THE COREAN KING A PRISONER

inese Steamers Prevented From Landing-Others, Manned by Coolies, On Their Way

LONDON, July 27.—The Central News has this despatch from Shanghai: "War has been declared between Japan and China. The Japanese have selzed the King of Corea and hold him prisoner. Eleven Chinese steamers are on their way to Corea. Most of the troops aboard them are Coolies armed with bows and arrows. Some Chinese steamers which have arrived at Corea have been prevented by the Japanese from landing troops. It is reported that the Japanese artillery sunk soveral of them.

LONDON, July 26.—The Japanese and Chinese officials have received many despatches from their home government. While declining to say much of the tenor of these despatches, the officials state that the prospect of an agreement between China and Japan remains satisfactory.

LONDON, July 28.—A telegram received at the office of the Peninsula and Oriental Steamship Company says positively that war has been declared between China and Japan and that hostilities have commenced.

Several morning dailes print this de-menced.

Several morning dailies print this despatch from Tien-Tsin:
"War has not been declared officially either in Tokio or Pekin. It is believed in government circles that it will not be deeither in Tokio or Pekin. It is believed in government circles that it will not be declared for several days. If the exchange of notes now proceeding result amicably the collisions that have already taken place will be mutually disallowed; otherwise they will be regarded as caus belil. The transport, which was sunk by the Japanese, was the Kow-Shung, owned by Mathison & Co. It is reported that all were lost. The Mathiesons have taken over a number of Chinese coasting vessels; hereafter they will sail their steamers under the British flag.

"Telegraphing between Japan and Corea has been stopped; therefore no direct reports can be obtained in Yokohama, where nothing is known of a declayation of war. The Japanese authorities stopped on Sunday the Nagasaki mail steamer bound for Shanghai."

day the Naçasaki mail steamer bound for Shanghai."

New York, July 28.—A San Francisco special says: Lucius H. Foote, who was United States hinister to Corea from 1983 to 1886, gives the following statement in regard to the Corean troubles: Japan has undoubtedly invaded Corea for the purpose of weakening the influence of China in that kingdom, and with the expectation of strengthening her own political and commercial importance there. For centuries China has dominated neighboring states, more by her finesse than by her prowess. She has long claimed and still continues to claim, notwith shadding the treaties made with western powers, suzerainty over Corea. This claim Japan has constantly ignored, until it his come to be an exceedingly sensitive question between the two nations. Corea occupies to the orient much the same relation that Turkey does to Europe. Aware of her own weakness and impressed with the supremacy of China, she has looked to that ampire for moral. the same relation that lurkey duces be Europe. Aware of her own weakness and impressed with the supremacy of China, she has looked to that empire for moral and physical support. The influence of China has therefore been paramount and has perhaps been exercised adversely to Japan. War between Japan and Corea would necessarily involve China. If Japan was victorious it would virtually destroy China's influence on the peninsula and give to Japan that value which she desires. give to Japan that value which site desires.

Montreal Merchant Instantly Killed.

Montreal, July 28.—James Richardson, a well-known business man, and member of the former wholesale leather firm of Hna, Richardson & Co., was killed outright by the Sorel train on the Montreal & Borel railway at Léngueuil. Mr. Richardson, who was very hard of hearing, was walking along the track when the train caught up to him, and before it could be stopped he was struck. washington, July 26.—The warehouse and stables of the George W. Knox Express Company, occupying over a quarter of a block at Second and B streets northwest, were destroyed by fire yesterday. Three firemen lost their lives. Over 200 heavy draught horses, nearly all of the company's express wagons and the contents of the large storage building were burned. The Adams Express Company's stable, adjoining the Knox building to the north, was also almost entirely consumed. About 150 horses were there, but all were taken out by the hardest kind of work on the part of the citizens and policemen. Eight two-storey houses on the alley north of the Knox building and two small frame houses back of the Adams stables were destroyed. Six or eight other houses were more or less damaged. The total loss will exceed a quarter of a million dollars, about half covered by insurance.

The fire was discovered at 2,20 a.m. A number of men who were sleeping in the Knox building were awakened by smoke. They found the entire rear of the second floor of the building in flames, and had hardly time to escape with their lives. Five minutes later a general alarm was turned in and in five minutes more the entire fire department of the city was on-hand. The horses of the Knox Company could not be reached. There were 200 of them, and they were on the second storey of the binding to the fire eccurred. The firemen had carried their hose into the burning warehouse through one of the large rear doors. This door was held up by weighted ropes and the men had just entered this door when the ropes burned through and the heavy wooden door fell penning them in. The work of cutting through the door was immediately begun and was all but finished when the floors above fell with a crash. The immense weight burst out the door and crushed three of the firemen to death. Three others were with difficulty dragged out of the debris alive.

OTTAWA, July 24,—The speech from the brone at the prorogation of Parliament esterday was delivered by the Governor-leneral with unusual brevity, and was as

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate—Gentlemen of the House of Commons:
In bringing to a conclusion this laborious session of Parliament, I have to thank you for the assiduity and zeal with which you have attended to the various matters which have been brought before you. I congratulate you upon the notable fact that the invitation which my Government extended to the Governments of the other colonies to send representatives to Canada to confer on matters affecting their mutual interests was so promptly accepted; and that her, Majesty's Government also suhanced the dignity and usefulness of the conference by sending a representative to assist at its deliberations. It is confidently hoped that the results of the conference conference by sending a representance of assist at its deliberations. It is confidently hoped that the results of the conference will be found beneficial to the colonies and to the empire generally. The ratification of the treaty of commerce with France will lead, I hope, to a large increase in our exports and an extension of friendly relations with that company. I trust that the ardnous work which has engaged, you have administ the duties of oustoms will accomplish the desired result of adapting the tariff to the present conditions of the various classes of our population.

The statutes of the session will show that the laws affecting many public interests have been revised and greatly improved by your efforts, and I observe that you have likewise made generous provision for public improvements which are designed to increase the facilities for travel and transportation throughout the country;

Gentlemen of the House of Commons: I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the services of the current, year.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate—Gentlemen of the House of Commons of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from your present duties, I pray that your labors may be fruitful and of benefit to the country, and that on returning to your homes you will find that a generous harvest is about to reward the toil of our farmers, and that the blessings of Providence have been likewise be towed abundantly on all the other interests of the people whom you represent. of the people whom you represent.

" DEBS FOR CONGRESS." The Strike Leader Addresses a Labor

CHICAGO, July 27.—The directors of the of delegates of the local unions to be held at Uhlich Hall in this city on August 2 to at Unifeh Hall in this city on August 2 to determine whether the strike shall be continued or abandoned. Each delegate will be instructed by his union before attending the convention how his colleagues feel on the question and he will have full subority to act for them. This will relieve the directors of direct responsibility and inetdentally accomplish the purpose of Debe. Howard, Kellher and Rogers without laying them liable to another case of contempt of court.

After the board adjourned the directors steaded a meeting of local strikers at Unlich hall, 2,000 men being present. The cheers which went up on Debs entrance could be heard several blocks away. Debs told his fellow railway men that if the rulings of Judge Woods were correct in the United States Circuit Court then the laborer was no longer a free man and had no right to defend and protect himself, but was a common slave to capital, and had no right to do other than as his employer ordered. He said he did not believe the ruling of the judge was sound, but that if it was, the only thing left to do was to muster their forces and carry to the polls a man who would bring about an amendment to the constitution which would give them their liberty, could be avoided, as the two temales might be as much of a capture as they could surely and safely make in that place.

As he had premised, Toletti led the way to the apartment where the girls slept, and by careful management they were so effectually smothered before they awoke, that they could give no immediate alarm, and thus were they borne away from the cavern, and led down the mountain, the gags being kept upon their mouths until they had gob-very near to the river, where horses were in waiting. As soon as Rosabel could speak she begged for mercy, but the robbers would not listen to her. One of the villains, however, more bold than the rest, whispered into her ear that if she would go with him he would save her from the clutches of the duke. She turned eagerly towards him to find out what he meant. He meant that she should go with him and be his, and he was beginning to swear eternal fidelity and love, when she turned from him in disgust and horror. She asked no more favors at the hands of the robbers, but suffered herself to be lifted to a saddle, in which condition she was borne away towards Milan, and early in the following day she was lodged in her own apartments in the ducal palace, Hippolita still bearing her company. But the companions were not to remain long together. At noon a messenger came from Hugh de Castro and led Hippolita away, conducting her book to the dwelling of her master, where she was confined in a close apartment, with an old black woman to keen watch over her. Towards evening

"I did."
"I did."
"What induced you to do such a thing?"
"That I might make some atonement for a grievous wrong which I had helped to do. When I led Vendorme to that dangeon, I did not dream of the horrible doom that awaited him. Had you told me that, no power could have induced me to help you. I helped you ignorantly, but I was not ignorant when I helped the sufferer."
"Upon my soul, girl, you are frank."
"I can afford to be so."
"Then be as frank in answering me further. Where is Orlando Vendorme?"

De Castro clenched his fist, and struck the "Lay there, insolent wench!" he muttered, "and when I come again you will learn to answer me with more propriety. I do not leave you now because you have conquered, but because I have not the time to waste ed, but-because I have not the time to waste with you." Thus speaking he left the room, closing and locking the door after him.

It was well into the evening, and Rosabel of Bergamo had slept several hours. She arose, and found a woman in attendance upon her. It was not one of her own women, but a servant whom the princess had seen at work in the garden.

"Why are you here?" Rosabel asked, when she recollected where she was, and what had traspired.

when she recollected where she was, and what had traspired.

"I am here to wait upon you," was the reply, delivered in a rough, impudent way.
"And I suppose you are also here to keep guard over me?"
"No. There are soldiers in the passage who do that. But I can get supper for you, if you want it."

"I want nothing to eat. You may bring me some drink."

"I want nothing to eat. You may bring me some drink."

The woman brought the drink, and Rosabel then told her she might retire.

"I cannot do it lady. I am ordered to remain in the room with you."

The princess was offended, but she had too much sense of pride to show any resentment, so she withdrew to a window which overlooked one of the gardens, and sat down. She had not been thus seated many minutes before the door was opened, and the duke made his appearance. The attendant was dismissed apd Manfred then turned to his ward, whom he regarded for some little time in silence.

in silence.
"Well," he at length said, biting off the word as though language were insufficient to express his feelings. "So you are back." The princess bowed her head, and made no reply. She had determined upon the course she would pursue, and she sought the strength that might enable her to bear

Manfred started angrily, and he seemed ready to smite the maiden with his fist.

"No, no," he said, "you shall not move me from my propriety. You are crazy, you are an idiot, you are a fool! But, my fair lady, let me tell you that men have been sent back after your gallant champion, and let me assure you that he will be taken, too, and when he is taken, he will be amply rewarded for the pains he has expended on your account. Perhaps you can imagine what the character of that reward will be."

A sense of faintness overcame the princess for a moment. She could understand what would be Vendorme's fate if he fell into the tyrant's power, and the thought was terrible. But she struggled up from the blow, and looked the duke once more in the face.

said; "and I can imagine all the interest you would make; so you can spare me the pain of hearing them."
"Yery well. Enough, then, of Vendorme until I can tell you exactly what has become of him. And now to another matter. I propose to have you married as soon as possible. It should be done this very might, but for my own convenience I must put to off until the day after to-morrow, when you will give your hand to Ludovice. Do you think, you can escape this time?"

You may so far make me a wife as to lay hands upon my estates of Bergamo; but in my soul a wife to Ludovico no power of earth can ever make me."

"Beware girl" said the duke, pressing his hand upon her shoulder. "You know not what you say. If you give not your soul to this marriage, you give it to perdition."

wards the old woman entered and resumed her watch.

Rosabel might have wept if she had been alone; but she would not shed tears in the presence of the unsympathiting sentinel. She retired to ber inner chamber, where she soon sought her couch; and as she rested her head upon her pillow, she offered up new prayers to Heaven. She prayed that God would have meroy upon her; but a more fervent prayer was breathed for Orlando Vendorme.

"And you set him free from his dungeon?"

"I did."

"What induced you to do such a thing?"

"That I might make some atonement for a grievous wrong which I had helped to do.

"Yes," said Manfred, rubbing his hands with evident satisfaction. "Crescentius and the Pope are both with me; and their in fluence cannot be well overcome. His Holiness will be here to-morrow, and will, in person, solemnize your marriage."

Upon this Ludovicor ubbed his hands, and declared that things were working better than he had even dared to hope. He had just spoken to this effect, when Hngh de Castro entered the apartment.

"How wow, my captain?" eriod the duke.

"What brings you in such haste?"

"Then you are the greater fool. I tell you, Master Vendorme, the time is not far distant when our free band will be able to shake the petty thrones of Lombardy. However, you need not fret yourself with the idea of loss, for I could not make you the offer if I would. You are not my prison. "Who is he?"

De Castro cast his eyes over the apart.

"Whose am I. then?"

De Castro cast his eyes over the apart-"We are alone," said Manfred.
"The man is named Pietro Bonzo. He is ne of the robbers."

Does he bring us news of Vendorme?"

one of the robbers."

"Yoes be bring us news of Vendorme?"

"Yes."

In a very few moments de Castro introduced the robber into the ducal presențe. He was habited in the garb of a peasant, but his face told well enough what he was.

"Well, sir," said Manfred, not at all shocked by the association, "what word do you bring?"

"My lord duke," replied the outlaw, bowing very slightly as he spoke, "a reward was offered to us on condition that we would find Rossabel of Bergamo, and sestore her to your keeping; and another reward was offered for the capture of Orlando Vendorme. The lady has been restored to you. And, furthermore, Vendorme has been taken; but, as we were not directed to bring him hither, we have secured him, and are ready to produce him when it may so please you."

"So works the matter still in our favor,"

De Castro nodded in approval of the sug-gestion.

"If do not see," continued his highness,
"what need there is of having much more trouble with him."

The captain nodded again.
"If I am not mistaken sir," the duke said, addressing the robber, "you do not love your prisoner much."

"We owe him nothing but vengeance, my lod."

"We owe him nothing but vengeance, my lord."

"Then you may earn your reward easily. You can act the peasant, and I will give orders to the guard to allow you to pass with fruit for the palace. You can bring the fruit in panniers, can you not?"

"Yes, my lord."

"And in a pannier, covered with citron leaves, you can bring me the head of Orlando Vendorme?"

"Yes."

"Yes."
"Mind—I want only the head. I want it brought secretly and punctually. I would behold it with my own eyes."
"And so would I," added Ludovico, with a gesture of mad delight. "I would give more to see the unbodied head of Orlando Vendorme than I would to see the emperor at my feet."
"It is a safe and righteous decision," said de Castro.

You shall have it to-morrow."

"At what time?"

"As early as possible. I said that I could bring the prisoner hither alive by the rising of the sun; but if I must find fruit, and prepare panniers, it may take some time longer. But it shall be sometime tomorrow." "Remember—when the head is delivered,

"There shall be no failure," replied the robber emphatically. When Pietro Botiza was dismissed from the ducal presence, he made his way out from the city as quickly as possible, and started upon his return mission. He stopped at Monza to transact a little business with one of the robber agents, and just as the sun was sinking he reached the place where he had left his companions with their prisoner. He found one of the band there, but no more.

"It is known that they had been making inquiries about us, and they were coming directly towards us. However, I have not seen them yet, and I know not where they are. In all probability they have pushed on to the south."

"Hold—nere he comes. Now you can ask him."

A dark-visaged, powerfully framed man, wearing an ostrich plume in his velvet cap, approached the spot where the prisoner sat. This was Lanzilla, the chief of the robbers. He had, in former years, been a knight of Mantua; but a great crime had subjected him to the loss of his spurs; and, seeking the Alpine banditti, he had joined their number, and finally risen to be their leader. He stood by the prisoner's side, and looked down into his pain-marked face.

"Orlando Vendorme," he said, "do you remember when you were first banished from Milan, that you met me by the bank of the Savesor."

"If you will have it so—yes."
"And will you conduct me to him?" "Not yet."
"What will you do?"

"What will you do?"
"Ere long you shall see."
"One word, sir," cried the captive, as Lanzilla turned to move away. "Will you not loosen the bond upon my arms?"
"Yes,—but not now!"
What did he mean? Why did he answer so abruptly, and stride away so suddenly? What was to be done? Orlando turned to a man who stood near, and asked him which way they meant to move. The man looked at him, and shook his head, vouchsafing no other answer.

way any mean to move. The man looked at him, and shook his head, vouchsafing no at the latter answer.

In a little while the robber chieftain returned, accompanied by two of his companions. He looked more stern than before, and upon his brow there was a dark scowl.

"Orlando Vendorme," he said, "I had thought of sending you your way without giving you any notice thereof; but my companions have overruled me. For my part, I forgive you for the work you once did against us; but not so with the others. My lieutenant leads in the determination to make you suffer."

"Aye;" interposed a stout, dark-visaged man, moving forward as he spoke, "I have not forgotten that my own brother fell by this fellow's hands. I am not so forgiving."

"Nor I," added another of the robbers.

The duke exhibited no anger at the maiden's freedom of speech. He was rather pleased than otherwise by her surrender.

"No,—you would have been a free and independent man, owing allegiance to no earthly monarch; and only governed by a chief of your own choice. But your choice was not with us. Perhaps you remember the next time you met me?"

"Yes," said Orlando. "I helped a party of gentlemen whom you had attacked; and I suppose you now intend to have ample revenge."

"Ah," returned Lanzilla, shaking his had."

"An returned Lanzilla, shaking his had." asked.

"If Blanche can come and help me."

Manfred promised to send the girl; and shortly after he withdrew she came.

"My dear lady," Blanche said, with tears in her eyes, "I cannot help you. We are watched upon all hands, and—"

"Stop," interrupted the princess. "I only wish you to help me dress. The time for other help is gone. But I would ask you one question: Do you know if anything has been heard from Orlando Venderme?"

"I have heard nothing."
"That is all. You may bring my dress

"That is all. You may bring my dress now."

The girl proceeded with her work in silence, and when her mistress was arrayed in her bridal robes she stood back and wiped her eyes.

"I wish to be alone a moment, Blanche."

The attendant withdrew to the bed-room, and then Rosabel went to her dressing-case and took from a secret drawer the little dagger which Vendorme had given to her.

"This may be my last friend of earth!" "This may be my last friend of earth!" she murmured, as she gazed upon the sharp, glittering point. The wicked prince of Milan shall never know-Rosabel as a wife—

She hid the dagger in her bosom, and not long afterwards a messenger arrived from the duke.

John XVII., the Pope of Rome, stood by the duke's side in the apartment where it had been arranged that the marriage ceremony should be performed.

"Ha, ha," said Manfred, as the sound of distant tumult fell upon his ear, "my people are already making merry on the occasion. They shall have a glorious time of it when the marriage is over."

Nawana, China, Juna.—I understand that people in the civilized western world-are patting themselves on the back at their success in economizing during the present hard times. They don't know what economy is. They should take a trip to China and learn something of the science of saving. The expense of living is here raduced to a minimum, and these Chingse millions would grow fat on what the thrifty French and Germans wasts. The food for a poor man in Nanking costs him no more than two cents a day, and at four dollars a month a man will support a family and lay up money. I met a fat, jolly-looking Chinaman this morning who told me he had a wife and five children, and his income was sufficient for all his wants. He carned about two gold dollars a month as a carpenter, and his wife makes one dollar more by going out to work. It costs five cents a day to feed a patient in the Methodist Hospital here, and a farmer may be hired for from ten to twelve dollars a year, provided he has his rice, his headshaving and his toheoco. It costs about five dollars a year to buy the wardrobe of a common laborer, and a Chinaman will put on flesh on a dollar a month. The majority of the people of this part of China are well fed and well dressed. They have good faces, and they are, I believe, far happier than the average laborers in North America. They seem to enoy their lives and their families, and they are far above the average of the world in their manners and culture. I have mixed indiscriminately among them and find them polite and kindly. They orowd about me wherever I go. They finger my clothes, and when I take a photograph or stop to write a note, they almost block the street in their anxiety to see what the foreign barbarian is doing. Their curiosity, however, is free from malice, and they are not the fierce foreign devil-haters whom I met with further up the river. I find much in them to admire, and I wonder every day at their wonderful economies. Lot me mention a few of them.

In the first place in the way of fuel. Nearly all of the firse in Nanking are made of straw and reeds. Every whisp of dry grass is cut and saved. There are thousands of people who do nothing else but reap the reeds which grow along the banks of the Yangtee Kiang and bring then into the cities to sell. These reeds are as thick as the base of a walking sitck and are often fifteen feet long. They are cut and stacked up along the banks and from thence are carried up and down the river in flat-bottomed boats. Such wood as is used is ti-d up in little bunches and is sold by weight.

Chargoval is sometimes found, and I see CHINESE BLIND BEGGAR MUSICIANS.

used is tied up in little bunches and is sold by weight.

Charcoal is sometimes found, and I see here a d there little balls of coal dust about the size of a baseball. The powder-ed coal is mixed with mud and dried in this shape. No one in China, however, either rich or poor, thinks of keeping warm by means of fuel. There are no furnaces nor baseburners, and wadded clothing among the poor and fur garments among the rich keep out the cold. A fire is never built by a poor man except when it is absolutely necessary, and the hot water used for the tea and rice in the early morning is sold by hot water stores. You water used for the tea and rice in the early morning is sold by hot water stores. You can get a bucket of boiling water for one tenth of a cent, and there is one such store in Shanghai to every twenty families. A large amount of rice is cooked at one time, and the breakfast rice is warmed by the pouring of hot water or hot tea over it. Speaking of tea, there are tea shops or restaurants all over China, and you get very fair meals in these for small prices. The cooking ovens are at the entrance of the tea house, and you have often to pass the cooks in going in to your meal. The tea is put into cups and hot water poured over it. After you have swallowed half the cooks in going in to your moal. The tea is put into cups and hot water poured over it. After you have swallowed half of the contents the cup is filled with hot water, and one drawing of tea is supposed to last one customer for a meal. After he leaves the tea grounds are gathered up and dried. They are sold later on to poorer restaurants or to families, and nothing about the cook shop goes to waste. Even the water in which the potatoes are boiled and the other vegetables cooked is saved and sold for the feeding of hogs, and the bones taurants or to families, and nothing about the cook shop goes to waste. Even the water in which the pointoes are boiled and the other vegetables cooked is saved and sold for the feeding of hogs, and the bones of the meat are bought by the makers of copsticks. Mr. Forqueon, the president of the Nanking University, told me that he had for a long time trouble in getting any meat brought to his house with the begin it, and he found that butchers and the sain it, and he found that butchers are applied to the sain it, and he found that butchers are arrively from the meat itself. You see me mpty cans or bottles lying about the ion to of the foreigners of Nanking. The Chinese take them. They sell the bottles, and the tim of the cans is used by the timers. A large part of the tim used in China comes from the petroleum cans of the Standard Oil Company, and every bit of iron is worked up by the blacksmitis into knives and farming implements. A large part of the razors of China are made of od horse shoes, and these are broughthere by the ship load from Europe, and are carried to all parts of the smpire. After te Franco-prussian war they were torn from the feet of the horses killed in lattle and were brought here by the ship load from Europe, and are carried to all parts of the smpire. After the ship load from Europe, and are carried to all parts of the smpire. After the odd clothes man of China does a bigger business than his brothers of other parts of the world. There are streets of see ad-hand clothiers in every Chinese city, and clothes are sold over and over a am, until they get down to the beggars, but their end is not yet. After the beggars find them too poor for even their use they are sold as old rag, and are bought by the maker of shoes. The shoes of the me and boys of China have soles nearly an much thick, and these soles are made of rags, which have been washed and dried and then pasted layer upon layer, until they reach the thickness required. They are cut, then into shape and are so polished along the edges th and mix it with fresh-cotton for sale. Take a look at the barbers who stand on every street shaving the heads of all males from old men to bables. They receive from less than a cent to two cente a chave, according to the wealth and rank of their customer, but you note that they save the scrapings of the head, and these bits of hair are sold by them to furniture dealers for the making of cushions. It is the same with eatables. All sorts of greens are esten, cooked and raw, and a large number of the beggars are supported every winter by the government of the towns and villages, but as soon as spring comes this appropriation is dropped and they are literally turned out to grass.

As to beggars, there is no country in the world that has more impudent beggars than China, but I doubt whether in proportion to its population it has more than many parts of Europe. The Chinese beggars are, however, organized into bands. They have a trades union of their own, and they go into the business as a profession. They have their kings, and the cities are divided up into beats, and woe to the man who attempts to jump his brother beggar's claim. There is sure to be a ficht

As soon as the bargain was made the beggars at the back of the house went away and he has had no trouble since then. Here in Nanking there is a royal guild of beggars, established, it is said, by the Emperor Hung Wo, who beggan life as a beggar, and became one of the greatest emperors China ever had. The head of this guild can prevent a shop or a family being annoyed by the beggars, and there is a system of buying off the assaults of beggars, which prevail throughout Chins, and which exempts the man who pays from their visits. As it is, every one gives to the beggar.

The tricks and schemes which these beggars get up to screw money out of the people are legion. They multilate themselves in all sorts of waps to excite pity.

The Chinese are, however, far more charitable than is generally supposed. They take better care of their families than any other people of the world, and a man is supp-sed to aid his poorer relatives and to help them on in the world. With all the beggars there are, I venture, fewer unemployed people here in China to-day in proportion to its population than there are in the United States.

Our ideas of the Chinese, however, are crude in the extreme. This is a country of the rich as well as of the poor, and I see every hour the svidences of a social, intellectual and industrial life, which are different from any descriptions of China I have ever read, and which are interesting in the extreme. FRANK G. CARPENTER.

Baron and Baronet. Let me explain the difference in rank between a baron and a baronet. The latter is the lowest order of hereditary rank and entitles the holder to be addressed as Sir and his spouse as Lady. It is in point of procedure rank sixty-five and permits the holder to est in the House of Commons, whereas that of baron entitles the holder to the rank, title and dignity of My Lord, and a seat in the House of Lords. The style of address to the spouse of the holder of the title is still My Lady. The rank of baron is the lowest of the five orders of peers and entitles the family of the holder to be known and addressed as Honorable.—Philadelphia Times.

How Dehorning Originated.

Dehorning cattle did not originate from fashion as did the docking of horses, but from a necessity on the farm, the ranch, the cars and the boat. The goring of cattle costs the stook raiser hundreds of dollars annually. Packing for transit on cars is much safer if animals are polled or buffalo headed, and when it comes to packing cattle on board ocean cattle boats, the advantage is decidedly perceptible. When one animal with a weapon furnished by nature for protection gores another from our devilment, as is frequently the case on large cattle ranches, it is natural that the owner should interfere and remove the weapon,—Orange Judd Farmer.

The Quantity Required.

The Quantity Required, A couple of old stagers in the fish line went off on a fishing jaunt, and when they returned, one of them was telling "By George," he said, "we saw fifty snakes."

"Come off!" protested the listener.
"But I tell you we did, and I'll swear to it."
"And I say come off." insisted the listener. "You took along only a duart of liquor, and I know that it would require at least a gallon to get you two up to where you could see that many snakes."

"Chastity of Honor," Who is the original author of the phrase, "chastity of honor," used by Lord Rosebery on a recent occasion? Last week I mentioned that it had been used by Lord Beaconsfield. A correspondent of mine has now found the same phrase in Burke's "French Revolution." There is nothing very original or remarkable about the words by themselves, and they might easily be as old as Adam—if Adam had spoken English.—London Truth.

ing the wholesale extinction of snakes, entered the mind of one William Jones, who, up to that time, had been a poor farmer struggling to support a big family. Now he is one of the solid men of the country, and he made all his money by the successful execution of that idea. He knew that the ordinary razor back hog of Florida was a great natural enemy of snakes, and he set to work to systematically train a whole drove of hogs to hunt down and destroy the reptiles. In a little while he had his swine as thoroughly trained in their part as setter dogs are drilled to point quall. He first cleared his own farm of a vast quantity of big ones, and then he began to hire out his hogs to the neighbors who were snake afflicted. The fame of those razor-backs spread all over the land, and people whose places were infested with rattlesnakes and men who were clearing up new land sent for Jones hogs.

"This is no romance, for I talked with Jones himself, and he told me all about it and exhibited his book of engagements, which also contained a record of all the snakes slain for the past twelve months. I have every reason to believe that he was stating the facts for he Treed by a Moose.

One cold January day Mr. Hamilton, who was in the Maine woods as a foreman for a lumbering company, went out prospecting for spruce. He prudently left his rifle at the camp, fearing he might be tempted to break the game laws.

While picking his way through a fir thicket he was suddenly startled by a resounding below, and found himself close upon a bull moose. The man lost no time in dodging behind a great birch.

Ror a moment the moose stood still, as if surprised, then vented his wrath upon a pile of spruce tops and boughs that lay near, tossing them about as if they had been a stack of jackstraws. Meanwhile Mr. Hamilton climbed into the birch. Treed by a Moose.

Neither Turtle Will Give Up.

Two months ago a crowd of coal miners near Newport took two snapping turtles into a cockpit and forcing open their jaws poured some whisky down their throats. Then they were turned loose on each other, $800 being wagered on the outcome, but with the understanding that no decision would be made until one of the snappers gave up or was killed. The turtles fought fiercely, each tearing his antagonist's head and neck with his horny beak until one obtained a grip upon the other's flipper. After a brief but ineffectual struggle to break his antagonist's hold, the turtle whose flipper was thus caught seized the other by the neck. Aside from a steady "weaving" motion there was no further demonstration for several hours. The crowd of miners watched them from early evening until long after midnight, when the two turtles, each retaining his vice like grip on the other, were carried from the pit and placed in the cellar of the deserted house. This was two months ago, and since then neither of the snappers has shown any symptoms of weakening his hold upon the other, and the bets have not yet been declared off.—Newcastle (Pa.) Special. A Peculiar Friendship. A Peculiar Friendship.

"The most peculiar friendship I ever saw formed was one between a hawk and a rooster," said D. R. Franklin, at the Gibson. "One day, when living on a farm in Western Pennsylvania, I shot a and wounded a hawk. When I picked up the bird I found that its wings were broken, but otherwise it was uninjured. My sister begged that the creature's life be spared, and the request was granted. Within a few days the hawk had become quite tame and would come to us for its food when we called it. The chickens were greatly frightened at its presence and kept up considerable fuss. This soon wore off and in a short time its presence was taken as a matter of course. The bird was tied to a stake in the back yard and the fowls would go several times a day to look at him. One rooster, more courageous than the rest, concluded to get acquainted with the enemy. In some way they succeeded in communicating together and establishing a bond of friendship. They were constantly together, and after the hawk's wounds had healed and he was liberated he would spend a portion of each day with his friend, the rooster, paying no attention to the other chickeach day with his friend, the rooser, paying no attention to the other chickens. In some way he must have told the other hawks that our flock was under his special care, for we were never troubled with them afterward, atthough before that we had lost a great many chickens."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Weeping of Horses The Weeping of Horses.
Did you ever see a horse cry? Many people believe that horses do not weep, but those who have had much to do with these faithful creatures know that on several occasions they will shed tears, as well as express sorrow, in the most heartbreaking manner. In the West, where the hardiness of the ponies causes as well as express sorrow, in the most heartbreaking manner. In the West, where the hardiness of the ponies causes the riders to almost overlook the neces sity of providing for their needs, it is quite common when the weather is ex-tremely cold to leave an unblanketed pony tied for two or three hours when pony tied for two or three hours when the temperature is nearly zero, and while its owner is transacting business.

In this case the suffering is evidenced by the cries, which are almost like sobs, and unmistakable tears freeze on to the cheeks like icicles. When a horse falls in the street and gets injured the shock generally numbs his senses so much that it does not either cry or groan, but under some conditions an injured horse will solicit sympathy in the most distinct manner. I remember a favorite horse of my own which trod on a nail long enough to pierce its foot. The poor thing hobbled up to me on three legs and cried as nearly like a child in trouble as anything I can describe. The sight was a very touching one, as was also the crippled animal's gratitude when the nail was pulled out and the wound dressed,—Practical Farmer.

Dirt and Science.

In the last analysis probably everything is dirt. But there are wonderful dirts, comments an exchange. Coal tar is one of the most unpromising to look at, but what a magazine of possibilities there are in coal tar after it has passed through the inquiring hands of the chemist. One of the latest uses to which a coal tar derivative is applied is as a substitute for quicksilver in the bulls of thermometers. This substance is tunol. It contains no water, can stand a much lower temperature than quicksilver without freezing, and when exposed to warmth expands with great regularity. Besides possessing these qualities, it is cheap, and as it is much lighter than quicksilver the tube of the thermometer can be made much larger than is now usual, and it will not only be much easier to read the record, but greater exactitude its registration will be secured. The dark-blue color of tunol is another element which will contribute to the ease of reading the thermometer
