be just a bit nervous about that. We must not be sentimental over these things, must we?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Lower: I would be a bit nervous. I would agree that in wartime there are certain things that probably cannot come out in public, but we have got to have the next best thing.

I should like to refer the house also to the evidence of Professor Lower in connection with the value of the provision we did incorporate into the bill of rights providing that parliament shall have the opportunity and right to overrule any declaration by which the War Measures Act is brought into effect. I was questioning Professor Lower in the committee and should like to read a certain portion of that evidence as it appears at pages 330 and 331 of the proceedings.

Mr. Fulton: —I will only ask one or two questions on it. It did seem to me in one or two of the exchanges that a point might have been obscured which I thought was clear from your first remarks.

I might add that I thought Professor Lower's first remarks were obscured by the very extraordinary and involved questions asked by the hon. member for Essex East. I went on as follows:

I take it that you do not question in principle the desirability of a government having at its disposal a War Measures Act or something of that sort in times of war?

Mr. Lower: Special powers.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, an act giving it special powers in wartime. What you question is the extent to which these powers should go?

Mr. Lower: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: You would like to see written into the War Measures Act the maximum safeguards of the liberties of the individual consistent with the welfare of the state?

Mr. Lower: Yes. You express it very well, I think.

Mr. Fulton: But you said you think it is better under the present circumstances to have a bill of rights now and then review or revise the War Measures Act as soon as possible?

Mr. Lower: Yes.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the course that we have been following. We enacted the bill of rights last year and the Prime Minister undertook to have the War Measures Act studied to see what revisions should be made to it, and to have the War Measures Act then amended at leisure but thoroughly so that it might be, to the maximum extent possible, brought into line with the spirit of the bill of rights. Professor Lower expressed unqualified agreement with that position.

I then went on to ask Professor Lower about other provisions that we had put into the bill of rights, and that appears as reported in that committee's proceedings as follows:

Mr. Fulton: If it is possible then that a government might resort to such a declaration in circumstances in which such a resort was not justified, would you not think it is most desirable that parliament should have the right of veto over the invocation of the War Measures Act under that declaration?

Mr. Lower: Yes. That had not occurred to me before. That would give an important justification for this.

Mr. Fulton: This would seem to give parliament the right to review the declaration made by the government, and examine whether the state of affairs really warranted the resort to emergency measures.

Mr. Lower: This makes me a lot happier about this clause. Of course I would like it to go further.

Mr. Fulton: I think I would accept the point that if there was an actual war and war was declared the debate might be pretty much pro forma, but I was directing my attention particularly to a situation in which there was a fictitious declaration which was being used as a device for the government gaining power. If there was a question as to whether there really was this state of emergency, both government members as well as opposition members might well be strongly inclined to check the government.

Mr. Lower: Yes, indeed. That would be a very unlikely circumstance, but I can imagine a circumstance under which something of this sort might occur.

Mr. Fulton: Would you then agree with me that it is a sensible provision at the moment to put this safeguard in against abuses of the powers of invoking the War Measures Act, which will thus give you some protection against the abuse of the powers conferred by the act; and then say we will look next at the act to see whether improvements should be made in the statute itself.

Mr. Lower: Yes. I was under the impression, when I read this, that this is an attempt to make criticism of the War Measures Act. From what you say about it I can see you have something additional in mind. I would be very happy not only to have this retained but also to have the revision of the War Measures Act made subsequently. Of course, I do think it is too big a thing to be examined at this time of year.

Mr. Fulton: Yes. It is a big thing whenever you examine it. When you get into the War Measures Act you are into a really difficult philosophical as well as legal problem.

Mr. Lower: Yes.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think we can properly and with justification say we can call to witness, as supporting our present action, one of the foremost opponents or critics of the War Measures Act in its present form, who stated clearly before the special committee of the House of Commons last year that he thought the sensible thing to do, as we did by the bill of rights, was to enact a bill of rights standing on its own feet, putting in safeguards immediately against a fictitious declaration of emergency which would give the government an opportunity to abuse the emergency powers, and then to make a lengthy and full study of the War Measures Act itself to see what changes to the measure should be made to bring it into conformity with the spirit of the bill of rights.

It is in that spirit that we have been studying this problem in the interim. As I said in the committee, which comment is contained in the portion I just quoted, and with which Professor Lower agreed, when we get into the realm of the War Measures Act we are getting into the realm of very difficult philosophical as well as legal problems. That is the area and the extent to which it is justifiable to ask parliament itself to give to the government, in times of real emergency, powers which, under normal circumstances, the government should not only not use, but should not even possess, because they are definitely contrary to the kind of situation which prevails in normal time of peace.

The extent to which the War Measures Act could go, and should go, is the problem which we have been considering during all this intervening period because, unlike the hon. member for Essex East, we have the responsibility of ensuring that the government will in time of war—which we hope to God will never come—have the ample powers which it needs to safeguard the interests of the state. Simultaneously we have the responsibility of ensuring that the powers given to the government do not go further than those which are necessary for that purpose.

One must be very careful, as I am sure every hon. member will realize, as to what one does, because two things must be remembered. The kind of war that would confront us in these days is such that events will move with such swiftness there will not be time to commence changing legislation then, nor to determine the limits of powers. If one gets oneself into that situation, it may well be, and indeed probably will be, too late to ask parliament to extend the powers. Therefore, one has to be conscious of the fact that too severe limitations on the powers of government in time of real emergency would be in the long run perhaps more dangerous than a rather restricted recognition of the rights and liberties of the individual.

It is hard to crystallize this matter in a few words, but this is the sort of problem that we have had in mind in approaching the War Measures Act in the context of the bill of rights. That is one of the reasons why we were not able, as readily and as rapidly as my hon. friend from Essex East thought desirable, to produce a concrete proposal to lay before this house. The hon. member for Essex East made the extraordinary and, indeed, absurd suggestion that it was his bill, introduced in January, which had the result of causing the Prime Minister to introduce this proposal now in June. If we were as frightened of the results of the hon. member's efforts as he seems to suggest, I hardly think that would be consistent with the position that he has taken, nor that we should have waited from January to June before proceeding as we now are. The fact of the matter is that the main reason this proposal comes forward at this time is because the government is now in the position to meet with members of parliament and to discuss with them the changes which should be made or considered to be appropriate in the War Measures Act.

The Prime Minister has outlined how this committee might proceed. I would ask the liberty of perhaps elaborating a little on what he said, to the following effect. It is true that this motion comes in late in the session, on June 13, at a time when it may be difficult to arrange in the immediate future for an opportunity for the widespread hearing of members of the public which will undoubtedly be desired. I suggest that one useful method by which the committee itself might consider the matter—and of course the committee will be master of its own proceedings and will determine for itself how it should proceed—might be as follows. When the committee first meets the government might, through those persons who have the responsibility for advising in these matters, present an outline to the committee for the committee's information of the sort of problem that arises in times of emergency represented by war.

I think it will be helpful to the committee to have that outline as a sort of indication of the scope of the problem with which we are dealing. Then the government would be prepared to lay before the committee a draft bill for its consideration. That bill would not be in the form of a "take it or leave it" document, but in the form of a specific draft in order that the committee may have something concrete before it. Then the committee might consider that, after some preliminary study, the matter could stand over for a while, during which time the draft bill could be circulated to all those individuals and organizations who would be interested in commenting on it. It might well be, therefore, that during the summer months this process could be going on and whenever parliament comes together again the committee would be in a position to continue its study and to hear the views of those to whom in the meantime the draft would have been circulated.

I put this forward as one suggested method of procedure only which the committee might consider. It might prefer to consider others, or it may prefer others, but it does seem to me this could be a very logical method of proceeding, and it was with this in mind that the Prime Minister made his suggestion earlier today, and it was with this thought in mind that we felt that this would be an appropriate time to bring this resolution before the house. That is all there was to it, and we had not any of the evil motives in mind attributed to us by the hon. member for Essex East.

Perhaps I should just conclude with a reference to some of the things that it might be suggested should be accomplished by any amendments to the War Measures Act. Some of these may have crossed the minds of my hon. friends opposite or some of them. If so, this is all to the good. This problem of amendments to the War Measures Act is not a problem of any one party or another in this house; it is a problem for the House of Commons, the parliament of Canada and the Canadian nation.

The War Measures Act is not the interest or the property of any one party. It is the means by which or through which in times of war a government will be entrusted with the necessary powers for the effective and successful prosecution of that war. And if, therefore, there are views held in common here as to the lengths to which we can go and the limits to be put on the lengths to which we should go in amending the War Measures Act, it is all to the good. It does seem to me these are some of the areas in which it might be thought appropriate to amend the War Measures Act.

First, amendments placing limits upon the rights of the governor in council to authorize the deportation of Canadian citizens. Second, it may well be considered whether or not we should amend the War Measures Act to take away the power to deprive Canadian citizens of their citizenship under the War Measures Act without in any way interfering with any other statute, the citizenship act itself, which confers those powers. Therefore we certainly may well consider whether it is not perfectly proper and indeed essential to limit the power to take away citizenship under an emergency measures act such as the War Measures Act.

Again, we might consider the question of whether persons detained under the emergency powers of the War Measures Act should have the right of hearing written into the act itself. I would think hon. members would feel that such a hearing should not be held in open court before the ordinary judicial tribunal. Professor Lower and I exchanged some views and the hon. member for Essex East and Professor Lower exchanged some views on this in the committee last year; but it certainly might be considered whether there might not be provided in the statute itself some right of review of the detentions under these emergency powers.

Then there are several sections of the War Measures Act, it seems to me, such as sections 5, 8 and 9, which could well be looked at to see whether they are really necessary at all. The committee could consider whether they should be repealed or amended so that if continued they are left over in substantially modified form. As I have indicated the government—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I put this forward for non-controversial purposes. Does the minister not recognize that practically all of these proposals are embodied in the bill which I introduced in the house on January 31?

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend has seen the light after 22 years I am delighted. He and his party had 22 years to do these things. We are just delighted, as I said a moment ago. We welcome the speed with which the hon. member now seeks to move. We just hope he will not over-reach himself.

These are some of the areas in which we think the committee might consider amending the War Measures Act. As I said, the government will be prepared, if the committee desires, to lay before it a draft bill putting in concrete form these and some other ideas in order to assist the committee in its deliberations.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of following up the purely political comments made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) with regard to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin).

The legislation before us today is very simple. The comments made by the hon. member for Essex East who spoke after were based on unchallengeable facts.

This legislation is to appoint a special committee responsible for examining the War Measures Act and recommending any amendment of this legislation considered appropriate in the perspective of 1961.

At one time, the hon. Minister of Justice quoted two names of animals in connection with the comments of the hon. member for Essex East. I do not propose to follow in the minister's footsteps in that respect.

Yet, I might tell him this. The government makes me think of a tortoise which has to be pulled by the ears to get the promised job done.

Mr. Ricard: Have you ever seen a tortoise's ears?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I now want to refer to page 5949 of the English issue of Hansard, dated July 7, 1960, to recall a few words from the Prime Minister's statement in answer to a question by the hon. member for Essex East.

(Text):

I think the whole act deserves to be considered, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said. I think if we would get together the membership in the house and deal with the War Measures Act and ascertain the degree to which the rights of the individual may be maintained to the highest extent without detriment to the security of the nation as a whole, changes and amendments might be made to that act. If hon. members of the house so desire, I would be willing that at the next session a committee be set up to consider this whole field, for the War Measures Act, like all measures passed for the purpose of ensuring the salvation and survival of the state, has been found in the light of experience not only here but in other countries to contain provisions that ought to be ameliorated or subdued in the interests of the individual while at the same time maintaining the security of the state.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister last year—I think it was on July 1—introduced his bill of rights, the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Pearson) suggested for the first time that while considering the bill on fundamental freedoms, we might at the same time take up the War Measures Act and make such improvements and amendments to it as were deemed necessary.

The Prime Minister then did not see fit to accept the suggestion of the leader of the official opposition.

When the bill of rights came up, we submitted amendments which were rejected by the Minister of Justice. When the matter came up again in committee of the whole, we again submitted the same amendments, which were again rejected.

These are facts which no one can deny.

The only measure submitted this year is Bill C-62, sponsored by the hon. member for Essex East, which proposes some very important amendments to the War Measures Act.

I can say to the hon. member for Essex East that the committee which is to be set up would be well advised to consider the amendments he suggested on January 31 last.

I feel sure that the legal experts who will be invited to the committee will also stress the importance of the recommendations made by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a bill which has to be extensively scrutinized and which calls for considerable study, as the Minister of Justice said, because times have changed and the dangers that might result from a state of war are not all known yet. We shall have to take into consideration, the disaster which might follow a state of war, as well as security requirements and the safeguard of fundamental freedoms for individuals.

I am sure that those hon. members who will have the privilege of sitting on that very important committee will consider the bill very carefully in order to include in our statutes, without any partisanship, a War

Measures Act that would spare as much as possible the rights of our citizens even in time of war.

Mr. Speaker, before assuming my seat, I wish to read a few lines from an answer given by the Minister of Justice to a question put to him by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), and I quote from page 5463 of Hansard, the following question of the hon. member for Essex East:

(Text):

Before the minister leaves the subject of the bill of rights, may I be permitted to ask another question. My recollection is that the Prime Minister said, I think at this session, there would be amendments brought in to the War Measures Act. The government has not given any indication of its intention in that regard. I have pointed out that I have prepared amendments that are incorporated in a private bill that has not yet reached this house but notice of which exists. Is it the government's intention to proceed with the amendments to the War Measures Act during this session?

(Translation):

And here is the answer given by the Minister of Justice—let us not forget that this is on May 27, 1961, just a few days ago—and I quote:

(Text):

My department has been working on amendments to the War Measures Act. We are not at the moment in a position to recommend legislation. I therefore regret that I am unable to assure the hon. member that an amending measure will be proceeded with at this session. It is also my recollection that the Prime Minister indicated that some action would be taken, but I am not quite sure whether the intended action referred to was legislation or a committee study. However, whichever it was, my recollection is that reference was made to action being taken at this session.

At the moment, so far as my responsibility goes, I am not in a position to state definitely that we will be in a position to take action at this session. If we should find ourselves in that position, and if there should be an immediate demand for action, we would then do our best to proceed; but I must say that in view of the stage the session has reached, and the state of the order paper, I think probably we all might wish to have another look at that situation.

Now at that time the Minister of Justice says:

(Text):

There was no immediate demand for action.

(Translation):

It must not be forgotten that while the Minister of Justice was stating: "There was no immediate demand for action", the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) had put on the order paper, since January 21st last, a bill in which he suggested very important amendments to the War Measures Act.

I listened carefully to the remarks of the Minister of Justice, and I understood that the house would not be asked to study, during this session, a bill amending the War Measures Act, but that such study of it that could be made would bear fruit next year.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder why efforts are being made to deprive the hon. member for Essex East of the credit to which he is entitled. What will come out of this? From time to time, measures of this nature, which transcend partisan considerations, are introduced, and I believe things would be so much easier if credit were given for it to a member, even if he happens to sit on the opposition side.

The hon. member for Essex East has been a member of this house for many years. He has been the very impersonation of due respect for the rights and freedoms of citizens, and I am of the opinion that the Prime Minister, and more particularly the Minister of Justice, would be much more deserving if—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I thought the hon. member was nearing the termination of his remarks.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am just about finished, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I wish to assure the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice that we shall do everything possible so that the study of this measure will be most profitable in order that the bill to be submitted to us in due course will protect the rights of the citizens in peacetime as well as in wartime.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the house wish to dispose of the motion before I call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Diefenbaker) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Referring to today's order paper, and more especially to the item "Order of Business", this is what I find:

From five to six o'clock p.m.—Private and public bills, the former having precedence. (De cinq heures à six heures du soir: bills privés et bills publics, ceux-là ayant la priorité.)

I wonder what is the meaning of the term "ceux-là"? Does it refer to private bills or to public bills? Would it not be better to write "les premiers ayant préséance", because the term "ceux-là" as it is now used, could apply to public bills as well as to private bills.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's suggestion will be taken into account.

PRIVATE BILLS

THREE RIVERS—ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE

The house in committee on Bill No. S-15, respecting the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river near the city of Trois-Rivières—Mr. Paul—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Construction of bridge authorized.

Mr. Howard: There is only one general question that I should like to pose dealing with the bridge itself and more particularly with a clause of the bill assented to by the legislative assembly of the province of Quebec. I appreciate the fact that we are not dealing with that bill except in so far as it is in the schedule. Before I proceed I wonder whether I may inquire whether my reference to these matters in the schedule could be considered under the schedule. You will be calling the schedule of the bill, will you not, Mr. Chairman, even though it is a copy of an act assented to by the legislature of the province of Quebec?

The Chairman: Yes.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, when this bill was drafted, the sponsors felt that they should include as a schedule to Bill S-15, a piece of legislation that was adopted by the provincial legislature in 1956, so that the members of the House of Commons would be familiar with the powers of this corporation which under this bill applies to the house for an authorization which in fact is nothing more than a requirement under section 11 of the Canada Shipping Act. Consequently, the hon. member should feel free to ask questions about the schedule any time he feels like it. On the other hand, I should like to point out to him that this parliament has no authority to make any change whatsoever concerning the "Corporation du Pont de Trois-Rivières" which was incorporated under a statute of the Quebec legislature.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: I quite appreciate the fact that one cannot alter a provincial bill itself. In addition to that, I would say that I have no desire even to attempt to engage in such a practice. The only purpose is so far as the point of interest is concerned. By hon. members raising this matter, as was done by my friend the hon. member for Vancouver East at the time the bill was given second reading, and perhaps by making reference to this particular thing, the result may be this. At some subsequent time the legislative assembly of the province of Quebec may be involved in amending this particular statute. If these matters are dealt with somewhat here, the question may be raised in the minds of the legislators in that province and they on their own initiative may desire to do something. However, my particular question has to do with what I will call section 22 or part 22 of the schedule, which I imagine is section 22 of the provincial act respecting the construction of this particular bridge. With some guidance from you, Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could leave these particular remarks until we get to the schedule; or perhaps we could deal with them under clause 1 because the whole matter deals with the provisions contained in clause 1 of the bill and with the maintenance and operation of the bridge. However, whatever you think would be the better way in which to approach the matter, Mr. Chairman, will be all right with me.

The Chairman: It seems to me that the discussion probably would be more appropriate when we come to the schedule because in clause 1 there is no special reference to the schedule. Usually the debate on clause 1 of a bill is more of a general nature. I think it might be better to wait until we reach the schedule.

Shall clause 1 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question to put to the hon. member.

In wonder if it would take too much time to give the names of the principal members of the corporation or of those who were the promoters of this bridge project.

Mr. Paul: This bill, as I have already said, was introduced in the provincial legislature in 1956, as a result of concerted action on the part of the chambers of commerce of the city of Three Rivers and the vicinity. Several municipalities, I should say, nearly all the municipalities of central Quebec passed resolutions supporting the project, which when implemented will favour the economic development of that part of the province.

The principal officers of the corporation are Mr. Frank Spenard as vice president, Mr. François Nobert, a barrister in Three Rivers, as secretary or treasurer. There is also a Mr. Wickadam who is president of the corporation. The bill also provides for the appointment of a representative of the city of Three Rivers so that the city will have someone to look after its interests when the time comes to do away with the ferry-boat system now in operation between the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to ask only one other question. Has Mr. François Nobert been elected to the post of secretary or was he imposed by—

Mr. Paul: I do not think that any change has occurred in the respective functions assigned to the persons whose names I have just given since the corporation has been in existence.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: There is one additional thought that I have here. In answer to the first question I understood the hon. member to give the names of three individuals and the reference to a fourth one to be appointed by the city of Trois Rivières. In this regard I think I must make reference to the schedule and say that in the schedule which was assented to 2nd February, 1956, as found in the bill at page 3, there appear the names of two others who were members of the corporation, namely J. Henri René de Cotret and Maurice Langlois. I wonder whether these people are still members of the corporation.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, they are still members of the corporation. I did not give the names of all the directors of the corporation, but only those of the executive.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I think the discussion will be relatively short in connection with the schedule and therefore perhaps it is not necessary to consider it point by point.

My remarks are concerned with paragraph 22 of the schedule. That paragraph gives to this corporation a monopoly in the operation of this bridge over any other bridge, tunnel or ferry service, save only the ferry operated at the present time by the city of Three Rivers, for a radius of 25 miles above and 25 miles below the site of the bridge.

I assume this means that within a total distance of 50 miles no other person can build or operate a bridge, tunnel or ferry over or under the St. Lawrence river during the period of eight years from the sanction of this bill. I do not know whether that means eight years from February 2, 1956, or eight years from the passage of the bill now before us. In any event, it is not only covered for a period of eight years, which I presume is the construction period, but it is also covered for the whole period of the utilization of the proposed bridge. So long as the bridge is in use, no other person can build any bridge, ferry or tunnel within a 50 mile area of the site of the bridge; that is, an area of 25 miles each side of the bridge.

It seems to me this is a rather unusual degree of power and authority and an unusual amount of monopoly to give to a corporation. I presume that initially it was done to cover the period of time until the indebtedness of the bridge was paid off by way of tolls collected. If this was the intention, I think it should be so stated in the bill. Perhaps one could accept that sort of proposal in the light of whatever circumstances might be applicable. However, I think it is an extremely unique power to give forever, to the corporation, or so long as the bridge is utilized. The corporation is in a monopoly position in this regard and no other person is allowed to build a bridge, ferry or tunnel in this area.

It may well be that the growth of this part of the province of Quebec which will be served by the bridge will make it inadequate in a few years' time to serve the traffic that uses it. This is quite apart from the discussion we had earlier about the width of the bridge and why it could not be built in such a way that would allow expansion for additional lanes of traffic. This monopoly provision is even more difficult to appreciate.

I certainly would not wish this committee to take this action and then within a period of ten or 15 years find the bridge totally inadequate to serve the area, in view of the traffic using it. We would not want to prevent the legislature of the province of Quebec from having additional bridges constructed as time goes on.

In the city of Vancouver in the late 1930's a three-lane bridge was built across Burrard inlet by a private company. Not too many years after the bridge was constructed it was found to be completely inadequate to handle the traffic using it. Within five or six years of this bridge being constructed by a private company it was purchased by the tolls, bridges and highway authority of the provincial government, and the provincial government subsequently built another bridge a few miles from the first one in order to deal with the volume of traffic travelling between the north Vancouver area and the lower mainland part of the city of Vancouver.

I think it would be most unwise for us to find ourselves in this position, especially in view of the importance of the area which the hon. member represents and the area that will be served by this bridge. It would be helpful to myself, and I think to all hon. members of the committee, if the hon. member would tell us the reason why there is this very unique, "forever" type of monopoly given to this corporation. Perhaps the hon.

member would also tell us what possibilities exist for building an additional bridge, ferry or tunnel if within a relatively short period of time the volume of traffic using the bridge demands additional facilities.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), I wish to say that if we examine the preamble of the provincial bill, we note it has been introduced to serve the interests of a whole series of constituencies enumerated on page 3 of the bill, namely Three Rivers, Maskinonge, Champlain, St. Maurice-Lafleche, Nicolet, Lotbiniere and Drummond-Arthabaska.

That is to say that a whole industrial sector will benefit from the advantages of that bridge.

I beg to disagree here with the previous speaker who said this bill was actually setting up a monopoly.

It is too bad the hon. member has not yet had the opportunity of visiting that beautiful district of the province of Quebec. He would have discovered that topographically the site is not at all suited for the erection of another bridge, first of all because of the width of the river, and second, because of the difficulties of approach on the south and north shores in all other locations.

The nearest large commercial centre is located on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river at Sorel. A bridge construction in that location would raise difficulties which could be overcome only with a considerable capital outlay.

Furthermore, when the provincial legislature examined the request submitted by "La Corporation du Pont de Trois-Rivières", it unanimously granted the request. Exclusive rights were granted the corporation, not to create a monopoly but to insure that the project would be seriously dealt with.

The amount of $35,000 has already been spent for the preparation of plans, and that amount was raised through voluntary contributions raised in the Three Rivers area.

The drive was conducted long before the passing of the bill incorporating "La Corporation du Pont de Trois-Rivières" by the provincial legislature.

If we are today faced with the situation that the corporation has to submit its case to parliament, it is because the governor in council cannot on his own authority grant permission for the erection of a bridge over the St. Lawrence seaway.

[Mr. Howard.]

The governor in council has the required authority when the construction of a bridge over any other navigable water is concerned, but not in this case.

Plans were submitted to the Departments of Transport and Public Works, and were not approved by government engineers. After some checking it was realized that they contained drawbacks or disadvantages for navigation on the St. Lawrence river.

The House of Commons adopted a similar bill in 1956. A three-year limit had then been set to have the plans approved by the governor in council. Unfortunately, they were not approved. I am now talking from memory and I wonder if the plans were ever submitted during that three-year period.

That is the reason why it was necessary to renew the rights granted under the 1956 bill.

The hon. member has referred to an eight-year limit. One has to be aware of the interest taken in the construction of a bridge at Three Rivers to realize how anxious the corporation is to carry out this project as soon as the required powers have been granted by this house.

First of all, a three-year period is necessary, that being the ultimate limit for the plans of the future Three Rivers bridge to be submitted to the governor in council for approval. Then, during the three-year period following the approval of the plans, the corporation will have to build the bridge; that is the reason why the provincial legislature has specified in the bill a possible eight-year limit for the project to be carried out.

However, it is hoped that the corporation will be able to build the bridge before the end of this period, to the satisfaction of all that industrial and promising area of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of opposing the building of a bridge at Three Rivers particularly on account of the fact that there was once another bridge, known as the Duplessis bridge which subsequently collapsed, probably because the guards who were supposed to watch its approaches against the communists were absent.

If I understand the bill correctly, a bridge is to be built which will not only be used by the citizens of the constituencies mentioned in schedule 3, but by all cars from every part of the province and of the whole country.

I fail to understand why we are being asked to pass a bill to entrust a corporation set up beforehand by a provincial legislature with the building of a bridge which may or may not pay its own way. Why should we members of the federal parliament, vote an advance of funds, or actually guarantee that the promoters of that corporation should never lose any money, but on the contrary make some?

I am in favour of having a bridge at Three Rivers. It will be extremely useful. And to please my hon. friend, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, I even believe it might be preferable to build it from Berthier to Sorel as it would link together two very important municipalities.

I do not see why we should vote a bill to benefit a corporation comprising Conservatives, Liberals and even C.C.F. people—of course, there are no members from the New party in it, but such will eventually be the case because the C.C.F. people are in it, and they only changed their name to please the public and not because of new ideas.

At all events, Mr. Chairman, I object to allowing even public corporations to build a bridge with only profit sharing in mind, because a corporation becomes illegal the moment it shares in profits only. Consequently, if the government is kind enough to give us a bridge, it should not do so only for the benefit of a handful of citizens—

The Chairman: Order. I must say I have tried most strenuously to connect the hon. member's remarks with the schedule but I fail to see any connection.

I realize that he is now dealing with section 1 which is already carried. The schedule is merely the statute under which the "Corporation du Pont de Trois-Rivières" was incorporated and I fail to see the connection of the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking on schedule 3 which follows section 3 we are considering at present. I could not deal with it while we were examining section 1.

If Your Honour will just take the trouble of looking, he will see that for himself. I do not know what that schedule is doing there but it seems obvious that if the federal government ever decides to adopt this bill, it is the Three Rivers corporation which will benefit from it while the federal government will foot the bill.

If profits are to be made, it seems to me that it is the government which should be making them since it is the government which will be lending or guaranteeing the necessary funds.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for St. Denis, I should like to point out that the person who drafted this bill is a lawyer whose competence is highly recognized in the city of Three Rivers, since it is Mr. François Nobert, who was the sponsor of this bill in the provincial legislature, and who then acted as counsel when the bill was examined by the senate committee in 1956.

Besides, when one refers to bridges—as did the hon. member for St. Denis—he recalled unfortunate events that took place in the city of Three Rivers when the Duplessis bridge collapsed—the hon. member seems to connect the collapse of this bridge—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Paul: —with certain communists who were blamed at the time for the collapse of the bridge—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Paul: —but I wonder whether the member for St. Denis could tell us who is responsible for the collapse of the Duplessis normal school in Three Rivers last April?

The Chairman: Order. I think I need not indicate to the hon. member why I called him to order.

(Text):

Mr. Howard: I should like to make one or two comments following the remarks of the hon. member who sponsored the bill. I must apologize not only for not having had the pleasure of visiting his fine part of the country but for not being able to pronounce the name of his riding. It is for that reason I refer to him as the hon. member who sponsored the bill.

I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for St. Denis when he spoke about profits and losses. I wondered if they represented a reversal of the stand taken with regard to the trans-Canada pipe lines project a few years ago when they wanted the Canadian taxpayers to lose everything provided certain individuals and companies could make a profit. I can see that there has obviously been a change in policy, besides a change in the position of the hon. member in the house. I notice that he has moved away from the front bench and I wonder whether he has gone to the back bench in order to get close to the New party about which he was speaking.

If the topography of the area around or alongside the river where this bridge is to be built makes it impossible for an additional bridge to be built there, then I wonder why this should have to be stated in a statute. That is the only thought I have on this. Perhaps it is not necessary to go once again into the whole question of whether or not this is a monopoly. I think that has been well enough established. Besides, once we get into the profit and loss question we shall not get too far. Your agility, Mr. Chairman, would bring you immediately to your feet to slow us down and I do not want you to go through that exercise too often.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL MORTGAGE CORPORATION OF CANADA

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-16, to incorporate National Mortgage Corporation of Canada.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member intend to explain his bill?

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, perhaps, because of the importance of this bill, I should make a few brief comments. I shall attempt to be brief because I realize some hon. members on the other side of the house intend to make some comments.

Bill No. S-16 proposes an act to incorporate a public company under the name of National Mortgage Corporation of Canada. This company is being formed because of an apparent need for secondary mortgage financing. This need was set out in an article entitled "An Investment Opportunity" written by J. L. Whitney, one of the incorporating directors, in the Financial Post on August 1, 1959. Shortly after that a group of interested individuals began to study all of the problems. As a result of this study and negotiation this company now requests incorporation.

The bill has a threefold purpose. One, that the company be allowed to deal in mortgages. Two, that the company be given the power to raise funds for investment in N.H.A. and conventional mortgages, through the sale of mortgage bonds to investors. Third, to give the company the power to carry on the business of managing and servicing mortgages, not only those which are owned by its policyholders, but also those which are owned by other individuals and corporations and which are left with the company for the purpose of being serviced.

It is the hope of the sponsors of this bill, through the medium of their mortgage bonds, to be able to induce institutional lenders, who have restricted their operations to relatively large urban centres throughout Canada, to make money available to them in order to make mortgages freely obtainable in remote communities. This will be done in the following way.

The company will set up two funds. The first fund will be used for the purchase of N.H.A. mortgages which are government backed. Those funds will be raised by the issuing of certificates to the lenders, either trust companies or large institutional companies or individuals who lend this money to the proposed companies, for which they will in return receive certificates which can be registered as to principal or as to interest and transferrable the same as bonds. The money received in this way will be invested in N.H.A. mortgages.

The second fund will be used for conventional mortgages and, of course, certificates will be issued in the same way but the interest rates on these certificates will be slightly higher than those received in respect of the ones backed by N.H.A. loans.

That is a brief outline, but I should just like to point out that the corporation will have a capital stock of $10 million, which may be increased to $15 million, and shall be divided into shares of $10 each. At least 60 per cent of any offering of stock be reserved for a period of 15 days from the time of such offering, for the purchase by corporate or natural persons ordinarily resident in Canada. It should also be noted that not less than 75 per cent of the directors of the corporation must be Canadian citizens, ordinarily resident in Canada. The head office of the company is to be in Toronto.

I can assure hon. members that when this bill is referred to the banking and commerce committee, representatives of this proposed company will be in attendance to explain in detail its proposals, and to discuss them with anyone who is interested at that time.

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words concerning Bill No. S-16, an act to incorporate a company under the name of National Mortgage Corporation of Canada. My remarks will be brief, but I intend to pose a few questions which seem to me to require answers at this stage.

It should be noted that the petition was dated December 14, 1960 and was read on December 19, 1960. When this bill was given first reading, in the other place, on April 25, the purpose was outlined briefly. The purpose was that the company proposed to deal in mortgages of two types; those which are guaranteed by the government under C.M.H.C., and conventional mortgages. It was also stated that the company desired to raise funds for investment in N.H.A. mortgages and conventional mortgages. It is also proposed that the company shall have the right to manage and service mortgages which are owned by its bondholders, as well as mortgages placed with the company.

Therefore, this bill provides, as the sponsor suggested this afternoon, for three main functions. One, that the proposed company be permitted to buy and sell mortgages. Two, that the company is to have the power to raise funds. Three, that the proposed company will be allowed to manage and service mortgages.

I think it will be agreed that this bill provides for a broad range of activity in the mortgage financing field in Canada. While the bill provides for activity in two separate and distinct mortgage financing fields, I cannot argue that the principle of the bill is contentious. In fact, for the past three years or more, I have urged the government to encourage the establishment of a secondary mortgage market in Canada, and on at least three occasions have set out in detail my version of an institution which could be publicly or privately owned, and would purchase N.H.A. mortgages guaranteed by the government to be used as collateral against the issuance of certificates in small denominations available to the small private investors, as well as to the large corporations. Many of these small investors, some with only a few hundred dollars, up to this point have not been able to conveniently invest in housing.

The interest rate paid on these certificates will vary with the N.H.A. fixed rate, probably one half of one per cent to three quarters of one par cent below the N.H.A. interest rate. Therefore, the series A bonds, being mortgage bonds backed by N.H.A. insured mortgages and by cash, should encourage new investors. It is my sincere hope that these mortgage bonds will be made available in small denominations, and that the greatest possible encouragement will be given the small investor to channel some of his savings in this way into the mortgage lending field. In my view it is only in this way that this corporation will be of any real benefit in bringing any new money into the mortgage lending system. Surely it cannot be argued that simply switching investment from one large corporation to another at a profit to both would contribute very much in this field. Now we have a new development and rather timely in respect of this corporation, of the government unloading C.M.H.C. mortgages at a discount which obviously will provide handsome additional profits for organizations such as the one envisaged in this bill.

A second mortgage fund to be known as mortgage fund B will be used in connection with the financing and sale of older houses, we are told, and to provide funds for investment in the conventional mortgage field. It is also said that this fund will provide a suitable market for individuals, corporations and estates to sell or convert mortgages into cash. I am especially interested in the aspect of activity proposed in respect of the financing of houses already built. I would hope that we can have some clarification of what precisely is proposed in this field.

During second reading in the other place, at one point it was indicated that the fund would be used for this purpose and later that consideration would be given to ways and means of making financing available on existing houses. I would point out that there is some difference between the term "would be" and the matter of possibly giving consideration. I would hope that the hon. member who introduced this bill will be able to clear up this point. I would remind hon. members that this bill gives the corporation broad powers and once they have qualified as an approved lender under N.H.A. the company will be able to buy, sell, administer, deal in and service all mortgages coming under N.H.A. Provision is also made for investment in income-producing realty, and it will be governed by the provision of the Loan Companies Act.

As I mentioned earlier, the original petition was presented in the other place on December 19. It is of more than passing interest to note that on April 17 the Minister of Public Works made an announcement on government policy concerning the establishment of a secondary mortgage market and it is of equal interest that first reading was given to the bill in the other place on April 25, only eight days later, second reading the following day and the bill was then referred to the Senate standing committee on banking and commerce. This committee examined the bill on May 3 and third reading took place on May 10.

As a result of the careful scrutiny given this bill in the other place nine amendments of a rather technical nature were made. It is rather strange that this bill, which was so long in the drafting stage, and which had a model bill to work from, was so technically deficient when presented to the other place, unless the sponsors realized the need for haste with these new opportunities just around the corner, with the government's decision to unload $170 million worth of mortgages at a discount.

Although provisions exist in the 1954 National Housing Act for block sale of existing mortgages, there has been relatively little activity in this field up to this time. I simply pose the question that it seems a little more than coincidental that the initiative for the formation of the corporation embodied in this bill has been timed so completely in accord with the government's announced policy of April 17 to unload a substantial quantity of mortgages at discounts.

My main objection to this bill arises from the proposed name, National Mortgage Corporation of Canada. The use of "National" and "of Canada" together clearly gives the impression of a government agency. I realize this matter was dealt with at some length in the other place, because I have carefully read the proceedings there. However, some very interesting evidence was presented on May 3 to the banking and commerce committee in this respect. Then later an amendment was moved on third reading in an effort by some hon. members in the other place to correct the confusion that will arise, and indeed has arisen already, as to the relationship of this corporation and the federal government. I would urge hon. members to read the objections presented to the banking and commerce committee by Mr. K. R. MacGregor, superintendent of insurance. His argument was sound and it is not my intention to delay the house by repeating or referring to his objections, nor am I going to raise the objections put forward by certain private companies such as the National Trust.

I would, however, draw hon. members' attention to the views of Dr. Stewart Bates, president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and as such perhaps the person most qualified to make a recommendation in this matter. I would like to quote, if I may, from a letter of Dr. Bates.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member proposing to quote on the question of the name of the corporation? Does the letter which the hon. member has in mind quoting refer to the name of the corporation?

Mr. Garland: Only, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I would think that that matter is not one properly to be elaborated on second reading. The hon. member has indicated that there is objection to the name, and this is a matter which will come before the committee and before the committee of the whole house and is a matter of detailed discussion of the bill. It would be appropriate then to take exception to the name.

Mr. Caron: On the point of order, if the hon. member is speaking to the principle of the bill, namely the abuse of the word "National" in the name of any company, not particularly this company, then would it not be considered as part of the principle of the bill?

[Mr. Garland.]

Mr. Speaker: Well, if hon. members feel that a matter of principle is involved in the proposed name I do not want to be too technical about the discussion. I would think that one should not get into a detailed presentation of evidence on the point.

Mr. Garland: It was my intention to refer only to this one piece of evidence. It seems to me to be quite important because of the position occupied by Dr. Bates. I would quote from his letter, if I may:

> Since Bill S-16 to incorporate National Mortgage Corporation of Canada was introduced in the Senate it has been brought to our attention that among approved lenders and others there is confusion as to whether this is a private corporation or a publicly owned one. In particular, we find many mortgage buyers believing this to be a government company, associated with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in connection with the recently announced government policy to develop a secondary mortgage market in Canada through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.
> The confusion appears to stem from the fact that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation administers the National Housing Act and insures National Housing Act loans and indeed, makes direct National Housing Act loans on its own behalf.
> We believe that the confusion to which I refer is undesirable from the point of view of the sponsors of the proposed new corporation and as well, from the point of view of this corporation. We would deem it a favour if you would explore with your colleagues and the sponsors of the new corporation the necessity of having the new corporation renamed.

This is a serious request from the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and merits the serious consideration of all hon. members. As head of the corporation, Dr. Bates is possibly in the best position to assess the confusion which has arisen already and which is bound to arise in the future. Quite apart from Dr. Bate's concern about the immediate future I would also remind hon. members that governments of the future may find it necessary and desirable to set up a public corporation along these same lines. I would therefore urge that the words "National" and "of Canada" be not granted to this company to be used together in the title, one or the other would be O.K. but certainly not both together.

I do not think there is any doubt that this has caused considerable confusion. I have proof of that in the statement of the Minister of Public Works in this house on May 9 in dealing with his announcement of the first offering to the secondary mortgage market, in which he had this to say:

> Prospective purchasers should therefore get in touch with one of the organizations I have just mentioned, and not with the corporation itself.

I should also like to know what the Secretary of State's department thinks about this matter. It has always been my understanding that any words capable of giving the impression that the organization is a federal institution or a federal agency have been considered to be objectionable and have been frowned upon by the department.

I know that hon. members are aware of "Fanny May", the United States federal government company, the proper name of which is the federal national mortgage association. This, I suggest, is just another reason to recognize that the day may well come when we will want to form a government corporation in this particular field. What we are doing here today cannot or is not likely to be undone, and I appeal to hon. members not to grant to a private corporation a name that clearly marks it as an instrument of the federal government. Surely we are giving this corporation broad powers already and we should not be required to give it a name that would even suggest it to be an agency of our national government.

With these few general remarks, I should like to ask the sponsor a few questions. First, will this company be able to sell bonds to the banks which would yield 6 per cent and then distribute profits made on the operation of fund A, thus enabling the banks to earn more than the statutory 6 per cent allowed them under the Bank Act? Second, since the securities of this corporation, the A bonds, will be indirectly guaranteed by the government, is it not a fact that they will in effect be competing with debentures of school boards. municipalities and provinces on the one hand and at the same time getting the federal government off the hook with regard to some of its long term commitments? Normally I would not object to this form of competition but surely all hon. members are aware of the unfair treatment these junior levels of government have received as a result of the excessive borrowing of the federal government. In fact, this competition from the federal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the hon. member does not propose to pursue that line because it is not raised at all by the bill.

Mr. Garland: Then I will refer to another matter. I had intended to establish this point with statements made at the recent conference of mayors and municipalities in Halifax but perhaps I can leave that for another opportunity. There is another question I should like to pose to the sponsor of the bill. If the government could unload a number of long term commitments on this new market, is it not possible that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) could hide a part of his deficit? Certainly he could avoid the necessity—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is discussing public finance and not the incorporation of a company with certain restricted powers to invest in mortgages. I do not want to keep interrupting him but to my mind the bill does not raise any question of public finance.

Mr. Grafftey: He will have to throw away that page of his speech.

Mr. Garland: Surely if the corporation we are creating is to deal primarily in mortgages being sold by an agency of the government there has to be a relationship. However, I will proceed.

Finally, the market is only going to take existing mortgages if a profit can be made on them. If they yield less than the discounted value of current mortgages they are not going to move. On the other hand, if they are sold at a discount the taxpayer is going to have to pay.

While the need for mortgage funds at the moment is not creating any problem, increased demand is bound to develop in the foreseeable future as Canada's wartime babies hit the housing market and/or when our economy resumes its normal rate of development. Today's problem is a lack of demand for buyers willing to take on these heavy commitments of high cost housing and high cost financing of housing. However, to whatever extent the corporation envisaged in the bill will attract new investors to channel their savings into the financing of housing it will, of course, be welcomed by most hon. members. It is only to the degree that it attracts investors who have not yet invested in housing that the corporation will make an important contribution. I believe there is a place for this kind of institution in the mortgage financing field. I do, however, object vigorously to the use of the words "national" and "of Canada" together in the name of the proposed corporation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate that the hour is nearing six o'clock. I have no desire to delay passage of the bill. I appreciate the remarks that have been made by the previous speaker and I am in agreement with them. A problem has been created in this regard mainly because the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) has used the same type of name in referring to this field. Therefore there is an implication that there will be a government crown corporation in the secondary mortgage field and its name would have some relationship to the name now being sought by this company.

I should have liked to have the opportunity to refer to some of the good points in connection with this proposed company because in some respects it is better than most mortgage companies while on the other hand there are also some restrictions. I will not do so, however, because time is limited. There are many who will want to discuss this matter and we do not want to see the bill go to the bottom of the list because we will probably be recessing on the 28th of this month. The bill might possibly die because of its position on the order paper. I should like to see the bill go to the committee where there will be an opportunity to say something about it. I would request the chairman of the banking and commerce committee to have the proceedings respecting this measure published so that even those who are not members of that committee will have an opportunity to study them.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 7.30 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE CAPITAL OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-107, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing the amendment to the Farm Credit Act on second reading I should like to use the time allotted to me to discuss some of the points of principle raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) when he spoke on this matter last night. His first observation was that this bill had an element of subsidy in it. There is a very small element of subsidy in the farm credit corporation set-up in that the money that is borrowed from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is borrowed at the going rate and is lent to the farmers at 5 per cent. It is also equally clear that if the borrowing rate of the farm corporation from the Minister of Finance should decline below 5 per cent, then that subsidy disappears and it could equally be argued that the farmer is subsidizing the Department of Finance. I thought I would raise that point because I want to make it as clear as it is possible for me to make it that this bill is not a hand-out to farmers. It is a partnership arrangement between the government of Canada and those farmers who can produce a plan whereby not only can they pay back the money they have borrowed at 5 per cent interest but they can also provide themselves with a better living at the same time. The emphasis is on the increase of income. This is a perfect example of helping farmers to help themselves.

I should like to put on the record the information requested in relation to the borrowings this last fiscal year. If one refers to the report of the farm credit corporation for the year ended March 31, 1960, at page 14, one will find that the last item is the sum of $15,800,000 borrowed at 5.75 per cent repayable $1.2 million approximately annually, the final payment on June 30, 1985. This item was borrowed by the farm credit corporation near the end of the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960. So even if it is not in the fiscal year under question, I mention that in order to give the full story. In this current year under discussion namely, 1960-61 there have been two additional loans, one for $15 million at 5.75 per cent and the other for $25 million at 5 per cent interest. So in this fiscal year under review the amount borrowed has been $40 million and in the previous year it happened to be, as the record shows, a total of approximately $29 million.

The next question asked by the hon. member was for a review of parallel provincial legislation on farm credit. This is a rather extensive request. I think I can meet it very simply by just taking the provinces mentioned by the hon. member. First of all let me say that there have been some forms of farm credit in every province. These forms of farm credit have changed from year to year. I can probably make the case as clear as it is possible for me to make it by pointing out that in some provinces the terms of lending money to farmers are much more generous than they are in other provinces. This fact can be easily ascertained by looking at where farm credit corporation loans have gone from the federal government under this act.

In the province of Quebec the farm credit act of 1936 and as amended in 1959 and 1960, has the special provision of repayment terms of 39½ years. It has a possible size of loan up to $15,000. As to percentage of security, which is an important feature of any act, they lend up to 80 per cent of the assets on regular loans. To young farmers between the ages of 21 years and 40 years they lend up to 90 per cent of the assets and certainly on regular assets of land and improvements they lend up to 75 per cent. The interest rate is the key fact. It is 2½ per cent. It is very heavily subsidized by the Quebec government.

An additional feature which is very attractive is that the government pays to the farmer a grant of one third of the loan up to a maximum of $3,000. Therefore if a farmer in that province borrowed $9,000, he could get a grant of $3,000, and on the balance he would pay interest on the very generous terms of 2½ per cent. This explains why it was that over 3,000 loans were granted in that province by the provincial government. I should say that these figures I am quoting are for the year 1959. Over 3,000 loans were granted for a total of nearly $13 million. They have outstanding loans to their farmers amounting to over $107 million. This explains why it is that in the province of Quebec the farmers naturally tend to go for the more generous terms of the provincial legislation.

In the province of Ontario, which was mentioned by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), in 1952 the provincial government set up the junior farmer establishment act, which was taken out of action in so far as new loans were concerned in 1959, after we passed our act. Their age group was 21 to 35 years and the maximum loan was $15,000. The security was 65 per cent on land and improvements—not quite as good as ours, but still very high. The interest rate was 4 per cent for terms up to 20 years, and 4½ per cent for terms between 21 to 25 years. The maximum term of the loan was 25 years. Loans granted under this act in Ontario were about 600 in 1959, for a grand total for the seven years the act was in existence of over 3,000 loans. In the year 1959 $5 million was granted in loans, and the grand total for the seven years the act was in operation was nearly $23 million.

The province of Manitoba passed their agricultural credit act in 1958. In that province loans are granted to persons between 21 and 60 years of age. The act includes a provision for supervised expenditure. The maximum loan is $25,000. The security is 60 per cent on land and improvements, up to 40 per cent on stock, and up to 20 per cent on equipment. The interest rate is a flexible one; it is not to exceed the cost of money by more than 1 per cent. The maximum term of the loan is 30 years. In the first year of operation 435 loans were made, for a total of over $4 million, to give them a grand total up to the present time of approximately $8 million. This is an extremely fine record by the provincial government with this very fine agricultural credit act and the very competent staff which administers it.

I point out these things in answer to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and to emphasize that some of these provinces have very fine acts. et in spite of the very good act in Manitoba, farm credit corporation lending in that province has climbed very dramatically. Perhaps hon. members would like to have the figures which illustrate that point. I will use round figures. In the year 1955-56 some 229 loans were granted in Manitoba, for a total of $900,000. In 1956-57 there were 284 loans, for $1.3 million; in 1957-58 loans amounted to $2.1 million; in 1958-59 there were 454 loans, for $2½ million; in 1959-60 there were 251 loans, for $1.4 million.

In 1960-61, under the new farm credit corporation, loans jumped to 317, for a total of $3.4 million. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that even in provinces where there is a very fine credit act and very fine staffs administering it, there is a place for farm credit corporation loans from the federal government.

In the maritime provinces there are good farm credit acts. Some of these acts are extremely generous in their provisions, and these show up in the few loans made by the federal government. I will not go through all the various acts in those provinces, but the best way to show the effect of the legislation in the maritimes is by just reading the figures for the last year in three of those provinces.

In 1960-61—an exceptionally fine year from Ontario all through the western part of Canada—all that was loaned by the F.C.C. in New Brunswick was $362,000 approximately. In Nova Scotia last year all that was loaned from the farm credit corporation was $264,000 approximately. In Prince Edward Island, with the new act which has just been put into effect, the farm credit corporation only loaned $598,000.

This leads to the next question asked by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. He said, "What type of co-operation is there between the provinces and the federal government." The hon. member's question was asked in order to ascertain whether there was duplication of effort, and whether there were any quarrels between the various governments.

I can say that at the provincial level the managers of the farm credit corporation are in almost constant touch with the provincial loan organizations and they have worked out certain methods of co-operation which save duplication and which save the two types of credit organization being caught in any kind of a whipsaw play.

In some provinces certain types of loans are featured by the provincial people, and we handle other types of loans. In other provinces we refer loans back and forth between the federal and provincial agencies. If the province cannot handle a loan, we will take a look at it and see if we can handle it, or vice versa. So generally speaking, at the working level of the provinces there has been very fine co-operation in the last year or so.

In addition to that we have occasional conferences of federal heads of the farm credit corporation and representatives of the various provincial governments. I think these consultations came about largely because of the fact that in the first few months of operation of the farm credit corporation it became very clear, and I noticed it particularly when I took over the department in October, that the loans going into the province of Quebec and the four eastern provinces did not show that startling growth rate that they showed in the province of Ontario and right through to the west coast.

Naturally it will be asked, "Why was this so?" In consultation with the agricultural ministers of these provinces we discovered that the terms of reference of our act do not lend themselves too readily to the type of farming done in the maritime areas. Then of course the very generous provisions of the Quebec act make it very difficult for us to get in there. In the maritimes the set-up we have was not right for their type of operation. In other words, the Farm Credit Act gives a tremendous emphasis to assets in land, and these assets are not available, in most cases, in the maritime provinces. I might make the same observation with regard to the province of British Columbia.

As a result of these consultations the farm credit corporation worked out with one province, first of all, very good co-ordination between the federal and provincial credit organization. As a result we took on as an experiment a new type of loan in the province of Nova Scotia.

First of all we looked at the possibility of marketing the production of the farms in that area. There was a deficiency in the hog production of Nova Scotia in relation to the demand for pork products in that province. It was estimated that some 300 to 400 farmers would be well advised to go into some form of hog production along with their other forms of production in order to meet this deficiency. The price for hogs, as hon. members know, is higher in the maritimes than it is in the central provinces.

A barn was designed, the best techniques of feeding were worked out, and our farm supervisors in these areas are now going out and making this market possibility known to farmers. They are encouraging farmers, in 300 to 400 cases, to take this on as one of the types of activities on their farms.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I have every desire to co-operate with the minister. However, would the minister indicate, in point of time, when these statistics were prepared in regard to Nova Scotia?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The figures I quoted for Nova Scotia were for the fiscal year 1960-61. What I am discussing now, of course, is the operation of the farm credit corporation in Nova Scotia in the last three or four months. This, to my mind, is a perfect example of what can be done by going into a certain area and considering the particular economic needs of that area in consultation with the local people. I hope that the setting up of these barns to handle 250 hogs a year will lead to a better living for the three or four hundred farmers who have received these loans at interest rates of 5 per cent.

I think that in other areas we shall need to take a searching look at the farm situation to make sure we are familiar with the situations prevailing locally. I am intrigued by the possibilities in the province of British Columbia, the maritime provinces and certain areas of Quebec and northern Ontario. I might include, also, the fringe areas of the prairies where the Farm Credit Act does not seem to be meeting the need as well as it does in the better established farm areas.

I forgot to mention one problem in Alberta. We realize there is a difficulty there. I refer to the question of lending money to ranchers and in the special areas.

Mr. Benidickson: What about the questions I asked yesterday?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have just finished answering them. Before the hon. member arrived I gave the figures for Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec where there is provincial loan legislation. I explained what the rates were, and how we co-operated with the provinces.

That completes the remarks I had to make in answer to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I should like to end by saying that the demand for this type of credit has been gratifying. It demonstrates that the need exists, and that if we operate in close contact with the farmer and work out plans under which they will not have undue difficulty in repaying the money, while demonstrating at the same time that the farmers concerned are going to enjoy an increased income, there will be a widespread acceptance of the idea of farm credit. Approximately 50 per cent of our farmers are farming land which could, potentially provide them with a good living. If we can provide them with the capital to develop that land into economic family farm units I think we shall have accomplished the main purpose we have in mind.

I should like to thank the staff of the farm credit corporation for the hard work they have done in the last two years and I should like, also, to thank the staff of the Veterans Land Act administration who have worked in the same office and shown that men of two different organizations can work together under the same heads without too much friction. The results of the last year or so are, I think, a measure of their efforts on behalf of Canadian farmers.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we had a discussion in this house on the resolution stage of this bill. At that time we indicated to the minister that we felt that in this field he and his department had made considerable progress. We were prompted to compliment him for that. I did, however, raise one or two questions which I do not think the minister has decided to answer. I referred yesterday to the interest rate which is payable by the farm credit board to the government. I indicated that we are amending the bill so as to provide capital which amounts to another $4 million but that in effect it involves 25 times that amount, namely, $100 million.

As far as the operation of the farm credit board is concerned I do not think the minister has, in accordance with my request yesterday, provided us with information as to the rate of interest which applies to borrowings by the farm credit corporation from the government. Under the amendments which were made in 1959, I think, the farm borrower pays 5 per cent. I indicated yesterday that there was some record that the corporation had borrowed from the government under the statute at a rate as high as 5¾ per cent. The minister does not appear to have dealt with this up to the present time.

The Farm Credit Act is a successor to the farm loan act. Under the latter act we had always operated on a non-subsidy basis. According to the report of the farm credit corporation for the year ended March 31, 1960, to which I referred yesterday, there had not been disclosed, in the financial statement, a financial loss. However, I urged the minister in our discussion yesterday to give us information which is up to date, or at least up to date to March 31, 1961, with respect to the operations in the second year of the new farm credit corporation. I do not think the minister has done that. I hope that before the debate is concluded, in view of the fact that this amendment involves $100 million of additional credit, to which we do not object, the minister will indicate the current rate of interest at which the farm credit corporation is borrowing money from the dominion government, relate that to the operating expenses of the corporation and relate it also to the section in the act which refers to the necessity for providing for a reserve fund.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Being absent last evening attending a function given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in tribute to the president of the general assembly of the United Nations I lost the opportunity to say a few words on the resolution preceding this bill, so I am now taking the opportunity to speak on the second reading of the bill.

We support the principles and purposes of this bill because it represents the type of farm credit legislation which members of this group have advocated for many years in this house and numerous legislatures throughout Canada. I remember being in the provincial house in company with the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) just after the war began when we were advocating provincial legislation almost identical to this with respect to its interest rate and its terms of operation.

We are particularly interested in this type of legislation because we in this group are interested in the development and the welfare of the economic family farm, because we realize its place on the Canadian scene and its value to Canadian society.

The success of this legislation is clearly indicated by the fact that the minister found it necessary to introduce this bill to extend the capital available to the farm credit corporation. Its success is also indicated by its generous acceptance by the farmers and farm organizations. Because of that it is clearly indicated that it fills a long-time unfilled need in the credit sphere as far as agriculture is concerned. Personally I have been very interested for many years in long term low interest credit for farmers. In fact, I think my interest was first aroused about 1920 shortly after the first world war.

I have been on committees that studied the matter, and have been an officer of farm organizations and fruit growers' associations, during which time I have given this serious consideration. I, in association with other members, have urged the necessity for this type of legislation, at farmers' institute meetings, fruit growers' meetings, in the legislature of British Columbia, and in the House of Commons since I came here in 1945, on behalf of this group, as well as in the country since. Therefore, I have no hesitation in supporting this measure.

We believe that when the government introduces legislation which we consider advantageous to the Canadian people, we should say so and support it. When we disagree with government policy we criticize it just as harshly as we think necessary. So, after a long time, the government of Canada has begun to realize or accept the fact that there is a need for this type of legislation, and has done so in response to representations made by farmers' organizations in this country and by hon. members of various parties in this house over a number of years.

At the present time farm organizations and farmers generally need this type of assistance, and those who are interested in agriculture support this act and the administration. We have had a good piece of legislation in the form of this act. It is evident that it is sound because of the use that has been made of it during a very short period of time by those who have required it. Good legislation is not sufficient unless accompanied by sound administration.

Without any hesitation I wish to pay tribute to the very sound administration of this legislation by the officials of the farm credit corporation from the director to the most junior supervisor or appraiser in the field.

Why have they been able to give that good administration? I suggest first of all it is because the great majority have that "something" which is required to make this type of legislation a success. They have a feeling for agriculture, and the experience in this field which gives them the knowledge of the farmers' problems, which is required. I suggest therein lies the basis for sound judgment when it comes to the question of assisting to meet farmers' needs in respect to credit.

In addition to that, not only have they this feeling for agriculture, and experience, but the staff has had much imagination and many ideas, while at the same time they have kept their feet on the ground. This is very different from the administration of the Canadian Farm Loan Act. I am not blaming the board or personnel, but that act was administered under the Department of Finance. It is very peculiar that whenever this type of act is administered under the Department of Finance it is not as successful as it might otherwise be, because it is being administered by people who think in terms of money and interest rather than personal relationships, land development and so on. However, that situation is inevitable. The act was too restrictive in its application and it did not provide to those administering it the opportunity to exercise their imaginations, nor to put into operation their ideas, as this act does. There was too little contact with applicants after loans had been made and very little in the way of an advisory staff in partnership with the farmers in their day to day operations after they had become clients of the board. That situation has changed entirely.

Before going on, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make reference to what I thought was rather a critical note. I may be mistaken but I thought the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) was somewhat critical of the slight element of subsidy that is associated with this act. I do not know if I am correct in assuming that—

Mr. Benidickson: No, I just wanted to make it clear that there was subsidy.

Mr. Herridge: The only subsidy that would arise would be the difference in interest rates between the interest paid by the farmers at 5 per cent, and the interest paid by the corporation on its borrowings.

Mr. Benidickson: And the administrative costs.

Mr. Herridge: And of course administrative costs, but we should exclude them because we have many other government services which are non-profit making in respect of which we do not consider administrative costs. I think it would be fair to the farmer, the people, and the government if we just considered that subsidy in relation to the difference between the interest paid for the funds received by the corporation, and the interest paid on the loans. There is no doubt that there is a slight element of subsidy.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not object to that.

Mr. Herridge: I think we should realize the value of family farms in this country and the work that is being done under this act, in conjunction with a realization of the existence of subsidies being paid to other industries. For instance, we have heard about the $50 million being paid to railways and the $15 million paid to the gold mining industry—

Mr. Benidickson: And the subsidy to the coal mining industry.

Mr. Herridge: I do not intend to criticize for one moment.

Mr. Benidickson: And tariffs.

Mr. Herridge: The small element of subsidy under this legislation has not, in my opinion, gained enough in proportion, in relation to the value of the economic family farm in this country.

The personnel at staff headquarters are individuals of long experience, some with considerable experience under the Veterans' Land Act administration and some in other services. That experience is very valuable to the administration of this act.

To indicate the imagination of the progressive ideas which are put forward by the present headquarters administration of this legislation I should like to refer to the booklet entitled "Farm Credit Corporation Lending Policy". I do not intend to deal with it at length but I think anyone who reads the booklet through—I urge all hon. members to—will realize that this administration is soundly based, and I suggest that the relationship of the corporation to the individual farmer and to the public of Canada is very well dealt with in this booklet, as far as lending policies are concerned. I suggest it is worth while for members to take the time to read about this lending policy as expressed in this booklet, if they wish to get some over-all idea of the thought, imagination, ideas and soundness of this administration.

In the field of local staffs, there are persons with experience in similar work, some with the Veterans' Land Act, and some with other organizations. That experience is not only in respect to legislation but in many cases has regard to circumstances and conditions which change so much across Canada. I can foresee that in the future this legislation will be increasingly complementary to the rural rehabilitation and development act. It will be one of the several acts which will dovetail into this scheme of rural improvement.

As far as the local administration is concerned, I have noticed a big difference in the administration of this act compared with that of the Canadian farm loan board, and I have had quite a long time experience with the Canadian farm loan board. I found them a somewhat impersonal body. They seemed to deal at arm's length with the poor farmer on many occasions. They have often been more impersonal than members of parliament. I have had much closer contact with farmers. The people in the field working under this act, go into a district and discuss the farmer's problems, taking the time necessary to make a thorough assessment of the situation to obtain the confidence of the farmer and determine whether or not in his judgment the amount of loan for which he makes application is in his favour.

Another interesting aspect is this continuing co-operation with the client, as it were, the farmer who has obtained a loan, in making regular visits and working with the farmer in the drafting of a satisfactory program for his soil, for his local circumstances and in relation to his markets.

I notice also that more younger farmers are interested in this legislation, and the staff itself is coming into contact with increasing numbers of young farmers as it becomes known and the terms of the legislation become known. I have a few suggestions to make. They are not made in a critical sense whatever. I make them as a result of pretty close association with the farmers in my district, a lifetime association with a very different type of farmer from those great prairie farmers who ride on combines with a radio on the front seat and a television set on the rear.

Mr. Speaker: Pardon my interruption but there are several very audible conversations going on which make it very difficult to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Herridge: I am by no means flattered by that suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I represent the dairy farmers, the beef farmers, the small general farmers, the fruit farmers, the poultry farmers, the muskrat farmers, and so on. I want to make a few suggestions in this connection but they are not particularly critical. I realize the difficulties at the present time with respect to the administrative load that is being placed on the headquarters staff.

I do suggest to the minister that within reason every opportunity be presented to the senior staff of headquarters, the director and his close associates, to make more frequent visits to different parts of Canada, to visit the local offices and become as acquainted as they can personally with the various regions of the various provinces and the areas within the provinces under their jurisdiction. I think it would be very worth while from their point of view and from the point of view of the farmers they are aiming to serve. I think this brings the administration close to the people and everything should be done toward that end. I particularly suggest that they do not overlook the Kootenays, because there they can do business and enjoy themselves at the same time. You can actually fish, troll or fly-fish in a boat as you go along from one farm to another around these beautiful lakes. It is a combination of business and recreation.

Then I suggest that senior officials and the provincial and district officials, where the opportunity occurs under suitable circumstances, attend farmers' meetings and the meetings of other organizations. As far as the farm organization meetings are concerned, I am thinking particularly of the local farm level, the local farmers' institute, the local federations of agriculture, the local fruit growers' association, and so forth. I urge them to attend those meetings and inform them fully of the purposes of the legislation and maintain that close contact and co-operation.

This type of legislation to serve the country to the best advantage also requires co-operation from the top right down to the individual farmers and through them the farmers' organizations because even skilled administrators and ministers can learn from people in very humble circumstances who have the capacity to observe, form judgments and pass on their information to others.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons why I utter so many, or give vent to so many, wise suggestions in this house and express so many good ideas is that I am fed continually by the people I represent in Kootenay West. They furnish me with these ideas and I simply rise in my place and act as their spokesman.

Then again I suggest also that the senior officials and the district officials, particularly the senior officials, should take the opportunity to visit on a spot basis certain typical farms in each of the areas they visit so that they will get a pretty close understanding of local circumstances.

I have one further suggestion. I can see possibilities in this direction. I presume there has not been a great deal of experience with this up to date. I understand it is quite possible for forest farmers to secure a loan under proper circumstances, as any other farmer can do, from the farm credit corporation. This is a thing I am very interested in and a good number of my constituents are interested in forest farms. I think you call them woodlots in Ontario. It is an area in our country of anything from say 100 acres up to 2,000, 3,000 or 5,000 acres of timber which a man is farming and cropping. Under the legislation I understand it is possible for a person with satisfactory security and knowledge of his business to obtain a loan if he satisfies the requirements of the act. I do suggest it would be a good idea if some of the senior officials would give some thought to this type of application. It takes a person with a little bit of experience, a man who is able to cruise timber and measure it. If a farmer says, "I have 5 million feet of timber on this property," he must be able to confirm that there are 5 million feet. It takes a man who understands species, who understands accessibility of timber, the markets, the cost of building roads and the possibilities for the development of, say, a local lumber market or other forest products market, or shipping to outside markets. In view of the possible future developments in that direction, I do suggest that it is a very worth while feature of farm technology and that more consideration be given to making certain that there are some of the officials of the farm credit corporation who have a knowledge of forest farming in all its aspects.

This is all I have to say at this time. I may have a word or two to say later on but I see nothing to criticize in the legislation, nothing to criticize so far as the administration is concerned to date and I think the best way to show my appreciation to the minister at this time is to conclude at this point.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): I should like for a few minutes to add my words of support for this measure. As one who represents a district where farming is perhaps a little different from that in most areas may I say I am sure hon. members will appreciate the difficulties that are found in an area where a family farm can consist of one acre covered with glass or maybe 1,500 acres used as a ranch. It could be land used for tobacco at $1,000 an acre in value or land that could be used for pasture purposes, heavy land, worth approximately $60 an acre.

Hon. members will appreciate that in administering a measure such as the farm credit corporation legislation the administrators are faced with immense problems. Under the previous administration there was not a great deal of desire on the part of the farmers, because of the high price of land, to use the implements at hand because it was felt that the money involved did not represent a large enough sum to help them obtain the necessary loan that would make such a venture profitable. When the act was amended to make it possible for young men to borrow up to $20,000 at 5 per cent from the farm credit corporation and to obtain additional funds for machinery and livestock under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, it was quite apparent that the young farmers in the riding of Kent felt that they at last had the tools necessary to help them obtain a farm loan.

One of the basic problems that faced these young, progressive, scientific farmers when they began to take advantage of these loans was the time lag. A great deal of time elapsed from the time they applied for a loan until it was processed and the money was actually placed at their disposal. There was considerable concern over this time lag and a desire to know where to place the blame. I too was very interested because of the many representations made to me and so I took the opportunity of going through the district to try to ascertain where the blame lay. Much to my amazement and to the amazement of other people concerned I found that the main reason for the delay was the tremendous number of applications being placed in the office by farmers wishing to take advantage of this legislation. It was absolutely impossible for the staff then available to process so many applications more rapidly. Let me assure you that these people were highly experienced and competent because of their association with the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. They simply had too many loans to process in too short a time.

However, when the thing began to roll the time lag became shorter and shorter, and I am very happy to report now that there are very few instances indeed where the young man is held up to any extent on this account. One of the most amazing things that occurred when some of these young men made applications for loans was that they did not always get the amount for which they applied. Any man who has dealings with a bank will very often find that he does not get what he asks for; but in connection with these applications these people in some instances did not obtain what they asked for but rather much more than the amount for which they applied.

I should like to refer to one young farmer with whom I am acquainted. He made application for a loan of $9,000. The men who administer the act are very competent farm managers themselves. They were able to point out to this young farmer that he could put his farm in a much more stable position, thus making it possible for him to repay the loan much sooner, give his farm a better rating and provide his family with a better living if he would borrow more money than the amount for which he had applied. This farmer who had applied for a loan of $9,000 was actually granted a loan of $20,000 by the farm credit corporation, and today he is one of the most progressive young men in the area.

I should like to lend my support to this measure for one basic reason. For too long we have seen the best and most energetic young men leaving the farms and going to the cities to take positions in industry simply because they lacked the necessary funds to purchase their fathers' farms. These fathers had worked through the years to pay off their farms and in many instances there were still small mortgages left. These young men were unable to take over their fathers' farms and so they went into industry and the farms passed into the hands of strangers.

I am very happy to report that in my district the situation seems to have reversed. The young men feel that at last here is an opportunity to borrow a large amount of money at a reasonable rate of interest over a suitable period of time. Thus they are given a reasonable opportunity to pay back the loan with honour, and thanks to the farm credit corporation legislation they feel they can obtain the necessary amount to buy the family farm which means so much to them, land which they are accustomed to work and on which they can do the best job. I think we have in my riding one of the finest examples in Canada today of young men at last being able to remain on the family farm because they feel that it will carry them and their families into the future with the same degree of security and satisfaction that was experienced by their parents.

At last there is a source of credit that is of value to the young men in my area and enables them to attain a business of their own. They have the desire and the knowledge and now they have the funds. This measure makes it possible for them to achieve success in life.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, last night and again tonight the minister gave us a detailed summary of the operation of the Farm Credit Act which is the old farm loans act under a new name, and his summary was very useful indeed. However, I wish to submit a few suggestions which, if taken into consideration and acted upon, will help not only the farmers of my constituency but farmers on small holdings everywhere.

The actual effect of this legislation is to increase the amount available for lending from $200 million to $300 million. I am heartily in favour of the principle of the bill and therefore I am not going to criticize the principle but rather some aspects of the administration of the legislation. As I realize that the bill under discussion would mean the enactment of legislation which could be of assistance to the agricultural potential of the district of Thunder Bay in which my constituency is located, I desire to avail myself of the opportunity to participate briefly in the discussion in the hope that I may be able to impress upon the minister the importance of doing something more than is being done at present by the senior levels of government to bring the agricultural lands of the district, which, as everyone knows, are not a prairie type of soil, into productive holdings from which our farmers can make a decent living.

I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the district is not known as a prosperous agricultural area. It has within its confines a few very fine, well developed and productive farms. The great majority, however, are comparatively small holdings of anywhere from 100 to 300 acres.

One of the commendable aspects of this bill is to provide assistance to those on the land who would otherwise be unable to obtain loans in the ordinary way. This is a welcome measure, especially for those who will be able to qualify; but the farmers of my district have had very little success in obtaining loans to improve their farms in the past.

I have already indicated that the average farmer in my constituency cultivates a comparatively small parcel of land. The majority are of the dairy and truck garden variety. We have, however, large tracts of empty barren areas that could profitably be put to farm use if the prospective farmer had the means of acquiring stock and machinery.

From its inception the farm loan act the name of which was changed to the Farm Credit Act has provided the means for financing farm equipment to western farmers. But it has not been too prone to do so for the poor farmers of the east, notably those in my constituency, with the result that they have had to resort to finance companies for their purchases of machinery, paying a rate of interest considerably higher than they would have had to pay had they been able to borrow from the banks through the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

During the past decade we have witnessed a trend of movement from the rural to the urban centres, brought about by more attractive living conditions, which in no small measure, have been due to gainful employment which up to two or three years ago it was rather easy to obtain. Conditions are now somewhat reversed in many cases and therefore I believe that what we should be concerned with at present is stimulating an interest in a return to the land movement. That is something which, in my opinion, we must do sooner or later.

Speaking on the supply motion on agriculture in 1960, as reported at page 3427 of Hansard I made the following statement:

> I have said previously and I say again that unless a farmer in our district has sufficient collateral to show it is next to impossible for him to secure a loan to enable him to develop efficiently and economically the agricultural potential of his holding.

The situation as described is just as true today as it was a year ago. I have been pleading with the government for easier credits for our farmers ever since my election to parliament in 1958, and I shall continue to do so until the tillers of the soil of my constituency receive the same consideration as do their more fortunate counterparts in the prairie provinces and in the lush eastern parts of Ontario. Social workers, clergymen and others agree that the farm and village are the ideal setting for family life, the best of all places in which to bring up a family. But, so long as a lack of opportunity for financial improvement exists, and so long as inability to borrow money from lending institutions continues, individual poverty and lack of community resources will drive farming people to the urban areas where, instead of milk and honey, only crowded conditions and often misery prevail.

Our efforts should be directed toward building a happy rural Canada instead of discouraging people from living on the farm, thus leading them to the misery of unemployment in the cities.

[Mr. Badanai.]

As a result of neglect on the part of both senior levels of government, both federal and provincial, during the past 20 years, the number of farmers in the Thunder Bay district decreased from approximately 2,500 to about half that number or 1,250, and a considerable portion of the land which they farmed is now deserted and looks as though a hurricane had passed through it leaving behind nothing but buildings which look like derelicts.

I think that the role in the economy of the farmer who operates a mixed holding of a few hundred acres or less has been overlooked by the government. Not sufficient emphasis has been forthcoming from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) in the way of promotion, especially in undeveloped areas such as the lakehead district which has a population of 125,000, of which only 5.3 per cent are farmers, whereas for the province of Ontario the percentage of farmers to the total population is about 12½ per cent.

The advent of the seaway, now in its third year of operation, has increased the demand for fresh farm produce. Unlimited supply of livestock feed is available at lakehead terminals. The disadvantage appears to be small amounts of crop land. There are plenty of good prospective farmers as well as those who are now on the land who would wish to enlarge and improve their holdings in order to get the maximum return from their land, and the only thing that stops them is lack of capital. If this increase in the capital of the farm credit corporation is really going to be made available to needy farmers and prospective farmers, then I would certainly congratulate the minister on his too little but, I hope, not too late measure to rescue the type of farmer for whom I am speaking.

I am a staunch advocate of a liberal credit policy designed to encourage ownership and operation of farms, large and small, in every part of Canada. Among the small farmers of northwestern Ontario is the mixed farmer who keeps cows, grows vegetables and has a woodlot from which he derives the biggest part of his income by selling the pulpwood to the local pulp and paper companies. These farmers should be assisted in setting up projects of reforestation. I express the hope that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming) will take under advisement the establishment of a policy to encourage reforestation on lands owned by these small woodlot farmers. This is the type of farmer that predominates in the agricultural areas of northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have been following the hon. member with some misgiving and wondering what he is saying has to do with the bill in question. Actually, we are dealing with the Farm Credit Act as it stands. The question or the principle before the house is whether to increase the capital of that act. I concede that anything that comes under the act as it stands is in order. However, the hon. member is talking about farm woodlots and reforestation and a great many agricultural problems that surely have nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. Badanai: I am merely attempting to show that this legislation could help the farmers by helping them through a reforestation policy within their woodlots. I am speaking about small farmers who do mixed farming and who operate woodlots within their own holdings. That is the type of farmer about whom I am speaking and to whom this legislation will be helpful if the money is available to them and approved by the proper authority.

The largest group of small farmers are those engaged in the production of whole milk which is sold to city dairies. During the past two or three years the market for whole milk has declined because there is a lack of facilities for the production of cheese and powdered milk, which would absorb the portion not used by the lakehead milk distributors.

This is another way in which we could help these farmers to create for themselves an avenue which would be of assistance to them financially. It is here that a substantial government loan could assist in the establishment, for example, of a cheese factory. A few years ago a few farmers did band together and established a small plant—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are several members who wish to speak on this bill and I think I would not be doing my duty if I allowed the hon. member to discuss a great many unrelated matters. There is nothing in this bill relating to the establishment of a cheese factory.

Mr. Badanai: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to bring to the attention of the house ways in which I believe this legislation could help our farmers. It may be of interest to hon. members to know that in order to establish a 5 cans of milk quota an investment of from $30,000 to $40,000 is required. This would gross to the farmer the princely sum of only $20 per day. As everyone knows, the farmer must of necessity milk his cows 12 hours apart, seven days a week, 52 weeks a year, notwithstanding the mechanization which has taken place in recent years.

One of the greatest problems of the farmer today is finding the money for the operation of his farm in the face of heavy payments on his capital expenditure for the mechanization of his operation, which mechanization has been forced upon him due to the difficulty of securing part-time farm help.

Farm loans have taken the place of the hired man. The farmer now hires money instead of men to carry on his farm operations. Of course, if he cannot borrow money his enterprise will suffer. It is for this reason the government has realized that more money is needed, and I am all for it.

I would feel much happier, of course, if those responsible for the approval of these loans took into consideration all factors, not least of which is the essential need of the individual applicant, regardless of geography. In the northern Ontario area there are a number of French speaking farmers, which would justify the appointment of a bilingual inspector of farm holdings whose job it is to approve loan applications. The point is that applications are often turned down because of a lack of understanding of the farmer's problems and because there is not a proper appreciation of the relative value of farms in these rugged parts of Ontario.

Local banks, while sympathetic, will loan money under the farm loan act. However, they will only loan amounts which are not necessarily based on needs, but rather on the bank's evaluation of the farmer as a financial risk. It seems to me that the Minister of Agriculture should initiate a study of all the potentials of agriculture in every part of Canada, instead of confining most of his attention to the problems of the big western farmers. The farm credit corporation should be able to recommend applications for loans to any farmer or farm organization for the establishment of facilities which would help not only farmers but the economy of the area in which these facilities will be located.

Loans are required to assist farmers to acquire registered livestock. If they had the money, they would be in a position to buy a better class of cattle. This is just as important in agriculture as it is for a factory to have better machinery with which to improve its products. According to the annual report in connection with the Farm Improvement Loans Act for the year 1960, in the 15 years since the act was introduced, from 1945 to 1960, out of a total of $1,013,782,000 borrowed under the act there remains outstanding $177 million, represented by 170 loans. Practically all the money borrowed from 1945 to 1956 has been repaid. This is the point I wish to bring out. On the basis of this record no one can deny the wisdom of the government of the day in enacting this legislation, the results of which have been an outstanding success.

The submission of the national farmers' union made to the government on February 15, 1961, rejected the widely held opinion that technology and efficiency demand the removal of the majority of farm families from the land. The brief included these words:

> We do not subscribe to the theory that the activities and institutions of men are determined solely by technology and economics regardless of human and social values, but hold that technological developments can and must be adjusted to serve the human, social and economic needs of men.
> We believe that the family farm is the most efficient unit in terms not only of production, but also in terms of soil conservation and human and social values. We therefore believe that the preservation of the family farm is of importance to farm families as well as to the nation as a whole.

I for one certainly subscribe to these sentiments, which are opposed to the farm people of Canada becoming "factory in the field" instead of a happy family farm. Canada's best interests will be served in the end by a large number of mixed farms rather than by a few specialized farm units.

It seems to me that the flight from the farm to the city which has been going on over the past several years is a sad trend. This decline in our farm population and in the relative importance of agriculture to the national economy is to be regretted. Certainly it has its sad side, particularly for those whose roots are deep in the land.

Our farm population may continue to shrink. The farmer is unlikely to become extinct, however, because he has an important role to play in the Canadian economy for a long time to come; just as long, in fact, as human beings need to eat.

With modern aids life on the farm is undoubtedly easier than it has ever been. The advent of the automobile, telephone, radio, television, the differences between rural and urban living have been narrowed to the point that a "back to the land" campaign would not be a bad idea. I commend this to the minister. If this bill will do anything to encourage people to stay on the farm and encourage some to settle on the land, then I say it will have accomplished a great deal for Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if the sentiments expressed by the last speaker truly represent the views of the official opposition, I am very happy to learn that the Liberal party has at long last discovered the value and virtues of the family farmer.

In considering whether or not support should be given to legislation of this kind which, in effect, will have the result of increasing by $100 million the amount of money available for lending under this legislation, I think one is driven to consider what were the simple principles which encouraged the government to pass the legislation in the first place. In order to recapitulate these I can do no better than read briefly from a statement made by Mr. George Owen, chief of the loans division of the corporation to the banker's summer school in Guelph. I am paraphrasing and summarizing the statement but I think it is constructive and I should like to put a few paragraphs on the record. These are simple principles but there is a tendency for us to stray away from them. When legislation has been passed we are inclined to look only at the means of applying the legislation and sometimes we forget the principles which led to its introduction. I am quoting now:

> The farmer, looking for ways and means of increasing his net income, has little hope of increasing prices for his product. There seems to be even less possibility that the cost of the items he must buy, in order to produce, will be less. His only real hope appears to lie in producing a greater volume of high-quality, readily-marketable product, thus spreading overhead costs over a larger number of units, and in careful planning and organization to reduce operating costs.
> Higher wages in industry have made it almost impossible to hire farm labour at a price the farmer can afford, and a shortage of labour in the production season adds to the risk of depending on hired labour. Farm labour which could be paid for by the day, week or month has, therefore, been largely replaced by machinery, which must be paid for in cash or with credit.
> Fortunately, with modern machinery and labour-saving methods, farmers may now handle much larger units. The cost of setting up a minimum economic family farm unit has thus greatly increased over the years. What is equally important is the fact that the capital structure of the individual farm has changed, with a higher percentage of total assets being represented by livestock, equipment and working capital, and a lesser percentage by real property, which has been the traditional security for long term credit. As a result, the credit arrangements which could be made under the former Canadian Farm Loan Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act, either separately or together, although fairly adequate for the well-established farmer, became entirely inadequate to meet the needs of the capable farmer on a farm of limited size who wishes to expand his unit, or of a young and capable farmer desirous of setting up an economic farm unit.

I think it was for the purpose which those last few sentences have defined that this legislation was passed. It has proved a most valuable asset to the farmers, as I know from my personal knowledge, and for this reason I have no hesitation at all in adding my support to this particular bill.

Dealing with the measure from a narrower angle, let me say that I have made it my business as I go home to talk to the people who have made applications, who have been granted loans or whose applications are being processed. I would estimate that I have seen or visited or written letters to approximately 25 per cent of those farmers in my constituency who have been in contact with the officials of the farm credit corporation with respect to this legislation and there is not the slightest doubt that the benefits which have been brought to these farmers are invaluable. As I say, I am speaking from my own experience. I am not going to deal with this subject statistically because I do not think dealing with it on a statistical basis would lend colour to our reasons for supporting this legislation. These are living people we are dealing with, working farmers, many of whom I have met.

In my area particularly under the old administration—I do not place any particular blame upon them, but it did happen—some of the officials of the farm loans board responsible for policy completely refused to acknowledge that farmers could be successful if they carried on their operations some miles from rail head. In what is called the Battle river district, some 60 miles north of the Grimshaw area through which the new railway will go, a splendid farming community has been built up, but only within the last two or three years has it been possible for the people of that district to have the benefit of this farm credit legislation made available to them. These benefits will, I hope, in due course be extended even further up into the Fort Vermilion area between 200 and 250 miles from the railroad.

Another aspect of this legislation I should like to praise is the time spent by the officials in preliminary assessment and appraisal. In the old days people would make applications for loans and send in their forms. Then there would usually be an attempt to cut down the amount of the loan to some extent without too much regard for the purpose for which the loan has been made. I think that was entirely wrong. It is a fault which has certainly been cured by the present legislation and the machinery for administering it. I know from my experience that the officials spend a great deal of time counselling and assisting the farmers and making recommendations concerning the type of loan they should have, the amount they should ask for and the purpose for which it should be granted, not in an arbitrary or authoritarian way but as helpers and advisers. I think this has paid off and that it will continue to pay off in the future.

My colleague who spoke before me mentioned the flexibility of the machinery of legislation and the willingness of the officials, should the circumstances justify it, to increase the amount of a loan which had been made in order to meet the exigencies of a particular situation; their willingness to take into account the human factor. I can recall last summer receiving a telephone call and, later, a visit from a middle aged farmer who had made an application for a loan which had been rejected. He did not come to me in order to complain, but he wanted to know whether anything further could be done. This was obviously a borderline case and in certain conditions he might well have been eligible. From what I knew of him I was satisfied that he was a suitable person to receive a loan. I telephoned the head office and within 24 hours another official came out, there was a reappraisal of the land in the light of certain conditions which I knew, and, as a result, in less than three days this application had been accepted. This is an illustration that knowledge of the human beings concerned in these transactions can, in itself, be enough to justify placing an application in a category where it can be accepted.

Another thing which appeals to me in connection with this legislation and its administration is the provision made for decentralization. I mentioned this before in connection with the A.R.D.A. bill which the Minister of Agriculture brought in. Undoubtedly it is necessary for governments to take unto themselves a large degree of power and authority. They have to do so in the complex world in which we live. But it is my conviction that wherever possible the use of such power should be decentralized and the right to make decisions should be left as far as possible with the officials in the field who are calculated to have a more precise knowledge of what the real facts are. All too often, by the time applications had been processed by a system of intellectual osmosis from the perimeter to Ottawa and back again weeks had elapsed, the tenor of the application had been destroyed and its urgency entirely dissipated. I know for a fact that a large amount of control and authority is left with the officials who are in the field. So far in my experience, they have made good and adequate use of it. That is another reason which I advance for supporting the legislation.

I could mention a number of cases, perhaps 25 per cent or 30 per cent in my constituency, where this program has been effective, but I shall not take up the time of this house to do so.

I know that while there are no figures or information available as to the exact aomunt of loans which have been made, they are quite substantial. I am satisfied for the reasons I have advanced that many of the people who were entitled to loans found that their rights to a loan have been restricted by the regulations of the old farm loan board, which considered the applications from this area, and I should think that because of this, under the new act we have probably had as large a number of applications from that area as from any other constituency in Canada, and I think that will continue for some time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but put on the record my feeling that the family farm, with the individual farmer, is probably one of the important remaining strongholds of the principles of human freedom, enterprise and liberty. I am not suggesting that it is the only stronghold, but the man and family who have to contend with nature with their own resources, represent an institution which, in our struggle with the other half of the world, we must strengthen and perpetuate.

I read just the other day in a news item that a large quantity of land in Russia has been turned over to collective farming, where because of the fact that there had not been that care and regard which the individual farmer has for his own land, machinery and stock, that land, which probably should never have been put under the plough, had seriously deteriorated. As a result, the estimates of the U.S.S.R., in anticipation of their food requirements, were much higher than could be produced, and they were sadly disappointed. I suggest that illustrates the absolute necessity for strengthening and maintaining, as an underpinning of our economy and way of life, the family farm of our country, because from there will be fed those qualities of industry, initiative and enterprise which have injected into the bloodstream of the nation those things which will perpetually keep us strong and maintain us in our present economy.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, having been in this house for many years I can assure hon. members that because this farm loan corporation comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) and because I am his parliamentary secretary, I feel it my duty to say a few words to strengthen his hand.

This is the best farm loan corporation that has ever existed in the Dominion of Canada during my lifetime. It has been brought forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the leader of this government, to assist farmers to assist themselves. We are now in a position where any farmer who has the qualifications can secure this type of loan without any difficulty.

I have been farming all my life and have paid for a farm the hard way, by borrowing the money from the bank at too high a rate of interest. I suggest 5 per cent interest is the highest rate that farmers can afford to pay, if thew are to be able to pay back the loan. The farmers must certainly pay back the loans because when they borrow from the farm loan corporation it is made abundantly clear to them that unless they prove that they are able to pay back the loan with interest within a certain number of years the loans will be refused.

We have the advantage now that many farmers who previously were unable to obtain a loan find they can do so through the farm loan corporation at 5 per cent interest, and thereby are able to increase their ability to pay back the loan.

I come from a part of the country which is purely agricultural. The farmers of that area have borrowed over $1 million from this corporation since its inception. Many townships have borrowed much more than others, but in my county farmers have been able to borrow well over a million dollars. In the province of Ontario loans to the extent of $23,011,870 have been made.

I should like to draw to the attention of this house some figures which I obtained from the latest full report of the farm credit corporation, for the years 1959-60. I intend to give the figures for a period of five years, from 1955 to 1960.

The number of loans approved in 1955-56 was 2,057; in 1956-57, 2,921; 1957-58, 3,702; 1958-59, 4,805 and in 1959-60, 5,339. The difference in the number of loans during that five year period is 3,282.

Mr. Boulanger: What does it mean?

Mr. Ricard: Spell it out for him.

Mr. Cardiff: The farmers have been able to obtain that many more loans in 1960 than they were able to obtain in 1955. That is exactly what it means.

The average amount of the loans in 1955 was $4,040 while the average of the loans in 1960 is $7,498, which is almost double. The difference is $3,458. The total amount of approved loans in 1955 was $8,309,650, while the total amount in 1960 was $40,031,250, the difference being $31,721,600.

The farmers are not receiving anything for nothing because they must pay 5 per cent interest. This is not a hand-out in any way to the farmer.

I should like to explain how farm loans can be used. First, they can be used to acquire farmland and to erect or modernize farm buildings. Second, they can be used to purchase basic herd livestock and necessary farm equipment. Third, they can be used to provide lime, fertilizer and seed to establish permanent plantings. Fourth, they can be used to discharge liabilities, or for any purpose which the corporation considers necessary for the organization and operation of an economic family farm unit.

I should like now to give a few more figures by placing the following quotation on the record:

On March 31, 1960, there were outstanding 28,453 first mortgage loans totalling $119,978,763, and 505 second mortgage loans totalling $173,108. In addition, the corporation held 91 sale agreements valued at $83,256 and 12 parcels of real estate in which the corporation's investment is $31,346 carried at a book value of $21,373. The following table shows the number of mortgage loans outstanding and the corporation's investment in them in each of the last five years, including accrued interest to March 31 each year.

Fiscal Year	Number of Loans	Investment
1955/56	18,931	$ 44,958,136
1956/57	20,372	53,748,364
1957/58	22,494	68,490,523
1959/60	28,453	120,151,871

At the end of the fiscal year 90.9 per cent of all first mortgage loan accounts were in good standing, as compared with 91.4 per cent on March 31, 1959. A total of $7,903,633 of principal was repaid during the year, of which 67.4 per cent was received in payment of principal not yet due. Interest due during the year amounted to $4,443,338, of which $4,111,165, or 92.5 per cent had been paid by the end of the year.

Types of Mortgage Loan

The Farm Credit Act provides two types of long term mortgage loans to bona fide and competent farmers, who are in actual need of assistance to set up economic farm units, the income from which is largely derived from crops grown on such units, and marketed either directly or through livestock. The first, under part II of the act, is an extension of the assistance formerly available from the Canadian farm loan board. It is based on the security of farm land and may be made to persons whose principal occupation is farming. The maximum loans may not exceed 75 per cent (formerly 65 per cent) of the value of the farm land taken as security or $20,000 (formerly $15,000), whichever is the lesser. These loans are repayable by equal annual or semi-annual instalments of combined principal and interest over an appropriate period not to exceed 30 years.

The second, under part III of the act, is designed to assist young farmers who have attained the age of 21 years and have not attained the age of 45 years, and who have at least five years' farming experience, to become established on economic farm units. Such loans are based primarily on first mortgage security of farm lands, but up to 40 per cent of the required security may be represented by livestock and farm equipment. The maximum loan may not exceed 75 per cent of the value of the farm land and chattels taken as security or $27,500, whichever is the lesser. That portion of the loan secured by farm land is repayable over a period not to exceed 30 years, and that portion (if any) which is based on chattel security must be repaid within the first 10 years. Part III loans are further secured by insurance on the life of the borrower. Another new and significant feature of these loans is the provision of supervision by the corporation of the borrower's farming operations until such time as the loan has been reduced to 65 per cent of the appraised value of the farm land held as security.

I should like to put on the record the cost of making and administering loans:

As of March 31, 1960, the average interest being paid on all money on loan to the corporation was 4.2 per cent. However, since the reserve, amounting to $3,748,862, and the capital of the corporation, amounting to $5 million, are available for loaning without interest cost to the corporation, the average interest cost of all money on loan to borrowers at that date was 3.9 per cent.

If, as expected, the corporation is obliged to borrow $50 million in the fiscal year 1960-61, and assuming that the interest rate on new money is that now prevailing, the average interest rate on the total money available for loaning purposes will be approximately 4.45 per cent as of March 31, 1961. This would leave a margin between the average cost of money to the corporation and the interest charged to its borrowers of only 0.55 per cent as compared with an average annual operating cost over the past five years of 1.1 per cent.

The corporation will derive additional revenue from the increased appraisal fees payable on new applications, but this will be more than offset by the cost of the extra staff required to make and review appraisals, which is made necessary by the much greater risks inherent in the provisions of the new legislation, and to supply a pre-loan counselling and loan service to farmers in their own communities. Additional costs will also be involved in bringing salaries in line with those being paid for similar work within the civil service.

I do not wish to read any more. I have had a lot of experience with farm loans and with the Veterans' Land Act from 1940 to 1945 when soldiers overseas came back to be re-established. I have had a lot of experience with the farm loan board and now this act has come into being. I can assure the house that if loans under this act increase in the next three years, as they have in the past years, they will more than double in a very short time. I would say that in a year the number of loans will be double what they are now. This proves that the farmers themselves have accepted this act and are taking advantage of it.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate. I have only two remarks to make following the speech just delivered by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cardiff). He said that the number of loans increased from 2,025 in 1955-56 to 5,339 in 1959-60.

I agree with him that that legislation has been particularly beneficial to the farmers of western Canada, because in eastern Canada the number of loans did not increase so much owing to the fact that the Quebec farm loans legislation may be better suited to our farmers. However, I submit that if there is such a large difference between the number of loans in 1955-56 and 1959-60 it is because the farmers were in an impossible situation, and that is why the number of loans more than doubled.

Furthermore, if the farmers' situation does not change the number of loans will increase further and it will not be any longer $27,500 which will be the limit of loans allowed to farmers, because they will need $50,000, and that, within a few years, if their net income does not increase.

Mr. Pigeon: Especially after a change of government in Quebec.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, since reference is being made to the Quebec provincial farm loan, I shall be pleased to talk about it, because if today the federal farm loan is of no benefit to the farmers of the province of Quebec, it is because in my province loans are made today on the basis of up to 80 per cent of the value of the farm and even 90 per cent in the case of young farmers of 21 to 45 years old. It is an improvement which has just been introduced by the government of the province of Quebec, and I would wish the federal government did as much.

In any event, I would suggest to the minister that the cost of assessment be reduced. Today, a farmer has to pay 2 per cent of the amount requested, or $50, whichever is the lesser. In the province of Quebec, the cost is only $5, and when the loan is refused, the $5 is refunded; however, under the federal legislation, a farmer has to pay $50, and if the loan is refused, it is his loss.

In view of the fact that the net income of the Canadian farm loan corporation was $240,000 last year, I think we might reduce the assessment cost on farm loans.

There would be much more to be said, but I shall end my remarks with this recommendation, to which I hope the minister will give serious consideration.

Mr. Martineau: Will the hon. member allow me a question? As I understood him, he stated that we would soon have to raise the amount of the loans from $27,500 to $50,000. If farming conditions are as bad as my colleague claims they are, and if farm incomes keep dropping, could the hon. member explain how the farmers will be able to repay the $50,000 loans he has just suggested?

Mr. Boulanger: Farmers will do then what they are doing today; they will eat up their capital from year to year, and when they have reached the end of their resources, they will borrow as they do today.

Some farmers borrowed $10,000; they used part of their capital in order to stay on their farm and now they have to borrow $25,000.

That is why I say that in a few years from now, they will need $50,000.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska will allow, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. Boulanger: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: Could the hon. member tell me what he thinks of the following quotation from Hansard of July 13, 1959, the day on which the government amended the Canadian Farm Loan Act. This is what he said then:

> I must congratulate him and thank him for that, on behalf of the farmers.

By those words, the hon. member commended the Minister of Agriculture and, at the same time, the government.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I was glad at that time to commend the government for the amendments it made to the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

I remember that we introduced then two amendments to the act and that, by their vote, the government members rejected them. Yet, those amendments favoured the farmers in general.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

(Text):

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, the Farm Credit Act is very popular in British Columbia. Some 355 applications have been received and according to the latest figures there are 25 now pending. To date about 16 per cent of the applications have been rejected. The total amount of loans in British Columbia is $3,469,150 for some 254 loans, or an average of about $13,700 per loan. I believe that Fraser Valley tops the list in the province for the number of loans made with the Okanagan Boundary district coming second.

As Fraser Valley is the centre of a large dairy industry, it is an area where farm loans are often required. The large co-operative Fraser Valley milk producers' association does big business in this area amounting to some $27 million a year. High-class cattle are bred here and although sales there do not average as high as the figure of $1,790, which was reached in Ontario recently at the national sale, the cattle that are bred do furnish considerable revenue along with the revenue from milk production.

I had one rejection of a loan brought to my attention before I came here last fall. A young man had received a farm of 225 acres with excellent soil because of the death of his mother and he wanted to borrow $20,000 on the farm. There were no mortgages on the farm at the time and I was rather amazed when he telephoned me one day and said that his loan application had been refused. I discussed the matter with the supervisor and he informed me that he considered that this man was trying to run an uneconomic operation. There were two hired men on the farm in addition to the owner and they were milking 30 cows. It is a poor man these days who cannot milk 30 cows himself, let alone having three men doing the job. This application was turned down but the young man then borrowed the money privately elsewhere.

In discussing the Farm Credit Act I think we should consider both the pros and cons, and if I am a little critical I hope the minister will forgive me. It may be because of the hot, sultry weather we are having but I do feel somewhat critical tonight about certain features of the act. I believe the chief criticism of the act in British Columbia is the difficulty of getting a loan on a small acreage, say 10 acres. Holdings of that size may be operated as poultry, berry, vegetable, flower, seed or even holly farms. A poultryman does not require heavy, fertile soil. In fact, for drainage purposes often poorer soil is better than rich soil. On the other hand, a berry crop requires a good soil. These are opposite situations but it shows the difference that can be found in 10-acre farms. It is amazing how much a revenue can be derived from 10 acres under certain circumstances.

I believe that at the commencement of the operation of the act the idea was that a poultryman should produce on the property half the feed that he uses. Hence he needed more than just a small acreage and this was one of the reasons why applications were turned down. This is an erroneous idea. Grain may be purchased in Fraser valley and in fact in most of British Columbia much more cheaply than it can be grown, especially on small farms and crop failures could be common especially in wet weather. This is a very poor idea but if my information is correct, at the present time I believe this clause has now been more or less eliminated and it is up to the supervisor as to whether he thinks there is a prospect of this particular farmer, whether he is a poultryman, a dairyman, or a fruit grower, can make a success of the venture.

The small dairy farmer is a different proposition. So, as I say, anything that has a reasonable chance of success is likely to be passed by the supervisor. A loan on a farm that is not operating successfully should be turned down anyway. Where farmers cannot succeed, it is often necessary to move or at least for the sons to seek employment elsewhere.

This is where vocational training schools fit into the picture of the farm loan board. The vocational training school project has gradually caught fire. I note that Ontario is planning an $8 million building program to be completed during the next year and a half. This will accommodate many students from farms as well as other places and even the actual labour of building will, it is stated, provide employment for about 20,000 workers for 18 months. In a local paper from British Columbia recently I noted a report stating that the minister of education has planned to spend $10 million on enlarging vocational schools in agricultural areas in order to look after certain instruction to young farmers and farmers' daughters. Some farms in British Columbia are well adapted for recreation centres around a lake or for motels or camp sites, et cetera. A dude ranch might be more profitable than is more standard farming. This whole system is suitable for arranging just such things as these. All these features should be investigated by the owner in order to see whether increased revenue, some of it easy money, could not be picked up. If failure is sure on any farm, no loan should be given.

Another criticism in Fraser valley and the coast area occurred when the provincial head office was moved from New Westminster to Kelowna. It was moved without notice and to the minds of many, for very little reason. It was asserted that it was nearer the centre of British Columbia. This is incorrect because Vanderhoof is the centre of the province. It was asserted that there were more loans in this area. I believe this statement was incorrect. It was asserted that it was nearer the farming area. May I say that Fraser Valley produces a great deal of farm revenue. I am sure there is agreement on that matter. It was asserted that it was easier of access. This assertion I again contend is false. If you wanted to fly to Kelowna from here, you would go to Vancouver and fly back—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it seems to me that discussing the administration of the act, especially in the respect in which he is now doing it, namely as to the place in British Columbia where the manager of the farm credit board should be located, would have nothing to do with the principle of the bill before the house which has only one purpose, namely to increase from $8 million to $12 million the money paid to the corporation for the capital of the corporation. Although some phases of the administration of the act may have some relevancy to the purpose of the act, certainly the subject matter with which the hon. member is now dealing would have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Hicks: I should like to finish up by pointing out this with respect to Kamloops—and this is what I was getting at. It would be easier to carry on in a place where there is a land registry office than it is where the office is now located. Let me conclude with this statement. I feel that the Farm Credit Act is good. Its growth is excellent, and from what I can learn it is generally acceptable.

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, last night when we listened to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) speak and again tonight I think we realized that he gave a rather concise picture of the operation of the farm credit corporation and of the need to increase the authorized capital of the corporation itself. Those of us who represent farm constituencies realize at first hand the need for this increase in capital because of the great demand for the service which the corporation is rendering. In an area such as that which I represent, where the assessment ranges from $500 a quarter section to $5,000, you can well realize the difficulty in the operation, and the assessment and the appraisal of the applications which come in. However, I have been greatly impressed by the enthusiasm not only of the staff and the officials of the farm credit corporation but by the responsibility which the applicants feel towards the officials of the farm credit corporation. It makes a person realize that the staff and the officials who are administering the act and working for the corporation really believe in them wholeheartedly. They impress upon the applicants the possibilities which are theirs within the scope of the act and the great way in which the farmers can avail themselves of the various opportunities.

When we look at the figures very briefly for the last three years, Mr. Speaker, we can realize why this authorization is required. In 1958, when the farm loan board was in effect, the loans made that year amounted to $30 million. In the following year, when the farm loan board was operated and the farm credit corporation took over after October 5, the loans rose to $40 million. In this last year for which we have records the loans are up to $60 million.

There has been very little increase in the staff during those three years. It is fairly obvious that the services which are rendered by the staff of the farm credit corporation are really outstanding. I refer primarily to the pre-loan counselling which is given by the farm credit corporation advisers. These officials are devoted servants. They are intelligent and they certainly have dedication to the work which they are doing. As I say, they impress the farmers very greatly and they are able to interpret the provisions of the act in a most admirable manner. The farmers who benefit by the clauses of the act realize that here is something which can improve their position. They are now able to get adequate credit which for many years had been denied them. They are aware that under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture we have a corporation which is serving a crying need that had been denied for a long time.

Mr. G. R. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I see the evening is wearing on and in rising at this time it is not my purpose to delay the second reading of this bill. However, I do have some brief comments to make on farm credit legislation.

I think that before looking at Canada's new farm credit legislation we might look at the farm credit situation as it existed prior to the introduction of these measures, and at some of the reasons why legislative changes appeared necessary if agriculture was to be given a chance to take advantage of the new technologies and methods which have been found so effective in reducing agricultural costs.

The amount of capital required to set up a minimum economic family farm unit having more than doubled since the last war, the credit arrangements which could be made under the Canadian farm loan act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act, either separately or together, although fairly adequate for the well established farmer were entirely inadequate to meet the needs of the young and capable farmer desirous of setting up an economic family farm unit unless, of course, he was fortunate enough to possess at least 50 per cent of the required capital or a minimum of $15,000.

To start out with something less than an economic family farm unit meant higher production costs in the beginning, and consequently very little by way of profit with which to expand. The struggle toward such a unit had become so slow that only a fortunate few ever reached it in time to fully exploit its advantages and, because of its cost, it was a difficult unit to dispose of in its entirety or even to transfer from one generation to another without the intervention of very substantial credit. The result has been that the transition to the family farm unit of economic size capable of using modern methods and of producing a standard, readily marketable product at a minimum cost has, in most parts of this country, been extremely slow.

There seemed to be good reason to believe that the problems associated with low farm income and with surplus disposal were closely linked with relatively high production costs, and that these excess costs were largely due to the fact that by far the greater number of Canadian farms were still a long way from being economic units by present day standards. It also seemed evident that lack of capital was making it difficult for farmers in the more adaptable areas to switch production from straight grain farming and in so doing help bring production more in line with future market requirements as estimated by the Gordon commission on Canada's economic future.

With our rangeland potential almost fully exploited, the predicted large increase in the demand for beef would have to be met in our more adaptable cultivated areas, both east and west, through switching to grassland farming and, incidentally, putting more of our good land into effective preservation against the day when every available acre may have to be put under intensive cultivation in order to feed our own increasing population and high protein foods, such as beef, will be a luxury, as they are today in many parts of the world.

That the net income of competent farmers now on inadequate units could be increased by at least 50 per cent and their production made to conform more nearly to future market requirements with ample, long term, package deal credit made available to them was well established by a survey conducted by the Veterans' Land Act administration in 1958.

This survey covered a cross section of 25 per cent of Veterans' Land Act farm settlers in all provinces of Canada and was made for the purpose of assessing their future credit requirements. It was also so designed that it would show what effect the availability and use of adequate long term credit would have on their farm income and on their future production pattern, they having been previously exposed to at least some instruction having to do with modern farm organization and methods, particularly as applied to agriculture, through the services provided by federal farm credit advisers.

The results of this survey indicated that the most serious problems facing agriculture today may well stem from the lack of sufficient long term credit. It also seemed evident that ample, long term, package deal credit designed to assist competent young farmers in the setting up of family farm units of economic size, when granted in sufficient amounts to do the job for which it was intended, always enough but never too much, was probably the most effective and economical way in which the government could assist agriculture to attain parity of income with other industries, and this through the medium of reduced production costs from which the whole economy would benefit.

While this would be essentially a long term program, the assembly under a competent owner-operator of each and every new, economically sized family farm unit would bring agriculture one step nearer to the objective of parity income for its operators and production costs which would not only keep the home market but would make it possible to compete favourably in the export market as well.

The object of this legislation, as stated by the then minister of agriculture, is:

> —to assist Canadian farmers in the voluntary reorganization of their industry into economic family farm units, each of which will be of sufficient size or efficiency to produce the farm income necessary to pay all operating and maintenance costs; to provide a good livelihood for the owner-operator and his dependents; and to retire any required credit, with interest, within an appropriate term.

There are several reasons why this new credit program should be better than the old, the most important being that the corporation is operating under more comprehensive and forward looking credit legislation, with policy directed specifically toward the task of assisting the industry to reorganize itself into sound, economic family farm units.

Next in importance is the fact that the corporation has at its all-important field level a force of over 200 trained and experienced resident credit advisers who are now well deployed throughout the agricultural areas of the country. These have been drawn largely from trained and experienced V.L.A. farm credit advisers.

There is one area in the farm credit field that I feel merits careful consideration. In Manitoba, particularly, the size of the farm is not always a criterion for establishing an economic unit. I am advised by the farm credit corporation officials that it is the income potential rather than the unit size that provides a basis for their lending policy.

Where proper rotation, and careful husbandry is used, a loan to modernize equipment, or intensify the operation of the holding would be as satisfactory for increasing incomes as would a loan to enlarge the farm.

All farmers do not want to be big time operators. Many prefer to manage successfully on a small, but productive unit.

The fact that the farm credit corporation is seeking additional funds suggests that its credit facilities are being administered successfully under careful appraisal and supervision.

The continued use of these credit facilities by our farm people should have an important bearing on the income improvement of our rural communities, and the continuation of the family farm, which is so essential to the economic well-being of the nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): No. I should like to say a few words before the house passes this bill. The Farm Credit Act has been a matter of concern to me over the years and it has also been of concern to my constituents. The measure before us is designed to increase the amount which can be loaned under the act. It increases the amount of capital from $8 million to $12 million and as a result of the multiplication factor involved an additional $100 million will be made available for lending under the act.

This bill is a necessity because at the present time $165 million has been lent out and only $200 million can be lent, so before the end of the year the amount will have to be increased. We are now increasing it to $300 million. While discussing the total amount available for lending under the act I might point out that this government took action in 1958, under the old farm credit act, but $80 million was the limit of the amount which could be lent under it. In 1958 we increased the amount available under the farm credit act to $120 million but we saw the need for a still further increase and today the present bill will provide for $300 million to be lent out to farmers.

I may say that the act has worked reasonably well in most parts of Canada and perhaps in a large part of my own constituency but in my own constituency and in other parts of western Canada including northern and southern Alberta there are areas which are known as local improvement districts. These have certain special characteristics and the act as it now stands does not lend itself too readily to providing assistance in these particular areas. In my own constituency there are areas known as "special areas" somewhat similar in character to local improvement districts and here again the act as it now stands is not well adapted to the making of loans in those areas. I mentioned this in my maiden speech in 1958. Up until 1958, under the old act, there were no loans made in those particular areas. I may say there are about 3,000 farmers living in those areas and there is a demand for land and there is a change-over of land; this has been particularly the case in the last few years.

Again, the act may not be working too well in connection with the smaller farms as the minister himself suggested when he spoke this afternoon. I am thinking particularly of a case which was brought to my attention where a farmer had been farming for the last ten or 15 years since the war on what we would call a small holding. He saw an opportunity to buy another quarter section recently adjoining his farmstead. He applied for a loan and his application was turned down because they thought his farm was not of an economic size. They said: if instead of $4,000 you are prepared to borrow $20,000 and buy an economic unit we will lend you the money, but we will not lend you $4,000. This particular farmer had been farming for 13 years He was a young man who had started farming in 1948 and who had acquired a lot of machinery, and perhaps a few debts with it, but he had been able to sustain himself and his family on a section of land. I think in this particular case he had a section and a quarter, and he had a lease on another half section. He wanted to buy another quarter section which he could have obtained for $4,000 but the corporation turned him down and said: you look around and try to find a large farm that is worth $20,000 and we will lend you the money.

These are some of the difficulties I have found in connection with the administration of this act. This particular farmer does not wish to move from his present farm. He wanted to add to it as adjacent land became available. Had he bought the other quarter section he might not have been through adding to it. He might have continued to add to it from year to year and maybe at the end of five or six years he would have built his loan up to $20,000. I think the corporation should have taken into consideration the fact that this particular farmer had been existing on his farm site. He wanted to add to his land as property became available. It is true he might not have had what some persons would consider to be an economic unit but we all know the difficulty of defining an economic unit. Acreage certainly enters into it, but acreage is not the only factor. It depends on how intensively the acreage is farmed. So I hope the men in charge of the administration of this act will pay particular attention to these things. I note that other hon. members who have spoken in connection with this measure tonight have encountered situations where this idea of what constitutes an economic unit in a given area sometimes varies to a large extent according to the peculiarities of a given locality. I certainly think there is a great deal of variation in what constitutes an economic unit and how it should be appraised in any particular area.

The particular areas I mentioned a while ago, the "special areas", are generally considered by some to be ranching country. But there are lots of good farming spots in central Alberta—lots of places where the farmer can sustain himself and his family on a section and a half or two sections of land. In other areas he may need closer to ten sections. So I hope the authorities will be more ready to lend a small sum of money rather than trying to encourage young farmers to borrow the largest amounts in order to buy well established farms. It is today very difficult to find a well established farm or what most individuals would consider to be an economic unit, for less than $20,000. I think the farmer who wishes to enlarge, develop or perhaps intensify his farm operations, should surely be able to do so with credit obtained under this particular measure.

The minister made brief reference to the suggestion of accepting leased land as security for loans made under this act. I should like to enlarge upon that subject.

In my particular area the farmers have had a great deal of difficulty in using leased land as security for loans under the act. I realize that authorities have suggested that a loan on this basis could qualify under part III of the act as it now stands. However, I should like to point out that under part III of the act a potential borrower cannot purchase land in respect to which he is a tenant farmer. I can see no reason why the farm credit corporation should not accept a lease in its name, allowing a farmer to borrow money in order to develop that land until he has paid the loan, at which time the lease would then revert to his own name.

In a great many areas of southwestern Saskatchewan, southeastern Alberta, and even the southwestern portion of Alberta along the foothills, a great deal of leased land is used for agricultural purposes. In my particular area leases change hands at the rate of $3 to $6 per acre. That is not a lot of money, and certainly a farmer would not have to borrow much money under this act to buy land of that type at that price, and would be in a position to repay the loan within a relatively short period of time. If the farmer had enough livestock he could use that as security for a loan under the farm credit corporation measure along with his leased land, put in the name of the corporation, and would then find himself in a position to pay back the loan within a few years, at which time the lease would revert to his own name. I understand that the Veterans' Land Act administration has worked closely with the farm credit corporation administration. I should like to point out to the minister that I am aware of certain cases where the Veterans' Land Act administration has accepted leases in its name as security for loans. I suggest this same practice could be followed by the administration of this act.

There has been some mention made during the debate this afternoon of the subsidization provided under this act. The idea has been expressed that there might be a continued subsidization in this regard. I take strong exception to those suggestions, because last year was the first year for a long period of time that the farm credit corporation, or the farm loans act, lost money.

The government is now in a position to borrow money from the Bank of Canada, if I read the figures correctly, at an interest rate of between 3.3 per cent and 4 per cent. I say that because of articles appearing in various newspapers recently. I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) frowning at me. Perhaps the interest rate is 3.30 per cent.

In any event the interest rate is between 3 per cent and 4 per cent. In view of that fact, I see no reason why the government cannot borrow money at that interest rate, and make loans under this act to farmers because, as the minister stated last night, the operation cost amounted to only .8 per cent. Under this act, borrowers must pay 5 per cent interest, so that even if the government had to pay 4 per cent on its borrowings, it could do so and make these loans at a profit.

For the reasons I have set out, I cannot understand why this measure is considered to be a subsidization at all.

Some hon. members might feel that this particular measure does not concern the farmers in my area. I should like to point out that under section 27 of the act a loan can be made to cover a complete farming operation, using the farmers chattels as security, only if the loan is made under part III of the act. In addition, there are further stipulations which must be met. The first important stipulation is that a farmer cannot borrow, under part III of the act, at the same time as he has a loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. As an example of the difficulty involved here I should cite the case of a farmer farming an area, who desires to purchase additional land through a loan under part III of the act. Having done so, he would be prohibited from borrowing under the Farm Improvement Loans Act in order to purchase new or additional machinery to farm his land. While there may be a few isolated cases where an individual has used the same piece of machinery as security for two different loans, I see no difficulty in that regard under the application of part III, because when a young farmer makes application to the bank for a loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the banker makes absolutely sure that the machinery used as security is clear of encumbrances.

I suggest the individuals who will take advantage of the loans available under this new legislation will be young farmers with a desire to purchase their father's holdings, and will be required to borrow close to the maximum amount. If those individuals accept supervision, they would make loans under part III of this act. Having done so they would not then be able to borrow money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act to purchase additional machinery, until such time as the original loan was reduced to less than $20,000. I can foresee complications arising because of the application of part III, and I do not understand the reason for its inclusion in the act.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to touch upon one other subject before I conclude, having to do with the appraisal fee. Most hon. members are perhaps aware that the appraisal fee is now set at 2 per cent of the amount of the loan, or $100, whichever is the lesser. I feel it is unnecessary to increase this appraisal fee from $10 to $100. I suggest this has caused a great deal of concern and hardship to those farmers who must pay the $100 appraisal fee in addition to the cost of finding out whether the title to the land is clear. I suggest that the total cost to the farmer, when making application for a loan under this measure, including the appraisal fee, might well be $200. That fact in itself perhaps would not be such a great problem if there was any assurance to the farmer that, having paid out that money, his application would be approved. In some instances farmers are apt to have an appraisal made, pay $100 and be turned down after the appraisal is made. Although the farmer is turned down, he still has to pay the $100. This is a hardship on a particular farmer who is thus prevented from enlarging his present holdings, as was the case in the instance I mentioned earlier this evening.

I should like to see some changes made in this regulation, perhaps not at this session but in the year to come, and the appraisal fee be reduced to $10 as it was formerly. If the applicant is turned down, or if the appraisal is not made, the fee should be refunded. This is a small point but I thought I should mention it because I know some of the difficulties that some farmers have had in my constituency in trying to get loans under this particular act. I might say that only the one area in my constituency has had this trouble. Farmers in this area have been turned down on a number of occasions because, as I said, they did not want to borrow too much money. They just wanted to borrow a little to add to their present holdings. Sometimes an appraiser would come into the drier part of Alberta and not recommend the loan. The country is dry, so much so that some people have claimed the gophers have moved out. Actually it is not that bad. Farmers in that particular area are as good security risks as farmers in any other part of the province. They have proved this over the years.

I would strongly recommend that an appraiser be placed in this particular area because of the number of applicants that have been turned down. An appraiser coming from some of the more fertile parts of Alberta, the parts fortunate enough to receive a great deal of rain, drives into this dry country and says, "Oh my gosh, I would not lend a plugged nickel in this country", and drives out again. A farmer trying to borrow some money is put in the position where his case is not properly viewed in the light that perhaps he would hope it would be, and he is turned down almost automatically because he is living in that particular area.

Another thought that was suggested last night was that land and land size—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Because the hon. member indicated some time ago that he was completing his remarks I did not intervene. I think he is now continuing to discuss the administration of the act, as he has been doing for quite some time now, and I would point out that he has not related his remarks to the purpose of the bill which is to increase the capital of the farm credit corporation from $8 million to $12 million. I would hope that he would soon come to the point.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In speaking to the bill I paid close attention to what the minister said when he opened the subject on first reading and I have tried to follow his remarks.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said nothing on first reading.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, when he spoke first on the bill today. I did try to relate my remarks to what he said. He first mentioned isolated areas and particular localities in which there is a great deal of variety and in which a great deal of adjustment might be necessary. Certainly, my remarks were related to the fact that this bill is to provide an increase of about $100 million in the amounts lent under the act. Certainly the farmers in this particular area would like to get a chance to borrow a part of this $100 million.

I am trying to point out, Mr. Speaker, that if an appraiser was placed in this particular area he might be in a better position to appraise and evaluate the land in the area, and in that way the farmers in this particular area, called the "special areas" of Alberta, would have an opporunity to borrow under this act.

I know that the president of the corporation has recently appointed Mr. Carr, chief land appraiser from Ottawa, to make a study of the whole lease problem in western Canada. I refer to the land that is leased in the area between the lakes in Manitoba and in southwestern Saskatchewan, in Alberta and in British Columbia. This land is leased by farmers and ranchers who are in the agricultural industry. The leased land changes hand from time to time, sometimes at high prices and sometimes at rather low prices. Certainly, those farmers should have the opportunity to adjust the size of their units, to make them more economic and to borrow money under this particular act. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for bearing with me for a moment while I got this particular thought across.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see this change and I should like to say a few words on the bill.

So far as I can ascertain, the remarks that have been made so far have all been in favour of this legislation. The reason that we are in favour of the increase in the amount of money is that there has been a new director appointed under the Farm Credit Act. We should be appreciative of the job he has been able to do in such a short time. The fact that we need more money under the Farm Credit Act now is an indication that the act is working for the first time in a long period of time.

It has always seemed to me that borrowing money from the Canadian farm loan board was a little bit like trying to borrow money from the treasury board or going to the Minister of Finance and asking him for a loan. The administrators of the act were not the least bit interested in lending money. There were certain requirements. If you fitted into that particular limited pattern then you got the money. Mr. Rutherford, the former director of the Veterans' Land Act did have experience. His officials had the approach of wanting to lend money that was going to be advantageous to the farmers. You did not lend the money whether the person needed it or not. Previously it depended on whether the farmer fitted into a little slot. It did not depend necessarily on whether it was advantageous to the farmer; he got the money if he met certain requirements. Now it seems no matter whether the money is asked for under supervision or not there is continuously a certain amount of supervision. It seems to me this is the only way that money being lent to farmers is going to be advantageously used by those farmers. Although farmers may not readily admit it, they need assistance in ascertaining how much help they need. The hon. member who just took his seat spoke of areas of 10,000 acres. This certainly does not apply in my area.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If the hon. member is referring to my remarks, I said 10 sections or 2 sections.

Mr. Peters: I am sorry if I misquoted the hon. member. It would not make any difference. Ten sections are still a great deal more than the area on which farmers in my constituency are going to be borrowing money, if it is a very large amount of land. It has been a factor. I presume the hon. member was referring to the need for larger farms to make up an economic unit. There has been a tendency for farmers to borrow money on an uneconomical unit. Obviously his borrowing of that money was not going to enable him to better his position very much.

One of the things to the credit of the Veterans' Land Act administration was the ability of the officials to supervise and the advice they gave. This practice is now being applied generally to Canadian farm loans and it means that the farmer is receiving some assistance and technical advice that he did not have the opportunity to obtain before. The advice is being given in such a manner that the farmer will accept it because it is not completely dependent upon the loan or the conditions of the loan. In my area, for example, farmers have been advised that if they plant certain crops the market is such and such and if they plant something else their chances of obtaining a better price per acre of produce will be much more readily realized. In some instances technical advice has been given in relation to the operation of the farm.

It seems to me that the technical assistance being given in this way by the officials is a great advantage over the system that obtained before. The Farm Credit Act agents are going to the farms and talking to the farmer and his wife. They are assessing the situation themselves and in my opinion this is doing a great deal to enable the farmer to obtain an advantageous loan, one which he is going to be able to repay and which it is to his advantage to obtain.

The fact that the government is asking for an increase in the amount of money available for loans is an indication that this credit system is an advantageous one. With its experience under this act, I believe that the government is going to give consideration to increasing the supervision under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. There is a similarity between the two acts. As a previous speaker mentioned, they are interrelated to some extent and they certainly work advantageously in combination.

Having in mind the inquiry into farm machinery that is now under way, I believe it is increasingly advantageous for the farmer to have impartial advice with relation to the purchase of new machinery because occasionally we find that rather than the farmer wanting to buy, the machinery companies are persuading him to buy. A little advice may help to prevent some farmers from trying to keep up with the Jones'. It seems to me that this act is a credit to the government. We are very pleased with the way it has been operating and with the fact that more money is necessary. We are also pleased that the bill has been introduced and will be passed before the budget is brought down because it might be more difficult at that time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Capital.

Mr. Herridge: Before this clause carries, out of curiosity on my part may I ask the minister whether he can inform the house in what amounts the farm credit corporation applies for advances from the consolidated revenue fund?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): In the last report and the figures I gave tonight the hon. member will find that the amounts usually range from $15 million to $25 million at a time.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PURCHASE AND SALE OF SECURITIES BY MINISTER, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-109, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

[Mr. Peters.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the house long. At the resolution stage of this measure last night one point was raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson). He asked why it was that the resolution made no reference to the provisions in the measure in relation to the assignment of debts. The answer is very simple, that no resolution is required in that respect because no matter pertaining to the balance of ways and means was involved in relation to the assignment of debts. Indeed, had that been the only provision in the bill there would have been no need for a resolution antecedent thereto at all. There are rights of the crown involved in this measure. His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the purport of the bill, has given consent, so far as Her Majesty's prerogative and property rights are affected, that the house may do therein as it shall see fit.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have very little comment to make in connection with the bill. I see it is almost 10.30 and I assure my colleagues that I will conclude my comments within a time that will appeal to them. I think it is unfortunate that the government has not seen fit throughout its long regime to permit parliamentary secretaries to conclude debates such as that instituted yesterday, for example, with proficiency by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. This is quite contrary to the practice of the former administration.

I did raise the point to which the Minister of Finance has referred. However, I am satisfied that there is nothing in the bill which we are now considering at the second reading stage that is deserving of special attention in debate. I do ask the minister, who has great influence in the ministry, to consider the former practice under which the presentation of any measure perhaps might be shared between him and his parliamentary secretary. I do not think there has been adequate utilization of parliamentary secretaries in the presentation of the business of the house.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ten thirty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be considered in committee of the whole house? Next sitting of the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: In asking the minister for the business tonight I should like to observe to him that if he could get from his own side co-operation comparable to that which he gets from this side of the house, this session would have been over long ago. Can the minister tell us what it is proposed that the backbenchers on the government side are going to filibuster tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my appreciation of the co-operation I get from both sides of the house in getting the business through quickly. Tomorrow we will take the estimates of the Department of Public Works. We shall commence with those estimates and, depending on the progress made by the house, they will be followed by the estimates of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Defence Production. I do not know how long they will take. I can announce other estimates for consideration later this week, if the house so desires.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister assure us that nothing but estimates will be taken for the rest of this week?

Mr. Churchill: It depends on the circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

It being 35 minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

THE BUDGET

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRESENTATION ON TUESDAY, JUNE 20

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am now in a position to inform the house that if it pleases the house, I would hope, barring unforeseen occurrences, to introduce the budget next Tuesday evening, June 20, at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A belated announcement.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF GOVERNOR

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I offer the house a statement on another matter upon which questions were asked in the house yesterday. Yesterday morning Mr. James Coyne, governor—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister proceeds may I call to his sympathetic attention a problem which concerns me respecting the statement he is about to make by leave of the house. Of course the statement has not been submitted to me and I do not know its contents, but I think the minister and the house will recognize that if it is about the governor of the Bank of Canada it is a statement about a very controversial matter which could very readily give rise to a debate on routine proceedings, at a time when the practice of the house does not provide for a debate.

I do not presume to assume that the minister proposes to make a controversial statement, but I ask myself whether the matter can be dealt with without the expression of opinion on matters which are controversial. Therefore, if the minister's statement is one of simple fact which can be made in that way and accepted by the house without debate, then I have nothing further to say. If on the other hand the minister has in mind expressing views about the circumstances with which he proposes to deal, then I would think the house might very well agree on the method by which this matter will be dealt with. If controversy is introduced and an opportunity to comment in the same vein is provided, then an endeavour should be made to limit the debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you and the house that the statement has been prepared with due regard for the practice of the house in these matters. I have endeavoured faithfully to confine the statement to a factual account of matters upon which it was quite obvious yesterday the house sought factual information.

I wish to make it abundantly clear also that I would not wish for myself in this situation any right that was not shared equally by those hon. members opposite who may wish to make comment on the statement after I have read it.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the point you have raised is an important one, especially in the circumstances. If the statement to be made by the minister deals non-controversially with that matter only, then it will be accepted as such on this side, of course, and any statement we made in reply in accordance with our right will be along the same line. If, however, the minister's statement includes opinions or facts which are controversial—

Mr. Broome: What is a controversial fact?

Mr. Pearson: —then I hope we will be given exactly the same right in reply that the minister has undertaken to exercise in making his statement.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, if the statement the minister intends to make is non-controversial, there will be no objection on the part of the members of this group to his making that statement now. If it introduces controversial matters or opinions, we think it would be more fitting and proper for the statement to be made after the budget has been presented next Tuesday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house recognizes that the Minister of Finance never makes controversial statements; therefore we are really dealing with something that does not occur very regularly. However, Mr. Speaker, the point you have made, followed by the Leader of the Opposition, is that if there is anything of a controversial nature in the statement it will always be interpreted in that way no matter how factual it is. There will be no objection to the Leader of the Opposition and one member of the third party making such observations thereon as they deem proper, having regard to the substance and the factuality of the statement to be made by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: I will call upon the minister to proceed, and will reserve to myself the right, if debate develops, to apply such strictures as appear to be necessary.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning Mr. James Coyne, governor of the Bank of Canada, issued a statement, which has been widely circulated, concerning his tenure of office as governor. It would not be appropriate at this point in the proceedings of the house to comment in detail on his published statement sentence by sentence or on its defiant and provocative character. At this stage I must confine myself to placing before the house the essential facts, virtually none of which appear in that statement.

During Mr. Coyne's period in office there has been a steady and deplorable deterioration in the relations of the Bank of Canada with the public. The governor, by a course of ill considered action and a series of public declarations of policy on public issues quite outside the realm of central banking, and by his rigid and doctrinaire expression of views, often and openly incompatible with government policy, has embroiled the bank in continuous controversy with strong political overtones.

Mr. Coyne's rigid attitude on the maintenance of high interest rates is one example. The government's policy is expansionist, aimed at the creation of more trade, more production and more jobs. The policies advocated by Mr. Coyne are restrictionist, restrictive of trade, restrictive of production and restrictive of jobs. The government has exercised patience in the hope of avoiding further controversy pending the expiry of his term of office on December 31 next, but its hopes have been frustrated by Mr. Coyne and it can no longer postpone decisive action.

Matters of high importance are awaiting decision and co-operative action by both the bank and the government. The need of teamwork between them and leadership by them has never been greater. It has become impossible to expect this kind of co-operation as long as the present governor remains in office. It was perfectly plain to the government that whatever assurances Mr. Coyne might give of co-operation for the future, the public could have no confidence that Bank of Canada policy would support government policy, having in mind the frequent public declarations by the governor which clearly run counter to the policies of the government.

Mr. Coyne has, as I shall explain shortly, lost the confidence of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada. He does not possess the confidence of the government.

On May 30, on the instructions of the government, I asked Mr. Coyne to tender his resignation to the board of directors of the bank. I further asked that he do so before the regular board meeting to be held in Quebec on June 12 and 13, so that action on the resignation might be taken by the board at its meeting. I gave him an ample statement of the reasons for the course the government was following. The main reason was that the government was convinced that Mr. Coyne's continuation in office as governor of the Bank of Canada would stand in the way of the implementation of a comprehensive, sound and responsible economic program designed to raise the levels of employment and production in Canada. After an hour's discussion he asked to be allowed to think the matter over. Presumably his published statement yesterday is his reply to the government's request.

Section 6 of the Bank of Canada Act provides as follows:

> The governor and deputy governor shall be appointed by the directors with the approval of the governor in council.

As is well known, Mr. Coyne was appointed by the board of directors with approval of the then governor in council in December, 1954, for a seven year term as governor expiring December 31, 1961. This term has six and a half months to run. Had Mr. Coyne complied with the government's request, the board of directors of the bank would have been in a position at its meeting in the last two days to take action on the resignation and, if so disposed, to appoint a successor with the approval of the governor in council. I had hoped to announce in the house today that this course had been followed and that the whole matter would have been handled with dignity and consideration. Mr. Coyne, however, has chosen to reject the request and to provoke a controversy.

Mr. Coyne has not contented himself with disregarding a request from the government. The board of directors met at Quebec on Monday and Tuesday. The subject of Mr. Coyne's tenure was discussed both days. Mr. Coyne himself introduced the subject at the board's meeting on Monday morning. Both at the morning session and again at the afternoon session that day he delivered a lengthy defence of his administration. Discussion followed. I am informed that Mr. Coyne was made fully aware on Monday that the board would ask for his resignation if he did not choose to submit it.

The board meeting resumed on Tuesday morning at 9.30; that was yesterday. When it became clear that the board was about to introduce a resolution requesting the immediate resignation of Mr. Coyne, he asked to be excused and asked the board to consider other matters of business while he was out. He returned to the meeting at 12.15 o'clock to inform the board that he had issued a statement to the press at 11 o'clock. This statement was apparently released simultaneously in Quebec and Ottawa. I am also informed that he read the press statement to the board and intimated that he would not resign even if the board of directors requested him to do so.

With Mr. Coyne in the chair the board then proceeded to vote on the following resolution:

> That it is in the best interests of the Bank of Canada that the governor do immediately tender his resignation to the board of directors of the bank and further that this action and decision on the part of the board has been taken after prolonged consideration and with regret.

Mr. Coyne polled the directors. The resolution was carried by a vote of nine to one. Mr. Coyne did not vote. Having declared the motion carried, Mr. Coyne then immediately adjourned the meeting.

In doing so he not only defied the formally expressed wish of the board that he should resign immediately in the interests of the bank; he made it impossible for them to proceed to consider what action might be taken in the face of this defiance. It is of particular significance that Mr. Coyne deliberately issued his own press release prepared in advance of the board meeting before the board had reached its decision, and in the knowledge that the board was about to reach a decision. In doing so he left the public with the false impression that the only request for his resignation had come from the government.

As I indicated earlier, it is not my intention to comment in detail on Mr. Coyne's statement. I should like, however, to make two observations. First, by referring to a—I quote his words—"mysterious and alarming" program which the government is contemplating, Mr. Coyne may have left a certain false impression with the public. Perhaps the best way to dispel this impression is for me to say at once that Mr. Coyne has not been told of the contents of the forthcoming budget and, therefore, has no right whatsoever to express views about it. Second, Mr. Coyne has asserted that he has been given no indication of disagreement with his views on economic policy. In my last two budgets and in various other public statements it has been clear for some time that there have been major differences of opinion with the frequently expressed views of the governor on economic matters.

The earnest efforts of the board of directors and the government to handle this unpleasant matter with dignity and with consideration for Mr. Coyne have thus been frustrated by him. The house will be able to judge whether this was the action of a governor with a proper sense of responsibility to the board of directors of the very important public institution of which he has been governor for the past six and a half years.

I have already indicated that under the terms of the Bank of Canada Act, in appointing the governor the board of directors is the appointing body and the governor in council is the approving body. The board has now asked for his resignation and the government has asked for his resignation. He on his part has asserted his determination to remain in office, though unwanted, for the remaining six and a half months of his seven year term.

Mr. Coyne has referred to his pension claims. Prior to February 15, 1960 Mr. Coyne under present circumstances of age and service would have become entitled on retirement this year to a life pension of slightly less than $12,000 per annum. As the result of a by-law passed by the board that day he claims to have acquired immediate entitlement to a life pension of $25,000 per annum on retirement this year at the age of approximately 50 years.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government was not notified of this by-law and the governor did not publish it in the Canada Gazette until this week.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Request for Resignation of Bank Governor

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government became aware of the enactment of this by-law only this spring. The government, as I informed him at the meeting on May 30, considers that the governor was lacking in a sense of responsibility in keeping with his high office in accepting an additional benefit worth $13,000 per annum for life without ensuring that the matter was brought to the attention of the government.

It is the government, not the governor, which has been continuously defending the integrity of the Bank of Canada. For this, and for this alone, the government has patiently borne misunderstanding and even abuse in the hope of shielding the bank from becoming, as a result of the actions and assertions of the governor, a centre of political controversy.

In the light of the foregoing I can now inform the house that the government will shortly invite parliament to take appropriate legislative action to meet the needs of the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the Leader of the Opposition I would remind hon. members of what I said earlier in connection with the course that was considered appropriate in this regard; that is, that hon. members' remarks should be kept within the scope of the statement made and should be appropriate to that statement. It has been indicated to the house that there will be an opportunity to debate this matter, and this present discussion should be confined to proper limits. That is my reason for rising before the Leader of the Opposition begins his remarks.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has made a statement which is as controversial in fact and opinion as any statement which could be made by a minister of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, naturally I believe I have a full right to reply to the best of my ability to these controversial statements made by the minister, statements which are controversial in fact and controversial in opinion.

The minister has seen fit, in a statement which he told us was to be non-controversial, to talk about the steady and deplorable deterioration of relations with the bank. He blamed it on the bank. He talked about ill considered actions on the part of the governor; he talked about the governor embroiling the bank in this, that and the other thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Pearson: He talked about the lack of co-operation between the bank and the governor; he talked about the government being frustrated, and he told us that he proposed to make a non-controversial statement on this matter.

The minister also said that he had hoped this matter could be dealt with with dignity and consideration. The conduct of the minister has made this quite impossible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The minister's statement this morning has contradicted not only the communications which have been made public by the governor of the bank—the communications which are before us—but it is contradicted by the minister himself in previous statements in this house during this session.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I propose to support that statement by putting on the record what the minister has said in this house. These are statements which contradict what he himself has said this morning, and surely I have the right to do that in view of what he has said. The minister has made the unprecedented decision of asking the governor of the Bank of Canada to resign just a few months before the end of his term of office. In fact the minister has demanded his resignation—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Pearson: —a few months before his term of office ends. This unprecendented decision, this unwarranted intervention in the affairs of the bank, was made by a government which only a few months ago claimed it had no authority over the bank or its management; that it had no authority over monetary policy and no intention of ever interfering with the Bank of Canada. Here is what the minister said on February 21, as reported at page 2258 of Hansard:

> I say that the responsibility owed by the Bank of Canada is to parliament... It is a direct responsibility.

Then the minister went on to refer to the management of the bank on page 2260 of Hansard. He said:

> The government has no power whatsoever, once appointments are made, to change them; only parliament can do that.

Then the minister, in defiance of those statements, on May 30 calls in the governor of the bank and demands his resignation. What did the minister say on February 21, the same day, a little later? Let me read from page 2265 of Hansard:

> Let us take the extreme case of a headlong clash, Mr. Speaker.

Now the minister, after three months, tells us that there has been a headlong clash going on for months and years between the government and the bank, in spite of the efforts we on this side of the house have made to get the minister to tell us what he thinks of the policy of the governor of the bank and his statement that there has been a headlong clash. The minister took this position when he was speaking in the House of Commons on February 21. He said:

> Let us take the extreme case of a headlong clash, Mr. Speaker. In a situation of that nature—

This is the Minister of Finance speaking, who spoke this morning in a very different vein:

> In a situation of that nature the government would have no power whatever to terminate the terms of office of the directors or the governor. In that situation all it could do would be to go to parliament, as the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday in effect. That is all it could do. The government has not been given by parliament any power or authority over the bank or its senior officials or directors in that situation.

The Prime Minister had something to say about this, too. He said in a broadcast to the nation on October 1, 1959:

> I point out that the Bank of Canada, not the government, controls the money supply in Canada.

Incidentally, that has been denied recently by the governor of the bank himself, and it has been denied by us from this side of the house many times. The Prime Minister continued:

> The bank was set up under law by act of parliament. It is independent and autonomous. It has one master, parliament, and through parliament, the people. That is the law. It has been the law for almost 25 years. But, as with any law passed by parliament the Bank of Canada Act is, of course—as the Bank Act is—subject to review and amendment.

Surely the most important issue must have arisen between the governor of the bank and the government. The minister said this morning that this issue had been developing over the months and, indeed, for a long time, though he never indicated in this house during any of the debates we have had on this subject that any such issue was developing at all. If that issue was developing; if the Minister of Finance had had these feelings toward the governor of the bank which he expressed this morning in such strong terms, why has he not risen in the House of Commons in the past and told us about them?

Mr. Benidickson: He told us the opposite.

Mr. Pearson: He told us the opposite. He has contradicted himself by his own statement, and he has been contradicted by the letters written him by the governor of the bank which have now been made public. We know now that this issue, and the demand for the resignation of the governor, have been hidden since May 30, the very day I asked the Minister of Finance why Mr. Bryden, a member of the board, had resigned. Incidentally, Mr. Bryden was a member of the committee of the board of directors which looked into the pension matter and made the recommendation of February, 1960.

I asked the minister about this on May 30. The hon. gentleman became very indignant and refused to tell us anything about it. As a matter of fact, since February we have asked the government on several occasions to call the governor before the banking and commerce committee so we might find out what was going on between the government and the bank. The minister refused to do that. He gave the impression that all was well. Now he tells us there was a general deterioration in relations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Denied parliament its rights.

Mr. Pearson: That was a most reasonable request, and in the light of what the minister has said today that request becomes even more reasonable. It was reasonable when we made it, yet it was summarily rejected by the government.

It is not easy to find out the nature of the issue which has led to this demand by the minister for the resignation of the governor, in spite of what the minister has said this morning. The issue, in the terms in which the minister put it this morning has, as I have said, been contradicted and denied by the minister himself. Let me read again from page 2258 of Hansard. The minister said this morning that the governor had been going around making speeches and contradicting in his speeches the money policy—the easy money policy—of the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is something new.

Mr. Pearson: That is something new, all right. Here is what the minister said as reported in Hansard in February about the governor and his speeches:

> May I say that I have no right of censorship over the speeches of the governor of the Bank of Canada. He does not refer them to me. Why should he do so? This is a free country.

Well, if this "heads will roll" attitude becomes common on the part of the government, we shall not be a free country for too long. The minister went on to say:

> He makes his own speeches and chooses his own themes . . . I trust that I am not to be held responsible for what may be said by the governor of the Bank of Canada when he exercises his right as a citizen to make speeches.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I should tell him that in two more minutes I shall consider that he has exercised his right to comment on the statement which the minister has made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Closure.

An hon. Member: You are the expert.

Mr. Speaker: The minister who introduced this matter did not speak at undue length; I noted how long he took, and I would consider it appropriate if the Leader of the Opposition would conclude his remarks before long.

Mr. Pearson: Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I would wish to use my rights in accordance with the advice you have given, but the minister made two points to which I must refer. One is that the governor has been in conflict with the financial and monetary policy of the government for some time. That was completely contradicted by the governor himself when he said that at no time had the government expressed disagreement with the operation of the Bank of Canada under his management. This is a statement made by the governor of the bank himself. Was there ever a clearer case for a committee of parliament being set up to inquire into a matter of such importance, when the governor and the minister are in complete contradiction even as to the facts?

The other point the minister made dealt with pensions. According to the governor in his statement, this was brought up as one reason why, perhaps, the governor should resign; because the directors of the bank in February, 1960 unanimously took certain action with regard to pensions. Now, on May 30, 1961 the minister gets very indignant about that, and has the effrontery to tell us in this house that he did not know about it. The deputy minister of finance was a member of the board of directors of the bank and was at that meeting when this action was taken.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. gentleman would wish me to correct the misstatement he has just made. The deputy minister of finance was not at that meeting. He had been called away the day before owing to the bereavement of a relative, and he did not attend that meeting.

Mr. Pearson: The deputy minister of finance is a member of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada. Is the minister trying to tell me that because, as he has said now, the deputy minister was not at that particular meeting the deputy minister did not get a copy of the minutes of that meeting, and did not send those minutes to him? I ask the minister now if the deputy minister has ever reported previously about that meeting. If the minister cannot find out from his own deputy what goes on at meetings of this kind he is hardly fit to be Minister of Finance.

The minister has been very active trying to find out from the board of directors, since, what went on at that meeting and at other meetings. This was action taken by the board of directors in accordance with their powers. Does the minister object to that action? If so he should fire all the other directors, too. He cannot fire Mr. Bryden because Mr. Bryden has resigned. And let us not forget that two thirds of the board of directors who took this decision were appointed by the present government.

The Minister of Finance who tells this house that neither he nor his government have any responsibility for monetary policy, now says he really must have some responsibility with regard to bank pensions. That is a strange attitude for the minister to take; and if he is trying to force the governor of the Bank of Canada out of office because of some pension difficulty I claim, to use the minister's own words, that it is very undignified—and I could use language much worse than that to discuss tactics of that kind.

That is the situation, Mr. Speaker, and I shall conclude by saying this; that nothing the minister has said this morning is in any way satisfactory as an explanation of the shocking and irresponsible action of the government in this matter. It is not a question of the policy of the board or of the governor of the Bank of Canada; it is a question of the relationship between the government and the Bank of Canada, and that relationship has been shown up in the last few days in a fashion which will cause lack of confidence in the financial community of this country and which may well be a shocking example of government interference with or injustice toward a man who has been a devoted public servant, whatever one might think of his policy or his words.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, without doubt the house has listened with great interest to the somewhat lengthy elucidation of a long standing enigma, but what the minister had to say in previous statements in no way indicated to the house that the situation he has now described actually existed. I think that is proven by the record, and there is no reason to quote it again. The members of this group are of the opinion that the minister has not been frank with the house or the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister said his main reason—we noticed he emphasized the word "main", because apparently there are subsidiary reasons which have also been given—for the government's action is that the governor is standing in the way of certain policies to which the government intends to give effect, to improve the economy of this country. That is in direct contradiction to the correspondence that has been circulated quite recently by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

I have in my hand a letter addressed to the Minister of Finance written by the governor of the bank and dated June 13, 1961. I should like to briefly quote from this letter to indicate that the minister's statement is not accurate from our point of view. That portion of this letter which I wish to read is as follows:

> Efforts were made by the directors to arrange for discussion with you in order to be absolutely clear that you were aware that there was no issue of substance between the government and the bank or the government and myself prior to your request to me on May 30—to be sure that you knew that the bank felt bound to support government policies in so far as they had financial implications, as it had always done.

I now wish briefly, in that connection, to refer to a television broadcast some months ago on which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance appeared, because I think the issue was the question of high or low interest rates. I understand that program appeared nearly two years ago, at which time both these hon. gentlemen appealed to the public of Canada to dispose of their low interest bonds and accept higher interest government bonds. That does not indicate any concern with the question of low interest.

A reading of the correspondence that we have received from the governor of the Bank of Canada indicates that the government's primary and first concern is political, not economic, and that the statements made by the governor of the Bank of Canada were, as indicated in the correspondence and as the government indicated, "embarrassing". I think that was the substance of the complaint in the first instance.

The Minister of Finance has mentioned that there was a difference between the government and the governor of the Bank of Canada in respect to policies. I am not going to take the time of this house to go into that subject. The Leader of the Opposition has quoted to some extent to prove that was not an accurate statement, and we agree with that statement.

What does the government do according to this correspondence, according to the statement by the minister, and according to what we have read about this issue, in order to achieve its main purpose, to cover its political embarrassment because of the statements made by the governor of the Bank of Canada? It uses the smokescreen of a relatively unimportant issue, relatively unimportant in relation to the welfare of this country as a whole. I might explain, Mr. Speaker, that we in this group do not endorse pensions of $25,000 a year for anyone. We are opposed to that type of pension being granted. We are also opposed to what is a relatively minor issue, compared to the issues at stake, being introduced by the government under this smokescreen to cover the real purpose of its actions and attitudes.

Mr. Speaker, I think in conclusion I should say that without any doubt, after this partial, and shall I say, somewhat phantasmagorical elucidation of the minister, it is the responsibility of the government and the minister to give the house all the facts surrounding this important situation at the first opportunity. Then the house must have the opportunity, after having received the facts —the house cannot debate the issue without the facts—of debating this issue. I agree with the suggestion made by the leader of the official opposition that this is a matter which should come before the committee on banking and commerce, and we should hear witnesses on all sides of the case. I am sure after we have heard that evidence the people of this country will know who is the real culprit.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I should like—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I hear the Minister of Finance I should like to say to this house that this has been a debate, in my view, and one without precedent in our practice. It appeared to be the wish of the house to discuss this matter pro and con and, following the minister's statement, to allow a reply to that statement by the Leader of the Opposition and the spokesman for the C.C.F. party.

I foresaw that situation when I suggested at the beginning of the statement that it would be reasonable to agree that a debate should take place, if the house wanted a debate, in the usual way. If the question is to be renewed and debated again, as has been indicated in the minister's statement, that debate cannot be entered upon now. I think the practice of limiting the discussion to the three spokesmen, one of each party, is a correct practice. I also feel it is fair, in view of the course that has been taken, to allow the Minister of Finance, who made the original statement, a brief opportunity to comment in reply on what has been said by the other speakers.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is my best judgment on the matter. This is a situation without precedent. If the house disagrees with my decision, the house is master of its own rules and can take such course of action as it sees fit. I propose to allow the Minister of Finance to have the floor for three minutes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I intend to be brief and to confine myself to correcting certain errors on the part of the two hon. members who have spoken on matters of fact. There will be occasion when debate can take place on the wider issue.

First of all the Leader of the Opposition said several times, not merely that I had asked for the resignation, but demanded it; and he roared out those words. At no time did I use the word "demand". On the instructions of the government I asked for the resignation of the governor to be tendered to the board of directors.

In the second place, he referred to statements made in which I had said that the government had no authority and no power to terminate the office of the governor. That is quite true, Mr. Speaker. I could do no more than ask, and the board of directors has likewise asked.

My statement this morning, and the course of action taken in recent days, is completely in accord with the statements I made in the house, as mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition. This has become an extreme situation; extreme within the kind of expressions used by Mr. Graham Towers on previous occasions, and which would call for the resignation of the governor, in the opinion of the government.

The Leader of the Opposition brought Mr. Bryden's name into this discussion this morning, and I think it ill-behooved him to do so. I gave a factual statement to the house concerning Mr. Bryden's resignation some days ago, and Mr. Bryden also made a statement in Toronto at the time, completely denying the attempt made by the Leader of the Opposition to insinuate certain reasons for his resignation. Mr. Bryden's resignation was, as he stated at the time, because of other burdens he had accepted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us see his letter of resignation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am limited to three minutes. Mr. Speaker, in regard to this matter of disagreement, I think no one who has taken the trouble to read the speeches of both the persons mentioned will have any doubt about there being wide divergencies. The efforts of the government and, if I may say so, of myself in particular in all these discussions have been to discharge a duty which I regard as a very important one resting on the Minister of Finance; that was to do, even at the expense of absorbing abuse and criticism, everything that was within my power to try to keep the Bank of Canada out of political controversy. I have not finally succeeded, but I did make the effort.

The final point, Mr. Speaker, concerns a reference by the Leader of the Opposition to what happened at a meeting of the directors on February 15, 1960. I said that the deputy minister of finance, who is a non-voting member of the board, was not present at that meeting, having been called to Toronto the previous day to take charge of funeral arrangements of a relative who died very suddenly. The assistant deputy minister went to the meeting. I received no report; I received no copy of the minutes. The Leader of the Opposition looks surprised, but I am stating the fact. I learned of the action taken at that meeting, as I said in the statement recently this spring. That is the fact.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Unbelievable.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The point made in the statement was that there was a responsibility resting upon the governor to have seen to it that this fact was known to the government before such a substantial benefit was accepted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister ought to resign; that is clear.

PROCEDURE THIS DAY WITH RESPECT TO STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: If the house agrees that it is not twelve o'clock we might proceed with starred questions. There is this difficulty, that starred questions are to be taken up not later than twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. Fulton: I do not wish to stand in the way of what you have suggested, sir, but I have a short statement to make on motions which I assure the house will be non-controversial. If Your Honour has leave to stop the clock with regard to starred questions, perhaps it might be stopped for another 60 seconds in regard to this statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the house agrees to the diversion so the statement can be made, I am sure it will also agree to its continuance to allow starred questions to be answered. I think that is the general consensus.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we stand government notices of motion and revert to motions so that the minister may make his statement, and deal with starred questions afterward?

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the minister speak first.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we take starred questions after we have dealt with routine proceedings in the usual course?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMBINES

DRUGS—AUTOMOTIVE OIL, GREASE, ETC.; ANNOUNCEMENT OF PUBLIC HEARINGS

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I think the house will be interested to know that the chairman of the restrictive trade practices commission has ordered that there be public hearings held in connection with two general inquiries under section 42 of the Combines Investigation Act. The first that I think the house should know about relates to the drug inquiry. The second relates to an inquiry into the distribution and sale of automotive oil, grease, antifreeze, additives, tires, batteries, accessories and related products, commonly known as T.B.A. inquiry. In connection with the drug inquiry, the chairman has ordered that the public hearings commence in Ottawa on Tuesday, July 4, 1961; and he has ordered that the T.B.A. hearings commence on Monday, September 11. The chairman has come to the conclusion that public hearings in both these cases will serve the public interest.

In view of this fact I am now in a position where I consider that I am able to table the statement of materials in the drug inquiry, and I do so now. I will also be able to accept the motion of the hon. member for Skeena with regard to the statement of material in the other inquiry. I would also like to table for the information of the house copies of the orders made by the chairman of the restrictive trade practices commission.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE RATES OF ALLOWANCES AND INCOME CEILINGS, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That Bill C-101 intituled "An act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952", now before the house, be amended, in clause 3 of the said bill, by adding the word "and" at the end of subparagraph (ii) and by striking out subparagraph (iv) of paragraph (a) in proposed subsection (4) of section 3 of the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1952.

Motion agreed to.

6. If so, was anything else inscribed with the text of the bill itself?
7. What was the cost of preparing this document, and what is its purpose?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Stand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister why this is allowed to stand? The minister has had this question for a long time. There has been all sorts of publicity outside the house; why should the house not be given the information?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dorion: I have received part of the material for drafting my answer but this morning I noticed that some of the material is not yet available.

Mr. Speaker: Stands.

Question stands.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS PENSIONS—REINSTATEMENT

5. If the period out of service was lengthened at any time, in order to give employees a better chance for pension time rights, was the benefit of this extended to those employees penalized previously when a shorter period was in effect?
6. If not, for what reason?

Hon. George H. Hees (Acting Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

The rules of the Canadian National 1959 pension plan provide that "service" means continuous employment as an employee without break of any kind, except as provided for in the company's regulations. LOW RENTAL HOUSING PROJECT, MONTREAL

Question No. 401—Mr. Lessard:

1. Is the government aware of the intended construction, by the city of Montreal, of a 250 unit low rental housing project, along boulevard des Trinitaires, at the cost of $3,125,000, 25 per cent of which is to be financed by the city of Montreal and 75 per cent by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?
2. If so, has C.M.H.C. agreed to finance such project on a 75 per cent basis?
3. Do the C.M.H.C. regulations provide for the granting of a loan, in the case of a housing project, outside a slum-clearance area?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to parts 1 and 2 is as follows. On June 8, 1961, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation received a request from the city of Montreal for negotiations to be initiated with respect to a proposed low rental housing project under section 36 of the National Housing Act on land situated along boulevard des Trinitaires. The officials of the corporation are considering the city's request and the recommendation of the corporation will be submitted to the minister shortly.

The answer to part 3 is as follows. If the hon. member has in mind projects undertaken under section 36 of the National Housing Act, it should perhaps be pointed out that these projects are not financed by way of a loan but that they are built and owned by a partnership of the federal government and a province or its agent, which may be a municipality. The capital cost of these projects, as well as the operating losses, are shared 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the province or its agent. Federal-provincial low rental housing may be built on land outside slum clearance areas.

ADDITIONAL EMPLOYMENT THROUGH PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

Question No. 411—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. How much additional employment is it estimated has been provided as a result of the establishment of the national productivity council which the Minister of Labour indicated would have notable results on the level of employment in the next six months after December 14, 1960?
2. What precise action has been taken by the productivity council to achieve these results?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answers to parts 1 and 2 of this question are as follows. Estimates indicate that employment has increased, on a seasonally adjusted basis, by 59,000 over the four months, December 1960 to April 1961. It is impossible to attribute this increase in employment to any one factor. It is also impossible to measure in any precise manner the results achieved from many individual measures. Nevertheless, there is no doubt that the creation of the national productivity council and its activities have had a stimulating effect on employment. The work of the productivity council is also helping to increase general awareness in Canada of the need for greater efficiency in the competitive performance of our economy.

FINANCE

GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the unprecedented request by the government for the immediate resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada and the circumstances related thereto.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Speaker: I would be disposed to ask the house if it is prepared to grant leave, as this matter appears to come within the rule. The only reservation I have is that the government has indicated its intention to bring before the house a proposal which would permit debate on the definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the unprecedented request by the government for the immediate resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada. Before I deal with the matter, perhaps I should hear hon. members.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief submission, not with respect to the importance of the matter itself but purely from the point of view of urgency of debate. I suggest that there might be three reasons why Your Honour would think the motion does not comply with that requirement of the rule. First, you permitted quite a far ranging discussion this morning, in which it is true that Your Honour did apply some limitation as to time, but with respect to which there was not much limitation as to range of debate. At least a full discussion was allowed within the context of the statement made by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, the Leader of the Opposition and the acting leader of the third party expressed, one assumes, the views of their parties in the house.

Second, the Minister of Finance announced today that the budget will be introduced on June 20. At that time, of course, there will be ample opportunity for debate, and that is just six days from now. It is, I suggest, difficult to see why the matter which has already been aired in the house would be so urgent of debate that the budget debate could not be awaited.

Third, Your Honour has yourself just made reference to the fact that the statement of the Minister of Finance indicated that legislation will be laid before parliament shortly to deal with this matter. I understand I have the authority of the minister to say that this will be as rapidly as satisfactory legislation can be drafted.

I would say, therefore, first that there has been quite a full airing of the matter here this morning; second, there is the budget debate; and third, legislation to amend the Bank of Canada Act itself will be introduced shortly, at which time a discussion can take place.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With your permission, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think I need not hear the hon. member unless he wishes to support the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That would be an unusual step for me to take.

Mr. Speaker: The urgent importance of the matter has been demonstrated today. The reservation which I expressed has not been satisfied; that is, I feel it is rather indefinite as to when the government may introduce its measure. We have had a limited debate today, but if the rule is properly invoked then the hon. member is entitled to a fuller discussion which the rules permit. I therefore ask the house whether, in accordance with rule 26, the hon. member has leave to move a motion to adjourn the house to discuss this matter of urgent public importance. Has the hon. member leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those who support the motion will please rise.

And more than 20 members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the rule satisfied, and the hon. member has leave of the house to propose a motion that the house do now adjourn. Mr. Pearson, seconded by the hon. member for Essex East, moves:

That the house do now adjourn.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have already had, though not in the course of debate, something to say on this matter. As you ruled, and quite properly, that a reply to a ministerial statement made on motions is not an occasion for debate, and as this matter is one of very grave importance and of the most immediate urgency, I have thought fitting to move this motion which will give to the members of the house an opportunity to discuss the whole question of the request by the government for the immediate resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada and the circumstances related thereto.

It does not seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that anything the Minister of Finance said this morning removes the necessity for this kind of discussion at this time. It seems to me that it makes the urgency of such a discussion even greater than it was before the minister spoke. The minister made certain statements this morning which are in direct and complete contradiction to statements that have been made by the governor of the Bank of Canada in correspondence which has been made public. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is in the interests of getting this matter cleared up as quickly and as satisfactorily as possible that we should have a discussion.

It is even more important, I believe—and this is one of the reasons for asking for this discussion, as has been pointed out by the acting leader of the C.C.F. group—that the banking and commerce committee should be convened at once for this particular purpose. We have been asking for this during the session. We have been asking for it at a time when the minister has said there was no necessity for it, having given the impression that there was not any fundamental disagreement between the governor of the bank and the minister which would warrant a discussion before a committee. Surely after what the minister has said this morning the government itself would wish to convene the committee and would wish to get these matters cleared up so we can find out what are the facts. The governor could appear before this committee and be questioned about the statements he has made and the communications he has published. The minister would also, of course, wish to appear, and he could be questioned on these and related matters.

Now, I am aware of the fact that the minister said something this morning about the action which the government intends to take by way of submitting a proposal to this parliament. What the form of the proposal will be, we do not know. Perhaps it will be an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act, which I believe the minister has stated previously was the only way by which this kind of change could be made. The Minister of Justice seemed to confirm that statement this morning. It has also been suggested this might be done by order in council. We do not know when this action will be taken. We do not know when this measure, in whatever form it may be, will be submitted to the House of Commons. We do not know whether it will be done before the budget or after the budget.

One of the extraordinary circumstances surrounding this whole sorry business is that it has become tangled up with a budget which should have been introduced weeks ago. I believe I am fair in suggesting, from what the minister has said this morning, that there is a relationship between the bank's monetary and financial policy and government policy. I confess I was very surprised, indeed, this morning to hear the minister say that the government at no time—I hope he will correct me if I am misinterpreting or misquoting what he said—during the consideration of the budget and the negotiations leading up to the budget consulted the governor of the Bank of Canada. You would have thought, Mr. Speaker, during all these weeks of preparation designed, we have been told this morning, to introduce some pretty far reaching financial changes—because those changes were put forward as the basis of the difference between the governor of the Bank of Canada and the government—that the governor of the Bank of Canada would have been consulted. That is an extraordinary position, to say the least.

Mr. Chambers: No one said it.

Mr. Pearson: I hear from over there an interruption that no one said it. The minister said it this morning, and it is on the record. Perhaps my hon. friend who interrupted was not listening to the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: He was too busy applauding.

Mr. Pearson: There are some other reasons why this discussion is most important and urgent and which should be put on the record. A very grave indictment indeed has been made against the governor. But interference and intervention in the affairs of the bank has been dealt with in communications which have been made public by the governor of the bank himself.

This morning the minister said that on May 30 the resignation of the governor of the bank was asked for or requested by the government through the minister. There is no use in the minister trying to take refuge in semantics and suggesting that parliament will decide, and all that he did was to approach the governor. The resignation of the governor was asked for on May 30 in circumstances which are outlined in some detail by the governor himself in public statements.

The minister said this morning that subsequent to that date, until the governor issued his statement yesterday he had no contact with the governor of the bank; no opportunity was given to him by the governor to discuss this matter further after May 30. That is the minister's statement, but let me read what the governor himself has said in a letter to the minister dated June 13, 1961. This letter deals not only with the relationship between the governor and the minister but also with the relationship between the board of directors of the bank and the government. I will read from this letter, Mr. Speaker:

> Further to my letter of June 9 I have now had the benefit of three days' discussion with my board of directors, during which time several of them were in frequent communication by telephone with you.

The nature of some of these communications was made fairly clear by the minister this morning. The letter goes on:

> It became apparent that there were no new arguments to be advanced why I should resign—

Mr. Speaker, I ask the house to take note of this, which is in direct contradiction to what the minister said this morning about the attitude of the directors of the bank over the preceding month. This letter goes on to state:

> —and indeed the directors were all surprised and disturbed when they first heard that you had requested my resignation.

There is one contradiction that should be cleared up and can only be cleared up satisfactorily by a committee holding hearings on this matter, with evidence being taken. The letter goes on:

> Many conversations were held both in the full board meeting and outside it, in the course of which I expressed the view that no valid case had been made for my resignation and that the board had no reason to expect it other than the fact that the government had asked for it.

We on this side of the house certainly have the right to take that position also, because there was no indication, in all the discussions we have had on this subject during this session, at any time by any representative of the government, let alone the Minister of Finance, that the relationship between the bank and the government was such that this action was likely to be taken. I refer to the action which was taken on May 30. Then Mr. Coyne's letter goes on:

> Efforts were made by the directors to arrange for discussion with you—

That is, the Minister of Finance:

> —in order to be absolutely clear that you were aware that there was no issue of substance between the government and the bank or the government and myself prior to your request to me on May 30—

In other words these very same directors, who according to the minister were already dissatisfied with the governor and were looking for his resignation—and these directors were characterized in those terms by the minister in this house this morning—attempted in recent days subsequent to May 30 to get in touch with the minister himself to find out if there was in fact any issue of substance between the government and the bank or the government and the governor. The letter goes on:

> —to be sure that you knew—

That is, the minister knew:

> —that the bank felt bound to support government policies in so far as they had financial implications, as it had always done.

The governor himself said in his statement that it is the duty—and of course it is the duty—of the governor and the bank to support policies of the government. That doctrine had already been laid down emphatically on this side of the house and rejected by this government. Mr. Coyne in his statement and in this letter having said that it is the duty of the bank to support the policy of the government in the field in which both have jurisdiction, and that the bank has always done so, the Minister of Finance gets up this morning and denies that. I have not his words before me, but he certainly gave that impression—and I am sure I am not misrepresenting what he said—when he said that far from supporting the policy of the government, the bank had been acting in contravention of the policies of the government and that that is the reason why these developments took place which required the government to intervene and request the resignation of the governor.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was the main reason the minister gave this morning.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, that was the main reason the minister gave this morning, though the governor indicated in one of his letters that apparently another reason was put forward, which was presumably to bring great pressure to bear on him. I refer to the question of his pension, and I will come to that a little later.

The letter goes on:

Each time your answer—

That is, the answer of the Minister of Finance:

Each time your answer was that the government had made up its mind and there was nothing to discuss.

In a matter of such fundamental importance which has shaken the confidence of the country in the relationship between the bank and the government, after the action taken by the minister on May 30 calling for the resignation of the governor of the bank, in reply to the efforts of the directors of the bank to get in touch with the minister and try to find out, if they could, what was behind all this, according to this letter the minister's reply was that the government had made up its mind and there was nothing to discuss. What a reflection, not only on the attitude of the minister but on the relationship between the minister and the bank. Mr. Coyne's letter goes on:

Finally this morning—

"This morning" is June 13, the date of this letter:

Finally this morning at about ten o'clock, after a further telephone talk with you, it was reported in open meeting of the board of directors that you had said to Mr. Hill that you would not consent to see me to discuss the matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Shame.

Mr. Pearson: And the minister this morning said that Mr. Coyne did not make the effort. I am not quoting the minister's words exactly, but he said Mr. Coyne had not seen him and therefore the minister was surprised at the action taken by Mr. Coyne because he had no opportunity to discuss this matter. In this letter Mr. Coyne said that Mr. Hill, at the meeting of the board of directors, had told the board that the minister would not consent to see the governor to discuss the matter. What an attitude to take in regard to a matter of such very great importance.

So that I will not misquote the minister's words or be unfair to him in any way I would refer to the text of the minister's statement which, it has been called to my attention, was circulated this morning. That statement includes this; I had better read the paragraph:

On May 30, on the instructions of the government, I asked Mr. Coyne to tender his resignation to the board of directors of the bank. I further asked that he do so before the regular board meeting to be held in Quebec on June 12 and 13, so that action might be taken by the board at its meeting on the resignation. I gave him an ample statement of the reasons for the course the government was following. The main reason was that the government was convinced that Mr. Coyne's continuation in office as governor of the Bank of Canada would stand in the way of the implementation of a comprehensive, sound and responsible economic program designed to raise the levels of employment and production in Canada. After an hour's discussion, he asked to be allowed to think the matter over. Presumably his published statement yesterday is his reply to the government's request.

Presumably his public statement yesterday was made after the minister refused to receive him, according to Mr. Coyne's own statement. Presumably also, his public statement yesterday was made after the minister had refused to see the board of directors of the Bank of Canada to discuss this matter with them. This is an almost unbelievable procedure. This is arrogance of a kind which is hard to contemplate, especially in the person of one who in the past used to talk so much in this house about the rights and privileges of parliament and of the individual. Then Mr. Coyne's letter goes on:

It was apparent to all that this closed the door—

It is certainly apparent to anyone who reads this letter, if the facts are as stated, that it closed the door.

—and there were no avenues left by which useful communication could take place.

So the only thing left for Mr. Coyne to do was resign—or else. If a committee were set up to consider this matter we might be able to find out what the "or else" was. We do not know yet. The letter goes on:

I left the meeting to consider my position. In the face of your refusal to see me, I felt it incumbent upon me to issue a statement, of which you have a copy, setting forth very briefly my view of the situation which had been created by the action of the government in this matter.

I subsequently returned to the board meeting (which in the meantime had been dealing with affairs of the industrial development bank) and read to the directors the statement which I had made public at about 11 a.m.

The directors then decided to bring forward a resolution, which I understand had been discussed with you the day before, and which you had demanded that they should pass.

"Which you had demanded that they should pass". This is the statement made in Mr. Coyne's letter. The letter goes on:

> The text of the resolution proposed by Mr. Hill is as follows:

Mr. Hill, I take it, is one of the directors.

> "Resolved that it is in the best interests of the Bank of Canada that the governor do immediately tender his resignation to the board of directors of the bank, and further that this action and decision on the part of the board has been taken after prolonged consideration and with regret."

I can understand a resolution of that kind being passed by the board of directors when the governor had reported to them that the minister who had requested his resignation would no longer see him and talk with him. It is clear that once a government takes an attitude of that kind toward a man in a position such as Mr. Coyne holds and refuses to talk with him or see him, his usefulness as governor of the bank is, to say the least seriously damaged. But let it also be said that this resolution which I have read out contained no reference of any kind to the conduct of the governor; no reference to the resignation being related in any way to the governor's inability to support government policies; no reference to the governor's conduct in any shape or form. The resolution merely says that because of this situation it is now in the best interests of the bank for the governor to resign. Then the letter goes on:

> There was a discussion of the motion. One director spoke against it. I then put the motion to a vote and polled the directors individually. There was one director absent from the meeting. Of those present all voted in favour of the motion save one who registered his vote against.
> After a negative response to my inquiry as to whether there was any further business to come before the meeting, the meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada was terminated.

So much for that aspect of the situation. We shall have to get a lot more facts before we can accept the minister's interpretation of the relationship between the governor and himself referred to in this letter and referred to in the governor's statement in terms which the minister has contradicted this morning and which indeed, the minister himself has contradicted in this house previously. Because if, in fact, as I said a few moments ago, this situation was developing in which the bank was frustrating government policy, then surely it was the duty of the government to bring that situation before the House of Commons.

We introduced a motion on this subject some months ago. There was no suggestion at that time in the discussion, either by the minister or anyone else on the government side, that this bad situation was developing. We asked questions as recently as May 30, the day on which the resignation was requested. There was no indication then from the minister of what he now tells us is the real difficulty, the fact that the governor was frustrating, as the minister says, the policies of the government.

What is even more extraordinary, the minister now says the governor is impeding the carrying out of the government's new, expansionist policy; the expansionist policy, incidentally, of a government which introduced the conversion loan and has done so much to establish the highest interest rates in our history. But there is to be a new, expansionist policy, presumably to be embodied in the long delayed budget, and it would not be possible, according to the government, for the governor to work with the government in the implementation of this policy concerning which they did not talk to the governor at all in the discussions leading up to the budget. In the minister's own words:

> The government's policy is expansionist, aimed at the creation of more trade, more production and more jobs. The policies advocated by Mr. Coyne are restrictionist.

If this is a fact, why did we not hear something about it in the house over the past weeks and months? If this is the way the government feels about Mr. Coyne, why was this matter not brought into the House of Commons where we could have discussed it together with the relationship between the government and the bank? The fact is that this is an ex post facto rationalization of the mess into which the government has got itself by its arbitrary and arrogant behaviour. If in fact the governor of the Bank of Canada could not work in harmony with the government—and he has denied this; he has denied, also, that he did not support its policy and denied that he would not support it—if the governor could not do that, then of course, he should resign. We have been saying that since this session began. Responsibility in these matters, we have repeatedly stated, belongs to the government, and if they feel that the governor is taking action and making speeches and interfering with monetary and fiscal policy then, of course, it is the duty of the governor to resign. That doctrine was laid down by Graham Towers, and it is a doctrine to which we subscribe. But that is not the situation with which we were confronted this session. The minister has denied the validity of that doctrine in the past and said that monetary policy is the responsibility of the Bank of Canada and we have no share in that responsibility at all. In other words the government may interfere with pension arrangements in the bank but not with monetary policy.

When we challenged that doctrine here the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance rejected our challenge and insisted that what the governor did in this field was the governor's responsibility, and that what the governor said in his speeches was also the governor's responsibility, because this is a free country and he should be allowed to speak as a free man if he wished. We now learn from these documents, and I think the minister confirmed this fact this morning, although I am not sure, that he did indeed intervene with Mr. Coyne at one stage back in March, and told him that his speeches were embarrassing the government. Presumably that was after the speech made by Mr. Coyne in New York. I think I am right in saying that.

At that time, when Mr. Coyne was approached and told that his speeches were embarrassing the government, the minister got up in this house and said that he was a free man and could say what he wished. Now the minister informs us that this was the beginning of the end of Mr. Coyne. Mr. Coyne himself refers to this episode in his communication, and apparently admitted the right of the minister to quarrel with his speeches. However, he said in one of his letters that since that time he has made no public statement which could conceivably be of embarrassment to the government. He has also gone on to say that whatever policy, monetary or fiscal, the government sees fit to put into effect, he and the bank should support it or, naturally, he as governor should resign. He had no reason until May 30 to believe that this situation had developed to the point where his resignation could suddenly and shockingly be asked for by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, that is the way this government does business. They allow problems to roll on and on, with the hope that something will happen by which they will disappear; and when the problems become crises, as this one has become a crisis, they take this kind of panic action based on political expediency in the hope of rushing something through which will do away with the crisis.

In this situation there is something else involved which relates to the board of directors, a question which is very much in the public mind, and which has certain sinister significance, namely the change in the pension position. The impression has been created that somehow or other the governor of the bank took action on his own in February, 1960 which increased his pension position, or that he should have prevented the action being taken. An impression of that kind has been given in respect to either negative or positive action on his part, and that this was too much for the high standards of political morality of the Minister of Finance.

In February of 1960, when this action was being taken, the government felt it was lawful action, and on May 30, 1961, the minister suddenly decided how awful it was; it was really terrible. That decision was made on May 30, 1961.

The minister told us this morning, and he reiterated this in his second statement, that he did not know anything about this action taken in February, 1960. He criticized me because I said the deputy minister, as a member of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada, should be present at such a meeting.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You said he was present.

Mr. Pearson: The minister criticized me when I said the deputy minister should be, and probably was, present at that meeting. I was wrong, in that he was not at the meeting. However, the minister tried to create the impression that because the deputy minister was away, and he obviously had a very good reason for not being present, it would make it difficult for the minister to find out what happened. The minister then admitted, and it is just as well he did, that the assistant deputy minister was there.

The Minister of Finance had his assistant deputy minister attending a meeting of directors of the board of the Bank of Canada which made decisions which in the minister's mind, were of such fundamental importance that they were questioned 18 months later; yet he never heard from the assistant deputy minister about those decisions, even though he was there representing the Minister of Finance. Does the minister expect us to believe that the assistant deputy minister of finance made no report and submitted no memorandum in regard to this meeting to the minister? Does the Minister of Finance really ask us to believe that?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is putting a statement I made this morning into question. I have stated that I was not informed what happened at that meeting and that I learned what happened, and of the passing of the by-law, for the first time this spring. That is my statement, and the Leader of the Opposition is calling that statement into question. The assistant deputy minister was present at that meeting, as I mentioned earlier, but I was not made aware of the action taken by the board at that meeting and only learned about it this spring.

Mr. Pearson: That statement of the minister confirms—

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, will the Leader of the Opposition permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly.

Mr. Macdonnell: No one in this house appreciates more than the Leader of the Opposition the burdens carried by the Minister of Finance. Does he think the Minister of Finance is capable even if he worked for 24 hours each day to know every detail of everything that happens in every department with which he is concerned?

Mr. Pearson: I do not consider a meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada as an unimportant thing. That board meets very rarely. I think it meets twice a year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no.

Mr. Pearson: It meets rarely.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It meets regularly.

Mr. Pearson: This meeting took place at a time of great economic difficulty and recession in this country, and I suggest the decisions of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada should be considered to be very important by any minister of finance.

While the Minister of Finance cannot perhaps read every paper that comes from his department, even though, as he has told us, he works 16 hours a day. I think he does, and that there has never been a harder working minister of finance. That makes it all the more incredible that a decision of this kind, of such great importance, was not brought to his attention until a year or so later. That is a very strange way of doing business.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Leader of the Opposition has just said that a statement which I made to this house, and repeated this morning, is incredible. I made that statement, which the Leader of the Opposition has now said is incredible. The rules of this house are quite clear in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood the hon. member to say that it was incredible that this decision was not brought to his attention. That is perhaps a little different than what the minister suggests. It is correct, of course, that the house must accept a statement made by an hon. member from his place in respect to a matter peculiarly within his own knowledge.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess at one o'clock the question had arisen as to the incredulity or otherwise of a situation where a meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada could be held at which important decisions were taken and those decisions not be brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance. The minister has said that that was the situation and of course I accept his word, but it certainly is astonishing to say the least that in a situation of this kind in those circumstances the minister would not know what was going on; and a year and a half later would raise the issue with the governor.

It is true the deputy minister was not at this meeting; I believe he was at a funeral. The assistant deputy minister was there and therefore the situation undoubtedly is, from our point of view, one that inspires astonishment if not incredulity.

This whole sorry business, Mr. Speaker, is depressing evidence of the unprecedented break-down in relation between the governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance. This break-down is disturbing to parliament; it is certainly disturbing to the business and financial community in Canada, and indeed abroad, and it is bad for business confidence in this country at a time when such confidence is so important.

The minister has emphasized that this has been developing over the months and the reason he had to take this kind of action on May 30 was that the governor of the Bank of Canada was standing in the way of an expansionist policy of the government, and that this had been clear. He referred to two previous budgets to show the difference between them. This brings us back a couple of years. While it may be clear to the minister now that the Bank of Canada was adopting a restrictionist policy at the time when the government wished to put into effect an expansionist policy in the monetary and economic field, it was not clear to the minister on February 21 of this year. That was the day when we on this side of the house criticized some of the policies of the Bank of Canada because in our view they were restrictionist. Did the minister agree with us then and give us an assurance that something would be done? Not at all. If hon. members will turn to page 2265 of Hansard they will see where the minister challenged our criticism and put statistics on the record to show that the Bank of Canada's monetary policy had been expansionist. What happened between February 21 and June 13 to cause the minister to change his mind so completely in this matter and to use his changed position to justify the action taken on May 30?

It is interesting to note that in that same debate the minister had this to say about the responsibilities of the government in these matters, as reported at page 2264 of Hansard:

> I made my statement with reference to over-all financial policy in Canada. I do not think there is anything in that statement which ought to be interpreted as supporting the thesis put forward by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday that under the provisions enacted by parliament with respect to the Bank of Canada Act, the government has power to direct the Bank of Canada or to call upon the Bank of Canada to observe a position of responsibility to the government as such, rather than to parliament.

In other words, on February 21 the minister said that he and the government have no authority "to call upon the Bank of Canada to observe a position of responsibility to the government", and yet on May 30 he calls in the governor of the Bank of Canada and says, "I want your resignation".

Let me also put on the record the proper doctrine, the doctrine which has always been accepted until recent months, on this matter of relationship between the government and the bank. I would refer to the banking and commerce committee of 1954 when the minister of today, a private member of the opposition of that day, was questioning the governor of the Bank of Canada of that day. He asked Mr. Towers a question on this matter and he received this reply. I quote from page 715 of the proceedings and evidence of the committee of that year. Mr. Towers said:

> The government, of course, either through the deputy minister of finance, who is a member of the board and of the executive committee, or through quite frequent conversations between the governor and the Minister of Finance, is always aware of what the Bank of Canada is doing.

I wonder whether these quite frequent conversations which, in the opinion of the previous governor, were so desirable and necessary, have been going on in the last year or two between the minister and the present governor? If not, why not?

Then the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) asked this question:

> For instance, in 1948 and in 1951, when you urged the chartered banks to restrict credit, was that advice given without the government first having been consulted by you?

Mr. Towers replied:

> The government would be aware that we were going to have the conversations. They would be aware, at least through the deputy minister.

Then the following exchange occurred:

> Q. And having offered no objection, I suppose one could say they were parties to it, at least in the sense that they did not interfere?
> A. Yes, because automatically, indeed, they must be parties to everything the central bank does unless they signify to the contrary.

Presumably, the hon. member for Eglinton was happy at that time to hear that doctrine expressed by the governor of the bank. It is certainly a quite startling contradiction of the doctrine he put forward this morning. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, we all recognize, that the views of the governor, even his right to express those views, are often controversial. This has been the case in respect of some statements that he, the governor, has made in the last year or two. These views have been questioned by many and they have been supported by many. Indeed, in this house members on this side have questioned the validity of some of the views put forward by the governor of the Bank of Canada. But what was the attitude of the government when we took that position? In all the discussions when we were the ones who were questioning some of these views there was not a word from the government either in defence or in criticism of the governor of the bank but rather a shrugging of the shoulders and the indication that monetary policy had nothing to do with them.

Mr. Coyne's views may have been criticized and they may or they may not be in dispute, but I do not think it is in dispute that he is a man of high principle and integrity who is devoted to the public service and to his duty and is uninfluenced by unworthy considerations. Therefore, whatever we may think about the validity of some parts of his economic doctrine, surely he should not be persecuted or victimized or misrepresented for stating his views when the Minister of Finance says that the governor has every right as a free Canadian so to do.

In the minister's statement this morning, the text of which I have now had the opportunity to read, the Minister of Finance had this to say:

> As I indicated earlier, it is not my intention to comment in detail on Mr. Coyne's statement. I should like, however, to make two observations. First, by referring to a "mysterious and alarming" program which the government is contemplating, Mr. Coyne may have left a certain false impression with the public.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is in quotes.

Mr. Pearson: That is in quotes, "mysterious and alarming" program. I say that by using those words in that context the minister has indeed left a false impression as to what Mr. Coyne said. I have a copy of Mr. Coyne's statement before me, as the minister must have had before him, and here is what Mr. Coyne said:

> The Minister of Finance has suggested to me that another reason the government wanted me out of the way was that they were preparing certain programs which were apparently thought to be of such character that I would oppose them.

He mentioned "certain programs" and that is the only expression he used. Then Mr. Coyne went on to say in his statement:

> This mysterious and alarming suggestion has not been clarified.

"Mysterious and alarming" were the words used by Mr. Coyne to describe the suggestion that he would be opposing the program of the government. The minister takes those words, puts them in front of the word "program" and thereby certainly misrepresents what Mr. Coyne said. It is obvious on the face of it, of course. The minister said:

> ... by referring to a "mysterious and alarming" program—

Mr. Coyne made no such reference and the minister owes it to him to withdraw that statement. The minister went on to say in his statement, from the text of which I now quote:

> Perhaps the best way to dispel this impression is for me to say at once that Mr. Coyne has not been told of the contents of the forthcoming budget—

This is the governor of the Bank of Canada and the budget has been under consideration for many months.

> —and, therefore, has no right whatsoever to express views about it. Second, Mr. Coyne has asserted that he has been given no indication of disagreement with his views on economic policy. In my last two budgets and in various other public statements, it has been clear for some time that there have been major differences of opinion with the frequently expressed views of the governor on economic matters.

If there have been major differences of opinion of that kind dating back for two budgets, why did the minister not get up in the house and state these differences of opinion? The minister said that finally his patience was exhausted. What patience? How often has the minister discussed these matters with the governor of the Bank of Canada in an effort to clear up these differences of opinion? According to the governor in his statement, the minister refused to see him after May 30. The fact is that it is clear on the face of it and confirmed by what has happened since May 30 that there has been a failure on the part of the government to establish adequate communication with the bank. There has been a failure to consult, to advise and to discuss. Obviously there has been a break-down in this important relationship, the result of which was the request from the Minister of Finance on May 30 for the governor of the bank to resign immediately on the ground that there is a fundamental difference of policy with regard to economic and financial matters between the governor and the government. Here is what Mr. Coyne has to say about that. Let the minister deal with this statement.

> I may add that at no time has the government expressed disagreement with the operations of the Bank of Canada under my management, either in the field of monetary policy, or in those fields in which we act solely as agents and under the instructions of the Minister of Finance, namely, in debt management and in operation of the exchange fund. There has likewise never been any occasion on which the Bank of Canada has failed to co-operate, so far as it was concerned in the matter, in support of government policy. In financial matters we have always loyally played our part in carrying out positive government policies.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the only way we will get down to the facts of the matter is to have a committee before which Mr. Coyne can appear and the minister can appear. Various explanations have been given outside the house, of course, to explain this crisis, this whole sorry business. Mr. John Meyer of the Montreal Gazette had this to say in his editorial this morning:

> One St. James street source put it this way:
> "Mr. Coyne isn't winning any votes for Mr. Diefenbaker so Mr. Coyne has to go."

That is another variation of the "heads will roll" approach of the government. Mr. John Meyer also had this to say in another article:

> It was, as Mr. Coyne says, "A slander upon my own integrity which I cannot ignore or accept."

This refers to the pension.

> This will be how the public as well will interpret the government's action. In seeking to discredit Mr. Coyne, the government has succeeded only in discrediting itself.

Mr. Grafftey: The Liberal party's new attitude to St. James street.

Mr. Pearson: I would welcome any serious interruption by the hon. and learned financial pundit on my left. The issue before us, Mr. Speaker, is very important but a very simple one. If the government ask parliament to remove the governor of the Bank of Canada because the governor has in fact prevented them from implementing their monetary and financial policies, and if that can be established through a parliamentary inquiry, then, of course, we on this side would support his removal. That has been the relationship we have put forward all along and we would support it now. That has been the relationship, that has been the doctrine which has been opposed by the government.

If in fact the government can do this, if they can establish that they have been so opposed, the governor of the Bank of Canada should resign. We would support that course in those circumstances because we believe that our system of responsible government would necessitate such a course. We do not think that any public servant should be in a position where he can prevent a democratic government from implementing its policies. But, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has not made that case. Indeed all his observations in the last six months in the house challenge the validity of that case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Four years.

Mr. Pearson: He has never at any time given us any reason to believe that this was the situation, and when members on this side have suggested that perhaps there has been some difficulty he has pooh-poohed that suggestion. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we will not support the government in any attempt, and it appears now they are going to make an attempt, to use the governor as a scapegoat, and to use a phony issue to cover up their own mismanagement of the country's affairs and obscure their own failures, to conceal their own confusion.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I believe that most of us will agree that we are debating this issue under a very great handicap, namely the lack of adequate information. We have not had a budget brought down as yet, and until we have had a look at the budget we cannot really understand what is meant by a possibility that the governor of the Bank of Canada may have serious reservations about the contents of the budget. Also, we have not been told what the proposed legislation is going to contain. I assume, since the minister mentioned legislation, that the government is contemplating the Bank of Canada Act. This is a move of great significance, and the information as to the intended legislation as well as the contents of the budget would enable us to debate the issue before us now in a much more intelligent manner.

I feel that the government has been negligent in not making this information available to us. However, I believe that at least all of us in the opposition would readily agree that the whole government is in a mess. The government did not expect the governor of the Bank of Canada to have the guts that history has now proven he has. They did not expect he would release to the public the information that he has released. In looking over this whole affair, it is obvious to me that "John" has won out over "Don". It appears that there is going to be the introduction of a new attitude on the part of the government toward Canadian economic problems.

The government, of course, is looking for an out. They remember only too well what happened the last time a Conservative government was unable to meet the needs of the Canadian people. This Conservative government, under the late Mr. Bennett, made a deathbed repentance in 1935. I believe the intention is to repeat that deathbed repentance by the introduction of some rather large, comprehensive new programs in order to help the people forget all the disappointments of the years since 1957. The government has to find an individual who can be used as a scapegoat. It is obvious to me at least that the governor of the Bank of Canada is intended to be the scapegoat so that the members who support the government will be able to pillory him during the next election campaign. I believe it is for this reason that the pension arrangements have been introduced into the argument.

We are not, in any way, defending the $25,000 a year pension. However, the government knows very well that private banks retire their governors on a much higher pension than even the $25,000, and at least one other civil servant, namely the head of the Canadian National Railways, would be entitled to an even higher pension than the one the board of directors arranged for the retiring governor of the Bank of Canada. In addition, I have read the act very carefully and I find no possibility of the government having any kind of voice in determining the level of the pensions of ex-employees of the Bank of Canada.

The pension matter was mentioned by the governor in his release to the press on June 13 last. If one reads this release very carefully, one is almost inclined to be a little suspicious that he was, in effect, advised that if he would be a nice boy and sneak away quietly the government might consider leaving his pension at $25,000 a year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is utterly untrue.

Mr. Regier: However, Mr. Coyne is a very responsible man, and Mr. Coyne also relates his responsibility to the board of directors. He says in paragraph 1:

He said the government—

The "he" refers to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

—were considering what action to take in the matter of the pension, had not yet come to a decision, and wanted my resignation before they came to a decision.

The only conclusion I can come to from reading that part is that he was, in effect, told to be a nice little boy and we—the government—will not be overly harsh with you in the matter of reducing your pension. I do not believe the pension could be reduced without an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act.

There is another matter that alarms me. There is no indication that anywhere along the line a serious difference of opinion existed between the board of directors and the governor. We hear now that last night, by an almost unanimous vote, the board of directors has asked for Mr. Coyne's resignation. I believe the minister owes it to this house to inform us as to why there has been an apparent change of heart on the part of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada. I, for one, would like to know how many consultations the minister has had with how many members of the board on the matter of taking the action that the board took last night when they finally asked for the resignation of the governor. In all the correspondence we have been allowed to see, there has been no indication that at any time the board of directors was dissatisfied or displeased with the work of the governor. However, we find that at the very crucial moment the board of directors asked for the resignation of this man.

I agree at once that the Bank of Canada must work in harmony with the government of Canada. I believe that is essential. The Minister of Finance, for a very good reason, is the only owner, on behalf of all the people of Canada, of this institution known as the Bank of Canada, and that would not be so were the intention not that the Bank of Canada should work in harmony with the government of the day. I had always assumed that they were working in harmony and this revelation is rather surprising to us. In the past there has not been any appearance of a conflict. I had always considered Mr. Coyne and the minister to be good, true blue Conservatives when it came to financial matters. I would like to indicate that in my opinion a conflict did not appear to exist in previous years. Reading from page 1063 of Hansard of November 13, 1957, the Hon. James Sinclair the then member for Coast-Capilano, asked the minister:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Actually it is a repetition of a question he was asked last Monday in Oakville, which he refused to answer on the ground that he could not answer it outside the House of Commons. Since he is now inside the House of Commons I should like to ask him, has there been a clash of opinions between the Bank of Canada and the government on economic policy?
> [Mr. Regier.]

The answer of the minister was:

> I am not aware of anything that could be called a clash.

Mr. Sinclair asked another question:

> A supplementary question. Does that mean the Minister of Finance is now in accord with the policy of the Bank of Canada which he called an unhappy legacy earlier this session?

The minister replied:

> The expression "unhappy legacy" does not apply only to what the hon. gentleman has just mentioned. There are a good many things in the unhappy legacy to which that expression ought to apply. When the time comes to deal with any questions of policy in the house I can assure the hon. gentleman that they will be dealt with fully.

I should like to underline the last word "fully". The minister has never on any occasion, in the years that have intervened since November 13, 1957, indicated that there was the slightest clash of opinion between himself and the governor of the Bank of Canada.

If there is a basic conflict, as the minister now seems to contend, I believe parliament is entitled to know what that basic conflict is and I hope, at least, the minister when he replies later on in the afternoon is going to be much more explicit as to the basic conflict than he was in his rather bland assertions this morning.

I had always assumed the two men were both excellent Conservatives. I realize, of course, that the governor of the bank was not appointed by this minister, but he was appointed by the equally Tory minded minister who preceded him. The minister mentions one possible clash. He complains—and these were his words—of Mr. Coyne's rigid attitude on the maintenance of high interest rates, as one example.

I can remember very well that the two men who led the campaign in Canada in favour of higher interest rates were our present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and our Minister of Finance. I have reference to their television appearance on the subject of the bond conversion loan.

An hon. Member: Ridiculous.

Mr. Regier: It may well have been the governor of the Bank of Canada, I will probably never know, who hatched that nefarious scheme, but the two leading spokesmen on its behalf in Canada were our Minister of Finance and our Prime Minister.

We now realize that interest rates in Canada are on an average a number of percentage points higher than they were at the time when this government assumed office, and I feel this government must assume responsibility for that. It is in very poor taste, to say the least, for them, after four years in office to now all of a sudden be blaming the governor of the Bank of Canada for pursuing a policy which they claim was in contradiction to government policy, in maintaining a rigid attitude on the maintenance of high interest rates. I believe the government cannot successfully escape its responsibility in this regard.

I notice also, in connection with the minister's attempt to blame the governor of the bank for high interest rates, that as reported at page 3093 of Hansard for April 27, 1959, the minister had this to say:

I think I should begin this reply, Mr. Speaker, by a reference to what actually has occurred in the money market of Canada. We have had a money market in this country now for approximately the last four years. Money markets are not greatly different from commodity markets in this respect, that they are governed, not entirely but very largely, by the law of supply and demand. Obviously if the demand is large in relation to supply the return on borrowings must be larger—

Yet today we are told the rigid policy of the governor of the Bank of Canada has been responsible for these high interest rates. At page 3095 the minister went on:

Then, the Bank of Canada, on November 1, 1956 set its rates in terms of a formula attached to the treasury bill rate.

Then a little later on:

Let us bear in mind that the government of Canada does not establish the Bank of Canada rate.

He continued:

The Bank of Canada, by an act of the parliament of Canada, is responsible for monetary policy, and this bank rate, as it is called, is set each week by the Bank of Canada in the exercise of its statutory powers.

This policy that was begun on November 1, 1956, was for the Bank of Canada rate to be automatically tied to the current rate payable on treasury bills. The Bank of Canada, as of that November 1, no longer determined the rate excepting that it attached an increase of a certain constant amount to the yield realized whenever the government offered treasury bills.

On the problem of tight money, at page 1444 of Hansard of February 27, 1959, the minister had this to say. I asked the minister this question:

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, of which I have not given him notice. Is the minister in a position to inform the house as to the effect on the Canadian economy of yesterday's announcement by the Bank of Canada of a new discount rate of 4.32 per cent, and does he still feel as he did on February 13 that this represents a fluctuation within a not very wide range?

The minister replied:

The rate on treasury bills over the past two weeks is approximately what it was when the Liberal government went out of office.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) interjected:

Tight money.

I then asked a supplementary question:

I should like to follow that with a supplementary question. Is the government taking any measures to establish a rediscount rate independent of the weekly offerings of treasury bills, or is this government now endorsing the tight money policy of the former government?

The minister proceeded to give me a considerable lecture, and I am getting used to them by now. He replied:

The hon. gentleman, if he is acquainted with what has been happening in the money markets of this continent, must be aware that interest rates have been rising rapidly in the United States. This has had an inevitable effect on interest rates in this country.

Today the minister is blaming the governor of the Bank of Canada for the unduly high levels of interest rates that have been prevailing. In my opinion the minister has been very long in arriving at this conclusion. If he had accepted his responsibilities as the sole owner of the Bank of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada, if this actually was happening the minister should have warned the Canadian people and should have taken action many years ago along the line he is now proposing. He would have saved the people of Canada a lot of the needless misery that unemployment has caused our country. The minister cannot rightfully claim that the governor of the Bank of Canada was responsible.

The minister further claims that the governor is not aware of the contents of the proposed budget. This sounds almost unbelievable, and had the minister not made that claim I would even label it as fantastic. Does the minister mean to say that before a budget is brought down—and I know the minister has no research facilities in his department—exceeding $5 billion—

Mr. Benidickson: Seven billion dollars.

Mr. Regier: —the effects of that budget are not called to the attention of the responsible people in the Bank of Canada? If that is the case, I say that the minister is completely unworthy of presenting a budget in this house. That is one of the purposes of the Bank of Canada, and if the minister is taxing the people of Canada to the tune of almost $6 billion a year without prior consultation with the bank on these matters I think he has been most derelict in discharging the duties assigned to him.

I am of the opinion that Mr. Coyne likely knows much more about the contents of the budget which is to come down than the minister is aware. I know the minister made his claim honestly, believing it to be true. However, in the release to the press which he prepared Mr. Coyne said this:

Governor of Bank of Canada

The Minister of Finance has suggested to me that another reason the government wanted me out of the way was that they were preparing certain programs which were apparently thought to be of such a character that I would oppose them.

Later on, he said:

It is for the government to disclose to the public what it is they are planning to do.

I think that is so. I think it is for the government to disclose to the public what they are planning to do. However, the governor, who is an honourable man, thought it would be way out of line for him to tell the public about any action which the government planned to take. He says:

It is for the government to disclose to the public what it is they are planning to do. I have never opposed government policy and do not wish to do so. It is conceivable at some stage and in some circumstances it would be the duty of the governor of the bank to resign on an important question of principle or policy.

Yet the government wants Mr. Coyne out of the way before the budget is brought down. If relations are as the minister described them as being this morning, I think the honourable course would be to bring down the budget and then to see whether Mr. Coyne would carry out his pledge to work with the government in a co-operative spirit as I understand he has repeatedly assured the government he is anxious to do. The statement which I have just read is an indication that if Mr. Coyne found himself honestly unable to support the government in its proposal then, in his opinion, it would be his duty to hand in his resignation. I see nothing dishonourable in the course proposed throughout this controversy by Mr. Coyne, though I can find much that is reprehensible, to say the least, in this obvious attempt by the government to rid itself of the governor of the Bank of Canada without the public knowing anything about it. It is apparent that an effort was made to persuade Mr. Coyne to fold his tent like the Arabs and move away. I think the government has made a miscalculation inasmuch as they did not expect that Mr. Coyne would appeal to the public with regard to the methods being used by the government. I believe Mr. Coyne knows much more about the budget than the minister supposes and that he has very strong views on what is contained in it.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, the hon. member repeatedly suggests that Mr. Coyne knows all about the budget. We have the assurance of the Minister of Finance that the budget is still locked in his own brain. Regardless of party we all respect the Minister of Finance, and I suggest that this repeated allegation, which is in direct contradiction to the minister's statement, is almost an insult and that it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member who raises this point of order may recall what has been said earlier. He may remember that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam did accept unreservedly the statement of the minister that as far as he knew, within his knowledge, Mr. Coyne did not know about the budget. The other statement is, to my mind, a different statement and I do not think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam can properly be asked to withdraw it.

Mr. Regier: I believe the government owes it to parliament and to the country at this time to disclose the nature of the major moves which are being contemplated by the administration because we cannot adequately assess this situation which now faces us without that information. It may be the government is contemplating a billion dollar deficit in an attempt to win an early election. It may be the government is contemplating the sale of crown corporations—I notice that Mr. Coyne refers to these corporations—and thus may be linked with the announcement of the Prime Minister that the next election will be based on socialism versus free enterprise. Or, it may have something to do with the proposed disposal of mortgages, and over a billion dollars worth of them are held by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If it were possible to sell these successfully I can see how the government might embark on an ambitious vote catching program without having to increase taxation or, necessarily, incurring a deficit. I should like to refer to one of the statements made by the minister in his speech this morning. He said:

At this stage I must confine myself to placing before the house the essential facts virtually none of which appear in that statement.

"That statement" refers obviously to the release issued by Mr. Coyne. I should like to ask the minister to tell us exactly which of the statements made by the governor of the Bank of Canada he denies. I should like to have a list of the statements made by Mr. Coyne and contained in this three-page press release of June 13 that are being denied by the minister. More specifically I should like to have the minister reconcile the reports of the meeting which was held last night in Quebec city when the board of directors asked the governor to resign. The governor, in a letter dated June 13 addressed to the minister had this to say in the final paragraph:

After a negative response to my inquiry as to whether there was any further business to come before the meeting, the meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada was terminated.

Yet the minister, in his monstrous attempts to cast reflections on the integrity of the governor of the Bank of Canada, reported that Mr. Coyne took an altogether different action. On page 3 of what the minister had to tell us this morning this version appears:

> Mr. Coyne polled the directors. The resolution was carried by a vote of nine to one. Mr. Coyne did not vote. Having declared the motion carried, Mr. Coyne then immediately adjourned the meeting.
> In doing so, he not only defied the formally expressed wish of the board that he should resign immediately in the interests of the bank, he made it impossible for them to proceed to consider what action might be taken in the face of this defiance.

Obviously Mr. Coyne has given us a wrong report of what happened, or the minister has misunderstood the report of what actually happened and conveyed the misunderstanding, through his own interpretation of what took place. However, the allegation contained in this discrepancy is a very important one to Mr. Coyne and to all of us who are interested in accurate reporting and the maintenance of the reputations of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Coyne reports that after the vote was taken and recorded he asked whether there was any other business to come before the board. No one said anything so the meeting was adjourned. The minister has indicated that Mr. Coyne made it impossible for the board to proceed with any other business that was before it at the time. There is a contradiction there of a very serious nature.

I hope the minister, in the interest of accuracy, and I know he does wish to be accurate, will clear this matter up. I hope he is able to tell us that Mr. Coyne wrongly reported what took place at the meeting, or that he was in error, or that one of his advisers supplied him with wrong advice, because I cannot imagine the minister deliberately making a statement with such implications. He either made the statement knowing that he was not accurately reporting what did take place, or was unaware of the fact that he was in error.

After blaming Mr. Coyne for his rigid attitude in maintaining high interest rates, the minister goes on to blame him for other things. Before I resume my seat I should like to make it very clear that we have always assumed that Mr. Coyne and the minister were working together in harmony. We have had no indication, either in the policies of this government or in the statements made by the governor of the Bank of Canada, that there was a basic conflict in the attitudes of the Bank of Canada and the government of Canada. However, we do claim that the two must work in harmony. If the minister can supply us with adequate reason, substantiated by facts and not by mere assertions, that the governor of the Bank of Canada has been working against the announced policies of this government then, of course, we should have no alternative but to support the demand of the government that the governor of the Bank of Canada resign because we still contend, in spite of everything the minister has said over the years, that this government is responsible for the monetary policies of Canada and it cannot evade that responsibility.

I am pleased to note that in at least one respect this government has now returned to that attitude which was once held by the minister himself when he was in opposition. However, I regret very much that this whole situation has to be part of an election campaign, and that one of our most highly esteemed federal civil servants, even though he was a Tory, has to have his name blackened and smeared by a government which is so ruthlessly desperate to win re-election it feels it must resort to measures of this kind.

Mr. C. A. Cathers (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about this very serious subject. I suggest it is serious in view of the fact that I have never before seen the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) so het up as he was today.

Mr. Habel: You ain't seen nothing yet.

Mr. Cathers: I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he get his facts straight, following the example set by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who, I understand, took history lectures from him at university in the 1920's.

I should like to draw attention to the statement the Leader of the Opposition made regarding Mr. Jack Bryden, who was a director of the Bank of Canada, and the implication therein contained. That hon. member was brought up sharply by the Minister of Finance who stated that he knew with assurance that Mr. Bryden resigned from the Bank of Canada on his own initiative due to the fact that his other duties were very heavy.

I have known Jack Bryden for at least 30 years. He is a fine, upright, brilliant economist and the head of one of the large life insurance companies. I have very high regard for him, and think it was very small on the part of the Leader of the Opposition to cast the aspersion which he did, on the reputation of Mr. Bryden.

Another example of the type of statement the Leader of the Opposition makes without having checked the facts, was presented this morning when the Minister of Finance informed him that the deputy minister was not at the meeting of directors when the change in pension was made. The Leader of the Opposition then corrected his statement. I suggest he should have lectured in mathematics at the university, a little more exacting subject than history.

I have had special interest in the Bank of Canada for a good number of years because, in 1934, when that great Canadian, R. B. Bennett, incorporated the Bank of Canada as a private enterprise, the shares were sold to Canadians. I had one share certificate which I cherished but it was redeemed because of the policies of the last Liberal government. I can remember the year 1935 as though it was last night, when Mackenzie King went out on the hustings. I attended a meeting on College street in Toronto when Hugh Plaxton the Liberal candidate announced the policy of the Liberal party, saying that if that party was elected it would nationalize the Bank of Canada. That government, of course, was elected and did nationalize the bank. For that reason I suggest we can now lay the blame on the opposition side of this house for the troubles we are having.

Mr. R. B. Bennett established the Bank of Canada originally on the same basis as the Bank of England, and I wish it was still that way because I am sure we would not have had the problems with which we are faced today.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are back to old R. B. again.

Mr. Cathers: Yes, sir.

Mr. Hellyer: Are you going to denationalize the bank?

An hon. Member: Get on your motorcycle and ride away.

Mr. Pickersgill: You do not like it.

Mr. Cathers: I should think hon. members would hesitate to bring personalities into this debate, particularly in reference to the presidents and heads of our crown corporations. I believe it is quite unfair for any hon. member to engage in personalities in this house in respect of individuals who find themselves in positions in which they cannot defend themselves. I refer particularly to the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who, with his flair for publicity, stood up and demanded that Donald Gordon resign. I was very sorry to hear some of our own party members concur with that statement because I do not agree with that type of practice at all. If we intend to have good men at the head of our corporations it ill behooves us to stand up in this house and verbally cut them down. We certainly cannot expect to build up the morale or prestige of those organizations by appointing individuals and then immediately criticizing them.

Mr. Benidickson: What about the governor?

Mr. Cathers: How many members have risen in their places in this house—and this applies particularly to the hon. member for Port Arthur—and criticized Donald Gordon for not making the railroad pay? When Donald Gordon as head of the Canadian National Railways has endeavoured to put some efficiency into the operation of the railways how many times has the hon. member for Port Arthur and others opposed it? Time after time they have done this. When the C.P.R. lays off men because they have no work for them, or tries to eliminate costs, we do not hear about it in this house, but every time the C.N.R. does it we hear about it. I defy any man to manage the Canadian National Railways on the basis on which we are trying to operate it.

In the late 1920's Sir Henry Thornton was president of the Canadian National Railways and there were kicks about his methods of running the railroad. I defy any man—

Mr. Pickersgill: The Tories cut his throat as well.

Mr. Cathers: I hesitate to engage in personalities with respect to the governor of the Bank of Canada but the opposition have asked for it. I support the Minister of Finance in the action he has taken.

Let us take a look at this Mr. Coyne. Who is he? He graduated from the university of Manitoba in 1931. He was a Rhodes scholar. I commend him for that. He took up law and was engaged in the practice of law from 1934 to 1938, and then he got a job as secretary in the Bank of Canada. I believe he was in the armed forces for a couple of years during the war. He came back and became deputy governor of the bank. But what experience did the man have to operate a bank? I do not set myself up as an authority on the operation of a central bank but I was engaged in finance and I do know that two and two make four. I have sometimes wondered in the last year, when I have read Mr. Coyne's speeches, whether he knows that two and two make four. The first speech I read was the one he made in Calgary when he said we were spending far beyond our means. Well, he is the governor of the Bank of Canada and he had a certain amount of control over things. Consumer buying had gone up; consumer credit had expanded and he could have controlled that very easily. He should not have waited until 1960 to start his program.

Another point he made had to do with foreign investment coming into Canada. He said that if we stopped it and lived within our means it would help the unemployment situation. Well, gentlemen, I was at the other place—

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget the ladies.

Mr. Cathers: —and I heard the members of the other place try to find out what his solutions were. I wish the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) could have been there to hear what the governor had to say, because I as the chairman of the banking and commerce committee would have liked to have Mr. Coyne appear before our committee—

Mr. Hellyer: Why didn't you?

Mr. Cathers: I would have liked it but after—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Because the Minister of Finance would not let you.

Mr. Cathers: Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Cathers: I will give you the answer. After going to the Senate committee on manpower and listening to the deliberations and Mr. Coyne's cure for unemployment—he said he had all the plans, he had all the solutions for this and that—I came to a different conclusion. Let hon. members ask the senators how much they got out of him; and they were not Conservative senators. The first thing I took exception to after we were elected was his statement when he was accused of operating under a tight money policy. We came in, in 1957. I used the statement because I know I was right. The statement said we were operating the Bank of Canada on a tight money policy. The governor denied it. I understand that the Liberals had some doubts about Mr. Coyne. As a matter of fact, I have heard that they laid a great deal of the blame for losing the 1957 election on the tight money policy.

This morning the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) was disturbed. I think the reason he was disturbed was that he would have liked, and those on the other side would have liked, to see Mr. Coyne continue in his position so that his policies might help to defeat us.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. members have been quite slow in coming to that conclusion; it has taken four years.

Mr. Cathers: I do not know that we have been so slow.

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. member does not mind wrecking the country but he does not want to lose the election.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Speak for yourself.

Mr. Grafftey: There are no Mackenzie Kings in our party.

Mr. Cathers: I think that if we had had Mr. Coyne before the banking and commerce committee we would have further advertised what the Liberals have been advertising all over the world, namely that conditions in Canada are not good. They have enjoyed the gloom and this is another example. The hon. member for Essex East has been trying every day to get the governor of the Bank of Canada before the committee in order further to depress foreign credit. I should like to point out to hon. members the danger of weakening our foreign credit. We need the money from foreign investments in this country to develop our resources and we cannot get along without it. I know because I was in the investment business for a long time. I know the attitude of United States investors toward Canada. It has taken a long time to build up and establish the fine credit we have in foreign countries. I think speeches such as those delivered by Mr. Coyne last year have undone a great deal of the good done in past years.

He has made reference to foreign investment in Canada. This foreign investment did not really start until 1949, when the foreign exchange control regulations were lifted and foreign capital came in. It came here because Canada was a safe haven for investment for people all over the world. I recall being in Switzerland in 1951 and talking to the bankers there. The reason they were so inclined to invest in Canada was that they knew us, that we were honest and that we had no exchange regulations.

Mr. Benidickson: And at that time we had a good government.

Mr. Cathers: The good government referred to is the government that is responsible. They saw what was happening. It started in 1949 and continued thereafter and if they thought it was such a bad thing they could have done something to remedy the situation.

There is something else which arouses a great deal of fear in my mind with respect to Mr. Coyne and that is his judgment with regard to foreign investment. In one of his statements he said that in companies in Canada for which the capital has been provided by foreign investment the majority of the directors should be Canadian. Can you imagine people handing their money over to strangers and saying, "Here is the money; you run our business". That is an impossible situation.

Mr. Pugh: He does not believe in directors anyway.

Mr. Cathers: There might be something in that. I have looked at the Bank of Canada Act and I see that the directors of the bank have the right to set salaries and that the governor of the bank has freedom and there is to be no interference by the government. Some 18 months ago the directors of the Bank of Canada took a certain action, on whose prompting I do not know, although I suspect there must have been persuasion on the part of the governor of the bank. They did something that I think is unforgivable. They increased his pension from a little less than $12,000 a year to $25,000 a year. According to the Bank of Canada Act, that action should have been approved by the governor in council. If this had been done in a private company the directors would have had to have their action approved at the annual meeting of shareholders. No approval was obtained in this case and the matter was not heard of until nearly 16 months later.

I should like to ask the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), who has been such a staunch supporter of Mr. Coyne, what he thinks of this pension of $25,000 a year. Here is a person who started working for the Bank of Canada as a young man in 1938. He is only 50 now and he will have a pension of $25,000 a year. The hon. member for Essex East has been a member of the house since 1935 and I believe I am correct in saying that if he were to retire tomorrow he would have a pension of $3,000 a year. I do not know of a single instance in the business world where a man who started at the bottom in 1938 would receive a pension of $25,000 a year after 23 years.

I think that the way Mr. Coyne has behaved himself since May 30 has been entirely improper. He must have known that a request for his resignation would be made because he had heard from professors, from the banks and from the investment dealers that they were not in agreement with his policies. I admire the Minister of Finance for the way he has protected this man. I cannot condone the action of this group of professors in writing a letter to the press. I cannot approve of their action in belittling the governor of the Bank of Canada in the way they did. If the Minister of Finance had been looking for an opportunity to get rid of Mr. Coyne, it would have been the easiest thing for him to have used the writing of this letter as a reason for doing so. But no, he was protecting a servant of the government, and I commend the minister for it.

I have talked with presidents of the chartered banks and my old colleagues in the investment business and I know they have no confidence in the governor of the Bank of Canada. I also know that the bankers and business people have the greatest confidence in the Minister of Finance.

I should like to point out that after the speech that the governor made in October of last year the price of the 4½ per cent conversion bonds to mature in 1983 started to fall on the bond market. They were then selling at a price of 95. They started to fall a day or two after his speech and continued to fall until on December 1 when they sold at 87. I do not know why we have not had more dumping of securities from the other side of the line when the governor has been going around preaching gloom. He certainly has done everything possible not to sell Canada to foreign investors.

I knew for some time that the governor of the Bank of Canada was paid a salary of $50,000 a year. That is not bad for a young fellow who has had no banking experience. I will give him credit for being trained in the law, but I would ask members of the former administration why he was ever appointed? On what grounds?

Mr. Cardiff: Political grounds.

Mr. Cathers: I know I was told that C. D. Howe did not approve of it.

Mr. Benidickson: He is not here to speak for himself.

Mr. Cathers: No, and I hate to say that. I cannot understand why this man with his background should ever have been appointed to this position with a salary of $50,000 a year and an additional amount of $12,500 a year from the industrial development bank, or a total of $62,500 a year for a man who had no business experience. I do not think he is an economist. I do not think he has ever professed to be an economist. If there is any blame for the situation we are in today with respect to the Bank of Canada, I think it should be put right over there on the doorstep of the opposition.

What were the qualifications of Graham Towers, the first governor of the bank who was appointed by R. B. Bennett? He was a graduate of McGill University and an outstanding student. He went into the Royal Bank and soon rose to the top. In all the years I was in business and while he was the governor of the bank I never heard one word of criticism of his operations in the Bank of Canada. Why?

Mr. Benidickson: Do you think he did not recommend his successor?

Mr. Cathers: Yes, I heard that. At that time, the late C. D. Howe said he had lost respect for Graham Towers because he recommended Mr. Coyne as his successor. I speak of the things I know.

Now, we could have settled this problem some months ago, but we did not. The Minister of Finance displayed the greatest of patience. I know that if I had occupied his position this man would have been out of here long ago. I believe the actions of the governor were deliberate. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) did not declare himself this morning, and I could not gather from what he said whether or not he was a supporter of Mr. Coyne. He seemed to be annoyed by the fact that we were getting rid of Mr. Coyne.

I think that, for the good of this country, we have to protect our credit. I was in the financial business in 1931, and Great Britain went off the gold standard in September of that year. I remember the event quite well. Government bonds that were selling on a 4½ per cent basis dropped overnight. I recall that every bond house, every bank and every life insurance company, if they had been forced to liquidate their portfolios, would have been bankrupt. I recall that when I started my own business in the dark days of February 13, 1932, these 4½ per cent bonds of 1957, which had a 5½ per cent coupon attached to them, were selling at from $82 to $84.

Now, why did that happen? It happened because we were tied up with the British empire, thank goodness. Great Britain was forced off the gold standard and the world markets dropped so many securities on the Canadian market that the price was knocked down from par to $83 in a very short time. I feel, therefore, that the members of this house should be most careful to follow the example of the Minister of Finance, who has tried not to advertise this rumpus between the governor and the country. The foreign investors are very fickle, and they will soon withdraw money from this country. I would say that if the United States investors started to withdraw from this country, there would be chaos in our bond market. We cannot finance this dumping of our securities on the market. I hope we will be very careful in the way we deal with foreign investors.

Before I sit down, I should like to say that, as a person who was formerly in the financial business, I admire the job that the Minister of Finance has done during the last four years. I know that I speak for a great many of the business people of Canada when I say that.

Mr. Benidickson: Before the hon. member resumes his seat, may I say that we all recall that at the beginning of his speech this afternoon he made reference to his long friendship with a Bank of Canada director, Mr. Bryden. He suggested that the Leader of the Opposition had been rather unfair in his references to Mr. Bryden. I would ask the last speaker who is the chairman of the banking and commerce committee, and who was nominated by the government, whether or not he has read the last sentence of the letter dated June 9 from the governor of the Bank of Canada to the Minister of Finance, wherein this statement is made:

> I will spare your feelings by not referring in this letter to the outraged comment made by the chairman of the committee having to do with pension matters, when I repeated the minister's comments made to me a few days ago.

Has the hon. member who took such umbrage at what the Leader of the Opposition said, read this sentence, and does he know whether or not the chairman of that pension committee was indeed his friend, Mr. Bryden?

Mr. Cathers: I have not read it and I do not know whether or not it is true. I will check with him at the first opportunity.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I have listened with interest to the hon. member who has just spoken. He will not misunderstand me if I do not follow all that he has said in the course of what I have to say. I will make this observation, however, that as chairman of the banking and commerce committee, to whom I directed questions on several occasions as to when the banking and commerce committee would meet for the purpose of enabling members of that committee to question the governor of the Bank of Canada, I naturally expected that, if he were going to intervene, he would have given us reasons for not giving us the opportunity of confronting the governor of the Bank of Canada. If such an opportunity had been provided, possibly we would not have had the very serious situation that now confronts Canada which has the most serious implications, as the hon. member himself said, when he referred to its influence on foreign investment in this country.

The hon. gentleman made perhaps the most succinct and important statement yet made in this debate when he said that unless this particular matter were handled properly there would be consequences for Canada of a most serious character. He had in mind, I believe, foreign investment and the like. I say to him, and I say to this government that if, as a result of this situation which has prompted this debate, we are confronted with that kind of situation it is because of the actions of the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada, and the way they have handled this regrettable situation.

We have repeatedly asked the government, and we have asked the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, to afford us the opportunity of questioning the governor of the Bank of Canada on his annual report, and questioning him on the statements that he made from time to time throughout the country with regard to methods to meet the serious economic problems now confronting the nation. We have been denied that opportunity. Yet the chairman of the banking and commerce committee has just made the statement that he would have liked to have had the governor of the bank appear before a House of Commons committee. One can only conclude that if his desire was not gratified it was because of the difficulties prevailing during the last few months between the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada about which we were not made aware and which the Minister of Finance did not want parliament to become aware of at that time. That is apparently the real reason why the House of Commons was denied this right with respect to a matter which the Minister of Finance had said belonged to parliament under the Bank of Canada Act.

The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat also spoke of a side issue, the facts of which are not clear and about which I have no comment to make. That was with regard to the pension of the governor of the bank. All I want to point out with regard to that side issue is this. One of the directors in Quebec, Mr. Baribeau, as reported in today's Toronto Star intimated that the dispute over pensions for governors was not a big factor in yesterday's decision.

I do not know whether or not that is the case, but I simply want to say to the hon. gentleman and to the Minister of Finance that the fact is that if there was an increase of pension provided for the governor, that was provided first as a result of the initiative taken by Mr. Bryden, a friend of the Minister of Finance and a political supporter of the Minister of Finance, who thought it was the right thing to do. And it was approved by every director of the Bank of Canada, every one of whom was appointed by this government.

Those are the facts. So that if there is anything questionable about that, my hon. friend can discuss it with the Minister of Finance. He will find that it was as a result of the unanimous decision taken by members of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada who were appointed to their office by the present government.

This is a matter of the greatest importance. Whether or not we agree with the policies of the government in financial matters; whether or not we agree with the attitude the government takes with regard to monetary policy and its responsibility therefor, the fact is that the governor of the Bank of Canada, in our economic system, holds one of the key positions in the public service of our country. Any miscalculation by this government or any government with regard to that office; any act taken by it that is not fully responsible can have the most serious consequences for the economic welfare of this country, as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken knows.

If this situation is as the Minister of Finance sought to indicate this morning, why did he not bring in today the proposal his government has in mind to deal with the governor of the Bank of Canada? Why does the hon. gentleman wait? Why did he not confront us this morning with the proposed procedures he has in mind regarding the attitude taken by the governor of the Bank of Canada following his request for the governor's resignation?

This is a unique situation. I doubt if there will ever be found a parallel in any country which has a central banking system, and where the governor of the bank is given the unusual powers given to the governor of the Bank of Canada, where there has been a withdrawal from office of the governor under circumstances such as those that now confront us in Canada.

The Minister of Finance knows that this man, who is one of those in charge of the investment committee of the unemployment fund; who is a paid official of the industrial development bank as well as being the governor of the bank; who traditionally is consulted by the Minister of Finance in the preparation and formulation of budget policy, holds a post which has to be treated by the government with circumspection and with a high sense of responsibility.

I regret to say to my hon. friend of many years that I do not believe his attitude toward the governor of the Bank of Canada since he has been Minister of Finance, particularly during the last three years, his statement of this morning and his utter disregard of the rights of parliament in this matter establish little reason for having confidence in him as Minister of Finance.

I regret to say, that if there is occasion for any resignation, I believe the circumstances warrant resignation by the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All over this country there is disquietude about the financial policies of this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That has been clear ever since the days of the bond conversion program. This situation today involving the position of the governor of the Bank of Canada only adds to that disquietude and to that concern. If there can be any doubt about this, all we have to do is look at the first paragraph in the statement of the governor of the Bank of Canada given yesterday to the press, in which he said:

> The Minister of Finance has suggested to me that another reason the government wanted me out of the way was that they were preparing certain programs which were apparently thought to be of such a character that I would oppose them.

That is a most serious statement. Is there any justification for that statement, I ask the Minister of Finance? Is that the real reason why the Minister of Finance has created this situation only a few days before the presentation of the budget?

I ask the house to recall the readiness with which the Minister of Finance announced the date of the budget today, and to compare that with the refusal he manifested during the course of the last few weeks in indicating to the house (a) whether there would be a budget in 1961 and (b) if there was, when we might expect it to be introduced. But now the Minister of Finance has no hesitation in giving us the date of the budget. Why? Because he has got the governor of the Bank of Canada out of the way; because he is out of his tracks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He is still there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is the gentleman who by virtue of his office and with all the skills behind him has been used by every minister of finance, and rightly so, in the presentation of government budgetary policy.

I tell the Minister of Finance I believe there are other reasons for this action. I suggest that the Minister of Finance wants to divert public attention from the character of the budget which inevitably he is going to have to present to this country next Tuesday.

An hon. Member: Tuesday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This will be a budget in which he is going to show a deficit of at least $700 million, and it has been suggested that the deficit might reach the $1 billion figure. Another reason is that the Minister of Finance does not apparently propose to do anything about the perilous state into which the unemployment insurance fund has been plunged. That is clear from the reply given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) the other day to the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) with regard to what course the government was going to follow, if any, regarding the replenishment of the fund. No effort to becloud the issue by the emergence of this situation is going to prevent a clear indication being given to the Canadian people of the state of the financial situation in our country. This will be revealed by the budget.

The Minister of Finance cannot say that he and the governor of the Bank of Canada have not shared the same views. It is only within the last few months and particularly within the last few days that the Minister of Finance has taken the position that he and the governor of the Bank of Canada have opposite stands. It will not be forgotten that the former minister of trade and commerce, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, expressed views not very long ago, in 1960 and late 1959, which were contrary to those expressed by the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada. The Minister of Finance said in this house, and he said in Toronto before the Canadian club in January 1959, that he shared the views expressed by the governor of the bank, forgetting, of course, that the Minister of Veterans Affairs had in this house clearly expressed views which were contrary to those held by the Minister of Finance and the governor.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At the end of my speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the hon. member be good enough to quote my exact remarks?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At the end of my speech. Will the minister deny that the baby budget of last December incorporated very important considerations which had been put forward by the governor of the Bank of Canada? I mention these things only so the record may be clear. The criticisms of Bank of Canada policy which have been expressed in this house have been expressed by the former minister of trade and commerce and by the Liberal opposition. That is a fact. We are here not as protagonists of current Bank of Canada policy but to challenge the minister in the particular course he has taken and for the reasons the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned today.

Another reason why the minister perhaps wishes now to give the impression that there is a real issue between himself and the governor of the Bank of Canada is because that gentleman has been saying repeatedly in this country that Canada does have the capacity to meet the problem of unemployment which confronts us at this time. It is true that when he appeared before the manpower committee of the other place he declined to expand on that subject notwithstanding that he had said on at least five occasions that we could adopt policies—the implication was that the government had not adopted them—to meet the unemployment problem. The reason given by the governor for not going into details before the committee of the other place was that the Minister of Finance had asked him not to express views which were at variance with declared government policy. That is what the governor said in a statement he gave to the press yesterday.

But the Minister of Finance cannot hope to escape responsibility for explaining, either in this debate or in debates relating to this matter in the future, why he has never disclosed to this house the nature of the consultations between himself and the governor of the Bank of Canada with regard to the latter's solutions of the problem of unemployment and the like. Is it because the government, closer to an election than it was a year ago, has now decided to embark on policies which it hopes will extricate it from its present difficulties? Clearly the minister does not want to have the governor of the Bank of Canada in his way. Is this the reason? There are good reasons for this thinking. As a matter of fact, Mr. Harris, the former minister of finance, apparently foresaw this when he said on May 18 of this year as reported in the Toronto Star:

> "Mr. Fleming is so far in debt he is still looking for words to explain why."
> He criticized the finance minister's refusal to accept responsibility for the decisions of the Bank of Canada. He said if the Liberals are elected they will co-ordinate the actions of the government and the bank which is intended to offset the effects of high and low swings in the economy.
> Mr. Harris said when he was finance minister the unemployment insurance fund had nearly a billion dollars. In the 3½ years since the Conservatives took over, $750 million has been taken from the fund.

Are these not the real reasons for this situation? Of course, if there had been a difference between the government of Canada and the governor of the bank over monetary policy then, of course, it would have been proper, as the Leader of the Opposition said, for the government, through the Minister of Finance, to have taken steps either to bring about the retirement of the government itself or that of the governor of the bank. There can be no doubt about that right, in the event of any difference with regard to policy, that is monetary policy. But what is the reason in law for the course which the government has now taken? The minister told the governor: we do not want you to be making these general speeches. Apparently that form of discipline—a discipline which I urged many months ago in this house—has had its effect and properly so. But now that has been removed, what is the reason for the unique action, the cataclysmic action, almost, which is now being taken by the government? It cannot be the governor's pension because apart altogether from the merits of that issue, under the Bank of Canada Act this is a matter for the directors of the bank. What other reason can the Minister of Finance give for the unusual and dangerous course he has taken or proposes to take? Is it because, as the governor of the bank says—

> The Minister of Finance has suggested to me that another reason the government wanted me out of the way was that they were preparing certain programs which were apparently thought to be of such character that I would oppose them.

If this is the real reason, I say to the Minister of Finance that he is failing in his duty, that he is violating his oath and that he must explain to this house and to the people of Canada why he has assumed the authority to eliminate from his path the governor of the Bank of Canada. The minister cannot say justifiably it is because the latter might express views contrary to those which the Minister of Finance may be taking with regard to problems facing the country at this time.

The words used by the Prime Minister over the television network on October 1, 1959, bear repetition here. The Prime Minister said, when he was confronted, as he had been in western Canada earlier, with questions concerning the tight money situation and, in particular, the developing problem of unemployment:

> The question might be asked as to whether there should be a substantial increase in the money being used in Canada. Well, let me make this clear. An excessive increase in money supply at any time means inflation. We do not intend to encourage a situation whereby the dollar value will be drained away, thereby bringing hardship to all, and particularly to the pensioners, the retired people, and others with fixed incomes.
> I should point out, too, that the Bank of Canada, not the government, controls the money supply in Canada. The bank was set up under law, by act of parliament. It is independent and autonomous. It has one master, though: parliament, and through parliament the people.
> That's the law. It has been the law for almost 25 years. But as with any law passed by parliament, the Bank of Canada Act is, of course—as the Bank Act is—subject to review and amendment.

Contrast that statement with the statement made this morning by the Minister of Finance when he said that the government's policy is expansionist, aimed at the creation of more trade, more production, and more jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. members applaud. That is the very kind of thing that the Leader of the Opposition and this party have been urging on this government for three and a half years. It has now discovered it. The Prime Minister said in 1958 that was something which belonged to the Bank of Canada, and to avoid inflation the matter must be left to the Bank of Canada. Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), now obviously being coached by the Prime Minister in preparing for an event some months away, seeking to curry public favour, and is now resorting to an expansionist policy along lines urged by the Liberal party, which would have corrected many of our current economic problems, particularly unemployment. Then the Minister of Finance made the following statement:

> During Mr. Coyne's period in office, there has been a steady and deplorable deterioration in the relations of the Bank of Canada with the public.

When did this begin, on May 31, or in the month of March? We have been talking about the relations between the bank and the government, and particularly between the governor of the bank and the Minister of Finance, for over two and a half years. We have been saying that there was a deplorable deterioration in these relations for a long time, but the Minister of Finance has denied this. Now because he is confronted with this situation, and wishing to see it develop along particular lines for reasons I have suggested, he acknowledges two and a half years later that the relations between the governor of the bank and himself have been deplorable. Whenever that was suggested in this house by anyone, the Minister of Finance indignantly rose to say hon. gentlemen knew perfectly well that relations between the governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance were those of two colleagues working together in the public interest.

Mr. Pearson: Like Damon and Pythias.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As the Leader of the Opposition points out, the Minister of Finance gave the impression that he and the governor of the bank, up until a few months ago, were as Damon and Pythias.

The minister's statement then contains the following:

> Mr. Coyne, has, as I shall explain shortly, lost the confidence of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada. He does not possess the confidence of the government.

The latter is perfectly clear. I indicated, two months ago in this house, my attitude with regard to ex parte statements of the governor of the Bank of Canada. But there is no evidence to support the statement that the governor has lost the confidence of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada.

Under the Bank of Canada Act the governor is appointed by the board of directors, subject to the governor in council, to hold office for seven years during good behaviour. The resolution passed by the board of directors yesterday indicates nothing about good or bad behaviour. As Mr. Baribeau clearly indicated today, the reason for the resolution of yesterday which, by the way does not and cannot legally constitute any procedural basis for dismissal, is that the government and the governor cannot get along and one of them should get out. There is no advantage if the governor works one way and the government another, he noted.

There is no evidence to support the Minister of Finance in his statement that the governor of the Bank of Canada lost the confidence of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance to tell me under what authority he has the right to approach one director of the Bank of Canada, as he has done—I presume it was Mr. Hill—and to tell him and two others, as Mr. Baribeau again indicated today, that the government wanted the resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada? The Prime Minister says the Bank of Canada is an autonomous body, yet the Minister of Finance interferes with the operations of the Bank of Canada by this clandestine relationship with certain of the directors of the Bank of Canada. That is a situation which calls for condemnation and explanation. We are told that this liaison between the Minister of Finance was through three directors; Mr. Bruce Hill of St. Catharines, Mr. L. Patrick of Calgary, and Mr. J. H. Mowbray Jones of Liverpool, Nova Scotia. By what authority did the Minister of Finance go to any director, or any privileged group of directors of the Bank of Canada and reveal the government's desire with regard to the resignation of the governor of the bank?

The minister cannot deny what I am saying because at the bottom of page 2a he makes the following statement:

> I am informed that Mr. Coyne was made fully aware on Monday that the board would ask for his resignation if he did not choose to submit it.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he asked the board of directors to pass the resolution of yesterday; a resolution, however, that does not declare that the governor of the Bank of Canada had acted within the mischief of the words "good behaviour" as I understand them in the Bank of Canada Act.

Let me ask the Minister of Finance this question. When did he first discuss directly with the governor the divergence of views as to policy which now require his resignation? Let him tell us that when he replies. I think his reply will reveal the basis for much of what I have had to say today.

Then the minister had this to say:

> With Mr. Coyne in the chair, the board then proceeded to vote on the following resolution:—

I intend to read out this resolution because it confirms what I have just said about the question of behaviour. The resolution reads as follows:

> That it is in the best interests of the Bank of Canada that the governor do immediately tender his resignation to the board of the directors of the bank and further that this action and decision on the part of the board has been taken after prolonged consideration and with regret.

The minister did not suggest regret. The board of directors had at least that much confidence in the governor that they expressed their regret and were apparently acting as Mr. Baribeau suggested only because of the differences between the government and the governor of the Bank of Canada, and that they had to take this course because the Minister of Finance would not talk to the governor. It is difficult to appreciate how the Minister of Finance in the preparation of his budget should not have found time to discuss this matter of national interest with the governor of the Bank of Canada. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he will have much difficulty in explaining his refusal to see the governor of the Bank of Canada to the people of this country who, I repeat, are increasingly showing their disquietude over the irresponsible way in which the financial affairs of our country have been conducted by this government.

Mr. Churchill: Did they show it in the by-elections?

An hon. Member: They sure did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance in his statement then said the following:

> Mr. Coyne may have left a certain false impression with the public. Perhaps the best way to dispel this impression is for me to say at once that Mr. Coyne has not been told of the contents of the forthcoming budget and, therefore, has no right whatsoever to express views about it.

I agree fully with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) that the governor of the Bank of Canada is still the governor of the Bank of Canada. As the minister said earlier, he is responsible to parliament. What right has the minister to refuse to consult on matters of high economic policy, in the presentation of his budget, with one who still occupies the important post of governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this matter might well have been resolved if the government had acted on the request that this whole matter, involving differences between the government and the bank, and the views that the governor had with regard to matters outside the field of monetary policy, be referred to a parliamentary committee of this house and not to a committee of the other place. That had been denied us, and therein lies the reason at least in part, why this present situation has resulted. I say to the Minister of Finance, not only is it fair to the governor of the Bank of Canada but it is in the national interest that the members of this house be given an opportunity to assess not only by way of debate in this house but by examination in a committee of this house what are the true facts. The institution of the Bank of Canada is too important to have it shelved or dealt with today or tomorrow merely by a majority of this house acting obviously for political purposes and not for any other purpose.

The Bank of Canada is a vital institution in our national life and the resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada is vitally important to that institution. Before this matter is finally disposed of we should have the opportunity of confronting the governor of the Bank of Canada and, if need be, the directors of the Bank of Canada, to ascertain precisely what is the situation. We should not have to rely merely upon the obiter dicta of the Minister of Finance, obviously a prejudiced party, a member of a government obviously moved at this time by political considerations. We should have an opportunity in the national interest of acting under the chairmanship of the hon. member who has just spoken, and putting questions to the Minister of Finance, to the governor of the Bank of Canada and to others, to ascertain all the circumstances in this unfortunate incident, an incident that is going to reflect seriously on the financial policies and the prestige of this government and in consequence on the people of Canada.

The Minister of Finance has taken the position, of course, that neither he nor the government has any responsibility in any way for monetary policy. It is only in that field that the Minister of Finance would have the right to call for the resignation of the governor of the Bank of Canada through impeachment or by an amendment to the act. In these circumstances I am sure, as Mr. Towers indicated, and as Mr. Coyne himself said, there would be no hesitation on the part of the governor to voluntarily withdraw where such differences prevailed. But the Minister of Finance is in this unhappy position, he has maintained that the government of Canada, notwithstanding what the Prime Minister said in a television broadcast in 1959, is not in any way responsible for monetary policy; that this is exclusively the responsibility of the Bank of Canada and the parliament of Canada. I wish to remind the Minister of Finance what he said in the banking and commerce committee on March 18, 1954, when he put this question to the governor of the bank:

> For instance, in 1948 and in 1951, when you urged the chartered banks to restrict credit, was that advice given without the government first having been consulted by you?
> A. The government would be aware that we were going to have the conversations. They would be aware, at least through the deputy minister.
> Q. And having offered no objection, I suppose one could say they were parties to it, at least in the sense that they did not interfere?
> A. Yes, because automatically, indeed, they must be parties to everything the central bank does unless they signify to the contrary.

I throw these words back to the Minister of Finance. They apply to the present situation. Every act of the present governor of the Bank of Canada is an act the responsibility for which must be assumed by the government and by the Minister of Finance. That being so, under our democratic system, notwithstanding the whimsical denial of the Minister of Finance at the moment, in the condemnation which he made this morning of the governor of the Bank of Canada he also indicted himself because the responsibility is one that cannot be divided. If the bank takes a particular course it is a course which the government must accept unless it takes steps to remove the governor of the Bank of Canada. Now it is taking steps to remove the governor, but not on the basis of the only ground which under the act and under our system of government it can take, but on pretexts that destroy any confidence that we legitimately might have had in the financial administration of this government. This government has dealt a death blow to the strength of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Ridiculous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It has confirmed the public uneasiness with regard to the way in which our financial policies have been conducted. That uneasiness began when this government imposed an added fixed charge of $100 million a year as a result of the costly and ill-conceived bond conversion program which is at the basis of so much of our trouble, so much of the very trouble which the governor of the Bank of Canada has sought to correct by methods which he publicly declared in speeches outside of this house, and contrary to government declared policy. Let the government then not stand today as an accuser. Let the government stand in the position in which it really must be placed, and that is as the accused. The governor of the Bank of Canada is not the accused in this case; it is the Minister of Finance; it is the government of Canada. They stand accused as a result of those ill-conceived policies which have now come home to plague them.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should prefer to speak on an occasion of this kind with restraint. I do not wish to—

Mr. Hellyer: The minister does not know how.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —add to the injury which I believe, and believe with deep regret, the governor of the Bank of Canada has done to himself. Least of all would I wish to see any prolongation of controversy, particularly political controversy, in relation to the Bank of Canada. But some things stand out today, Mr. Speaker, as a result of this debate, and I think the significance of them will become more and more clearly apprehended as the days pass.

First and foremost stands out this fact, regardless of what may have been said in the past by certain hon. members. The fact is that the Liberal party and the C.C.F. or New party in this house, are in this situation. They have chosen to make themselves the declared champions of Mr. Coyne. There is no half-way position in this situation, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members opposite in the opposition, both wings of it, have gone the full way today. There is an issue that has become sharper and clearer as this debate has proceeded.

One wonders how it was that for participation in a debate of this kind the opposition could have chosen as their spokesmen the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Essex East. If there are two members in the official opposition whom the opposition would have been well advised not to have called upon to participate in this debate today it is the Leader of the Opposition and the member for Essex East. They have rung the changes today on the assertion, if it be such, of Mr. Coyne that he was unaware of differences between himself and the government.

Mr. Benidickson: Parliament was.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition said that we should not have asked for the resignation of Mr. Coyne under those circumstances. We also heard this afternoon from the hon. member for Essex East that parliament had not been made aware of differences between the government and the governor in relation to matters of policy. The Leader of the Opposition claimed he had never heard of the deep-seated differences on policy between the government and the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Such innocence, Mr. Speaker, is most unimpressive. I prefer to base my impressions upon the record. Let us look at the record. Let us turn back to a debate which has been referred to frequently by hon. members opposite and from the record of which they have read copiously today, a debate in this house on February 20, 1961. Was the Leader of the Opposition unaware of deep-seated differences between the government and the governor of the Bank of Canada? Let me read you this, Mr. Speaker.

—the Minister of Finance so far has refused to say whether or not the governor of the Bank of Canada is speaking for the government.

Mr. Benidickson: Page?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You will get it. And further:

One contradicts the other in this field—

This is a reference to the governor and the Minister of Finance. Note these words.

One contradicts the other in this field, and the result obviously is a feeling of instability, a feeling of uncertainty—

These are the words of the Leader of the Opposition uttered in this house on February 20, 1961, as found on page 2198 of Hansard. He was not satisfied then with exhibiting his complete knowledge of the existence of these deep-seated differences because he returned to the subject in the same debate as found on page 2206:

It is most regrettable indeed that the Bank of Canada has become the centre of the present controversy because it may weaken seriously the prestige and the authority of a most essential institution whose prestige and authority in this country since it was established have been strong and which has commanded the highest respect.

Yet the Leader of the Opposition has the temerity to make the pretence before this house today that he was unaware of differences between the government and the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My time is limited and I will have to ask the hon. member to reserve his question until I have finished.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister give us the page again?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Page 2206. The story does not end there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think the page number is accurate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have given it twice. It is on the record. Let us look a little further at these interesting statements. There were more of them that day. In stressing this difference of points of view the Leader of the Opposition went so far, as found on page 2200 of Hansard, that he got on the subject of the appointment and removal of the governor and the directors of the bank. So completely conscious was he of the differences between the government and the governor in relation to questions of deep-seated policy that he said:

The governor and the directors are appointed by the government. They can be removed only by parliament, it is true.

This was very much in his mind. His mind has changed. He has been very forgetful today, perhaps conveniently so. We are indebted to the Leader of the Opposition for not having contented himself with exhibiting his complete knowledge of the fact that there were these deep-seated differences. He went on to prescribe the remedies that should be followed in such a case and to deal with what should be the proper course. As found on page 2201 of Hansard for February 20, the Leader of the Opposition said:

If the governor cannot agree with the general policy which the government desires him to implement, then the government (governor; see page 7039) has no alternative, of course, but to resign.

Mr. Benidickson: There is no question about that. We have said that for four years.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): So much for that hollow assertion of the Leader of the Opposition. I have something to say as well about the hon. member for Essex East. This debate, of course, would not have been complete without his participation, and he regaled us today with the same kind of speech that he turns on about every second day in the house. Let us look back and see what he said when he said something to which I think he had given some thought. I refer to page 3242 of Hansard for March 22 of this year. This is under the name "Mr. Martin (Essex East)":

If the observations made by the governor of the Bank of Canada do not stand in the position of opposing the policies of the government, they at least stand in the position that there are no known declarations made by any of the ministers of the government, more particularly the Minister of Finance, that support the contentions made by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Lest you in your innocence, Mr. Speaker, should think that is a pretty weak statement made by that hon. member, let me tell you that there is another one that follows three pages later. As found on page 3245 the hon. member had this to say:

The governor of the Bank of Canada is a very able man and has been well trained for the high post he occupies. He must know the extent of his authority. He must know that his authority is limited to monetary policy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You see, he was talking about the speeches that the governor had been making on the subject of fiscal policy—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —which, of course, is the responsibility of the government.

He must know that his authority is limited to monetary policy. If he persists, as he does, in making these declarations on such a wide economic front, he must be doing it for a purpose. I suggest that purpose is clear. He is concerned about the results of government policy and particularly the policy of the Department of Finance and the consequences of those policies. He must feel that he is serving his country best by making these declarations which are tantamount to warnings to the Canadian people. What other conclusion can one come to?

Then I rose and asked this question:

If that is what the governor is seeking to do, does the hon. member approve of such a course of action?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Finish the sentence.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This was the answer of the hon. member for Essex East:

I certainly do not approve.

Note this, Mr. Speaker.

I am stating that I do not believe that under our system of government it is right or proper for a government official, in areas of authority not specifically extended to him by parliament, to take in public a position that puts him in disagreement with the government of the day.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear. That is our position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Out of thine own mouth hast thou condemned thyself.

An hon. Member: St. Paul.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why did you not follow that policy?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No one, of course, would expect the hon. member for Essex East to confine his vocal effusions to the House of Commons, and he did not. The Ottawa Citizen of March 15, 1961, contains the following news item under the heading, "Make Government or Governor Quit: Martin":

Toronto (C.P.). Paul Martin, Liberal member of parliament for Essex East, said Tuesday a difference of opinion between the government and the governor of the Bank of Canada should result in the resignation of one or the other. Mr. Martin told the Liberal businessmen's club governor James Coyne's responsibility was restricted to monetary policy and he had transgressed this in recent speeches.

But, Mr. Speaker, what of the brain trust?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): How about dealing with the question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What of the arch adviser, what of the high priest of economic Liberalism? Here is the Ottawa Citizen of April 12, 1961. The heading of the article is, "Dead End, Pearson Economic Aide Joins Attack on Coyne". This is a Canadian Press dispatch from Toronto.

Maurice Lamontagne, economic adviser to Liberal Leader Pearson, said Tuesday the economic policies advocated by the governor of the Bank of Canada "would lead our country to a dead end."

Yet we heard the hon. member for Essex East a few minutes ago talk about our ruining the country. The article went on to say:

Bank governor James Coyne has made a wrong assessment of Canada's long term difficulties, Mr. Lamontagne said in a speech to the Liberal businessmen's club of Toronto. He took issue with Mr. Coyne's arguments in favour of reduced imports of goods and capital.

And further, Mr. Speaker;

"We can safely assume therefore that the governor is speaking for the government in this debate."

I interpolate, Mr. Speaker, that this has been Liberal strategy all the way through the session, to try to bedevil the relationship in this field by trying to pin on the government responsibility for the things that the governor was saying, and which were quite outside the field of central banking.

The article continues:

Mr. Lamontagne said that in his view "Mr. Coyne's assessment of Canadian long term difficulties is wrong, and the direction he would like the Canadian economy to take would lead our country to a dead end.

"It is wrong to explain our recent stagnation by the current high level of our imports.

"The volume of our imports has always been high throughout our history and Canadian experience shows very clearly that increased exports have been a consequence of expansion, not a cause of stagnation."

Mr. Lamontagne rejected the argument in Mr. Coyne's last annual report that recent high levels of unemployment are a consequence of "diversion of purchasing powers from domestic production to foreign production".

There had not been any such diversion. Since 1956, when the first signs of stagnation and high structural unemployment began to appear, the volume of exports had risen nine per cent and the volume of imports had declined four per cent.

He added that it is difficult to accept Mr. Coyne's statement that high unemployment has not arisen from a deficiency in capital investment spending.

Total capital investment in volume terms had declined 13 per cent since 1957 and business investment had declined 25 per cent.

Mr. Coyne's proposal for reduced imports and greater self-sufficiency was an "invitation to a narrow economic nationalism". This program "would only make our situation worse".

These, Mr. Speaker, are the authentic voices of Liberalism, but they are not the voices to which we have been listening today, not these hollow sounds that we have heard today. These are statements made under circumstances in which hon. members opposite and their advisers were not so ready to yield to the temptation of trying to score a political advantage, even though in so resorting they might be doing severe damage to an important public institution in this country.

In the face of these facts, Mr. Speaker, which are known, what was the government to do? In the face of a plain contradiction of policy, deep-seated differences of policy at a time when these deep-seated differences became more and more serious in their consequences, at a time, as I tried to suggest this morning, when the necessity for teamwork and co-operation between the Bank of Canada and the government is greater than perhaps ever before in our history, what was the government to do? At a time like this, to be faced by contradictions in policy in the case of a man who has made so many statements, very strong statements, was the government to wait until December 31 and let his term expire?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why did you not act a long time ago; that is the point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Possibly we could have waited until that time, but by then we would have been into another winter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have waited for a year and a half.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has obviously not finished his speech. I do not wonder that he wishes to amend the last one he made.

We considered it to be our duty, under these circumstances, to take the course which we did. Let me say this: We had every right to assume that when the governor of the bank spoke as he did and made firm assertions, very firm assertions as he has been making for months now, these represented deep-seated beliefs on his part. Out of respect for those deep-seated beliefs, it was impossible for us to expect that a governor holding these views could extend to the government, under existing circumstances, the co-operation that is so essential.

In recent days we have heard about letters of the governor which the opposition now has containing professions of a willingness to co-operate. I think hon. members will wish to be realistic about this and ask themselves whether these important statements and firm opinions extending over a period of a year and a half should be just ignored under these circumstances.

It is said, and said wrongly, that there have been no warnings given to the governor of the Bank of Canada. As to this, it is of interest that even hon. members opposite could recognize what they called a contradiction so deep and clear resulting from a difference of opinion. Perhaps I may expect the governor of the Bank of Canada to be aware of what the Minister of Finance says in his speeches or in his budget speech. Certainly there were all the indications there in the past two budgets, of deep-seated differences of opinion.

The governor of the bank communicated with me frequently with a view to trying to persuade me to accept his ideas. We have heard today talk about conversion loans. Well, there was an attempt made to convert me to the views of the governor of the Bank of Canada. If a complaint is made that I did not encourage this gentleman to sit down and spend a lot of time listening to those views and submit to the attempt to be converted to them, I am not going to apologize for that. I think most people, under the circumstances, would have drawn some pretty obvious conclusions from the fact that I had not indicated interest in being converted to those ideas which the governor of the Bank of Canada had been proclaiming in public.

I did not attempt to muzzle him in making his speeches. I was not responsible for his speeches. I was never once consulted about those speeches. Hon. members opposite in playing politics, the low political game they have been playing all the way through, have been trying to pin on me and through me on the government responsibility both for the making of those speeches and for the contents of those speeches. I reject these contentions in their entirety. When you see hon. members opposite playing this shilly-shallying game of politics in this house today, can you imagine what a field day they would have looked forward to if they could have come to this house and said that the Minister of Finance had tried to muzzle the governor of the Bank of Canada and prevent him from speaking in public?

Yes, there were warnings, Mr. Speaker. I have been told by certain members of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada, to whom the governor is in a certain sense responsible, that some of them had given him warnings about these speeches. I have been informed by one of them that the governor was told if he went on making these speeches, he would be out.

I pass now to the manner in which certain events have been brought to pass. Questions have been asked as to what happened on May 30. I will give the house an account. I had no authority or power, and the government had no authority or power to discharge the governor or dismiss him from office. This is what I said during the debate on a former occasion, that the government had no power to dismiss him and that only parliament can do that. The Leader of the Opposition thought he had laid an egg this morning when he came across my statement. If the government had had the power through parliament to terminate the tenure, under those circumstances that power would have been exercised. The government would have taken this responsibility and have discharged that duty. But, Mr. Speaker, we did not have the power to terminate; we did not have the authority to terminate. Parliament has not given that to us and for that reason I asked Mr. Coyne for his resignation; it was not a demand as the Leader of the Opposition has suggested, as though I had taken the governor by the throat, abused him and demanded his resignation.

Let me give the facts, and not the distorted impressions the Leader of the Opposition has sedulously been endeavouring to create in the minds of hon. members. The meeting lasted about an hour. The tones in which the three persons present spoke were quiet. I expressed regret that it was necessary for me to perform the duty that it was so essential I should perform under those circumstances. I gave Mr. Coyne the reasons in detail.

At the conclusion of the meeting he asked if he might think the matter over. He asked me three questions before the meeting broke up and before he went on his way. He asked whether the government had decided on his successor. I said, "No". He asked me whether the directors had been consulted, and I said no, that I was trying to spare him all the embarrassment I possibly could. When the discussions ended it was Mr. Coyne, not I, who carried the information about the request for his resignation to others. I did my best all the way through to play this matter down and to spare the governor every possible embarrassment that I could.

The third question he asked me was in regard to his pension. Here, contrary to the very unfair reflection cast by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) this afternoon, there was no suggestion to him, as the hon. member put it, that if he would be a good boy he would get his pension. On the contrary, we had discussed the events of February 15, 1960, in the board of directors' meeting and I had expressed to Mr. Coyne the shock and consternation of the government in discovering what had happened that day, that a governor who went into a meeting entitled to a pension worth a little under $12,000 a year for life on retiring, even if he retired at 50 years of age, came out of that meeting with a pension, according to his contention, worth $25,000 per annum for life commencing at the date of retirement.

I expressed to the governor my view and the view of the government that under the circumstances, having regard to the high office he held and the high degree of responsibility attached to that office, it was not an adequate discharge of the responsibilities of that office that the governor did not see that this was brought to the attention of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition says there was an official there from the Department of Finance. Yes, it was one substituted on very short notice for the deputy minister—

Mr. Pearson: The assistant deputy minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. He was substituted on very short notice because of a crisis which existed the day before, and he went to that meeting. It was not reported to me; I did not hear about this.

The Leader of the Opposition talks about minutes. I can give him this information, because he needs plenty of it,—

Mr. Pearson: You did not give it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —that the bank does not circulate minutes.

An hon. Member: Make a note of that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The bank does not circulate minutes. I have never seen a minute of the Bank of Canada except when this spring, I asked for minutes of the meeting of February 15, 1960, and it was then that we had the full information with regard to the pension.

Mr. Pearson: You just said there were no minutes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Henderson: Take your medicine.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government became aware in the spring of the voting of this pension. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker, and I have told the house the views I expressed to the governor on May 30.

The third question Mr. Coyne asked me that afternoon before he left was, "Well, what about my pension?" I said, "I cannot tell you anything as to what you may expect in regard to pension", and I made that very clear and emphatic. I said, "The government has learned of this situation. The pension may be of doubtful validity and no decision has been reached yet, and you must realize that". I do not know how much clearer I could have been.

So, Mr. Speaker, we move on. After May 30 I did not hear from the governor. I am told I should have seen him. I was expecting, or hoping I would hear from him, but not a word did I hear from him. With regard to this request for a hearing made yesterday, that request did not come to me from Mr. Coyne at all. One of the directors called me from Quebec in the morning to say that Mr. Coyne had proposed that the board should rise and that he should come back to Ottawa and talk to me.

It was perfectly clear that what this meant as it was conveyed to me was that the board was asked to terminate its meeting without having taken any action on this matter, even though we considered action to be necessary, and urgently necessary. While he would come back and talk to me, the net effect would come that the matter would ride over to the next meeting, and that might be September. I interpreted it so, and I thought I correctly interpreted it so on the information that was given to me. I said there was just no sense in that. "What is required is a decision". It was hoped even up to that time that good sense would prevail on the part of Mr. Coyne. I have related the later events of yesterday.

In taking the course that he has, Mr. Coyne has gone contrary to advice that was given to him by gentlemen whom he well knew on the board and who talked to him in a manner designed to serve both his own good and the good of the Bank of Canada. I regret very much the manner in which Mr. Coyne chose to make this a matter of public controversy. The fact is that he had prepared his statement in advance. It was only slightly revised yesterday; it had been prepared prior thereto.

I regret very much the fact that he excused himself from the meeting while the matter was under discussion and went out and released the statement, and released it, according to his later admission, at 11 o'clock so it would be known in parliament that morning, and also so that the release would come from him before the Minister of Finance had the opportunity to make any release on the subject.

Mr. Deschatelets: This is your weakest speech in a long time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This gentleman's regard for deliberate timing I must say I regret. I had no thought of rushing into print on this. My whole attitude had been to try to spare Mr. Coyne all the embarrassment possible and it is he who has chosen to bring the matter onto this stage. I will have some further comments in that regard.

Mr. Coyne saw fit to write me a letter dated June 13. It must have been written after he came back to the city late last night, and evidently a copy of that letter came into the hands of the Leader of the Opposition as soon as it came into my hands this morning.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was distributed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is all part, I regret to say, of a clearly calculated attempt to build up controversy and, I think it is quite clear, to attract as much public attention as possible, and this notwithstanding any effect it may have upon the Bank of Canada.

I cannot adequately express my, shall I put it mildly and say "profound regret" that the governor has chosen this manner of embroiling himself, and I am afraid to some degree the Bank of Canada, in controversy; and indeed, if you please, political controversy having regard to what has happened in the house today. Any gentleman of the intelligence of the governor must have been aware that this would be the result, and anticipated it.

Mr. Fulton: And had intended it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And it will not be difficult, I think, for many to infer that it was so intended, regardless of the effect it might have upon the Bank of Canada or upon public confidence.

I shall endeavour to conclude, Mr. Speaker. I think I need say no more on the subject of pension except to recall to the minds of hon. members a fact that I mentioned this morning. The final clause of the Bank of Canada Act calls for the gazetting of by-laws. This particular by-law was interpreted by the board, evidently, as not being governed by that clause. But that clause provides that by-laws shall not come into effect until they appear in the Canada Gazette.

This by-law was not gazetted at the time. The responsibility for seeing to the gazetting is the responsibility of the governor. It is not the responsibility of the board of directors; it is the responsibility of the governor. It was after my discussion with him on May 30 and after I had pointed out to him that this by-law had never been gazetted and that the effect of gazetting at that time would have been to bring the contents of this by-law and his handsome increase in pension to the attention of the government, to the attention of parliament and the public—it should have been gazetted back in February, 1960—that the governor apparently then decided to have it gazetted—

Mr. Benidickson: You did not read the minutes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and caused it to appear in the Canada Gazette published last Saturday. I regret it very much if a man who has held the high and responsible office of governor of the Bank of Canada seeks to make a martyr of myself in this situation, because the role of martyr does not fit under these conditions. There are many Canadians who will find it hard to associate the mantle of the martyr with a gentleman who according to his claims under the by-laws is now entitled to an immediate pension of $25,000 a year for life.

Finally, I wish to say a word about the institution itself, the Bank of Canada, one of the most important of our national institutions. I said this morning, Mr. Speaker, and I hope you will not mind my saying it again, that throughout this entire period both when there were difficulties and when the difficulties took on changed forms, in periods when there was co-operation and in periods when there was difficulty, in all these situations and, above all, at times when the opposition in its irresponsible and callous way was trying to exploit these difficulties and turn them to their own base political advantage, I did my best to stand between the bank and political controversy. There were times when I might have spoken more freely in this house than I did but, perhaps unwisely in the light of recent events, I forebore from making contentious statements in these circumstances because even at the expense of being a target for criticism and, frequently, abuse, I felt I had the duty to try to the limit of my power and patience to keep the Bank of Canada from becoming a subject of political controversy.

I have respect for the office of governor of the bank. It is one of the most important public offices in Canada besides being one of the most powerful offices in Canada and one calling for the greatest measure of responsibility. I can say for the government that as soon as this office becomes vacant, a strong successor will be chosen. That, I can assure the house, is the wish of the board of directors of the bank and it is certainly the wish and the intention of the government. In these circumstances, with a new governor appointed without delay as soon as the office becomes vacant, I believe we can look forward to a new era of improved relations between the government and the Bank of Canada, a new era of co-operation, a new era of joint effort in meeting the economic problems of Canada. I believe we can look forward to a measure of team work of the kind that prevailed in the days when Mr. Graham Towers was governor of the bank. I believe that in this situation the confidence of the Canadian people and the confidence of business in Canada will not be shaken, notwithstanding the effort of the governor to make this matter one of supreme political controversy and notwithstanding the irresponsible efforts of the opposition to exploit and exaggerate the situation regardless of the effect upon our institutions.

I believe that in spite of these efforts on the part of hon. members opposite to profit from the events—the unpleasant and regrettable events—through which we are passing, the people of Canada and especially the business community of Canada will find renewed reason for confidence, not only in our institutions generally but in the Bank of Canada and the responsible way in which its affairs will be administered. I trust, as well, there will be renewed confidence in the determination of this government to see that the Bank of Canada is not made a target of political controversy but that it will be made, as far as the present government can contribute towards this end, a partner with the government in serving the best interests of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the minister kindly answer the question I put to him earlier: when was the first occasion when he directly discussed his difficulties with the governor of the bank?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It depends what the hon. member means by "discuss", whether it is a matter of sitting down to talk.

I think the hon. member has some wrong conceptions about what happened. The governor and I met from time to time in the ordinary course to discuss financing and bond issues and having regard to the greater frequency with which those issues have been put out, our meetings in that respect have been increasingly frequent since 1960. In addition I have frequent meetings, of course, with the deputy governor, Mr. Rasminsky, to discuss matters pertaining to the international monetary fund, the International Bank, the international development association, the Industrial Development Bank, O.E.C.D. and so on, and with other deputy governors with regard to other matters of financing of which I have spoken. I have received numerous communications from the governor in regard to his suggestions in this field and, of course, I was not unaware of the fact that he was making numerous public speeches. He heard from me, with certain comments on the views he was expressing in his communications to me, and I may say that at Easter, when the hon. member for Essex East was enjoying a thoroughly good holiday—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was in hospital, incidentally.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): While the hon. member was enjoying a well deserved holiday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said I was in hospital.

Governor of Bank of Canada

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, that is right. The hon. member was in hospital at that time. He was not on holiday. It was an enforced lay-up and we are all glad to see him back after it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think you are.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The governor, the deputy minister and I had a long discussion at that time with regard to all these matters.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It began at Easter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say it began at all. There is a fine example of the way hon. members opposite time and time again distort what are the facts of the case.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question, then.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have referred to a long series of communications which passed between us and the fact that we had occasion to see each other on matters of common concern. I do not intend to sit back and see hon. members opposite distort my remarks. I think that the governor of the Bank of Canada is quite intelligent enough to understand fully the views of the minister in this matter upon which he, the governor, expressed contrary opinions. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, his previous hope was to convince the Minister of Finance that he should embrace the ideas that the governor was espousing and publicly declaring.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), who proposed the motion, agree that it be withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: If he is not willing, I shall put the question.

Mr. Pearson: Put the question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, if the mover of the motion wishes to withdraw it I am sure there is no objection on this side of the house.

Mr. Pearson: There were objections.

Mr. Harkness: The objection was raised by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith).

An hon. Member: There were objections from your backbenchers.

Mr. Pearson: Put the question.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: The motion can be withdrawn only by unanimous consent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Question.

Mr. Speaker: If the house does not give unanimous consent the motion must be put.

Motion negatived on division.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

C.N.R. PROPERTY RENTAL

Motion No. 144—Mr. Pigeon:

For a copy of the contract, correspondence, and other documents exchanged between the Canadian National authorities and the Meunerie Coopérative de Joliette (Joliette Co-operative Flour Mill), following the acquisition by, or rental to, the Meunerie Coopérative de Joliette, of the Canadian National property.

(Translation):

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house would grant me leave to withdraw this notice of motion for production of papers?

(Text):

Motion dropped.

WORKS PAYROLLS, SOLITAIRE RIVER, QUE.

Motion No. 145—Mr. Dumas:

For a copy of all payrolls, with names of employees, duration of employment, and amount paid in the case of each, with respect to works carried out in 1958 and 1959 on the Solitaire river, at Rollet, in the township of Désandrouins, province of Quebec.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the project referred to is one of those being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the general area. We have made many investigations and will be making many more. I suggest that this order can be accepted with the reservation that the return be tabled after the investigations are completed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member prepared to have the motion put subject to that reservation?

Mr. Dumas: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government would consider setting up a committee to discuss the situation surrounding the request for the resignation of Mr. Coyne.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to have this confession from the Leader of the Opposition that after the long harangue he delivered here today, he did not have the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should remind the hon. minister that the debate is over.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether we are going to get the facts from Mr. Coyne?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has evidently indicated a preference for that source. I can only offer the house the facts, and I have done that today. It still rests with the hon. gentleman to make a choice where he finds differences.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister realize there is a complete contradiction between his opinion of the facts and the version the governor of the bank has, and does he not agree that this contradiction should be resolved?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I did not agree that there has been a contradiction of facts as he has asserted. In the letters that Mr. Coyne has chosen to write there certainly is a slanting of the matter and a selection, and they were written from a partial point of view. Perhaps that is natural in a situation where a man is pleading his own case. It is certainly a good example of the fact that no man is the best judge in his own cause.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. If and when the banking and commerce committee commences its work, will the Minister of Finance place any obstacle in the way of that committee interrogating the governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have ever placed an obstacle in the way of anyone, and least of all in the way of the hon. member for Essex East.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I leave it to him to hang political millstones around his neck, and I put no obstacles in his way.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

BROCKVILLE-PORTLAND, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO NEW BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister inform the house what progress has been made with respect to the new federal building at Brockville, and the new post office at Portland, promised by the Minister of Public Works on Wednesday, May 24, last.

An hon. Member: An eager beaver.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like on behalf of all of us on this side of the house to express a very hearty welcome to the very gallant member who now represents Leeds, and tell him that I hated to have to correct the open letter that he wrote in a Brockville newspaper which misled the public in connection with all matters about which he has spoken, because the federal building has been under way for some time. I refer to the acquisition of the property and the completion of plans for the federal building at Brockville as well as plans for the post office at Portland. Perhaps he should be excused on the grounds of ignorance at that time. But now that he is in the House of Commons, he will have the opportunity to avail himself of all the information obtainable here, to keep himself completely up to date, and will find out that things do move along, particularly now that we have a Conservative government.

THE CENSUS

INQUIRY AS TO SUSPENSION OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or, in his absence, of his parliamentary secretary, arising out of information given to me this morning in answer to a starred question. Could the parliamentary secretary tell the house the reason why Mr. Sasseville was suspended as a census commissioner on June 8, 1961?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Sasseville was, as I understand it, charged with an infraction of the Criminal Code for the operation of an illegal distillery.

Mr. Robichaud: Was he selected?

Mr. Morris: I hear the interjection in regard to his being selected, and therefore take the opportunity of stating that he was selected after being interviewed by the dominion bureau of statistics, and that he alone, of 28,000 Canadians, has been suspended from this activity, which is rather a good record.

Mr. Peters: That just goes to show that there are not very many stills in Canada.

Mr. Morris: The operation of an illegal distillery, Mr. Speaker, is an infraction of the Criminal Code but not of the Statistics Act. Mr. Sasseville was suspended for non-availability to the general public.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Could the parliamentary secretary inform us when Mr. Sasseville was interviewed as to his tact and judgment, and as to whether it was known then that he has been wanted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police since October 24?

Mr. Morris: No, Mr. Speaker. The interview revealed that he was a man who was considered to be above average intelligence, which is borne out by the activity in which he was engaged.

Mr. Hellyer: How did he get in the Conservative party in the first place?

SHIPPING

HALIFAX-ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CANCELLATION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In his absence, may I direct it to the acting minister. Can the minister advise whether the C.N.R. proposes to cancel the agreement between the shipping companies chartered during the winter months, plying between Halifax and St. John's, Newfoundland, thereby causing the loss of approximately $250,000 to longshoremen in St. John's and over $250,000 to longshoremen in Halifax?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Perhaps in the circumstances I may be allowed on behalf of the Minister of Transport to say that we shall take this question as notice and bring it to his attention. I understand it is under close study; therefore the answer should be forthcoming very shortly.

(Translation):

PUBLIC WORKS

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES AND BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Ratelle (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Could the minister indicate how many people were employed in his department in 1957 and 1961 as carpenters, painters, plumbers, etc? Could he also indicate how many buildings located in the city of Montreal and suburbs, including Longueuil, St. Lambert and Ville Jacques Cartier, came under the responsibility of the Department of Public Works?

The reason I am asking this question, Mr. Speaker, is to avoid having to ask a number of questions of the minister when the estimates of this department come up.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member seldom troubles the house with a question. He is asking for statistical information which he could not expect to receive without notice. Does the minister prefer that the question be placed on the order paper?

FINANCE

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—INQUIRY AS TO REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Having regard to the rather new views on policy expressed in the debate today by the minister, will he indicate to the house whether he is prepared to recommend to the Industrial Development Bank that its rate of interest be reduced in conformity to the rate of reduction which has been initiated by the commercial banks as a prime lending rate?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Obviously that is not a proper question at all to ask on the orders of the day. I reject altogether, Mr. Speaker, the assertion in the first part of the question that some new policy has been enunciated today by the Minister of Finance in relation to interest rates. We have, as the hon. member well knows, expressed our opposition to high interest rates and our determination that interest rates should not be one degree higher than is necessary under all circumstances. I expressed the satisfaction of the government some days ago when the chartered banks reduced the prime lending rate in this country.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

329. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,667,720.

The Chairman: This item will be found on page 67 of the blue book, and the details on page 452. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Bourget: Is the minister not going to make a statement on the activities of his department?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Levis would like me to, with the permission of the committee, perhaps I should say a few words. I do not propose to be long because I think hon. members are girding their loins for many questions and I shall just outline, as the hon. member for Levis suggests, some of the highlights.

In the first place, may I make a few general remarks concerning the activities of the Department of Public Works. I should like to mention at this time some of the more important developments in the department's activities in the year 1960-61, and to indicate, if I may, the salient features of our construction and development plans as reflected in the 1961-62 estimates which hon. members will be asked to approve.

I shall review briefly the activities of the year 1960-61. I am very pleased to be able to say that the department's record of work carried out this year, as measured by the amount expended, compares quite well with the construction program as it was envisaged when the estimates were introduced in the house last year. This comparison of expenditures with appropriations does, I think, indicate the extent to which we have been successful in carrying on a 12-month works program which would compare in complexity and extent with any construction program ever undertaken in Canada.

In 1959-60,—this may be of interest to the lone member of the New party; if he will give me his attention I will outline it—90.7 per cent of the total moneys appropriated were paid out for work done during that year. In the next year, that is, 1960-61, a considerably better record was achieved. In that year total appropriations were $216,203,000. Total expenditures for work done during that year were $203,899,000 or 94.3 per cent. Hon. members will appreciate that the execution of the variety of tasks as they are planned depends on a number of factors, not the least among them being weather sufficiently favourable to permit certain types of work to be done. In view of this and other factors, 94.3 per cent is a good record, and I say this with all modesty.

I turn now to building construction. In the construction of new buildings to provide needed accommodation for government services good progress was made during the year 1960-61 on several large projects for which contracts had been awarded previously. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to account for them. New contracts were awarded during 1960-61 for a number of buildings which will also be of interest. These included, in Nova Scotia additional alterations to the federal building at Halifax, $895,000; in New Brunswick, addition and alterations to the Moncton building, $1,674,000; in Quebec, a contract of more than $3 million for the new postal terminal at Quebec city; in Ontario, a contract for a new postal terminal building at London to cost more than $3 million; in Saskatchewan, a new building to accommodate the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue, at a cost of $835,000; in British Columbia, a contract for a new federal building at Penticton, $600,910; in the Northwest Territories, construction of federal housing and related work at Inuvik, $369,694.

In dealing with this building construction, I should mention that the work was completed during the year on two of the buildings in the new Riverside drive development at Ottawa. One of them is a headquarters building for the Department of Public Works and the Department of Fisheries, the Sir Charles Tupper building as it is now known, and the other houses the department of insurance. A testing laboratory building for the Department of Public Works, which is also in the development, was completed earlier. Work is still in progress on a headquarters building and two smaller structures for the Post Office Department, a cafeteria building, a communications laboratory for the national research council and the heating plant itself for the development as a whole.

A considerable amount of landscaping work has been done on the grounds and more will be required as these buildings are completed. I invite hon. members to take a look around when they are on their way to the airport or if they are out that way they can drop in to see me and I will show them around the very wonderful development at that location. We hope to call it confederation heights. We think that might be an appropriate name under all the circumstances. When the whole development is finished it will, I think, be one of the most important fruits of the national capital planning which has been going on now for some time. I repeat my invitation to hon. members to visit the project. If they have not yet done so, I assure them that they should. As the national capital commission has made a tour available, I think we should all avail ourselves eventually of the opportunity to see Ottawa.

The department continued during the year the program of construction of standard post office buildings in the smaller communities of Canada with the work being done during the cold weather to provide winter employment. A total—and this seems remarkable—of 90 contracts for these buildings was awarded in the past winter. This means that a total of 220 of these small post office buildings will have been constructed under this section of the winter works program since it was begun in 1958.

I come now to harbour and river works. In harbours and rivers engineering projects a very large program was carried out during the year 1960-61, and in particular I should like to mention some of the most important projects. In Newfoundland, for instance, work was continued on the tremendous harbour development at St. John's with the aim of providing the port with modern cargo-handling facilities. The Department of Transport agency wharf and the mooring basin were completed in this year. A number of old buildings and wharves were demolished and a sunken ship was removed. Work was well under way on the main terminal structure.

In Nova Scotia work was continued on the harbour repairs at Cariboo, reconstruction of the harbour facilities damaged by fire at Pictou and reconstruction of the wharf at Sydney. In Prince Edward Island construction of a breakwater and dredging were carried on at Wood islands.

In New Brunswick harbour improvements were completed at Caraquet and work was under way on an extension to the breakwater and dredging in the Saint John area at Negro point.

With respect to Quebec, in the development program for the winter port at Pointe-au-Pere dredging and construction of the substructure for the wharf were carried out. At Newport point harbour improvements were completed. In Ontario, at Hamilton and Toronto construction of important facilities, including provision for seaway shipping, was continued. At the lakehead access roads and bridges for the new harbour terminal were completed and other work connected with this large project was carried on.

In British Columbia work was continued on the assembly wharf and fishing harbour at Port Alberni and on the boat harbour at Westview. Dredging on the Fraser river was also carried out.

I should like to say a word or two now about the trans-Canada highway. In activities under the Trans-Canada Highway Act there were two very important developments during this year. One was the signing of a construction agreement with the government of the province of Quebec. May I say now how delighted I am to have them participate in this project. Vive Quebec!

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Vive Quebec!

Mr. Walker: Vive Quebec. You are right. The province of Quebec, not the government, not necessarily.

(Text):

I cannot be political here.

Mr. Bourget: You are never political.

Mr. Hellyer: Will you speak up? We do not want to miss anything you are saying.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. Walker: I am so pleased to hear that. If the hon. member was not able to understand, I will send one of my officials to see him at six o'clock.

Mr. Hellyer: I would appreciate that very much.

Mr. Walker: In activities under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, as I say, we at last have the province of Quebec taking part. I know the hon. member for Levis was interested in this matter when he was parliamentary assistant. All ten provinces are now participating in the project and the highway has become, so to speak, a truly national highway. Until this agreement was signed the highway did not completely traverse the nation, nor did it provide, as it now does, an additional link in the ties which unite the French and the English speaking parts of Canada.

The other main development was that one of the two gap sections which I mentioned when I introduced the department's estimates in the house last year, the section north of lake Superior in Ontario, was finally opened to traffic. It was a tremendous project. This means that, although not completed yet, the whole highway, 4,876 miles in length, is now open to traffic winter and summer with the exception, of course, one 90-mile gap in the Rocky mountains between Donald and Revelstoke in British Columbia. This latter section passes through spectacular scenery but I should add that it involves construction problems equally spectacular, problems which at times have appeared almost insurmountable. It will not be completed until 1962 but if the weather permits progress in the present fiscal year may enable sufficient work to be done for it to be opened to traffic. I should mention that a good alternate route for those hon. members who are going to be among the first to travel the trans-Canada highway is available around this gap in the summer by way of the big bend highway in British Columbia.

In construction of those sections of the trans-Canada highway which pass through the national parks, the work, as hon. members know, is entirely a federal responsibility and excellent progress has been made. Work in Terra Nova national park in Newfoundland was completed during the year to the extent that the road has been opened to unrestricted traffic. Some of the final paving has been laid in Banff national park while in Glacier and Revelstoke the grading, several of the structures and the base course were substantially completed.

In the bridge construction field an agreement was signed with the government of the province of New Brunswick during the year for the construction of the Campobello island bridge to the state of Maine. As you know, this is a very interesting spot for tourists. As you also know, another agreement between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario and the dominion was signed for the construction of the new Macdonald-Cartier bridge between Ottawa and Hull. This is an achievement of which I think we can all be proud, particularly because of the co-operation of all five levels of government in bringing this matter to a successful conclusion.

I come now to the program for 1961-62. The total amount requested for the Department of Public Works in the main estimates is $220,565,554. As in previous years, this includes the estimates of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I should mention, however, that it also includes this year for the first time the estimates of the national capital commission. However, they are all segregated, as hon. members know.

In the estimates of the Department of Public Works proper the total amount requested is $209,565,304. This is approximately $5,600,000 more than the amount appropriated by parliament for the department last year in the main and supplementary estimates.

There is a decrease in the amount requested for public buildings in 1961-62. This is caused mainly by the completion of a number of large building projects in some of the major population centres in the past few years. This decrease, however, will be more than offset by increases in other categories of work, mainly in harbours and rivers engineering and in the expenditures anticipated for the trans-Canada highway.

In harbours and rivers work, the increase of approximately $4 million is due mainly to a number of large projects on which expenditures are expected to be heavy during the present fiscal year. In trans-Canada highway work, expenditures on those sections which pass through national parks are expected to be about $2 million less because of the extent to which construction has been completed. This is more than offset, however, by expenditures anticipated because of the entry of the government of the province of Quebec into a trans-Canada highway agreement. Hon. members will be asked to approve smaller increases in other categories, including building maintenance and furniture and furnishings.

In connection with building construction I mentioned a decrease in the amount required for building construction because of fewer really large buildings being in progress. There are, however, a number of noteworthy building construction projects which will be of interest to hon. members. Foremost in this category is a building for which preparations will be completed during the present fiscal year, with construction scheduled for 1962. I am sorry the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is not here because she has been one of the many members who have been importuning us with regard to the national library building which will be located on Wellington street on the site of the No. 1 temporary building. It is expected to cost between $10 million and $12 million, and will be of supreme interest to Canadians everywhere.

The accommodation requirements for various government agencies following the explosion damages to the Jackson building made it necessary to continue using the No. 1 temporary building. However, plans are now being prepared, and we have an item in the supplementary estimates to provide funds for a building at Tunney's pasture for a unit of the Department of National Revenue. This unit is now in the No. 1 temporary building. We hope to have construction of the new building in progress this summer. This will make it possible to clear the No. 1 temporary building site by calling tenders and having it demolished ready for the start of construction on the new national library building. Thus, it has only now become possible for us to schedule construction of the national library and while funds for the building will not be sought until the main estimates are presented for the next fiscal year, I thought the committee would be interested in having a general description of the plans that have been made for this nationally important building.

The building will be approximately 300 feet by 210 feet and will contain an assembly and theatre hall capable of seating 300 persons. The exterior walls will be faced with Canadian granite—which seems to be appropriate under the circumstances—and the building will be air conditioned because of library requirements. It will be capable of handling some two million volumes as well as many manuscripts on its 15 stack levels, three of which will be below ground. The ground floor will provide offices for the Royal Society of Canada and exhibition halls and offices for the national library. Reading rooms and rare book displays will be included on the second floor, while the third floor will be used for the dominion archives displays and offices. The fourth floor will be used in part by the national library and may, for a period, be used as well as office space for other government departments.

Hon. members will be interested also in a number of other building construction projects in various parts of Canada on which work is expected to start during the present fiscal year. I will run over them very briefly, and I hope to get through by six o'clock. Then, the hon. member for Trinity or the hon. member for Levis can follow if they so desire. The list is as follows:

Newfoundland—construction of a new public building at Dark Cove.

Nova Scotia—a new public building at Kentville.

New Brunswick—a public building at Florenceville.

Quebec—new public buildings at Beauharnois and Magog and an addition and alterations to the public building at Marieville.

Ontario—new public buildings at Acton, Bolton, Smiths Falls, and Weston and a new postal terminal at Kitchener.

Saskatchewan—new public buildings at Cabri, Carlyle and Kerrobert and an addition and alterations to the public building at Nipawin.

Alberta—new public buildings at Lacombe and Saint Albert.

British Columbia—new public buildings at Clinton, Creston and a building for the unemployment insurance commission at Vancouver.

The program for construction of small, standard post office buildings in the smaller communities of Canada during the winter has been, I believe, highly successful and has been particularly well received in the communities affected. This program will be continued during the winter of 1961-62 and according to present indications it will be of approximately the same order as those for previous years. I want to thank hon. members, including members of the opposition, for giving me so many opportunities to provide post offices for places in their particular ridings.

In so far as harbour and river works are concerned, the committee will be asked to approve appropriations for the continuation of several noteworthy projects, as well as for the beginning of new ones which have an important bearing on the economic growth and development of the communities concerned. Some of these will be of more than usual interest to the committee. They are:

Newfoundland—the main terminal in the St. John's harbour development is expected to be completed as well as the marginal wharf on the north shore and two large transit sheds. In addition, the construction of a breakwater will be undertaken at Fortune.

Nova Scotia—at Dingwall, construction will be undertaken on a novel system of breakwaters designed on the basis of a model study carried out by the national research council. We get tremendous help from this council. It is hoped that this system will provide protection and prevent the silting of the harbour which has caused very difficult maintenance problems in the past. In addition the reconstruction of the wharf at Pictou should be completed during the year, and a new public wharf will be started at Yarmouth.

Prince Edward Island—the breakwater at Wood islands will be completed and dredging undertaken.

New Brunswick—dredging will be carried out at Saint John and an extension built to the breakwater there.

Quebec—harbour improvements will be carried out at the Magdalen islands, at Etang and Caps and Havre Aubert, and reconstruction of the wharf will be undertaken at Les Eboulements. Also several important projects will be carried forward which are associated with the industrial development of the north shore generally. These include harbour improvements at Baie Comeau—which is a tremendous community and becoming more and more so—completion of the harbour construction at Pointe-au-Pere and enlargement of the wharf at Sept Isles.

Ontario—a harbour development will be undertaken at Cornwall and work continued on the new harbour terminal at the lakehead. In Toronto dredging and other harbour improvements will be undertaken including an eastward extension of the existing ship channel to provide extra berthage.

Manitoba—construction of a new breakwater will be undertaken at Gimli.

Alberta and Northwest Territories—we expect to begin construction of wharves at Fort Good Hope, Fort Norman and Fort Providence.

British Columbia—dredging in the Fraser river and maintenance on the river control works will be carried out as well as reconstruction of the assembly wharf at Nanaimo. Harbour improvements will be undertaken at Qualicum Beach.

Then, in so far as trans-Canada highway construction is concerned, I may say that in actual practice the section through Terra Nova will be fully completed this year. A substantial amount of the final paving is expected—

The Chairman: Order; it is now six o'clock and the minister seems to have a good deal more to complete his statement.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether we could have another two minutes, Mr. Chairman, to complete this statement.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take advantage of the good nature of the hon. members of the committee. There are two more pages and it would take approximately five minutes.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader would indicate if there is any change in the business announced for the rest of the week.

Mr. Churchill: There is no change, Mr. Speaker; we will continue with the estimates of this department tomorrow.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

C.N.R. PENSION ACCOUNTING PRACTICE

Question No. 218—Mr. Fisher:

1. What would the 1960 Canadian National Railways charges for pensions have been if the company's practice with regard to funding pension liabilities had been on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year?

2. What would the 1960 C.N.R. deficit have been if the company had not, in 1960, changed its method of accounting for charges in respect of certain of its pension plans?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

Parts 1 and 2. The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that an explanation of this matter is to be found on page 12 of the annual report of the railways for 1960, and that Note 4 to the balance sheet on page 18 of the same report is also explanatory of the situation.

The Minister of Finance also answered a question on this subject in Hansard of 26th April, page 4011.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SESSIONAL COMMITTEE

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe) presented the first report of the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLICATIONS

TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and in French of the report of the royal commission on publications. Copies of this report are being distributed to members forthwith and released for publication. I shall not, of course, at this time endeavour to summarize or interpret the report, or give any indication of the government's intentions concerning its recommendations. However, I might say that the government is giving careful study to this report and its recommendations in the light of its objective to foster a sound and strong Canadianism.

The report speaks for itself and should be of the greatest interest to hon. members and to the public generally. May I also add a word of commendation to the membership of the commission. All members applied themselves with diligence and commendable zeal to the problem they faced and deserve the thanks of the people of Canada for the work they have done.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ARCTIC ISLANDS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DRILLING OF EXPLORATORY WELL

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that a well in search of oil and gas will be drilled in the Arctic islands this year. This is the first exploratory well to test this major northern sedimentary basin, one of the last great untested potential oil and gas producing basins in the world. The decision to commence drilling operations follows two years of broad scale geological work in the Arctic islands.

The project represents an outstanding example of initiative on the part of private enterprise in Canada. The necessary capital has been raised by Dome Petroleum Limited on a co-operative basis. This investment under the leadership of a Canadian company in the development of our resources is an encouraging response to the government's program of northern development, and suggests that the recent amendments to the oil and gas regulations have had a beneficial effect.

There are many difficulties to be overcome, not the least of which is transportation. The drilling rig will be loaded on freight cars in Calgary to be shipped to Montreal. From there it will be transshipped to a freighter which will take it to the islands during this summer's shipping season. Depending on ice conditions, drilling will take place in the high Arctic on either Melville island or Bathurst island.

Oil and gas exploration in the north is now entering a new phase. Should success result from this first venture, it will be the first of many wells to be drilled in the islands and will mark the beginning of a new era in the economy of Canada's Arctic. I am sure that Canadians everywhere will watch the operation with keen interest.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BANK OF CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give the house an undertaking that the legislation referred to yesterday by him, dealing with the Bank of Canada, will be introduced before the introduction of the budget.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not see any reason why that legislation should precede the introduction of the budget. Hon. members opposite have been screaming for weeks now urging the early introduction of the budget. Now that they have got it apparently they want other business introduced which may have the effect of postponing the budget, because evidently they want to debate such legislation at great length.

Mr. Pearson: May I just say that the minister's reply is both irrelevant and offensive.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the Leader of the Opposition that it was not meant to be irrelevant.

Mr. Pearson: But naturally offensive.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—INQUIRY AS TO REVISION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act forecast in the speech from the throne will be introduced before the adjournment or prorogation of this session of parliament.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of government policy. As soon as a decision on that policy is arrived at, action will be taken and communicated to this house.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the policy was announced in the speech from the throne, is the minister's reluctance now an indication that there has been a change of policy?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, as I said previously, any decision on that policy that is made by the government will be communicated to this house. The intention of the government in respect to this matter will be made known.

THE CENSUS

STATEMENT ON CENSUS COMMISSIONERS ACTING AS ENUMERATORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked on Tuesday by the hon. member for Nipissing, as shown at page 6250 of Hansard, I have ascertained that in some instances a census commissioner may be required to enumerate people in the course of his or her duty as a census commissioner. As this is part of the duty of a census commissioner, he or she does not receive any extra pay.

Mrs. Margaret G. Priest of 147 Riverdale avenue, Toronto, is the commissioner in census district 575B. Her son, Mr. W. G. Priest, is an enumerator in census district 575C. In the selection test for enumerators he scored 100 per cent. Another son, Mr. E. H. Priest, is an enumerator in census district 575A. In the selection test for enumerators he scored 96 per cent. Both these census districts are under other census commissioners.

[Mr. Pearson.]

The dominion bureau of statistics reports that Mr. G. W. Priest has finished his assignment and has been checked out by their officials, and his work has been classed as excellent. Mr. E. H. Priest has almost completed his assignment and his work has also been classed as excellent.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Could I ask the minister a supplementary question—

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I wonder whether I might ask a supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Make up your minds.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Garland: The minister seems to be in a good and informative mood this morning. Would he confirm that this is the same Margaret G. Priest who is president of the Broadview-Riverdale Progressive Conservative Association?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I am very proud to do so. Mrs. Priest has the honour of holding that very distinguished and important post.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Nipissing rose I was also going to ask the minister a supplementary question and mine was, is this the restoration of the family compact in Toronto?

THE BUDGET

REFERENCE TO COMMENTS OF FINANCE MINISTER ON JUNE 14

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I know the appreciation he has for what happens in the mother of parliaments. Will he admit that in yesterday's debate our Minister of Finance revealed the major aspects of the budget even though the details were omitted?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question did not seem to me to start out as one asking for information when he asked the Prime Minister to admit something. As I heard it, the question of what was said in the house did not appear to me to be an administrative responsibility of the Prime Minister.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister was able to table the O'Leary commission report, which was received much later than the Bladen report, will the Minister of Finance now or before the budget table the Bladen report on the state of the automobile industry in Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the question should come to me. Again I would say to the hon. member that it will be tabled at the time felt to be appropriate in the opinion of the government.

TRADE

STRAWBERRIES—INQUIRY AS TO IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question about strawberries.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Address it to the government.

Mr. Hicks: This does not mean we are going to get some crates of strawberries. The question has to do with strawberries coming into Canada. A large tonnage of strawberries is being imported from the United States by local canneries. This will mean a cut in the price to local growers if it is not stopped at once. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether any action is being taken in connection with this matter.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I just heard about the matter this morning. I am taking it up with the fruit and vegetable division and I should be able to have the information for the hon. member shortly.

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO SEIZURE OF EXPORTS BY CANADIAN CUSTOMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I wonder whether the minister is now in a position to report to the house on the investigation the minister claimed was being made by the customs department into the seizure of 165 tons of spare parts and materials on board a ship destined for Cuba a few weeks ago?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not think I have received that report, Mr. Speaker, but I shall check up on it and give the hon. member an answer tomorrow, if possible.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

TENDER NO. 43-1-1977-D—REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether in the absence of the Minister of Defence Production I might direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the assurance given to the house on Thursday last by the Minister of Defence Production that priority is given by his department, when purchasing, to goods made in Canada provided prices are competitive, can the Prime Minister say whether a price difference of $3.14 on a $600 item is sufficient reason to deny jobs to Canadians by giving the order for goods made outside Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, naturally I would not answer that question in hypothetical form. If the hon. gentleman will give particulars of the specific contract he has in mind an answer will then be secured.

Mr. Garland: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of what the Prime Minister has said I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would be good enough to look into tender No. 43-1-1977-D, which closed on June 5, and give the particulars to the house.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

329. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,667,720.

The Deputy Chairman: This item will be found on page 67 of the blue book, and the details on page 452.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I had almost completed my remarks last evening and was dealing with the trans-Canada highway construction program in the national parks. The section through Terra Nova will be fully completed during this year. A substantial amount of final paving is expected in the Banff national park, and a start will be made in paving in Yoho. In Glacier and Revelstoke national parks we expect by the end of the year to have a bituminous stabilized base course to provide a paved surface in both sections. The construction of snow sheds for avalanche protection begun in 1960-61 will be continued and, as you know, Mr. Chairman, this is a novel and large undertaking.

May I briefly summarize the work for the other departments. I went into the other matters in some detail yesterday. Hon. members will recall that when I introduced the department's estimates last year I mentioned a new departure, namely the planning and construction of embassy and chancery buildings abroad in co-operation with the Department of External Affairs. I know hon. members of the committee will be pleased that a further step has been made in this direction. We are now working in co-operation with the Department of Justice on construction plans for new buildings associated with certain penitentiaries in Canada. More and more the Department of Public Works is being used by the other departments of government for the construction of whatever buildings they find necessary, and a complete rapport exists among the departments in this connection.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I agree.

Mr. Walker: At least the Postmaster General agrees with that statement. We have been working with him for a long time, however. In 1961-62 the department expects to do a substantial volume of construction work for other departments using funds from their appropriations. On the basis of present information, 470 projects in this category are expected to be carried out for 15 other departments with a total expenditure in 1961-62 estimated at $37¼ million. Some of them are new and others are to be continued from 1960-61. The larger projects in this category will be of interest to hon. members, and I will summarize them briefly. In other words, this is work outside the Department of Public Works, and outside what we would ordinarily do in the past.

Department of Agriculture: a science service laboratory at Vancouver.

Department of Citizenship and Immigration: a large number of schools and residences, including a school at Pointe Bleue agency, Quebec; hostels at Whitehorse; a residential school at Mission, B.C.; a school at Pelly agency, Saskatchewan, and a water supply system at Fort George, James bay agency.

Department of Fisheries: construction of several community fishing stages in Newfoundland; a gear research Laboratory at Nanaimo, B.C.; a workshop building at St. Andrews, N.B.; and conversion of the electrical system at biological station in Nanaimo, B.C.

Department of Forestry: a garage and office building at Quebec city.

Department of Mines and Technical Surveys: construction of the Bedford institute at Bedford basin, Dartmouth, N.S. and road construction at Victoria, B.C.

Department of National Defence: reconstruction of the jetty at Esquimalt, B.C.; reconstruction of a naval radio station at Inuvik; repairs to the jetty at Patricia Bay, B.C.; and repairs to the fuel oil depot at Colwood, B.C.

National research council: communications laboratory building at Riverside drive, Ottawa, and applied physics building at Montreal road.

Department of National Health and Welfare: a hospital at Inuvik, N.W.T.; a hospital at Whitehorse, Y.T.; a nursing station at Habay, Alberta; repair of civil defence building at Arnprior.

Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources: large contracts for highway construction, other than trans-Canada, in the national parks—Banff, Kootenay, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island and Yoho; a school and hostel at Fort Simpson, Northwest Territories; road reconstruction in the Yukon, on the Keno road at Whitehorse and on the Flat Creek—Eagle Plain road. In addition, a survey and some new construction will be undertaken on the road from Watson Lake to Ross. In the Northwest Territories, road work will be undertaken on the Mackenzie highway from Frank Channel to Rae, and on the road from Yellowknife to McKay Lake.

For the R.C.M.P., for which my colleague the Minister of Justice is responsible, a large number of detachment quarters are to be built, among them buildings at Queen Charlotte, British Columbia; Carmacks, Yukon Territory; Summerside, Prince Edward Island; Grand Manan, New Brunswick; Shelburne, Nova Scotia; Lillooet, British Columbia and Rock Island, Quebec.

For the Department of Transport the program includes marine agency buildings at Saint John, New Brunswick, and St. John's, Newfoundland; wharf and sheds at Corner Brook and Lewisporte, Newfoundland; work on the Toronto island airport and dredging at Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick.

For the Department of Veterans Affairs the program includes a therapeutic wing at the Shaughnessy hospital, Vancouver; a laundry at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, and a new hospital wing in London, Ontario.

I wish to thank the ministers in charge of these various departments of government for their complete co-operation in entrusting to the Department of Public Works so many important projects. I have outlined to the committee only the highlights of the department's work program. I know that hon. members will have questions to ask concerning individual items which are of particular interest to them and about which they may require additional information from me. I shall be glad to give them all the information I can at this time.

Finally, since I understand some hon. members are concerned about this, I can assure the committee that I feel very good natured today.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) for the information he has just given us. It will prove useful, I expect, for the discussion that will follow.

I was glad to hear him say a moment ago that he is fully willing to discuss matters related to his department.

He realizes, I suppose, that since he has been Minister of Public Works, he often loses his temper. I hope that in this debate, he will manage to contain himself so that the discussion will be intelligent and serious.

I was somewhat surprised by the brevity of his remarks on the activities of his department. He is usually more talkative. He certainly has no reason to be, especially where the accomplishments of the government or his department are concerned.

I think I understand him on that point because ever since he took charge of the Department of Public Works, both activities and expenditures have been decreasing year after year.

(Text):

Mr. Boulanger: Shame, Shame.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: As last year, I will limit my remarks to general observations and then add to them as each item is considered separately.

As in the past, I should have liked to make an analysis by using charts to show what percentage of the appropriations were actually used during the last fiscal year, namely 1960-61.

That would have enabled us to better appreciate the efficiency of the department during the past year.

These analyses showed that in 1958-59, the expenditures amounted to 89.5 per cent of the appropriations, while they amounted to 90 per cent in 1959-60.

For 1960-61, in view of the fact that the estimates of the department are being examined before the budget speech, it is impossible to make such an analysis, since we lack the required data, which are contained in papers tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) when he introduces the budget.

It seems appropriate however to bring to the attention of the members of the committee the fact that during the current year, the number of unemployed reached a record percentage, that is 11.3 per cent of the labour force in February 1961. Yet this government, which advocated full employment and whose leader had said that no one would suffer because of unemployment, had requested for the Department of Public Works appropriations exceeding by only $7.9 million the amounts voted for 1956-57, the last year of the former administration.

This amount of $7.9 million does not include, of course, amounts provided for the construction of the trans-Canada highway, which are statutory expenses depending upon the activity of the provinces.

Thus I had every reason to say, as we have every right to repeat now, that there has been a reversal of the policy that the government was supposed to lay down, since it has renounced its famous public works program which was to supply jobs for everyone.

As I pointed out last year, if you analyse the estimates of the Minister of Public Works for the years 1958-59, 1959-60 and 1960-61, you find that instead of going up, as was the case under the Liberal administration, the expenses of the department have steadily declined from year to year. In 1958-59, expenditures ran to a total of $220 million whereas for the year 1959-60, the total was only $203.8 million. Finally, for the year just ended, we had been asked to vote $195.9 million including expenses for the trans-Canada highway, a decrease of $25 million in relation to the previous year. Under the Liberal administration, the amounts voted showed an increase every year, going from $37.2 million in 1946-47 to $147.5 million for the year 1956-57.

Last year, when these estimates came up, I asked the minister whether he could justify the fact that there had been such a drop in the work of the department at a time when unemployment was reaching alarming heights and when future prospects were none too bright. Here was the minister's reply, as recorded on page 6619 of Hansard for July 20, 1960:

> The hon. member for Levis asked me why we cut $25 million from last year's public works budget. There are two reasons. The first reason is, of course, that in the two previous years, in an effort to get out of the recession, a great spending program, although a proper and well directed spending program, was initiated. It was felt that this could not be kept up forever and that it was a very good thing to cut back this year because we had hopes of having a very prosperous year and, aside from the unemployment figures, the gross national product is going to be exceptionally good.

The minister went on to say:

As my hon. friend also knows, when the Minister of Finance made his budget address the hon. member for Levis was one of those who voted for a balanced budget. I am not always in favour of the suggestions made by the Minister of Finance. Sometimes we are at odds. Naturally, all the backbenchers are on my side because they want things I am convinced they should have. Sometimes I have to bow to the Minister of Finance and you are quite right when you suggest that.

At that point, I reminded the minister that he was forgetting the promises made in 1957 and 1958. Here is his reply:

Hon. members not only got promises, but they got results. The benefits of a balanced budget are obvious, even to my engineering friend the hon. member for Levis. I do not need to go into that. What would have happened in the country so far as finance is concerned? We have to have our financial institutions operating properly if we want to have business operating as well as possible. I need not go into that.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, it was better at the time for the minister not to go into that, and I feel sure that when he is reminded today of the statements he made last July, he wishes he had never made them, because they were just another vision or dream that never came true.

The Minister of Public Works was at that time completely in error. I have shown a moment ago on the basis of statistics that the amounts spent by the Department of Public Works, instead of rising as should be the case in view of the fact that the expenses of the department should expand along with the development of the Canadian nation, have been steadily dropping since 1958-59.

This is why I say that the extensive public works program which we heard so much about has never existed except in the minds of government supporters, in spite of the goodly number of unemployed that kept increasing from year to year.

Moreover, I suggest that the prediction about the tremendous increase in the gross national product has proved altogether false, since the 6 per cent rise expected by the Minister of Finance reached only 3.2 per cent, or 2.1 per cent, if price increases are taken into account.

As far as the matter of a balanced budget is concerned, the minister must agree with us today that he was entirely wrong since the expected budget surplus of $12 million has turned into a deficit of almost $300 million.

[Mr. Bourget.]

I recognize, of course, Mr. Chairman, that a balanced budget has certain advantages. But, in spite of all their promises, did we have any balanced budgets since the Conservatives came into power? No, not even one. On the contrary, we had an uninterrupted series of deficits now exceeding $2 billion. That is why our country finds itself in a bad financial situation, the interest on the national debt is going up in a frightening way, the interest rates are prohibitive and our manufacturers, businessmen, workers and farmers find it difficult to borrow money. It is also because of the lack of action and foresight on the part of the government and the absence of any well conceived and orderly plans that we have today 700,000 unemployed in Canada.

Therefore, we have a right to say that the government has failed in its duty, that it is proceeding in a fog toward an unknown destination.

The minister also stated that he was not always in agreement with the suggestions of the Minister of Finance and that sometimes he had to give in to him. Then, how can he reconcile his remarks with what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) himself said as recorded on page 3569 of Hansard for January 21, 1958, and I quote:

While next year we would unquestionably like to have a balanced budget, let me make it abundantly clear that we are not going to put a balanced budget above our firm determination to provide, through the agency of public works, jobs for unemployed Canadians.

I would then advise the minister to remind the Minister of Finance of those words when he has to justify his department's appropriations before the treasury board. Then, he will not have to give in to him or to give reasons which do not stand by themselves to justify his conduct.

Mr. Chairman, I should now like to analyse briefly the estimates for the fiscal year 1961-62. I say briefly because they are neither numerous nor impressive. We are asked to vote an amount of $166,548,544, that is only $2.3 million more than last year's vote.

On the other hand, if we subtract from those appropriations $2.7 million for the national capital commission which came under the privy council until last year, we find that the Department of Public Works' appropriations were, in fact, again reduced this year by some $400,000. In other words, they are $25.4 million less than for the fiscal year 1959-60.

Incidentally, I should like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that this amount of $25.4 million is about the equivalent of the government's appropriations for the winter works program, which bring me to the conclusion that what the government gives us with one hand, they take away with the other.

Mr. Valade: Who said that?

Mr. Bourget: By analysing the two major services, that is the one which looks after the construction, acquisition, maintenance and improvement of public buildings and the harbours and rivers engineering services, I find that, in the first case, appropriations have been pared by $5,447,000 whereas in the second case, they were increased by $3,558,000. In other words, appropriations for the two major services of the department have been cut down by nearly $2 million.

This year again, I would like the minister to give us the reasons for such a decrease in his estimates, when unemployment is known to be increasing, year after year. Is he trying to help the Minister of Finance balance his budget, as he said last year? He should then put an end to all expenditures, cut all building projects in his department, for if the experts are right, the deficit for the current fiscal year will be twice as high as that predicted for 1960-61. Or is it that the department is short of projects?

Yet the minister's predecessor said in the house on June 6, 1958, that he was going to have a reserve of public works to be undertaken on short notice. Where are those projects? Where are they? Is the reserve already depleted? Is the minister feeling tired? Or are the projects being kept for an election year?

I could easily, Mr. Chairman, point out a few to the minister that could be undertaken immediately and could even have been undertaken last year if the department had seen to it.

As a matter of fact, in the department's estimates for 1959-60, a sum of $600,000 was earmarked for the construction of a building in Quebec city for an unemployment insurance office there. Nothing has been done so far, except that the old hospital has been demolished.

Last year, another amount of $500,000 was provided for the same purpose, and nothing has been done.

I then asked the minister why construction had not been started. He answered that the accommodation committee looking into this matter had needed time to decide if the building would house only the unemployment insurance commission or several government services. He added that the committee had settled the problem and that the building would only be used to accommodate unemployment insurance. Well, that was in July last year and nothing has been done so far.

Another item of $575,000 is provided again this year for the construction of that building. If the same eagerness is shown this year as in the last two years, I can guarantee that nothing will be done. I even wonder if the plans have even been started. If not, it will take at least five to six months to complete the plans and specifications, a month and a half for the calling of tenders and another month to consider the tenders and award the contract. That means that even if the plans were started immediately, actual work could not begin before the end of this fiscal year.

And yet, the minister has certainly not forgotten that when visiting Quebec in January 1960—i.e. a year and a half ago—he announced the site where the building was to be erected and said that $500,000 had been provided in the last estimates for that construction. His parliamentary secretary and representative for the riding was present. Unfortunately the Quebec East constituents are still waiting. They may find some consolation, however, in the fact that they are not the only ones waiting for this government to honor its promises.

Indeed, in the city of Toronto where the minister lives, construction of a building to accommodate unemployment insurance had been announced in the 1959-60 estimates. It was supposed to be erected at the corner of Dundas and Jarvis streets and $400,000 had been voted for that purpose.

I want to point out that this was another building to house unemployment insurance. And accommodation for that department is badly needed under the Tories because they have so many unemployed.

Well, the following year, that is in 1960-61, the same amount of $400,000 was voted again for the very same building. And this year, we are asked to vote $900,000.

Now, on February 22 last, I put a starred question asking whether the plans and specifications of the Toronto unemployment insurance office were ready. The minister's parliamentary secretary answered as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that it was originally expected that the plans and specifications would be completed by April 1, 1961. A basic change in the accommodation requirements has been proposed, and until this has been dealt with it is not possible to say when the plans and specifications will be completed.

That is another project for which we have been called upon to vote estimates for two years and a half and they do not know yet when the plans will be completed.

Surely, you cannot expect the hon. members of the committee to believe that during that long period, it could not have been possible to have the plans completed and the building started. Well, either they do not want the project carried out now or there is carelessness. The delay in carrying out that project cannot be explained otherwise.

The minister seems to be in need of suggestions about new projects the department would like to carry out. Well, I should like to make a very interesting suggestion which, I hope, will meet the approval not only of the minister but also of all hon. members, whether they sit on this side or on the other side of the house.

We know that, in Ottawa, the capital of this country, many conventions are held and that, unfortunately, there is no suitable building or local for that type of meeting. Since in six years from now, that is in 1967, we will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Canadian confederation, would it not be wise to consider, right now, the possibility of erecting a federal building which might be used for that purpose and which, at the same time, could be considered as a monument erected in our capital properly to mark that important event in the life of our country?

Furthermore, I suggest that all provinces get together with regard to that project, in the sense that the name of each be given to one of the halls of the building.

Mr. Deschatelets: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bourget: The minister could at the same time take the opportunity to organize a competition open to all Canadian architects. I am sure they would be only too glad to cooperate to a project of such scope. I do not intend to say any more about that project for the time being, but I think this suggestion should be seriously considered by the minister and his officials.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about the possibility of building a causeway that would cross Northumberland strait to link New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

As all members of the committee, I noticed that in the remarks he made this morning and yesterday the minister had nothing to say about that important project which has been under consideration for four years.

Last year, on the discussion of these estimates, I mentioned a number of studies carried out by various government departments and firms of consulting engineers. I also pointed out to the minister that in my opinion with that data available the approximate cost of the project could be estimated so that it could be determined whether it was economically feasible or not. I added that studies and research in the future would affect only in a small way the estimate of cost for the project.

Later on, in the same debate, I asked the minister when he expected to be in receipt of a final report on the feasibility of that project, or when he expected the termination of research carried out by the national research council to ascertain whether this project was economically feasible. Here is the answer the minister gave me. I quote:

This week, the N.R.C. told us they hoped the results would be available next fall. As soon as possible afterward—

It is always as soon as possible.

—we shall decide whether the work is feasible and we will then be in a position to give a definite answer to the hon. member as to the total cost of the project.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel that after three and even four years of study, which cost almost $700,000, members of the committee, and particularly the public in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, have a right to know whether the project is feasible and what the government intends to do in that regard.

I hope the minister will make up his mind and tell us exactly what the situation is, now that the by-election has been held in Prince Edward Island, because after four years of consideration—and I repeat—after expenditures of $700,000, we have a right to know what are the intentions of the government about that important project.

Mr. Chairman, may I now—

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member's time has expired. Will the committee give unanimous consent to his continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I also want to thank the members of the committee.

(Translation):

Mr. Chambers: It is the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) who is in favour of it.

Mr. Bourget: In that case, I have unanimous consent.

Mr. Martineau: You have at least one follower.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are in favour of extending your speaking time and also agree with everything you say.

Mr. Ricard: I am afraid he will shout himself hoarse.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Essex East (Mr. Martin) says that he entirely agrees with me.

Mr. Chairman, I now come to the program for the construction of smaller post offices in some communities. The minister knows that the program was approved by all hon. members and that the citizens want those post offices in many places.

In 1960 and 1961, I received from two municipalities in my riding, that is St. Lambert and St. Louis de Pintendre, requests for small post offices in those two municipalities. I then referred those requests to the Post Office Department and to the Department of Public Works with the reasons which, in my opinion, could justify the departments to agree to them. Later, I received very polite answers saying that those two post offices were of the class called revenue post offices and that in those cases, the quarters were usually provided by the local postmasters.

I have no criticism in the case of the request from St. Lambert parish, for the revenues of that office in 1959-1960 were only $2,076.54, or almost $1,000 less than the required amount of $3,000, according to the information given to me last year by the minister.

However, I fail to understand why the St. Louis de Pintendre request was turned down by the minister, because, according to the Post Office Department publication "List of Post Offices with revenues", that office's revenues in 1959-60 reached $3,411.23. Besides, I am convinced that there is just as much work to do in that post office as in others that have been built by the government under this policy.

I know from experience that it is difficult to grant all requests during the same year, but I think that if they meet the required standards, they should be granted even if construction has to be deferred until the next year. The municipalities concerned would then feel that they are all being treated in the same manner.

Unless there are reasons that I am not aware of, I ask the minister to reconsider his decision on the request of St. Louis de Pintendre so that the citizens of that municipality may feel they are given the same treatment as those in other municipalities.

And while I am on the subject of small post offices, I would like to draw the minister's attention to the general appearance of the post offices built in recent years.

Members of the committee will recall that in May I told the house about the complaints of the population and public organizations of Rouyn, in the province of Quebec, about the drab appearance of this town's new post office building.

The following day, the minister replied that he had received the particular complaints and that the department would improve the looks of the building by the removal of a construction shack and the contractor's signs. He added that efflorescence on the brickwork would be removed and a general cleaning up around the building would be carried out.

You do not have to be an architect or an engineer to realize that the minister paid little attention to the complaints of the people involved, because otherwise, his reply would have been different.

The complaints made in the circumstances had nothing to do with the normal cleaning up job to be done after a building is completed. As I have indicated, they referred to the disgraceful appearance of the building itself, in other words to its exterior design, its architectural design.

Foundations had been laid, then a floor and after that four walls had been set up and a roof put on top. But no attention had been paid the building's architectural design, in order to make it attractive.

I hope there is no need to belabour the point. I am sure the minister, and particularly the officials of his department, know what I mean. I also hope that in the future we will hear no more such complaints, and even if it costs a few thousand dollars more to the government, I hope they will be spent, so that the municipalities may be proud of their public buildings.

The last point I wish to discuss briefly—I shall refer to it again when the relevant item comes up—concerns the trans-Canada highway.

At long last, after 11 years of waiting caused by the stubborn refusal of the Conservative government in the province of Quebec, a Liberal government has been elected to office in that province and an agreement has been reached on this highway.

That agreement between the federal government and the provincial government was signed on October 29, 1960.

For a period of 11 years, the late government of the Union Nationale had refused the benefits of this plan under the fallacious pretext that this project was altogether unacceptable and inconsistent with provincial autonomy. I may even go on to say that the great majority of Conservative members from the province of Quebec now sitting in this house supported the views of the late great leader of the Union Nationale. But now they do not utter a word. In their opinion, this project does not now infringe upon any aspect of provincial autonomy, probably because it is introduced by a Conservative government.

This 11 years of stubborn refusal has cost the province of Quebec millions of dollars—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Bourget: It is difficult to estimate the exact amount so lost, but I can say that a considerable part of the Montreal metropolitan boulevard, which will cost almost $130 million, could have been paid by the federal government. It is thus easier to see now that such stubbornness on the part of the previous provincial administration was most costly.

Some time ago the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin) put a question to the Minister of Public Works. He wanted to know whether the Department of Public Works intended to pay part of the metropolitan boulevard under the trans-Canada highway program.

He apparently was happy to hear the minister say that he would not pay that part which was built before an agreement was entered into by the federal and provincial governments.

I regret that an hon. member from the province of Quebec has put such a question to the minister, for I know that his intention was to say that Mr. Lesage—

[Mr. Bourget.]

Mr. Martineau: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I believe that you have allowed the hon. member for Levis the greatest latitude up to now.

However, it seems to me that, according to our rules, he does not have the right to pass judgment on the intentions of a member who voted for or against a bill.

The rules of the house are very clear on that point. I therefore believe the hon. member for Levis should refrain from passing judgment.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that there is no point of order in the circumstances.

I simply noted that a member from the province of Quebec had put a question in this house concerning the metropolitan boulevard. Being a Quebecker, I was sorry to hear that question.

I have been a member of this house for 21 years, Mr. Chairman, and I have always asserted the rights of my province, without playing politics.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, would you give your ruling on the point of order I have raised, to the effect that the hon. member is imputing motives to other members?

I believe that the hon. member for Levis is out of order; besides, according to our rules, his time is up.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: We have under consideration the first item of the Department of Public Works. I have noticed that the hon. member has strayed on one or two occasions but has come back to the point. As I say, we are dealing with the administration item which is related to the forthcoming fiscal year, not any year in the past to which the hon. member was making reference, so I would ask him to co-operate with the Chair and endeavour to stick more closely to the item under consideration for the forthcoming fiscal year.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Tell us something about the Salvas commission.

Mr. Bourget: How that Salvas commission gets under your skin. That is why you have taken an injunction to try and stop it. The commission will keep on getting under your skin. There we see what has been happening for 16 years in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Ricard: The judges are also the accusers.

Mr. Bourget: You see, Mr. Chairman, the respect they have for judges in the province of Quebec.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wishes to ask a question, then the hon. member for Levis who has the floor must be prepared to yield before the hon. member is entitled to ask his question. I have not noticed that the hon. member for Levis has yielded the floor.

Mr. Bourget: I will be glad to answer any question the hon. member cares to ask.

Mr. Pigeon: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. Bourget: Do you know what a question of privilege is?

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the house agreed—

Mr. Bourget: No, no. I allowed the hon. member to ask me a question, but—

Mr. Pigeon: The house agreed to allow the hon. member for Levis a few more minutes. But, as he is out of order, I object to his pursuing his remarks. Anyway, his time has expired.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member take his seat, please. If the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has a point of privilege, I cannot hear what the point of privilege is if two members are speaking at the same time.

Mr. Bourget: I have only about 20 seconds left, Mr. Chairman.

(Translation):

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think we may conclude that people realize better today what the Union Nationale government cost Quebec. On the other hand, I rejoice at the thought that the Liberal government of our province will try to regain any lost ground by earmarking $50 million, for instance this year of which $20 million—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, we are not at the moment discussing the estimates of the Quebec legislature, and that is exactly what the hon. member is trying to do. I submit that he is out of order and should not be allowed to continue.

Mr. Ricard: The usual small Liberal tactics.

Mr. Bourget: In so far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is not listening to what I am saying. I am referring to the program for the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Johnson: Stop playing in the farm clubs; you are in the big league here.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. To the extent that the hon. member for Levis is referring to the joint responsibility for the trans-Canada highway, he would be in order under this item. I would be obliged if he would stay closer to the subject matter under discussion, particularly in view of the fact that his time has been extended. Perhaps the hon. member could bring his remarks to a conclusion on that particular aspect of the subject as quickly as possible.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do not like to abuse the rules. I would say that I am perfectly in order when I deal with that joint program and say that the province of Quebec is going to spend $50 millions this year and that, out of that $50 million, $20 million will be contributed by the federal government. Where am I out of order? You are a good lawyer, Mr. Chairman. You tell me where I am out of order.

An hon. Member: He does not know.

Mr. Bourget: I do not know.

(Translation):

It will be admitted, Mr. Chairman, that this is an excellent start which proves that the government of Quebec wants to give our province a highway system which will answer the needs of our people.

Well, Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wanted to make under the circumstances. I hope my fellow members from the province of Quebec will have an opportunity of making themselves heard and expressing their views. I shall have the opportunity to say a few words when we discuss the various items.

(Text):

Mr. Walker: Answering the hon. member for Levis, as he asks this specific question, may I say that the average expenditure by Department of Public Works from 1945 until we took over in 1957 was $90 million a year. Since we took over the average has been $218 million a year. For the Department of Public Works and other departments for the period under the Liberals from the war until the Conservative party took power, the average was $109 million a year and under the Conservatives it has been $234 million a year. That is the answer to the allegation that we have cut down on public works.

Mr. Bourget: You certainly have cut down.

Mr. Walker: We have increased them by 113 per cent in our own department without any of the other work that we are doing for other departments. I do not want to engage in any controversy, because I am not in the mood for it. However, these are just some of the facts.

Mr. Bourget: If the minister would look at the figures that appear in the blue book I think he would realize that since 1959, since he has taken over as Minister of Public Works, the estimates of his department have been going down. I said the situation was contrary to that under the previous administration. I have here the estimates of the department from 1946-47 to 1957-58. If the minister would like to have a copy I will give it to him, so he will be able to see that the situation was different under the Liberal administration. Even last year the minister himself admitted—and this admission can be found in Hansard—that the estimates of his department had gone down $25 million. That he cannot deny. He admitted it himself.

Mr. Herridge: Speaking for this group I wish to make a few non-partisan and objective observations on the activities of our multi-use minister and his multilateral department. The scope of the minister's activities is really remarkable. Not only is he Minister of Public Works; he is the minister responsible for the activities of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I found out that he had also been the curator of a miniature art gallery on behalf of the people of Canada, unknown to himself. I now find that he is also custodian of the red carpet for this government. I discovered that fact quite lately. I am always interested in the scope of the minister's activities.

Before proceeding I wish to say that I understand that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is one of the members for Halifax, usually warms up the minister's audiences when he visits the maritimes. It might have been a nice gesture if he had made a sort of introductory speech on the minister's estimates in order to excite or warm us up a bit. However, possibly that is not necessary in view of the furor displayed in the last few minutes.

I was pleased to listen to the review by the minister of the building activities of the department, of the buildings that are being built in the country and of the proposals for certain buildings at headquarters in Ottawa. I must say that this group is particularly interested to hear of plans for the commencement of a national library building. This has been advocated by a good many members in this House of Commons and others and we are very pleased to hear it.

I must say this, and in this respect I think I am speaking generally for the members of our group. We appreciate the minister's courtesy when dealing with representations made to him by various members, and his prompt attention to those representations. Whether or not he is successful, it is rather heartening to a member to have a minister undertake to look into the question and give him a prompt and complete reply with respect to all these circumstances. We also appreciate his readiness to discuss even small problems that are brought to his attention in connection with his department. I also wish to express our appreciation of the attitude and the approach of the deputy minister, the senior staff in Ottawa and the district staffs throughout the country.

In connection with staffs I want to make two observations. As far as the professional technical and trained staffs are concerned, I hope their salaries are in line with the salaries being paid by private industry to persons performing the same type of service. I have had brought to my attention on one or two occasions in British Columbia recently instances in which we have lost extremely good men because private industry made them very attractive offers. In order to maintain the efficiency of the department I think the salaries of technical and professional personnel must be in line with those paid by private industry.

I have one other matter to mention in respect to men employed on public works contracts throughout the country. I think there must be a little stricter policing of the fair wages clauses of the contracts signed by various contractors. No doubt the labour department supplies the Department of Public Works with information as to the prevailing rates and the circumstances in any particular community. However, I suggest that a very close watch be kept upon contractors, under certain circumstances, in order to make sure they are paying the prevailing rates and that the working conditions are those accepted in the area in which the work is being done.

Another thing I wish to mention is this. I understand that under these contracts a contractor undertakes to engage, as far as possible, local labour. I have noticed a few cases in which the bulk of the labour—and I am speaking of circumstances within my own knowledge—were employees who came from the coastal area into the interior while there were men in the community, carpenters and other artisans, who were quite capable of doing the work. I can understand the need for bringing in certain supervisory personnel. However, I think the department must watch this aspect of contracts more closely than it has been watched in the past.

I understand the difficulties. District officers must depend upon correspondence, and the administrative staff is some distance from these operations in isolated and smaller communities. In this respect I suggest that it would be a good idea to ask the inspector or the clerk of works, as I think he is properly called, to inform the department of the number of local persons who are employed and the number of imported personnel. I think the clerk of works on the job could keep the district architect informed of any particular violations.

We are very pleased to note that it is increasingly the policy of the Department of Public Works to undertake the greater part of the construction work for the government of Canada. That is a very changed situation compared with the situation of only a few years ago, when I think most of the outside work undertaken by the department was for the Post Office Department. I think it is an excellent development. It will add to efficiency and give some continuity to the approach of government toward public construction, and provide for the building up of an efficient and satisfactory staff instead of having pockets of staff in various departments concerned particularly with the construction of buildings and projects of that type. I think the present policy has been proven wise by results.

In this connection I cannot resist quoting briefly from an item in the Ottawa Journal of Saturday, May 13, which touches on this point. I think it deals with the subject very well:

> Another feather in the efficiency hat of the public works department has been the decision to have it take over the architectural and engineering branch of the penitentiaries commission from the justice department.
> It was only seven years ago that public works built only for the Post Office Department, and, of course, took care of its own construction.
> Now it's the builder for every federal department and agency except national defence and transport, and even for those it does all but the big basic construction jobs.

I endorse wholeheartedly the sentiments expressed in that item, and I suggest that the Department of National Defence, from my knowledge of certain circumstances, would save a lot of money if they let the Department of Public Works build their buildings from now on. I must say this all demonstrates that the minister and his officials are applying the principles of socialist planning to the operations of the Department of Public Works and that is why we in this group are so pleased with the purpose and activities of this department.

I have a few other suggestions to make. My remarks at this stage will be directed mainly to administration, but later on I shall have some more parochial comments to make on the appropriate items. One other suggestion I have is this. I think it would be a good idea if the minister found an opportunity to travel more than he does to various parts of the country. I know he is a very busy person, but I think his presence would be welcomed at outside points. I know it would in the Kootenays; we would give him a rousing welcome, as we do all prominent persons. But we see so few of them. The minister goes to Vancouver, spends a day or so with his officials there and drives around the city, but how rarely does either he or other ministers come into the southeastern interior. I do suggest he should find an opportunity to do that.

The same applies to the deputy minister. I think there is nothing like seeing the projects on the ground and the country in which the department is carrying on its activities in order to understand the local problems and difficulties. I suggest that more of that be done wherever possible. But even if it is limited, for heaven's sake let us have a visit from the minister or the deputy minister at least once in ten years in the southeastern portion of British Columbia.

With respect to the staff in British Columbia, I am a great believer in decentralization in administration and, as you know, in the southeastern part of British Columbia and in the Kootenays particularly there has been tremendous development. We had a very busy period in the early days of this century, when we had a district engineer and an assistant district engineer, who had a palatial boat and used to arrive in style at all the smaller places. Over the years the steamers disappeared and there was a certain stability, shall I say, in population and activity. But the area is now developing very quickly indeed with the expansion of the mining and smelting industry and the forest industry.

I have been asked to mention this by various chambers of commerce, business people and community organizations whose members are long time residents who remember the early days and are interested in future developments. We suggest there should be a district engineer living in the southeastern portion of British Columbia. There is more work to be done, and I think an engineer needs to live in a district in order to understand the circumstances which arise particularly with respect to rivers, waters, erosion, floods, local building conditions and other local circumstances.

I have been asked to bring this to the attention of the minister and suggest that it might be appropriate as soon as possible to have a district engineer responsible for the southern interior living in the southern interior, instead of him finding it necessary to come from Vancouver periodically to make a hurried visit to the district. There is nothing like getting the feel of the district and a knowledge of the people, and also belonging to certain of the local organizations in order to gain closer contact, appreciation and understanding of district problems and requirements.

Because of these recent developments I have another suggestion to make. I think there has been a bit of slackness in this regard both on the part of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport throughout the years. I should like the minister to tell us, when he can find time—I do not expect an early reply—how many complaints he has received from any officials in the last 50 years with respect to violations of the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act in so far as they affect the responsibility of the Minister of Public Works. I intended to ask the Minister of Transport the same question.

These things were not serious years ago. People would drive piles without permission and string booms without permission. They would dump sawdust into our lakes, and it would go unobserved and unreported. I do suggest that because of the development which has taken place, in order to prevent the pollution of our rivers and the dumping of slabs and logs and things of that sort, the officials responsible should be told to watch carefully for any improper driving of piles or any improper stringing of booms and to make certain that saw mills—there are very few offenders in this respect—are not dumping their slabs into the river. I am not sure where the division of responsibility lies. I mentioned this when the estimates of the Minister of Transport were before the committee, and I mention it again now so the minister may consider just what aspect of this question comes under his jurisdiction.

I must say I read the annual report. You know, I am interested in public works. It is the sort of concrete subject that a simple mind like mine can understand. I am not much on the abstract art they have down at the national gallery, but I do know what a wharf is and what a highway is, or a building, and I must say that the annual report reflects the spirit of organized purpose which has been developed in this department since Mr. Winters took over as minister. That was the time when there was a change in direction in the administration of this department. I found the report informing, and the explanation of the activity of each branch and division interesting. The details are clear and understandable.

I am interested in knowing what is being done with respect to appropriate designs for public buildings. I mentioned this last year at somewhat greater length. Are competitions held? I am interested in the design of public buildings, and for this reason I should like the minister to tell the committee what the policy is in this regard. The smaller buildings are, I think, most suitable and attractive; the smaller post offices and R.C.M.P. buildings, for example. They are generally appreciated through the country, and there are many favourable comments.

However, I do not see any definite policy with respect to the design of the larger buildings to the end that when you go into a city you will know that certain buildings have been built by the federal Department of Public Works, buildings which are not only functional but which are attractive to look at as well. I should like the minister to tell us what is the policy with respect to the design of public buildings, particularly the larger ones, and also what is the policy with respect to air conditioning in federal buildings. I think air conditioning is very necessary in Ottawa and it is necessary, also, in some other points throughout the country, particularly in the larger buildings.

Then I should like him to tell me what the policy is with respect to the administration of public buildings. Take the example of a building occupied mainly by the Post Office Department, with the offices of four or five other branches of the federal government located in the same building. Who is responsible for the administration of that building? Suppose there is a parking lot available, who should have the right to say that certain cars shall be parked there and certain cars shall not be allowed to park there, and so on? This is a problem that has created a little fuss and furore on one or two occasions, because apparently there is not a clear line of responsibility. At times the janitor in charge of a building has fought with another official of the Department of Public Works who claimed he had the first right to park his car in a specific area and the postmaster had to take his car around to the back door. I feel that individuals in charge of buildings should be informed as to who is responsible, on the spot, for the administration of these buildings and the decisions as to what preferences exist for the parking of cars and so on.

In regard to designing policy, I should like to know whether certain architects are studying this question, and whether at any time there is consultation with the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada as to a policy respecting the design of public buildings. I should also like to know whether any competitions are being held or are anticipated regarding suitable designs for public buildings.

I have one or two other matters to mention, following which I shall have practically completed my few remarks on the administration item. Last year I made a plea for the rehabilitation of lover's lane between the back of parliament hill and the Ottawa river; not that I have any particular interest in or use for this area, but as it is now it is a very unsatisfactory view for anyone travelling along the Ottawa river by boat.

At the time I mentioned this situation last year the minister stated that he would give the question consideration, and I should like him now to tell this committee what consideration has been given to clearing up this rather unsightly area in order to make it available for people who wish to legitimately enjoy it. I am of the opinion that this project would not cost a great deal of money, although there are certain walks and rails which would have to be repaired and put back into proper condition, and I cannot understand why there is so much hesitation in improving the area.

I have another query with respect to what I am pleased to term "operation statues and lemon juice". I brought this matter to the attention of the minister last year, after the department started a program of rubbing the statues, beginning with that of D'Arcy McGee, with lemon juice, I believe. In this regard I should like to read an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of June 3, 1960. When I raised this question in the committee last year I received a report that this most unusual operation was proceeding satisfactorily. I later received a letter to the same effect. The article to which I have made reference reads as follows:

Ottawa, June 2—Satisfied with the scrubbing job on D'Arcy McGee and the fair maiden they call Mollie, senior officials of the Department of Public Works have given permission to clean up the remaining eight bronze statues on parliament hill.

The father of confederation, standing on a concrete pedestal, with the buxom Mollie draped at his feet, was recently given a test bath. McGee was chosen because he is at the rear of the centre block, hidden from most of the tourists. Had the test failed it would not have been noticed as readily as the others.

A scrubbing crew removed years of grime from the statue and then rubbed McGee and Mollie with lemon oil.

"We've been trying to get them the colour of a Sam Browne belt,"—

That is a peculiar Sam Browne belt colour which exists there now. The article then continues:

—a department official said.

Mollie is well browned all over, but McGee's bronze locks have turned grey. The officials said they have yet to touch up McGee's hair.

Throughout the summer, work crews will concentrate on the remaining statues, including former prime ministers Borden, Laurier, Macdonald, Mackenzie, Lafontaine and Baldwin, Queen Victoria, George Brown, another father of confederation and founder of the Globe, and explorer Jacques Cartier.

Mr. Chairman, I have made periodic visits along with other individuals interested in this project, and have noticed that only one statue has been tackled. I think anyone, in fairness, will say those which still retain their original patina are much more attractive than the statue of McGee and Mollie with the verdigris showing them in a most dilapidated condition. I think Mollie's complexion is really out of this world.

In view of the comments made last year and the information I received from the minister at that time as to the success of this very interesting project, and in view of the report appearing in the Globe and Mail in regard to the appearance of that lone statue in question which the department has scrubbed and rubbed, I should like the minister to inform me what is the policy of his department in respect to this operation.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have spoken in committee since your appointment, and I should like to take advantage, at the outset, of the opportunity to congratulate you in respect to this very high appointment. I do so as one Manitoban to another.

I have a very few brief remarks to make to the minister and his officials this morning, and I hope he will forgive me if I become a a little parochial, inasmuch as I may not be here later on in the day, in making suggestions regarding two or three matters of importance at the present time to the people of the city of Winnipeg.

I believe the minister is aware of the fact that at the present time the Red and Assiniboine rivers which flow through the city of Winnipeg are at very low and dangerous levels, and that the water pollution at the present time in the city of Winnipeg has become very dangerous. There is no effective treatment unit to remove the sewage from these two rivers, and because of the low rate of flow there is a very great possibility of the spread of bacteria followed perhaps, by sickness.

There has been some discussion about the locks at Lockport lower down the river, which were used some months ago and perhaps are still being used to increase the rate of flow so as to raise the level of the water in the rivers at the city of Winnipeg. If at all possible I should like some information from the minister or his officials in this regard.

In addition to that suggestion, but having regard to the sewage treatment unit, I understand that at the present time the city of Winnipeg and the metropolitan council of greater Winnipeg are making application to the minister and his department in relation to the financing of these units, by virtue of the amendment made last fall, under the National Housing Act. When these applications are received I should like them to be given high priority and consideration so that these facilities may be installed at the earliest possible opportunity.

The next subject I wish to refer to, which is of great interest to our senior citizens of the city of Winnipeg, has regard to the expansion of housing facilities for our elderly people. I am sure the minister is aware of the great work done in Winnipeg by the age and opportunity bureau, and will remember receiving a brief from that association with respect to an amendment to the National Housing Act to increase the provision of housing facilities for our senior citizens through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

This organization has made a comprehensive survey of the existing needs of our elderly citizens for increased housing facilities in the city of Winnipeg. Perhaps I may just take a moment or two to place on the record two or three points made manifest by the study carried out by this excellent organization. First of all it discovered that old age assistance and old age pensions are the main source of income of a large percentage of aged persons. They found that those who need accommodation most cannot afford to pay the rent being charged aged persons in limited dividend housing projects provided under existing legislation. They found that the existing regulation for the accommodation of single aged persons is not realistic in that it is impossible to provide the required standards of accommodation at rents compatible with their incomes. They also found that single aged persons constitute a majority of the population over 70 years of age, and that single aged persons cannot live in those units.

I am not going to deal with this matter at great length. The minister has full knowledge of my views and my interest in the matter, and the fact that something should be done with regard to amending or expanding section 16 of the National Housing Act to provide for some type of accommodation which would cover those people. The accommodation would be the hostel type which at the present time is not included under the National Housing Act.

This is not a situation which is signally evident only in the city of Winnipeg. From the information I have I would say that it exists in the larger cities right across Canada. I wonder whether perhaps for a start the minister might take into consideration the appointment of someone—not necessarily from C.M.H.C.; perhaps someone from the Canadian welfare council—to make a study in the larger cities across Canada to see if the National Housing Act is providing adequate housing facilities for our senior citizens, and whether the hostel type of accommodation is the solution to the problem, if those facilities are not adequate at the present time. I believe most of this information is available now. On the basis of the report on such a survey I think it would become only too apparent that the need is not being fulfilled and something should be done about it. Perhaps the time has come, Mr. Chairman, to give consideration to applying one section of the National Housing Act, or indeed introducing a special act, to housing for aged and senior citizens. This might cover people over 60, 65 or 70 years of age.

I will not dwell any longer on this subject, inasmuch as the brief and the views of the aged and opportunity bureau and myself have been distributed among hon. members. The minister was kind enough to receive the brief, sit down with me and other interested members and explain to us the present provisions of the act and the fact that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation itself, the government and his officials are always interested in looking into things of this sort. I hope he takes heed of what I have said today and perhaps takes a longer look at it.

I might move on to my third and last point, which has to do with slum clearance and urban redevelopment in the city of Winnipeg. Hon. members know that a few days ago I had the special privilege of looking at the Mulberry housing project in the city of Halifax. I was happy to have the opportunity to go down and see it. When I saw it I was astounded to realize that in the city of Winnipeg we probably have some of the worst housing conditions to be found in any of the major cities across Canada. Yet for the last three and a half or four years the city council of Winnipeg has done nothing approaching the Mulberry project in the city of Halifax. The Mulberry project contains 348 units and I am told it will house around 1,500 persons. A project of this kind could be used in the city of Winnipeg at the earliest possible moment.

I am told by the minister and by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that they are ready, willing and only too eager to get going on the same sort of project for the people in those areas in the city of Winnipeg where more adequate housing and redevelopment are needed. I am sure such a project would bring new business and provide greater economic opportunity for the depressed slum areas. I trust the offer still stands. I should like to receive the assurance from the minister that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and his officials are interested in this problem. Perhaps he could bring us up to date on just what progress is being made in the city of Winnipeg in regard to this matter.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks this afternoon on one of the divisions of the department which comes under the jurisdiction of the minister. I hope to be as objective as possible. I wonder whether you would call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my first words should be words of congratulation to you, sir, on your recent appointment, one that I feel is very well deserved and which I am sure you welcome as another opportunity for service.

In order to appreciate fully the situation in which the housebuilding industry and the government find themselves today, I believe it will be very helpful to review very briefly government activity in this field in the past year. It will be recalled that during almost the first half of 1960 housebuilding had virtually collapsed as the result of government policy. The annually adjusted rate at that time, I believe, averaged something in the order of 60,000.

First there was the reluctance of the government approved lenders to put their money into long term mortgages when more attractive terms and rates were available elsewhere. It will be recalled that the banks stopped lending. The fact that more attractive interest rates and better investment opportunities were available caused the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance to say that these institutions were abdicating their social responsibilities. Yet it was the government's monetary and fiscal policies that had resulted in these higher interest rates throughout the economy.

Further, it will be remembered that during this very period when the approved lenders drastically reduced their lending on housing and the banks refused to lend, the government decided to cut in half the amount it had made available for direct lending during the previous year. Despite the fact that the then minister of trade and commerce had indicated that there would be 140,000 starts in 1960, and the Minister of Public Works at that time forecast 125,000, the government announced its intention to reduce from $330 million odd to $175 million the money it would make available for direct lending in 1960.

It was hoped—and they had the benefit of good advice, of course—that construction in other fields would take up the slack, but the fact of the matter is that it did not. Therefore at a time when mortgage money could scarcely be found from normal sources, the government sliced in half its lending activity. Little wonder that we ended up the year with 108,000-odd starts. Little wonder that this year, when housebuilding is showing some signs of recovery toward a volume that we might normally expect, the minister is able to stand up and announce increases over last year's depressed figures. But these announcements by the minister only tell part of the story. Despite the minister's fine words, and despite the artificial stimulation that has been given to housing by government legislation, starts have been actually declining since February. I have here the latest figures that are available to me, the dominion bureau of statistics figures for June 7. These are the seasonally adjusted rates: February, 119,000; March, 110,000; April, 90,000.

Hon. members will also realize that more than a shortage of mortgage funds developed in the housebuilding industry last year. During the last half of the year there was a great shortage of buyers which resulted from the overexpansion and overstimulation of the housebuilding industry by the government during 1958 and 1959. Further, I believe that during 1960 and again this year there was and is a growing awareness on the part of the buyers of the tremendous burden of high interest payments at today's 6¾ per cent rate, which we all know is the highest interest rate in the history of the National Housing Act.

Certainly the government cannot blame the governor of the Bank of Canada for this rate, which was set by the government itself. It is little wonder, then, that the government was desperate last fall in an attempt to find ways and means to get the housebuilding industry back on the rails. It is little wonder that they found it necessary to introduce amendments to existing legislation during the last quarter of the year, and particularly the changes in December.

May I say at once, as I said at the time the legislation was before us in the house, although it was a year too late, to the extent that it increased housebuilding it was welcome. We also recall the imposition of the ceiling on wages. Finally the government raised the ceiling on wages, and then removed it. However, I am not going to go into all these things now.

I have referred to these activities of the government during the past year or more in order to point out the power of the federal government in this field. The results of the past 17 months have clearly shown the degree of control over housing that can be exercised by any federal government. Where it would appear that total activity might lag, housebuilding can be stimulated. Where it appears that total activity in the economy is straining our total resources, steps can be taken to curtail housebuilding. The degree to which this stimulation or curtailment might be applied is, of course, highly debatable. The power of our federal government to control the rate of housebuilding comes largely from its control over the N.H.A. mortgage market. It controls the supply of mortgage funds by making N.H.A. mortgage rates attractive or unattractive to private lenders by varying the volume of its own lending.

It has been clearly shown in recent years that the volume of housebuilding responds very quickly to changes in the quantity, availability and of course the terms of N.H.A. mortgage money. Restricting housebuilding in times of prosperity while stimulating housebuilding in times of recession is splendid in theory. The difficulty lies in the policy of attempting to produce total stability by deliberately creating instability in housebuilding. These violent fluctuations are indeed costly to the industry and of course ultimately to the purchaser. When the housebuilding industry is overstimulated, inefficient, inexperienced people are attracted into the industry. They often produce homes that regardless of their price, are expensive.

However, it is not this particular aspect of the high cost of housing that I want to pursue here, Mr. Chairman. As I mentioned earlier, today's main deterrent is not the scarcity of mortgage funds but rather the high cost of mortgage funds. In an earlier debate I dealt in some detail with this 6¾ per cent N.H.A. rate. Suffice it to say today that a person buying a $15,000 home over a 35 year period will pay $22,476 in interest. If the average age of a purchaser under N.H.A. today is slightly over 35 years, he will pay $37,754 for a $15,000 house, will be collecting his old age security pension and may well have his house fall down before the final payment is made.

I would ask hon. members to compare the interest payments made on a specific amount over a period of time at 6¾ per cent as compared to 5¼ per cent. I point out that on a $12,000 mortgage amortized over a 30 year period, there is a difference of $4,056. I point out further that the monthly payment for this amount of money and for this particular term at 5¼ per cent, is $65.85 as against $77.10 at a 6¾ per cent rate.

I remind hon. members of the F.H.A. rate in the United States, which is 5¼ per cent. I remind hon. members also that N.H.A. rate was 5¼ per cent under the Liberal administration in 1954, during a period of mild recession. I appeal to the government again, as I have tried to do for the past year, urging them to reduce at once this 6¾ per cent N.H.A. rate. What possible justification can there have been during the past year of recession and during a period when three quarters of a million people were unemployed, for maintaining this unnecessarily high N.H.A. interest rate? I hope now that we see signs of a professed change of heart on the part of the government, that there will be early action in this regard.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the government must be aware of their responsibility in monetary and fiscal matters. Let us just for a moment take a peek at how the young, aggressive administration south of the border tackled this matter immediately after taking office. They had inherited a similarly stagnant situation from the previous administration. I should like to refer very briefly to some quotations. The first is from the New York Times of February 28:

United States acts to cut mortgage rates
The government started a direct and high powered effort today to bring down mortgage interest rates.

The same article continues:

The administration's first move was a package of stimulants through federal housing program channels. The most prominently noted part of that package was a reduction of the permissible maximum for rates on mortgages insured by the federal housing administration—to 5½ from 5¾ per cent.

In the Ottawa Citizen of March 15 we find this:

United States driving to lower interest on mortgages
The Kennedy administration is intensifying its campaign to drive down mortgage interest rates. Home owner's borrowing costs have been edging lower but the decline has been too sluggish to satisfy top officials.

In the New York Times of May 22 we find this:

Mortgage rates are moving down
A new phase of the administration's efforts towards lower mortgage interest rates has started bearing fruit already. Another step is under serious consideration.

The Montreal Star of May 27 has this to say:

Kennedy cuts mortgage rates.

That article covered the announcement by the administration of a reduction from 5½ per cent to 5¼ per cent in interest rates. Surely the most important component of the real cost of housing is the cost of money. A reduction of only 1 per cent in the interest rate would have more impact on the annual cost of a house than any conceivable improvement in technology. This government should carry out its debt management policy and its monetary policy in such a way as to create the proper kind of economic climate for capital expenditure and investment in housing.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I should like to say a few words concerning the proposed secondary mortgage market. It will be recalled that for the past three years we on this side of the house have recommended the establishment of an effective secondary mortgage market. I can recall that on at least three occasions. I spelled out in some detail my version of one effective phase of a secondary mortgage market. I referred to an institution that would purchase N.H.A. guaranteed mortgages and use them as collateral against the issuance of certificates in small denominations that would be made available to a new type of investor in housing, the small investor. To the extent that this would attract new investors into the mortgage lending field, it would be effective. However, at no time did I envisage the government unloading long term mortgages at discounts that would have the effect of earning handsome profits for the purchaser at the expense of the taxpayer.

Now, I know the Minister of Public Works will say that this is not the case. It should be noted that in his statement to the house on April 17, this matter was not covered. But in a press release outside the house it apparently was stated, as reported in the press throughout the country, that there would be no loss because the money from the sale of these mortgages would be reinvested at these abnormally high rates. Since that time the minister, in response to questions of mine, has refused to say how much of this money will be reinvested.

There is the picture. After a favourable press release, we have silence on this point. I am watching with considerable interest, therefore, the action of the government in this offering of a $15 million nibble which is currently being made. It will be interesting to note the price at which they will be prepared to pass on to the purchasers these $750 million worth of mortgages—

Mr. Grafftey: Will the hon. member inform the committee from what document he is reading?

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, I hear a series of squeaks.

Mr. Grafftey: You hear a question being asked. You were reading from a document.

An hon. Member: Sit down; you're rocking the boat.

Mr. Garland: Perhaps I should say it was a squawk.

Mr. Grafftey: You hear a question.

An hon. Member: Don't take yourself so seriously. Nobody else does.

Mr. Garland: I hear squawking from Brome lake. I was under the impression that the Brome lake area produced better ducks than that.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Harkness: I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has raised a point of order which I think should have been raised at least 10 minutes ago. The hon. member for Nipissing has been reading his speech, every word of it—I have been watching him closely—for the last five or ten minutes. This procedure, of course, is directly against the rules of the house.

Mr. Bourget: So did the minister.

Mr. Harkness: As the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has raised the matter, instead of him being abused for doing so I think the rules should be observed.

Mr. Winch: May I add a word here on the point of order. I think I can do so because I never read a speech; I speak extemporaneously. I want to tell the hon. member who has just spoken that almost every speech made from the government side of the house is read. If he wants that rule enforced, as I think it should be enforced, inasmuch as he has raised the point I intend to challenge everyone on the government side henceforth who reads his speech, and 95 per cent of the speeches made from his side of the house are read.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I raised the point of order. The hon. member who has just spoken was not speaking to the point of order; he was making an attack on unspecified members on this side of the house. The point of order having been raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, I think it should be dealt with.

Mr. Caron: While we are on that point of order may I say this, being one of those who never reads a speech. It might be better if I did so. However, I maintain that this is something that has been done over the years from the beginning of the House of Commons. I think it is an advantage to those who are listening when a speech has been well prepared. Just because it is foolishly provided in the rules that nobody should read a speech, I can say this. If the rule is enforced today, as has been requested by the minister, he will be obliged to sit down for quite a while, because I will watch him and I will watch other ministers, even the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, when they read from this time forward.

Mr. Ricard: I want to speak on this point of order. The point has been raised with regard to the identification of a document from which the hon. member was reading. We should not allow ourselves to be diverted from the question. The hon. member was asked to identify the document from which he was reading. With all deference to your authority, Mr. Chairman, I think you should enforce this rule.

The Deputy Chairman: I have no difficulty in identifying the document to which the hon. member is referring. I can only presume that they are notes he has prepared for giving his discourse on item No. 1 of the estimates. Inasmuch as he is the official opposition critic of the department under consideration, and because I was watching him very closely and observed that he spoke extemporaneously on several questions apart from the notes he had, I do not think I should do other than caution him not to read, as I would have to caution other members of the committee, on a regular basis; and in the interests of proceeding expeditiously with this item of the estimates I think we should allow the hon. member to have the floor.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Habel: Are you appealing his decision?

Mr. Ricard: Sit down; he is raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Grafftey: On a question of privilege may I say this. In good faith I rose in my place and put a question. I politely asked the hon. member a question, as I was following his remarks very carefully. I asked him most politely if he would identify the document from which he was reading. He then went on and abused my district in general and me in particular. I am not asking him to withdraw this abusive language; I am considering the source from which it came. I draw that matter to the attention of the committee, but let it be quite clear. I was not facetious. In a serious manner I asked the hon. member to identify the document from which he was reading. In reply he was abusive, as I say, to me in particular and to my riding in general. That is on the record, and I let it stand as I take my place.

Mr. Ricard: He has let his Grit spirit come through.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not wish us to get into a controversial debate on this matter. If I know the hon. member for Nipissing I am sure he will soften the reference he made to the hon. member who raised the question of privilege. I also know that a number of interjections occurred before the hon. gentleman had an opportunity to answer the question that has been raised as to identification of the document to which he was referring. I think we will give the hon. member for Nipissing the floor and let him take what course he deems fit.

Mr. Garland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought I had properly identified the quotations I had used in trying to make my point. On that point, may I say that I offer no apologies for coming to the house prepared to speak on a subject in which I have a very genuine interest. I do not think it is necessary to make any further explanation. I noted carefully that yesterday the minister read every word he uttered. We made no objection to that procedure. At least I prepared my own notes to which I have been referring.

Mr. Ricard: Are you implying that he does not do so?

Mr. Walker: I was not going to intervene but with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to do so.

Mr. Garland: Have I the floor, Mr. Chairman? Twenty minutes are gone now.

Mr. Walker: This is a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the minister raising a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Walker: I am raising a question of privilege. Under the rules every minister has the right, because of the need to quote figures that he has to give and to go into the details that he has to mention, to read any part of a statement. That is exactly what I did and what any other minister must do. If the hon. member will peruse my speeches he will find literally hundreds and thousands of figures. To take the objection that I had to read part of that statement is illogical and cannot be compared to what is being done now. I have no objection to the hon. member for Nipissing reading his speech, but I object to him pointing out that I have been doing so contrary to the rules. The rules specifically state that the minister may do so.

Mr. Caron: What is the authority?

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member for Hull, speaking from his seat as is not unusual, asked for authority for the minister's statement. If he will read Beauchesne, page 124, paragraph No. 144, he will find it.

An hon. Member: Fourth edition.

The Deputy Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Nipissing.

Mr. Garland: I should like to deal with a matter that is occupying the attention of many of the leaders of the housebuilding industry, namely finding some satisfactory means of facilitating the financing of the older type homes. Surely it cannot be argued that everyone buying a home wants a new house in a new subdivision far removed from his place of work or daily activity. It is becoming daily more and more apparent that this ever spreading development into new raw land is creating tremendous costs in respect of services required and in respect of transportation, etc. However, this has been the trend since the war, and understandably so. The N.H.A. was designed primarily to assist in the construction of new homes, to take care of the tremendous backlog that existed as the result of little or no construction during the war years and indeed during a great part of the thirties.

Today the situation is entirely different. For the first time in 15 years we have seen evidence during the past year that the effective demand has been met. I am not for a moment suggesting that the facilities of the National Housing Act should be diverted from the encouragement of new construction. However, I am fully convinced that the facilities of N.H.A. should be expanded to the extent that the C.M.H.C. could assist in the financing of older type homes along the same lines as is now being done with regard to new construction.

In nearly every Canadian town and city we find older people who have raised their families and who are now living alone in homes much too large for their physical and financial capabilities. Yet these people are forced to live on in these larger homes because no convenient way has been developed to finance the sale of such houses with a small down payment, as is the case with new homes. Therefore the older folks stay on and the younger prospective purchasers are compelled to forgo the opportunity of buying larger homes which might be more in keeping with their family requirements, or resort to some loan shark who will extract the last pound of flesh through a second mortgage. In countless cases families could purchase and properly assume financial responsibility for a moderately priced home but, goodness knows, there are plenty of statistics to prove that many find the burden of the newer and more expensive homes too great for their incomes. I think the housing statistics put out by the dominion bureau of statistics provide ample proof that 92 per cent of all N.H.A. buyers are earning more than $4,000 a year, so we have reached the point where the National Housing Act in this respect is practically useless to those in the lower income group. I believe that making loans available on existing houses would result in a substantial increase in the number of Canadian families owning their homes and this, as I am sure hon. members will agree, would be a highly desirable situation.

As I mentioned earlier, not all families want to live in a particular area that is being developed at the time they are buying a home. It is therefore understandable that under the system I propose, prospective purchasers could buy homes in the locality they prefer.

I think it is apparent to all that if the sales of older homes were encouraged, it would result in an increased demand for new homes. This conclusion is based on the assumption—a proper one, I believe—that the number of potential buyers for older homes would be greatly increased and as a result present owners could sell more easily, cash in their equity and have it available for the purchase of a new home. I therefore urge the government to amend the National Housing Act so as to enable C.M.H.C. to make loans in respect of existing homes along the same lines as loans are presently being made available in respect of new housing. Let us put an end to this discrimination against the owner of an existing house.

Now I should like to turn from something new to an old complaint involving the government's stubborn insistence in clinging to a 2 per cent insurance premium to insure its own mortgages. This is as unrealistic as it is unnecessary, and the record proves it. I will not go as far as some and say that the premium should be eliminated, but most certainly the rate should be reduced. The government's insistence on maintaining the present premium rate adds several hundred dollars to the cost of every home purchased in Canada, not only to the original purchase price but in the financing.

The fund resulting from this premium now stands, I believe, at some $70 million. I believe this fund should be used to assist in making low cost housing available to some of our elderly citizens. The need in this field is great, and with the increase in life expectancy now being experienced the problem will increase. However, I hope to have more to say on this subject at another stage in the examination of these estimates.

I should like to make a further new proposal to the government, namely that home owners who are unemployed for six months or more and who are threatened with foreclosure and the loss of their homes and equities be given special consideration. I propose that a moratorium of 12 months on payments be guaranteed by the government under N.H.A. to home owners who are out of work for a period of more than six months. The slackening of our economic development and the unprecedented level of unemployment demand that attention be given to this problem. The relief I propose should be extended until national prosperity has been restored. This problem is particularly acute in areas where there is long term unemployment. However, losing one's home is a tragedy in any area of this rich young country.

Mr. Pallett: Would the hon. member care to indicate the particular areas he has in mind?

Mr. Garland: It would be Canada-wide.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member said that in certain areas this would apply particularly. Does he have any particular areas in mind.

Mr. Garland: I think the hon. gentleman has misunderstood me.

Mr. Pallett: Well, he certainly cannot say that for the area which I represent, and I do not want him to include a lot of others.

Mr. Garland: The hon. member may read what I have said in Hansard. The assistance I have proposed could be given at no cost to the federal treasury, because the borrower at the end of the mortgage term could repay the money which had been advanced on his behalf. Unless something is done in this regard it is my intention at the next session of parliament—and I am assuming there will be another session of this parliament—to introduce a bill incorporating the kind of assistance I have just mentioned. Surely there is something missing in legislation which permits a wage earner who becomes unemployed through no fault of his own to lose his home and, in many cases, a major portion of his savings.

I should like now to say a few words in respect to slum clearance and related matters, and in particular to the financing of renewal projects. I was interested to note that the minister, speaking in Halifax on June 1 to the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, urged that they speed up the job of weeding out blighted areas within their borders. If I may, I should like to quote the minister, as follows:

[Mr. Garland.]

Let me say straight away that in my opinion we are not making nearly enough progress in getting rid of slums.

Well, I can tell the minister that we on this side of the house heartily agree with this statement, and have been saying so for some time. In his speech at Halifax the minister went on to reprimand the municipalities for not moving fast enough. As most people know, however, our municipalities would like to move more quickly with regard to these matters, but they are handicapped in their financing by the way the federal government gobbles up the investment dollar at high interest rates. I should like to refer to a publication put out by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities dated May, 1961, and to quote very briefly these words:

The obstacles to municipal borrowing and to the financing of more comprehensive programs of renewal can only be removed by appropriate federal legislation.

The minister might more properly have directed his reprimand to his colleagues who have pursued monetary and fiscal policies leading to higher and higher interest rates. But I do not wish to deal with the shortcomings of the present administration.

The Canadian housing requirements of the future must meet the needs and satisfy the population as a whole rather than any particular segment. At the same time, government must recognize that the earnings of all are not equal. It must also be realized that within each income group there are wide differences or responsibility, due to family numbers, basic managerial ability, incidence of illness and many other relative factors. Any pattern for the future should attempt to provide housing at a price that will afford the greatest opportunity to the greatest number in purchasing their own homes. Such plans must also recognize that there is a large segment of our population which must rent accommodation. Future plans must further recognize the fact that there will also be an increased demand for public housing. This is an economic fact.

In conclusion may I say that we regret the miscalculation and fumbling of the government during most of 1960. We stand ready to commend them, as we have already done, for the worth-while legislation they introduced toward the end of the year. We have for many years urged the establishment of an effective secondary mortgage market which would have the effect of garanteeing a steadier flow of mortgage funds. We think the National Housing Act under both administrations has done an effective job, but believe it should be extended to provide for the financing of older type homes. What was satisfactory in 1954 no longer meets the requirements of 1961. We believe the insurance premium should be reduced. We believe that a moratorium of up to 12 months if necessary be extended to a home owner under N.H.A. who is out of work for six months or more. We believe in a concentrated drive on slum clearance and assistance to municipalities by the establishment of a municipal loan fund, both of which would allow our municipalities to get on with projects badly needed, and which would provide much needed employment in these distressed times.

As I have said on earlier occasions, housing is a most interesting and complex subject and one that will be occupying more and more of our attention and resources as time goes on. Much has been done in the past, but much more remains to be done in the future. When one considers all the social and economic ramifications of this subject in the light of the rapid development in housing which is bound to take place in the foreseeable future, future governments would do well to consider the desirability of a separate department with cabinet status. In this way the housing needs of our people and the economic influences resulting from adequate programming would be assured of a strong voice in government policy, and not just be something tagged on to the end of another department.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I intend to take but a moment, but I know the hon. member for Nipissing would want me to say a word in respect to the National Housing Act interest rate. I should like to tell him again, sir, that this interest rate is based on the yield on long term government bonds and under the N.H.A., as framed by the Liberal government, the yield cannot be more than 2¼ per cent above long term government bonds. The present long term yield on government bonds is approximately 5.2 per cent. Therefore the maximum N.H.A. rate, under the rule promulgated by the late Liberal government could be 7½ per cent.

However, under our government the present rate is 6¾ per cent, which is considered to be the lowest competitive rate possible, as compared with other bonds and industrial yields. The decision to adjust the rate twice yearly, which I announced on April 17 last, should keep the N.H.A. rate in relation to other yields. There is no one in Canada who would be more delighted to make it possible to reduce interest rates on N.H.A. loans than myself, as the minister. Having gone through the experience, however, of the approved lenders' funds completely drying up just a few months before I became the minister, when the rate was at 6 per cent, I know what a hazardous expedient it is to reduce interest rates, as a result of which we can get no money from approved lenders. I am sure my hon. friend, with his knowledge of these matters, and as critic of the opposition in respect to this subject, would not wish the government to exclude private lenders from the market. Otherwise it would cost the federal government hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars per year extra.

In connection with the other suggestion of my hon. friend, that he intends to introduce a bill to declare a moratorium for the benefit of certain people under certain circumstances, might I ask whether he proposes having that measure introduced in each of the provinces or only in the federal parliament? Because it is purely a provincial matter. This is a matter involving property and civil rights, in respect to which the federal government has no authority. Is it his proposition to have someone introduce this measure in the provincial house, or does my hon. friend propose to run for a seat in the legislature of the province of Ontario?

In any event may I say that there are millions of dollars which the approved lenders have invested in N.H.A. mortgages. Is my hon. friend suggesting that the guarantee which has been given to the investor should be done away with, and that a moratorium should be declared so that the mortgage loans which those investors have made in good faith under the terms of the N.H.A., inaugurated originally by the Liberal government and taken advantage of, of course, by the Conservative government, will be seriously affected. Is my hon. friend seriously suggesting there now should be a moratorium in respect of this act?

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, since the minister has asked me a question I should like to attempt to answer it. First I should like to say that it is surprising how he reconciles his words this afternoon with the criticisms directed toward some of us in this house when the present government was on this side.

In respect to the legislation I proposed, surely it is within the capabilities of a society such as ours to introduce legislation which would have the very humane effect of preventing the wage earner of a family from losing his entire savings as a result of being out of work through no fault of his own.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of matters of concern to me which are very much related to housing and certain aspects of the housing industry which come under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the estimates for which are contained in vote No. 373. It is not my intention now, during consideration of the first vote of the Department of Public Works estimates to raise matters which I think should be raised in respect to vote No. 373. However, there is one matter of principle in respect of which I would very much appreciate the comment of the Minister of Public Works.

I should like to ask the minister whether, in his position as minister and under his oath of office, he could give information to this house relating to the letting of contracts under his jurisdiction. I believe I am correct in saying that on tenders being called, they shall be opened on a national basis, that no tender is opened until after a certain deadline, and that those who have tendered have a right to be present at that time.

If I am accurate in suggesting that the tenders must be opened on a national basis, I suggest it would be rather difficult for many individuals who have tendered to be present when they are opened. I should like the minister to inform this committee whether some tenders are opened on a provincial basis and, if so, whether the minister approves. There is a general understanding among subcontractors across Canada that this government, with all its sanctimonious utterances, has a selected list of subcontractors in various fields. Is the minister prepared to stand up before this committee of the whole and state that there is no such selected list at his divisional headquarters?

As my second question I should like to ask on what basis contracts are let by his department at a provincial or divisional level. I know something of the construction industry and I travel in this country a good deal, as a result of which I have come to certain conclusions regarding the letting of contracts. I do not think it will be too much of a shock to the minister when I suggest that the subcontractors of this country are convinced that there is some dirty work going on in the Department of Public Works in respect to the letting of subcontracts.

According to my information subcontracts are handled in a different way from contracts on a national basis in so far as opening the bids is concerned. National bids are not opened until the deadline is reached and those who tender are present. I am informed that in more than one province the situation with respect to subcontracts is most peculiar. Certain people who tender never put in their tender until a few minutes before the deadline. Some of them know what the other tenders were and their tender, put in in the last few minutes, is always just a few dollars lower than the other tenders. I have heard this said in more than one province of Canada. Subcontractors want to know just what is going on.

If my information is correct, and I think it is, I say to the minister that no contract on the national level should be opened until the deadline is reached, and anyone who tenders can be there. What is the policy on contracts let outside of national headquarters of the Department of Public Works? Is it not possible to have a policy in the provinces or at divisional headquarters which would not only remove the suspicion in the public mind and in the contractors' minds that there is the selected list which I mentioned previously, but also remove the definite suspicion and understanding that before the deadline is reached certain contractors know the amount of the tenders of the other subcontractors, and in the last half hour or last few minutes put in their tenders just below the lowest of those that have already tendered?

Through you, Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister there were grave misgivings in many quarters with respect to this matter. I would like the minister to explain the situation in his department with respect to subcontracts and tenders. If the situation is as I am told it is, then there is a lot of dirty work going on and people are getting contracts at the last minute by underbidding because somehow they get previous information. If this situation exists, then this loophole should be plugged so the system of tendering would be put on a honest basis and contracts would be granted honestly.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the situation in connection with tendering in the Department of Public Works is well known and recognized across Canada. Let me start in Ottawa, or on the general level. If there is a contract with an estimated amount of $15,000 or more a universal tender is called. That goes out together with the specifications, and anybody across Canada in entitled to tender. If the project is to be undertaken in a certain area the people in that area naturally would like to see the tender go to a local contractor in that particular area. This is what we would like to do and we get criticism, of course, if it is not done. But we have found that we can save the people of Canada a great deal of money by having the tender open for everybody to bid on.

For the information of my hon. friend who has just made a statement without any supporting facts, and who is simply asking questions, which he is entitled to do, may I say that when the tender is called the date is set out and the hour up to which a tender or bid can be made. At that hour the tenders are closed. After that hour bids which come in, even a couple of minutes after the hour, are too late. The tenders or bids are then opened by a department official, or two department officials, sometimes three, and in the presence of a representative of the Canadian Construction Association.

I wish to pay my tribute to the Canadian Construction Association for the tremendous assistance they have been to me during my two-year period as Minister of Public Works, for the suggestions they have made and for the advice I have able to get from them from time to time when I have asked for it on certain tenders. We have found it a wonderful thing. We also have present the people who have bid on the project. Until the bids are opened they are under seal. They are all opened together and there can be no complaint, lest anybody should suspect that favouritism is shown, because they see them all opened. Each of the bidders can be there with the representative of the Canadian Construction Association.

My hon. friend referred to subcontracts. May I tell him that when a bid is made in response to a universal tender the applicant has to set out the subcontractors specifically, and he is not entitled to change those. He has to go ahead with them and use them if he is awarded the contract. In the old days it used to be possible to set out certain subcontractors when the tender was put in and then change them later on. That has all been done away with. We feel we have a fool-proof and, let me say, an honest system.

In connection with local tender calls for small undertakings, there are day labour jobs, as the hon. member for Vancouver East knows. We do not undertake these projects if it is at all possible to avoid them because sometimes they are quite costly. On smaller undertakings in a local area we call for local bids, where anybody can and is invited to bid. The undertaking is advertised in the local newspaper and in the local post office, and the lowest of the bids is accepted. On very small undertakings, such as supplying material or doing a small job, we have what are called invited tenders, where the official engineer in charge of the local office in the area can decide who in that area could supply, shall we say, a stove or some other material.

Mr. Winch: Does he have a list in front of him?

Mr. Walker: No list from our department, no. Under no circumstances has he a list.

Mr. Winch: Will you stand there and say there is no selected list?

Mr. Walker: Do you need to repeat that more than once?

Mr. Winch: Yes, I do.

Mr. Walker: I have stated that there is no list. Is my hon. friend suggesting that the Department of Public Works would send out lists to our local engineers all over Canada containing names of those whom they should ask to bid on these local projects? The low bidder among the invited tenderers in the local area gets the contract, whatever it happens to be. We have found this practice eminently successful.

I know that I am bitterly criticized time and time again, week in and week out, for being so strict. If there is anything of which I am perhaps guilty it is the fact that I have been as strict as I have in my two years as minister. I know that many of the backbenchers on my side of the house feel that I am unnecessarily strict.

Mr. Robichaud: They seem to enjoy it.

Mr. Walker: However, those are the rules in the Department of Public Works. We have tried to work out rules and if at times I appear to be too strict it is because I am endeavouring to follow the rules.

As far as any complaints are concerned, it will be recalled that last year the hon. member for Villeneuve referred to a situation involving day labour work, and as the hon. member for Vancouver East knows this is sometimes difficult to deal with. Away off in the hinterlands you will have a foreman running a job and hiring help. The hon. member will realize how difficult it is to supervise these matters even though they involve small projects. The result is that trouble can arise. In that instance we not only investigated but we prosecuted and put certain people in jail. Some of them are still in jail.

I should like to make a suggestion to the hon. member who has been a member of the house for many years and who, when he led the C.C.F. party in the province of British Columbia, was within one seat of being the premier of that province. I know he will not put a bogus case before me because there is nothing bogus about the hon. member. I would ask him to give me any information he has about any situation which he himself has investigated, not just the wild statements of people who have missed out because they did not make the low bid or because, as I pointed to the hon. member for Hull last year, they were incompetent to carry out the contract, or because they were financially incapable of doing so. If the hon. member has any instance where the government has not followed the rules on which I have elaborated at some length because of the respect I have for the hon. member, I would ask him to let the department know and we will investigate the matter and, if necessary, we will prosecute.

If there is any misconduct on the part of our officials, we will fire them, and every official of the department across Canada knows that. General Young, my deputy, summons the engineers to Ottawa every year and we go into these matters carefully and fully. Every official knows where we stand on this subject. If the hon. member does not mind me saying so, he will appreciate that unless we have specific examples to verify, support or bolster statements made it is very hard for us to do anything except to outline the general situation. I invite the hon. member and all other hon. members at any time and under any circumstances to bring to my attention any variation from these rules. The department is, of course, a vast one. We are spending more than twice as much as the Liberals did in an effort to solve unemployment and develop the country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With less consequence.

Mr. Ricard: He is reading aloud.

Mr. Walker: I wish the hon. member for Essex East would note that I have not had any notes for this particular discourse. I say to hon. members that they should bring these things to our attention. It will be appreciated that there may be some derelictions as we found in a certain township away off in the hinterlands last year in connection with a day labour contract. Bring these matters to our attention and we will investigate them. In the Department of Public Works we feel that by following this system we are saving the taxpayers of Canada millions of dollars every year.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pose a question to the minister on this subject. I am glad that the minister brought up this question because in my riding there is a case that has been dragging along for many years. It involves a contractor who padded payroll lists before 1957 with the names of school children and other persons who never worked and for whom money was drawn. I am very anxious to have some information with regard to this case.

Mr. Cardiff: That was under the former government.

Mr. Ricard: Yes. It was the Liberal organizer for St. Charles-Richelieu. I should like the minister to give his immediate attention to this case so that justice will be done as soon as possible.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think it would be fairer to the members of the committee if they would follow the rotation which is listed before me here in the order that they have presented their names to me. I know all hon. members will have chances to ask specific questions when particular items are being dealt with but at the present time I think we should limit ourselves to the usual debate that takes place and which is the practice of the committee under item 1 of the estimates of a department.

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Chairman, since over half of British Columbia's 15,000 miles of coast line lies within the constituency of Comox-Alberni, I feel called upon to make a few remarks on this item. In the constituency of Comox-Alberni in particular there is a multitude of scattered communities without, in many cases, interconnection by roads. This results in the Department of Public Works being called upon to spend huge sums of money for wharves, floats, boat harbours and other such maritime services.

The residents of the communities to which I have referred are undoubtedly more interested in the work of this department than in that of any other department of the government. Because of rapid development, particularly in the northern part of Vancouver island and along the west coast of that island, and because of the ever-changing pattern of transportation, demands for expenditures are heavy and will be increasingly so. Where wharves and floats were not required a few years ago, in some cases there is now an urgent necessity, and the need for safe mooring facilities for the large fishing fleets we have on the coast and the small coastwise merchant ships such as tugs and small freighters is a need that must be met as soon as possible in many areas.

I have already brought to the attention of the minister and his officials the need for public docks in several places. One is Tahsis and another one is Gold river on the west coast of Vancouver island. I have pointed out the need for safe harbour facilities between the Ballenas islands and Campbell river. This is the course that ships follow as they go up the coast of British Columbia. It is an area in which it is extremely difficult to find a safe anchorage during a severe storm. In the past there have been a number of lives lost in that area, some within the past year, and I feel that both lives and shipping could be saved if a safe anchorage were provided at an appropriate spot. I know the department is giving consideration to the essential requirements of Kelsey bay. This is the present terminus of the island highway and because of the number of boats that require moorage in that area I urge the minister to proceed with this project at the earliest possible date.

The residents of Parksville-Qualicum beach area, as well as those on Lasqueti island, are grateful for the item included in these estimates for the reconstruction of the French Creek boat harbour. This project should be expedited as the present facilities are daily becoming less usable by the commercial fishing fleet and other boats.

The requirements I have mentioned lately are but a few of the essential ones along that part of the coast. The people of the area are quite aware of, and greatly appreciate, the large sums of money that have been spent on public works in the last three years. I know that the total amounts to several millions of dollars, and I also know that a trip along the coast line of the Comox-Alberni constituency—which I hope the minister will have an opportunity to make this summer—will convince the minister that millions more are needed to fill the essential needs.

As I said before, development in some areas is at a rapid pace. New pulpmills are contemplated in the near future, and there has been a tremendous development in mining in this area which, until recently, was not considered by some government departments to have much promise. All of these developments require extended wharf facilities and other public works. New mines are coming into production, resulting in new communities, and development programs involving many millions are under way. I am sure the department will do its best to provide the works, such as wharves, boat harbours and floats, that come under their jurisdiction.

I should like to speak for a moment on a subject which I have raised before, namely, the question of the trans-Canada highway on Vancouver island. I know the minister gave a short, and perhaps one might say a rather sharp, answer to the Hon. Mr. Gaglardi, minister of highways for British Columbia, to his telegraphed request for extension of the trans-Canada highway to the north end of the island. The manner in which the request was made no doubt gave rise to the answer which was sent. However, I do believe the people of Vancouver island are entitled to have the minister give serious consideration to this proposal. The mistake of designating only 70 miles of the highway on an island over 300 miles long as part of the trans-Canada route, is one for which the government of British Columbia must accept the greater part of the blame.

The minister has said on several occasions that his first interest is in the completion of the first trans-Canada highway. I am not talking about a part of a second trans-Canada highway, I am talking about an extension of the present one to its rightful terminal, the most westerly accessible point on the Pacific coast. While I am referring to the extension of this highway, I might say that the British Columbia government recently received, or expects to receive, from this government, a subsidy for the construction of its two proposed ferries operating between the mainland and Victoria. I believe this will probably amount to something over $2 million. I think it would be only fair for the provincial government to use this $2 million for the development of a highway in the northern part of Vancouver island.

I spoke earlier, Mr. Chairman, about changing patterns of transportation along the Pacific coast. Many communities formerly served by coastal vessels sailing from Vancouver are now served by ferries from Vancouver island points. In the past the federal government assumed full responsibility for the construction of the necessary steamer docking facilities at these communities. In some cases these so-called steamer docking facilities are no longer required because the communities are served by ferries from Vancouver island. I feel it is only fair that the federal government should accept responsibility for these necessary ferry landings. As I said before, the traditional type of wharf is no longer required. The government had no hesitation in the past in accepting responsibility for the old type steamer wharf, so I think they should give some consideration to accepting some responsibility for these necessary ferry landings.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to express my appreciation, and I think I speak for my constituents, of the consideration that the minister and his officials have given to the multitude of requests that come from a constituency such as mine. I should like to say that I warn the minister, in case he is about to mention Ripple rock and all the money that was spent there a number of years ago, if he brings up that subject, I am going to agitate amongst the diehards in Victoria that we start a campaign to have the hole filled up again and this will cost a lot more money than the cost of blowing up the rock.

Mr. Badanai: I have a few matters concerning my constituency which require the attention of the department, the estimates of which are now before us. Some time ago I received a letter containing a resolution passed by the corporation of the city of Fort William which reads as follows, and I quote:

That whereas it has been very evident that municipalities have very great difficulty due to the increased use of automobiles and heavy trucking through and over city streets in trying to maintain and keep up with the increasing demand for roads and also the increased standards required for present day heavy vehicular traffic. The cost therefore, has risen beyond the ability of the municipalities to adequately cope with it. This problem has been recognized in part by the federal government in the United States and they are increasing their assistance to the municipalities for road construction.

Therefore be it resolved that we request the federal government to make realistic appraisal of the plight of the municipalities in respect to road construction with the view of setting up the policy to participate with the municipality and the province in sharing the costs of all road construction within the municipalities.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that it has not been federal policy to assist financially in road construction within municipalities. However, it seems to me that the time may be opportune to give such a policy some serious consideration. It could be set out in a formula similar to the winter works incentive program which would create job opportunities for many unemployed. I urge the minister to keep such a proposal in mind which, if adopted, would receive the commendation of every municipality in Canada.

Last year, again at the request of the Fort William city council, I brought to the attention of the minister the need for breakwater protection for the McKellar and Mission islands facing lake Superior within the city of Fort William. These two islands which form part of the harbour frontage of the city are exposed to the lake and require the protection of a breakwater, from the present breakwater which protects a portion of the mainland fronting on Port Arthur. At the present time the Canadian Pacific Railway own a large area of land on McKellar island which would be ideal for industrial use if it had breakwater protection, and the same statement applies to a large tract of property located on the Mission island.

Another major obstacle which is retarding the full use of these two islands and which must be removed is that at the present time there is only one bridge connecting the mainland with the Mission island and a second bridge connecting the Mission island with the McKellar island. In the event that anything happens to the bridge connecting the mainland, it will have the effect of separating both islands completely from the mainland. It will therefore be seen that another bridge between the mainland and the Mission island is absolutely essential.

The building of another bridge would remove the main objection against the almost immediate development of these islands for potential industrial expansion, which includes the probability of a steel mill since Premium Ore Company which is headed by Cyrus Eaton, the chairman of the board of Steep Rock Iron Mines, has an option on the Mission island for such a project.

In an article written for the industrial edition of the Fort William Daily Times Journal, Senater N. M. Paterson, a man of great experience and vision made the following statement:

The seaway will gradually develop as it takes time to change methods and deepen channels which will be required over the next few years, but I would like to take this opportunity to point out the necessity of building a new bridge from the island across the Mission river to the mainland so that if anything happened to the railway bridge in Westfort there would be an alternative route rather than Slate river.

It would be a most serious thing to all the traffic which crosses that bridge daily if the wind happened to catch a ship going through the bridge and twisted the bridge from its foundation. We must attract the authorities' attention to this important matter as with foreign ships going in, anything is liable to happen.

Those living at the head of the lakes do not see the development as one who goes there periodically and to me the progress is as amazing as we see in eastern cities in proportion.

I do not think I need to add more to the senator's statement which emphasizes the very real danger that some day something might happen to the present lone bridge, except to say that the new bridge would also serve as a highway to further development of harbour facilities, and it is generally conceded that when expansion in the seaway dock now under construction becomes necessary, the only desirable area available will be on these two islands.

My constituents are very grateful to the government for the lakehead seaway terminal now under construction, which will be a great asset not only to the lakehead area but to the prairie provinces, as intimated by their respective premiers on numerous occasions, because it will improve the transshipping of goods and materials east and west and vice versa.

Another matter of considerable importance to the area with which the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Labour are particularly familiar is the need for a new public building to replace the old dilapidated 70-year old structure which houses the national employment office. The building in question was the post office vacated some 30 years ago. It is a fire trap and it is totally inadequate for the services for which it is put into use.

The department has an ideal site with a frontage of 273 feet by 140 feet centrally located with ample parking facilities. It is no secret that the Minister of Labour has recommended that the construction of a new building be given earliest consideration. The anticipation was that in the estimates of 1960-61 provision would be made for this project. I regret very much to find that the decision to build has again been postponed.

During the Easter recess I paid a visit to the national employment office and, as I expected, I found the place crowded with people in every nook and corner. Office workers and job seekers could hardly be distinguished. The corridors were cluttered and when I asked one of the officials if they had toilet facilities for visitors, the answer I received was that washroom facilities available were limited for the staff on the third floor of the building—which by the way has no elevator; you have to walk up—and inadequate even for the office workers.

One of the officials from the Winnipeg office, namely Mr. L. T. Fraser, after an inspection, recently made a report to the effect that inasmuch as it will take two or more years before the new building is erected, he would recommend that between 1,000 to 1,200 square feet of suitable office space be leased as close as possible to the present premises which he considers insufficient for the claims pay function, but which would provide accommodation for the male placement division.

This is clearly a situation which should not be allowed to worsen before taking action and, if the government is trying to alleviate unemployment by such means, among others, and if a stimulation is needed in public works, what is the government waiting for? I doubt whether there is a national employment office the facilities of which are as poor and inadequate as those at the Fort William office which serves an area of 70,000 people. There are other departments of the federal government which are paying rent in the city of Fort William and I cannot see why there should be any delay in providing a building which would house other services as well.

The annual report of proceedings under the Trans-Canada Highway Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, contains a statement that the trans-Canada highway project provided 1,531,155 man days—eight hours—of employment during the one year; and labour created by the supply of materials and services estimated at an additional 2,602,964 man days of eight hours.

From this statement it can be seen that road work absorbs a substantial number of our labour force and what is even more important, it provides jobs for the most part to the unskilled labour.

In the absence of any other similar projects which would employ a large number of people, I submit that the government should give serious consideration to the construction of a four-lane national highway.

Plans for a six-lane expressway to serve Malton airport from Toronto are completed. It will replace the old two-lane highway which has been a bottleneck responsible for many delays and accidents. I only wish I could now offer congratulations to those responsible for the planned improvement, on similar action in connection with the highway west of the lakehead.

During the debate on the trans-Canada highway resolution last year, I drew attention to the poor condition of the highway west from Fort William to the Manitoba boundary. Complaints had been pouring in from various organizations and travellers. Now, a year later, with the exception of a few stretches, the highway resembles a trail of potholes. I realize that the upkeep of the trans-Canada highway is not the responsibility of the minister. Should it not then be the responsibility of the federal government to ascertain that before any contribution is made there should be some assurance that a fair standard for the highway is established for every part of the country. Speaking of road conditions in the province of Ontario, what we need is a national co-ordinated system which would serve the national interest in case of an emergency. Existing traffic arteries leading out of our major cities, including our capital city, do not have the capacity to evacuate the population, should that become necessary.

It is because of these considerations among others, not the least of which are the safety and convenience of the people, that a conference should in my view be convened by the government to consider these matters together with the provinces and major municipalities, traffic engineers and the good roads association.

The Canadian tax foundation in its study of taxes and traffic has this to say on the subject, and I quote:

> Undoubtedly, highways have some "national" implications in Canada, just as they have provincial and municipal implications, and these are probably broader than the federal government has been willing to recognize in the past. The Trans-Canada Highway Act and some of the earlier legislation has been in the right direction and more of this type of program should be planned for the future.
>
> The "national" implications of highways in Canada are far more intangible than in most other countries—particularly in the United States—and the danger is that they will be valued too low rather than the reverse. We shall not truly be a national community until it is possible for the masses of our citizens who own cars to travel the country from coast to coast in comfort and safety during at least the milder times of the year.
> Just where the line falls between national effort that will achieve this end and federal assistance to the provinces and municipalities in meeting their normal responsibilities for highways, roads and streets cannot be said categorically, but undoubtedly experience and experiment would produce some workable rules. Whenever the line is drawn it should be consistent with the concept of highway financing set out previously.

This statement bears out conclusively the need for a greater and an intensified effort towards the establishment of a national system of highways.

In the interest of safety on our highways I draw attention to the study which was made in the state of Kansas last year which revealed that highway accidents dropped by 25 per cent when white lines or guide lines were painted along the edge of all roads outside urban centres. I should, therefore, like to impress the minister and his officials with the immediate necessity of pressing those responsible to have the edges of highways painted white. I am confident that is a commendable measure which might be the means of saving many lives and preventing many unnecessary accidents.

Now I come to another matter which may appear to be only of minor importance, but I want to assure the minister that in the eyes of hundreds of people who are concerned the subject which I am about to discuss is of considerable interest. It has to do with the accommodation of the income tax office in the city of Fort William which serves the entire area of Thunder Bay including the city of Port Arthur. Several weeks ago I pointed out in a letter to the Minister of National Revenue, the need for the renovation of this building. I am hoping that the Minister of Public Works will have someone in his department look into the conditions which exist in this public building. A month ago I had an opportunity to inspect these premises which were constructed in 1912 and which now serve five times the number of people they were designed to accommodate. The building is shared with the customs office which occupies the lower floor. The receiving area of the income tax office is totally inadequate, space being wasted in one place and cramped in another. I am not asking for a new building. I am being modest. A good renovation job and the replacement of creaking chairs by more comfortable furniture together with an improvement in seating capacity would be a satisfactory approach.

I could bring other matters to the attention of the minister, however, I wish to be modest in my requests and want only to emphasize the importance of certain things which are essential, namely: early consideration for breakwater protection for the McKellar and Mission islands in lake Superior; assistance in the building of a new bridge over the Mission river in order to prevent isolation of those two islands where millions of dollars are invested in industry, including an oil refinery, a hydro steam generating station, and several oil storage plants, in the event of a possible break in the present bridge; the construction of a federal building to house the national employment service and other federal services; restoration of the old customs building and consideration in respect to an improved trans-Canada highway.

I submit these suggestion with the knowledge that implementation of these requests will not only benefit my constituency alone, but will directly and indirectly have a beneficial effect shared by all Canadians.

One further matter to which I wish to refer, and which has caused considerable irritation, is the manner in which announcements are made in respect to government projects affecting members' constituents. As an example of what I refer to, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation a few weeks ago released a number of welcome announcements having to do with items such as the federal loan for the sewage project at Langenburg, Saskatchewan. These announcements were all made by the hon. member for Melville, the member concerned, on behalf of the minister.

Other announcements concerning similar projects at Tugaske and Dinsmore, Saskatchewan were made by the hon. member for Mackenzie as well as the announcement in respect to the project regarding an old people's home, made by the hon. member for St. Boniface.

An announcement was also made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in respect of his own constituency in Vancouver which demonstrates that, notwithstanding the fact that his duties are of an exalted nature, he feels that an elected representative should properly regard any announcement of this nature as being his prerogative.

That pattern is not always followed. For instance, there was announcement made regarding a sewage plant for Willow Bunch, which is in the constituency of Assiniboia, but was the hon. member representing that area notified of that project? I do not know, but the announcement was made by the Minister of Public Works. Whether or not previous governments have followed similar methods is unimportant to me. I do honestly feel that the Minister of Public Works should consider a change of policy in this regard. I admit that it is not a matter of great importance but a change would, I am sure, result in a more congenial and co-operative attitude on the part of all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, that represents everything I wish to bring to the attention of the minister at this stage, and I am sure he will give consideration to my suggestions. I have great faith in the competent officials of his department who have years of experience in this department. I suggest all they need is a little encouragement from the minister and his approval so they can go ahead and do that job for which they are admirably equipped.

Mr. Matthews: Mr. Chairman, I find myself in rather a peculiar situation because I have made notes which I intended to read. However, because of events which have taken place recently in this committee, I hesitate to do so. I am left with two courses to follow; I can rip up the notes and write a letter to the minister, or perhaps I can go ahead and speak off the cuff. Unfortunately, for some time I have been living on a basis of tightening up my belt and find myself now with shirts without sleeves, so the cuffs are gone.

I should like to say that it is a great pleasure on my part to take part in this debate on the estimates of the Department of Public Works. This department, under the very capable and industrious minister, has contributed greatly to the improvement of the economy of Canada. I congratulate the minister and the officials of his department for the excellent work that is being done. In spite of the doom and gloom and the pessimistic crepe hanging of certain individuals, the minister has proceeded with courage and faith to build up Canada so that Canadians can enjoy that prosperity which is rightfully theirs. The minister's program of allotting public works funds to all the provinces of Canada and to the localities where they are most needed and will do the most good, has certainly paid off. It is noticeable that he is consistent in this program.

I wish to bring to the attention of the minister the necessity of a breakwater at Chemainus, British Columbia. Chemainus has been a port of export since the first sailing vessel cleared the harbour in 1861. The MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited mill at Chemainus is the second largest mill in Canada and the sixth largest in the world. Well over 100 deep-sea ships load at this port annually, and in 10 months in 1959, 126 ships loaded and sailed to all parts of the world. Harbour dues paid since January 1954 to December 1959 amounted to $52,991.41, and in 1959 alone amounted to $10,903.14.

The people of that area pay personal income tax on a payroll in excess of $7 million annually and I am sure the government receives a substantial amount from corporation income taxes from the mill in that area. From all sources the federal government has received millions of dollars of revenue from Chemainus over the past years, yet all that has been built there by the federal government is one government wharf, one spar buoy and one gas flasher light at the harbour entrance. There is not one permanent government structure in Chemainus to show for 99 years of progress and taxes paid. Even the post office and customs office are rental property. The following figures show the investment which has been made in that area up to 1959. MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River, wharves and structures, $9 million; inventories of logs, lumber and chips in scows, $1,100,000; and scows, $200,000, totalling $10,300,000. There is also a railroad ferry slip in the amount of $50,000; a federal government wharf, $75,000; a provincial government wharf, $90,000; construction by Island Wharves Limited, $30,000; eleven tugs belonging to Chemainus Towing Limited, $125,000; construction by Western Forest Products, $75,000; fishing vessels, $100,000; 138 pleasure boats, $100,000; and a marine taxi, $10,000.

Other investments in Chemainus are a British Columbia power commission thermal plant in the amount of $15 million and other MacMillan and Bloedel buildings making a grand total of well over $40 million.

Moorage for small craft provided in the harbour is as follows: the government wharf, 1,060 feet, Western Forest industries float, 1,500 feet and other floats, 250 feet.

During 1959 over 1,000 small craft used the port of Chemainus to clear customs, to shop for supplies and to take on fuel and ice. This port is open to the north, northwest and west winds which have a sweep of five to 15 miles of open water. Even during July and August the winds have kept small craft from entering the harbour. These two months are the best months of the boating season and the lack of a breakwater has caused a serious loss of business to local merchants as cruisers enter the harbour, note the lack of protection, turn and sail to better anchorage.

The federal government could and should construct a rock-filled breakwater from Hospital point to the spar buoy and Chemainus would then become a safe and secure harbour. The people of Chemainus have tried for years to get this breakwater built and I suggest to the minister that this request be reviewed and work started as soon as possible.

There are certain locations in Canada where a program of public works makes a great difference to the welfare and prosperity of the people living there. One such place is Ganges, on Salt Spring island. There are no large payrolls or industry at Ganges and the establishment of a boat basin would undoubtedly add to the prosperity of that wonderful harbour. I urge the minister to give this matter immediate and careful consideration.

The Department of Public Works has made a survey in connection with a boat basin at Ganges, and I have been advised that the proposal has been placed on the department's advance planning program. Each year hundreds of boats cruise the waters of Salt Spring island; many of them go to Ganges harbour but because of the great popularity of Ganges there is not enough mooring space for them. Ganges harbour lies in the centre of the best cruising waters in the world. Ganges has all the facilities needed to make it the best boating centre on the west coast. They have boat repair yards, a fine hospital, good doctors, stores and shops as required by the boating public.

I ask that the minister give this important matter very serious consideration and that a start be made on a boat basin as soon as possible. It will have to be done sometime and I believe that now is the time to get on with it as the people of Ganges have waited long enough for something that should have been done years ago.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Chairman, I shall begin my remarks on the estimates of this very important department by expressing my appreciation to the minister and his staff of their many acts of courtesy extended to me from time to time, both in Ottawa and in Newfoundland, and to assure the minister that they have helped me in no small way in passing on important information to my constituents. However, as can be expected, I did not always agree with the minister or with the decision of his officials; but I must thank them for the prompt replies and assure the minister that as long as I am a member from Newfoundland I shall work in the best interests of that province.

This committee is aware but sometimes forgets that Newfoundland entered this great dominion, which now stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as the tenth province only in 1949, and we shall, therefore, be a long time in catching up with even the Atlantic provinces which themselves are by no means the richest provinces.

Canada is not a number of provinces grouped together but a great dominion comprised of 10 provinces united for the common good of its people, and as a province is weak so is the nation. No chain can be stronger than its weakest link. Weakness in one part impairs the whole nation, and if we have one weak province then we cannot have a healthy and prosperous nation.

Newfoundland is an island of approximately 43,000 square miles with a coast line of 6,000 miles. In Newfoundland we have problems which are unique and which do not exist in any other province and therefore should be treated as such.

I am well aware that the Department of Public Works has spent much money in Newfoundland on public works but no more than is spent proportionately in other provinces. For a number of years Newfoundland was completely dependent on its fisheries. While this position has changed somewhat, nevertheless it is a very important industry and ties in with the logging industry.

The department proposes to improve facilities in many communities along the bleak coast of Newfoundland and for this I am grateful, particularly for the proposed construction of the public wharf at Dildo, Trinity bay, where there is a large whaling and fresh fish operation. It is from here that the only mink feed delivery service operates in Canada. This is essential to the existence of 20,000 mink in the 20 ranches in this area.

In addition, this wharf provides shelter for the fishermen to moor their boats and as a result they will be able to fish later in the fall of the year. Every year because of the spring storms and the ice that floats around our coast many repairs have to be made to the public wharves, slipways, stages and so forth. In addition there is always a great need for the dredging of the harbours and coves. I am pleased to learn that the Department of Public Works intends to do some dredging this year in some seven communities in my riding. I believe this work will prove highly beneficial.

I would also urge the minister to see that as much work as possible be done early in the spring so that the fishermen can get the benefit of those services which have been provided and at the same time get badly needed employment.

I am well aware that everything cannot be done in all communities of Newfoundland in any one year, but there are a few places in particular which I should like to mention at this time, even though they have already been brought to the attention of the minister by way of petitions, letters, personal meetings or by telephone calls. I am now thinking of settlements which I know are very important as far as our fisheries are concerned.

First, I call the minister's attention to the need for improving facilities in the Port-de-Grave area, including Hibbs Cove, where a breakwater is badly needed. In 1959 I understand that 9 million pounds of fresh fish were produced in that community and when the water is rough the fishermen have to go three miles to discharge their catch and then truck it back to their stages to salt it. The harbour is so crowded with boats that the fishermen can walk across the cove by stepping from one boat to another. If a breakwater were constructed it would give the fishermen much more space in which to carry on their work.

In the Port de Grave area we have as good fishermen as will be found in any part of Canada. I understand there is a firm which would erect a fresh fish filleting plant in the Port de Grave area if improvements were made to the harbour facilities.

I also request improvements in Harbour Grace, which is one of the most important fishing communities in Newfoundland. Here we have one of the most modern fresh fish processing plants in North America, owned and operated by one of the most progressive firms in the industry, namely North Eastern Fish Industries Limited. This plant is very beneficial not only to the immediate area but also to many persons in Trinity and Conception bays. Last year there were in operation out of Harbour Grace nine boats 36 feet long and over, five boats 32 feet long and over, 12 fishing boats under 32 feet and a number of other small boats. The condition of the public wharf at Harbour Grace is bad and not suitable for the tying up of small fishing boats. There is no place where the fishermen can haul up their boats or moor them in safety. A petition has been forwarded to the minister by the fishermen at Harbour Grace and because of the great necessity of a wharf I again urge the minister to give this matter further consideration. I would also ask him to consider the construction of a haul-out at Harbour Grace similar to the one which the Department of Transport proposes to construct at Clarenville this year.

I would also be grateful if the minister would consider the need for a fishermen's landing at Carbonear. I am pleased to learn that the department proposes to repair the government wharf there this year.

At Chapel Arm and Butter Cove in Trinity bay there are no public wharves and I must again ask the minister to see if his department will construct wharves there.

Again I must ask the minister to give sympathetic consideration to the petitions submitted by the fishermen of Melrose, Trinity bay. One petition was dated February 16, 1960, and another March 6, 1961, and nothing has been done notwithstanding the fact that the majority of the voters supported the friend of the minister. I am aware that many investigations have been made in this harbour and unfavourable reports were received. The fishermen at Melrose do not agree with the results of the investigations of the officials, and they think that improvements could be made to the harbour at a cost much less than the estimates submitted to the minister.

The fishermen of Melrose have never had a public wharf of any kind and have to carry on their avocation in the same manner as their ancestors did 100 years ago. There are more than 60 fishermen in this community with 40 boats, and these fishermen are hard workers and very industrious. Their catches of codfish have meant much to the fresh fish plants at Catalina and Port Union. It has been estimated that the total revenue for this community would be $30,000 yearly.

There are many other communities where the Department of Public Works could improve the harbour and fishing facilities. Among these are Coley's Point, Bishop's Cove, Burnt Point, Caplin Cove in Conception bay, Western Bay, Old Perlican, Green's Harbour, Winterton, New Harbour, Monroe, Dunfield and Butter Cove. It is all the more necessary to help the fishermen in every way because of the competition we are getting from foreign countries, the latest addition being Russia. According to reports, Russia now has 150 modern vessels operating in the fisheries off the coast of Newfoundland.

During the national Liberal rally a committee unanimously recommended the construction of a major auditorium in Ottawa for the accommodation of large national gatherings. This resolution was submitted by the Newfoundland delegation and was enthusiastically endorsed by the national problem subcommittee. At the present time it is difficult to hold meetings in the national capital, Ottawa, and the present facilities are such that they discourage large conventions from coming here.

During the Liberal rally many temporary rooms were set up in the agricultural section of the coliseum in which committees could hold meetings. Most of the committees, owing to pressure of work, were meeting at the same time. The rooms were far from soundproof. As a matter of fact, when a speaker with a loud voice was talking in an adjacent room it was sometimes thought we had two speakers in the same room talking at the same time, which reminded us of what takes place sometimes in this house. The rooms were so poorly lighted and so crowded that they reminded us of the black hole of Calcutta. In my opinion it is the duty of the federal government to see that such a building is erected in Ottawa, a city in which every Canadian should take an interest and of which we should all be proud.

I should also like the minister to give consideration to the erection of a public building in Brigus, Conception bay. At Brigus there is a building that is outdated in every respect and is in a bad state of repair. The present building is used by officials of the department of welfare, the forestry division, the post office and for a court house, and is quite often used for public meetings also.

I should like to speak for a few minutes on the trans-Canada highway. The trans-Canada highway, when completed from the western end of Newfoundland to St. John's, the capital, will cover approximately 600 miles, about 200 of which have been paved and about 100 of which are ready for paving. I understand that it will cost about $50 million to construct and pave the remainder of the mileage of the trans-Canada highway. Newfoundland has the second lowest population of all the provinces and the highest road mileage per capita.

The terms of the agreement respecting the proportion of the cost paid by each province should be based on the cost of living in each province and the taxes collected from the people, coupled with the earning power of each province. Newfoundland has a claim to some special consideration with regard to financing because at the present time she is the only province that does not have a standard gauge railway. Newfoundland has a narrow gauge railway and this is a great problem.

Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces also, I believe, have not as yet enough local roads to provide the means of transportation required to transport provisions from one part of the province to another. This is urgently required for the maintenance of the people and to help the province toward progress and prosperity. It will not be until secondary roads are provided that the Atlantic provinces will even consider the completion of another trunk highway, let alone completion of the trans-Canada highway. At this time, to these provinces of the Atlantic region, especially Newfoundland, the trans-Canada highway seems like something away off in the distance, a beautiful dream. This is the way it will remain unless the federal government come to realize that, if the trans-Canada highway is to be completed within the lifetime of any of us now living, they will have to shoulder their duty and responsibility to all the Canadian people and make the necessary provisions to have this highway completed by providing the required financial assistance. If the federal government intends to continue its present formula, then it is just as well to face the fact that the trans-Canada highway will never be completed. Consequently, the economy of Canada will suffer because of the neglect of those regions which most need and most deserve federal support.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the provinces take full responsibility with respect to the layout of the trans-Canada highway.

[Mr. Tucker.]

We have learned that in the province of Quebec, the trans-Canada highway will go through the city of Montreal and then cross a bridge to be built over the St. Lawrence in order to connect the north shore to the south shore.

This bridge will be built in Boucherville and will cost approximately $90 million. Therefore, the trans-Canada highway will run along the south shore of the St. Lawrence. I wonder why the Quebec government which is responsible for the layout of the trans-Canada highway, has not decided that the route be laid out so that the highway would run on the north shore, through the constituencies of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere and so forth.

The decision taken by the Quebec government to build this highway on the south shore of the St. Lawrence will hinder the development of the area of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and of that part of the province which is located on the north shore of the St. Lawrence.

I should not want the Quebec authorities to discriminate against the district of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and the north shore of the St. Lawrence. The city of Joliette is but a few miles from Montreal. It is essential that a highway should be built to connect those two cities. Consequently, I would have thought it would be more logical to build the trans-Canada highway on the north shore, thus bringing closer to Montreal the riding of my distinguished colleague from Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere as well as my own riding.

If the Quebec government had decided to do that, the Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere districts would have undergone extraordinary economic development.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether the C.M.H.C. and the national research council have carried out or are still carrying out joint studies to provide Canada with a national building code. I should like the minister to tell us whether such a code will soon be provided and put into force. In other words, I should like to know what progress the C.M.H.C. and the national research council have made in that regard.

(Text):

Mr. Robichaud: While it is not my intention at this time to discuss in a general way the estimates of the Minister of Public Works, I do wish to bring to the attention of the minister certain projects which are of particular concern to my constituents in Gloucester. The minister is aware, I am sure, as are his officials, that numerous requests have been received by his department for the development of the port of Bathurst. Last year a delegation from the town of Bathurst met with the minister and his officials and presented a definite request to improve the accommodation at that particular port. I wish the minister could tell us, before he closes the debate on this item, what progress has been made in this direction. I understand that the request was for the dredging of a 23-foot channel in order to accommodate ocean-going vessels.

No later than yesterday a most important announcement was made by the premier of New Brunswick to the effect that Brunswick Mining and Smelting, which has been idle for a number of years, will soon resume operations and so will Consolidated Mining in the same area. The premier of New Brunswick went further and stated that by 1963 a smelter will be erected in that area in order to take care of the production of these mines. If this project is completed, there will be a definite necessity for the development of harbour accommodation and I hope that the co-operation of the federal government will be forthcoming at that time.

I should like to bring to the ministers attention certain requests which have been before the department for some time relating to some of the important fishing communities in my constituency. In Maisonnette, for example, we have about 40 or 45 fishing boats in operation. Fishing is the only industry in that community. Notwithstanding the fact that these fishermen have available a small landing of about 275 feet in length with a depth of water of a foot and a half at low tide, last year they landed over 1.5 million pounds of fish. I understand that the department has had in hand for the last two years a plan for the extension of the present wharf. I understand that this extension could be carried out at an estimated cost of approximately $165,000.

As a result of our experience with similar projects, we know that if tenders were called for the extension of the Maisonnette wharf in order to provide water of a depth of four feet, which will give good but not perfect shelter, the project could be completed at a cost of about $125,000. This would be definitely in line with similar projects approved by the department in the past. I hope that the fishermen of Maisonnette will be granted this extension to their wharf without delay. This extension would provide urgently needed protection because every year these fishermen lose two or three boats during storms and, in addition to that, their fishing operations have to be curtailed.

There is also before the department a request for the replacement of the Lower Caraquet wharf which was carried away during a storm in 1958. Early in 1959, the Minister of Public Works notified the local chamber of commerce that the replacement of the wharf would be considered in the 1960-61 estimates. However, the 1960-61 estimates were introduced, and they did not contain any item for the replacement of the Lower Caraquet wharf. We now have the 1961-62 estimates, and again there is no item to cover the replacement of this wharf. I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the replacement of this wharf which is needed for the development of the fishing industry in that area.

Another fishing community in my constituency at which some improvements are needed is Ferguson gully. I understand that if the department were to accept the request of the local fishermen, a major expenditure would be involved. However, the first request has been amended and the fishermen will now be satisfied if the department will undertake an experiment and have a cut made through the sandbar in order to allow these fishermen to go out to the fishing grounds. I would ask the minister to advise us whether or not this project could be undertaken during the present summer.

The last fishing community which I shall mention at this time is Pigeon Hill. We have 55 fishing boats operating out of this community, and these fishermen have no shelter, no landing accommodation whatever. They have to launch their fishing craft every morning and beach them when they come back from the fishing grounds in the evening. This locality is along the shores of the gulf of St. Lawrence, and if the local fishermen were to leave their boats at anchor there would be a good chance the boats would be gone before morning. I know that the minister is aware of the situation at Pigeon Hill. I know that it could involve some major expenditure. I feel, however, that the expenditure is well warranted in view of the heavy production and the large number of fishing boats involved. I have been told that every morning the minister uses his canoe by means of which to go from his home to his office. If the minister were obliged to go through what our fishermen at Pigeon Hill are obliged to go through every morning he would be more fully aware of the situation.

I have here a picture which appeared in the newspaper Evangeline for Thursday, May 25. It shows these fishermen having to launch their boats loaded with traps. Here is a fishing boat 35 feet or 38 feet in length and loaded with 40 lobster traps. The fishermen have to go into the water up to their waists and be exposed to two-foot or three-foot waves, and on many occasions they are obliged to spend a whole day soaked to their waists. If, while launching their boats, the waves get over their high rubber boots and rubber suits, they are obliged to carry on fishing all day that way. If the minister had to get his feet wet, at least he could come to his office and in a warm spot dry off very quickly. For the information of the minister I am sending this picture over to him. It will give him firsthand information of the misery these fishermen are obliged to go through.

I am positive that the project at Pigeon Hill is not impossible. It is true that an engineering problem exists, but the engineers of his department in the past have taken care of problems which were just as serious as is the one at Pigeon Hill. I hope that this project will receive serious and early consideration.

Mr. Johnson: I should like to ask a question of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, if he does not mind. Since the hon. member always maintains that he is a good representative of New Brunswick, I should like to know why he did not ask for anything for the constituency of Restigouche-Madawaska.

Mr. Robichaud: As the bright boy has asked me this question, Mr. Chairman, I will tell the hon. member this. When we come to item 362 I may have a series of questions to address to the minister concerning the constituency of Restigouche-Madawaska.

Mr. Johnson: We have a good member. We do not need them.

Mr. McCleave: First, I think the committee would be pleased to know that the minister has recently retrieved this famous canoe in which he moves to and from work. It apparently was lost, strayed or stolen a while back but now it has been returned safely and the minister is again paddling his own canoe.

I have two suggestions to make and I hope the minister will not tell me to paddle my own canoe. They will be short ones and I will not take too much of his time. The first is a request or a suggestion—and I made it some two years ago or three years ago— that more attention be paid to the problems of paraplegics when public buildings are designed. I know the minister has continued the program his precedessor followed of doing something for paraplegics, but there are still in this country a number of public buildings which are going up without due regard to those unfortunates. There are ready architectural plans, for example, in all the buildings put up by the Department of Veterans Affairs. As I say these plans are available to the architects who design the other buildings. I hope the minister will aggressively see to it that all public buildings will have entrances that are suitable to paraplegics. When I went through Dalhousie law school I had the personal experience of helping to move into and out of the school a student who was a paraplegic. From that personal experience I know of the problems that face these people.

The second point, Mr. Chairman, deals with your grand province of Quebec. I should like to make this point in French except for the fact that, despite hard study, my French is of the nature that has to be translated in booths on both sides of the chamber. I will therefore make the remarks in English, if I may do so. I visited several places in Quebec recently and was somewhat surprised to find that companies which had set up what I suppose you would call the company style town, had incorporated the English Canadian style of architecture rather than the French Canadian style of architecture in their building development. This seemed to be most surprising. Subsequently I talked about this matter with officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to ascertain whether there were any homes of distinctively French Canadian design that could qualify for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans. I am informed that the corporation is doing all it can to encourage architects in Quebec to come up with homes of this style with a peculiarly Quebec flair. I hope the minister and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will encourage these architects to achieve something that will reach that goal.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the first vote of the Department of Public Works.

I shall start by mentioning an answer given by the minister (Mr. Walker). When replying to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), the minister repeated an accusation he made last year following a discussion concerning a contract which had not been awarded to the lowest tenderer.

The minister said then—and he repeated this accusation today—that the case referred to was excusable because the contractor who did not get the job did not have the ability required for carrying out the work.

The minister may have been ill-informed at the time, that is quite possible. But today, he takes the same attitude, in spite of the evidence I supplied him with and which leaves no doubt with regard to Mr. Langlois. That is certainly unjustified.

I submit that this attempt to disprove our evidence is a clear case of intentional deceit.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege.

The hon. member just accused the minister of intentional deceit. This is deliberately accusing the minister of being dishonest I believe his words are contrary to the rules of the house.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martineau: I would ask the hon. member for Hull to retract his unkind words.

Mr. Caron: I said, Mr. Chairman, that the minister may have been ill-informed.

Mr. Johnson: No.

Mr. Caron: But when, after having received additional information, he persisted in this attitude, there was or there might have been, intentional deceit.

Mr. Johnson: You never said that; you said that there was intentional deceit.

Mr. Caron: Let us say that after getting additional information—

The Chairman: Order. I think that the words used by the hon. member for Hull were to the effect that there was intentional deceit.

I wondered whether the hon. member would clearly state that he was not speaking of the minister. That is why I allowed him to comment on the point of order. I think he just confirmed that those were indeed the words he spoke, and that they were aimed at the minister.

I believe those words are not allowable under our rules and our practices. I shall therefore ask him to make the correction which is called for.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I comply with your wish that I should withdraw the words which are said to be unparliamentary.

Nevertheless, I wish to show this house that the minister was not right in repeating today what he said a year ago on the basis of information which, according to me, could have been unjustified and unjustifiable.

He claimed that the person concerned was not qualified. I asked him at the time what was the basis for that statement. He then gave me the names of people who were supposed to have testified to that effect.

I then wrote to those people and I received answers from everywhere and I had copies made which I sent to the minister himself to see what his reaction would be.

Here is a summary of the situation. I have here a letter from the C.N.R. over the signature of the building engineer—I sent a copy of it to the minister; therefore he cannot say that he did not get the information. I believe that the C.N.R. building engineer for the Moncton section is an honest and honourable man; therefore, since he has been given by the C.N.R. the responsibility of supervising construction projects, he should know what he is talking about when he says:

(Text):

As requested in your telegram, I am attaching to this letter a statement indicating that you completed the contract for the Canadian National Railways in a satisfactory manner.

(Translation):

Now, the Canadian National bank—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, as a matter of information, could the hon. member give us the date of the document he has just been quoting?

Mr. Caron: The date? Yes, it is July 12, 1960, from Moncton, N.B.

And now, from the Canadian National bank which had also been mentioned by the minister, I have received, under date of July 11, 1960—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Caron: Are you trying to stop me from making my speech?

Mr. Martineau: I am rising on a point of order. The hon. member is repeating a point he raised in the house last year and to which the minister had replied, quoting nine examples. So I do not think it is in order for the hon. member to again bring up this point which had to do with last year's estimates, because in that case we could go on and on discussing what was discussed and voted in the house last year, not to mention the fact that the business of the house could not proceed.

Mr. Caron: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am not—

The Chairman: I think I may immediately indicate to the hon. member that in my view, the point of order raised by the hon. parliamentary secretary is not well taken, because this is not a closed debate.

I think the hon. member may go on.

An hon. Member: He is all wet.

Mr. Caron: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Here, under date of July 12, 1960, is a letter signed by Mr. J. A. Grisé, chief architect of the buildings service of the Canadian National bank, whose views must certainly be worthy of confidence. Here is what he says:

Contrary to the assertions of the minister based on inaccurate information he has received, this is to certify that Mr. Arthur Langlois, general contractor of Mont-Joli, has carried out extension and improvement works for the Canadian National bank in the year 1956, at the Canadian National bank building at Mont-Joli.

This job, which cost approximately $35,000 and consisted in building a new vault and carrying out improvements both inside and outside the building has been completed satisfactorily.

Signed: J. A. Grisé,
Chief architect,
Canadian National Bank.

And I have here a telegram and confirmation from Mr. R. M. Wickwire, building engineer, of Moncton, N.B., date July 12, 1960. I quote:

(Text):

This is to certify that Mr. Arthur Langlois constructed an extension to our express building at Mont Joli, Quebec, in 1956, valued at approximately $16,000. The contract was successfully completed in a workmanlike manner to the complete satisfaction of the railway.

(Translation):

And it is signed: R. M. Wickwire, building engineer.

I also have a letter from Mr. L. P. Martin, division engineer, C.N.R., Campbellton, New Brunswick, dated—

(Text):

Mr. Walker: On a point of order. The hon. member as reported at page 6472 of Hansard, read the letter which he has just read again into the record. It was read into the record a year ago. Now he proceeds to read another. Surely there is a rule against repetition of this kind. He was answered in full. We gave nine instances of the gross inefficiency of his friend who he wanted to have a contract.

The question I should like to ask the hon. member at this time, and one which I am constantly asked, is: has he 29 or 33 relatives in the civil service at the present time?

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: And his nephew—

(Text):

Mr. Caron: They can't call me Danny Boy. I shall speak first to the point of order and then I shall deal with the dirty way in which the minister deals with these matters. Yes, this was brought up before, in the previous session, but the minister came back today and repeated his statement when he should have known better than to do so, having received all those letters, because I have sent copies to the minister. Notwithstanding the copies I have sent him he came back today after the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver East. He came back again and repeated that the man was incompetent to do the job when he knows better, having received copies of all those letters. This is not considered to be fair play. This is hitting a man below the belt, and I cannot understand why an ex-boxer should behave in that way.

As for the relatives I have in the civil service, I do not know of many. But there is one thing I do know: I never recommended one single one. They have settled their own value and that is a lot better than the minister can say, because if he had not been the henchman of the government on the old printing bureau he would not be the minister today. That is the way it is—the henchman.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, we have 45 letters written by the hon. member for Hull to the George street office of the Department of Public Works alone since the 1957 election asking for jobs—

The Chairman: Order. It seems that the question put by the minister was out of order. I have allowed the hon. member to reply because he was personally concerned. Now I hope we may come back to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Winch: I rise on a question of privilege. Do I gather from what the minister said a moment ago that if an hon. member of this house by chance, or in any way at all, has a relative in the civil service that he should not be allowed to speak on any matter?

The Chairman: The hon. member will agree, I hope, that this is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Winch: Then what is it? Did you hear the remark of the minister?

The Chairman: I think the hon. member will agree that this is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Winch: Did you hear what the hon. member said?

The Chairman: I heard what he said and I stated that in my view he was out of order. I allowed the hon. member to reply, but I think we should now proceed with the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Caron: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have here a telegram of July 11, 1960, which the minister has received and which reads as follows:

Arthur Langlois,
253 St. Joseph Boulevard,
Hull, Quebec

This is to state that you have performed services for the Canadian National Railways in providing an extension to our express building at Mont Joli in 1956, value of contract being in the vicinity of $16,000, and that your work was very satisfactory.

M. B. Martin,
Division Engineer, C.N.R.

(Translation):

In answer to the insidious question of the Minister of Public Works—his questions are always insidious anyway—I wish to tell the house that when I got interested in that case, I had never seen nor met Mr. Langlois; I did not know him. Since then, I saw him only once and I cannot consider Mr. Langlois as a friend, although I would be happy to be in a position to say so, since I have seen him only once in my life.

Mr. Johnson: You should have seen him more often, you would be better informed then.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, my information is firsthand information and it is more accurate than whatever information the hon. member could give me.

Mr. Chairman, I continue—

Mr. Johnson: Act four.

Mr. Valade: Why don't you go mosquito hunting?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, the minister has claimed that, notwithstanding the information I gave him, he obtained information to the effect that the school board of Ste. Flavie had not been satisfied with the work which was carried out for them. He repeated the same thing today. I cannot understand this stand on the part of a man who is supposed to know at least something of the law since, as I am told, he qualified as a lawyer at one time. I am surprised to hear him repeat today his claims in the very same terms, even though he has been given all the information. In fact, here is a part of the information he has received:

To whom it may concern.

Arthur Langlois:

We, the school board of Ste. Flavie, have accepted the tenders for various construction and repair work on four of our schools, and have been very satisfied with the work done. This gentleman has always abided by and respected his contracts; all the jobs he has done have been satisfactory to the Department of Education.

We therefore recommend Mr. Langlois as a builder with experience in all fields of construction. Moreover, I should add that I have known Mr. Langlois for 25 years, that he has done all sorts of construction work in our district, and that I wholeheartedly support the recommendation made by the members of the school board concerning Langlois' fulfilment of his contracts and the interest he takes in his work.

(Signed) Yvon Pelletier, farmer.

And now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Johnson: Is that Mr. Honore Pelletier.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, the minister has said that Mr. Langlois had worked for a certain Eugene Belisle. This is what Mr. Eugene Belisle states:

The undersigned declare that they were satisfied with the work carried out by Mr. Arthur Langlois, general contractor.

(signed) Eugene Belisle of Eugene Belisle & Fils Auto Limitée
Mont Joli.

The Mutual Life of Canada wrote to Mont Joli—

I am sorry, according to the minister, an agent of the Mutual Life of Canada, Mr. Dumais, had a house built by Mr. Langlois and he suggested that the work was badly done and that he had to have it done over again. This is entirely false and there is more than that. In that case, a house was built through a C.M.H.C. loan and since work carried out under such a loan is closely supervised in general, it is rather difficult for a contractor to get away with an unsatisfactory job. At any rate, this is what Mr. Dumais, who had a house built by Mr. Langlois, wrote:

Further to your letter of the 22nd instant, it is a pleasure for me to express my appreciation and that of the many friends who visited my house. As a contractor, you have fully met your obligations. The architect's specifications have been followed. The quality of the materials fully met C.M.H.C. requirements.

I trust that this letter will be useful to you as I am convinced that you will give them full satisfaction.

(Signed) R. Dumais.

Mr. Chairman, I could quote many more letters, but I am satisfied that I have made it abundantly clear, through letters from responsible and competent people, that the minister was not justified last year and that he was even less justified to bring up this matter again this year, since he had received copy of all this information.

Would it be to justify himself for having granted a contract to a person who had not submitted the lowest tender, to please a member of parliament? If so, that is no excuse, in my opinion. Let him take his responsibilities before the public; he should not accuse others of incompetence when, in fact, he is the one who is incompetent. If any one is incompetent in this house, it is the present Minister of Public Works and he should not come here and accuse honest people and reflect on their reputation to hide his own incompetence.

In my opinion, the minister's attitude is not justified. Mr. Chairman, I could quote many more letters and evidence like I did last year but I think it would be useless to go any further. The minister has a copy of all that information, yet he is not satisfied with that. He repeats today what he said last year, knowing full well that it is false.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know how you would express yourself in such a case, but I say it is not honourable for a member of parliament or a minister to say such things after having been provided with information—

Mr. Martineau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I think I know what words the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister takes exception to and I feel the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) will agree with me that an hon. member cannot imply that another hon. member has said something which he knows is false, and then add that such conduct is not honourable. I feel both expressions are unparliamentary and would ask the hon. member to correct them.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I will correct my statement. I state that with all the information I gave him, the minister had every reason to believe that it was not false, and that his conduct was absolutely honourable. (Text):

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I should like to say that I could even go out under the circumstances and get a recommendation for the hon. member for Hull, but it would not mean anything.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, seeing how some hon. members are trying to bring the house down, I am happy that I was busy at something else and failed to hear the remarks of the Minister of Public Works. I am sure they were absolutely insipid since they seem to appeal to those who were applauding.

Mr. Pigeon: Tell us something about your nephew, Mr. Jean Lupien, who works for C.M.H.C.

Mr. Caron: Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) apologized last year for having made such a reference, and he is at it again. He knows perfectly well and he has admitted as much to me, that I had nothing to do, neither directly nor indirectly with the employment of my nephew by C.M.H.C. in Montreal or in Ottawa.

Well, after admitting that he knew that, he butts in with the same matter, which indicates how far he can go.

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Caron: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) is attacking my reputation. I took the hon. member's word, still it seems strange that, as I have said, his nephew was in fact granted a key position with the government. It is shocking.

The Chairman: Order. What the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has said after rising on a question of privilege is proof enough that there is no question of privilege, since the hon. member for Hull said nothing which could be construed as a reflection on the reputation of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Bourget: You are always off the track.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I am very fond of the songs coming from the extreme left of the house—

An hon. Member: You have a better voice yourself.

Mr. Caron: Yes, my voice is more powerful.

Mr. Valade: A mosquito voice.

Mr. Caron: We have just heard the mosquito voice. Nevertheless, the contract was awarded, not to the lowest bidder, but to the highest.

Mr. Valade: Try to be honest, and say what you have to say.

Mr. Caron: I said it was in your riding that the contract was awarded to the highest instead of the lowest bidder, and that the minister was compelled to take this step in order to please the hon. member.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I must raise a point of order.

Mr. Caron: There is no point of order here.

Mr. Valade: The hon. member for Hull, in his mental aberration, has laid a charge against me. I ask him to make himself clear or withdraw what he said.

An hon. Member: He had better go mosquito hunting.

Mr. Caron: I see, Mr. Chairman, that you did not understand, neither did I.

(Text):

Oh yes, there are quite a few reasons, especially when they come from the Union Nationale party.

(Translation):

The Chairman: Order. May I call upon the members to let the hon. member who has the floor continue his speech without interrupting him, especially when those interruptions have no other result than to cause the debate to drift into other channels, or, to continue the allegory into foreign seas.

Mr. Johnson: Maybe it is to give him something to think about.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Valade: On a question of privilege. The member for Hull referred a moment ago to my riding. He said that in my riding contracts had been given for a price, I do not know what price, but I believe he referred to contracts which were awarded in the riding I represent. I would ask him to prove what he says and to avoid making allegations that reflect upon my reputation and my county.

The Chairman: Order. The fact that a member states that a contract has been awarded in the riding of another member cannot reflect on the reputation of that hon. member. However, if the hon. member wishes to put a question to the hon. member for Hull and if the latter one allows it, it would be quite in order.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, on the question of privilege, the member for Hull actually said that a contract had been awarded to the highest tenderer in the constituency of St. Mary in order to please the hon. member for that riding. I did hear that statement made by the member for Hull, who should not make such statements without being able to prove them. Put up or shut up!

Some hon. Members: Then prove what you say.

Mr. Valade: Prove that it happened in my riding.

Mr. Caron: You want to know if I can prove it. There was for the Hudson Heights post office—

Mr. Valade: In St. Mary?

Some hon. Members: That is far from St. Mary. You do not know your geography.

Mr. Caron: In any case, I meant the Hudson Heights post office, and the tenderer was Stuart and Stuart, of Montreal, who bid $23,825; the second was Gray and Gareau, of Hudson, $21,650; the third, S. R. Wilson, of Hudson Heights, $19,950; and the fourth, Arthur Langlois, of Ste. Rose-de-Lima, $16,750. The contract was awarded to the one who had bid $19,950, that is to say he had admitted a price of $3,200 more than the lowest bidder, and the minister, at the time, told us it was because the lowest bidder was incompetent.

I say the minister was mistaken and that he had no right to repeat the same thing.

Furthermore, in Hudson, another contract was awarded—

(Text):

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, this was all gone into in extenso last year. The hon. member for Hull is still speaking in connection with his same inefficient friend who did not get that contract at Hudson because of his gross inefficiency. This matter was raised last year in the consideration of my estimates and we spent hours on it. My point is this. We have had not one word from the hon. member for Hull on the estimates this year until today. Surely there is a limit, Mr. Chairman, to the distance to which you will allow the hon. member for Hull, who has a loud voice and a vacant mind, to go.

Mr. Caron: I brought up this matter because of the answer the minister gave to the hon. member for Vancouver East. The minister rose and repeated the same accusation against Mr. Langlois that he made last year. I admitted at the time that it might have been because of his lack of information, but since then I have sent the minister all the details but he has not changed his views. The minister rose in his place today and repeated the same accusation. I believe this is the same kind of hitting below the belt that no boxer would accept in any boxing match. This is what the minister has done. He has claimed that in the past he was a prize fighter but I do not accept the fact that I cannot answer the accusation made by the minister in this committee. He has repeated today the accusations he made unjustly last year. I did not think he knew the facts at that time. Since then he has had the information and he had no right to repeat the accusation. The best thing he could have done would have been to remain silent and not say anything at all. It had not been mentioned up to that time but in answering the hon. member for Vancouver East who asked whether there were any privileged contractors or privileged tenderers the minister said to the hon. member, if there is any information that you have will you bring it to me as some others have done. He said "last year the member for Hull brought some information and I could show him that the man was incompetent". This is why I have to object to what the minister said.

(Translation):

I may also talk about that.

Some hon. Members: Talk about the printing bureau.

Mr. Bourget: You said it, we are going to talk about it.

Mr. Caron: And I duly intend to talk about it.

Mr. Pigeon: Creeks in the basement.

Mr. Caron: Those words of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm prove that he is utterly ignorant.

Mr. Habel: On a point of order, I feel that this debate has degenerated into the kind of debates conducted by the Union Nationale, which should not be tolerated in this chamber.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, usually I have respect for older people, but the malicious insinuation made by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) is an insult to a million Quebec voters who supported the Union Nationale party, which certainly gave us a good government while it was in power, and the hon. member who has just spoken should be the last to say such things on the floor of the house. He should be ashamed.

The Chairman: Order. I think it would be proper to invite the hon. members generally to be a little calmer, and especially on a point of order not to introduce into the debate completely irrelevant facts, which in turn are followed by others; there results a chain reaction which again makes us wander from the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Caron: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Johnson: I rise on a question of privilege. I suggest to the hon. members and my colleagues present that even though the hon. member for Hull has quite a loud voice, which perhaps brings a little more animation into the debate, that it is not a good enough reason for the hon. member for Cochrane—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Johnson: I am rising on a question of privilege—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I rise—

The Chairman: Order. I have already given my ruling on the matter raised by the hon. member for Cochrane and I should like again—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I ask the hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville—

Mr. Bourget: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: —to help the Chair maintain order and to allow the discussion to continue in an atmosphere of, shall I say, relative calm, so that the hon. members may follow the discussion.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I have always shown a good example, but if my voice is maybe a little louder than most, I cannot reproach the Good Lord when he gave me that advantage.

Mr. Ricard: It must be used wisely.

Mr. Caron: I have never interrupted an hon. member who was speaking in this house, and you know it, Mr. Chairman.

I had the patience to wait till he had finished his remarks and then I rose to reply.

If they go on interrupting me, Mr. Chairman, I hope you will allow me to go beyond the narrow field of this debate on public works and answer freely all questions that will be put to me, for it is so easy to do so.

If I do not have the time to do it in my first half hour, I will take a second, a third and even a twelfth half hour, if necessary.

I certainly do not intend to be intimidated by anyone, especially by such inexperienced members who have so much to learn.

Mr. Valade: We are not here to be intimidated by the hon. member for Hull.

The Chairman: I had allowed the hon. member for Hull a few minutes to resume his subject. However, I realize he is still discussing the points of order.

Mr. Caron: I will come back tonight, Mr. Chairman and resume the subject.

(Text):

Mr. Peters: Carry on.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Peters: Agreement to carry on.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to take part in the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. Although my remarks will be brief, I feel I have some interesting items to bring up. As I am appreciative of the co-operation I have received from the minister and officials of his department, it is only right and proper that I should extend my sincere thanks during the consideration of these estimates.

Some time ago several officials of the department and of the Toronto office along with post office officials visited Waterloo North for the purpose of purchasing land which in the near future will be used for new post office buildings in the twin cities of Kitchener and Waterloo. Kitchener, a city of 75,000 or more, has doubled its population during the last 25 years, and the property which has been secured is well situated in the busy section of the city. I understand that plans are now under way to start this building in the fall. When completed it should be a fine addition to the city which is well known throughout Canada for its progress in manufacturing, educational facilities—

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, a question has been raised this afternoon about members reading their speeches. While I do not want to be restrictive, I believe it should be made clear that if it is not correct for one member to do so it is not correct for other members to do the same thing. This should be brought to the attention of members.

Mr. Pallett: On the point of order raised by the hon. member, may I say that I have been listening to the hon. member who now has the floor. I have noticed that he has not been reading his speech and has only referred to a few notes that he has. I think I am in a better position to observe the hon. member than the hon. member for Timiskaming is.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to the point of order too, and I only do so because I think it is something that should not come up. When the point was raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, I deliberately left my seat and went behind the hon. member to see whether he was reading and every word was typewritten, so the point of order is correct. I would not have raised it if that member had not brought it up.

Mr. Valade: On the same point, Mr. Chairman, I have seen the hon. member who has raised this point reading all through debates on divorces.

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, that was not in my speech. I did not write the remarks I was reading on those occasions.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Waterloo North may explain.

Mr. Weichel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I understand that plans are under way to start this building in the fall. When completed it should make a very fine addition to this city which is well known throughout Canada for its progress in manufacturing, educational facilities and other worth-while fields.

Waterloo, the twin city of Kitchener, has doubled its population during the last ten years. This is probably a record in Canada and the need for a new post office here has been of the utmost importance. This city is known as the Hartford of Canada because of its many insurance companies, and its growth in population together with the great strides it has made in manufacturing also substantiate my remarks respecting the need of greater postal facilities. The land chosen for the building is ideally situated and when the post office is completed it should make a fine contribution to service and the appearance of that part of the city.

For many years the village of Wellsley has had very poor postal facilities. This has been corrected and the people there now enjoy a new post office. My home town of Elmira has also benefited from the program of the government and the Minister of Public Works in that improvements of real value to the community have been made in respect of our federal building.

Perhaps I should say a word or two about Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which comes under the minister's department and which has played a great part in housing and other facilities for our senior citizens and other citizens. Recently Mr. Mervin Woods, Q.C., popular president of the Canadian Legion of Canada, officially opened the elderly persons' homes of which I am a director. These homes are an example of what can be done for our senior citizens so far as their problems as to low-rent housing are concerned.

The young men's club of Kitchener recently opened a similar home which is a credit to the club and is much appreciated by the community as a whole. I could go on and mention many other worthwhile efforts that have received the assistance of the minister and his department. However, in closing may I again express my sincere appreciation to the minister and his staff for every consideration extended to me and my community.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring up at this time a number of matters that are of interest to the constituency which I represent in the House of Commons.

Mr. Peters: Don't read your speech.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As the hon. member has said, I shall do my best to follow my notes and not to read carefully from any text. The minister may perhaps be aware that I have had some correspondence with the director of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. However, in the event that he is not aware of the exchange of correspondence that I have had with that distinguished public servant I should like to mention a matter that is of considerable concern to many of the people who live in certain sections of my riding and who are living in houses that come under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation through the credits these persons have received in the building of these homes as a result of the legislation which the minister administers. This has to do with some inadequacies in some of the apparatus that goes into these houses. I have had a number of petitions which I have passed on to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation regarding the construction of many of these houses. These petitions relate to such things as faulty eavestroughs, downspouts, condensation on the ceilings, and particularly to hot water tanks. I should say I have had over 200 different such cases brought to my attention.

I know that the matter is not one that is easily dealt with because it is a matter involving housing inspection. However, I believe, since the government is prepared under legislation that exists to assist in the construction of homes as a guarantor, we have an obligation to see that the standards laid down by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are observed. In the case of the hot water tanks, for instance, the argument is made that there is a guarantee in some cases for as long as 10 years, but it is only regarded by the corporation as a standard of a recommendatory character. In some cases defects have shown up in the course of less than a year. I am sure that what I say applies not only to my constituency but to other sections of the city of Windsor as well as other communities in Canada. I do not want to overstate the case and I do not want to hurt any builder unduly or unfairly, but I am sure many hon. members have had the experience of people going into houses where the construction has been faulty, where hot water tanks and the like have been faulty.

It seems to me that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could do something more than merely express the view that these standards are recommendatory. I realize there is an important policing job here. The minister will recall that last year I urged upon him that steps ought to be taken to avoid discrimination in the matter of any individual being denied the opportunity to obtain credit for the purpose of building a house. At any rate, the initial view of the minister was that this was a provincial matter. The minister did, finally, find a method of coping with the problem. I am suggesting to him that in this kind of situation some effort ought to be made to see that builders do live up to the standards laid down by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I would ask the minister to have this matter referred once more to the director for all the data I have supplied to the latter in this matter.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question? I do not appear to have any correspondence with the hon. member on this subject—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I have corresponded with the director.

Mr. Walker: If the hon. member wanted to bring it to my attention, would it not be better if he had done so through these 200 complaints he received? May I ask him also whether or not he brought to the attention of anyone in our department the 200 complaints, giving the names and addresses of the complainants?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. If my hon. friend will refer to his director, he will find that I have had correspondence with him as late as June 8. I have had correspondence from him on May 2 and the director has before him the petition which I sent dated March 23 in respect of one phase of the construction of many of these houses.

I suggest to the minister that the attitude he should take is not one of belligerency with regard to this matter; that is not the approach that I made. If he wants to debate this matter on these terms, then I am prepared. Unfortunately, the manner of the minister in connection with every question that comes up, is that of taking a belligerent, personal attitude instead of taking the attitude that he will do the best he can in particular situations.

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, all I am asking is whether there is a record of the 200 names and addresses. I infer from the answer of the hon. member that there is not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not say that. I said if the hon. gentleman will look at the correspondence—

Mr. Walker: You said there was.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —he will see that I have sent the petition in question to the director, and I think most of the names are on it. Most of these people will be found living on Belleperche place in Riverside. Some of them live on Laporte avenue, some of them on Vimy in old Walkerville. The only point I am seeking to bring to the minister's attention is that he should not be unduly sensitive. His department does lay down standards as to the kind of heating equipment, for instance, that should be installed and this is one of the main sources of complaint. These heaters, guaranteed by the builders, are not living up to expectations. They cost quite a lot of money, a large sum of money for many of these people. In many cases, they have had to be replaced. I am simply saying to the minister, will he not give consideration to taking steps to see to it that through Central Mortgage inspection service or some other method, the corporation takes steps to see that the standards laid down by it are observed by the builders.

This is not an unreasonable request to make of the minister. I find it very difficult to understand this sudden display of belligerency with regard to so reasonable a request which I put in a reasonable way. I can only attribute the minister's petulance to the fact that he has had a hard afternoon, one which has tried his patience and disposition. He is taking this out on me. Why should he want to take it out on me? I do not understand it.

However, I hope he will not mind if I make this plea on behalf of my constituents who spent much of their hard earned money in the purchase of these homes and who find that the guarantees are not being met. As a result, they have had to spend considerable sums of money, away beyond original estimates. All I am asking the minister is to be good enough, as the minister of the crown in charge of this operation, to see whether some improvement can be made in the way this particular matter is handled. I am not complaining about the director. The director, in my judgment, is one of the most efficient men in the public service. I am not complaining about any of the officials. However, I believe that where standards are recommendatory, the department ought to take steps to see that some of these irritations are eliminated.

I must say that in one case I brought to the attention of the director, he did act expeditiously. He did send someone there, and as a result a correction was made. I refer to the case of a gentleman who does not even live in my constituency, but lives on Everett street in Sandwich West. As a result of the director's intervention, a correction was made. I am simply asking that a practice be established for meeting that kind of a situation as a rule, and not merely upon request.

The minister may have a good answer. I do not know why he should get all hot and bothered simply because a member of parliament puts to him, as a representative of the crown, a request on behalf of his constituents who feel that they have been aggrieved. The minister also will not mind, I hope, if I bring to his attention another matter which I mentioned last year. It is only because I think this is a legitimate request that I make it again. I hope the minister, who is an old friend of mine of many years' standing, will not think that I am unfair in making a request of him. After all, I am a member of this house. I do represent some people in this house, and I think I have a right to address myself to the minister. I know he is overburdened. I know that he is exercised today. I know he has been unduly agitated. However, I have not added to that agitation. I do not know why he should be so greatly disturbed because I seek to bring these matters to his attention. I am referring now to Belle River. To illustrate how I feel towards the minister, I ask him to come down to Essex East some time and to let me take him through my constituency. I should like to take him to Belle River. His able deputy knows about Belle River. I am sure that he would recommend to the minister a visit of this kind. I think the minister would find that my association with him would not be altogether unpleasant in the circumstances.

I should like to show him some work of reconstruction of the dock at Belle River. I am grateful for the work which has been authorized and which is a continuation of the work that proceeded under the former government. However, I would suggest to the minister that Belle River, being perhaps the most important location or meeting place for all kinds of watercraft, should receive special consideration. It is the most natural harbour of its kind in the rural sections of the county. In the summer thousands of summer craft of all kind ply back and forth on lake St.

Clair on which Belle River is situated. It seems to me that to improve the dock facilities there would have the effect of attracting increasing numbers of tourists and this would greatly assist the community of Belle River.

I am asking the minister to take a second look at the proposal which was made by the chamber of commerce and by other citizens in Belle River and which was strongly supported by me and I believe also, as a friend of the court, by the hon. member for Essex West. This was a proposition involving an expenditure of a large sum of money, admittedly but one which in time, I am sure, would have justified the expenditure.

When the minister is looking at this matter, I wish he would also give consideration to the desirability of building a post office at Belle River. I know that this is not the minister's entire responsibility. However, if he would discuss that matter with the Postmaster General I am sure that they would both agree, after getting their heads together. Perhaps if they would be good enough to call me in, I would be able to help and we might possibly find ways and means of building a post office in that thriving community.

When the minister is doing that, I hope also he will look at the proposal I made for the building of a post office in Sandwich East. That township of Sandwich East is one of the townships in Essex county in which the increase of population has been very great in the last few years. I think that community also deserves a post office.

I should be very grateful to the minister if he would look into these matters and I say this sincerely. I do not expect him to give an immediate reply. One could not expect him to have all of these matters ready at hand, although it may be that he anticipated that I might make a modest intervention today and that on that account he would be prepared to meet me headlong. If that was the case I should be very happy. I should be honoured to think that these various proposals which I put forward for my constituency loomed so large in his consideration.

I hope the minister will understand the spirit in which I have put forward these requests. I put them forward in the hope that they will receive his serious consideration. I would say to him that nothing would give me greater pleasure than to have him visit this area, knowing how much he likes good swimming water and how much he likes water in which he can operate a craft that he can handle. We do not have many canoes on lake St. Clair but we have other kinds of water craft. I should be happy to take him along the shores of lake St. Clair and to show him Belle River and other areas in my constituency that border on lake St. Clair. As a result of the convivial spirit which that kind of confrontation would bring, I am sure that the minister and I would understand one another better politically and better as men in public life. The consequence would be that he would not place any obstacle in the way of my realizing every one of these requests which I have put forward to him today and which I might on some other occasion again put forward. I hope the minister will give these matters his consideration. I am glad to see the minister smiling. I am sure that the waters now have been smoothed, that he bears no animosity towards me or towards the hon. member for Hull, that everything is serene, and that we can now proceed constructively with our work.

(Translation):

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), I am also, I hope and believe, a great friend of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker).

Even if I plead my case with some force, I will certainly lack the great eloquence of the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be appropriate now to call it six o'clock.

(Text):

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, when the house took recess at six o'clock, I recalled that it is always difficult for a member to rival the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) in eloquence, especially when no controversial point is at issue.

Mr. Chairman, at this stage of my remarks, I should like to take this opportunity to thank, through the minister, the officials of the Department of Public Works for the courtesy they have shown me in my work for the benefit of my fellow citizens of Brome-Missisquoi. I refer particularly to the officials of the Montreal district office. In so far as they are allowed to do so under the existing regulations, they have always looked favourably upon my requests. They have always received my representations with great courtesy; therefore, through the minister and on behalf of all my fellow citizens, I should like to thank them sincerely for their co-operation.

Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to see in the estimates an item for the construction of a retaining wall along the Yamaska river, in Farnham. On behalf of the people of that community as well as on my own behalf, I wish to take this opportunity to thank the minister. I am sure the construction of that retaining wall on the Yamaska will soon be undertaken.

(Text):

I was very interested to hear the minister explain to the committee how tenders are awarded and how bids are received. I think everyone in this committee and the country in general will realize that a most wise and scrupulous procedure continues to be followed in this regard. I would only say this—that when it is at all feasible and in accord with sound economics and the regulations of the department, local work should be given to local people. I have said this both inside and outside the house and I am not shy about doing so.

On some occasions, and particularly with regard to larger contracts costing over $15,000 it is only sound economics, I know, to proceed as the minister has stated, but I repeat that whenever it is in accord with sound economics and within the regulations, the importance of giving local work to local people should be stressed. I think this is a good principle to follow in general and it certainly creates good public relations for the department. In the estimates this year, as was the case in past years, there is again an item of $100,000 for improvements to the warehouse facilities in relation to the customs house and warehouse at the border point at Phillipsburg in my constituency in Quebec. I know many complications have arisen and I am not blaming anybody here at all. Successive provincial governments have had difficulty in determining where the highway should go through that border point. Then, again, it is a large border point involving problems concerning citizenship, immigration, customs and so on. But as I notice this item has occurred in the estimates once again this year I hope all possible action is taken to get this work under way as soon as possible.

In closing I should like to refer to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I may say briefly in passing that I do not think anything could be much more important in this nation today, certainly in a domestic and economic sense, than house building. I feel the benefits of home ownership are such that we cannot stress them too greatly. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that a man who owns his own home or has a prospect of owning it takes a greater interest in the affairs of his own community. I think it has always been a principle of the government and of the party which I support that home ownership and the rights of property are matters to which very serious attention must be paid.

In the past, for various reasons, it has been difficult to attract housing money into rural areas. I am not blaming anybody for this, but the facts are there. I should like to congratulate the minister and his department for the initiative they have shown up to now, initiative which will make it easier for people living in rural areas to obtain housing money. I know the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has only a limited number of personnel. However, I should like to thank the minister and his department for initiating a series of visits from the Sherbrooke office to my own particular area at Cowansville. I mention Cowansville because it is centrally located in my constituency.

Up to now it has been very difficult for the citizens, of Brome-Missisquoi, no matter what their walk of life, to have housing loans processed and to obtain information. Because of the initiative of the minister and his department we have had officials from the Sherbrooke office visting Cowansville and interviewing the people of my constituency on an experimental basis. While this is in the experimental stage, I am convinced that it will work because there is need in my constituency for this type of approach, and I certainly hope in the future that these visits will be put on a permanent basis.

I feel that in many rural areas the need for increased housing is evident, and that once visits such as I have referred to are put on a permanent basis applications and information will be forthcoming.

(Translation):

That is why I wish to take this opportunity to thank the minister and his officials for their initiative.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, in summing up, I support the principle of local work for local people. I hope that the project in relation to the customs building at Phillipsburg will be speeded up. Again I urge that in the future more Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation assistance be provided in the rural areas in general and, I hope, in my area in particular.

I should like again to say that the party I support and the government in authority today realize the importance of home ownership and the importance of home building to the economy of our country.

An hon. Member: Give the kid a hand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I intervene in this debate on the estimates of the Department of Public Works at this time to discuss a matter of particular importance to a certain group of people and, I am sure, to the department, as well as to myself.

I have reference to an item in the estimates in relation to the harbours and rivers engineering services. Normally I should wait to discuss this matter until we were considering that item but because of the sittings of the committee, on railways, air lines and other agencies owned and operated by the government, of which I am a member, I feel that this is the only time at which I can discuss this matter.

The minister over a period of months, and I believe longer, has received representations from the Cornwall industrial development commission for the establishment of wharfing facilities at Cornwall.

I have indicated during the discussion on previous occasions of the estimates of the minister that the committee and the department might well have given consideration to a suggestion which had been made earlier by myself for the establishment of an economic survey to deal with the effect of the St. Lawrence seaway upon the area which it traverses. While that recommendation was approved unanimously by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, no action was taken in respect to it.

There was a recommendation approved not long ago by the same committee, also unanimously, to increase the directors of the Canadian National Railways from seven to 12. Although there was very little discussion of that matter it was approved immediately. However, my suggestion fell by the wayside.

The Department of Public Works did set up a committee to consider, in conjunction I understand with the Department of Transport, the advisability of the establishment of port facilities along the front of the seaway extending from Dorion on the east as far as Oshawa, I believe.

When the minister replies to these suggestions he might give us a detailed report in respect to what has happened to the recommendations of this committee, in addition to what is being done at Cornwall, of course. There the department has decided to build a wharf. There is in the estimates the sum of $300,000 for that purpose.

The construction of that wharf was recommended in a brief presented to the Department of Public Works by the industrial commission for the city of Cornwall to illustrate the immediate need for a wharf and deep sea water facilities in that area. That was also recommended by the Cornwall industrial development corporation.

At this stage I should like to pause for a moment and place on the record a statement contained in a speech I made on September 11, 1956 on the occasion of the ceremony of laying the cornerstone of the headquarters building at Cornwall. That paragraph reads as follows:

> What I have said of Canada applies in a proportionate degree to Cornwall. Its growth in the last quarter of a century has been remarkable. Today it is the fastest growing community in eastern Ontario, it is an important industrial centre—it could become a port bustling with activity. There was a time when the wharf at the foot of Pitt street was the busiest place in town. At the turn of the century, following the construction of the 14 foot canal through this area, Cornwall thrived from water transportation. With the coming of the railways and the construction of modern highways, competition from these forms of transportation was faster and more efficient and water transportation in this area became a poor third. But here is an opportunity and a great one to regain our long lost prestige on the water. We are bringing deep sea navigation right up to your door. There is a natural harbour from St. Lawrence park to Gray's creek. Get the business, get the industries and soon a port will flourish and thrive on your waterfront. Here you will have to rely upon your own initiative. The government cannot be expected to build navigation facilities which will attract industry and at the same time develop a port on your waterfront. Here is an opportunity to exercise the drive and energy I referred to earlier.
> The government and the seaway authority have confidence in the future of Cornwall. Not only have they made sure that deep water navigation will be available to you but they have selected this city as the headquarters of the seaway authority. When the seaway is completed, its operations will be directed from here and for that purpose we have erected on this site a modern and efficient building.

Even before that the Canadian National Railways had conducted a survey of the proposed deep waterway project and its effect upon the community of Cornwall. This survey was prepared by the development branch of the department of research and development of the Canadian National Railways in September, 1953, and among the many recommendations it made, the following recommendation appeared:

> 2. That the zoning authorities for greater Cornwall be advised to protect for industrial use, by restrictive zoning, an area of about 1,000 acres beyond the growing housing development east of Courtaulds and lying between the present Canadian National Railways main line and the St. Lawrence river.

This area, which that branch of the Canadian National Railways recommended, is not far east of the area in which the Department of Public Works intends to build this wharf. My purpose in referring to this recommendation is that, acting upon it, the city council at that time expropriated, or took an option, on the property referred to by the Canadian National Railways, which is roughly speaking, a mile or more downstream from the present wharf which is being built by the department. At this point the deep water facilities range anywhere from 23 feet to 42 feet in depth. Therefore, there was not any doubt that deep-sea vessels could come into that area.

I raise this point not because I have any complaints to make about the site chosen by the Department of Public Works. On the contrary, I think the question is one for the local authorities, the city and those who are concerned, to determine. If at a later date the city fathers saw fit to believe that the recommendations made by the Canadian National Railways were not applicable in 1960 or 1961, I certainly have no fault to find. I think the decision of the industrial development corporation in selecting that area, having regard to the circumstances and the time at which it was done, is perhaps superior today to the recommendation made by the Canadian National Railways. I say that because the industrial development corporation purchased a number of mills. It purchased the Canada mill and the Dundas mill for industrial development purposes, and then they got the idea of developing the wharf, which to my mind is an excellent one, and they should be commended for it. The industrial development corporation deserves a great deal of commendation for the interest it is taking in the development of industry in that vicinity.

My particular purpose in rising is that it has been repeated in the house and elsewhere that if there has been a decline in business activity in the community of Cornwall it is due to the St. Lawrence seaway. No statement could be further from the truth. The statement is inaccurate. It is one which should be challenged in the light of the development that is being carried on by the Department of Public Works in the eastern part of the city of Cornwall.

It has been stated also that the economy of Cornwall declined because the St. Lawrence seaway canals were put on the United States side of the line. This statement is also inaccurate. If I go back to history I can show that the statement is inaccurate. The 1932 United States-Canada agreement provided for a two-stage development of power and navigation in that area. It provided for one canal on the United States side at Barnhart island and the other canal on the Canadian side at Chrysler island upstream from Cornwall. The 1941 agreement provided for both canals on the United States side. The 1954 proposal to the international joint commission provided for an undertaking by Canada that it would build all the facilities on the Canadian side of the line, but as the committee knows, following the meetings that took place between the United States representatives and the Canadian representatives, it was decided to build one canal and two locks opposite Barnhart island on the United States side and one canal and one lock at Iroquois on the Canadian side. And Canada undertook to continue 14 foot navigation on the Canadian side at Cornwall. Therefore, there is now not only a deep channel of 27 feet not very far from the wharf which the department is building but also a canal 14 feet in depth upstream from that area.

It has been said that little or no traffic goes through that canal now. I mention this because it has a great deal to do with the wharf which the department is building. Fortunately, because of the 27 foot facilities which are practically opposite the wharf which is being built, there will have to be little or no dredging. In fact, the wharf comes practically to the end of the 27 foot facilities. This will enable deep-sea ships to go right to the wharf when the department is building.

Since it has been stated in the house and outside that because of the seaway the traffic has diminished tremendously I should like to put on Hansard figures indicating the amount of local traffic that went through the Cornwall canal from 1947 to 1959. These figures have been obtained from the St. Lawrence seaway authority, statistics section. They are dated August 18, 1960. I should like the permission of the committee to place these figures on Hansard.

The Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member wishes to have these figures included in Hansard I shall have to ask for the permission of the committee. Is it agreed that the hon. member may place this table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: I should say that, roughly speaking, over the 12 years I have mentioned the unloaded traffic averaged about 300,000 tons a year. Since the seaway has been in operation the St. Lawrence seaway authority, in their present traffic report, namely that for 1960, have produced the figures of the cargo tons going through the Cornwall canal for the year 1960. I should now like to compare the first figures with those for the year 1960 which are also taken from the traffic report of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, 1960. I would ask permission of the committee to have these figures put on Hansard as well.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the hon. member read them?

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member indicate just how substantial the table is?

Mr. Chevrier: It is just one page.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member permission to put the table on Hansard?

Mr. Brunsden: I suggest the hon. member read the figures.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Traffic report of the St. Lawrence seaway, 1960.

prepared by
St. Lawrence seaway authority and
St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corp.

Mr. Chevrier: My purpose in putting these figures on the record is to indicate that in the old days the traffic on the St. Lawrence canal at Cornwall was tremendous and, in fact, was responsible in large part for the progress and development of that community, but as the railways came into being and as trucks and all the other methods of transportation advanced traffic gradually declined. From a peak of about 300,000 tons of traffic annually, reached after 1947, it went to 183,000 tons in 1960. So there is not a great deal of difference so far as that is concerned.

It was also stated that because of the facilities that were provided on the United States side of the line tremendous growth took place at Massena, N.Y. That statement is also inaccurate. There is no port at Massena but there are two industries at a place called Rooseveltown, New York, to the south almost diagonally opposite the wharf which is being built by the Department of Public Works. Reynolds Aluminum has established an industry there and General Motors have established a Chevrolet plant also. These developments have not taken place on account of port facilities because there are none there. They are due to railway and highway facilities and particularly due to the fact that the New York state power authority saw fit to allocate to the northern New York area, particularly Rooseveltown, a large block of power. That was unlike what was done by the Ontario hydro commission which decided to allocate no power to the immediate vicinity in the international section at Cornwall but rather decided to feed it all into the grid and thus transport it for the development of industry in southern and southwestern Ontario.

As the committee knows, what has been the difficulty in the community, which is being remedied by this and other actions to which I will refer in a moment, what was responsible for the boom was the fact that during the construction of the seaway no less than $800 million was spent within an area of five or ten miles of the city of Cornwall. When the construction work ceased there was of course a great letdown so far as public expenditure was concerned and business declined. However, if there has been a decline in the economy it has been due mostly to the closing of the three cotton industries to which I referred on another occasion although I will not go into that matter at this time.

I want to come back now to the wharf being built by the department. As the minister knows, this project was announced last year. I believe that in December of last year the mayor of the city of Cornwall announced that this would be done and from that time on all sorts of hopeful statements have appeared in the local press under headings such as "Seaway City Name a Reality at Last", "Perhaps City's Seaway Dream Wrapped in the Harbour", "Seaway About to Enter Period of Adjustment", "Seaway Wharf May Mark Turning of the Tide". Editorials under headings of this type appeared in the Cornwall Standard-Freeholder over a period from December last year even up to May of this year.

In one editorial at least some surprise is expressed at the fact that these facilities will not be started until August of this year. When the minister replies, I should like him to give some indication of why there should be such a delay. The announcement was made by the mayor in December of last year. It was confirmed by the present mayor at a later date. I believe the minister himself made an announcement. There has been an item in the estimates on one occasion and I may be mistaken but I believe there was also an item in a supplementary estimate.

As set forth in an editorial in a recent issue of the Standard-Freeholder, the question which arises is why the work is not to begin until the month of August. I think it is well to bring to the attention of the minister and the department matters which I am sure have been brought to their attention already. I bring them to the minister's attention again because I have been requested to do so. I bring them to his attention particularly because of the work that is being done by the industrial development corporation. Without any hope of remuneration, they have purchased the facilities belonging to the Canada and the Dundas cotton mills as I have said, and they are actively soliciting industries. They have already succeeded in bringing to the area two industries and they hope to be able to have another one in the near future. They are convinced that this facility being established by the department will enhance tremendously the value of the premises which they have purchased.

I need hardly tell the minister that in order to encourage industry there should not only be rail and highway facilities but there must of necessity also be cheap water transportation facilities. Those who have been critical of the former administration should be reminded that a channel 27 feet in depth was built alongside the wharf and leading up to a structure in the dike of the power dam in order to provide for a deep-water canal on the Canadian side should the volume of traffic on the seaway warrant it at a later date. These people should be reminded that here is a channel that has permitted the Department of Public Works to build a wharf and I hope a shed also in due course.

I believe the department would not have thought for one moment of constructing these facilities had there not been a 27-foot depth of water in the immediate area. The fact that there is in Cornwall the headquarters building of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, which houses some 150 people, and the fact that the former administration took the decision to build two international bridges there, one to connect the United States shore with the Canadian shore over the south channel and another to connect Cornwall island and the city of Cornwall over the north channel, should be encouraging factors and should confirm the department in the view that the money to be spent here is money that will be well spent.

There is a great deal more that I think the department can do, and I hope the minister and his officials will continue to give consideration to further facilities as time goes on. However, there is one thing particularly which I have been requested to bring to the attention of the committee, the fact that construction under this program announced many months ago has not yet started. If the Department of Public Works will give this development the same attention and care that it gives to many of its other public projects, I am sure the city of Cornwall will thrive and benefit from this expenditure.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I find in the book of estimates an item which reads as follows: "St. Hilaire retaining wall, $100,000". First, I wish to thank the minister and the Department of Public Works for their kind attention in solving this problem at St. Hilaire. I should like to remind the minister that sometimes after there has been publication in the newspapers of the fact that certain works are to be performed by his department, the work is not actually performed before the fiscal year is ended. This happened once in respect of St. Hilaire, and I hope that the minister will inform the appropriate officials—perhaps if the former member for Stormont would discuss his problems outside the chamber, I could continue my speech.

I was saying that two years ago there was supposed to be a retaining wall built in the vicinity of St. Hilaire at a cost of $75,000. Something happened and the work was not actually performed by the department before the end of the fiscal year. I understand that the amount has now been increased by $25,000, bringing it up to $100,000. I am going to take advantage of this opportunity, therefore, to thank the minister for increasing the amount. However, I should like to make sure that his officials, either in Montreal or in Ottawa, see to it that construction of this retaining wall is undertaken not later than July 15. I hope that I shall soon read in the newspapers that tenders have been called by the Department of Public Works for the construction of this protecting wall.

I do not want to ask for too much for my own constituency. However, I have a few remarks to make in connection with the needs of some of the municipalities in my constituency which can be met by the Department of Public Works.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I understand that in St. Hilaire the municipal council was planning to build a main sewer of some importance. This main sewer could be installed on the shores of the Richelieu river so that the pipes could lead to a sewage disposal plant. It might be advisable to build the retaining wall needed in the village of St. Hilaire at the same time as the main sewer the municipality proposes to install jointly with the municipality of Otterburn Park.

This retaining wall could be built by the federal government while the main sewer would be installed by the municipality, possibly as a joint operation. Of course, many details remain to be discussed. However, I ask the minister to intervene so that his departmental officials in Montreal meet with the St. Hilaire municipal authorities to discuss this project as soon as possible.

The above-mentioned retaining wall which is planned for this year extends over a section outside the village. That is justifiable because there are houses on this section of land that are inhabited all year round by country people around St. Hilaire.

It is extremely important that those properties be protected before those in the village, because the houses there are not near the river but some distance away from it. In fact, the provincial highway which is also the main street of St. Hilaire, runs between the shore and the houses; but nevertheless, the highway may possibly cave in. It is essential that the Department of Public Works take action without delay.

The federal government should avail itself of this opportunity to open negotiations with the municipality of St. Hilaire and undertake both projects simultaneously so as to avoid duplication and enable the municipality of St. Hilaire to build its main sewer as cheaply as possible.

It has been pointed out to me that in Otterburn Park a wharf owned by the federal government is in need of repairs. I call the minister's attention to this matter and I ask that an investigation be made as soon as possible.

Since we are speaking of wharves, it might be advisable to repair the Chambly canal and its wharf pending the implementation of the Richelieu waterway project.

I should like now to refer to the Marieville post office. On page 461 of the main estimates, I note that an amount of $30,000 is provided to repair and extend the Marieville post office. Up to now, discussions have taken place between representatives of the federal Department of Public Works and those of the previous municipal council. Since then, there were both provincial and municipal elections. The municipal council has been substantially altered and I think negotiations would have to start from scratch to bring the new members up to date.

Following the provincial election, changes were made within the department of Public Works in Quebec City. Employees of the department were transferred from Montreal, amongst others Mr. Martineau, architect, who was responsible for the plans for an addition and repairs to the post office of Marieville. Someone from the department's Montreal office should get in touch with the new municipal council of Marieville so that an agreement could be reached. There is a problem, however; the property next to the post office belongs to the municipality.

The municipality is asking a prohibitive price for that property. A meeting should therefore be arranged between the representatives of the Department of Public Works and those of the municipality to convince the latter that the property which is needed for the construction of the addition should be sold to the federal government for a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to call the minister's attention to the fact that a pile of Fryer dam on Fryer island, between Richelieu and Chambly on the Richelieu, has been in need of repair for the past two years.

If I remember well, I was told by the Department of Public Works, two years ago, that those repairs were urgent. The people of that area are still waiting for news about that famous pile which, according to officials of the Department of Public Works, is in urgent need of repairs. That was two years ago; I wonder what certain officials of the department mean by urgent repairs.

Mr. Chairman, about two or three years ago, a retaining wall was built in Beloeil in accordance with a promise made by the former Liberal government. I honestly felt at that time that that project was less urgent than the one in McMasterville. However, so as not to deprive the municipality of Beloeil of that retaining wall and the people of that community of the work they were going to have by the implementation of that project, I willingly agreed, without too much discussion, to let the officials of the department, whether they be from Montreal or Ottawa, make the mistake of thinking that the construction of a retaining wall was more urgent in Beloeil than in McMasterville.

Subsequent events proved that I was right. In fact, the following spring, McMasterville was the scene of a serious flood. The provincial highway which is also the main street in McMasterville was under more water than it had been for a long time. Fortunately, last year and this year, McMasterville was spared that calamity, but the danger is none the less there and, each spring, floods may occur.

In 1959—I have not time to read the letter from the deputy minister to that effect—departmental officials were suggesting that a retaining wall was less urgently needed at McMasterville than at Beloeil, even though the Richelieu channel used by the ships is nearer the shore at McMasterville than at Beloeil. Such an attitude was beyond my understanding and I never could figure out how an intelligent man could write such a letter, but it is actually on file and the decision left me no choice.

However the fact remains that such a retaining wall is most important for McMasterville. Let no one suggest, like the officials of the department did after the unfortunate decision taken by the St. Laurent government, that a retaining wall should be built only where damages have been done by navigation or by erosion resulting from navigation.

The Richelieu channel is located a few feet from the highway and surely the damages are due, if not entirely at least partly, to erosion, caused by navigation.

However the matter also concerns the provincial government. As I have said already, the provincial highway is at the same time the main street in McMasterville and it runs along the river. This highway will surely have to be widened.

This question of widening the highway was raised before last summer and then was the time for the provincial and federal governments to show co-operation in order that once the widening of the highway was completed the federal government might build an adequate retaining wall.

I met with the members of the municipal council of McMasterville and the provincial member to discuss this matter. And although the provincial member was a political friend, I put it quite plainly to the municipal authorities that the provincial government must first widen the highway before the federal government could build a retaining wall.

This view was approved by the provincial member and he was to submit the matter to the provincial minister of highways. I was given the indication at the time that things would be settled in such a way that this highway would be widened and the only thing left to do would be the building of the retaining wall.

Since the change of government in Quebec, I have been without news from him. I know that the provincial member is a man of goodwill. He once told me publicly before several witnesses that he was ready to use in our favour whatever influence he had with the provincial government or the minister of highways. I do not know whether he made any representations, but I hope that he is better at keeping his word than his leader and that we may witness an extremely warm co-operation between the provincial highway department authorities and the representatives of public works.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of Public Works to take this into consideration so that the federal government will at least take the initiative of discussing this problem with the representatives of the Quebec highway department.

I have said it in McMasterville, I told the municipal authorities and I repeat it here—the provincial government must first decide to widen that road. But, the federal government and the Department of Public Works more particularly must do their share and indicate that they are ready to build the retaining wall as soon as the highway has been widened. I hope there will be closer co-operation between the two governments so that the citizens of McMasterville will at last be treated with justice.

They have been kept waiting for several years. In fact, when I was elected as representative of Chambly-Rouville which includes McMasterville, I was told that the Liberal party had taken advantage of three or four election campaigns to promise a retaining wall.

I was in for collecting the hats as they say in French, to fulfil the promises made by my predecessors, but I am not going to back out. I hope I will be able to count not only on the co-operation of the minister, but also of his officials, low and high.

Mr. Chairman, I have another request to make concerning a retaining wall. I am referring to the famous retaining wall in Chambly, that is around the basin.

There is a magnificent basin in Chambly, but navigation is doing such considerable damage to the bank that if it should continue part of Main street and Church street will collapse, and the rectory and the church with it.

It would be interesting if the public works officials were to revise their judgment. I was told two or three years ago that erosion at that spot was not caused by navigation only but was also due to natural causes. If that is the case, it should be said clearly. The provincial government should be advised to assume its responsibilities. We should urge the minister of natural resources, the former minister of hydraulic resources, to take his responsibilities and to repair the damage caused by erosion.

I still think something might be done, pending a decision by the provincial government. The federal government might perhaps decide. Since damages are largely caused by navigation on Chambly canal, which flows into Chambly basin, about 100 feet from the shore, the federal government might consider the erosion there as its responsibility and build a retaining wall.

Let no one object that the federal government has no jurisdiction. Under section 91 of the constitution, the federal government has jurisdiction on navigation and must necessarily be held responsible for damages caused by navigation. But, even when erosion is not entirely due to navigation, it remains that subparagraph (c), paragraph 10 of section 92 is specific on that point and it empowers the federal government to undertake the construction of such retaining walls.

I should like to quote subparagraph (c), paragraph 10 of section 92 of the B.N.A. Act. Paragraph 10 provides that:

> local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes.

are considered to be of a provincial nature, lying within provincial jurisdiction, and one of those categories is category (c) which reads as follows:

> (c) Such works as, although wholly situated within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

I think that section may receive a wide enough interpretation to include the construction of retaining walls. Of course, if that section were to conflict with another power of the provincial government, we could not discuss the matter, because the provincial power has priority.

But there does not seem to be any objection, in the sphere of provincial jurisdiction, to the federal government undertaking such works. If the provincial government did object to the federal government undertaking such works, Mr. Chairman, we would have nothing more to say. However, I submit that the provincial government should shoulder its responsibilities and build itself that sustaining wall, which has become absolutely necessary.

Finally, so long as the provincial government will not undertake the construction of that retaining wall, and so long as the damages are caused substantially by navigation, a field coming under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and so long as the provincial government holds on to its attitude, the federal government may assume that responsibility and build retaining walls.

If I may, I would even make another suggestion. If there is fear of taking such a decision, if even hypothetical consequences are feared, it might be possible for the Department of Public Works to arrange with the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that the latter build that retaining wall around Chambly basin in order to beautify the approaches to Chambly fort, which is located at the other extreme of that basin. We could then have at that place a well-built and well cared for fort, with a retaining wall around the basin limiting a park, a development which would be extremely attractive and interesting for tourists.

Since I have a few minutes left, Mr. Chairman, I should like to come back to another question dear to my heart. During the discussion on the post office estimates, I talked about the possibility for the government to make rooms available to members in public buildings. I think I can resume that point on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Public Works, since those buildings seem to belong to that department.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) cleverly dodged that issue in the house. Therefore, I should like to know whether the Minister of Public Works will commit himself and mention that problem.

That is a worth-while suggestion particularly when one considers that voters very often have to see their member, even though it is only to ask for information, because, after all, instead of preaching against patronage, when we could do some, we are satisfied with not doing any, while another government, another party which—

Mr. Deschatelets: You have no right to say that.

Mr. Johnson: Here in Ottawa, I think the situation is clear, there is no question of patronage, but, of course, the voters like to see their members even though it is only to voice complaints about some civil servants, and this is their natural right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnson: I see that some members are giving me their approval, and if my hon. friends opposite would imitate them, everything would work more smoothly.

Voters are right when they go to see their member. They have a right to ask him for information, to ask for an appointment, even to criticize him and rake him over the coals. Therefore, it would be most important that the member have at his disposal, in a central part of his riding, an office comprised of one or two rooms, just a waiting room and an office, to receive his supporters, while a civil servant could be affected to the reception of communications from voters who would like to obtain appointments with their member of parliament.

Mr. Chairman, these requests are important, because the session keeps us here at least five and even six days a week over a six to eight month period.

It is of the utmost importance to have in the constituency a place where the electors can go when they wish to meet their representative and there should be someone, a civil servant, for instance during office hours, not necessarily at night, who would take their messages and deliver them to their member of parliament during the week end. Part of those public buildings could be used for that purpose.

Let us take, for instance, the case of Marieville. It would be possible to reserve one or two rooms in the post office for that purpose. The post office officials could take the messages of the electors who want to communicate with their representative.

I know that is less urgent in my own constituency since my electors can easily reach me over the week end. But since we are in the house during the week, we need someone to take any messages.

As long as the members' indemnity is not increased, they will not be able to afford a full-time secretary.

Perhaps the Minister of Public Works could refer this question to the cabinet. If he would kindly and patiently read over the remarks I have made—perhaps a little vague but useful—I believe—I would be grateful to him.

I want to thank him in advance for his kind attention, and I hope departmental officials will never again pull the trick they once pulled on the people of St. Hilaire by dropping a vote for the construction of a retaining wall which was never built.

(Text):

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I do not this evening intend to complain about any municipal government or about either the Liberals or the Conservatives. I mean to recall to the minister's mind some rather disastrous floods that occurred in the city and in the district of Coquitlam over each of a long number of years, and I would like to especially recall to his mind the disastrous flood that occurred in the whole of the lower mainland of British Columbia back in 1948. This incidentally, was a flood that cost all levels of government many, many millions of dollars. As a result especially of this disastrous flood of 1948 there was established what was then known as the Fraser river basin board, now known as the Fraser river board. The responsibilities of the board have been to make an intensive survey of all phases of the river including even such matters as upstream power dams, and so on, as well as flood control.

As I understand it, as a result of a letter written by the diking commissioner at New Westminster, British Columbia, this Fraser river board presents its report to both the provincial and federal governments. I should like to read from its interim report labelled "Investigations into Measures for Flood Control in the Fraser river Basin" the following pertinent portions:

The fourth alignment for a diversion is from the Pitt river near DeBoville slough—

I might say before continuing that there were investigations carried out in respect of many possible diversions for this river into the sea in order to prevent a repetition of the disaster of the 1948 flood. The report continues as follows:

—parallel to the main road, and along the hill foot to Port Moody. See route 4, plate 5.5.1-4. The length of this channel would be 29,800 feet with probably another 4,000 feet of channel to be dredged into deep water at Port Moody.

The area is not particularly useful as agricultural land. One main feeder road and two minor roads are crossed. This route also intersects the Coquitlam river.

A concrete lined rectangular channel, 200 feet wide with bed slope .0003, and bed level at Pitt river—16.0 geodetic was assumed for the study. The only control necessary would be at Port Moody to prevent the flow from Burrard inlet to Pitt river when the tide is high and the Fraser river is at a low stage.

Calculations of the daily discharge of this channel for the 31-day period, June 12 to July 12, 1950, were made. The total discharge of the channel for this period was compared to the runoff of the Fraser river at Hope for the same period. The comparison showed that the diversion channel could discharge 18.8 per cent of the Hope flow.

The lowering of water levels on the Fraser river, through the diversion of water from Pitt river to Burrard inlet, cannot be determined from the data presently available. To obtain the necessary data would require a long and extensive survey. The answer to the determination of the extent of stage reduction seems to lie in a model study.

I have been asked by a large number of organizations and individuals to appeal to the government to undertake this kind of a survey. I am not in a position to advocate the digging of a canal to connect the Pitt river to Burrard inlet. However, I do know that this is an ancient river bed of the Fraser, and it would appear only logical that, if this canal were dug, it would very easily alleviate the possibility of floods in the lower mainland, and especially in the district and city of Port Coquitlam.

Ever since a little publicity was given to this proposal, I have received a large number of letters which have indicated that this is not a new proposal, but that it was initially raised in the year 1910, and as late, as I have already indicated, as 1955. At that time an official board of this government recommended, or at least expressed its opinion, that there should be a long and extensive survey made.

All I intend to do this evening is to appeal to the government to express its willingness to vote a limited number of dollars, perhaps in the tens of thousands, which this long and extensive survey might require, because we cannot easily forget what the flood of 1948 cost—it was in the neighbourhood of $15 million. Nor can we forget the almost annual floods which we have had in the areas of the Coquitlam river, which have run into tens of thousands of dollars each and every time they occurred. I have received a letter from a Mr. Cannell in which he endorses the idea of such an extensive survey. I have also received a letter from a clergyman, Reverend A. J. Griffin, of Trinity United Church, Port Coquitlam, which reads as follows:

Your enclosed letter was most interesting. All points to an exciting possibility.

A long range flood control plan is most urgent in our area.

Put me down in favour of this "canal" idea—I realize a lot of investigation has yet to be done, but as you say, the potential is fabulous.

I have also received a letter from a Mr. Gibson which refers in detail to this situation. The letter reads as follows:

I am quite interested in the proposal to dig a canal from the Pitt river to Burrard inlet. This canal if dug sure would be advantageous for the control of flood. I do not think it will be long before there will be floods in the valley, from what I saw during the last winter, if not corrected one way or the other. There seems to be quite a bit of dispute throughout the lower mainland as to who is responsible for flood control. If a canal were dug this would eliminate this uncertainty, would it not? The dikes are deteriorating and should have more maintenance than is being done at present.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would allow me to interrupt to ask a question. Is the canal which he is suggesting in aid of navigation or is it in connection with flood control?

Mr. Regier: I should like to answer the minister in this way. I am not advocating that this canal be dug but am pleading guilty to a lack of adequate information. However, I am asking that an adequate survey be made as to the feasibility of such a canal. I suggest if the canal were dug it could easily be a measure for flood control as well as an aid to navigation. The minister's department is very definitely involved because that department is the only department which would do the work if it were deemed advisable. I should like to be modest in this respect and say that I am not advocating this proposal but am pleading, with some knowledge of the important matters involved, that the government expend the money necessary to undertake such a survey.

The letter from Mr. Gibson continues as follows:

No one seems to want the responsibility of dike maintenance in normal times but, after flooding, when it is too late, someone decides something should be done.

In my experience the municipal government has always maintained that this was the responsibility of the federal government, while the federal government has always maintained it was the responsibility of the provincial government. The provincial government maintains, of course, that this is the responsibility of either the municipal or federal government. I have been interested in this now for many long years. When the present Secretary of State for External Affairs was the minister of this department we had almost arrived at the conclusion at least to make an attempt to resolve this unending problem. This has been a problem to those people ever since 1910, when the late Mr. Kilmer, an eminent engineer, advocated that a canal be built.

Mr. Gibson goes on to say:

> I understand that the pumping system should be modernized soon. This may cause considerable expense. Would this canal be a boon to logging operations on a sustained yield basis for a big part of Garibaldi park and open up the tourist and Vancouver holiday trade? There is no doubt about the commercial possibilities. This would be a help, too, in relieving the unemployment situation throughout the lower mainland.
> I think this proposed canal would be a good election subject for the C.C.F. party—

I would recommend to the minister that if he adopted the proposal it might be a good election subject for his own supporter in my riding, and if he were willing to dig the canal I would be willing to give him full marks. I would not even ask him to invite me to the official opening of the proposed canal, I would be so happy at the project being completed.

I also have a letter from a leading Liberal of the city of Port Coquitlam, a Mr. Harry Purdy. This is a non-political letter. He wholly endorses the idea of the government investigating the possibilities, and being prepared to spend the limited amount of money necessary to make an adequate survey. He pays his compliments to a former Conservative opponent of mine, the highly respected alderman Jane Kilmer. It was her father who first proposed away back in 1910 that this canal be dug. I have a letter from a captain of a tow boat in the waters concerned; he is a grandson of this Mr. Kilmer of whom I am speaking.

I am not going to ask the government to dig the canal this year, nor next year. However, we do have an urgent problem of annual flooding, and for the life of us, all of us, regardless of whether we are Liberals, Conservatives, Social Crediters, members of the New party or of the C.C.F. party, we cannot, and have not been able to bind any level of government down to assuming responsibility. At the mouth of the Coquitlam river on the one side there is an Indian reserve which is under the jurisdiction of the federal government. On the other side there is Colony farm which is owned by the government of British Columbia and yet the river runs through the district of Coquitlam and the city of Coquitlam. No one wants to assume any responsibility. The river was last cleaned out in 1919. It has not been used since that time for major transportation, and therefore the federal government says that since 1919 it has not been a navigable river and its responsibility has ended.

One of the letters I received reprimanded me a bit. The writer, a Mr. Cockerill by name, complained and suggested that I am overly ambitious, that I could not expect the federal government to dig the canal from the Pitt river to the head of Burrard inlet. He asked why I did not in the first instance plead with the federal government to divert the Coquitlam river into Burrard inlet and then a few years later I could ask them to complete the other mile and a half of the canal in order to connect the Pitt river and the Burrard inlet. I believe that proposal has much merit. At this time I am asking the minister in all earnestness not to be political and not to be hasty but to discuss this honestly with his engineers. I know there may be engineering interests, not in his department, and other interests that may be very much in opposition to this idea. However, I ask him to institute a survey, to spend the $30,000, $40,000 or even $100,000 necessary, because it may save the taxpayers of Canada many tens of millions of dollars in the years to come and also save the annual ridiculous cost of maintaining dikes that all of us know are inadequate, if ever exceptionally high waters recur.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak for a few minutes on the minister's estimates on a subject which I raised last year, namely the importance of the harbours and rivers division in his department to my province, with particular regard to the construction of breakwaters.

During the discussion of the minister's estimates last year I brought to his attention the necessity for the construction of a breakwater at Bell Island. As I pointed out to the minister, that part of my constituency has a very large and very important mining community with a population of approximately 14,000 and it is without harbour facilities.

When one considers the nature of transportation and its importance to this island community it is all the more important that we stop to think of the fact that this community is without adequate harbour facilities.

A few years ago a substantial public wharf and shed were constructed on Bell Island. The minister will recall that at that time he came to Newfoundland to officially open the structure. I was given to understand that this particular public wharf was designed in such a way as to make itself eventually complementary to a breakwater and thereby provide artificial harbour facilities; in other words a small boat basin.

The economic situation on Bell Island has deteriorated somewhat in the last few years. There is a serious unemployment problem and there have been suggestions from time to time that perhaps some of the answers to the economic difficulties facing this part of my constituency, and this very important Dosco operation, may be some incentives to those people on the island to carry on a shore fishery. Of course, in order to do this it is essential that adequate harbour facilities be provided. If the minister's department is prepared to give consideration to the construction of a breakwater at this place it will first and foremost provide harbour facilities. Second, but also important in this respect, is that it will provide adequate mooring facilities and adequate shelter for the operation of the ferry service which runs between Bell Island and the local mainland with its terminal at Portugal Cove.

Within the last year the federal government has provided new automobile-passenger ferry for this important service. This ferry is now in operation. Again, it seems to me that we were given to understand from time to time that the decision to provide a breakwater at this place was contingent on the new ferry going into service, in other words, in order to determine properly the correct location of such a breakwater with a view to providing the maximum protection for the boat. The new ferry has been in operation now for the last ten months. Again, I am not expressing an opinion of the department but it is the opinion of the local people in the area who are familiar with the tides and the prevailing winds that the necessity of a breakwater at this place has been proven beyond any doubt in order to provide adequate shelter for the ferry which has to moor at Bell Island when it is not in service providing and maintaining adequate communication with the local mainland. When the minister replies I hope he will be able to throw some light on what the plans of the department are in this regard.

The second point I wish to raise concerns a very important aspect of public works, one of the major public works projects currently being undertaken in this country. I refer to the development of St. John's harbour. The vote for this year, which I think will just about conclude the final phase of the development, is just under $5 million. The contract for the north shore phase of this development was let some time last winter. I cannot recall the exact date, but it seems to me there has been considerable delay from the time the contract was let until the time work actually got under way. I understand that only now is construction beginning to start on this phase of the harbour development after a delay of three or four months.

I realize, of course, that part of the delay was caused by the quite extraordinary ice conditions that we experienced in that part of Canada this year. However, I feel that not all of the delay has been caused by ice conditions. I have not been successful in finding out from the contractor exactly when he does intend really to get under way with his portion of the development, and perhaps the minister may be able to give some indication when he replies.

I should also like to bring to the attention of the minister at this time my sense of disappointment at the fact that the vote for Newfoundland under construction of public buildings is substantially smaller compared with other provinces of similar size. It is substantially smaller than the vote for Nova Scotia and substantially smaller than the vote for the province of New Brunswick.

When one realizes that the department of Public Works, which is a very important department in Newfoundland, is housed in temporary wartime buildings, when one takes into account the fact that the operations of the Department of Fisheries in the province are also housed in temporary and inadequate facilities and that the operations of the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission are also carried on in temporary wartime buildings, it seems to me that the minister should be impressed with the importance of providing proper facilities in the province for the public service of Canada.

I do not think it is right and fitting that departments of the federal government should be forced to operate under most inadequate conditions. It has a demoralizing effect on the staffs of these departments. They are usually working in cramped quarters and I think it would pay off in the long run if proper accommodation were provided. I hope that some attention will be paid in the consideration of the minister's estimates for the next fiscal year to providing another public building in the city of St. John's to house these very important departments. The Sir Humphrey Gilbert building, which houses the other departments of government to which I have not referred, is filled to capacity at the present time. In order to provide proper facilities for the three remaining departments, which in my opinion are the most important departments to the province, I believe that consideration should certainly be given in the estimates for the next fiscal year to the inclusion of an item for another building in the city of St. John's to house these three departments.

There is one other matter to which I neglected to refer in my remarks with respect to Bell Island. This is an item that is not included in the estimates because it is something that arose subsequent to their preparation. I refer to the inclusion of a vote for the provision of adequate docking facilities at Bell Island and Portugal Cove to accommodate the new passenger-automobile ferry to which I have referred. I understand that plans are in the process of being prepared involving an approximate expenditure of $100,000. I was given to understand that the tender call would be ready several weeks ago. However, apparently the plans have not yet been completed.

We now find ourselves well on into the summer and the ferry John Guy, which is now operating on its summer schedule, is operating under a tremendous hazard by reason of having to use inadequate facilities which were prepared piecemeal for a much smaller type of vessel. With what is left of them now, which is not very much, I am afraid that unless something is done very soon we are going to have a tragedy on our hands because under extreme weather conditions the present ferry is going to find itself on the rocks. When the minister replies, I hope he will throw some light on this project with regard to what the delay is in getting it under way. I would hope that the tender call will be ready within a few days and that the minister will be able to tell us that this is so.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I want to make some brief remarks at this stage, and deal with a few cases of general interest, while reserving a few questions, which I shall ask the minister when we discuss individual items. This morning the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) who is the official critic of the opposition in respect of this department, gave us a very complete picture of expenses submitted to us for this year, and he mentioned some very important matters. He also threw some light upon the fact that the estimates which we are asked to vote this year, are $400,000 lower than last year.

Mr. Chairman, at a time when public works are so urgently needed, we are asked to vote amounts much smaller than those of last year. Here the minister gives us somewhat the measure of his contribution. We feel that his colleagues in the cabinet do not take him very seriously. This is most unfortunate for this department, which certainly today is not playing the prominent part it should, in respect of our national economy.

But, such decrease in estimates somehow confirms what we already know. The minister said before that public works were but a poor means of creating employment. The Toronto Daily Star of September 13, 1960, echoed the minister's own words:

(Text):

Public Works poor way to make jobs—Walker

(Translation):

Well, Mr. Chairman, this raises another interesting case. If it is true that the minister was sincere when he made his statement, why did he and his fellow members of the cabinet publicly preach in March 1958 that they were going to embark upon a public works scheme of several hundred million dollars?

Now, I would like the minister to explain this changed attitude in his remarks and to tell us today when and why he changed his mind, for it is obvious that he did change his mind.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out an issue which the papers have already taken up. And before dealing with this problem I shall read an item which was published in La Presse of May 23, 1961 under the following title:

One language only in the Montreal office of the federal Department of Public Works: English!

Venne, Bergeron, Maltais, Gadbois... All these people meet there and speak English. They receive letters written in English. They must answer in English. They write to each other in English—

Things have been this way of late in the Montreal office of the federal Department of Public Works, because of a man, who was recently promoted office head—

There are, in that office, in Delorimier street, 74 employees, among whom 70 French speaking Canadians. Not only is the use of English a must in that administration, but the employees have also to use it impeccably: One of them has had papers thrown at his head because he made a mistake in some English text.

That is the way things are going lately, that is, since the departure of the engineer Anatole Gagnon, who was recently promoted deputy minister.

(Text):

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Does the hon. gentleman appreciate the fact that this matter was raised by another hon. member in this house during the question period, and answered in full by me as reported at page 5576 of Hansard for May 30? At that time it was pointed out that 70 of the 74 members were French speaking, that the new chief himself was a very distinguished French Canadian gentleman, and as a matter of fact it now appears that the member who made this statement to the press was so ashamed of himself that he resigned from his position.

Mr. Deschatelets: If the minister wants to make a speech, he will have an opportunity to make it.

Mr. Walker: It is all in Hansard.

Mr. Deschatelets: This is not a point of order. I have the floor, and I am going to keep it.

When the minister says that this matter has been raised, he is right. It has been raised, but it has not been answered in full. I have here Hansard for May 30, 1961.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, on May 30, 1961, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Bourdages) put the following question:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Could the minister indicate to the house whether the English language is imposed as the official language of communication between employees of his department at the Delorimier street office in Montreal and whether instructions to that effect have been issued by the new head of that office, Mr. G. R. Aubut, as reported in a story published in La Presse on May 25?

Mr. Chairman, I shall not put on the record the long statement which the minister made at that time, but I shall give a brief summary of his answer.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I did read the article, and can say there is no foundation at all to the report that Mr. Aubut, a distinguished French Canadian—

And so forth. Now, when the minister says there is no foundation, I am going to ask him some questions. Has he made an investigation? By whom was this investigation made? Was there a written report? We would like to know the contents of this report. Those are my questions, and the minister will have an opportunity to answer them.

I am going a little further than this article because I am not finished with the matter yet, even if the minister does not like it.

Mr. Walker: I like it. I am just pointing out how foolish you are.

Mr. Habel: That is a very nice word for the minister to use.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, let me read further:

But this is not the end of buffoonery. And this time it is more serious. The contempt of the French character of the province of Quebec is something of an institution within the federal Department of Public Works. The following development bears the fact.

A course on fire prevention was given recently to employees in charge of maintainance and heating of the department's building in the province. This course given by an English-speaking official from Ottawa was attended by 125 people, among whom were 115 French Canadians.

As they came out of the lecture hall, some 75 French-speaking employees admitted that they had not understood a word of the masterly explanations given by their English-speaking teacher—

No wonder that after such an incident things flare up somewhere.

[Mr. Descchatelets.]

Well, Mr. Chairman, in his answer of May 30, 1961, the minister also spoke about this incident, according to page 5576 of Hansard. I quote:

(Text):

The report concerning a lecture by an English speaking official of the Dominion fire commissioners' branch was correct in some respects, but sufficiently incomplete as to give an entirely wrong impression. A specialist on fire prevention in government buildings did go to Montreal to speak to representatives of all government departments there, including the fire wardens of all government buildings in the area. The office of the Dominion fire commissioner does not have a large staff, but its French speaking personnel includes an engineer who is completely bilingual. Unfortunately he was not available for this mission.

(Translation):

Well, Mr. Chairman, I should like at this point to leave the question of those unfortunate incidents and to tell the minister that, in the light of those facts, he will have to do something to which he is not used to—he will have to show a certain degree of humility. Let him agree that this was a mistake. We are not hard on him; we simply ask him to take appropriate action so that such mistakes do not occur any more.

Mr. Chairman, I will now go on to another topic.

I have here an article from the newspaper Le Devoir, dated June 8, 1961. I apologize to the minister, but the heading of this article is: "A blunder by Mr. Walker", and I quote:

The federal Minister of Public Works, Mr. Walker, should have thought twice before answering as he did Tuesday a question put by Mr. Murdo Martin. It is an advertisement published in a Paris daily by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and which appeared exclusively in English.

This unbelievable blunder was reported here on Monday in our column of Notes and Comments. The May 18 issue of Le Figaro published an advertisement headed "Canada—Town Planners". The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which does not even mention that it also has a French name, wants to recruit town planners for its works in Ottawa and across the country. The advertisement explains that this Canadian government agency is responsible for housing and slum clearing programs, and goes on to list the qualifications required of applicants and the benefits they are offered. But the whole advertisement is in English.

Mr. Chairman, one must not be too critical, but at least we can ask the minister to see that such incidents are not repeated.

Mr. Chairman, I should now like to discuss another subject. On April 25, 1961, the hon. member for St. Henry (Mr. Lessard) asked the following question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) as recorded on page 3965 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works. Le Devoir reports this morning a statement made yesterday by the minister to a delegation of unemployed to the effect that pick and shovel jobs are available for the asking. As there are in my riding thousands of unemployed anxious to work can the minister tell us to whom they should apply and how many jobs are available?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I have not read the article referred to.

And Le Devoir, for April 25, 1961 published the following statement made to a delegation by the Minister of Public Works:

Mr. Walker immediately offered them a pick and shovel job. "Such jobs are available for the asking", the minister said.

The day after that statement, when the minister was asked for an explanation, he did not even remember. So, I would just ask him in passing whether that statement was another of his jokes at the expense of Canada's unemployed?

Mr. Chairman, may I now say a word on the item concerning the trans-Canada highway. As the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) so eloquently recalled this morning, we are now beginning to realize, through hindsight, that negative autonomy has cost us millions of dollars. I am very pleased to note that this year, an item has been included to cover the cost of the trans-Canada highway, something which will be of great benefit to the province of Quebec.

I do hope that when we reach that item, the hon. members who in 1958 opposed all joint programs will be there to support this item. Even if they have been slow to see the light, we are very pleased. We have been so successful in converting them that they are now blessing what they burned not so long ago.

Mr. Martineau: What a Pecksniff.

Mr. Deschatelets: Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Johnson: Before going on to another subject, would the hon. member allow me a question?

The hon. member asked how some members of the house can reconcile their attitude with their former stand against joint projects. I would ask the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) how he can reconcile the attitude of the government of the province of Quebec which, on the one hand, denounced joint programs in July and on the other hand, has accepted and signed the agreement on the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, that is a very easy question. It is a matter of public record that the Quebec provincial government has never spoken against joint projects. The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) is mistaken. What he is thinking about is the opposition shown by one of his leaders, Mr. Talbot.

Mr. Johnson: Not at all. I am speaking of the opposition made by the Quebec premier, Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Bourget: If my hon. colleague will allow, I will reply to the hon. member because I have followed quite closely—

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. member should let the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont reply because since we have to follow the established order of members who wish to speak, he might have to keep the floor longer than he thinks.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I should now like to say a few words on the question of slums.

Allow me to read an article which was published in the Toronto Daily Star of June 3, 1961. Everybody knows how independent that newspaper is.

(Text):

Mr. Johnson: Don't make me laugh.

(Translation):

Some hon. Members: He does not understand.

Mr. Deschatelets: That article is entitled:

(Text):

Ottawa should lead.

Scoldings do not clear any slums, not even when the scoldings come from Canada's public works minister himself.

In Halifax this week, Mr. David Walker complained that Canadian municipalities were "not making nearly enough progress" in getting rid of slums and halting the spread of blight. He said that Ottawa offered "generous assistance" to the municipalities for these purposes, but the municipalities weren't making full use of it—

But the municipalities know from experience—for example, Toronto with Moss park—that being offered this kind of assistance is one thing; actually getting it is another.

The article concludes as follows:

The trouble is not just in one quarter, but all along the federal-provincial-municipal line—too little in the way of leadership; too much in the way of governmental and intergovernmental complexities.

As for leadership, it should come mainly from Ottawa, which is the main source of money and authority in this field. Rather than rail at the municipalities, let Mr. Walker rally them to the cause of self-improvement.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I shall now conclude my remarks. I will certainly have some questions to ask when we come to the items of particular interest to me.

I trust that the minister will give back to this department which is so important the magnitude it had in previous years. In my opinion, this department has become the orphan of the government. When he succeeds in convincing his colleagues, it will be easier for us to put up with the arrogant replies he gives us from time to time.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, allow me now to answer the question of the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) to the effect that the Quebec premier has spoken against joint projects.

I challenge the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville to quote a statement from a Quebec minister, not only the premier but any Quebec minister, opposing joint projects. I must tell him what the Quebec premier said in a speech delivered in the provincial legislature during the budget debate. Besides, he made this suggestion right here when he attended the last federal-provincial conference on fiscal matters. He said that he wanted to do away with joint projects and replace them with unconditional payments, by extending the fields of taxation reserved to the provinces. The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville must know that in this field, the province of Quebec has received absolutely nothing that is the answer I wanted to give the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville. Once again, I challenge him to quote words, not only from the premier but also from any Quebec minister. Besides, the thing is clear. If the province of Quebec had not wanted to take part in this joint project, it would not have signed the agreement on October 27 and 28, 1960.

Mr. Denis: Anyone can see that.

Mr. Johnson: I put a question to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont and willingly the hon. member for Levis walked into the trap I had set for my hon. friend from Maisonneuve-Rosemont. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont got around the difficulty not by quoting Mr. Lesage, nor by denying my statement concerning Mr. Lesage, but by quoting Mr. Talbot. Mr. Talbot has not changed his attitude. The hon. member for Levis cannot deny that Mr. Lesage took a position as regards joint projects and then, going against the attitude he had taken at the dominion-provincial fiscal conference, he allowed an agreement to be signed between the Minister of Public Works and his minister of highways for the trans-Canada highway.

Moreover, as the hon. member for Levis is aware, Mr. Lesage stated at the dominion-provincial conference in June or July 1960, that the time had come for the province of Quebec to abandon joint projects, because of their conditional features, and that these matters should come back to the province. He went further, he said social security legislation should be brought back under provincial jurisdiction. Neither the hon. member for Levis, nor the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, nor any one of their friends in the opposition can deny it.

Concerning the trans-Canada highway, can the hon. member deny that Mr. Lesage took a contradictory stand when, in July 1960, he denounced the joint plans by pointing out that they were an infringement of provincial jurisdiction, while, on the other hand, he had his minister of highways sign the agreement? If the hon. member can deny that, he will go against the texts. I did not have the documents a while ago and that is why I put the question to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

It is six of one and a half dozen of the other.

If Mr. Lesage wants the federal government to withdraw from all joint programs and let the provincial government occupy the whole field of taxation, he only has flatly to turn down any joint program and to require the federal government to let the province have free rein over the whole field of taxation. That is, if Mr. Lesage is a logical man. There is no reason why he should have signed an agreement with the public works department. That is exactly what our friends opposite do not understand when they refer to the trans-Canada highway and other joint undertakings. They refuse to make allowance for circumstances such as they were when the Quebec government refused those joint undertakings.

The Quebec government was then waging a fiscal war with the federal government. That was the period of the "believe-or-die" policy of the federal government and the provincial government would not give in to such a policy. I say once again that such was the policy of the federal government.

Now that a Conservative government is in power, it has a better understanding of the situation and it is ready to discuss with Quebec and even to give it back its large share. The government is ready to let the premier of Quebec accept the joint undertakings freely.

Now that our party is in power, it is possible to discuss intelligently with provincial authorities, provided that the provincial government be in earnest.

It is not up to us, the federal members, to dictate to Mr. Lesage what he has to do.

If Mr. Lesage chose to sign that agreement, we morally have no right to refuse voting those items because the agreement was signed.

If Mr. Lesage had been consistent, he would have refused to sign the agreement and would then have explained his position, and would have been right to ask for a larger slice of the tax money.

When the Liberal party was in office, and surpluses were accumulating, federal M.P.s were refusing to restore the taxation sources belonging to the provincial government.

That is why the province for its part would not enter the joint schemes and agreements with the federal government, because it rightly contended that the federal government was using subterfuge to avoid restoring tax fields to the provincial government.

The federal level was trying to invade the field of provincial jurisdiction by refusing to restore to the provinces their sources of taxation.

We are now faced with a situation of fact which we have to respect. We must abide by the commitments of our predecessors.

Now that we have deficits, we cannot for all that overlook our commitments.

If Mr. Lesage wants the federal government to restore to him the sources of taxation, he only has to refuse the federal subsidies. Then we will see whether he is a man to be taken seriously or a joker.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, I am not a lawyer. Being an engineer, I am not in the habit of wrapping my arguments in long sentences. Furthermore, I have no business defending the earnestness of the Quebec premier.

Mr. Parizeau: The tax fiend.

Mr. Bourget: On June 22 last, the province of Quebec, in spite of all the organization and money of the Union Nationale, expressed its will.

I do not wish to prolong the debate any further on that matter. However, I shall say a word about joint loans.

The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) is a lawyer. He has the knack of wrapping his arguments in long-winded sentences. But he did not quote one word—and I challenge him to do so—of the Quebec premier denouncing those agreements on joint programs.

On the contrary, he made suggestions at the dominion-provincial conference.

Mr. Chairman, unless words mean nothing, there is a marked difference—and I hope my friend from Chambly-Rouville understands French—between making a suggestion and denouncing something.

As for fiscal agreements, we shall have the opportunity of coming back to that later. I repeat to the hon. member, one of those who, during the last federal election in the province of Quebec, said that we were strangling the provinces, that we have obtained nothing from the Conservative government, absolutely nothing, while other provinces were getting $1, $3, and even $8 per capita.

In the joint plans, nothing was changed, not even a comma, especially in regard to regulations concerning the agreements about the construction of the trans-Canada highway.

And you, honourable members, who denounced them, you, great patriots—

Mr. Pigeon: Do quote our words.

Mr. Bourget: To quote all you have said, we would have to read for six days and six nights.

Mr. Pigeon: Go ahead, quote.

Mr. Bourget: You deny all you ever said in the past.

Mr. Ricard: Not so loud, you might choke.

Mr. Bourget: You do not have the courage of standing up to repeat in this house what you said in the province of Quebec during the 1957 and 1958 election campaigns.

The Chairman: Order.

I think this is no time to discuss the last provincial or federal election campaigns.

I urge the hon. member for Levis to go on with his remarks without straying too far from the trans-Canada highway program. Otherwise, we would run the risk of taking the wrong road.

Mr. Bourget: I refuse to follow the member for Chambly-Rouville.

I do not want to overtax the patience of the committee. However, I want to repeat this to the member for Chambly-Rouville: find me one statement of the premier of the province of Quebec in which he denounces the joint program. Ask your colleagues to try and find any.

Read over the speech of the premier of Quebec, and especially your own. Your friends in the province of Quebec, all of you who have supported Mr. Duplessis, have denounced that program.

Mr. Chairman, I immediately come back to the subject under discussion. But let gentlemen opposite tell the truth not only in the province of Quebec but in this house also.

Mr. Pigeon: We always tell the truth.

Mr. Bourget: Never.

Mr. Pigeon: You were sitting for 22 years, but we have been rising in this house ever since we have come to office.

Mr. Bourget: Yes, you are one of those who take the floor and repudiate what they stated in the province of Quebec in 1957 and 1958.

The Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Johnson: I would say that one hit a sore spot, gentlemen, particularly in the case of the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis), who is trying to get on his feet.

Mr. Bourget: It is nothing like the Salvas inquiry.

Mr. Johnson: To cool down the hon. members, I would refer to page 29 of the report of the proceedings of the 1960 fiscal conference held in Ottawa on July 25, 26 and 27. Mr. Lesage says:

> In Quebec, as in other places, our provincial development imposes on us and on our municipalities increasingly heavy demands. We are acting urgently to make proper provision for education—

May I say, in brackets, that this is just boasting—> —roads and many other services which are our constitutional responsibility.

Now listen to this—the hon. member for Levis should listen to this:

> The determination of the government of Quebec is that those responsibilities should be discharged through harmonious and equitable exercise of the interdependent rights that belong to each government in Canada. That purpose, which animates the government of Quebec in coming to this conference, must, I believe, be our common purpose in Canada. That fundamentally, is why we are all here.

The premier then spoke about sovereignty and interdependence.

Mr. Deschatelets: Where do you see that?

Mr. Johnson: On page 31, the prime minister of the province of Quebec says—

Mr. Bourget: Go on.

Mr. Johnson: Here it is:

> To sum it up, the government of the province of Quebec means fully to exercise its sovereignty in the fields under its jurisdiction without, however, ignoring that all governments in this country are unavoidably interdependent.

Mr. Denis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnson: The premier further says—

Mr. Deschatelets: You might have waited till tomorrow to find it.

Mr. Johnson: Its coming now.

Mr. Bourget: That is the wrong book you have there, it is the second edition.

Mr. Johnson: No, no.

Mr. Bourget: It is nowhere to be found.

Mr. Johnson: The premier said further:

> Neither are we without realizing that this federal government should also face serious responsibilities implying huge disbursements. We are well aware that in the last instance, money can only come from one source: from the taxpayer who has already to carry a tremendous tax load—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valade: That is why Mr. Lesage increased taxes.

Mr. Johnson: I continue the quotation:

> —Taking all these circumstances into account and considering the constitutional fact that direct taxation is a joint domain—and I am quite as magnanimous as Mr. Frost—belonging to both spheres of government, but the only one which may be used by the provinces, we think that taxation rates which are exclusively in the provincial field should be increased to at least 25 per cent of the present federal income tax, both on personal and corporation income.

Mr. Bourget: Very well.

Mr. Deschatelets: Go on.

Mr. Johnson: Now Mr. Lesage asks that the sources of taxation be supported by the provinces.

Mr. Bourget: Go on.

Mr. Johnson: Give me time.

Mr. Denis: The remnants of the Union Nationale.

Mr. Bourget: It is so hard to find when it does not exist.

Mr. Deschatelets: Why do you not prepare a brief for tomorrow.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member would let another member have the floor in the meantime, because I—

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, after all, the hon. member has a right to know—I do not mind the chairman making easy jokes, but—

Mr. Bourget: Very funny.

Mr. Johnson: The member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) has asked me to give the quotation. Here it is on page 27:

> The federal government should withdraw from these fields to the extent that this is necessary to allow each province to get a fair share, namely 50 per cent of the taxable productivity of the said personal and corporation income tax fields. This adjustment could be made progressively year by year over a five year period.

Exactly the suggestion which the Prime Minister of Canada has implemented.

Mr. Bourget: Come on, you are a better lawyer than that.

Mr. Johnson: Let me find the text, I will quote it for you.

Mr. Bourget: Are you so sure of finding it? Of course we are in no hurry.

Mr. Tardif: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnson: I will find the quotation and will send it over to you.

Mr. Denis: Why not look on the cover? Look on the cover.

Some hon. Members: Carried! Carried!

Mr. Johnson: I will find the quotation and will send it over to you. Go ahead and laugh, but you know quite well that this question exists and was even published in the newspapers. I cannot find it at the moment, but I will send it over to the hon. member for Levis when another opportunity comes up. I rose immediately because I did not want to hold up the proceedings and the minister wanted to speak. I will give him the time, but the hon. member for Levis knows quite well that the quotation exists.

Mr. Bourget: Oh no.

Mr. Johnson: I will find it and will read it to you.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville has been talking through his hat. He votes these amounts every year while pretending to be against them.

The trans-Canada highway is under construction from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but there is a gap in the province of Quebec. That province with the taxes paid by its people is paying part of the cost for other provinces. Quebec does not have the advantage of any federal subsidy because it does not have even a single mile of that highway under construction. One can only conclude that the people of the province of Quebec have been taken in by the government then in office. Some were saying then "Duplessis is giving to his province and Ottawa to foreigners", and they are doing exactly the same with this difference that the province of Quebec is now taking all it can get from Ottawa. It is not a question of winning an election on mines but of giving the people of Quebec their just share of the taxes they pay to Ottawa.

The statement made by the premier of the province of Quebec indicates that he would like this joint program to be dropped and that another formula be arrived at. But in the hope of receiving all the millions of dollars which we lost during some years through the fault of the Union Nationale, the present Quebec Liberal government has accepted everything, will accept everything.

You are the ones who do not want Ottawa to give to the provinces under joint programs. At long last, for the first time in some 15 years, the province of Quebec is part of Canada; it is part of confederation. If ever during the next election mention is made of mines like those which have misled for years the people of the province of Quebec —well we had enough of that. There are only a few supporters of the Union Nationale left and they are here in Ottawa, until the next election. They have had the jitters ever since the last provincial election; this is the swan song.

I sympathize with their statements.

If Mr. Duplessis was giving to his province and Ottawa to foreigners, what are you doing for the province of Quebec, you who have doubled everything you blamed us for in the past.

Mr. Bourbonnais: Would the hon. member allow me a question, Mr. Chairman? He said: "For the first time the province of Quebec is part of confederation". What does he think of all the veterans, of our Canadians of the province of Quebec who sacrificed their lives during the last war?

Mr. Caron: They were not supporters of the Union Nationale.

Mr. Denis: I did not understand the hon. member's question. I suppose he was visiting his canal. Would the hon. member repeat his question so that I could try to answer if possible.

Mr. Bourbonnais: The hon. member for St. Denis said a moment ago that for the first time in the history of confederation, the province of Quebec was part of confederation. I ask him what he thinks of the people from Quebec who sacrificed their lives in two wars?

Mr. Denis: The hon. member is wrong. I told him that when the Union Nationale was in power in the province of Quebec, we were not part of the rest of the country, but that since the taking over by the Lesage government we are Canadian citizens and we are proud of it. In other words, we are not savages. We accept the legislation introduced by the present federal government, which is a Conservative government.

Mr. Johnson: I shall continue the quotation of the text I started to read before the hon. member for St. Denis took the floor. I just found it. It has to do with the joint programs and it is found at page 35 of the report of the proceedings of the fiscal federal-provincial conference held on July 25, 26 and 27, 1960. Mr. Lesage said in his brief:

> Experience shows that often those joint programs do not allow the provinces to use their own revenues as they see fit and to sufficiently take into account local conditions.

And further on:

> In addition, they also bring up administrative problems resulting in a loss of efficiency or duplication and higher costs. The provinces must have a special staff to report to Ottawa about the execution of those programs and the government in turn must hire officials to see to it that the conditions laid down by Ottawa are complied with by the provinces.
>
> We feel that such a situation has become undesirable. The present joint programs have had a stimulating effect upon the economic and social development of the country; in several cases, they have replaced the provincial initiative. Those programs are now well enough on the way at the provincial level so that the federal government could put an end to its participation and withdraw from those fields.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnson: The federal government should be willing to accept that request.

Mr. Bourget: Very well, that is exactly what I said.

Mr. Johnson: Well, gentlemen from the Liberal party, you have just commended a brief submitted by Mr. Lesage, in the same terms, and containing the same mistakes in French that would have made Mr. Duplessis. What difference is there between Mr. Duplessis' stand and this stand taken by Mr. Lesage, who criticizes, who claims that experience shows that these joint programs do not allow the provinces to use their own income as they would like to, and to have due consideration for local conditions?

If Mr. Lesage held this opinion, why has he adhered to this scheme? And if Mr. Lesage has adhered to this scheme and, if, as you claim, gentlemen from the Liberal party, the people of the province of Quebec cannot afford to lose this money, which Mr. Lesage has accepted, then why do you ask us to refuse to vote for it?

You are being most illogical. You are nothing else but petty political followers, the followers of Mr. Lesage, your branch manager who is getting short of money and wishes the federal government to come in and foot the bill of his electoral promises. That is your attitude, gentlemen of the Liberal party. If you want a fight, you will get it.

Mr. Bourget: We relish that.

Mr. Johnson: You are saying that on the one hand Mr. Lesage is right in signing these agreements and on the other hand that we would be wrong in supporting them. Where do you stand? What do you want? Are you for or against?

Mr. Bourget: Do you want to know?

Mr. Johnson: Do you want Mr. Lesage to take the logical attitude he adopted at the tax conference or do you want him to sign agreements? Do you want Mr. Lesage to come to Ottawa begging the federal government or making counter-propositions still favourable to the Quebec cause or do you want him to adopt the attitude of his predecessors who came and settled, for example, the university grants matter in a fashion compatible with their pride and without abandoning any provincial jurisdiction? Those people then discussed with the federal government.

The federal government, the Minister of Public Works is ready to discuss conditions, but Mr. Lesage did not want to discuss. He needed $10, he wanted $10 unconditionally without any discussion, without seeking to ascertain whether in good logic the experience would show that joint undertakings often do not allow the provinces to dispose of their own revenues according to their wishes and according to local conditions.

Mr. Lesage did not take that into consideration when he came to sign the joint agreements. He demanded nothing, he simply said: Gentlemen, I sign the agreement and I accept your conditions.

Can you blame the federal government? Logically, can you blame the federal members for approving such a thing, since it is Mr. Lesage who asked for it?

He should be logical. He should say once and for all what he wants. He may refuse, if he wants to, but then he should not blame his predecessors for their past refusals. Be logical, gentlemen of the Liberal party, take one or the other stand but take it in a responsible way.

In another line of thought, since we are now discussing joint programs, I think the Department of Public Works must, to some extent, supervise, on behalf of the government of Canada, works to be done on the Quebec section of the trans-Canada highway that is to be built. It is also its duty to supervise the implementation of any agreement concerning the construction of a road to resources.

Mr. Denis: No commission on white lines.

Mr. Johnson: So, Mr. Chairman, according to an agreement signed between the federal government and the Quebec government last fall, the federal government contributes, jointly with the Quebec government, to the construction of a road to the Mattagami mine. Now, Mr. Chairman, section 5 of that agreement provides:

(Text):

Canada and Quebec mutually covenant and agree as follows:

(1) No member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of any contract, agreement or commission with respect to the project, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

(Translation):

I wonder how a member of this parliament who has got into the habit of looking for the mote in his brother's eye and not seeing the beam in his own, like the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas), can explain that, as a land surveyor, he is collecting fees from the provincial government to survey the road leading to the Mattagami mine.

I refer to what the hon. member for Villeneuve, who is unfortunately away, had to say. I do not like to attack him while he is away—he was here all afternoon—but since you want to bring up those matters, we will talk about them. I am sorry the hon. member is not here—

The Chairman: If I correctly understood the remarks of the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville, he was talking about a contract between the central government and the government of the province of Quebec, but I did not understand whether it was about the trans-Canada highway or a public works contract—

Mr. Johnson: That is right, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: One in which the Department of Public Works is involved?

Mr. Johnson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, because according to the agreement entered into, the Department of Public Works must supervise the work on behalf of the federal government which is a party to the contract. As a matter of fact, even though agreements about the access roads were between the provincial governments and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, they come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works.

And just to show that those people who are talking about kickbacks are carrying on patronage in Quebec with federal funds—

Mr. Bourget: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Johnson: Do you want to ask me a question or to raise a point of order?

Mr. Bourget: No, I just want to ask a question.

Is the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville talking about an access road to mines?

Mr. Johnson: Yes, the Mattagami road.

Mr. Bourget: In that case, Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to call the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville to order, because the Department of Public Works has nothing to do with the access roads to mines, and the hon. member should know that those roads come under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member made a rather serious charge against the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Johnson: One moment, Mr. Chairman, we shall dispose of the point of order first.

The Chairman: Order. The point of order has to do with the relevancy of the discussion on the estimates of the public works department. The hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) seems to think that this contract is one that comes under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. If that is the case, of course, it would be irregular to start a discussion on that contract.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) seems to suggest that the Department of Public Works has something to do with this matter.

Mr. Bourget: The Department of Public Works has nothing to do with it and the minister can confirm that.

(Text):

The Chairman: Possibly the minister can enlighten the committee as to any responsibility of his department with respect to the contract to which the hon. member has alluded.

Mr. Walker: I have not been following the argument. I have no idea what it is about. What was the name of the road?

Mr. Johnson: Mattagami.

Mr. Walker: That is a road to resources. It is true that it is being paid for jointly by the province of Quebec and the federal government. So far as the administration of the building of the road is concerned, the Department of Public Works is in charge of that.

Mr. Bourget: No.

Mr. Walker: Yes. We are in charge of the administration of it. However, the amount paid by the federal government is charged to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. We do a great deal of work for that department. They look to us as the responsible party to see that the proper people are paid on behalf of the federal government, that the road is surveyed and constructed properly, that the contracts are let properly and that everything is in order. We have a very important and almost overwhelming part in that regard, although the cost is charged to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Bourget: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell the committee honestly—he has the deputy minister before him who knows about the matter if the minister does not—that the Department of Public Works has anything to do in any way, shape or form with roads to resources. I am asking the minister to tell us precisely and he can be informed by the deputy minister now.

An hon. Member: He just told you.

Mr. Bourget: No, he tried to mix up the whole situation. That is what he did. I understand French and English, you know.

Mr. Walker: In other words, the hon. member for Levis does not want me to speak French?

Mr. Bourget: Go ahead, French or English.

Mr. Walker: I can assure my hon. friend that I have consulted with the deputy, and I will repeat what I have said. We have everything to do so far as the duties of the federal government are concerned in connection with the building of roads to natural resources. The only thing we do not do is to sign the contract and pay the share of the federal government. It is just the same as with penitentiaries. The deputy points out to me that the trans-Canada highway is the best example of our participation, but in that case we also pay for it.

The hon. member for Levis may shake his head but it is four years since he had any part in the government of Canada and it may be 18 years more before he has again. He may shake his head but I am telling him the facts. It is not necessary for him to say to me, "Honestly now, Mr. Minister, will you tell us?" I am sorry that I have to disagree with the conception of the hon. member. Whom are you protecting tonight?

Mr. Bourget: Again I ask the question: Can the minister point to any item in these estimates that covers roads to resources? I am asking the minister, with the help of the deputy minister and all the officials who are around him and in the gallery, to tell me here in the house if the Department of Public Works has something to do with this matter. The minister has said that the government of Canada has something to do with it. Roads to resources are under the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who is in his seat. He knows that roads to resources are under his jurisdiction. Is that right?

Mr. Dinsdale: These are not my estimates and I have not been participating in the discussion throughout the day. However, I do understand that some use is made of the staff of the Department of Public Works in this regard and that there is an involvement in that connection.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I was thinking of the statement of the Minister of Public Works to the effect that his department has something to do with it, and it was with regard to this that the point of order was raised.

The Chairman: Order. In the document which the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville holds in his hand, if there is a clause which may establish a responsibility on the part of the Minister of Public Works with regard to contracts which may be awarded under that convention, I shall ask him to read out this text. However, if the responsibility of the Department of Public Works only extends to supervising from a physical point of view or with regard to the carrying out of work, I believe that this is not the right time to deal with the matter.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of the Minister of Public Works contain various items dealing with specific objects. But when more general matters are involved, and we are discussing the administration vote the debate on various subjects directly or indirectly related to a department has to take place, if I understand the rules correctly, when the first item is discussed, and it is at that stage, to my mind, that I may speak on this issue, as it is not an item specifically relevant to the Department of Public Works but will probably be voted under some legislation which may be administered by another department. Now, I wonder at what point I may discuss this item, when for the supervision and the carrying out of that work the Department of Public Works is spending—

The Chairman: Order. I asked the hon. member whether he had a text to read, because there is no doubt that expenses with regard to the roads to resources program are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and those items were voted when the estimates of that department were discussed. When the hon. member says that under the first item of a department we may discuss anything that concerns the department, I agree. However, if the Department of Public Works is responsible for letting the contracts which come under the contract and is only responsible for the technical carrying out of the work, I think the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville will agree with me that it is not in order to discuss such matters under the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Johnson: So, Mr. Chairman, I will not be allowed to discuss this on the estimates of the Department of Public Works, or to expose the underhand work of the hon. member for Villeneuve with the Lesage government; I will have to wait till next year, when the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources are taken up, to raise the matter again.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I think you will allow me to take the defence of one of my colleagues who is forcibly absent from the house owing to illness. I find it odd that the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville has taken advantage of his absence to lay a completely false charge.

Mr. Johnson: He was here a few minutes ago.

Mr. Bourget: I shall prove to him, if the hon. member will just keep quiet and listen, I shall prove to him—

The Chairman: Order. I have no objection to the hon. member speaking now. However, if he intends to show that the allegations made by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville are not true, he will then be continuing the discussion and it will be impossible for me to prevent the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville from replying. If the hon. member for Levis insists on pursuing that course and if the committee is agreeable, I have no objection, but if he does, I think he is opening the door to a full debate on all the facts.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, with your permission, my colleague's argument is very simple.

(Text):

I am going to speak in English. This is the same as the trans-Canada highway. The minister will agree with me that, so far as the plans and surveys of the roads are concerned, the federal government does not have to pay a cent, is that right?

Mr. Johnson: Right.

Mr. Bourget: Then, why do you accuse the hon. member for Villeneuve of getting money from the federal government when the federal government has not participated in the cost of the surveys or plans for the road? I am asking the Minister of Public Works if I am right or wrong in that. Does the federal government have to pay a cent for the preparation of the plans or surveys in connection with the route of the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Walker: We do not pay for the land acquisition, but we do pay for the engineering survey of the route.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Walker: We are responsible also for every cent that is spent. We have to approve of all the bills. Does the hon. member for Levis refer to the survey bills? We are responsible for the passing of the survey bills, the engineering surveys.

Mr. Habel: May I speak to the point of order? Would the minister dare to say that, in so far as the roads to resources are concerned, the provinces do not make the surveys and pay for them? Do the provinces then not go to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources with the proposal that they want accepted by the department? Does this not show that nothing whatever is coming from the federal government in so far as the location of the road is concerned and anything else except the construction of the road?

Mr. Walker: The answer to that, as I understand it, is that everything has to be approved in advance by the Department of Public Works on behalf of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, just as we do for so many other departments. We are increasing the scope of our activities. What is this all about, by the way?

Mr. Habel: The question is this.

Mr. Walker: I have heard your question and I have answered it.

Mr. Habel: The question is this: Is not the province committed to surveying the road, preparing the plans and submitting them to the department? They have to pay for the preparation of the survey themselves?

Mr. Walker: It is the same procedure as that relating to the trans-Canada highway. The province pays for it, proves by vouchers what it is, and we check all the bills. The federal government pays its share and it is charged to the department of northern affairs.

Mr. Habel: No, no.

Mr. Walker: If you know, don't bother asking questions.

Mr. Habel: I do know because I was discussing the whole matter with the minister of highways for Ontario, and he told me they had to pay for the survey themselves.

(Translation):

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member for Levis has given up his point of order, I think I could—

Mr. Deschatelets: We shall give you enough rope to hang. Go on.

Mr. Johnson: —continue my remarks. All I want to say is that hon. members across the floor helped me to prove my point. They got the answers they wanted from the minister. The federal government pays its share of the Mattagami mine road. The provincial government awards a contract to a federal Liberal member. The provincial government avails itself of the provisions of this contract to do some day labour, to make use of patronage in the province of Quebec while we, at the federal level, the good fellows, we are paying for this Liberal patronage of Mr. Lesage's. That is what you call good patronage; good patronage with good Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Chairman, I quoted the text, clause 5 is clear.

(Text):

No member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of any contract, agreement or commission with respect to the project, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

(Translation):

The hon. member for Villeneuve who likes to come out against patronage in other places and people who misuse public funds will have some explaining to do about that. At the same time, he may have a chance to explain what happened, during the Liberal regime in the case of the retaining walls, in Beloeil, where certain foremen were appropriating public funds, cashing cheques of people who were not working, and were making money that way—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Johnson: He might explain what they were doing with that—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Johnson: —Liberal patronage paid out of federal government funds.

The Chairman: Order. Order.

I should point out to the member for Chambly-Rouville that he may be allowed to deal with the matter, but he must show the connection with the Department of Public Works.

I believe that at the moment he has wandered far from the subject, and I would ask him to come back to it.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I feel I have followed your instructions, for I was referring to retaining walls. My remarks were therefore, in some ways, relevant to public works.

I merely want to point out that the clause is quite clear. As far as the hon. member for Villeneuve is concerned, notwithstanding the allegations of hon. members opposite, I have not taken advantage of his absence to talk about it.

I even took the care to mention first that I was sorry he was not here to speak in his own defence.

I now refer to pages 2031 and 2032 of the English Hansard. There is reference there to the member for Villeneuve.

The member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) had addressed him, and here, for the benefit of the house, is the translation of his words, as found on page 6 of the appendix.

(Text):

I am reading from the translation:

Mr. Asselin: Could the hon. member tell us the name of the engineering firm which makes the survey of the joint projects?

Mr. Dumas: This question makes me laugh, Mr. Chairman. To answer it I will tell the hon. member that the department's engineers are those who do the civil engineering work for the construction of the road. But I see what my hon. friend is aiming at, and I must say to him, that as a surveyor, the government of the province of Quebec has asked me to do the surveying for the expropriation of certain parcels of land bordering on this new road from Amos to Mattagami. So, to help ease my hon. friend's concern on this matter, I will read to him—I think I might give this explanation—

I have here a copy of the agreement signed by the government of Canada and that of the province of Quebec with regard to the construction of the road between Amos and Mattagami and I find the following at clause 9 of this agreement:

"The cost of these works will not include any amount paid by the province of Quebec towards the project after March 31, 1966, and in all cases will not include the payments made by the province of Quebec towards—"

And I now read subclause (B):

"The purchase of an interest or any land interest in connection with the execution of the project, including compensation or indemnification for the obligatory taking over of the land or for the unfavourable soil of other lands;"

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: You spoke illogically.

Mr. Johnson: How does the hon. member for Villeneuve explain his conduct regarding the question of land surveying?

He did not reply to the hon. member for Charlevoix. He tried to play on the meaning of section 9 and he was completely wrong.

Perhaps he also forgot on purpose to quote section 5 which is indeed very clear.

The people will judge the hypocrites who claim they do not engage in patronage and who set about practising the worst kind of patronage the moment they are in power.

They favour not only the Liberal lawyers of the province of Quebec but even the engineers and land surveyors who are members of the federal parliament. They are not satisfied with cramming the members of the provincial legislature, they have to give a piece of the cake to the federal members of parliament, who belong to the Liberal party.

Perhaps, one day, the minister of hydraulic resources who is now the Quebec minister of natural resources, will know how to thank the member for St. Denis for the fine work he did during his election which he won by a narrow margin, last June, and in such a way as I do not care to qualify.

Mr. Deschatelets: The hon. member should take some rest.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall item 329 carry?

Mr. Peters: I have been waiting very patiently for the aftermath of the political storm that has been raised among members from the province of Quebec this evening in order to continue on what I consider to be the estimates of the Department of Public Works. It may be true that these remarks that have been made tonight have been very colourful and that they have given us an insight into Quebec politics. However, I think they have strayed far away from the field that I wanted to go into.

Mr. Johnson: That is an easy slander.

Mr. Peters: It is a quiet slander, and a very mild one too, I would say.

Mr. Johnson: Though you are not in the province of Quebec, you can get defeated easily also.

Mr. Peters: I would imagine it would be a very mild slander. I am quite sure that the hon. member's hide is a mile thick, and that it will never penetrate at all. I think it would not even be considered slander by him at all.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be wise to continue for the next four or five minutes the discussion of the roads to resources program as it affects the province of Quebec. Maybe this would be in the best interests of all concerned. However, I wish to congratulate the minister's department, and not entirely the minister, because I am now thinking of a little clipping which I saw from the Timmins Daily Press under the heading "Ottawa Report" in which with regard to the minister the following is pointed out:

> He brought to Ottawa a high reputation from his legal career, honoured as a bencher of the law society of upper Canada, and held in awe by Toronto lawyers as "the terror of the negligence bar". An embittered and humbled opponent in the house dubbed him "the man with the stiletto"; his stiletto is a brilliant, lethal and always colourful tongue.

This may be quite true, but tonight the minister has not had to use it. If he was going to control the debate, I think he would have had to use a broad axe and probably this is not his field.

I should like to compliment the department on the work that has been done. The engineering with which I have had the opportunity to have some connection seems to be of a high calibre; and there seems to be in that department still a carryover from the days of the former minister, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in which he said that we would get relatively free from politics. Sometimes it may not be wise to get completely out of this field of politics. I should like to relate one particular incident that happened recently where I think it is an advantage. I want to refer to only one instance in which I asked of the department an investigation into a situation that I thought should be investigated. I gave the department the information as I had it and the investigation was made by the engineer. I happened to be in that area and I went and saw the situation for myself. It was very much as I had been told it was. I have been informed that the former Conservative candidate also visited the area. Rather than being upset about this, I am quite pleased about it because I think now there are three people who have been back to the department and have reported that the situation is very much the way each and every one has reported it. It therefore may not be wise to get too far away from this field. The former Conservative candidate no doubt has at heart the interests of the area in the same way as have the inspector of the department, the engineering branch and I. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: The hon. member means 10.30.

Mr. Peters: Yes, 10.30.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could ask the house leader whether he could indicate with reasonable certainty now what we will be doing tomorrow and Saturday and whether he could give us any idea of what we will be doing up until whatever hour it is we meet on Tuesday evening. Perhaps he could tell us whether under the rules it would be 7.30 or 8.00 o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I will announce tomorrow night the business for next week. Tomorrow we will carry on with the estimates of the Department of Public Works. The business for Saturday will be determined depending on the progress we make tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister not expect to finish public works before tomorrow is out?

Mr. Churchill: I sincerely hope that we shall finish public works tomorrow. It is now June 15.

Mr. Pickersgill: What will we do then?

Mr. Churchill: If we finish public works early tomorrow we will commence with national defence. But if we do not finish public works in good time tomorrow, I am not certain that we would start with national defence on Saturday. I am open to suggestions from hon. members opposite.

At 10.30 o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

This additional grant raises to $400,000 the amount of wheat which Canada has made available to Burma under the 1960-61 program.

THE BUDGET

TABLING OF BUDGET PAPERS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to table copies in English and in French of the annual budget white paper. For the convenience of hon. members as well as of subscribers to the reports of this house, I move that the budget white paper be published as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings and also as an appendix to the Hansard report of Tuesday, June 20.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he can inform the house of the reasons for the adjournment of the discussions with the United Kingdom of the uranium contract after four days, I believe.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Discussions were held on Monday and Wednesday on the ministerial level and on Tuesday and Thursday on the official level as to the details. At the end of that time it was decided that Sir Roger Makins would return to the United Kingdom for consultations with his government, leaving several of his officials here to continue consultations with Eldorado Mining and Refining on technical matters. As indicated in the press release yesterday, he will be returning at a mutually convenient date to continue these discussions. I might emphasize that these discussions have been adjourned only, and will be continued as soon as possible.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—MISSION TO DISCUSS ENTRY BY U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Has the Prime Minister any comment to make on the report that Mr. Duncan Sandys will be coming here from the United Kingdom to discuss the common market situation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was a reference over the radio to the effect that the Right Hon. Mr. Sandys, secretary of state for commonwealth relations, would be here next week or within the next ten days to discuss in general the problems connected with the common market being joined by the United Kingdom. That report was incorrect. He will be coming a little later, at a date to be determined. I mentioned the other day that I thought he would be here some time in July.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it a fact, as I think the Prime Minister indicated in his reply, that when this visit takes place there will be discussion concerning the problems arising out of the United Kingdom joining the European common market?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there will be general discussion in regard to that matter and the inferences, the results, the implications and the like. Also, of course, there will be a canvassing of the attitude to be taken by the government of Canada toward the necessity of preserving and maintaining our rights under existing trade agreements within the commonwealth, and of our position that there should be no unfair interference with or diminution of Canada's existing trading rights.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to take advantage of this opportunity to discuss with the representatives of the United Kingdom the possibility of Canadian association with these European economic developments?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that connection, Mr. Sandys would not be particularly interested, nor would the British government.

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO SEIZURE OF EXPORTS BY CANADIAN CUSTOMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres asked me whether I was yet in a position to make a report concerning the seizure of an export shipment for Cuba. Upon inquiry I learned that the matter is still under investigation and I am, therefore, unable to make a report at this time. I assure the hon. member, however, that I shall make a report as soon as one is available.

STRAWBERRIES—STATEMENT ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Fraser Valley asked me a question concerning the importation of strawberries into British Columbia. I now wish to advise that this specific report referred to by the hon. member has been investigated. As the hon. member knows, the British Columbia processors ordinarily import strawberries to supplement local supplies. Imports are currently being received at the prevailing price in the United States. It is reported to me that the delivered cost of these berries to the processors during the first half of June is somewhat higher than the price being paid for local berries.

I wish to inform the hon. member that if any British Columbia strawberry producers feel that the value of imported berries is unduly depressed, they should request the horticultural council to make application to the Department of National Revenue for assistance under the provisions of section 40A (7B) of the Customs Act which the government makes available to protect growers against low seasonal values for imported products.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say whether it is his intention to make the Bladen commission report public at any time?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is in the affirmative.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

TENDER NO. 43-1-1977-D—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR PARTICULARS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Nipissing asked the Prime Minister whether he would look into tender No. 43-1-1977-D which closed on June 5, 1961, and give the particulars to the house.

This was a tender relating to plumbing pipe and pipe fittings, and was issued by the Ottawa district office of the Department of Defence Production. The low tender was submitted by Emco Limited at a price of $573.09. The products offered by Emco Limited were partially of Canadian manufacture and partially imported from the United Kingdom. The next lowest tender was submitted by Crane Limited which quoted $578.14 and offered products entirely manufactured in Canada.

The policy relating to procurement of defence supplies is as follows. With respect to head office contracts, that is all contracts involving major production or procurement programs, every effort is made to ensure maximum Canadian content. For many of our most important contracts only Canadian manufacturers are invited to bid. In many other areas, preferences are given to Canadian contractors.

With respect to district office contracts, which normally relate to off the shelf items and where tenders are restricted to local manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers, distributors and agents, the low bidder meeting the specifications is invariably selected. The district offices of the Department of Defence Production placed 130,000 contracts in the fiscal year 1960-61. It is obvious, therefore, that with respect to this very large number of contracts the only practical purchasing rule is to award the contract to the low bidder.

AGRICULTURE

MARITIME PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO AID TO POTATO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the government has yet been able to make up its mind about the compensation that he promised nearly two months ago to the potato growers in Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the government does make up its mind it will be announced in due course.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—INQUIRY AS TO PROJECT TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Perhaps I could ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether the government has yet made up its mind about any one project on which to spend the $1,500,000 that he announced as long ago as May 30 would be used for employment in Cape Breton.

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes, Mr. Speaker. An announcement will be made by the Prime Minister very soon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AMATEUR ATHLETICS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the house leader if they could indicate whether it is the intention at this session to go ahead with the measure to consider means of encouraging the youth of Canada in amateur athletics, as set out in the speech from the throne.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Skeena is here, I shall be glad to deal with the question of privilege he raised the other day.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Call in the member.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): He is not in the house, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

329. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,667,720.

The Chairman: This item will be found at page 67 of the blue book and the details at page 452.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, last evening I had been mentioning some problems on the estimates of the Department of Public Works. I should like to congratulate the government in this connection, but I think I should not really congratulate them because in my opinion they got into this situation by accident rather than by design. I refer to the field of housing in which the government now finds itself.

If it had not been for the money that was put into housing by the federal government several years ago there just would have been no home building at all in Canada. It was an indication that something was wrong with the source of the money upon which we were depending for the expansion of our housing industry in Canada when the government—and certainly this is true of the Conservative government—had to go into the field of lending of money for housing.

I do not think this has been a bad move; I think it has been a very good one. Indications are now apparent that other interests would like to put money into housing and that there will be an expansion of credit, and mortgage money particularly, available for housing. This has been a good thing. If this government have done anything to solve the unemployment problem across this country, probably their greatest effort has been in the field of housing. The fact that the federal government did put money into housing when money was not available from other sources and when no building was taking place in other fields has meant a great deal of employment in the housing industry itself and, second, in the service trades that depend upon the housing industry.

This brings us, of course, to another problem that has now developed. The minister has indicated that he is going to unload a large number of mortgages now being held by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is my opinion that this in itself may not be a bad thing either. However, I think we are going to have to look very carefully at this matter, and for this reason we have been watching very closely one of the bills on the order paper being sponsored by a private member. This bill is in connection with secondary mortgages and the handling of mortgages by means other than those by which they have been handled in the past. We have been interested in this, and I have satisfied myself that this government is not invading the field that the minister has indicated he is going to leave open for industry and the financial interests to take part in.

I only want to make this suggestion. The federal government has not done a bad job in housing. It has not hurt the government; it has not hurt the Conservative party, and I think it has been good for the country. Therefore I think it behooves us to give consideration to going into this matter more deeply, rather than getting out of it entirely. For this reason I hope when the minister brings in the resolution that will indicate a bill is in the offing for the establishment of a secondary mortgage field, he will give consideration to a crown corporation handling secondary mortgages. I believe it is highly essential for the development of Canada that we take the profit motive out of the mortgage field and the interest that is available when going into such an important field as national housing. The lower the rate of interest on that money, the more money is available and the easier it is to obtain. In this way we would have the largest amount of money available for housing, whether it be through secondary mortgages or the original Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans. Both tend to increase housing development in Canada, and this is a vital necessity even now.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister for the work his department has done recently in the construction of some of the very lovely small federal buildings. I was very pleased to have the opportunity of attending the opening of a post office, in the company of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, in my riding two weeks ago, and should like to state that it is a very lovely building. It is very modern and designed to serve the needs of that community for some time in the future. I feel there was a good deal of foresight in the planning of this building, in that it has been designed in such a way as to allow for a good deal of expansion without, at the same time, creating a future white elephant. If expansion does not take place as quickly as has been anticipated I feel that building can still be used in an efficient way.

The construction of this building also created extra employment in that area during the wintertime, which has been a tremendous advantage to the people of that community. I am very pleased that this government, through the Department of Public Works, has seen fit to provide this type of opportunity to various communities, because this has been of tremendous help in providing employment for a number of people in this country.

I suggest there are many other fields of endeavour in which this department should take part. There are many problems in my own area of which I am aware and which I should like to bring to the attention of the department when considering the relevant votes. However, at this time I should like to comment in a general way in respect to the government's building activities in the Ottawa area.

While it is fine for an hon. member to say in this house that there are $17 million worth of government buildings in his riding—and I refer to the constituency of Russell—I do not feel it is necessarily a good thing. The centennial of Canada's confederation is not far away. I feel that this country has now reached that stage where Canadians can be proud of it, and that now is the time for us to review and correct the haphazard building program that has been followed in the city of Ottawa.

At the outset I should like to say that I do not believe the central experimental farm should be developed as a land assembly scheme upon which government buildings should be built in haphazard fashion. I realize that certain ministers of the crown would like to see many types of government buildings built on that farm, but I believe the experimental farm has served and is serving a useful purpose, and should not be cluttered up with departmental buildings of all types. I suggest the government should use some foresight in its planning and location of government buildings, so that over the period of the next 50 or 100 years this city will be developed in a manner and style in which we as Canadians can take pride.

The city of Ottawa itself is the national capital of Canada and should not be developed as an industrial city but as a national capital. I realize that the federal government must compensate this city for the industrial losses which will accompany the development of the city as a national capital, but I suggest the federal government must have some authority as well as interest in this type of development program of development which is being followed at this time has resulted in the location Wellington street in order that at least the administrative headquarters of each department of government may be located there. The program of development which is being followed at this time has resulted in the location of many administrative buildings in the outlying areas of the city.

I feel this is a mistake on the part of the government. For instance, an individual coming to Ottawa with the intention of perhaps discussing a contract with the officials of the Department of Public Works will have difficulty in locating the officials of that department. I suggest he will probably have to take a taxi on a tour through Tunney's pasture and various other government building locations before finally arriving at the new public works building in the area of Hog's Back. I know I have difficulty locating these officials even by telephone from my own office, and therefore suspect that a subcontractor from an area such as Timiskaming, perhaps the city of Kirkland Lake, being a stranger in Ottawa would have great difficulty in locating the officials of the department in which he is interested.

In making this suggestion I realize, of course, that many of the operations of different departments cannot properly be located close to parliament hill. I do not suggest that the technical services provided by the department of research, for example, should be located in downtown Ottawa, but at least the administration offices of that department could be located there.

If the government did expropriate all the property along Wellington street it could accomplish two things. It could rid that district of the slum areas which exist there, and could centralize the administration buildings of all departments of government. An individual visiting this city could then easily locate the officials of this government without the necessity of taking a taxi on a grand tour of the city. I believe an individual wishing to consult a deputy minister should not be expected to travel to the outskirts of the city in order to do so. After all, Canada is no longer a small country, and should have a national capital designed after the examples set by other nations of the world. I suggest the location of government buildings in Washington provides a good example for us to follow. That city has been designed and developed as the national capital of the United States. Here in Ottawa there exist all kinds of slums, industries, government departmental buildings, in all areas.

I suggest that the officials responsible for the development of Ottawa as a national capital should consult with the officials of the city of Ottawa in order to work out an efficient and effective plan for the development of the national capital. I seriously suggest to the minister for his consideration a program of expropriating the property along Wellington street so the administrative offices of this government could be centrally located. I also repeat my suggestion that the experimental farm be maintained as an experimental farm. I suggest the operation of that farm has been of great benefit to many people of this country over the years, through the development of better seeds and so on, and has provided solutions to various other agricultural problems which have existed. I suggest that a great deal of beneficial research and development has been carried out as a result of the operation of this farm. I strongly suggest this should not be a land assembly plan. I dislike very much going out to the experimental farm and finding that the federal government has erected a new building there because it had not bothered to expropriate additional land.

I should like to raise another problem with the minister. The minister may say it does not come under his jurisdiction. It is somewhat like the argument we had last night on the roads to resources program. I am speaking of the port of Moosonee. On page 11 of the report of the Department of Public Works we find the following statement:

> As in previous years, members of the branch made several on-site surveys of various harbours. The interdepartmental group, consisting of senior officials of the Departments of Public Works, and Transport, continued to investigate major harbour requirements.

The people of northern Ontario are greatly interested in the survey now being carried out jointly by the federal and provincial governments having to do with the development of a northern salt water seaport, the only salt water seaport the province of Ontario can have. I refer to the port of Moosonee. The potential of that area is exceedingly great. Some of the largest iron ore deposits in the world are there. The potential of other minerals in the Moosonee area is great. We are very interested in seeing a comprehensive and legitimate survey conducted there.

In northern Ontario we have a railway owned by the provincial government. It was originally called the northern Ontario development railroad, and was built to open up the resources of northern Ontario. For many years

Colonel Reynolds, the chairman of this railroad—he is now getting to be a very old man—pushed the idea of a salt water port at Moosonee for the development of northern Ontario.

This is not a pipe dream; it is a feasible thing. I believe that on many occasions the chairman of the railway used it for political purposes. I am quite sure that most of the politicians in northern Ontario have used it for political purposes. I have. I make one exception; the hon. member for Cochrane has never used it for political purposes, and it is in his riding. But I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Cochrane is very interested in the port of Moosonee. He has been going there for many years, and is well aware of the potential of the area.

A survey has been made. Press reports indicate that the minister has given assurance that the report will be made very shortly. Last night I looked up references in Hansard. The last one, which was a month old, indicated that the minister would be willing to bring in a report on the survey within a month. I presume the report of the survey is now available and that the minister's department has participated in it.

I think these things should be done by the federal government. I am not too pleased about anything the provincial government does in this field. In the field of harbours, lakes, navigable waters, and so on, the provincial government has shown a very narrow minded and provincial attitude toward those developments. It has decided that any waters throughout the province should be used for provincial parks and that those provincial parks should cost a great deal of money if you wish to visit them. Three years ago it cost you $1 to go to a provincial park in Ontario. Now it costs you $3 to go to a provincial park for the season. It costs $1 to stay in a provincial park.

Most of our navigable waters in northern areas that originally came under the jurisdiction of the federal government are now administered by the department of lands and forests of the provincial government. I strongly suggest that the minister keep his hand in this particular field, because it is my opinion that we get better utilization of some of our natural resource development if it is handled by the federal government than we do from the provincial government, particularly in those fields in which both governments are interested.

I should like the minister to give a full report on what is going to happen at Moosonee. We know it is an extensive development proposition. It is a proposition that would have a high labour content and would do a great deal for the development of that area. It also has a national defence aspect because if an enemy force was going to land it would find it most advantageous to come in through Hudson strait, Hudson bay and down through James bay, and it would then be fewer than 600 miles from the main industrial city of Canada, namely Toronto. If for no other reason, we should develop this port for defence purposes.

However, in my opinion defence is only an excuse. It is something I would use with the minister as an argument because the government seems to give consideration to this type of argument. If we developed our resources in that area we would increase our secondary development, because we would be serving the communities and the industries which would develop from the use of the natural resources. This would carry far more weight with the people of northern Ontario and I think the people of Canada in general than anything else.

This proposed development has been a political football. It has been kicked around for a long time. I have been there; I have looked at the terrain. I am no engineer. I do not know whether it is feasible or not, but I do know this. If the port is feasible it would do a great deal for the people of northern Ontario. It would mean new life for Kirkland Lake and for all the towns along the Ontario Northland Railway. It would add new life to the agricultural development which is taking place in the little clay belt. It would mean a tremendous development program in probably the largest undeveloped agricultural area in Canada today, the great clay belt which covers nearly all of Cochrane north. In my opinion all these things would take place if a port is feasible and could be developed at Moosonee.

The survey which is being done under the direction of the minister's department is of such importance that it will give guidance toward the development of the resources of northern Ontario for many years to come. If it is at all possible to develop a seaport in northern Ontario, then it should be developed and the minister should give not only his assistance and his guidance but his whole-hearted support. I see the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his seat, I do not know whether an opportunity has been afforded to him so early in his term of office to visit the area of northern Ontario of which I am speaking, but if he does visit it I am sure he will be impressed with the resources that are available in that area. This was part of his predecessor's vision. It is a part of the vision that is possible of realization. It is part of the vision that is feasible. It is quite within the realm of development in the next few years as the kind of community that his predecessor spoke of, namely development much farther north.

What will be done hinges on the reply of the minister. I hope he will find his way clear to give consideration to this development at this time. The people of northern Ontario are frightened at the situation which is developing. They see their basic industry, gold and silver mining, reaching the stage where most mining companies are nearing the end of the properties they are now working. They have not been able to obtain any assurance from the government that there will be an increase in the price of their product, so this development is a vital neccessity. If they are to plan for a constructive future they are going to have to take into consideration the availability of a market not only south from their communities but north as well.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, there is much I should like to say about the minister's estimates in this committee, but given to brevity as I am I shall have to put in capsule form some of my thoughts about what the minister has done in the area which I have the honour to represent. We are very pleased with the continuing major programs in the Wood islands area, which has become a very important point in our transportation link with the province of Nova Scotia. If, as we hope, a new boat is placed in that run there is no reason why there should not be night service, and the Department of Public Works would be called upon to do even more in the way of providing facilities.

The hon. member for Timiskaming spoke about housing. We in Prince Edward Island are just beginning to take advantage of some of the federal opportunities in the housing field, and we look forward to most helpful developments along this line.

A project very close to our hearts at the present time is the construction of a new railway wharf, as we call it, at Charlottetown. The present one is being overtaxed by the increase in shipping which has come about in recent years in Prince Edward Island. At the present time our trade, especially with the northern ports along the St. Lawrence, is expanding greatly.

In Prince Edward Island we are looking forward to a great celebration in 1964. Many people, we hope, will be coming to Charlottetown by boat, and I hope the minister's new wharf will be completed at that time.

I listened with interest the other night as the hon. member for Halifax spoke about an event that took place there nearly 100 years ago. I might say, of course, that the event he spoke of was a mere postscript to the Charlottetown conference of 1864 which planned the confederation of this great country. The Minister of Public Works is involved now, however, in that question which down through the years has been the most important political and economic question to the people of Prince Edward Island. I refer to a transportation link between our province and the mainland, between Borden and Cape Tormentine.

It was this very question of transportation which assumed major importance in the confederation negotiations of 1873, and the province of Prince Edward Island exacted from the dominion government a guarantee of continuous and efficient communication. There has been much discussion about this in the years that have passed. In 1903, for instance, for 40 days and 40 nights nobody travelled to Prince Edward Island. No mail came or left, and when the Prince Edward Island members eventually got to Ottawa they had something to say about this situation. In 1907, from three o'clock in the afternoon of one day until one o'clock the following morning, the subject of Prince Edward Island transportation was before this chamber.

The Minister of Public Works need have no fear that we shall discuss it that long on this occasion, but he has become involved in this historically significant, politically potent and economically vital factor because of the survey for the causeway. I suppose he would hardly expect me to be on my feet for any length of time without mentioning the causeway. I should like to take this opportunity now to say what I have said to him privately, how much the people of Prince Edward Island appreciate the visit by his very able and competent deputy minister, General Young, who came to Charlottetown about a year ago, spoke to a group of citizens there and gave a most excellent and lucid report on the causeway survey up to that time.

We are very anxious that this matter be pressed forward with all the speed possible having in mind the tremendous technological and scientific considerations which must be involved in a project of such magnitude and such originality. We realize that it is a tremendous undertaking. At one time we were hearing stories about remedial measures that must be taken with respect to various parts of the shore line on the south shore of Prince Edward Island. Indeed, at one time I heard that one area which would be destined for inundation was the area around the very beautiful community of Victoria which happens to be my home town and birthplace. In this instance I had no desire to become a postdiluvian survivor. However, we learn from the reports so far made that this matter has been dealt with and the problem has been taken in stride.

I was tremendously impressed a while ago when I went to the national research council and saw the model study. I knew this was an engineering project of great magnitude but to see it visibly before me, to have it explained by some of the finest engineers not only in Canada but in other parts of the world as well, was a most valuable educative opportunity. We in Prince Edward Island may sometimes be regarded as impatient about the causeway survey. We are quite aware that great sums have been expended and much research has been done. If, however, the Minister of Transport will provide us with another new car ferry to replace the Prince Edward Island, this will contribute to an abatement of our impatience but not to the lessening of our interest or our desire for this up-to-date communication link.

When the time comes I think it will be easy to prove the economic feasibility of the causeway. As one looks at the tremendously rising cost of ferries he will see that the demand for service will require more and more boats, and the more boats that are put in service the higher the cost will rise. With the development of a land link between our province and the mainland, one could predict that with the increasing traffic the unit costs would go down.

That there is an extensive increase in traffic I need hardly point out. As late as 1943 we had coming to Prince Edward Island in one year 9,539 automobiles. In 1960 this had risen to 171,540. There is every indication that the season ahead of us will be our finest tourist season yet. As more and more people learn the glories of our province we can predict that on an ever ascending scale we shall have people wanting to get to Prince Edward Island and sad to have to leave it. Therefore we will require the most up-to-date transportation link possible.

I believe that the most up-to-date link will be a causeway. We realize the magnitude of the project. While at times we may be impatient, our impatience will be abated, as I say, if we have a new boat. I know that the minister and the officials who are working with him will want to make no mistake. We got quite a shaking in Prince Edward Island last winter. It was the worst winter we have undergone since 1903 or 1905. There is some uncertainty as to which was the worst. There is still some ice not too far removed from the gulf area. The heavy formation of ice which remained there month after month would certainly have to be one of the factors, and an obvious factor, in the consideration of building this tremendous and imaginative link of our province with the mainland.

I am convinced of the seriousness of the study being undertaken. I am convinced of its magnitude, although as a layman I would not pretend that I understand all the ramifications. I know the minister will persevere in this effort, and that every possible avenue will be explored in examining the economic and engineering feasibility of this project. I do not suppose we could have it ready for 1964 for our celebration, so we might be content to wait for the other confederation celebration in 1967.

There is much more I might say about the initiative the minister has demonstrated in his department which has meant so much to the people in my province, but I am content to rest my case on the causeway at this moment. I know the minister has heard a great deal about the causeway from hon. members from Prince Edward Island, and no doubt the hon. lady from that province who recently joined us will present her views to the minister shortly.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring up a matter that is of great interest to the hon. member for Niagara Falls and to myself, having to do with the deepening of that part of the Welland river between Port Robinson and Chippawa on the Niagara river. In years gone by this part of the Welland river formed part of the Welland canal and therefore was navigable. Today it is filled up, and I doubt that even small barges could navigate this part of the river.

I have received many representations recommending this. Recently I received representations in this respect from the township of Crowland, copies of which I have sent to the minister. In years past when Niagara Falls was part of my riding I received representations from the chamber of commerce of that city and from different plants in the area. I might say that the Welland river crosses under the Welland ship canal at Welland through an aqueduct. For some miles the Welland river and the Welland canal run closely parallel.

Some years ago representatives of the Niagara Falls chamber of commerce came to Ottawa and proposed the construction of a dock at Port Robinson which would serve both the Welland river and the Welland canal. In other words, these two streams are sufficiently close that the same dock could serve both of them. If one were constructed goods could be unloaded from boats in the Welland canal to ships on the Welland river and vice versa.

As I have indicated, this part of the Welland river was at one time part of the Welland canal. When the canal was first built it ran from Port Dalhousie to Port Robinson. There was a lockage into the Welland river. In later years, of course, a cut was dredged from Port Robinson to Port Colborne and the Welland river was deserted as far as navigation was concerned. There are a number of plants situated along this river at the present time. I have been told that these would make use of waterborne traffic. This area is an excellent location for the settlement of industry.

In making representations to the government concerning the dock the chamber of commerce presented an outline of an ideal situation, namely to have a lockage between the Welland canal and the Welland river at Port Robinson. At the time the representations were made we were told that the government did not have any money. I suppose it is accurate to say that the government has less money today that it had then. It is therefore perhaps futile to press for this lockage project at this time. I would, however, urge the minister to look into the situation with a view to bringing about conditions under which we might have navigation in this part of the Welland river.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourbonnais: Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes at my disposal, I should like to deal with the trans-Canada highway which runs through my constituency.

Last January, I stated publicly that the building of the trans-Canada highway by way of Ile aux Tourtes would cost from $9 to $15 million more than the route proposed previously through Ile Perrot and Dorion.

At that time, neither plans nor specifications had yet been drawn up to enable the provincial minister of highways, the Hon. Bernard Pinard, to submit specific estimates for the new route going through Ile aux Tourtes. Therefore, in order to have this change in route approved by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), in Ottawa, Mr. Pinard sent him a telegram which reads as follows:

(Text):

Following the information given to your Mr. Williams, assistant deputy minister, and to your Mr. G. T. Clarke, concerning the route of the trans-Canada highway at the western end of Montreal island could you wire me immediately your authorization to announce officially the new route which is to go through Ile aux Tourtes instead of Ile Perrot. This will help me very much in the preparation of my estimates for the next fiscal year. The change recommended in the route may save your government several hundred thousands of dollars.

(Translation):

So the reason put forward by Hon. Mr. Pinard to have the route changed, was to enable the federal government to make substantial savings.

A minister of the Quebec provincial government who defends the interests of the federal government! That is unique.

Last January 17, before the change in the route was made public, I telephoned the Hon. Rene Levesque, the Minister of Public Works for the province of Quebec who is responsible for the construction of bridges.

I told him that if he wanted to build a bridge between the island of Montreal and the Vaudreuil-Soulanges riding by going through Ile aux Tourtes, he would have to secure beforehand the authorization from the federal departments of public works and transport.

I added that such an authorization could be obtained—

Mr. Walker: Would you be so kind as to speak louder?

(Text):

I have asked the hon. member to move over. We are experiencing difficulty in hearing him.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourbonnais: When I phoned the Hon. Rene Levesque at Quebec on January 17 last, I told him that, if it was his intention to have a bridge built over the Ottawa river between the island of Montreal and Ile aux Tourtes, he would have to get permission or authorization from the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport, in Ottawa, for the simple reason that the Ottawa river is a navigable river.

At that moment, the provincial government thought that, if the bridge was built there, a causeway could be erected at the eastern end and another one from Ile aux Tourtes, which would have considerably reduced the length of the bridge.

I pointed out then to Mr. Levesque that such a project would bring dangers of flood from the Prairies river as well as from the Mille Iles river. Moreover it would have an influence on the water level in Montreal harbour, while diverting the water from the Ottawa river.

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is what I told the Hon. Rene Levesque on January 17 last for the sole purpose of giving him a good piece of advice so that he would not look foolish in making the statements he intended to make.

He replied that I did not know what I was talking about, that I was no engineer and that it was his business.

A few days later, it was announced that the route would go through Iles aux Tourtes instread of Iles Perrot. On the first of February last, I made a public statement which appeared a few days afterward in La Presse.

In that letter, I gave some particulars on the additional work which the new route would involve and it is only following that article that borings were undertaken by the minister of public works of the province of Quebec, on the Ottawa river.

It is since then also that work on the trans-Canada highway has been stopped, that is to say plans have not been drawn up, specifications are not ready, and I think that the minister will admit that work on the trans-Canada highway in the Vaudreuil-Soulanges district will not start this year, precisely because the route was changed, that the Ile aux Vaches route, which had been recognized on November 28 last when the federal and the provincial governments signed an agreement with regard to the trans-Canada highway was abandoned. Moreover when that route was changed, the data or recommendations of certain engineers in the province of Quebec were found not to be in accordance with the facts.

With regard to the Ile aux Tourtes route, it was discovered that the bottom on which piles could be erected is at 40, 60 and even 80 feet below the water-level, whereas for the Ile aux Vaches route, the solid ground which could carry the piles, is found at about eight to 10 feet below the water-level.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to hold up the house any longer with this matter, but as the federal government has agreed with the province to settle the issue of the trans-Canada highway, and as an amount of $22 million is now available to the province of Quebec for the building of that highway, and as the worst traffic problem in the province of Quebec, outside Montreal, is precisely found between Ile Perrot and Dorion, I think it is imperative that the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec get the work started on the trans-Canada highway in the area I represent.

Recently, the provincial government offered to take over the Soulanges canal. It promised certain developments for sportsmen and fishermen in the area. But so long as the problem of the trans-Canada highway has not been solved in the constituency of Vaudreuil-Soulanges, I think it would be unwise and indeed would show a lack of foresight to carry out developments for the benefit of sportsmen while the major traffic problem remains unsolved, because development will be impossible in my constituency until it is solved. I therefore urge the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works to do their utmost to persuade the provincial government or the provincial minister of highways to get the work started as soon as possible on the trans-Canada highway and on the bridges, whether it be at Ile aux Tourtes or Ile aux Vaches.

[Mr. Bourbonnais.]

(Text):

Miss LaMarsh: I am rising in order, first, to add some remarks to those of the hon. member for Welland with respect to a proposal which for some years has been placed before the department, as to the deepening of the Welland river and ultimately locking it into the Welland canal system in order to provide a navigable waterway into the heartland of the area which I have the honour to represent.

Along the Welland river, which at present is a broad and pleasant stream but of no assistance to industry in the area, there are several major industries. One has been located within the past year within the riding of Welland; I refer to the Ford of Canada glass plant. In addition, there is a very large plant which was built by this government during the war years and was later acquired by North American Cyanamid, Limited. There are two other major industries, and all these industries have a substantial transportation problem.

While the Niagara area is perhaps the shining diamond in the golden horseshoe, as southern Ontario has been referred to, not only because of its natural wonders but also because of its industrial development, it is hampered considerably in its industrial development by the lack of transportation facilities. It has not benefited from the development of the seaway, and under the present situation it cannot benefit from it. However, if there were to be constructed a locking device to lock in the Welland river and the Welland canal, this would open cheap water transportation to major industries located along the canal by permitting them to get into the St. Lawrence seaway system.

It is my understanding that over the years representations have been made to the minister and his predecessor by municipalities both in the riding of Niagara Falls and the riding of Welland, and also that representations have been made by chambers of commerce and interested individuals. So far as I am aware, no study has ever been made on the governmental level as to the cost of such a development. But since I know that the minister responsible for this department is particularly interested in the development of southern Ontario, and since I know that he is a part of a government who have confessed that their greatest interest is in the expansion of this country, I suggest that a study might be made in the department with a view to assisting this area by the development of this proposal.

There are other matters in the riding of Niagara Falls which have already come to the attention of the minister. One of these was raised by my predecessor in the years 1957 and 1958; and during the hiatus of a few months last year when my riding was not represented, the hon. member for Lincoln was kind enough to continue the matter until I was elected. I refer to the representations which have been made to the Department of Public Works by the municipality of Crystal Beach. Crystal Beach is a village located on the lake. It is perhaps one of the greatest tourist attractions of a man made nature in my riding. It is a small village in the wintertime but develops greatly in the summertime. I am informed that the banks in the area have estimated that something in the order of a quarter of a million dollars in United States currency comes into the country as a result of operations there.

Within the past year or so the municipality has made great exertions to extend its facilities for tourists, particularly tourists from other countries. Over the past two years representations have been made to the Department of Public Works with a view to having a breakwater installed in order that a small boat harbour or marina might be constructed at Crystal Beach. In this particular area there are many very fine sand beaches and there is a great deal of small boating. However, nowhere in the area is there a location where they may harbour.

Representations have been made over the past few years, and most recently over the past winter, to the department. They have suggested that a consultant be called in to clear the matter of sewage disposal in the area. The municipality has constructed a new road right down to water level and has made strong representations, as I said, under the aegis of the then warden of the county of Welland, a noted friend of the government, and also through the hon. member for Lincoln in order to have this marina brought about. If the minister is interested in the development of what I think has become the third greatest industry in Canada, namely the tourist industry, I suggest that for a very small expenditure on behalf of the people of Canada a very large return can be obtained by assistance in the construction of this breakwater and small boats harbour.

I can tell the minister that I will be making representations from time to time on this matter. I have photographs which I am sure are already in his files. There will be delegations here from time to time. We intend to press the minister for this installation. I would hope that he would see the benefit that would accrue to the area and to the country generally from a small expenditure.

I venture to make these representations to the minister because he is known as the most sweet tempered, most considerate and most thoughtful man in the House of Commons. I think this is demonstrated by the fact that in the public works estimates for the whole province of Ontario for this year, Niagara Falls rejoices in having the second largest commitment.

I shall have some remarks to make later when other items are called. However, I wish to congratulate the minister on having demonstrated so clearly that party bias or partisanship is not at all a factor in his make-up. Notwithstanding the fact that Niagara Falls riding has been well represented in the past by those of my political persuasion, the minister has seen fit to put in his estimates this year the sum of something in excess of one third of a million dollars expenditure in my area. For this the minister has my gratitude.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to extend to the minister my sincere thanks for the tremendous assistance he has provided me and my constituents, especially in the Springhill area, by seeing that they are to be given a new federal building, thereby indicating to the people of that town that they certainly have not been forgotten by the people in Ottawa, especially those in the minister's department, and that we believe they will continue to progress and attain a stable economy, which they certainly deserve.

I should also like to thank the minister for the tremendous assistance he has provided the fishermen in my area through harbour improvements that are now under way at Spencer's Island, Parrsboro and Wallace, and which are to be under way shortly at Malagash, Joggins and Port Greville. There is no doubt that these improved harbour facilities will be of tremendous value to the fishermen in their work.

May I at this time bring to the minister's attention the need for a new fishermen's wharf at Pugwash. I know the minister has given favourable consideration to this matter, but has been delayed awaiting the decision of the salt mines there as to the loading of salt on vessels which will then take this product to other areas of Canada and the United States. I would, however, urge upon the minister the need for making a decision with regard to the fishermen's wharf. Certainly the fishermen of this booming community are in need of better facilities and I feel they should have them at the earliest possible date.

I should now like to turn to another matter of great importance to all people in the maritime provinces. I refer to the Chignecto canal and the report which the people are awaiting in this regard. I know there were delays in establishing the committee that was to consider the reports prepared for the Chignecto canal committee. In this regard I wish to commend the minister for his attitude on the selection of personnel for this committee. Certainly it would not have been right or proper to have people who had already committed themselves to this project then being placed on the committee to determine whether or not it was feasible.

I do not think the reports when completed could have been given that regard that will now be possible with the civil servants who are there to assess this matter in an impartial manner and determine whether or not the construction of the canal is feasible. I do, however, want to point out to the minister that we are very anxious to see this report completed and provided to the public in order that they might decide whether or not this is the type of project that should be proceeded with immediately. I personally am most anxious to see whether the report that was prepared for the Chignecto canal committee is sound and whether the proposals set forth therein can be confirmed by this committee.

If it should be that the findings of this interdepartmental committee of officials of the federal government and the government of New Brunswick do not confirm those set forth in the reports prepared for the canal committee, there must be a reappraisal of the whole matter. However, if the earlier reports are confirmed I feel that we must give very serious consideration to the immediate construction of the canal. In this regard I would certainly appreciate the minister's comments on where the committee's work now stands and just when we will have a report available on this very important and urgent matter.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I just have a few brief general remarks to make at this time, one of them having to do with the total amount of money estimated to be expended this year compared with the estimates of this department for other years. I refer to the 1957-58 estimates. These are the main estimates, and I am not taking into account the various supplementary estimates that have been introduced during these particular years. In 1957-58 we discover that the main estimates of the department totalled $145 million. I am just speaking in round figures rather than giving the exact amount. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the estimates for 1958-59 had perhaps something to do with an election that was also in the offing. For that year we find this department boosted its estimated expenditures to $172 million. This is not taking into account statutory items, which also increase and change from time to time.

In the fiscal year 1959-60 the estimates remained substantially the same. There was a slight increase, to $173 million. Then in the last fiscal year, 1960-61, they undoubtedly felt the influence of Mr. Coyne in this department. As least, if we can take at face value what the Minister of Finance said the other day, it is undoubtedly Mr. Coyne's fault that we had a decrease in the estimates of this department to $147 million, practically back to the figure for 1957-58. You will also remember, Mr. Chairman, that this was undoubtedly connected with those large blue pencils which the Minister of Finance passed out to all the departments of government when he wanted to balance the budget, and in fact I think initially balanced it, at least on paper, to within $12 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, he was going to be $12 million over.

Mr. Howard: Yes, he would have a few dollars in his pocket. Of course subsequent events proved just how inept and wrong was the Minister of Finance, when he came along for the last fiscal year with five separate sets of supplementary estimates and we found that the original $12 million that he had estimated would be cash in the pocket, as it were, really ended up as a great indebtedness. I am quite sure that the activities of Mr. Coyne caused this curtailment and foolishness on the part of the Minister of Finance, who is thinking in terms of a balanced budget primarily to paint a picture of economic development in this nation. We are now considering the estimates of public works for the present fiscal year.

Mr. Pickersgill: The year of expansion.

Mr. Howard: Yes, for the year of expansion. We find that the amount to be expended by the Department of Public Works has increased by $20 million over the amount for the last fiscal year. Next Tuesday evening, when the Minister of Finance presents his long awaited budget, perhaps we will learn something more about the so-called expansion which is to take place. I am not sure how much faith we can place in that budget, in view of the past mistakes and blunders which have been made. However, there is an indication in the increase in the estimates of this department, to be expended on various projects, totalling $166 million, that some expansion will take place, and one can draw all kinds of conclusions regarding the necessity of this type of program.

I have very often considered the operations of the departments of public works, federal and provincial, as election operations, because these departments often delay the commencement of projects in various areas until such time as they coincide with an election. In this way the government is able to create the impression in the minds of the voters in the country that it is stepping into the economic field and providing measures of assistance, and that all one has to do is vote for that party and the building, wharf or whatever the project happens to be will be commenced.

I have also considered these departments of public works as kind of pork barrel departments. I do not indicate that is the case in this instance, but in the past I have considered this department of public works as being one that can be dipped into from time to time for political purposes. Perhaps the activities which have taken place recently in the province of Quebec will be the last of this kind that we will see.

The Department of Public Works is engaged in a field of activity which economists have recently classified as social capital activities; that is, public money being expended in regard to such things as roads, bridges, federal buildings, docks, shipping facilities and the like. In this regard we had an announcement from this government some time ago to the effect that in order to assist the economic conditions of various depressed areas, it was necessary to engage in what is classified as double depreciation to attract the establishment of industries. In considering this field of social capital activity one finds that the amount of social capital is inadequate and its use in many respects is obsolescent, particularly in view of the rapidly expanding urban areas.

> We are in a continuing danger of choking out economic growth with congestion, pollution, the development of slums, and with the effects of deficiencies in vital public services and amenities. The bottlenecks appear to lie in the methods of financing, in lack of planning, and in the difficulties of achieving effective co-operation between the three levels of government.

That statement appears in the fifth report of the special committee of the Senate on manpower and employment, which can be found in the Senate Hansard of June 14, at page 876. I use it to succinctly point out the feeling which exists in many part of this country that there is a great deal to be desired in respect to activities in this field of so-called social capital.

The Department of Public Works expends a great deal of money in this field of social capital activity. However, it was the Senate of this country which commenced a study in regard to unemployment because this government failed to give that question proper consideration, and, in fact, even rejected suggestions last session that there was a necessity for considering the unemployment situation. The committee of that other place felt that the role of government in this field of social capital investment was in many respects obsolescent because of the development of slums, congestion, pollution and the like.

I suggest that we review the expenditures to be made by this department with a view to determining what effect these expenditures are liable to have upon our economy. Surely the government must realize—it has in past years, as has been indicated by explanations given to this house in glowing terms regarding the expenditure of moneys for housing development to meet unemployment situations —what effect the expenditure of this money in all the activities carried on by this department has had on the growth and expansion of our economy. I think we should analyse this situation to see what effect the spending of these moneys has on our economy, and to find out whether that committee on manpower and employment is accurate in its analysis of the situation.

As I have said, the report of that committee suggests that the bottlenecks appear to lie in the methods of financing, in the lack of planning, and in the difficulties of achieving effective co-operation among the three levels of government. I do believe there has been a lack in planning in this regard. I think this was illustrated by the Minister of Finance when he brought down his balanced budget last year, which indicated that he had slashed left and right with his pencil, curtailing the expenditures of the Department of Public Works to the point they were in 1957-58, without any regard whatsoever to the effect upon the economy and without any regard to the necessity and desire of getting into the field of expansion of social capital investment.

This lack of planning appears again this year, indicating that we were in error last year in accepting the advice of the Minister of Finance, because the economic situation worsened rather than improved. We now find there is an expansion in the proposed expenditures of the Department of Public Works, which I suggest has been adopted to correct the situation. I suggest we should explore the activities of the Department of Public Works particularly with regard to the co-operation which exists, or does not exist, between that department and the other two levels of government. I suggest we should search for methods of attracting industry to depressed areas so as to bolster the economy as much as possible. We have entered this field to a limited extent by the creation of double depreciation, although I feel this will not in itself be sufficient. I agree with the statement contained in the report of the committee of that other place, which reads as follows:

> The consequences of technological changes and the effects of declining industries are so large that little can be accomplished with marginal and small scale remedies.

This is what the Senate manpower employment committee said about the double depreciation effort of the government. In fact they made another reference, as follows:

> Sporadic incursions into this problem and random flourishes are not going to bring results.

I think that is what we have with respect to this government and this department, sporadic incursions and random flourishes in all fields of activity in which this government engages, and the end result is not very beneficial to the economy or to respect for government or anything else. It breeds a degree of contempt for a government that has not the foresight to look past the end of its nose, and then when it suddenly discovers it has made an error it engages in an attempt to blacken the name of a public servant, as happened a few days ago, and lay all the blame on him.

I should now like to turn to the question of the trans-Canada highway, which comes under the Minister of Public Works also and which is in part a social capital investment. If my memory serves me, the original intention was to have the trans-Canada highway completed in 1956. By a subsequent change it was supposed to be completed by the end of December of last year. It is now expected that it will be completed by the end of December, 1963. In fact we have had three target dates for the completion of the trans-Canada highway. We have also had three or four different changes and increases in the amount of money which the federal government may contribute toward the construction of the trans-Canada highway. The amount has been increased from $150 million to $250 million and then to $350 million, and now I believe parliament has authorized that up to $400 million may be contributed toward the cost of the highway. We have also had an alteration in the formula from the original 50-50 basis to a 50-50 plus 90 per cent of 10 per cent of the mileage respecting the national parks.

The report of the trans-Canada highway for last year is a bit more cagily drawn up, and I imagine this reflects the attitude of the minister. In previous years the report was pretty definite and said that the highway would be completed by a certain time, and so on. I notice that the report is not quite that definite now, but speaks in terms of hopes and expectations for the coming year. I think this is more correctly aligned to the facts than the reports of previous years.

The trans-Canada highway itself, as should have been expected when it was originally conceived, has run into some formidable problems. One can build highways in the province of Saskatchewan much quicker and at much less cost than in some parts of British Columbia. I am sure a highway can be built in Manitoba at much less cost than along the rocky shores of Newfoundland, or in some parts of northern Ontario. All these different geographical conditions contributed greatly to the delays, postponements, extensions of time, increases in the amounts of money and changes in formula that were found necessary in order to complete the trans-Canada highway and make it a first-class coast to coast paved route.

In the four western provinces, with the exception of one part of British Columbia, we appear to be rushing toward the completion of the highway. On page 4 of the report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960 some figures are given. I am sure these figures have changed since the publication of this report and the minister will undoubtedly indicate, or perhaps already has indicated in detail what the situation is in those provinces. I would point out that in the four provinces there is a total of—I had the total here, Mr. Chairman, but I cannot find it. In any event, of the total mileage in the four western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, only 42 miles are indicated as not passable. There are 164 miles which are not paved and 152 of those are in British Columbia, the most notably difficult section being through the Rogers pass area.

The minister's predecessor, who is now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when discussing this question a couple of years ago said in effect that it was not the intention of the government to abandon the contracts or agreements with respect to the trans-Canada highway once the highway had been completed. I read into that that it was at least the intention of the minister's predecessor to extend the present system or agreements respecting the trans-Canada highway to other east-west highways. I hope this is still the situation so far as the present minister is concerned, because in northern British Columbia we—and when I say "we" I include everyone in the area, boards of trade, the unions, chambers of commerce, community associations and individuals alike—have been concerned with the development, building, completion and reconstruction of highway 16 and the extension of that highway eastward from Prince George to Jasper in Alberta, in order that we might have in that area an east-west access to our friends in the prairie provinces instead of having to go north to Fort St. John and Dawson Creek, although they are delightful places to visit, or south to some other part of the province.

If we are thinking in terms of this social capital and the need to engage in this sort of thing, now would be the time to do it; for if ever it was appropriate for the federal government to make overtures, as it were, or to get in touch with at least the four western provinces—and I mention those only because I am more familiar with them than I am with central Canada or the east in so far as highway building requirements are concerned—and indicate that the federal government is willing to participate financially with them in the construction of a so-called second trans-Canada highway, or a northern trans-Canada highway, running east-west along the general latitudes which cover Prince Rupert, Prince George and the like, this is the time.

There is one more reason for this, Mr. Chairman. It is not only the fact that we like to have fine black-top highways there, instead of gravel and earth highways and so on. There is also the question of our relationship with the United States and the state of Alaska, because they also are becoming more involved in tourism and in travel through their particular part of the country, and especially along highway 16 out to Prince Rupert. There is a possibility that within a year or a year and a half the Alaska government will build a so-called marine highway, or will build a number of ferries which will in fact carry automobiles and passengers to the ports of the Alaska Panhandle. Because the southern starting point of the service will be Prince Rupert, which is also the terminus of highway 16, I think it is most desirable that the federal government participate financially with respect to highway 16 as soon as possible. I should like the minister to indicate what is happening in this regard.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to be able to give the minister the time he deserves, but I only have five minutes to bring up two points that affect his department. I asked a question which was answered in the house on February 15, 1961, as found on page 2062 of Hansard. My question was:

> How are the design contracts or awards given to architects by the Department of Public Works?

I should like the minister to note this question fairly closely, because I think I got a poor answer. The second part was:

> Has the department received or noted any communications or views since 1957 which have been critical of the procedure in awarding commissions to architects?

This is the answer I received to these two questions:

> Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of the question is, on approval of the minister and authorization of treasury board. In answer to part 2, no such communications have been received by the department.

I want to draw the attention of the minister to a magazine that I would assume some of his senior officials would look at. It is the Canadian Architect. I think it is the main magazine in the field in Canada; and in the issue of December, 1960, there is an article entitled "Architecture's Big Clients". Then there is another article entitled "Five Years of Public Works". If they do not express views that are critical of the assignment of architects' commissions in the Department of Public Works, then I cannot read correctly. I should like to put one brief paragraph on the record to indicate the nature of the criticism. It reads as follows:

> What is significant about this whole study is that the situation outlined in our April, 1957 issue, a relatively few architects receiving an extremely large proportion of the money that the Department of Public Works has to spend on architects' fees, continues to exist. We would certainly not press for D.P.W. jobs to be allotted right down the list of firms, alphabetically, one by one; nor do we deny that D.P.W. may well find it more convenient, or more satisfying, or more anything else, to work with one architect rather than another. We simply wonder if the department has really found the best way of awarding commissions, in view of the large amounts of public money it disburses and the fairly large number of competent architects who would like to do buildings for the government and are not doing so now.
> All other considerations aside, a public building costing three or four million dollars or more is surely a proper subject for national or provincial competition. The department would certainly avoid a lot of criticism if such large commissions were awarded in this way; to our knowledge, only one of the 50 big buildings was so commissioned, and it was not built according to the winning design even then. We strongly recommend, therefore, that the department hold competitions for its big buildings, and we will continue to make this recommendation as long as the situation detailed here continues.

I do feel that those are certainly views that should have come to the attention of the department and the people in charge of architects' commissions. They certainly set up a criticism and give an analysis of which I would have thought the minister and the deputy minister would have been fully aware. I should like the minister to explain why this particular view was missed, and what reaction he and his officials have to these opinions expressed in what I understand is a reputable magazine. If it is, then I think this is a fairly serious criticism which should be answered.

The other point I want to bring to the attention of the minister is quite simple. I should like the assurance from him that the department is doing its best to police the fair wage section of the contracts that exist between it and its contractors. At the lakehead we have a higher wage level than other parts of the country because of the pulp and paper industry. When outside contractors bid on public works jobs in our part of the country, and they quite often do so, they are not prepared to pay the going rate in the area. I have found that the fair wage office of the Department of Labour has been remiss in keeping these matters up to date, and we have a succession of disputes and difficulties.

The other factor is that these contractors, because they cannot get tradesmen in our area to work for the rates they offer, bring in men from outside. Having regard to these two aspects of public works contracts, I should like the minister to explain to us just how they are policed and how much vigour is put into the policing of them. The word "police" may be unfortunate, but I think the minister knows what I mean.

As I said when I started, I regret that I cannot give the minister the attention I should like to give him. I wanted to deal with this loving article about him where he is rated as the scrappiest man in the cabinet. We have a sort of Jekyll and Hyde personality here. In Rosedale he is Uncle Dave, yet he says that here he finds it hard to control his bitter tongue. I assume that some time during the discussion of these estimates, Mr. Chairman, we will see something other than the Uncle Dave aspect.

Mr. Walker: I should simply like to remark that the hon. member may have had some experience with bitter tongues during his encounter with Donald Gordon this morning in the railway committee.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

[Mr. Fisher.]

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, the mood of the day appears to be more serene, and the minister has not opened the door to matters of the past, so I hope we will be able to discuss the present and the future without any interference.

Yesterday, I heard the minister state in his opening remarks that he expected the work to start soon on the new national library. I am very glad to hear it. Indeed, the need for it has been felt for some time. I realize that such things cannot be done overnight. Paris was not built in a day, nor will Ottawa.

A national library is a necessity in a capital city which has two universities. The students in those institutions need to have places where they can do research work and prepare for the future.

When I attended the University of Ottawa, students could go to the Carnegie library. Despite its limitations, this library was of great service, and enabled us to complete the subjects taught to us and even to learn things not included in the curriculum.

That is where I learned that under the French regime, in Canadian history, the greatest man who ever came to Canada from France was Jean Talon. Perhaps he did not have the glamour of Frontenac or Champlain, but he was a man of peace.

Moreover, he did not come to Canada to get rich in the fur trade. He came to build up a civilization and to ensure the welfare of his people.

He was the first to organize a great settlement scheme, and a great network of roads. It was thanks to his action that thriving communities sprung up between Quebec and Montreal.

This modest library, therefore, was of great benefit to us. The new national library will have an even greater impact because it will provide a means for more elaborate research.

We must not forget that in the final analysis, the purpose of a college education is to create personal working habits and to open up vistas in more than one field. Former students, having become adults, will find new sources of wisdom in this library.

Buildings erected in the vicinity of the parliament buildings should not detract from their style. There are several such buildings that we can admire, and they give Ottawa real architectural beauty.

This is also true of Quebec city, whose buildings are of a distinctive style.

In my view, the design of buildings in Ottawa should harmonize with the main building, namely the House of Commons. Their design should therefore reflect something of the past, and should not be too modern.

The customs building, on MacKenzie street, for instance, is rather attractive; the Chateau Laurier also fits in well with the parliament buildings.

Union station, however, is a monstrosity. If it is the intention to build something along those lines, let us at least hope it will be built away from the centre where it cannot be seen by visitors.

The confederation building, the justice building, the supreme court building, the veterans affairs and the trade and commerce buildings, are all very fine. As they are federal buildings, I hope that in co-operation with the national capital commission the Minister of Public Works will see to it that this style we like is continued.

However, in the building field, I note that there are about 15 projects which will be carried out within the coming years, and not a single one is to be erected on the Quebec side, in the district marked out for the national capital district. Yet, some buildings were erected miles away from the centre of the city, whereas, on the Quebec side, in Gatineau and Hull constituencies, there are marvellous sites very close to the center of the national capital and the parliament buildings which are not being used. Buildings need not necessarily be erected in my riding; there are excellent sites in Gatineau.

Part of the district is now being used as a national park. But there are other magnificent sites where federal buildings could be erected.

Why is construction of national buildings on the Quebec side being delayed? I do not, and cannot understand it. I hope the minister will try to discuss those things with national capital authorities and with the national capital commission, so that, in the immediate future, some sites might be found on the Quebec side for buildings worthy of our capital which is not limited to the city of Ottawa but comprises an area of about 30 miles. In that 30 mile area, there are possibilities for buildings which would indicate that we too are part of the Dominion of Canada, since our return of June 22, 1960.

I know that the minister has hardly mentioned the subject until now, because it is rather difficult, as there is no adequate bridge for people to cross over to our side of the river. But as the building of a new bridge has been decided, I hope that the minister will be encouraged to put up some new buildings there. Speaking of the bridge, we were informed that agreements had been signed between the province of Ontario, the province of Quebec, the cities of Hull and Ottawa and the federal government. We also learned that engineers have been looking over the situation so as to pick the location and work out the cost of the bridge. But we have not heard anything since. I hope that the minister will be in a position to tell us, in his reply to various questions put to him, if all borings are completed, if the necessary engineering work is on the way, whether it is going to be a high-level or low-level bridge because, as I said in this house, if we are—and the day will come whether we like it or not—to dredge the Ottawa river as the Richelieu river is bound to be dredged, now is the time to plan for that.

No bridge is built for two days, 10 years or 20 years; it is a project which must last even for hundreds of years; then we might as well plan for it right now.

It could be argued that the other bridges are not high enough. Well, if we build another low-level bridge instead of having four or five bridges to raise, there will be five, six or seven.

As I said a while ago I asked for information about that and never got any answer. I hope that we shall be told whether this will be a high-level or a low-level bridge. If the decision is to be in favour of a low-level bridge, perhaps the minister could inform us whether the fact that the Ottawa river is bound to be dredged has been considered, and if so, perhaps he could tell us, in the event that a high-level bridge is to be built how this dredging can be done when we find that the only place where some kind of a harbour could be developed considering the ground level is Hull since the shore on the Ottawa side is too steep. We could also be told on what side the seaway should be extended to reach Deschenes lake, and then Rapide des Chats to continue up north to lake Timiskaming and finally to the French river.

We should be given that information, and if the department has not yet started any survey to that effect, I submit that the time has come to ask the engineers to set up an engineering commission, to look into the best method of deciding not only upon the type and site of the interprovincial bridge but also consider future bridges that are to be built as a result of this Ottawa river development which is bound to happen some day, in 10, 15 or 20 years from now, because no region such as this can be left undeveloped along the Ottawa river between the cities of Hull and Ottawa right down to the Montreal area, as long as it is possible to do so through industrialization which could supply work to thousands of people.

We should also like to know whether it would cost less to build a suspension bridge or whether it would be better to build one on piles. If the bridge is going to be on piles, we should be told to what depth they will be sunk. I have heard it said that on the Ottawa side, the first pile will have to be driven 125 feet below water level because there are 90 feet of water and about 30 feet of soft soil before reaching bedrock.

Those are things we could and should know. If the department has not yet started working on this I hope it will soon get going so that the house may be better informed.

One thing I should like to say about that bridge, is that we have been asking for it for quite a while. As early as 1955, I brought pressure to bear with the then minister of public works and he told me at the time that the bridge could not be built before the parties concerned gave their consent. The governments of Ontario and Quebec and the municipalities of Hull and Ottawa have exchanged correspondence for months, even years. One day, the Quebec premier said to me: If the federal government want bridges, let them build some themselves. In the face of such a negative attitude, it was difficult for us to proceed.

I then asked that the correspondence between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec concerning the bridge be produced; my request was complied with on July 14, 1960. At the time, a letter which the city of Hull had sent to Mr. Diefenbaker on September 24, 1958, was produced. Then, a letter from Mr. Claude Gauthier, secretary to the Prime Minister, addressed to Mr. Leblanc, the Hull city clerk and dated October 1; a letter from mayor Thomas Moncion of Hull sent to Mr. Diefenbaker on January 19, was also tabled at that time; a letter dated February 6, 1959, in which Mr. Claude Gauthier, secretary, replied to mayor Moncion's letter. Then a letter dated March 18 which the Hull city clerk, Mr. Leblanc, sent to Mr. Diefenbaker on behalf of the municipality and with which he enclosed a resolution passed by the municipal council concerning the bridge. There is also the letter which secretary Claude Gauthier wrote to Mr. Leblanc on March 24, 1959, to acknowledge receipt of the resolution. And here is the letter which mayor Armand Turpin wrote to the Prime Minister on February 10, 1960, to stress once more the necessity and urgency of building such a bridge.

[Mr. Caron.]

Here is another letter. On February 29, 1960, His Worship Mayor Turpin received a letter from the Prime Minister's office with regard to the communication he had sent.

On December 13, 1957, Mr. Young, deputy minister of public works, mentioned the possibility of extending Montclair boulevard and the Interprovincial bridge.

On February 10, 1960, there is another letter from Mr. Turpin. I am sorry, I note that it is a translation of a letter written in French by Mr. Turpin. The other documents are only translations.

And in all that correspondence, we find that Quebec authorities were not definitely against the project but did not seem overly interested.

Once again, I asked the minister for some information, which was supplied on April 27, 1961. Here again we have letters, especially one written by Mr. Winters in 1955.

The first motion for production of papers read as follows:

(Text):

A copy of all correspondence, telegrams, contracts, agreements and other documents exchanged between the federal government, the provincial governments of Quebec and Ontario, and the municipal governments of Hull and Ottawa since June 1, 1957, concerning the construction of a bridge over the Ottawa river between the cities of Hull and Ottawa.

The second motion for production of papers referred to—

(Text):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, contracts, agreements and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the provincial government of Quebec, since November 15, 1955, concerning the construction of a bridge over the Ottawa river—

(Translation):

And there we have documents dating prior to the year 1957. As a matter of fact, there is a letter dated September 27, 1955, in which the then minister of public works, the Hon. Mr. Winters, invited the premier of Quebec, Mr. Duplessis, to come and discuss the building of a bridge. On September 30, the premier answered Mr. Winters that he hoped to be in Ottawa soon and to be able to discuss the matter with him.

On October 19, 1955, Mr. Winters wrote again to the Hon. Mr. Duplessis, asking him to meet with those primarily concerned with matter and more particularly with the Ontario premier and the Ottawa and Hull municipal authorities.

On October 31, 1955, Mr. Duplessis informed Mr. Winters by telegram that he had tried to phone him but without success, Mr. Winters being out of town. Mr. Duplessis was advising him he could not attend the meeting but that he would delegate a representative.

On November 10, 1955, the Hon. Mr. Winters sent a very long letter to Mr. Duplessis, giving him a detailed account of the action taken following discussions on the matter of the bridge with representatives of the province of Ontario and the cities of Ottawa and Hull.

On November 15, Mr. Duplessis replied to Mr. Winters thanking him for the information received and saying that he would consider the matter.

On January 13, 1957, Mr. Winters wrote a letter to Mr. Duplessis on all the points discussed since with those interested in the building of the bridge, briefing the premier on the situation.

On February 28, Mr. Winters wrote again to Mr. Duplessis:

(Text):

On November 10, 1956, I advised you that it was proposed to set up a committee to consider the matter of rearranging the approaches to the existing bridges between Ottawa and Hull, and the possible location of an additional bridge, as well as preliminary estimates of cost. An invitation was extended to you to have a representative on this committee.

The committee has now reported and, for your information, I am enclosing a copy of the minutes of their last meeting held December 14, 1956, as well as a copy of the consultant's report in which a recommendation is made for the construction of a new bridge.

I would welcome any comments you might care to make on this proposal.

Yours sincerely,
Robert Winters.

On April 17, Mr. Winters wrote again to the Quebec premier. It was only on April 6, 1960, that a meeting was suggested, that the letter from the present Minister of Public Works was sent to Mr. Barrette who had then replaced Mr. Sauve as leader of the Quebec government; that was in April 1960. This is what the present Minister of Public Works said:

(Text):

My dear Premier:

I wish to refer to your letter of March 22 to Prime Minister Diefenbaker in regard to the above meeting.

I note with pleasure that representatives of the province of Quebec will attend.

I am also writing to the designated representatives of the province of Ontario and the mayors of Hull and Ottawa suggesting that the meeting be held in room 356-S of the House of Commons at 10.00 a.m., on Thursday, April 28, 1960.

Would you please let me know if this is agreeable to you.

(Translation):

And here we have letters and telegrams sent by the present Minister of Public Works to convey his regrets for the delay in settling this problem. In fact, on April 22, 1960, the minister informed Antonio Barrette, premier of Quebec—

(Text):

Regret delay in replying to your letter of April eighth to Prime Minister. Would advise that two cabinet ministers from Ontario as well as mayors of Ottawa and Hull have indicated they will be present. Representation from your cabinet would be most welcome.

Here is another letter from the present Minister of Public Works to Antonio Barrette:

(Text):

On February 24, 1960, the following motion was passed in the House of Commons:

"For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, contracts, agreements"—

(Translation):

It is about the motion for the production of papers which I have in hand now, asking for permission to make certain letters public.

Here is another letter of June 15, 1960.

(Text):

Following your letter re producing correspondence Hull-Ottawa bridge. We have no objection to the production of this correspondence in the House of Commons.

(Translation):

On July 20, 1960, the present Minister of Public Works sent a letter to Mr. Rene Levesque, minister of public works in Quebec, informing him of the steps taken, mentioning the meetings that had taken place and asking him to continue the work already undertaken.

Then, the federal deputy minister of public works wrote Mr. Branchaud, chief engineer with the Quebec highway department, as follows:

(Text):

Reurtel meeting Ottawa-Hull inter provincial bridge will take place Thursday September eight ten a.m. room 238-S House of Commons Ottawa. This information was forwarded to the hon. Mr. Levesque in our letter July twenty as Quebec department of public works was only department represented at April meeting. Mr. Levesque was requested to advise if that time and date was satisfactory and also to forward names of those attending. Please advise—

(Translation):

Then there was another letter and a telegram sent by the present deputy minister to the Quebec minister of public works, Mr. Levesque.

Mr. Marc Picard sent a letter to the present deputy minister of public works:

(Text):

Department of Public Works. Sorry we did not find letter from hon. Walker re meeting Ottawa-Hull bridge for September. Agree meeting on September eight ten o'clock room 238-S House of Commons. Will be present hon. Rene Levesque minister of public works; Herve Gauvin, deputy minister; P. A. Dupuis, chief engineer, and myself. Marc Picard, technical adviser.

(Translation):

There we realize that things start moving. And the exchange of correspondence continues between the minister, the deputy minister and the provincial authorities. There is much activity, much action, because the urgency of that construction is realized.

When I asked for that correspondence and when it was produced, the minister said:

(Text):

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity of adding that Quebec was brought into agreement for the first time on participation in the financing of the bridge by the government of former Premier Barrette.

(Translation):

Even though I looked through all the documents I had, which I had received from the Department of Public Works, I could not find a single letter, telegram or note to substantiate the minister's statement. The only two letters received from Mr. Barrette are the one I read a moment ago authorizing the production of the documents and this one, which was also addressed to the Prime Minister, like the first one, and which reads as follows:

(Text):

Pursuant to my letter dated the 22nd ultimo, I am pleased to inform you that Mr. C. R. Laberge, deputy minister of public works, and Mr. Georges Cote, director of surveys and cadastre services, department of lands and forests, will represent the province of Quebec at the conference to be held in Ottawa for the discussion of the project of a new bridge on the Outaouais river, between Ottawa and Hull.

If this conference should be at the ministerial level, I will delegate a member of the cabinet as my representative.

With my best personal regards, I remain—

(Translation):

And those two letters have been produced after the production of the other documents and not at the time of the first request, which goes back to July 14, 1960; and they had been sent to the Prime Minister in March and April 1960. I cannot understand why they have been added to those documents after their production. But the minister was wrong in saying that the premier of Quebec, Mr. Barrette, had been the first to agree to share financially in this project. I do not criticize Mr. Barrette for not having had the opportunity to do so during his tenure of office, for as soon as he became premier of Quebec, following many changes, it was logical to call an election.

But I cannot accept that he is the one who came to an agreement. Even if the minister says there was an agreement concluded over the phone, that does not constitute an agreement to a financial sharing, because such agreements are not made over the phone. So, I suggest there must be a letter that could be shown to that effect.

I challenge the minister to produce one document which would prove that Premier Barrette was the first one to agree to share financially in the building of that bridge.

I am asking for the actual facts. I am asking for the tabling of documents which could prove that fact. But there is nothing to confirm that Premier Barrette had offered to share financially in the construction of that bridge. Such a statement saying that Premier Barrette was the first to agree to share financially in the construction of the bridge might mislead the population.

(Text):

—I take this opportunity of adding that Quebec was brought into agreement for the first time on participation in the financing of the bridge by the government of former Premier Barrette.

(Translation):

It does not exist. And if there was a telephone conversation note of it should have been taken in order to prove that it had taken place. We do not have to take the minister's or anybody else's word for it.

I have here the documents produced. These are the documents that we should have and I submit that the minister did not have the right to relate facts that I consider inaccurate since they are not borne out by the documents I asked for.

I hope, in spite of all that, that the minister will continue to step up things so that the interprovincial bridge be built before 1967, that is as early as possible, in two or three years maybe, so as to allow not only for a more complete development of the city of Hull, but also of Ottawa. Furthermore, it should be recognized that the bridge is urgently needed. I hope that the minister will shortly be able to give us better news than what we have been given so far.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay in any way the passage of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. However, I should not like to pass up this opportunity of expressing my appreciation to the minister and to his departmental officials. I must add that I can always count on an immediate, prompt and intelligent co-operation on the part of the minister and every member of his staff.

I thought I should take a few minutes of the time of the house to say a few words, because I want to put on record certain facts of common knowledge that are at variance with the suggestions of hon. members opposite that nothing has been done in the Department of Public Works since the Conservative government came to power.

My hon. friend from Levis (Mr. Bourget) will certainly have a hard time convincing the people of the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot that it has not been a good thing for them as well as for the rest of Canada to have a Conservative government in this country and, consequently a Conservative minister at the head of the Department of Public Works.

The only evidence I need in that respect is the speech just made by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), who tried for a half-hour to say that if the interprovincial bridge is built, it will not be thanks to the present Conservative government.

He repeated many times that all the efforts which were made until now to bring about the construction of a bridge between Hull and Ottawa, had led nowhere—

Mr. Caron: I do not make it a habit of trying to contradict the hon. member when he speaks. However, I never said the Conservative government had done nothing because, in fact, the government started the work. I simply stated that the minister had no right to say that it was Mr. Barrette who had been the first to reach an agreement. That is all I said.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Hull had the floor, a while ago, and was saying that the minister had lied, I came very close to getting up but I have shown him the courtesy that he claims he has for others and I remained silent.

But I think he had no right to state a few minutes ago that the minister was wrong in saying that the premier of Quebec, Mr. Barrette, was the one who had brought the negotiations to a head on this matter.

The country at large and in particular the province of Quebec are quite aware of that fact, which seems to be unknown to the hon. member for Hull.

At the next election, the people of Hull will consider the situation in its proper light and we shall see what will happen.

I refer again, Mr. Chairman, to remarks made by the hon. member for Levis who said it had not been a good thing for my riding to have in the house a Conservative representative since June 10, 1957.

That is a surprising statement coming from the hon. member for Levis, who is himself an engineer and who moreover was the parliamentary assistant to the minister of public works under the former administration.

In the St. Hyacinthe-Bagot riding, retaining walls had been built along the Richelieu and Yamaska river. In St. Charles on the Richelieu, from 1936 to 1957, that is under the 21-year Liberal administration, a wall 2,381 feet long, costing $58,806, was built.

Mr. Johnson: Friends of the former government must have had properties in the area.

Mr. Ricard: Quite probably. In St. Denis, a retaining wall 2,207 feet long was built at a cost of $44,487. In St. Joseph, $3,443 was spent on a wall 250 feet long.

I am coming now to the years 1958, 1959 and 1960. Let us see what the Tory party did in three years for the St. Hyacinthe-Bagot riding: St. Charles, at a cost of $54,582, retaining walls over a distance of 1,577 feet. At St. Denis, the expenditure was $83,467, for retaining walls 3,416 feet long.

At St. Joseph, $77,082 was spent on retaining walls 2,500 feet long.

For this year 1961, appropriations by the Department of Public Works amount to $110,000 for St. Charles and to $143,000 for the village of St. Denis.

Mr. Chairman, if you add up all those amounts, you get, after 21 years of Liberal administration, a total distance of 4,838 feet and a total value of $106,036 of retaining walls erected on shores damaged by navigation.

During the last three years, that is since the Conservative party took over, retaining walls have been built in my riding over a distance of 15,933 feet at a total cost of $469,131. I need not point out that those projects have provided employment for my constituents.

For all his long-winded statements, declamations and rantings, the hon. member for Levis will not succeed in making the people of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot believe that the present member did not obtain for his constituency more than the former Liberal regime, palsied by inertia, ever provide for his county.

In the matter of federal buildings, Mr. Chairman, thanks to the co-operation of the present Minister of Public Works, my constituency has obtained two post offices, one in the village of St. Germain of Graham and the other in St. Pie.

Furthermore, preparations are about to be completed for the construction of a federal building in St. Hyacinthe, which will house the federal services of the constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Since the beginning of the century, there has not been any federal construction in that constituency.

The election of a Conservative government led by a prime minister with foresight who has the welfare of the nation at heart was needed before my riding obtained what it needed.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to talk about a matter which does not come directly under the department whose estimates we are now discussing. And I do not talk about the forthcoming construction of a tunnel.

Mr. Chairman, since I want to save you the trouble of calling me to order, I will immediately ask the Minister of Public Works for another post office building in St. Damase an up-and-coming parish of my constituency. The local farm and poultry co-operatives have an excellent reputation and are a credit to the industrious and clever spirit of our people.

According to the Postmaster General, postal revenue in that place exceeds $3,000 and I believe that the good people of St. Damase fully deserve a new post office.

I also want to deal for a few minutes with the activities of the present Conservative government in the field of housing. Mr. Chairman, it is a known fact that since the Conservative government came to power, it has set itself to improve the National Housing Act. Under the Liberal administration, when an individual wanted to build a house, the maximum loan available to him was only $12,800, while today it is $14,200. Here again, the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) will be hard put to convince the Quebec people that the coming to power of a Conservative government was not a happy event.

I should also like to call the minister's attention to the trans-Canada highway and to ask his co-operation in this regard. At the present time, plans are under way in my riding with respect to a section of the trans-Canada highway. The new route planned by the Quebec government will bring about an unfortunate situation; in fact, the best ancestral lands in my riding will be cut up.

Last week end, some farmers came to see me and urged me to use my influence in order to convince the proper authorities to spare their farms, both in the main concession of La Presentation parish, and in one concession of St. Thomas d'Aquin parish.

If the present plans of the Quebec Liberal government are carried out, it will be disastrous, because the best farm lands of my riding will be cut in two.

Mr. Chairman, men and women, dedicated farmers, and God knows there are none to spare in Quebec, have urged me in a sobbing voice to make representations on their behalf.

I therefore urge the Minister of Public Works to try and convince the Quebec minister of highways to spare that part of my riding which is the most beautiful and the most productive, and to please adopt the former proposed route.

Mr. Chairman, as member for the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, it is my duty to sound the alarm. If this project for highway No. 9 through the St. Hyacinthe riding is carried out, it will be a disaster. For years to come, these farmers will bitterly regret having abandoned their land under such intransigence and misunderstanding. And, once again, Mr. Chairman, I urge the Minister of Public Works to be good enough to bring the Quebec highway minister to reason, to kindly save this lovely part of the Quebec garden which includes the lands of the main concession of La Presentation parish and also other concessions in St. Thomas d'Aquin parish.

Mr. Deschatelets: We are going to build elevated highways just to please you.

Mr. Ricard: No, there are other methods available.

I would not want to resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, without saying a few words about the awarding of contracts. A well established policy in the department is to call for public tenders. I have no complaint about that. I think public funds should be spent in the best interest of Canadians. But matters are going a bit too far, because of the ignorance of some caretakers.

In the town of St. Hyacinthe, in my riding, two or three plumbers were asked to tender for repairs amounting to $10, $12 or $15. Now, not a single hon. member who is intelligent and has his own interests at heart would bother three or four contractors and ask them to bid for so measly an amount. People in charge should have the latitude to make their own decision and ask a particular contractor to do the work.

I would also ask the minister to consider the possibility of limiting calls for tenders on contracts for $25,000 or less to contractors in the constituency. In each constituency there are qualified contractors who can properly undertake any kind of contract for plumbing, joinery, heating or electricity, required by the department. I am saying this in all frankness, it is most annoying for a taxpayer, who pays taxes to the town and contributes to the economic life of the community, that contractors 100, 125 or even 200 miles away be invariably awarded contracts which actually should have been awarded to local residents.

Therefore, I ask the minister not to follow the example of the government of the province of Quebec and enact legislation restricting all contracts for amounts of $25,000 or less to political supporters who are invited to bid. What I am asking is that those contracts of $25,000 or less be restricted to local contractors and that they be awarded following a public call for tenders.

Mr. Chairman, I would not want us to commit the same sins as the present Quebec government. After claiming throughout the last electoral campaign that there would no longer be any patronage, they are the very ones who, more than ever, have introduced patronage in the province of Quebec. I am only asking the minister to reserve to contractors of ridings concerned contracts for $25,000, or less. I am not asking the minister to follow the example of the Quebec department and to award those contracts to selected contractors, friends of the party. I do not want that, because I do not believe it is in the best interests of the people. What I ask is that those contracts be restricted to contractors of the constituency. I feel quite at ease to say here that, in my constituency and in the ridings of my hon. friends here, there are honest and qualified contractors who can do the work which the Department of Public Works wishes to have carried out.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, I should like to repeat that, even if he raises his voice, the hon. member for Levis will not succeed in making the people of the province of Quebec forget that in 1946-47, the Liberals spent $147.5 million for public works whereas, the Conservatives have earmarked $220 million for public works this year.

Nor will the hon. member for Hull convince the people that he does not have the fullest confidence in the ability of the present Minister of Public Works when he gets down on his knees to recommend that the interprovincial bridge be built as soon as possible.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the most eloquent testimonial of the unlimited confidence the Liberals have in the present Conservative government. The latter will certainly prove them right in the future.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 329 carry?

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words before this vote carries. One thing we have appreciated about the minister is his refreshing candor. I can remember last fall when we waited in vain to hear what the government was going to do about unemployment. We were very surprised when nothing appeared in the speech from the throne.

Then we listened to speech after speech claiming there was no unemployment. Finally, this minister made a speech on the radio on the program "The Nation's Business" in which he admitted there was unemployment. He admitted there was a serious problem and it would take a while for us to solve this problem. If we have no reason for being appreciative of anything else that this hon. gentleman has done, I think those of us on this side of the house have cause to be appreciative of this moment of truth which seemingly came to the Minister of Public Works although it failed to come to his colleagues. For that reason, we tend to forgive him when sometimes in the house he uses two lines of argument which seem to conflict as has been indicated by the fact that he stands up and, with what we regard as a refreshing flourish, once again reads out the number of housing starts for the last month. Then, he tells us what a wonderful thing this is because it is providing more employment. Then he turns around and tells us that, really public works do not provide very much employment, and public works will not solve the unemployment problem.

We believe that down in his heart he knows that public works do provide a great deal of employment in the long run. They have the general effect of increasing the social capital. They have the long term effect of increasing the impetus toward a healthy economy in other sectors as well as the public sector. In his own heart, he knows that a really dynamic program of low cost housing subsidized by the federal government would do a great deal toward solving unemployment.

I think he knows that if the dominion bureau of statistics tells us we are going to need 10 major universities in the next 10 years, if these were constructed by his administration that would do a great deal to help unemployment. I think this minister will undoubtedly claim that I am being very unrealistic. However, this morning the Prime Minister said that the government is going to do something about the athletic achievements of the youth of this nation. If the Minister of Public Works embarked upon a program of building recreational centres across this country, that too would aid in reducing unemployment. It is for this reason we, in this corner, have a great deal of respect for this hon. gentleman, even though he sometimes astonishes us by suggesting he really cannot do very much about unemployment except provide a few pick and shovel jobs once in a while. I believe the minister feels that if he were given the opportunity he could devise an imaginative, ingenious, dynamic program, and that is what we are hoping to see.

In so far as the local scene is concerned I am afraid I cannot, at this time, put forward any suggestions that the minister might take home with him to think over during the week end. I should like to say we have one or two very interesting new federal buildings. The one federal building which houses the post office, as well as other offices, is one of the most attractive buildings in the community. However, when they built the unemployment insurance offices they constructed perhaps the ugliest building in the community, which is unfortunate. I believe that this building has had a tremendous amount of use, but the same level of architectural excellence was not achieved that was the case with the post office building. My colleague suggests that it is the ugliest and the busiest building.

However, we hope that we will soon see the minister letting quite a few contracts in my area. We understand we are to have an airport, and although I realize this does not come within his jurisdiction, nevertheless we expect to see some action being taken by the public works department in that area.

I should like to bring to the attention of the minister one or two problems that have been brought to my attention by the people of my constituency. One of them is really a repetition of a subject referred to by the hon. member for Nipissing, and that is finding a means of providing N.H.A. mortgages for older houses. I have spoken about this to the minister in private, and other people have spoken to me about it. I feel that we have drowned ourselves in a program of construction of two and three bedroom bungalows. We are wallowing in these bungalows. We need now a more diversified approach to the whole problem of housing. After the war a great many young families bought these bungalows, and they now want larger homes. Because of the difficulty of financing them, they are unable to obtain these homes. I feel such action would have a tremendous effect upon the economy as a whole if the minister could find some way of solving this problem.

I realize that this is a distinct problem. I realize there is a problem of priority. I realize a problem is presented by the fact that people might use these mortgages in a way in which they would be using national funds for purposes which even we in this corner would find it hard to justify. However, I believe the minister has the ingenuity to get around these things. Perhaps we could take a tip from the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Let us set up some method of screening people in order to determine what the use of these mortgages will be, and only give mortgages to people who have a real justification. I am sure that with the amount of energy the minister has displayed in the past he can get around this difficulty. I am hoping that very soon we will see a dynamic answer to this problem of mortgages for older homes, so that we can get these larger families who are now in bungalows moved into the older, larger homes without virtually bankrupting themselves by so doing.

The second problem which I have mentioned, but which I should like to go over once again, is this matter of land assembly. We, in Peterborough, have more land assembly areas than any other community in Canada. I should like to commend the minister and his department upon what has been achieved in connection with these land assembly projects. We need more of them so that we can give cheap land to people who want to build houses. However, I am going to suggest that we need greater federal control over these projects. We have people buying land under the land assembly system and they put up houses which could not, even by the greatest stretch of the imagination, be called low cost houses.

The land assembly idea—that is the dominion, provincial and municipal governments going together and buying up a large amount of land, then selling it virtually at cost to people—is a first class example of democracy at work. I believe this was the original concept. However, I wish there could be a little more control over it so that the people who really need low cost housing can gain through the land assembly system, and not have larger, more luxurious homes being placed upon this land to the detriment of the people who want to put up low cost houses.

There are a great many interesting items under this minister's control. One is fire prevention. I notice that this minister is giving $5,000 to the Canadian joint fire prevention publicity committee. This is an area which I think needs a great deal of attention. I am sure that when this item is called there will be a great many members who will have something to say about it.

Another item of interest is housing research and community planning. This, too, will require some discussion. This is one of the major areas to which we in Canada need to devote our energies. What kind of communities do we want? What kind of planning do we need? Many visitors come to our country and say our communities not only lack character but they lack any form, any planning whatever. I think this is something on which we should now get busy very quickly. I hope this item is going to be sufficient to provide the kind of planning which is necessary in these communities all across Canada.

I believe this minister has a tremendous opportunity to make this country a better place in which to live, and I am sure he is going to accept that challenge.

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, before asking for additional public works for my riding, I should like the minister to know that I am not ungrateful for the work which has been done, and which is in the process of being done in my constituency. I am particularly pleased that a decision has been reached to reconstruct the wharf at Botwood. The reconstruction of this wharf will fill a long felt need in this important shipping port. The wharf at Goose Bay is nearing completion. Other projects scheduled for this year at Jackson's Arm, Harry's Harbour, L'Anse au Clair and L'Anse au Loup are jobs which need to be done. Progress is being made on the new Canadian National dock at Lewisporte. But while I am indeed grateful for the work which is being done in my riding, I feel that I must point out the need for additional public works in Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, with its long sea coast and its maritime activities. I should like to speak particularly about Labrador.

As I have had said previously in this chamber, and I hope hon. members will bear with me if I repeat it, Labrador is an extremely important source of fishery products today, and its importance is increasing all the time as more and more of the fish plants in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia depend upon fish caught in Labrador waters. Not only is Labrador important to the province of Newfoundland and to the economy of the whole of the Atlantic provinces but it is, of course, of the greatest importance to those people who live in the villages along its coast. It is a well known fact that small marine works encourage the fisheries. Small marine works such as small wharfs and breakwaters permit the fishermen to operate when otherwise they could not do so. These works extend the period of the fishing season and the benefit which accrues to the fishermen and to the economy as a whole is far beyond the small amount of money it takes to provide these small public works.

Some work has been done on the Labrador coast but I would request more attention for these small communities along the coast of Labrador and more of these marine works which will make it easier and more practical for those who live in these fishing communities to carry on their avocations. A number of additional works are needed. I will not attempt to list them all. From time to time I have written to the minister's department with regard to them. However, I think of the coastal villages of Makkovik, Square Islands, Georges Cove, Capstan Island and others where the need for wharves or community stages or both exist and where an investment in small marine works will unquestionably bring real dividends. The waters of Labrador are extremely productive and there is no doubt that these marine works will enable the productivity of these places to be increased. I would ask that the minister give careful and sympathetic consideration to increasing the amount of money spent in Labrador.

In northern Newfoundland some dredging is required at St. Anthony, Goose Cove and Englee. A wharf at Roddickton which was partly reconstructed needs to be completed. A wharf for Goose Cove should be considered and wharves for Miles Cove and other places in Green bay. There are also other places where the need for marine work is equally acute. I would express the hope that northern Newfoundland, Labrador and the rest of that part of the coast of Newfoundland included in my riding would be given sympathetic and careful attention by the Minister of Public Works. A small dredging operation is required at Lewisporte at Mussel bay where an expenditure that may be more than a few hundred dollars would reduce the distance which the fishermen are obliged to go in order to discharge their products.

I mentioned earlier that the cost of some of these projects is low compared with the service that they render. In that connection I think of a small job that was done at Shoe Cove last year which cost very little. A small breakwater which consisted mainly of filling up with concrete a gap between two rocks has made it infinitely easier for the fishermen of Shoe Cove to carry out their operations. There are many places like that where comparatively small expenditures result in making fishing ports of much greater use to the fishermen and, in the long run, enabling them to increase their catch and the total production of fish.

With respect to community stages may I say this. Although I mentioned this matter on the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries, as the Department of Public Works builds them I think it proper that I should make some reference to them here. The program of building community stages undertaken by the federal Department of Fisheries and Department of Public Works has more than justified the decision to build them. These community stages are of inestimable value to the fishing settlements in which they have been built. They provide premises from which to fish and places in which to handle gear. They bring fishermen together so that they can deal more effectively as groups rather than as individuals. By and large they have given a considerable impetus to the fisheries.

I might add here that, in my opinion, in a country such as ours with a growing population, not only should new industries be developed but old ones should be expanded. There is no doubt in my mind that the community stages program resulted in an expansion of the fishing business and that they will continue to be used more and more as time goes on. I would express a sincere hope that this program will be continued and that a community stage program will be planned to be carried on year after year until all the communities which require them have been supplied with them. There is nothing of greater importance in the whole program of public works than is the building of these community stages. Again they provide an instance in which comparatively small amounts of money provide really great and worth-while returns.

[Mr. Granger.]

Since the last estimates of the Minister of Public Works were before the committee for consideration, two small post office buildings have been erected in Glenwood and Norris Arm in my riding. They fill a need which has been acute for a long time. I wish to mention here that I should like to see a number of these small buildings erected in my riding. I would mention again the need for a post office building in Happy Valley in Labrador, a community which has needed such a building for a long time and in which the need now is greater perhaps than it ever was. I would hope that before the year is out some action would be taken to provide a public building for the community of Happy Valley. I would also revert to the need for dredging in northern Newfoundland. I have every reason to believe that this matter is under review by the department and I would express the hope that a favourable decision will be arrived at.

One of the great requirements of the province of Newfoundland is the completion of the trans-Canada highway. A large section of the trans-Canada highway passes through my district and the completion of this highway is placing a very great strain upon the finances of the province. In view of the fact that Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces in general have a severe transportation handicap by the very nature of their geographical position, I suggest that it would be only fair for the Department of Public Works to build at their cost, or to undertake the major part of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway in the Atlantic provinces.

The completion of the trans-Canada highway by the federal Department of Public Works, or the greater part of the cost of it being paid by the federal government would provide something in the way of compensation for transportation handicaps in that area. It seems to me this would permit the provincial governments concerned to devote more funds to building secondary roads in remote areas. This aspect of the completion of the trans-Canada highway is one which I have mentioned before. I hope the idea has not been lost sight of by those who have charge of the trans-Canada highway program.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, those who live in the more fortunate and wealthier parts of Canada cannot properly appreciate the great need for additional transportation facilities in places where these facilities are somewhat restricted. At the same time it may be difficult for those living in central Canada to realize the great value and the utterly vital importance of small marine works to the economy of coastal towns and villages. But these needs are very real in the Atlantic provinces.

These needs are very evident to everyone who lives in my riding, which includes a great northern area. When the minister and his officials sit down to make up their estimates in regard to what should be done during the coming year all over this vast area of Canada, I would like them to bear in mind that considering the value of some of these works, the cost in dollars and cents is actually very small. The cost of a wharf or a small breakwater is very small indeed compared with the utility it gives, compared with the increase in production which it makes possible and the increased standard of living which results.

I would ask again that the Minister of Public Works and his officials keep in mind the relative importance of these small marine works, remembering that where a small wharf is built it enables the fishery to carry on when otherwise perhaps it would not be possible to carry on and that it has been proven that where these works have been allowed to disappear, the returns to the fishermen have fallen off. I would ask the minister and his officials to keep in mind that the real, economic advantages and the improvement to living standards brought about by these small works are away beyond the relatively small cost involved.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, there are a few brief remarks I should like to make at this stage of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. First of all I should like to congratulate the minister and thank the departmental officials for the consideration which has been given to northern Manitoba in the form of post offices, alterations and improvements to federal buildings, and particularly in C.M.H.C. housing loans, which up until this time we have encountered some difficulty in procuring for that area. Things have been improving immensely over the past year and a half and many of the areas are now receiving the benefits of central mortgage and housing loans. I should also like to thank the department for the consideration they have given northern Manitoba in the construction of many small docks and wharves.

However, my prime purpose in speaking on this particular subject today results from some very disturbing news items which have appeared in Manitoba newspapers these past few days. Articles have appeared in the Winnipeg newspapers and in the Manitoba weeklies which have resulted, apparently, from a visit to northern Manitoba of the newly elected leader of the Liberal party in Manitoba, Mr. Gildas Molgat.

Although I must say there are some aspects of Mr. Molgat's report with which I agree, I do take violent exception to others which in my opinion leave the inference that nothing whatsoever has been done in respect to the very important projects and problems which exist at Churchill, Manitoba. According to a report contained in the Winnipeg Free Press of June 13, upon his return to Winnipeg Mr. Molgat reported:

> The government has frozen the sale of all new lots in town for the past two years while provincial and federal authorities carry out studies on the planned move.

That is, the planned move of the town. The article continues:

> Word of the impending action was brought to Winnipeg Tuesday by provincial Liberal leader Gildas Molgat, who has just returned from a tour of the north. Mr. Molgat said he plans to raise the issue at the special summer session of the legislature.

That is, the Manitoba legislature. For Mr. Molgat's information, and wishing him all success in any assistance he may be able to give in solving the problems of Churchill, I would like to say that this will definitely not be the first time, if he raises the matter in the Manitoba legislature, that the problem has been raised there. I wish to assure him that both this federal government and the present government of Manitoba have been working in co-operation over the past three to three and one half years on this particular problem. Mr. Molgat says that the situation at Churchill is an intolerable one at this time. That is one of the points with which I agree. The situation is very bad and I sincerely hope that something can be done about it in the near future.

However, I do believe that the article leaves the impression with the people of Manitoba that nothing is being done and that the recommendations have been pushed under the rug. That is not the case, and I should like to state to the committee at this time that Mr. Molgat is specifically referring to a situation which is being studied, and that is, whether the town should be relocated or redeveloped at its present site. I suggest that Mr. Molgat has failed to report to the people of Manitoba in regard to the assistance which has been forthcoming for the past four years.

I can recall when I first went to Churchill to find out what the people's complaints were in that area that there were three or four specific problems involved. Those problems primarily were in respect to the establishment of a sewer and water system, adequate power supply, and the hard surfacing of the road to the army camp. They also wanted to have a new water supply system. For the benefit of Mr. Molgat and those individuals who are interested I should like to place on the record at this time the statement that, due to the co-operation between the provincial and federal governments, some of these projects—in fact most of them—have already been accomplished, yet I cannot forget the fact that there is one very serious problem in that area.

A new water system, which has been the subject of requests on the part of that town for many years, is now under construction and should be in operation within a few months, at least by the end of this year. Incidentally, the cost of that new water supply system, which will benefit not only the army camp, the national harbours board and other federal government establishments and the town itself, is in the neighbourhood of $967,000. This project is being carried out under an arrangement between Department of Public Works, and the Department of National Defence.

One of the other projects of interest to the people of Churchill, as expressed at the time I first visited the town, had reference to their increasing power requirements. At that time the townsite was being supplied power by the national harbours board. However, the national harbours board unfortunately could not supply sufficient power to meet the requirements of the town. Through an arrangement made with the Manitoba power commission, in which the government of Manitoba, as well as the Department of National Defence played a large part, an arrangement was agreed upon under which anyone in the Churchill townsite area using power is now able to get sufficient power at a greatly reduced rate, compared with what was previously being paid.

The people also asked to have the road to the army camp hard surfaced. Last fall this road was hard surfaced between Fort Churchill and the townsite at a cost of approximately $135,000.

I realize that this particular problem regarding the final decision as to whether the townsite is going to be relocated or reveloped at its present site is of great importance to the people of Churchill at this time. Mr. Molgat's report gave me the impression that he felt nothing was being done at Churchill but I should also say that additional wharfage is being constructed at the port of Churchill at the present time at an expenditure of something over $5 million. That is another project which the people of that area have been requesting for many years.

Mr. Molgat has criticized both the provincial and the federal governments for the length of time that has been taken to complete a study in regard to the town. I have on many occasions felt that this study was taking a great deal of time. I know that it is hoped and anticipated that this very necessary study will be completed before the end of this year at which time, I feel quite certain, both the provincial and federal governments will be in a position to meet and agree in regard to the possibility of servicing a new townsite, if that is the decision, or putting services in at the present site.

It is my understanding that the first part of the report of that study, which is now being conducted, indicates the desirability of relocating the townsite at a site approximately five miles from the present townsite. If that desirability is borne out by further study I am quite sure that the work which is being carried out by the two governments concerned will be realized and that an arrangement can be made to provide the necessary services for the people of Churchill.

As I have said, I agree with some portions of Mr. Molgat's report of his visit to Churchill, particularly that portion regarding the extreme necessity for action being taken at the earliest possible moment. However, I very definitely feel that both governments are at this time doing everything within their power. It is my hope that the study will be completed as quickly as possible and that the two governments concerned will arrive at an early agreement.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat I should like to refer to one other project for northern Manitoba. I would respectfully request the minister to give consideration at the earliest opportunity to the desire and necessity of federal buildings being located at the new townsite of Thompson. This town is growing very rapidly and I am sure that the departments of this government will require office space in the area, so I again ask the minister to consider the possibility of building a federal government building there.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, when the Minister of Public Works made his statement in introducing his department's estimates, he gave us an outline of the major work contemplated by his department for the present fiscal year, covering the whole of Canada from Newfoundland on the east to British Columbia on the west. He mentioned the proposed projects for each province, including such things as new buildings to be constructed, work to be done on harbours, dredging and new breakwaters to be built. I know we all appreciated that run-down. Of course, sir, I was interested in the picture the minister presented as it related to my own province of British Columbia. I was particularly intrigued by his mention of certain work on breakwaters in British Columbia. When he mentioned this in introducing his estimates I checked on the details to see what breakwaters were going to be built in British Columbia in this fiscal year. I can see only one at Okeover Arm costing $29,000. If this is the only one, Mr. Chairman, you can understand why I am speaking at this time.

In April of this year the minister received a factual comprehensive brief regarding a breakwater being an absolute, imperative and immediate necessity at Port San Juan. This brief was prepared and sponsored by British Columbia Forest Products Limited, the British Columbia towboat owners' association, the fishing vessel owners association of British Columbia, the native brotherhood of British Columbia, Orenda Mines Limited and the united fishermen and allied workers' union. In addition it was endorsed by the associated chambers of commerce of Vancouver island, the Port Renfrew chambers of commerce, the Victoria and island publicity bureau and the Victoria chamber of commerce.

As I said, sir, a factual, comprehensive brief on the immediate and imperative necessity of a breakwater at Port San Juan was presented to the minister. Certainly, sir, you could not get a stronger group of sponsors and supporters of this project than those I have mentioned. I also received a copy of that brief. As a representative from British Columbia in this House of Commons I felt it was of such importance that a question should be asked the Minister of Public Works. Therefore, on May 4, on the orders of the day, I directed a question to the minister and I refer hon. members to page 4324 of Hansard of that day. Here is my question as it is recorded in Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works, of which I have given notice. Is the minister in a position to reply to the urgent submission sent him from various organizations emphasizing the need for immediate consideration and action on the construction of a breakwater at Port Renfrew, San Juan bay, on Vancouver island?

I should like you, Mr. Chairman, and hon. members to pay particular attention to the reply of the minister:

> I have been urged to construct a breakwater at Port Renfrew, San Juan bay, on Vancouver island, in conferences with Mr. George Chatterton who is, I believe, the reeve of Saanich. Within the past few days his representations have been supported by a brief signed by several organizations, and I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that careful consideration is being given to this matter. Government engineers are engaged in arriving at a decision on the facts, and in due course I will be very happy to inform the house.

That was a most interesting answer, Mr. Chairman, and from the sardonic look on the minister's face when he gave it I gathered that he knew exactly what he was trying to do in answering my question when he said that he had received representations from and had conferences with Mr. George Chatterton who he said he believed to be the reeve of Saanich. Of course, I do not suppose the Minister of Public Works knew on May 4 that this individual, the reeve of Saanich, was the Conservative candidate in the by-election in Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Howard: He knew it a couple of days later.

Mr. Winch: He knew it when he made the statement. I knew that by the look on his countenance, the sardonic look in his eye and the curl of his lips. But, Mr. Chairman, about three and a half weeks later the by-election was held. May I tell the Minister of Public Works that his statement was used by the Conservative supporters of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. The gentleman to whom the minister referred in his answer on May 4 has been returned and is now the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich in this house by the grace of a majority of just over 500.

The Minister of Public Works should make it clear to the committee whether the statement he made prior to the by-election was just a bribe, a political statement, or whether, it having paid off, something is going to be done about the reeve and about the construction of that breakwater. It does not appear in the estimates this year. This may be understandable because I presume they were printed—they must have been—prior to May 4. Since no mention of it is made in the estimates, I think we can rightfully ask the minister whether there is to be a supplementary estimate brought down for the construction of this breakwater. The minister owes it to the people of Esquimalt-Saanich, to the people of British Columbia and to this House of Commons to assure us that the statement made on May 4 was not just made for the purposes of the by-election. The minister ought to tell us that he is going to follow through with it and that we shall have a statement from him either now or when we reach the particular item on whether construction is to proceed. If it does not proceed, then the minister stands guilty of bribery through using his office for by-election purposes. I would not want the minister to be criticized nor condemned in that way. This is the only reason why I remind him of the brief he received in April and the statement he made on May 4. I realize that if we wait until we get to the specific item we sometimes get this answer, "Why did you not let me know about this before; it may take a little while to find the answer?"

There is one other matter that I should like to draw to the minister's attention at this time in the hope that either now or when we get to the item dealing with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation he will comment on the matter that I shall now deal with. I was quite disturbed when a few months ago I was told by contracting firms in the construction industry that they were almost at a complete loss to know what were the actual requirements as to housing standards for construction coming under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. They told me that it is practically impossible for anybody in the construction industry to know what are the minimum required housing standards.

I was so intrigued by that information that several weeks ago I wrote a letter to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation asking them to let me have their regulations concerning housing standards. I appreciate the fact that they sent me the information I requested by return mail. I hold in my hand now a document entitled "Housing Standards", which gives the minimum requirements for plans, construction and materials in respect of detached and semi-detached houses, duplex and semi-detached duplex houses and row housing. The date of issue is January, 1958. This document, which sets forth the minimum standards for housing, is some 116 pages long.

I can understand why it takes 116 pages to set forth the minimum C.M.H.C. housing standards as outlined for them by the division of building research of the national research council. But I draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, the fact that this 116-page document has been amended three times without consolidation. I also have in my hand what is termed amendment No. 1. It is a 7-page document amending the original document to which I referred a few moments ago. I also have here amendment No. 2. This is a 16-page document amending amendment No. 1 and also amending the original document on minimum standards. I also have here amendment No. 3 which is 24 pages long. It amends amendment No. 2, amendment No. 1 and the original document. Section after section is amended which means that you have to tie them together, and I can certainly understand why many firms in the construction industry have told me that they defy anyone in the industry and the inspectors of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to tell them exactly what the rules and regulations are with respect to minimum standards under C.M.H.C. There are 47 pages of amendments to amendments to amendments to the original document. Just how inefficient can people be?

[Mr. Winch.]

I want to be absolutely honest. I understand that for months Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been working on a revision and consolidation for the purpose of producing a new book on housing standards. I cannot quite understand why it takes months to do that. I understand further that the book is not ready yet for the printers and the industry.

As the minister knows, I was in the construction industry for many years so that I think I know whereof I speak to quite an extent so far as construction is concerned. I am most disturbed by some of the reports now being circulated as to changes being contemplated in the new revision. It has come to my attention that there are suggestions with respect to lowering the standards of construction of housing built under the National Housing Act. From information that has come to my attention I know that consideration is being given to the lowering of the quality of lumber by one grade. I know that the widening of the distance between beams and joists is under consideration.

I want to draw to the attention of the minister the need of a consolidation of the minimum standards so that not only contractors but the corporation's own inspectors will understand what the minimum standards are. In addition, to my mind it is of the utmost importance that there should be no lowering of standards in the new revision. We want to have homes that will not deteriorate to a considerable extent after a few years. In certain circumstances lowering the quality of the lumber by one grade is not good and widening the centre to centre distance between joists and beams is also not good. I believe that those recommendations were made by the construction association. I hope the minister will not allow building standards to deteriorate.

Because of the terms of the act under which the mortgage is repaid over a period of 25 or 30 years before people can own their homes, I hope that in the interests of good housing construction standards will be maintained, that the quality of lumber will be maintained and the distance between joists, beams or studs will be properly maintained. I sincerely hope that now or when the specific vote is under discussion the minister will tell us what is being done about the consolidation of the regulations and the maintenance of standards for the well-being of future home owners.

Mr. Loiselle: Does the minister want to speak?

Mr. Walker: Go right ahead.

(Translation):

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, we are now discussing the estimates of the Department of Public Works and, as the representative of a labour district, which is also one of the oldest in the city of Montreal, it is my duty to draw the minister's attention to a certain situation concerning slum clearance and redevelopment.

My constituency is located on the waterfront and that section of the city has been the pioneer of industry and trade in Montreal. Today, two bridges connecting the island of Montreal with the south shore are located in my constituency, which is clearly indicative of its importance.

The Montreal administration has not done much in the field of slum clearance and redevelopment. In fact, for several years now, many houses in my riding should have been torn down and replaced.

In recent years, the city administration has built a housing project that is known to all, that is the Jeanne Mance housing project.

It was reported in certain newspapers that 91 apartments were vacant there, but as a member of the Montreal urban redevelopment board, I can assure hon. members of the committee that at this time, there is not one vacant apartment in the Jeanne Mance housing project. Quite the contrary, I have been advised that some 2,000 people had applied in vain for apartments. This shows how important it is to clear the slums in the city of Montreal and to build new houses.

What struck me most is the fact there are many requests for apartments of five rooms or more. That means that the heads of families with five, six, seven or more children, and who earn average salaries, are anxious to house their families in such apartments.

It is therefore essential to build low cost houses, so as to accommodate the families of those workers. And, with regard to this matter, I want to quote from a press item containing a statement by Mr. David S. Keast, former president of the "Chambre d'immeuble de Montreal", when speaking at the Lions club in that city. I quote:

Mr. Davis S. Keast, former president of the "Chambre d'immeuble de Montréal", declared yesterday evening that the larger Canadian cities can increase their income by encouraging the help of private enterprise in the redevelopment of older districts.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out the fact that this article is entitled:

Redevelopment of the older districts: Montreal's salvation.

I am convinced that the demolition of slums and the erection of low cost houses in the older districts of Montreal will give a stimulus to the city's economy while embellishing its approaches.

And the article says further:

Mr. Keast stated that he is in complete agreement with the plan proposed by the Morgan company for the rehabilitation and redevelopment of a large portion of the business district in Montreal.

Mr. Keast recommends that several other residential many storeyed buildings be erected in proximity of the business center so that existing municipal services may be used to full capacity, in order to avoid the prohibitive development of outlying districts.

The fact that industrialists recognize the need and ask general contractors to build residential buildings is also an indication that the authorities of the city of Montreal should make some effort to benefit from section 36 of the National Housing Act, which provides the assistance a municipality may get with regard to demolition, expropriation and reconstruction. As far as demolition and expropriation are concerned, I mentioned in the past that the government pays 50 per cent of expropriation costs and 75 of the rebuilding costs.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, and I make this suggestion to the minister, that C.M.H.C. should pay 75 per cent in the case of expropriation, that is the same as for rebuilding. That would be of great assistance to the municipalities and would encourage them to take advantage of that legislation for the purpose of demolishing and rebuilding sanitary housing units.

After the Centre d'Habitation Jeanne-Mance was completed, the Montreal authorities drew up a plan for the removal of certain buildings in the block surrounded by Dorchester, Amherst, Papineau and Craig streets, and following discussions with officials of the C.B.C., it was agreed that the corporation would locate its studios in this 20-acre block. This would have helped the eastern part of Montreal to keep up with the western section of Dorchester boulevard, which has been developing at a tremendous rate over the last few years.

In an editorial published in La Presse for February 12, 1961, it was stated that after protracted discussions between the C.B.C. and the city of Montreal, it was practically agreed that the C.B.C. would acquire this land. That is the reason why last week, following a statement by Mr. Dunsmore, I asked the following question to the minister responsible for the C.B.C., and I quote:

Is the minister aware of a statement made by Mr. Robert L. Dunsmore to the effect that the C.B.C. should gradually proceed to carry out its centralization plans with regard to its offices and studios in Montreal and Toronto?

The following day, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for St. Ann asked whether I was aware of certain comments of the chairman of the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with respect to the search for a suitable location in the city of Montreal where C.B.C. operations will be consolidated. I did notice this report, and I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that a final decision has not been taken with respect to the location described in the question, as both the city and the corporation have decided to study one or more additional locations before deciding on the matter.

What most surprised me when I heard the minister's statement, Mr. Chairman, was that in February 1960, after a serious study had been made of the situation, the C.B.C. had accepted this location in principle. This was over 18 months ago, and now the C.B.C. is considering whether it really should locate in this area. If government officials are that slow in reaching a decision, how can you expect this organization to function properly?

Every aspect of this location has been thoroughly considered, and the city is prepared to expropriate, but now everything is held up by the C.B.C.'s inability to reach a decision. I therefore ask the government, through the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), to tell us yes or no whether it intends to accept the land made available to the C.B.C.

In the affirmative, the municipal authorities will be encouraged to build houses elsewhere for the displaced people, not to mention the fact that this will improve this section of Montreal. In the negative, then a new study should be made to find the best way to deal with the situation. Such a study should not be allowed to go on indefinitely, as this would slow down the development of that section.

I would also ask the minister, in considering requests from any administration, whether it would be possible to eliminate all the red tape, because it can hold up action indefinitely, as in the case of the C.B.C. scheme, which has come to nothing after 18 months, despite the fact that an agreement had practically been reached at the time.

It seems to me that the various departments of government should be more diligent and speed up the examination of petitions from municipal governments. For instance, a petition from the city of Montreal concerning a new construction project on the boulevard des Trinitaires in the west section of Montreal, must have reached the minister's desk by now. At present, the land is vacant and belongs to the city. All that is needed is the approval of both the provincial and federal governments before a housing project is started there consisting of 250 to 300 housing units. If that project is carried out, the city will then participate in another project whereby people could be provided with living accommodation.

What I mean, Mr. Chairman, is that the government should not delay in replying to municipalities in order to help them to make better use of the National Housing Act.

(Text):

Mr. Taylor: I should like to make a few suggestions during the passing of the estimates of the Minister of Public Works. Recently in a Vancouver paper there appeared an article written by Mr. Cliff MacKay, the financial critic, and it said this:

> Signs indicate that this country needs a five-year plan of economic redevelopment. Cities can and do have five-year plans to clear slums or channel traffic. But the nation itself seems to be chained to an economic system based on a 365-day budget with an occasional baby budget thrown in to tinker with the more obvious mistakes.

It went on to ask what kind of way is that to deal with problems which have been building up ever since the end of the last war. The main suggestion that the editor is making here is that there should be a comprehensive five-year plan for proper economic development. Prior to the appearance of that article in the Vancouver paper, I had a similar plan in mind and I took time to write a 24-page report which I called a seven-year program for appropriate development of a number of projects in the Vancouver area. I am not going to deal exhaustively with that lengthy report at this time. However I wish to say that I would appreciate having, at an early date, an interview with the minister's officials in order to discuss this very lengthy document. I feel that many of the suggestions contained in the report would be most welcome in my area. The report deals with a number of projects in which the federal government already has an interest in the city of Vancouver. The report deals with a proper long range development of the Jericho beach area and also with the proper development of an area in which the R.C.A.F. at present carries on operations at the south end of Burrard bridge. My report deals with the re-activation of the Boundary Bay airport, an area which is much needed by small plane owners in the city of Vancouver and surrounding areas. The report also deals with the much needed all-purpose coliseum which would be of major interest to the Department of Trade and Commerce. The report also deals with the necessity of housing the operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation under one roof in the city of Vancouver. At the present time the operations of the corporation are carried on in some six different buildings in a most uneconomic fashion. The report which I drafted also deals with the unification of the network of railroad lines which lead into the Vancouver area and it sets forth what the Canadian National Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company could do, for example, in uniting their present depot. The report also deals with the international airport, a matter which I hope the ratepayers of the city of Vancouver will resolve this coming week.

In particular I should like to deal with another breakwater in addition to the one which was referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver East today. He spoke about a much needed breakwater and I support his remarks to the fullest extent. We need, the San Juan breakwater on Vancouver island. However, at the same time we also need a breakwater which has been long advocated by many people in the Vancouver area. I refer to a breakwater which is to be constructed either at Locarno beach or to the east of Jericho beach or closer in to the downtown area at the south end of the Burrard bridge.

We are a port city. Our people go down to the sea in ships. Every winter and certainly every spring pictures appear on the front pages of our newspapers showing small craft that have been washed ashore during a sudden squall. Every time those pictures appear, the city officials again suggest and cry out for a proper breakwater. There is an ever increasing number of small craft owners. In a city which will have approximately one and half million people by 1980, according to what the forecasters say, we certainly need now and will need even more in the future a proper breakwater in the area to which I have referred. In correspondence with the minister's department it was reported as follows:

> Tentative studies have been carried out on such a project and two sites were actively considered. They were at Jericho beach and Spanish banks. The Spanish banks site had been more particularly referred to as the Locarno beach area. The tentative plans call for a combination rock and sand fill of about 2,000 feet in length starting from the shore near Blanca street, then carrying a rock mound parallel to the shore and eastward to a point in front of Locarno Park. The area behind this protection would be dredged for floats and a mooring basin. The plans call for accommodation for approximately 1,500 boats.

The previous minister of public works, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, indicated that the senior government would contribute $1 million to the construction of the breakwater to which I have referred. I do hope that when the minister is commenting upon this proposed breakwater he will once again say, as his predecessor said, that the $1 million is still available provided, of course, that the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia make an equal contribution. At least if we have his assurance that the $1 million is available from the federal government we will continue to press for equal grants from the province of British Columbia and from the city of Vancouver.

I do not necessarily advocate that the breakwater be located at Jericho beach or Spanish banks, or even near the south end of Burrard bridge, but I do strongly recommend that we have a breakwater on the south side of English bay. The Kitsilano ratepayers' association, which is an association in my own riding, passed a resolution as follows:

> That the Kitsilano ratepayers' association go on record as supporting the proposed breakwater at Locarno beach with a marina for small boats.

There has been an impressive number of other organizations recommending the construction of a breakwater in this area. Therefore I hope the minister will say that the senior government is still prepared to make a contribution of $1 million toward that much needed project.

Then there is another matter which comes within the minister's field concerning the False creek area, which is in the Burrard riding. The problem of the proper development of the False creek area has been under consideration for some 30 years and I would like to feel that during the time I am able to represent the Vancouver-Burrard riding suitable progress will be made in the appropriate development of False creek.

This area has been praised as a secondary harbour with first-class industrial sites, and it has been damned as a polluted waterway and an ugly and dirty eyesore that should be, according to some, eliminated once and for all by filling it in. Its shores are lined by industry, as the minister knows, and harbour experts say it is on the whole poorly laid out; land is being used to a fraction of its potential, which means not only a loss of good sites and misuse of a potentially good waterway, but a loss of tax revenue to the city.

The minister's department comes into this project because there is a considerable amount of dredging to be done in order that we can properly develop this secondary harbour in Vancouver. It is necessary, so the planners say, to establish a 300-foot channel and development of industrial sites up to that channel as part of a long range program. As I see it, the factors which make False creek a target for criticism at the present time are:

1. There is inefficient and uneconomical use of the land which is considered prime industrial property with road, rail and water service.

2. The road system around it and into it is inadequate.

3. The old Kitsilano trestle located just east of Burrard bridge blocks the False creek entrance to all but small boats. There is only 1½ feet of water at the swing span at low tide and deep dredging is impossible. This railway bridge was the first creek crossing, was finished in 1886 and is still used by the B.C. electric railway.

4. The water is polluted and this area, bordering on the downtown and spanned by major traffic routes, is an eyesore.

I understand that the minister's department has carried on extensive dredging operations in that area during the past year. I hope that when this item comes up for consideration later in the minister's estimates he will indicate what the dredging operation has proved so that we can now properly plan the future development of the False creek area.

I would also like to feel that the minister and the other appropriate minister concerned will in due time consent to a change of name for False creek. The name which I suggest is Kitsilano bay or Kitsilano harbour. I sometimes have difficulty, because its name is False creek, in conveying to the officials of the Department of Public Works that it is in fact playing a very useful purpose in the Vancouver area and will in the future play an even more important role as Vancouver's secondary harbour.

If because of the fact that there is a hodgepodge of interests in the whole area agreement cannot be reached among the ownerships, I suggest that perhaps the only answer may be for the government to take action and assume power similar to that in relation to metropolitan areas and proceed to set up a commission to get the job done. Possibly some public authority should be set up at an early date in order that there can be proper development of the area. Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understand the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has a question for the house leader.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may ask the house leader, just before the committee rises, whether these estimates will go on tomorrow. I think it would be helpful to hon. members to know this.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, these estimates will be taken up tomorrow, but I hope they do not go on all day.

Mr. Pickersgill: If they do not, what will the minister call after them?

Mr. Churchill: The estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of public and private bills pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day, or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of public and private bills, the former having precedence pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in order to expedite the passage of certain private bills and in order that they may be given consideration in committee next week in anticipation of perhaps an early adjournment of the house, it has been agreed between the parties by unanimous consent that notwithstanding standing order 15 (3) as amended, the house deal with the items listed on today's order paper under private bills and that public bills be dealt with on Tuesday next, and that the said private bills be dealt with in the following order as shown on page 12: item Nos. 7, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 6 and 10.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to confirm that that is also the understanding on this side.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable to this party also.

Mr. Speaker: Is it then agreed that during this hour private bills shall have precedence and on Tuesday next during the corresponding hour public bills will have precedence? Is it also agreed that the order for private bills today shall be as requested by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do I understand that the order suggested will be a continuing order of the order paper or is it for today only?

Mr. Morton: It will be a continuing order.

Mr. Speaker: Then the order will have effect when private bills are called again.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE CANADIAN LEGION

Mr. W. G. Beech (York South) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-23, respecting the Canadian Legion.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 105 this bill should be referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. Beech: Mr. Speaker, because of the non-contentious nature of this bill I wonder whether it could be given second reading and then discussed by the committee of the whole rather than be referred to the committee?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, that procedure is quite agreeable to this group because we wish to facilitate the passage of this measure.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I have had quite a few calls from members of the Canadian Legion in respect to this bill to the effect that there are too many organizations adopting the word "royal" as part of their name, in Canada, and I wonder whether the bill could be sent to the committee in order to give me time to confer with these individuals?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

THE CUMBERLAND RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY AND THE SYDNEY AND LOUISBURG RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-19, respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company and the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that I will not take too much time of this house at this stage, but I should like to draw hon. members' attention to the fact that under the merger, which we hope will take place, protection will be provided for the 200-odd pensioners who had previously been employed by the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company. This bill will bring the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company under the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners, so it can take full advantage of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Other than explaining the bill to that extent, I should only like to say that this is not contentious, and that there has been no objection raised.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who sponsored the bill was kind enough on another occasion to provide us with a rather detailed explanation in writing of the purposes of this bill and the beneficial effect that it will have to the parties concerned. We are quite happy to support the bill now before us.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

THE CANADIAN COUNCIL OF THE GIRL GUIDES ASSOCIATION

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-20, respecting the Canadian Council of the Girl Guides Association.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the girl guides association in view of the fact that it is now an independent group. The present name, the Canadian Council of the Girl Guides Association, was adopted when this organization was in fact a branch of the Girl Guides Association with headquarters at London, England. Since that time the Canadian association has become independent of the parent body and a member in its own right of the world association of girl guides and girl scouts. It is, therefore, appropriate that the name be changed so as to avoid complications encountered by suggestions that the Canadian association continues to be part of the British association.

The second purpose of this bill is to do away with the limitations in respect of the amount of property which can be held by that organization, which is $250,000. This organization is acquiring property and is asking that there be no limit on the amount entitled to be held.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, on an earlier occasion we passed a somewhat similar bill dealing with the Boy Scouts Association of Canada. Some very commendable words were used at that time in relation to the activities of the boy scouts association. I am quite sure these same words and thoughts can be applied to this association. On that earlier occasion the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) indicated that he had been an old scout of some standing, and thereby added interest to the discussion in respect of that bill. I spoke to that hon. member recently and he indicated that he has also been interested in guiding girls and, from that point of view, perhaps he will also support this bill with great gusto.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

UKRAINIAN EVANGELICAL BAPTIST CONVENTION OF CANADA

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-18, to incorporate Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Convention of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to me to have the honour of sponsoring this bill in this house. I should like to inform hon. members briefly of the work of the Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Convention.

The work of Ukrainian Baptists in Canada began in Winnipeg in 1902. As immigrants from the Ukraine flowed into Canada from the year 1900 onward, further churches were established, in western Canada at first, and later on in other parts of the country. The convention of Canada has two local conferences, one with its centre in eastern Canada and the other with its centre in western Canada. The headquarters of the conference in the east are at Toronto and the headquarters of the conference in the west are at Saskatoon. The convention represents more than 7,000 Baptists of Ukrainian origin. There are more than 500 pupils attending Sunday schools conducted by the convention. There are 21 organized churches, with an adult membership of more than 800. In addition there are some 25 mission stations where services are held periodically. There are 10 ordained ministers and 10 missionaries.

The churches are located as follows: One in Montreal, Quebec; five in Ontario; three in Manitoba; three in Saskatchewan; six in Alberta, and three in British Columbia. The mission stations are scattered throughout Canada.

The convention owns a periodical called the Christian Herald, which is the organ of the convention. It is published in Winnipeg.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

THE CANADA PERMANENT TRUST COMPANY

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-25, respecting the Canada Permanent Trust Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to authorize the Canada Permanent Trust Company to merge and amalgamate with the Toronto General Trusts Corporation and to authorize Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, which holds all of the shares of the Canada Permanent Trust Company except directors' qualifying shares, to invest in the whole or any portion of the shares of the amalgamated company and to exchange shares of the Canada Permanent Trust Company for shares of the amalgamated company.

General legislation enabling such an amalgamation to take place is provided for in the loan and trust corporation act, chapter 222 of the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960, but no corresponding general legislation has as yet been enacted by parliament. The enactment of the present bill is therefore necessary before the proposed amalgamation may be effected.

It may be of interest to note that the parent body of the Canada Permanent Trust Company, namely the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, was incorporated in 1885 under the British building societies act of upper Canada with the name of Canada Permanent Building and Savings Society. Later, by a special act of the parliament of Canada passed in 1899, the parent company was incorporated with the name Canada Permanent and Western Canada Corporation. Then in 1927 this company acquired the assets of the Brantford Trust Company and in 1949 acquired the assets and business of the General Trust and Executors Corporation of Halifax. At the present time it is known as the Canada Permanent Trust Corporation, which has an authorized capital of $15 million, of which $2 million has been fully paid up.

The Toronto General Trust Company was first incorporated in 1872 by act of the provincial legislature of Ontario. However, this Company did not commence business operations until February 3, 1882. These two companies have had a lengthy period in the financial operations of this country. I understand that the locations of these corporations complement each other in that by the amalgamation there will not be very much duplication of offices and in that in the area where there are no Canada Permanent Trust offices there are Toronto General Trust offices.

I suggest that if there are any questions to be asked they could better be asked in committee.

Mr. Caron: Will the hon. member permit a question. What will be the name of the new firm?

Mr. Morton: This is shown in clause 1 of the present bill. It is the Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company. The French name will be Compagnie de Fiducie Canada Permanent Toronto General.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, again the use of the word "Canada" may give people the impression that this is a company under the control of the government. There is a danger in that and I would oppose the use of the word "Canada" in the name of the new company. If it was an old company and was still in existence and was to carry on I would not object; but I think the word "Canada" or the words "National Canadian" or anything of that kind should not be in the name of any corporation so that people would not get the impression that the corporation belonged to the government of Canada. For this reason I believe we should ask the company to change the name so that it will be acceptable to everyone.

Mr. Morton: I suggest that this can be discussed fully in committee.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It was my understanding that the hon. member for Davenport would not be in the position of closing the debate. I saw, sir, that you had not stirred yourself and therefore I thought I was fully protected.

I notice in the bill, Mr. Speaker, there are some of what one might consider to be protective devices, in that the legislation does not come into effect except upon proclamation by the governor in council, following tests to be made by the government of the province of Ontario and assented to by the lieutenant governor of that province. Therefore I feel it will be some little time yet before the actual amalgamating company which is named in the bill can come into being.

I think this is something that should be dealt with at this time, Mr. Speaker, in a preliminary way before it goes to the committee. I took the trouble to look into the Financial Post survey of industrials for 1960 to see what the relative positions of the two companies, the Canada Permanent Trust Company and the Toronto General Trusts Corporation, were with respect to the trust companies structure in Canada. We find that in the year 1959 the total assets listed for the Canada Permanent Trust were $177,493,368. The total assets of the other trust corporation which is mentioned in the bill, which will be a party to the agreement, were in 1959, $576,547,704. Once these companies have amalgamated and without taking into account the relationship which the third parent company, that is Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, will have, but taking into account only these two firms or companies which are to amalgamate, we see their total assets in 1959—undoubtedly they are larger now—are $754,041,012, or about three quarters of a billion dollars in total assets.

In the last couple of years we have seen two or three other mergers, amalgamations or acquisitions of one company by another in the trust company field. For instance, in 1958 Western Trust Company was acquired by Guaranty Trust. In 1959 Okanagan Trust Company was acquired by Royal Trust. I think this will perhaps be the third amalgamation or merger in the trust company field in the last two or three years. It would place the amalgamated company sought to be established by the bill in the position of being at least the third or, depending on its relationship with the Canada Permanent Mortgage Company, perhaps the second largest trust company in Canada in terms of listed assets.

I should like to give some indication of what would be the relative positions of these two or three larger companies of which the amalgamated company would be one. In the 1960 Financial Post survey of industrials some 28 companies are listed in the trust company field, and following this merger there would be 27. Of the total of 27 and taking into account what is proposed under the bill, we find that three of them, the amalgamated company, the Royal Trust Company and the National Trust Company will have assets greater than those of all the other trust companies combined. Thus, in terms of their assets, these three companies will be in a rather powerful position compared with all the other companies.

I worked out the figures very roughly and I have them here. The total of 28 companies last year had assets of approximately $6,200 million and the amalgamated company to be established under the bill, the Royal Trust Company and the National Trust Company will have assets of approximately $3,800 million.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Certainly.

Mr. Macdonnell: I think the hon. member will agree with me, and I suggest he might make this point, that when he speaks of the assets of these companies the vast bulk of these assets belong to other people and are merely held by these companies as trustee or agent, involving no ownership on their part.

Mr. Howard: I quite agree that that is probably correct. One of the purposes of a trust company is to hold things in trust for other people. I was not saying that these were earned assets as in the case of life insurance companies. I was pointing out that in terms of assets held these three companies will be in the position of having total assets greater than the total assets of the 24 other companies in Canada taken together, as shown in the 1960 Financial Post survey of industrials.

The survey also lists loan companies alongside trust companies and there is a relationship between loan companies and trust companies. With respect to the bill before us, there is a relationship in that, as is mentioned in the bill, the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation holds all of the shares of the Canada Permanent Trust Company except directors' qualifying shares. In looking at the list in the Financial Post survey I see there are cross-references as to holdings by one company in another. The Royal Trust Company is not isolated from the loan company in that one lends money and the other holds money in trust because I understand that a trust company holding money in trust is able to invest in certain types of securities in some instances which brings a return to the person for whom they hold the money in trust.

The point is that in the past few years there has been one merger after another of trust companies and we now have another which will result in the National Trust Company, the Royal Trust Company and the amalgamated company having assets greater than the assets of all the other companies taken together. I am wondering whether this is not a matter that should be explored rather fully in the committee. We certainly explore these things through the combines investigation branch under the Combines Investigation Act although the act does not cover the field of finance with the exception of insurance rates. The provision of services, as it were, and loans are excluded from the Combines Investigation Act although the act deals with monopolies, oligopolies and price fixing situations in the field of commodities and sales.

I wonder whether this is not something that the committee should not explore more fully to see whether we are getting into a dangerous position in Canada. I think that this perhaps should be done when we find three corporations of this type with assets more than all the others put together and when we are moving more and more towards larger and larger trust companies with the number of active trust companies becoming less and less.

I do not raise this matter in the same way as I would if the corporation involved were in the field of production and sale of commodities or consumer goods or something of that nature. I think this matter is in a different field but it concerns the money of individuals. In one case they entrust their money and in the other case they buy something. In the one case prices may be fixed by arrangement and in the other case some mutually agreeable arrangement may be worked out which is not truly beneficial to the financial situation in Canada. I am not trying to say that in this instance I see arriving on the scene some huge corporate octopus which is going to engulf the entire financial field or drive other trust companies out of business by acquisitions, mergers and the like, eventually leading to a situation where only a few companies have practically all the trust assets in Canada.

I raise this matter because I think it should be considered by the committee. There is a move here in the same direction that has taken place in other fields involving mergers such as the sugar industry, the beer industry and so on. There is a move in the direction of larger companies, greater assets and a smaller and smaller number of companies with the concentration of authority, as it were, in the hands of fewer and fewer people. I think this matter must be looked at rather seriously from the point of view of ensuring that the interests of people who have money with trust companies and the interests of the country as a whole are protected to the fullest extent possible.

The growth of monopolies and oligopolies is not always detrimental. A monopoly per se is not detrimental but the manner in which it operates may be. These are some things that I think should be looked at seriously by the committee to ensure that the trust company situation in the financial world is protected, that these other relationships are protected to the fullest extent possible, that investors are protected and that the general public are also protected. These various interests should be protected from activities that might be directed—I am not saying they will be—toward controlling more and more such assets, activities which are not in keeping with the good sense that we now expect of trust companies.

When the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) introduced the bill, he said that it would allow the amalgamated company to have offices that will fairly well cover the country. I understand that one company now has offices in one area and another company in another area. The bill will allow the amalgamated company to carry on operations in a broad field. I would certainly appreciate from the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton), who is sponsoring the bill and who has a knowledge of the corporate structure of trust companies, some indication of his views on what I have said, namely whether or not when the officials of the company are before the committee they will be prepared to deal with this specific point.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to make one comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Hull

(Mr. Caron) with regard to the use of "Canada" in the name. I do sympathize with him in the feeling he has that the name should be safeguarded and that it can, on occasion, give rise to misunderstandings. I would submit, however, for his consideration that in this case it is somewhat different. The Canada Permanent has had the name "Canada" for nearly a century now and it would, therefore, be very confusing and indeed a rather serious matter to ask a company with such a long time and honourably known name to change it. In addition, I would think it is so widely known, and for such a long time, that the chance of there being any confusion as to the reality of the situation, in other words the chance of anyone being misled into thinking it was anything but what it is, is very slight.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is rather ironical that I should have the opportunity this afternoon to say a few words about a company such as the Canada Permanent Trust Company. My early recollection of this company is rather unfavourable. Certainly if I had been asked 25 years ago to support this measure, I would have turned it down without any questions asked.

I should like, however, to refer to the situation which produced this feeling. My first association with this company was when we bought a farm from that organization. This was during the depths of the depression, and the farm had originally had a mortgage against it for a small amount. However, because of the structure of this company, they compounded the interest on the amounts that were due and before long there was $10,000 owing on this farm. If this is still the practice of this company, the committee should give some consideration to it because I am still opposed to it. Fortunately, my father was able to obtain a loan and we bought the farm at a lower price than that amount.

As I say, this incident occurred in the depths of the depression. Probably the relationships of the farmers and the Canada Permanent Trust Company in northern Ontario were highly unsatisfactory. People who had homesteaded farms and who had borrowed small amounts of money on these farms, then found that the interest was compounded at a time when payments were not made, and were not being made anywhere across the country. Those people who had mortgages with Canada Permanent Trust Company, because of this practice of compounding the interest, in most cases lost their farms. At one time this company probably had as much farm land in my area as was owned by all the farmers put together.

This company seems to be expanding rather quickly. Their net earnings have been something over 11¾ per cent. This would seem to indicate a very healthy situation at a time when repossessions are probably small in number and when defaults on payments are very small. I believe the committee would be well advised to look into this matter of compounding the interest on arrears. If this is still the policy of this company, then I believe the committee should take steps to see that the matter is corrected. We have now a much more humane method of handling this situation in so far as other kinds of financing are concerned. It would seem to me that we could develop, without much difficulty, a much better system than this compounding of interest. It was not advantageous to the farmers in my area, and I am sure it was not advantageous to the Canada Permanent because, while the farmer lost his farm the Canada Permanent lost its reputation and a great deal of money in that area. The company has not returned to the area to any extent since the depression.

For these reasons, I believe the committee should give consideration to this matter. I am unable to say whether or not the Guaranty Trust has followed this practice. However, I feel that when these companies are asking parliament to increase the amount of mortgage money under their control, then we should be very cautious about permitting a practice that has, in the past, had serious repercussions. In my opinion, this practice has created hardship for the mortgagee through no fault of his own. He was not responsible for causing the depression. In my area, many people who had homesteaded, built their own farms, lost them, even though the amount owing was small, because of this practice of compounding the interest on the arrears.

Mr. Speakman: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not see anything in this bill concerning interest rates, and I wonder if the hon. member is not straying a little from the subject.

Mr. Peters: The point I am making is that I have not much objection to this company growing. I would object, however, to this company amalgamating or joining with another company if these provisions relating to interest were still in the act of incorporation of this company, and if they were not corrected.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): In so far as the comments of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) are concerned, I think perhaps the mere combination of companies would add to the investment power and usefulness of the service of these companies. If there were too many of these companies coming together and we found the number of companies diminishing, then perhaps we should consider the problem of monopoly. I think the company officials would be able to discuss that problem with the hon. member when they come before the committee.

With regard to the matter brought up by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that if he looked in the clauses of most mortgages he would find a penalty clause providing for compound interest. The policy he attributes to Canada Permanent is not one attributable to that company alone. When he is speaking of Canada Permanent, he is speaking of the parent company of the company in question here. I would suggest that the hon. member check with other firms before he brings up the matter in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

ACADIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-22, to incorporate the Acadia Life Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is brought about in that the Acadia Insurance Company is now operating under incorporation of 1862, chapter 77 of the Nova Scotia statutes as the Acadia Fire Insurance Company. Then later, in 1953, bill No. 52 was passed by the Nova Scotia legislature adding to the name of the company as described in chapter 89 the words "and in French" "L'Acadie, Compagnie d'Assurances". They have been operating a general insurance business. This company is wholly owned and operated by the Phoenix Assurance Company Limited of London, and because of their going into the life assurance field the inspector of insurance has advised that it would be better if the company operated under two companies. Therefore the present company is being incorporated to deal with the life insurance but it will be owned by the same parent company and the directors of Acadia Insurance Company will be the directors of Acadia Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): May I ask a simple question as to the ownership. Does this mean that, under clause 3, immediately this amount of $1 million will be raised from the parent company rather than from stock distribution on the market?

Mr. Morton: That is my understanding.

[Mr. Morton.]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CONGREGATION OF THE SISTERS OF THE HOLY FAMILY OF BORDEAUX IN CANADA

Mr. Maurice Johnson (for Mr. Morissette) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-26, respecting the congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-27, respecting Guaranty Trust Company of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to authorize an increase in the capital stock of the company from $5 million to $10 million. I believe also in clause 2 permission is given to the company to use, in addition to the name of Guaranty Trust Company of Canada, the name Compagnie Guaranty Trust du Canada, which is the French version of their name. This company is a wholly owned Canadian company. It has over 2,200 shareholder residents in Canada from coast to coast. It was first founded and started business in 1925 after incorporation in Windsor, Ontario. The company continued to operate with one office until 1934, when it chose the most important city in Canada, namely the city of Toronto,—perhaps I should not put it that way—in which to open its second office. The company operated two offices until 1940 when it acquired the assets of the Fidelity Trust Company of Ontario which had an office in Niagara Falls. This acquisition provided the company with a third office in the province of Ontario. Since that time the company has grown. The company now has 15 active offices. It hopes to extend its operations before the end of the current year and that it will have 20 offices. At the present time there are approximately 300 employees on the payroll and additional employees, of course, will be added. This company has also participated in taking mortgages under the National Housing Act. I understand they hold in excess of $27 million in mortgages which have been acquired under this act over a period of time. If there are any questions that any of the members would like to ask concerning this company now, or in the committee, I shall be glad to try to answer them.

Mr. Howard: Before the hon. member takes his seat I wonder whether he can answer two questions. One is this. What page is he reading from?

Mr. Morton: I was referring to some of the notes that were taken from the proceedings of the other place, at page 769.

Mr. Howard: Can the hon. member also indicate what is the par value of the shares?

Mr. Morton: It would appear that originally the shares of this company had a par value of $100; but in 1949 these shares were split, 10 for one, into shares having a par value of $10. This was done in order to permit a wider distribution of ownership in the company by small investors in Canada.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before you put the question may I say this. As may be recalled, just by way of accident more than anything else, this is one of the companies I mentioned when we were considering Bill S-25. I mentioned it then, in an incidental way; and as I say, just by coincidence, the same company happens to have reference here. May I say first that earlier the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) as I understand him, in effect said yes, that we should concern ourselves about the growth of monopolies and the like but that it was not of too much concern at the moment; that perhaps after a while, if it got to be a problem of fewer and fewer companies in this field controlling more and more assets, then we should concern ourselves about it. He said it really was not a problem at this time. That is generally what I understood him to say.

While it may not be a problem at this time —and I am not suggesting that it is a problem, apart from the fact that, as I said, three companies own more assets than do all the other 24 put together which fact to me puts them in a unique and powerful position—I think it is something that we should continue to keep under review, especially in this field where the combines investigation branch has relatively little jurisdiction apart, as I understand it, from the question of insurance itself as a service. The rest of its activities are in the commodities and consummer goods fields and relate to price fixing and other unfair trade practices.

This particular company acquired Western Trust Company in 1958, so it is a company which is into this field of merging and it is one with which we should concern ourselves. Its growth as a company is demonstrated by the fact that originally the shares were at $100 par value and were then split ten to one. One of the reasons given by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) was that this allowed small investors to invest in the company. This is somewhat the same reason that is given for other companies splitting shares, except that they relate theirs to their market value. Then when the shares get too high on the market it does not look good for them to have it that way and they engage in a stock splitting business to make it look as though the company is not faring very well and is just holding its own.

I would imagine the Guaranty Trust Company has done relatively well over the years. In fact, according to the 1960 survey of industrials, in 1959 it had total assets of some $220 million. It does not indicate in here, except perhaps by way of subtraction, what the assets were of Western Trust Company which was acquired a year before, but we notice that in the one year period the assets of this company increased by some $35 million. Whether or not this reflects the position of Western Trust Company is very, very difficult to say. However, in 1957 it had assets of $142 million. Therefore in one year we see a jump of about $40 million in assets, and the next year an approximate increase of $35 million in total assets, with earnings per share running around $2—$1.95 to be exact.

We should look at this question in terms of the growth of the corporate structure, and I think we must all be on guard to ensure that in fact these groups do not become laws unto themselves outside of the operation and the control of parliament, which is really the only agency which is able in any marked degree to protect individual members of society against the hugeness of the corporate structure.

The purpose of this bill being to double the capital stock of the company—which is in fact what it does by increasing it from $5 million to $10 million—indicates to me that perhaps Guaranty Trust has a good perception of what may exist in the future, because I am sure they do not want just to double their capital stock for the fun of it; there must be some purpose behind doing this sort of thing.

It would be interesting to find out just what this particular company has in mind in doubling its share capital because, as I have said, it seems to have been doing fairly well under the old capitalization of $5 million, which I gather has been in existence since 1925, although I may have misread the explanatory notes. Since 1925 the company has had a $5 million capital structure. During that period of time it has built up these assets in a rather marked degree. As shown by the survey of industrials, over the last two year period this company has increased its total assets from $142 million to $220 million, or almost an $80 million increase. This represents a 50 per cent or 60 per cent increase in total assets over a two year period.

I think that if we looked at the figures of this company next year we might find it is in an even more advantageous position and anticipates quite an additional growth in its assets. This would mean that the more this company grows, the more it will be brought into relationship with the three companies I mentioned earlier, and perhaps the four of them will control even larger and larger amounts of the total assets of all the trust companies in existence in Canada.

I think this is something we should continue to be on guard against to ensure that the corporate structure does not get into the position of being a private law unto itself, with the individual having relatively little protection against its activities.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, briefly—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the house that if the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to the company having a capitalization of $5 million since 1925. The record will show that in 1925 it had a capitalization of $500,000; in 1947 it was increased to $1 million, and in 1949 to $5 million.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the business for tomorrow will be the estimates of the Department of Public Works, followed by the estimates of the Department of National Revenue.

For next week the forecast of business runs this way: Monday and Tuesday legislation, with the budget debate coming at 7.30 on Tuesday evening. Wednesday will be legislation or estimates; Thursday and Friday the budget debate, and Saturday estimates.

For Monday and Tuesday the legislative items which are on the order paper will be taken up, with the exception of Nos. 3, 4 and 5. There will be some other legislative items appearing on the order paper tomorrow and in Votes and Proceedings tomorrow. Therefore tomorrow at six o'clock I will give the order in which these items will be taken up on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could get some information on the legislative items that are likely to be discussed on Monday and Tuesday so that we may hold ourselves in readiness. The house leader has already mentioned those matters that are now on the order paper, save and except Nos. 2, 3 and 4, but could the house leader give any indication as to what other items may be on tomorrow so that we will know what we may expect on Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I excepted Nos. 3, 4 and 5. There are the two bills from the Senate which received first reading today; there are two bills mentioned in Votes and Proceedings, which will be on the order paper tomorrow. They are an act to amend the Criminal Code, and an act to amend the Railway Act.

In Votes and Proceedings tomorrow and appearing on the order paper on Monday will be an act to amend the National Energy Board Act, and a resolution dealing with the construction of the Pine Point railway. Those two items which I have just mentioned will not be ready for debate until Tuesday.

Mr. Chevrier: Does it follow from that there will be no legislation dealing with the governor of the Bank of Canada next week?

Mr. Churchill: Unless it appears in Votes and Proceedings by tomorrow it would not be available for discussion on Monday or Tuesday.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

EMPLOYEES—CANADIAN NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR UNESCO

Question No. 236—Mr. Howard:

Are employees and staff members of the national commission for UNESCO appointed pursuant to advertised competitions?

Answer by: Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister):

The pertinent powers of the Canada Council in connection with the national commission for UNESCO are set forth in section 8, subsection 2 of the Canada Council Act, which reads as follows:

"The governor in council may assign to the council such functions and duties in relation to the United Nations educational, scientific and cultural organization as he considers desirable."

On June 14, 1957, order in council P.C. 1957-831 provides, in part,

"That the Canada Council shall provide the secretariat for the national commission . . ."

The Canada Council is not an agent of Her Majesty but the Canada Council Act provides the manner in which the council is to report to parliament annually.

The government has no power to ask the council to reveal information such as is asked for.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Third report of standing committee on external affairs—Mr. White.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROJECTS TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I should like to make an announcement relating to certain initial steps being taken by the government to help in providing alternative employment for persons affected by the closing of certain mines in Cape Breton. My colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys announced on May 30 that parliament would be asked to provide an amount of $1.5 million which would be set aside for approved projects for this purpose this year.

Two of the specific projects for which parliament will be asked to provide, I now wish to bring to the attention of the house. The first is a program of the Minister of Forestry for the improvement of forest stands in the area. This project offers a constructive means of improving the forest resource while simultaneously helping to meet the urgent problem of employment in Cape Breton. The total cost of this program during 1961-62 is estimated at $350,000, and it will provide employment for about 100 persons. It will be proceeded with immediately and the government of Nova Scotia will share in the cost.

Second, the government proposes to proceed immediately with the first stages of a program for the restoration of Louisbourg fortress as a tourist attraction. This was recommended by the Rand commission on coal. This project will also offer a most dramatic means of teaching the nation's history to its citizens and visitors. There are several alternative plans for the development of Louisbourg, and while a final decision has not yet been made among them, the preliminary work to be done this year, is common to all the alternative schemes. This work would involve preliminary surveys, installation of utilities, construction of various buildings for the work compound, rock quarrying and other items. The expenditure during this fiscal year under this initial program at Louisbourg is estimated at $1,100,000, and it will provide employment this summer and next winter for an average of 145 persons.

A number of other projects, which, in the ordinary course of events would have formed part of the regular programs of various departments, are being accelerated. Taken together, these will provide a further 280 jobs in 1961-62. The entire program will involve an expenditure over several years of some $15 million. In addition, several other possible projects are under active investigation, and where necessary provision for these projects has been made in the supplementary estimates recently tabled.

The national employment service will be taking special steps, as various projects begin, to make certain that information regarding them is made available to persons displaced from employment in the coal mines of Cape Breton island.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on the announcement which has just been made by the Prime Minister. He has announced two specific projects, one of which is for the improvement of forest lands. The Prime Minister did not say how near these lands were to the areas affected by the recent closure of one mine and the prospective closure on July 2 of the Florence mine; nor did he say whether it was the intention of the government to give preference in this employment to the miners. I would assume that would be the case because the fund, if I remember the original statement, was specifically for the purpose of providing employment for displaced miners.

The second project for the restoration of Louisbourg will, of course, involve considerable travel problems for any displaced miners because of the considerable distance Louisbourg is from the area in which mine closures have occurred. As I am sure the Prime Minister knows, because I imagine he has received a letter from the united mine workers of which I have a copy here, the workers at the Florence mine which is to close on July 2 are very concerned about the possibility of getting any alternative employment in that area so they can remain at their homes.

While what the Prime Minister has announced will be very far indeed from meeting the whole problem, it is an instalment which I am sure will be welcome.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this group is very pleased to hear of any proposal to provide employment for a few of the many Canadians at present unemployed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The forest area is in reasonable proximity to the closed mine area and as to the work at Louisbourg, the workers will be transported by bus each day.

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-110, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO RATES ON RAPESEED

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-111, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister explain this bill?

Mr. Balcer: The purpose of this bill is to bring in an amendment to the Railway Act in order to apply to rapeseed the rates applicable to flaxseed by virtue of the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY TRAFFIC ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PENALTY FOR VIOLATIONS

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-24 (from the Senate) to amend the Government Property Traffic Act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fulton: You do not explain Senate bills.

Mr. Walker: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I understand from others with greater knowledge of parliamentary procedure that we do not explain Senate bills.

Mr. Pickersgill: They explain themselves.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED FINANCIAL IRREGULARITIES RESPECTING FORMER SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the light of disclosures widely published in the press this morning I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. At the time of the translation of Hon. Henri Courtemanche from the cabinet to the other place, had the Prime Minister any reason to believe that the gentleman was involved in any alleged financial irregularities? If so, were any investigations made by the government before his appointment to a place in the gift of the crown was recommended?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I make it very clear, and emphasize it, that there never was any such suggestion at any time.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Revenue and ask him this. Did a federal income tax inspector visit Jean Talon hospital early in 1960 and take note of cancelled cheques issued to Hon. Henri Courtemanche? If such a visit was made, will the minister arrange—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member's question is more properly one for the order paper. It asks for information which obviously will require some research. Furthermore, it relates to a matter which occurred some time in the past.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the question arises out of reports that have been made and which appeared in the press this morning, and out of evidence which was given. I think the question is perfectly in order. It simply asks whether an income tax inspector went to the hospital and whether, if he did, the minister would arrange to have this federal official appear before the public accounts committee and have him examined by that committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now raising another question. If notice of the first question has not been given, I think it should go on the order paper because it is not the type of question that an hon. member—

Mr. Hellyer: The government has really had a year and a half's notice.

Mr. Speaker: —can expect the minister to have information on relating to some incident in the past.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in view of your ruling may I ask the acting minister to take this as notice of the question?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think I should point out that all matters pertaining to any income taxpayer's file are, of course, secret; but at the same time I will give consideration to the question.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the disturbing newspaper reports this morning and other disturbing rumours with respect to other activities of the gentleman mentioned, will the Prime Minister give consideration to a complete investigation in order that the house and the country may be informed of the facts, in fairness to all concerned?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the first notice I received was contained in the press dispatch of last evening. I immediately gave directions that a letter should be written requesting that the Department of Justice communicate with the royal commission of the province of Quebec, asking for an official copy of the transcript containing the evidence in connection with this matter, in order that the question may be studied most carefully.

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the chief of the opposition.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Speaker: Order. On what basis would the hon. member suggest that he be given the floor to ask such a question?

Mr. Johnson: On the basis that there is nothing in the rules that prevents my asking such a question. Such a question was asked once before, if I remember correctly, of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small). The hon. member was asked the question about a year ago, during the 1960 session, by a member of the opposition and I—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must refer the hon. member to rule 39, which says specifically that such questions may not be asked unless they relate to a matter of the business of the house of which the hon. member has charge. I do not note that any motions or bills stand in the name of the Leader of the Opposition, nor is he chairman of any of the committees of the house.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman desires to ask this question because he assumes I will be having charge of the business of the house before long.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question which concerns a member of the opposition under the direction and leadership of the hon. member. The question I wish to ask would lead them to stay in the opposition for a very long time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has not given any reason which would lead me to change my view that the question would not be in order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-72

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, could I address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the interest in the house and throughout the country, would the Prime Minister inform the house when consideration will be given to Bill C-72 as amended in the other place, to which amendment there was some "Brunt" opposition and dire warning?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon, gentleman considers the day a failure when he does not have a play on words. In so far as the question, freed of its surplusages, is concerned, that matter will be taken up in the appropriate order.

THE BUDGET—OPPORTUNITY FOR FULL DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he can give the house an assurance that a full debate on the budget will take place before the house ceases to sit.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): All I can say is that the requisite time will be taken. Whether hon. gentlemen opposite will discharge their responsibility and make a full debate of it, I do not know.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena raised a question of privilege on June 7. I have given some thought to it. At that time he did not indicate that he wished to proceed with a motion; if he is still of the same mind perhaps I do not need to take the time of the house, because he explained his position at the same time he raised his question of privilege.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I indicated at the time that I desired to proceed with a motion if it was in fact accepted as a question of privilege. My motion would be one of censure against the government for its refusal to answer the particular question involved.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member has a motion in mind, I think I should explain my views on the point.

On June 7 the hon. member for Skeena alleged that the government had given incorrect information in a return to an order of the House of Commons made November 30, 1960, and alleged that this was a breach of the privileges of the house. I have the return, which is sessional paper No. 216A tabled by the Secretary of State on May 5, 1961. The questions ordered for return were as follows:

1. Did any member of the cabinet incur any travelling expenses between September 1, 1960 and October 31, 1960 inclusive?
2. If so, for each member of the cabinet what was, for each day, the amount of expense incurred, the place travelled to and the purpose of the visit.

The return made to that order of the house was as follows:

There is no official record from which the information called for by this order of the house can be drawn. Under a well established practice, expenses incurred by cabinet ministers when travelling on official business are paid out of departmental administration or other appropriate votes without any accounting being required therefor, irrespective of whether or not an advance is made.

In support of his allegation the hon. member put forward question No. 381, asked by the hon. member for St. Denis and answered orally by the Postmaster General on June 7, as reported at page 5965 of Hansard. I do not think I shall take time to read it. Hon. members will find the question and the answer at this page. There the Postmaster General gave particulars of some of his recent travel expenses. The other relevant fact was the assertion by the Minister of Finance at page 5966 that the answer given to the order for return was a correct one and in accordance with the practice of the house.

The problem presented to me was whether the complaint of the hon. member for Skeena, which he is undoubtedly entitled to make at one time or another, was properly made as a question of privilege at the time it was made. If a question of privilege of the house is involved, the rules permit it to be brought before the house at once. If it is not a question of privilege the hon. member would have to wait for an appropriate opportunity to bring the matter before the house, for example as a grievance upon a motion to go into supply, upon the estimates of any department which make money available for travelling expenses of ministers, or by the usual notice of motion which at this stage of the session is not a very practicable remedy.

I do not propose to take time to review the authorities on the nature of parliamentary privilege, but I refer hon. members to May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition, pages 42 and 43; Bourinot's Parliamentary Practice, fourth edition, page 37 and to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, page 93 and following. There it is indicated that protection against outside interference by the crown, by the courts, by the House of Lords and other outside influences was the origin of privilege. In our house I find no instance where a return of information to an order of the house has been attacked as a matter of privilege on the ground that the return was inaccurate, unduly delayed, or otherwise unsatisfactory as a compliance with an order of the house.

In the report of debates for 1895, at pages 1830 to 1842, there is an interesting precedent, where a complaint was made that the government had failed for more than two years to bring forward a return of information in response to an order of the house. The house was asked to give leave for an hon. member to move the adjournment, as would now be done under standing order 26, to discuss the matter. I shall take a moment to refer to this precedent. At page 1830 of the debates of 1895 the member for Bothwell said:

Before the Clerk calls the orders of the day, I desire to call the attention of the government and of the house to what seems to me to be a contempt of the rules and rights of the house; and, if it is necessary to a discussion of this subject that I should move the adjournment of the house, I make that motion. More than two years ago, I moved, in this house, for a return, and I stated that my reason for that motion—

Then he went on to say:

The whole of that session went by without that return being brought down.

The succeeding session went by; he was then in the third session when he brought the matter forward in this way. There was a lengthy discussion of the position. I would just like to refer to what Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Speaker said at page 1839:

It is a breach of duty on the part of the government; and though my hon. friend from Bothwell took an extreme course in bringing this matter before the house by moving the adjournment, still he was within his right. Let me quote the opinion of Dr. Bourinot on this subject:

"Every care should be taken by the department or officer whose duty it is to furnish the return, to have it strictly in accord with the terms of the address or order. If a person neglects to furnish a return or frames it so as to mislead the house, it will be considered a breach of privilege, and he will be reprimanded or more severely punished, according to the circumstances of the case."

At the same page, Mr. Speaker said:

Before putting this question, I desire again to express my opinion with regard to the inconvenience of this mode of bringing up a discussion. I am, of course, in the judgment of the house in dealing with this matter, but I may point out that there are other ways in which a question of this kind might be raised without moving the adjournment of the house. In the first place, a motion might be put upon the paper censuring the government. Then there is another way in which the matter might be brought up without any notice at all, that is, on going into committee of supply.

Then he quoted Sir Erskine May. The Speaker then concluded as follows:

That, to my mind, is conclusive that a question of this kind for the redress of a grievance, should more properly be discussed on moving the house into committee of supply.

He treated the matter as one of grievance.

Although I cannot find that it has been done before, it is possible that an open and obvious defiance of an order of the house might be raised as a breach of privilege in the nature of contempt of the authority of the house. Such situation, if it arose would seem to me to go deeper than the privileges of the house, which are ancillary procedures in support of its authority, and would seem to involve a question of the confidence of the house in the government.

In the present case there is no obvious disrespect by the government of the order of the house. The order has been complied with, and the answer was available to the hon. member some time ago. There may be some inconsistency between the return and the oral answer, but as I said hon. members have other means of challenging such inconsistencies without the use of a superseding privilege motion.

In the circumstances, which include an interval of delay in objecting to the return, I do not think the hon. member would be warranted in asking to introduce a motion based on privilege.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATIONS RESPECTING FISHING VESSEL SUBSIDIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport how soon the government expects to be in a position to publish the regulations governing the subsidies for fishing vessels. As the minister realizes, a great many persons are anxious to get ahead with the building of their vessels.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, these regulations should be published within 10 days. This is the latest information I have received from my officials.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

NUMBER OF PILOTS USED IN VANGUARD AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has T.C.A. now decided to operate all its Vanguard turbo prop flights into Chicago and New York with three pilots, two regular pilots and one supervisory pilot, on each plane instead of two as originally announced?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will bring this matter to the attention of the management and furnish the answer to my hon. friend.

Mr. Chevrier: I ask the question in view of a statement which appeared in the Montreal Star on June 15, which quoted a T.C.A. official. I might send it to the minister.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

GRANTS TO PROVINCES FOR HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is a new formula being used for construction capital grants to hospitals in payments to the provinces?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the administration of national health grants is entirely a responsibility of the provinces. The federal government receives applications for health grant purposes directly from the provinces and never directly from the hospitals. The federal government pays all grant money directly to the provincial treasuries.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the hon. gentleman say whether that has always been the case?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Chown in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

329. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,667,720.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, yesterday during the discussion of the minister's estimates I had the opportunity to discuss a seven year plan or program involving projects in which the federal government has an interest. I had the opportunity to deal with the proposed breakwater at the most advantageous place on the south side of English bay in my riding. I also had the opportunity of discussing a plan of proper development of the False creek area, which I hope in the future will be renamed either Kitsilano harbour or Kitsilano bay.

This morning I should like to discuss for a few minutes another matter in which the federal government has an interest. I refer to the major defence installations in the Jericho beach area. Before the war we had at Jericho beach a very fine golf course known as the Jericho golf and country club. This course added considerable beauty to the city and was cherished by golfers and non-golfers alike. Then the war came along and the air force and army took over the property. Wooden barrack-type buildings were erected, and along the waterfront air force hangars were constructed. These buildings have been there now for many years, and the people in the community are anxious to see them vacated.

During the war no one took serious objection to buildings of that type, but as the war is long since over the citizens of Vancouver would like to see a major renovation of the entire area. I suggest that there would be many advantages to the city and to the defence department should the army and air force units be withdrawn entirely from the Jericho and Kitsilano areas. Withdrawal of these units from the city and thus from the waterfront area would allow for that type of city development which, as I have stated, the citizens have long desired.

From the sale of these lands at Jericho beach the defence department could build at Surrey, let us say, a new and modern installation which would satisfy the requirements of the defence department and would certainly permit the city officials to plan the proper development of the Jericho area. The benefits all round would be enormous. In making these suggestions I am not unmindful of what has been done in such cities as London, Berlin and Cologne since the war.

Vancouver, as everyone knows, was never touched by the ravages of war, yet it seems to take us longer to remove the flotsam and jetsam of war buildings than other cities which received terrible punishment. I must emphasize that Vancouver gave up the Jericho and Kitsilano areas in order to prosecute the war, but we need these areas once more in order to set up a reserve of green spaces. I believe the records will show that in 1943 the federal government purchased 7.8 acres of the Jericho golf and country club for the very nominal sum of $55,000. The senior government also acquired 140 additional acres in this area from the province of British Columbia. One of the major issues in Vancouver at the present time is the acquiring of further green areas for park development. One isue at the present time is whether or not another area known as the Shaughnessy golf club should be purchased for park purposes in the city of Vancouver, but the holdings of the army and air force are almost forgotten.

The armed forces occupy 192 acres of prime land along the Jericho and Kitsilano waterfront. My question is, is it necessary for these twin military establishments to be where they are? Is the military community a multi-million dollar white elephant or a multi-million dollar necessity? These two establishments employ a total of 488 officers and men, which works out to 2.5 men per acre. In addition there are 377 civilian employees of the Department of National Defence.

The removal of the defence installation would provide us with a major public works project in the Vancouver area. It certainly would do so if the military forces vacated. The Minister of Public Works would no doubt be able then to call for the sale of the land and a proper housing and park development could take place there. Therefore I urge the minister to give very serious consideration to the proper development of that area.

As I mentioned yesterday, the defence department occupies a major holding near the south end of Burrard bridge, and if the defence department vacated that area and the Jericho area a major military construction project could be undertaken say in Surrey, which would be carried out by the minister's department. A major establishment could be set up there which would certainly please the military forces. These two important areas in or near Burrard riding are two major issues, and I hope progress can be made at an early date.

I also hope the Minister of Public Works will give consideration to the resolution passed by the city of Vancouver in 1941 which allowed one of the government departments to enter that area upon the condition that they would vacate it at the cessation of hostilities. The war is long since over but these installations are still there, and I hope the present administration will comply with the terms upon which the particular department entered that area.

I noticed in the paper last night that the national capital commission is planning a cultural centre in mid-town Ottawa, on the east bank of the Rideau canal. The newspaper article says that the cultural centre will likely contain a convention hall or auditorium, and perhaps a theatre to start. The project is to rise on 22 acres near the Union station. The newspaper article went on to say that the Prime Minister had suggested that centennial planning for the capital might cover such things as a convention hall-auditorium, a national theatre and even a stadium or arena.

This is a wonderful development for this area, and I am not necessarily criticizing it. I also noticed a photograph with relation to a major development at Niagara Falls. The newspaper article says that a multi-million dollar permanent international cultural trade exposition at Niagara Falls has been approved by Ottawa. We also learned from the newspapers earlier and heard in the house that the federal government was prepared to advance to the city of Montreal and to Quebec some $40 million to hold a world's fair in 1967 in Montreal. We are also aware of the fact that at Dawson Creek, a rather small community in the interior of British Columbia, the federal government is advancing a considerable sum of money for the restoration of a theatre in order that the community may celebrate the centennial in 1967. Other cities are planning major projects.

The point I want to make is that Vancouver is likewise in great need of an all-purpose auditorium. We feel that if this type of development can take place in eastern Canada, then by the same argument we should also be able to proceed with such a development in the west. Vancouver is a long way from Ottawa, and I think we can make a special case for the fact that we need a similar building on the west coast. We are in the Pacific trade theatre, and this type of building would help us very much in the field of trade and commerce. As the minister knows, we need a coliseum very badly, and I hope he will give consideration to assisting us with the construction of an all-purpose coliseum in the Vancouver area.

There are numerous advantages to this project. The trade and commerce field will certainly benefit, as will the tourist industry. This proposed building could be used as one of the main buildings for the Pacific exposition, if we are able to proceed with our plans for it in 1967. I think we can make a special case for Vancouver in this regard. Since this is my only request at this moment, I hope the minister will be able to make available to us one of his fine architects who could design us a building in which the C.B.C. could be housed as well as the coliseum. In Boston, the Boston Gardens is built over the top of the Union station.

I understand that the C.B.C. is in great need of storage accommodation for their many properties. If we need a coliseum and the C.B.C. need a building for their properties, surely with proper planning we could design a building to accommodate our coliseum and give the federal government room for the C.B.C. My request in this regard is that the minister try to assist us in constructing an all-purpose coliseum on the plot of land already owned by the C.B.C.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the minister will be glad to learn that, unlike the hon. gentleman who just preceded me, I intend to keep my observations generally within the ambit of the Department of Public Works. I think everything the hon. gentleman mentioned concerned some other department than the Department of Public Works, that is so far as I was able to follow him. The minister will be pleased to learn also that I do not intend to be quite as harsh in my criticism of the present government as the hon. gentleman who just spoke. This does not mean that I will not have a few critical observations to make.

I join wholeheartedly in the criticism made yesterday by the hon. member for Churchill of the dilatory actions of this government, in which the hon. member was reflecting the views of the new provincial Liberal leader in Manitoba, in dealing with the problem of Churchill. The hon. gentleman ended his remarks by expressing a pious hope that something would be done. If the government moves in the matter of Churchill at the same speed that it has moved in respect of the Red river floodway, then I think the hon. member for Churchill's successor will be addressing another government about this matter before anything ever happens.

I should like also to join with the hon. member for St. John's East in his criticism of the government which appears on page 6422 of Hansard, and which I understand was exceptionally palatable to the minister. As reported on that page the hon. member said:

> I should also like to bring to the attention of the minister at this time my sense of disappointment at the fact that the vote for Newfoundland under construction of public buildings is substantially smaller compared with other provinces of similar size. It is substantially smaller than the vote for Nova Scotia and substantially smaller than the vote for the province of New Brunswick.

This is true, sir. For the first couple of years this government was able to carry on the building projects and policy of expansion which the minister and his predecessor inherited from Mr. Winters. However, when they ran out of those plans that Mr. Winters had prepared, they had no program of their own so far as public construction in the city of St. John's was concerned. There is no evidence that any plans are being made.

I happen to know, of course, that it was the intention of the previous government, which did things and did not just talk about them, and which had a program of expansion which helped this country to grow as compared with the stagnation of the last four years, to phase this building program so there would be a reasonably continuous level of employment on public construction in St. John's. Moreover, there is a very strong argument which I have made many times before and which I intend to make again for structures outside of St. John's in some of the smaller places, particularly buildings to house the Post Office Department.

It just so happens, and the statistics have been put on the record many times, that in Newfoundland, unlike New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, there are practically no rural routes. The treasury is therefore saved the very considerable cost of free rural mail delivery which the other provinces do get. Perhaps for a long time to come, because of the nature of the settlements along the coast, Newfoundland will be less adaptable to that kind of thing. It is the custom there to go to the post office to get the mail. In Newfoundland, therefore, unlike the other provinces, the needs of the Post Office Department are quite different. In the first place, in practically all the smaller places the C.N.T. is in the post office, and that creates a different situation at once. The second thing is that in Newfoundland it is entirely unacceptable, for historical reasons, to have post offices in shops or stores or other places of business, which is the usual thing in the rural areas of the rest of Canada. There is, on the ground of laying out a reasonable amount of public funds to give comparable service, every reason why there should be some exception made in Newfoundland, and some exception has been made. I have expressed appreciation to this minister and his predecessor for continuing to replace public buildings in Newfoundland where they existed in the old days.

However, what the government will not do is to put a building in any place that did not have a building before confederation, notwithstanding the fact that some of these places have grown considerably larger than some of the places that do have public buildings. I refer, of course, to a community like Hare Bay, which received a good deal of notoriety only last week when the whole place was almost consumed by the great forest fire. While I have persisted in my advocacy of this policy over the years, and I have not yet had any success, I feel that if I keep on trying there is always a chance, particularly as we get nearer to an election, that the government might decide to do something about this or at least indicate that some day it might.

I do want to join with the hon. member for St. John's East in saying that I think St. John's should be better treated so far as a public building program is concerned. If this government really meant what it said about having an expansionist policy, then St. John's would have been better treated. The fisheries department there needs a new building, as well as other departments that were referred to by the hon. member the other day.

What is even more distressing than the public building situation is the marine works situation in Newfoundland. After all, this work is even more vital to the economy and to the life of the people in the outports. It is true that if you look at the global figures for marine works in the estimates this year, they are up $300,000 over last year. They have not gone down very much as compared with earlier years. They have varied little from year to year. There is a high proportion of the money now being spent on the harbour development at St. John's, which of course was only started two years ago, though the plans were laid in 1956 and 1957. When you abstract the amount being spent on St. John's harbour you see that there has been a tremendous shrinkage in the marine works program in the province of Newfoundland compared with what it was in the first year the present government was in office, or in the year both governments were in office, or in previous years.

It is not as though there are not projects that urgently need to be done. There are plenty of projects. The minister knows this from correspondence he has had with me, and I think he will testify that I am an assiduous and patient correspondent and that nothing discourages me, even the minister's replies.

The minister will recognize that in one of the seven constituencies there are plenty of works which he and his officials have admitted are deserving of consideration—I have it in writing that he has said that they are deserving of consideration—and which are not getting done.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, they are not getting done at a time when the rate of employment in Newfoundland is higher, unhappily, than the national average—indeed it is considerably higher than the national average—and when a redoubled effort should be made. These works are ones that have a fairly high labour content. They would employ a great many people. They would save the drain on welfare funds or on the unemployment insurance fund. There is everything to be said for getting them done, because they are all works that would add to the income of the community in which they would be situated, or practically all of them are of that type.

I just want to remind the minister of a few of them. I am not going into the details; he has them all. The first place is Newman's Cove. I feel particularly badly about the situation at Newman's Cove, although I know very well what the difficulty is. Because of the exposed harbour there it is a difficult place in which to build a wharf that will stay put. Of course we do not want built a wharf that is going to be carried away by the ice. That is one of the most active fishing communities in the whole of Bonavista bay, at least, and certainly on the south side of the bay. A great deal of fish is shipped from that place. As a matter of fact there is a structure there now that takes up too much of the space of the present wharf. I would certainly put Newman's Cove at the top of any list I made of places that ought to be served. I feel a certain sense of responsibility—I was almost going to say guilt—about this place because by sheer inadvertence this wharf was not included previously. I may say that it was inadvertence—for which I do not think I have any direct responsibility, but I was a member of the government at the time—that it was not included in 1957, and it should have been included.

Then I wish the minister would have his officials take another look at the situation at Upper Amherst Cove. There is a slipway there, and it is another very difficult place. There are many fishermen there who would earn twice as much from the fishery and would catch twice as much fish if they had a wharf on which to land them. Then in view of the catch I think Plate Cove West ought to have an extension to its wharf. I plead for Plate Cove West, notwithstanding the fact that I did not do very well there myself in the last election and the minister's friend did much better than I did. Notwithstanding that fact, I commend Plate Cove West to the minister. Perhaps that particular commendation would appeal to him more than some others.

The next most important one after Newman's Cove in Bonavista south is Princeton. The minister has had a great deal of correspondence about Princeton, which is frightfully important for two reasons. It is one place where the railway touches the shore, and it is a transshipment point for freight carried on the railway all through the southern part of the bay. Princeton is also a considerable fishing place. There would be more fisheries and much more productive fisheries at Princeton if that wharf could be built. It is a very small structure that is needed, and it would not cost a great deal.

On the south side of Bonavista bay the one other place that really has been neglected is Sweet Bay. I think Sweet Bay gave me a majority once out of three times. Perhaps the minister would therefore think kindly of Sweet Bay. If everybody had treated me in the way Sweet Bay treated me, maybe I would not have been here. At any rate, whatever the people of Sweet Bay may have thought of me, I think a great deal of them and I think they should have a wharf.

Then there has been a recent request, and this gives me a chance to say a word of commendation of the department. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, I do not mind saying a word of commendation of the department with regard to many things. However, I want to say a particular word of commendation of the department after I have mentioned this next project. I refer to Lethbridge. Lethbridge is not a fishing place, and I would not pretend for one second that it was. I would never have asked for a wharf at Lethbridge. There is an old wharf where there is not enough water to get a good sized canoe alongside. That is not the fault of the government of Canada. That was one of the mistakes made by the commission of government. Lethbridge has not too much deep water. However, somewhere on that side of the bay, as opposed to the Musgravetown side, a wharf is needed because a big pulpwood operation is going to be starting up in that area.

That brings me to my point of commendation. The government spent a large sum of money on an extremely long wharf—the longest one in my constituency and one of the most impressive—at Carmanville. I am sure the minister and his officials will be glad to learn that millions of cords of pulpwood are being shipped over that wharf at the present time to Italy, bringing an income not only to that settlement but to the whole of that coast, and that dozens and perhaps hundreds of families have been kept from drawing unemployment insurance and have been kept off relief in this area because that wharf is there. It is certainly one of the best investments recently made by the government in expansion.

I am glad to say, of course, that the replacement was planned in the old days, but the government carried out those plans and carried them out very expeditiously, although it was a very big job and I am sure that at times they may have wondered whether it was going to be justified. I should like them to know that it has been amply justified, as would be these other projects, I am satisfied, if they were carried out. If the government want an expansion program, this is the kind of expansion from which they would get dividends. I am not suggesting the waste of public funds on useless wharfs.

Perhaps not quite so strong as the plea for Sweet bay, I would also plead for Winterbrook, which is not so much a fishing area generally but where there is a big lobster fishery. A small landing at Winterbrook would be helpful. I would also hope that the minister would take another look at Glovertown north. I should also like to have a careful look taken at the situation at Greenspond, the old capital of the north, on the north side of the bay. It is one of the most historic places in Newfoundland. Unhappily it is an island, and it is extremely hard for these islands to survive. It has the biggest population of any of the islands in Bonavista bay. Most of the rest of them are becoming depopulated. While I would not advocate any large expenditures at Greenspond, because it is a difficult place to get at, still it has a very lucrative fishery, and I should like to think that adequate facilities will be maintained there.

Going around Cape Freels and into Notre Dame bay I come first of all to Lumsden south. I was at Lumsden south one day in the fall in a very rough sea indeed. I saw men bringing in a boat on the rocks on the beach, and two of those men were all but killed; in fact I could hardly believe they would not be killed. It was the most marvellous manifestation of the skill for which Newfoundland seamen are famous that they were not killed, and all because we cannot get an extension to that slipway. In terms of dollars it is a very small project in this great fishing area, one of the most historic fishing areas of the whole of Newfoundland. We are not even asking for a wharf, just a slipway for pulling up the boats. This is desperately needed, particularly in the rough weather in the fall.

Then coming to Fogo island, the minister knows there is a modified proposal now for the development of Fogo harbour. I know it is a difficult problem; no one knows it better than I do, except perhaps the engineers of the department. There are 5,000 people on Fogo island and the town of Fogo is the centre of the island. They are all fishermen; there is no other industry at all. If the town of Fogo cannot have adequate marine facilities 5,000 people are going to be in a very desperate economic plight.

There is another place on Fogo island that deserves some consideration. That is Stag Harbour. They have a nice little wharf there but it is not big enough to handle the traffic. When the wharf was built the people moved off one of the islands just off Fogo island on to Fogo island, doubling the population there. They are fishing people; they are fishing all the time, and they need adequate landing space and perhaps a little more depth of water.

Then I come to two places in Dog bay, Horwood and Stoneville. They had wharves in the past, but their wharves have gone. These unfortunate people are not fishermen; they are woods workers. They have to get away from there to work in the woods because the great mill that used to be there is not operating any longer. They have no way of getting out. The provincial roads program will get there eventually, but the provincial government is strapped for funds and it has so many claims for local roads. These people should have a wharf in at least one of those places. I would like to see wharves in both places. The minister could even flip a coin as far as I am concerned—and I do not mean any pun there—as to which place to put it, as long as he puts one there so the people will be able to get out and the coastal boats get in and land the people properly.

I think the minister ought to take another look at Port Albert and Boyd's Cove. The situations are very different. Port Albert will not get a road for quite a while; it is the other place besides Horwood that will not have a road for quite some time, I am afraid. But Port Albert in the wintertime, in the spring and fall is used by people coming from Change islands and Fogo island to get to the mainland of Newfoundland. It is a small place, but there are fishermen there and I think if we had a wharf we would increase the value of the fishery. In addition we would have certain other advantages accruing. I think in time this would become a big settlement, instead of a small settlement, through the moving in of people from the islands.

Boyd's Cove is a different kettle of fish. The road is being built to Boyd's Cove and will be through there this year. That normally would be regarded by the department as a reason for not building a wharf, but I suggest that Boyd's Cove is now going to become the main terminal for getting out to the islands in the spring and fall. Also, as the minister and his officials know, a causeway is going to be built across to New World island from Boyd's Cove and there will be a need not for an elaborate structure but for a wharf there to handle the traffic that can reasonably be expected.

The minister will be pleased to hear that I am coming to the end of my remarks. I could give the minister a lot more requests than these, but I am only picking out the urgent cases. There is Whale's Gulch. I still think the department could find enough ingenuity to do something for Whale's Gulch. I will not go into the problem because the department knows it very well, and it is a tough one. These are wonderful people; they are all fishermen, and they should be able to get in and out of that place a little more easily and with a little less peril. I know about this because I went there on a rough day myself and our boat was nearly swamped trying to get in.

Then there is Bridgeport, the most important of all the fishing settlements of New World island. The minister's officials have told me—and this has always hurt my feelings because they should really have known better—that Bridgeport is only two miles from Moreton's Harbour by road. That is quite true, but it is not much comfort to a fisherman who in order to get to the wharf at Moreton's Harbour has to go all the way around Western Head. I went around Western Head in the election campaign of 1958, and I can tell the minister he would not like to have been with me that day. Bridgeport is a real fishing place—

Mr. Walker: Just that day?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was one day in March or February, 1958, and it was quite a day. At any rate, Bridgeport should have a wharf. It should have had a wharf some time ago. We should have built one there. We made a mistake in not building it, and I am asking the minister to correct that mistake. He can take all the credit he likes for correcting the mistake if he will build the wharf.

An hon. Member: You made quite a few mistakes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish the minister would look into the question of the dredging needs at Durrell's Arm, particularly, Upper Jenkins Cove. I had a telegram only the day before yesterday from the community council at Crow Head in Twillingate. The minister knows that one of these community stages was built there. No community stage has benefited a community more. There is a wonderful co-operative spirit in that place, and the people are using the stage to such an extent that the wharf just will not handle the traffic. They do need an extension to the wharf in order to carry on their business and in order to make it pay and really be useful. I think perhaps the minister could squeeze the small amount required for that project out of his miscellaneous vote, and he could not use it in any better way.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask about something which is of great interest in my riding. We have a problem in the town of Haileybury. Without a doubt we are going to have to build a post office there, because the lease is up on the building now being occupied. It has become obsolete, and it is certainly not a satisfactory building for a post office.

I think as we will soon have to construct this building, this would be a good time for the department to consider the needs in that area for federal buildings. For a great many years there has been a legitimate complaint, in Kirkland lake, and it still exists, that a building should be built to house the federal departments in the area. One of the very grave problems for a long time has been the housing of the offices of the unemployment insurance commission. These offices have been located in rented premises. If this is possible, they are even more crowded than some of the offices in the House of Commons, and I think that is probably the height of overcrowding. These people have had to sit in the corridor and in front of the door with the wind blowing in at 60 miles an hour. The conditions which exist would certainly not pass the Ontario factory act, because there is terrific overcrowding.

At no time has the decision been finalized to construct a building in which to house these people. As the minister is aware, renovations are taking place in the federal building. The post office in Kirkland Lake is not going to be changed, but there will be a change to the upstairs part of the unemployment insurance property now housing the post office. This seems to be unsatisfactory, because it will be necessary to move the R.C.M.P. out or put them in less suitable quarters, and the reserve units of the army will have to be shifted around.

It seems we should have a survey which would take into consideration the needs of the federal departments for some time to come. That is why I am asking whether a survey of this type could not be carried out in the Haileybury area. I will arrange that a petition be circulated in Haileybury asking for a federal building to house the post office in that area, but I believe other things should be taken into consideration.

This is one of the reasons I have not pressed this matter in the past. It seems to me that the civil defence organization is bound to need some accommodation in this area, and probably this should be considered in connection with the arrangements made for the Algonquin regiment, which has its headquarters in Haileybury. The land presently owned is sufficient to allow a federal building to be built on it, though I do not suggest that it could not be built in a better situation. However, there is enough land there to serve as a site for the post office, a building which would take into consideration the needs, both present and future, of some of the other officials working in that area; for example, the staff engaged in carrying out the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act and the work of the Department of Veterans Affairs. There are also the inspectors and officials of the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Public Works has no representatives in the area, and the fact that officials have to be sent from North Bay undoubtedly interferes with the speedy handling of requests made from areas further north.

The situation could probably be dealt with better by setting up a permanent office in the area. The unemployment insurance commission has arranged that a branch will be established before the end of the year in New Liskeard. If this is so the officials will obviously have to be housed in a federal building, because rental accommodation in that area is limited. I am suggesting that the minister should survey the requirements of the whole area so that the town of Haileybury will be able to get a post office large enough to also house other federal agencies which can be located in the town, and that with the establishment of the new unemployment insurance office in New Liskeard consideration be given to housing in one building the other agencies which are now operating from buildings in adjacent areas.

I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, how we go about arranging these things and getting them done. I am not interested in this question in a political way. If it is necessary to bring the defeated Conservative candidate into the negotiations, if the department feels it is necessary to send him around, it is perfectly all right with me, because we both come from the same area; we both recognize the needs of that area and are sympathetic to them. If this is the way it should be done, I do not object to having some assistance. But I do believe that these projects should not be carried out by bits and pieces. I believe that while we are building premises in Haileybury to house the post office we should consider other demands which are likely to arise for accommodation. I suggest that the minister should give consideration to the needs of his colleagues who are concerned with civil defence and the desirablility of finding accommodation for civil defence staff in this area. As I say, this might be considered in close connection with the Algonquin regiment, whose history throughout northern Ontario is highly respected. The fact that the regiment has for many years had its headquarters in the town of Haileybury would indicate to me the desirability of having the civil defence headquarters for the northern region in that area also.

There is another problem and I am not sure what happens about it, but I am concerned with docks, wharves and other facilities on lake Timiskaming. For many years we have, without doubt, neglected lake Timiskaming. I am sympathetic toward the question raised by the hon. member for Hull when he speaks in this house about the forward looking program we should be developing in connection with the Ottawa river. This is only part of the problem, which affects the upper Ottawa river, which includes lake Timiskaming.

This whole area is now faced with all the problems of conservation which other areas faced earlier in their development. One of these is erosion. I have often heard members from the maritime provinces talking about erosion and the assistance which is given to combat it. I think some of this assistance should be available to lake Timiskaming, which is an interprovincial body of water. I see that the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister is in his seat. His riding covers all the other side of those waters, and he will agree with me, I hope, that the survey which appears to me to be necessary should not be made on a partisan basis. It should not even be on an exclusively provincial-federal basis. It should be on a scale sufficiently large to include both the conservation authorities and the municipalities.

Obviously control dams will be needed in the riding of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. They will be needed on the White river and on the Quinze river as well as on the Wabi, on the Moose, the Matachewan and on the Montreal river. Each of these rivers will need control dams, and these dams will have to compensate for the abuses which are taking place at the present time in connection with the use of the water by Ontario hydro. Ontario hydro does not give one hoot to what happens to the Ottawa river or to the Ottawa river watershed. They could not care less what happens to it. All they are interested in is getting a head of water to produce a certain amount of electricity.

Last year, on one occasion when I went home, I found that my area was flooded. The town of New Liskeard had water in its streets. I am sure the hon. member whose constituency lies across the lake found exactly the same situation in all the towns along the lake shore on his side. When one is asked to make representations asking that water be let out at the south control dam, one is well aware at the time that both at Britannia, here, and all the way up the Ottawa river other places are flooded also. This is a situation which should not exist, and it would not exist were it not for the inability of the hydro authorities to look at this problem in a larger light than that of their own interests, which, as I say, consists of maintaining a head of water for the generation of electricity.

I do not know whether this question can be settled now. I do not even know whether the government has any interest in making a survey of the whole situation in the Ottawa watershed, but this is an important matter. Within the next few years it will arise internationally, and we shall be obliged to give consideration to a project which will be as important to the Canadian people as is, presently, the problem associated with the Columbia river agreement. The same situation will arise in relation to the need which has already developed in Chicago, where there is not even enough water to meet the sewage disposal needs in that area. And, of course, the only place from which we can get water is the Ottawa river watershed, supplemented, of course, by water taken from the Arctic watershed.

I am not asking the federal government to make that survey now, because it still seems unrealistic to me. I am not really suggesting to the minister that we survey the Ottawa river with the object of putting in a canal. This seems kind of unrealistic to me as well. The only reason it sounds unrealistic to me is that I am not an engineer and I am not really a conservation expert, and I do not know what the potentials and possibilities are; but many people much smarter than I have said that it a feasible project, and both these things will come to pass at some time in the future. I think we would be foolish not to take these problems into consideration.

Lake Timiskaming is a very pretty and useful lake and a very large resource of northern Ontario. It is a large resource for southern Ontario as well, because if that lake does not continue to serve the purpose it is serving now, namely as a reservoir for power development, we shall pay very dearly for the loss of it. As a first step the department could make a survey. This is just an example. I know the minister is going to have more examples. I know he is familiar with this matter because the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has brought it to the attention of the cabinet, of caucus and also of the house.

Let us use New Liskeard as an example. The municipality of New Liskeard has been playing around with one of the tributaries of Lake Timiskaming for a number of years. The erosion of the shore is very great in our area. I am not so very old and I cannot remember too far back, but I am old enough to remember that at the mouth of the Wabi river there was a nice grove of hardwood trees which was rather unique in that area because they were oak, and normally oak trees do not grow that far north. Most of these oaks have been killed, the shore has eroded and silt piles up in the mouth of the Wabi river.

More important than that, during heavy rainfalls torrents of water come down the river. The lake is muddy about three quarters of the way across Wabi bay, which is two or three miles wide at this point. This was not true 10 years ago, and certainly not 15 years ago. The lake was relatively clear in the past. Many years ago they did have a very large breakwater in the New Liskeard area, and it protected the shore. Over the years it fell into disrepair. The department said it was not as necessary now as it had been in the past, and this is probably true, but its disrepair resulted in a great increase in the rate of erosion, and this is particularly evident since the breakwater was removed. All I am asking is that we give some consideration to this matter.

It is very hard to go back to mining municipalities and say to them "Let us have a conservation organization." How much better it would be if we did that now rather than wait until we reach the same impasse they reached in the United States in the time of Roosevelt, when he took the initiative to set up the Tennessee valley project. After he set up the project millions and millions of dollars worth of benefit accrued from it, but only because they spent the money to put it in. But really it was a little late. It is not too late yet for us to act. It would not be an expensive proposition to bring about conservation in the Ottawa river watershed and prevent the abuses that are bound to take place if we do not take some action. I hope the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue will rise in his place and say something about this because I believe this problem affects all of us in northern Ontario and northern Quebec. It is a serious problem, Mr. Chairman.

In my opinion we were not smart enough in our part of the country to see that a federal law was passed which would prohibit the driving of logs or having logs floating around in the lake all year round. This is not a little pond that we are talking about; it is a lake 85 miles long and 12 miles wide. It is a large body of water. Of course the federal government is responsible for it. It has passed legislation to establish an upper Ottawa improvement company to be responsible for looking after this particular aspect of lake Timiskaming. I am sure it is possible to call up the people concerned and criticize them for not sweeping the particular area and they will get busy and do it. I think the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue will agree with me that we should have an authority representative of all the municipalities and communities around the lake. We should be pressing the federal government for this survey and for control dams on the headwaters of that system, which would make it much easier to overcome the silt problem and cut down the amount of clay which is drifting into the lake. The other valuable assets and the natural resource that we have in that area in the form of lake Timiskaming should be protected.

I should like the department to give immediate consideration to the land erosion program as it affects three or four of the municipalities. The municipality of Harris is now a very well developed housing area, but the shore line of the lake is usually in very bad shape. The erosion taking place is not legally the responsibility of the government, because the water level in that area was changed. It was placed so high that you would have to drown the town of New Liskeard before there was any high water problem. I own a piece of land along the shore there which is four or five acres in extent. I think I would be lucky if I could claim half an acre because the rest of it, owing to the very high water level established at the time they changed the water levels with the erection of the dams in south Timiskaming, would be under water. This appears to me rather unrealistic. Surely the reason for establishing the high water level was not to take away from the federal government its admitted responsibility of preventing and supervising erosion. This has come about because of the inability of the department to decide at the time what the high level should be in relation to the level that would have to be maintained by the dam, and the fact that the government did not want to be put into the position, I am quite sure, of having to expropriate a great deal of land for flooding purposes, if that was necessary, when the level was established in the lake. I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the reference to the high water level was changed in the deeds about the same time that the water level in the lake was raised by the establishment of the permanent dam in south Timiskaming.

I should like to see more municipalities undertake to do their share of the protection of the shore line. New Liskeard has been doing some erosion prevention work. The department of highways is interested in this problem, because there is continuous danger of their losing the highway which until this year has been a part of the trans-Canada system. There is great danger of the highway falling into the lake. The water comes up very close to the shore line. It is a rocky shore line, and when the water is maintained at a high level the winds and the ice conditions make it very difficult to maintain a sufficient amount of land on the lake side to prevent a threat to the highway. On occasions the road has to be closed off because part of it falls into the water.

It may be true that the water level is too high. It is also true that the municipalities are ignorant of their rights, Mr. Chairman. They have not applied for assistance in the prevention of erosion. In most instances they have done it themselves without any assistance. While this is to be commended, the fact is that they do not necessarily spend their money in the most efficient manner. I think much more could be achieved if they would spend their money in conjunction with financial assistance from the federal government, and they would also be able to avail themselves of the technical advice and assistance that the federal department is quite capable of giving. The department has had a great deal of experience in other parts of the country in connection with erosion and the protection of shore lines, and their assistance would be very valuable. Yet it always seems to require a great deal of dickering to arrive at an arrangement whereby the federal government will participate in these matters. I say the municipalities are partly responsible for this because of their inability to understand just what their responsibility is and what grants are available to them.

I think such projects could be carried out under the winter works program. I know that the town of New Liskeard would be willing to do their erosion work in the late fall and early spring, because the water level is very low at that time and the work could be done more economically then. I would be pleased if the minister would give some indication when he replies as to what the department is going to do with relation to the whole Ottawa river watershed. This question involves considerations of diversion, canalizing the Ottawa, the system of control to be used, the necessary reforestation under a conservation program, what assistance the government will give in setting up a conservation authority like the Thames valley authority and the Tennessee valley conservation authority in the United States; in other words, what assistance the federal government contemplates giving in this whole field in the future.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, I had a few questions to raise and, first of all, I wanted to refer to the building of an additional post office in the western part of Hull, which includes Wright, Tetreau, Lafontaine and Dollard wards, and whose population numbers about 30,000. However, I realize that the Department of Public Works has only the responsibility of building post offices, but that it is up to the Post Office Department to decide on the necessity of those post offices and where they are to be built. Consequently, I shall content myself with writing directly to the Postmaster General about the matter.

Mr. Chairman, I should like also to refer to something that does not seem to work too well in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I know that up to May 1960, when regulations to take effect on January 1, 1961 were adopted, loans could be obtained for buildings located in places where there are no sewers.

Not being aware of those new regulations, I recently wrote C.M.H.C. on behalf of Mr. Dupuis. Besides reading the letter I wrote, I will also read the reply I received from the corporation.

Here is what I wrote:

Gentlemen—

Mr. Andre Dupuis, 30 Rouville St., Hull, told me that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation refused to approve a $15,000 loan because his house is to be built along McConnell road, where there is no sewer or water service.

Taking into account the fact that his lot is about 200' x 200', that the septic tank is to be installed at the far end of it, more than 100 feet away from the well, and also taking into account the fact that he has a letter from Dr. Gregoire, Quebec health deputy minister, who after an examination of the plans stated that everything is in accordance with the provincial sanitary regulations, how is it that C.M.H.C. refuses to approve that loan?

I know that Mr. Dupuis has a large family of 10 children and that, because of his difficulties in finding proper housing for them, he is forced to build. Do you not think that those particular circumstances deserve special consideration?

I would be very happy if you would reconsider this case in the light of those facts, and if it is not formally forbidden by the law, try and grant his request.

Here is the answer I received from the Ottawa branch manager. I quote:

This letter is in answer to yours of June 2, concerning the application of Mr. Dupuis for a loan for the construction of a house on a piece of land located in Hull South, lot 17-A-10, where there is no sewer system.

His case was considered again and we reached the same decision, that we cannot accept his application since there is no sewer system in a suburban-like area.

This is consistent with our corporation's new policy announced May 13, 1961, and retroactive to January 1, 1961.

You will no doubt agree that the area where Mr. Dupuis wants to build has a very good residential development potential for the future, with a sewer system and waterworks planned according to accepted city planning principles.

Our past experience proves that it is difficult to carry out such a program in a suburban area where a number of houses have already been built without any such system.

We are really sorry not to be able to grant his request, but he might perhaps consider another site where a loan could be authorized under our rules.

My point is that at least two houses have been built in that area under a C.M.H.C. loan. In fact, a Mr. Tremblay, if I am not mistaken, and another individual have built houses there after the department of health of the province of Quebec had recognized that their system, according to the blueprints, was acceptable to the department of health.

I realize that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has decided it should protect individuals against themselves, and I realize that preventive measures are called for.

However, in areas where there are no sewage systems and where none will perhaps be installed for years to come, when people comply with provincial government regulations requiring septic tanks to be placed at a distance of at least 30 feet from the well, I fail to see why a change was made to the provision which formerly allowed house building loans to be granted. We must not forget that in our cities, there are large families that cannot find accommodation and must go out and build outside the city, something they might be unable to do if taxes were in relation to the services provided.

Moreover, if loans were granted for this type of housing on the basis of provincial health legislation, this would be a tremendous boon to some areas where there is a great need for accommodation for large families.

I therefore leave the matter with the minister. I hope he will consider it and will agree to amend the regulations so that provincial sanitation regulations will be recognized as reasonable housing standards in areas without sewage systems.

Following a number of members who have spoken before me, I should now like to discuss the matter of retaining walls.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, from time immemorial and up to the years 1954 or 1955, the Department of Public Works has at all times, both under Conservative and Liberal administrations, accepted a measure of responsibility for the construction of such walls.

I know such was the practice for at least 30 years, and that it was when Mr. Winters was appointed to the Department of Public Works in Ottawa that the system was changed. I think Mr. Winters was advised by lawyers that he had no right to get into this field and that since then, the department has stuck to the same policy.

I had an opportunity of writing to the minister in that connection not so long ago, that is on August 19, 1960, and in that letter I explained the problem as I saw it.

Dear Sir:

I received your letter of August 13, in reply to mine of July 17, concerning the damage caused by floods in the municipality of South East Buckingham. You mention that the damages resulted from the extraordinary swelling of the waters which occurred last spring. That, I will admit, but the whole question remains debatable. As I stated in the house, Mr. Winters took the liberty of giving his own interpretation to the constitution when he said that all navigable rivers were under the jurisdiction of the federal government. Even if Mr. Winters confused "navigable rivers" and "rivers where there is navigation", I took the matter up with the attorney general of Quebec, who claimed that the responsibility lies with the federal government, since, according to the constitution, the latter is responsible for navigable waters.

I then asked Mr. Winters to take advantage of a federal-provincial conference to clear up this matter, which he never did, and I note that you have accepted this version or interpretation given by Mr. Winters; I am all the more surprised since you are a lawyer and I am convinced that a lawyer would interpret a matter such as this better than an engineer.

To clarify this matter once and for all, it should be submitted to the Minister of Justice and, at the same time, to the attorneys general of the different provinces, so as to establish:

1. The extent of the federal government's responsibility regarding damages caused by navigable waters;

2. The complete definition of navigable waters; and

3. The extent of the principle of overpowering circumstances or, as it is called, an act of God.

Then we should not have to treat those matters in a haphazard way in the future.

Here is the minister's reply, dated October 1:

Re: Flood damage in Buckingham, Que.

Dear Mr. Caron:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter dated August 19, 1960, and I am sorry I have been unable to reply to you sooner.

I have made a thorough study of your comments in connection with this problem and I feel there is a misunderstanding on that point.

Section 91 of the B.N.A. Act gives the parliament of Canada exclusive jurisdiction to legislate in matters pertaining to navigation and shipping. Parliament has exercised that jurisdiction over the years by adopting statutes such as the Canada Shipping Act, the Navigable Waters Protection Act, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, etc.

The Canadian government has also carried out its responsibilities in administering that legislation as well as regulations set up under the various acts.

The comments I just made thoroughly prove that the legislative power of the Canadian parliament is restricted to matters which can reasonably be considered as related to navigation and water transport. Those are the limits of parliamentary authority in Canada in this matter.

On this point I do not seem to understand the argument very well. I was told at the start that there is somewhere a misunderstanding with regard to the matter and the government's responsibility is said to be limited to the field of navigation and water transport. Nevertheless, when I submitted that to Mr. Duplessis who, at the time was attorney general of the province of Quebec —Mr. Duplessis was also a lawyer—he said: The waterways are the responsibility of the federal government, and I therefore always insist that the means be found for the two parties to get together in order to know whom to approach. To date there has been no such understanding or discussion, which might have been helpful.

And he says further:

You indicated, in your letter, that waterways are the responsibility of the federal government. The proposition is correct—so the minister told me—as far as you intend it to mean that navigaion and transport on the waterways are constitutionally under the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament.

The problem you are raising in your letter deals with the responsibility resulting from flood damage to properties on the banks of the Ottawa river, at South East Buckingham, in the spring of 1960. You will recall that the flood was due to heavy rainfall when the river had reached its highest spring level.

The conditions prevailing on the Ottawa river, near South East Buckingham in 1960 can in no way be blamed on or related to navigation or shippin.

Therefore the parliament of Canada has no authority under the constitution to pass legislation on such matters.

The problem is essentially "a purely local and private matter in the province" under subsection 16 of section 92 of the British North America Act. The constitution gives jurisdiction in this matter exclusively to the provincial legislature.

I hope this explanation will clearly show the distinction between matters under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada and those under the provincial legislature, and satisfactorily answers your first question.

As to your second question, I might say that the expression "navigable waters" has not been defined by the legislator.

Well, how can we gauge government responsibility with regard to navigable waters, if the expression has never been defined in the law.

Things were left that way on purpose, because each case must be decided on its merits.

This is where my opinion is at variance with the minister's and all those who share this opinion.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege based upon a remark made this morning by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville when he made a so-called correction in Hansard. I am sorry to note that the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville is not in his seat. However, I called his office and talked with his secretary, and she said she would notify him as soon as possible. I would have risen at the time this morning, but I wished to be absolutely sure that I heard the words correctly by checking further with my colleagues.

The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville first quoted the agreement between Canada and Quebec on the Mattagami access road, as follows:

> No member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of any contract, agreement or commission with respect to the project, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

He then went on to say this: "Évidemment il s'agit du député de Villeneuve". In addition, in the course of the debate on the estimates of this department he made a number of statements in connection with professional services which I performed, as a Quebec land surveyor, for the department of mines in the province of Quebec. These services were under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec and were paid for exclusively by the provincial government.

The hon. member certainly left the impression that my conduct in this matter was incompatible with my responsibilities as a member of this house. I cannot allow any such impression to remain unchallenged. I therefore request the hon. member to withdraw the remarks which have reflected on my conduct. If he is not prepared to withdraw I challenge him to make a definite charge and then I will immediately ask that the matter be referred, in accordance with the past practice of this House of Commons, to the standing on privileges and elections. In other words, he should put up or shut up.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I have heard the question of privilege. If I am not mistaken, I believe it was raised this morning when Mr. Speaker was in the chair, or at least the matter with which the hon. member takes issue was raised when Mr. Speaker was in the chair. Perhaps it would be the part of wisdom to defer the point until Mr. Speaker is in the chair and possibly the hon. member who aggrieved the hon. member for Villeneuve is in his place as well.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, at one o'clock I was discussing the second part of the reply, or rather the reply to the second part of my letter dealing with retaining walls. The minister wrote, and I quote:

> With reference to your second question, I may say that the phrase "navigable waters" has not been defined in the legislation. This was done on purpose, because it is a matter to be determined in the light of the facts of every particular case. However, the courts have ruled that a river is in fact navigable if, in its natural condition, it can be used for purposes of trade, no matter how the trade is carried on. The standard of navigability of a river must therefore be judged in the light of its natural capacity and its usefulness for trade purposes. The courts have in fact ruled that small rivers of shallow depth in which navigation could only be carried on in small craft were none the less navigable.
> Though I am not sure what purpose you have in mind in raising your third question in connection with the present case, I might mention that the phrase "act of God" has been defined in civil law as being "an unforeseen event caused by a major force against which no resistance is possible". Under the law, an act of God is necessarily a very unusual event and is seldom invoked successfully as a means of defence in a damage suit.
> The principles applying to the present situation are clear, and I regret being unable to see any advantage in discussing this matter with the attorneys general of the various provinces.

First, I must say that I do not consider the reply as clear as the minister claims it is. I submit that in the minister's letter, there are many contradictions, particularly where he suggests that the responsibility of the federal government mainly concerns navigated waters rather than navigable waters, and quotes as an example the findings of the courts to the effect that shallow rivers and even, if I am not mistaken, a river which perhaps is not normally navigable but on which logs are floated to the mills are considered navigable.

The minister has stated his opinion. I have asked, and I again ask what is the extent of the federal government's responsibility in relation to damage caused by the waters of navigable rivers?

This is a question which has been discussed at great length. I have raised it in Quebec. I have raised it in Ottawa. The opinions given to me in Ottawa are at variance with the opinions I have received from Quebec. It is claimed in Ottawa, and this is the generally recognized opinion, that navigable waters are a federal responsibility, but that the bed and the river itself are a provincial responsibility in view of the fact that they are the property of the province.

But when I ask both federal and provincial authorities to co-operate in order to clearly define the responsibilities, nobody does anything about it. Neither federal ministers nor provincial ministers take action with a view to finding a method of agreement to define responsibilities.

I do not accept the federal government's version in its entirety; part of it might be correct and based on something sound and reliable. Besides, I do not accept either the provincial government's suggestion that this is a federal responsibility. It seems to me that both governments have a joint responsibility and that they could agree to clearly define it.

The minister says this amazing thing in his letter:

With reference to your second question, I may say that the phrase "navigable waters" has not been defined in the legislation.

Well, if it has not been defined, it is time perhaps we had a sound and complete definition of navigable waters.

We are told that all waters where navigation is possible and on which logs can be floated are navigable waters and that we already have findings to that effect. Well, both governments should meet once and for all in order to discuss this matter and give satisfaction to those who maintain that they have a right to those retaining walls, because if that responsibility were clearly defined and if the present department, like the previous one under Mr. Winters, had accepted to keep on building retaining walls, a great number of projects could be undertaken in many Canadian municipalities, which could alleviate unemployment since local people could carry out such work during the summer.

That is what I am asking the minister. I ask him to kindly see to it that a definite plan be established. This is not my first request on that point. In fact, on December 3, 1957, I asked the minister the following question:

(Text):

Has the minister taken advantage of the federal provincial conference to discuss with the premier of Quebec as to which government is responsible for protection walls along the Ottawa and Gatineau rivers?

[Mr. Caron.]

(Translation):

I never obtained an answer. And I asked this supplementary question:

(Text):

Is it the intention of the minister to discuss the matter with the Quebec authorities who claim that it is the federal responsibiliy?

(Translation):

I did not get an answer to that question. I asked another one:

(Text):

Due to the controversy between the Quebec and the federal authorities regarding the responsibility towards the building of protection walls alongside of navigable rivers, even if not or little navigated, would the minister satisfy all the interested parties by submitting the case to the Supreme Court of Canada for clarification?

(Translation):

There again, I got no reply.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is about time that the governments agree on a precise definition as to who is responsible for navigable waters and who is responsible for the prevention of farm land erosion by navigable waters. There is a great deal of farm land in my constituency—the same thing can be said about several other constituencies in Canada—which is being eroded gradually by the water in the spring and in the fall. Farmers who are not rich have lost hundreds of feet of land in a space of 25 years.

The government must attend to that. I am not blaming entirely the federal government and the provincial governments. My criticism is aimed mostly at the ministers who do not want to clear up this matter.

I know that in the committees where there are a lot of lawyers, plays are made on words. But when the question to be cleared up is one of such importance to the people of those areas, it seems to me that they could take the trouble of coming to an agreement to clear up this situation, so that we may know where to apply when damage is caused by some river, whether it be the Ottawa, the Gatineau or any other river.

I know that retaining walls were built at certain places. I am not blaming the ministers who authorized them. However, I feel that that should be the over all policy as it was until 1954 or 1955. That had been the constant practice under all the ministers of public works and all administrations. Municipalities and farmers who had damage caused by erosion always received assistance from the federal government.

And that practice was followed by lawyers. I know that Mr. Fournier, now a judge of the exchequer court, and who was, of course, a lawyer followed that practice. So did his predecessor, Mr. Cardin, also a lawyer. In short, the ministers of public works who were mostly lawyers, always recognized this as a federal responsibility.

I wonder why there was a change of attitude since that time? If it is only for the sake of economy, I think it ill-advised. Because, such a saving does not help the people. If expenditures were made in different counties to assist the population who suffers damage on account of erosion by water, it would reduce unemployment, since such works would call for local manpower.

That is why I ask the minister once again to take up this matter with the provincial authorities, in order to have a definition of navigable waters, to know who is responsible and to see whether navigable waters must be taken to mean waters on which there is navigation. Let us have a clear definition of these words and we will know if we must direct our requests to the provincial government.

But, pending the clarification of this matter, I submit that we must request the federal Minister of Public Works to revert back to the sound policy that obtained before 1954. That is what I am asking today.

(Text):

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, before coming to the main items which cause me to rise today I should like to support the plea put forward this morning by my colleague, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, for a revision of the government's policy with respect to public buildings in general, and in particular to post office accommodation for small communities.

We raised this matter when the estimates of the Postmaster General were before the committee, and subsequent correspondence which I received from the Postmaster General indicated that we had given him the impression that we were asking for a post office building in every community that has a post office. Of course, that was not so and I should like to take this opportunity to correct that impression.

As my colleague pointed out this morning, we have a special situation in Newfoundland because of the difficulty of integrating the policy of the Newfoundland government prior to our becoming a part of Canada with the policy of the government of Canada. Many small communities which were able to get a public building for post office accommodation from the Newfoundland government prior to confederation, are now smaller than many other communities which have grown since confederation and which are not able to qualify for these buildings under the present

We are not asking for a post office building in every community, but there are many communities where the public cannot be served satisfactorily by the post office being in some part of a person's residence. Particularly in the larger communities which have a population of five or six hundred or a thousand people, we feel the best solution is to have a little post office building. We ask that every case be considered on its merits. There would not be very many; in my own riding there might be five or six communities in that category. So I would urge the minister to consider the details which my colleague has put on record in Hansard and to take another look at this policy respecting postal accommodation in these communities which have grown and expanded since confederation.

I think there is no department of government which touches the lives of so many of my constituents or affects them more closely than the Department of Public Works. I have in my riding about 55,000 people most of whom are dispersed in some 160 small communities stretched along a coast line which, if it were straightened out, would reach for hundreds of miles. It can be realized how important to these people are the services provided by the minister's department. When it is considered that about 80 per cent of these people are fishermen and that all of them are facing the sea—and even those who do not earn their living directly from the sea often use the sea as a highway—we get some idea of the importance of the structures which the Department of Public Works provides. In our smallest communities there is a need either for a little landing place where small boats can dock or for a ramp to help fishermen haul up their boats more easily without damaging them on rocks and boulders.

I know that from a strictly economic point of view many of these structures could not, perhaps, be justified but I raise this question today mainly to point out to the minister that there are factors other than purely economic ones to be considered, and in my opinion these other factors are more important. The usefulness of these structures is not limited to the people who actually live in the settlement. Once a wharf or landing place has been provided it serves the interests of everybody in the area and, from time to time, of people throughout the province or even those who live outside the province. To be able to tie up alongside a wharf in a small boat, instead of having to lie at anchor all night and pass sleepless hours wondering whether the wind might change and your vessel be blown ashore, is a most comforting experience. It is much better to be able to lie alongside some sound structure and have a good night's sleep without worrying about whether you will have to run for your life or whether you will drift ashore during the night. In our larger communities we need wharves in order that the C.N.R. ships may tie up for the convenience of passengers and for the handling of freight. If such structures do not exist, the work which has to be done is multiplied many times. People have to go out in small boats in all weather to deliver cargo and bring it ashore. Inconvenience is caused especially to old people and to women and children who have to clamber over boulders and climb down rickety stages. All of this could be avoided by the expenditure of comparatively few dollars to build a landing place or small wharf in these communities.

I should like to point out that many of the structures which have been provided so far in many communities have led to a considerable decrease in the cost of living. If a community facing the sea has a harbour and can bring in its coal direct from Sydney or St. John's it can save as much as four or five dollars a ton on that item alone. Multiply the saving by a large number of communities and you will realize the total advantage to the people who live in this region, though the statistics in any one place may not be impressive.

Then there are the breakwaters. These not only provide shelter for the boats which are moored in the harbours but very often they save lives as well. In our winters in Newfoundland we experience very stormy weather and it is not unusual to find waves 14 feet high rolling in on the land. Last winter, in particular, the weather was severe and there were cases reported when walls of water 17 feet high rolled on the beaches. That is the height of a two-storey house, and hon. members can imagine what damage would have been done not only to shipping but to lives and property along the water front if breakwaters had not provided some protection. Last winter in several of the communities in my riding the force of these seas was strong enough to upset several of these breakwaters, but the very fact that they were there saved not only the fishermen's property but their dwellings and, possibly, their lives.

These are all factors which must be taken into consideration apart from strictly economic considerations. I wish to express my appreciation to the minister for the kind and thoughtful attention he has always given to the many cases I have brought to his attention during the last year and for the careful and sympathetic consideration he has always given to them. Since I am speaking mainly of the work of the harbours and engineering branch I want to pay a special tribute to the chief engineer, the district engineer and the officials of the harbours and rivers engineering service, because it was with them that I had most of my contacts. I have always found them most co-operative in trying to solve the problems and to work out what is best for the fishermen, or for the community concerned.

I note that the vote for harbours and engineering services in Newfoundland is up this year by about $316,000. I realize that a large part of this amount is earmarked to take care of the contracts that have been let with respect to St. John's harbour. I do hope that this large project will soon reach completion and that the minister will then be able to give more consideration to these smaller works which I have brought to his attention.

I mentioned a while ago, Mr. Chairman, that I have 160 settlements in my riding. I think I could find something that would be useful and needed in each one of them, but I assure the minister I am not going to make a list of them. There is already on record in the department a list of recommendations that will take care of his votes in this regard for perhaps several years to come, but I do want to mention one particular place, perhaps two. I am not going to go into detail about it because I have already given the minister complete details in a volume of correspondence. The place I refer to is Seal Cove in Connaigre bay. I brought up this matter in his predecessor's day. It has been deferred from one year to another. I merely mention it now to point out to the minister that the situation is getting more and more desperate the longer it is deferred. This is a large, important and growing community. The provincial government has lived up to its part of the bargain in this instance. They put the road to the new site. I do hope that the minister will see fit to include in his estimates next year an item to provide a sort of combination breakwater-wharf which is necessary to provide a harbour for those people and also to permit them to earn a livelihood because if this is not done they will have no means of earning a living at all.

I should like to bring one other place to the attention of the minister, namely the town of Marystown. The town of Marystown has a public wharf which is pretty much in the same condition today that it was 10 years ago when Newfoundland became a part of Canada. It has been repaired and strengthened, but it is not at all in keeping with the kind of facility the department has provided for other communities of similar size and importance. This picture is not now adequate to the needs of Marystown. Again this is a structure that has been deferred from year to year. I do hope the minister will make a special note of this along with Seal Cove. I should be very happy if he can have these two items in his estimates next year.

One other point I should like to mention to the minister has to do with policy or perhaps I should say priority. I know it makes a very good argument to say that if a community has a road, then its need for a wharf is thereby lessened. Well, that argument is not as sound as it appears because the road that it has is usually very poor; it is not a paved road; it is just a small narrow dirt road, usually very dangerous and usable only for a very short part of the year. To truck freight over that kind of road is very costly.

Despite the fact that communities seven or eight miles away, may be linked up with other settlements by road, I would ask the minister to keep in mind that during the wintertime the road will be blocked and nothing will be able to get over it. There is still need for an outlet by the sea, and that can only be had by providing the proper facilities.

I have one particular case in mind that I wish to bring to the minister's attention in this regard, namely Harbour Mille in Fortune bay. I understand it is not the fault of the department that this structure has been delayed so long. There again the situation is getting more and more acute. The population and the need are growing. Therefore I ask the minister to reconsider this project and see what can be done in his estimates next year.

During the past two years there has been a great deal of rumour and press reports in my riding about the development of a transshipment harbour at Mortier bay. I understand an interdepartmental committee has been considering this project for many years. There is so much rumour that I think it would be advisable to have some official pronouncement about this project in so far as it concerns the minister's department. If the minister can reveal anything of any plans in the process of being worked out for this project I would be very grateful to him if he would tell us about it when he replies.

Then there is need for clarification of policy with respect to erosion. As has been pointed out by a good many hon. members, at the present time it is difficult to define where federal responsibility ends and provincial responsibility begins. If the federal department accepts responsibility for erosion caused by lakes and rivers, it would seem to me logical that that policy should apply also to harbours and to the approaches to harbours. I personally would like to see a clear-cut definition of policy with respect to protection works to take care of erosion of the sea shore.

There are two other matters that I wish to mention before I take my seat. I notice that the vote for repairs and upkeep, vote 358, has been reduced by $100,000. This happens to be the year when we have the most need of repairs, following the very severe winter that we have just gone through, with all the storm damage that I mentioned a few minutes ago. I do hope that this reduction in the vote will not delay the necessary repairs to put those structures back into shape before another winter comes.

I am glad to see that vote 360 for dredging, construction or acquisition of plant and equipment, has been increased by $366,000. That is a relatively small increase. I do not think the minister will be able to secure very much new equipment with that much money. As I have pointed out on previous occasions, dredging is one of our most urgent needs in Newfoundland. Although we have modern equipment, we do not have any heavy suction dredging equipment. We have been trying for two years to pry loose the dredge of that type operating in Nova Scotia but it seems to be stuck there, and in the meantime our needs are becoming more and more acute. There is certainly a need for more heavy suction dredging equipment than we have and there is also a need for more shallow dredging equipment.

I hope the minister will look at this need, particularly with regard to Newfoundland, because the amount of equipment we have there now has not been able to look after the needs that were inherited ten years ago when Newfoundland became part of Canada and very soon some of these situations will have to be looked at again. If we are going to keep abreast of the problem and maintain our harbours in proper shape, we must have more dredging equipment than we have at the present time.

I am a little disappointed that vote 371 for miscellaneous works is slightly less than last year. It is now $2,450,000 compared with $2,500,000 last year. This is a reduction of $50,000 but certainly the trend is in the wrong direction. If there is one vote that needs to be increased more than any others, it is that for miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for. Most of the structures in small communities in my riding of the type to which I referred earlier have to be financed from this vote. Many of these communities have been waiting for six or seven years now for something to be done. Because the amounts are too small to be listed separately in the blue book, this is one vote that should be doubled instead of decreased.

When one considers that the $2,450,000 has to be distributed all across Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it is certainly not a very large sum. When one considers further that projects costing up to $25,000 can now be financed out of this vote, it becomes apparent that no provision has been made for the extra drain on this fund. To reduce the total amount only makes the drain all the heavier and will certainly result in deferring still longer many small projects costing $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 for which we have already been waiting for several years.

I am not going to burden the minister with further details. I have tried to speak in general terms, but I hope the minister will heed what I have just said about the need for a further increase in the dredging vote and particularly in the vote for miscellaneous works. Finally, I thank the minister and his officials again for what they have done in the past and I hope they will be able to do even more in the future.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak briefly on the general item of these estimates. I represent Leeds, a riding in the very heart of what has been characterized as the golden triangle of eastern Ontario. Various tourist publications describe the area as being directly north of New York state, a land of hundreds of clear lakes, sparkling trout streams, thousands of picturesque islands, lofty evergreens, rugged mountains and so on. It is a lot more than that, Mr. Chairman, but may I say that under earlier administrations certain great projects flowed from the co-operation of Mr. King and Mr. Roosevelt first of all with respect to the Thousand Islands bridge at Ivy Lea. In respect of that bridge I think that a tribute should be paid to a man who worked indefatigably for it for many years long before it became a reality. I refer to George Fulford. He travelled up and down eastern Canada and particularly upstate New York. The Ivy Lea bridge is just over 300 miles from New York city, the most populous and wealthy part of the United States of America. It is right in the centre of that golden triangle bounded on the east by the charming village of Bainsville, on the north by Hawkesbury, the Ottawa river and Deep river and on the south by that ancient, great and historic city of Kingston.

The Thousand Islands bridge at Ivy Lea, in which Mr. Fulford had so much interest in years past, has actually transformed the face of eastern Ontario. Unquestionably my riding, all of which is within 40 miles of the bridge, is vitally interested in tourism. Extending to the west we have historic sites as far as Kingston. Extending to the east we have Glengarry park, Upper Canada village and so many of the great areas along the river including the parks of the parks commission which are now attracting thousands of United States tourists to this country.

We now see indications that the Canadian dollar appears to be slipping and no doubt this will lead to greater tourism, particularly if the minister can impress upon his colleagues the urgency and importance at least to our part of Canada of soft-pedalling anti-Americanism. Those of us who live in this part of Canada feel that we are very closely related to upstate New York and, indeed, to all of the United States. We feel that our wealth is partly dependent upon a happy and close relationship with the United States and we believe that at times definite harm has been done to our area by comments that have been made and by policies that have done our area no particular good.

It happens that the Leeds area, which has such attractive places as Gananoque, Seeleys Bay and Westport on the west, Charleston and the Rideau lakes system, is very popular with United States tourists and a most happy relationship exists between our people and them. We hope that this relationship will continue to exist.

We were pleased when the minister spoke on May 25 last of a contract having been let for a public wharf at Westport. Westport is only a tiny place but it is immensely important. It is located on a beautiful body of water which is connected with other bodies of water and it is really important so far as the tourist business is concerned.

The minister also spoke of Seeleys Bay, which was the home of my very fine predecessor, Mr. Hayden Stanton. Seeleys Bay is also important from the tourist standpoint. On May 24 the minister also referred to contracts that have already been let at Gananoque and other work to be performed. I would impress upon the minister that anything that is done in this area in the way of public works, however small it may be, will add to the general economy, welfare and benefit of this part of Canada. We do not expect from the minister, perhaps, great projects of the type of the deep sea waterway or such things as the Thousand Islands bridge. These works have already been completed and the whole area has been elevated and enriched by the co-operation, for example, that existed between Mr. St. Laurent and, in the first instance, Mr. Truman. This has transformed this part of Canada. Still, the natural beauties are there. They are very much appreciated and we can go forward with new heart.

I urge the minister kindly consider, from the standpoint of unemployment, any of these projects in that part of the riding which is bounded on the north by Smiths Falls, on the east by Brockville, on the south by Gananoque, and on the west by Westwood, because they are very urgently needed at this particular time.

Mr. Bourget: Before this item carries, I have a few questions I should like to ask the minister. Have some of the architects and engineers left their jobs, either in Montreal or Toronto? If so, how many and for what reason?

Mr. Walker: I will obtain an answer to that question.

Mr. Bourget: I should like also to ask the minister if he will tell us why one Charles Bankley of Montreal who, I understand, was working as a janitor from March 3, 1959 to June, 1960, was fired.

Mr. Herridge: I have been very quiescent during the initial stages of this discussion. Before this vote carries, is the minister going to reply to a few of the questions that were put, or is he going to reply on the appropriate items?

Mr. Walker: On appropriate items.

Item agreed to.

334. Quebec, $4,680,000.

Mr. Bourget: I should like the minister to tell us when the plans and specifications are going to be ready for the public building to house the unemployment insurance commission. The minister will recall that we have had this item in the estimates for the past three years, but so far nothing has been done except to demolish the old hospital. We should be entitled, after 2½ years, to get some information as to when the people of Quebec can expect the building to be erected.

Mr. Walker: The hon. member is speaking of the unemployment insurance commission building in Quebec city?

Mr. Bourget: Yes.

Mr. Walker: The delays in this project have been caused by discussions necessary to settle the requirements for space in this building. The development of the site plans has now been agreed upon, and the architect has developed them into preliminary elevations and other matters. The architect has indicated a completely stone faced building. This has been a change, and the department has requested changes in order to lower the cost of the project. It is expected the architect should be able to complete the plans and specifications by the end of this calendar year.

Mr. Deschatelets: Referring to page 461 of the details, I notice that there are three projects for the city of Montreal. Is there any project for the construction of an office for the national employment service, since the office on Delorimier street is too narrow for present purposes. Is there any project to cover a new office building in the east end of Montreal?

Mr. Walker: No, not for the east end.

Mr. Bourget: I wonder if the minister could give us a progress report on the post office building in Quebec city? Have there been any extras in the work or any changes in the plans and specifications since the main contract was awarded?

Mr. Walker: There have been no extras, and we are getting along nicely. It is 36 per cent completed.

Mr. Denis: Has the minister considered the advisability of constructing better looking post offices? Many complaints have been received from all parts of Canada about the new post office buildings, especially in so far as the small post offices are concerned. These buildings are erected by the federal government, and if they do not look well in their surroundings they give the appearance that the federal government is the poor member of the family. I know the minister agrees that, since there are so many complaints, there should be some improvement.

I know that in the province of Quebec a committee has been formed to study the decoration of public buildings, and this committe is composed of architects and painters. I should like the federal government to be at least on the same level as the provincial government in so far as public buildings are concerned.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Bourget: I think that the comments made by my colleague, the hon. member for St. Denis, deserve an answer. This is an important question because many of these small post offices have been constructed all over Canada. We have noticed that, generally, they look like square boxes. Surely the minister has a sense—I do not know how to say it in English, but "sens de l'esthétique, comme on dit en français". I hope he will pay particular attention to that because I know he has seen, as we have, these little square boxes. Even if it costs $2,000 or $5,000 more to erect a different building it would be worth while. The federal government should set an example in the erection of these buildings so that the people of the municipality will be proud of them.

Mr. Walker: I was accepting the remarks of the hon. member for St. Denis as advice, and I was giving them consideration. If a reply is required, I may say that the small post offices erected during the winter, of which there were 90 last year—I refer to the small ones of 800 to 1,200 square feet—are contemporary architecture. Some people do not like them. However, during the discussion of these estimates, we have heard a tremendous amount of comment about how pleased the different members were with them. It is a question of taste. These are modern post offices, streamlined and very businesslike, but with good lines, so I am told by architects.

As to the post office in Quebec city, I think the hon. member for Levis and the hon. member for St. Denis will agree because I am sure they have seen the plans, this is going to be one of the most magnificent post offices in Canada.

Mr. Bourget: I am not speaking about the large one. I am speaking about the small ones.

Mr. Walker: I regret the situation in Rouyn. They needed more space and it was a question of adding to the present post office or getting a new site altogether. I understand the original building was constructed in 1956 or so. It was not considered practical to scrap it and so an addition was planned on the same architectural design as the building constructed in 1954 or 1956. One consequence—and I think it is regrettable—is that it comes up very close to the street line. It is not set back. However, now that the exterior has been cleaned up around there it is looking much better. I agree that, if we could have done so, it would have been better to get rid of the old building. However, these things must be looked at from an economic standpoint. I agree that if we could have got rid of the old post office there and could have built a brand new one, it would have looked much better because we could have given it more space. However, we had to add to it under the circumstances.

Mr. Dumas: In view of the fact that the minister has mentioned the post office in Rouyn which is in my constituency, I think he would like me to correct an assertion just made by him to the effect that the building was constructed in 1954. It was constructed long before 1954. It was built in the 40's or in the 30's. I agree that the government did the right thing by putting on an addition to this building. However, this is only a one-storey addition and it does not look too good. I wonder whether the minister would give consideration to putting perhaps another storey on the addition that was made in 1958-59 or 1959-60.

Mr. Walker: I accept my hon. friend's correction as to when it was built. I personally have no idea as to the time. I can only depend on my officials and apparently we have not any information here as to the time at which it was built. I apologize to the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

335. Ottawa, $11,320,000.

Mr. Peters: Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I raised three or four problems in relation to the public buildings in Ottawa. One was with regard to the establishment of departmental administration offices on Wellington street and the federal government working out a plan with the city of Ottawa for expropriation of the area in order to allow centralization of administration at least of our government departments. Then there is the problem that is uppermost in the minds of many people who are interested in agricultural development and experimental work. It is in connection with the difference of opinion that appears to exist as to whether the experimental farm should be considered to be a land assembly scheme on which any department can put government buildings if they cannot find a site somewhere else. The other side of the coin, as it were, represents the opinion that no buildings should be constructed on the experimental farm except those that are closely allied and connected with the continuation and the furthering of agricultural experimental work.

An hon. Member: Which coin?

Mr. Walker: I wish to admit to the hon. member that I am no authority on town planning. However, the former government brought in from France probably the greatest town planner in the world—I refer to Mr. Greber—and he submitted a plan to the predecessor of the national capital commission for a more beautiful and greater Ottawa. After many adjustments his plan was approved by the national capital commission, the government of Canada and the city of Ottawa. It is a decentralized plan, but in being a decentralized plan it follows the tendencies of Madrid, Paris, London and latterly Washington. I should like to be able to engage with my hon. friend in a learned talk on this subject. However, in matters of this kind, I always rely on experts. However, I would think that his views might be brought up for consideration in committee at some time or other. There is certainly an argument for what he has said as certain people object to decentralization.

Mr. Pearson: Under this vote I believe there is an item "West block—alterations and improvements". I should like to ask the minister whether he can tell me when the extremely useful but extremely noisy activities of the tunnelling company outside my window and other members' windows are likely to cease?

Mr. Walker: In reply to the Leader of the Opposition may I say this. We really thought the session would be over now when we were making the plans with the contractors. We are somewhat responsible for the fact that the explosions have started at the present time. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that I am, I guess, the closest person to it. I get soot in my windows every day and when I am having my snooze at noon, I am wakened up each day. I know exactly what the Leader of the Opposition is speaking of. However, it will continue all summer. We expect it to be completed in the early fall, I believe in October. Although those explosions sound fairly noisy at times I am assured over and over again, because I keep asking the question, that they are harmless as far as the main structure of the central building is concerned.

Mr. Pearson: I am not criticizing anybody. I am just reminding the minister that while all the explosions may be harmless, they are also reminiscent.

Mr. Bourget: While we are speaking of the tunnel, I think we can discuss this matter on this item. When were tenders called for the tunnel, how many tenderers came in on the contract and at what price?

Mr. Walker: It was all in the main contract. Does my hon. friend know how many tenderers there were there, or will I look it up? I am informed that there were 12 on the main contract.

Mr. Bourget: When were tenders called?

Mr. Walker: We will look up that information.

Mr. Bourget: I understand that they are also working in two shifts. Is there any extra cost for that work, if they work in two shifts?

Mr. Walker: No extra; no.

Mr. Bourget: With regard to the west block alterations—

Mr. Walker: In order to get rid of the noise of the explosions mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, we suggested having three shifts but that was really going to be expensive.

Mr. Bourget: I do not suppose the minister has a snooze during the night in his own office. He goes home for a good sleep.

Mr. Walker: I paddle back to my river place.

Mr. Bourget: With regard to the alterations to the west block may I say this. Last year, when we were discussing the estimates, the minister, in answering a question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, said that the alterations will be done in two parts, meaning that they will work on one part and then after it is completed, will work on the other so as not to disturb the members who are located there. I should like to ask the minister also about the tenders. Were tenders called last year on that matter? I do not remember exactly because at the time, when the estimates were discussed on July 21, the minister said this as reported at page 6685 of Hansard of that year:

> The consultants have almost completed their estimate and I expect it will be ready in about a month's time at which time I would be glad to give the information to the hon. member.

The session ended. A month elapsed after July 21. I am therefore wondering whether the minister can inform the house what was the amount of the estimate, what was the name of the firm which was the lowest bidder and what was the price submitted by that firm.

Mr. Walker: It is one contract, and it is to be done in two parts. I believe the tenders were called in December. We have not the exact date here. The contract was awarded on April 13 this year. The original estimate was $6,400,000 and the contract was awarded Perini Limited in the amount of $5,088,000.

Mr. Bourget: I understand that is a firm contract.

Mr. Walker: It is a firm contract, yes.

Mr. Bourget: And so far there have been no changes in the contract?

Mr. Walker: There has been no change in the contract.

Mr. Bourget: While we are dealing with this subject, is there any date for completion of the work in the contract?

Mr. Walker: February 18, 1963.

Mr. Pearson: In Washington, where they have this type of tunnel between the congressional building and the house and senate office buildings, they have little trolley that runs back and forth so the members do not have to walk. Is it the intention to have that kind of facility in this tunnel?

Mr. Walker: No.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to hear that. We are becoming a nation of sissies.

Mr. Peters: This raises another problem. I mention this matter as we are discussing the tunnel itself and repairs in the west block. One rumour that is prevalent—and there are thousands of rumours in the House of Commons, of course—is that the new cafeteria accommodation will be built in the tunnel. Was this contemplated at the time the contract was let, or is this just a rumour?

Mr. Walker: That is a very interesting thought as to where the cafetaria is going to be, but it is not the fact. It is going to be where the present courtyard is in the west block, and on the ground level.

Mr. Bourget: Is the cafeteria also included in the main contract?

Mr. Walker: Yes, it is.

Mr. Denis: While these alterations and improvements are being made in the west block and other buildings, would it be possible to have a kind of recreational centre to which members of parliament could go and take some exercise? As the minister himself has noticed, and other people have noticed this, we are far from healthy and one only has to look around to see the big bellies which are caused by lack of exercise.

In past years members of parliament, their wives, staff, messengers and newspaper men used to be able to bowl—and paid plenty of money for it—outside the parliament buildings. This would help House of Commons personnel to get some exercise, and I do not think it would be very expensive to have that kind of recreational centre with bowling alleys in the west block or any other public building close to the parliament buildings. I am sure this could be done by charging a fee less than we used to pay outside.

I am sure it would be a good thing for the members of parliament and the staff to have this kind of recreational centre. As the hon. member for Kootenay West has just said, there might be less sissies around and more people would be physically fit for work.

Mr. Pearson: If there is to be such a recreational centre, would the minister make sure it includes a punching bag?

Mr. Walker: I could have used one the last couple of days. I have been sitting here silently for two days. In answer to my hon. friend from St. Denis may I say that there is to be an exercise room on the top floor of the west block, and also showers in connection with it. It will not be a large room. It will include a rowing machine, and that sort of thing. At the present time, as hon. members know of course, we have an excellent new steam bath just adjacent to the barber shop and we have Sam from the Chateau Laurier, who is a very good physiotherapist.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Denis: I was speaking specifically about bowling alleys, which would not be very expensive and would be good for us all. I am sure members of parliament and the staff would be quite willing to pay their share if they could go and bowl in such a recreational centre.

Mr. Walker: We have not found room for the bowling alleys, but we may find room for the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that we put in punching bags. That would be a very, very excellent idea.

Mr. Denis: It would be good exercise against the Tories.

Mr. Johnson: I understand that many members of the opposition and the Leader of the Opposition himself are very much concerned about the leisure of hon. members, but since this question has been raised I should like to bring one matter to the attention of the minister.

I should like to know whether there are provisions for parlours in the west block for people who might be visiting their members of parliament. I can understand that this might not be a question which interests hon. members from far away, but hon. members whose constituencies are not far from Ottawa often have to receive visitors, and it is very difficult for them to find a convenient place in which they can wait. These people have to wait to see their member of parliament in order to discuss some matter with him.

At the moment we have to share an office with another member of parliament, and when we have visitors it disturbs our partner.

I understand that when hon. members' offices are transferred to the west block we will not have to share offices and each member of parliament will have his own. However, we still will not have a waiting room for visitors, I understand. It might be convenient to put such a waiting room on each floor at least. We could have one parlour on each floor, with a telephone, for accommodating visitors who have a right to come and see their member of parliament in Ottawa.

While I am on my feet—and I will try not to rise again—I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that every time hon. members whose constituencies are not far from Ottawa come to Ottawa during the recess, they are very much concerned because they cannot telephone unless the Department of Public Works is notified that the hon. member intends to stay in his office for quite a while. If that is the case, the department sees to it that we have a telephone. If the member of parliament comes to Ottawa for only one day, I understand he does not have any telephone facilities. I also understand that if an hon. member comes from the Union station to the House of Commons at 10.30 in the morning he has to run in order to get a secretary, and the secretaries leave at 4.00 o'clock during the recess. By the time the member reaches the minister or an official of the Department of Public Works, for instance—the minister has his offices way on the other side of the city—it is difficult for the minister to do anything.

It is sometimes important that members of parliament should phone ministers or departments from the House of Commons, and if they come to Ottawa for only one day they have a very difficult time finding a telephone in order to reach the minister or the officials of his department.

Would it be possible to establish at least pay phones in some parts of the building, either in the main building or the west block, for use during the recess? The best thing to do would be to have telephones at the convenience of hon. members, of course; but if the government is too poor to do that, at least let it put pay phones in different sections of the building and in the waiting rooms. They could be put in the corridors or the hallways of the west block and on the main floor of the centre block.

Mr. Walker: In reply to my hon. friend I shall be glad to take up that matter with the Speaker because this is something which is within his purview.

Mr. Peters: With regard to the modifications which are going on in the west block, has any decision been reached about what is to happen to the cafeteria in this building? Does that fit in with the building program? I have advance information from another committee, though I may be misinformed. The suggestion which has been made in that committee is that there would be only a coffee shop and a restaurant in this building and that the cafeteria would be in the other building. If so, I want to put a claim in for a room in that part of the main building which the cafeteria will have vacated.

Mr. Walker: There will be two cafeterias, one here in the main block and one there. Then, of course, there will be the dining room upstairs.

Item agreed to.

336. Ontario (other than Ottawa), $6,332,000.

Mr. McMillan: This item has to do with the voting of money for public buildings in Ontario outside Ottawa. I wish to bring up a matter which concerns the hon. member for Niagara Falls who is engaged elsewhere in a standing committee.

Mr. Brunsden: Where?

Mr. McMillan: She was a few minutes ago so engaged. On page 463 of the estimates appears an item:

Niagara Falls—public building—addition and alterations—to complete, $375,000.

I am informed that no start has been made on the construction of this building as yet. I believe that in a previous year moneys have been voted for this proposed building in Niagara Falls and I should like to ask the minister if these sums were voted in respect of the acquisition of adjacent property. I should also like him to give me some idea as to the total cost of these additions and when they are likely to be started and completed.

Mr. Walker: At the request of the church which was adjacent we delayed proceeding with this building until they felt it was satisfactory for us to proceed. The original vote was $200,000 in 1959. The plans will be completed in July.

Mr. Matheson: Can the minister provide the committee with details respecting the $500,000 federal building to be built at Brockville? My questions are as follows: 1. Has any property been acquired? 2. Have funds been provided for the acquisition of such property? 3. Have funds been provided for the construction of the building? 4. What firm of architects in Kingston is preparing plans for this building? 5. When will tenders be called?

Mr. Walker: Several of the lots have been acquired. We are not sure at the moment whether or not there are two other lots yet to be acquired in connection with this building. The architects are Beaver and Smith of Kingston. They have been sent the plans and they are working on them at the present time.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask whether funds have been provided both for the acquisition of such property and for the construction of this $500,000 building?

Mr. Walker: I should say to the hon. member that the planning vote is for the purpose of doing just what we are doing at the present time. It is not allocated to any particular project.

Mr. Bourget: May I ask the minister when he expects the plans to be completed?

Mr. Walker: Some time during the winter. You mean the Brockville federal building?

Mr. Bourget: Yes.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister what land the federal government holds in the town of Haileybury and if this is sufficient land upon which to build a post office? I also should like to know if it is contemplated building a post office on that land or whether the department intends to acquire a new site. I understand that the lease of the present building expires in October, and so this question has to be decided in a few months. I believe the federal government does own the armoury site and maybe one or two lots close to it, but I am curious to know whether this is sufficient to allow for the construction of a government building.

Mr. Walker: I wish to thank the hon. member for Timiskaming. We shall be glad to have the help of any advice he has to give us in this connection. It is not too late to consider that advice, because the whole plan is now under study—whether it is possible to expand or whether we shall have to put up an entirely new building. The hon. member's assistance would be welcomed.

Mr. Pearson: I wonder if the minister can tell me when it is anticipated that the federal building in Elliot Lake will be completed.

Mr. Walker: It is 97 per cent complete and when it is completed and we go up there I intend to ask the Leader of the Opposition to come along for the opening ceremony.

Mr. Pearson: I think that is a good idea. The minister might need a little protection up there.

Mr. Matheson: Perhaps I am a little slow, but may I respectfully ask the Minister of Public Works if funds have been provided for the federal building in Brockville and also when construction is likely to begin. This is a matter of great importance to my riding.

Mr. Walker: In reply to the hon. member for Leeds we do not provide funds in the estimates until it is necessary to do so, and as I explained we have in the planning vote sufficient money to acquire the land and complete the plans.

Mr. Matheson: I also asked the minister when construction may be expected to begin.

Mr. Walker: We anticipate that construction will commence early next summer if the Kingston firm has completed its plans and if everything works out as we anticipate.

Mr. Matheson: On May 24 the minister was good enough to indicate there would be a new post office at Portland costing $25,000. Has property been acquired for the post office at Portland? When will tenders for this building be called?

Mr. Walker: This is a winter works program. We will seek the information from our officials and I shall let the hon. member know as soon as it is received.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. McMillan: I asked a question on behalf of the hon. member for Niagara Falls. I said she was attending a committee. An hon. member to my left, I think it was the member for Medicine Hat, suggested that that was not right. She is in the railway committee room at the present time. I asked the minister when it was proposed to call tenders for the public building at Niagara Falls and I think the minister said the plans would be completed by July of this year.

Mr. Walker: By the middle or end of July this year.

Mr. McMillan: Will tenders be called immediately thereafter?

Mr. Walker: Tenders will be called immediately after that.

Item agreed to.

566. Saskatchewan, $1.

Mr. Rapp: I should like to take the opportunity to say just a few words on this item. The proposed amount in the supplementary estimates is $30,000 for a public building at Naicam. May I express on behalf of the residents of this community and on my own thanks to the Minister of Public Works for giving consideration to this project. I am sure the people of this community will receive this vote with satisfaction and gratitude. This public building is something the people of Naicam have looked forward to over the years. The minister has given consideration to this matter and because of the efficient work the officials in his department are doing and the remarkable understanding they have displayed in instances such as this, the people in this community are to have the public building. When will work commence on this building under this item?

Mr. Walker: It will be a winter works program, starting this fall in October.

Mr. Speakman: I do not wish to delay the committee on this item but on behalf of the residents of my constituency I express their appreciation to the minister for two winter works post office buildings completed last winter, one in Calmar and one in Devon, and now for the fine new federal building which is going to be provided for the town of Lacombe.

Item agreed to.

340. British Columbia, $2,680,000.

Mr. Herridge: In rising to speak even briefly on this item, Mr. Chairman, I am very conscious of the row of gentlemen opposite who would prefer to be on the golf course than to be captives of our eloquence and curiosity.

Mr. Walker: I do not play that game any more.

Mr. Herridge: I have a few words to say on this item. I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that I received considerable correspondence from organizations and residents in the city of Rossland who are very interested in the proposals of the minister's department for improving their post office facilities and are anxious to see something started as soon as possible. They realize the difficulties in assessing the situation and the circumstances surrounding it; but I have been asked to bring to the attention of the minister their anxiety to have this work proceeded with as soon as possible.

The residents of Kootenay are very pleased with the decision of the minister's department to consider as a winter works project the building of a post office there. It is a very active and aggressive community. This post office was needed very much indeed.

What is the latest situation with respect to the acquisition of a site for a post office at Montrose? If the minister has any information I should be very pleased to have it, since it would save my writing a letter.

I think the Department of Justice has had under consideration for a year or 18 months the erection of an R.C.M.P. building at New Denver, British Columbia. I was informed that it would be considered for a winter works program this year. I am all in favour of delaying the construction of those buildings so that they will be undertaken when they will employ persons who are more likely to be unemployed at that time than they are, particularly, during the summer months. I would apreciate it very much indeed if the minister could inform the committee when the department intends to commence the construction of this R.C.M.P. building at New Denver?

Mr. Walker: The Rossland extension or alternation is now under study and when the study is completed the alterations will be proceeded with. Plans for the R.C.M.P. building at New Denver have been 90 per cent completed. As to Montrose, we have no information. We will get that information and let the hon. member know.

Item agreed to.

341. Yukon and Northwest Territories, $1,410,000.

Mr. Hardie: I do not want to hold up these estimates any more than anyone else does. I am wondering whether the minister can tell me if the item of $560,000 for federal government housing at Fort Smith and the item of $200,000 for federal government housing at Inuvik will complete the major portion of the federal government's housing programs in these two locations?

Mr. Walker: The answer is yes. May I on behalf of all hon. members express our delight at seeing the hon. member back in his seat.

Mr. Hardie: Is it intended to proceed with the administration building at Hay River this year? If not, can the minister tell me whether the plans and the location of the land have been settled?

Mr. Walker: We are just in the planning stage. Even the site is under consideration. Because of a possible conflict, as my hon. friend will know, with the railway terminal there, it is very difficult to give any estimate of when construction will begin.

Item agreed to.

342. Outside Canada, $250,000.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to ask the minister a question about an item in this vote that deals with the Canada House building in London, England, on Grosvenor square. What is the total expenditure that has been made on the property, on the building itself and on the remodelling that was required?

Mr. Walker: Up to the end of the fiscal year we have spent $4,283,503.

Mr. Pearson: Is there any further expenditure required or is the building now complete, occupied and used?

Mr. Walker: We expect the interior alterations yet to be done to be completed in another two months.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister tell the committee whether all the Canadian offices in London now, except those of the Department of External Affairs, are housed in this new building on Grosvenor square?

Mr. Walker: When the alterations are completed my understanding is that it will house all the offices of Canadian departments in London.

Mr. Pearson: Including all the offices of the Department of National Defence and the joint staffs?

Mr. Walker: Yes, including the Department of National Defence although I understand that at the moment there is some problem about security. The defence department has not completed moving.

Mr. Pearson: Is there any occupier of the building now apart from Canadian government offices? I think there was a flat in the building last year leased to a private individual which had not been given up.

Mr. Walker: There were three tenants who had life-time leases and they have been moved to the top floor. When I answered some questions of the Leader of the Opposition last year, I think I indicated that we anticipated having too much room at this time and that we would be leasing the top floor.

Mr. Pearson: So that within a short time, when these difficulties to which the minister has referred are cleared up, we can anticipate that all Canadian government offices, except those in the old Canada House, will be in this building and there will be no outside leases in London at all?

Mr. Walker: That is my understanding, yes.

Mr. Peters: Has any further consideration been given to establishing accommodation of some sort for the missions at the United Nations? There was some suggestion that Canada would be buying or erecting a building suitable for housing missions.

Mr. Walker: This is a matter for external affairs. I take it the hon. member for Timiskaming is referring to the Canada building in New York.

Mr. Peters: I have reference particularly to the delegations that go to the United States, the permanent staff there and the accommodation provided for them. I do not want to get into a discussion of the Canada building. There was some talk that a building would be constructed to house these semi-permanent delegations to the United Nations.

Mr. Walker: I am afraid I cannot enlighten the hon. member. It is a matter for external affairs.

Mr. Bourget: Is there an office of the Department of Public Works in Europe since we are looking after all these buildings, and what kind of a staff is there?

Mr. Walker: We have established an office in London in the new accommodation in Grosvenor house and the staff at the present time numbers three.

Mr. Pearson: Can the minister inform the committee what the exact responsibilities of the Department of Public Works are in connection with Canadian buildings abroad, diplomatic and trade commissioner buildings and that sort of thing?

Mr. Walker: We give the Department of External Affairs any technical assistance they may require. Having learned from them what they wish, we assist them with the plans. When a decision has been reached in conjunction with the Department of External Affairs, we then proceed to erect the building or arrange the lease or do whatever else is required.

Item agreed to.

343. Improvements generally and miscellaneous buildings—not more than $25,000 to be expended on any one project without the approval of treasury board, $1,000,000.

Mr. Bourget: Will the minister tell us why the amount is doubled this year? If you look at the details on page 466 you will see that up to November 1, last year, the expenditure was $177,282 and the estimated amount for the balance of the year was $322,718, or a total of $500,000. This year the amount is doubled. What are the reasons for the increase? What are the big projects?

Mr. Walker: The extra amount represents two storage buildings for the storage of war material, one of which is at Kemptville and the other at Carleton Place.

Mr. Bourget: Are these new buildings?

Mr. Walker: Yes.

Item agreed to.

344. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, $44,794,200.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that some general seems to have halted the attack on the patina covering the statues on parliament hill, would the minister inform the committee whether the attack is to be resumed or has it been definitely abandoned?

Mr. Walker: It has been definitely abandoned. The hon. member for Kootenay West really has a point there. Although this chemical treatment is suitable to London, England, where there is salt in the air and different climatic conditions, it has not worked out too well here. It did not do D'Arcy McGee too much harm but if some of the nudes who are looking up at D'Arcy McGee were treated in this way it might at times prove to be embarrassing.

Mr. Herridge: It was a bit damaging to Molly.

Mr. Walker: Damaging to modesty, yes.

Mr. Bourque: Mr. Chairman, in view of the correspondence we receive continually from the graphic arts association of Montreal about the printing bureau, I should like to ask the minister some questions. I understand that everything in connection with the bureau is paid for by this department, the upkeep, maintenance, lighting, heating and so on. What charge is made to the printing bureau for all these services?

Mr. Walker: No charge.

Mr. Bourque: No charge whatever. It is all at government expense. The reason I ask the question is that there seems to be quite a controversy between the printers in private industry and the government printing bureau. The bureau claims it can do work much more cheaply than private industry. If they are provided with their building free of charge and are also provided with heating, lighting and everything else free of charge, their costs must be very much lower than those of private printers who have to erect their own buildings, pay taxes and all the other charges.

Mr. Walker: I do not think I can make any comment. I have completely forgotten about the printing bureau. I think it was three years ago since I had anything to do with it.

Mr. Bourque: In order that there might be a basis for a fairer comparison between the costs of private industry and those of the government-owned plant, would it not be possible for the minister in some way to arrive at a charge that could be made for these services so that there would be some method of arriving at the costs of the government plant? They do not seem to have any basis whatever now. If there is no charge made to them for their plant, lighting, heating or the machinery they buy, it seems unjust for the government plant to say that they can manufacture more cheaply than private industry because the bureau has no basic figures in order to arrive at their costs. If you have a plant worth $5 million and do not have to pay rent or interest or carry anything on your books, it seems obvious that you cannot have any basic figures to indicate that you can manufacture more cheaply. The government will never know whether or not it is losing money in this plant.

Mr. Walker: I thank the hon. member for his comments. This is matter for the Secretary of State, and I understand it is presently under study not only by the Auditor General but also by the public accounts committee.

Mr. Peters: We have had a discussion recently relating to recreational facilities for the members of the House of Commons. This is obviously a difficult proposition, but one suggestion was that a swimming pool be installed. Has the minister given any consideration to the fortunate situation in so far as some of his people are concerned, in that there is a ready made swimming pool located near at hand? Has there been any consideration given to the development of this to provide recreation for the people in the minister's building as well as those in the other buildings located nearby?

Mr. Walker: I will refer that suggestion to the national capital commission.

Mr. Batten: When the estimates of the Post Office Department were under consideration I referred to the public building at Corner Brook. At that time I recognized that this did not come under the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General, but I thought he would take an interest in a building that is locally referred to as the post office. This building is well kept inside. I think the standard of maintenance is one that the minister would be willing to commend. However, the grounds are not as well kept as they might be, and are not at all compatible with those of the other buildings around the city of Corner Brook. I believe the Postmaster General has written the minister about this matter. I would assume, from the letter I had from the minister, that something will be done about these grounds during the present year. I wonder if my assumption is correct?

Mr. Walker: Because of the manner in which the hon. member has pressed this matter, and the justness of his claim, it is not only being looked into but I expect something will be done about it.

Mr. Herridge: I have another question to ask the minister on this item which I overlooked before. I raised this matter last year, and have mentioned it on quite a few occasions. I am referring to what the newspapers call "Lovers' Walk". I do not know whether or not that is the correct name. Last year the minister said he would give consideration to the cost of restoring this walk between the parliament buildings and the Ottawa river. Has any consideration been given to the matter, and has there been an estimate of the cost?

Mr. Walker: I know that the hon. member has a particular interest in this walk. I accept his word that it is purely a platonic interest. I know he is a great admirer of nature. However, the hon. member for Kootenay West is the only member who has really pressed this matter and the mounted police as well as the national capital commission, are still adamant that lovers' lane should remain closed. I regret that I must deny the hon. member anything, but I am afraid I must be governed by the advice I get from these two departments.

Mr. Herridge: I thank the minister for his explanation. I can understand, to some extent, the reasons for this stand. However, I was the spokesman for a great many members of his own party who did not have the courage to get up and speak about it.

Mr. Bourget: My Colleague, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska being absent, has asked me to ask the minister whether or not a decision has been taken concerning repairs to the clock in the public building at Arthabaska. The minister will recall that Arthabaska is a historical place in the province of Quebec because Sir Wilfrid Laurier stayed there for many years.

The minister wrote my colleague on May 18 of this year telling him that if the repairs could be made, they would be made. I know that in the past this question of repairing clocks in public buildings has been a headache for the department because there have been so many complaints from people. However, since this is a historical place, the people would like to keep that old building and the clock, and I wonder if special attention could be given to these minor repairs?

Mr. Walker: Yes, I will have that looked into at once.

Item agreed to.

345. Furniture and furnishings for government departments, $2,943,808.

Mr. Bourget: I noticed lately that a competition was advertised by the civil service commission for a purchasing agent at Quebec city. I am asking the minister if any changes have been made in the purchasing department. If I remember correctly, there was a regional staff set up by the Department of Public Works for supplying what was needed for public buildings. I am asking whether any change has been made in this practice.

Mr. Walker: There has been no change. There was a vacancy to be filled.

Mr. Bourget: Are the materials needed for public buildings supplied by Ottawa or by the regional office in Montreal? I do not want to translate this advertisement, Mr. Chairman, because it might be too long, but it sets out in French the functions of the purchasing agent as follows:

(Translation):

To carry out instructions given by the chief of purchasing and stores for the proper operation of the stores—

So, if I understand correctly, in this case—

(Text):

This purchasing agent will be required to buy some materials, and that is why I was wondering if a change had been made and a regional office had been established in Quebec city. I have no objection. I think it would be a good place to establish a purchasing office because it would be centralized. If I recall correctly, however, in the past all materials needed for public buildings were sent from Montreal or Ottawa. I think it would be a good idea to decentralize and have an office in Quebec city to take care of that district.

[Mr. Bourget.]

Mr. Walker: While we are looking up the answer to the last question, may I answer the hon. member's question about engineers and architects who resigned in Toronto and Montreal. Mr. A. Gagnon, a district engineer, resigned on May 2, 1961, to join as deputy minister for the Montreal area the provincial service of Quebec; Mr. P. R. Martineau, district architect at Montreal, also resigned on May 2, 1961 to join in a high post the provincial service at Quebec. In Toronto, Mr. K. A. Rowswick, engineer grade 3, resigned on March 31, 1961 to accept a position with a private firm.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I revert for just a moment to item 344. I am not one of those Conservative members who appointed the hon. member for Kootenay West to act as his spokesman. I should like to speak for myself. I think the reasons given by the police and the national capital commission are utterly inadequate.

Mr. Herridge: I am very pleased to have a supporter in this one man crusade, which has now become a two man crusade.

Mr. Bourget: I was wondering if those officials who resigned from the service left the service because they could not get an increase in salary. These officials had a good deal of experience. The minister and probably the deputy minister also must realize that it is very difficult—and I am speaking of Quebec particularly—to get architects and engineers of experience. I know it is not the fault of the minister because he cannot prevent that situation. However, if it is a question of salaries I think it should be looked into. I think some increase should be given to these men who have rendered service for many years. The time will come when the department—and this statement applies not only to the Department of Public Works but to other departments which are concerned with the construction business—will have great difficulty in getting architects and engineers of good standing and good experience. I know that because I was with the engineers and the architects of the department for four years.

I think we are extremely fortunate to get such good and experienced men having regard to the very small salaries they are getting. When we consider the fact that we are spending nearly $100 million in building and that on harbours and rivers we are spending about $35 million or possibly more, I think the question should be looked into and that an effort should be made to see that they get salaries which are comparable to those being paid in private industry. Some people might think that this is an unnecessary expenditure, but I do not think so. The minister realizes that when we have good and experienced engineers and architects we are saving to the country every year thousands and thousands of dollars. I therefore think the minister would not be criticized if he looked into the question and, if there is a chance to do so, gave consideration to the salaries of those employees who have experience and whom I think we should keep at the service of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers engineering services—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, including expenditures on works on other than federal property, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

347. Newfoundland, $6,593,500.

Mr. Batten: I should like to make one or two comments with regard to the amount of money that is spent under this heading in Newfoundland. I think that most of us recognize that the work going on in St. John's is a special job; and as a special project I do not see any reason why the amount of money being spent on this project in one area should be taken from the rest of the province. I think that the money being spent on this project at St. John's is going to be well worth the effort; but because it is a special project, I think that a special grant should have been made for it and that the money to be spent there should not have been taken from projects in other parts of the island.

If we look back over the amounts of money spent in various years under this item in Newfoundland, we find that the amount has been consistently decreasing since 1958-59. I should like to support that statement by some figures which I have here. Expenditures on harbours and rivers for the year 1955-56 amounted to $3,173,601. For 1956-57 the amount was $2,741,601. For the year 1957-58, the amount spent under this item was $3,015,100. For the year 1958-59—and I think this is the first year in which there was in the estimates an item for improvements to the St. John's harbour—the total amount under this heading was $4,606,500, with $1 million for harbour improvements at St. John's leaving for the remainder of the province $3,606,500. For the year 1959-60, the amount under this vote was $4,237,200. The allocation for St. John's harbour was $1,250,000, leaving the total of $2,987,200 for other projects in the province. Last year the total amount under this item was $6,277,501, with harbour improvements in St. John's at $4,500,000, leaving $1,777,501 for the remainder of the province.

Last year the amount spent outside the city of St. John's on harbours and rivers was only slightly more than one-half the amount spent in the same area in 1958-59. I am sorry; I should say it was a little more than one half the amount spent in the year 1955-56 and only a little less than one half of the amount spent in the year 1958-59, or I should point out that the total amount of money spent under this heading last year was divided in this manner: 72 per cent for harbour improvements in St. John's and 28 per cent for the whole remainder of the province. This year the estimate gives a total of $6,593,500 and for the St. John's project $4,850,000 leaving $1,743,500 for other projects within the province. For this year it means that the total amounts spent on the St. John's project will be 74 per cent of the total expenditure for the province, with the remaining projects in the province receiving only 26 per cent. Again, the amount for this year is slightly less than half of what was spent in the year 1955-56 and a little less than half of what was spent in 1958-59. I think that anyone who wants to examine these figures carefully will note that since 1958-59 the amount spent under this item outside the city of St. John's has been decreasing consistently.

I hasten to point out to the minister that I am not objecting to the amount of money being spent in St. John's. My contention is that since this is a special item there should be a special vote and that it should not be carried out at the expense of the rest of the province. Around the island of Newfoundland and Labrador, of course, there are many projects in need of being undertaken. It appears to me that some of these projects are being delayed because of the large amount of money being spent on the St. John's project. At this time I am not going to go into any long description of specific points in my riding that need attention. However, I wish to take two particular areas as examples. I refer first to the strait of Belle Isle in the northern part of Newfoundland. I have written to the minister on a number of occasions not only about the area known as the strait of Belle Isle but also for every specific place in that area. Here these people are all fisher folk. I cannot see how they can manage to carry on their work unless the facilities which they cannot be expected to provide for themselves are provided for them. They are living in an area where rough seas are very common and it is impossible for these men to protect their boats unless they are hauled up in the evening and launched in the morning.

The hon. gentleman, being a small boat owner, will know exactly what I mean. I recognize that in the area in which he operates his boat the waters may be a little bit calmer than they are in the strait of Belle Isle, but I am sure he has some conception of what I am talking about. I have not had the opportunity of seeing the ability with which the hon. gentleman manoeuvers his boat, or should I call it prowess in this case, but I am sure he does it well enough to be able to understand the difficulty of a man in the northern part of Newfoundland who has to handle a big boat in stormy weather.

I also recognize, and I think the minister recognizes this too, that this is not an area where marine works can be built cheaply. In some places where marine works are urgently required it may be true that they will cost a little more than in the average place in Newfoundland. However, I cannot accept that as an argument against having these projects carried out.

In this section of Newfoundland we have one of the few places on the eastern seaboard of Canada where people make their living almost entirely from the fishery. Again I appeal to the minister to give consideration to the representations that have been made on behalf of these people who live and work in the straits of Belle Isle. While it may be true that some of the projects recommended would cost a considerable amount of money, I think the amount of money which might be spent on these projects is small when compared to the return the fishermen will get.

One of our problems in the fishing industry of Newfoundland is that we are not able to get our men working early enough in the year and we are not able to get them working late enough in the fall because they have no protection for their boats. I hope that in an effort to keep these men in their own occupation—one which means that no other type of employment will have to be found for them—this money will be spent. It will be money well spent, and again I describe it by saying that it would be well spent in providing for them those marine works which they could not be expected to provide for themselves.

Again I want to bring to the attention of the minister, as I have on a number of other occasions, the situation in the peninsula of Port au Port. Port au Port is a peninsula that juts out into the sea on the west coast of Newfoundland. It has over 25 small and large communities and exists on the outskirts of the large United States base at Harmon field. Over the last 20 years people from the Port au Port peninsula have been able to earn a living by doing construction work on this United States leased base. Obviously this construction work cannot continue, and as construction begins to taper off some other alternative employment must be found for these people.

It seems to me that if alternative employment is to be found, it must be found by using the resources that exist in the area. In this particular area there is an ample supply of various types of fish, from the catching of which men could make a living. Here again the shore line is rather rugged. The cost of marine works will be higher than the average, but again I believe that if employment is to be found for these men, to a large extent it will have to be found in the fishing industry. However, these men will certainly be unable to carry out their work as fishermen unless they have the marine works that will provide all the protection and all the convenience they require.

I have had a good deal of conversation and correspondence with the minister concerning what he very affectionately refers to as the Irish town of Piccadilly. Another admirable site for marine construction would be Port au Port. I can also think of Ship Cove, Boswarlos and Mainland. These are places where there are large numbers of fishermen and yet there is no marine protection at all for their fishing boats.

I hope the minister will give some consideration to the needs of the people who live in the strait of Belle Isle and those people who live on the Port au Port peninsula. Last year and the year before I made some recommendations to the minister regarding a settlement on the St. Barbe coast known as Parson's Pond. Some dredging is needed at Parson's Pond. The minister has advised me that a certain amount of dredging will be done there this year.

I am very pleased to hear that and perhaps the minister will not mind if I just say this to him, knowing the situation as I do—and I know it from firsthand experience—and knowing, too, something about the sea.

I do not think that the work the minister intends having done this year will be sufficient to solve the actual problem. It may be that the minister has in mind doing this work and seeing what happens, and then perhaps completing the job another year. If this is all the department intends doing at Parson's Pond I would very respectfully suggest to the minister that a second look should be taken in regard to this matter.

Mr. Walker: We will do that.

Mr. Batten: I think the dredging that is going to be done will be of some advantage, but whether or not that advantage will last very long is a matter which will have to be decided. I will be very pleased if the minister goes ahead with what he has decided to do this year, but I think another look should be given to this problem of Parson's Pond.

Mr. Chairman, I know that all around the coast of Newfoundland there are various projects that need attention. I hope that when the minister makes his estimates next year the amount of money he will spend on projects outside the city of St. John's will be restored to the former amount.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 347 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take just a few minutes to say a few words which are frankly intended to be complimentary of the minister and his officials with respect to what has been the expenditure of a small amount of money which has achieved a great deal of good in the area in my constituency known as Lesser Slave lake, which is about 70 miles long. There is taken from this lake more fish than from any other part of the province of Alberta, about three million pounds a year, three quarters of which is coarse fish for feeding to mink, and the other quarter is commercial fish.

Thirty years ago there was a rickety pier built by the government of the day. It was destroyed and taken out by the ice. Since then for 30 years the fishermen—and there are some 80 or 90—go out in small, open boats across that lake. They have to do this without any form of harbour or wharf at all.

I have frequently travelled past there and seen, after a hard blow from the north, half a dozen of these boats cast up on the shore. Eventually I was able to dent the armour of the department about three years ago and they showed an interest in it. Finally the regional director came up, and just at that time the fishermen in a small community called Faust gave up the ghost and attempted—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I cannot relate what he has said heretofore to the item under consideration. If the hon. member can relate it for me, he may carry on.

Mr. Baldwin: Am I speaking on item 347?

An hon. Member: You should be on 354.

Mr. Walker: The hon. member was just about to finish I think. Could he not finish?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This might well have reference to other parts of Canada as well. The regional director came up and saw that these fishermen had then started on their own to build a canal in the harbour. He was so taken with the fact that they had shown this initiative that he endorsed the plan which I had proposed. Since then the minister and officials of his department have devoted approximately $50,000 to this, as a result of which some 5,000 people have their means of making a livelihood greatly improved. This will be a matter of great interest to the people in that community and I am sure the minister and his officials should be commended upon what has been done.

Mr. Batten: Before item 347 carries, may I ask the minister one question? On page 475 we see the entry: items not required for 1961 and 1962, $1,125,500. Would the minister tell us what is included in those items not required for the present year?

Mr. Walker: It is a balancing item to complete the accounts for last year, a question of bookkeeping. We could table the particulars if the hon. member wishes us to do so.

Mr. Batten: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

351. Quebec, $6,926,000.

Mr. Bourget: On this item, the report of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960 states that members of the branch made on-site surveys of various harbours. The report says that an interdepartmental group consisting of senior officials of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport continued to investigate major harbour requirements. I should like the minister to tell us what harbours have been investigated and, perhaps, to give us a brief report on each of the main harbours concerned.

Mr. Walker: Baie Comeau, Windsor, Sept Iles, Cornwall, and Goderich.

Mr. Bourget: Has any final decision been taken on these reports? The minister has mentioned a few places. I should like to ask him if in the case, for instance, of Gros Cacouna, an investigation has been made of this particular project.

Mr. Walker: Yes it has.

Mr. Bourget: And are the conclusions favourable? Does the department intend to proceed with it?

Mr. Walker: This is a very complicated matter as the hon. member for Levis knows. No decision has been made as yet.

Mr. Bourget: The minister will recall that there was a delegation from Riviere du Loup. Following the visit of this delegation I asked the minister, on May 3, I think, whether an answer had been given to the city of Rivière du Loup. Has an answer been given and, if so, what is contained in that answer?

Mr. Walker: An excellent delegation came from Riviere du Loup. Because of the complex nature of this project, which would be a large one, a model study has been begun at the national research council and is proceeding at the present time.

Mr. Keays: I trust tempers will be restrained for a few minutes, as I should like to speak about a few projects on the Magdalen islands. As you well know, Mr. Chairman, our people are humble, but they still have the pioneer spirit. They wish to earn their own living without having to call too often on the government for means of subsistence.

On the Magdalen islands there are, as hon. members know, a number of fishing harbours. The present government has done a great deal of work which has enabled our fishermen to pursue their calling more efficiently. However, there are further harbours, unloading docks and facilities needed to enable them to take advantage of every day of the month and of every month of the year. In some instances we find 50 fishermen fishing out of one harbour while the following month there may be 100 fishermen fishing out of there. In these circumstances the facilities are not sufficient to accommodate them all. I trust the department will take into consideration the fact that this situation does exist and that further developments might well be undertaken.

I can assure the minister and his officials that what has been done is deeply appreciated by those people. I should like to mention a few places to which I believe consideration needs to be given, among them, Oyster Basin where the development of a harbour and not the establishment of a fish processing plant is desired. I understand the department requests that we should have an assurance from the department of fisheries of the province of Quebec that the province will consider moving its fish processing establishment to this area before the government will consider a further development there. However, the problem there is not to give facilities for fish processing but to be able to harbour the boats which fish out of the area.

I was down in the riding recently and at Old Harry I saw fishermen having to pull their fishing boats over a sand bank between 50 yards and a 100 yards wide before they could get out into deep water. I assure the minister this is not what we expect our fishermen to have to do today. Therefore I suggest that at Old Harry the construction of a slipway should be immediately undertaken. At Gros Ile where the fishermen go in the fall of the year and where there are not sufficient fishing facilities, I would ask for an extension to the present wharf and breakwater. At Havre Maison, or Harbour House, where there are now three different harbour facilities I would recommend that one main harbour be built for the whole island. This would result in a lessening of the expense which the department now has to incur due to sand. Bryan island is the most prolific fishing area of the Magdalen islands although there are no inhabitants there. Since it is situated approximately 15 miles from the main island, many of our fishermen go there on Mondays and return on Friday nights. They are requesting an unloading facility there. Although the land which is owned by one of the co-operatives consists of a few acres I think there is sufficient land on this 600-acre island to be able to build the unloading facility and to give the residents of the Magdalen islands a most prolific area where they can go and earn a living.

At Etang du Nord the problem is very well known. Last year reconstruction of the breakwater was cancelled owing to the fact that the petitioners could not agree on the plan submitted. I trust that the department will undertake another plan immediately and thus be in a position to start this development as soon as possible.

Item agreed to.

352. Ontario, $10,786,500.

Mr. Habel: On this item I should like to ask the minister whether the amount of $50,000 in last year's estimates has been spent on the survey at Moosonee? Has the survey been made? Has the minister received a report on the survey?

Yesterday the hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned the fact that many people have been playing politics with the Moosonee seaport. I am the last one who would want to play politics with this question. It is one which deserves consideration and a thorough study. It is a question which I myself have taken up with the division of the department having to do with harbours. I did this in 1956. I must say that in that year I happened to be in the offices of the department when a vote was taken. It was the only vote recorded during the special session of 1956 which took place at which I did not record my vote. As I say, I did not record it because I was in the office of the engineers discussing this very matter with a man from Montreal who at that time had a boat at Moosonee and could not get it out that fall. He was very much interested in the possibility of the development of a seaport at Moosonee. We went over the whole matter. I received information with respect to the whole matter. As much as I am interested in the welfare and advancement of my riding, I want to be fair with the Department of Public Works. Even if the provincial government wishes to take the federal Department of Public Works for a ride I would not be a party to it. I would rather give the Department of Public Works the chance to study the feasibility and all the angles of the case for a seaport there. I would be the last one in fact to try to play politics with such an important project that may be very prominent some day. It should not be tackled in 24 hours and should not be dragged into politics.

Mr. Walker: I want to thank the hon. member for Cochrane for these observations. I know that he would not play politics in this matter even though he is the whip of the opposition.

In reply to him may I say that the basic surveys have been completed and the information derived therefrom is being forwarded to the province of Ontario, as a matter of fact next week. From these surveys a feasibility study of the whole port project can be made. If there is anything further to report the next time we meet I shall be very happy to inform the hon. member.

Mr. Peters: The minister made reference to the report of the survey. I presume this is the one in which the provincial and federal governments have co-operated?

Mr. Walker: Yes.

Mr. Peters: I would appreciate it if it was made public.

Mr. Walker: It is survey data of a technical nature; it is not in the form of a report.

Mr. Garland: Do I understand that this is technical data only and has no reference to economic feasibility?

Mr. Walker: My hon. friend from Nipissing is quite right; it is hydrographic.

Mr. Peters: I presume it would include a survey of the problem that I suggested was evident to a number of the members concerned in relation to the upper Ottawa river watershed. Can any consideration be given to a survey of this nature by the department? Has any consideration been given in the past to a survey of that type?

Mr. Walker: Yes. I understand that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has a commission appointed to study that area.

Mr. Garland: My question is in respect of the Moosonee survey. I understand that no funds are provided. Although we have no control over the matter and nothing is submitted by the province, can we conclude that no action is proposed this year other than a review of the study?

Mr. Walker: Nothing more. We have no further obligations at the present time. We have carried out our undertaking with the province. The $100,000 has been spent on this basic survey, of which we pay $50,000.

Mr. Peters: One further question. Is the department anticipating any repairs to the harbour dock facilities at Haileybury this year?

Mr. Walker: Yes, I understand some small repairs are expected to be made this year.

Item agreed to.

355. British Columbia and Yukon, $2,414,500.

Mr. Payne: I have a few observations to make on this item. Probably they could more appropriately have been made on item 1 of the estimates. However, I thought it would be more co-operative to make them at this time. Generally, and before getting to specifics, I should like through the minister to congratulate Mr. Walkey, the chief engineer of harbours and rivers for the British Columbia and Yukon area, on a magnificent job of work done over the past several years. I should like to add to that the very profound thanks of thousands of people in the lower mainland for the splendid work he has done in connection with the planning committee of the port of Vancouver.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion this afternoon has been most interesting. I will also say to the minister it has been somewhat disturbing for we have listened for some time during the discussion of these estimates, particularly those on harbours and engineering, to some of our fellow colleagues from the province of Newfoundland sitting in the opposition. It does seem to me there is internal disagreement as to where the vast sum of money allotted to the province should go, whether it should go to the main harbour and port of St. Johns, or whether it should be more generally distributed.

I would say, against this background, and I do hope the minister will pay attention to this, it is indeed disturbing, while we are talking about the distribution of funds, to see amounts such as that allotted to Newfoundland. I say this not for the sake of being parochial in any way whatsoever. It is disturbing when we look at the vast coast lines of the province of British Columbia, including an island certainly in economic importance, in area, and in boat requirements greater than the province of Prince Edward Island, and see a sum of a little over $2 million to supply the public works requirements, the boat shelters, the rock-filled breakwaters that are so urgently needed in so many areas of British Columbia.

I say quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, that I look with some alarm at the general breakdown of these items under harbours and engineering services, and I would ask the minister to take a very careful look at this matter in future years and try to establish a balanced program based on the economic needs of various areas of Canada and making provision for the safety of the thousands of craft that are plying the waters off our shores.

I wish to thank the minister for certain splendid undertakings such as that going forward at Okeover arm and the Westview small boat harbour. I wish to discuss these briefly. They are of a somewhat different concept in the provision of shelter on the west coast. They are rock-filled shelters where small craft can go for a short period or for a longer moorage. I would very much wish the minister to take cognizance of the fact that, though these works have been done and are appreciated, much of the thanks should go to the people living along that coast. I consider, and I am sure the minister will agree, that they have co-operated in a most wholehearted way by allowing his department to dispose of various wharf facilities which no longer fit the economic and trading pattern formerly prevalent along the British Columbia coast. In other words, today motor connections and the ramp loading of cars have become a major factor and wharf facilities built on piles are becoming less and less important. In the case of these unnecessary works the people of the west coast have been most co-operative. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate gets up and catalogues the vast requirements of the people of his riding, leaving me to wonder what he did for them while he was a minister of the crown. In this case we have works going forward which have been contributed to in a major way by the people surrendering works of a nature not now required.

Quite aside from the commercial necessity, we have a requirement today for shelter for small craft. Today on a week end between 40,000 and 45,000 small craft ply the inner waters of the strait of Georgia and Malaspina strait, and only in very rare cases have we ever recognized our responsibility to provide shelter to which these thousands of craft can run in the event of a sudden squall. Unless steps are taken now, one of these days we are going to be faced with a tragedy.

I would ask the minister to think about this matter very seriously. I would point out that the difficulty of proving the need for shelters along the long exposed coast line of the Sechelt peninsula is such that it is almost impossible to surmount. The historic requirements of the department are that first of all you must show economic need. This is certainly putting the cart before the horse. Nobody can make use of a shelter along that coast line unless shelter exists and it is impossible to try to establish in a statistical way a situation that cannot develop until the much needed shelter is provided. Such statistics cannot be supplied to anyone until shelter is provided.

In a not too critical way, I hope, I say, as a British Columbian who feels a responsibility to those who ply the waters of the Pacific and the sheltered waters of our inland canals, that I believe that greater emphasis and attention must be placed on the needs of the west coast. Surely a great maritime province such as British Columbia with its apparent needs is justified in expecting an amount to be provided for such services far greater in ratio than that which is before us in the estimates this year.

My criticisms and my suggestions in this connection are not directed against the minister in his capacity as Minister of Public Works. This pattern is a historic one. The same recognition of the need of Canada's west coast has been shown by past ministers over many years. All I am asking today is that the matter be looked at closely and put in its proper perspective.

Before taking my seat, I should like to thank the department again for its continuing program with respect to the building of a sea wall around the historic area of Stanley park. I should also like to make one suggestion. Much of the harbour of Vancouver is taken up by what is known as the north shore area, which is the southern boundary of my beautiful riding. I would urge that some consideration be given to establishing a continuing program, as has been done in the case of Stanley park, whereby the approaches to Canada's western gateway may at long last have the sea wall which they so badly need.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few observations. First of all, I wish to refer to the surface of the wharf at Crawford Bay. The wharf is a rock-filled crib structure that cost around $30,000 and it is an excellent wharf. There is an earth covering over the rock fill and owing to large trucks using the wharf for the unloading of logs and so on the surface has been very much cut up and has been somewhat neglected until recently. The minister's department is going to look into the matter and improve the surface at the first opportunity.

I suggest that the department investigate the possibility of providing an asphalt surface like that at the Kaslo wharf. It makes an excellent surface for these rock-filled, earth-topped wharves. I am not suggesting any large expenditure but I do ask the department, because of the requests of a number of residents, to look into that question. It makes an excellent launching ramp for small craft belonging to local people and for the many tourists who use the highway which passes nearby.

I want to say that the residents of Kootenay Bay are delighted to know that the department intends to build a launching ramp or proper launching facilities there because there is an increasing number of people coming from the United States particularly who will use these launching facilities and they will also serve the local people.

The people of Slocan city have requested for a couple years the consideration of the building of launching facilities there. I understand the policy of the department is that these launching facilities are provided where the major industry is catering to tourists. I would ask them to look into that question again because the number of tourists who stay in that small city is increasing every year. It is a historical place, an old mining community that was very much larger at one time than it is today. It was at one time the smallest city in North America having a population of about 272 persons in an area a mile square. It is in a most attractive spot at the south end of Slocan lake, with an excellent beach three quarters of a mile long fronting this small city, which of course attracts tourists there in increasing numbers.

I come to one other question, and I hope the minister does not think I am at all avaricious. I am just putting forward the views of my constituents. The Nakusp launch club, supported by the chamber of commerce and other organizations, asked the minister to give reconsideration to the necessity for a small breakwater behind which United States small craft can shelter. Last year, we had about 125 of these small craft come up. I just got word today of about 20 being there. Under storm conditions, it is very difficult for them to find satisfactory shelter. Some of these craft are too large to beach. Some of them are quite expensive cruisers, and are quite elaborate. They come from as far south as Portland, being portaged around the Grand Coulee dam and the Bonneville dam on huge trucks or lowboys, as I think the term is. Since the people of the United States have discovered this paradise in which we live, they are coming in increasing numbers.

I have a suggestion to make. I am under the impression, and I know something about the cost of piling and logs, that the department has, on occasion, possibly paid an unnecessarily high price for piling and logs required for the foundations for breakwaters and that sort of thing. Since the war all the lumber companies have been very busy. These small orders have been somewhat of a nuisance to the larger operators. There would be possibly two or three people who would bid on these contracts for piling and logs under these circumstances and because the order is small and a particular effort is required to get these materials out, the prices have been somewhat high. I do suggest consideration be given to calling for tenders for these piles and logs that are required in the construction of wharves during the winter when there are many unemployed men with families who would be very pleased indeed to undertake this work at a reasonable cost. I make that as a suggestion in respect of this breakwater.

I am of the opinion that this is a very necessary breakwater because Nakusp is the main port on the Arrow lakes, in fact it is the capital of the Arrow lakes. These boats usually come up from as far south as Portland and stay there overnight before continuing their journey to Revelstoke. I have been rather astounded at the estimated cost of this work as given by the minister's officials. I know something about the construction of these facilities. I believe the high estimated cost is due to the cost of the raw materials. The piledrivers are there and the driving of the piles would not occupy more than a day. The other facilities needed for this kind of work are there, too. I suggest that with some co-operation with this launch club and the local organizations, this breakwater could be built at about half the cost of the estimate provided by the minister when the matter last received consideration. I just put forward that suggestion.

I want to say a word or two about Duncan river.

Mr. Walker: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member for Kootenay West, but there was some suggestion that we might be able to get through some of these items by six o'clock. The hon. member for Kootenay West often drops in to see me. Could he outline the details of some of these projects to me during a private visit? I do not want to interfere in any way with the hon. member in presenting his comments, but it would be appreciated if we could get through some of these items. We have had three hard days so far.

Mr. Herridge: I am in a very co-operative mood. I was going to say a few words about Duncan river and the dredging of the Arrow lakes. However, I shall accept the minister's suggestion and call on him at the first opportunity that is convenient to him.

Mr. Walker: Thank you very much.

Mr. Howard: I do want to underline, if I may, the remarks made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano with regard to the great need which exists for boat shelters. I expect this need is more prevalent in the lower coastal area because of the population than it is in some of the outlying regions. I spent almost a year travelling up and down the coast by small craft, and know from personal experience the need that exists for these breakwaters and shelters.

At this stage, I would not want to become involved in any difference of opinion which might arise between the hon. member for Coast-Capilano and some hon. members from Newfoundland about the relative importance of each coast or the different amounts of money that are assigned to each coast. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that on a number of occasions I have expressed similar thoughts with regard to fisheries and, on another occasion, with regard to the subsidies for shipping and transportation. I pointed out the disparity that exists between the two coasts.

Over the last two years there has been some work developing on the northern coast of the Queen Charlotte islands at Wiah point or Seven Mile point. Perhaps the minister could give us an account of this work, if he would. I am sure it would be very brief. Before the minister replies, I should point out for the benefit of the hon. member for Kootenay West who raised the question of the initial estimates of such projects, that the initial estimate of the Wiah point project was greatly in excess of what it actually cost to do the dredging and the breakwater work that was necessary. Some thoughts have been expressed to the effect that it is sometimes the policy of a minister who does not want to say no to a particular project and be accused of being unfair to one part of the country as compared with another, to take the initial estimated cost and double or treble it, then say it is far too costly to do that this year. I do not say this Minister of Public Works does that.

However, as I say, I have met this situation with regard to Wiah point. The initial estimates were far in excess of the actual cost. I am sure the minister of highways for British Columbia sometimes does this overestimating in order to curtail argument and pressure from groups in the community in relation to proceeding with particular road projects. We have seen, on a couple of occasions, that the final cost was less than the initial estimated cost, which seems to be a bit difficult to understand.

I wonder, too, if the minister would give us an account of what is taking place with regard to the dredging of Metlakatla bar, just outside Prince Rupert. I have exchanged a lot of correspondence with the department. Once they said yes; at another stage they said no, then yes, and then the captain of the dredge was involved in the argument, too. The last information I received was to the effect there was going to be some dredging at Metlakatla bar. I wonder if the minister could give us an indication of what is happening in connection with those two items.

Mr. Walker: In reply to the hon. member for Skeena, I would say he is quite right. This work is being planned and I understand we hope to get it under way very shortly.

Mr. Batten: I just want to make a few brief comments on the remarks made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I do not want to become embroiled in any argument as to the relative importance of the Vancouver coast and the Newfoundland coast. I do not know anything about the coast of British Columbia. I therefore do not propose to have anything at all to say about it. If there are needs on the British Columbia coast, I would think that those who are representing British Columbia here in the House of Commons will be well able to speak for the constituencies who sent them here. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that nobody will ever hear from me any complaints about any hon. member talking too long in order to place before parliament the needs of the area which he represents. I am just a little bit annoyed that anyone should take occasion to object to my representing the area from which I come. I do not know the length of the Vancouver coast or how many projects are required. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has requirements and I have no doubt that he does a good job of placing those requirements before the minister. However, I should like to do exactly the same thing.

In my province we need a large number of marine works. I come from an island where the coast line is 6,000 miles long, and where along that coast line there are 1,200 small settlements; to that figure you will have to add another 3,000 miles for the coast line of Labrador. Surely on the coast line it is to be expected that there would be a great need for marine construction. True it is that in the early thirties many of the marine works that were built along the coast of Newfoundland were destroyed and the government of the day was unable to replace them. However, coming into the mid 40's and well before Newfoundland came into confederation in 1949, a number of these marine works were replaced. From 1949 until the present government came into office a good deal was done to provide the needed marine works. Let us be fair about this matter. Since 1957, the present minister and his predecessor have done exactly the same thing. But because all this has been done I see no reason why there should be any objection to explaining to the minister what further things are required. The Newfoundlanders who sit in this House of Commons listen for days and days to members from western Canada talk about agricultural products, but you never here any complaint from Newfoundlanders, and I am certainly not going to complain. They have their case to place before parliament and they have a right to do so. I claim the right to do exactly the same thing. I may not talk about exactly the same problems that exist in British Columbia or the prairies. Maybe in the case of Newfoundland we are talking about fish; in the case of the prairies we are talking about wheat. However, they are all products of Canada. Let me say to some of the western members that you cannot live by bread alone.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 355 carry?

Mr. Howard: Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like to relate to the minister a couple of following thoughts I have or rather thoughts following upon what I had originally said about the need for breakwaters and the like. I have had correspondence over this matter with the department and with the minister and have had discussions with them for some time. The department and the minister's officials have been kind enough to conduct in some instances, surveys and investigations of the requests and in others they have not yet quite reached that stage. However, I would point out that the north coastal area is to a great extent, at least on the coastal part, dependent upon the fishing industry. The north coastal part is not so well protected as is that area between the mainland and Vancouver island on the lower coastal part.

Throughout the entire Queen Charlotte islands and the entire north coastal area we are at the complete mercy of the Pacific winds and storms from the southeast in the fall and winter months and it gets extremely dangerous to go fishing on many occasions, with no shelter in sight. This Wiah Point that we mentioned earlier was a case in point of being the only possible place on the whole north coast of the Queen Charlotte islands that could be developed into some sort of haven for the fishing fleet that fish out of there. Some work was done and that is most helpful and most appreciated by the trawlers that work off the north island and Seven Mile, Masset inlet and the parts along the north coast of the Queen Charlotte islands.

In the middle of the Queen Charlotte islands, on Skidegate inlet there is another group of settlements containing a fairly large number of people who are fishermen with rather expensive boats. This is near Queen Charlotte city or Skidegate. There are a dock and two floats there, but generally the boats are at the complete mercy of any storms that blow up anywhere along the north coast. There is no shelter whatsoever and they are moored out in the bay and Skidegate inlet. The people have been complaining and asking for and insisting upon a breakwater to be established there—a rock filled breakwater—for many years now but so far no breakwater exists; and any time that a storm blows up or storm warnings are up those individuals who have boats out in the inlet have to get up, whether it is in the middle of the night, middle of the morning or any other time or off fishing days and row out to the boats, unmoor them and move away down the inlet in order to gain some protection from the winds that blow up there almost overnight in the fall and in the winter parts of the year.

This is an extremely important matter. I wish the minister would undertake to delve into this particular question of a breakwater at Skidegate. When he is doing this, I wish he would pay less attention to the question of cost as it relates to the number of people who might use it. The lives of individuals are involved as well as the value of their ships just as is the case at another community, namely Port Simpson just north of Prince Rupert. The minister's department made some investigations there. They came back with the answer that it would cost too much to provide the breakwater facilities; that there were not enough people here with boats of enough value that would get enough benefit out of the breakwater even if we were to put it in, but it cost too much anyhow. To look purely and simply at the dollars and cents end of it and to establish some arbitrary rule, if that is what is done, about whether or not a breakwater, a dock, or some other safety device of that nature is established I think is the wrong thing to do.

Port Simpson, for instance is an Indian village and I think it will remain for some time at generally the present level of population and that the increase will come from an increase in the birth rate. It will remain for some period of time, I would think, in relatively the same economic position, with relatively the same number of boats and the same number of people operating them, with gradual increases arising out of population alone or perhaps intermarriage into the bands. To me this means that for a long period of time to come those people are going to be denied the right to safety and a safe mooring place behind a breakwater because it is considered to be uneconomic by the department.

I could mention a number of other places on the north coast that are in the same position. The minister I am sure has under consideration one that immediately comes to mind at Hartley Bay where a great need also exists for a breakwater. This is also an Indian village and it is also going to remain in relatively the same position economically and with respect to population for quite a number of years to come.

Without going into all of these other requirements and needs by name at this time, I just wanted to use these one or two instances in order to point out to the minister and I think in a number of cases, far too much consideration or almost exclusive consideration appears to have been given—or at least this is the feeling that the people in those communities have—to the question of cost and that the sole concern is dollars and cents related to the number of people who might be using that particular facility. When the lives of individuals are involved and when their investment in boats, fishing equipment and gear is involved, I think if this is the criterion the department uses, it is an incorrect one.

I wonder whether the minister would also say what is happening with respect to the requests of people at Oona River who wanted to participate jointly with the department in some work at that particular community by supplying labour and the like if the department would supply some additional equipment and money in order to establish facilities there. I would like the minister to give an account of what is happening there.

I was not able to be in the chamber earlier, unfortunately, and perhaps at that time the minister dealt with the matter raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East yesterday, namely the situation at San Juan in which the minister had quite a bit of interest prior to the by-elections and indicated to the house, as I read his words, that all that was necessary was to elect the Conservative candidate for Esquimalt-Saanich and the breakwater would be built overnight. If the minister has already dealt with that matter and it is on Hansard, perhaps he will let me know and I will find it. If he has not, perhaps he will deal with this particular point.

Mr. Broome: Are those all the afterthoughts the hon. member has?

Mr. Howard: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Broome: The hon. member made one speech and then said, "I have some afterthoughts". I wondered whether he had any more afterthoughts.

Mr. Howard: If my hon. friend invites me, I will be glad to accept the invitation. What I said was not that these were afterthoughts, but thoughts which I hoped to express after I received a reply from the minister on the question of Wiah point and Metlakatla bay. Also, I saw the hon. member for Humber-St. George's rising at the same time as myself and I thought perhaps he wanted to deal with the question of the relative treatment of the east and west coasts. I certainly did not want to take up all the time and prevent him having an opportunity of taking part in the debate.

I know the Minister of Veterans Affairs has accused me of doing this before, that is, preventing hon. members like my hon. friend from Vancouver South having a say in this house. That is a pretty sad situation. However, I may be able to follow the invitation of the hon. member after the minister has replied to the questions I have asked.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the Esquimalt-Saanich matter, I think my answer to the question in connection with the breakwater was very non-committal, because I gave no encouragement; I said the matter was being investigated by the engineers. If the hon. member for Skeena had been the minister of public works, does he think he would have given as non-committal an answer?

In regard to the other questions the hon. member has raised, I can give no information at the present time except to say that we are noting the remarks of the hon. member.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 355 carry?

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Chairman. I think this question of San Juan is one in which we should perhaps get involved a little more, because the minister with a smirk on his face the other day when questions were asked about this, obviously meant—and in fact almost said it—that he had been in touch with an individual who was the reeve of Saanich. When he was asked a question a couple of days later he qualified that and said this was the individual who would be the next member of parliament representing the constituency of Esquimalt-Saanich; and he was.

This is what happened, and there is no doubt at all that the statements of the minister were used to advantage in that particular constituency. Perhaps anyone who had been in the same position would have used them in the same way. I think perhaps all candidates take advantage of using government information of this kind, if they can, in order to get a few votes. The unfortunate thing that develops out of this practice is that such projects and matters are purely and simply vote-getters and do not mean anything in so far as concrete action is concerned.

One would not want to see this particular request carried on year after year after year waiting for other elections and by-elections for the minister to consider it. I know how long these things carry on and how much delay takes place in giving them what is known as proper consideration. I know how many petitions have to be signed, letters written, requests made, resolutions passed and everything else before action is taken. Esquimalt-Saanich is not my constituency and I only raise this matter as an incidental in this discussion because I have asked questions about it before.

I have been in that part of the country. The hon. member for Vancouver East dealt with the subject last evening. Perhaps the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich at some time intends to ask the minister about this particular item or perhaps he has already done so. Perhaps the hon. member has been in touch with the minister and may want to deal with it further.

I suppose the minister has an excuse if this is not contained in the estimates now before us, because they were prepared long before the by-election was called. The minister has that excuse, perhaps, if he wants to use that sort of excuse. However, there are supplementary estimates which we will also be dealing with, and I notice it is not included in there either. I only want to say that I hope this is not one of those items which drags on and on and on, year after year continually being given consideration, with no action being taken.

This is what happens to requests for so many projects of a similar nature. I have mentioned a couple of them already. I have mentioned the one at Port Simpson and the one at Skidegate. The projects I have mentioned would be of great benefit to the people there, just the same as the projects mentioned by the hon. member from Coast-Capilano would be of benefit to the people of that area.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the minister a question. I know I am out of order, but I have not been in the chamber because of committee work. The minister may have answered this question earlier. It is in connection with the report of his officers and those of the Department of Transport about the facilities along the waterfront from Dorion to Oshawa. Are there any other recommendations apart from that covering the expenditure at Cornwall?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier asked some questions yesterday and the answers, as I have them seriatim, are as follows:

Dorion, Quebec. No steps are being taken to develop a major harbour at Dorion.

Cornwall, Ontario. Engineering investigations have been carried out under the advance planning program of the Department of Public Works to prepare an over-all plan with cost estimates for a harbour development to handle both bulk and package freight. Any development undertaken is to proceed in stages, with only a modest outlay in the first instance, with further stages to depend upon the growth traffic.

A single berth wharf, 400 feet long, providing for ships with a 21-foot draft, but expandable both as to depth and length of face, is to be constructed this fiscal year. Tenders are expected to be advertised next week.

Morrisburg, Ontario. There is not now sufficient basis to warrant a major deep water harbour development at this place. Morrisburg will rapidly increase in importance as a tourist centre and, consequently, there was a reasonable case for the provision of tourist wharfage facilities.

An L-shaped timber cribwork and span structure, 180 feet by 16 feet, is presently under construction. This wharf is nearing completion and the contract price was $22,280.

Prescott, Ontario:

(a) A deep water facility is not warranted at Prescott;

(b) There are the Johnston national harbours board deep water wharfage facilities on the west side of the elevator slip which can be utilized for general cargo, provided that a transit shed facility is installed;

(c) The Department of Public Works has constructed such a transit shed about 60 by 200 feet on the national harbours board wharf, west of the elevator slip; this shed is being administered by the national harbours board.

The approximate cost of this shed was $58,000.

At Brockville, Ontario, no steps are being taken to construct deep water harbour facilities at Brockville until such time as there are firm indications of the volume and nature of traffic which would use the harbour.

At Oshawa, Ontario, a wharf structure, 500 feet long is to be constructed on the eastern side of the harbour to provide additional berthing. The cost of this construction will approach one half million dollars.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister. There was another question which I put, namely, why the construction work would not begin until the month of August, as stated in the local press.

Mr. Walker: The wharf site has been approved by the industrial committee, by the mayor, the town planner and other parties but the job has been delayed somewhat as the consultants' original plans required substantial revision. The plans and specifications are now ready and tenders will be advertised next week.

Item agreed to.

357. Remedial works where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures, $800,000.

Mr. Caron: I have asked the minister time and time again, and I ask him again today, what can we expect from the department by way of protection wharves. I have stated that before Mr. Winters became minister of public works successive ministers in both Conservative and Liberal governments had always recognized a certain responsibility for the provision of protection wharves along navigable rivers. When Mr. Winters took over it was decided that "navigable" should be construed as "navigated" and from that time ministers of public works have refused to accept responsibility along navigable rivers.

I have written to the minister stating my case. I have told him that while Ottawa was saying, "it is not our responsibility", Quebec was saying that it was the responsibility of Ottawa because damage was occurring along navigable rivers, not navigated rivers. For this reason I have from time to time asked the minister why the federal and the provincial authorities should not get together to decide exactly who is responsible in these cases. It is claimed that erosion by waters in the spring is an act of God. But we also suffer from the effects of erosion every Sunday because the numerous dams on the Gatineau and Ottawa rivers are opened Saturday. Then the water rises and it goes into the land affecting the land belonging to farmers along the river. They close again on Saturday night so that they can get water for power, and the water goes down. This certainly cannot be called an act of God. It is an act of man. We should like to know definitely who is responsible for these things.

The minister wrote me a letter two and a half pages long but I cannot accept it as clearing up the situation perfectly. The only way in which we could have a clear answer would be for the federal and provincial authorities to get together and accept the joint responsibility they might have, together with their individual responsibilities. I should like to hear from the minister whether or not he intends to submit the problem to the provincial authorities to see what can be done.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Caron: I should like to have an answer from the minister. I know that in the letter he sent me he does not admit he is obliged to. I understand that he is not forced to take action but if he wishes to clear up this matter this would be a way of doing so. The minister will have to do so one way or the other—either he or his successor. If this matter were cleared up we should know where to strike when we want to get something done. Farmers in a great many places in my riding along the Ottawa river have been affected including those at Gatineau Point, Templeton, Masson and Buckingham. They have been affected in all parts, and I know this situation exists not only along the Ottawa river and the Gatineau river but along many other rivers in Canada. The minister should give us the necessary answer so that we might know who is responsible and where we should strike if we need help in these matters.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Caron: I am not ready to let it carry in this way. I think the minister should at least give the committee an answer.

Mr. Walker: The answer is fully set out, with clarity and detail, in the long letter which took hours and hours of preparation so that the hon. member for Hull might be able to understand. There is no change in government policy. I had hoped the hon. member would understand the letter. If he does not, I shall be glad if he will come to my office and I will go over it point by point.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Caron: I am not ready to accept it that way. The minister seems to have made up his mind that the answer he gave was satisfactory. I know that the provincial authorities say it was not so. They claim this is the responsibility of the federal government. The federal government denies this. How can we get a clear-cut answer with regard to this matter? Either we shall have to send cases to the supreme court in order to have a ruling or the two parties must get together to decide. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: The leader of the house indicated last night that today he would give us the order of business of the legislative program for Monday and Tuesday. I wonder if he would be good enough to do that and at the same time indicate what estimates will be taken up during the course of next week.

Mr. Churchill: The legislative items for Monday and Tuesday are 10 in number. The order in which they will be considered is as follows: No. 1, a bill to amend the Criminal Code; No. 2, Bill No. C-109, with regard to the Financial Administration Act; No. 3, Bill No. S-28, with regard to the Trust Companies Act; No. 4, Bill No. S-29, with regard to the Loan Companies Act; No. 5, Bill No. S-24, with regard to the Government Property Traffic Act. No. 6 will be the resolution in my name, followed immediately by consideration in committee of the whole of Bill No. C-101, to amend the War Veterans' Allowance Act. No. 7 will be Bill No. C-108, concerning the Export Credits Insurance Act. No. 8 will be a bill to amend the Energy Board Act. It will appear on the order paper Monday morning; it is in Votes and Proceedings now. No. 9 will be a bill to amend the Railway Act; and No. 10, a resolution concerning the Pine Point railway.

This is the business available for Monday and Tuesday, followed on Tuesday night at 7.30 by the budget. Wednesday will be available for other legislation or estimates, I have not decided yet. It depends on the progress made on Monday and Tuesday on these legislative items. Thursday and Friday will be given over to the budget debate and Saturday will be devoted to estimates.

I think it is a little early to predict the estimates that may be taken up next week. We have now completed nine departments, we have dealt partially with four others. Two are in committee. Therefore there are not very many left but the house will have to determine how rapidly it would like to progress with the estimates.

It being five minutes past six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 19, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF LABOUR OF NIGERIA

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to call to the attention of the house the presence in the diplomatic gallery of the minister of labour of Nigeria, Hon. J. N. Johnson. Mr. Johnson is currently visiting Canada and the United States and recently has been attending the international labour conference in Geneva. I am very pleased to welcome him today. I am sure all hon. members would wish me to express our good wishes to him and to his country, Nigeria, which gained independence within the commonwealth last October, and which is a friend of Canada.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we in the official opposition are happy to join with the Minister of Labour in extending a warm welcome to so distinguished a person as the minister of labour of Nigeria. We not only extend him a warm welcome but in this way we express our admiration for his country.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, members of this group are pleased to join with the Minister of Labour and the hon. member for Essex East in the sincere and cordial greeting that has been extended to our distinguished visitor. I think the feelings of this group can be best expressed this way. We all take great pride in the commonwealth and its organizations, and are convinced that it can make a great contribution to the peace and prosperity of the world.

One way in which this can be done is by the exchange of men who hold high office such as our distinguished guests here this morning. I know that in Canada we always welcome ministers from other nations and by the mutual exchange of views, opinions and understanding of each other there is given a lead to world peace and happiness. We in this group, are very thankful for the opportunity of adding our words of welcome to our distinguished visitor and hope he will have not only a pleasant but an interesting stay in our country.

COPYRIGHTS

REPEAL AND REPLACEMENT OF EXISTING LEGISLATION

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-112, to provide for copyright in Canada and to implement the universal copyright convention.

Mr. Pickersgill: Explain.

Miss LaMarsh: This bill which is introduced as the result of several weeks of intensive effort, is an act to repeal the present Copyright Act which is 40 years old and to provide for its modernization; further, for the assistance of authors and architects, composers and cameramen, playwrights and poets and other artists within the community; and to further protect them by implementing the universal copyright convention signed in 1952, pursuant to the recommendations of the Ilsley commission of 1957 and the O'Leary commission of 1961.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-113, to amend the National Energy Board Act.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Explain.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make necessary amendments to certain clauses in the National Energy Board Act that was passed two years ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What clauses?

Mr. McIlraith: Explain.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the minister shall have leave to introduce said bill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have not had an explanation of the matter. The minister has simply said that this is a bill to amend certain clauses. What clauses? Can the minister give us some indication of the principle involved?

Mr. Hees: As there are a number of clauses that have to be amended, I am afraid it would take up too much time of the house to explain each clause in detail. These are technical amendments.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is there no principle involved?

Mr. Pickersgill: Contempt of parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF LINE TO GREAT SLAVE LAKE

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta and in the Northwest Territories by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near Grimshaw, in the province of Alberta, in a northerly direction to Great Slave lake, in the Northwest Territories; to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of a subsidy to Canadian National Railway Company equal to the cost of constructing the said line of railway, but not exceeding in any case $86,250,000, to enable the work of construction to proceed forthwith upon an agreement being completed between Her Majesty, Canadian National Railway Company, Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada Limited and Pine Point Mines Limited, the said agreement to provide, among other things, for payment to Her Majesty not exceeding $12,500,000 on behalf of Pine Point Mines Limited toward the cost of constructing the said line of railway, such payments to be based on the average annual value per ton of concentrates shipped and to commence after the completion of construction of the said line of railway and to continue for a period of ten years.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF AUTOMOTIVE ACCESSORIES AND RELATED PRODUCTS

Motion No. 143—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of the material collected for submission to the restrictive trade practices commission in the course of an inquiry under section 42 of the Combines Investigation Act relating to the distribution and sale of automotive oils, greases, anti-freeze, additives, tires, batteries, accessories, and related products, by director of investigation and research, Combines Investigation Act.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I explained last week the chairman of the restrictive trade practices commission has ordered that public hearings be held in connection with this inquiry. I therefore consider I am not under any disability with respect to the production of the documents and am prepared to accept the motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Fulton: I table two copies herewith.

[Mr. Hees.]

SIREN TOWER, NORTH BURNABY, B.C.

Motion No. 148—Mr. Martin (Timmins):

Motion agreed to.

PENSION PLAN, BANK OF CANADA

Motion No. 149—Mr. Matheson:

For a copy of any communication or communications addressed to the Minister of Finance by Mr. John T. Bryden, former director of the Bank of Canada, regarding the pension plan of the bank together with the replies to any such communications by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why should this stand, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: No. 150—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I see the hon. member in his place moving his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member unwilling to allow the motion to stand?

Mr. Matheson: I am not willing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member to allow this to stand because I have just this morning seen the motion and I think there should be opportunity to examine it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the minister has raised a point of order. These motions are of course put on the order paper, with due notice given under the rules. The minister has had the same opportunity to see this as we have to see other things, and it does not seem to me there is any reason, since the minister himself has chosen to introduce this subject, why it should stand.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is not debatable. If the hon. member wishes the motion put, I shall put it.

Some hon. Members: Put the motion.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Matheson) which was negatived on the following division:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject to the approval of the government of the province of Alberta.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING FISCAL MATTERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave to revert to motions so that I may table certain correspondence.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask leave to table copies of letters written on June 16 to the premiers of the provinces with regard to dominion-provincial fiscal relations. One of the letters that I have here is to Mr. Frost, the premier of Ontario. The other, in French, is to Mr. Lesage, the premier of Quebec. I would ask at the same time, if the house agrees, that these letters be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that these letters be printed as suggested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of letters above referred to, see appendix.]

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MEMORANDUM FROM GOVERNOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he will table the memorandum to him from the governor of the Bank of Canada dated February 6, 1961, which has now been made public, and submit it to the banking and commerce committee of this house for examination.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was informed just before I entered the house this morning that the governor of the Bank of Canada has released a memorandum that answers to the description given by the Leader of the Opposition. The governor has always told me that any communications passing between him and myself were confidential. I have respected that rule. I will have to examine the position in the light of the action taken by the governor this morning.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister whether he has discussed with the governor the substance of this memorandum, which puts forward a program that in the view of the governor would reduce the deficit and reduce unemployment to less than 4 per cent within one year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is now seeking to discuss the contents of a memorandum which the governor of the bank evidently has released this morning. The governor has always told me that all such communications, including this memorandum, were sent to me in confidence. He has always taken the position that communications passing between him and me were confidential whether or not they were marked to that effect. I have said that I have respected that confidence.

I think I should examine the position before allowing myself to engage in discussion on it or answer questions concerning it. Obviously if there is to be complete disclosure on the part of Mr. Coyne, then I should have the right to answer and to point out the extent to which some of these observations contained in such memoranda are self serving evidence or contain proposals that would be unacceptable for various reasons. I think in all fairness, until there has been opportunity to examine precisely what the governor has been doing in these day to day or hour to hour actions and announcements of his, I should examine the position that he has always taken in the past in regard to the confidential nature of communications.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Finance care to say why he has taken the extraordinary position of refusing to discuss—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia started out in rather an argumentative way. If the hon. member has some request for factual information I suggest that he not lead off with an argument about some extraordinary position.

Mr. Argue: My question for factual information is this, Mr. Speaker. Is it correct that the Minister of Finance has refused to discuss with the governor of the Bank of Canada these proposals that were presented to him on February 15?

Mr. Pearson: That is the question I asked.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to welcome back to the chamber the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Argue: I am not sure I am glad to be back.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. gentleman may not be completely up to date with respect to the events of recent days, and he may not have fully absorbed what I have just now said to the Leader of the Opposition in reply to the question that he directed to me on the same subject.

Some of these matters have been discussed and were the subject of correspondence, as I mentioned in a statement in the house last Wednesday when the hon. member, I think, was not present.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, since these further submissions have now been made, I wonder whether the Minister of Finance will allow the annual report of the Bank of Canada to be discussed by the banking and commerce committee with the minister and the governor appearing before the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question which to my recollection has been asked approximately half a dozen times.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, although this question has been asked on a number of occasions I am asking it in the light of the new and extraordinary information that has now been divulged. In the light of this I wonder whether the report could now be made available to the banking and commerce committee for discussion.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to prevent the minister from answering if there is any possibility of a change in the answer, but the question has already been answered a great many times uniformly in the same way.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I submit with great respect that the question asked is in order. It is true that I have repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance whether he would allow the governor of the Bank of Canada to be interrogated by the banking and commerce committee. But in the document which was circulated by the governor this morning he makes this statement on the first page—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It would not be regular to allow the hon. member to introduce an extraneous matter in relation to a point of order; that is, a substantial matter. The question relates to the business of the house. Unless the minister wishes to answer the question I suggest to hon. members that it has been asked often enough that there is no need to repeat it further. It takes up the time of the house unnecessarily. The question is the same question asked before relating to the submission of the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada to the banking and commerce committee, as I understood the hon. member's question. Is that correct?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, it is not the same question—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the question was directed to me, and perhaps I could save the time of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member had not concluded his remarks relating to the point of order when I interrupted him, I shall hear the hon. member and then the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I thought I might save the time of the house and save you from having to listen to the same question that has been asked so many times and the same answer which has been consistently given by the minister. This question has been asked many times and if it were directed to me again this morning I would give the same answer I have given on every other occasion when the question was raised.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, surely it is not an extraneous matter when the governor of the Bank of Canada says that for four years—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the Leader of the Opposition introduces remarks, statements or propositions from the statement of the governor of the Bank of Canada he will be seeking to introduce a discussion of these matters which to my mind would be irrelevant in relation to the point that has to be decided. Presumably the minister knows what is in the communication. If the question is asked of the minister whether in the light of the communication which has now been revealed he would consider referring the report of the Bank of Canada to the committee on banking and commerce, that is the same question that we have had, as I said, at least five times, and there could be a great many variations of support for the argument; but to my mind it is irregular to introduce a discussion of the subject matter which might be so referred.

Mr. Pearson: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the privileges of the house are involved. The governor of the Bank of Canada makes public a statement which bears on the action taken by the government in response to previous questions regarding the submission of this matter to a house committee, because in this submission the governor of the Bank of Canada—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member now wants to introduce the statement which he attempted to introduce earlier.

Mr. Argue: It is time the minister was thrown out again.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is very thin-skinned.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I expect hon. members in discussing the point of order to observe the proprieties, namely that they should not endeavour on a point of order to introduce matters contained in the statement.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, it is quite true that we on this side of the house have brought up this matter on several occasions, but it is also true that the governor of the Bank of Canada, dealing with this particular matter of the submission of the annual report of the Bank of Canada to a house committee, has made a public statement to the effect that the minister refuses to allow this to be done—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was a time when hon. gentlemen opposite cared about the privileges of this house, or at least pretended to.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I were to permit the Leader of the Opposition to refer to what the governor has said in this statement with which the Minister of Finance has declined to deal until he has had an opportunity to consider it further, I would then have to admit the whole of the statement and there would be no limit to the discussion that might take place. I rule the question out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the governor of the Bank of Canada is a public official appointed by the board of directors of the bank and responsible to parliament. This morning the governor made a statement which affects the rights of parliament. He has said that on four occasions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should establish that there is a question of privilege before he makes statements which are obviously objected to and would be argued against.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to comply with what I think is a proper request of the Chair. The fact is that the governor of the Bank of Canada is responsible to parliament under the Bank of Canada Act. This fact has been acknowledged repeatedly this session by the Minister of Finance. Parliament, through some of its members, has sought this session to have the governor appear before the banking and commerce committee. Because of our procedures it is not possible to arrange for that—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member for Essex East, who is raising a question of privilege, allow the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka to intervene on a point of order?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this. A question of privilege does not arise by way of appeal from Mr. Speaker's ruling. Your Honour has made a ruling, and I think that should be the end of it. The hon. member is merely raising a question of privilege which arises out of your ruling. I submit that he is not permitted to do so. However, this is exactly what he is doing. If he wishes to appeal your ruling, that is a different question.

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. member says is not necessarily true. What might not be a point of order might very well be based on circumstances which involve a question of the privileges of the house. I wish to satisfy myself whether there is a question of privilege as the hon. member for Essex East asserts, and I think I should hear what he has to say providing that he observes the proprieties.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it clear that I have not risen to appeal your ruling. That has not been thus far our practice in this house, because of the high regard we have for the way in which Your Honour has conducted our proceedings. Let that fact be very clear to the hon. gentleman. I rose on a question of privilege, and in substantiation of my right to do so, I was in the process of indicating that members of this house had this session sought to resort to procedures by which they might examine the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada and the governor of the bank himself.

Your Honour will be familiar with the steps we have taken in that regard. Questions were put to the distinguished chairman of the banking and commerce committee. Questions were asked of the Minister of Finance if he would stand in the way of the realization of this particular objective. He replied to the contrary and said no, that he would not object. Notwithstanding that fact, it has not been possible for us to examine the governor of the Bank of Canada, who now affirms that he was prepared—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should not introduce affirmations by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Am I not permitted—

Mr. Speaker: What the governor of the bank chooses to affirm or not seems to me to have no bearing on what decision this house makes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I deal first by way of digression with this last point which I think is fundamental to this whole question. Your Honour has said that what the government has said in that regard is not germane. If the governor of the bank is responsible to parliament and if parliament has been endeavouring to try to set up a procedure under which to examine the governor, what is contained in a public document made public today is a matter of the greatest concern to parliament. The Minister of Finance understandably may not be in a position to reply if the document has only come to him within a short time, but it is a public document now and it goes to the very vitals of the rights of parliament.

I am rising on a question of privilege in order to enunciate that we have the right now, in the face of this new evidence, to ask the Minister of Finance whether he will not facilitate the setting up of a committee of this house so that we can examine into the statements made this morning, among others, by the governor of the Bank of Canada with regard to the intransigent position taken by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's point of privilege comes to the same position as the question which was asked and which the minister, in discussing the point of order taken at that time, has indicated he would answer in the same way as before.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether his reluctance to publish Mr. Bryden's letter is because it discloses that the minister misled the house last Wednesday?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have heard something this morning about privilege, and you had a speech by the hon. member for Essex East smuggled in on that subject. You have just heard now from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate an attempt of a kind that is made by him in particular, and others of his ilk in the house, to defy and to break the rules of the house. The purpose of this question was not to obtain information. That fact is perfectly patent to everyone in the house. The purpose was to try to throw a slur and a smear.

Let me say that when this question was raised this morning by the hon. member who brought in the motion for the production of papers, I asked that the matter stand. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate did not even wait for the member who sponsored that motion, namely the hon. member for Leeds, to say whether or not he agreed to let the matter stand. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate jumped up—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and prevented that motion from being allowed to stand so that it could come up later.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems that one irrelevance is leading to another. The house decided against the production of the document, and I think it would be improper for the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to question the decision of the house by asking an oral question which throws doubt on it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege. The minister chose to make insinuations about my motives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister is entitled to have any ideas he likes about my motives, but under our rules he is not entitled to express them in this house, and he should withdraw those insinuations. However, I am not going to waste my time by asking him to do so. I can tell him that he can resolve this whole question by publishing that letter and revealing to us whether or not he misled the house, as I think many people feel he did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, you have allowed the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate now to make another statement following the statement he made previously which was clearly a breach of the rules of the house. I can tell him that he will make a contribution to the fuller understanding of this whole issue by all members of parliament if he refrains from these calculated attempts to smirch and smear.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the minister talks about smears!

Mr. Herridge: I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it supplementary to the last dispute we have had?

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Speaker. It is another dispute.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a new question, I recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

THE CENSUS

INQUIRY AS TO QUESTION 26 ON FORM 2A

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a long time champion and defender of women's rights, prestige and prerogatives, I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question is based on a complaint from a lady constituent of mine who served with the British, French and Belgian armies in world war I. Her complaint is that question No. 26 of census form 2A makes no provision for the recording of wartime service by women. This question reads as follows:

> 26. Did you ever have any wartime service in the active military forces of Canada or allied countries?

The form states: "Question 26 for all males 25 years of age and over". Can the parliamentary secretary inform the house of the reason for this serious and irritating omission?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this question relates to a detail and it seems to me that it might be more appropriate to put it on the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce supplementary to the one I asked him previously. In view of the fact that I promised this lady, of whom I am very fond, that I would get an answer for her today, could he possibly give me an answer this morning?

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, question 26 in form 2A of the population census reads:

> Did you ever have any wartime service in the active military forces of Canada or allied countries?
> In what war(s)?
> In what forces?

This question has been included in the 1961 census of Canada at the express request of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Similar statistics which derived from information collected in the 1951 census of Canada have been found useful to that department in the preparation of estimates for administrative purposes.

Since the question would have had to be asked of some five million adult females in order to produce fewer than 50,000 affirmative answers, it is extremely doubtful whether the result would be a useful statistical summary. The question was asked of adult females in the census tests of 1959, which hon. members will recall were taken in Galt and Joliette, but the result was not found to possess that degree of accuracy which is desired in census taking.

I should add that with this sort of ratio of less than one in one hundred, the information, if it should be required in the future—and the Department of Veterans Affairs have said that they do not presently require it; that they have quite accurate records of adult female veterans—the opinion of the dominion bureau of statistics is that with this sort of ratio there are probably better ways of getting that type of information as to access to the census.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—MISSION TO DISCUSS ENTRY BY U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is a fact, as alleged in the London Times, that the visit of the secretary of state for commonwealth relations to Canada, which was to have begun this Friday, has had to be postponed until after he has visited Australia and New Zealand because, according to this report, of the internal political commitments of Canadian ministers.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are many reports that appear. I have noticed on occasion that the papers in London publish statements made by their representatives here in Ottawa that bear no resemblance to the facts. This is another example of that type of thing. Originally there was some suggestion that the secretary of state for commonwealth relations would come here in the latter part of June. Then it became inconvenient. Finally it was decided that it would be most acceptable to both parties if he would come a little later on. That question asked by the hon. gentleman is founded on another of those reports which too often emanate from the correspondents here in Ottawa, and which have no relation to the facts.

REPORTED DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PACIFIC COMMON MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. The question arises out of press reports suggesting that steps or discussions are taking place concerning the organization of a Pacific common market. My question is this. Will the Prime Minister advise the house whether the government has taken any steps toward the establishment of a Pacific common market.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman says, there were press reports to the effect that consideration was being given to a free trade area for certain Pacific countries, including Canada. May I say at once that I am not aware of any foundation for these reports, and there is nothing in them so far as the Canadian government is concerned.

COAL

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF OPERATION OF FLORENCE COLLIERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the house whether he has received a communication from the secretary of Florence local No. 4544 of the united mine workers of America, requesting that he use his office as Prime Minister to take the necessary action to extend the operation of Florence colliery, scheduled by the company for closure on July 2, 1961? If so, would he advise what consideration has been given to this request.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a letter, and I will make a statement to the house at the proper time. The hon. member and other hon. members from Cape Breton have continued to bring before the government their ideas with regard to this situation in that island.

I can only say that concerning the operation of the mines that is a matter the government cannot determine, being purely the undertaking of a private company. However, concerning action to meet the general situation, on Saturday I made an initial report setting forth what was being done, and as further steps are taken the house will be advised.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I recognize at once that the government cannot direct the company, but would the government consider making representations to the company that the Florence mine be kept open until the alternative employment he forecast on Saturday is actually available?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there have been continuous discussions among the company, labour representatives, municipal representatives, the Minister of Labour and other ministers. Naturally we would welcome any action along that line, but as the hon. gentleman was very fair and very frank to admit, we have no power of "dirigisme", an expression that was used last September or October, I think, at a well known meeting at Queen's University.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a new one on me.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR RETURN TO MOTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It relates to a notice of motion for production of papers, but not the one upon which the house reached a decision. I refer to No. 147. In view of the presentation of the budget tomorrow evening and the proposed resumption of the debate on Thursday, would the minister endeavour to comply with this motion at the next opportunity, which I take it will be Wednesday?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume the motion must first be passed before I could be expected to carry it out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you going to oppose it too?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Both these motions, No. 146 and No. 147, stood this morning.

GRAIN

WHEAT—FINAL PAYMENT ON 1959-60 POOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I had originally intended to ask it of the Minister of Agriculture, but I see he has been called out of the house. My question is this. In view of the fact that the announcement of the final payment on the 1959-60 wheat crop has been delayed beyond the time when final payment announcements have usually been made, and further because of the very disastrous situation with regard to grasshoppers and cutworms on the prairies and the increased cost to producers who have had to spray for these insect pests, would the Prime Minister use his good offices to see that announcement of the final payment is made immediately?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion of the hon. member has been made by practically all hon. members from the province of Saskatchewan. They have pointed out the situation there caused by grasshopper infestation. However, when the payment shall be made rests with the wheat board. I know the Minister of Agriculture has been in touch with the board, and it will provide the information at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. I appreciate the Prime Minister's answer, but I wonder whether it is correct to assume from his answer—and I hope it is not—that the account has not yet been closed, because first it has to be closed before the payments are made some weeks later. I am wondering whether the account has now been closed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do the procedure that is followed in closing the account.

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Agriculture announced some weeks ago that the payment—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Argue: —would be made soon, and I regret very much that the announcement has not been made yet.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member could not fail to hear me calling for order, and I would appreciate it if he would resume his seat when I call order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MOOSONEE, ONT.—USE OF LIVING ACCOMMODATION BY STRIKING CARPENTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the isolated nature of the Moosonee community, what consideration is being given to permitting the carpenters who went on strike today at Moosonee to stay in their present bunkhouses, which I understand are owned by the crown and are under the minister's administration.

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, as this dispute is under the Ontario labour department, and since when this contract was awarded to Carter Construction Company they were given the use of these buildings—it was part of the contract—we feel it is not our responsibility to intervene in the dispute. We hope very much the strike will be settled as quickly as possible, but we do not feel we should intervene in any way whatsoever in either the lodging arrangements in the buildings or in the dispute.

IMMIGRATION

RESTRICTION ON MOVEMENT OF CANADIANS TO U.K.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether either the hon. lady or her department or the government have received any approaches from the United Kingdom government concerning a restriction of Canadian immigration to the United Kingdom?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No such approach has been made to my department.

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-110 to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: It is not easy in dealing with an amending bill of this nature, which covers a variety of subjects under the Criminal Code, to make a second reading speech concerned strictly with the principles of the bill. There are, however, three or four major matters which are covered by this measure, and it may be helpful to hon. members if I outline those parts of the bill which are of the greatest importance and of the greatest interest both to them and to the country.

I should like, therefore, to outline, first of all, the changes which are being made in those provisions of the Criminal Code which deal with criminal sexual psychopaths, a term which we are now changing to "dangerous sexual offenders". Then I will deal with two or three other matters covered by the bill, including the operation of small vessels, habitual criminals generally, and so on.

The first subject, and the one which will be of the widest interest and importance, is that relating to the criminal sexual psychopath.

The problem of the sexual offender is a most complex one. As the house knows, in 1954 a royal commission was appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice McRuer, chief justice of the high court of Ontario, to study the question and make representations with respect to the criminal law relating to criminal sexual psychopaths. This commission presented its report to me in 1958, and that report has been the subject of consideration and study in my department and by the government ever since.

In dealing with the subject it might be helpful if, first of all, I endeavour to outline the problem itself. After that I will describe the amendments which we are placing before the house for its consideration. Finally I shall turn to a difficult question and one which is not covered by the amendments, namely the question of providing for clinics, education and research in this field.

Probably the best way I can give to the house an outline of the scope of the problem is by borrowing from the words of the royal commission itself as they appear at page 59 and following of its report. The commission describes it as follows:

> Although sexual offenders cannot be precisely classified, they may be divided into two general groups—those who are a danger to the public and those who are not dangerous but are distinct nuisances. In this inquiry we are primarily concerned with the first class. The legislation we are considering has special application to those who, by reason of some limitation on their power to control their sexual impulses, are likely to be dangerous to society. The principle of preventive detention underlying the law is twofold—segregation to prevent injury to others, and treatment if possible so that the prisoner may ultimately be safely released.
> It appears to us that there is no reason why a convicted sexual offender who suffers from no mental disorder impairing his free will and ability to restrain his sexual impulses should not be treated as any other criminal. There always have been and probably always will be in society individuals who seek to fulfil their selfish desires and accomplish their selfish ends through trespass on the legal rights of others.

Again, the royal commission said:

> The sexual crimes included in section 661 of the Criminal Code are all crimes affecting the person and are either of a violent or of a corrupting nature which may have devastating effects on the victims, particularly if committed against children.

The amendments which we are proposing to the law on this subject are to a large extent based upon the report and recommendations of the McRuer commission as those recommendations were considered in detail by the commissioners on the uniformity of the law. I should explain that we are not at the present time adopting every one of the recommendations or every part of every recommendation made by the royal commission, but in large part the amendments which I am presenting do proceed from the studies of the royal commission as amended, or in some cases modified, by the study of the uniformity commissioners.

I should say at once that we do agree entirely with the finding of the McRuer commission that the law as it stands now is not accomplishing its purpose, and, further, we agree that this failure, as the royal commission says, may be due to one or more of three causes; first, the phraseology of the law; second, the lack of proper enforcement of the law; and third, the reluctance of the courts to commit a person to imprisonment for an indeterminate term, especially where there are no arrangements made for custody and treatment of the prisoner apart from those provided for prisoners serving determinate sentences.

There are a number of the amendments which, while arising out of the report of the royal commission, take the form which they have in this bill as a result of the work of the commission on the uniformity of legislation. These are designed to strengthen the provisions of the Criminal Code in relation to this matter and to make them more workable and effective. There is, for instance, the change in the description of the offender from "criminal sexual psychopath" to "dangerous sexual offender". This is based on the report of the royal commission, concurred in by others, that the use of the word "psychopath" is not appropriate because it gives rise to difficulties and misunderstanding between experts in the field on the one hand, particularly when they are called upon to give evidence, and layment, comprising the jury, on the other hand.

It seemed to us to be desirable to adopt a more simple and less technical definition as being less liable to create technical and unnecessary controversy, especially if, as we believe is the case, it is possible to find a phrase which describes the situation we are trying to deal with in non-technical language. With the assistance of the royal commission, we think the words "dangerous sexual offender", based on the reasoning which that commission adopted, do accomplish the purpose of giving a better definition of the type of offender with whom the law is attempting to deal.

Further, we have adopted not only a new terminology in this respect but also a new definition of what constitutes an offence. The present definition of a criminal sexual psychopath is:

> A person who, by a course of misconduct in sexual matters has shown a lack of power to control his sexual impulses and who as a result is likely to attack or otherwise inflict injury, pain or evil upon any person.

The new definition of "dangerous sexual offender" is:

> A person who, by his conduct in any sexual matter, has shown a failure to control his sexual impulses and who is likely to cause injury, pain or evil to any person, through failure in the future to control his sexual impulses or is likely to commit a further sexual offence.

I have already dealt with the reasoning behind the change in terminology. As to the change in the definition, the purpose is to make it clear that a court, in an appropriate case, may make a finding that a person is a dangerous sexual offender on the basis of one offence. It was suggested in the evidence before the royal commission that much of the reason why courts have not found, or apparently have not found, the present provisions with regard to a criminal sexual psychopath effective to restrain in custody under treatment those who are guilty of this type of offence is that the law at present makes it necessary to prove a course of conduct probably extending over some years. This has the effect of importing into the law in this field, that which should not be imported and which might be likened to the principle that every dog is entitled to his first bite; whereas it is felt by the commission, and with this line of reasoning we agree, that in dealing with offences that are potentially dangerous and damaging to others, as is the kind of offence embraced in the words "dangerous sexual offender", it should not be necessary to wait until there is a second or subsequent offence, but that the the law itself should define the offense in such terms as to make it possible for the courts, aided by expert medical and psychiatric evidence, to sentence offenders to indeterminate sentence for treatment if, on the basis of that evidence, they come to the conclusion that the offender comes within that definition, whether or not there has been a previous offence.

Another purpose of the change in the definition has been to avoid the extreme difficulty of proving lack of power to control as compared with simply failure to control. After all, what we are concerned with here are the consequences to society of the crime or the offence. Our objective is to remove the offender, thus protecting society on the one hand, and providing treatment for the offender on the other. Therefore it seems immaterial whether the offence is the result of a complete lack of a power to control, requiring technical and very difficult proof, or whether, as is certainly the case whenever this sort of offence is committed, it simply results from failure to control.

Another purpose of the change in the definition has been to eliminate the implications of coercion contained in the word "inflict". The evidence before the royal commission contained considerable examples of differences of opinion on this point and, indeed, the commission itself referred to a case in the Supreme Court of Canada where the judges of the supreme court themselves were divided on the question of whether or not the words "inflict damage or evil" imported a necessary element of coercion. We felt it was not essential to the determination of the matter to enter into an analysis of whether or not a person, in respect of whom an application has been made to have him declared a dangerous sex offender, may cause the damage in the future by physical coercion or by mere persuasion and temptation. It does not seem to make much difference what method is resorted to, but it is again the possibility of evil and damage which must be borne in mind here, as well as the elimination of the possibility of that evil or damage. In connection with this particular point, inclusion of the words "or is likely to commit a further sexual offence" was the proposal of the uniformity commissioners.

Again, the amendments relating to dangerous sexual offenders will also clear up the question as to when, in relation to the time of conviction, the application to have a person declared a dangerous sexual offender may be made and the notice of such application must be given. A new provision is included that such an application may be made upon notice thereof being given at any time not later than three months after conviction for the offence giving rise to the application. Under the existing law an application had to be heard before the passing of sentence for the offence giving rise to the application.

It will be noted that we have accepted the argument of the royal commission that the making of an application to have a person declared a dangerous sexual offender should not entitle that person to change his plea if he has already pleaded guilty to the specific offence upon which he is at that moment in court. We have accepted that point of view, but we have gone further. I think in fairness to the house I should point this out, because it should be in the minds of hon. members as they discuss this matter.

We have gone further and provided that the crown may make the application to have a person declared a dangerous sexual offender after he has been convicted, but not more than three months after conviction, and limited in any event, to the time which the offender or convicted person is serving under his sentence. In other words it will not be possible for the sentence to have expired or have been served in full then for the crown to reach out and make an application based on the previous conviction. However, provided a person is still in custody or, if sentence has been suspended, provided that the sentence is still in effect, and within the limit of three months after conviction, the crown may make application to have that person declared a dangerous sexual offender.

I should like to add a few words on the sentencing of persons adjudged to be dangerous sexual offenders. Under the present law the court, upon adjudging a person to be a criminal sexual psychopath, now to be described as a dangerous sexual offender, must sentence him to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years, and in addition may impose a sentence of preventive detention. The amendment now before the house will eliminate the determinate portion of the sentence because, in our view—and again here we agree with the royal commission—it seems inappropriate to couple a determinate sentence with an indeterminate sentence or a sentence of preventative detention, the main purpose of which is segregation and treatment. I think the reasons for this decision are best explained by the royal commission itself as found at page 65 of its report, which reads as follows:

> The mandatory minimum sentence of two years in prison, to be followed by an indeterminate period of preventative detention as required by section 661 C.C., not only eliminates any opportunity of treatment of the prisoner as an out-patient while on suspended sentence, but makes it obligatory that both the determinate and indeterminate sentences be served in a penitentiary. The only qualification is that the prisoner may be confined to a part of a penitentiary set apart for prisoners servicing indeterminate sentences of preventative detention. In theory the sexual offender who comes within this branch of the criminal law is one who at least suffers from some abnormality affecting his sexual impulses. If he does not suffer from any abnormality he does not come within the scheme of the law and should be dealt with as any other convicted person.

Then it continues as follows:

> The custody of habitual criminals was discussed in the report of the royal commission investigating the penal system of Canada.

I interpolate here, Mr. Speaker, to point out that their reference is to the Archambault commission which reported in 1939 and not the Fauteux commission, which reported in 1955 or 1956. Then to continue the report:

> The recommendations are (1) the sentence of preventative detention should become effective at once and not on the expiration of any other sentence and (2) segregation in an institution away from other offenders.

Then the McRuer commission continues as follows:

—the purpose of the prison (in the case of habitual criminal) is neither punitive nor reformative but primarily segregation from society.

Again the McRuer commission makes this express finding:

All that is said in the Archambault report applies with greater force to the treatment of one who is undergoing preventative detention as a "criminal sexual psychopath", except that segregation should be acompanied by all possible treatment.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the main effects that we hope to attain by the amendments to the law on sexual offenders; that is, the segregation of any person who, as a result of his conduct in any sexual matter, may be determined to be persons likely to commit a sexual offence in the future and thereby liable to cause damage or suffering to any other person. We are concerned with his segregation first, but also his segregation for the best treatment we can devise for him and which is within the limits of our ability to administer in our penal institutions.

This is, however, only the first stage toward the solution of a very complex problem. The reformation, in this case the treatment, of the inmate is only one essential part of any rehabilitation program. The segregation of these offenders, however, will not serve any long term desirable results if the sexual offenders are not treated, so this leads naturally and I think inevitably to a discussion of the establishment of diagnostic and treatment centres, the early detection of cases and the organization of research.

I think it is essential, before I outline the work being done in this field, to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the state of present medical knowledge of this disease. As pointed out by the McRuer royal commission:

The public should understand that it is not possible to speak with assurance about curing the class of offenders we are considering. Many of the medical witnesses who were in a position to speak with great authority took a pessimistic view of the prospects of obtaining satisfactory results from any known form of treatment.

The report went on to state:

Notwithstanding these pessimistic views, we think that a positive attitude toward the problem is of great importance, and a positive attitude demands more than mere custodial care for the prisoners we are discussing. We are convinced that with custodial care must go definite progressive methods of the application of all known helpful means of treatment and the development of new means.

The royal commission recommended that special provisions be made in the penitentiary system for the custody, control and treatment of every sexual offender undergoing preventive detention. In regard to these suggestions I wish to say that the penitentiaries branch is actively engaged on a policy of increased psychiatric attention for all classes of prisoners, including dangerous sexual offenders, who appear to be in need of such treatment, and in connection with such policy the penitentiaries branch is studying the best methods of applying such treatment, including the question of how and where dangerous sexual offenders should be confined. In implementing this policy the penitentiaries service is at present restricted by the difficulty of obtaining the services of psychiatrists, and by the limitations of the detention facilities at present available.

It will be remembered that the proportion of dangerous sexual offenders in the prison population is relatively small. No particular question or problem of escape from custody appears to be involved. It will also be remembered that while it is generally recognized that every reasonable attempt should be made to give treatment to those cases willing to receive it and likely to profit from it, psychiatric treatment cannot by its nature be forced upon a prisoner or patient. The McRuer report itself points out that the outlook for successful treatment of those who are not prepared to co-operate in such treatment may be bleak.

The royal commission has recommended that special clinics be set up in co-operation with the courts. In view of the relatively small number of dangerous sexual offenders actually charged and convicted as such, and the high proportion thereof who will be sent to penitentiary in any event; in view also of the fact that the penitentiaries have and are constantly improving the psychiatric services for dangerous sexual offenders, we feel it would be unreasonable and unnecessary duplication at this time to incur the expense of establishing special clinics not part of the penitentiaries system. Furthermore, the establishment of such clinics in what would be really a purely health field is essentially a provincial responsibility.

Although the problem of establishing separate clinics to examine and treat persons who may become dangerous sexual offenders is essentially provincial, the Department of National Health and Welfare is deeply concerned and is approaching the provincial authorities for the purpose of creating interest on their part and discussing with them the manner in which provincial facilities for such diagnosis and treatment outside the penitentiaries system can best be utilized in connection with this problem.

The McRuer commission also suggested a program of education of parents, teachers and all those in charge of young persons, urging them to co-operate with clinics established on the basis, for instance, of the forensic clinic of Toronto so that all known effective measures might be taken to arrest the development in young persons of tendencies toward sexual deviation. Again, this is mainly a problem for the provinces to tackle, but the department of my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare is concerned about the problem and is approaching the provincial authorities for the purpose of finding the most efficient and effective solution to this problem. There is indeed urgent need in Canada for research into all aspects of sexual deviation with a view to development of means of correction and prevention. The question of the possible participation by the federal government is under active consideration by my colleague at the present time.

I hope I have succeeded in outlining to the house, in a necessarily brief compass, something of the nature of the problem and of our approach to it, which recognizes that amendments to the law should be based on the principle, first, that a court should be empowered to find a person a dangerous sexual offender on the basis of one offence if the medical evidence indicates that he is a person who is likely to repeat that kind of offence; and second, that the object of the law should be to provide for the segregation of this type of offender for two reasons, on the one hand the protection of society while he is segregated and, on the other hand, the application to him to the greatest degree possible of effective methods of reformation and treatment designed to assist him in curing his deviation so that he may ultimately, in appropriate cases, be released to society without danger to himself or the members of society.

It is, however, always necessary to sound a word of caution in this field as in other related fields. It must be recognized that the dangerous sexual offender is a sick man for whom no assured treatment exists as yet. I should also repeat that, based on the preponderance of medical evidence, it is possible to diagnose "an individual as having a psychopathic personality but we have no specific way of determining what type of anti-social activity he will display". That is actually a quotation taken from the evidence of Dr. Frederick van Nostrand, as it appears in the royal commission report at page 93. So this is a difficult and complex problem about which it is not safe to say with certainty that this or that measure will produce the answers. However, in our view it is a problem with respect to which it is essential to make a beginning, and we trust members of the house will agree that this legislation represents an effective approach to the problem.

I should like to pass now to a discussion of one or two of the other more important amendments found in the bill before the house, the first of them having to do with habitual criminals generally. The house will appreciate, of course, that the provisions with regard to dangerous sexual offenders, about whom I have up to now been speaking exclusively, are, of course, found in that section of the code dealing with habitual criminals generally, and we have amendments here relating to that subject as well.

One amendment to the provisions relating to habitual criminals parallels the amendment relating to dangerous sexual offenders, in that it permits a notice leading to an application to have a person declared an habitual criminal to be made at any time up to three months following the imposing of the sentence for the offence that gives rise to the application.

Another parallel amendment eliminates the determinate sentence in the case of a person found to be an habitual criminal and sentenced to preventive detention. In the future, when a finding is made that the person concerned is an habitual criminal, the only sentence to be imposed will be an indeterminate sentence to preventive detention. I should point out that in the case of any indeterminate sentence under our new legislation, it is the parole board which determines whether and when the time may have arrived at which it is appropriate to release the person from custody and allow him to spend the balance of his sentence at large in society.

Another amendment which I am sure will be of great interest to the house generally, and perhaps particularly to lawyers, is a provision of the bill which restores the offence of dangerous driving which used to be an offence under the old Criminal Code. At the time of the Criminal Code revision, however, this offence was dropped in favour of the offence of criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle. There is a long history, both in this country and in other countries, of an attempt to formulate an offence under which juries would convict, in appropriate cases, for the reckless or dangerous operation of a motor vehicle which caused death or bodily harm. Juries at one time shied away from convicting persons of manslaughter arising out of death caused by the negligent operation of motor vehicles because of the rather awesome connotation of that word.

This tendency led to the enactment, some years before the Criminal Code revision, of the offence of reckless or dangerous driving, coupled with a provision to the effect that if upon a charge of manslaughter the jury was not satisfied that manslaughter was proved but was satisfied that the other offence was proved, it might convict of that other offence. Apparently juries have tended similarly to shy away from convicting for criminal negligence in such circumstances. At the present time, the offence of dangerous driving having been removed, it is felt, and widely felt, that there are many cases where persons who have been guilty of criminal negligence in the operation of their motor vehicles are nevertheless escaping with a much milder penalty because of the reluctance of juries to convict of manslaughter or of criminal negligence.

We are accordingly reinstating, at the request of the provinces, the old offence of dangerous driving. We are, however, omitting the word "reckless", because to employ this word seems to have the effect of elevating the offence to the same plane as criminal negligence, thus creating a distinction without a difference which would make it very difficult to charge juries.

There is also an amendment making the offence of driving a motor vehicle while the person is disqualified or prohibited from doing so by reason of the suspension of his licence by the court or a motor vehicle registrar, an offence punishable upon indictment as well as upon summary conviction, which is now the case, and imposing a more severe penalty when the charge is proceeded with by way of indictment.

Another provision in this bill, which I am sure will be of great interest, has the effect of transferring to the Criminal Code a number of provisions now found in the small vessels regulations. For some years there have been in the small vessel regulations, enacted under the Canada Shipping Act, a series of sections paralleling those in the Criminal Code relating to abuses in connection with motor vehicles; namely operating a vessel or towed object, such as water skis, dangerously or while the ability of the operator is impaired by alcohol or a drug, or leaving the scene of an accident with intent to escape liability; and providing that the court, when convicting for such offences, may make an order prohibiting the person convicted from operating a vessel for a stated period.

Of late years, as all hon. members know, the number of small pleasure craft on the domestic and territorial waters of Canada has greatly increased and a great many accidents, in some cases fatal, have recently been caused by the careless operation of such craft. We consider that this problem has now become so acute that measures to deal with it should be in the Criminal Code. While those provisions were to be found only in the regulations under the Canada Shipping Act, they have tended to be regarded as rather special provisions of interest chiefly to the Department of Transport, or at any rate to the federal government alone; by including them in the code we hope they will be recognized as an ordinary part of the criminal law made necessary by new conditions and will be enforced by provincial authorities in the ordinary course of Criminal Code enforcement.

There are, as will be appreciated, a number of other amendments in the bill. I think I have picked out the amendments of greatest interest and concern, at least I have endeavoured to do so, in an effort to be as helpful as possible to the house in outlining the thinking of the government which has given rise to this amending bill.

I should say also, Mr. Speaker, that it is my view, and my colleagues have agreed with me in this, that generally speaking amendments to the Criminal Code should not be made every year. It seems to me that, as nearly as possible, the criminal law should be certain. It is not desirable, then, that changes should be made too rapidly or too frequently. Every change necessarily imports the necessity for building up new jurisprudence on the change and may, in ways quite unforeseen, have the result of confusing settled jurisprudence. We do not think it is desirable in the field of criminal law that this should take place, at least with frequency.

I wish to emphasize that this does not indicate that we will refuse to consider necessary changes or to discuss with anyone the necessity for a change. It is merely that we feel, in general, changes to the Criminal Code should be made as a matter of real deliberation, and as infrequently as will meet the necessities of the case. This is one reason there is a fairly substantial bill this year. There was no Criminal Code amending bill last year.

Of course if a case in the courts or a situation in the country arises, indicating an emergency and indicating urgent necessity for an amendment, we would not then be so foolish as to say we do not believe in amending the Criminal Code every year and therefore we will not introduce such an amendment. The necessary amendment would be recommended to the house at once where there was any real necessity for it. In general, however, our thought is that there should be a Criminal Code amending bill only every two or three years. This is one of the reasons for the size of the present bill.

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, in introducing the amendments to the Criminal Code the minister prefaced his remarks with an apologia to the effect that it was difficult to speak to matters of principle in connection with this bill because its 45 amending provisions deal with so many different aspects of the criminal law. I hope the minister and the house, in listening to my remarks, will bear in mind the fact that if it is difficult for the minister, who has had the bill in charge for some time, it is even more difficult for the opposition members who only saw the bill for the first time this morning. There are a number of remarks which I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, concerning these provisions, and perhaps I might do so in reverse order to those touched upon by the minister.

In so far as the small vessels regulations are concerned which have been incorporated into Bill No. C-110, as the minister stated those provisions have been in the law and have been the responsibility of the Department of Transport for some time. The necessity for enforcing them, therefore, has lain with the R.C.M. Police. As the minister indicated, this responsibility now passes to the provincial police of those provinces which have provincial policing authorities.

Speaking generally to the principle, I suggest that they are good provisions. They have been in the Canada Shipping Act for some time. However, care must be taken in enacting legislation not to enact it purely because it appears to meet a need or because it appears to be a good thing. This should not be a kind of "busy" work just to justify a department. Laws enacted by this parliament should be those which not only meet a need but which are enforceable.

It is well known, I think to most hon. members of the house that the R.C.M. Police have had difficulty in trying to enforce these regulations. Their numbers are comparatively small. The problem itself is acutely difficult because of the thousands and thousands of small lakes and hidden waterways within Canada. If the R.C.M.P. who have been dealing with this matter for some time are incapable of handling the matter, it is highly unlikely that the provincial police forces, which call annually for more personnel and which are annually running well behind the necessary personnel even to police the highways, will be able to provide sufficient personnel to police the waterways. When I think of the many lakes, even in the area surrounding Ottawa to which hon. members have resort on Sundays while the house is in session, and the number of boats such as those I saw yesterday speeding through the lakes with no member of a provincial police force anywhere for miles around, it seems to me that we must be careful not to congratulate the minister or the government, or not to be content that by the mere proposal and passage of a section in the Criminal Code or under the Department of Transport regulations we have thereby solved the problem. The mere fact that we have enacted legislation, unless we have sufficient policing authority to enforce it, is useless verbiage.

I would hope that the minister would be able to advise us, either now or later, of some provisions which may be made for special policing authorities. It may be that in his discussions with the provinces, which I presume were held prior to the introduction of these sections into the Criminal Code, some arrangement has been made with the provincial attorneys general to provide more policing authorities, particularly as we are now into the summer season and there are thousands more small boats in use each year. I think this is a good provision if it is enforceable. If it is not enforceable, then it only weakens the criminal law to include it.

With respect to the provisions in Bill No. C-110 dealing with driving while under suspension, may I say that it has been my experience and, I think, that of most of the hon. members of the house who are of the legal fraternity, that the public generally does not view this offence as serious. By now making it capable of being prosecuted as an indictable offence with a vastly more serious penalty, it may be that the public generally will accept this as a more serious matter and will be deterred from driving while under suspension. To carry the same provision into the operation of a small vessel only points up, I think, how difficult it is to police those provisions with respect to small vessels. I have been told at various times by members of policing authorities that they would estimate that there are 10 drivers on the highway driving without licences or with licences under suspension for every one who is caught in the process of doing so. I imagine that these figures would be vastly greater if one were to consider those operating small vessels with licences under suspension. Again I repeat that the mere enactment of legislation is insufficient and weakens the criminal law unless there are enough provisions for enforcing it.

As to the amendment to replace in the Criminal Code the offence of dangerous driving, may I say this. As the minister knows and has mentioned, this has a long history of difficulty in the criminal law. When the act was amended in 1955 it was dropped for a particular purpose, as it was felt that there would be convictions under what was at one time motor manslaughter but is now criminal negligence in the use of a motor vehicle. As a matter of practice, as the minister has said, juries do not convict because there has been telegraphed to them the fact that this is the old motor manslaughter provision. There appears to be a feeling in the community that manslaughter is not the proper name, that it does not carry the proper intent, when connected with a motor vehicle. The public generally seems to feel that that is an almost deliberate sort of killing.

Accordingly, it may well be that there are many individuals who have been guilty of driving in a manner which has caused grievous bodily harm, in some cases death, and in other cases considerable property damage, who ought to have been convicted of some offence and to have suffered a monetary penalty or a penalty by incarceration, but who have not convicted by virtue of the fact that this section was not in the code. Its reinstitution I would suppose has been suggested by provincial authorities and would be greeted by them with some pleasure. It cannot be said, however, that defence counsel would greet it with the same pleasure.

As to the provisions respecting habitual criminals, may I say that this is perhaps the greatest single deterrent which is in our criminal law. In my experience with habitual criminals or those who characterize themselves as professional thieves or professional robbers—and there are, shockingly enough, in Canada those who pride themselves on this title—they are all afraid of what they call "the bitch". As they collect a record of convictions they come terrifyingly close to the point where a crown attorney may lay this charge. Within the brief span of my 11 years in practice, most of which has been in criminal law, I found that nothing deterred or frightened a professional criminal with a record as much as the possibility of a charge of being an habitual criminal.

I think the provision which is being instituted by this amendment is one which must be approached with caution. Although it strikes terror into the hearts of criminals—and that is what we want for one who is an habitual criminal—we have to bear in mind that this is not an offence in the usual understanding of that term. It is a condition; what the court is asked to find is that a person is in such a condition that in fact he cannot be reclaimed to society, as indicated by a long history of convictions for varying criminal offences. Because I think we recognize that all individuals in society may commit crimes, no matter how heinous, and may be reformed, we must be careful in the use of this charge, or this application to have a person so found. Notwithstanding a long and vicious record, it is possible that some intervening act may happen to make them reclaim themselves.

The fact that now it will not be necessary to serve this notice and have the same jury which convicted an individual of a criminal offence deal with the application to find him as an habitual criminal works in two ways, or can possibly do so. One of these can certainly be as a deterrent to an individual who has been charged with an offence and has been convicted but who, in the time after conviction and prior to the expiration of three months, feels that he can rehabilitate himself; then shortly before the expiry of the three months he finds that the crown authorities have laid this charge against him.

I would call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, if I may do so.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, before the luncheon adjournment I was discussing some of the provisions of this bill with which the minister had dealt in the latter part of his statement. Before leaving that part of it I might make one other suggestion. Many people who have dealt with the question of habitual criminals are of the opinion that this provision is not used sufficiently. I do not have the statistics, nor has the minister placed them before us, of the number of habitual criminal convictions which have been obtained in Canada since this provision was put into the Criminal Code. However, I have heard it discussed at various times by those involved in the administration of justice, and I have heard the suggestion that there should be a definite time laid down after which there should be no discretion in the crown attorney. In other words, on the third or fourth criminal conviction there must be an application made to the court to find the individual concerned to be one who is an habitual criminal. I wonder if the minister, when he discusses this matter later, would comment on whether this suggestion has been considered by the department and what the rationale of the department was in deciding not to include it.

I should like to pass on to the clauses of the amending bill which deal with those who until now have been called criminal sexual psychopaths. My experience of this matter has been in discussing it with a member of the royal commission which was chaired by Chief Justice McRuer, a person of whom in my riding and county we are very proud, in particular those of my sex. I refer to Her Honour Judge Kinnear of the county court of Ontario, who was the first woman appointed by the previous administration to this level of the judiciary and who still remains senior in this post throughout the commonwealth and the empire.

She was a member of the commission which dealt with the difficult question of criminal sexual psychopaths, and over the years I have had the benefit of discussing this question with her. Chief Justice McRuer, who chaired the commission, has the widest practical criminal experience in Ontario, and the recommendations included in the report of that commission are lucid and humane. It is with some regret that I notice this bill does not include a provision for research and clinical facilities such as were recommended by the royal commission. I understand from the statement of the minister that consideration of this matter has not ceased, and that in the future it may be possible to make provision for more facilities, but the intention now is that anyone convicted as a dangerous sexual offender under these amendments will be required to go to a penitentiary.

The royal commission report is very definite on the point that this is of little real assistance and that there are two factors which keep many such offenders from becoming cured or rehabilitated. One is that most sexual offenders do not choose to be rehabilitated. This is, in many sexual offences this is a way of life which they have adopted and which they choose to pursue. The other is one which the minister mentioned, that so far medical science has discovered no real cure for one who does not wish to be changed.

Certainly the change of style from "criminal sexual psychopath" to the style in the present bill of "dangerous sexual offender" is good. In particular I think it might be interesting for the house to note that in the evidence of the psychiatrists who were called before the McRuer commission the first quotation was a remark of Dr. B. H. McNeill of the Ontario department of health, who said "I once heard a psychopath defined by a psychiatrist in the same way as he said someone defined a hippopotamus; he could not define it but he knew one when he saw it". This points up the fact that psychiatry has not as yet been able to define or pinpoint what it is that is wrong with these people and thus take a first step toward their cure. Certainly within the experience of certain criminals whom I have defended there is in the penitentiary system wide scope for abnormality of sexual experience which this bill will not cure, because even though these people are segregated within the penitentiary system there will still be opportunity for this abnormality to continue without any real treatment and without at present any real hope that they may be cured.

Many suggestions were gone into by the commission when they dealt with this subject. While it is a knotty and difficult one, partly legal and partly medical, it is encouraging, I think, for hon. members of the house to remember that the numbers involved are very small; that most of those who are guilty of sexual offences are only what are known as common nuisances and that the really dangerous criminal offenders are very much in the minority. Thus we are legislating with respect to only a few people, although those few people are capable of wreaking great damage on other people and particularly on very young children.

We should be careful, however, when dealing with any offence which may bring about a term of preventive detention that we do not infringe on the rights of all under the bill of rights or under the natural rights of people in this country. We have to be satisfied first that there is, in fact, a condition there which cannot be cured in our present state of medical knowledge. Second, even if a cure is available it may not be accepted by the individual concerned, since it is necessary to have sympathy and empathy between the psychiatrist and his patient. Third, we must consider whether simply removing these people from society is sufficient.

We hear in this field very little discussion of points which arise in the consideration of murder, such as what is a deterrent, what is the retribution of society and what is the rehabilitation of the criminal. We admit we cannot rehabilitate these people. We deny, I think generally, that what we are asking for is retribution. I would ask the minister upon what philosophy he has based the provisions he now places before the house in order to remove these people from society for a more or less permanent period which may be the rest of their lives.

The provisions of the clause dealing with dangerous sexual offenders are generally noncontentious, inasmuch as they were largely recommended by the McRuer commission. That commission, however, did not stop with these recommendations. Ten of the 20 or more points made dealt with questions beyond the Criminal Code, in particular with the urgent need in Canada for research into all aspects of this problem and the need to develop a means of correction and prevention. The commission pointed out that the psychopathic sexual offender is no different from any other offender, that he is in effect an ill man, as the minister also pointed out. The commission drew the conclusion that our only course is simply to segregate these people from society; that we should not cover this with a feeling that we are doing something for these people who are ill, but that we must recognize that at this point there is little we can do for them even if they were willing to co-operate.

All we can do is merely remove the festering canker from society and place where it cannot be communicated. This, of course, is communicable if left in society because the aberrations of some individuals cause them to bring in younger and younger people, and it spreads. It may, therefore, be justifiable simply to remove them from society. However, we should not pride ourselves that because we are taking them out of society we are doing this for their good. This removing of offenders from society is nothing but punitive legislation for society's good.

The provisions of the bill are similar to those which apply to habitual criminals, in that this offence may be charged within a period following conviction. I would again caution the minister, as I did before the luncheon break, about the obvious dangers of this. Once having faced trial on a sexual offence and having been found guilty, any time within the following three months an individual may be faced with a further charge and prosecuted.

There are a number of things which were recommended by the royal commission which the government has not yet seen fit to adopt. I understand from the minister's statement this morning that unless something arises of an emergent nature it is unlikely that we shall see another amendment to the Criminal Code during the life of this parliament. The hon. gentleman indicated clearly that be believed amendments should only be introduced every second or third year. While I agree that it is very necessary to have a degree of certainty in criminal law in order that a body of jurisprudence may be built up and in order that there should be time to see how the legislation operates, I decry the rigidity of saying that unless there is something of an emergent nature we shall not amend it from time to time.

It may be that it will take more than three years for the effects of this legislation to become known. Of course if we do not pass it we shall never find out what its effects might have been. However, it may be that within a year after its passage we find that further amendments need to be brought forward, amendments more in conformity with the report of the royal commission, particularly in connection with whatever assistance may be given sexual offenders in providing research and clinical facilities and, especially, by providing a separate place in which to segregate them where they would receive treatment, rather than receiving treatment in other parts of the penitentiary where they are at liberty to move among other prisoners.

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. lady not agree that a provision of that kind would not necessarily be made by way of amendment to the Criminal Code, but more likely would be made by other legislation, possibly under the Penitentiaries Act or within the field of responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Miss LaMarsh: I do agree with the minister that it is likely this would come in elsewhere. There were, of course, other recommendations respecting amendments to the evidence act and amendments to the Penitentiaries Act. I have not seen these on the order paper, and it may be that the minister will be bringing those in shortly.

If I may sum up, Mr. Speaker, we on this side approve in general, I would say, the adoption of the recommendations of the commission. These were reported to the Minister of Justice in 1958, and for three years now they have been available to the public, to psychiatrists and to those law officers who would be interested. The minister announced that a study had been made by the commission on the conformity of legislation. The hon. gentleman said that having had the benefit of its report he had modified the report of the royal commission, adopting some of its recommendations but not others.

We are in sympathy with stern treatment for those who as ravening monsters prey sexually on small children. We are also in sympathy with those who are ill, who have committed these offences and who wish to stop being deviates and avoid getting into such trouble again. We are in sympathy, I would say, with the principle of preventive detention, because this permits flexibility in that each person convicted of an offence may, as the individual reaches the point where he is no longer a danger, be freed without the rigidity which is necessarily so often a part of the criminal law.

We shall have remarks to make at the committee stage not only on these clauses but on other clauses with which I dealt prior to the noon adjournment. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, it is difficult to deal with the principles involved in a bill which covers so many subjects, linked only because they come under the umbrella of the Criminal Code. However, in principle the amendments are largely ones of which we approve although, as I stated before, we reserve our right at the committee stage to complain about certain of them. It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that the minister will find certain amendments being put forward, either with respect to the material now dealt with or additional material, since we have been warned in effect that we cannot expect other amendments to the Criminal Code for some years.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this bill contains several principles, as the minister has indicated, and I should like to say a few words about the main ones.

I should like to refer in general terms to amendments to the Criminal Code, and draw to the attention of hon. members the progressive manner in which the Minister of Justice has brought before this house problems which have been seriously troubling many people of this country. During this session we have considered the most serious problem regarding the question of capital punishment, in respect to which there were many satisfactory proposals made and accepted by this house. The Minister of Justice has also brought forward a bill dealing with narcotics control and treatment of offenders. This involves another serious problem which has concerned many people in this country.

I suggest there are two main principles involved in the bill presently before us. The first deals with the provision of a stern code of regulations to prevent individuals from turning our waterways into speed zones and death traps when they should be used for the pleasure of individuals. The second principle embodies an effective method, which the minister has proposed, to deal with dangerous sexual offenders. There is of course also the provision having reference to the reinstatement of the dangerous driving section of the Criminal Code, to which I should like to refer briefly later on in my remarks.

In relation to the dangerous operation of vessels on our waterways, I suggest this has been a problem of serious concern to individuals throughout Canada and particularly to those resident in my area of the country, which has a very important tourist industry. For many years the waters of Canada, and particularly the inland waters, have been used for pleasure by individuals on fishing holidays, or just for travel from one place to another, as well as by those who wanted to take a vacation away from crowds of people.

With the advent of high powered engines and lighter and smaller craft, dangers on inland waters have become very great. Not so many years ago people were satisfied to have boats equipped with 2½ horsepower motors, and to cruise slowly along the water enjoying themselves. Today there exist many high powered engines mounted on very light craft, which in itself creates a danger, used by individuals for travelling around our inland waters at high and very dangerous rates of speed. I do not suggest it is always young people who operate these boats in that fashion. It is very easy to blame this wild speeding on teen-agers, but I suggest that on many occasions adults are guilty of this same dangerous practice. It seems that when an individual puts a high powered motor on a small craft he likes to feel the power behind him and takes the attitude that while travelling on open water there is not likely to be anyone else in the area.

The minister has pointed out, in introducing this bill, that there are small vessels regulations in existence under the shipping act, but that the main problem involved has been one of enforcement. Operators of these motor boats apparently have not been impressed by the existence of these regulations. While they do exist, I suggest, like the provision of library book fines, they are not taken seriously. Perhaps the reason for this is that these regulations come under the Department of Transport. I suggest that by placing these regulations under the Criminal Code it will be drawn to the attention of the public, particularly operators of these small craft, that infractions of these regulations are considered to be serious matters, to be seriously dealt with.

The Department of Transport has issued a small booklet entitled "Safety Afloat" with wide distribution among pleasure craft operators, but it has not been receiving the attention it deserves. In appendix 4 of that booklet appears a list of offences and penalties under the small vessels regulations. I feel that this has been a polite reminder to operators of small craft of the existence of the regulations. However, in view of the apparent lack of concern and attention, the time has now arrived when action must be taken in a manner which is not merely polite but also effective in preventing the continued infraction of these regulations by the operators of small boats on our public waters.

I suggest the new amendment to the Criminal Code covering the regulations in respect of the operation of small vessels will constitute a clear indication to those operators that this situation is considered serious. I believe there will be no reason, following proper publicity given to this change in the regulations, for individuals to consider them only as polite reminders.

I suggest one other problem which has resulted from the fact that the regulations were under the shipping act has involved their enforcement. There has been some difficulty in persuading municipal and provincial police forces that these regulations in respect of inland waters under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport should be enforced by them. Those forces have taken the attitude that the enforcement of these regulations was a matter of concern to the mounted police force only. This attitude exists particularly in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, which are policed in the main by provincial police forces. I suggest, therefore, that there has been some gap in respect to the responsibility of enforcing these regulations on our public waters.

While it is true that the provincial police have on several occasions, certainly on the Muskoka lakes, established patrols similar to those established by the mounted police, I feel it is understandable to all hon. members that it is impossible for these patrols to enforce these regulations on all the lakes and streams throughout these districts. I suggest that the inclusion of these provisions in the Criminal Code will make clear that the responsibility for enforcing the regulations lies to a great extent upon the provincial and municipal police forces, and thereby will remove a great deal of doubt which I suggest has existed in the past in this regard.

I feel that many of these provincial and municipal forces have considered that the mounted police, particularly in Quebec and Ontario, are a specialized force designed to carry out the enforcement of federal laws, and that lack of effective enforcement of those regulations within the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport has resulted from the lack of sufficient personnel in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force. For the reasons I have stated, I am very pleased that the Minister of Justice has seen fit to bring these regulations under the Criminal Code in respect to navigation on the waters of this country.

The second subject which I should like to deal with has reference to dangerous sexual offenders. I feel that the existence of these dangerous sexual offenders in our communities has been perhaps the greatest source of worry to parents in this country, and that the inadequacy of the law in respect to them has been obvious for quite a number of years. We all know that a royal commission was set up under the chairmanship of Chief Justice McRuer of Ontario, which reported to the Minister of Justice on March 21, 1958. That commission found that in addition to an inadequacy in law there was an inadequacy in definition as to the type of individual who ought to be dealt with as a criminal sexual offender. I suggest that the amendment now introduced by the Minister of Justice in this connection contains great advances in this matter. Occasionally it is said jokingly, if you cannot do anything about a certain subject, appoint a royal commission. But here is an example, among many others, of where a royal commission has made a very thorough review of a difficult subject and has brought forward good recommendations. I commend the Minister of Justice for accepting them almost without hesitation and certainly without any alteration of the main principles of the report.

In the report the commission came to a number of conclusions and made a number of recommendations with regard to sexual offenders. As found in the summary of conclusions on page 123, they conclude first that the use of the word "psychopath" as applied to the class of sexual offenders coming within the terms of reference is undesirable. During the course of the commission's hearings, many of those who appeared before it tried to define what a psychopath was and it was found that to a large extent it was undefinable. To a considerable extent the definition depended entirely on the evidence of one psychiatrist or another and, as we know, psychiatry has not developed to the point of absoluteness where there can be any sort of agreement.

I think the recommendations made by the royal commission and accepted by the minister with regard to defining the type of person and the offence constitute a much better criterion than trying to define a criminal sexual psychopath, and in that regard the first recommendation of the McRuer commission, as found on page 127 of its report, was adopted. The McRuer commission recommended the use of the words "dangerous sexual offender" and defined them in almost the precise terms that are found in the bill now before us.

The commission also recommended that section 661 of the Criminal Code should not be extended to cover any offences not named therein. An examination of the bill indicates that this recommendation has been carried out and that the same offences now listed in the Criminal Code have been carried forward into the bill.

In paragraphs 7 and 8 of the recommendations in the McRuer report there is reference to the evidence to be given at hearings and the rights of the prisoner and the crown with respect to appeals. These recommendations have been carried into the bill now before the house. The McRuer report also recommended that the courts should be given power to refer a prisoner convicted of any indictable offence for psychiatric examination before sentence. We find that this conclusion has been carried into the bill, and we also find that it applies not only to those classified as dangerous sexual offenders but to prisoners in general.

Conclusion No. 14 in the report of the McRuer commission reads as follows:

> The provisions of the law requiring a court to sentence a prisoner found to come within section 661 C.C. to serve a definite term of imprisonment before the sentence of preventive detention commences are not consistent with the theory of the law.

Effect has also been given to this conclusion in the bill now before us, with the result that a person may now be sentenced immediately to preventive detention. I do not want to offend against the rules by the discussing the bill clause by clause, and I think it is sufficient for me to make the general comment that the good work done by the McRuer commission has been given effect in the present legislation. There are certain amendments which are not included in the report of the royal commission and there are a number of slight changes in wording, but in general the bill meets a crying need in respect to criminal sexual offenders.

There is another principle introduced in the bill that I should like to discuss. I do not think it was mentioned by previous speakers but it seems to me that it is rather important. It has to do with the power given to a court of summary conviction to remand a prisoner for mental examination. This is found in clause 42 of the bill, and I refer to that clause purely and simply because it deals with one particular principle involved in the bill.

For a good many years magistrates and persons with similar jurisdiction have been remanding for mental examination people about whom they have had some doubts. Heretofore they have had no direct and real authority to do so and no criteria to follow. Under the proposed clause they must secure the opinion of at least one duly qualified medical practitioner, and if the magistrate has reason to believe that a certain accused person may be mentally ill the magistrate now has authority to direct that the person be remanded for observation for a period not exceeding 30 days. I think this clause will be welcomed very much by a great many people involved in the administration of justice because it removes any doubt as to the period and the grounds for which such a remand can be made.

The final principle I should like to discuss has to do with the question of reinstating in the code the provision with respect to dangerous driving. Mention has already been made of this matter by the minister. While the technical reasons for omitting the dangerous driving section from the code when it was rewritten are well known to members of the legal profession, I believe the general public failed to understand the significance. Many people never did quite understand why dangerous driving was no longer an offence. Dangerous driving, of course, always has been an offence, only under a different classification and a different name.

[Mr. Aiken.]

I think the reintroduction of this particular provision in the Criminal Code will do a great deal with respect to the administration of the rules of the road. It has been found that many magistrates, judges and juries hesitate to find a person guilty of criminal negligence in connection with the operation of a motor vehicle. The criminal negligence section was not particularly designed to cover dangerous driving of a motor vehicle; nevertheless it was included as part of the general offence of criminal negligence. Now it is made very clear that dangerous driving of a motor vehicle on the highways is in itself an offence.

Those are the main principles of the bill that I wish to discuss. There are several others, minor in their nature, which can be considered when the bill reaches the committee stage. I think I might say that all these amendments are well considered and should meet with the approval of the house.

(Translation):

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us includes 45 amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with the most varied subjects.

At the end of his statement, the minister expressed the opinion that amendments should not be made too often to the Criminal Code, so as not to cause any confusion in the field of jurisprudence, which is not always in line with the intention of the legislator. I do not know whether the minister was thinking then of the jurisprudence ensuing from the bills we passed recently on premeditated murder and goof balls, but, at all events, I have no intention of making a commotion about this matter. However, the only criticism I should like to make now is that we are being called upon to express our opinion on the principle of very important questions on too short notice, and as far as I am concerned, I was not able to examine this bill until 11 o'clock this morning. I suggest that, in the future, when a bill as important as this one is introduced, a bill which does not deal with contentious matters, it would be advantageous for members of all parties if we had at least two or three days to examine and consider it in order to properly comment on it.

I should like now to comment very briefly on some of the amendments before us. As for section 4 which makes it an offence to operate a motor vehicle in a way which endangers the public's safety, that is merely the re-enactment of a provision which existed before. The minister will recall that on March 28, 1961, the police chiefs' association sent him a brief concerning this type of offense, in particular. I will now read that brief as it appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of March 28, 1961:

(Text):

There seems to be no alternative to a charge of criminal negligence. Hence, if a person is acquitted of criminal negligence, and records indicate acquittals far outnumber convictions, the person responsible seems to escape punishment unless one steps down to provincial or even city bylaws. This is an unsatisfactory condition.

The chiefs called for reintroduction of reckless driving . . .

(Translation):

I fully agree with what this amendment lays down. Already the Criminal Code provides very severe penalties for the most serious cases, like, for example, manslaughter due to criminal negligence on the road. I am in a position to speak knowingly on that subject because, I think it was two years ago, I acted as counsel for a man who incurred the heaviest penalty, that is five years of imprisonment, for having killed two persons with his car while intoxicated; but such cases are the odd ones.

This amendment deals with cases occurring most frequently, perhaps the most dangerous on the road, but where the driver is likely to escape scot free. It is the offence of the irresponsible driver who passes another car on a curve or on a hill, when it is impossible for him to know if a car is coming, and who thus places drivers and riders in constant danger. If I understand correctly, the amendment deals with such offences, which should be punished with the utmost severity. I hope that the legislators who will administer this act will make all the necessary arrangements to ensure, especially during the summer season, that law-abiding citizens will not be exposed to the dangerous driving of those irresponsible drivers.

I realize that it is not always easy for any provincial government to have enough officers on the road to ensure the protection and the safety of the public. But I wonder whether it would not be possible, on a holiday or on a Sunday in particular, when cars are simply crowding our highways, to assign special officers at the most dangerous spots so as to catch in the act those who commit the offence mentioned in this section.

Now, I would like to deal briefly with clause 5, in which we are asked to include in the Criminal Code certain provisions that already exist, in regulation form, in the Canada Shipping Act.

It represents another improvement. I believe that time has come to provide for and apply penalties to put an end to dangerous navigation on our waterways.

Since the end of last war, increasingly powerful craft are plying our lakes, and many tragic accidents have been caused by careless and irresponsible drivers.

At this point, I should like to point out to the minister that the proposed amendment makes no reference at all to age requirements. The minister knows, as we all know by experience, that when we have a yacht, most of the time it is the youngsters who take it over. I wonder whether it would not be advisable—and this is something we shall take up at the committee stage—to prescribe a minimum age for the operator of a craft with a motor of, say, more than 10 horsepower. In my opinion this is a most necessary provision because most of the time—as visitors to our lakes well realize—children eight, nine and 10 years old are seen operating very powerful craft, children who obviously lack the required amount of judgment to observe essential safety regulations or precautions for the proper operation of such boats.

Mr. Speaker, the minister told us this morning that enforcement of those regulations in the province where there is no provincial police, would be a responsibility of the R.C.M.P. I am referring here to the province of Quebec, and I am not talking politics at all. I say that when, in a province, there is already a provincial police force, that police force could very well—and even better than the R.C.M.P.—look after law enforcement on our lakes.

I know from experience that, on the northern lakes, where I go, the R.C.M.P. put in an appearance once or twice during the season to check on whether craft have a registration number and sometimes to investigate certain thefts of outboard motors. But, in Quebec at least, lake navigation cannot be controlled by the R.C.M.P., because there are not enough officers to see that regulations are observed as they should be.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the provincial police will see that all necessary steps are taken to ensure the implementation of this timely amendment, and that some way will be found to make it known to all our municipalities. Just how this can be done, I do not know. We are going to pass important legislation, and it meets a need. In what way will this act be made known to the public? I wonder. It might conceivably be more of a provincial responsibility to look after such publicity. Still, I do hope that such an important amendment may be posted, for instance, at the entrance of all the parish churches in the north, in areas where lakes are used for navigation purposes in the summertime. In any event, I leave this suggestion with the minister in order that this amendment be publicized, and also to make enforcement easier, because those responsible for enforcing the regulations know perfectly well that about 80 per cent of people are law abiding, and that there is only a minority of citizens who always refuse to conform. Therefore, I do hope there will be some publicity made in this regard, so that we may enjoy safety on lakes and will no longer have to deplore such tragedies as have occurred in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I now want to say a word about section 9 which concerns the transmission of information known to be false by telephone, telegram, radio, etc. I am now referring to the problem relating to a certain type of telephone call. In a professional capacity I have had to deal with various cases of persecution by telephone. Indeed, some people have come to me complaining that they had been getting so many anonymous night time telephone calls that they had to have the service discontinued. At this time, I also want to mention the fact that in such cases, we do not always get the kind of co-operation we might expect from the Bell Telephone Company. In the one case I have in mind, we tried to investigate the matter. Now, to do so, it is necessary to enlist the co-operation of the Bell Telephone Company, because the telephone conversations of any person suspected of persecuting someone in this way must be listened to or, to use the familiar phrase, wire-tapping must be resorted to. At the present time there is no way of discovering who might be responsible for such anonymous persecution, nor of prosecuting such people. I see here, in the Ottawa Citizen for March 8, 1961, that this amendment is among those recommended by the police chiefs association of Canada. The section says:

(Text):

That persons using the telephone to transmit threats, insults, or cause annoyance are guilty of a criminal act.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, may I now draw the minister's attention—and we shall have the opportunity to take this up again at the committee stage—to the fact that clause 9 does not seem to cover average cases of telephone persecution and nuisance. I have read over and over again the proposed amendment to section 315 of the Criminal Code, and in my opinion the simple case of repeated nuisance does not seem to be covered. However, we shall have a chance to go into this matter further at the committee stage.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to say a few words about clause 32 which I feel is the most important of the proposed amendments. It is a clause which has to do with sex offenders. I find that there is now a new definition and that henceforth a judge will find it much easier to order preventive detention. In other words, it will not be left entirely to the judge to decide when preventive detention should be ordered. Such detention will become compulsory whenever the crown requires such sentence, with the consent of the attorney general of the province, within three months of the time the sentence is passed and, in any event, before the sentence has expired.

We have provisions similar to this with regard to the habitual criminal, with the difference that, for the habitual criminal, the accused must necessarily have been convicted three times for offences involving over five years in the penitentiary and must still be living a life of crime.

I quite agree with these amendments and I do hope that if they are enforced as they should be, this will not only remove a menace to society, but also make it possible through segregation and through a study of the offender, to make an effort to cure him so that he may return to society as a healthy individual.

Hon. members will recall that it costs, I think, $2,500 a year to keep a person in jail, so both from an economic and from a purely humanitarian standpoint, it is in our interest to provide appropriate means to cure the people involved in order that they may become an asset to society as soon as possible.

The present legislation is obviously inadequate, and I feel sure these amendments will strengthen the present provisions, and as I indicated a moment ago, will make it much easier for the courts to deal with these cases.

It is interesting to note that many of the individuals convicted for sexual crimes are sane people.

I find on page 366 of Hansard for January 20, 1956, a quotation from the Hamilton Spectator for Tuesday, January 17, which reads as follows:

Dr. J. N. Senn ... said today the majority of suspected sex offenders committed by magistrates for observation are returned to the courts as sane persons.

Extraordinary as this may seem, the study that was conducted in New York on this type of criminal behaviour also points to the rather surprising conclusion that most of these individuals are sane. I feel sure, however, that there is a most important social problem involved and that we are only at the exploratory stage.

I think the minister referred this morning to the matter of research, which is still the most important aspect. I do not think we have made much headway in the study of these problems. I include the case of homosexuals and all others of that type.

If we provide for segregation of those individuals, if we have their case studied by a staff of psychiatrists who are qualified to study individual psychology, and if we promote research in this field, I am sure we shall make great strides in fighting this threat to society. While statistics prove these people to be sane, I remain convinced that we are dealing here with very ill people.

But there is one thing which worries me. The minister is speaking of isolated clinical institution for prevention, segregation and research. Have plans been made to meet such a program? In other words, the minister is quite familiar with the situation. I shall, for instance, take the case I know best, that of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, in the province of Quebec and more particularly of the Leclerc Institute, where there are now no facilities for following up such a project.

I therefore hope that it will not be news to the minister when I say that, even in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary—which he can easily check—the budget is overspent and there is a lack of curative drugs. I have been told so, and the minister could check on this, as I wish he would.

But how should we go about it? There should necessarily be some building program, projects for adequate additions to the penitentiaries in order to carry out such a program, which is excellent in principle. But I am afraid we lack the required material facilities that would enable us to do so.

I earnestly hope I am mistaken in this regard, or that the minister will seek the agreement of his cabinet colleagues so that we may immediately launch a campaign for additions to existing penitentiary facilities.

Now I shall say a few words with regard to section 39 which deals with habitual criminals. The minister knows that, when his estimates were discussed, I said that I did not at all like the idea of that, at a given time, an individual who has led a life of crime, and is still doing so, be sent to the penitentiary, in the same way as, in the olden days, people were sent to a secret dungeon and were never heard of again. One feature that pleases me is that, with respect to an habitual delinquent, the case will be reviewed once a year and that such review will be statutory, so that all will be treated on equal terms. This provision removes to some extent my apprehension about those cases and I feel this will have a good effect on the morale of those individuals sent to penitentiaries during pleasure and who are wondering, after being under custody for 12 or 14 years, whether they have not been completely forgotten.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make at this point, and we shall keep on making suggestions so that this bill may prove as useful as possible.

(Text):

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to comment on the statement made by the minister which was referred to by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) when dealing with the question of when and under what circumstances there should be amendments to the Criminal Code.

I am inclined to agree with what the minister has said, provided he underlined the last part of his statement when he intimated that when there was a clear, pressing need and an indicated requirement for amendments, they would be made from time to time without having to wait for a general over-all revision of the provisions of the Criminal Code.

It has been my experience that when you have a body of jurisprudence such as is contained in the various sections of the Criminal Code, administered at varying levels from superior court judges right down to the magisterial level, it is wise not to have it in too great a state of motion and flux. There are many, many hundreds of magistrates who probably deal with by far the greatest percentage of those people charged under the Criminal Code and who have to face a magistrate, judge or judicial tribunal.

When amendments are made in parliament and they percolate down to the magisterial level we usually find some period of time has elapsed before magistrates have acquired an understanding of what is involved in the changes. It may well be that some of the changes become the subject of dispute, as for instance when a case comes before a supreme court judge and is appealed by the crown or the accused. It may even go to the Supreme Court of Canada. Amendments which are made today may not be solidified for a period of a year to a year and one half from now.

Consequently I think it is a great mistake to be continually stirring up the provisions of the Criminal Code, because apart from what I have said there are many consequential effects. If we make an amendment to one section of the Criminal Code today we may well find there will be a determination as to the true measure of the results of that amendment by reference to various other sections of the code and by reference to cases which have been decided in the Supreme Court of Canada or the appellate tribunals of the provinces. Sometimes the result is somewhat different from what was anticipated when the amendments left parliament.

Consequently I feel it very wise, when passing amendments in a group such as this, to find out what their impact will be, what consequential amendments may be required later on and what interpretation will be given by our courts. Then after the lapse of two or three years, or whatever the period may be, they should come back for any new amendment which may be required.

I say that I favour that approach provided, and I think the minister made this abundantly clear, we review these amendments if the situation calls for review because of the superior courts' or appellate tribunals' decisions. We should then review these particular amendments, decide that they have a certain meaning and give a certain interpretation to them, because of the great many varying situations which may arise. So long as the department and the minister are prepared to bring in amendments from year to year as and when required, I believe what the minister has announced is proper and wise, and I am saying that from very considerable experience.

I should now like to deal with the question of dangerous sexual offenders. I am not going to go into detail on this matter; it has been commented upon by all speakers so far, and I will have something to say when we are considering this matter in committee. I mention specifically only one aspect of it, and that is with approval. I refer to the effect of the measure which permits there to be some type of treatment without the necessity of there being a determinate jail sentence. I think that is requisite; I think that is very, very necessary. I should only like to make this general observation that this particular aspect of the amendments is a measure of the willingness of this government, and in particular of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) who is charged with the responsibility in these matters, to deal with this question and with kindred problems on a far wider basis than has been the case in the past, and I am not saying this in any partisan spirit. There is a tremendous wastage in our society today because in the past we have not been prepared to consider ways and means of salvaging persons in this country who have committed criminal offences, and who have done things for which there must be some punishment, but who may still be restored to society. So many of the matters which the government has undertaken, and so many of the bills which have been passed, have indicated that this government is prepared to examine our criminal law in the light of its social implications. While on the one hand preserving penalties which will act as a deterrent, society still holds out a hope of the individual ultimately regaining his place. Those who deliberately choose and persist in criminal courses of action will receive stern punishment but, on the other hand, those who through no fault of their own have fallen into or been driven into a course of action which involves them in the criminal law are to be helped in every way we can. It is not only the pragmatic cost in dollars and cents, if you want to look at it that way, but the fact that these people have a place in society and it is for us to make sure that we restore them to it if possible.

I want to deal to some extent with the amendment which restores to the Criminal Code the section providing for the offence of dangerous driving. I am interested in this matter. I mentioned it on the estimates of the minister and I was very glad to hear at that time that an amendment of this kind was to be included in the amendments to the Criminal Code when they were brought down. At the present time there is in the code the offence of criminal negligence which, when it results in the death of a human being can be punished by life imprisonment. When it results in bodily harm to an individual it can lead to a penalty of up to 10 years, and when committed without any specific harm being done to an individual, an offender is still liable to a penalty of five years. The general description of that offence is "wanton and wilful disregard". It has been my experience, and I am reinforced in it by opinions which have been expressed to me unofficially by members of the judiciary and by crown attorneys who have appeared in these cases that when a judge has to charge a jury giving them direction as to what the law is in respect of criminal negligence and has to explain these words "wanton and wilful disregard" he often runs into difficulty. This situation is made worse when, quite often, a jury, though it is not concerned with the question of the penalty, realizes what the penalty is. Many instances have occurred when people who should have been convicted in respect to some offence have been acquitted.

Under the old code, under the code as it stood before the introduction of the offence of criminal negligence, there was what is known as reckless driving, as the minister has pointed out, and dangerous driving. Reckless driving can be more or less related to criminal negligence as it now exists. Consequently I think the minister is right in saying it is unnecessary to bring that back into the code. But the reintroduction of this offence and the fact that when there has been a conviction the judge is entitled to prohibit the driver from driving for a specified period of time is an excellent change in the law as it has heretofore existed. The fact that there has been a consequential amendment by which people who are charged with the more serious offence may still be convicted, if the jury sees fit, on the lesser offence of dangerous driving is also to the good. The frightening carnage and slaughter which is taking place on highways of this country—a slaughter which I greatly fear will increase as our population grows and as more cars come upon the highway—will grow no less as more and better roads are built. It is erroneous to think that when we build better roads we shall experience less killings, less motor car accidents, less injuries. I do not think this is the case. Anything we can do to try to stop this and get at the root cause of it is all to the good. That is why I am most heartily in favour of this particular amendment.

I might mention to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) who brought up what appears to be an excellent suggestion concerning an age limit that this question might well be considered by the provincial authorities. The hon. member was talking about the operation of vessels.

I want to pass on, then, to this particular part of the amendment which introduces into the Criminal Code the various provisions which in the past have been contained in Department of Transport regulations for safety. Apart from the fact that there is involved a question of policing I think it is all to the good that we are now attaching a stigma to these particular actions. In the past it might well be that people regarded them as being a breach of a regulation. Once these regulations become part of the Criminal Code there is likely to be present in the minds of people a consciousness that in committing any of these prohibited acts they are in breach of the criminal law of this country, and it has always been my feeling that when we introduce a provision into the Criminal Code and say it is prohibited and there is a penalty for it, reasonable, decent, law abiding people are more likely to consider their actions with care in the future than in the past. For this reason, I feel that the enactment of these particular provisions as part of the Criminal Code will go a long way to ease the situation now existing. And the present situation does present a danger. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) enlarged upon it. Anybody who has been down to the summer resorts, the lakes, the rivers and the seaside of this country in the last few years cannot but be impressed by the large increase in the number of pleasure boats in use. That is part of the heritage of recreation enjoyed by the people of this country. But this is a right which must be used hand in hand with the responsibility which goes with operating vessels of this kind. The waters of this country are for the benefit of all the people. They are not merely for those engaged in operating speed or pleasure boats. I hope the incorporation into the Criminal Code of offences which heretofore were part of the regulations published by the ministry of transport under the small vessels act will go a long way toward dealing with this problem.

The only other point I should like to deal with which has not been mentioned as yet, is that section of the bill dealing with the offence of false pretences. I suggest this proposed legislation enlarges the coverage in respect to banks so as to include other financial institutions and will, I imagine, include credit unions and, in the province of Alberta, the treasury branches which operate there, and will attach to the deliberate writing of cheques on accounts which, known to the writer, do not contain sufficient funds, the same criminal consequences as are now attached to those individuals who write cheques on chartered banks.

I approve of the principles of this legislation as well and feel that when these matters are being dealt with at the committee stage there will be greater opportunity to go into the detail of the principles which have been brought forward.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief because I am not competent to deal with some aspects of this bill. However, I do intend to comment with regard to the two or three sections in which I am particularly interested and with which I feel competent to deal.

I listened to the minister, while enjoying my pipe behind the curtain, with a good deal of interest during his introductory remarks. I noted that he said in his opinion it was not wise to frequently amend the Criminal Code. I think he suggested it should not be amended more frequently than once every two years. I feel that is a very sound practice. I feel that the application of law to any degree must be accompanied by time and experience in order to make certain in the first instance that a particular law is not as effective as it should be, and to acquire that experience which indicates the amendments required. I am an individual who is opposed to tinkering with things in too much of a hurry. I am a little old fashioned in that respect. In fact, I have a model T car which is quite serviceable and is much better than many modern vehicles for operation on backwoods roads. I mention that fact to indicate that I do not change my opinions overnight.

I intend to say a few words in regard to clause 5 of this bill dealing with small vessels, which provides for the incorporation in the Criminal Code of the regulations, which previously existed under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport and were enforced by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I think this is a sound move because the field of small vessels navigation is becoming increasingly important. I do not intend to criticize anyone who in past years considered that these regulations were sufficient because the problem in regard to the operation of small vessels has developed very rapidly since the end of the second world war, as a result of a tremendous increase in ownership of small craft for recreational purposes. As I understand the principles of this clause, the administration will be in the hands of provincial authorities, even though the provinces have a contract with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I have noticed a great increase in the numbers and uses of these small craft on the lakes of the area in which I live. I have been very conscious in recent years of the increase of the horsepower of the engines being used, as well as the increase in interest in water skiing and things of that sort, and I have, therefore, noted the increased necessity for sufficient regulations and laws to deal with the situation.

Without regulations and laws of this kind there will always exist a number of individuals who fail to use good judgment in respect to their own safety, and who have very little regard or concern in some cases for the safety of others, often as a result of ignorance. Many individuals in the last two years have taken to water sports and water recreations with very little experience and knowledge of how very quickly serious accidents can occur through the use of fast moving craft.

As far as the administration of the regulations is concerned one of the big problems will involve personnel. I suggest in isolated areas, where many people go to enjoy water recreations, it will not be possible to have constables to enforce the regulations. I do not understand how this difficulty will be overcome but I suggest that with the co-operation of launch clubs and recreational organizations it may be possible for provincial authorities to establish services similar to the honorary fire services, members of which, because of their knowledge, and by recommendation of responsible groups, can be issued badges indicating the right to counsel and advise operators of small vessels in the first instance and to turn over to the proper authorities for prosecution the numbers of the craft of individuals who refuse to obey the law. I suggest the success of the application of this law will depend entirely upon co-operation between organizations interested in these types of sports and activities, as well as upon the co-operation of the greater percentage of individuals involved in this type of activity.

In addition to the adoption of these regulations I am of the opinion that small water craft should be licensed. I believe the time has arrived when the owners of small craft should be required to license their vessels at a fee of between $1 and $3, following their having passed rudimentary examinations regarding the principles of navigation and rules of the road, so to speak, as well as an examination in regard to safety requirements, involving the use of life preservers, fire protection equipment, engine control, and things of that sort. I do not know whether this type of regulation would come under the jurisdiction of the federal or provincial government, but I suggest it is something that must be worked out in the very near future through co-operation of the federal Department of Transport and the appropriate provincial authorities.

I make these suggestions, Mr. Speaker, because I am firmly convinced that we have now arrived at the time when operators of small water craft of over three horsepower should be licensed. I think this suggestion will be accepted by the majority of those operators, because it is not the majority who object to regulations and licensing but, like the operators of motor vehicles on the highway, the small percentage of irresponsible individuals who will not be checked or changed except through regulation and licensing.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to make a few remarks in respect of clause 9 of this bill. Having listened to the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton), the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) and the other hon. members of the legal profession who spoke in regard to this bill,

I feel a bit like a duck out of water in doing so. However, clause 9 in part, reads as follows:

(1) Everyone who, with intent to injure or alarm any person, conveys or causes or procures to be conveyed by letter, telegram, telephone, cable, radio, or otherwise, information that he knows is false is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

(2) Everyone who, with intent to alarm or annoy any person, makes any indecent telephone call to such person is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) Everyone who commits an offence under paragraph (b) or (c) of subsection (1) is guilty of (a) an indictable offence and is liable for imprisonment for two years or (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Paragraph (b) and paragraph (c) of subsection (1) read as follows:

(b) to burn, destroy or damage real or personal property, or

(c) to kill, main, wound, poison or injure an animal or bird that is the property of any person.

I should like to comment in regard to paragraph (2) of that clause. I can well understand the necessity for the regulations and have known of one or two cases where, in order to annoy, or alarm or cause anxiety to a person, particularly a woman whose husband is away, an individual has telephoned possibly three times per day, week after week, and has simply failed to say anything when the telephone was answered. I have been informed of one case where this has caused serious anxiety and almost a nervous break down. When we come to the clause itself, I wish the minister would inform the house if it covers such a practice where a person simply telephones a number repeatedly night after night and when the phone is answered never speaks. These people do this in order to cause a state of anxiety and annoyance. If it is not covered by the clause, I think it should be because in some instances it is getting to be quite a common trick. It does not sound like much when one mentions it in discussing a clause in a bill but the practice can cause very serious anxiety to some people.

Mr. Macdonnell: Do you mean to say that sane people do that?

Mr. Herridge: I would not think they were sane, Mr. Speaker, but they are vindictive people or people who want to cause annoyance. We have a small percentage of these cranks, shall I say. It might be done because of certain circumstances, because a person belongs to a certain group or something of that sort, but it does happen.

I come now to clause 11 which I find rather interesting. It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, but even a socialist is attracted to a clause in a bill if it has something to do with his personal experience and if that personal experience has cost him some money in the past. We cannot help it. We are all weak and human. The explanatory note in connection with clause 11 reads as follows:

The purpose of this amendment is to make it lawful for a land surveyor, surveying for a public work which will necessarily obliterate an existing boundary mark, to remove such boundary mark provided he establishes a permanent record that permits its original location to be ascertained.

I have known of a number of persons, Mr. Speaker, who suffered considerable inconvenience in recent years because of the removal of a boundary mark or survey stake, particularly with respect to property, timber limits and things of that sort. Mind you, there is an increasing lack of respect for boundary marks. I think some people do not realize what they are, but this situation has been brought about because of the development of highways and public utilities. I have found that the very competent engineers in charge of the building of pipe lines, for example, especially if they come from Texas, have very little regard for these stakes. They simply bring in their bulldozers and push them over.

I think more must be done with regard to this matter. I am not really sure what the offence is but I think it should be considered a serious offence to remove a boundary mark or survey stake. I am not sure what the penalty is either but I wish the minister would inform the house as to the situation when he speaks. I have known of a number of cases in the last four or five years where great inconvenience and considerable expense have been occasioned by people simply pulling up a survey stake at the corner of a timber limit or timber lease and throwing it 10, 15 or even 100 feet into the woods thinking that it is just a joke. This is something that has come about with the increasing population. There are many people who did not grow up under the same environment as we did and they do not realize how much it actually cost to put the stake there.

I am speaking to some extent from personal experience and therefore I speak with some warmth and interest. In the first place, I think this is a very serious offence and attention should be drawn to it even if notices have to be posted for the information particularly of the younger people who are quite unaware of what they are doing. They think these stakes are simply driven in at appropriate intervals and can easily be put back in place. They do not realize that it may require the running of four or five miles of line to locate the stake again.

It is explained here that the purpose of this amendment is to make it lawful for a land surveyor, surveying for a public work which will necessarily obliterate an existing boundary mark, to remove such boundary mark provided he establishes a permanent record that permits its original location to be ascertained. I have seen that sort of thing done in the past and I am not sure whether it is sufficient. I think it should be a last resort. I think that anyone who removes a stake or boundary mark should first be required, if at all possible, to provide an offset mark. What I mean by that is that if you put blazes on three trees and triangulate from the three trees you can find the location of the stake even if it has burned down. In the majority of cases you can locate the boundary mark or offset stake or offset monument, whether the distance is 10 feet or 50 feet or 100 feet. That is a much less expensive way of determining the corner or boundary of any property than depending on a record which will cause you to hire a surveyor at considerable expense who, in order to locate that position, may have to run a line two or three miles long. I am speaking of large land holdings, timber holdings and things of that sort.

I ask the minister to consider whether it is not possible first of all to provide for an offset boundary mark in order to lessen the expense rather than having to determine the location of the boundary mark or stake from a record. I have no doubt that the minister has received advice on this matter but I just mention these things as a result of my experience. When we come to this clause I should like him to tell me whether there is any merit in the suggestion or what reasons he has for refusing it.

When it comes to the question of what is a permanent mark, that is a very relative term. In surveying history a four-inch by four-foot stake was a permanent mark according to the legislature of British Columbia. Under modern conditions a wooden stake is no longer a permanent mark and I think there should be some elaboration of the word "permanent" to indicate that it means either an iron stake or a cement block or something else that is definitely permanent and cannot be easily wrenched out or destroyed by fire or because of other circumstances.

These are the clauses in which I am particularly interested, Mr. Speaker, though I am interested in all these amendments. I am very pleased to see the amendment with respect to dangerous driving. I listened with great interest to the minister's explanation of the amendments concerning sexual offenders. I am going to say very little on that subject because I am not competent to deal with the legal, medical and psychological aspects of such a very complicated problem. I judge from the minister's remarks that this is a progressive step and an improvement over the former legislation. I know the matter has received considerable study and is of great importance.

Finally, with respect to this serious problem which requires our sympathetic attention, I wish to say that I am all in favour of this new and more sympathetic approach. While we have to protect citizens and restrict and punish those who are criminals in this respect, we also realize there are many persons who are actually psychologically sick and who suffer as a result of their inherited tendencies or unfortunate environment. This group is very pleased to see these amendments and we will watch the results with interest. Those members in particular who have taken an interest in this subject for many years will watch with interest the application of this new law respecting sexual offenders. No doubt as a result of time and experience amendments will be found necessary to improve the legislation further, but from our point of view this is a step in the right direction.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) for the amendments to the Criminal Code which he has introduced. In my opinion all of them have been needed for some time but, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has said, it is not wise to tinker with these things until proper consideration has been given. While I should like to speak on a number of the amendments, I think I will confine my remarks at this time to those involving the regulation of small vessels. This, Mr. Speaker, has been a matter of great interest to me ever since I have been in this house. The history of this legislation is probably interesting, too. In 1954 I had the honour of introducing a resolution concerning the establishment of a search and rescue organization on the inland waters of Canada. This resolution was debated on several occasions and received the support of all hon. members who spoke. Naturally, the discussion of this resolution covered a rather wide area and included, among other things, the regulation of small vessels on inland waters.

Subsequently, amendments were made to the Canada Shipping Act to regulate small vessels. I can well recall that many hon. members in this house now, as well as others who were members at that time, contributed many valuable suggestions to the committee which was set up in 1955 and 1956. As one or two hon. members have pointed out today, while regulations were passed under the appropriate section of the Canada Shipping Act, there has been some confusion in various parts of the country as to how these regulations should be enforced. In Ontario, for example, the provincial police were not certain as to whether they should enforce them or whether the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should enforce them, since the regulations were made under a federal statute. Certainly in so far as the public is concerned, the regulations under the Canada Shipping Act relating to small vessels have not been very adequately enforced. I think all hon. members would agree with this.

While the enforcement of the law is of course not the responsibility of this parliament, nevertheless now that these regulations are embodied in the Criminal Code it will be made quite clear that the provincial authorities should enforce these regulations the same as other sections of the code. The hon. member for Kootenay West made a suggestion with regard to enforcement. He said that yacht clubs and organizations of that nature might very well appoint special deputies to help enforce these regulations during the summer months. I would agree with this suggestion. However, I should like to go a step further. Since the use of small craft is, of course, prevalent in the summer months, those who are charged with responsibility for enforcing these regulations might very well give consideration to the employment of senior university students. This scheme would provide the students with summer employment, with the necessary funds to continue their education, and at the same time would not cause the law enforcement authorities to take on an unnecessary number of persons whose services would not be required during the balance of the year. As I have already mentioned, services of this nature would be required largely during the summer months. I know that the Department of National Revenue employs senior university students to assist in the enforcement of customs regulations during the summer. I feel that the provincial authorities who will be responsible for enforcing these regulations might very well deputize a number of senior university students to help enforce the regulations covering small craft on the great lakes, Muskoka lakes and other resort areas in Ontario as well as other parts of Canada.

There is another matter to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) as well as the hon. member for Kootenay West, and that is the question of licensing small craft and the age limits of operators. I realize that there may be some difficulty in setting age restrictions. Also, I do not know whether or not this parliament has the constitutional authority to license boats. This is a subject for constitutional lawyers, and I would not presume to make a statement upon it. I would be interested in hearing what the Minister of Justice might have to say on the matter. If it is not possible for this parliament to legislate on the matter, perhaps the appropriate legislative bodies could do so.

I refer, of course, to the question of licensing not only small craft, which I believe are licensed now, but licensing the people who operate them. I am not particularly concerned whether a one dollar or two dollar fee is charged, as suggested; I do not believe that is important. The important thing is to make certain that the people who operate small craft which have engines of high horsepower are persons who are responsible. In so far as the age limit is concerned, I do not know what it should be. I feel this should be given careful consideration. Perhaps sixteen would be the appropriate age, just as it is for driving a car. One thing is quite certain. Since the war there has been a great increase in the number of small pleasure craft using our inland waters. I believe it is just as essential to regulate craft using these waters as it is to regulate traffic on the highways. I believe that is a self-evident fact upon which I do not have to elaborate.

Some consideration should be given, too, to requiring persons to be a certain age before they are permitted to operate boats which are propelled by engines of perhaps more than three horsepower. These boats can become very dangerous weapons indeed in the hands of irresponsible persons. Provision is made, I see, for adults, for those who are intoxicated while operating boats. I have spent a great deal of time on the inland waters during the summer because boating happens to be a hobby of mine. Generally, the worst offenders in the operation of small boats are young boys and girls of 10, 12 or 13 years of age. It is true there is the occasional adult offender. However, all too frequently we see children of eight or ten years of age operating boats powered by engines of 40 horsepower. They go roaring around small lakes, in around swimmers, in a very dangerous manner. I do not believe there is any excuse for the parents who permit this to happen. I believe an age limit might be set which would prohibit children operating a boat over a certain horsepower.

It is very difficult, of course, to make children reponsible and punish them because they are not really responsible. I believe provision might be made for the punishment in some way of the parents who permit children to operate small boats of high horsepower. This matter should be given consideration. I do not expect the minister to immediately produce an additional amendment to the act because, as the hon. member for Kootenay

West pointed out, you do not want to tinker with the Criminal Code unless adequate consideration has been given to the amendments. I think this is something the officials of the minister and of the Department of Transport might carefully consider because I believe such provisions would go a long way toward preventing unpleasant accidents. I believe those are all the observations I have to make at this time.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. What is the meaning of the words "dangerous to navigation" contained in section 226A (1)? What kind of navigation is included? I understand the reference to be wholly to power boats, those little boats that rush about as the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) has said at 30 to 40 miles an hour and make life hideous for everybody within range. Is any consideration being given to the comfort and security of those strange people who still row or paddle or sail or are they regarded as being just as extinct as the dodo? Are they no longer to have any rights? Are we quite prepared to accept the fact that those sports have now given way to the so-called sport of sitting in a boat and being rushed about by an engine? That is my question. In the consideration of the words "dangerous to navigation", can the navigation of these innocent people be considered, because it certainly is no joke to suggest that it is dangerous for them to be on their lawful occasions when these incredibly powerful little boats with irresponsible people in them are dashing about.

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to deal with the principle of this bill and to congratulate most heartily my colleague from Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) who replied to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) this morning, even though she hardly had any time to prepare herself.

I should like to offer similar congratulations to my colleague from Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) who, in spite of the few hours at his disposal, succeeded in giving us this afternoon a most accurate statement on the bill under consideration.

Since I have been sitting in this house, Mr. Speaker, I have taken part in several debates on bills introduced by the Minister of Justice. I had the opportunity also of participating in the debate which takes place each time we consider the estimates of the Department of Justice, the penitentiaries division and the R.C.M.P.

Very seldom did I have to address any reproach to the Minister of Justice but this time, I have a few to make. Perhaps those reproaches do not concern him in particular but they surely concern the government of which he is a member, and especially the leader of the house.

During his speech this morning the Minister of Justice told us that, in his opinion, a government should not introduce amendments to the Criminal Code every year but rather think them out thoroughly and submit them to the house deliberately, after having considered all the aspects of one or several matters covered by the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, I agree in part with the principle that legislation, and especially the Criminal Code, should not be amended without due consideration. On the other hand, the government, clearly disregarding this principle, introduces through the agency of the Minister of Justice a bill including 46 sections. This bill was read for the first time Saturday morning, and it is only this morning, at the beginning of the sitting, that a copy of the bill was made available to us. And moreover, Mr. Speaker, the standing orders of this house provide that any bill must be printed both in French and in English.

Now, when this morning's order paper was distributed, the French version of the bill was not ready. In fact, when we came to the house at 11 o'clock this morning, only the English version was available, and we had to send over for the French version.

It is extremely important for hon. members, particularly the French speaking members, to prepare themselves adequately for a debate. It would have been preferable to be able to examine the French text at the outset. We did not even have a single week end to consider this bill, and you will agree that this is inadequate.

This is what I would call an omnibus bill, as the amendments put forward deal with various aspects of the Criminal Code.

I have no doubt that these amendments have been the subject of continuing and thorough studies by the minister and his officials. Some time was also devoted to them by various organizations. I refer in particular to the Canadian association of police chiefs, which made recommendations in a brief submitted to the minister last March.

The proposed amendments to the Criminal Code deal with the dangerous driving of motor vehicles, threats made by telephone or otherwise, etc.

The McRuer commission, appointed in 1954 by the former government, pursued its studies until 1958, when it submitted its report.

It recommended various amendments to the Criminal Code, particularly in relation to habitual criminals and habitual sexual offenders.

We agree with the minister that all amendments proposed in his bill represent a step in the right direction. As far as I am concerned, I foresee no difficulty in getting this bill adopted.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, before resuming my seat, to deal with a few points covering dangerous sexual offenders.

They are divided into two categories.

First of all there are the sexual perverts, the depraved individuals, who are caught in the swamp of sexual delinquency. We all admit with the minister that they have to be kept away from society.

On the other hand, there are sick people, those who suffer from an anomalous state for which they are not actually responsible.

Those people are not necessarily criminals. But, in their case, the state has the responsibility to provide a temporary internment which would help their rehabilitation.

Some time ago rehabilitation was discussed in this house, particularly when the estimates of the penitentiaries branch were discussed.

Last Monday, more particularly, when we examined the penitentiaries bill, the question was studied at length. Habitual criminals, ordinary habitual criminals, which this legislation covers, and dangerous sexual offenders were all discussed.

Clause 39 of this bill says that the minister shall, at least once a year, submit all cases of criminals undergoing preventive detention to a review by the parole board.

To my mind this is an improvement. The Criminal Code now provides for a revision every three years, but this bill provides a yearly revision of the records of those unfortunate people.

With regard to the rehabilitation angle, the minister mentioned it when the situation of penitentiaries was discussed.

I believe that, in a general way, this section, if it is enacted as we may expect, will mean a substantial improvement and a better protection of society against those who live in ordinary crime or sexual crime.

(Text):

Mr. Laurier Regnier (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal briefly with section 660 dealing with applications for the imposition of preventive detention. Section 660 reads as follows:

> Where an accused has been convicted—

Section 661 contains the same words. Section 661 deals with cases of rape, carnal knowledge, indecent assault on female, buggery or bestiality, indecent assault on male and gross indecency. These are cases which are usually heard by juries. One of the sections provides that the application for the imposition of preventive detention shall not be heard by a jury. Then section 662 provides:

> (ii) seven clear days' notice has been given to the accused by the prosecutor, either before or after conviction or sentence—

Therefore I am a bit puzzled whether the application can be heard concurrently with the offence being tried, because in most instances the offence would be tried by a jury. It is provided that notice may be served even before conviction, although sections 660 and 661 provide that application may be made only after an accused has been convicted. I submit that this bill requires amendment to reconcile those two sections.

Another section provides that if the application is made after conviction it shall not be heard by the convicting judge. That would imply that a transcription of the evidence would be required for the hearing of the application. Past experience has shown that many times an accused has not been able to properly defend himself because he did not have the funds or opportunity to obtain for himself a transcription of the evidence.

Then section 667 deals with the right of appeal to the court of appeal. Here again I should like to underline the fact that an accused has to face an almost indefinite sentence of imprisonment, if he is convicted and sentenced to preventive detention, and he may not have the funds with which to provide the transcription of evidence.

We know that cases are dismissed every year in the court of appeal where the accused has filed notice of appeal but has not the means to provide a transcription of the evidence for all the judges of the court of appeal, for the crown and himself. I believe accused persons deserve some protection in this regard, because it means that wealth and poverty are not balanced. Many times an accused has not sufficient funds of his own with which to provide the required number of transcriptions, and very often he has not any friends who can provide these funds. I commend the minister for this bill, but it seems to me more safeguards should be provided for accused persons.

Criminal Code

Mr. R. D. C. Stewart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill No. C-110 at the present time I do not wish to delay the bill being considered in committee. Although there is no general principle involved in this bill, it contains a number of substantial amendments to various sections of the Criminal Code.

I listened with a great deal of interest this morning to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) as he outlined the provisions of this bill, particularly those sections dealing with dangerous sexual offenders. I believe that in this particular field the provisions of our Criminal Code at the present time are wholly inadequate. It is not enough to remove these people from society; we must, if we are going to practice the principles of Christianity, try to provide some means of rehabilitating them.

I also agree with the minister that amendments to the Criminal Code should not be made piecemeal, they should not be made haphazardly or too often unless it is absolutely necessary. It has been found in the past that one amendment to the Criminal Code usually requires several other amendments to various other sections. If those amendments are not made at the time the result is that the new amendments, if enforced by the courts without the corresponding sections being amended—perhaps this is a good thing for defence counsel—possibly a person who should have been convicted escapes punishment.

There are a number of substantial amendments in this bill. As the bill will be discussed section by section in committee I do not intend to refer to these sections specifically, except to say I am quite disturbed about introducing into the Criminal Code regulations dealing with the operation of small vessels.

As I read the relevant section, it puts small vessels in exactly the same position as motor vehicles on our highways. In the constituency of Charlotte we are not particularly concerned with pleasure craft except in some of the inland waters. As this house is aware, we have tides of 28 feet and 29 feet in the bay of Fundy which prevent the use of that water by pleasure craft.

Also, most of the vessels in the bay of Fundy area are commercial vessels used entirely for fishing purposes, having a speed of possibly six or seven knots per hour, and some of them a great deal less. Most of these boats are powered by inboard motors, except the small boats used by fishermen for lobster fishing, which are sometimes powered by small outboard motors. These boats do not constitute any menace, or any of the dangers that this provision of the code contemplates and I would suggest to the minister that possibly there should be some distinction made between commercial craft and pleasure craft.

I have another observation to make. During the past number of years, particularly since the present code was revised in 1955, there has been a tendency to take away from an accused person the right to a trial by jury. I realize there was a reason for this. It has prevented a lot of minor cases from going up before the supreme court or before a county court and a jury. Nevertheless, we should keep in mind that when we are going to impose a severe penalty on a person charged with a criminal offence we must give him an ample opportunity so that he may have a proper defence at the right time. We have, in other words, extended the powers of magistrates without, in a good many instances, increasing their competence. I realize that the appointment of magistrates is purely a matter for provincial governments, but we have an instance in this bill where we are going to make driving by a motor or a boat operator whose licence is under suspension an indictable offence carrying with it a possible penalty of two years' imprisonment, yet we are making it one of the offences which can be tried by a magistrate with absolute jurisdiction. In other words, although the magistrate now, under the summary conviction penalty section, can sentence a man on conviction to a maximum of $500 and six months, or a fine or sentence less than the maximum it is now going to be made an indictable offence when a man is liable for two years imprisonment, yet an accused has no option but to be tried by the magistrate. Under the absolute jurisdiction section of the code we find that the offences dealt with in this way are more or less minor offences such as assault, assault on officers or peace officers, attempted theft, thefts involving sums less than $50 and so on, most of which are dealt with by magistrates by the imposition of fines or short jail sentences of maybe up to 30 days. If the circumstances surrounding the suspension of a licence in the operation of a car or a boat after suspension were serious enough, I suggest an offender could be tried under the criminal negligence section of the code.

I was interested in the minister's observations on the old dangerous driving section of the Criminal Code which, if my memory serves me correctly, was section 285(6). The minister explained why this section was deleted, but I would suggest that the main reason was the difficulty of obtaining convictions under the old code which set out three distinct and separate offences. I am pleased to see that the change now proposed in this bill deletes many of the objectionable features of the old section 285(6). But I think this further question should be raised: are we not getting into another field of conflict, as most of the provinces have passed legislation dealing with the operation of motor vehicles? These are usually called "due care" sections. I just point this out to the minister to indicate that there is some difficulty inherent in this section.

I do not intend to discuss at any great length habitual criminals or dangerous sexual offenders. I suggest, however, that in both categories the federal government should provide some means of rehabilitating individuals of this type, providng ways and means whereby they can obtain the necessary training. It has been my experience over the years to defend a good many of these people and I say they are more to be pitied than punished. I feel we are failing in our duty if we do not provide not only for their removal from society but some method whereby worthy citizens can be made of them.

I shall have some further observations to make when the bill is before the committee and is being discussed clause by clause. I feel I should commend the minister and his department for the substantial and beneficial amendments proposed in this bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, in any properly organized society, criminal law must be conceived so as to protect the citizens, and any legislation must always be drafted in the light of common good.

If we consider the bill now before us, we are convinced once again that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) has taken into account various recommendations submitted to him by different organizations.

This bill, on the whole, features three aspects of safety. First, there is the section dealing with highway safety; the second section provides for water or maritime safety; and third, a series of sections provide for moral or social safety.

Considering the dangers incidental to driving nowadays on our increasingly congested highways, I feel we must take stricter steps to bring to reason those who drive their vehicle without paying any heed to the rights of those they meet on the highways. In view of the large number of accidents, the legislators must punish those who break our laws because, by their reckless and dangerous driving, they ruin the social order in families. Besides, I believe we are right in being even stricter with those who, because of carelessness, youth, stupidity or intoxication constitute real hazards to public safety.

The minister has decided to include in this legislation the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act with which the people were not familiar enough and which were not respected unfortunately. There again, there are too many water casulties today and society which we represent, must take every possible means to put an end to this lack of care which people show much too often on our lakes and rivers during the summer season. Turning offences under the Shipping Act into indictable offences appears to me to be a wise measure in so far as it will prompt owners of commercial and pleasure crafts to observe basic safety rules.

I think we must pass such a measure in order to provide the ever increasing number of people who are to be found on our beaches, rivers and lakes with a minimum of safety and to protect them from the fools who, careless of what is going on around them, are a real threat to the public.

The principal feature of Bill No. C-110 is the provision dealing with dangerous sexual offenders. It seems that the bill wants these offenders against marality to be treated more like sick persons.

The legislation aims at protecting youth against these mentally unbalanced and dangerous beings; that is why the minister inserted into the bill these provisions the effects of which will be to protect society from these dangerous persons.

The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Regnier) seemed to view the problem from a different angle. In his opinion, offences mentioned in sections 136, 138, 141, 147 and 148 of the Criminal Code are still crimes for a jury to judge. And when the hon. member said that the application cannot be heard by a jury, he was referring to a distinction bearing not on the crime itself, but on the consequences that the individual might bring upon himself in committing his crime, because the attorney general must decide on the application of this act and he may order an inquiry before a judge to determine whether the accused is a dangerous sexual offender. It is only in that case that the hearing is not before a jury. In my opinion, the person who has to face a specific charge against morality retains all his means of defence, as it is the case now under our Criminal Code as modified in 1955.

All members will readily accept those different amendments which not only help improve our Criminal Code but ensure a larger measure of protection for society through fuller respect for the individual and the right to human life.

(Text):

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the remarks of hon. members who have spoken this afternoon in regard to Bill No. C-110 as introduced this morning by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton). I listened with particular interest to the remarks of the minister, and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), my neighbour on the other side of the house, whose words are usually wise and worthy of attention. I thought this was particularly true when he referred to the matter of amendments to the Criminal Code, that very important piece of legislation in this country which applies throughout the many provinces, and involves all the people of Canada.

The hon. member for Peace River pointed out that certain amendments must be made to the Criminal Code from time to time because of the fact that our way of life changes, as well as because of changes in our society. He suggested that the amendments to our legislation must reflect these changes but that they should not be made too quickly or too often, because they must be interpreted throughout this land by the members of the judiciary who are, after all, human also, as well as by lawyers engaged both in crown and defence work. Time must be given, as that hon. member pointed out, for interpretation of the changes, and for cases to be tried in the various courts of the land, so that a complete picture can be obtained as to the impact upon our society. We must not be stagnant in regard to our legislation, but must at the same time allow for a period of interpretation.

I should like to make a few remarks regarding the amendment contained in this bill particularly concerning the operation of small boats. I feel it has particular importance to the Atlantic provinces, and recognize the situation referred to by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stewart), and the importance of this legislation to the people of his area where there exists a particular problem because of the fact that small boats are engaged to a great extent in commercial enterprises. However, I suggest that small boats are used a great deal today in many other areas in the Atlantic provinces, as well as in the areas of inland water in Canada. I feel that the results of these regulations, formerly contained under the shipping act, will justify their incorporation in the Criminal Code.

I think that the benefits of this change will be recognized by the many individuals throughout Canada who operate small boats strictly for enjoyment and in the pursuit of hobbies, as well as by those individuals who are members of yacht clubs and other similar organizations. I am sure those individuals will also realize the necessity of having regulations of this type. I do not suggest that they should be too strict, but I believe that responsible individuals will recognize the necessity for regulations in respect of this type of operation as responsible car drivers throughout this country recognize the need of highway and traffic regulations.

In regard to the amendment reinstating the dangerous driving section of the code, I suggest this is one of the amendments I had in mind at the opening of my remarks this afternoon when I referred to the necessity of keeping our legislation in line with changes in our way of life and society, for the protection of our citizens. This bill also provides that a charge of criminal negligence can be reduced to a charge of dangerous driving. I suggest to the minister that he give consideration to the remarks made by the hon. member for Charlotte regarding subsection (3) of section 225, covering the operation of a vehicle by a disqualified individual. I shall not refer to this in detail now, but may do so at the committee stage. It seems rather strange to me that under this provision an individual is liable to two years' imprisonment upon conviction of an indictable offence because, as the hon. member for Charlotte pointed out, the matter of dangerous driving is one which is within the absolute jurisdiction of a magistrate, so that an accused person cannot elect to be tried by a judge or a judge and jury. Perhaps the minister will consider this situation and give some explanation in his reply.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) mentioned the fact that he owns a model T car. I should hope that he drives it at an adequate speed because, should he not drive it fast enough, although he would not be in contravention of the dangerous driving section, he would undoubtedly be dealt with under the provincial motor vehicle act of the province of British Columbia.

That hon. member also mentioned the legislation referring to the making of telephone calls to the annoyance or nuisance of individuals. It has come to my attention that quite often calls are made and when the phone is answered the person on the other end of the line hangs up, thus creating a great nuisance. I realize it is very difficult to check through the telephone companies and prove such matters but I would suggest to the minister that perhaps he might look into the nuisance that is caused with a view to doing something about it in the future.

The legislation with regard to sexual offences has been discussed fully and I do not intend to go into it. There are also amendments with regard to election involving offences where absolute jurisdiction has rested with the magistrate, and there are other matters of importance dealt with in the bill.

I do not wish to take any more time now except to say that the amendments with regard to sexual offences and the other changes in the Criminal Code that have been made since the minister became Minister of Justice show that he is carrying out a policy of attempting to rehabilitate many of the offenders and is making an effort to restore them to society as worth-while citizens. When the bill is discussed in committee there may be other matters of interest which I will have an opportunity to discuss further then.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a number of important points which have been of some value have been made in the discussion and I wish to express my appreciation to all hon. members who have spoken for their suggestions which I am sure will be helpful to us when considering whether or not there are some amendments that should be made in committee. I also wish to express appreciation to all hon. members for their general indication of the support which the proposals embodied in the bill are receiving and will receive in all parts of the house. I will endeavour, as I think I should in recognition of the serious contributions that have been made, to deal with the majority, if not all, of the points that have been made, but if I omit any or omit reference to any hon. member particularly I would ask all hon. members to understand that this may well be because the same points in different form were made by a number of members and also because some of them lend themselves perhaps better to detailed consideration in committee. However, I wish to show hon. members, who have been very generous to me, the courtesy of dealing with all the points that have been made.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) referred first to the important aspect of the new provision with regard to the small boat laws which concerns the question of enforcement by the provinces. I should like to assure her that there have been some discussions with the provinces, most particularly with the province of Ontario. It will be appreciated, of course, that in all provinces except Ontario and Quebec the provincial police service is provided by the R.C.M.P., and to some extent therefore the question of whether they are enforced under provincial or federal regulations is but a variation of the same problem in those provinces.

As was pointed out, it will be largely a question of whether or not adequate personnel can be provided for the discharge of this very heavy duty, a duty made particularly difficult because of the fact that the use of these boats mushrooms during the summer months and then falls off to practically nothing, at least on the inland waters of Canada, during the winter months. The problem, therefore, is one of having sufficient personnel to deal with the matter in the summer tourist months while not having so many men on your force that you have got nothing for them to do in the other months of the year.

In that connection I was particularly impressed with a suggestion made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) that it might well be that some type of honorary or voluntary warden could be appointed and given some authority at any rate in connection with the enforcement of these laws. I am much struck with that suggestion and I have made a note to investigate, the moment I have time, the question of whether such persons, for instance, as game wardens might not be persons to whom it would be appropriate to give authority in this field. I would think that in a large number of cases, if not the majority, boats being used at resorts would be used in areas where there is a game warden or fisheries warden present. Therefore this strikes me as being a very excellent and apt suggestion.

In addition to the discussions which the R.C.M.P. have had with the provinces, I should point out that the Department of Transport has also had some preliminary discussions with the provinces regarding this whole matter and that it is their intention to follow up these discussions and have specific talks on the problem of licensing. I noted that all members, I believe, who referred to the small boat problem, referred to the question of licensing the operators of boats. It will be appreciated, of course, that here you have a question where we have to be careful because of the limits of constitutional authority, and it might well be that the licensing of boats is something which is within the authority of the provinces. In any event, it is desired and intended to discuss this question, and when and if a licensing system is worked out there can then be provision either that to operate a boat without a licence is a criminal offence, which could be provided subsequently, or if the licensing were to be done under provincial authority the provinces themselves could provide, in a manner similar to that which now prevails in the highway acts of the provinces, that the operation of a boat without a licence is an offence. We have very much in mind the desirability of working out a licensing system and then providing by the appropriate provincial or federal legislation that to operate a boat without a licence is an offence. Here again, of course, there would be room to take care of that point which many members raised that it is probably desirable to impose an age limit as a qualification for the operation of a boat with an engine say of more than three horsepower.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls referred also to the question of habitual criminals and the changes imported into the law by the bill now before the house. So that she will not think that I am omitting anything in the discussion, I should point out that one of the problems she referred to does not arise, I think, by reason of the fact that an application to have a person declared an habitual criminal or a dangerous sexual offender is not now heard by a jury. It is heard by a judge alone and the only change we are making in this respect is to provide that where the application is made subsequent to a conviction it should not be heard by the judge or magistrate who tried the specific offence which gave rise to the application.

I was also asked for the record with respect to habitual criminals and sexual offenders. The following are the records as of June 19, 1961, with respect to persons sentenced as habitual criminals. The total number sentenced was 54. The number who died in prison was four, leaving a total of 50. Of that number, 24 had been released on parole. Of the 24 released, four had had their parole revoked or forfeited, so that there are in custody or were in custody 30 habitual criminals. Of those 30, one had successfully appealed his conviction. As of this date, the actual number in custody was 29. The record with regard to parole is, as I have pointed out, 24 have been released on parole. Two have subsequently died; four have had their parole revoked or forfeited, so that there are actually 18 habitual criminals on parole at the present time.

The record of criminal sexual psychopaths, again as of June 19 this year, is as follows: The total number of persons sentenced under that provision was 34. Of those, one had died in prison and nine had been released on parole. Of those nine, one had had his parole revoked or forfeited. There is, in custody at the present time under this provision, a total of 25 persons. Of those, one is appealing his conviction. Again, with respect to the record of the parolees, of the eight released on parole, one has subsequently died; one has had his parole revoked; one is in custody facing other charges. There are, therefore, five at present on parole who had previously been sentenced as criminal sexual psychopaths.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) referred to the small boat regulations, and particularly the problem of young persons operating small boats. I hope he will agree that I have covered that and when a licensing system is worked out, which I think is most desirable, it will be possible to cover the question of those who should be licensed to operate boats with engines beyond a certain horsepower.

The hon. member for Kootenay West dealt also with this problem. I have noted his suggestion regarding temporary personnel being appointed with authority under these regulations. He asked me some questions concerning the penalty for removing boundary markers. This is found in section 384 of the code, and the maximum penalty at the present time, if I recall correctly, is five years. The section reads:

> Everyone who wilfully pulls down, defaces, alters or removes > is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

The maximum penalty for this offence is quite severe at the present time. However, it is a fact that with the number of roads being built, and the widths and permanence of these roads, an increasing problem has been posed for surveys in that at the present time the code merely protects them where they carefully replace the necessary boundary mark as it was. With the type and size of highway being built now, it is becoming increasingly difficult to replace the mark where the surveyor took it up. It is for this reason the additional provision protecting the surveyor is being enacted, so that if he finds it impossible to replace the boundary mark he will be covered if he establishes a permanent record of the original position sufficient to permit such position to be ascertained.

I would think that with respect to the hon. member's point the surveyors should be required merely to establish reference marks so that it would not be necessary to run a line two or three miles in length to establish the location of the original mark, the surveyors would be aware of this and would be inclined to establish such reference marks. There is nothing in the wording of the clause that would preclude that. I believe the wording of the clause suggests this. It says he is protected where he establishes a permanent record of the original position sufficient to permit such position to be ascertained. An offsetting mark would be the most readily means of establishing the original position. I will give consideration to the matter. I am unable to give my hon. friend a firm answer at this time, but I shall be glad to give consideration to it to see whether in committee or at perhaps some other appropriate time, a clarification is indicated.

The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) also commented on the necessity and desirability of licensing operators of boats. We have, I think, covered that point sufficiently now.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) raised the interesting and understandable point of the protection of those who are operators of small boats but who operate them without engines preferring—I am glad there are numbers in this country who do so prefer—to operate them with their own muscle power or by sail. He asked whether they would be protected by the words "dangerous to navigation". I would say they would be because he will note the section provides:

> Everyone who navigates or operates a vessel or any water skis . . . in a manner that is dangerous to navigation, life or limb . . . is guilty of an indictable offence—

If the operator or owner of a boat with a powerful engine goes sweeping past at a speed which endangers the life or limb of my hon. friend or others who share his commendable point of view, and there is danger of swamping the rowboat or sailboat, then there would be an offence under this section as we have drafted it.

The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Regnier) raised a question as to whether it would not be desirable to provide more protection for the accused in connection with an application to have a man declared either a dangerous sexual offender or an habitual criminal. He suggested that it might be provided that the jury which heard the case should also dispose of the application. We had thought rather that the opposite principle should govern on the grounds that where a jury had also heard and disposed of a case—the application would not arise unless the accused had been convicted of that specific charge—it would then be undesirable to have the same court which had convicted on the specific charge deal with the application to have him declared a dangerous offender or habitual criminal. I want to remind the house again that these applications will not be dealt with by a jury in any event. The principle which we think should be applicable is that the judge who disposed of the charge on which the accused was convicted should not dispose of the application under this section because of the possibility of prejudice to the accused. We thought it should be a new judge or magistrate as the case may be.

The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stewart) suggested that there should be some words in clause 5 of the bill to make it clear that the provision does not apply to commercial vessels but only to small, pleasure craft. I would be glad to give this matter further consideration but I must say that at first sight the suggestion does not appeal to me. After all, the offence that we are now importing into the criminal law is the navigation of a vessel in a manner that is dangerous to life or limb. I am not able to appreciate why commercial vessels should be exempt or placed in another class so that this provision would not apply to them.

I point out further for the hon. member's consideration that it is provided by a later subsection that, with respect to commercial vessels which are required to carry certificated masters, mates or engineers, the right of those persons to operate a commercial vessel cannot be taken away by a conviction under this section. The reason for that is that it is the Canada Shipping Act that at present provides for the qualifications of persons who shall have certificates as masters, mates or engineers. We think that is the proper place where those provisions should rest and that the taking away from one of these persons of his right to operate a vessel for which he is certificated should remain under the shipping act. What is intended here is that if a person operates a vessel, whether it be a commercial craft or a pleasure craft, in a manner that is dangerous to navigation or life or limb, then he commits a criminal offence; and if he is the owner and operator of a pleasure craft he may be prohibited from operating that craft. However, if he is the certificated master, mate or engineer of a commercial vessel, then the question of whether or not he has his certificate taken away from him rests to be disposed of under the Canada Shipping Act.

Then the hon. member for Charlotte and also the hon. member for Pictou both raised the question as to whether it is wise to provide, as we have provided in subclause 2 of clause 4, that a charge of operating a motor vehicle while disqualified or prohibited from driving by reason of a previous conviction, should be made an indictable offence as well as an offence punishable on summary conviction as it is now. The reason for their concern, if I understood them correctly, is that this was an offence within the absolute jurisdiction of a magistrate and that to provide that it is now also an indictable offence would have the effect of giving to magistrates, about whose qualifications there are sometimes some reservations, the power to impose punishments of two years and more. With respect I think I must take issue with the hon. gentlemen. I have not had time to check this matter out completely since it was raised, but it is my impression that this charge would not be within the absolute jurisdiction of a magistrate. It may be that the offence for which they were originally convicted and on the basis of that conviction were prohibited from driving was within the absolute jurisdiction of the magistrate. However, I question whether the charge which is involved here, namely the charge of driving a motor vehicle while under an order of prohibition, is under the absolute jurisdiction of a magistrate. The study I gave to it in the few moments since the question was raised rather persuades me that it is only triable by a magistrate with consent. If that is correct—and I will have a further check made on that matter—it would, I hope, dispose of the reservations expressed by my hon. friends.

I think that covers the points that were raised, Mr. Speaker. If I have left any out or if I have not covered them adequately I shall try to make amends when we are in committee on the clauses.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1.

Miss LaMarsh: By virtue of the fact that the bill has not been given to us in time for us to make a very detailed study of it and also by virtue of the fact that, as I have no doubt, the minister has brought in the amendments as a result of some difficulties which have been created in the past and recommendations which have been made, may I ask that the minister, as we approach each group of sections dealing with different subjects, give us some background on what the present law is, why it has not been found to be fitting and why an amendment has been brought in. The explanatory notes are very brief, of course, but it would be of great assistance to us, as we have not had very long to study the matter, if the minister gave us a brief introduction.

Mr. Fulton: Yes. I think clause 1 stands by itself. It is made necessary by the fact that last year we amended both the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act in order to set up courts of appeal for those territories. Prior to that time it had been necessary for them to have recourse to the courts of appeal of certain of the provinces, but now they have a court of appeal in the territories. We are therefore changing the words here in order to provide that, in the Yukon Territory, it is "the court of appeal" instead of "the court of appeal for the province of British Columbia" and similarly with regard to the Northwest Territories.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Service of Process.

Miss LaMarsh: I hesitate to be on my feet all the time, but it may be that in clause 2 the minister has done something which it was not the intention to do. I was just idly looking at subparagraph (a). In the case of a municipal corporation service will be made on the mayor, secretary-treasurer or clerk of the corporation. I am thinking of one municipality in my riding in which there is no mayor, no secretary-treasurer or no clerk. Therefore it would be impossible to effect service. I know that the minister is a big city boy and it may be that most of the people on the other side of the house are in that category. I am not sure about all the provinces, but in the province of Ontario we have municipalities which do not have as their head a mayor; they are reeves. There are many cases of municipalities which do not have a secretary-treasurer. They may have a secretary or a treasurer but they are not always a secretary-treasurer. In those cases there is often no clerk. In the one municipality, a village of which I was thinking, you would find there was a reeve, a secretary and a treasurer but none of the three offices which are indicated in subsection (a). I wondered whether it might be considered by the minister that this subsection should stand and that some consideration be given to the fact that there are municipalities other than cities whose heads are not mayors. In the Ontario municipal act the matter is covered by a reference to the head of the municipality, not the mayor or the reeve.

Mr. Fulton: I think I can only say that, far from being a big city person myself, I am a small town lawyer and proud of the fact. I am therefore prepared to admit that the hon. member has a point there the answer to which I do not have at the moment. If there is a municipal corporation that has no mayor or secretary-treasurer or clerk, I do not know what the answer would be. It may be that the Interpretation Act would provide us with an answer but we shall be glad to look into that matter. Perhaps in the meantime the clause might stand. I am afraid that we may have fallen into the error of taking it for granted that, because an almost identical provision appears twice elsewhere in the code, it had been tried and found not wanting. Perhaps it just has not been tried. Perhaps also the municipal corporations of these small places that my hon. friend has in mind would never be guilty of anything requiring service of process under the Criminal Code. I think that would be the most likely answer, Mr. Chairman.

Miss LaMarsh: That undoubtedly is the answer.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Order prohibiting driving.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I find that I did not have time to make the necessary study after the hon. member for Charlotte and the hon. member for Pictou raised a question regarding giving magistrates absolute jurisdiction to try the offence of driving a motor vehicle while disqualified.

In this bill we have provided that it shall be indictable, and by virtue of clause 18 within the absolute jurisdiction of the magistrate. It has not previously been indictable, but it will be indictable and absolute when this bill is passed. I have had my memory refreshed now and I am reminded that the reason why we thought this was appropriate was because it is a relatively simple issue; it is not a difficult legal issue. The issue is simple: has an order prohibiting driving been made, and was the accused driving the motor vehicle while under that prohibition?

It is not a difficult legal issue and therefore we thought it was one quite appropriate to leave in the hands of the magistrate, even though the penalty has been increased. The penalty has been increased for the reason referred to by several hon. members, namely that we think it is a serious matter and persons should be required to take seriously an order prohibiting them from driving.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Dangerous operation of vessel, etc.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 5, suppose a child of 11 or 12 years of age is guilty of an offence under this clause, what would happen in that case? We are dealing here with the penal law.

Mr. Fulton: Of course, the case could be tried in juvenile court. I do not think the position here is any different from that of a child accused of another criminal offence.

Mr. Deschatelets: I know of the case of a young boy of 10 years of age who was driving a motor boat on a lake—I think it was in the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—a few years ago and four people were drowned. The father was arrested on a charge of manslaughter because of his negligence in performing his duty as father of the child. He was acquitted, by the way. In my remarks a few minutes ago I suggested to the minister that we should provide a minimum age for operating certain classes of boats. I wonder whether the minister has any comment to make on this matter.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think the position here is simply one of the general application of the provisions of the Criminal Code, which set the absolute age below which no person shall be charged with a criminal offence. As I recall, the age is seven years. In the case of an indictable offence by a child over 14 years of age it would be in the discretion of the juvenile court whether he should be prosecuted under the Criminal Code in the ordinary courts or whether the case should be proceeded with in the juvenile court. However, because the Juvenile Delinquents Act is not in force in all parts of Canada it would be quite inappropriate for us to say that children of a certain age must have their cases disposed of in juvenile court. We think we should merely create the offence and then leave it to the determination of the authorities in the ordinary way as to the method by which these cases are dealt with.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Theft of telecommunication service.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to ask the minister this interesting question; that is, interesting to me. In the first part of clause 6 the word "colour" is spelt c-o-l-o-u-r. Why is the Oxford dictionary spelling, which is the preferred spelling, used in the clause and the Funk and Wagnalls dictionary spelling, which is the United States spelling, used in the explanation? Does this represent a difference of opinion in the minister's department, or a concession to the United States?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think it might be said to represent a very neat compromise. I could rationalize this by saying that in the code itself the spelling "o-u-r" is used throughout, but in the explanatory note—which is of course of no statutory value in so far as the bill itself is concerned—we have apparently used the spelling "o-r". We have at least saved one letter in the explanatory note.

Mr. Herridge: Is it the practice of the department, in the spelling of words, to use the Oxford dictionary style of spelling?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, that is correct. The "color" in the explanatory note is a typographical error.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you. I am very glad to hear that.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Presumption from cheque issued without funds.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, would the minister give an explanation of the reasons for this amendment, or perhaps the representations which were made in connection with this proposed amendment.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, this arises primarily out of the fact that there was a case where a cheque was drawn on an institution that was not a bank and a conviction could not be obtained. Since caisses populaires, credit unions and other legitimate and worthy institutions which are not banks have increasingly entered into this field and to all intents and purposes have cheques drawn upon them, we thought this was an omission in the Criminal Code which should be rectified. The amendment is simply to add the words "or other institution".

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—False messages.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, would the minister tell the committee how it is proposed to convict anyone of this offence. What kind of evidence could be adduced in connection with threats made by telephone? I think it is an excellent provision, if you can make it work.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, it might be difficult, but on the other hand I think it might be possible. Certainly in so far as a telegram is concerned it should be possible to establish that a certain person actually conveyed information in a telegram. In connection with the telephone, it is possible to obtain direct evidence that a telephone call came in at a certain time and a certain person actually placed that call at that time. I do not think it would be easy, but we certainly think the actions described here should be made an offence.

Miss LaMarsh: May I suggest it is more in the nature of an educative process; it is there, and that is supposed to deter people from doing it, even though it may be very difficult to prove?

Mr. Fulton: I have never been one to place too much store on the deterrent effect of criminal legislation. We had that discussion in connection with the capital punishment bill. However, if the course of action were persisted in, I think my hon. friend will appreciate that certain checks could be made that would establish the facts with reasonable certainty and might well support a prosecution.

Certainly in the casual or isolated call I doubt very much whether you could ever obtain the evidence, but if it were a course of conduct persisted in, I think it might well be possible to obtain the evidence.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I said in my remarks a few minutes ago, and I think the hon. member for Kootenay West said the same thing, that clause 9 does not cover the most ordinary case of nuisance by telephone. The first and second parts of this clause provide:

> (1) Every one who, with intent to injure or alarm any person, conveys or causes or procures to be conveyed by letter, telegram, telephone, cable, radio, or otherwise, information—
> (2) Every one who, with intent to alarm or annoy any person, makes any indecent telephone call to such person is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

These are not the ordinary cases. I think the most common case is simply annoyance by telephone—somebody would phone 25 times in a day and when they answered they would hang up the phone. It is not covered.

Mr. Fulton: That is true. I do not think the case of a person who places a call and hangs up as soon as he hears a telephone lifted at the other end is covered by this section. An attempt to deal with it here might possibly create an offence more embracing than was intended or desired. There might be a number of innocent explanations as to the reason for hanging up at the other end. It might be that on two or three occasions an innocent explanation would prevail. Perhaps a mother who was calling would have to hang up the telephone to go to a child who had fallen. We feel that the section here has gone as far as is to be desired and that the danger of such a course as has been suggested would outweigh any possible advantages.

Miss LaMarsh: The minister and his department might consider putting something similar into the nuisance section to make it an offence to annoy another person by telephone calls. This would not be such a serious offence and it would not be so difficult to prove.

Mr. Fulton: We shall be glad to look at that suggestion if it is not covered already by the nuisance section, and see whether we can adopt it.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Saving provision.

Mr. Herridge: I want to thank the minister for explaining what the penalty was. I did not realize it is as severe as it is. This is an increasing problem, especially in backwoods areas. People go hunting and pull up a stake or something of that sort, knowing they should not do it but not realizing the damage they are causing. I know of one case where it cost $1,500 to relocate a stake because they had to go back many miles to relocate timber limits by reference to other markers.

I wonder if it would be possible to have some small notices made available, or what other steps could be taken to give publicity to this matter. I know that is a provincial matter, but the minister's officials are in contact with the provincial attorneys general and it seems to me that this question might well receive some publicity even in local post offices because I am sure the majority of people do not realize how serious it is. It is impossible to find out who does these things when this damage is done miles from anywhere. I wonder if there is any way of bringing this to the attention of attorneys general.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure this could be drawn to the attention of attorneys general and they might decide to give some publicity to it but that, of course, is something they themselves have to decide. Perhaps this discussion today and the reminder that the penalty is five years may go a long way to serving the purpose the hon. gentleman has in mind.

On clause 12—Exception.

Mr. Roberge: What is the exact purpose of this clause and also clause 13? Will the minister give us the background?

Mr. Fulton: Clause 12 deals with the situation which arises when a person charged with an offence in one province wishes to plead guilty to an outstanding offence in another province. Clause 13 deals with the situation where an accused person charged with an offence in a province wishes to plead guilty to an outstanding charge against him elsewhere in the same province. The purpose of both clauses is to enable all the outstanding charges against an accused person to be disposed at one time so that he does not have to face a situation where, having served a sentence on one charge he is liable to be apprehended in the same or another province and prosecuted again.

At the present time in both cases the consent of the attorney general of the province concerned is necessary before an accused person can plead guilty to other charges. We have thought this should be preserved only in the case where a charge is outstanding in a different province. There the consent of the attorney general of that province will still be necessary before the charge can be disposed of. But where the outstanding charge is in the same province we feel the accused person should have the absolute right to have all the charges disposed of at the same time. We feel there is not the degree of administrative or other difficulty which would warrant anyone refusing to allow the accused to have the charges all to be disposed of at the same time when they arise in the same province. But where the outstanding charge is in another province we have retained the necessity for obtaining the consent of the attorney general of such province but we provide that it may be given by the deputy attorney general because it does not seem logical to insist that the attorney general must personally sign all these documents.

Mr. Roberge: One of the phrases in the clause reads this way: "Where the accused is in custody". Does that mean in custody undergoing punishment or in custody waiting to be tried for an offence? Would it include waiting to be tried for an offence and being out on bail, even?

Mr. Fulton: I understand that the better view is that this would apply on either occasion, when a man is in custody pending the disposition of a charge or when he is in custody following conviction. I would remind the committee that the Fauteux commission made a recommendation on these lines and the change has also been asked for by the uniformity commissioners, who represent the attorneys general of the provinces.

On clause 14—By peace officer.

Miss LaMarsh: Would the minister say whether this provision will be of some assistance to us in the riding of Niagara Falls so that peace officers will be entitled to arrest without warrant anyone who throws himself into the upper Niagara river?

Mr. Fulton: I think that would be left to the discretion of the peace officer.

Mr. Deschatelets: What is the reason for spelling out attempted suicide here? I thought that was covered by the former section.

Mr. Fulton: Under the Criminal Code, attempted suicide is only punishable on summary conviction, so a peace officer could not arrest without a warrant merely where he has reasonable and probable grounds to believe. In order to make it possible for these officers, who are confronted with a situation where a man is about to jump over a bridge, to arrest the individual, one has to make attempted suicide punishable as an indictable offence.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, but the change that has to be made is one that provides that a peace officer may arrest without a warrant, where he has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a person is about to commit suicide.

On clause 16.

Mr. Fulton: The amendments to clauses 16 and 17, Mr. Chairman, are consequential upon the capital punishment bill that passed through the house a few weeks ago.

Clauses 17 to 25 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 26.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in respect to clause 26, my hon. friends opposite asked if I could give the background. Clause 26 is the clause which arises out of the recommendation of the McRuer commission on the law of insanity.

On clause 32—Dangerous sexual offenders.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister what the purpose was of adding the words "or is likely to commit a further sexual offence," to the definition as recommended by the commission?

Mr. Fulton: This idea was suggested by the uniformity commissioners as being a further test available to the court on the basis of which it could reach a conclusion as to whether or not a person should be adjudged a dangerous sexual offender. I think the hon. lady will agree that this creates a second and alternative test as a basis on which to form a judgment, and we felt it was a proper proposal.

On clause 33—Application for preventive detention.

Mr. Regnier: Mr. Chairman, a portion of this clause reads as follows:

> Where an accused has been convicted of an indictable offence the court may—

Whereas, section 661 reads in part:

> Where an accused has been convicted—

When we consider section 662 we find that it provides that seven clear days' notice must be given to the accused before conviction, and then at page 13, paragraph (b) also provides that either before or after conviction notice may be served. I should like the minister to explain, regarding the service of notice, how an application can be made for an indeterminate detention before there is a conviction?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is that if the crown has in its possession, before the trial commences, evidence of the record of the accused in respect of other matters which, in the opinion of the crown, establish that the accused is an habitual criminal or a dangerous sexual offender then the crown can decide at that point to make application to have the individual so declared. Under those circumstances this amendment makes it clear that notice of this application may be given before or after conviction.

On clause 34.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, again I wonder why the minister or his department have varied substantially from the terminology of the McRuer commission in its recommendation in regard to section 661 (3), which suggests that where the court finds an accused to be a dangerous sexual offender it shall, notwithstanding anything in this act or any other act of the parliament of Canada, sentence the accused to preventive detention; whereas the bill before us suggests that the sentence of preventive detention shall be in lieu of any other sentence that might be imposed, or in addition to any sentence that was imposed if that sentence had expired. Why is it necessary to add those words?

Mr. Fulton: The answer to that is that we have included here the additional principle of providing that the crown may make application subsequent to conviction and sentence. We felt, in conformity with the intent of the McRuer commission's recommendation, that after the accused had been sentenced to a determinate period and the application was granted, then the court should impose an indeterminate sentence in lieu of the determinate sentence that had already been imposed. I think this carries out the intent of the McRuer recommendation, varying only because of the circumstances which we now are including, and which were not contemplated by the McRuer commission.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, there is a principle of law that once a trier has heard a case and has come to a conclusion he is functus. In this case, where the judge has tried the matter, has convicted and imposed a short term of sentence, following which an application is made, within the three-month period, to another judge to have the individual declared a dangerous sexual offender, the other judge may sentence the individual to an indeterminate period in lieu of the first sentence. In other words, the second judge, who has not been seized with the case at all, has the rights of an appeal court and can wipe out the determinate sentence and substitute an indeterminate sentence.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think there is anything contained here beyond the principle that a court of appeal may vary a sentence. All we are doing in principle is allowing a change in the sentence and providing by statute that, where a person is adjudged to be a dangerous sexual offender, the court that makes that finding shall impose an indeterminate sentence. The statute then says that the sentence is in lieu of the determinate sentence which may already have been imposed. I think this principle carries out the intention of the McRuer commission report.

Miss LaMarsh: It was my understanding that the only thing which could disturb a sentence, once properly made by a court with proper jurisdiction, was an order of the court of appeal or the exercise of executive clemency. However, this clause states in part:

> Where the court finds that the accused is a dangerous sexual offender it shall—impose upon the accused a sentence of preventive detention in lieu of any other sentence that might be imposed—

That seemed to involve a major departure from the usual practice.

Mr. Fulton: I suggest this clause tidies up the situation.

If my hon. friend's point has relation to the suggestion that the statute should say instead of "in lieu of any other sentence" that the sentence shall take the place of an earlier sentence, that might well have been said; but I would suggest that is just a matter of words. It is a new court trying a new issue, the issue of whether or not the accused is a dangerous sexual offender or habitual criminal. That is the only issue that that court is trying. That court is not retrying the question of guilt or innocence on the original charge. The statute says that if you find he is in one of these two categories then you shall impose an indeterminate sentence which shall be in lieu of the determinate sentence that was previously imposed.

Miss LaMarsh: Can the minister think of an analogy involving anything now existing in the criminal law which supports this?

Mr. Fulton: I do not think so.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.
