HOMEWARD

How strange, while the sleeping city lies, Silent around me, from the sombre skies The birds of passage send their vague, weird cries.

And, like the wings of phantoms in a dream. Where the dim street-lamp throws its tardies Their pinions flash and vanish in the gleam.

For lonely coverts, screened by sedge and brake On the black margin of some northern lake, The wild fowl now the lotus-isles forsake;

And down the ranks that waver in his rear Their toil-worn leader sends his hail of cheer: "Courage, O! comrades, for we homeward steer !"

In climes where soft the languid zephyr blows, Laden with scent of orange bloom and rose. Where warm and bright perpetual summer

No charm for discontent the swallow learns; Still for the lowly cottage-caves she yearns, And to her ruder north she still returns.

So howsoe'er our vagrant hearts may roam, Grieved and unsatisfied they always come Gladly at last to nestle safe at home.

That promises release. No solitude so drear but yields its store Of thought and inward peace. No night so wild but brings the constant sun

With love and power untold. No time so dark but through its woof there run Some blessed threads of gold.

And through the long and storm-t burn, In changing calm and strife, The Pharos-lights of truth, where'er we turn— The unquenched lamps of life.

O Love Supreme! O Providence Divine! What self-adjusting springs Of law and life—what even scales are thine— What sure-returning wings

Of hopes and joys, that flit like birds away, When chilling Autumn blows, But come again, long ere the buds of Spring Their rosy lips unclose !

What wondrows play of mood and accident Through shifting days and years; What fresh meturns of vigor overspent In feverish dreams and fears.

What wholesome air of conscience and of though When doubts and forms oppress. What visits opening to the gate we sought Beyond the wilderness-
