EXTRACT FROM MRS. PALMER'S LAST LETTER When we wrote our last we were on the Isle of Wight. The religious thermometer in the South of England has been very low. It appears to have been for this reason, that the friends of vital religion expressed so much solicitude in bringing us to these parts. Revival efforts seem scarcely to have been entered upon by any denomination. We found more fallow ground to be broken than in the north of England. But we pray to be sent where most needed, and we do not question but the Lord of the vineyard led us to the beautiful Isle of Wight.

Such a work was never witnessed there be formation from Sicily as to the openings for the fore. Perhaps you have seen some accounts of pread of the Gospel. Sister, I'll Remember Thee. Childhood's home we shared together, Hand in hand we plucked its flowers ; Sunny skies and stormy weather. Shared our fleeting youthful hours. All its cares as well as pleasures, Thou did'st sweetly share with me-'Mong the dearest of life's treasures, Sister, I'll remember thee.

Sharing smiles and tears together, Lengthened years have come and gone, And their changes, often bitter, We in mutual love have borne. But should life its arrows double All its pleasures blasted be, In the darkest hour of trouble. Sister, I'll remember thee.

Should the Savior call thee homeward, First in glory bright to rise ; First, to join those dearest loved ones, Who have left us for the skies ; Then a spirit bright, oft lingering Round my home, methinks I see, As my watchful, guardian angel, Sister, then I'll think of thee.

Then I'll linger where you're sleeping, Listening close to hear you call, While thy spirit's gentle breathings, On my heart in music falls, And thy sweet, angelic whispering-Oh, how cheering then to me, In this sweet and blest assurance, Sister, I'll remember thee.

But that whisper-some thing tells me, Of the rapid flight of time, And it speaks of my departure, Even nearer still than thine. Should the Savior sooner call me, And from earth my spirit free. In that home of light or glory, Sister. I'll remember thee

Fare the well; perchance we never-Never here may meet again ; But can time or distance sever. Deathless love's cemented chain No! our hearts in sweetest union, Mingling still where'er we be, Bound in friendship's sweet communion Sister, I'll remember thee.

Even death shall not divide us. For in Jesus we are one, And we'll praise him there together Midst that bright and shining throng. In that sweet and heavenly union, Where the ransomed all agree, Spirit there with spirit mingling, Sister, I'll remember thee.
