Mr. Meeson's Will.

CHAPTER V. "THE KANGAROO."

It was on Tuesday evening that a mighty vessel was steaming majestically out of the mouth of the Thames and shaping her imposing course straight at the ball of the setting sun.

As she stood there, holding on to a station to steady herself, for the vessel, large as she was, had begun to get a bit of a roll on, she was suddenly aware of a bulky figure of a man, which came running, or rather reeling, against the bulwarks alongside of her, where it—or rather he—was instantly and violently slung. Augusta was, not unreasonably, almost horrified into following the figure's example, when, suddenly growing faint or from some other cause, it loosed its hold and rolled into the scuppers, where it lay feebly swaying. Augusta, obeying a tender impulse of humanity, hurried forward and stretched out the hand of succor, and presently, between her help and that of the bulwark nettings, the man struggled to his feet. As he did so his face came close to hers, and in the dim light she recognized the fat coarse features, now blanched with misery, of Mr. Meeson, the publisher. There was no doubt about it. It was her enemy; the man whose behavior had indirectly, as she believed, caused the death of her little sister. She dropped her hand with an exclamation of disgust and dismay, and as he did so he recognized who she was.

"Halloo!" he said, with a faint and rather feeble attempt to assume his fine old created publishing-company manners. "Halloo! Miss Jimmie—Smithers, I mean; what on earth are you doing here?"

"I am going to New Zealand, Mr. Meeson," she answered, sharply; "and I certainly did not expect to have the pleasure of your company on the voyage."

"Going to New Zealand?" he said, "are you? Why, so am I, at least, I am going there first, then to Australia. What do you mean to do there—try and run round our little agreement, eh? It won't be any good, I tell you plainly. We have our agents in New Zealand, and a house in Australia, and if you try to get the better of Meeson's there, Meeson's will be even with you, Miss Smithers—oh, heavens! I feel as though I were coming to pieces."

"Don't alarm yourself, Mr. Meeson," she answered, "I am not going to publish any more books at present."

"That is a pity," he said, "because your stuff is good selling stuff. Any publisher would find money in it. I suppose you are second-class, Miss Smithers, so we shan't see much of each other; and, perhaps, if we should meet, it might be as well if we didn't seem to have any acquaintance. It don't look well for a man in my position to know second-class passengers, especially young lady passengers who write novels."

"You need not be afraid, Mr. Meeson; I have no wish to claim your acquaintance," said Augusta.

At this point her enemy was taken violently overboard, and being unable to stand the sight and sound of his writing and grating, she fled forward; and, reflecting on this strange and awkward meeting, went down to her own berth, where, with lunch intervals, she remained helpless and half stupid for the next three days. On the fourth day, however, she reappeared on deck, quite recovered and with an excellent appetite. She had her breakfast, and then went out and sat forward in as quiet a place as she could find. She was so used to see Mr. Meeson any more, and she did want to escape from the stories of her cabin mate, the lady's maid. This good woman went, after the manner of her kind, insist upon repeating to her a succession of histories connected with members of the families with whom she had lived, many of which were sufficient to make the hair of a respectable young lady like Augusta stand positively on end. No doubt they were interesting to her in her capacity of a novelist; but as they were all of the same color, and as their tendency was absolutely to destroy any belief she might have in virtue as an inherent quality in highly developed women, or honor in man, Augusta soon wanted of these chronic scandalous. So she went forward, and was sitting looking at the "white horses" chasing each other across the wavy plain, and reflecting upon what the condition of mind of these ladies whose histories she had recently heard would be if they knew that their most secret, and in some cases disgraceful and tragic, love affairs were the common talk of a dozen servants' halls, when suddenly she was astonished by the appearance of a splendid official bearing a book. At first, from the quantity of gold lace with which his uniform was adorned, Augusta took him to be the captain, but it presently transpired that he was only the chief steward.

"Please, miss," he said, touching his hat and holding out the book in his hand toward her, "the captain sends his compliments and wants to know if you are the young lady who wrote this."

Augusta glanced at the work. It was a copy of "Jimmie's Vow." Thus she replied that she was the writer of it, and the steward vanished.

Later in the morning came another surprise. The port-cabin official appeared, touched his cap, and said that the captain desired him to say that orders had been given for her things to be moved to a cabin further aft. At first Augusta demurred to this, not from any love of the lady's maid, but because she had a truly British objection to being ordered about.

"Captain's orders, miss," said the man, touching his cap again, and she yielded.

Nor had she any cause to regret doing so; for, to her huge delight, she found herself moved into a charming deck cabin on the starboard side of the vessel, some little way aft the engine-room. It was evidently an officer's cabin, for there, over the head of the bed, was the picture of the young lady he addressed, and also some neatly fitted shelves of books, a rack of telescopes, and other seaman-like contrivances.

"Am I to have this cabin to myself?" asked Augusta of the steward.

"Yes, miss; those are the captain's orders. It is Mr. Jones' cabin. Mr. [Continued on 4th page.]

FOR DYSPEPSIA, Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is an effective remedy, as numerous testimonials conclusively prove. "For two years I was a constant sufferer from dyspepsia and liver complaint. I doctored a long time and the medicines prescribed, in nearly every case, only aggravated the disease. An apothecary advised me to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I did so, and was cured at a cost of $5. Since that time it has been my family medicine, and sickness has become a stranger to our household. I believe it to be the best medicine on earth."

T. F. McNulty, Hackensack, N. J., Summer 27, Lowell, Mass.

FOR SLEPPY, Ayer's Sarsaparilla

In a certain case, when the complaint originated in impoverished blood, "I was a great sufferer from a low condition of the blood and general debility, becoming finally so reduced that I was unfit for work. Nothing that I did for the complaint helped me so much as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, a few bottles of which restored me to health and strength. I take every opportunity to recommend this medicine in similar cases to our household."

FOR ERUPTIONS, Ayer's Sarsaparilla

And all disorders originating in impurity of the blood, such as boils, carbuncles, pimples, blotches, salt-rheum, scald-head, scrofulous sores, and the like, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Continued from 1st p. The second officer, out he has turned in with Mr. Thomas, the first officer, and given up the cabin to you. "I can assure it is very kind of Mr. Thomas," murmured Augusta, not knowing what to make of this turn of events. But she was not to be deterred. A few minutes afterwards, just as she was leaving the cabin, a gentleman in uniform came up, in whom she recognized the captain. He was accompanied by a pretty, fair-haired woman very becomingly dressed.

"Excuse me, Miss Smithers, I believe," he said, with a bow. "I am Captain Alton. I hope you like your new cabin. Let me introduce you to Lady Holmurst, wife of Lord Holmurst, the New Zealand governor, you know. Lady Holmurst, this is Miss Smithers, whose book you were talking to me about."

"Oh! I am delighted to make your acquaintance, Miss Smithers," said the lady, in a manner that evidently was not assumed. "Captain Alton had promised that I should sit next to you at dinner, and then we can have a good talk. I don't know when I have been so much delighted with anything, as I was with your book. I have read it three times; what do you think of that for a busy woman?"

"I think there is some mistake," said Augusta, hurriedly, with a slight blush. "I can assure you that I am not on board this ship, and therefore can not have the pleasure of sitting next to Lady Holmurst."

"Oh, that is all right, Miss Smithers," said the captain, with a jolly laugh. "You are my guest, and I shall take no denial."

"When we find guests for once in our lives, we are not going to lose the opportunity of sitting at its feet," added Lady Holmurst, with a little movement toward her which was neither courtesy nor bow, but rather a happy combination of both. The compliment was, Augusta felt, sincere, however much it exaggerated the measure of her poor capacities, and, putting other things aside, was coming as if from one of those women to another, possibly graceful and surprising. She blushed and bowed, scarcely knowing what to say, when suddenly Mr. Meeson's hand touched her, and she found herself in a respectful key, broke upon her ear. Mr. Meeson was addressing her in a person that Lord Holmurst, G. G. M. G. Lord Holmurst was a stout, short, dark little man, with a somewhat pompous manner and a kindly face. He was a colonial governor of the first water, and was perfectly aware of it.

"Now, a colonial governor even though he is a G. G. M. G. when he is at home, is not a name, to conjure with, and does not fill an extensive place in the eyes of the English world. There are many colonial governors in the present and past times to be found in the ordinary English individual, and puts on the body of the colonial brotherhood. In short, from being nobody out of the common, he becomes, and very properly so, a great man. Nobody knew this better than Lord Holmurst, who was a person fond of observing such things, nothing could have been more curious to notice than the small but gradual increase in the pomposity of his manner, as the great ship day by day steamed further from England and nearer to the country where he was king. It went up, degree by degree, like a thermometer which is taken down into the bowels of the earth or gradually removed into the sunlight. At present, however, the thermometer was only rising."

"It was repeating, my lord," said the harsh voice of Mr. Meeson, "that the principle of an hereditary peerage is the greatest principle our country has yet developed. It gives us something to look forward to. In one generation we make the money; in the next we take the title which the money buys. Look at your lordship. Your lordship is now in a proud position; but, as I have understood, your lordship's father was a trades like me."

"Hem!—well, not exactly, Mr. Meeson," broke in Lord Holmurst. "Dear me, I wonder who that exceedingly nice-looking girl Lady Holmurst is talking to?"

"Now, your lordship, to put a case, I went on the remotest Meeson, who, like most people of his stamp, had an almost superstitious veneration for the aristocracy. "I have made a great deal of money, as I do not mind telling your lordship, what is there to prevent my success—supposing I have a necessary amount of money, and I am not rising on it to a similar position to that so worthily occupied by your lordship?"

"Exactly, Mr. Meeson. An excellent idea for your successor. Excuse me, but I see Lady Holmurst looking to me." And he fled precipitately, still followed by Mr. Meeson.

"John, my dear," said Lady Holmurst, "I want to introduce you to Miss Smithers—the Miss Smithers whom we have all been talking about and whose book you have been reading. Miss Smithers, my husband!"

Lord Holmurst, who, when he was not deep in the affairs of state, had a considerable eye for a pretty girl—and what man worthy of the name has not?—bowed most politely, was proceeding to tell Augusta, in very charming language, how delighted he was to make her acquaintance, when Mr. Meeson arrived on the scene and perceived Augusta for the first time. Quite taken aback at finding her, apparently, upon the best of terms with people of such quality, he hesitated to consider what course to adopt, whereas Lady Holmurst, in a somewhat formal way, for she was not very fond of Mr. Meeson, mistaking his hesitation went on to introduce him. Thereupon, all in a moment, as we do sometimes take such resolutions, Augusta came to a determination. She would have nothing more to do with Mr. Meeson—she would repudiate him then and there, come what would of it.

So, in an address upon her with outstretched hand, she drew herself up, and in a cold and determined voice said: "I already know Mr. Meeson, Lady Holmurst; and I do not wish to have anything more to do with him. Mr. Meeson has not behaved well to me."

"Then my word," murmured Lord Holmurst to himself, "I don't wonder she has had enough of him. Sensible young woman, that!"

Lady Holmurst looked a little astonished and a little amused. Suddenly, however, a light broke upon her. "Oh! I see," she said. "I suppose that Mr. Meeson published 'Jemima's Yew.' Of course that accounts for it. Why, I declare there is the dinner-bell! Come along, Miss Smithers, or we shall lose the place that the captain has promised us." And, accordingly, they went, leaving Mr. Meeson, who had not yet fully realized the unprecedented nature of the position, positively gasping on the deck. And on board the "Kangaroo" there were no clerks and editors on whom he could wreak his wrath!

"And now, my dear Miss Smithers," said Lady Holmurst, when dinner being over, they were sitting together in the moonlight, near the wheel, "perhaps you will tell me why you don't like Mr. Meeson, whom, by the way, I personally detest. But don't, if you don't wish to, you know."

"Well, upon my word," said Lady Holmurst, when she had listened with tears in her eyes to the history of poor little Jemima's death, "upon my word, of all the brutes I ever heard of, I think that this publisher of yours is the worst! I will not let him, and get my husband out of me. But no, I have a better plan than that. He shall tear up that agreement, so sure as my name is Bessie Holmurst; he shall tear it up, or—"

and she nodded her little head with an air of infinite wisdom.
